An hon. Member: Relevancy. Remember there is an amendment on the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: I thank hon. members for their consent. I will speak for another three or four minutes at most.

An hon. Member: Speak about the provincial territories.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: To put it another way, a Canadian citizen anxious to travel in his own country will have to check very carefully, before leaving his province, how the constitution is interpreted in the provinces where he intends to stay. For instance, if he were to be arrested his legal rights might vary when he crosses a border. Faced with what may be a great number of rights which are applicable or not applicable, the least one can do is wonder whether one is still in the same country or in a federation of different countries. Despite this imbroglio of legal situations which might develop and which I find deplorable, I can fully appreciate the spirit of compromise and co-operation which paved the way for the present agreement. I am all the more pleased to see that this spirit of compromise is enduring, as we have noticed in the past two days. It is that same will to compromise which enabled the governments to return to the bargaining table and redefine a new constitutional agreement which now includes the right to equality for Canadian women and the acknowledgement in our constitution of the rights of the native people.

On these two issues, Mr. Speaker, I am in complete agreement with the position taken by the government of Canada. In view of these demonstrations of good will and of compliance with the true spirit of federalism, I seek the support of all members so that our Constitution will recognize, apart from the rights I just mentioned, the right for citizens of both official language groups to an equal treatment. In fact, Mr. Speaker, that simply means the implementation of the motion I introduced today under Standing Order 43 to ask that all provinces recognize the linguistic duality of Canada and be subjected to Section 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) and 20(2) of the resolution. That would establish in law the equality sought by both language groups. I therefore ask that the government and this House introduce an amendment to that effect, since I cannot do so for reasons of parliamentary procedure. I hope Mr. Speaker that I have made my position clear.

● (2100)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was rising to speak in the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am relatively happy to speak to this motion moved by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I wish it was unnecessary. It has been a concern since the first ministers' conference two and a half weeks ago, first brought to our attention with full impact by the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. Certainly it is one that I, as one of the members aspiring for autonomy in the far north on an equal basis with the provinces, would wish to see deleted so we as northern people can proceed with plans in this respect.

It was inconceivable to northerners, both from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, that the premiers of the provinces could have deliberately agreed to expand their powers to the point of stealing what rightfully belongs to other people. This in itself is unconstitutional. I am sure, under the same circumstances, that all members of the House would react in the way that the assemblies of the two territories and all northern people have reacted.

Therefore this matter is certainly one that the federal New Democratic Party has been concerned with. The day before last the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) moved an amendment which I had the honour to second, stating that any changes to the boundaries or political status of the territories should be done only with the consent and participation of the people inhabiting those areas. This is only just. Every person in this country knows that. Most assuredly, the premiers knew that when they agreed to the November 5 accord.

I would like to quote from several documents that might help enlighten people. First, a resolution was passed unanimously in the Yukon Territorial Assembly which reads as follows:

> The Yukon Legislative Assembly supports the efforts of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories to have clauses 41(e) and 41(f) of the Constitution Act, 1981 now before the House of Commons removed and that this legislature further seeks the inclusion in the Constitution Act, 1981 of a clause that will provide for the capability of new provinces to be created under similar circumstances to the British North America Act of 1871.

Second, a resolution was passed in December 1867 in this Parliament asking for jurisdiction over the northwestern territory and Rupert's Land, which states:

> —to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government; and we most humbly beg to express to Your Majesty that we are willing to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards those territories.

Further to that, I quote from the preamble to the Rupert's Land Act which outlined the terms under which the land transfer was made, which reads as follows:

> —and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government upon the terms and conditions therein stated.

In light of that act, it is clear that the inclusion of Section 41(1)(e) and (f) is a violation of trust and an abdication of the federal government's responsibilities to the territories. By taking this power for themselves, the provinces have made an incursion into federal jurisdiction.

This means that under the powers given them by the inclusion of Section 41(e) and (f), for the first time in history provincial governments will be granted extraterritorial jurisdiction.

Section 41(1)(f) will means that no new provinces can be established without the consent of at least two thirds of the provinces whose combined population exceeds one half of the total population of Canada and the federal Parliament. Therefore, for the Northwest Territories or the Yukon Territory to become a province, it will be necessary to have the consent of eight governments. This is a marked departure from the present law and past convention, where the authority to establish new provinces resided exclusively with the Parliament of Canada.

This is not acceptable. How would one of those provinces like to be under similar circumstances? I do not think it would like it. We can only assume that, having deleted the aboriginal and treaty rights section from the Constitution Act, 1981, the provinces would never allow northern peoples, no matter how far down the road, the right to look forward to the attainment of full, responsible government under the same conditions and privileges that other Canadians have enjoyed.

This is elitist thinking and repugnant to a society which calls itself democratic. It is repugnant to this party in view of the fact that it is the federal NDP policy to support the right of territorial peoples to self-determination.

In this regard, northern people are realists. We do not ask for provincial status now, but wish to have it when we are ready. We do not expect to own all the resources in the north. However, Bill C-48 takes care of that. Constitutionally, we do expect to have the right to the same political development that all other Canadians have enjoyed. For the moment, while we prepare for advancement in the political sphere, we wish to remain under federal jurisdiction. This jurisdiction was further confirmed under the British North America Act 1871 which, by the way, is included in Schedule I of the resolution. An oversight by the premiers? Perhaps.

To northerners the possibility of provincial takeovers leaves us feeling something akin to what Canadians would feel if the Constitution of the United States included provisions for extending state boundaries into Canada. In the north we have a national identity which is based on our loyalty to our country, but we also have another identity deeply rooted in the fact that we are northerners.

We do not wish to be annexed, and we particularly do not like the scenario of losing our status as residents of a territory through constitutional provisions which we had no part in developing. There were no territorial government representatives present to defend the autonomy of territorial lands, and so Section 41(e) and (f) made its appearance in the Constitution.

The nine premiers, eight of them Tory I might add, who signed the constitutional accord naturally have a stake in leaving the way open to extending their boundaries, particularly considering the fact that the areas into which they would move are a resource developer's dream. Fossil fuel and mineral resources are considered to be in abundance in the north. The only surprising aspect of this development is that the federal government did not balk at the possibility of future loss of control over the Canada lands which the oil and gas act so ably ensured.

All Canadians would surely empathize with the situation which faces us in the north if they would consider their own reactions under similar circumstances. It is essential to future north-south relations in our own country that the northern territories be allowed to develop within the Canadian tradition in ways which fully involve us politically. The deletion of Section 41(e) and (f) is a small but essential step in this direction.

● (2110)

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise to take part in this historic debate. I am sure that all hon. members share in the sense of achievement that is represented in the resolution before the House. It is not every session, nor even every year or indeed every decade, that a subject of this significance is brought before Parliament. I do not believe there will be many such occasions in the future to discuss a matter as fundamental as the Constitution of a country itself, because it is not every year that amendments are brought forward to a matter as important as this.

Because of the historic achievements, I wish to pay particular tribute to those who have been most responsible, especially to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has presided with wisdom and grace over the whole process of constitutional discussions and who, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, will be recognized and acknowledged as the architect of a truly Canadian Constitution. I also pay tribute to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), and the provincial premiers and to all hon. members of the House who have debated and discussed this matter, not only in the House but also throughout the country. I also want to add commendations to the literally thousands of Canadians who have participated not only before the committee but in public discussion and who have made their contribution to this Canadian Constitution, because I know that all Canadians share in this achievement.

There is also another reason I am proud to take part in this debate. It is a very special reason. I am a resident of Prince Edward Island. In 1864, 117 years ago, the first meeting to discuss the concept of confederation of the British North American colonies was held in Prince Edward Island. I sat as a member of the Legislative Assembly of Prince Edward Island for more than ten years, in a building called Province House, known throughout Canada as the cradle of confederation. It is designated today as a national historic site. It was in that building, just down the hall from where the Legislative Assembly still meets, that the Charlottetown Conference was held.

Of that meeting, Sir John A. Macdonald said that if the Charlottetown conference had not been held, never, perhaps for a long series of years, would we have been able to bring confederation to a practical conclusion". As a distinguished Canadian historian, Peter Waite, correctly noted, the Charlottetown conference "Was more than a Canadian triumph; it was the first appearance of an authentic national spirit".

I think it is rather fitting, Mr. Speaker, that during these days when the logical culmination of that original conference is taking place, now as Parliament is taking steps to bring the Constitution to Canada, workmen are putting the finishing touches to the restoration of those confederation chambers in Charlottetown. The building, under Parks Canada, is being restored to the way it was at the time of the Charlottetown conference. It is rather interesting that as we put the finishing touches to this constitutional debate, the finishing touches are being put to the chambers where the idea of confereration itself first took root.

I may be forgiven a certain sense of pride as a Prince Edward Islander because the spirit of confederation really had its birth there. I think it is also useful to look at the resolution that is now before us in two ways. It is, as I said, the logical culmination of the original drafting of the British North America Act. No one in the House or in the country will disagree with the patriation of that act. I believe then, first of all, that we should look at this measure as the fulfilment of a broad range of historical imperatives. As the Minister of Justice so appropriately observed at the beginning of this debate in quoting the words of George Brown, the original Constitution was not a perfect document. Even with the measures that have now been incorporated into it, it is still not a perfect document. Yet it fulfills in many respects the spirit of the Fathers of Confederation. That spirit, those historical imperatives, saw a united Canada from sea to sea. There was a sense of cultural and linguistic diversities throughout the country and a respect for those diversities. There was a recognition of the special needs and the opportunities of each region.

While as a Maritimer I cannot say that the national policy served us extremely well, it is not because of the constitutional framework but because of the loss of that spirit of sharing which was inherent in the concept of confederation at the beginning. Perhaps the original framers were at fault for not including the guarantees. Perhaps the euphoria of nation-building obscured consideration of practical realities as they might and did emerge. In any case, I am happy to see that this resolution not only captures the original spirit of Canada from sea to sea but also confirms and incorporates the commitment of Parliament to those principles.

This brings me to my second point, Mr. Speaker. This step does not only represent the fulfilment of a process which began more than a century ago, it also represents the beginning of a process, the laying of a foundation for the future of federalism in this country. Not only does it catch up to present realities, it is also forward looking. The entrenchment of native rights, the rights of women, the principle of equalization, embodies some very basic principles which have served this country well and will continue to serve it in the years ahead. It is more than a measure which reflects the state of our country, of our national psyche, at a given period in our history.

It is not simply a measure which is frozen in time. The resolution is both the fulfilment and the promise of the very framework of this country. It is a recognition, a reconfirmation of our confidence in the federalist system, a system which has served us well before and which will serve us better in the years ahead. It is a reconfirmation of a national spirit which was first conceived in Charlottetown, and it promises the opportunity for the continued evolution of the federal character of our country in response to future changes throughout society as a whole.

We talk about the nature of the resolution before us. Over the last number of months we have had a great deal of discussion about the general character of federalism and what it means to all of us. We heard discussions ranging from a preference for a strong federalist system to preference for what has been characterized as a system made up of a "community of communities" where a jurisdiction is transferred from one level of government to the other. In one area there is total jurisdiction for fisheries and in another area there is total jurisdiction for mineral resources, thus areas are abandoned and transferred from one level to the other.

● (2120)

It is very important within this process to ensure that we not only project the federalist system; it must also be changed and must respond to the changing society and country in which we live. I do not mean this in a narrow legalistic sense. I mean it must reflect the co-operative achievement of Canadians working together for a common goal. At the same time—it is clear that we must recognize the diversities of our great country. In fact, I have argued that, because of the unique circumstances of Prince Edward Island, special responses to its needs and opportunities were essential. But I also recognize that a precondition to all that, whether it be the capacity to respond to the diversities of regions or provinces or individuals, is the maintenance of a strong federal system which is crucial to the continued existence of the country.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms removes the prospect of the exercise of arbitrary political power interfering with the basic rights and freedoms of individuals, just as the entrenchment of the principle of equalization ensures that provinces such as Prince Edward Island will continue to play their legitimate role in the context of a strong federal system of government. On those grounds, I repeat that the resolution makes an assumption about the essential federal character of the country, which I fully endorse and support.

Throughout the entire constitutional discussions over the past decade or so—in fact over the past half century—the province I represent consistently addressed the need for a strong federal government to redress the imbalances among provinces which have existed. That principle was recognized in 1912 by Sir Wilfrid Laurier who was commenting in the House of Commons on a brief brought before the federal government by the province of Prince Edward Island. "The one reason for recognizing the case presented by Prince Edward Island which has impressed me", said Laurier, "and it is not a constitutional reason, it is not a legal reason, it is a simple question of equity . . ."

I am proud to see the question of equity entrenched in the Constitution, not just as it applies to the provinces, but also as it applies to women, to native people, and to all individuals throughout the country. It would be a shame if that principle, that spirit of equity, were not shared by all governments and by the people they represent. At the risk of making an understatement, the Constitution is a good thing. But it will fail if its spirit and intent are not fully shared and endorsed by the people of Canada and their governments.

As Minister of Veterans Affairs I am deeply aware of the spirit of sacrifice on behalf of the principles of freedom, justice and equity which Canadians before us have made. We can be faithful to that spirit by supporting the resolution. It has been remarked that various enactments contained in the resolution will create a lot of business for lawyers as the legal applications are tested before the courts. I hope that is not the case, not because I want to see lawyers lose business but because it would seem a shame if the spirit and intent of the resolution were diminished by legalistic bickering. Yet, as I said at the outset, the constitutional package represents an excellent start in the process of enabling Canadians to determine the constitutional framework which best serves their needs, while embodying certain fundamental principles which are essential to the future wellbeing of the country and of all Canadians.

There are opportunities for further improvements, but I believe this package provides a sound base upon which to continue to work for the achievement of our common goals in the future. With the patriation of the Constitution, the process will now be in the hands of Canadian citizens.

In conclusion, this package represents not only the fulfilment of our historic aspirations as a country, but also the framework and the basis for our future growth as a nation and as a people. I commend the way in which it has redressed the deficiencies and also the way in which it has ensured the principles of equity and freedom in our future. The original agreement was not forged out of revolution but because reasonable people sat down together. Although it has taken more than a half a century to reach this point—which in itself speaks volumes about the Canadian experience—I believe historians will regard this package as one of the significant achievements of Canadian nationhood and statecraft. It is more than a constitutional package; it is a reaffirmation of our faith in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Constitution

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am conscious, when I rise in the House this evening, that I am following a very distinguished speech by a very distinguished member of the House, a former premier of Prince Edward Island and a former leader of the opposition in that chamber who sought refuge in this Chamber. Having been part of the life of Prince Edward Island during the period of time when he was seeking refuge here, I welcome the statesmanlike quality of the hon. member's contribution to the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): When I came into the Chamber tonight, I did not think I would be following a former premier and a former leader of the opposition. I am pleased that it was a person from other than central Canada.

He said something in his speech which has been brought home to me in the nine years I have been a member of the House of Commons, something which perhaps Canadians forget, that is that a solution which might be dreamed up by a government to apply nationally sometimes does not apply as appropriately in British Columbia or Prince Edward Island as it might in Ontario. What might be appropriate for the hon. member's part of Canada might not be appropriate in western Canada. This speaks to the great diversity of the nation and to the reason why the Fathers of Confederation made a great journey down the St. Lawrence by boat to Charlottetown in 1867 and made the happy return journey to Quebec. This speaks to the reason for having a federal system. We are different, we are different. If we do not realize this, we will miss something as Canadians.

This debate started off in the fall in dreadful rancour. If it meant anything at all as it moved from its stage in the fall to now, it was that somehow or other respect for the importance of the differences in Canada was seeping into the minds of hon. members of the House and of members of the Canadian public who were watching—the differences of region, of development, of language, of race, of time, and the differences in people coming to Canada for the first time. As a result of this debate I hope that, whatever else comes of it, we will begin again the process of understanding what Cartier and Macdonald began in 1867.

The hon. member spoke of confederation. What is confederation? It is a difficult term to describe. Certainly it is similar to a marriage. Certain things are written down and codified about the relationship of marriage, and those things are enforceable between husband and wife. If the husband does not live up to his obligations or his wife does not live up to her obligations in a marriage, the offended party can take the other to court and enforce those rights against the other.

● (2130)

But written words do not keep a marriage together nor do they keep a marriage alive. The things important to domestic peace in marriage are the things that are unwritten, the things that cannot be legislated, that are as simple and straightforward as they are profound. Those things are respect, understanding, love, sharing, compromise, trust and forgiveness. They are what grease the wheels of marriage. I have a feeling, Mr. Speaker, that they also grease the wheels of nationhood.

It has been the lack of those elements between the two levels of government in the last while that has caused so much trouble in the Canadian family.

If we have seen precious little of those virtues, then the brilliant judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada pointed the way to peace, to the state where we could begin to talk to each other, to where we were given a second chance as a country, and our leaders were given a second chance to begin again the search for the resolution of some of our difficulties.

Hon. members will recall that at the time of the judgment what was on the minds of us all was what the leaders of the country would do with that time. Would they squander it, begin again the exercise in confrontation that had gone before, or would they begin to talk to each other rather than at each other.

I think all of us in the House tonight can say to the Premiers, can say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), can say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the others who were involved in those negotiations that they did not squander that time. We are now at the point in the debate where we are considering a new confederation for our country. This is what it amounts to.

The so-called "gang of eight" opposed to what was happening has become the "chorus of nine" in favour. Those who had opposed the very idea of entrenching a Charter of Rights and Freedoms of some kind in the Constitution of Canada are now consulting with ministers of the Crown, with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and with the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), about how it should be improved. Such is the change in attitude.

Whereas the amending process was a stumbling block to agreement because it gave unnatural powers to the central provinces at the expense of others, somehow or other we have agreed upon the keystone of federalism, that is, the power to amend our Constitution ourselves.

I say to you that at the end of this exercise, Mr. Speaker, this document will go to Great Britain and we will have patriation. We will have the right to amend the Constitution here, again and again and again if we choose.

I listened tonight to the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who spoke rather feelingly of what is a charter of rights and freedoms. If I quote him correctly, he said that a charter of rights in a Constitution is designed to protect the rights of minorities against majorities.

Hon. members may recall that last fall I said in the House that the rules of practice, what is in Beauchesne, what is in the parliamentary tomes, is that the majority does not necessarily have the right to rule. We protect minorities in the country; we have to protect minorities here.

I listened to the hon. member speak—he did not speak before in the debate—and tonight he spoke with feeling from his own position. I could understand how he felt. I personally felt that way last fall. As I listened to him, I said to myself that he should have faith in this new beginning because this Constitution has within it the right of all of us as Canadians to participate in advancing rights. That is an important feature.

When the accord was reached, there were some who said that it should not be changed by Parliament. "Don't rock the boat" said the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I suggest we have improved the boat. We have added equality of the sexes. We have had unanimous agreement today with respect to the rights of the native people.

We are now talking about an amendment, which I hope will be supported in the House and which I hope will meet with agreement, that will allow the people of the Northwest Territories and the people of Yukon, those people north of 60, to feel that their opportunity, when they want to exercise it, to become a province like Prince Edward Island, like Ontario, like Quebec, like Alberta and like British Columbia, is not taken away from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think that is worthy of support. They want only to preserve the right to realize their future aspirations.

I have not travelled much, but I have been in the north several times and I can attest to the spirit of enterprise and the spirit of the future of the people in northern Canada. I think we in the House owe them passage of this amendment. I hope it can be done. I do not say anything tonight in a partisan sense, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) was kind enough to mention that all members of the House had contributed to bring us to the point at which we are now, and he is right. The resolution before us now is different; the amending formula is different; the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is different, and the differences in Canada are respected in this document.

The Supreme Court of Canada was allowed to function. It brought down a judgment which I say is a brilliant judgment, one that could not be picked apart. It gave the country a second chance. It said the government had a legal right to do what it wanted but to beware if it moved without substantial provincial support. It would be unconstitutional and, I think, divisive and damaging to the country. We have reached a new plateau.

In his kindness in paying tribute to all members of the House, the minister included the Leader of the Opposition. I hope hon. members will allow me to say something about my leader and his part in this process.

There would not have been renewed negotiations but for the steadfastness of the Leader of the Opposition who inspired a sense of commitment to the importance of consensus in the constitutional process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There are many who may disagree with my leader. It is a free country; they can disagree with him if they want. Of course, he reserved the right to disagree with them. He believed in the importance of consensus, in understanding and compromise, and he fought for those things.

● (2140)

I say with as much modesty as I can muster that it was my party which led a battle in the House. It was not understood early in the battle that it was to delay the process, to delay a steamroller, which we honestly believed was wrong. Ultimately, the courts were allowed to decide and make that historic landmark judgment.

I was very proud to be the House leader of the party during that process. I must say that I am delighted not to be the House leader of the party today. When I listened to the point of order being argued today, I was delighted to be able to sit as an observer, because as my friends know, I have argued many points of order before. However, it was important. I do not say this in a partisan sense, looking back on it now, because it is the way things have evolved. However, hon. members will recall that this former resolution was to be in Britain by Christmas—

An hon. Member: It will be.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —Christmas of 1980. It is best for the country that it was not there in 1980 because I believe—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —we would have done great damage. I want to pay tribute to my leader who, right from the outset, said where he stood and never changed his ground. In his speech the other day, he indicated the importance of having Quebec at the table of the accord. He said that we, as a party and as a Parliament, should grasp every opportunity to keep alive any chink of light there might be to have Quebec as part of that accord.

It is important to repeat again and again that there will be an empty chair at the table of confederation if the House approves this resolution. It is important that we keep that chink of light alive if we can because this is not the end of the constitutional process. This is, by virtue of the Constitution itself, the beginning of the constitutional process, a process which will go on as long as this country exists. All of us, everywhere, must try to keep that alive.

I do not know the attitude of the government of Quebec. However, I believe it is important that, whatever we do, we hold ourselves open to the people of Quebec. That is why my leader has proposed an amendment in terms of full compensation for opting out. That is important, as he stated so well to the people of Quebec. That is why I hope that in the discussions he is having there could be some settlement with respect to the issue of language.

I want to see the Canada clause adopted in that province. I am a Canadian. My children will grow up in this province as Canadians. I would like them to be able to go to that province. My friends on the other side shake their heads, suggesting that it may be impossible, and it may be; but my case is only that that chink of light should be kept alive if it is at all possible. Governments come and go. Public men come and go. As they come and go, attitudes change and societies evolve. Surely, we would want the society in Quebec or elsewhere to evolve so that, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier said, the override clause could be diminished so that rights would be completely entrenched, if they are there at all. This would mean there would be no opting out and there could be no absence from one chair at the table of confederation.

Your Honour can judge from what I say, that I am overjoyed that we have moved from the process of confrontation to one where I feel a great sense of coming together. I think it is important that the resolution go forward with the broadest support we can muster in the House of Commons. We have spent a great deal of time. I believe now, as I look back on it, that time has not been wasted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There are some things in this country that we must tackle, as they are very important to Canadians who may be watching this debate and wanting this debate to end quickly. I want it to end quickly. I want the government to be able to move quickly, regardless of what the vote may be in the House of Commons.

I believe we have demonstrated that Parliament is not the rubber stamp of federal-provincial conferences. We have now demonstrated, in at least two instances, that there is room to improve even their good work, that their work is likely the first word and not the last word, and that this is the Parliament of all Canadians.

I hope that hon. members of the House will approach the amendment put by my successor as House leader, my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), in the spirit in which he put it; namely, it is important that we keep the principle of equalization for women and for the aboriginal people of the country entrenched in our Constitution, and that people be allowed to move freely from province to province. Equally, people who want to form provinces, and people who want to protect the boundaries to protect their potential to form provinces, should have that right. That is why, as a person who has been a visitor north of 60, I make a plea to my friends in the government to accept this reasonable amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon.

In the dying days of the debate, I do not think I will participate in this constitutional debate any further. I appreciate the latitude that Your Honour has allowed me. I feel very much like the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier felt, as he had not participated in the debate either. I had the opportunity sooner. We will engage in many things, but none more profound than what we are concerned with now.

I want to thank my colleagues on all sides for their kind attention to what I had to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my remarks in the debate on this resolution by praising my predecessor, the distinguished hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I listened to his speech and I was very impressed by the quality of his contribution to the debate. I did not expect anything else. I knew in advance that my friend, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, would bring a constructive contribution to this debate. It is unfortunate that he could not inspire his colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

[Translation]

It is a shame, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Joliette did not choose to make the kind of speech just held by his colleague from Nepean-Carleton. However, I would have liked to have heard from my respected colleague from Nepean-Carleton how he intends to convince Mr. Davis, the Premier of Ontario, to recognize minority rights in Ontario, as demanded by my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on the same terms as they are recognized in New Brunswick and Quebec. I hope that the member for Nepean-Carleton will be able to convince his colleagues and Mr. Davis that they would be well advised to do so. In fact, if national unity is the issue, Mr. Davis should be made to understand that the Progressive Conservative members in the House of Commons are supporting this petition being made by the members from Quebec on behalf of the people of the Province of Quebec. And contrary to the claims of our colleague from Joliette, although the Government of the Province of Quebec is not represented among the signatories to the agreement, Quebecers do not lack representation. And this, Mr. Speaker, is because the main architects of the new constitution are people from the Province of Quebec—I see that my colleague from Nepean-Carleton agrees. Since I have only a few minutes until ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, before broaching points that are of particular concern to me, especially regarding the resolution, I wish to say a few words in praise of those who, in fact, have worked for months toward that historic moment when Canada and Canadians will have their own Canadian constitution, and I am, of course, referring to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

● (2150)

Mr. Speaker, Canada enjoys an enviable reputation in the rest of the world, and that is why the world is watching us today and why observers are anxious to see how Canadians are going to deal with the issue of getting a truly Canadian constitution, how they are going to convince Canadians from every part of the country that there are tremendous benefits in national unity and that Canadians should have a made-in-Canada constitution. The same observers, whether they are from Europe, Asia or South America, will probably be very surprised to see how passionately involved Canadians have become in their country in the course of this debate. At the beginning of November the situation seemed to have reached an impasse, but then came incredibly rapid developments and we are now actually about to create a truly Canadian constitution. And this is thanks to the spirit of co-operation shown by all heads of provincial parties, all provincial first ministers, with one exception, of course, but with 74 members in the House of Commons, one can say that Quebec is amply represented and that the interests of Quebecers are in good hands. We have been doing this for years, Mr. Speaker. If there are 74 of us, it certainly did not happen by accident, and the reason is surely that the members from the province of Quebec are dedicated to defending the interests of Quebecers.

Of course, the Government of the province of Quebec was in a position where it could not sign this kind of agreement, for the simple reason that its number one priority and raison d'être is to separate the province of Quebec from Canada. Would the party's militants agree to having their leader sign and become a Father of the Canadian Confederation? Imagine! I do not understand how anyone could entertain the thought that those people would be capable of coming to Ottawa in good faith and making a sincere contribution to advancing the case of Canada's Constitution. In fact, they made it quite clear that they thought it was a non-starter and that they were not interested. The whole point of their being there was to apply delaying tactics. Every time a solution seemed imminent, every time a problem was resolved, they managed to find other ways to obstruct the proceedings and to keep Canadians from getting their made-in-Canada constitution. Of course, that is part of their program. And that is how they keep the aspirations of their militants alive.

Mr. Speaker, today the Premier of the province of Quebec or perhaps I should say the provincial Premier of Quebec, is claiming that he has a veto right, which he himself had refused last April, when he acknowledged that he did not, in fact, have a right of veto. Besides, if he had been convinced that he had veto powers, he would not have found it necessary to go to the Supreme Court and ask them to decide whether two major provinces, with the Canadian Government, could ensure the patriation of our constitution with an amending formula and the Charter of Rights. If he had felt for a minute that he really had that veto right, he certainly would not have gone to the Supreme Court. Clearly Mr. Speaker, his arguments are frivolous.

I referred earlier to the contribution of the hon. member for Joliette, the Progressive Conservative member for Joliette. I had expected that his contribution to this debate would be inspired by loftier sentiments.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, he kept carping at his colleagues from Quebec. It is a nice thing in such an assembly to hear someone claim that only he can be right. This reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of that soldier who was marching out of step in a parade and saying: I am not out of step, all the others are. This is absolutely shocking and what I found most disappointing in his intervention was his lack of support for his leader. After hearing him, the first question you wanted to ask was this: Is his leader really sitting at the House of Commons or in the Quebec Legislative Assembly? And from his comments, to which we are unfortunately used, I infer that his leader is not sitting in this House but in Quebec. However, as a member of the federal Parliament addressing the constitutional proposal, it seems to me he should have supported his own leader, the leader of the federal Progressive Conservative Party in his efforts to convince his Quebec leader to sign the agreement, like his counterparts from the other provinces. But he did not, Mr. Speaker. He did not have the decency to praise his leader's commendable efforts to convince Premier Lévesque, on behalf of the Quebec people, to support the resolution as suggested and supported by the other premiers. But he may also see some political advantage in trying to turn Quebecers' minds away from matters which are relevant to them. The longer the debate goes on, the better it is for him because there are problems Quebecers have and wish to discuss among themselves, for instance the gasoline tax increase, the National Holiday scandal, the high increases in electricity rates and many other matters, such as the scandals and the mismanagement at the Department of Education. Quebec, or at least the present provincial government is pleased that the debate is still going on in this place because it keeps the people's minds occupied in every province and especially in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, before calling it ten o'clock I would simply like to repeat how tiresome it is for us Quebecers that so much time is being spent on deciding to give ourselves a Canadian constitution. With your permission I will read a statement by one of my predecessors here in this House of Commons, the member for Labelle in the 1930s, Mr. Henri Bourassa, who upon returning from a trip—Mr. Speaker, I see that you want to call it ten o'clock, so I will wait until tomorrow to quote my colleague and predecessor, Mr. Henri Bourassa.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

● (2200)

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS FOR DISABILITY PENSIONS. (B) TERMS OF ELIGIBILITY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on November 5 I directed a question, which appears at page 12533 of Hansard, to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) concerning the recent War Veterans Allowance Board decision that expanded the definition of the term "theatre of war", to include areas such as Newfoundland and Jamaica, thereby making previously ineligible veterans pensionable for war veterans allowance purposes.

I asked the minister whether the government would give consideration to broadening further the terms of eligibility for pension benefits to include those veterans who, through no fault of their own, were stationed in Canada during the war and were not given the opportunity to serve overseas and up to now have not been eligible for pension.

I thought perhaps the minister's answer was somewhat vague. He felt sure that the War Veterans Allowance Board would continue to look at ways and means of further extending those benefits to other veterans. Does this mean that the department will eventually recognize the valuable service of veterans stationed in Canada by extending pension benefits, and that it is just a matter of time before those veterans receive pensions?

I would suggest that veterans should not have to wait until the War Veterans Allowance Board is inclined or disposed to extend benefits. I believe the minister should take steps, through amending existing legislation, so that these veterans who would have gladly gone into front line service if called upon will receive the pensions they so rightly deserve. A change in legislation is what veterans need. So I ask the minister to do everything possible to introduce legislation to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, and as soon as possible.

There is another area of concern to our veterans I should like to mention to the minister at this time. I refer to those World War II veterans taken prisoner in Hong Kong who contracted the parasite strongyloidosis. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the adverse and long-lasting effects this parasite has had on veterans when looking at their applications for pensions.

Long delays in processing claims for benefits are another major concern of veterans. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has brought this matter to the attention of the House before, that is, the serious delays veterans face when applying for pensions to which they are rightfully entitled. These points are major and pressing, and they are concerns expressed by veterans' associations. We all believe these concerns are very well founded.

I realize that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has only recently been elected to the House of Commons and that it does take all of us a bit of time when first elected to get the feel of things around there. I feel confident, therefore, that the minister will be looking into those problems I have mentioned and will redress as soon as possible the injustices and inequities to all concerned veterans.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) has in fact raised three questions. He realizes I only have two and a half or three minutes to respond, so maybe I could address the question he raised initially, that is the question of the recent decision by the War Veterans Allowance Board to expand the benefits of war veterans allowance to those veterans who served in Newfoundland.

This involves, of course, not a change in legislation but merely a change in interpretation, in that it has been determined that veterans who were transported beyond the territorial waters of North and South America and the adjacent islands while on duty were considered to have served in a theatre of war. This ruling is merely, as you know, an expansion of the previous definition of "theatre of war" for the purpose of the War Veterans Allowance Act. This expansion of eligibility was possible within the criteria which are set out in existing legislation.

● (2205)

As I mentioned in response to the question from the hon. member, with the exception of those who served in both world wars and those who suffered some pensionable disability as a result of service during either war, the act requires that a veteran has served in an actual theatre of war to be eligible for an allowance. The Board continues to review all areas of service in order to ensure that all those who served in areas of war or theatres of war be given full access to the benefits of war veterans allowance.

On the other hand, in order to extend eligibility to those persons who served in Canada only during either wars, a change to the legislation would be required. That, Mr. Speaker, raises the question, as I mentioned in my answer to the hon. member, whether such a change would be acceptable, considering it would be contrary to the legislation as originally envisaged. It has always been considered that those who did serve in a theatre of war may have been affected in ways which are not readily apparent on medical examination. Therefore, those veterans have always been in a special category recognized by the Government of Canada.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES—UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, for many months now we on this side of the House have been trying to get answers from the government on the urea formaldehyde foam insulation crisis. I use the word "crisis" advisedly because over the past few weeks especially, this UFFI mess has been developing into a monster of staggering proportions, a result of a gargantuan blunder by this government going back to the mid to late 1970s.

The mind boggles at the number of unanswered questions which only serve to raise more questions, more fears on the part of Canadians who were encouraged to instal urea formaldehyde foam insulation by the government, who were then warned by this same government that the substance might constitute a health hazard, who were then told that the foam was officially banned for health reasons by the government, and who now find that the government cannot appear to get its act together and come up with some positive answers, some hope, some way out of the predicament that it has put these home owners into in the first place.

The government officially banned urea formaldehyde foam insulation a year ago. What has happened since? The government has left hundreds of thousands of people hanging out to dry by ducking questions or running off in six different departmental directions. We have heard the latest chapter just in the last few days, that of lending and banking institutions becoming twitchy in terms of renewing mortgages for people who have UFFI in their homes.

I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. McCauley) in the House this evening. I do not envy him trying to answer some of the questions that are weighing so heavily on the minds of some half a million Canadians. But still, Mr. Speaker, I must put these questions to him because it is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) who acts as the government's umbrella spokesman on the UFFI crisis. The problem is that so far in the House, his umbrella has brought nothing but more bad luck to those with foam in their homes.

I cannot believe the previous answers that the minister has given in the House that it is not the Canadian government's fault that home owners used these products in the first place or that the government must not accept the blame now. Much of the blame, says the minister, lies with the provinces.

Therefore, one question I hope the parliamentary secretary will answer tonight is how the government can use the provinces as a scapegoat for this UFFI mess. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which granted acceptance numbers for the foam's national use, is not provincial. The Canadian Home Insulation Program, CHIP, which promoted and paid Canadians to instal the foam with CMHC's approval, is not provincial. Health and Welfare Canada, which studied, then temporarily banned, then permanently banned the material, is not provincial. Energy, Mines and Resources and Consumer and Corporate Affairs officials who refused to recommend UFFI and, indeed, cautioned against its use, are not provincial.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will not repeat the line that the provinces have to share a great deal of the blame for this mess and that Ottawa is not responsible, because if you can believe that, you will believe that Colonel Khadafy just graduated from the Dale Carnegie School of Public Relations.

While we are on the involvement of CHIP, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the government start preparing lists of those homes financed under the CHIP program so that we can have exact numbers and addresses, and that these numbers and addresses of every home insulated under CHIP are available. This is imperative so that if, as, and when the government decides on compensation for those who need to remove the foam and then restore homes to their original condition, people will not have to wait another six months or so.

Let me come to another very serious dimension to this UFFI problem—one of the questions which must be answered—which has come to light only in the past 24 hours. We know that anywhere from 80,000 to 100,000 homes are affected in one way or another by UFFI. What about apartments? In its investigation of the UFFI matter, has the government considered the number of apartment buildings which may have foam in them? I know of at least two large apartment complexes where the presence of UFFI has been detected and indeed verified.

• (2210)

One tenant watched the foam being blown into his apartment building about three years ago. He began suffering a scratchy throat and put a humidifier in his apartment. When UFFI was banned, he went to his property manager to ask if the foam was in the building. When he got an evasive answer, he had the health department team in to test his apartment. The reading was just a touch below the federal Health and Welfare Department's proposed safety level. He informed the apartment owner, asked if any other tenants in that apartment building had testing done, and was told to keep his mouth shut and not inform the other tenants.

I have passed along the particulars of this situation in confidence to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to the provincial ministry of health in Toronto. I do not feel it is fair to alarm other tenants in that building or to have them harassed. I only use this example to indicate that the UFFI program may yet be reaching a magnitude that not even this government is aware of.

I want to make one final point in this short presentation. Of course, not everyone who has UFFI in their homes or maybe apartment buildings will have problems, not now anyway. Nobody knows whether there could be cumulative effects down the road. It is the uncertainty, the fear of the unknown, the fact that this government, which has known about the UFFI problem for so long, has been offering precious little hope to Canadian home owners. Hope starts with positive information. That is what we need. I hope, on behalf of all those people we have been meeting across this country and who have been writing to my office, that positive information is what we get, beginning tonight, from the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to my good friend and colleague in the House, the hon. member for Hamilton Wentworth (Mr. Scott), whose admirable rhetoric sometimes gets in the way of the facts. I want to take this opportunity to set the record straight with respect to government initiatives relating to urea formaldehyde foam insulation. From the outset, this government has acted responsibly and speedily on this issue to ensure that the health of Canadians is protected.

Prior to November 1979, less than a handful of health-related complaints had been registered with the government against this product. An interdepartmental committee was set up to examine this issue in response to information emanating from other jurisdictions, namely the United States of America.

By September 1980 the government had received approximately 100 complaints, and an advisory committee of health experts was organized to examine the issue and report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). Based on the recommendation of this committee, the government acted promptly and banned UFFI under the Hazardous Products Act.

Since that date of less than a year ago, the government has continued to act responsively to home owners who require assistance and information. On June 15, 1981, the UFFI Information and Co-ordination Centre was established by the government to provide information to the public, administer a national testing survey and co-ordinate federal efforts. A toll-free telephone system was set up, which to date has responded to over 10,000 inquiries.

A series of information booklets has been written and disseminated to thousands of individuals. Further publications are planned. Important and promising research is under way which touches upon the use of neutralizers, the effectiveness of remedial measures and the structural effects of UFFI on homes.

On August 24 of this year the government announced that 2,400 homes would be tested to determine formaldehyde gas levels, with special priority given to home owners reporting medical problems. This survey is now completed and an analysis of the results is under way.

Unfortunately, due to the restraints of time, it is impossible for me to touch upon all the elements and history of this problem. I do, however, wish to comment on a particularly important facet, and that is the board of review which was established under the Hazardous Products Act. This board is conducting public hearings into the safety, history and use of UFFI. Thousands of pages of testimony have been recorded and over 250 exhibits have been filed. Hearings have taken place in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Calgary and Vancouver. The board has heard virtually any individual wishing to present evidence, including consumers, federal and provincial government officials and members of the business and professional communities. As can be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, the government has reacted quickly to this situation by putting in place a program that responds to this very complex issue. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has stated on several occasions that the government must have available valid, scientific data on which any further government action can be based.

• (2215)

The formulation and analysis of this data is being actively pursued.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

RAILWAYS—EMPLOYEES HOURS OF WORK

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, 1981, I asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). It dealt with the hours of work of railway employees, who have to work as much as eleven hours without rest. As reported in Hansard of November 6, 1981, at page 12599, the minister answered my question by saying:

—you and others would find me doing something that is not of my competence, of my jurisdiction.

I want to say that we are talking about the minister's jurisdiction. This is the second time I have asked this minister about this problem. Tonight I will try another approach. Tonight I will put the Minister of Transport on a unit on one of the Canadian railways. We will call the minister. He will be okay for duty. He will be waiting to be called to go to work. He could get up at eight o'clock in the morning and possibly wait six or eight hours to get his call. Finally, he will be called. He gets a two hour call. He will have his meal and then will go out to work. He will climb up on a unit, with one employee on the head-end and another one on the tail-end. His train could be anywhere from 10,000 to 14,000 tonnes. He will start on the way to his destination. I want to talk about the mountainous area. It could be snowing that evening. It could be snowing heavily when he starts out. He could be anywhere from the age of 40, 50, 60 or 65, as many of them are. He will start his journey on this train going through small communities. On this train he could be carrying dangerous commodities. He will be on that train for eight, nine or 10 hours. As the train gets going, we find it at the top of the grade, and there is a passenger train down the hill, with probably 500 passengers sitting down there waiting for this train to come. The minister will be watching the signals. Mind you, he will be on duty for ten hours, he will be on duty for unable to stop to eat because he must not delay his train. He will start down that grade. I will remind the House of the fact that 500 passengers are sitting on the train. He has been on duty for ten hours. He is weary but his contract did not provide him with the opportunity to say, "I am tired". He has to carry on because the union agreement indicated that he must. The Minister of Transport has not brought in laws so that after eight hours he could say, "I am too tired, I cannot carry on." But the passengers have no contract. They are at his mercy. What about the small village down there all these explosives on the train? The people of the village do not have a contract.

● (2220)

The Minister of Transport has a responsibility to bring forward legislation which would indicate that an employee, after eight hours on duty, should be the judge of his own condition. It has nothing to do with the contract. It is only so that the employee can say he is not fit to carry on, or "I feel fine. It was only two or three hours. I feel good, I will take my train to its destination".

Surely the Minister of Transport has a responsibility to Canadians—to those in small communities, to passengers and to others. There are railway employees who are having heart attacks at 49 and 50 years of age. Some of them die, some are demoted. At this time there are 50 railway employees paying $500 contempt of court charges because of such concerns.

Mr. McKenzie: One hour on the road, then stop for breakfast.

Mr. Parker: I am not suggesting anything like that. I am suggesting that there should be regulations covering someone who has completed eight hours of work, so that he can be a judge of his condition in deciding whether or not to carry on. This is my question. It has nothing to do with contracts or interference. It is the responsibility of the minister.

I will conclude with the following note. If the minister does not carry out his responsibility, it will be on his conscience. On top of this, he is allowing American trains to come into Canada. Those employees do not have union contracts or working agreements. They are coming into our country with no agreements, and they must work long hours. They are travelling through the same communities. It is a serious problem. The Minister of Transport has a responsibility to ensure the safety of our communities, of passengers on trains and of the public.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for raising this question. I assure him that the Department of Labour is very much concerned with the situation.

In 1972, the then minister of labour appointed a commission of inquiry, pursuant to Section 62 of the Canada Labour Code, into employment practices related to a variety of classes of railway employees within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada which are known collectively as the operating trades or running trades. When the commission reported to the minister on October 16, 1972, it recommended that these employees be exempted from the application of Sections 29 and 30 of the Canada Labour Code because the sections could not be reasonably applied to this class of employee. In consequence thereof, and following further study by the minister, regulation No. SOR-73-246 dated May 9, 1973 was promulgated in the Canada Gazette. In essence, the regulation exempted the cited classes of employees from the application of Sections 29 and 30 of Part III of the Canada Labour Code. For the purposes of these regulations, hours of work are scheduled and actually worked without regard to Section 31. of the code.

It should be noted that the classes of employees who are exempt from the application of the hours of work under the provision in Part III of the Canada Labour Code are generally engaged in work in which it would be impossible to demand crew changes at the end of any given eight-hour work period.

● (2225)

It is the practice in the railway industry, and has been for years and is recognized in the collective bargaining agreements, entered into by the railways with unions representing their employees, that these classes of employees are generally paid on a mileage basis according to a formula which recognizes an agreed upon average speed of the trains, etc. Therefore, the Minister of Transport was quite right in his response of November 6, wherein he said that this matter was a matter between the employees and the employers. In view of the exemption heretofore granted—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 27, 1981

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

DISASTERS

ASSISTANCE SOUGHT TO RECONSTRUCT FISH PLANT AND WHARF DESTROYED BY FIRE IN NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The loss by fire of the Riverport Seafoods Ltd. plant in Nova Scotia on September 26 brings one of the province's highest productive areas to zero growth, puts 400 people out of work, and robs the local economy of $4.6 million annually in income. Since the plant cannot be rebuilt without a guarantee from the federal government that it will replace the million dollar wharf which was also destroyed by the fire, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans give an immediate indication of the government's plans for the reconstruction of this facility.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CONGRATULATIONS ON RESCUE OF CREW OF VESSEL IN DISTRESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has taken his seat. From time to time the House recognizes the exceptional and truly outstanding selflessness of certain individuals. Last night a handful of Canadian Armed Forces personnel from CFB Shearwater and from CFB Summerside joined these numbers. In winter's first major storm, in the mask of night, these gentlemen clearly demonstrated and distinguished the level of professionalism which is clearly the hallmark of the Canadian Armed Forces; 26 crew members of the Euro Princess are alive this morning because these professionals did their duty. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House says, "Well done, gentlemen" to Canadian Armed Forces personnel from CFB Shearwater and CFB Summerside who participated in the rescue of 26 crew members of Euro Princess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

TRADE

LIFTING OF LEATHER SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, the lifting of import quotas on leather shoes this week will not only eliminate 40 per cent of Canadian shoemakers within three years, but it will have a disastrous effect on Canadian tanneries, according to Peter Dunham, President of Beardmore & Company Limited, Acton, Ontario, whose tannery was already forced to lay off 400 people. In view of the fact that we are already in a depressed economy, as witnessed by massive lay-offs in most other industries as a result of Liberal economic policies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be instructed to reconsider the timing of his negative announcement which could virtually eliminate Canadian leather shoe manufacturers, thereby adding considerably to record high unemployment and the lack of productivity in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

INDUSTRY

CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY INVESTIGATION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC. LOSSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The federal government's 49 per cent ownership of Consolidated Computer Inc. resulted in the loss of more than $30 million in public funds since the government took over active management, or should I say mismanagement, of the firm 16 months ago. This black hole of public funding has now been sold for a $100,000 cash downpayment plus $7 million in future considerations. The total anticipated loss is expected to be almost $100 million, a staggering sum which might have been better used to give assistance to Canada's beleaguered home owners. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House condemns the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for his incompetence and mishandling of public funds and, further, to prevent a government cover-up, that this entire matter be referred to a special parliamentary committee for a thorough public investigation of this previously secret deal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

CHANGE IN POLICY AFFECTING FOREIGN DOMESTIC WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced changes in Canada's immigration policy as it affects foreign domestic workers in Canada. The result will be that this group, which has often been at a disadvantage, will be given a greater opportunity to become full contributing members of the country. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain):

That this House applauds the minister for his progressive and humanitarian policy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF MURB HOUSING INCENTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the discontinuation of the MURB incentives in the coming year will reduce the number of multiple unit starts from 9,000 to 2,000 in the Calgary area alone. In view of the fact that this action taken by the federal government will result in soaring rents and even lower vacancy rates during this period of high interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

● (1110)

That the Minister of Finance consider the very serious implications the discontinuation of MURB incentives has on the housing market, the construction industry and renters, and that he fully reinstate MURB incentives in his budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HEALTH OF FORMER SERVICEMEN EXPOSED TO NUCLEAR RADIATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which relates to a group of veterans who served in an RCAF nuclear warfare unit. Over a long period of time these individuals were exposed to radiation and now appear to have contracted degenerative illnesses and cancer from that service. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That the Minister of Veterans Affairs provide an order of reference to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs authorizing it to conduct a study into the circumstances of the veterans who served in the RCAF nuclear warfare group, particularly the present health status and needs of this group.

Second, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare authorize her department to undertake a long-term medical study of the members of the nuclear warfare group to establish if the exposure to radiation during their term of service has resulted in the contracting of cancer and degenerative disease.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

DEMAND FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the MacEachen budget kills the incentives to invest, makes a mockery of saving for retirement or for a home in the future, continues to waste the peoples' money on such things as useless advertising, imposing metric on our people, providing excessive amounts of booze at every government function, and spending money like a drunken millionaire. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this House demands the immediate resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED NAME FOR NEW BREAKFAST MENU ITEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, given the universal reaction to the November 12 budget, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), I move:

That this House honours the Minister of Finance for his budget by recommending to that well-known restaurant chain a new item to be inserted on their breakfast menu: Egg MacEachen.

You don't eat it; you wear it all over your face.

* * *

EXTERNAL AID

RELIEF URGED FOR TYPHOON VICTIMS IN THE PHILIPPINES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise to call the attention of all members of this House to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of the damaging typhoon which has destroyed south-east villages in Manila, Philippines, leaving 73 people dead, 37 injured and 40 missing, causing $9 million in crop damage, and given that Canada has always acted with swiftness in meeting such natural disasters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That this House express its deepest sympathy for the people of the Philippines who have suffered from a typhoon which destroyed south-east villages in Manila, and request the Canadian government to join with other countries in extending relief to the victims if requested to do so in an international appeal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The house has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING INSURANCE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the budget provisions respecting the taxation of life insurance have placed the industry in jeopardy. These ill-advised measures will have the effect of inhibiting saving, of discouraging the accumulation of retirement funds, and will generally fuel inflation. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to withdraw these onerous and foolish tax measures.

Madam Speaker: Is there consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1115)

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF ELDERLY WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Earlier this week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was content to wring her hands and plead that it was not up to her, it was up to the economy, to help the 400,000 elderly women who scrape by on $5,000 a year. Members of the New Democratic Party find this to be unacceptable. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the Liberal government be condemned on the grounds of moral bankruptcy for ignoring the plight of the hundreds of thousands of elderly Canadians whom this government has wilfully committed to lives of utter destitution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There is more evidence every day of the very great disruption which has been caused by this budget, particularly by its tax reform elements, which is undermining the investment and, therefore, the job-creation process in this country. Obviously this is a very great concern, particularly because of the serious recession we are in today.

In view of this, and in view of the response in the House by a number of the minister's colleagues while he was away on other business, that he is considering amendments to the budget, would the minister advise the House today whether, in fact, he is considering substantial amendments to the budget, which is now known in this country as the "Oops, I forgot that one" budget?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Alley Oop!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member was absent yesterday on business I am sure, when I did respond to an hon. member who inquired about the impact of the change in income-averaging annuity contracts affecting farmers. I said that I was prepared, first of all, to explain to various groups in the country the impact of changes which, in some cases, have been misunderstood. For example, I believe that in the case of farmers, they might find it useful to compare the rigidity which was imposed upon them under an income-averaging annuity contract system with the flexibility which may be available to them under the new forward-averaging system.

For example, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has made some representations. We would like to discuss with the federation whether, in fact, the disadvantages which it perceives actually exist, or whether, indeed, there may not be some advantages to farmers in the way of providing additional flexibility.

Therefore, I have no hesitation in telling my hon. friend, first of all, that I think it is important that affected groups understand the implications of the budget. Second, if it is apparent that any changes made are not in accordance with the motivation of equity which is within the budget, then of course I am prepared to consider making adjustments. That has always been the case with respect to budgets, and it will not change in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLICY GOVERNING TAX CHANGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons the investment process to which I referred in my original question is being undermined is because the budget introduces a major change in taxation policy. It is applying new rules which affect investment decisions on a retroactive basis. This applies to people who have invested in small businesses, in high technology companies, in annuities, in junior resource companies, and those anticipating retirement allowances, who now find that the rules of the game have been changed and, in some cases, significantly changed. The result will be fewer jobs created in Canada, just to remind the minister again, at a time when we are in very serious recession.

Is the minister consciously departing from this principle of non-retroactivity in the formation of tax policy in this budget, and will that affect future budgets?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is constantly missing the fundamental, underlying public policy reason for the tax changes in the budget.

Mr. Andre: We are not talking about cars; we are talking about interest.

Mr. MacEachen: The burden of taxes has grown more and more as special provisions have crept into the tax system—

An hon. Member: You put them in.

Mr. MacEachen: —with the result that, at the present time, quite a considerable number of high-income people in Canada are paying absolutely no tax at all because of the tax system. They are not carring any burden. That is the first fact.

• (1120)

The second fact is that quite a considerable number of taxpayers in high-income income brackets are paying a lower proportion of their income in taxes than other tax filers in low-income brackets. What kind of a system is that in this country?

An hon. Member: You created it.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member is overlooking that kind of correction that we intend to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF TAX REFORM ELEMENTS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister, in his normally very self-righteous tone, is ignoring the fact that those so-called loopholes today were put in by governments of which he was a part.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Supported by the Tories.

Mr. Wilson: The minister is forgetting one fundamental factor. That factor is the impact of these changes on job creation in this country at a time when the economy is in serious recession.

Before I put my final supplementary question to the minister, I want to stress that I am not being provocative—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: —but the minister, because he has been bound by conflict of interest guidelines for some 15 years, has never had to make an investment decision. Those decisions have been made for him. Members of his staff and senior officials have been bound by those same guidelines. They have not had to make investment decisions. Therefore, because of his lack of experience with this process, and lack of understanding of the impact of that process on job creation in this country, would the minister consider at this time removing, as a package, those elements of the budget which come in under the entitlement of tax reform? Would he consider removing those elements from the budget and putting them before a special committee of the House in the form of a white paper for study, thereby allowing Canadians who are so seriously affected by the budget to explain to the minister, to his officials and to members of this House the implications of the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the other day that question was addressed to me by a member of the New Democratic Party who suggested that it might be useful to send the bill to a standing committee which could hear representations. The person who objected to that proposal was the hon. member for York-Peel, who suggested to me across the aisle that the place to deal with the bill was in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Clark: That is incorrect.

Mr. MacEachen: I think that is another illustration of the conflict of views between members of that party. We are going to have an opportunity to deal with the bill before the Committee of the Whole House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: You are the one who mentioned Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MacEachen: —and that seems to me to be an adequate place.

The hon. member suggested that many of the tax preferences that are in the tax system had been put in by former Liberal governments. That is true. That is the case. But I must say that when I examined the tax system I was scandalized by the number of preferences—

An hon. Member: Where were you for the last 15 years?

An hon. Member: Where were you in 1971?

Mr. MacEachen: —that had crept into the system, not for the purpose—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not for the purpose of what?

Mr. MacEachen: Maybe for very laudable purposes at the time they were developed, but which have had the effect of permitting large, high-income earners to escape taxes altogether—

Mr. Clark: Blue Cross, dental care and severance pay—what about those?

Mr. Andre: What about small business investment?

Mr. MacEachen: —or other income earners to bear a lower proportion of the tax burden. That is what I am attempting to correct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING DISPOSAL OF GOVERNMENT EQUITY IN COMPANIES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When the Canadian government owns control of a company and the government then decides to dispose of its equity to a foreign firm, giving the foreign firm control, is this transaction subject to FIRA, or because the Government of Canada is one of the parties to this transaction, is the transaction exempt from the usual FIRA process?

● (1125)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken the law provides that the disposal of companies by either the federal or provincial Crown is not subject to the Foreign Investment Review Act.

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC.—REQUEST THAT SALE BE MADE TO CANADIAN FIRM

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as this matter has been brought up, let me say that my understanding is that there has been nothing finalized as yet in relation to Consolidated Computer. If something has been finalized, perhaps the minister could inform us.

Because the Government of Canada has announced that one of its major target industries for support is the high tech industry, and because the government has indicated that it would try to encourage Canadian firms rather than foreign firms to buy Canadian companies up for sale in Canada, will the minister undertake not to sell Consolidated Computer, of which it owns 49 per cent, to the Japanese firm Fujitsiu, but rather to sell or dispose of the government's interest to one of the three Canadian companies which, I understand, have taken an interest in that company?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, that is exactly what we have done.

* * *

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES PAYING HIGH INTEREST MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Finance. He makes Rip Van Winkle look like an insomniac with his answers. Where was the Minister of Finance during all those years when the loopholes were being put in by his government? Let me return to a question I asked last week.

The Minister of Finance indicated last week that he agreed with me that those people who were locked into very high mortgage interest rates as a result of a peak that took place during the summer months should be given some consideration now in trying to bring their interest rates to a level that would be more acceptable. I note with interest that some of the banks have flatly rejected any responsibility in this regard.

What does the minister propose to do to try to aid the close to 150,000 Canadian families who are locked into interest rates of 19 per cent, 20 per cent, 21 per cent and 22 per cent and who are obviously being asked to shoulder a burden far in excess of what could be considered reasonable?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member put a preamble to his question on which I would like to make a comment. All of these tax expenditures or tax preferences were originally put into the tax system for what we expected to be useful purposes. Over time, instead of encouraging investment as much as had been intended, they have become, in addition to that, a basic way of avoiding taxes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Now his leader—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the New Democratic Party for weeks before the budget was up on his feet every day asking the government to take action to close off these tax preferences. Now that we have taken the action he hasn't got the backbone to stand up and support that action we proposed in the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That is how the Leader of the New Democratic Party behaves. If the hon. member is going to put preambles into his questions he is going to get answers to them also.

The member has talked about those particular persons who renewed mortgages at very high interest levels. I have indicated to the hon. member that I have taken his point and will attempt, through the system that we established with the financial institutions, to see whether any adjustment can be made in those mortgage rates. That is what I am attempting to do.

* * *

• (1130)

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DIRECT BANKS TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Let me say to the minister that, in the closing of the loopholes, he has left at least 80 of those loopholes open in terms of people being able to take unfair advantage of the tax system.

Let me go back to the housing question because it is of vital importance. To this day there are people in Canada who have paid in excess of $40 million more than they ought to have been asked to pay as a result of the inordinately high interest rates that they have been tied into. The banks have reported, just in the last two days, obscene profit margins when compared to the profit margins of most other areas of the economy. Those are being taken from people who are paying mortgages—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has to proceed right now to his question.

Mr. Deans: Will the minister direct the banks to reduce the mortgage interest rates for those 150,000 Canadians who are paying in excess of the going rate today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that under the terms of the Bank Act which went through this Parliament during this session, and in which members of his party participated—

An hon. Member: And opposed.

Mr. MacEachen: —there is no authority for the government to give direction to the banks to establish any rate of interest.

An hon. Member: Be honest.

Mr. MacEachen: What we have done is to provide, through that act, increased competition for the banks.

I would hope that those mortgage renewals which took place during a period of very high interest rates were for a very short term. Even so, I have told the hon. member that I will do what I can within my powers to encourage the banks to make some adjustments. But there is no authority under the law to direct the financial institutions, or any other institution in the country, to provide for any particular price. However, what the hon. member ought to be satisfied about is that there has been a very significant drop in interest rates and that many hundreds of thousands of Canadian home owners who are now facing renewals will do so under a much better arrangement than has been in existence in the last few months.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR COMPANY FACING BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is quite simple. If the minister wants to change the Bank Act to allow the government to have the power to set the interest rates for mortgages, we will pass it in one day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to ask the minister how this government can find $91 million to waste on a company that is going bankrupt yet cannot find money to help people who are losing their homes or are paying far more than they should be asked to pay?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member will have noticed that we have provided several hundred millions of dollars in the budget—

Mr. Deans: Not for this.

Mr. MacEachen: —to help the housing situation and we have taken—

An hon. Member: Only if they go down to the banks.

Mr. MacEachen: We have taken steps in the budget to ensure that no home owner in Canada will lose a home because of high interest rates. We made that commitment in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session. I am rather pleased to be able to say in the House of Commons that no Canadian family will lose a home because of high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

ALLEGED VETO RIGHT OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Honourable Prime Minister. Yesterday, Premier Lévesque, in referring to statements by the Prime Minister to the effect that Quebec had lost its veto right, said that these statements in fact acknowledged the existence of a veto right. Some members of the media appear to be rather confused by this apparent paradox. Would the Prime Minister say that the alleged veto right was never a legal right but rather a political privilege that the government of Quebec has now lost by obstructing all attempts to reform the Canadian Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as the legal aspect of the matter is concerned, obviously I can only express an opinion. The courts will have to decide on the legality aspect, if necessary, but my position has always been, that ever since I became leader of the Canadian government we have always looked for an amending formula based on the concept of regionalism, which recognized the existence of four regions in Canada and as a result acknowledged implicitly that the Province of Quebec had a veto right. That was our position at the constitutional conference in 1971, and has been our position up to the events of the past few weeks, when we had a resolution before the House in which we were proposing an amending formula based on the regional concept and therefore on a veto right for Quebec. So that when Premier Lévesque, in joining forces with the seven provinces, agreed with their concept that all provinces were equal and that there were no veto rights for anyone, and signed the accord on April 16 of this year, he relinquished the veto right we had been prepared to acknowledge in the amending formula. So that is what happened, Madam Speaker, and once more, I do not want to say what the law is on this question nor what the constitutional conventions should be. I merely wish to say that for ten years we have been proposing a constitutional amending formula that would have given the Province of Quebec veto rights, and it was Mr. Lévesque's government that since or sometime before the accord, in September 1980, joined forces with the seven provinces which denied veto rights to any of the provinces. Mr. Lévesque agreed to accept this view, thereby relinquishing the veto rights we were prepared to acknowledge, not in law but in the amending formula we were proposing.

Oral Questions

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING INCOME-AVERAGING ANNUITIES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his budget the minister said that the reason some of these provisions were placed in the budget was for fairness. He talked about the removal of income averaging annuities because high income earners in Canada were using them not to pay any tax.

For the reason of fairness, would the minister consider using the existing laws as they stood before November 12 so that people who had sold, in particular people who had sold property to which capital gains were attached, prior to November 12, would not be penalized because the existing law prior to November 12 gave them until March 2 to purchase an income averaging annuity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think I should make the point that I have been talking about a fairer tax system which would more evenly distribute the burdens of taxation. When I make that comment, I am not casting aspersions on any individual taxpayer who may have used that tax system. It was fully legal. But the impact of the tax system, as is revealed in the analysis on tax expenditures, is such as to create considerable inequity. That is what I have attempted to remove.

The hon. member has spoken about one particular aspect of these tax changes, having to do with the possible transitional adjustment. I have indicated several times in the House that I am quite prepared to listen to the representations of groups and Members of Parliament to see whether transitional adjustments in certain circumstances might not be fully justified in the interest of equity.

I take the hon. member's question as a serious one in the interests of providing equity to a particular class of Canadians.

● (1140)

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I appreciate very much the response of the Minister of Finance because, knowing his roots, I am sure he understands that people build for retirement in this country, and they do their best to provide for themselves. I hope the minister will listen a little more earnestly. One example is a widow who is forced to live below the poverty line. She sold a quarter section of farm land so that she could use the proceeds to live on in her retirement. This widow has to pay $30,000 in capital gains tax now.

I would like to inform the minister that another retiring farmer in my constituency consulted the tax department on how much time he had in which to purchase his income-averaging annuity. He was told March 2. He now does not have that opportunity, and I hope the minister, with all the fairness he can muster, will give people in this position the opportunity, until March 2, to provide for their retirement with their own funds.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, it is difficult, if not quite impossible, to adjudicate on a particular case on the floor of the House during question period. I know that several days ago a member of the House said that as a result of the budget the tax on a particular farm would have increased by $72,000, after the budget. I had a chance to look at that case and found that of that tax $49,000 under the forward-averaging system would be a refundable tax, and would be of benefit to the farmer and provide him with additional flexibility. I believe the hon. member ought to examine very carefully the forward-averaging system to determine whether he may be advocating a rule for farmers that is more onerous, namely, the existing one.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

ROLE OF BANKS IN SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the Small Business Development Bond. We all know that the minister was very confident when he brought in this singular measure to help small businesses and farmers. He was confident of the co-operation of the banks. It now being quite evident that the banks are not co-operating, for a variety of reasons, and that they are not offering to co-operate with their clients in issuing this bond, what is the minister's next step in solving the serious problems affecting small businesses and farmers?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I am really surprised that once again, for the third time, a Conservative member is trying to give the impression that banks are not implementing the Small Business Development Bond. Madam Speaker, I have checked with the Royal Bank, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Bank of Montreal, following statements by one of the honourable member's colleagues at the beginning of this week to the effect that there was a moratorium on implementation of the Small Business Development Bond. The three financial institutions I consulted have told me that they were implementing the provision, that they supported the program and that they would be using all the means at their disposal to develop a new definition of the terms as quickly as possible and the provision is already being implemented.

[English]

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, as the minister has done, I have undertaken the same kind of exercise. I have telephoned the head offices of some banks. They are very confused about the guidelines, and their instruction to their bank managers is not to issue the small business bond. We may have a conflict of understanding, but that is my conclusion.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE BROADENED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, has the Minister of Finance himself asked or has he received some advice about the notion of broadening the scope of the Small Business Development Bond by offering the bond to private purchasers, in other words, allowing private investors to purchase these bonds with the same kinds of guarantees that are offered to the banks and the same kinds of tax advantages?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not see how the characteristics of the Small Business Development Bond could be applied to private investors. If the hon. member wishes to make a proposal, I would be glad to consider it, but there is an interface between the operation of the Small Business Development Bond and the taxing situation of the banks.

Mr. Clark: I guess they should talk to Ian Stewart, the real minister of finance.

QUERY RESPECTING CHANGE IN PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I certainly concur with the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River. There is confusion out there as to whether the Small Business Development Bond is available now or not.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, and it too is with respect to the bond. I remember when the minister asked the House to extend the date of termination of the bond until the end of this present year, and I believe no one objected and that it went through very quickly because it was one of the few things the government had done to provide some limited assistance to small business. However, on November 12 that program was changed and, as a result, many small businessmen who were anticipating and planning to enter into the provisions of that bond were no longer able to do so. Consequently, their rates of borrowing money have gone up, in some cases many tens of thousands of dollars. Would the minister state to this House whether he does not consider that to be changing the rules of the game half way through the game?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, we are more than halfway through implementing the program. The new provisions concerning the Small Business Development Bond were announced on November 12, while the previous program was to end on January 31 and I feel that the one-year extension is extremely important. I agree with the member that there is a certain amount of confusion within the financial institutions at the present time. Monday morning, there will be a meeting of representatives from all chartered banks belonging to the Canadian Bankers' Association, with officers of the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue and the Small Business Secretariat, and by the end of that day we hope that any questions that exist at the present time will have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Riis: We will certainly be looking forward to that clarification.

REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENTS IN APPLICATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism has agreed that indeed there was a change in the rules of the game, perhaps not at mid-point but toward the end, but it still left many small businesses caught unawares. The minister indicated earlier this morning that he is prepared to make adjustments where there is some injustice committed. Would the Minister of Finance look into making adjustments so that those small business men anticipating taking advantage of the Small Business Development Bond until the end of the year will have that opportunity?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think there is some confusion with respect to the impact of the Small Business Development Bond. There has been the suggestion that the bond is no longer available for development purposes. It is available until the end of the year for development purposes. There is, of course, a threshold of 6 per cent in effect now. With that threshold there is still a very considerable interest advantage to small businesses taking out financing under the small business loan. If, for example, the market rate were 20 per cent, banks could offer about 13 per cent to 14 per cent to small businesses even with this threshold. We established this threshold because we wanted to create a greater availability for firms in financial difficulty.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RECIPROCITY STATUS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Three weeks ago the Government of the United States issued a request for comments on the reciprocity status of Canada dealing with the Mineral Lands Leasing Act which calls for retaliation against "citizens of another country, the laws, customs or regulations of which deny similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of the United States".

Has the minister or somebody else in the government—perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whose national energy policy triggered this request—responded to the request which was made to Canadians as well as Americans? Is he planning to respond to the request and, if he has or is planning to do so, will he undertake to table in the House of Commons his response to this request?

● (1150)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not sure I heard every word of the hon. member's question. I understood him to say that this was a request by members of a congressional committee. He can correct me if that is not the case. I am not aware of any specific request. We have certainly kept the United States informed of our views in this respect.

REQUEST MADE BY UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): The request was made by the administration from the assistant secretary of policy budget in the administration, Department of the Interior. It specifically invites Canadians, individual corporations, elected officials, as well as Americans, to respond to this request. I humbly suggest to the minister that failure to do so could result in the U.S. administration taking precipitous action which could be very damaging to Canada's interests.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that type of request I think is not one which is addressed to the Government of Canada, and not one that we would be responding to directly. But we have certainly fully informed the U.S. government of our views on this and any other questions in dispute.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT—QUERY RESPECTING IMPACT OF INDIRECT TAXES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister tell the House about the specific impact of indirect taxes, the hidden taxes on recipients of the guaranteed income supplement. Specifically the $35 which this House voted a year ago—does it exceed the tax take which now averages better than a $100 a month increase under the two budgets?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. The $35 a month increase to the recipients of the supplement is fully indexed.

REQUEST FOR STUDY INFORMATION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I understand the impact of full indexing. At 10 per cent per year that would be $3.50 a month. Indirect taxes, on average, per household, have increased over $100 a month under this Minister of Finance. He talks about equity. Could the minister table in this House a specific scientific study that would show the impact on senior citizens in this country, the impact of his indirect taxes on their capacity to buy food, to pay rent and to buy clothing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be delighted to do that. I will be delighted to provide the hon. member with information that would remove from his mind the impression that we have increased indirect taxes.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER MORE GENEROUS GUARANTEES COULD HAVE BEEN OBTAINED IF QUEBEC PROTECTED RIGHTS OF CANADIANS

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Since yesterday, the government of Quebec has started to show an interest in the situation of francophones outside Quebec, after having ignored them for a year and a half during the negotiations on the Constitution. I may recall a statement by Claude Morin at the beginning of the last conference in which he said that applying Section 133 to Ontario was of no consequence whatsoever.

Does the Prime Minister agree that far more generous guarantees would have been obtained if Quebec had wanted to take to heart the interests of Canadians instead of withdrawing within its own separatist option?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this question is similar to the issue of Quebec's veto which I discussed earlier in reply to another question. I can say that both items received our attention, since we were proposing a veto right for Quebec and improvements in the position of francophones in the rest of the country. In the course of the negotiations on the Constitution, we did not receive Quebec's support on either of these two items. In fact, it joined forces with the seven provinces that at the time did not want veto rights—they still do not—and which also did not want to guarantee educational rights. Madam Speaker, I believe we could go even further. Starting at the Victoria Conference in 1971, the Canadian government had received from seven provinces a constitutional guarantee for at least part of Section 133. These constitutional guarantees were entrenched in the Victoria charter, which, as the record shows, was rejected by the province of Quebec.

The federal government, since I became Prime Minister and, of course, under Mr. Pearson, has been fighting for the entrenchment in the Constitution of minority rights for francophones outside Quebec. We have always done so without the help of the province of Quebec, and now, since Mr. Lévesque came to power, in spite of the opposition of the province of Quebec, and that is what the situation has been for ten years.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

INCREASE IN EXCISE TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Finance would explain to the House why in this budget he is increasing the excise tax on building materials, contrary to what has been said about the reduction of the rate of excise tax, yet with regard to building materials the rate remains at 5 per cent, notwithstanding that the basis for valuation for tax goes from the manufacturer to the wholesale level?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in certain aspects of the budget I had to seek additional revenues in order to carry out the fiscal policy which I thought was necessary in the present circumstances.

IMPACT ON HOUSE BUILDING INDUSTRY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, has the minister consulted with the minister responsible for housing? Has the minister seen the impact of that increase in tax on the cost of building houses in this country, an industry which at the moment is possibly at its lowest in a generation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I had the necessary consultations with my colleagues. As a result of consultations with the minister responsible for housing I was able to provide very substantial sums of money in the budget in order to support housing activity in Canada.

An hon. Member: That is why it dried up.

* * *

FISHERIES

PROPOSAL TO ALLOCATE QUOTA RIGHTS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It concerns the proposal that he is considering of the transferable property rights. The policy proposal would allocate to individual fishing enterprises or companies assigned quotas over a year, as opposed to the current total allowable catch management system. This proposal also would allow these enterprises or companies to buy, sell, or trade those rights. Will the minister please inform the House if this proposal will become government policy, and when it will be implemented?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, a couple of days ago I said that the meeting had taken place. The advice from all sectors is being pulled together. I should be having a meeting with my officials next week. I would like to repeat to the hon. member what I said before, that there is no question to allocate in perpetuity what belongs to the people of Canada.

EFFECT ON INSHORE FISHERMEN

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I read the proposal. The principle of the proposal is to allow orderly and uniform delivery of fish to the onshore processors, a policy with which I agree. Will the minister explain to me and to the inshore fishermen, the independent fishermen, how this policy will benefit them?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we are trying to deal with the problem of the offshore fleet which generally is in the hands of four major companies. If we can solve that problem, that is good. There are other problems of the inshore that are not related to this proposal.

* * *

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FINANCIAL PLIGHT OF PERSONNEL IN CALGARY

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It has now been two years since we learned of the financial plight of many of our armed forces personnel stationed at CFB Calgary. Since then, the situation has worsened, so that today some 400 families qualify for provincial welfare aid and some 30 to 40 families are actually collecting such aid. Will the minister please inform the House why he has not done anything during his year and a half in office to turn this situation around?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am always glad when someone from the NDP seems to have some interest in defence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I always had a great concern for the welfare of our armed forces. I know that in some areas—

Mr. Sargeant: They do not want welfare.

Mr. Lamontagne: Do you want an answer?

Mr. Sargeant: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: In some areas we know that they have difficulty, like the hon. member just told me, for example, in Calgary. This is why I authorized yesterday that the armed forces will have in the future a special posting allowance for people when they are posted from a low cost to a high cost area. Also, with the approval of Treasury Board there will be a special accommodation assistance allowance effective November 1, 1981, for people moving from low-cost to high-cost areas. This is what we have done for the Canadian Armed Forces, and they deserve it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1200)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I should like to point out to the minister that hon. members in this corner of the House are interested in the defence of people.

We have heard many platitudes over the last couple of years from the minister about how proud he is of service personnel. I think it is a shame that service personnel have had to go on welfare before the government was forced into doing something for them.

Would the minister guarantee that the program, which he finally brought in or is promising to bring in, will guarantee all armed forces personnel, whether stationed in Canada or in Europe, an adequate quality of life?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to an article in The Globe and Mail. The woman who told the reporter the story seems to be more reasonable than the hon. member on the other side. She said "that she went into this with her eyes open, so she cannot really be bitter". Armed forces personnel know very well what kinds of salaries and conditions they will have when they join the armed forces. We are doing everything to try to help them. I just mentioned to the hon. member these two new policies to help these people. We have corrected a lot of what the hon. member mentioned. As far as forces personnel being on welfare is concerned it is a very small minority. It is a question of trying to help them when we can.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Thursday, November 26, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I could have the attention of the government House leader, I wonder whether it would suit his convenience and his schedule if he would call a House leaders' meeting immediately upon resuming orders of the day so that we might discuss the timing of the conclusion of the Constitution debate and dealing with any intervening amendments. Because I have some positive proposals to put to him.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I welcome this offer, provided that the NDP House leader attends the meeting as well.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as I said yesterday, I am willing to meet at any time. I can hardly wait to see these positive proposals.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. McCAIN—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I believe the privilege of hon. members of the House in committee, as well as those who appear to present points of view, is being somewhat detracted from, if not absolutely breached, by virtue of the fact that we find ourselves in a blocked system. I am speaking in general. I am not speaking about a specific instance or making a criticism against a specific chairman. I ask Madam Speaker to be patient with me for just a moment; I will not take much of the time of the House.

For example, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry met yesterday to hear the evidence of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union of the province of British Columbia on the Pearse Commission report, with which most of us are familiar. That committee, by virtue of its organization—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question which the hon. member wants to raise at this particular time does not flow from the deliberations of today's sitting. A question of privilege may be brought forward without notice only if it flows from the deliberations of today. I am afraid what the hon. member is talking about does not flow from the deliberations of today. If he has a question of privilege, he can give me notice of it and I can hear him on it on another day.

Mr. McCain: It was my understanding, Madam Speaker, that a question of privilege could be presented at the first opportunity which presented itself to an hon. member after the incident occurred. Under the circumstances, it was impossible to obtain the necessary information to present the question of privilege yesterday. Perhaps I should have given Your Honour notice of it yesterday, but it was impossible to pursue the item until today. I would ask you to just bear with me; I will be very brief.

Madam Speaker: I cannot; I must follow the Standing Orders. A matter of this nature could possibly be brought forward under privilege. I cannot judge the substance of the matter which will be brought forward, but I remind the hon. member of Standing Order 17(2) which clearly indicates:

—any member proposing to raise a question of privilege other than one arising out of proceedings in the Chamber during the course of a sitting shall give to the Speaker a written statement of the question at least one hour prior to raising the question in the House.

If the hon. member wants to give that statement and that notice, I can hear him on another day.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table the fourth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and the House has agreed through spokesmen for both opposition parties—

[English]

Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the New Democratic Party have agreed that I move concurrence of this report later this day.

* * *

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60, I wish to table a notice of ways and means in English and in French. The notice of ways and means, in accordance with earlier notices, provides for the dropping of the petroleum compensation charge from $51.28 per cubic metre to $39.64 per cubic metre. The decrease in the charge is, as was announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in September, consequent on the wellhead price increase which, while imposed by regulations made on October 1, 1981, does not flow through to the consumer until November 30, 1981. It means that Canadians will face a price increase of .5 cents per litre rather than 1.6 cents.

* * *

PETITIONS

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—THE CONSTITUTION—SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by Canadians which deals with Section 33(1)-Section 33(5) of the resolution presently before the House. It expresses a concern with respect to the override clause as it applies to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution. It is extremely long in its preamble. I think I would be presuming upon the House to read it all, although I should like to do so to make it clear. But Madam Speaker will be in a position to see it.

I believe that petitions are the one way in which people can contribute directly to debate and impress on members of Parliament the depth of feeling. It is on that basis that I beg leave to table this petition in the House.

MR. FULTON—THE CONSTITUTION—CONCERNS OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition to table on behalf of the Native Council of Canada, the Inuit Committee on National Issues and the Native Women's Association of Canada. It has a long preamble as well. I will not impose upon the time of the House by reading all of it, but I should like to point out that the prime concern is that the native people of Canada have been unable to meet with any government ministers; in fact, they have refused to consult with native people during this past week about some of the very important provisions they request to have within the Constitution. I table it on their behalf.

* * *

● (1210)

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), chairman of the subcommittee on Canada's Relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, that the fourth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, tabled earlier today in the House, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Nielsen: Agreed, Madam Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,683, 3,136, 3,264 and 3,328.

[Text]

MIRABEL AIRPORT DEFICIT

Question No. 2,683—Mr. Beatty:

1. Will Mirabel Airport have a deficit by the end of this fiscal year and, if so, what will it be and for what reason will there be a revenue shortfall?

2. What is the projected deficit for the airport for the fiscal year 1981-82, if present conditions remain the same?

3. Is the government presently exploring avenues to lower the deficit and, if so, which avenues?

4. Will an announcement be made on an airport policy change and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The deficit for Mirabel is $20.1 million for fiscal year 1980-81, including depreciation of $17,675,000. The deficit is attributable to decreased revenues because some carriers have cancelled their service to Mirabel.

2. Projected deficit for 1981-82 is $28.5 million, including depreciation of $18,355,000.

3. Senior officials of the Action Mirabel group undertook a marketing mission to Europe in November, 1980, in order to promote the use of Mirabel as a gateway to North America. In addition, continuous efforts are made to control and reduce operating and maintenance costs at the airport.

4. The first stage of the study on the Montreal airports system was completed some months ago and the findings were summarized in a report entitled "An interim report on airport role options", which was made public in February 1981. The second stage of this study, a more detailed cost-benefit appreciation, is well advanced and is scheduled for completion soon.

FUEL PURCHASE DIARY

Question No. 3,136—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Was the "Fuel Purchase Diary" issued by Statistics Canada and, if so, what was the total cost for (a) its preparation (b) its distribution (c) compilation of the data?

2. What was the purpose of the diary and did it achieve its purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Statistics Canada reports that the "Fuel Purchase Diary" is a data collection instrument issued by Statistics Canada as part of the national Fuel Consumption Survey. The survey itself is conducted by Statistics Canada under the sponsorship of Transport Canada as part of the federal government energy research and development program (an inter-departmental program under the leadership of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources). Each month samples of vehicles are drawn from provincial motor vehicle registration files provided to Statistics Canada by each of the ten provinces. Owners of the selected vehicles are asked a series of screening questions on the telephone and fuel purchase diaries are then mailed to the principal drivers of privately-owned vehicles. For a one-month period, the principal drivers use the Fuel Purchase Diary to keep a record of fuel purchases. At the end of the month, the completed diaries are returned by mail to Statistics Canada where the data are processed and tabulated for release on a quarterly basis. The total cost for the survey for a fiscal year is approximately $675,000 which can be subdivided as follows:

(a) Sample selection and preparation for data collection—$200,000.

(b) Screening and data collection—$300,000.

(c) Processing, compilation and publication—$175,000.

2. The primary purpose of the Fuel Consumption Survey is the establishment of a national data base concerning the personal use of passenger cars and light trucks and vans in Canada which would contain the following information: total distance travelled, total amount of fuel consumed, average distance obtained per unit of fuel, total expenditures on fuel and seasonal fluctuations in fuel consumption and in distance travelled. To date the survey methodology, as described in the answer to question one, has proven successful in meeting the primary objective. Four quarters of data have been published on the fuel consumption patterns of personal use passenger cars, and data on the fuel consumption patterns of light trucks and vans are currently being evaluated. Future quarters will be published as data become available.

PURCHASE OF MOTOR VEHICLES

Question No. 3,264—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year 1980-81, how many motor vehicles were purchased for staff members of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in (a) New Brunswick (b) Nova Scotia (c) Prince Edward Island and what amount was paid for the vehicles?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned, it has not purchased motor vehicles for staff members in the fiscal year 1980-81. We have, during this period, purchased the following motor vehicles for use by staff members in the performance of their duties and functions in two of the three maritime provinces in question:

Province	Vehicles	Total cost
New Brunswick	10	$68,499.80
Nova Scotia	12	$83,347.80
P.E.I.	None

TOURISTS VISITING QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Question No. 3,328—Mr. Herbert:

How many tourists entered (a) Quebec (b) Ontario from (i) the United States (ii) other countries in 1980 and in 1981 and what percentage of the tourists are believed to have spent most of their stay in the two provinces?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, it should be noted that Statistics Canada in its monthly tabulation of International Travellers Entering or Returning to Canada differentiates between total travellers (visitors) and long-term travellers (tourists). The distinction between these terms is important as the following numbers reveal. The total number of travellers (excursionists with less than 24-hour visit and visitors of more than 24-hour visit) coming into Canada for the period January through September, 1981 amounted to 35,197,473; the number of long-term visitors (plus 24 hours) comprised only about one third of the foregoing total, namely 11,430,720 in the same period. In responding to the inquiry made, use has been made of Statistics Canada's Long-Term Traveller which most closely relates to the term tourist.

Having stated the above, some arbitrary decisions are made by Statistics Canada in determining who might be plus/minus 24-hour visitors on a monthly basis.

Long-term travellers (tourists) from U.S. are classified as total plane, auto and bus, one or more nights; and total train and boat flows. The foregoing method is accurate for auto and bus, and quite accurate for plane and train, in that most plane and train arrivals have a stop overnight; however, it possibly tends to inflate boat entries as it indicates those persons who take ferry excursions between the U.S. and Canada but may not stay overnight. Given the foregoing caution, the attached statistics are relevant.

A. From U.S. to Quebec and Ontario

Long-term travellers, residents of the U.S. entering into Canada through Quebec;

(a) First eight months of 1980:	1,067,263
(b) First eight months of 1981:	1,023,674
Percentage:	−4.1 per cent.

Long-term travellers, residents of the U.S. entering into Canada through Ontario;

(a) First eight months of 1980:	5,158,450
(b) First eight months of 1981:	5,317,651
Percentage:	3.1 per cent

B. From Overseas to Quebec and Ontario

Defining long-term travel from countries other than the U.S. as overnight or longer land entries via the U.S., total air entries, total boat entries (includes same day travel by plane and boat), the undernoted figures are provided;

Long-term travellers, residents of countries other than the U.S. entering into Canada through Quebec;

(a) First eight months of 1980:	269,881
(b) First eight months of 1981:	263,906
Percentage:	−2.2 per cent

Long-term travellers, residents of countries other than the U.S. entering into Canada through Ontario;

(a) First eight months of 1980:	729,574
(b) First eight months of 1981:	729,993
Percentage:	0.1 per cent

C. Tourists spending most of their stay in Quebec and Ontario

The international travel survey measures, on an annual basis, provinces visited and each person is credited for each province visited. The data, however, cannot be desegregated to answer the question on the percentage of tourists spending most of their stay in the two provinces.

Defining tourists as those travellers staying one or more night only in Canada, the following statistics may be of use:

2.6 million U.S. tourists visited Quebec in 1980; 6.4 million U.S. tourists visited Ontario in 1980; 0.5 million tourists from countries other than the U.S. visited Quebec in 1980; 1.1 million tourists from countries other than the U.S. visited Ontario in 1980.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

SCHEDULE B

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Interprète

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Programmes de promotion sociale

Official Languages of Canada

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of Canada

16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

16. (1) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Canada; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions du Parlement et du gouvernement du Canada.

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of New Brunswick

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the

(2) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions de la Légis-

Langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick

legislature and government of New Brunswick.

lature et du gouvernement du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Advancement of status and use

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

(3) La présente charte ne limite pas le pouvoir du Parlement et des législatures de favoriser la progression vers l'égalité de statut ou d'usage du français et de l'anglais.

Progression vers l'égalité

Proceedings of Parliament

17. (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.

17. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux du Parlement.

Travaux du Parlement

Proceedings of New Brunswick legislature

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

Parliamentary statutes and records

18. (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

18. (1) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux du Parlement sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents parlementaires

New Brunswick statutes and records

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

(2) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

Proceedings in courts established by Parliament

19. (1) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.

19. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux établis par le Parlement et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux établis par le Parlement

Proceedings in New Brunswick courts

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

(2) Le public a, au Nouveau-Brunswick, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec tout bureau des institutions de la législature ou du gouvernement ou pour en recevoir les services.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions du Nouveau-Brunswick

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Recours

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Dispositions générales

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be con-

Maintien des autres droits et libertés

26. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne constitue pas strued as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

une négation des autres droits ou libertés qui existent au Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

28. Indépendamment des autres dispositions de la présente charte, les droits et libertés qui y sont mentionnés sont garantis également aux personnes des deux sexes.

Égalité de garantie des droits pour les deux sexes

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

29. Les dispositions de la présente charte ne portent pas atteinte aux droits ou privilèges garantis en vertu de la Constitution du Canada concernant les écoles séparées et autres écoles confessionnelles.

Maintien des droits relatifs à certaines écoles

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

The Constitution

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

Effet de la dérogation

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

Durée de validité

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

Nouvelle adoption

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

Durée de validité

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

Citation

Citation

34. This Part may be cited as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Titre

34. Titre de la présente partie : Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

Titre

PART II

RIGHTS OF THE ABORIGINAL PEOPLES OF CANADA

PARTIE II

DROITS DES PEUPLES AUTOCHTONES DU CANADA

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

Confirmation des droits existants des peuples autochtones

35. (1) Les droits existants — ancestraux ou issus de traités — des peuples autochtones du Canada sont reconnus et confirmés.

Definition of "aboriginal peoples of Canada"

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Définition de «peuples autochtones du Canada»

(2) Dans la présente loi, «peuples autochtones du Canada» s'entend notamment des Indiens, des Inuit et des Métis du Canada.

PART III

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PARTIE III

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

36. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

36. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART IV

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

37. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Conférence constitutionnelle

37. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART V

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

38. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

38. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue repré-

that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

sente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces. Majorité simple

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification. Désaccord

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte. Levée du désaccord

Restriction on proclamation

39. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

39. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord. Restriction

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification. Idem

Compensation

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

40. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 38(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement. Compensation

Amendment by unanimous consent

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters

41. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivan- Consentement unanime

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

tes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 43, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

42. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 41(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

42. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 38(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 41*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 38(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

43. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

43. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

Amendments by Parliament

44. Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

44. Sous réserve des articles 41 et 42, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

45. Subject to section 41, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

45. Sous réserve de l'article 41, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Modification par les législatures

Initiation of amendment procedures

46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

46. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 38, 41, 42 et 43 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Initiative des procédures

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Possibilité de révocation

Amendments without Senate resolution

47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41, 42 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

47. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 38, 41, 42 ou 43, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Computation du délai

Advice to issue proclamation

48. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions

48. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolu-

Demande de proclamation

required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Constitutional conference

49. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

tions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Conférence constitutionnelle

49. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART VI

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

PARTIE VI

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

50. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

50. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

The Constitution

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Idem

51. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

51. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

PART VII

GENERAL

PARTIE VII

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Primauté de la Constitution du Canada

52. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

(a) the Canada Act, including this Act;

(b) the Acts and orders referred to in Schedule I; and

(c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Constitution du Canada

(2) La Constitution du Canada comprend :

a) la Loi sur le Canada, y compris la présente loi;

b) les textes législatifs et les décrets figurant à l'annexe I;

c) les modifications des textes législatifs et des décrets mentionnés aux alinéas a) ou b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Modification

(3) La Constitution du Canada ne peut être modifiée que conformément aux pouvoirs conférés par elle.

Repeals and new names

53. (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of Schedule I are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

Abrogation et nouveaux titres

53. (1) Les textes législatifs et les décrets énumérés à la colonne I de l'annexe I sont abrogés ou modifiés dans la mesure indiquée à la colonne II. Sauf abrogation, ils restent en vigueur en tant que lois du Canada sous les titres mentionnés à la colonne III.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act, that refers to an enactment referred to in Schedule I by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in Schedule I may be cited as the Constitution Act followed by the year and number, if any, of its enactment.

Modifications corrélatives

(2) Tout texte législatif ou réglementaire, sauf la Loi sur le Canada, qui fait mention d'un texte législatif ou décret figurant à l'annexe I par le titre indiqué à la colonne I est modifié par substitution à ce titre du titre correspondant mentionné à la colonne III; tout Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique non mentionné à l'annexe I peut être cité sous le titre de Loi constitutionnelle suivi de l'indication de l'année de son adoption et éventuellement de son numéro.

Repeal and consequential amendments

54. Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Abrogation et modifications qui en découlent

54. La partie IV est abrogée un an après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie et le gouverneur général peut, par proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada, abroger le présent article et apporter en conséquence de cette double abrogation les aménagements qui s'imposent à la présente loi.

French version of Constitution of Canada

55. A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in Schedule I shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

Version française de certains textes constitutionnels

55. Le ministre de la Justice du Canada est chargé de rédiger, dans les meilleurs délais, la version française des parties de la Constitution du Canada qui figurent à l'annexe I; toute partie suffisamment importante est, dès qu'elle est prête, déposée pour adoption par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conformément à la procédure applicable à l'époque à la modification des dispositions constitutionnelles qu'elle contient.

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

56. Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 55, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de certains textes constitutionnels

56. Les versions française et anglaise des parties de la Constitution du Canada adoptées dans ces deux langues ont également force de loi. En outre, ont également force de loi, dès l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'article 55, d'une partie de la version française de la Constitution, cette partie et la version anglaise correspondante.

English and French versions of this Act

57. The English and French versions of this Act are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de la présente loi

57. Les versions française et anglaise de la présente loi ont également force de loi.

Commencement

58. Subject to section 59, this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Entrée en vigueur

58. Sous réserve de l'article 59, la présente loi entre en vigueur à la date fixée par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Commencement of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec

59. (1) Paragraph 23(1)(a) shall come into force in respect of Quebec on a day to be

Entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec

59. (1) L'alinéa 23(1)a) entre en vigueur pour le Québec à la date fixée par proclama-

fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

tion de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Authorization of Quebec

(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be issued only where authorized by the legislative assembly or government of Quebec.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (1) ne peut être prise qu'après autorisation de l'assemblée législative ou du gouvernement du Québec.

Autorisation du Québec

Repeal of this section

(3) This section may be repealed on the day paragraph 23(1)(a) comes into force in respect of Quebec and this Act amended and renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of this section, by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

(3) Le présent article peut être abrogé à la date d'entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec, et la présente loi faire l'objet, dès cette abrogation, des modifications et changements de numérotation qui en découlent, par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Abrogation du présent article

Short title and citations

60. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1981, and the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1975 (No. 2) and this Act may be cited together as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1981.

60. Titre abrégé de la présente annexe : Loi constitutionnelle de 1981; titre commun des lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1975 (nº 2) et de la présente loi : Lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1981.

Titres

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

MODERNIZATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
1.	British North America Act, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	(1) Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867." (2) Section 20 is repealed. (3) Class 1 of section 91 is repealed. (4) Class 1 of section 92 is repealed.	Constitution Act, 1867
2.	An Act to amend and continue the Act 32-33 Victoria chapter 3; and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Can.)	(1) The long title is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "Manitoba Act, 1870." (2) Section 20 is repealed.	Manitoba Act, 1870
3.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the union, dated the 23rd day of June, 1870		Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order
4.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting British Columbia into the Union, dated the 16th day of May, 1871		British Columbia Terms of Union
5.	British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)	Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1871."	Constitution Act, 1871
6.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the Union, dated the 26th day of June, 1873		Prince Edward Island Terms of Union
7.	Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.)		Parliament of Canada Act, 1875
8.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting all British possessions and Territories in North America and islands adjacent thereto into the Union, dated the 31st day of July, 1880		Adjacent Territories Order

ANNEXE I

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

ACTUALISATION DE LA CONSTITUTION

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
1.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	(1) L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé. (3) La catégorie 1 de l'article 91 est abrogée. (4) La catégorie 1 de l'article 92 est abrogée.	Loi constitutionnelle de 1867
2.	Acte pour amender et continuer l'acte trente-deux et trente-trois Victoria, chapitre trois, et pour établir et constituer le gouvernement de la province de Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Canada)	(1) Le titre complet est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé.	Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba
3.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Terre de Rupert et le Territoire du Nord-Ouest, en date du 23 juin 1870		Décret en conseil sur la terre de Rupert et le territoire du Nord-Ouest
4.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Colombie-Britannique, en date du 16 mai 1871		Conditions de l'adhésion de la Colombie-Britannique
5.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)	L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1871.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1871
6.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, en date du 26 juin 1873		Conditions de l'adhésion de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard
7.	Acte du Parlement du Canada, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1875 sur le Parlement du Canada
8.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant dans l'Union tous les territoires et possessions britanniques dans l'Amérique du Nord, et les îles adjacentes à ces territoires et possessions, en date du 31 juillet 1880		Décret en conseil sur les territoires adjacents

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
9.	British North America Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1886."	Constitution Act, 1886
10.	Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)		Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889
11.	Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
12.	The Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3 (Can.)		Alberta Act
13.	The Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42 (Can.)		Saskatchewan Act
14.	British North America Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1907."	Constitution Act, 1907
15.	British North America Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1915."	Constitution Act, 1915
16.	British North America Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1930."	Constitution Act, 1930
17.	Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.)	In so far as they apply to Canada, (a) section 4 is repealed; and (b) subsection 7(1) is repealed.	Statute of Westminster, 1931
18.	British North America Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1940."	Constitution Act, 1940
19.	British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
9.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1886.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1886
10.	Acte du Canada (limites d'Ontario) 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1889 sur le Canada (frontières de l'Ontario)
11.	Acte concernant l'Orateur canadien (nomination d'un suppléant) 1895, 2e session, 59 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
12.	Acte de l'Alberta, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 3 (Canada)		Loi sur l'Alberta
13.	Acte de la Saskatchewan, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 42 (Canada)		Loi sur la Saskatchewan
14.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1907, 7 Ed. VII, c. 11 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1907.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1907
15.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1915.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1915
16.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1930.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1930
17.	Statut de Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (R.-U.)	Dans la mesure où ils s'appliquent au Canada : a) l'article 4 est abrogé; b) le paragraphe 7(1) est abrogé.	Statut de Westminster de 1931
18.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1940.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1940
19.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
20.	British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
21.	British North America Act, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Newfoundland Act."	Newfoundland Act
22.	British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
23.	British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
24.	British North America Act, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Can.)	The Act is repealed.
25.	British North America Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1960."	Constitution Act, 1960
26.	British North America Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1964."	Constitution Act, 1964
27.	British North America Act, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Part I (Can.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1965."	Constitution Act, 1965
28.	British North America Act, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 38(1) (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1974."	Constitution Act, 1974

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
20.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
21.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi sur Terre-Neuve.»	Loi sur Terre-Neuve
22.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique (N° 2), 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
23.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
24.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Canada)	La loi est abrogée.
25.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1960.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1960
26.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1964.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1964
27.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1965.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1965
28.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par le paragraphe 38(1) de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1974.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1974

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Concluded

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
29.	British North America Act, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 31 (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975
30.	British North America Act (No. 2), 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Can.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975

And on the motion of Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Mr. Baker (Nepean—Carleton), in amendment thereto,—That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended by striking out paragraphs (e) and (f) of subsection 42(1).

ANNEXE I (fin)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
29.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par l'article 31 de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975
30.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique nº 2, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Canada)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975

Et sur l'amendement de M. Nielsen, appuyé par M. Baker (Nepean—Carleton),—Qu'on modifie le projet de Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 en supprimant les alinéas e) et f) du paragraphe (1) de l'article 42.

Madam Speaker: Before resuming debate, may I point out to the House that because of the amendment to the resolution adopted yesterday, a renumbering of the sections was necessary. Therefore a technical change will have to be made to the amendment now before the House in the name of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The amendment should amend Section 42 instead of 41.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, when the House adjourned last night, I was about to ask your permission to quote from a speech Henri Bourassa, the then member for Labelle, made in 1931 upon his return from a conference in London, in which he reported some comments by a member of the British House of Commons on the desire of Canadians to have their own Canadian constitution. Here is the account given by Henri Bourassa:

> To be perfectly frank, we are rather tired of all this talk about the independence of the dominions, and it is high time you people in Canada, Australia and elsewhere start to prove that you are really worthy of the concessions we are prepared to make. On the other hand, if you are afraid of some minor consequences this might have in your own provinces, you cannot expect us to have more respect for you than you have for yourselves.

That speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker. Henri Bourassa added in the same speech:

> Surely, the time will come when wisdom and self-respect in the Dominion or in the provinces will have reached a level where, with the concerted efforts of the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures, we shall be able to formulate measures with a view to exercising the right to amend our own constitution.

And that is exactly what happened when the accord was signed by the vast majority of the provincial premiers.

[English]

It will surprise no one, I am sure, when I say that I favour the early passage of the resolution. I do so, not simply because I am a Liberal and a supporter of the government; I do so because I am a Canadian with pride in this land, the most generous country in the world, with the potential for global greatness.

Some members of this House have come to this country from other lands and know from personal experience the immense value of the liberty we enjoy. Others, like myself, were born here and have developed their love for, and pride in, Canada through experience in wartime and the opportunity to look at their native land from overseas.

In my own case, I was born and brought up in the area of Quebec that I represent today in this House, in an almost totally French-speaking region. I was 18 and joined the Royal Canadian Air Force before I could speak English. Like many young men and women of my generation I was impatient with our leaders. I found it incomprehensible that Canada had no flag of its own and that we had to wear uniforms that were not identifiably Canadian in any way. I found it curious, and deeply disturbing, that I could not even risk my life for my country in my own language. I had to learn another language.

In this respect I share some of the background and experience of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) for whom I hold a high regard. We are Canadians of the same generation, he from Alberta and I from Quebec. He served, as I did, with the RCAF overseas and we entered politics—he as a Conservative, I as a Liberal—at about the same time and for the same reasons. I therefore identify myself closely with the moving remarks he made in this House on March 10 last and I share with him the view that bringing our Constitution to Canada after 114 years of nationhood is, for many of us, the fulfilment of a dream to make this nation whole, to give it a distinctiveness, a true Canadianism that is wholly our own.

Like the hon. member I, too, regard myself as a Canadian before first being a partisan politician, and a citizen of this country rather than of one of its regions.

[Translation]

I want to ask my fellow Canadians to make a commitment to this country to stand up and be counted as proud Canadians. Mr. Speaker, unlike what has happened in Europe during the last 50 years, we have not often been called upon to fight and risk our lives for our country. And although more than a million of us joined up during World War II to stop Nazi tyranny, those Canadians who did not want to go, simply stayed behind.

In the 35 years since the war, we have been able to count our blessings in one of the richest and most generous countries on earth, without pausing to consider our responsibility in turn. What have we done to deserve what we enjoy in Canada today? What can we do for Canada in return? You know, Madam Speaker, it is often said, and accurately, that to see your own country best, you must look at it through the eyes of an outsider. Try to imagine how Canada looks today to people of South and Central America, of Africa and the Middle East, of the crowded lands of Asia and the regimented societies of Eastern Europe. They must regard us with a mixture of envy and wonder—wonder that we accept our affluence and freedom so casually, as though they were our God-given right. In our selfish self-contemplation, we have neglected our wider responsibilities on the global scene by failing to respond adequately to the needs of other less fortunate people.

The world is calling on Canada today to show its greatness and generosity, to give leadership at the international level, and to share its good fortune with others. To meet those high expectations, we must first demonstrate our national unity and sense of purpose. This constitutional debate provides the opportunity to do just that. Since we started seriously discussing the question of having our own constitution, observers throughout the world have been wondering whether we have that quality of greatness we must have if we are to meet the constitutional challenge and the aspirations of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recalled a few days ago in Vancouver that the major problem in Canada was perhaps that too many Canadians find this country too big for them. We now have the opportunity to show the entire world that we Canadians are worthy of Canada and able to meet the greatest challenges. We did so in the past when we had to build a railroad from one end of this vast continent to the other. The Canadians who came before us succeeded magnificently in this endeavour. Other projects which Canada alone has tried have succeeded, and the last challenge that remains, Mr. Speaker, is for us Canadians to have a truly Canadian constitution, and this is an urgent task. The Canadian people are becoming increasingly impatient with their legislators. The day before yesterday, the Right Hon. Prime Minister transmitted an invitation to the people of Vancouver which I now repeat to all my colleagues and to every Canadian. If we are worthy of Canada, let us face and meet this challenge.

• (1220)

[English]

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are debating an amendment which would remove an insulting and degrading inequity in the resolution before this House which seeks to provide us with a made-in-Canada constitution. That inequity is inherent in the provisions of the amending formula for the proposed Constitution which would allow the extension of existing provinces into the two northern territories without their consent. It is degrading because it would enshrine in the Constitution of our country the revolting concept of a perpetual colonial status for the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: It is insulting because it would entrench in the Constitution the repugnant idea that there could be two different classes of Canadians with different political rights, depending upon whether they live in Canada north or Canada south. These two offensive clauses represent the threat of a possible grab by some of the provinces for northern resources which more properly belong to northerners and to Canadians as a whole. If retained in our Constitution, they virtually eliminate any hope that the two northern territories could evolve as a province, as did the rest of the country, and as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has explained. Thus, this resolution, in its present form, is offensive, repugnant and also ludicrous.

The resolution suggests that one Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and nine southern premiers could carve up the north in their so evident self-interest. It would create a Constitution drafted by southern Canadians which gives them rights denied to northern Canadians. I hope the premier of my province, Premier Bennett of British Columbia, can see the unfairness of this resolution.

Imagine the anger, the fury and the rage of those Canadians who live north of 60 who, by an act of this Parliament, would be condemned to perpetual serfdom and to perpetual colonial status unless these offensive clauses are withdrawn. I can relate to this anger because I experienced it while I was a resident of the Northwest Territories. I can relate to it because it is an anger similar to that felt in the west when the provisions of the original resolution laid before this House would have created different classes of provinces.

I can remember the rage British Columbians felt under the old resolution that British Columbia could be excluded from participating in any future constitutional change. I can remember the fury we felt about a resolution which placed the west under the shadow of submission to other regions of Canada, a shadow which this resolution casts over the 40 per cent of the country which represents our north. I cannot believe that hon. members of this House feel no shame in reserving for themselves and for provincial legislatures powers they are unwilling to grant the two legislative assemblies of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, either now or in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: It is the hope of my party that this unfair situation does not reflect the spirit of this House of Commons. It is certainly the hope of the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and the hon. member for Yukon that this House will ensure that their constituents have the rights which southern Canadians enjoy under a new Canadian Constitution.

The original resolution has now been amended to provide equal rights for women, partial rights for natives, and less rights for northerners. We now have the opportunity to correct this wrong. We can unanimously vote to drop these offensive clauses from the resolution. We are not simply talking about clauses; we are also talking about people. We are talking about the Pudluk family in Resolute, John and Vince Steen in Tuk, Terry Ryan at Cape Dorset, and the Amagoalik families in Frobisher Bay, Bill and Jessie Lyall and their four children at Cambridge Bay, and Ernie Lyall at Spence Bay. We are talking about Dick Hill, the first mayor of Inuvik, and his wife, Cynthia Hill, the current mayor of Inuvik. We are talking about Inuvik town councillors, Susan Husky and Alex Foreman, and the one-woman chamber of commerce at Teslin on the Alaska Highway, and Archie Lang, who operates the Watson Lake Hotel. We are talking about the chief at Old Crow, Charlie Able, whose wife told me about a tragedy in her family and said, "People don't think how I feel".

We are not thinking about how people feel in Coppermine, Fort Good Hope, Fort Franklin, Fort McPherson and Yellowknife. We are not thinking about how they feel if we permit this document to proceed in its existing form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: We are talking about Canadians. If members of this House are prepared to declare that these Canadians are to be enshrined as second-class citizens under our Constitution, we should be ashamed of ourselves.

We must act now to restore to the north the rights that we have reserved for the south if the concept of Canada as a nation is to endure. We in the House have the power to do this. We know how this inequity could be corrected. Twenty-two members of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, all fully elected, the majority of them native northerners, came to Ottawa to tell us to remove the clauses which are such an assault on their own legislative powers.

The Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories seeks a deletion of Section 41(1)(e) of the amending formula in the proposed constitution which provides for the extension of existing provinces into the territories. The Legislative Assembly sees this authority as an affront to its own legislative authority and an infringement of the democratic rights of the people of the Northwest Territories. Thus, the Legislative Assembly has requested that the power to alter boundaries be exercised as currently provided under the British North America Act of 1871. The Legislative Assembly also seeks the deletion of Section 41(1)(f) from the amending formula in the proposed Constitution, because this clause provides that, notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces can only be achieved with the consent of Canada and at least two thirds of the provinces, the total population of which exceeds 50 per cent of the population of Canada.

The position of the Legislative Assembly is that the right to establish new provinces out of existing territories is vested in the federal Parliament by virtue of the British North America Act of 1871 and that this power should continue to reside in the Parliament of Canada. The Legislative Assembly of the Yukon has unanimously endorsed the principle set out by their colleagues in the Northwest Territories.

The 22 members of the Legislative Assembly from the Northwest Territories and their colleagues in Yukon understand very well that these clauses would encourage a grab for northern resources by the southern provinces. They understand very well that this is a real threat because it has happened in the past. Unless these clauses are removed, it could happen in the future.

Last month in the House I described how the Northwest Territories have been defined entirely by the needs of southern Canada. I outlined how the original Northwest Territories was once composed of the area which now represents Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, northern Ontario, northern Quebec and the present Yukon and Northwest Territories. I described how the Northwest Territories, as we know it, is the residual area left after the creation of the prairie provinces, and after Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec had extended their boundaries north. Therefore, one can understand the very real concern of our northern territories.

• (1230)

I suggest that if we sell out the north we will sell out our self-respect as Canadians. We should never be a party to a document which would permit the extension of the provinces into the Yukon or the Northwest Territories without territorial consent.

Some may argue that amending the resolution at this stage might threaten the spirit of the accord reached by the Prime Minister and the Premiers. We can only ask ourselves why the Prime Minister and the nine provincial premiers would feel that discriminatory measures that were so unacceptable to them would be acceptable to people in the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: If this resolution passes in its present form, it will lead to a psychological and emotional isolation of northerners in their own country. If this resolution passes in its present form, I would say to the MLAs who came here from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and to my former colleagues George Braden, Nellie Cournoyea, Nick Sibbeston, Mr. Pudluk, Don Stewart, Arnold McCallum and all the others, that we have failed to protect the rights of our fellow Canadians in the north.

If we fail them, they would be justified in putting up the barriers on the Mackenzie highway keeping southern Canadians out. If we fail them, I would tell our northern colleagues to turn off the heat in the federal building in Inuvik, to turn off the lights in the federal offices and homes in Frobisher Bay and to send all federal employees from southern Canada back home. If we fail them, I would tell them to take over the airports at Resolute and Yellowknife and divert southern based traffic back there, sever the telecommunications link with the south and shut down satellite-delivered television. I say give the north back to northerners and put it beyond reach of the greedy grasp of the south.

If we pass a resolution which gives certain rights to some Canadians and denies them to others, then we will have destroyed the very foundation of this Parliament, this federal institution of a country which stretches from sea to sea to northern sea. If we pass this resolution unamended as an act of Parliament, it will be an act of contempt toward Canadians north of 60.

I urge members to right this wrong, remove this self-serving insult and ensure our self-respect as Canadians. I implore them to support our position that these degrading clauses must be removed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I ask whether the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) is in his seat? In order for the Chair to recognize him, he should be.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I apologize to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Chair as to the order of speakers to be recognized in this debate at this time? Can you tell me who is to be recognized next? Is it someone from the government side or are we to vote on the motion now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will try to assist the hon. member. A fiction has been maintained over the centuries that the Chair does not keep a list of speakers. I will recognize an hon. member who stands and wishes to contribute to the debate. If no hon. member stands, I will put the question to the House.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet spoken on this matter. I think there are some things that should be put on the record, especially when we are discussing the very important matter of whether or not the provinces are to be allowed to extend their boundaries north and take over the area that we know as the Northwest Territories.

I think we all realize that this is an area of the country that is in its developmental stages. We want to treat the northerners fairly and we want to protect their right to govern themselves. For that reason, I speak in favour of the amendment. It is not something which this House should countenance by putting forward the resolution as it now stands to give the potential to the House of Commons or the provinces to extend their territories northward by the simple drawing of a line. That would then take away from the northerners, the people about which my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), has spoken. They are the people who live in the north now and feel very strongly about their connections to Canada. These are the people in the north who want some day to have the right to attain provincial status. I think we are all agreed here that Canada is an emerging nation. Canada has been a nation for 114 years. We look forward to many, many more centuries as a nation. It would be wrong at this time for us to shut off prematurely any opportunity which the people in the Northwest Territories may have to form a province.

Ten provinces are involved in this exercise. Ten provinces felt very strongly about the amending formula. The provinces felt that the formula of regionalization of this country was wrong. We saw something very dramatic when the provincial premiers decided to take away that unfair amending formula in the original resolution, the unfair amending formula which gave a perpetual veto to Quebec and to Ontario, and I say that as a member from the province of Ontario. The perpetual veto given to Ontario was wrong.

For that reason, I think we should deal very carefully with this amendment. We should examine it closely and ask ourselves whether we want to be in a position to prevent the Yukon and the Northwest Territories from ever becoming provinces. I think it very important that we consider where we stand on this issue.

I want to touch on two other areas. As Canadians, what fair deal do we want for our children? Where are we going with respect to mineral rights? To speak about those issues more fully, I would like a little more time to prepare myself. Therefore, at this time I will relinquish the floor to another hon. member.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask a question of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis)? We understood yesterday that the proposer of the amendment, the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), had been consulting with provincial representatives to determine whether they would agree to his amendment. Someone from that side told me late yesterday that seven of the nine provinces involved in the accord were ready to go along with the amendment. Could the hon. member or one of his colleagues inform the House what the present status is of the consultations? In other words, how many provinces agree with the amendment?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in preparing my remarks to speak on this question, I did not have an opportunity to get involved in the many negotiations as to whether or not the provinces would agree to this amendment. I understand that the proposer of the amendment is now involved in a House leaders' meeting and it would not be fair or correct for me even to venture a suggestion at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Has the hon. member for Simcoe North now completed his remarks?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Edmonton—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the hon. member for Simcoe North rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I did not tell you that I had completed my remarks. I have in fact completed them, and I believe another one of my colleagues is ready to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I distinctly saw you recognize the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). I find it somewhat strange that you recognized him and although a point of order intervened, you are now recognizing another member.

Mr. Paproski: Are you challenging the Chair?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will try to ease any problems that may have been created. I do not understand the expression that the Chair was seen to recognize an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Are you challenging the Chair?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If the hon. member for York East is indicating that he had heard the Chair recognize the hon. member, there might be a point. In point of fact I did not verbally recognize the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) at all; I quite clearly recognized the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), whom I recognize again.

● (1240)

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I used the wrong words, but before the point of order by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), the only member standing in this chamber to speak was the member for Edmonton East, who was shuffling his papers preparing to speak. You said the words "the hon. member for Edmonton—uh", and perhaps the word "East" was truncated. I just wonder whether or not you should be—

An hon. Member: He never said "Edmonton".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He has rights too.

Mr. Collenette: Yes, the hon. member for Edmonton East should at least have his right to be recognized reserved.

Mr. Paproski: He can speak for himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Perhaps the Chair can once again make a contribution to this matter. There really is not a point of order that I know of, but I will dispose of the matter very simply. It must have been perfectly evident to all members present that on several occasions in the last few minutes I have looked to my right in the expectation that there might be an hon. member there who wished to take part in the debate; and in the absence of an hon. member rising to my right I have looked to my left. The Chair is in no way involved in any conscious selection of one member as opposed to another, or in any plan to approve of the recognition of one member or another.

I recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In summarizing, and in answer to the hon. member for York East, I would state that "I call 'em as I see 'em".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: You pick your own member and we will pick ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You look after your side and we will look after our side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to note the attention being paid by certain people who have not the slightest idea of what is happening or should be happening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: It is simply a matter of their wanting to show that they are here, possibly mischief-making.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: In so far as this present debate is concerned, I would think the two members who have been participating would go and hide their heads in shame. As I recall, just a little over a year ago when the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) was trying to be the busybody as Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, he was the man who was hustling us as well as his minister to get this resolution through the House. According to him, this was the best possible resolution. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) was there, I suppose, as the spokesman for his superior, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and they were imposing their original resolution and their will. Apparently they had been anointed by God, or touched by that wand of wisdom that had touched Moses. The resolution as it then stood was the best possible resolution to be given to man by their fellow man.

We have seen what has happened. I do not want to dwell upon this because the record will show a sorry, sad performance of backing, filling and trading of rights which has been declared to be sacrosanct, but when the chips were down the participants became as cynical in their haggling and trading of rights as a rug merchant in a bazaar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: What have we been doing? We have been considering amendments that are almost precisely the same as what was contained in Sections 28 and 34 of the original resolution—part and parcel in the beginning. Those rights were included at the time of public hearings. The Minister of Justice then had the gall subsequently to say "we gave you". How grandiloquent of them; how generous of them!

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Lambert: The parliamentary secretary says "right". He has not, nor has any minister of this government, an ounce of power or right to grant a right to a fellow citizen. The citizen has his or her rights, and it is not for the state or a representative of the state to grant those rights. That is the difference between the philosophy of this government and ours. The Liberals are "states rightists".

[Translation]

They are states rightists, obsessed with the theory that the individual exists for the benefit of the state.

[English]

We can expect that from the socialists because that is their morning porridge, and of course the two have been getting together. The socialist leader has been clasping the original resolution and charter to his bosom and saying "me too, me too!" That is what he said at the beginning, indicating clearly the philosophy that the state gives the individual his or her rights.

A constitution is that body of law given by the constituent peoples to the state for their governance, not some sort of body of law devised by a man or those in power granting rights to individuals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: That is what has been happening, and what has happened since October 1980 has shown the corrupt thinking of the whole process. We have reached this point, lurching this way and that way, where members of this House and colleagues from the Senate have heard from the people who appeared before the joint committee. The people were not supposed to be heard from, not at all. That was the doctrine of the NDP to start with. In the original instance they supported the timetable through the mouth of their leader who did everything but genuflect before the Prime Minister in his self-serving subservience to achieve, I do not know what.

This resolution and charter, which is not recognizable as the resolution in its original form, was supposed to be over in Britain by the first of July. Look at all the imperfections. I am glad the NDP did finally wake up and did put forward proposed changes, with a good deal of ability. Their chief representative was so sickened by the process that he broke from them and resigned from his position. During that time we did witness, through statements from the mouth of the Minister of Justice or the representative of the government in the Senate, the grudging granting or the inscribing into the charter the expression of a further right, here and there.

● (1250)

That was not a good performance on the part of Canadian legislators. There was a question of whether it was legal for the Government of Canada unilaterally to push through whatever they wanted, to turn black into white just because they said so. Our party said no, Canadians said no and the courts said no. I believe that the British Parliament would have given a resounding no. But that does not have to happen now.

Mr. Peterson: Vote against the charter if you do not like it.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) has always got a cheap contribution to make from his seat. I have not talked of the charter as it now stands. The charter now expresses certain rights. Because there was a compromise, it does not meet everybody's satisfaction. I believe people are entitled to say whether the charter expresses their rights properly. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have not been heard from. Few of their provincial legislatures ever held a debate or proposed a resolution in support of their premier for the views he put forward during the negotiations. Some legislatures, to their credit, were exceptions to that. During the last several weeks there seems to have been some sort of grand poker game going on, wheeling and dealing between ten people.

An hon. Member: That is your process.

Mr. Lambert: Again, this was what the hon. members on the socialist side of the House had been quite prepared to accept beforehand. We must remember that they protested very loudly once they saw the light, but their leader committed their party to a quick passage of the original resolution in which there were no aboriginal rights, no equality of the sexes, hardly any rights for the handicapped, and all the way down the line. The NDP was ready to go, grosso mode right out.

An hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to the present amendment, it is again manifestation of that centralist thinking bureaucracy. It appears to the public eye as though the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister are granting rights in a colonial way, as my friend, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) so ably pointed out a moment ago.

I visited the Northwest Territories in 1940 and the Yukon in 1957 and have done so certainly many times since. The feeling of those people and their resentment, which was so ably described by my colleague, is similar to the feeling felt in Alberta and Saskatchewan against the bureaucratic, centralist thinking in Ottawa, represented by ministers from central Canada. The bureaucrats and the members from central Canada cannot see that there is this violent objection to this patronizing colonialism which permeates government policy. It is a clear example of how the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon can have their territories emasculated without their consent. We saw it in Bill C-48, the oil and gas legislation.

An hon. Member: What about it?

Mr. Lambert: The parliamentary secretary says, "What about it?" I will tell him that Bill C-48 permits an outright plunder of the resources of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon before they are turned over to the people to whom they rightfully should be given in due course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: I have been told by Liberal members in all seriousness—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) allow a question?

Mr. Lambert: At the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to continue my comments.

[English]

Those resources which should rightfully belong to the people of the Northwest Territories today and in the future should not be stripped and spoiled by a money-hungry central government which would attach if it could as many milk bags on one cow and hook on to every teat in order to get all the possible milk it can. If the government could put pipelines into the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, they would do it. Those Liberals have told me that under a Liberal government those territories will never achieve provincial statehood. That is the view today. Those Liberal members may be speaking for the government and it is a philosophy that they portray and, naturally, they come from central Canada.

Mr. Laniel: The people of Canada voted for it.

Mr. Lambert: I suggest that there is nothing more tyrannical where people's rights are concerned than when there is a temporary majority.

We have seen a great deal happen here in the past year, generally to the credit of the system, notwithstanding the efforts of individuals who were representing the federal government and some of the provinces who wanted to rush along with this resolution. Canada would have been much poorer if we had not taken the time to make the amendments in the joint committee, at the Premiers' conferences and through bargaining with the federal government in this chamber. I hope that we will be able to make more amendments in uniquely federal jurisdictions where the consent of the premiers is not required, because this is the way Parliament should function.

This House and the Senate should not be rubber stamps to federal-provincial first ministers' conferences. That is growing into a convention in this country. I hope that we will see an end to it so that this chamber will be responsible for itself and arrive at decisions with a government that is responsible to it.

The parliamentary secretary wanted to ask a question. Perhaps we can get it in now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No, we cannot. It being one o'clock I do leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had the floor, and I think he had completed his remarks.

Mr. Lambert: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West for approximately two minutes.

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Speaker, never shall it be said that I have completed my remarks! However, in closing I wish to reiterate all the sentiments which were contained in that most tremendous speech last night by my colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I commend it to all members of the House and to whomever is within hearing range of my voice, because I think it represents a true sentiment.

In dealing with this question this House should be inspired by confidence in the new beginning, and there is even a glimmer of light—there may be a number of glimmers—for holding within the framework of Canada the province of Quebec. I am satisfied that the people of Quebec are within the whole federation. The people are, yes; but the government, no, because it had its principle of independence to begin with.

I want to pay particular tribute to all those who participated in getting the Constitution this far. There are some parts of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms I do not like. I do not like turning my life over to the courts and to interpretation by the courts. That is alien to our form of government and our social consciousness. That is something that is American.

Mr. Smith: Vote against the charter then.

Mr. Lambert: There is the other spirit now. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) says that if we do not agree with him 100 per cent and if we disagree with the Prime Minister even by 5 per cent or 10 per cent, we should vote against the charter. That is our alternative, but that is nonsense. That is the most foolish philosophy which could ever be adopted by any government in this country.

I trust that with some more amendments which the House will support and the amendments that are before it presently—and there may be one or two others which I would commend to the attention of the House—we could then accept this resolution and see it on its way, so that ultimately in due course we will have a made-in-Canada or resident-in-Canada Constitution. We have done pretty well for 114 years. Another few days, weeks or months will not make any difference.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the radiant glow of constitutional euphoria in which the Liberal government is at present basking because of the apparent success of the constitutional resolution and process so far, the comments I am about to make are not likely to be well received—about as welcome, I suggest, as a storm cloud about to obliterate the sun and drench the sun bathers in a lashing gale and hailstorm.

For openers, however, I wish to pay tribute briefly to the Progressive Conservative Party and our leader for the outstanding work we managed to accomplish since October 2, 1980 when the original resolution was revealed to the Canadian public. Time will not permit me to list all these accomplishments. I propose to summarize them, nonetheless, and to say that had it not been for the perspicacity and foresight of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and for the determined and unified opposition against that earlier proposal, ably led in this House and in committee by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), Canada would by now be strait-jacketed into a completely unworkable Constitution—if the British Parliament could have been persuaded to approve it in that earlier form, that is, having gone through the first intended process, namely, unilateral imposition through arbitrary decision.

Our leader and our party can take a great deal of credit for the following: first, alerting the Canadian people through insisting on open television coverage, of what exactly what was taking place in the committee; second, the appearance of expert witnesses; third, the inclusion of amendments which were at first refused; fourth, the extension of time which was at first circumscribed; fifth, the reference to the Supreme Court; and sixth, the meeting of the first ministers. That is not a bad record. It is one of which we can be proud.

However, as already indicated, we still have a defective document which will not accomplish what this government claims it will; that is, it will not provide Canada with a purely Canadian Constitution. To that matter I shall return, as I will to some other defects, shortcomings and false expectations, not to mention the illusory benefits which the government's advocacy advertising has either promoted or glossed over and made a number of Canadians believe.

I am having difficulty with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is riddled with defects. There are drafting defects as well as shortcomings. The charter gives rise, furthermore, to false expectations. It is a document which was hastily thrown together. What we are witnessing is amendment even as we debate.

However, one of my arguments is, given the nature of the three main elements this document contains—namely, a patriation formula in Schedule A, Section 1, an amending formula in Schedule B, Part IV, and a Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Schedule B, Part I—and given that the amending formula is so drastically changed and improved over the rigid one included in the original proposal, I am wondering now if we could not proceed with the patriation formula and the amending formula as a package for the British Parliament to approve and leave the charter, as it should be, a document which will be fashioned and approved in Canada in accordance with the approved Canadian amending formula. Why not? That is my first suggestion.

Mr. Waddell: What do you think we have been doing for the last year?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Let us go about this properly and in a Canadian way now that at last we have found a formula that can be accepted by "a substantial majority," as we were directed to do by the Supreme Court. Even the decision as to whether or not we really require a Charter of Rights and Freedoms—and I am not sure that is so—ought to be dealt with through the amending formula.

• (1410)

One of the reasons I make the suggestion is that, however you look at it, Schedule B of the resolution, once approved in Westminster, will be and will remain a British statute. Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms will be a British statute—it cannot be anything else—just as is the BNA Act. It is drafted in Canada, but the British Parliament is asked to approve it. There is no way out of that impasse. If one were to insist that the Charter be submitted to Westminster for approval, it will emerge from that Parliament as a British statute. That is not what I consider patriation.

I shall cite one example, Mr. Speaker. Do we know what we are doing when we in the Canadian Parliament, presumably supreme within our own domain, ask the British Parliament, I repeat the British Parliament, to provide in a British statute that this Parliament shall sit and each legislature of this country shall sit at least once every twelve months? We ask the British Parliament to tell us when to sit. Is that not something we should do in Canada?

Personally, I resent the very suggestion that now, with all the talk of being maîtres chez nous, masters in our own house, we should be bound by a British statute as to how, and how often, we conduct Canada's business. Should we ask the British Parliament to legislate in respect to provincial equalization and regional disparities, as Part II, of Schedule B suggests they are being asked to do? Have we no pride? Are we unable to stand on our own feet? Is the British Parliament being asked to do these things? I suggest it is, Mr. Speaker, and they are things we should be doing ourselves. Also on the matter of whether or not we should hold constitutional conferences, which is in Part III? We must all be out for lunch, and not at Mr. MacEachen's lunch either. In this respect as in so many others, this Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the promises made to the Canadian people about it are an utter sham.

It comes down to this: charters as such have me worried. I do not believe that freedoms, liberties and rights are advanced, much less guaranteed, merely by itemizing them. Most freedoms, most liberties and many rights, I contend, are inherent in us as human beings. They are ours from birth and remain ours unless we are deprived of them.

An hon. Member: By governments.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not within the power of the state to grant them or to confer them because the state has no such storehouse of rights on which to draw, not a single one.

Mr. Smith: Then vote against it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): However, the state, having sovereign power, can deprive us of our freedoms, our liberties and our rights and in doing so become tyrannical. That is the problem.

When we put these two notions together, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that rights can only be real and have lasting meaning when we consider them as limitations on the sovereign power of the state to protect individuals from the unfettered exercise of the power of the state. Or perhaps more simply put, as protection against unwarranted invasion by the state.

Blackstone, that great eighteenth century legalist, put it in this way: ". . . the principal aim of society is to protect individuals in the enjoyment of those absolute rights which were vested in them by the immutable laws of nature".

More contemporary expressions of that same attitude are to be found in the writings of Mr. E. A. Driedger, Q.C., a former deputy minister of justice of Canada, whom I have paraphrased somewhat in the foregoing.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms before us in this House, Mr. Speaker, is not drafted from this perspective. This Charter of Rights and Freedoms offends that approach to rights in that it reverses the relative place in the order of things as between man and the state. Blackstone and Driedger—and, if I may be so bold as to place myself in that company, I too—place the individual first and the state second. This charter has put things the other way. It was put together by people who believe in the supremacy of the state over the individual. Had it been otherwise, instead of saying what they do in Section 2, that "Everyone has the . . . fundamental freedoms . . .", and then it proceeds to list them, it would have been drafted in this way: "No act of Parliament, or of a legislature, as the case may be, shall derogate from the following fundamental rights and freedoms of individuals, unless the case is made that to do so is in the general or public interest". That is a hasty redraft of that Section 2. That puts the priorities in their proper place.

My proviso is a concession that is necessary to recognize that freedoms, liberties and rights are not unlimited—and I have never said they were—but must be subject to societal demands.

The Chair might think I have made more of a case than I needed to to demonstrate a different approach to rights. I consider the difference fundamental. I fear the results of subscribing thoughtlessly to provisions drafted by those whose ideas, concepts and driving forces differ so radically and fundamentally from that concept that rights belong to the individual and should be protected from invasion by the state.

I have other concerns with the substance of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that is before us, Mr. Speaker. Some relate to the wording but most relate to the risk that we are running in handing over to the courts the task of interpreting this document and, in consequence, of making the laws that Parliament should be making. In our tradition, Parliaments are our legislators. In this particular document we are about to hand over a large portion of that legislative responsibility to our courts. That worries me, Mr. Speaker, as it should worry not only parliamentarians but all Canadians.

Judicial interpretations of entrenched items in this charter will be, if I understand matters correctly, alterable only through the application of the amending formula. That will not be easy. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms will hand over to the courts much that was once within the power of Parliament to consider. This I consider regressive, Mr. Speaker.

I have spoken about what the British Parliament is being asked to do, and I consider it improper that it be asked to tell this Parliament when it should meet. On the other hand, Part IV, the amending formula, is properly a matter on which the British Parliament can decide, along with the passing of Section 2 of Schedule A by which the British Parliament formally and finally renounces any power it has to pass laws having effect in Canada. In other words, to remove itself from that role that it has played in the past. This is the essence of patriation with an amending formula.

I can see no other way of making Canada's Constitution a truly Canadian document, patriated, along with an amending formula that has a substantial measure of support, as the Supreme Court of Canada ruled was desirable; all the rest is for Canada to decide—by the Canadian Parliament and Canadian legislatures.

If we were to proceed in any other way we will still be governed by a statute—as I previously said, and it needs underlining because some people cannot see this—which is not fully and properly of Canadian make and has the full force of Canadian law behind it.

● (1420)

If I may be permitted a further comment, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a rather slipshod bit of drafting in the bill; it is one of its defects. Despite the fact that the clause in question has been before us for approximately 14 months, this defect has remained unchanged. I refer to Section 3 which provides that every citizen of Canada has the right to vote. I have a neighbour with two children, one eight years of age and the other six years of age. Both these children were born in Canada and are Canadian citizens under the Citizenship Act. The Canada Elections Act may well indicate that in order to vote, Canadians must have attained that age of 18 years by election day.

However, I submit that under Section 15 of the charter, legislation which discriminates on the basis of age could be contested. I consider this somewhat farcical. While the intent of the right to vote is clear, the method of expressing it is distinctly faulty and makes a laughing stock of the particular clause. I do not think the Constitution should be the laughing stock of the people who are supposed to accept it. If faulty drafting can be identified here in such an obvious context, how many other perhaps even more serious flaws may lie undetected in the 57-odd sections of the bill? I am not a lawyer; I just happened upon this particular defect. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) detected two defects concerning the extension of the provinces into the territories.

I have serious misgivings about charters and codes of right. They stem from my intellectual upbringing, relying on precedent, practice, convention and common law to determine the four corners at any given time within which I may exercise the rights I believe I possess.

Mr. Chénier: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I cannot understand why the hon. member is giggling. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) intervened on the original resolution. He expressed much the same thoughts, particularly as they referred to the inherent nature of our rights. I commend his speech to all within hearing distance of my voice. It can be found on page 7497 of the February 19 edition of Hansard.

As I have already said, it will be impossible to escape from the strait-jacket of entrenchment without recourse to the amending formula. This is a frightening concept. Perhaps I am repeating myself, but I think it is worth doing so. By my understanding of this term and its application, judicial interpretations are just as entrenched as the sections that are being interpreted. This gives judges the role of legislators which they were never intended to be.

I notice Mr. Speaker is becoming somewhat jittery; perhaps he is suggesting that I should sit down soon. I should like to refer to Section 24(2) which deals with the enforcement provisions. It rules out evidence in a proceeding for remedy against an infringement of an entrenched right or freedom, if it is established that "having regard to all the circumstances", which is a phrase that is surely open to judicial interpretation and appealable beyond the court where such a ruling was given, the admission of that evidence would "bring the administration of justice into disrepute". Again this is an open-ended phrase. What do those words mean? What will the judges say about them?

In the few minutes remaining I should like to examine the preamble because I think it is defective as well. There are three whereas clauses. Between the second and the third there is need for amendment. It overlooks the fact that there was an agreement in conformity with the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada. I suggest that the following two additions be made:

And whereas it is constitutionally required that this resolution have a substantial measure of provincial consent.

An hon. Member: Are these amendments?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am suggesting that there are defects. I am not proposing amendments, but I think the entire document is a sham. The second addition would read:

And whereas provincial consent to this resolution has been signified by the governments of the provinces of—

And the provinces ought to be listed. It would fulfil the requirement of the Supreme Court of Canada. We cannot rely on the British Parliament or on Her Majesty the Queen to follow our newspapers. It should be part of the document which is going to them. It should indicate that substantial consent is required and has been obtained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, indeed this is a surprise. I followed closely the remarks of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), but I could not quite understand whether he finds the Constitution so fatally flawed that he will vote against it. I almost gathered this from his speech.

I should like to say something generally about the Constitution and something precisely about the particular amendment of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). A constitution is more than a mechanical set of ground rules: it is a mirror reflecting the national soul. I agree with the last speaker that we must take time to make this the best document possible.

We in the New Democratic Party have consistently argued for three historic goals: patriation of the British North America Act, 1867, hitherto Canada's main constitutional document; an amending formula which would do justice to the regional diversity of Canada; and a charter of fundamental freedoms and rights. Today I had the opportunity to speak with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). On the basis of my experience as a westerner and partly as a northerner, and his experience from travelling around the country with the inquiry into the Constitution for years, we both agree that Canada is a difficult and regional country. But this is part of the greatness of the country. We wanted to see an amending formula which would do justice to the regional diversity that is Canada.

This is not new for us. It is consistent with the history of our movement, the movement of the CCF and the NDP. For example, in 1927 J. S. Woodsworth introduced a motion to patriate the Constitution. The same motion prompted the calling of the first constitutional conference which really began the entire process we now see culminating.

The New Democratic Party and its predecessor, the CCF, have a record in civil liberties unsurpassed by any political party. One need only mention our fight for the vote for Chinese Canadians, against the shabby treatment of the Japanese Canadians, as well as our opposition to the War Measures Act. On a provincial level, T. C. Douglas introduced Canada's first bill of rights in Saskatchewan in 1947. We have consistently fought against Canada's political colonialism to the United Kingdom. Today, every day in the House and in every committee, we fight against Canada's present economic colonialism to the United States. It is a consistent history. One would expect that we would welcome, support and advocate the government's thrust toward a new constitution.

I should like to put one matter to rest. The Constitution was made in Canada. It was made by 900 individuals who appeared before the committee, the presentation of 300 briefs and the work of approximately a hundred members. I should like to pay tribute in my speech today to the excellent work of the hon. Minister of State (Mr. Joyal), as able co-chairman of the committee, as well as that of the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) as members of the committee.

● (1430)

This Constitution was made in Canada and at every stage of the process Canadians wanted to make it a better and more contemporary constitution. That was always the resolve.

Some doubts were raised in the country about the legality of the process, so it was proper that the finished package be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. When the Supreme Court ruled that it was legal but not constitutional in the conventional sense, it was proper for this party to hold out for another first ministers' conference. That is history, Mr. Speaker. We had that first ministers' conference and in the end we had a document.

That document contains some improvements. For example, the Senate veto was deleted and that is an improvement. But it also had some fundamental flaws, Mr. Speaker. There were four—and perhaps a fifth one is this amendment dealing with the north.

The first fundamental flaw was the removal of the principle of equality between men and women. That was restored, however. The second flaw was that it removed an explicit and positive affirmation about native rights. That was restored, but only partly, because the word "existing" was added to Section 34. I want to speak further about that in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. That amendment was very symbolic for the native people and it is something upon which we can build. The third flaw is that the accord does not include Quebec.

The fourth flaw is that the charter has been somewhat emasculated. The principal concession that the premiers won from the federal government in the November 5 accord was the provincial override on fundamental freedom, legal rights and equality rights in the charter.

The purpose of an entrenched charter is to give the courts, in an open and direct manner, the authority they need to protect our basic freedoms if legislative and government restraint should fail. If legislatures are given the power to cancel that judicial authority, as they now have been, they are most likely to use it when there is a failure of restraint. Canadian history shows that it has been, by and large, the provincial legislatures and their creatures, the municipalities, that have most often violated fundamental rights.

I am a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, and I have appeared in every level of court in Canada on civil liberties cases and I have seen this pattern emerge very clearly. It is in our history, from Mr. Roncarelli's liquor licence to the Alberta press laws, most recently to the anti-parade by-laws in some of our cities which affect freedom of assembly. It is a sorry picture.

There have been violations of civil liberties in this country and if the legislatures are given an override, they may use it some time when restraint is called for.

A great lady who once represented my riding of Vancouver-Kingsway in this House, Grace MacInnis, told me that her husband, Angus MacInnis, stood up against a tidal wave of public opinion when it was proposed to confiscate the homes and property of Japanese Canadians and move the people away from the west coast during the war. I am afraid that could happen again and that is why I think it is unfortunate that we do not have an entrenched charter. We will have to live with that, however. We expected that some concession would be made to the premiers and this is it. I just want to express my disappointment about that, Mr. Speaker.

This is not the kind of charter that we, as socialists, believe in, Mr. Speaker. We believe that the hungry must be fed; the ailing must be helped; the old must be looked after and the young must be allowed to go as far as possible in school. These ideals are almost universally accepted. They belong in a twentieth century constitution but what we have here is a nineteenth century charter.

Socialists are concerned with the growth of the human spirit. This charter talks of freedom but we know that no one is really free if unemployed, if poor or if unable to send his or her children as far as possible in school.

Last weekend 100,000 people demonstrated on Parliament Hill. I think they were demonstrating for economic freedom in the interests of working people, students and pensioners.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if it is true, as it has often been said, that the Prime Minister and his liberal caucus are the most legitimate representatives of Quebec and that we can ignore the designs of the Quebec premier, Mr. René Lévesque, I ask myself a few questions. Why do the same principles and reasoning not apply to the other provinces? Have the aspirations of the premiers of anglophone provinces been brushed aside when they were inconsistent with those of the federal members from those provinces? Surely not Mr. Speaker. The Parti québécois may fail to reach its goal of Quebec independence but it will remain a political power in Quebec for several years to come. This is why it must be taken seriously, this is why we cannot allow ourselves to ignore the legitimate aspirations of Quebec merely because the Parti québécois is in power.

As federal Members of Parliament, it is our duty to be prudent. What should we do? I think that the federal Parliament should do its utmost to respect the traditional position of Quebec in constitutional matters. In April, 1981, Quebec agreed to a patriation project with seven other provinces. I think that this constitutional resolution should contain the basic principles of the agreement reached among those eight provinces. How could Mr. Lévesque reasonably object to such a resolution? To maintain the principle of two majorities in Canada, I would even be willing to consider the right for Quebec and for Quebec only to opt out of federal programs coming under its own jurisdiction and to receive a fair financial compensation.

[English]

We cannot say that the federal Liberals necessarily represent Quebec. It is not said of me that I represent the provincial interests of British Columbia; I represent national interests. If we are to take provincial interests into consideration, then we must carefully consider the government of Quebec. The Parti Québécois will not just go away. I suggest that in this regard we should examine the April accords and try to implement them. I have gone so far as to say that we may have to consider giving Quebec, but only Quebec, the right to opt out of programs with financial compensation.

The reason that I will vote for this package is that it embodies, not in a perfect way but in a general way, the picture that I have of Canada. I see Canada as two founding societies, the English and the French, built on the foundation of the aboriginal people. That is why we fought so hard to get Section 34 included.

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: That is what Canada is about. We have the native people included, and they can continue their fight; and we also have the French and the English. We recognize that it is important not to educate a bunch of old bureaucrats in the French language, but that we go to the kids, to the schools and to educational rights. That is where we should be going. Then we have added on the multicultural provision. The hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner), from the Conservative Party, spoke eloquently about how he came as an immigrant, as I did. We add that aspect and that is Canada, is it not? We put that foundation in place.

Before I conclude, I want to say a couple of things about this particular amendment. In the Rupert's Land Act of 1867, Parliament was clearly given jurisdiction over the Northwest Territories. Now, in light of that act, it is clear that the inclusion of Section 41(1)(e) and (f) is a violation of trust and an abdication of the federal government's responsibilities to the territories. By taking the power for themselves, the provinces have made an incursion into federal jurisdiction. Besides, when did we ever agree to grant provinces extraterritorial jurisdiction? That is what we are doing here. Why should the provinces of Canada be able to expand into the north? Why should they have a veto as to what happens in the northern territories?

I lived in Yellowknife for two years, I am a member of the bar of the Northwest Territories and I had an opportunity to travel throughout the north.

An hon. Member: Canadian bar?

Mr. Waddell: Not some of the bars which my hon. friends think of, there are legal bars there as well!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is there an illegal bar?

Mr. Waddell: In the north we have a unique opportunity to create different kinds of provinces. The Yukon has its own culture. I would like to see the Yukon as a province. I would like to see the Dene area of the Mackenzie Valley a province some day. I would like to see an Eskimo province in this country. Just think what that would mean to the world! Just think what it would mean to have Nunavut a province. I might say that I see the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) in front of me. In my chance to speak concerning the constitutional resolution, I want to pay sincere tribute to the hon. member. Sometimes he and I do not agree on everything, but I want to pay tribute to the hon. member because he has consistently fought for his constituency, his people, against long odds and he has been very successful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: In his speech on this very topic the other night, he continued to fight against these proposals in Section 41 of the Constitution. People wonder, what are the interests of most Canadians in the north? Most people live in the south or on the American border. They stretch five thousand miles across the country. They do not really live in the north. Yet even though most Canadians have not been to the north, they feel that they are northerners. We are a northern land, a northern country.

An hon. Member: The true north, strong and free.

Mr. Waddell: That is part of the Canadian culture. That is why there is always consistent public support in protecting the people of the north from the encroaching development which prevents them from getting a fair break. I ask the government to consider that when it votes on this particular amendment.

I notice my time is drawing to a close, but I want to back up what I said with the fact that Canadian culture and Canadian literature has always referred to us as northern people. We should not allow the possibility of expanding our existing provinces into the north; rather, we should work to create new provinces of the north-

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: —just as we will work to create new ideas of aboriginal claims and rights in the north and other parts of the country.

I want to end by a quote from my favourite poet, F. R. Scott. In a poem entitled "Laurentian Shield", he wrote the following:

Hidden in wonder and snow or sudden with summer
This land stares at the sun in a huge silence
Endlessly repeating something we cannot hear Inarticulate, Arctic
Not written on by history, empty as paper.

The Canadian dream of which I have spoken may still be elusive and undefined. However, in our own way, in this House of Commons, in this Parliament, with the premiers and in meetings, and with the good will of the people of this country who have tried to make this constitutional resolution better—let us remember the word "better"—we can find a little part of that Canadian dream and define it a little bit. We can add to that empty paper. We can articulate in the huge silence which is Canada, and that is what we are trying to do.

That is why I am supporting this constitutional document. That is why I am encouraging hon. members opposite to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Yukon, as spoken to the other night by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq, and, the other day, by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), and to let our northern territories develop into new and unique provinces to further continue the Canadian dream.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by expressing my thanks to my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative caucus for giving me another opportunity to speak to the constitutional resolution as this parliamentary debate draws to a close. We began with the introduction of the constitutional resolution in September of 1980. We have travelled some perilous waters in coming to the position in which we find ourselves today; that is, our constitutional accord which may, in the end, result in giving the people of Canada a new Constitution, made in Canada, with provisions governing rights of Canadians.

I realize that we have yet to vote in this House of Commons on the ultimate provisions of the constitutional proposal. However, the establishment of the accord between nine of the provinces of Canada and the Government of Canada gives hon. members in this House the opportunity to consider the constitutional provisions in the light of a consensus and agreement among the great majority of the Canadian people. That is something we did not have in September of 1980 when this constitutional proposal was first brought before the House of Commons.

For that reason, let me pay my respects to the work done by the right hon. member for Yellowhead and Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark). From the time the constitutional resolution was introduced in this House, the Leader of the Official Opposition made his position clear. That position was that the constitutional resolution did not result from a process of consent and concurrence.

The process followed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in bringing this resolution to the House of Commons did not involve, and was not the product of, agreement with the heads of the provinces with whom he had dealt in a first minister's conference. It was the lack of the following of that process which was raised in the House by the Progressive Conservative Party as being the major objection to the constitutional resolution.

Today we stand here with our leader, the right hon. member for Yellowhead, completely vindicated in the position which he took with the support of the Progressive Conservative Party, the official opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: If the people of Canada are not already aware, they should be made aware of the disaster which would have taken place in this country had this Parliament simply stood mute and not fought the Prime Minister and his party on their insistence in bringing forward a constitutional proposal which did not have the consent and concurrence of the provinces.

It should be repeated again and again across this country that it was the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who stood up to be counted in the face of the apparent popularity of the constitutional provision. The Prime Minister said time and time again that the people of Canada were behind him; but in spite of that bravado on the part of the Prime Minister, the opposition on this side of the House stood firmly behind its leader. Now we have the constitutional accord which will give real meaning to constitutional change.

• (1450)

The process of consent and concurrence must continue. The Government of Canada cannot expect to bring about substantial changes in the traditions, culture and heritage of Canadians without the consent and the involvement of the provincial governments. That is very much a part of our federal system. I hope the Prime Minister and his supporters in this House of Commons have learned a lesson over the last months and years in that the federal nature of Canada must be honoured in any constitutional change.

There has been a fight in Parliament. The position taken by those who fought that battle has been vindicated. I hope that we can now proceed in a common sense fashion to bring about a sensible conclusion to this constitutional process.

I must remind you, Mr. Speaker, and other members of this house that part of that fight was the stand which this Progressive Conservative Party took on the matter of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. Again the Prime Minister and his Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) stood both inside the House and outside of it and said that the Supreme Court of Canada had no role to play in the constitutional process. The Prime Minister and his Minister of Justice said that the constitutional proposals should go forward without any reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine its legality, notwithstanding the fact that in the past the government's proposal with respect to Senate reform had been pronounced unconstitutional.

Other legislative measures introduced by the government have been declared unconstitutional in the past and yet the Prime Minister failed to yield to those who cried caution and asked and begged that the matter be referred to the courts for resolution by the highest court of this land. It was only under pressure, again from the opposition and under the leadership of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, that we were able to convince the Prime Minister that the matter ought to be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Of course, everybody knows what happened once the constitutional proposal was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada said quite clearly that the proposal violated constitutional conventions. But what did the Prime Minister do? Did he respect the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada? No, the Prime Minister then commenced an argument as to the meaning, extent and involvement of constitutional conventions in the process of change. The Prime Minister was again proved wrong, I suspect not because of action in this House, but because he must have known that the United Kingdom Parliament would force him to act on the basis of constitutional convention, that the United Kingdom Parliament would not allow him to have passed in Westminster the constitutional proposal unless the constitutional conventions established by the Supreme Court of Canada were observed.

We then had the process before us which led to the accord between the Government of Canada and the provinces. It is that accord that we must follow and keep in mind as we consider the constitutional proposal now before this House. The Prime Minister himself in the past has indicated quite clearly that the constitutional proposal had two main parts. The first part was to bring the Constitution to Canada and make it subject to an amending formula which could be implemented within Canada and without reference to the United Kingdom Parliament. The second part was the establishment of a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I want to deal principally with the matter of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as enacted in the constitutional resolution. The legislative provision on human rights and fundamental freedoms is not new to the Parliament of Canada. In fact, the Canadian Bill of Rights was introduced in this House by the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker many years ago. As a result of the efforts of Mr. Diefenbaker, the Canadian Bill of Rights was enacted and became law. If you review that Canadian Bill of Rights today, Mr. Speaker, you will see provisions not much different from those provisions included in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

But, Mr. Speaker, you must ask yourself, what effect do those provisions have? Since the enactment of the Canadian Bill of Rights and over the years since then, when brought before the courts in attempts by persons to apply those provisions to situations which arose from time to time, the courts, and particularly the Supreme Court of Canada, have not championed the cause of human rights as enacted by the Canadian Bill of Rights. Time and time again the courts in their decisions have limited the application of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

When people talk about emasculating constitutional provisions and emasculating the charters of rights, that is indeed what has taken place over the years with respect to the Canadian Bill of Rights. That is my first and foremost concern. Will the provisions now contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will be given full force and will they be implemented across Canada if and when the charter becomes law. That will happen only if the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has the real support of the Canadian people. It is only today, as a result of the accord reached among the provinces and the Government of Canada, that I think there will be the kind of acceptance on the part of the Canadian people that is necessary to give real meaning to the provisions of this charter.

I would like to review some of the provisions of the charter which I think are of real importance and could bring about just results in situations where in the past injustice has occurred. I have particularly in mind the provisions relating to handicapped persons. Anyone who has followed the plight of handicapped persons in Canada will know that in many practical and theoretical ways they have been deprived of their rights. Our charter now contains a provision which will guarantee handicapped persons equality with all citizens of Canada. I wonder if the people of Canada and indeed even members of this House, realize and recognize what that means. It means in one way the simple provision of access to buildings so that a person in a wheelchair can go into the same places as a person who has the full use of his or her legs. That physical access can be easily provided.

But what about the other problems facing the handicapped? Will our schools across Canada be willing to admit children with handicaps? It will be very difficult to bring handicapped children into the classroom in which other children, are taught—those who might be said to be normal children. If handicapped children cannot be brought in and integrated into the educational system and have exactly the same privileges and treatment as children without handicaps, this provision will be meaningless.

I can say from past personal experience that the implementation of those provisions will cost thousands and thousands of dollars, perhaps millions and millions, in the provinces of Canada. I hope that when we rise to vote on this constitutional resolution and endorse the rights which we are now giving handicapped persons, we will do so in the full realization that in order effectively to implement those rights millions of dollars of public funds will have to be expended.

I can say the same thing about native persons. In this Charter of Rights and Freedoms, if it is enacted by this House, we have given special rights to native persons. To implement those rights we are now giving to native persons will mean a massive, expenditure of public funds, so as to equate the position of native persons with that achieved by other Canadians. I hope we are ready for that.

We are giving special rights to women by way of a provision that will ensure that women have equal rights with men. I am sure all Canadian women can tell you of many instances during their lifetime when they have been deprived of rights. Again we must face the fact that in order to implement any special rights, such as the right of equality we will be giving women, we have to face the challenge of implementing those rights.

• (1500)

Members of this House from the province of Nova Scotia, particularly my good friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), were surprised to learn a few weeks ago that the government of Nova Scotia had some concerns about giving full rights to women. We have come to learn that this involved a technical matter and the legal drafting of the measure, and that there was never any intent on the part of the government of Nova Scotia to refuse to give women across Canada equality of rights.

However, I do want to go a step further. I have said publicly, and I repeat now, that the challenge to the government of Nova Scotia and, indeed, the challenge to all provincial governments and the Government of Canada, is not to stop at merely enacting a provision that gives equality to women, but to proceed to implement that right and ensure that women receive their just and fair treatment in Canada in all phases of life. I cannot repeat too often the need to challenge governments, having given rights to the people of Canada, to ensure that those rights are implemented and given real meaning.

There is an area not expressly a part of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms that is very important to persons in Eastern Canada, and that is the question of equalization and regional disparity. The constitutional resolution contains a provision in Section 35 guaranteeing the removal of problems which have in the past created regional disparities. The same provision indicates that the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada will promote equal opportunity for the wellbeing of Canadians, and will further economic development to reduce disparity in opportunity and provide essential services of reasonable quality to all Canadians. The area of Atlantic Canada has suffered in the past in this regard. Again the challenge to the Government of Canada is to implement this provision which is about to be enshrined in a constitutional resolution.

I have to say that it does not look to me at this point in time that the government takes that challenge seriously. The government is willing to bring forward a provision and include it in a constitutional resolution, but is it ready to go forward with the economic measures and initiatives required to bring about real equality among the regions of Canada?

I look across the House and see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and I am reminded of the record of the Canadian National Railway Company. In 1867 the national railway line was very much a part of the confederation proposal. Confederation was built around a transportation system that would give to all areas of the confederation equal access and equal opportunity to trade goods and otherwise deal with various parts of the confederation. Some 115 years later that transportation system is in jeopardy.

At the port of Halifax, for example, as the minister knows, we are suffering from the inability to transport goods, particularly in containers and in other forms of cargo containers, from the port of Halifax to Central Canada. The only practical link is the Canadian National Railway Company. What does the railway company do? It places rates on that freight transportation which make it impossible for many marine transporters to compete effectively. How can we take seriously a constitutional provision intended to develop equal treatment and remove regional disparities when right this very day we have allowed our national transportation company to fall to the position where it cannot create at least that level of equality of transportation services?

We have before us at the present time, at the initiative of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), a proposal to remove from the constitutional resolution those provisions which would give to all the provinces and the Government of Canada the right to decide whether the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories can become provinces of Canada. If that amendment succeeds in passing through the House, then the right to create new provinces will belong solely to the Government and the Parliament of Canada, as has been the case in the past. I support that proposal, and I support it because—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I merely wish to say in conclusion that I support the proposal the hon. member for Yukon has initiated because we have a similar problem in the province of Nova Scotia. We want to expand our boundaries in order to include within our province the submarine lands, which we believe are rich in natural resources and which we believe are rightfully claimed by the province of Nova Scotia. This goes to the right of self-determination among the regions and provinces of Canada, and is very much an important feature of any constitutional change; that is, giving the people of an area the right to determine their future. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand in the House this afternoon to speak about the Constitution of Canada. I should like to begin by paying tribute to the right hon. leader of the Conservative Party and to my colleagues in this party on this side of the House. I think that tribute is warranted because we would not be here in the month of November 1981, dealing with this basic resolution, which is so very different from the one we first saw in October 1980, had it not been for the leadership given by that former Prime Minister of Canada who sits in this chamber on this side of the House. He has had that experience and that awesome responsibility as head of the Government of Canada. It was that experience as well as his experience from the years before that perhaps provided him with the wisdom and common sense needed to recognize what was wrong with the original package.

May I suggest that it was not just the content of the original package which was at fault but, and this is perhaps clear to most Canadians, that unilateral process which ran against the very nature of this country and which has run as a thread throughout our discussions on the Constitution both in this House and in the committee. I am pleased to be able to stand this afternoon and indicate to Canadians that this unilateral process was stopped and we returned to the Canadian way of resolving conflicts. As a result, we were able to reach an agreement among the nine provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Once that initial barrier was overcome, we subsequently found in the House of Commons a remarkable degree of agreement on some very basic issues. This would indicate that the charter and the resolution itself were still flawed. We are engaged here this afternoon in the process of trying to correct it further.

• (1510)

For me, the word Canada suggests something clearly greater and more significant than the sum of its parts. I think we should acknowledge, especially in the House of Commons of Canada, that our nation is truly blessed, both in the quality of the people who live within it and in the resources which are available to every Canadian. I believe it is equally true, as our leader often says on public platforms to Canadians, that we are a community of communities. What he is reflecting is the basic reality of this nation. What he is speaking to is our vast distances, the different political choices in many of our provinces and regions. What he is trying to communicate to Canadians is the necessity for every member in the House, and hopefully every Canadian, whatever their origin, to be sensitive and never forget how large this country is and how varied those of us who live in different parts of Canada are.

When we cease to be sensitive and try to move unilaterally, when decisions which are binding on all parts of Canada are made from the centre, and as the distance from Ottawa increases, the sensitivity to those decisions decreases. The rhythms which result are frequently dangerous and run counter to the essential nature of Canada and, I believe, counter to the reality of Canada in the future.

If we are not sensitive to each and every part of this nation, we run the risk of putting intolerable pressure on parts of this nation. We run the risk of giving cause to those who would separate us in this nation. That is true of Quebec today and that is true of the people in my province because of the tensions we have experienced over the last 12 months. Those tensions were real and were caused by nothing more and nothing less than the public perception of a lack of sensitivity to those parts of Canada which are somewhat different than the centre.

I suggest to members of the House that it takes a long time for public perception to grow and for the public to understand accurately what it is that we sometimes debate in the House for too little time.

The major feat which this party accomplished on behalf of the Canadian people was really nothing more and nothing less than time for the Canadian people to begin to understand what the constitutional resolution was all about and time for Canadians to mobilize and bring pressure to bear on the people whom they elect and give them, if you will, a sense of public's will and a sense of the need for change. That is what the filibuster brought on behalf of the Canadian people.

I believe that this week has been an important one in the history of this nation, and the common ingredient again is time. People who care, who are knowledgeable and who live in all parts of this country have used that time to put pressure on their provincially and federally elected members to continue to change and try to improve this resolution before it becomes the basic law of our country.

If it was true in October, 1980, that we needed time, I stand in the House this afternoon to say that I do not think we need much more time, but we do need some. I wonder how future members of this chamber will feel ten years from now if they look back on what we are doing here today and wonder if a few hours or a few days would have given a little more time for the Canadian system to work, more time for the people of Quebec, for instance, to find out exactly what this constitutional resolution is about and to bring pressure on the people elected from the province of Quebec to improve it so they could be signatories of the resolution.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I may be so discourteous as to interrupt the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I believe the government House leader has a proposal that he wishes to advance, if that is acceptable to the hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that there is unanimous consent to allowing me to move the following motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, following a proposal made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and following the House leaders' meetings which followed this proposal made on the floor of the House this morning, I am happy to report that we have come to an agreement on the following motion. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the motion of the Minister of Justice for an Address to Her Majesty the Queen concerning the Constitution of Canada (Government Orders, Government Business, No. 56), notwithstanding any Standing or other Order, be disposed with as follows:

1. The first member to be recognized after the amendment to the said motion proposed by the honourable member for Yukon has been disposed of shall be the honourable member for Rosedale who shall propose an amendment.

2. All questions necessary for the disposal of the amendment proposed by the honourable member for Rosedale shall be put without further debate no later than 4.30 p.m. this day.

3. After the disposal of the amendment proposed by the honourable member for Rosedale the first member to be recognized shall be a member of the Progressive Conservative Party who shall propose an amendment relating to fiscal compensation of provinces and the next member to be recognized shall be a member of the New Democratic Party who may propose a subamendment.

4. Not later than 8.00 p.m. on Tuesday, December 1, 1981, a member of the Progressive Conservative Party may propose an amendment relating to section 23 of the resolution.

5. Notwithstanding any Standing Order or ruling or practice, at 10 p.m. on Tuesday, December 1, 1981 an amendment that is the same as the subamendment proposed by the honourable member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands on November 26, 1981, but found to be out of order, shall be deemed to have been moved and to be in order.

6. Except as provided in this Order, no other amendments may be proposed, provided that this shall not be interpreted as preventing the proposal of sub-amendments.

7. At 3 p.m. on Wednesday, December 2, 1981, the Speaker shall interrupt whatever proceedings are under consideration and shall put, forthwith and successively all questions necessary to dispose of the aforementioned Government Order without further debate or amendment.

● (1520)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely as agreed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add that I too find this motion in order, and I am happy to see the end in sight.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair to the House leader. I had made it known that I insisted on having the right to speak in this debate because I have a special position on certain sections, and the House leader did guarantee me that right to speak. However, I must say that by merely listening in the House to the whole motion which is a long, complicated motion, it is hard to grasp, and I wonder if it is necessary that we agree to it immediately. Could we not circulate it so that we could read it, and then agree to it perhaps in five or ten minutes? I do not suggest for one minute that the House leader is trying to mislead me in any way, but I feel I have an obligation to read the motion to make sure my rights are protected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This places the Chair in and awkward position. Either we have a motion or we do not have a motion before the House. However, for the benefit of the hon. member, I will read the motion through again.

It is very difficult to entertain a motion and then not to entertain a motion. There is a motion before the House, and I think it should be accepted or disposed of now.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I can reassure my colleague, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). What he says is correct. I promised that he would have an opportunity to speak before the end of the debate. I even told him—and I have no hesitation in saying so publicly—that there is a possibility, not a guarantee because that kind of guarantee cannot be given to any member, and as far as I am concerned I will not raise any objection, a possibility for him to move a subamendment to Section 23 of the constitutional resolution, keeping in mind Section 4 of the agreement. In these circumstances, whether we need five or ten minutes to vote on the resolution, I have only one word and again I say to the hon. member that I cannot guarantee that he will be given an opportunity to move a subamendment, it is possible he may have that opportunity, but one thing for sure is that he will be entitled to make a speech before the end of the debate on the constitution.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not ask of course for a guarantee that I be allowed to propose an amendment. I merely asked about the possibility to do so. To ask for a guarantee I would have to sit here every hour of every day the House is sitting. It is my responsibility to be here and to take advantage of the opportunities open to me, but as long as I have the possibility and the guarantee to speak in the debate, I will agree to the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I think that, according to the motion, that possibility does exist. Before putting the motion to the House—

[Translation]

Mr. Duclos: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) on a point of order.

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, I had told the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that I would agree to any motion that would require unanimous consent if I were allowed to move in the House an amendment concerning Section 37. I am not saying I suspect the intentions of my colleague the President of the Privy Council, I simply want to be enlightened because I did not quite understand the full consequences of the motion.

Mr. Pinard: I can clear this up by saying that the hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) was kind enough to give me his word that he would never refuse to accept any agreement whatsoever in this House. I took his word for it and I accept it. If he wants further clarification I will be very pleased to sit down with him in a few minutes, after the motion has been adopted, to explain it to him. If he wants to speak in the debate I will ask the chair to give him an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, it is not just a matter of having the guarantee to speak in this debate. I had also indicated my intention of moving an amendment to Section 37 on the amending formula. In any event, I shall respond to the invitation extended to me by the President of the Privy Council and I am sure that we can come to a gentleman's agreement.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Before putting the motion there would have to be unanimous consent to dispose of the private members' hour, since this motion calls for a vote at 4.30. Is that agreed?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions on that, and we do not want in any way to impinge on private members' hours. So I think we are all agreed that whatever time this matter takes, the private members' hour shall continue this evening for a full hour. Its commencement is dependent upon the disposition of the first parts of this House order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed that, no matter when the vote on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) would take place, there would be a full hour for private members' business, and although the motion says 4.30, I am sure that out of courtesy, if we need a few extra minutes to end the speeches, we could have them by unanimous consent.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is it agreed that the Chair will not see the clock at four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, now we put the question on my amendment now before the House.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This morning I asked one of the speakers from the opposite side of the House if there would be a report on the discussions with the provinces. I understand that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was seeking agreement to his amendment from provincial governments, and I would like to know what sort of consensus or agreement he has from the provinces. Is he suggesting that we break the accord, or does he have agreement to do that?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to answer for the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but as far as the business of the House in concerned, I want to indicate that by order of the House you must now put the amendment moved by the hon. member for the Yukon. I have no objection if he wants to reply to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We should hear the answer to that particular question. It is very relevant to this vote, and we should not cut it off. I suggest that we seek the unanimous consent of the House so that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) can answer the very relevant question posed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Nielsen) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 128)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blaikie
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cooper
Corbett
Crombie
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Deans
de Jong
Dick Dinsdale
Epp
Forrestall
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gurbin
Gustafson
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kilgour
Kristiansen
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
Malone
Manly
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McKnight
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murphy
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Sargeant
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Siddon
Skelly
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Young—85.

NAYS

Messrs.

Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Comtois
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Fox
Garant
Gauthier
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
(Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis—117.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

● (1600)

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose and speak to the following motion:

That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended by adding after Clause 31 of Part I the following new clause:

"32. Nothing in this charter affects the authority of Parliament to legislate in respect of abortion."

The other day, the hon. member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question with respect to this matter. The Prime Minister responded in this fashion:

If the essence of the question is whether this House continues to have the right to deal with abortion, Madam Speaker, the answer is yes. It will be the Parliament of Canada which will still be writing the Criminal Code, and members of this House will have the responsibility, and I wish them well, in dealing with the problem of abortion.

In my view, all sides of the House and, indeed, Canadians across the country, want to ensure that Parliament has the right to legislate if any changes are deemed necessary with respect to the law on abortion. The difficulty for a great number of Canadians is that conflicting legal difficulties throw that matter into doubt. We want to make it clear that Parliament's freedom to legislate on this matter is unimpaired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: That is the purpose of the amendment, and there is no other. Abortion is not merely a legal matter, and it is not only a medical matter; it is both. For many people it is also a moral question. Those who believe in, and call themselves Pro-Life, have a strong moral conviction that life begins at conception. They hold a deep and abiding reverence for the sanctity of human life. They even have difficulty with the existing legislation. Those who believe in, and call themselves Pro-Choice, believe, as stated in I Corinthians, that the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit; therefore, they believe that abortion and the question of abortion is a personal and individual responsibility. They hold that conviction so strongly that they have difficulty with the existing legislation.

Many of us on all sides of this House and throughout the country represent constituents who understand and agree with at least some parts of both of those positions. Indeed, it has been my experience that when Canadians themselves deal with the matter of abortion in specific situations, they approach the matter with soul-wrenching honesty. They try to do the right thing and they try to choose the good. They try to do what they ought to do.

If Your Honour has ever been involved in any specific circumstance, you know that there is a desperation concerning the question of abortion as people strive to get a moral perspective in dealing with the onslaught of circumstance. That is why the vast majority of Canadians approach the matter with a feeling of individual responsibility to themselves, to their families, to their communities, and to their God, taking into consideration their reverence for life. That has been my experience; but it may not be the same for all at all times.

There are some people who think that abortion is only a medical matter and that it is devoid of any moral context. There are others who think that there are no moral, theological or compassionate grounds for the act of abortion. It is not my purpose, in this amendment, to evaluate or judge any of those perspectives. I want to ensure that these perspectives will be heard when the question is raised in the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: It took 350 years to establish the parliamentary system where legislation governing our actions with respect to life and death would be determined not by those appointed by the state but, rather, by those elected by the people themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: None of us disagree on that: not the Liberals, not the New Democrats, not the Conservatives, not Pro-Life, not Pro-Choice, and not anyone in the middle. We all agree that Parliament must have the freedom to decide. The purpose of this amendment is simply to make sure and make clear to all that that is, indeed, our intention.

For those who have doubts about the matter being in the Constitution, this will lay to rest their fears. For those who do not have any doubts, it should give them no problem because this motion does not alter the substance of the charter one whit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Through this amendment, I am simply making explicit what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister made implicit yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Moreover, I should add that since the amendment deals only with the Parliament of Canada, it should not have any effect on the accord between the federal government and the provincial governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I would also like to say that in my view this amendment strengthens the charter. It will remove doubt from those who would like to be able to support the charter, just as we removed doubt in Section 28 when Parliament restored equality to full guarantee, as no override is contained in that section. Finally it agreed with the ancient Chinese philosopher that women hold up half the sky, therefore confirming that in this country there should be clear equality between women and men.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: We have also removed the doubt concerning Section 34 and native rights, as many people in on both sides of the House are attempting to do with respect to the doubts raised in the Province of Quebec.

When I was asked if I might speak on this motion, I prepared some notes. I do not mind saying that a number of people got in touch with me. Although they agreed with the substance, they asked why I was doing it since I was not directly involved with the issue and had not participated on behalf of my party on the issue. I make these comments today and, in a sense, put my neck on the line because I believe in this Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: What about the accord?

Mr. Crombie: I believe in the accord.

Mr. Chrétien: You believe in the accord?

Mr. Crombie: The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is very important, not because it will deliver immediate realities tomorrow, but because it contains articles of faith and testimonies of hope for the people whom this Constitution governs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1610)

Mr. Crombie: This charter not only sets down the rights, the freedoms and the privileges for which generations of Canadians have fought and died, its provisions also extend to Canadians who until now have had great difficulty understanding that in this country they had an equal stake in the future. This charter allows those people to come into the Canadian home. What I want to do through this amendment is to allow the doubters to come home. I want to allow the doubters to come home and support this charter.

The story of Thomas is an old story, but it was Jesus of Nazareth who told us that it was necessary to go with the doubters one more time, to go with the doubters that one extra mile. That is the purpose of this amendment.

This charter was built by all of us. It is not the product of the Liberal Party of Canada, it is not the product of the Conservative Party and it is not the product of the New Democratic Party alone. I served on the constitutional committee and I know that this charter is the product of all of us. It is not a triumph of one group over another. It is not a triumph of one view over another. This charter moves us one giant step closer to the goal of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker in 1961 when he stated that his reason for having an entrenched charter of rights was as follows:

> I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country.

Therefore, I can decide the questions that are vital to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this motion causes difficulty, and it was not my purpose to cause difficulty. I ask the government to consider my motion. It is a simple one. It allows those who want to support this Charter of Rights and Freedoms to be able to support it once they have been assured that the Parliament of Canada, not the courts alone, will deal with the question of abortion.

I want to emphasize that all of the groups, no matter on which side of the question they are, want Parliament to decide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I see the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) rising on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a brief question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the comments I am about to make regarding this particular amendment, including various reasons why I feel the amendment is redundant, I should also like to take this opportunity to explain the government's general position with respect to amendments that are presented to the House at this stage, undoubtedly for perfectly good reasons, with a view to further improving the charter. Of course there is room for improvement in the charter like everything else that is made by man, and we admit as much. However, I would like to suggest to the House that at this stage, any further amendment such as the one presented by the hon. member opposite and the one that has just been defeated and which was moved by the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), is actually a threat to the accord concluded on November 5 which finally gave us our own constitution amendable in Canada with a charter of rights, of which a member of the opposition has just said that it was very good in its present form.

I shall first address the substance of the amendment. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has explained several times in this House, in point and verbally on other occasions, that in his view, which is supported by his own Department of Justice, the charter is at this point in time neutral with respect to abortion. In other words, the charter does not say whether abortions will be easier or more difficult to practise in the future. The charter is absolutely neutral on this matter, and according to the interpretation of senior officials and agents of the Department of Justice and according to the minister himself, under the constitution the House retains the right to amend the Criminal Code, which is the statute affecting the issue of abortion. So, as I said yesterday, I believe, in answer to a question by the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), the House will probably have to decide in the weeks, months or years ahead, depending on the wishes of its members, whether the Criminal Code should be amended to make abortion less readily or more readily available. The onus will be on us. This, Mr. Speaker, is to reassure those who feel that under the charter we are losing some of our rights with respect to abortion. However, as I said yesterday to the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, should a judge conclude that on the contrary, the charter does, to a certain extent, affect certain provisions of the Criminal Code, under the override clause we reserve the right to say: Notwithstanding this decision, notwithstanding the charter of rights as interpreted by this judge, the House legislates in such and such a manner on the abortion issue.

Mr. Speaker, that is our general argument. Moreover, towards the end of his speech I heard the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) say that there were still people who had some doubts about this, and he said, and I hope I am quoting him correctly:

[English]

"We want the doubters to come home. "We want the doubters to feel reassured as a result of this charter, and, therefore, I am proposing an amendment relating to abortion".

Once again I think what the hon. member is doing is being done with the utmost of good faith. But I wonder why he does not also attempt to satisfy doubters with regard to the question of capital punishment. Maybe the right to life, which is guaranteed in the charter, in some way affects the possibility of restoring or abolishing capital punishment. There are certainly some doubters on that point. I see some hon. members in the backbenches behind the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) nodding in assent.

What about the question of euthanasia? It also affects the right to life. Why do we not say that nothing in this charter prevents us legislating on that? What about genetic engineering? What about all the doubts that will arise on every other subject? We have the right to have conscription, maybe; the right to send men to war to kill other people or be killed themselves. All these things may cause doubt in some people's minds.

● (1620)

This is to say, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot expect in advance, in the short time we have, without the test of the application of this charter in the courts and without some experimentation with its effects, to bring all the doubters home, as the hon. member would like to see us do.

I will go on to another argument which once again affects not particularly this amendment but others. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has handed me several pages of argument to the effect that this amendment is not only unnecessary but could, indeed, be harmful because, by excluding from the charter the right to do something as regards abortion, lawyers and judges might be inclined to conclude that since we made that exclusion for abortion and did not make it for euthanasia, capital punishment and so on, therefore the charter itself precludes the Parliament of Canada from legislating in those areas.

That is just one of the many arguments the Minister of Justice has just handed me. I will not go into them at this stage. They are all good, but it seems to me we have another reason which does not affect only this amendment, but which affects the amendment moved earlier by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and no doubt will affect other amendments which will be moved in the course of today, Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday. I want to explain the attitude this party has as regards those amendments.

When I was meeting with the ten provincial first ministers on November 3, 4 and 5 I was meeting them not only with the desire of this party but with that of others to seek one final compromise, which I must say in my own heart I was not very optimistic about reaching, though I was very determined, as was the Minister of Justice who was assisting me, that we would ago as far as was conceivably possible to try to make an accord possible. Not only was that argued on this side of the House, it was a very firm enjoinder of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), who made strong, I would say almost vociferous, statements to the effect that if we went there and did not negotiate in good faith, they would fight us tooth and nail all the way. They would not let us go to London.

I must say this was not surprising coming from the Leader of the Opposition. This has always been his position, and I respect it. But the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who has been a supporter of the previous resolution before the House, made it very clear to me too that if there was not some compromise, if there was not a genuine attempt to reach an agreement, he would not be able to guarantee that he or his caucus would support this party in the resolution which was then before the House.

The Government of Canada went to that meeting of first ministers intent on compromise, intent on reaching agreement even if that meant giving up some parts of the charter or, indeed, some formula for amending which we thought, and, as I indicated in answer to questions earlier today, probably still think, is better than the one with which we are now going to proceed to Westminster. But we compromised. We were asked to compromise and we did compromise.

The result is that we reached an accord which is historic not only in content but in bringing into effect the will of the Canadian people and of successive governments since they began the attempt in 1927, to give a constitution to Canada, the only sovereign country in the world which until now, and it is still true today, did not have its own constitution amendable in its own country—a constitution as a result of an accord which would have these historic, momentous dimensions.

This did mean on this side giving up quite a bit. It meant telling the premiers: We will give in to you when you want a non obstante clause; we will give in to you when you do not want the Victoria formula but prefer the Vancouver formula—which was also the preferred formula of the Leader of the Opposition—but at least we will sign this accord in good faith and will undertake as a government to see it through the House of Commons. I think we have lived up to the spirit of that accord until now.

It is true that with regard to the two amendments, one concerning women and equality between the sexes, and the other concerning aboriginal rights and the entrenchment thereof in the Constitution, the Minister of Justice did support changes. He did so after consulting with the nine signatories to the accord who gave their consent in circumstances which are known.

It is true also that in an effort to reach out to the government of Quebec we also brought in other amendments, one on the Canada clause and the other on some form of compensation when there is opting out of constitutional change in areas concerning culture and language, two subjects which, of course, are very important to the preservation of the identity of the French-speaking Canadians who are largely citizens of Canada residing in Quebec. It is true that the Minister of Justice did this. He did this in the case of the first two amendments because I think the results showed that if the equality of sexes amendment and the aboriginal rights amendment were left out of the accord, it was not the result of a wilful desire of the ten signatories to take out of it what had been before the House and the country for a year. In that sense I think the Minister of Justice, though I know he felt he was walking on eggs, treading gingerly, knew every time he picked up a phone to speak to the premier or attorney general of a province he was risking their saying: "Look, what are you people doing in Ottawa? You are trying to force us, blackmail us or threaten us into recognizing such and such a pressure from such and such a lobby group. You are end-running the accord." I must say the provinces have shown a great deal of forebearance and the Minister of Justice a great deal of patience in getting the improvements we already have.

I say, as regards the two amendments relating to the particular situation of Quebec, that they were not only brought before the House with the consent of the nine signatory provinces, but with the support, I believe it is fair to say, of at least a majority of the official opposition and of the NDP because they, as we on this side, feel it was and is important to bring the province of Quebec, through its legal government—I say "legal", but is it legitimate; I am not sure—into signing this accord.

That is the story of the amendments we had until now. That is why, from now on, when it comes to improving the charter in ways that had not been put before the House or had not been accepted in the previous resolution, improving the charter to bring doubters home as the present amendment suggests, or improving the charter to give satisfaction to the requests of the Council of the Northwest Territories or Yukon, as the amendment brought in by the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) does, we say those improvements should be made in the charter when it is in Canada and when we have an amending formula to improve that charter.

I think that was the point of view expressed ad nauseam by the official opposition last year when we were trying to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the Right Hon. Prime Minister. There was a House order earlier this day that at 4.30 the question would be put. However, he may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry I did not realize that the vote was for 4.30, Mr. Speaker. I beg the indulgence of the House to permit me to at least terminate this last argument I was in the process of making.

Any amendment now which is brought before the House and which does not have support of the nine premiers, we will vote against. We will vote against it because we are holding our word to them. When the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) telephoned them during these past days, the premiers said that if that was the last time we would go to them, it was all right. But we are also keeping our word that we gave them when we signed that accord, that imperfect as it was, we would be bound by that accord and we would not try to make end runs in order to improve it in some way that had not been done through the accord.

Once again, for a year the official opposition has been telling us that it wants a charter written in Canada, that it does not want it to be done in London and does not want Westminster to tell Canadians what their rights are. For the past ten days they have been trying to change this resolution so as to tell Westminster to tell us what this charter should be. Surely a minimum of consistency should be required. We had a charter. We have one now. It is not perfect, nor was it in the previous resolution, but now that we have an accord, now that we are proceeding to Westminster at least in a way in which the courts indicated was not only legal but constitutional, let the accord and the resolution go to Westminster. Let it come back and let us use the amending formula not only to bring other doubters on board if we have to, but even then to continue trying to bring the government of Quebec on side and hopefully as well the government of Ontario when it comes to entrenching Section 133.

These are the tasks ahead of us, Mr. Speaker. We should now turn our efforts in these last days to making sure that we do not destroy the historic accord of November 5. My caucus, my cabinet and I have reached this conclusion in past discussions, including one which we had this morning amongst several ministers in which we said that from now on we cannot risk accepting any amendments, no matter how desirable, because they do risk endangering the accord.

I think the first precept of ethics is to make sure that the aim for the better does not destroy the good.

We had made this decision and I told the leader of the House that I intended to speak in this way on this amendment, but just 15 minutes ago I was handed the text of a telex sent to me by the premier of British Columbia who, as we know, is the chairman of the premiers' conference for this year.

It is a telegram that was not solicited by me or my government and of which I had no knowledge until after we had made the decision that I have just announced.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read this telegram which has reached my office by telephone. I am told the telex is on its way. The telegram reads:

> I am writing to you on behalf of the nine provinces that signed the November 5 constitutional accord. The agreement reached in Ottawa is a significant achievement in the affairs of our nation and was only possible through compromise on the part of all of us. I have been asked by my colleagues to inform you that additional constitutional change should only be considered in Canada following the patriation of our Constitution. My colleagues and I believe that further negotiation must not put at risk the accord and that the package should be approved by Parliament as it now stands and proceeded with without further delay.

That is the position of the nine provinces which signed the accord. That is the position of this government and, regardless of the merits or demerits of any amendment put forth between now and the adoption of this measure, this government, and I hope members of this caucus, will respect the word we gave when we signed that accord and will agree to be bound by a compromise agreement which was constantly described as the Canadian way, by a compromise agreement which we signed in good faith and which we will defend in this House with utmost vigour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is seeking the floor. Again, that can only be done with unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of this House take most seriously the telegram that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has just read. I hope the House will still take the time and the courage to consider some of the amendments that are to come before the House yet, such as the one in relation to the consent of the aboriginal peoples of this country.

I would like to speak to the amendment put before the House by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and to inform him and all members of the House that it is our opinion and that of the Department of Justice that the Constitution is neutral on the issue of abortion, and intentionally so.

Despite this, if what the member says is true, there is definitely a flexible amending formula, of which all members of the House are aware, and also the fact that seven of the consenting provinces are led by premiers of the same party as the hon. member.

I would like to deal for a moment with the last-minute amendment put forward without notice that is now before us. It is something that the Conservative House leader and the member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) took offence to our party doing yesterday when we introduced the consent clause in relation to aboriginal rights. They condemned us for not giving the House time to see the text and to consider it, to perhaps have caucus meetings and an opportunity to prepare speech notes before coming into the House. For that reason it is somewhat regrettable that they have suddenly moved this amendment.

It is the view of our party, Mr. Speaker, that it is clearly a redundant amendment, explicitly so, to use the same words as those used by the hon. member. It is an attempt to inflame the argument on both sides of this issue. For what purpose? I have listened to the Conservatives—the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the previous House leader of that party, just yesterday, calling for support for the resolution, and he certainly was not alone in that party. It is neither necessary nor appropriate to spell out the proposed amendment in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

● (1640)

There is the danger in the constitutional sense that by specifically preserving Parliament's power in this area, the courts could draw the implication that Parliament's power is somehow diminished in other areas which are not named in just such a clause. This is a very potent argument and one carefully avoided—in fact, perhaps purposely absent—in the argument put forward by the hon. member for Rosedale in the hope of drawing attention away from the issue of constitutional law to one of morality, to various possible court decisions and the very function of this House.

Why is the Conservative Party singling out abortion but not capital punishment, for example, and what is the signal they intend to send out, first to the Canadian public and, more specifically, to the courts? The answer is clear. This is an attempt by the Conservative Party to play the most devious kind of politics, and I say that without intending any slur or touching in any way on the honestly-held beliefs of the hon. member for Rosedale.

Where is the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald)? I know that just a few hours ago she was unaware of this Tory action, this Conservative amendment. She was in Kingston today and is now hoping to get back, and I am confident she would fight against this kind of action taken, no doubt, to rally the Conservative caucus around an idea—a deeply felt issue, I admit, on the broader scale of human life—but it is certainly not specified here or in the amendment or in any of the legal arguments we have heard in the House or in the committee.

It has been made to seem that, through some sleight of hand, this was not previously dealt with in the committee or here in the House. The moral, legal and medical arguments on the issue of abortion are only to be dealt with by Parliament, and always will be. This sleight of hand—this trick—was twice lost this year already and is resurrected—for what reason I can only wonder.

I ask all hon. members of this House to refer to Votes and Proceedings of April 23, 1981, to look at the clause put forward by the Conservative Party at that time and to reflect on the fact that it was lost by a vote of 175 to 93. When this was under very intense scrutiny before the joint House of Commons and Senate committee on January 30 of this year, a very similar clause was put forward. However, it included capital punishment, and it also was sufficiently lost during the committee stage.

Where is the capital punishment part of that clause in this amendment, or is it to be the next amendment of the Conservative Party? And where are the other social questions which could also have serious constitutional and legal implications for the interpretation of the charter? I will deal with capital punishment in a moment.

As I said earlier, this is a redundant amendment. The Conservatives say it is to make explicit what they say is, somehow shadily, implicitly taken away from Parliament. That is a crude political portrayal of months of legal argument on this issue. Even though twice lost, the Conservatives have again sought the spotlight, not to settle this issue as they claim but to ask Canadians perhaps to gaze askance at the charter and to set the mood out there that perhaps some of them are going to vote against the package or against some part of it and that somehow the Parliament of Canada is giving over something very vital to the courts.

As I have said earlier, if what they say comes true, there will be ways very early in the future to deal with it. This issue is vested, just as is capital punishment, with the House and with the collective moral conscience of all the men and women elected to this place.

The issue of capital punishment is perhaps not here, as it was on both previous votes, because the Conservative leader himself is opposed to it in principle. Also the attempt is to force the issue of abortion in a new way through the courts through the Constitution. I urge all those listening to this debate in the House to see this for what it is. It is not an attempt by members of the official opposition to clarify what they now call a glaring error in the Constitution but a dangerous play to fire up the Canadian public by calling a concern a shadow, a shadow a vagary and a vagary a reality, and thus a constitutional flaw. History will prove me correct that this staged debate is no more than a fabrication.

I have my views on the issue of abortion, and I have stood firmly by those views through two consecutive elections. Many Conservatives have their views as well, but to use this forum and this debate to put forward their views, veiled in the artificial shroud of fact, is a sad way to respond to this issue and to the fabric of this nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to an order made earlier this day, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Crombie) which was negatived on the following division:

● (1650)

The Constitution

(Division No. 129)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre	Fretz	McCuish
Anguish	Friesen	McDermid
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Gamble	McGrath
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Gurbin	McKenzie
Beatty	Gustafson	McKnight
Bloomfield	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	McRae
Bockstael	Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Bosley	Hargrave	Murta
Bradley	Hawkes	Nielsen
Clark (Yellowhead)	Howie	Oberle
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Hudecki	Ogle
Cooper	Huntington	Paproski
Corbett	Kilgour	Patterson
Crombie	Lambert	Roche
Crouse	Lang	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Dantzer	Lawrence	Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Dinsdale	Lewis	Siddon
Epp	Lewycky	Taylor
Forrestall	Lonsdale	Thacker
Fraser	Malone	Wenman
		Wilson—61.

NAYS

Messrs.

Althouse	Garant	Masters
Axworthy	Gauthier	McCauley
Bachand	Gimaïel	Miller
Bégin (Miss)	Gingras	Mitchell (Mrs.)
Benjamin	Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)	Munro (Hamilton East)
Berger	Gourde (Lévis)	Murphy
Blaikie	Gray	Nystrom
Blais	Guilbault	Olivier
Blaker	Herbert	Orlikow
Breau	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Ouellet
Broadbent	Hovdebo	Parent
Bujold	Irwin	Parker
Burghardt	Ittinuar	Penner
Bussières	Jewett (Miss)	Pepin
Caccia	Johnston	Peterson
Chénier	Joyal	Pinard
Chrétien	Keeper	Portelance
Comtois	Kelly	Prud'homme
Corriveau	Killens (Mrs.)	Riis
Côté (Mrs.)	Kristiansen	Roberts
Cousineau	Lachance	Robinson (Burnaby)
Cyr	Lajoie	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Dawson	Lamontagne	Rompkey
De Bané	Landers	Rossi
de Corneille	Laniel	Roy
de Jong	Lapierre	Sargeant
Demers	Lapointe (Charlevoix)	Savard
Deniger	Lapointe (Beauce)	Schroder
Desmarais	LeBlanc	Simmons
Dion	Lefebvre	Skelly
Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Lumley	Smith
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	MacBain	Tardif
Dubois	MacEachen	Tessier
Duclos	MacGuigan	Tobin
Dupont	Mackasey	Tousignant
Dupras	MacLaren	Trudeau
Erola (Mrs.)	MacLellan	Turner
Ethier	Malépart	Veillette
Evans	Maltais	Waddell
Ferguson	Manly	Watson
Fisher	Marceau	Whelan
Flis	Massé	Yanakis
Fox		Young—129.
Fulton

● (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

[English]

Motion No. 43 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

* * *

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT FOR FIRST DEGREE MURDER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should include the follwoing question in the 1981 census:

"Do you favour the reinstatement of capital punishment for deliberately planned murder?"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I placed this motion on the Order Paper on April 30, 1980, with a view to having it debated prior to the 1981 census. It has just now been called, more than a year and a half later, and the census has already been taken. Whether there is any purpose in debating the motion is questionable, but since it has been ordained by the House that private members' hour must go ahead, I suppose I have no choice.

My view of a representative of the people is that he or she, to the greatest possible degree, should reflect the thinking of the people who sent the member to a legislature or to Parliament. My view of a government is that it should reflect the thinking, to the greatest possible degree, of the majority of the people they endeavour to govern.

This is the premise upon which I endeavour to act as the representative of the people of Bow River. I am sure many other hon. members follow the same premise. If a member feels that way, he or she has a responsibility to find out how his or her people feel about various issues and questions. In my own riding I have no doubt because the matters were discussed very definitely at fora. From knocking on some 8,000 to 10,000 doors, I know that a great majority of the people indicated that they wanted capital punishment for carefully planned murders reinstated. Consequently, that is what I believe I should present to the House of Commons. In addition it is my own conviction.

In order to find out how Canadians feel about this matter, I thought there was no better way than doing it through a consensus where practically every Canadian family is contacted, so that they would have an opportunity to say how they felt in regard to capital punishment. A simple question could have been included on the census paper. It could have read:

Do you favour the reinstatement of capital punishment for deliberately planned murder?

It would not have been difficult for people to answer yes or no to the particular question. However the government did not see fit to bring it forward in time for the 1981 census. All we can do now is discuss the matter after the fact and possibly have the question included on the next census.

We have some indication as to how the people of Canada feel. The Government of Canada does not prepare legislation on the basis of one constituency. It prepares its legislation on the basis of the majority of the population. There are different ways to find out how people feel. It can be through the representations of every Member of Parliament or through Gallup Polls.

● (1710)

I want to refer briefly to what the people of Canada have said to the government about capital punishment. I do not intend to discuss the merits or demerits of capital punishment to any great degree at this time, but I will endeavour to show that governments should reflect the thinking of the people. The people have spoken very, very clearly. I do not believe in the totalitarian philosophy—that the government knows best; that the government should tell the people how they feel; that the government should tell the people what is good for them. I do not believe in that philosophy at all. I believe that the government should find out what the people at the grassroots think and then reflect that thinking in the laws of the country.

I think every party pays attention to the Gallup poll, so let us examine the polls for the last few years to see what they show is the concerted thinking of the people on this particular topic. The publication "The Gallup Report" of August 6, 1977, begins as follows:

In spite of the fact that Parliament voted to abolish capital punishment last summer, a large proportion of the Canadian electorate still are in favour of this form of punishment.

Today, 75 per cent favour the death sentence for the killing of a prison guard or an on-duty policeman; while almost as many Canadians (74 per cent) would like to see it for murders committed by terrorists. Somewhat fewer, but still a solid majority (68 per cent) favour capital punishment for the killing of any innocent person.

The people of Canada spoke very loudly and told Parliament that they did not support the law that had been passed a few months previously. The report shows that people feel very strongly about the murder of prison guards and policemen. Today, 75 per cent to 80 per cent of people feel that if a prison guard or police officer is killed in the course of duty, the murderer should suffer death as well. The report showed that for the murder of any innocent person, a child or a woman or an elderly man, 68 per cent to 69 per cent of the people felt that capital punishment should be imposed.

On April 19, 1978 "The Gallup Report" began as follows:

When questioned about a recent suggestion that a referendum be held on the issue of capital punishment at the time of the next federal election, over eight-in-ten Canadians said they would favour such a vote; 12 per cent opposed it—

The people had said that the government was passing legislation with which they did not agree and that they wanted to have a way of telling the government how they felt. The following question was posed:

Would you yourself be in favour or opposed to a vote being held on the issue of capital punishment?

The response was 82 per cent in favour of a vote. In effect, the people said that they wanted to tell the government how they felt. The response was broken down into age groups. Many people feel that the young people are opposed to capital punishment but the response showed that in the age group 18 to 29, 80 per cent wanted the right to tell the government how they felt; in the age group 30 to 49, it was 81 per cent and for 50 and over it was 84 per cent. So across the board, more than 80 per cent of the people thought that the government should let them say how they felt about capital punishment for deliberately planned murder.

In 1979 the same question was asked, "Do you favour or oppose capital punishment (a) for the killing of a prison guard or on-duty policemen?" The response was from 70 per cent to 79 per cent in favour. For the killing of any innocent person the response was 68 per cent to 69 per cent in favour of capital punishment. The questionnaire also dealt with terrorists but I will not go into that. In 1979, however, more than 70 per cent of the response favoured the reinstatement of capital punishment for the killing of a police officer or prison guard and almost 70 per cent favoured reinstatement for the deliberate killing of an innocent person.

On March 25, 1981 "The Gallup Report" began as follows:

There has been little change over the past two years in the attitude of Canadians towards the death penalty. Today, 73 per cent favour it for the killing of a prison guard or on-duty policeman; 74 per cent for terrorists; and 67 per cent for the killing of any innocent person.

Let us analyse the results, Mr. Speaker. For the killing of a prison guard or an on-duty policeman the response was 70 per cent to 73 per cent in favour with only 7 per cent not having an opinion; for the killing of any innocent person the response showed that 67 per cent or 68 per cent of people wanted the death penalty brought back for those who kill our little girls, our little boys, our elderly people—sometimes for their own lust and gratification. The people had spoken again in 1981.

Throughout these Gallup polls in which many people place a lot of faith, it has been shown that the people are consistent in asking for the return of capital punishment for the deliberate murder of prison guards, on-duty policemen or any innocent person. Apparently the government will not listen to what the people have to say.

In his householder of January, 1981, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) asked whether constituents favoured the imposition of capital punishment for premeditated first-degree murder. The response showed that 87.2 per cent of those polled asked for the return of the death penalty. The result was broken down into urban and rural categories showing the response of adults and of youths.

I think the people of Canada have a right to expect that the government will reflect their thinking. More than two thirds of all the polls indicate that the people of Canada want the return of capital punishment.

There was an ideal opportunity to get the opinion of almost every Canadian on this subject had my motion been brought forward prior to the 1981 census. The question "Do you favour the reinstatement of capital punishment for deliberately planned murder?" could have been included in the census form. The response would have given the government an indication of how the vast majority of people in Canada feel about this important subject. The government was not prepared to include that question, however, so we do not have the information. It would have been a more sensible question than asking how many bathtubs are in a house.

A few years ago when I was in provincial politics I conducted a poll through public meetings. After debating both sides of the question results showed that 82 per cent of the people at those meetings, from all political parties, favoured the reinstatement of capital punishment.

● (1720)

Today, crime is running rampant and violent crime is becoming all too prevalent throughout the country. The elderly, and particularly elderly women, are afraid to walk outside after dark in some of our cities. We are more concerned with treating the criminals justly than we are concerned with the victims. The rights of law-abiding citizens seem to be eroding with the increasing leniency toward crime, prison sentences and punishment.

Some people say that we should not worry because those who commit hideous sexual crimes, particularly those against little boys and girls, will be killed by fellow prisoners. That is a great way to have justice! The country should face its own responsibility! When someone commits a crime, such as the one where a little girl was terribly abused and then killed, surely that is deliberate murder and it should not be condoned.

People should not be put into prison for 20 years and then released. There are many cases where people have been in prison once, twice or three times, and they have come out and killed someone else. That is not justice, in my view. It is not the type which gives people a sense of security.

I consider, for example, the heinous crime committed in my own constituency last year. I appreciate the tremendous concern expressed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). Perhaps all the cabinet ministers were concerned, and I believe I can say that every hon. member in the House was concerned. That little girl was taken out under there pretext that she was to babysit, and her parents never saw her alive again. Who knows what she went through in those hours before the monster who took her, tied rocks to her and sent her to the bottom of a lake in southern Alberta? He is still running at large. If he is apprehended, there will be the bleeding hearts who will say, "Oh, poor man. He is sick". He was so sick to have planned, deliberated and committed a crime that he does not deserve to live.

It is time we took this type of crime seriously. Sixty six per cent to 90 per cent of the people of Canada cannot be wrong. We are asking the government to take cognizance of and give recognition to what the people of Canada are saying in regard to reinstating capital punishment. Let us show that if criminals murder, deliberately, they have no right to life themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Let us not put them in prison for nine, ten or 20 years and then let them loose again so that they can commit the crime all over again. That is not justice, in my view.

We are now providing conjugal visits, at the expense of the taxpayer, for prisoners with life sentences. We are letting people with life sentences get out on parole among the public. It is no wonder that parents are concerned about what will happen to their children.

I said that I would not deal with the merits and demerits of capital punishment to any great degree, and I do not plan to do so. However, I want to say that crime is reaching high proportions in this country and that it is high time the government started to listen to what the people of Canada are saying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate because I was one of the Members of Parliament, along with many of my colleagues, who were present in the House at the time this vote was taken. I can recall that for some 18 months prior to the vote, there was not a time when I could go home on the weekends and talk to my constituents or, for that matter, even to people around the Hill, who did not have very strong opinions about capital punishment.

If I could address myself directly to the motion, it is surely out of order in the sense that nothing can be done about the 1981 census. The intent of the motion is to have the people of Canada generally decide whether there should be a return to capital punishment. I question whether this type of query should be answered by way of a census. If this question is put to the people, should we not also have a question on abortion? Should we not also have a question on euthanasia? Should we not also question people on to the use of nuclear power? Surely, if anything were to go wrong there, it would mean the loss of thousands of lives.

I think that once we start putting these questions by way of a census, we must have some kind of an idea as to why we would take a census. Would it be to get opinions from people, or hard facts? Why should we obtain these facts from a census? Surely, it would help us to view the make-up of our country.

If we want to get the opinions of the people of Canada, we can do that through an election. We in the House of Commons are the spokesmen for our regions throughout the country. As we have all been present in the House in these last hours, and as so many people are here listening to our words of wisdom, I would point out that we will probably be influencing everyone who is in the House of Commons. Indeed, if I were simply to influence half the people present and get their agreement, I am sure it would go a long way toward showing the people of Canada just exactly what is thought of the motion which has been raised, and, perhaps what is generally thought of the private members' hour.

However, I wish to address myself in part to the issue of capital punishment itself. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) spoke earlier about Gallup polls and polls which he had taken in his own meetings where people of various political persuasions were present to give their opinions. Perhaps I could share with him and with all my other colleagues in the House the results obtained when I took such a poll. I was the Member of Parliament for St. Catharines at the time. I prepared and sent out a questionnaire for householders. At the time, there were 40,000 householders in my riding of St. Catharines. It should be kept in mind that this was the most pressing problem for most of the people of Canada, and it was the one issue my constituents wanted to discuss with me on the weekends when I went home. This was the issue which, in its intensity and importance, took up virtually all of the waking time of some people.

I sent out my questionnaire to the people of my former riding so that they could share with me in making this decision. Out of 40,000 questionnaires which were sent out, the grand total of 2,255 people shared with me their perception of capital punishment. It amounted to less than 8 per cent. Only 7.3 per cent of the people who were sent questionnaires took the time to let me know what they were thinking when they had the opportunity to respond to their Member of Parliament.

We could agree, but then say that if we decide on the census, it would force the people to answer. Perhaps it would. Capital punishment was a burning issue at the time I sent out the questionnaires. I ask myself and hon. members here, is this the way we should conduct ourselves? Is this the way that such a very important question should be decided, by poll results? Or should we view the question in the quietness and solitude of our own minds and consciences? Can the state take the life of one of its citizens? Do we have the power to play God? Shall we decide who deserves to live and who does not?

I personally believe that the state does have the right to take a human life. The conditions I laid out then have not changed for me. I voted in favour of capital punishment then because long ago, when I was in university, I learned in the study of apologetics that for a person to be truly responsible for an act, he must, first of all, know that the act is wrong. I agree with the hon. member. If the man deliberately, wholeheartedly, coolly and methodically plans a murder, he must know it is wrong. First, he must know the deed is wrong. Second, by wanting to commit murder, he has exercised his will, knowing the deed is wrong yet wanting to carry it out. Third, he plans his crime over a long period of time. I can hear the question, how long is the period of time. I say, long enough for someone to plan a sequence of events leading to such a hideous crime. Finally, the crime must be committed. There are four steps. Those are the four conditions which, as said, if they exist, then that individual who knowingly, wilfully, methodically, carried out a murder whether against a young girl, a young boy or an older person, it does not matter, against another human being, has forfeited his right to live in this society. After proving beyond any shadow of a doubt that this crime was planned, perpetrated and finally committed, after due process of the law and recourse to the courts of appeal and after all the demands for mercy have run out, I believe now as I did before that the state has the right to take a human life.

• (1730)

I have looked at other facts aside from recognizing the logic of this conclusion. Many times I have heard that the lives of murderers should be taken because they will kill again. But what are the facts to support that? From the time that England abolished capital punishment until January 1975 we know that 308 men and women were tried and convicted of first degree murder. To wilfully plan and commit murder carries the ultimate charge of murder in the first degree.

But these 308 men and women in England convicted of first degree murder evidently were not hanged. They were not put to death. How many of them committed murder again? If 300 of them committed murder a second time, then we must conclude that they should have been put to death. If 200 of them committed murder a second time, then we should conclude that because over 50 per cent committed murder a second time, they should be put to death. And if only ten committed murder a second time out of a total of 308, then 298 did not do it a second time.

From the figures I quoted at the time I spoke on capital punishment and declared my stand on the issue, of the 308 men and women who had been convicted of murder in England up to January, 1975, one, and only one, committed murder again. Yet 307 other men and women would have been put to death as well. What happened to them? I do not have the case histories of them in front of me. I know that a number of them, I think of three in particular, who were convicted of murder wrote books giving us an insight into their lives before the crime and into their lives in prison. I know that these people, who are not among us now, experienced a great change in their lives.

I am not for one moment saying that we were right to give them a second chance, but I am saying there might be a doubt in our minds about these people who commit heinous crimes that they are beyond redemption in the sense that they are beyond doing any good for society.

Since voting on this issue, I have had a great deal of time for second thoughts. The other day the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), when he was asked a question in this House as to whether capital punishment would again be considered, quoted a figure which surprised me. He said that the number of murders committed in Canada had declined on a year-to-year basis since the abolition of capital punishment. What do we conclude from that? Do we conclude that the action we took in abolishing capital punishment has convinced more people not to commit murder? I do not know.

[Translation]

I wish I had the answer to all those questions. Mr. Speaker, when, for some reason or other, men and women take away the life of one of their fellow citizens, we really have no idea what was going on in their mind when they committed their crime. We must ask ourselves whether or not, in some way or other, it may not be that society, the type of life they led, programmed them to commit their crime. Four or five months ago, I met five men all members of the same family. Thank heavens, none of them had committed murder. Yet, the five brothers were in prison at the same time. One must wonder why they were in jail, all at the same time. Could it be because of their home life? Because of the environment in which they grew up, perhaps the school they attended? What motivated them? If only we had the time, perhaps we could change the situations which lead people to commit this or that crime.

[English]

If I can return to the question itself, Mr. Speaker. The motion put forward by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is simple. He asks that the question be included in a census. I have asked myself, I have questioned the hon. member for Bow River as well as my colleagues, whether this is the way to go about getting the information we seek. I wish I had a nice easy answer and I wish I could say to the hon. member that he is dead wrong. I wish I could say to him that he should not suggest seeking the answer that way. But if I say that, then I have to come up with a better way to glean the answer. I do not know if it is a better way in the sense that we will get a real answer, but I think the system we have devised for members such as ourselves is to get as much information as we can. But more than that, we should get all the information we can through reading and by listening to the debates here, then after struggling with our consciences, decide, each one of us individually, if the state does have a right to take a life. Perhaps then we would come to a decision which would be best for the individual concerned, ourselves as legislators and, indeed, the citizens of Canada.

● (1740)

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to repeat that the motion we are debating once again brings capital punishment to the attention of hon. members. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should include the following question in the 1981 Census:
>
> "Do you favour the reinstatement of capital punishment for deliberately planned murder?"

As the previous speaker has pointed out, the question really is out of order because obviously the 1981 census has been taken. I found that the question was put on the Order Paper in April, 1980. Perhaps the next time it would behoove the hon. member for Bow River to put in a clause to cover the possibility of a similar situation arising, because if his motion is dated, there is a chance it will be irrelevant. Nevertheless, I think the hon. member has made some points and put forward some issues which deserve consideration.

I sense in my constituency a growing concern that there is more emphasis being placed on the rehabilitation of an individual who has done physical damage to another individual than on the victim, in some cases a victim who has lost his life. There is no amount of rehabilitation, psychiatric treatment, pill or anything that can return a life. I sense in my constituency the feeling that in society as a whole we have lost this balance.

I should like to address this problem as I feel there are two major areas in which we can improve the situation. First, there should be better methods of protection for the general population from those who have already shown, by their deeds, that they are capable of physical harm to another person. I would give as an example the individual who has committed rape upon a child, or some other horrendous deed, and where it has been shown there is an associated mental disorder.

Unless evidence is produced through the medical community, or that community which deals with criminology, that this pattern of behaviour can be changed, and no such evidence has been produced, then I think it is incumbent upon those who make the laws in our country, that is hon. members here and in the legislatures, to ensure that such individuals not be allowed back into society. The reason I say that is the probability that such an individual will commit the same kind of crime. We know there is no cure for the mental condition exhibited by the individual who commits the kind of crime I have just described. We know that no amount of rehabilitation can eradicate that kind of behaviour on the part of an individual who has demonstrated the ability to commit that kind of crime, the rape of a small child and murder. I have referred to that example because that was the example given by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I feel society has the right to be protected from this type of individual when it has been established that there is a mental disorder which allows the commission of such violent acts.

It is time we made our views strongly known to the provincial governments which have the responsibility of enforcing existing legislation, such as the Criminal Code. Unfortunately many people feel the federal government is the enforcer of such legislation. In point of fact, the responsibility for the enforcement of the law in most criminal areas lies with provincial governments and those judges who handle most of these criminal cases.

Let me refer again to this matter of protection. A previous speaker suggested that the number of murders had decreased since the removal of capital punishment. I think we have to look with some suspicion at that statistic. I have discussed this issue with judges and lawyers in my area. I have learned that the number of murders shown by the statistics is not the same as the number of murders actually committed. First of all, there is the matter of charges being reduced from murder to manslaughter and, secondly, there are the not-obvious murders. An example would be the individual who decides to murder someone and then commit suicide by getting into a car and hitting another car head-on. There is a whole spectrum of murder from those that are not obvious through to the cold-hearted, deliberate murder described by the previous speaker. It is quite difficult to use statistics in relation to murder to come to any conclusion about capital punishment.

What we really want to do is to establish in Canada a social milieu in which we have as few murders as possible. How can we do that? This brings me to the second major area I want to discuss, and that is the area of prevention. I think one thing we can do in order to achieve this goal is to stress the importance and value of human life and its first priority over anything else in our society. We can talk about this, but the fact is that in many little ways, which mount up to a big way, we put material things far ahead of respect for and value of human life. This involves a challenge not just for politicians, educators, teachers, professors and those engaged in business and labour, but for all Canadians, the challenge to reassess their values. Human life is at the apex.

● (1750)

The last point I would like to make on this issue is that I am concerned. I do not think it is idle talk to be speaking of the value of human life at this time. I believe that at this time in history it is one of the most important subjects we should be talking about.

The value of human life must become a political issue, especially when I hear the President of the United States talking about the feasibility of a limited nuclear war involving the deaths of 100 million people or talking about the feasibility of pressing the button first to start a nuclear war. I hear of military strategists saying they may lose 100 million people in a war but they will win it because it is worth it. This is an issue which people should consider when electing their leaders.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to speak after my two colleagues from Welland (Mr. Parent) and Kitchener (Mr. Lang) on this important subject. I think it is pertinent to remind the House that we are discussing, of course, an obsolete motion and that because of the wish of the member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was not my wish that this come today. There was another motion which was proposed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Taylor: Do not put the blame on me. The government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: To come back to the motion, and the purpose of the motion at the time it was tabled in April, 1980, I myself believe it amounts to governing by census. As my colleague from Welland pointed out earlier, it would be a strange way for us to start governing by sending confidential questionnaires throughout the country after thorough consultation by all parties who are using these figures. In fact, every party has the opportunity today to take polls on all issues. This particular issue, of course, is certainly being discussed.

Nevertheless, the subject matter before the House today and in the past weeks centered more on the constitutional motion than on other subjects, and I was proud of the vote taken in the House on several amendments, including the provisions on equal rights for women and the rights of the aboriginal people to be entrenched in the charter. I would remind members that these rights were initially in the charter.

To speak to the motion, Mr. Speaker, I was elected to be part of this Parliament, and this Parliament is here to legislate by respecting the opinions of each of our constituents. There are different views on the role of Parliamentarians. I see my role as representing not only the views of my constituents but also my own. My constituents know what I stand for, they know what I campaigned for and they know the platform of my party. I trust that they elected me because of these reasons.

Earlier today there was a vote on an amendment submitted by the hon. member for Bow River to amend the constitutional resolution by adding a provision on abortion.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not move any motion about abortion. Surely the hon. member should know that the government calls these, not the opposition. Why does the hon. member not speak to the motion? I offered to withdraw it. She would not go for it. She wants to make a speech. She has not even prepared a speech. She is talking about the Constitution. What is the matter with this Liberal Party?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I shall now come back to the issue which concerns us, namely the basic question of individual rights. As a matter of fact, when we talk about capital punishment, I believe that we are dealing with rights, or at least the first right of any individual, the right to life. And when a vote was taken this afternoon seemingly to clarify the constitutional issue, we were once again playing a political game aimed at leading the Canadian people to believe that you can sit on the fence where this issue is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that our party has ever sat on the fence when it comes to such fundamental issues as individual rights. This is why, when we are dealing with such important matters as the power of a Parliament to take away the life of individuals, I believe that we should do so with a great sense of responsibility without trying to score political points. And for those of my constituents who are not anglophones, I repeat that I find it very strange to use a census, and the next one will probably be in 1986 if we follow the usual procedure, to ask the voters of the Montréal-Mercier constituency if they are for or against an issue which deals with the conscience of every Canadian. I would like to explain the purpose of a census and the reasons why, in fact, such an issue should not be raised during a census.

First there were technical questions when the matter was raised; the questionnaire had already been finalized and approved by order in council, in February. Therefore, when the member submitted his question, it was already too late to have it included. Mention must first be made that since this questionnaire is sent out to every family across Canada, even though the full questionnaire is sent to a smaller sample, this involves millions of copies that have to be made, prepared and printed.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, when a census is prepared, questions and objectives cannot be changed without serious thinking. It is very important, in view of the number of people that are to be surveyed across this country, to also consider the needs of all the people in this country who use the results of the census.

I would like to refer to the scope of the questionnaire. Because more than 8 million families, distributed over an area of more than 9 million square kilometers, have been reached. Some 39,000 temporary workers are hired to collect the information from the people. Provision has also been made for combining the farm census with the general census. Therefore, 340,000 farmers have also been reached. This is no small task, no work that leaves—

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are only four members in the House. We do not have a quorum. I move that we adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): If that is a motion, it should be in writing.

Mr. Taylor: I can write it.

An hon. Member: Call it 6.05.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that we call it 6.05?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being 6.05 p.m., this House stands adjourned.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourns until Monday next, November 30, 1981, at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Orders 2(1) and (3).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 30, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE BUDGET

ADVICE TO REFER TAX REFORM ELEMENTS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, this past weekend in Toronto at the Liberal Party policy convention, the delegates put forward a proposal that was first suggested in this House last week by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). The delegates moved that the budget provisions dealing with the closing of so-called tax loopholes be referred to a committee of this House for further study. Since this motion was defeated by only six Liberal votes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the Minister of Finance accept the advice of members of both his party and the Conservative Party and send the tax reform elements of the budget to a parliamentary committee for closer examination.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED SHORT-TERM GOAL FOR GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, at a weekend policy convention of the federal wing of the Ontario Liberal party, according to The Toronto Sun, resolution No. 1 urged the government to reconsider very strongly the present budget which will increase taxes, fuel inflation, and cause higher unemployment. I feel confident, therefore, that the party colleagues of the Ontario wing, across the floor, will endorse the motion passed in Toronto and moved now in the House by me, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That, to quote the motion, "Because high-interest rates are inflicting intolerable hardship on home owners, hurting the vital interests of small business, driving up farm operating costs and inhibiting economic growth," the government should select, as a short-term goal, programs to provide for victims of high-interest rates and, in the long term, should abandon its policy of high interest rates and find other ways to bolster the dollar and fight inflation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

ASSISTANCE NEEDED TO BRING PENSIONERS ABOVE POVERTY LEVEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the November 12 budget will net the federal treasury $1.4 billion in the next fiscal year, and the energy deal with Alberta will bring in another net of $2.3 billion, and yet the government claims it can do nothing to improve pension incomes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House directs the Minister of Finance to get his priorities straight and find the $730 million needed to bring all pensioners above the poverty level from this $3.7 billion windfall, so that retired Canadians can spend the balance of their lives in financial dignity.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR RESCINDING OF PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the rank and file of the Liberal party in Ontario, frustrated with the quiet acquiescence of their Liberal MPs in the House of Commons who are supporting everything in the MacEachen budget and are afraid even to say boo to the government, rose up in anger this last weekend, and declared in a resolution that the budget discouraged risk-taking and job creation, did not reduce inflation but merely increased taxes, the very things the Conservatives have been saying long, loudly and clearly. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House has no objection to the Minister of Finance killing the Liberal party in Ontario—the sooner the better as it is the only place outside of Quebec where there were Liberals in any number—but strenuously objects of these policies which are choking the life out of the Canadian nation, and demands that these anti-incentive policies which are increasing unemployment and doing nothing to reduce inflation, be rescinded at once.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING LIFE INSURANCE DIVIDENDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the government's plan to tax dividends credited to life insurance policies is extremely unfair to older Canadians who will in future be liable for thousands of dollars of income tax every three years, even though the accumulating dividends are not actually received by policyholders as income. I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the Minister of Finance be directed to rescind his regressive decision to tax unrealized income arising from dividends credited to life insurance policies, because this unfair measure imposes a rapidly escalating tax burden on life insured Canadians, especially those in their senior years who can ill-afford to pay thousands of dollars of additional income tax every three years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HEALTH

FUNDING FOR ONTARIO HOSPITALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, you will have no doubt noticed on the weekend that the president of the Ontario Hospital Association has indicated that Ontario hospitals are facing a financial crisis and in fact patients who normally would have to wait two to three days for urgent surgery are likely to have to wait ten days or two weeks. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

● (1410)

That this House state its concern with the threat to health service in Ontario posed by federal and provincial budget cuts, and further that this House instruct the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare to initiate discussions with her provincial counterpart so that the people of Ontario will be sure their health care system will be maintained and protected by both levels of government and that no person in need of hospital care will be denied access to hospital as the result of inadequate funding.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE COLLEGE BOWL

ACADIA AXES ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is of urgent and pressing necessity and results from some activity this past weekend. On Saturday last the College Bowl crowned new Collegiate Football Champions when the Axeman from Acadia chopped the claws of Alberta's Golden Bears—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —showing again that small is beautiful and quality of play often produces more points than quantity of players. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport:

That this House compliment all those who participated with such energy and enthusiasm in a truly Canadian event, the College Bowl, commiserate with the losers along the way, and congratulate the new Collegiate Bowl champions, the Acadia Axeman from Wolfville, Nova Scotia.

Madam Speaker: Does the House want to applaud this motion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

RAILWAYS

CALL FOR PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS TO ASSIST IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas all the individuals and institutions involved in the movement of western grain have agreed that 1,300 new hopper cars are needed to be added annually to the grain fleet, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this House instruct the government to immediately proceed with the purchase of 1,300 hopper cars to assist in the assured movement of grain to export.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REFERRALS TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has met for a grand total of one and one half hours for the entire year of 1981. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That when the McCracken Report is completed it be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs along with the Auditor General's report, the Public Accounts Committee Report, and the Senate Committee Report, all of which condemn the government for its failure to meet the needs of Canadian veterans. At the same time, controversial issues such as the Hong Kong veterans' parasite disease could also be dealt with in as many meetings as it takes to solve this long list of serious problems.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

CONDITION OF ATLANTIC FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Given the fact that the Atlantic fishing industry is in serious trouble, and given the fact that some people are predicting a complete economic collapse by early summer, does the minister have any specific plans to offer his provincial counterparts at their December 4 meeting? Does he have any hope to offer, whatsoever? Does the minister have any sort of coherent strategy to meet this disaster in Canada's Atlantic coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the causes for the problems are not simple; in fact in some cases they are not very much related. As I have said before in this House, the failure of the inshore fishery is a phenomenon of a very cold water situation, and the fish did not move inshore. That has caused some fishermen a considerable amount of difficulty.

The second problem is caused by slowdown in the foreign markets, particularly in the United States, where the consumption of fish has dropped and where Canadian exports have slowed down. American brokers are buying only as much as they need because of their high interest rate situation. Of course they must maintain the inventory that they buy from us.

The third problem we are hoping to solve is the allocation of the resource, mainly to the large offshore trawlers which fish in January. They should not race for the fish, but fish in an orderly way which would allow them to put into market products the fish which is saleable, and not the eternal cod block, which is plugging the system at the moment.

• (1415)

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO REDUCE NUMBER OF EXPORTERS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, the minister offers faith with very little hope. I might turn to another subject. The minister has said that interest rates and fuel costs are merely "irritants"—that is the word the minister used recently—to the industry, and he says that he cannot do anything about it. But he also threatens legislation to restrict the number of people exporting fish from Canada. Can the minister tell this House whether that legislation is aimed at cutting the total volume of exports, or is it aimed at kicking exporters out of the business?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the last part of the hon. member's question amazes me. In the interview to which the hon. member was referring in the first part of his question, I was comparing the fact that Canadians catch 90 per cent of their fish within the 200-mile limit. Therefore the cost of fuel, in Canada's case, is considerably lower than the cost of fuel for some of our competitors. This government has maintained the cost of fuel for Canadian fishermen and other users below international levels.

On the question of orderly marketing, I am amazed the hon. member understands that orderly marketing means the removal of people from foreign markets. We are trying to prevent what happened last winter when some companies dumped fish below cost in our traditional markets and weakened our position.

Mr. Crosbie: That is twaddle.

PRE-BUDGET DISCUSSIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the minister and to members of the House that in a speech the minister made in early October on the question of restricting the number of exporters, he said:

On this point, I am not only saying there should be fewer people exporting fish from Canada, I am saying there will be. It can be achieved either on a voluntary basis or through legislation—

I just want to bring to the minister's attention that I have not misinterpreted his words. They are there in black and white. But I want to point out to the minister, through you, Madam Speaker, that there is nothing in the budget to help the fishery on the Atlantic coast. There is absolutely nothing, despite the fact that we have five ministers from the Atlantic provinces, including the Minister of Finance, who come from ridings that are primarily associated with the fishing industry. Was there no discussion at all to put something in the budget to help the present alarming situation on the east coast fishery?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, when I indicated that there would be fewer exporters, I meant there would be a consolidation of our effort and there would be order in the way we market our fish.

On the second issue, the measures in the budget which favour unincorporated small businessmen—and the budget says so—apply to fishermen and farmers who are in difficult financial situations. However, I am afraid that the problems we are facing in the Atlantic fishery right now are problems that have been building up since 1977 when we inordinately increased the amount of the processing capacity on the east coast. I am afraid those chickens are now coming home to roost.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S PLANS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I must express my concern to him over his failure to react positively to this serious situation. He realizes, of course, that because of the weakening of some European currencies in relation to the U.S. dollar, and because of changes in consumer habits in the U.S. market, this has resulted in high inventories, low prices, and with it the inflationary situation which has driven up costs in this country. That has resulted in some companies, indeed, one of the major companies being under virtual control of the banks. We have the situation of Bay Street calling the shots in a major segment of the Atlantic industry.

Instead of the minister standing in his place musing and philosophizing and trying to attribute blame to everyone but himself, surely we are entitled to expect some action from the government. What does the minister intend to do to avert what will be a serious crisis which could result in a complete shut-down of the industry? It is the minister's responsibility to do something about it.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, before the hon. member asked his question, another hon. member said, "You, were the minister". I am afraid that I have to remind hon. members across the way, in the event they do not know, that the issuing of permits to open fish plants is a provincial responsibility—

Mr. Crosbie: Helped by DREE.

Mr. LeBlanc: —and I have systematically opposed the increase of processing capacity since 1976.

Mr. Crosbie: What about DREE?

Mr. LeBlanc: In fact in many cases DREE, at my suggestion, refused to put DREE money into expanding processing capacity. It is the friends of hon. members across the way, particularly the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland, who have allowed the province to increase the processing capacity of that province by 230 per cent. I am afraid that is a problem for which I am not responsible.

• (1420)

As for the other matter raised by my hon. predecessor, I would say that the Fisheries Prices Support Board has addressed this matter and has made recommendations to the government. We are looking at those recommendations. One recommendation the board made very loudly and very clearly is that we should not simply put money in a band-aid solution, because the problems are considerably deeper than those requiring band aid treatment.

MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Atlantic governments, the fish processors and the fishermen would accept anything from the minister in the way of leadership. Maybe the minister will be prepared to answer this question. Why has he refused consistently to meet with the Newfoundland government about this critical situation, unprecedented in the history of the industry, when he knows very well there are 5,000 jobs at stake and that the shots are not being called by the Minister of Fisheries for Canada, who has a responsibility, but by the banks, and that is an intolerable situation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I hope to meet with the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland and other Atlantic ministers either Friday or next Monday. There have been contacts between senior officials of my department and representatives of the government of Newfoundland right along.

I might say on the question of the banks that in some cases we advised against plants being opened because we knew that the stocks could not sustain increased capacity. DREE in some cases has not associated itself with the financing of new operations. I know of one case in particular where the bank felt it could put $7.5 million on the table, against the warnings of my department and the warnings of DREE. If the banks have enough money that they want to spend it that way, I am afraid that is their responsibility.

* * *

HOUSING

REPORT OF MINISTER'S REPRESENTATIONS IN FAVOUR OF ABANDONMENT OF RENT CONTROLS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister regarding his evaluation of the rental situation in Canada. In a brief the minister responsible for housing submitted to the cabinet he said:

It is easy to overestimate the importance of rent controls in the current situation.

He went on to say:

New construction is exempt from control.

With over one million renters already paying over 30 per cent of their incomes on shelter, I should like to ask the Prime Minister why the minister for housing before the weekend went to the newly-elected government of Manitoba and urged it to abandon rent controls? I ask this in light of the fact that last spring I put the same question on rent controls to the Prime Minister and he said there had been no change in policy. Have we just had a change in policy, and is the Government of Canada abandoning its commitment to rent controls?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not been made acquainted by the minister about his conversation with the new Premier of Manitoba, as obviously the Leader of the New Democratic Party has, but if the hon. member gives me a little bit of time I will talk to the minister when he returns, to determine what message or what the conversation was that took place between them.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I am not asking the Prime Minister about the details of the conversation, as the details were reported in the Winnipeg Free Press. It is public knowledge that the minister responsible for housing went there and publicly urged the new government to abandon rent control policies. I am asking the Prime Minister, as head of the government, what the government's policy is on rent controls. There is a great shortage of rental accommodation and the minister has already acknowledged that new rental accommodation is not subject to controls. But we need controls. What is the Government of Canada's policy on this?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe that the hon. member knows that rent controls are a matter of provincial jurisdiction and that the situation may vary from province to province. We have not at any time in cabinet, to my knowledge, sat around to decide how the provinces should exercise their jurisdiction in this matter. In that sense it is not possible to say our policy has changed. We have no policy for the provinces on that.

I am sure that individual ministers from provinces they come from, or provinces to which they are speaking, will express opinions. That may be the case in the situation related by the hon. member. I have not seen a copy of the speech or the reports of the speech. Therefore I cannot indicate what the minister was explaining at that time. I do know that we do not spend much time in cabinet deciding what policies the provinces should exercise in matters within their jurisdiction.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, of course the Prime Minister is right, jurisdictionally speaking, in saying that the question of rent control is within provincial jurisdiction. If he is right in saying that, and I acknowledge that he is, I would also say that it is none of the minister's business at all to be going around to all the provinces to tell them to abandon a rent control policy, the only policy that is holding down rents in this country.

Considering that right now we have in Canada 70,000 unemployed in the construction industry, and 14,000 unemployed in the forestry industry. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why is it that the government in its current fiscal year is planning to spend only one fifth of the amount on housing that it was spending in 1976? Why is there not a massive influx of government spending on housing to provide jobs for unemployed workers, and to provide housing accommodation for the people of Canada who need it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat puzzled that the hon. member points out that it is no business of the federal minister to be expressing views on rent control but it seems to be the business of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, at least at the federal level, not only to express views on that, as has been done, but to seek views from myself. I do not think that is very consistent.

An hon. Member: You did not answer the question.

* * *

MINES AND MINING

EFFECT OF BUDGET MEASURES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Mines. Mr. David Thomas, President of the Mining Association of Canada, recently stated that the Canadian mining industry is currently in its worst depression since the 1930s. In fact high interest rates and high energy prices have led to a pronounced downturn in demand for base metals such as copper, iron, lead and zinc in recent months.

In view of the recent federal budget which fails to address this serious situation—in fact the proposed new tax measures will further limit the availability of venture capital for new resource exploration and mine development—why has the minister been so singularly unsuccessful in pursuing this urgent problem with the government, and what specific proposals does she advocate at this time to prevent the crippling of whole communities and tragic unemployment for thousands of additional Canadians once the full impact of "MacEachen's recession" is felt by our primary industries?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member did refer to some comments by Mr. David Thomas of the Mining Association which reflected his immediate reaction to the budget. He had not had time to review the budget thoroughly before that specific interview, to examine the fact that there were incentives in the budget that were helpful to the mining industry. I refer particularly to one incentive which the prospectors and developers had been requesting for the last couple of years, which was a change in the capital assets now allowing them to refer those funds which are invested in new exploration companies to be taxed as capital gains. It was an incentive which had been requested by the mining companies and one which they greeted quite favourably once they had examined the budget in full.

I might also add that the mining companies of Canada greeted with great favour the fact that we had extended the moratorium on northern benefits for a year, and that within another year we would have an even more positive policy in effect, so that there are, indeed, benefits to the mining companies.

With respect to the markets, the hon. member is absolutely right, but these are international markets over which the Canadian government has no control.

* * *

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT OF MINING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, we can pursue that question further on another occasion, but I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

● (1430)

It is now over 20 months since the minister promised to introduce some form of industrial development plan for Canada. The budget working paper which he commends so highly, called "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties", does nothing more, as pointed out in the conclusions, than provide an assessment of the economic challenges. It provides no solutions.

I would like to ask the minister why it is that the Canadian manufactured content of mining equipment used in the Canadian mining industry has fallen from some 70 per cent in 1970 to only 30 per cent in 1980. Given the massive mining projects to be undertaken, particularly in western Canada, why has the minister announced no specific plan and no specific proposal to build a plant in Canada which could manufacture much of this important and large scale mining equipment, perhaps with the assistance of that elusive Western Development Fund?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we certainly did table an economic development plan in this House. We did so in connection with the budget, and I commend it to my hon. friend because one of the priority sectors it lists for attention in terms of action on policy, and development of policy, is the mining sector.

My hon. friend has pointed to a very discouraging trend, the reduction in Canadian content in mining machinery—which, unfortunately, continued during the period his government was in office—but we are working to contain that trend and reverse it.

Earlier this year we had a major conference in Vancouver jointly sponsored by the federal government, the British Columbia government, and the mining industry. The conference was aimed at bringing together the mining industry and manufacturers to begin a new process of communication to lead to an important increase in the Canadian content in mining machinery. That process and that conference were widely praised by the same Mr. Thomas who was quoted with approval in this House a few moments ago. If the hon. member takes Mr. Thomas seriously on one thing, he should also take him seriously when he says the mining industry is very pleased with the opportunities in the mining process, and we are continuing the progress based on it.

In fact, we will use the industrial and regional benefits program we announced in August as a basis for important efforts to increase Canadian content and opportunities for Canadian workers in mining machinery and other machinery used in major projects across this country.

* * *

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

REFUSAL TO FUND PARTICIPATION BY AMPUTEE SPORTS TEAM IN AUSTRALIAN GAMES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for fitness and sport. The minister will remember that this is the Year of the Disabled and that the Canadian Amputee Sports Association wrote him in May of this year asking for a contribution from the government to enable it to participate in the Australian Summer Sports for the Disabled which are taking place December 2 to December 7, in a few days time. The association requested the amount of $70,000 to send a Canadian team to Australia. The minister refused. The association raised $35,000 itself and came back and asked the minister for $35,000, or a reasonable gesture, to help these athletes go to those games. They won more gold medals at the Olympics in Holland than anyone else at the recent Olympics there.

Can the minister tell the House why he and his department refused $35,000, or any contribution, to the Canadian Amputee Sports Association to send a team from Canada to Australia in the Year of the Disabled?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I think he should understand that it is not the general practice of Fitness and Amateur Sport to finance particular events. The amputee championships in Australia are not world championships.

What happened in this particular instance is that because this is the Year of the Disabled, Fitness and Amateur Sport has dedicated over one and a quarter million dollars to various events affecting disabled athletes, in Canada and outside the country. However, the late application for assistance respecting that particular project in Australia made it impossible for the department to give favourable consideration.

I might point out that this particular group does receive substantial assistance in relation to its administrative costs and other projects, and it is receiving that in the course of this year.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister will be aware that there are such things as supplementary estimates and that the government could have saved $27,000 and given it to these amputee athletes if it had not sent three ministers on three separate jets to Winnipeg from Ottawa on October 29, or it could have saved $10,000 on cocktails at the Grey Cup.

FUNDING FOR 1983 WORLD AMPUTEE SPORTS GAMES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is this: why has the minister refused to support the Canadian Amputee Sports Association, which has been invited to hold the World Amputee Sports Games in St. John's, Newfoundland, here in Canada, in 1983, at a cost of $250,000? Why has the minister refused to help them with these world games in 1983 when, in 1982, he will be financing the Pan-American games for the disabled in Halifax at a cost of $2.5 million? These are wheelchair athletes. What has he got against Canadian amputee athletes? Why is he not going to help support those world games in Newfoundland in 1983, the four hundredth anniversary of Sir Humphrey Gilbert's landing in Newfoundland and the commencement of the British empire by taking possession of Newfoundland? Why is he not prepared to do that? He can ask his colleagues for funds for 1983. That is in two years' time. He does not need any supplementary estimates.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the application in relation to the championships projected to be held in St. John's was not filed in the time provided by the guidelines stated in the agreement between the federal government and the provinces on what the hosting practices should be. But, if the hon. member wishes, I would be happy to review that situation.

I do, however, want to tell the hon. member that if in his haste to give programs away to the provinces the then Prime Minister and now Leader of the Opposition had not decided that the easiest and quickest thing to get rid of was Loto Canada, then we would have ample funds on hand to take care of projects of this type.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO MODIFY ITS POLICY ON FOOTWEAR

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is clear that the footwear industry policy announced last week by the minister is not satisfactory to the industry itself. Could the minister inform the House whether he intends to make any changes in the policy and if so, when does he intend to announce such changes in the House?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are trying to focus the industry's attention on all positive aspects of the policy, but at the same time I am open to suggestions from the various sectors in the industry and I shall bring these to the attention of my colleagues.

We are concerned about the industry's future and the new policy we announced several days ago was designed to provide a sound framework for supporting and modernizing this important industry.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MORATORIUM BE PLACED ON NEW FOOTWEAR QUOTAS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is in relation to the same matter. The elimination by the minister of the quotas will take effect tomorrow. Some 150 representatives of labour and business met in emergency session in Montreal on Saturday, and they said that the policy will result in plant shut-downs and the loss of thousands of jobs. They requested that the minister announce a moratorium respecting the quotas. In order to consult with the industry and with the workers in those plants, I wonder whether the minister is willing to accede to this request that there be a moratorium on the imposition of the new quotas.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, it is very interesting that someone from western Canada should be calling for the continued imposition of quotas. This may be the first of a number of changes in approach in matters of this kind. However, certainly before making our decision on the policy we announced a few days ago, the cabinet considered very carefully all aspects of the situation, including representations from the workers and from the industry.

We do not accept the premise of my hon. friend's question that what we announced yesterday will bring about the decline in employment about which he spoke. Our purpose in announcing the quota system was to ensure that one of the major matters talked about by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal report, the pressure, by way of the ability to substitute non-leather footwear, on the leather sector, would be dealt with. We have responded as well to the major finding in the report that our industry was in a position to compete with imports from developed countries, including state trading ones, and most of our imports from those countries are leather footwear.

● (1440)

People also forget that leather footwear will continue to have the benefit of a 25 per cent tariff as well as the protection of our anti-dumping law and our valuation laws. As I stated to my colleague from the Liberal side of the House, while I am ready to receive representations on this matter and bring them to the attention of our colleagues, we certainly are not in a position today to give a favourable response to the request for a moratorium.

GUARANTEE SOUGHT THAT JOBS WILL NOT BE LOST

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, since the answer is no, and since the industry and union spokespersons disagree with the minister about jobs, can the minister now state publicly in this House that he will give an ironclad guarantee that there will not be any loss of jobs in the shoe industry in Quebec or in other parts of this country?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the per capita consumption of footwear in Canada since 1972 has declined from four pairs to about three pairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: There are also changes in productivity through the introduction of new equipment, and changes in consumer tastes. Our view is that our policy will not bring about the decline in employment my hon. friend has said. Our purpose is to stabilize employment and strengthen the industry. What he is asking for does not fit in with the reality of the dynamics of the marketplace. Our purpose is to enable the industry to compete better, to stabilize it and strengthen the framework of job opportunities for workers in the industry in all parts of Canada.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REFUSAL TO PERMIT SALE OF IRWIN-DORSEY LIMITED

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is to the same minister who, I think, runs on Duracells. The cabinet decision to disallow Irwin-Dorsey Limited, a small healthy company in Georgetown, to be purchased by a United States company from its present owner, another U.S. company, on the grounds that the sale would not be "in the best Canadian interest", will result in the Georgetown plant closing on December 31, putting 28 people out of work. Will the minister please explain how this is in the best interest of Canada and especially in the best interest of the 28 people who will lose their jobs at the end of the year?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the decision disallowing the application does not force the closing of the Irwin-Dorsey Company. That is the decision of the foreign parent, Dow-Jones in the United States, which so far declines to sell the business to its Canadian employees, to any Canadian company, or to file a new application offering further benefits to Canada. The responsibility for this unfortunate event is solely in the hands of the foreign parent, whose attitude is one which all Canadians should deplore.

BACKGROUND TO DECISION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that the Liberal's friend, Bob Campeau, can sell his hotel to Hong Kong interests and put it through FIRA, but a little company with 30 employees cannot get cleared through FIRA. Will the minister admit to this House today that the Ontario government supported the transfer of the ownership, and in reaching that decision the federal cabinet received political pressure from the Minister of State, and in fact the decision would have been to allow the purchase had it not been for that totally unnecessary political pressure?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the law adopted by this House says that we have to consult with and seek the views of relevant provincial governments and relevant federal government departments. We sought this advice. We took it into consideration in making our decision as a government. We did not find that on balance there was significant benefit. If the parent company of Irwin-Dorsey was serious about its concern for the workers, it could easily have filed a new application offering further benefits to Canada or, as I said, make arrangements to sell the company to its employees or to another Canadian firm. It chose not to do so. I am surprised my hon. friend is accepting and supporting this deplorable conduct on the part of this foreign company.

* * *

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

TRANSFER OF TOURISM OFFICE FROM OTTAWA TO YARMOUTH, N.S.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. It has to do with the government's decentralization program. Can the government confirm that a decision has been made to move the Canadian Government Office of Tourism's distribution unit from the national capital to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Forrestall: Not a bad idea.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Would he please confirm that?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Madam Speaker, my recollection is that the decision was made to move the Office of Tourism to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. I am delighted to see there is a lot of support for that move on the other side.

Mr. Nielsen: One member.

ADVICE TENDERED BY MINISTER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the minister is no doubt aware that on April 29, 1981, his colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, wrote to the President of the Treasury Board setting out on four or five pages why it would be inappropriate to move that particular unit to Yarmouth, and asking the minister to find another unit that might be more appropriate to move to Yarmouth. Yet the government seems to be persisting in something that has been, by the minister's seatmate and colleague, indicated to be stupid in terms of government administration.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer that one.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Did the minister make any attempt to find another unit? Why is he flying in the face of the advice of the minister responsible for the department?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is indeed referring to a letter I sent to my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. In that letter I asked for my colleague's co-operation in finding another branch or section of the federal public service that could be moved to Yarmouth. The matter was considered, and the President of the Treasury Board and myself were unable to find any other work units that could be moved to Yarmouth on short notice, so I changed my mind and asked the President of the Treasury Board to proceed with the original plan, because, Madam Speaker, we feel that regional development is just as important as maintaining the number of public servants in the national capital.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER FUTURE OF C.F.B. CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. It results from his remarks in my constituency on November 7 to the effect that he would establish a high-level interdepartmental committee to seek solutions and to implement those solutions with regard to the base at Chatham. Can the minister advise the House whether that committee has been established and whether there will be an opportunity for local input to the deliberations and decisions of that committee?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the answer is affirmative in all three cases. The interdepartmental committee has been set up, Lt. General G. C. E. Thériault, Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff is taking charge within the Department of National Defence, and Mr. F. J. Anderson, Assistant Deputy Minister Policy, is chairman. The local people will have an opportunity to have some input in the discussion with regard to the phasing out of some of the operations of Base Chatham.

* * *

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF OFFSHORE FLEET

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question relates to those raised earlier by my colleague. It is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The government has two distinct options with regard to the very serious difficulty in which the east coast fisheries finds itself. The first is to intervene in the marketing process. There has been a very clear indication from the minister and the industry that they would not wish to do that. The only other alternative that seems available, and I would like the minister to comment on it, is to consider moving into the area of purchasing the offshore fleet to complement what is already an absolute control with respect to quotas and licences.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, a whole spectrum of options has been suggested. That is one of them.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PURCHASE OPTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the temptation is to ask the minister to do it so that we can turn the ships over to his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and then we can have a Canadian navy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: I am serious about this. The minister is aware that the industry is in very bad shape. Is the minister or his departmental officials applying this idea? Is it being considered? Is there a government view with respect to it? If so, we might possibly support such an option.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, that is the second time this idea has been suggested. I remember that suggestion being made in late 1974 or early 1975 by the industry. I said this was an option which is being considered in a very informal discussion with the industry. We listed about ten possible measures; that was one of them. I thought that the discussion that took place was extremely enlightening.

● (1450)

PORTS

PRINCE RUPERT—INCLUSION OF BELLEVILLE, ONT. FIRM ON TENDERING LIST

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the Ridley Island Coal Terminal in Prince Rupert, British Columbia. The minister will know that the federal government is funding 90 per cent of the equipment there. I would like to point out to the minister that my opinion is that there is not proper consideration being given to a firm from Belleville, Stephens-Adamson Division of Allis-Chalmers Canada Limited, a firm that is very expert in providing reclaimers-stackers. Will the minister undertake that this Canadian company will be placed on a short list and allowed to bid against the foreign firms which are now on that short list?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this was done on Friday afternoon.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S SUPPORT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): If I may, Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This same type of thing happened recently through CIDA for a different purchase of equipment, but it still involved the same company. Does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce support his colleague, the Minister of Transport, in having this Canadian company, that is very expert in this particular field, kept on this short list to provide equipment to the Canadian government? It is the only Canadian firm capable of doing such work.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to support my colleague, the Minister of Transport, in this important effort.

* * *

AVIATION SAFETY

SHORTAGE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The government cut back on training for air traffic controllers in Canada a year and a half ago. In spite of this, training has now been accelerated, and Ministry of Transport officials have estimated that we will face a shortage of up to 1,000 air traffic controllers by 1985/86, and that we presently have a shortage of 50 to 100 air traffic controllers. Will the minister tell this House what steps he intends to take to deal with the present immediate shortage of air traffic controllers caused by the government's cutbacks in training?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, without accepting the figures used by my hon. friend, I will agree with him that there is a shortage. A number of months ago we moved to remedy that situation. We moved in a number of ways, some internal, some external. By way of illustration, we have signed an agreement with Georgian College in Ontario to make sure that the school system would bring candidates and would train candidates in a wider fashion for the job of air traffic controller. We are in the last stage of passing an agreement with the government of Quebec in a similar approach. At St. Jean, Quebec, there will be a CEGEP airport facility for the training of air traffic controllers.

One of the great difficulties that the department has had is that it recruits many, but the process of training them is quite difficult. One never knows how many one will have at the end. By using the school system better than in the past, the department hopes to recruit more of them, and also to give them the facility for doing something else than air traffic controlling, should they be found not to be able to do it.

Another thing the department is doing, which is not very pleasant, is that it is preventing them, because of this shortage of air traffic controllers, from serving in other countries of the world, through agreements with ICAO. I have had a number of people on the other side and on this side protesting against that. To sum up, we are aware of the difficulties and are taking steps to remedy them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PREFERENCE BE GIVEN TO CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, presently we have high levels of unemployment in Canada and such highly-skilled jobs are needed by Canadians. Will the Minister of Transport give assurances here and now that our fully trained air traffic controllers will be given preference to promotions and so on, and will he give ironclad agreements that no foreign air traffic controllers will be brought into Canada and that we will use Canadian people for these highly-skilled jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am more friendly than is my hon. friend. In view of the situation that we have now—and I have admitted we have a scarcity of air traffic controllers—if some people want to come to Canada to serve in this capacity, I am quite sure that they will be eligible as candidates. But the normal rule of acceptability in these matters, that is, preference to Canadians, will be applied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a brief question as well, Madam Speaker, for the Solicitor General. It is simply to ask the Solicitor General when he intends to fulfil the commitment that he made in the spring of 1980 to bring forward legislation to provide members of the RCMP with more equity within the force, and whether he intends to recognize the very real concerns that there be included in this new legislation some provision for collective bargaining without the right for the members to withdraw their services?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the legislation that I referred to is now on the Order Paper. If the Conservative Party is indicating through the hon. member that there is some interest in making progress on that legislation, then I would be very happy to ask my House leader to discuss the possibility of bringing it forward this week. It is important legislation, as the hon. member said. Although it does not contain the collective bargaining recommendations that the hon. member seems to be advocating, it does increase equity in the force and I think it would be tremendous progress.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR KASKA, DENE TRIBAL COUNCIL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): I have a brief question, Madam Speaker, that I shall direct to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. One of the more recent visits the minister made to the Yukon and northeastern British Columbia brought him in contact with the Kaska, Dene Tribal Council which was established about a year ago. The minister made a promise in meetings with that particular native group that funds would be provided to help with the research of their claim as it relates to the encroachment of a massive hydro development plant in northeastern British Columbia, and as these people relate to the claims which are presently negotiated in the Yukon. Will the minister tell the House whether he has made good his promise and made the funds available to the Kaska people, or when is he prepared to do so?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, no, I cannot assure the hon. member that I have been able to assure the people involved in the hon. member's question of the necessary funding. I have been endeavouring to find additional funds for this current fiscal year for research into land claims. I do agree, Madam Speaker, that these people do have a legitimate claim, particularly because there is some impact upon them as a result of the cost of the Yukon Indian claim. I have not yet been able to find the necessary moneys, certainly in the proportions they are requesting. I am still continuing to try to do so.

TIMING OF PROVISION OF FUNDS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Because of the urgency of this matter, is the minister prepared to advance smaller sums than those he had promised, and could he give me a time-frame? Will it be in the spring when these funds will become available? I was very distressed not to see any indication of his promise in the estimates that we have now before committee.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have heard the hon. member's representations. I will check into the matter and get back to him.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE SOIL IN ONTARIO

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reassure the people of Simcoe County that plans to move 4,000 tonnes of radioactive soil to Base Borden are dead and will not be revived?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there has been a court decision rendered on this matter that prevents the federal government from doing anything on this subject. Following the temporary interim injunction that has been granted by the courts, until the matter is otherwise resolved or until there is a final decision by the courts on this subject, I cannot comment further.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ATTEND PUBLIC MEETING

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I shall repeat the question again to the minister. Will he give the assurance to the House that he is now dropping plans to move 4,000 tonnes of radioactive soil to Base Borden? If not, will the minister tell the House if he is aware of a letter from the Executive of the Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe Liberal Association that says:

> What we object to, is the manner in which this decision was made, without local government consultation, without environmental studies, and without public hearings. This decision is totally devoid of the spirit and philosophy of liberalism as we understand it to be.
>
> We demand that the proposed dumping be stopped.

If the minister is aware of that and if he does intend to pursue the matter, will he personally appear at a public meeting in the affected area to hear from affected residents?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, again I have indicated that there has been an interim injunction granted by the courts on this subject. I do not want to comment further until the courts have rendered a final decision.

● (1500)

I might add that I have written to the government of Ontario suggesting that it might consider alternative plans under the powers it has, reminding it in particular that the land in question has been owned by the Ontario Housing Corporation and that it could fulfil its own responsibility in this regard. Discussions are taking place at the present time, and if and when this matter is resolved I will certainly be very happy to inform my colleague.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented to the House on Friday, November 27, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITION

MISS JEWETT—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure, not only a duty, for me to present this petition on behalf of the Ad Hoc Committee of Canadian Women, humbly praying that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms be amended by deleting Section 33, the override section, thereby ensuring that fundamental human rights and freedoms are genuinely and fully entrenched within both federal and provincial jurisdiction.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,703, 2,812, 2,817, 2,842, 3,183, 3,196, and 3,234.

[Text]

CONTRACT WITH FOUR ENGINEERING FIRMS

Question No. 2,703—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did four engineering firms in Ottawa each receive a $100,000 contract for the same purpose "Engineering Services for Medium Logistic Vehicle Wheeled 4 (MLVW4) project 11MY.3611003." and, if so, are the firms competing with each other in a phase of a larger contract or are they engaged in different parts of the same project?

2. Were any firms outside Ottawa approached to see if they would be interested in participating in the work?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Four Ottawa-based engineering firms have each received a $100,000 contract for the provision of a broad range of engineering services and technical support on an as and when required basis from date of contract award to March 31, 1982. Included, will be the development and prototyping of various kits to be used on the MLVW project.

The firms are not competing with each other. They are engaged in developing special equipment vehicle kits, some 43 in number, and including technical data packages. Production contracts for high quantity of similar kits will be awarded competitively to Canadian industry. It will be an option that the firms that do develop the kits can also be tasked to acquire the small quantity production kits, if that is considered cost effective and reduces risk.

2. No. Firms outside of Ottawa were not requested to participate for the following reasons:

(a) As a matter of policy, the Department of Supply and Services will endeavor to acquire goods and services of comparable quality at a minimum cost to the Crown.

(b) In this particular case, the aforementioned principle dictated the approach followed i.e., the project management and task project officers will all be located in Ottawa and the nature of the work involved will require day-to-day control, direction and inspection acceptance. The staff used representatives and key project participants from the supply branch as well as the required test facilities are all located in Ottawa.

(c) Consequently, the engineering services contracts were limited to Ottawa area firms at enormous savings in travel costs, co-ordination efforts and manpower.

EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,812—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $2,001 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization.

2. Nil.

3. Nil.

4. Nil, the only employee on education leave in the past three years is still with the department.

Question No. 2,817—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of External Affairs for the Canadian International Development Agency at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $9,094 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The guidelines that were used are contained in the following two documents: "CIDA's Training and Development Policy, 1980", Treasury Board's personnel management manual, chapter 110-5—Conditions governing education, training and subsidization.

2. Nil.

3. Nil.

4. 26.3 per cent have left the Public Service.

Question No. 2,842—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Treasury Board for the Comptroller General at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $10,047 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board):

1. (a) (i), (ii) and (iii) Chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization.

   (b) Same as (a) above.

2. Nil.

3. (a) Nil.

   (b) Nil.

   (c) 100 per cent.

4. None.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 3,183—Mr. Cossitt:

Which Crown corporations, agencies and enterprises are classified, for the purposes of the national income and expenditure accounts, as (a) "government" (b) "corporate and government business enterprises"?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Statistics Canada classifies Crown corporations, agencies and enterprises according to the national accounts basis as follows:

(a) Government	(b) Corporate and government business enterprises
Agricultural Stabilization Board	Air Canada
Atomic Energy Control Board	Bank of Canada
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation
Canada Council	Canadair Limited
Canada Employment and Immigration Commission	Canadian Arsenals Limited
Canada Lands Company Limited	Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation	Canadian Commercial Corporation
Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety	Canadian National Railways
Canadian Dairy Commission	Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited
Canadian Film Development Corporation	Canadian Patents and Development Limited
Canadian International Grains Institute	Canadian Saltfish Corporation
Cape Breton Development Corporation	The Canadian Wheat Board
Centennial Commission	The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	Eldorado Aviation Limited
Defence Construction (1951) Limited	Eldorado Nuclear Limited
Director of Soldier Settlement	Export Development Corporation
The Director, Veterans' Land Act	Farm Credit Corporation
Economic Council of Canada	Federal Business Development Bank
Federal Insolvency Trustee Agency	Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation
Fisheries Prices Support Board	Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation
The International Development Research Centre	Loto Canada Inc.
Livestock Feed Board of Canada	National Harbours Board
Medical Research Council of Canada	Northern Canada Power Commission
Municipal Development and Loan Board	Northern Transportation Company Limited
National Arts Centre Corporation	Petro-Canada
The National Battlefield Commission	Royal Canadian Mint
National Capital Commission	The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority
National Museums of Canada	The Seaway International Bridge Corporation Limited

Order Paper Questions

National Research Council
Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council
Pilotage Authorities
Atlantic Pilotage Authority
Laurentian Pilotage Authority
Great Lakes Pilotage Authority
Pacific Pilotage Authority
Science Council of Canada
Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Standards Council of Canada
Teleglobe Canada
Uranium Canada Limited
Via Rail Canada Inc.

CASH PAYMENTS TO EMPLOYEES

Question No. 3,196—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to question no. 2,789, what is the basis of the calculation of the cash payments to employees in those provinces where payments for health care are not made to the provincial health authorities?

2. In the last year for which the information is available, by province, what amount was paid to the provincial health authorities or treasuries and what amount was paid directly to public servants in the form of cash payments?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Employees and pensioners of the federal government receive a benefit from the government as employer in respect of the cost of the health care plan in their respective provinces of residence.

In those provinces which do not levy provincial health insurance premiums, the employer contributions are based on the estimated per capita costs, for each individual province, for those health care services insured under the provincial plans and funded by the federal government and the provinces.

In Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta and the Yukon territory, part of the employer's contribution may be made by direct cash payments to employees whenever the premium is less than the employer's contribution based on provincial per capita cost of health care.

2. The government's total expenditure, by province, for fiscal year 1980-81 in respect of this benefit program (including contributions made to or on behalf of employees, members of the Armed Forces and RCMP, and pensioners), was as follows:

Province	Contributions paid direct to provincial authorities in premium-levying provinces
Ontario	$25,958,919.14
British Columbia	9,241,861.05
Alberta	3,398,217.62
Yukon territory	293,998.29

Province	Contributions paid direct to employees, etc.
Newfoundland	$2,065,339.63
P.E.I.	592,127.83
Nova Scotia	7,482,343.45
New Brunswick	3,120,021.59
Quebec	18,533,028.38
Manitoba	4,453,387.77
Saskatchewan	2,481,498.78
Northwest Territories	372,592.09
Ontario	450,808.00
British Columbia	826,896.67
Alberta	2,012,145.33
Yukon Territory	39,874.81

EXPENSE ACCOUNTS FOR DEPUTY MINISTERS

Question No. 3,234—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the rules and regulations pertaining to expense accounts or expenses of a personal nature incurred by deputy ministers and being paid for from public funds?

2. Are there guidelines laid down for deputy ministers in this regard and (a) if so, what are they (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Does the government intend to draw up such guidelines and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Expenses of a personal nature incurred by deputy ministers which are not the direct result of a program requirement are not reimbursable from public funds.

2. No specific guidelines are laid down for deputy ministers in this regard; however, various administrative policies enunciate rules and regulations with respect to travel, membership fees, hospitality and relocation. These policies establish admissible charges and limitations with respect to the expenditure of public funds for program reasons in each category, and are applicable to all public servants.

3. The current guidelines associated with each particular policy are considered adequate; the government does not intend to develop specific rules and regulations pertaining exclusively to deputy ministers.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Friday, November 27, consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :

que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Version française

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

Titre abrégé

SCHEDULE B

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Séance annuelle

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Liberté de circulation

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Liberté d'établissement

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Restriction

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Programmes de promotion sociale

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

Détention ou emprisonnement

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités. Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires. Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète. Interprète

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques. Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques. Programmes de promotion sociale

Official Languages of Canada

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of Canada

16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

16. (1) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Canada; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions du Parlement et du gouvernement du Canada. Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of New Brunswick

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the legislature and government of New Brunswick.

(2) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions de la Légis- Langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick

lature et du gouvernement du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Advancement of status and use

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

(3) La présente charte ne limite pas le pouvoir du Parlement et des législatures de favoriser la progression vers l'égalité de statut ou d'usage du français et de l'anglais.

Progression vers l'égalité

Proceedings of Parliament

17. (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.

17. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux du Parlement.

Travaux du Parlement

Proceedings of New Brunswick legislature

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

Parliamentary statutes and records

18. (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

18. (1) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux du Parlement sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents parlementaires

New Brunswick statutes and records

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

(2) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

Proceedings in courts established by Parliament

19. (1) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.

19. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux établis par le Parlement et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux établis par le Parlement

Proceedings in New Brunswick courts

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

(2) Le public a, au Nouveau-Brunswick, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec tout bureau des institutions de la législature ou du gouvernement ou pour en recevoir les services.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions du Nouveau-Brunswick

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Recours

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Dispositions générales

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be con-

Maintien des autres droits et libertés

26. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne constitue pas strued as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

une négation des autres droits ou libertés qui existent au Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

28. Indépendamment des autres dispositions de la présente charte, les droits et libertés qui y sont mentionnés sont garantis également aux personnes des deux sexes.

Égalité de garantie des droits pour les deux sexes

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

29. Les dispositions de la présente charte ne portent pas atteinte aux droits ou privilèges garantis en vertu de la Constitution du Canada concernant les écoles séparées et autres écoles confessionnelles.

Maintien des droits relatifs à certaines écoles

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Effet de la dérogation

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Durée de validité

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Nouvelle adoption

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

Durée de validité

Citation

Titre

Citation

34. This Part may be cited as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

34. Titre de la présente partie : Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

Titre

PART II

RIGHTS OF THE ABORIGINAL PEOPLES OF CANADA

PARTIE II

DROITS DES PEUPLES AUTOCHTONES DU CANADA

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

35. (1) Les droits existants — ancestraux ou issus de traités — des peuples autochtones du Canada sont reconnus et confirmés.

Confirmation des droits existants des peuples autochtones

Definition of "aboriginal peoples of Canada"

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

(2) Dans la présente loi, «peuples autochtones du Canada» s'entend notamment des Indiens, des Inuit et des Métis du Canada.

Définition de «peuples autochtones du Canada»

PART III

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PARTIE III

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

36. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

36. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART IV

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

PARTIE IV

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Constitutional conference

37. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Conférence constitutionnelle

37. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART V

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

38. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces

Procédure normale de modification

38. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue repré-

that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

sente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Majorité simple

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Désaccord

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Levée du désaccord

Restriction on proclamation

39. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

39. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Restriction

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Idem

Compensation

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

40. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 38(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Compensation

Amendment by unanimous consent

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters

41. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivan-

Consentement unanime

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

Amendment by general procedure

42. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 41(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

43. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and tes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 43, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Procédure normale de modification

42. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 38(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 41*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 38(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

43. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

Amendments by Parliament

44. Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

44. Sous réserve des articles 41 et 42, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

45. Subject to section 41, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

45. Sous réserve de l'article 41, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Modification par les législatures

Initiation of amendment procedures

46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

46. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 38, 41, 42 et 43 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Initiative des procédures

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Possibilité de révocation

Amendments without Senate resolution

47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41, 42 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

47. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 38, 41, 42 ou 43, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Computation du délai

Advice to issue proclamation

48. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions

48. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolu-

Demande de proclamation

required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Constitutional conference

49. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

PART VI

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

50. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

tions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Conférence constitutionnelle

49. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PARTIE VI

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

50. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Pouvoir du Parlement

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

Taxation des ressources

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

«Production primaire»

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

Idem

51. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

51. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

Idem

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

PART VII

GENERAL

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

(a) the Canada Act, including this Act;

(b) the Acts and orders referred to in Schedule I; and

(c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Repeals and new names

53. (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of Schedule I are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

PARTIE VII

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

Primauté de la Constitution du Canada

52. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

Constitution du Canada

(2) La Constitution du Canada comprend :

a) la Loi sur le Canada, y compris la présente loi;

b) les textes législatifs et les décrets figurant à l'annexe I;

c) les modifications des textes législatifs et des décrets mentionnés aux alinéas a) ou b).

Modification

(3) La Constitution du Canada ne peut être modifiée que conformément aux pouvoirs conférés par elle.

Abrogation et nouveaux titres

53. (1) Les textes législatifs et les décrets énumérés à la colonne I de l'annexe I sont abrogés ou modifiés dans la mesure indiquée à la colonne II. Sauf abrogation, ils restent en vigueur en tant que lois du Canada sous les titres mentionnés à la colonne III.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act, that refers to an enactment referred to in Schedule I by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in Schedule I may be cited as the Constitution Act followed by the year and number, if any, of its enactment.

Modifications corrélatives

(2) Tout texte législatif ou réglementaire, sauf la Loi sur le Canada, qui fait mention d'un texte législatif ou décret figurant à l'annexe I par le titre indiqué à la colonne I est modifié par substitution à ce titre du titre correspondant mentionné à la colonne III; tout Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique non mentionné à l'annexe I peut être cité sous le titre de Loi constitutionnelle suivi de l'indication de l'année de son adoption et éventuellement de son numéro.

Repeal and consequential amendments

54. Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Abrogation et modifications qui en découlent

54. La partie IV est abrogée un an après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie et le gouverneur général peut, par proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada, abroger le présent article et apporter en conséquence de cette double abrogation les aménagements qui s'imposent à la présente loi.

French version of Constitution of Canada

55. A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in Schedule I shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

Version française de certains textes constitutionnels

55. Le ministre de la Justice du Canada est chargé de rédiger, dans les meilleurs délais, la version française des parties de la Constitution du Canada qui figurent à l'annexe I; toute partie suffisamment importante est, dès qu'elle est prête, déposée pour adoption par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conformément à la procédure applicable à l'époque à la modification des dispositions constitutionnelles qu'elle contient.

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

56. Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 55, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de certains textes constitutionnels

56. Les versions française et anglaise des parties de la Constitution du Canada adoptées dans ces deux langues ont également force de loi. En outre, ont également force de loi, dès l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'article 55, d'une partie de la version française de la Constitution, cette partie et la version anglaise correspondante.

English and French versions of this Act

57. The English and French versions of this Act are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de la présente loi

57. Les versions française et anglaise de la présente loi ont également force de loi.

Commencement

58. Subject to section 59, this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Entrée en vigueur

58. Sous réserve de l'article 59, la présente loi entre en vigueur à la date fixée par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Commencement of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec

59. (1) Paragraph 23(1)(a) shall come into force in respect of Quebec on a day to be

Entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec

59. (1) L'alinéa 23(1)a) entre en vigueur pour le Québec à la date fixée par proclama-

fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

tion de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Authorization of Quebec

(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be issued only where authorized by the legislative assembly or government of Quebec.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (1) ne peut être prise qu'après autorisation de l'assemblée législative ou du gouvernement du Québec.

Autorisation du Québec

Repeal of this section

(3) This section may be repealed on the day paragraph 23(1)(a) comes into force in respect of Quebec and this Act amended and renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of this section, by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

(3) Le présent article peut être abrogé à la date d'entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec, et la présente loi faire l'objet, dès cette abrogation, des modifications et changements de numérotation qui en découlent, par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Abrogation du présent article

Short title and citations

60. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1981, and the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1975 (No. 2) and this Act may be cited together as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1981.

60. Titre abrégé de la présente annexe : Loi constitutionnelle de 1981; titre commun des lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1975 (nº 2) et de la présente loi : Lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1981.

Titres

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

MODERNIZATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
1.	British North America Act, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	(1) Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867." (2) Section 20 is repealed. (3) Class 1 of section 91 is repealed. (4) Class 1 of section 92 is repealed.	Constitution Act, 1867
2.	An Act to amend and continue the Act 32-33 Victoria chapter 3; and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Can.)	(1) The long title is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "Manitoba Act, 1870." (2) Section 20 is repealed.	Manitoba Act, 1870
3.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the union, dated the 23rd day of June, 1870		Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order
4.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting British Columbia into the Union, dated the 16th day of May, 1871		British Columbia Terms of Union
5.	British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)	Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1871."	Constitution Act, 1871
6.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the Union, dated the 26th day of June, 1873		Prince Edward Island Terms of Union
7.	Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.)		Parliament of Canada Act, 1875
8.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting all British possessions and Territories in North America and islands adjacent thereto into the Union, dated the 31st day of July, 1880		Adjacent Territories Order

ANNEXE I

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

ACTUALISATION DE LA CONSTITUTION

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
1.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	(1) L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé. (3) La catégorie 1 de l'article 91 est abrogée. (4) La catégorie 1 de l'article 92 est abrogée.	Loi constitutionnelle de 1867
2.	Acte pour amender et continuer l'acte trente-deux et trente-trois Victoria, chapitre trois, et pour établir et constituer le gouvernement de la province de Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Canada)	(1) Le titre complet est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé.	Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba
3.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Terre de Rupert et le Territoire du Nord-Ouest, en date du 23 juin 1870		Décret en conseil sur la terre de Rupert et le territoire du Nord-Ouest
4.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Colombie-Britannique, en date du 16 mai 1871		Conditions de l'adhésion de la Colombie-Britannique
5.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)	L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1871.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1871
6.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, en date du 26 juin 1873		Conditions de l'adhésion de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard
7.	Acte du Parlement du Canada, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1875 sur le Parlement du Canada
8.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant dans l'Union tous les territoires et possessions britanniques dans l'Amérique du Nord, et les îles adjacentes à ces territoires et possessions, en date du 31 juillet 1880		Décret en conseil sur les territoires adjacents

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
9.	British North America Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1886."	Constitution Act, 1886
10.	Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)		Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889
11.	Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
12.	The Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3 (Can.)		Alberta Act
13.	The Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42 (Can.)		Saskatchewan Act
14.	British North America Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1907."	Constitution Act, 1907
15.	British North America Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1915."	Constitution Act, 1915
16.	British North America Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1930."	Constitution Act, 1930
17.	Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.)	In so far as they apply to Canada, (a) section 4 is repealed; and (b) subsection 7(1) is repealed.	Statute of Westminster, 1931
18.	British North America Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1940."	Constitution Act, 1940
19.	British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
9.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1886.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1886
10.	Acte du Canada (limites d'Ontario) 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1889 sur le Canada (frontières de l'Ontario)
11.	Acte concernant l'Orateur canadien (nomination d'un suppléant) 1895, 2e session, 59 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
12.	Acte de l'Alberta, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 3 (Canada)		Loi sur l'Alberta
13.	Acte de la Saskatchewan, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 42 (Canada)		Loi sur la Saskatchewan
14.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1907, 7 Ed. VII, c. 11 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1907.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1907
15.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1915.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1915
16.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1930.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1930
17.	Statut de Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (R.-U.)	Dans la mesure où ils s'appliquent au Canada : a) l'article 4 est abrogé; b) le paragraphe 7(1) est abrogé.	Statut de Westminster de 1931
18.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1940.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1940
19.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
20.	British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
21.	British North America Act, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Newfoundland Act."	Newfoundland Act
22.	British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
23.	British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
24.	British North America Act, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Can.)	The Act is repealed.
25.	British North America Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1960."	Constitution Act, 1960
26.	British North America Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1964."	Constitution Act, 1964
27.	British North America Act, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Part I (Can.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1965."	Constitution Act, 1965
28.	British North America Act, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 38(1) (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1974."	Constitution Act, 1974

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
20.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
21.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi sur Terre-Neuve.»	Loi sur Terre-Neuve
22.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique (N° 2), 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
23.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
24.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Canada)	La loi est abrogée.
25.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1960.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1960
26.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1964.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1964
27.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1965.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1965
28.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par le paragraphe 38(1) de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1974.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1974

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Concluded

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
29.	British North America Act, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 31 (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975
30.	British North America Act (No. 2), 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Can.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975

ANNEXE I (fin)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
29.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par l'article 31 de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975
30.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique nº 2, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Canada)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975

The Constitution

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate once again. Subject to the House order that was agreed to unanimously on Friday, on behalf of the Conservative Party I intend to move an amendment. I shall read it first so that members of the House can be aware of its contents and possibly the reasons for the argument being made. Maybe that is a twist or an initiative that has not been too common in this House, but I will do it that way today. I move:

That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended by striking out Clause 40 and substituting the following:

40. In the event that a province dissents from an amendment conferring legislative jurisdiction on Parliament, the Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of that province, taking into account the per capita costs to exercise that jurisdiction in the provinces which have approved the amendment.

Members of the House will recall the comments the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made in this House on Friday. I have reread his remarks this morning. He indicated that he would be receiving a telex from Premier Bennett, the chairman of the premiers, indicating that they had two points of view in mind. First, they did not want the accord to be broken; second, they did not want any further amendments. It is important that we consider this telex in the context in which it was made.

Nothwithstanding the Prime Minister's comments on Friday, I cannot believe that he or any of the premiers of the signatory provinces are willing to forgo an opportunity to improve the resolution to the point where the province of Quebec might be able to sign the accord. Every member of this party is concerned that the accord remain. We do not want to break the accord. Nor is it our intention today in moving this amendment, which we earlier told all parties we would move, in any way to jeopardize or weaken the accord.

It is important that all of us recognize that members of the Canadian Parliament are part of the process of constitutional change. It must be clearly understood that it is not only the premiers—although it is their decision and their decision only whether they want any legislative action in their legislatures regarding the Constitution—but also members of this House who must understand that Parliament is not simply a bystander waiting to rubberstamp that which has been agreed to.

This is not the time to address the question of federal-provincial conferences and what effect they have in terms of the parliamentary process in Canada. That is for another day. I am sure that the premiers fully recognize that the Parliament of Canada has a responsibility and, despite the Prime Minister's remarks on Friday, this party at least intends to fulfil its responsibilities in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It is also important to recognize that the Accord signed on November 5 left the door open for the Prime Minister and this Parliament to make accommodations to Quebec which would put forward an olive branch, if you like, or the possibility of the people of Quebec feeling that they were part of the accord and the resolution that will go to Westminster later. That is the spirit in which we present the amendment today.

Whether the present government of Quebec has any intention of signing the accord is a point that I will not attempt to argue today but it is our responsibility to present to the people of Quebec a resolution that is generally acceptable to them because it addresses the traditional concerns of Quebecers and governments past.

I shall go on to argue that our concern is not solely with the province of Quebec but rather with the provinces of Canada, especially those that need equalization, because the amending formula must serve all of Canada for many years to come. I am stressing that it is an amendment not directed solely and only to Quebec, although obviously it addresses the question that surrounds that province's ability to join the accord; this amendment is one that is universally applicable to all provinces.

The amendment that I propose will reintroduce to the Constitution's amending formula a reasonable financial compensation to provinces opting out of a situation where powers or rights held since confederation are transferred to the central government in Ottawa.

Two points must be made at the outset. First, constitutional amendments to which reasonable financial compensation will apply are strictly limited to the contents of Section 37 of the resolution before us. It is important that Canadians understand that we are not proposing financial compensation to any province wanting to be an obstacle to any future constitutional change. It applies only to the case of proprietary rights of a province or other rights of a legislature, rights I must repeat and emphasize granted to the provinces by the Fathers of Confederation, and to powers held by the provinces where reasonable financial compensation could apply.

• (1510)

I believe it is also important to underline that this would be the only situation where a province could opt out and receive compensation. It would only be where those powers have been, in fact, transferred and where those powers have obviously been held by the provinces earlier. Opting out and financial compensation could never lead, in my mind, to less standardization or greater decentralization than we have in Canada today, and I intend to explain that. We would have a situation where, instead of 10 different standards, there might be two or three or four. Additionally, provinces which had not opted in to a transfer of jurisdiction could, at any later date, decide to opt in. They could do that at any time. However, once any province agreed to transfer its jurisdiction, it could then not opt out again. In other words, once in, one could not get out.

Therefore, I would suggest that it could eventually lead, concerning issues I will point out, to greater standardization. For example, if a province refused to transfer power and the people of that province began to be upset that they did not share the same standards or arrangements as two-thirds of the rest of Canada, they would obviously apply pressure to their government to opt in, to have the same benefits and the same conditions. For example, we have already seeen the ability of popular opinion to pressure premiers, the provinces and the Prime Minister. Never has that been more evident than, for example, with Section 28 and Section 34 last week. Therefore, public pressure has changed the mind of the Prime Minister on an issue which has been very central to his administration and to the position in which he sees himself in historical terms.

On the other hand, if the people of the province were convinced that the province could look after the area with which they were dealing far better than the federal government, who could say that they were wrong? Why should they then not leave the matter within provincial jurisdiction? Opting out and financial compensation provide a protection for the unique character of every province, a uniqueness which was recognized by the founding Fathers of Confederation, not only because of the special character of the province of Quebec, I suggest to Your Honour, but also because of the special characters of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario; and also, I suggest, the special conditions prevailing in the provinces which entered confederation after the original four.

In my earlier remarks, I said that our amendment did not apply only to Quebec. In fact, this party has always been concerned that there be a so-called special status for any province. However, it is important that we look at what protection this amendment would, in fact, give to the province of Quebec. As my leader said in his remarks a few days ago, I, for one, am not a resident of that province, so some members in the House might ask why I am qualified to speak on this issue. I say to them that I believe it is important that hon. members from different provinces relate to the issues which are of importance in other provinces.

Therefore, I do not believe I have to be a Quebecer to understand the significance, for instance, of an article in Saturday's La Presse where the Quebec Liberal leader, Mr. Claude Ryan, revealed that in his view it was not the intention of the Prime Minister to approach power sharing with the provinces in a genuine spirit. In reading that article, Quebecers must surely have had renewed doubts about the real intentions of the federal government in this whole constitutional exercise. Those are not my words but the sentiments expressed in that article by Mr. Claude Ryan.

Therefore, faced with the prospect of centralization of power in Ottawa, the protection of reasonable financial compensation, I believe, is very important to this debate and to the future of this country. The question can be asked as we address it. Does Quebec or did Quebec have a veto? If I correctly understand the Premier of Quebec, that issue will now be taken by that government to the courts. However, speaking as only one member of this House, if Quebec did have a veto, I seriously question whether that was not seriously jeopardized by the signing of the accord of April 16 last. That is a personal opinion.

However, regardless of whether or not that province had a veto, I believed that full protection is another issue. When Quebec signed the accord of April 16, I know it did so on the understanding that full compensation would be given if, in fact, powers were transferred from the provinces to the central government or the federal government here in Ottawa. It was a provision of that April accord to which all the signatories gave assent at that time. They knew that financial compensation for any province not opting in to constitutional amendments taking away their jurisdiction was an intrinsic element of an amending formula which recognized the equality of the provinces for the first time.

We on this side of the House, or, at least, we in this party, have argued for the equality of the provinces. We cannot have a federation if different provinces are created with different standards by which they can apply their strength and power to the amending formula. Additionally, the Premier of Ontario recognized the equality of all provinces in the November conference when he volunteered to give up Ontario's veto. We all recall that action as an attempt by that premier to get an accord which would conclude the process.

Today, I believe that since we have the April accord and the November accord, no province can now object to financial compensation on substantive grounds because, in one way or another, they have all agreed with the concept of the equality of all provinces. If all provinces are equal, it follows that constitutional protection of their traditional jurisdiction must therefore also apply to all provinces.

Since November 5, and again when he came into the House immediately after the accord was signed, the Prime Minister has said he is willing to have ongoing talks with the province of Quebec in an attempt to find agreement on the constitutional accord. The Premiers of the provinces, in their closing public statements of November 5, gave the Prime Minister considerable latitude in pursuing discussions with that province. It is imperative that the Prime Minister use that freedom to act before the resolution becomes part of the Constitution.

Hon. members of the House may or may not remember that in order to change the amending formula, unanimous consent of the provinces and the federal government will be required. Unanimous consent is a standard much more strict than that which was imposed on us by the Supreme Court in its September decision. It is a standard which the Prime Minister himself has formerly called the "tyranny of unanimity".

Therefore, I want to emphasize to hon. members in the House that if some constitutional arrangement for reasonable financial compensation is ever to be worked out, it must be done now before the resolution is passed here, because in the future, when the unanimity rule will apply, I believe it will not take place. At that stage, consent of only one province would be needed to change the amending formula. Using the Prime Minister's own arguments, I believe we would then have a "no" from at least one of the provinces. If the government really wants to bring into the accord the only province which is still outside, or, at least, put forward the olive branch to the people of that province who are still outside, I suggest that it should do it now. In the future it may be too late because any province—Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Ontario—could, in fact, block that attempt. I believe this is the time for Ottawa to prove its good faith to the people of Quebec.

I also want to explain this proposal to the critics of the proposal. One critic, who was quick off the mark, and who has criticized it consistently, has been the leader of the New Democratic Party. This amendment has somehow been interpreted as involving some kind of incentive for provinces whereby they would be able to opt out of constitutional amendments more easily if they were compensated.

● (1520)

It has also been said that financial compensation would be an incentive to allow rich provinces to prevent constitutional amendments by opting out. What seems clear to me is that rich provinces do not need any incentive because they are already rich. Financial compensation is no incentive to a province which is capable of being self-sufficient from its own revenue base. It can already afford to finance its own unique programs with or without financial compensation. It is only an incentive for provinces which are short of revenue and need equalization.

I believe the leader of the New Democratic Party knows that, if financial compensation were denied to poor provinces, we would be saying in effect "It's too bad you're poor but we won't do anything about that; you'll just have to give up that jurisdiction to Ottawa if you can't afford to retain it". I suggest to the leader of the New Democratic Party that he re-examine the statements he has made.

He has also raised, as have the Prime Minister and his supporters, the concept of a checkerboard Canada. May I remind them that financial compensation is envisaged only for constitutional amendments which would centralize power in federal hands by transferring jurisdiction from the provinces. For instance, they use the argument of medicare. Let us look at that argument. They say that if the transfer of medicare had taken place, it would have been prevented were financial compensation offered to provinces not opting in. In the first place, medicare is a program in a field of provincial jurisdiction, both now and when it was introduced. On the one hand, health care in Canada is a checkerboard because ten provincial governments retain jurisdiction for it to this day. As my colleague has said, they all run it differently and you cannot have a checkerboard greater than that. But on the other hand, the fact of a checkerboard, as they call it, did not prevent the development of, in the Prime Minister's language, a "national will" as far as health care is concerned. The reality of medicare today is that 11 governments in Canada accept it because they agree with it. There is no checkerboard, yet health care is the responsibility of ten different provincial governments.

Before leaving the example of medicare, I want to make another point. In one sense medicare, to use that argument, is a completely false issue in the context of financial compensation, because it came about historically through the use of the federal spending power, not through constitutional amendment. It is important that everyone understand that distinction. People should not have a fear that suddenly social policies or social programs will disappear from the scene because these were affected by spending power rather than constitutional change.

Medicare was not made possible through a constitutional amendment; it was brought about through the use of the federal spending power. And what was the principle, at least in part, of the use of the spending power? Not all provinces could afford medicare, so Ottawa used its financial resources to assist them. That is the same principle behind financial compensation, nothing else. Not all provinces can afford to exercise certain of their constitutional responsibilities at the same level as others—without assistance from the central government. That does not mean that the division of powers is wrong; it simply means that not all provinces have a self-sufficient fiscal capacity.

Financial compensation is a mechanism enabling them to retain a historical jurisdiction when that is in the best interests of the people of a province without incurring a financial penalty for doing so, without having to buy the right to go on exercising that jurisdiction, without subjecting those citizens to some kind of double taxation. We do not propose an incentive for rich provinces; I repeat, they are already rich, they do not need any incentive.

Before leaving medicare, I want to put a hypothetical situation to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Medicare was not introduced through constitutional amendment. Suppose it had been. Suppose that rather than using the federal spending power in health care Ottawa had simply asked that health care be transferred to federal hands.

Let us take that hypothetical case. An NDP government was in power in Saskatchewan at the time. It was in Saskatchewan that medicare was born. I ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party whether it would have come, or come as soon, if Saskatchewan had not had jurisdiction over health. And I ask him further whether Saskatchewan could have exercised its jurisdiction if, through the absence of fiscal compensation, it had been forced to accept a constitutional transfer first. Would medicare have come about in that province when it did? The situation is hypothetical. There are no definitive answers. But I suggest to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that the argument has to be made.

If the Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to argue that social programs would be prevented if Ottawa does not have constitutional jurisdiction over them, I believe he is denying the history of medicare. It began under a provincial government and spread across the land, aided by the federal spending power. If through fiscal compensation, provinces wishing to do so can exercise their jurisdiction without financial penalty, the same situation can occur again. In the meantime, Ottawa retains its spending power and can use it to encourage provinces to provide programs in their jurisdiction which are national in character. I believe that is the flexibility of federalism, and I believe that is the reason Canada works as a nation.

I said earlier that the provinces and the regions are unique in many ways, but we should not in our amendments here attempt to bring about a oneness or a sameness, especially in these areas with which we are dealing today. I believe it is important to show that provinces and regions can be unique in many ways because our amendment has been interpreted largely as an overture to Quebec.

I say to members of the House that this overture is not only to the province of Quebec. It is not that we want some special status for that province or for any other province—and I do not wish to dwell on the question of special status for Quebec. That is not my point. While it is perfectly obvious that Quebec is unique in many ways, it is most unique in areas of culture and language, and the resolution provides for that situation. Nevertheless, it is universally accepted that the Constitution should make provision for the free expression of Quebec's unique character.

What should be equally obvious, then, is that other provinces are unique as well, albeit in different ways. The genius of Canadian federalism is that it allows all regions and provinces to express their individuality or to have their special requirements met without preventing the free expression of other provinces and without preventing the development of a national will. Financial compensation captures that genius of federalism and expresses it in a technical way.

My colleague says it is possibly the Canadian way. What we are trying to remove is the fear of a province saying no. By saying no it would have the problem then of a population which would say: "Transfer your power, because if you do not transfer your power, we will not have the same rights and the same social policies that Canadians in other provinces enjoy".

If the House agrees with this amendment to provide financial compensation to all provinces, I believe it makes sense to expand it beyond the area of educational and cultural matters. As I have said, medicare and other pioneering social programs might never have been implemented had jurisdiction been held in Ottawa. I am convinced that is the case because I have seen the suspicions, fears and difficulties that exist in federal-provincial relations on both sides of the table. Nor does it make any sense to limit financial compensation to Quebec. While we are motivated out of a sense of justice for that province and its people, we do not want to stop short of justice for every province and for all citizens of Canada.

I remind this House that when we in this party speak of justice for the provinces, we have in mind justice for the people of Canada, who are sometimes better served by Ottawa and at other times better served by their provinces and legislatures.

This issue has been dealt with at length in committee. In regard to the argument of a checkerboard, while it was made strenuously by members, including the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), on sober second thought, as we reflect on it and as we look at the new amending formula today, it is important for us to recognize that what this amendment would do is in fact not create special status, it would not create the checkerboard effect that some people fear, but rather would provide the equality for all provinces which we seek.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1530)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all parties in the House and the nine provincial governments have agreed there is a great deal in the constitutional resolution which will benefit all Canadians. However, we all know it contains certain flaws, many of them rather important. So far in response to this reality we have improved some of those flaws by producing positive changes affecting the equality of women and equality for the aboriginal peoples of Canada. However, in these final days of this historic debate more needs to be done; more care needs to be given to what we are about to finish.

At the time of the accord all three federal leaders expressed concern about the absence of Quebec's signature. All were serious and all three said greater efforts were required. The government responded, I candidly say, by offering financial compensation for constitutional changes in the educational and cultural domains. Although this was offered all provinces, what I want to stress is that no one in this country is under any illusion that the real reason was to come to grips with Quebec's legitimate and historic concerns. More, as I have said, needs to be done in this direction.

Some Canadians have held the view that, no matter what is included in the constitutional resolution, the province of Quebec would not agree. The most legitimate reason for this assumption is that the Parti Québécois, constituting a government committed to sovereignty-association, would find it virtually impossible to patriate a constitution that remains federal in nature. I candidly say that my own disposition has been of this kind. I have said, and I repeat now, that I would be surprised, pleasantly so, to find any proposal which the present government of Quebec would accept.

Nonetheless, I have repeated two further points since the day of the accord with the provinces. We in this Parliament and we in the provinces of Canada outside Quebec must keep trying to persuade the government of Quebec, on the one hand, with reasonable offers; but in the final analysis the goal must be to have a proposal that gains the support, to use an old phrase, of the hearts and minds of contemporary Quebecers, and that is compatible with federalism—compatible with maintaining Canada—even if it is rejected by the present government of the province of Quebec. Our goal in this Parliament in these last days of debate must be to convince Quebecers who believe in a federal Canada that what we desire is a genuinely renewed federalism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Today on behalf of my colleagues I want to make such a proposal on the amending formula, and I hope it is one the government will consider very seriously before reaching a final decision. I also hope it is one which will obtain the support of the official opposition. It must meet, for me and my colleagues, three important tests: it must be compatible with federalism; it must be adequate in meeting the legitimate concerns of Quebec; yet it must be flexible enough to enable every province and the federal government to innovate in the future to provide a more just society. We must have a renewed federalism that can continually provide for a more equitable Canada.

Before turning to my specific proposal I would like now to discuss the amendment just proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. In a speech on Friday, November 20—and this was referred to in the speech we have just heard—the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) said quite clearly that Parliament should attempt to bridge the gap that exists where we have, and I quote:

> —on one side... the Canadian government and the nine provinces where francophones are a minority; on the other side by accident or by design... the one province where francophones are the majority.

The Leader of the Opposition then suggested that the way to bridge the gap is to include in the constitutional amending formula the general opting out formula agreed to by the government of Quebec and seven other provinces last April, about which he correctly noted the following, and again I quote the Leader of the Official Opposition:

> Quebec did not give up its veto right for nothing. It was offered in exchange for a reasonable guarantee of fiscal compensation for provinces who chose to opt out, that is, who decide not to go along with the constitutional amendment. It is common knowledge that this guarantee of full fiscal compensation was the only reason why Quebec signed the accord. It was also common knowledge that if the guarantee were withdrawn, Quebec would reject the accord so that taking this compensation out of the accord was tantamount to forcing Quebec to withdraw.

I agree with all of those words uttered by the Leader of the Official Opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition, I add, however, was perfectly correct in this assertion. He was quite right to point this important historic reality out to the rest of us. Some of us were well aware of it.

However, what the Leader of the Opposition should have added was that the overwhelming reason and justification for this proposal was not that the majority of the provinces wanted the opting out right, but because of the need to respond positively to the province of Quebec, they wanted to provide for fiscal compensation if, as a result of seven English-speaking provinces and the Government of Canada agreeing to transfer provincial jurisdiction to Ottawa, Quebec wanted to opt out. That, I say to hon. members of this House, is the reality which the Leader of the Opposition failed to mention in his speech in the House just a week ago.

It is clear to the New Democratic Party that if we accept opting out with fiscal compensation to all provinces we have a potential threat in limiting the ability of the Government of Canada in either maintaining current national programs of equality or initiating new ones such as, for example, a guaranteed annual income which falls within provincial jurisdiction.

● (1540)

As a general proposition, the Government of Canada cannot justify its involvement in a national program in which its responsibilities to the citizens would vary from province to province, even though it taxes every citizen in Canada. In addition, if all provinces could opt out with financial compensation, what incentives would there be for the rich provinces to respond positively to new national programs such as a guaranteed annual income program?

I agree with the hon. member who spoke a few moments ago that the spending power of the federal government ultimately forced medicare to come in in the province of Ontario. Because of the spending power of the government and the overlapping jurisdictional authority at that time, that situation enabled the government to do it. I say to the hon. member who has just spoken that I am not talking about programs in which the federal spending power alone is applicable; I am talking about programs in which there would have to be a transfer of jurisdictional authority from the provinces to the Government of Canada. That is crucial to the argument.

As a Canadian and one who comes from a wealthy province, I say that the rich provinces would inevitably opt out and the poorer majority in our country would suffer. Even more inevitable—this is crucial to the history of federalism in the years beyond the turn of the century—because of the likelihood of the rich provinces opting out, they would effectively kill further national innovation which could be profoundly important for a high level of equal existence and experience for Canadians from coast to coast.

In short, if we accept the Conservative amendment, in my judgment the result would be either a checkerboard Canada or the status quo, and I say that in all sincerity.

Rather than jeopardize the possibility of further innovation which could provide for a more equal Canada, I appeal to hon. members to consider an alternative which honestly and openly takes into account something which we have all known for years, and that is that the unique constitutional arrangements which have existed for Quebec since confederation should and can be extended without damaging our cherished federal union. Indeed, I suggest that the change I propose on behalf of my colleagues will deepen the possibility of unity precisely because it is grounded on the notion of the equal right of our two great cultures to flourish, innovate and invigorate one another in a constitutional structure in which the majority culture guarantees protection to the minority, whose rights to flourish are morally equal to those of the majority.

I want to remind the House that all federal parties and virtually all the provincial premiers said at the time of the referendum that at this hour in our history we must understand that Quebec is unique. By this I mean—and I believe most others, in discussing the situation, meant—that Quebec's uniqueness differs in kind from that of the uniqueness of other regions of Canada. It is certainly the case that the prairies differ from British Columbia, that Ontario differs from Newfoundland and, indeed, that Newfoundland is quite different from the other Atlantic provinces.

Before discussing Quebec in particular, I would like to say that not only are the differences as I have described them in terms of our human experience, either as politicians or as Canadians travelling in English-speaking provinces, but I am pleased to note that they have been portrayed by such distinguished Canadian writers as Margaret Laurence, Miss Atwood, Mordecai Richler and others who are now on the world stage of English literature. They have portrayed the diversity of English Canada, that there is no such thing as a monolithic English Canada and that we are finally beginning to well understand—as many people in Quebec, I am pleased to say, are beginning to understand—that this is so.

[Translation]

As we all know, on this last point, Quebec's situation is unique and different from that of any other province. This fact is recognized not only by intellectuals and in the Pepin-Robarts report, but also by most Canadians from every region. It has also been recognized by former leaders of all parties. I am thinking about Robert Stanfield and Lester B. Pearson. The latter made a statement which has now become a cliché and which simply meant that Quebec was not a province like the others.

Quebec is the main centre of French culture in Canada, excluding the large number of francophones in New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba and elsewhere. This difference this rich culture inspire us, and they are assets which we all share and cherish. No one should therefore be surprised to find that, surrounded by anglophone provinces and over 200 million Americans, Quebecers are more aware of their collective existence, of their differences and of the need to protect their cultural existence than other Canadians. For these reasons, Quebecers want to be protected by our Constitution. If we fail to understand this reality, we fail to understand Quebec and to understand Canada. If we fail to meet this need, we shall be doing a disservice to Quebec and to Canada. I therefore move the following amendment to the amending formula.

[English]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the proposed Constitution Act of 1981 be amended by:

Amending the motion of Mr. Epp of November 30 amending the motion of Mr. Chrétien that an address be presented to Her Majesty requesting that a measure be tabled before the Parliament of the United Kingdom by striking out, in the first line, "a province" and substituting "the province of Quebec".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1550)

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: This constitutional change will have positive results for Canada as a whole. Historically, Quebec has always had a veto to oppose any change proposed by the rest of Canada. Many Canadians have objected to this veto, and rightly so. Our amendment would take away this veto. Briefly put, it would allow seven provinces or more to transfer areas of provincial jurisdiction to Ottawa with or without the agreement of Quebec. Provinces with an English majority would be able to innovate in constitutional matters. However, our amendment would allow Quebec to keep its traditional powers without incurring any financial loss. This amendment does not give new powers to Quebec and it would not entail any additional expenditures for the other Canadians. It would simply allow Quebecers to retain what they already have and wish to retain. It represents a positive option for Quebecers. Such an amendment would provide security to Quebecers within Canada and lead to the type of renewed federalism which was promised at the time of the referendum. There would be fewer occasions for conflict and the Canadian duality would be recognized, all this within the context of federalism. There can be no losers. Everyone would gain. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government, the official opposition and the government of Quebec to support this proposal.

Hon. Serge Joyal (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, a number of speakers have pointed out the historical significance of this debate as the last "Canadian" step towards giving our country the status of a fully independent state, both in fact and in law. This step, in fact, marks the close of a long series of events which started in 1791 with the election of democratic legislatures. One of the patently false claims being circulated most widely today is that the long march towards independence has taken place and will end without Quebec. And some people are very upset because at this final stage we are witnessing a sometimes bitter struggle between two Quebecers, as if this were happening for the first time.

History gives us an entirely different view. In fact, from Louis-Hippolyte Lafontaine to Pierre Elliott Trudeau, illustrious Quebecers have always been in the forefront of Canada's long and lengthy struggle towards independence. It is also true, unfortunately, that from Louis-Joseph Papineau up to René Lévesque, there have always been Quebecers who opposed this process and who defended the status quo with fierce determination. I think it is appropriate to recall these events today, in order to put the present debate in its proper historical context.

It was Louis-Hyppolyte Lafontaine who, in the 1840's, took on the task of repairing the political damage caused by Louis-Joseph Papineau, leader of the 1837-38 rebellion, and who, through his alliance with Robert Baldwin, succeeded in reinstating the use of French in the legislature and in obtaining responsible government. Nevertheless, he was constantly and fiercely attacked by Papineau upon his return from exile and by his followers, then led by Nielson and Viger. Joseph Cauchon said the following about Papineau in 1848, and I quote:

> Some men are bent on destruction but have never built on the ruins they left behind.

In 1867, there would have been no confederation or Canadian federalism, and Canadian federalism would not have been as decentralized as it is without George Etienne Cartier. Once more, it was Papineau and his followers, this time led by Antoine-Aimé Dorion, who were opposed to the federation plan and violently attacked Cartier. However, it was George Etienne Cartier who initiated the codification of civil law in Quebec and established the province's exclusive jurisdiction in that field.

At the beginning of this century, Wilfrid Laurier decided to take a stand against London's imperialist designs and to affirm Canada's political autonomy in the shipping issue. The shipping bill tabled in 1910 involved, for the first time in our history, a definition of Canada's status as a country not fully independent of the empire nor totally integrated in the latter. To Laurier, it was an opportunity for Canada to act responsibly, while setting itself apart from the Empire. To the Ontario Tories, Laurier's gesture constituted a serious act of disloyalty to England. To the Quebec Conservatives and Henri Bourassa's nationalists, the gesture reeked of colonialism. Canada's autonomy became one of the major issues in the 1911 election. Laurier was defeated by a curious alliance of imperialist Tories and Quebec nationalists. In an article published in Le Devoir on December 29, 1911, Omer Héroux confirmed once again that extremes tend to meet, and I quote:

> Laurier's shipping bill was defeated because it satisfied no one, neither the nationalists nor the imperialists. Both parties were agreed that the hybrid policy should not be allowed to proceed. It was logical and unavoidable.

After Laurier's defeat, it was also logical and unavoidable that the views of the imperialists rather than those of the nationalists should triumph.

As for Laurier, at the beginning of 1912 he declared, somewhat frustrated, and I quote:

> As a penance, I have to read Le Devoir every day.

And he added:

> As I was saying just now, we have been attacked by all the extremists; those who were most acrimonious, most violent and most unfair in their attacks were those who call themselves nationalists in this country. Our policies exasperated them; our moderation put them in a frenzy and the word conciliation had them foaming at the mouth. To hear them talk, no good could come out of Ottawa; the Liberals, from whom they were separated, were worthless; the Conservatives were even worse.

Ernest Lapointe, Mackenzie King's right-hand man, was a dominant figure in Canada between the two wars. Over the protests of London, in 1923 he was the first Canadian representative to sign, alone, an international treaty with the United States. At a federal-provincial conference in November, 1927, Lapointe, as Minister of Justice for Canada, proposed that our country should have the right to settle its own affairs, both internationally and nationally, and should have the authority to amend its own Constitution. Under the Statute of Westminster passed in 1931—Lapointe was one of the provincial negotiators—Canada's external and internal independence was recognized. Unfortunately, at the time, who was supported by the Quebec nationalists, London retained the authority to amend Canada's Constitution.

In 1949, Louis St. Laurent, the then Prime Minister of Canada, succeeded in passing bills by which the Supreme Court of Canada became the court of last resort for all Canadian cases, with three out of nine seats being reserved for representatives of Quebec, and in giving the Parliament of Canada the power to amend its own Constitution without going to London. This time it was Maurice Duplessis, again supported by Quebec nationalists, who protested these expressions of emancipation. And in 1952, Louis St. Laurent decided it was time a Canadian was appointed governor general.

In 1964, thanks to a commitment made by Lester B. Pearson at the insistence of his Quebec colleagues, especially Maurice Lamontagne, the bill to adopt a Canadian flag was passed by Parliament. Since 1925, attempts had been made to give Canada a distinctive emblem. Because of the political situation at the time, the Progressive Conservatives were opposed to this bill. However, today no one, except perhaps the Quebec separatists, would question the pride felt by the vast majority of Canadians with respect to our flag. As for Canada's national anthem, adopted by Parliament in June 1980, the music was written a hundred years before by the Quebec composer Calixa Lavallée, to words by Justice Alphonse-Basile Routhier. The English version dates back to 1908. Another Quebecer, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, proposed its adoption.

In giving this short overview of the steps that have led to the complete emancipation of our country, I wanted to make it clear that Quebecers have always played a major role. As leaders of the Liberal Party, as ministers of the Crown and as members of the House and the Senate, Quebec Liberals have always felt that they had to continue the work undertaken by Lafontaine and bring it to fruition. At times this was done at the cost of a lost election and sometimes of attacks and insults of all kinds but always, and today is no exception, they shared the belief that the fight had to go on. At each stage those Quebecers felt certain of reflecting and expressing the concerns of their fellow French-Canadians in that process of shaping the country.

● (1600)

Unfortunately, they always met along the way other Quebecers who were afraid of change and in favour of the status quo for the sake of some outmoded survival of times past or because of inferiority complex. In that context, the current bitter fight is better understood. What is involved historically is a conflict between two groups of Quebecers with basically different views of what is in store for their fellow citizens rather than a personality conflict. I for one am proud that Quebecers at every high point in their history chose the road indicated by Lafontaine rather than Papineau, which would have led directly to annexation by the United States.

Today, we are on the eve of the most significant step in our constitutional history since Confederation, not only because we will soon attain full constitutional independance, but above all because we are going to ensure that provinces in the future will have the absolute right to play an essential role in this country's constitutional development, that Canadians will enjoy basic rights that are protected against the whims of governments, and finally that Canada will become a country committed forever to equal status and rights for the French and English languages.

Many of our predecessors attempted to reach that goal. Lapointe, St. Laurent, Favreau and even this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in Victoria and more recently in Ottawa in 1980, met with failure and had to postpone that last and fundamental step.

As always they met along the way the supporters of the status quo, knowing or unknowing successors of Papineau.

Our history was made despite their nationalism based on resistance and mere survival. Under that philosophy, language was once the keeper of the faith and now the keeper of the people. This new kind of clericalism is nothing but a trap. It might lead us to miss the Canada of the year 2,000, just as the old one kept us for more than 100 years in a marginal rural society apart from the development of the industrial society.

The Quebec challenge is not to ensure that the French language and culture will prevail in Quebec. That goal has already been reached. According to official figures, 86.2 per cent of young Quebecers are now in the French education system; the number of students in English schools declined from 250,000 before 1975 to the current 168,000, a 33 per cent drop over six years. Even with the "Canada clause", the invasion of Quebec by English-speaking Canadians from other provinces is not to be feared anymore. Indeed, the opposite will happen. Quebec's new cultural challenge focuses on the improvement of the quality of our language and culture. This is a challenge for each and every one of us to meet. Our proximity to the United States makes it difficult to reach that aim, but then it would be wrong to suggest that separation from the rest of Canada would make it easier.

Another major imperative for Quebecers is prosperity and a balanced economic growth. Several scenarios, especially that drawn up by Julien, Lamonde and Latouche in their book entitled Québec 2001, une société refroidie, predict a growing crisis of the economic structure in Quebec. It would be deceitful to suggest that Quebec would more easily overcome that economic crisis by seceding rather than remaining within Canada, with the huge transfer payments which that relationship implies and which from now on, following the passage of this resolution, will be made to Quebec as a matter of right formally guaranteed in the new constitution.

I am afraid that if we devote our best efforts to control that structural economic crisis, we will not succeed in overcoming it completely. During the two next decades, jobs will be principally created in Western Canada.

An increasing number of francophone Quebecers will probably decide to take part in a second large rush to the West. Moreover, the migratory movement has already begun. From 1976 to 1980, the annual net average of immigration from Quebec to other provinces was 33,300 people. From 1980 to 1985, the average is expected to be 32,000 according to the task force on the development of the labour force. By extrapolating this figure to the year 2000, it can be estimated that about 640,000 Quebecers, in net terms, will emigrate in the next two decades.

In that context, care must be taken to avoid the errors of the first great rush in the second half of the 1800s when 900,000 of our own people left Quebec permanently. Another challenge must be met: that of improving considerably the linguistic and cultural environment of francophone minorities outside Quebec in order to ensure the full development of those communities. Unfortunately, that challenge has never been the priority of the Quebec government. On the other hand, since 1963 and particularly during the '70s, the Canadian government met that challenge, thanks primarily to the courage and perseverance of the present Prime Minister of Canada. The official languages act, specific federal subsidies to the provinces and francophone groups, the extension of French radio and television networks from coast to coast in Canada are among the steps taken by the Canadian government to improve the lot of francophone minorities.

The resolution now before us is another very important step in the same direction. Of course it does not go far enough but still the fact is that it enshrines in the constitution the full linguistic rights of the Acadians of New Brunswick and the right of other French-speaking people outside Quebec to be educated in their own tongue at the primary and secondary levels throughout Canada. There will undoubtedly be a lot of work left but I am convinced that with patience and courage we will succeed. In that context, I do not understand those who are against this resolution because it does not go far enough, yet at the same time reject the significant progress it guarantees. Probably without realizing this, they too are in favour of the status quo.

Finally, there is another right which will be formally guaranteed by the constitution, namely the right of the provinces henceforth to participate fully in the constitutional evolution of the country. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled recently that even though there is a convention which requires a consensus of the provinces with respect to any constitutional change which affects them, the federal Parliament is strictly entitled to make such changes unilaterally. In my opinion, that is an anomaly which is inconsistent with a genuine federalism because a mere convention which offers no legal recourse is not a sufficient guarantee for the protection of provincial rights and powers.

It is precisely that unacceptable anomaly which will be corrected by the resolution and the amending formula. This formula is not the best, of course, but at least it does guarantee Quebec's cultural sovereignty. Personally, like others on this side of the House, I would have preferred the Victoria formula under which Quebec had the right of veto. It is unfortunate that Mr. René Lévesque did not advocate that formula when it was time, unlike the Canadian government and those of Ontario and New Brunswick. In short, it is extremely sad indeed that the government of Quebec has not made any real effort to improve this resolution so as to be able to give its consent without making overstatements of delivering unacceptable ultimatums. And yet, upon reflection we should have realized at the outset that such agreement was impossible. The PQ government could not drop the first clause of its platform which is sovereignty. As was stated in their white paper, they do not believe in renewed federalism. I quote:

In the opinion of the government of Quebec, the pitiful history of numerous as well as useless attempts at revising the constitution proves just how delusive it will be henceforth to think about renewing federalism in a way which might be satisfactory at the same time for both Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Not only do the PQ supporters not believe in renewed federalism, but they certainly do not want to have anything to do with it. In that respect I recall a statement made to the Canadian Press last November 25 by Mr. Sylvain Simard who was recently elected Vice President of the Parti Québécois thanks to the support of Mr. Lévesque. I read that statement in The Citizen of November 26 but, unfortunately, I did not find it in Le Devoir. Therefore I will quote it in English:

● (1610)

[English]

What I myself feared was that Levesque's mission (to Ottawa) would result in a certain success, an agreement.

The (1980) referendum forced him to play the game (of federalism), but for us it was an extremely dangerous game because an agreement would have paralysed us for years.

That is the vice-chairman of the Parti Québécois. If one wants to discuss an agreement with the present representative of the Quebec government, then it is better to have that in mind.

[Translation]

That is the naked truth. The PQ government never really wanted to enter into an agreement. Mr. Lévesque would not accept to scuttle his party to meet the Canadian challenge. And in his effort to convince Quebecers to favour independence, he uses every means at his disposal, even deceitful propaganda against the Government of Canada which he claims is responsible for all kinds of evil, treason and encroachment. In this respect, the recently published PQ pamphlet entitled "C'est souverainement le temps" provides a good illustration of this dishonesty which few of the so-called impartial observers in Quebec have the guts to point out.

The PQ pamphlet states, and I quote:

The very same year, 1927, Ottawa grabled an area of Quebec jurisdiction, that of old age pensions.

To say that Ottawa grabled that area is wrong. The fact is that the Quebec government established its own retirement scheme in 1965. Moreover, when the Government of Canada proposed its old age security program in 1950, it did so through a constitutional amendment agreed upon by all the provinces. Mr. Duplessis, the then Quebec Premier, made the following statement in English during the federal-provincial conference which had been called for that purpose:

[English]

We are willing, indeed pleased, to co-operate with Ottawa. If any modification of the constitution is appropriate in the circumstances, well, we would be willing to consider in a most friendly way the possibilities of modifying the constitution in the matter of old age pensions.

[Translation]

As one can see, the federal government did not act by force, as the Parti Québécois now maintains. Elsewhere in its publication to PQ states, and I quote:

In 1941, Ottawa invaded a social field which belonged exclusively to the provinces: unemployment insurance.

What that document fails to point out, however, is that at that time also, the Constitution was amended with the agreement of all provinces including Quebec. So how can they speak of encroachment when the Constitution was amended, with unanimous consent, in order that all Canadians could benefit from this great social measure? Might I also recall that the sollicitors for Quebec themselves, when arguing their case before the Supreme Court last April, stated that Quebec had always freely agreed in the past to constitutional amendments.

But these contradictions do not bother the Parti Québécois. The PQ pamphlet contains the most far-fetched and deceitful statements to try and make people distrust the federal government, while it has given our country, always in the interests of Quebecers, one of the most generous social security systems in the world, within the purview of the Constitution. Yet, the PQ party maintains that Ottawa is taking over, encroaching, grabbing, envading. It is with this type of propaganda that the Parti Québécois government is launching its campaign for an independent Quebec which could, apparently, come close to civil disobedience. It is getting ready to repeat the unfortunate experience of Papineau, in which most Quebecers were never involved but which nevertheless lead temporarily to a deadend.

I have listened attentively to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the sub-amendment introduced by the hon. member for Oshawa and leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). Both proposals are sincere attempts at arriving at some sort of arrangement or compromise acceptable to the province of Quebec. The Canadian government is not in principle opposed to fiscal compensation. Hon. members will indeed recall that the constitutional resolution tabled last November 18 by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) provided for fiscal compensation in the fields related to education and cultural affairs. But the Right Hon. Prime Minister explained last Friday in the House the position taken by the premiers who signed the accord on November 5. We therefore cannot ignore their views in this regard. I would also point out that there is a flaw in each of the proposals introduced by the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. member for Oshawa.

The first proposal, by the hon. member for Provencher, is for full fiscal compensation. However, the hon. member for Oshawa would like to see this restricted to Quebec. In fact, both ignore the basic objection that it is desirable to ensure and guarantee that constitutional amendments aimed at establishing Canada-wide programs consider the specific option open to some of the richer provinces, namely to opt out of these programs.

The hon. member for Oshawa answers that he would rather keep full compensation, with all the drawbacks it entails, restricted to Quebec. However, and I am expressing the position of the government of Canada, at the next stage in our constitutional reform, the government will always be willing to consider proposals for meeting this objective, which would also enable us to meet the objective pursued by the hon. members for Provencher and Oshawa. However, I should like to point out to both hon. members that at this stage, where we have a commitment from nine provincial first ministers to discuss further amendments in the near future as soon as the Constitution has been patriated and the amending formula established, we can draw satisfaction from the fact that the objective or concept of fiscal compensation has been accepted in the present constitutional resolution, and that the Canadian government undertakes, if such is the desire of the other provinces, to discuss the matter at the next federal-provincial conference and to seek a formula that takes into account the objectives pursued by the hon. member for Oshawa as well as of the objections we have already expressed in this regard, namely that the automatic withdrawal of any province would jeopardize the establishment of programs that should normally be accessible to all Canadians.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I can say once more that I am convinced the vast majority of Quebecers will not be blinded by the false promises of the Péquistes who, in fact, have no respect for the people of Quebec. They do not know the people. It is true Quebecers will not let their leaders forget their distinctiveness, but neither will they tolerate the neglect of other equally important aspects of their individual and collective existence which they share with their North-American neighbours. Quebecers want to preserve their special status, but they do not want to be isolated in the process. And especially, they do not want to be governed solely on the basis of their differences. That is exactly what the Péquistes refuse to understand and what we, Liberal members for Quebec, always try to realize. In this respect, at least, we can claim to be closer to the people than the Parti Québécois, even if the PQ accuses us of betraying Quebec.

It is of course unfortunate that during the last negotiations there were no true representatives from Quebec on the provincial level. But this in no way means that the last step on the road to this country's emancipation will be taken without Quebec. We, Liberal members from Quebec, following the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada and the hon. Minister of Justice, have been full-fledged participants. We are convinced that in supporting this resolution, we are following in the footsteps of our predecessors. We also believe we are expressing the wishes of a great many Quebecers and respecting both their personality and the strong ties that bind them to a greater country. I for one am grateful to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice for having associated me to this historic task, and I am proud as a Quebecer to have been one of its participants.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. minister accept a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Agreed. The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened closely as the hon. minister placed in their historical context the two traditional attitudes that have prevailed in Quebec. But finally, in that exercise he chose to launch into an attack against the Parti Québécois. In this debate this afternoon, neither the Progressive Conservative member nor myself have dealt with that situation. Generally, I feel we are in agreement with you on this.

My question is therefore the following, concerning federalism. Does the minister think that Mr. Ryan, as a Quebecer, as a federalist, is on his side on this issue, or on ours?

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased that the hon. member for Oshawa refers to the position taken by Mr. Ryan on this.

I would remind him that in a telex he sent to the Right Hon. Prime Minister on Monday November 9, Mr. Ryan suggested three ways of settling the dispute which developed at the time the constitutional conference of November 5 was adjourned.

His first proposal was that financial compensation be granted with respect to education cultural affairs. He also suggested that, where other fields of provincial jurisdiction were concerned, we begin discussions immediately or make such discussions the very first item on the agenda of the following constitutional conference. I am referring to the telex of November 9. He suggested two other solutions for the other two points, namely the Canada Clause with regard to Section 23 and a reassessment of the mobility clause.

When the Right Hon. Prime Minister spoke before the Quebec section of the Liberal Party of Canada in Quebec City two weeks ago, following the representations contained in a letter to him from my hon. colleagues of the Quebec caucus, he proposed acceptance of Mr. Ryan's first suggestion which is now included in the constitutional resolution tabled by the Hon. Minister of Justice on November 18. Afterwards, the Hon. Minister of Justice had to consult with the premiers who had already signed the accord to obtain their consent. In the meantime, Mr. Ryan had further discussions with his officials and advisors, and he asked that the financial compensation provision be reviewed with a view to extend it to communications, and also to social affairs among other things.

Meanwhile, during the discussions that followed on reinstating in Sections 28 and 24 the provisions related to native rights, the premiers indicated to the Minister of Justice that this was the accord which they were willing to accept in order to meet at this point the representations submitted by the province of Quebec, the official opposition in Quebec and this side of the House. The Prime Minister has therefore partially met the request for full financial compensation. What I have stated today is that the government does not object to extending this compensation in principle, but that for the moment, it is bound by the telex and the agreement expressed by Mr. Bill Bennett who, as chairman of the first minister's conference, who clearly told the government: We hope that the House and the Canadian Parliament will complete the debate on the Accord as quickly as possible, and that patriation can be effected without delay, and that we can meet again to resume our discussions on this matter.

This of course is in response to the objections or the wish for compensation expressed by Mr. Ryan later on and takes into consideration the objections raised by the hon. member for Oshawa himself ten days ago in this House when he said: "As concerns social programs, an opting-out clause with full financial compensation could cause considerable difficulties in implementing new programs designed for all Canadians". It would therefore probably be possible to have discussions and to develop a formula which would meet both Mr. Ryan's suggestions and that the hon. member for Oshawa and ourselves have been saying during this debate. I therefore believe that the wise thing to do today, tomorrow and Wednesday afternoon would be, of course, first of all, to go on with this debate because opinions are not cast in cement in this regard, as the hon. member for Oshawa has admitted. As far as we are concerned, on the government side, we are willing to discuss this matter during a forthcoming constitutional conference where we would try to define it better, but we do not want to prevent this resolution from being agreed to as soon as possible so that we may continue meeting Mr. Ryan's objectives which are those of the Quebec Liberal Party, the objectives of the hon. member for Oshawa and the most sincere objectives of the hon. member for Provencher.

I therefore believe that it is in such a climate that the debate must continue during the next few hours and not in a context of outbidding where everyone would try to add a bit more to the resolution to make it more attractive to the Parti Québécois government since the hon. member and myself both know that, in this regard unfortunately, we have to consider the statements made by the duly elected representatives of the Parti Québécois at their conventions and at public political gatherings.

So I feel it is our duty to look after francophones in Canada. I am delighted to see that the hon. member for Oshawa is doing his utmost in this respect, and that is exactly the trap the PQ would like us to fall into, namely, to refuse from now on to meet the particular needs of Quebecers. And as I illustrated this afternoon, our predecessors have always done everything possible to meet the specific needs of Quebecers. I will not repeat either what Cartier, St. Laurent and Pearson proposed, or what we ourselves are proposing now in this regard.

When the next stage comes, the hon. member for Oshawa, whose party has made many constructive suggestions throughout this Constitutional debate, will be able to continue taking part in these discussions. And I emphasize that one of the fundamental aspects which has been changed, compared with previous Constitutional conferences, is that the Government of Canada will no longer take part in them, as it used to, without the support of a resolution passed by the House, without having involved the Parliamentary committees of both the Senate and House of Commons; and from now on, when we take part in Constitutional conferences, under new precedents which proved very useful over the past few months, we will be able to accept the participation of hon. members from all the parties in the House. And I think that in this way, we will be able to respond positively to a request which the hon. member has made and which Mr. Claude Ryan, the Leader of the Quebec Liberal Party, has supported.

● (1620)

[English]

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in order that the debate may go forward in an orderly manner, I wonder if the minister would accept a question.

Mr. Joyal: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: I want to thank the minister and members of the House for their courtesy. I was pleased to hear the minister indicate that the principle of full compensation had the support of the government. In view of the statement he has now made that there is to be a final vote at three o'clock on Wednesday and that the matter of the time of the House is now resolved—in other words, the debate will end at that time—and in view of the telex received from Premier Bennett and the good will that prevailed on November 5 between the Prime Minister and the provinces, which I interpreted as giving the Prime Minister the ability, the freedom, to continue discussions with Quebec and that that would not jeopardize the accord, and in view of his endorsation of full compensation, does the minister now feel that discussing it and trying to come to some agreement would jeopardize the accord?

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Provencher for his question, which will give me an opportunity to clarify one aspect of the answer I gave to the hon. member for Oshawa.

The point I want to make is that the government is not opposed to the principle of full compensation because the government has already accepted the implementation of that principle in relation to education and cultural matters. I think the hon. member will clearly understand that.

What I said clearly to the hon. member for Oshawa was that at this stage all members and parties in this House have unanimously agreed to conclude this debate not later than Wednesday at three o'clock.

• (1630)

The chairman of the premiers' conference very clearly stated in a telex to the Prime Minister last Friday that at this stage the premiers of the provinces are not in a position to reopen the discussions in relation to that very aspect. The position that I expressed today in the House is that we agree there might be progress, change and suggestions to be considered which could probably be entrenched in the Constitution at a later stage. However, at this point it would be much preferable to conclude the debate by continuing to discuss the implications of full compensation in the manner which has already been raised by the hon. member for Oshawa and the hon. member for Provencher. We know that within a year, according to Section 36, we are committed to a constitutional conference concerning at least one item, the aboriginal rights issue. We will be in a position at that time to discuss that aspect again. If there is a need and a consensus reached to entrench that matter in the Constitution, we will then have the kind of amending formula and constitutional process to achieve that result. I am quite sure that if we keep the good will existing between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premiers of the provinces which was just mentioned by the hon. member, we will be in a position to make progress.

If we cannot comply with the suggestion made by Premier Bennett at this stage, and we try to improve it without being in a position to obtain unanimous agreement in the last hours of debate, a kind of pressure might be created which would be counterproductive. Good will should be kept. I think the hon. member understands that the best way of continuing to make progress, as demonstrated in the past weeks and days, is essentially to debate the issue as hon. members have done. However, we should make sure that that objective will still be in the minds of the premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada at the next constitutional conference so that they will be in a position to reopen discussion on that very subject. I think it is pretty satisfactory in terms of the consensus in arriving at that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Other hon. members are seeking the floor, perhaps for the purpose of asking a question. However, I must remind the House that the time allotted to the hon. member has expired. Of course, anything can be done with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I was not rising to say "no". If someone wishes to ask a question, I would be happy to have the hon. member do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In that case, does the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) seek the floor for the purpose of asking a question? Order, please. Permission has been granted. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is seeking the floor to ask a question of the hon. Minister of State. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) for saying that, in principle, he supports some kind of arrangement concerning compensation. I think that he has made a very important statement. Because of the importance of the issue, I wonder whether he might consider using what the government has done in Section 23 and in Section 59 as a precedent. In other words, we are putting Section 23, concerning the language of education, in the Constitution, and we are giving Quebec the right to opt in once it passes through the National Assembly.

I wonder, because of the importance of the issue, whether the minister would consider doing the same thing concerning fair and reasonable compensation; that is, that the federal Parliament include a passage in the resolution on compensation under Section 38(1)(a) of the amending formula that has the support of the House of Commons and the Senate. In other words, it would be our half of the amending formula. Therefore, when one would go to stage two of the constitutional conference, the House of Commons and the Senate would already have said yes to some arrangement on compensation which would then not force anything on the other provinces and would not open the accord. This would clearly say to the other provinces that we in this House have agreed with some principle of compensation, that we have already passed it, it is there and concrete, and it has gone through the British Parliament at Westminster. I wonder whether the minister would consider that we are at least half way on this very important issue, since he agrees to it in principle.

Mr. Joyal: I would like to thank the hon. member for his question. I think one aspect of his suggestion could be adopted. However, as I have already replied to the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, I think that those aspects can be debated. At least, it would meet with the agreement of the premiers of the provinces who signed the accord on November 5.

I think the hon. member will recognize that if we consider changing anything at this stage, it will create a pressure. In the context of the good faith which we must keep and the statement made by Premier Bennett, at this stage we should continue to discuss the amendments and subamendments, attempting to find out all the implications of their adoption, but we should keep things as they are now. In this House there have been unanimous amendments to the resolution as it affects the issues of aboriginal rights and women's rights. I think that we are satisfied with the resolution at this stage concerning compensation, education and cultural matters. I think that all Canadians, especially Quebecers, understand that there is the possibility of further discussions. However, I think that changing anything concerning the objectives we have already reached would really jeopardize further progress at the next constitutional conference.

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think there is agreement, through informal consultation, for me to ask one more question if the minister will agree to answer it. I just wanted to have it clearly understood—

Mr. Chrétien: It is not a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Again, that will have to be done with unanimous consent because the minister has used up all the time allotted to him.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister, to make the matter perfectly clear. He is saying that the government is prepared to look to at least two options and conceivably others. One is the general opting out formula which has been proposed by the Conservative Party, and the other is the proposal we have made today concerning the possibility of an opting out formula which would recognize the unique place of the province of Quebec in confederation. Is that the clear understanding that the minister attempted to convey?

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I think that any kind of suggestion which could be made in the House in relation to general compensation is something which would be helpful at one stage or the other in order to attempt to arrive at some kind of a conclusion to those proposals. I am quite sure that the proposal, the subamendment put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa, is a valid one. However, it is necessary to study and debate its ramifications, as well as the one put forward by the hon. member for Provencher. What I want very clearly to state is that the government is not opposed to the principle of compensation because compensations are already entrenched in the present resolution.

However, the principle of full compensation is another matter. It concerns matters which encompass all of the jurisdiction involving Sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act. It then raises many questions, as hon. members know very well. Therefore, on that ground I would think that further debate could take place.

Mr. Nielsen: You let him off the hook, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: I wanted to put him on it.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise to speak in favour of our party's amendment. The case has already been made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and I do not intend to repeat it. I would ask the minister if he would not be prepared to concede that the matter is so important to the people of Quebec that it is reopening the matter with the premiers. If a telex can be sent on Friday, surely we could send another telex to the respective premiers today asking them whether they would consider reopening this matter, which we all agree is important, in order that the people of the minister's province might feel more sympathetic toward this proposal. I remind the minister, as he is aware, that a recent poll showed that something like 27 per cent of francophone Quebecers feel that the accord is a "bonne chose", which I think is a distressingly low figure.

The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has moved that compensation should be allowed only to the province of Quebec. I would ask why, if it is sound for one province, it is not sound for the others. Is it that the Leader of the New Democratic Party strongly attacked our proposal last week without thinking? Is it because those in his caucus who are more sensitive to Quebec have persuaded him that the matter is so important in la vieille province that he should make further concessions on the matter? I would hope that the hon. member for Oshawa and his party would vote for the amendment as well.

• (1640)

During the next few moments I would like to tell hon. members why I will vote for the resolution. There are many reasons, and I will discuss some of them. I will also discuss why this resolution causes me, as someone who thinks national unity is the most important factor in updating our Constitution and federal institutions, immense concern.

First I will discuss why seemingly my constituents want me to vote for this resolution. The caucus and the leader of this party have taken a very active role in getting the resolution to where it is now. We attempted to mobilize public opinion against the original package of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) because of its substance and its unilateralism. We struggled for a full and a fair debate of the proposal in this House. We fought for a full, open public hearing before television so that many Canadians could be heard and many more Canadians could see the process. We were adamant that the Supreme Court of Canada decide if the question was legal and constitutional before it was sent off to London. We dragged the government—I do not think it is incorrect to say wheezing and groaning—into doing so. After the decision, in which a majority of the Supreme Court judges said that the matter was legal but unconstitutional, we fought hard to have a meeting of first ministers for further negotiations.

Since the ten-party Accord of November 5, we have, with others in this House, fought to get aboriginal title and equal status for both the sexes put back into our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Our successes, in whole or in part, have in effect made us a full party to this document. In a sense, whether it is for better or for worse, we are married to it.

In my view, it has in a very real sense been my party's finest hour. How can we now vote against it because of various imperfections? There is much in the resolution which any Member of Parliament of good will would want to support. Patriation of our Constitution is probably not 54 years but 114 years overdue. If only our Fathers of Confederation had produced an acceptable to all amending formula in 1867, we would not have the deadlock over the amending formula which has not allowed us to patriate the Constitution for all these decades.

Umbilical cords for nations as well as for babies are best cut at birth. But then, hindsight is always 20/20, and we have much to thank these early statesmen for, most of all for the creation of the most fortunate nation on earth.

The concept of an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms enjoys wide support in all parts of Canada, certainly among the majority of my constituents, according to a poll that I conducted. However, as a lawyer and as someone who hangs John Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights in his office, I have, like many others, been saddened by the way that our courts have judicially extracted most of the vitality of that Bill of Rights on the premise that it is just another federal statute applicable only in the federal spirit. To my knowledge, it has been applied to override part of another measure only in the Drybones case in 20 years. Paradoxically, the courts will no longer be able to ignore an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms because the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the most basic sense stands above the courts, albeit subject to their interpretation.

Which member of Parliament wants to vote against entrenching such things as freedom of religion and peaceful assembly? Which one of us is opposed to mobility rights for our fellow citizens? Our respective constituents surely favour legal rights, including the right to life and liberty, protection from unreasonable search and seizure, arbitrary detention, the right to reasonable bail and a host of other matters. The same, of course, applies to equality rights, the barring of discrimination based on race, colour and religion, etc.

[Translation]

As a member of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, I fully agree, of course, with the clauses of the bill which will grant equal rights to both official languages as far as their use in parliamentary institutions and the Government of Canada is concerned. In that respect, I congratulate the people and government of New Brunswick for having voluntarily accepted both official languages in the institutions of New Brunswick. I also congratulate the premiers of the nine provinces for their good faith in providing rights for education in the minority language.

[English]

I salute the nine premiers and the Prime Minister for accepting our amendment on the equality of the two sexes for constitutional purposes and for entrenching existing aboriginal rights.

Obviously some members of both groups are unhappy about the extent of these amendments but some progress has been made in this House unanimously.

On the good side of the resolution as well, the new amending formula of the November 5 accord removes one of the abhorrent features of the earlier Liberal-NDP formula which would have weighted the votes of Canadians for constitutional referenda on the basis of provinces of residence. First-class Canadians would be residents of the two central provinces. All other Canadians would have been second class.

Mr. Nielsen: Some third class.

Mr. Kilgour: I am told that there are some third-class citizens in the territories.

The new formula is light years better than the earlier one. This party tried to amend the formula to give the Northwest Territories a fighting chance for provincehood in the future. We regret that the Liberals lacked the courage to support us in that proposal.

Time is passing by very quickly so I will briefly sketch some of my profound concerns with this resolution. First, the mobility rights of the resolution, as I read it, bar affirmative action programs for socially or economically disadvantaged people if they live in high employment provinces. If that is so, how can any member in this House from a high employment province look any handicapped, disabled or other socially disadvantaged constituent in the eye if we vote for that, especially in the International Year of the Disabled?

Second, another part of the proposal would bar any evidence in criminal trials if it would "bring the administration of justice into disrepute". Along with the Canadian Police Association and the Canadian Association of Crown Counsel, I worry that this, well intended as it is, will in due time lead to the adoption in Canada of the U.S. tainted evidence rule. This has contributed in no small way to what the U.S. Chief Justice Burger has recently called the "reign of terror" in American cities. Obviously I am not saying that our crime rate will jump about six times to that of the United States the minute we pass this resolution, but what I am concerned about is that if our experience here begins to imitate theirs as a result of this measure—and I accept the fact that it was my party which introduced that amendment and I regret it did—the guilt or innocence of some people in criminal trials may become an almost irrelevant factor. There have been simply too many bizarre acquittals in the United States under the tainted evidence rule to think otherwise.

Third, I find there are provisions in the charter which could result in the abortion section, Section 251 of the Criminal Code, being struck down as being unconstitutional. That would mean abortion on demand. Unlike the Prime Minister, who indicated last week that if that happens this Parliament would simply re-enact Section 251, I fear that a majority of Liberals opposite lack the political will to bring such a measure back into this House.

Fourth, and perhaps the most important, I am concerned about the absence of one member of the Canadian family in this Accord and, coupled with the concerns that have been voiced by the Premier of Quebec and the leader of the opposition there, I am concerned this absence could create unity problems for the country in the future.

● (1650)

I mentioned at the outset the fact that only 27 per cent of francophone Quebecers seem to think this matter is "a good thing" disturbs me profoundly, as I think it must disturb any Canadian. Does this resolution really respect the duality which the Pepin-Robarts Task Force on National Unity said was essential for the country to remain together in the future? Some say it does but, if so, why does Mr. Claude Ryan seem only a little less concerned than Premier Lévesque about imposing a version of the Canada clause on Quebec unilaterally, and that in an area that is of utmost concern and sensitivity to the Quebecer historically?

From the standpoint of the anglophone Quebecers, moreover, if the "where the numbers warrant" test is imposed on Quebec, how many English schools will close under that test? The minister of education has indicated it will be up to one third. Others including one of the members opposite, have pointed out that under the wording of the proposal now, if an anglophone sends his children to a French school in Quebec, his grandchildren will lose the right to attend English-language schools. That is a fine price to pay for trying to learn the majority language of one's province.

[Translation]

On the other hand, the Liberal members from Quebec—this is quite ironic—do not seem to be willing to guarantee the rights of francophones in the Charter which they helped to draw up. Any Canadian versed in the history of Canada knows that at its origin the country was born under the agreement of both founding groups sharing equal basic rights. When we deny or forget that historic fact, the entire country is in jeopardy. As one of the ministers opposite said!

Quebec cannot exist without Canada, Canada cannot exist without Quebec.

To send to London a resolution which would not show that Canadian duality would violate the confederative agreement of 1867. This is the reason why we moved that amendment and I strongly hope that we will introduce another one tomorrow dealing with section 23.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a country born out of an arrangement and some good will, for the sake of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, George Etienne Cartier, Louis St-Laurent and several others, I ask the Liberal members to support the amendment now under consideration and also the amendment to be moved tomorrow which will not impose unilaterally Section 23 on Quebec but will give it the right to opt out. It is useless, Mr. Speaker, to dodge, to shut our eyes and accept a promise of renewal which forgets an essential part of our national life.

[English]

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, more than one hundred years ago we Canadians set out on a great undertaking. At first hesitatingly, subsequently hopefully, we Canadians began the process of binding a continent together to create a country. Now we are about to complete the work of 1867.

In this, the last week of our new constitutional debate in Canada, our emotions are a mixture of satisfaction at what we have attained in the amended resolution before us and of regret at what we have not been able to accomplish.

It would be easy for those of us on this side to give way entirely to sentiments of disappointment. We have had to accept an amending formula which we regard as seriously flawed. Yet it must surely be clear by now that we place a much higher priority on the attainment of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms than we do on any amending formula, whatever its merit. In fact, it was this very difference in priorities that enabled us to reach agreement with the dissenting seven. Like the seven, we protected our highest value in the settlement; unlike them, we assigned first place to the rights of Canadians. We fought, not for power for ourselves, but for the people. And we won.

[Translation]

However, even in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms we have been unable to protect the Canadian people as much as we should have liked. Full protection will be possible only if and when a future Quebec government, determined to fight for rather than against Canada, agrees to the provisions on education. In addition, it will be possible only if also the other provinces do not override periodically the rights guaranteed in the Charter. Total protection depends on the continued good will of provincial governments and the continuing vigilance of Canadians.

[English]

But complete actualization of potential protections may not be needed at every moment of constitutional life. Professor Walter Tarnopolsky, perhaps the country's leading civil liberties specialist and the director of the new Institute of Human Rights at the University of Ottawa, developed the notion of the override in the Canadian Bar Review in 1975. He said:

I believe a notwithstanding clause . . . may be the only restraint we need place on the legislature . . . One must be realistic and understand that the most one can expect from a written bill of rights and judicial review is control of administrative and police action . . . Whether the courts do hold legislative or administrative action inoperative or invalid, is not always as important as the fact that they can do so, and as the fact that in rendering their decisions they can amplify the terse terms of the Bill of Rights and infuse them with principles to which society aspires and will compel, even indirectly, the public servants to adhere to. Even in the United States, the Supreme Court has invalidated very few Acts of Congress, but its judgments are guidance of what will be tolerated.

If Professor Tarnopolsky is right in estimating that it is not acts of Parliament or of the legislatures that will from time to time need to be declared invalid, but rather administrative actions under their authority, then perhaps the people have not lost very much through the introduction of the legislative override mechanism. In any event, they can bring into play all their skills in political lobbying. Even if worst comes to worst and an infringing law is enacted, it has a maximum life of five years, thus allowing special interest groups further opportunities of defeating it at five-year intervals.

Our satisfaction on this side is increased by the knowledge that the achievement is owing to our own efforts. It was the principled idealism and the stubborn determination of this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), this goverment, this caucus and this party that brought about the accord. Can anyone doubt that, without this contribution, there would have been no initiative, no momentum, no result? We would have been at the beginning rather than at the culmination.

● (1700)

[Translation]

That conclusion is most obvious when one compares the almost totally negative attitude of the dissident provinces at the federal-provincial conference of September, 1980, and their new determination to achieve an agreement in October, 1981. For our part, we were willing to find a compromise at the very first conference. Indeed that was why we called the conference. However at that time there was complete intransigence on the part of the dissenting eight. It was only 13 months later, after a continuing display of unflagging determination to carry the project to completion on our part, that an accord became possible, when they realized that they could in no way better its progress. Our strength achieved what weakness could never have won.

[English]

And now, the constitutional resolution goes from here to the Parliament of the United Kingdom for final disposition. I have said publicly many times that the British government would use every possible means to put our resolution through their Parliament, not because they had committed themselves to do so—although they had—but because it was their obligation to do it under the rules of the Commonwealth and of international law. Those who compared the constitutional convention to consult which the Supreme Court of Canada found to exist within Canada with the constitutional convention under which the United Kingdom was obliged to enact constitutional amendments requested by the Parliament of Canada through joint address failed to grasp the elementary distinction between non-law and law. The Supreme Court of Canada found that the constitutional convention of consultation within Canada was not legally binding, whatever else it might be. The constitutional convention of the United Kingdom, however, is legally binding because it is a requirement of Commonwealth and international law.

First, with respect to the Commonwealth, let us note the principles laid down at the Imperial Conferences of 1926 and 1930 and enshrined in the Statute of Westminster. These principles are simple. All states and parliaments voluntarily associated within the Commonwealth are fully equal in status and in no way subordinate to one another. They relate to one another as equals and address one another as equals, sovereign state to sovereign state and sovereign parliament to sovereign parliament. As such, they may not interfere in one another's internal or external affairs.

By constitutional convention, however, the Parliament of the United Kingdom enacts amendments to the Canadian Constitution as requested by the Parliament of Canada. In this respect, the Parliament of the United Kingdom stands in the same relationship to the Parliament of Canada as the Queen to her ministers. The Queen, of course, never exercises her powers without the advice of her ministers, nor refuses to exercise her powers when her ministers advise her to exercise them.

So it is with Westminster's power of amendment of the British North America Act. This power remains vested in the United Kingdom Parliament under the Statute of Westminster. It must be exercised upon request and as requested. That is the relationship to which Canada consented in 1931. That is the duty which Britain then accepted.

As early as 1937, in his classical work on "The Law and the Commonwealth", R. T. E. Latham wrote that " . . . Commonwealth conventions may prove to be or to have become indistinguishable from rules of municipal or international law". The tentative conclusion of 1937 has become the reality of today. Sovereignty, equality and non-interference are cardinal principles of international law. These principles apply between Commonwealth states. They clearly require the Parliament of the United Kingdom to act only in accordance with the wishes of the Parliament of Canada in the amendment of the British North America Act.

In international law, the same result is a fortiori. There is no question that Canada is a fully sovereign and independent state, nor that the federal government alone is competent to speak for Canada in all matters concerning foreign relations and to enter into treaties on behalf of Canada. Both under the British North America Act and the Law of Nations, the provinces of Canada have no status beyond the boundaries of Canada. This has been unchallenged constitutional law since the Labour Conventions case in 1937 and is embodied in the Department of External Affairs Act.

It follows from the sovereign status of states in international law that other states owe them a duty of non-intervention in their internal or external affairs. This duty of non-intervention is a master principle of international law. Deviations from sovereignty as established by international law can occur only by treaty, and the central nature of treaty law is the double criterion of consent and symmetry. If, as the Kershaw report claims, the relationship between the two countries is of a quasi-treaty character, it would have to be brought about by the expressed and unequivocal consent of Canadian federal authorities, who alone have competence in the matter, and matched symmetrically by consent of the United Kingdom through its government or Parliament.

There is, of course, nothing in international law, in Commonwealth custom, in the records of the Imperial Conferences, in the Statute of Westminster nor in any expressed or implied treaty relationship to support the contention that Canada has gained anything but full independence, or has left Britain with a residual responsibility that would go to the very heart of our internal affairs. Canada has never consented to any such derogation from our responsibility and Britain has never claimed it. British governments and British parliamentarians, on the contrary, have affirmed for many years and at the highest level that Westminster is duty bound to act in accordance with the request of the Canadian Parliament in matters of constitutional amendment.

There might be something disquieting in this, despite the legalities, if we were asking Westminster to make our decisions for us. But, of course, we are not doing that. The joint address will ask the United Kingdom Parliament to implement the decision, not to make one. The political responsibility is ours, and ours alone. Only the legal form has to be fulfilled in Britain.

The attainment of full Canadian constitutional independence, when the final legal steps are taken in the United Kingdom, will perhaps mark a slight advance in our international recognition, a fuller legal expression of the sovereignty we have so often demonstrated in international deliberation and action. But I believe its consequences within Canada, on the other hand, will be enormous.

Not only have we added to our institutions a Charter of Rights and Freedoms along with a mechanism for future amendments to our Constitution, but what is to my mind even more important is that we have added to our self-awareness. What we are now saying to ourselves, in a form of sacred writ—our Constitution—is that we are bilingual country, a multicultural country, a democratic country, a country where God-given human rights take precedence over the man-made structures of the state. These are fundamental truths which are important for us to realize and express to ourselves and to the world. The act of formalizing them sets us on the road to fulfilling them. This is what I meant when I said at the beginning that we are about to complete the work of 1867.

• (1710)

Canadians are not, as a rule, a demonstrative people. But at our innermost heart I believe there lies a great love for this country we share together, a deep pride in what we have made of this part of the new world, and an unshakable determination to preserve our free and sovereign union.

Canadians have manifested this in many ways during this year-long debate; in their answers to pollsters of their strong support for the charter; in their attempts, in groups and as individuals, to improve the charter; in the groups of women, for instance, who brought powerful premiers to their knees; and ultimately even in their impatience to see the process brought successfully to an end. In a real sense the charter is theirs. They wanted it, they amended it, and now they will have it to protect them. In the words of our national anthem:

[Translation]

It will protect our homes and our rights.

[English]

This is the legacy of the last year, the legacy of a great country where the francophone minority can now feel at home everywhere, where the new peoples from beyond the seas can see their cultures free to survive, and where all can find something new and richer in being Canadian. It is a legacy we are proud to leave to the future.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Administration of Justice—Review of mandatory supervision policy. (b) Operation of system; the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney)—The Budget—Impact on construction of rental housing. (b) Request that provisions be amended. (c) Announcement of study results; the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—the Constitution—Francophones outside Quebec—Protection of rights.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien respecting the Constitution of Canada, the amendment thereto of Mr. Epp (p. 13492) and the subamendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 13497).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have prevailed upon the House to have an opportunity to make some comments on behalf of the many people I represent, in conjunction with some of my own thoughts. First I would like to give a great deal of credit to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) of our party for the work he has done on this Constitution. He has done an excellent job and has served us well.

It is indeed unfortunate that the ongoing debate on the Constitution has produced such acrimonious feelings and sentiments across Canada between provinces, between the provinces and the federal government and between groups and individuals. It has pitted region against region of our fair land. I regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pressed with undue haste to put together what I consider a slap-dash resolution which, to me, is second-rate. The time frame being forced on us in Parliament allows little time for sober second thought.

A murky constitutional resolution was further clouded by a fuzzy Supreme Court ruling. Certain questions have to be asked. When does something which has become a convention become legal? At what point in time does the common law of convention pass over into the brass-bound arena of legality? Is it possible that a measure could be accepted through convention and at the same time be illegal? Is it possible for a measure to be legal and at the same time unconventional?

I do not think the Supreme Court did the nation any favours with its vague ruling, but it did sit the Prime Minister down. It gave him a slap in the face and allowed the premiers of the provinces to be heard. It gave them some breathing room.

What of Quebec's claim that it still has a veto power? Is there validity to that argument? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) says no, and he and the Premier of Quebec engage in a contest of personal name-calling. There are too many "ifs" and too many grey areas for the government to ask Parliament to rush its judgment.

The good is often the enemy of the best. The constitutional resolution might be good for some, but for others it is not just that good, and for some it is just plain bad. That is not the Canadian way. I am not happy with any measure which allows for special status for any provinces or any segment of our society. The Constitution should be the single most important document in our statutes. If there is an urgent and pressing need for a Constitution or a debate on a Constitution at this time, I must question whether there are not more pressing items on the stove with which Parliament should be dealing. The Constitution should be placed on the back burner until more important economic matters have been dealt with and resolved.

As a nation we have been in business for 114 years. We have managed to survive that long without any written, formal Constitution. For the past 55 years the federal government and the provinces have held periodic talks on the matter of patriation and an amending formula. While nothing tangible happened, none can deny that some progress was made, slowly but surely, like a glacier moving across the landscape.

Canada has been moving toward full nationhood—a free and independent nation. Most of our external symbols of nationhood are in place. Canadians were given a distinctive Canadian flag and, I might add, not without some bitterness and resentment. Some still refer to it as the Liberal rag. It is unfortunate, but it is true. The Liberals brought this upon themselves by their approach to the issue. It just did not need to be that way. It was very much mishandled.

In 1945 the House of Commons voted, 182 to 2, in favour of having a distinctive flag. In 1946 the Red Ensign was put forward as a substitute for the Union Jack until a new flag was approved, and this happened about 20 years later. "O Canada" was adopted as our official national anthem. This too was a slow process.

It has been alleged that a nation which does not have its own constitution, its own autonomous institutions and its own national flag is not free. In 1955 the then minister of justice, Mr. Garson, described the present situation when the question of a bill of rights was debated in the House of Commons. He said:

> We are in a position in which we have to secure from the Parliament of the United Kingdom amendments to our Constitution with respect to all of these matters of joint concern to Canada and the provinces.

This state of constitutional subordination was relished more by Canadian politicians than by the British Parliament. It was, and is, a convenient protection against embarrassing demands for constitutional reform. None in this House will disagree that it is time to end the procedure whereby amendments to the Canadian Constitution, the British North America Act, must be referred for approval to the British Parliament. That is one giant step toward full Canadian nationhood. Nobody argues about that, but when we reach this stage, we must then proceed with caution. We must make haste slowly.

It is inconceivable that Canadians should be expected to accept a full grown and full blown Canadian Constitution overnight. Constitutions are not made; they grow. They grow through years—nay, centuries—of customs and usage through convention and practices.

The United Kingdom has no formal, written constitution; it has survived for almost a thousand years without one. Yet if one were to ask a Briton if he or she had a constitution, the answer would be yes. He or she would point to the Magna Carta, habeas corpus and a galaxy of other statutes and safeguards etched in law, custom and usage.

If we had had a constitution during the so-called October crisis, I wonder whether Canadians would have been any better off. Would their civil rights have been better protected and guaranteed had a formal document been in place? I think not.

There are large numbers of our people who are very concerned about the direction in which we in Canada are going. My colleague for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) mentioned the trend toward the Americanization of Canadian law. I want to read part of a letter from concerned Canadians. Incidentally, this letter is signed by seven ex-RCMP personnel and a retired B.C. provincial court judge. I would like to put it on the record. I quote:

● (1720)

With the federal government announcement that national security is being removed as a responsibility of the RCMP, Canada is another step closer to becoming the Afghanistan of North America. And if the Prime Minister of Canada is sleeping peacefully these nights, Canadians are not. Canadians are aware that their freedom is being eroded by Ottawa mandates, legislation and political convictions. They are also aware that such convictions are not necessarily the convictions of the up-until-now "silent" majority. Canadians have always taken pride in the knowledge that their personal rights, social and political liberties were being maintained and protected by one of the world's finest body of men engaged in police work.

Today, that pride is being systematically destroyed. First, the Kent Commission tabled its recommendations to control the media. Then, the McDonald Commission brought forward a report obviously designed to embarrass, humiliate, and bring to an end, the effectiveness of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Security Force.

Control the media, control the security—and you control the country. Simple as that.

I bring this to the attention of hon. members because Canadians are very concerned as to what is happening to their security. I am sure that all members received a brief on the Canadian Constitution from the Canadian Police Association. I quote:

The Canadian Police Association wants it clearly understood that we are not opposed to Canada having its own Constitution, whether by patriation or otherwise, or to a Charter of Rights and Freedoms with such fundamental legal principles as can be capsulized in constitutional language, as long as Parliament and the legislature can at least share with the courts the function of evolving Canada's criminal law and procedure in future years.

We do, however, strongly object to the dangerous wording of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as presently proposed which, in our opinion, would dramatically affect our criminal justice system and abdicate Parliament's authority and responsibility as the primary guardian of the rights of Canadian citizens.

In supporting the position taken by the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police and the Canadian Association of Crown Counsels, the Canadian Police Association, on behalf of over 50,000 members, hereby expresses its grave concern regarding certain provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which forms a part of the proposed Canadian Constitution and relate directly to legal and/or law enforcement issues—

The wording now before Parliament invites the courts in Canada to adopt the United States exclusionary rule, which has never been the law of Canada, England or the rest of the Commonwealth.

Let me impress that there has never been as good a force in the world as the British rule of law and British justice. The quote continues:

The rationale of the United States approach is that courts can supervise and discipline police by the after-the-fact sanction of excluding evidence and thereby protect the civil liberties of individuals. The Anglo-Canadian experience is that the function of the courts is to search for truth by having all relevant evidence and the best way to supervise and discipline police and thereby protect the civil liberties of Canadians is by before-the-fact direction to police and by subsequent prosecution and/or disciplinary hearings for police to act illegally or improperly.

I feel the Liberal government has let the RCMP down very badly because of its mishandling of the police under the McDonald commission inquiry. We live in an imperfect society. We are being asked to sanction an imperfect document. Stephen Leacock once wrote that the only place one is likely to find perfection is in a socialist commonwealth of angels. He is probably right.

I cannot accept an imperfect resolution which is bound to create more problems and more division than it will solve. There will be court case after court case. It will be a gold mine for lawyers. It will create a tremendous workload for the courts. Many of the issues will be taken out of Parliament and placed in the courtroom.

The litany of imperfections is lengthy. Any one is reason enough to oppose this measure. Taken together, the sum total of evidence against it is overwhelming. I cannot in conscience support this measure in its present form. I cannot in conscience abstain from voting against it. I must in conscience speak out against what I believe is wrong and imperfect. Somerset Maugham once wrote:

Conscience is the guardian in the individual of the rules which the community has evolved for its own preservation.

One thing for sure, I have not had to wrestle my conscience to the ground. I have been guided by the advice of scores of constituents who have contacted me. Their advice and support have confirmed my own findings, strengthened my resolve and spurred on my conviction.

Regrettably, language and institutionalized bilingualism has been a divisive factor on the road to nationhood. Almost 30 years ago Mason Wade wrote:

Destiny, not of character, but of fate, has made the French-Canadians a tragic people in the highest sense of the word. So long as they continue to speak the French language—the most precise, vivid and rapid language in western civilization—they may be our partners and we theirs, but we can never be a single people.

Does this mean we must despair of making Canada a truly united country? Not at all. We must first recognize that we have a great deal in common and that we have made enormous progress toward mutual understanding. The good will that existed before the present tenure of the Prime Minister was much superior to that which exists today. The hatreds of former times were almost dead and they must not be revived.

Several of the causes of friction which have been at the bottom of the crises of the past must not be allowed to reappear. One may say, moreover, that to the degree that Canadians become more Canadian, are more proud of their country, admit no other allegiance than they owe to their country, they are becoming more tolerant and more open to mutual understanding. This mounting pride seeks expression.

I cannot see a Canada where there is not equality applied equally in all of the ten provinces. I cannot see a Canada where there is one set of rules for nine of the provinces and another set for the tenth province. I cannot envisage a Canada where a person is excluded from promotion or advancement because of his or her mother tongue.

I cannot tolerate a federal public service, police force or Department of National Defence where language becomes paramount over merit. The merit principle has served our country well and it will continue in the future if given an opportunity.

I believe that the journey towards a bilingual country should be a voluntary walk, not a forced march. At the present time I want to bring to the attention of this House a problem that exists for English-speaking people in the province of Quebec. I want to quote from two articles in the November 27 Montreal Gazette. I quote:

Buoyed by the success of native and women's groups in getting their rights restored to the constitutional package Quebec's Protestant school boards have begun pressing Parliament to guarantee English education in this province.

Telegrams have been fired off to Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and Justice Minister Jean Chrétien . . .

The constitutional proposals now being debated by Parliament guarantees schools where numbers warrant to francophones outside Quebec with eligibility simply defined as those whose mother tongue is French, or those whose parents were educated in French anywhere in Canada.

However, another clause—the one the boards want repealed—says a similar guarantee of English schooling based on mother tongue will not apply in Quebec unless the Quebec government agrees to it. If Quebec does not agree, the so-called Canada clause, guaranteeing English schooling for children whose parents were educated in English anywhere in Canada, would be imposed on this province. That's not good enough for the school boards.

● (1730)

"The fear about the Canada clause is that it will be detrimental to pupils whose mother tongue is English but whose parents in good faith and in the spirit of co-operation have sent their children to French schools or French immersion courses," said Paterson.

"The Canada clause could have a detrimental effect on those pupils' chance to later send their own children to English schools."

Thousands of children, Mr. Speaker, are apparently caught in this situation. There is no protection for them in the constitution, and certainly there is no provision for the jurisdiction of the courts.

I should like to quote Ian MacDonald on the same issue. He says:

A lot of people may be wondering what the Constitution actually says in this famous "Canada clause" they've been hearing so much about . . .

"Citizens of Canada who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in the province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province." . . .

It means that if you were educated in Canada in French or English, you have the right to send your kids to school in that language. In practice, the Canada clause will apply mainly in Quebec, overriding Article 73 of the Charter of the French Language, Bill 101, which limits access to English schools to "a child whose father or mother received his or her elementary instruction in English in Quebec."

In the rest of the country the Canada clause will also apply, but the more important criterion for minority language education rights is a simple question of "first language learned and still understood."

That is Section 23(1), Mr. Speaker. I would like to quote it for the record at this time. It reads:

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

Mr. MacDonald's column went on to read:

That is Section 23(1)(a) of the federal resolution, otherwise known as the "mother tongue clause." The feds finally decided to go with two standards for two different reasons.

First, they could not apply only the Canada clause in other provinces, since there were no French schools in some of them at the time when many francophone parents were going to school.

Therefore, if it could not be demonstrated that the parents had themselves attended primary school in French, they could hardly claim the right for their children. A big technical hitch: ergo, no Canada clause in the rest of Canada. The mother tongue clause would do the trick.

But not in Quebec. An English mother tongue clause in this province would mean that naturalized Canadians of English-speaking origin would have access to English schools. In effect, this means New Canadians from Commonwealth countries, like India, Pakistan and Zimbabwe. Political dynamite.

No Canadian should be denied equality of opportunity because he is unilingual in either of the official languages. If there is to be equality, there must be true equality, Mr. Speaker. We cannot have bilingualism and Bill 101 side by side in this country. There is no room for restrictive covenants which discriminate against segments of our population.

To me, a Charter of Rights and Freedoms is window-dressing. It is something for the Prime Minister to run up on a flag pole as a retirement legacy. I am suspicious of any charter, especially of one proposed by the Prime Minister, this man who trampled on the basic rights of so many Canadians during the October crisis, a time of an alleged apprehended insurrection. Mr. Speaker, does this not ring a bell?

On too many occasions in this country the liberties of individuals and groups have been cast aside for the alleged common good. The treatment of the Japanese during World War II is a scar we will shamefully carry forever. The treatment of Jehovah's Witnesses in Quebec is a blight on religious freedom and liberty. The War Measures Act was an insult to liberty and an affront to justice. All this was done by a man who now brings in a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Can he be trusted? Has he repented? The spirit of John Diefenbaker cries out, "This is a greater conversion than the one on the road to Damascus".

There is no reference in the proposed Charter of Rights and Freedoms to the right to own property. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this is under provincial jurisdiction and that we are fairly safe in the Province of Alberta. In fact, I know we are safe there. But what about the Province of Saskatchewan, that socialist province where the government is taking over control of more and more land, land upon which food is produced? It does not bother me so much that governments are setting up Crown corporations, but it really bothers me when the state takes over control of the land upon which we produce our food.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is intended to protect people from government. How can people be protected? How can people be assured and guaranteed their rights if there are no provisions for overriding legislation? Further to that, God was reluctantly paid the minimum wage by the Prime Minister in the charter.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, what are the rights of the unborn? I happen to believe that life begins at the moment of conception. Unborn babies must be recognized as members of the human family. How many members of government could guarantee they would be here today if abortion on demand had been in effect in Canada in the last 70 years? After 55 years of slow progress on the Constitution in Canada, why must we slip up in a flurry of undue haste? Why do we not think about the responsibility that humanity has, which is to be prepared to accept our responsibility for the defenceless unborn child? This is one of the basic human rights and it is omitted from the charter.

I know that the Prime Minister has given his affirmation; he has made a statement on that. It is a verbal statement. I once heard a politician say that the statement was not worth the paper it was written on. That is how I feel about the Prime Minister's statement. I ask, why the great hurry?

I recommend to hon. members that they read some of the statements which were made by members from both sides of the House during the debate on the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights in 1960.

Certain of our rights—indeed all of our most important rights—were not given to us by government. Government cannot give anything to us until it has taken something away. Many of these rights were hard fought for and hard won. They are inalienable rights. These rights have deep roots in history, in custom and usage, in convention and in common law. They were ours originally. Then, of course, every time government does something for you, you lose a part of your very being.

We are fortunate to live in a parliamentary democracy where the individual is supreme. We are fortunate because of the rich legacy of laws and statutes we have adopted from the mother countries of Great Britain and France.

On the road to nationhood, we have experienced growing pains. We have made mistakes. But when women and men of goodwill reason together, common sense, logic, compassion and understanding prevail.

No one in the House will oppose the move to patriate the British North America Act and bring it home to Canada. No one will oppose the reality of being able to amend our own laws in Canada without reference to any outside legislature or parliament.

Canadians everywhere will decry the inordinate rush to rough justice for many Canadians. Many will question the need to blindly adopt a resolution which was hastily agreed to.

If there is need for a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I want to see it made in Canada. I do not want to see a patchwork, incomplete and unacceptable charter thrown together in Canada and enshrined in Britain.

It is time for sober, second thought. It is time for a cooling off period. It is time for the government to hear the views of those who will be affected. It is time for the government to heed the cries of those Canadians who will suffer because government moved to enshrine their rights. If we do this, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for unravelling the accord that has been arrived at by the provinces. They have done a good job and I give them credit for that. We can patriate the Constitution, yes; we can patriate the Constitution with the amending formula, yes. It is not my intention to undo the accord in any way, shape or form by anything that I have said, but I do think the time has arrived when we as members of this House of Commons must take a second look and approach this problem with common sense.

• (1740)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, like most members of the House who have had an opportunity to speak in this debate, I consider it a great honour to do so. This is a historic debate and undoubtedly is the most significant debate on the most significant matter the House has ever dealt with.

Some of the famous debates concerned the building of the CPR under Sir John A. Macdonald, the navy bill under Borden, conscription, pipeline, the flag debate—all of these have gone down in Canadian history as part of our heritage and our tradition. But this constitutional debate is the greatest of them all, and that is why it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to particpate in it.

I have not had a speech ready to give at a moment's notice, Mr. Speaker, because we were in a period of flux until recently. Earlier today when I had to decide what I would say when I spoke today, I thought I might talk about some of my feelings and about how I regard where we are at this point in the debate.

My attitude is a very positive one. I have a feeling of pride because I think the House is going to do a very good thing in two days' time. I think it is important that we recap for a moment the elements of what we are about to do in patriating the Constitution.

Until the beginning of this year many Canadians did not know that the Constitution of Canada did not reside in Canada but was still an act of the British Parliament. Canadians now know that for a variety of reasons we have not been able to bring that Constitution home for 114 years. As the result of this debate, many Canadians are now aware that we started making a conscious effort to bring the Constitution home in 1927 under Mackenzie King. In 1931, the Statute of Westminster was passed and the other dominions, as they were then called, cut the umbilical cord, but for several reasons Canada was not able to do that.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) say that he felt we must make haste slowly. If any nation has ever made haste slowly on the subject of the Constitution, it is Canada. The question of patriating the Constitution is not in contention. Just a couple of months ago people were saying, "Leave it; it has been fine for years and there is no need to worry about patriating it." I think it is clear that the consensus in the country now supports patriating the Constitution.

We have a very good amending formula which I think is reasonable and fair, Mr. Speaker. In all honesty, it is not all that I personally had hoped for. I liked the provision for a referendum when there seemed to be no other way to get agreement. I have never been afraid of going to the people, particularly with the built-in safeguards that were in the referendum procedure which would have required a majority of the people in each of the four regions to vote in support of a constitutional amendment. We compromised on that because there was a real desire to reach an agreement with the provinces. That agreement was reached, and there was an accord.

I admit I am somewhat surprised not just by the attitude of the hon. member for Red Deer but by many members of the official opposition who, for months when the government was prepared to go ahead without the consent and agreement of most of the provinces, kept urging the government to try to reach an accord at all costs. Now that the accord has been reached, they are prepared to break it for a variety of amendments which they have put forward.

The NDP were at least prepared to go ahead, regardless of whether a majority of the provinces agreed. I think it is now consistent with that position for them to move amendments to the accord, but I find it difficult to understand the position of the official opposition in this regard.

Notwithstanding my remarks about the opposition and their attitude to the Accord, I think it is fair to say that when the debate on the Constitution began there was a fair bit of acrimony when the subject of the amending formula came up. I do not think that acrimony exists now. There may be some people who disagree but we do not have the dissension we once experienced in the House.

We now have a charter, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is a good charter. I have always been committed to the concept of a charter although I realize that not everyone in the House has been. Earlier today I read some of the speeches hon. members opposite made when the item first came up for debate. Many members, particularly in the Conservative Party, were opposed to the basic concept of a charter before there was even any debate on what it might contain.

We know the position of former Premier Lyon and, quite frankly, I think it hurt him in the recent provincial election although that would be difficult to measure. A lot of people do not fully understand the ramifications of the charter or the ramifications of bringing the Constitution back home.

When it comes to a question of wanting the problem solved or not wanting it solved, I think most people want it solved. When it comes to the question of helping or hindering, I think most people want to see the premiers of this country helping. To the extent that former Premier Lyon was a hindrance, I think the people of Manitoba spoke and clearly indicated their sentiments on that.

Personally, I have never been in doubt about the charter. I have to admit that I have been greatly influenced by the experience of chairing the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which went across the country and listened to hundreds of handicapped and disabled people speak about their feelings and why they wanted a charter. Many of them said; "Don't leave us at the mercy of the provinces. We want this charter and we want it in force right across the country." Well, Mr. Speaker, it is in force right across the country. I know that some disabled people objected to the override clause but we strove for the best deal with the provinces, and I think that rather than the disabled people of this country being at the mercy of the provinces now, the provinces are at the mercy of the charter. The provinces cannot pass that override provision in a piece of general legislation every few years. They must put it in every act that they want it to apply to and they have to re-enact it every five years or else it automatically lapses.

The political reality of a formula such as that is that it will rarely, if ever, be used. And I do not think it is likely to be used with respect to the disabled and handicapped people of this country.

At the outset of the debate on the Constitution I know that people did not see the need for a charter. I think that mood has changed. The remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer are not typical of the feelings of most Canadians, in my view, although there are still some who feel that way.

About a week ago I spoke to a group of lawyers at a luncheon in Toronto. Afterwards there was a question and answer period and one man asked if I could tell him how his life would be any different after the charter is in place. I had to admit that his life probably would not be any different. I also tried to point out to him that he was white, he was able bodied, he was Anglo-Saxon, he was a lawyer, he had a good income—

Mrs. Appolloni: He was a man.

Mr. Smith: As the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) has pointed out, he was a man.

• (1750)

I think it is fair to say that if most of us look at the many advantages we all have, that the odds on any of us having to fling ourselves at the courts and plead for the intercession which the Charter would provide for us are perhaps not that high. However, there are many people in this country who do not fall into the categories to which I have just referred. When I pointed this out to the gentleman at the luncheon, he said, "You are right. I had not really thought about it from that perspective before". He had to admit that he had really only been thinking of himself. I think it is very important for all of us to analyze our thoughts and emotions on this subject. We should not only think about how it will affect us personally. We should think also about how it will affect many people who do fall into these disadvantaged groups.

I was disappointed when I heard the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) say that he could not support the charter. He said that he was automatically suspicious of anything which had been proposed by the Prime Minister. Quite frankly, I am really shocked by that attitude. It would seem to me that everyone in the House ought to be sufficiently mature to be able to analyse a piece of legislation, a resolution, or whatever is before the House, and judge it on its merits and not on whose name is attached to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: I think, though, that we have come a long way in the House since last fall. I remember that after the first minister's conference in September of 1980, there was a breakdown. The ten premiers, after they had eaten breakfast, went to see the Prime Minister. They had 11 demands which, quite frankly, had the Prime Minister agreed to them all, would have emasculated the ability of the federal government to run this country. It would have been virtually treasonous to have accepted those demands. The Prime Minister was prepared to accept a few but not to give away the fort and all the supplies that were in it.

If we try to analyse what happened there, and why matters broke down to the extent that they did, we will find, I think, that there were surely some personality clashes which may have contributed. But I think that the Prime Minister really put his finger on it when he spoke in the House earlier this year. He referred to the incident which happened in 1966. For the first time, the then Premier Johnston of Quebec, in responding to a move by Prime Minister Pearson to patriate the Constitution, said, "Yes, you can have Quebec's agreement, but we have a price tag". What happened then was that many premiers sort of fell into the rut of saying "Yes, we will go along with it, but this is our price". It was at that point that the Prime Minister started hammering through the message that we, as a party and as a government, were not prepared to trade off rights for fish and oil. He kept hammering away at that point and, thank goodness, it got through. I think the people of this country really agree with that point. What it really boiled down to was leaership and determination.

I can remember that during the early stages of this debate I would frequently hear, while I was travelling around the country, the word "obsession". Some people felt it was an obsession. What are the characteristics of leadership? I think it is fair to say that had John A. Macdonald waited for universal agreement to build the CPR, it would certainly never have been built. It would have never got to Vancouver and Canada would not be in the shape it is in today. Sometimes there comes a situation where someone must break the log jam, must show determination, and must just take the bull by the horns and say, "We will do the right thing and we will press on". That is exactly what has happened. In my viewpoint, that is the final analysis of the true test of leadership and what it is all about.

In the years to come, I wonder what our recollection will be when we think of the constitutional debate of 1980 and 1981? My first recollection will be of the night we voted to set up the committee. There was a near riot here on the floor of the House. Mr. Speaker was being defied by some hon. members who, in my opinion, were acting quite disgracefully. Some of them were standing up and shaking their fists, at Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: It was closure.

Mr. Smith: It was an unfortunate thing. My sister, who has lived in California since 1949, just happend to be here. This was the only time she had ever sat in the House of Commons. It was that day.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I met her that night.

Mr. Smith: That is right. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did meet her. He was very charmed by her because she is a lovely lady, and she was quite charmed by him. In any event, she was sitting up there in the gallery. She sat there in complete disbelief until about 2:30 in the morning when the whole thing ended.

However, it is quite fair to say that that mood and atmosphere has evaporated. It is gone. I think that when the vote is taken on Wednesday night, there will not be any recrimination, there will not be bitterness or acrimony. That mood has disappeared, and I think that fact is good cause for all of us to be very proud.

Second, when I think of what I will look back on, I will probably recall my first reaction to that night. I wondered whether we would ever be able to heal the divisiveness and whether there was any light at the end of the tunnel. I remember a speech which was given by Senator David Croll. Senator Croll talked about being on the right side of history, and how, at the time history was taking place, it was not always clear to everyone which, in fact, was the right side of history. He reminded us of the debate on citizenship in this country which took place in the 1940s. Of course, Senator Croll has been in public life since the 1920s. Thank goodness, he is still active in public life. However, he reminded us of the citizenship debate. No one has a more waspy background than I do, and I am quite proud of it. However, I am also proud to be a Canadian. I remember that at the time when we had the debate on citizenship people were saying that it was a treasonous and terrible thing to give up being British subjects for Canadian passports and Canadian citizenship. At the time, there was a really hot debate. But when one looks back on it now, it is inconceivable to think that anyone would have been against Canadian citizenship. However, they were at the time.

There was a similar situation during the flag debate. I was fortunate enough to be working here as an assistant at the time. I sat and listened to most of the flag debate from the galleries. Some of the very divisive statements made at the time might have caused one to think that perhaps we could never heal some of the divisions in the House. However, there was a right side of history at the time. Surely, one cannot be against the Canadian flag.

I believe that when we look back in years to come, there will be a right side of history on this one. I just remember how correct Senator Croll was. He said, "In years to come, you will look back and find it inconceivable that anyone could have been against bringinng the Constitution home." He was more of a prophet than some people may have thought, because I think that most people in this country are already in this mood.

The final recollection to which I might refer relates to the fact that the disabled are included in Section 15. When the first draft came out, they were not included. I remember my first reaction to that. I do not think the fact that they were excluded was indicative of anyone being mean spirited or indifferent. People were simply not aware of the need for their inclusion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think you are right.

Mr. Smith: I remember speaking on it in caucus time after time, to the point where I almost felt that I was becoming a pest. One would see the odd person rolling his eyes back as if to say, "Here goes Smith again on the disabled". However, I remember the feeling I had when the Minister of Justice stood up in caucus and announced that the disabled would be included. If I never do anything in public life again, that will have been worth it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I agree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: There are some other memories. I could talk about spending some time in Great Britain. In March, I spent three weeks there talking to about 40 Members of Parliament about the Constitution, the caucuses and the arguments.

However, I see that my time is up. I would just like to say that it is all great history. All of us should be proud to have been part of this chapter of nation-building. When the curtain drops on Wednesday night and the role of this House is finally complete, I am sure we will all stand up and give a great cheer to have been part of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I am in favour of patriating the British North America Act and an amending formula which is the most acceptable to all Canadian provinces and all Canadian people. I might add that have not changed my mind one iota since my constitutional speech on the first proposal.

Once again, I am concerned with the hurry up attitude of the government opposite. The Constitution is too important. Our rights are too sacred to be rushed along in a whirlwind of hasty meetings and telexes, hasty amendments and House agreements. I say, stop the merry-go-round and slow down. What is the hurry?

I do not want to see Canadians saddled with an imperfect Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I do not want to see Canadians saddled with many of the clauses which will not stand the close scrutiny of Laurier's sober second thought. Rome was not built in a day. Constitutions are not made overnight, or late at night in kitchen conferences at the Conference Centre amid bottles of whisky. Constitutions are not made in hasty, badly thought out compromises. On Wednesday we will be asked to vote on this hasty document, an Accord of flaws, an unworkable maze.

I for one do not want to see a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in stone and enshrined in Great Britain. I want to see it made in Canada by Canadians, and I want a charter as perfect as men and women can devise. But the axe falls Wednesday at three o'clock.

Personally, I want to see our rights carefully considered, not traded off for expediency and efficiency to meet some fictitious timetable, a timetable to salve one man's manic ego whose documented desire is redistribution of wealth in this Canada of ours and enshrined bilingualism.

I fear as much this charter proposed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the author of "Federalism and the French Canadians", the implementer of the draconian War Measures Act, the closure artist, the order in council buck passer, the prosecutor of the Official Secrets Act, the manipulator of the uranium cartel, the man from whose cabinet the Hon. James Richardson retired warning us all of the Prime Minister's motives regarding the Constitution. I fear a Charter of Rights and Freedoms from someone who has ignored rights.

We may be opening up a Pandora's box by proceeding with undue haste and a lack of caution. What is wrong with a cooling off period and the appointing of a constituent assembly? We could then go about our business while the Constitution is being debated again. We could look after the economy. We could strike an all-party committee and invite the Governor of the Bank of Canada to sit in on the hearings, and we could do something about interest rates, the mortgage rates and the deplorable lack of housing. What is wrong with a second thought given to the resolution by Canadians from all walks of life? There are too many ifs and buts in this resolution. There are too many loopholes, many more than the ones which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is supposedly addressing in the budget. There are too many escape clauses and too many clauses which divide us. There are too many areas for disagreement.

Will the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be forever doomed to territorial status because of this imperfect resolution? It certainly looks that way.

Will our system go the way of the United States in dealing with criminals? I hope not, but I fear so.

Already there are revolving doors at main entrances to most police stations. As quickly as police round up lawbreakers, they are released and back on the streets in record time. The police in this country are helpless to carry ou the mandates to which they are pledged. Violent crime is on the upswing in most communities in Canada.

Are we moving toward a society where there is more concern for the rights of the criminal than for the rights of the innocent? I hope not. I do not want to see a society where the civil liberties of the lawbreaker override the basic rights of the law-abiding citizen.

I am sure that all Progressive Conservative members have received in writing the concerns of the Ontario Attorney General in this regard. I am sure that all parliamentarians have received the objections of the Ontario Police Association to the exclusionary rule. Are we adopting the U.S. Miranda convention? I certainly hope not.

● (2010)

Former Senator Eugene Forsey, now retired, is one of the most respected constitutional experts in this country. Permit me to read what he wrote:

> If we draft in haste, we may have to repent at leisure, and a very prolonged leisure. We could be stuck with a blotched Constitution for a generation or more. Our children and our children's children might have to suffer the consequences or our carelessness, our fecklessness.

I agree with this thesis a hundred per cent.

Is there no way that this imperfect document may be hoisted so that it may be made more perfect, as perfect as the input of all interested and involved Canadians will allow; a constituent assembly taking at least as long as the original document took which was ended by closure? Is there any sane reason for this inordinate haste to rush to judgment, to Great Britain? Is there any logical reason for the imposition of informal closure by the government House Leader? Are there any compelling reasons, and if there are, I fail to see them. Will this resolution make Canada a better place to live in? Will it create harmony and unity? Will it heal wounds rather than create new ones? Will it make better partners of the two founding races in confederation? Will it strike down insidious invasions against language freedom, such as Bill 101 in Quebec? Will it guarantee the same language rights to the English-speaking minority in Quebec as it does to the French-speaking minorities in the other nine provinces?

The Houses of Parliament here have some 1,800 employees. About 50 per cent of management consists of anglophones and about 50 per cent of francophones, the remaining two-thirds being francophones. Is this employment by merit or by language? Does this sound right; does it sound fair? Will the charter curtail or promulgate these things?

Under Sections 23 and 58, will the provision to allow provinces to opt into language rights enhance and advance the government's linguistic goals for this nation? I fear not, and I also fear institutionalized bilingualism. I fear the Canada clause and I fear for the English language in view of this government's policies.

I ask you, what will this nation face if Quebec ever secedes? I am afraid there will be acrimony, and acrimony of the most bitter kind.

Under Section 28 the notwithstanding clause is really an override. The much vaunted Charter of Rights and Freedoms is really not entrenched or enshrined in the Constitution. It is subject to change at the future discretion of federal and provincial legislators. I happen to disagree with this approach. The draftsmen are attempting to ensure that the custodians of our rights will not be appointed judiciary, but the elected representatives in the federal and provincial arenas.

I happen to be one of those who feel and believe strongly that basic human rights are not negotiable and not amendable. These rights were not given to us by the state. They are inalienable rights which stem from centuries of civil and common law, from confrontations with the monarchs and the barons, and from bloody battles in the defence of liberty and freedom. These are inalienable rights, as has been stated so many times; the right to life, liberty and the ownership of property. The state is not giving us any rights we do not already possess. To attempt to formalize these rights in a charter is carrying coals to Newcastle. Anything that is not written down I can do. It is those things that are done backwards that I fear.

The right to freedom of religion does not require any legislation which may permit a "notwithstanding" clause. The right to freedom of speech does not require any legislation which may permit a "notwithstanding" clause. The right to freedom of assembly does not require any legislation which may permit a "notwithstanding" clause. The right to own property does not require any legislation which may permit a "notwithstanding" clause.

By the way, under Section 2, where is the right to possess and enjoy the ownership of private property in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? You will not find it, and do not give me the bally-hoo about provincial rights.

May only the state own property? The right to own property is a sacred right in this country and in a few others. Its omission from the charter is indefensible in my opinion. Historically we have always had that inalienable right to property. Even Machiavelli, who was championed by the right hon. gentleman across the way, stated:

> When neither their property nor their honour is touched, the majority of men live content.

Let me quote from Charles Evans Hughes in a speech at Elmira, New York, in 1907. He said this:

> We are under a constitution, but the constitution is what the judges say it is, and the judiciary is the safeguard of our liberty and of our property under the constitution.

Pope Leo XIII stated in 1891:

> Every man has by nature the right to possess property as his own.

It is ludicrous in my view to propose such a tentative charter. It is an affront to simple justice, equality, liberty and freedom to propose a charter which might be subject to change at the whim or caprice of some legislative body. Freedom of speech, religion, assembly and the right to own property are basic human rights. They are less than secure or safe if they are subjected to a "notwithstanding" clause.

These fundamental freedoms should mean the same throughout each and every province in this country. We have always assumed that our rights are universal and portable. We have never considered for a single moment that they might vary or be subjected to different interpretations depending on what province we are in.

If rights must be entrenched, so be it, but let them be entrenched without qualification or override. In my lifetime I have seen too many abuses of the rights of some, ostensibly to protect the rights of others.

I think perhaps it was John Stuart Mill who said literally that every man has the right to go to hell in the manner of his own choosing so long as he does not bother his neighbour. I would prefer to take my chances with the courts interpreting my rights. I do not subscribe to the doctrine of legislative supremacy in all cases. If you prefer to go the route of legislative supremacy, maybe you should talk to the Japanese-Canadians whose rights were overridden during World War II, or talk to the Jehovah's Witnesses in Quebec.

I do not favour any lossely worded protection of basic rights which will permit the passage of discriminatory legislation. It has been written by others that the "notwithstanding" clause is a "watering down," a "gutting" and a "disembowelling" of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The "notwithstanding" clause weakens the charter, it does not strengthen it. Freedom of religion means just that—no "ifs", "ands" or "buts". The same goes for our other fundamental rights and freedoms.

Will we be better off with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms? Will we be more united? Will this proposed charter divide us? Those are interesting questions.

The United States has an entrenched charter, but its charter was wrestled, fought for an bled for. It was a declaration of independence from another country. That is a vast, vast difference.

On the other side of the Atlantic the United Kingdom does not have an entrenched charter of rights. In fact, the U.K. does not have a formal constitution. The U.S.S.R. has one of the broadest and most humanitarian charters for the protection of civil liberties that exists anywhere in the world. Need I say any more? So much for entrenchment.

We have existed for 114 years without an entrenched charter of rights and freedoms, and I think that, with a couple of obvious exceptions, we have done remarkably well. Most Canadians want an end to this debate, but I do not believe they wish an imperfect charter as the price. I do not believe they want an imperfect Constitution. I would again like to quote from Senator Forsey who said:

> —if we get an entrenched charter of individual and minority linguistic rights, putting them out of the power of Parliament or the provincial legislatures to touch . . . Such a charter would give the courts wholly new, and vitally important, powers over a vast new field of subjects; and the history of the United States shows how courts can interpret an entrenched bill of rights to block social progress. So the drafting of such a bill, or charter, will be both delicate and crucial.
>
> For example; a constitutional guarantee for parents to have their children educated in their mother-tongue (French, English, or native) would not protect the freedom of choice which the United Nations has declared essential. An English-speaking Canadian who wanted to have his children educated partly in French, or a French-speaking Canadian who wanted to have his children educated partly in English, or an Indian or Inuit who wanted to have his children educated partly in French or English, would have no constitutional protection whatever.

I do not believe that the people of Canada wish to trade parliamentary law for constitutional law. I feel somehow this evening that my remarks here are redundant. The dye has already been cast. We are all aware of it on this side of the House.

• (2020)

The government is determmined to proceed hastily with this inferior product while we suffer the consequences later. It may be news to the government but Canadians do not rate the Constitution very highly in the pecking order. As Canadians perceive it, I am told that it ranks about fifth. It rates below the economic issues.

I am sure that most Canadians condemn the headlong haste of this government to patriate the Constitution. No one will disagree with the laudatory principle of patriation of the British North America Act to Canada so that our national infrastructure may be amended in Canada by Canadians, which is not the situation now. Patriating the British North America Act and adopting an amending formula are long overdue measures, but as the old Chinese proverb says, "Every journey of a thousand years requires a first step."

Many of my colleagues and I are prepared to take that first step but many of us are reluctant to voice our approval for something which is incomplete, inferior and a product of poor draftsmanship.

Give us the ways and means to unite this country. Give us the opportunity to unite as Canadians while casting partisan politics aside for the common goal, and give us the hope that we may have a basic resolution which can be examined and improved from time to time. Wednesday at 3 p.m. is not long enough. Let us not attempt to hobble future generations of Canadian legislators, the judiciary and ordinary Canadians with what is expedient and at the time politically proper.

We must do what is right. I must do what I consider right and not just what is popular. It is to be hoped that all our constituents will understand what we are doing. We will always need a salve in this country to soothe the regions and provinces, but now more than ever.

Let us slowly embark on that journey of a thousand years, but we should make haste slowly. Next Wednesday at three o'clock is a moment of great personal and national decision. Donne said, "Ask not for whom the bell tolls, it tolls for thee."

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House of Commons in 1962, many years ago, I think that my views on the issue of unity, bilingualism and multiculturalism had already been fairly well formulated.

I might just say, without going into detail, that my formative years were spent in a community called Sillery, halfway between Quebec and Quebec Bridge. As I recall, it was a community which was made upword principally of French-speaking Canadians—we used the word "Canadien" in those days, not Québécois. There was a large number of Irish Canadians and Scots living there. It was a community which was the exception rather than the rule. I had the privilege of learning French, not in school but from French-speaking Canadians, for whom I had a great affinity even as a youngster. We did many things in common. We played ball, hockey, ran to vespers in the evening, went to mass which started at 10.30 in the morning and finished at 1.30 or 2 in the afternoon on Sunday. We learned to respect each other. We learned to respect each other's language, culture and traditions. Now and then we traded insults, which is normal, and had small arguments which disappeared overnight.

When I came to the House of Commons in 1962 I was appalled at the lack of sensitivity here. Documents were tabled in the French language weeks after the English version, and even those translations were poor. There were unilingual guards at the front door, which was an embarrassment to all members from Quebec who had French-speaking constituents visiting their Parliament.

Due to the foresight of Mr. Diefenbaker, who named the first French-speaking Governor General, and the wisdom and sensitivity of Mr. Pearson, who set up the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, slowly but surely the understanding of the House in that respect evolved. When the Official Languages Act came before Parliament in 1969, it was endorsed by virtually all members of the House.

I had rather simplistic views on the Constitution in 1962. I saw a country in which both official languages would be recognized from one ocean to the other; where French-speaking Canadians could send their children to the school of their choice, as I could in Quebec. It was a right, not a privilege. I visualized a multicultural country in which all Canadians were equal. I linked that with the change in the Constitution. I even recall being encouraged by Mr. Pearson in the 1960s, as an English-speaking Quebecer in a predominantly French-speaking caucus, to present the views of English-speaking Quebecers forcefully in that caucus. However, an hour or two later I would find myself arguing the views of French-speaking Canadians along with French-speaking members in the national caucus.

Those were tough days, days when the President of the CNR said he could not find enough French-speaking Canadians to name to the board of directors of the CNR. It was not prejudice, but insensitivity, intolerance and misunderstanding. I have seen great progress made since. That is why I am a great admirer of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), because imperfect as this Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are, the Officials Languages Act is still enshrined in the Constitution. It is beyond the grasp of petty politicians who may in the future, if politically expedient, wish to modify or change the Official Languages Act.

For the first time, French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec will be able to demand that their children be educated in their mother tongue, by virtue of Section 23. The provision is less than ideal—it is limited by the phrase, "where numbers warrant"—but at least it is a step in the right direction. It shows which way we want this country to grow. I am pleased that the two criteria in Section 23 go a long way to implementing the concept of freedom of choice. I am a little unhappy that Section 23 is limited as far as that application is concerned to the English-speaking people of my former province of Quebec. I am sorry that Section 58 had to be introduced in that resolution which limits to some degree freedom of choice. If members opposite feel as strongly about Section 58 as the member who sat down, he or his party tomorrow can make an amendment to remove Section 58 from the charter if they feel like it. I do not think they will.

I am conscious, since I have been in Lincoln, of the privileged position I really had as a youngster in Quebec. I am sorry that the Constitution does not include the provision of Section 133 in every province across the country. I am truly sorry about that. I applaud Mr. Hatfield and his progressive approach to that issue. I am pleased, in other words, that we have gone a long way, through the Constitution, to rectify old injustices.

• (2030)

The hon. gentleman who just sat down recalled the intolerance of Quebec, and he mentioned the Jehovah's Witnesses and linked that situation somehow with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I suspect that his knowledge of Quebec history is very sketchy and very superficial because if he knew anything—and he is not here at the moment—he would know that it was Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Frank Scott who took the case of the Jehovah's Witnesses all the way up to the Supreme Court against Mr. Duplessis and wiped out that infamous padlock law. That same Pierre Elliott Trudeau is the Prime Minister of this country.

I do not know how I will vote on Section 58. It bothers me, concerns me and worries me. I know how important language is to French-speaking Canadians. Their battle for survival is well documented. Thomas D'arcy McGee, who was one of the Fathers of Confederation representing the riding I represented when I left here in 1976 to go to Quebec to seek election, said as far back as 1857:

> The Canadien hold dearer than life itself, their social life, their historical rank, their religion, their nationality . . . Their language is their point of honour as well as their lever of power. So long as they keep it, they are unconquered. When it ceases to be spoken by their children, a greater loss than Montcalm's will be felt.

I share that view. I expressed it in the Quebec National Assembly the day I left. I admire French-speaking Canadians for fighting so vehemently for their language.

There is another reason hon. members opposite should welcome Section 23 as it applies to French-speaking Canadians living outside Quebec. They should be pleased at the extension of Section 133 to New Brunswick because there are many forms of separation and many ways by which separatism can occur, and perhaps the most dangerous, because it is the most subtle, is the kind of separation that would inevitably result if somehow in the future Quebec were to evolve into a unilingual French province and the rest of Canada were to become totally English. In no time we would cease communicating. In no time we would separate into two nation states. In no time such separation would be inevitable. On October 23, 1976, in a speech I gave the night before I announced my resignation in this House, I said:

But there is another road to separatism that is more dangerous because it is not so apparent. If over the next decade Canada were to become a country made up of two groups, two communities, two ghettos, if you like—one speaking only French and the other speaking only English—then in a relatively short period of time, both groups would be assimilated, culturally, economically or both, by the United States of America. It is the bilingual character of Canada that more than anything protects it against American cultural assimilation; it is the economic strength of the whole country that has preserved us so far from total economic subservience.

That is one reason, Mr. Speaker, if you do not buy any other, that we should welcome the growth in numbers of the Acadian people and hope that the cautious steps taken in the Constitution may somehow result in a decade or two in a substantial growth in the numbers of French Canadians outside Quebec.

What about the English speaking community of Quebec? It has been privileged; I say that without hesitation. Where Ontario and Manitoba skirted the will of the Fathers of Confederation Quebec honoured it to the letter of the law, and more. We have our own school system because of Section 93 of the Constitution. French-speaking Canadians in Ontario will not have that ever after the constitutional changes. We have our hospitals, our schools, our universities and our infrastructure but, as the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) said today, enrolment in the English-speaking school system is down by 33 per cent in five years. It is down because English has been prescribed by Dr. Laurin in a neat little box: no addition to its natural source of numbers; the lower birth rate; thousands of people have moved out of Quebec for economic reasons; a close, tight definition of what is an English-speaking Canadian; and the fact that English-speaking people from outside Canada cannot enter the English school system in Quebec at the moment, something we are rectifying with the Canada clause. All these things have limited any injection into that little group of people, which slowly but surely is diminishing in number. Unfortunately, Section 58 postpones rectifying this for another indefinite period, until some more enlightened provincial government comes along and opts into the mother tongue feature. It is too bad we did not have the generosity of spirit to do it now. I say that sincerely. I have to say it; it bothers me, and it hurts me.

I could understand it if the numbers were the other way. I could understand it if the English-speaking Quebecer represented a threat to the language and culture of French Quebec. The real threat comes from the field of communications, as the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) said at the weekend. It comes from Archie Bunker on the boob tube. It does not come from the presence of a few hundred thousand kids in school. That is the line the Parti Québécois has developed and fostered through the decade in order to garnish all the mavericks, nationalists and misfits possible to join forces with those who legitimately think independence is best.

I say to my former citizen friends in Quebec that they have to recognize that the charter is not quite what they had hoped it would be, but it goes a long way toward perfection. We retain our confessional schools. The charter contains at least a clause which says that if you were educated in English in any of the other provinces and you are coming to Quebec, your children would be able to go to an English school. It contains a clause of which in a few years, happily, another government will see fit to take advantage, namely, restoration of freedom of choice for Canadian citizens. This is in addition to all the other benefits in the charter which flow to Canadians, whatever their language and whatever their persuasion.

I say, however, to hon. members opposite, as a friend and as one who feels this deeply, that if they bring in an amendment tomorrow and play petty politics with one million English-speaking Quebecers—an amendment, for instance, which says we will wipe out Section 23 entirely in order to appease the Quebec government because we must bring the Quebec government in somehow—the English community will not forget the Tories or the New Democratic Party, and I will see to that, because that would be rank discrimination. That would be denying the English-speaking people of Quebec not only freedom of choice but also the Canada clause to which Mr. Lévesque agreed some years ago in St. Andrews.

I have sat here and listened. I have read the letter from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to Mr. Lévesque. I heard little bits of a speech last night in Montreal. I hear that a nice little amendment will be coming tomorrow. I hope it is not an amendment which suggests for a moment that Section 23 be postponed until some future time, in the vain hope that somehow the Parti Québécois can be seduced into supporting the Conservative Party in the next election. Not only will they lose the Parti Québécois, which they never had, but they will lose the English-speaking community which under normal circumstances supports that party in surprising numbers.

● (2040)

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell me when.

Mr. Mackasey: When? Mr. Diefenbaker always picked up eight or ten seats. He had the support of the normal English-speaking Quebecer who traditionally supports the Tories, as he should have under our system. Periodically that English-speaking Quebecer supported the Liberals and this Prime Minister because they felt that somebody in this House was speaking out for their rights. Until the hon. member mentioned English-speaking Quebecers tonight, and the member who spoke before supper did so too, nobody in the House got up to say one word on their behalf. It was as if they did not exist. However, there are one million such people in Quebec, more than the population of Saskatchewan or Manitoba—I may have forgotten my figures—who are Canadians. They look to this Parliament as federalists for their rights. They look to the charter. They look to the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) or to the Prime Minister or to the Quebec caucus to protect their rights.

I do not speak in anger. I speak gently and softly. However, I was appalled when I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party refer to new Canadians the other day as immigrants and again over a radio or television show on Sunday. It is almost as though there has to be a pawn in the chess game between the federal government and the separatists. Somehow that pawn in the chess game is one million English-speaking Quebecers. I hope that is not the case.

I will probably support this resolution reluctantly, not nearly as freely as I would have if Section 58 had not found its way into the resolution two weeks ago. I accept the explanation of the President of the Treasury Board made in the House a week ago Monday. I accept the Prime Minister's reminders periodically that perfection can be the enemy of the good. I just hope that, in their anxiety to appease the PQ government, the party opposite does not break faith with one million English-speaking Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words tonight about the very historic resolution before the House. On the afternoon of November 3 when that very historic accord was anounced, two feelings hit me all of a sudden. One was that I thought the Canadian people, on one hand, probably heaved a sigh of relief that the accord had been reached, but, on the other hand, there was not any celebration. In addition to the free-standing sexual equality clause not being there, the aboriginal people of this country had been left out and the province of Quebec was not a signatory to the accord.

I had another feeling as well, that the Canadian people wanted an end to conflict within our country. They had the feeling that all of a sudden there had been a settlement with nine of the provinces. However, to really end the conflict in the country, something more had to be done. We had to settle with the aboriginal people of this land and the people of Quebec.

When I look at a Constitution, I feel that it should be a reflection of the reality in a country. In other words, it should be a mirror of the country. When we look at Canada, we see a country that is very complex and extremely diverse. It is not a federation like the others.

There are some federal states where most of the states are quite monolithic and it is relatively simple to devise a system. There is good regional balance. In our country we have competing realities. What is real in one area may not be in another. We have many communities which are very different. There is a lot of regionalism in this country, as well as the factor of duality. Somehow in a Canadian Constitution all of these differences which make us so unique, and I maintain make us so rich, have to be recognized and reflected.

I will deal first with regionalism. The provinces all differ one from the other. Saskatchewan differs from Alberta as Newfoundland differs from Prince Edward Island. We also have differences within the provinces. We have different regions. I think of the Peace River country in Alberta which extends into British Columbia, Cape Breton which is different from mainland Nova Scotia, and the Italian community in the city of Toronto and the Chinese community in the city of Vancouver, which are also unique. I think of all these differences in terms of regionalism and ethnic origin in this country which makes Canada so rich. All of these say very clearly, as the leader of our party said this afternoon, that the nine English-speaking provinces are not monolithic. They are different.

In the accord reached on November 5 those differences are reflected in terms of flexibility within the Accord. The differences are reflected in terms of the amending formula which treats every province as constitutionally equal. It has in there as a safety-valve an opting-out provision in case provinces should decide to give some of their powers to the central government.

We have reflected in the accord the enshrinement of a multiculturalism reality which is important to many Canadians. We have enshrined in the resolution rights for many Canadians, men, women, the handicapped, the aged, and no discrimination on the basis of colour, ethnic origin and so on. We have greater powers being transferred to the provinces in terms of resources, which is important to a province like mine and to many other provinces.

We have equalization being enshrined in the resolution before us. That is important to many provinces, particularly to Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and Manitoba. These are many things that are positive. It is a very good beginning, a very big step forward in the search to find ourselves in this country.

In a way, the nine English-speaking provinces have found themselves. We have come to terms with ourselves. It took a long time to do that, but we have an accord now that goes a long way in that direction.

As I said before, this country is more than just communities and provinces, more than just the sum of all those parts put together. We are more than just regionalism or east and west and central Canada. We have the unique factor of duality in Canada. In fact, we have a double duality. We have the duality of the provinces and of the aboriginal people of this country who are at the base of our Confederation, the original people of this country who cannot be forgotten. We need a special accord, entente or arrangement, whichever word you want to use, with the aboriginal people of this country. We are off to a pretty fair start with Section 24. It goes the right way, but it is only a start. Our party realizes this. This is why we are moving a motion to involve the aboriginal people in the amending formula in terms of their consenting to constitutional change affecting them. We realize that to give them the same rights in terms of their needs as other Canadians have we must reach a settlement or negotiation that is slightly different with them than we have with the provinces per se.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we also have another very important duality in this country of ours, Canada, the French Canadians of Quebec, a very distinct Quebec society that is very different from that of other provinces. For instance, two languages are spoken in Quebec, French and English. The history of Quebec is also very different as are the facts of life. There is a different civil code, a different religion in the province of Quebec. Right across the country, administrative and constitutional arrangements differ from those found in Quebec. The proposal made by the leader of my party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr.

Broadbent) is not only an extension of that dual reality in Canada but, as I see it, an extension that is necessary in our country. I want to congratulate our leader as well as the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Clark), who tried through other means to find a solution for the people of Quebec.

Duality is necessary. Some things in the resolution are most important to Quebec. I have already mentioned many of those that are important to all the other provinces of Canada, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already agreed in the resolution, in Section 40, I believe, to compensation with regard to education and cultural matters. I want to congratulate the Prime Minister on accepting to do so for the province of Québec. It is very important for the people of Quebec, but we have another idea and another proposal to put forward. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, duality is necessary. Let us keep in mind that there are only six million Quebecers in Canada, six million Quebecers in North America. It is of the utmost importance for the future of our country that the Constitution contain a provision ensuring the security of francophones.

• (2050)

[English]

I think, Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian who comes from an English-speaking province, that we should look very seriously at the specifics of the motion moved by the Leader of the NDP. First of all, it deals with the issue of national unity. It says that "We as Canadians in the west or in Ontario or in Atlantic Canada very much want Quebec as part of our country".

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: It is imperative that Canada include Quebec.

[English]

I think we have to do whatever we can to make the people of Quebec feel a part of this country and of this Constitution. People also want an end to conflict in this country. They realize that the conflict will continue until we reach a settlement with Quebec and with the aboriginal people of our land. We also realize that the Premier of Quebec said last April that he was willing to trade his veto, if indeed there was a veto, for an opting-out formula that would not penalize Quebec on existing powers only; not on additional powers but on existing powers only.

I want to take a look at whether or not we should accept the kind of deal that was offered by the Premier of Quebec. First of all, I want to argue that we very seldom use it. If I remember correctly, over the last 114 years of our history there have been only about two occasions when the provinces agreed to give some of their powers to Ottawa. By the way, the opting-out provision applies only if a constitutional amendment derogates or takes away from existing powers. That is all it is. We have had only two examples of that in the history of our country. One was for unemployment insurance; one was for pension legislation.

In the case of pensions, Quebec wanted to opt out. The government of Lester Pearson said that it will set up an administrative arrangement, "You can have the Quebec pension plan and we will have the Canada Pension Plan". As a result, we have a national pension plan, and Quebec did not have veto power to stop the pension plan for all. My point is that it will happen very seldom, Mr. Speaker. It will not happen every ten or fifteen years but very seldom indeed.

The second point that I should like to make is that for it to happen at all, seven provinces have to agree to transfer some of their power or jurisdiction to Ottawa. If that happens—and Ottawa, of course, as to agree as well—then it must be for a pretty good cause, or a pretty just cause, and for a pretty important cause in terms of this country.

The other point I want to make is that not all opting out that would occur will involve compensation. There may be some opting out that will just involve some inexpensive arrangements in terms of transfer of jurisdiction from one area to the other. There may be some opting out where indeed the provinces by opting out would continue to keep a lot more money than by transferring their power to Ottawa. For example, if a province wanted to transfer its resources to Ottawa, it would lose a lot of revenue. By keeping the resources, it would keep the revenue but it would receive no compensation. It would not lose anything. There would be nothing to compensate it for. I make the point that it would happen very seldom indeed, Mr. Speaker.

The second area I want to look at is the cost of the compensation amendment of the Leader of the NDP. If you look at it, no cost to the taxpayer of this country is involved. If indeed Quebec opted out of some amendment that took away from its existing powers, it would not cost the other taxpayers of this country. Other provinces would not have to pay anything to the Province of Quebec. There would not be any special tax whatsoever. On one hand, it would not cost us a penny. On the other hand, the citizens of the province of Quebec would not be double taxed because now under the amending formula Quebec could opt out. However, it could involve a lot of money. Quebecers would still pay into the national treasury for national programs and pay an extra tax into their own treasury in their own province for their own programs. I maintain if that ever happened, Mr. Speaker, any federal government would probably make an administrative arrangement anyway. I maintain that from the point of view of cost it is a very sensible idea indeed.

I want to look at the question of veto that I previously mentioned. The Premier of Quebec has offered to trade away his veto. I think for the other provinces in this country this is probably a very good idea. I shall remind the House that Quebec government have traditionally wanted a veto.

The Prime Minister until three weeks ago wanted Ontario and Quebec to have the right of veto. I have had mixed feelings about that. I thought that because Quebec is different it needed an assurance that its existing powers would not be eroded. It needed an assurance that the French language would be protected. On the other hand, I am not sure it needed a veto to stop changes in freight rates, transportation systems, municipal affairs and things that really had nothing to do with what it needed as a collectivity to survive.

It is a point that was made on CTV's "Question Period" by the Premier of Quebec yesterday when he said that Quebec has been rightly criticized over the years for wanting to veto or block any constitutional change. If it did have a veto, it could block national programs, for example, that are needed by this country. There could also be a roadblock in terms of blocking something that was not needed for Quebec but that was vital for other provinces in our confederation. In effect, it could hold up other provincces in terms of stopping the evolution of constitutional change in this country. For the other provinces to find this kind of a compromise is a good thing, and it is good that we can still have constitutional change. But if that change were to hurt the people of Quebec and derogate from the powers it now has, the status quo it now has, not something extra in the future, then the people of Quebec, through the National Assembly, could opt out without being penalized.

That is all we are asking for, Mr. Speaker. We are asking for the protection of the powers and the competence of the Province of Quebec that exists right now in the Constitution of Canada. We are not asking for anything more.

● (2100)

I should like to say one word about the Conservative amendment, Mr. Speaker. My leader has offered some of our concerns about it, and what it may mean to national programs in this country. I want to add that when the accord was signed by the nine premiers of the other provinces, all nine said that they wanted to agree to the amending formula that we have and, that they wanted the opting that we have but that they did not really require the compensation clause to remain. On the other hand, Quebec said that it required the compensation clause.

I understand the premiers have said to the Prime Minister, "You have a tremendous amount of flexibility and leeway to try and settle with the province of Quebec." All this party is saying is that if by offering that clause, that will settle with the province of Quebec, then it is worthwhile for the unity of the country and it is worthwhile if it will end the conflict in the country that is sickening people and making them disgusted with all the fighting and turmoil that is present today.

I want to urge the Prime Minister of Canada and the ministers in charge to take a serious look at the amendment we propose. If they cannot agree to it this time, then, as I suggested this afternoon, perhaps it could be inserted in the resolution, in Section 38(1) of the amending formula which concerns the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada. If we could put this in the resolution we could deal with it here and then the Senate could deal with it. The national institutions would have dealt with it saying that they want a compensation amendment, then later in the process the provinces would have to respond. If they should respond, then I think we will have gone a long way toward meeting the concerns of the province of Quebec.

I just want to reflect on one or two other things about the whole process that all of us have gone through. In many ways, the process was typically Canadian. We have stumbled to a conclusion, or a quasi-conclusion. The process will not be complete, of course, until we deal with the Quebec issue and the issue of the aboriginal people, but we have come a long way.

If we learned anything from the process, it is that we should have involved more people from the beginning. We should have involved not just members of the government and the opposition parties in the House and in committee but we should also have involved members of the legislatures of the provinces. I remember speaking on this subject in October and suggesting to the government that we should have involved members of the government and members of the opposition of the ten provinces, that we should have involved the aboriginal peoples of this country, that we should have involved the Yukon and Northwest Territories and, finally, that we should not leave the Constitution primarily to 11 men to settle behind closed doors but we should have involved the women and women's organizations of Canada.

Had we done this, we would have had a lot less agony, less divisiveness, less pain and conflict over the matter. I do not believe that a Constitution hammered out by 11 delegations getting together, making deal after deal, getting into all kinds of options where certain rights are traded for other rights, certain powers traded for other powers, is the correct process, but we were all part of that process, Mr. Speaker.

When we get to stage two of Constitution building in this country, I hope that we will involve more people, that will consult more people, that we will get the aboriginal people involved in a meaningful way to discuss what their rights should be, that we will make sure we know what the people of Quebec want to do and what kind of measures they want in the Constitution of Canada and that finally, once and for all, we will make Canada a truly federal country in terms of our national institutions.

A Charter of Rights and Freedoms is enshrined in the Constitution but the final arbitrator will be the legislatures and Parliament on the one hand or the Supreme Court of Canada on the other hand. But the Supreme Court is appointed by the Prime Minister of this country and judges are appointed by the federal government without any input whatsoever from the provinces. Yet, the Supreme court is the referee in federal-provincial conflicts.

In federations such as the United States, Switzerland and others, in cases where national institutions affect the jurisdiction of the provinces and the federal government, both the provinces and the federal government must have a say. Until we have that reflection of the regions in the centre, we are going to have strains in this confederation, we are going to have things that pull us apart instead of bringing us together. We are going to have greater and greater institutionalizing of something which I do not like. which is a federal-provincial conference and all the power that it has gathered to itself. The premiers' conferences and the cabinet ministers' conferences are accruing greater and greater power because of a vacuum in our system. There are no places in our country where the regions can be reflected equally, where the voice of the region can be reflected and heard and felt in terms of power.

Because of the lack of this possibility, the provincial Premiers and cabinet ministers become the spokespersons for regionalism in Canada. I do not blame them any more than I blame members of the House. I blame the lack of a truly federal system that reflects, on the one hand, "rep by pop" but not on the hand, "rep by region or rep by province". I think we need both if this country is to stay together.

My final comments are about this institution itself, Mr. Speaker. I think we need a really serious reform in Parliament. I think we have to make the member of Parliament a legislator with some real power and real clout over what is happening in the country. All too often parliamentarians are nothing more than a rubber stamp for the executive or cabinet in Canada. I think that is dead wrong. I think we should be strengthening the power of committees and giving Members of Parliament a lot more power and a say.

I will just use one example of this, Mr. Speaker. In the United States the President can only nominate Supreme Court justices but the Senate, which reflects the states, has to approve those nominations in the judiciary committee.

An hon. Member: Do you want our Senate to pick them?

Mr. Nystrom: We cannot have our Senate pick them because our Senate is appointed solely by the federal government. It does not reflect the regions, federalism or the political reality that is out there in the country. These things have to change, Mr. Speaker.

Another thing is that the Prime Minister appoints all ambassadors. Perhaps we should look forward to a time when the Prime Minister would nominate ambassadors, and the External Affairs Committee of the House of Commons, representing the people of the country, could either accept or reject the nominations.

Many of our central institutions, such as the Prime Minister's office and the Privy Council office, have too much power. That is an immense distortion of the democratic system and it is repugnant to the idea of democracy. I am not reflecting on any individual here. We as Canadians have allowed this practice to develop over the years. I think the time has come to democratize this place. The time has come to give members of Parliament real power as legislators, not just rubber stamps for an executive. The time has come for us to make sure we federalize our institutions and, if we are to keep the Senate, to make sure it is federalized. Otherwise, let us abolish it. We have to federalize the Supreme Court of this country and many of the other federal institutions, and if we do that, I am sure that the country will remain strong and happy forever.

The Constitution

• (2110)

For a country to survive, its constitution must reflect the reality of the country. Our reality as a country is one of diversity, one of regionalism, one of provinces and one of duality with our aboriginal peoples and the people of the French language or the people of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in this historical debate which marks a turning point in the development of Canada's political structure, I should like, of course, to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on his perseverance and determination in dealing with the constitutional issue, and especially on his understanding and willingness to compromise as demonstrated during these past weeks. Earlier, I heard the previous speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) making all kinds of suggestions at this late stage in the debate. If he had his way, the debate would have to start all over again. According to him, veto rights should be given to every single Canadian.

I believe, with the Prime Minister, that we must reach a decision, and the decision must be made this week. I am glad to see the parties in this House have at least agreed to finally end this first stage in the constitutional debate. I should also like to thank my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), for the persistence and determination he has shown in dealing with this matter, which represents a major step in the process of constitutional reform. All the points raised by the previous speaker can probably be dealt with at a subsequent stage.

Mr. Speaker, personally, I am very proud to be present once more in this House at another exciting moment in Canadian history and to be associated with the present government when this House votes on the motion to Canadianize the British North America Act after 114 years, to provide for an amending formula we have been seeking throughout that period, and to incorporate a charter of rights and freedoms to protect all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, in the publicity campaign that has been going on for months in Quebec, we have been told that our constitutional resolution was aimed at divesting Quebecers of their rights. Scare tactics were used in a series of melodramatic commercials. Well, I must say that if the Charter of Rights and the amendments being considered in this resolution do anything, they take away rights from all governments and redistribute those rights among all Canadians so that they will be better protected. In fact, both levels of government have relinquished some rights for the benefit of the individual, Mr. Speaker.

This is not the first time since I came to this House that I have been here at an historical moment such as this. I was here, Mr. Speaker, during the flag debate. I was also outside this building when the Maple Leaf was finally raised for the first time on the Peace Tower. I was in this House when members agreed unanimously that the Canadian flag had its place on your right, Mr. Speaker. I was also in this House when we adopted the music and then the lyrics of O Canada as our national anthem, and we spontaneously sang O Canada in this House, with fervour and emotion. Therefore, it is with even greater pride that today I am taking part in this historical debate on the constitutional resolution, which, I realize, is not perfect. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, in fact, all hon. members may find there are shortcomings and that some improvements and changes are desirable, but the fact remains that this resolution is the closest we can get to a Canadian consensus, and the closest to what our fellow citizens want to see at this time in their constitution, over which they will have full jurisdiction once the British Parliament has agreed to this last constitutional representation by the Parliament of Canada.

Of course, everyone here regrets that the Government of Quebec did not choose to continue its involvement in the patriation process, a process aimed at strengthening Canada's political structure and nothing else, and we had hoped, on all sides of the House I am sure, to receive before the end of the debate any suggestions or alternatives or compromises that would be acceptable to all concerned. In fact, the resolution does include certain provisions that would be favourable to a compromise solution. We left room for compromise but Quebec has refused to change its position.

Mr. Speaker, for the moment I do not intend to analyse the motives of the Quebec government, the Levesque government, to isolate Quebec, even though I know what they are. And I emphasize that it is the Levesque government and not the Quebec people which has isolated the province since the last first minister's conference while we have seen what I consider exceptional efforts on the part of the nine other premiers as well as the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada to seek—and find—grounds of agreement and compromise solutions.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the national consensus which is becoming increasingly evident among the public, I believe, as I said earlier, that we cannot wait forever and that it would be irresponsible for us to wish to start the entire negotiation process all over again, especially in view of some of the provisions contained in the resolution, including that under which the Quebec government can make a voluntary commitment concerning the linguistic clause, just as Ontario might eventually do with respect to Section 133 of the British North America Act by institutionalizing bilingualism in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as well as in the courts of that province, as most francophones in Canada, and not only those outside Quebec, would like.

Mr. Speaker, the feelings of an individual are often identified with his character or with conditions which have influenced his life. It is in this context that I would like to express what I feel today. During the Second World War, forty years ago, Mr. Speaker, I joined the Canadian air force at a time when it was not easy for a unilingual francophone to get along in a unilingual anglophone air force—and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) can confirm this—and at a time when everyone will agree that our two major ethnic groups did not understand each other as well as they do today.

• (2120)

[English]

I want to say a few words in English at this time and to repeat that it was not easy, neither at a few thousand feet in the air nor on the ground, for a unilingual, French-speaking member of the Royal Canadian Air Force to manage under the system. There were many others like me who came and joined the forces and got to like this country. I do not want to rehash the various situations in which we found ourselves in those days.

However, just as a hint to those who were not there, to those who sometimes question some of our representations, let me give them an example. I was one of a group of about 25 francophones from Quebec who were stationed in Souris, Manitoba, and who had to go on strike to win the right to speak French in our airmen's canteen. Do hon. members know the solution that was found to that problem? We were moved to Toronto to learn English. However, all that did not impress me. I rose to the challenge. I obtained my pilot's wings with the rank of pilot officer out of a graduation course of approximately 25 men of the RAF, 25 men of the RNZAF from New Zealand, 25 men of the Royal Canadian Air Force, men from outside Quebec, and one unilingual francophone. I succeeded not only in gaining my wings in the air force, but I also got to like my country. I became more proud to be a Canadian, which I am trying to communicate, and which I have been trying to communicate to my children and my friends ever since.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during these difficult war years when the dialogue was not what it is today, I discovered that my heart was bigger than myself, my family, my city or my province, and that it was as big as this vast country of Canada with all its differences and various elements. Throughout the years, Mr. Speaker, I have found that my feelings for this country have become even stronger, and this is probably why I finally chose to spend 20 years of my life in politics, in this House, where I have continued, with the confidence of my constituents, to defend the principles to which I had committed myself, the main one being my country.

Mr. Speaker, since I was elected to this House, I have always promoted that kind of Canadian nationalism, while remaining committed to my province and my area, of course. I have always been outgoing, and my colleagues will vouch for it, unlike some of my fellow Quebecers who feel isolated, suspicious and envious, and who advocate the break-up of this Canada of ours. Once, Mr. Speaker, as can be confirmed by my colleagues here, including the hon. member from Nova Scotia, I proposed that compulsory training be provided for young Canadians so that they get to know each other better, learn both official languages, acquire some sense of discipline and visit their country. I felt this would help them get together, fraternize and understand one another. For a number of years I have also been very active in French-speaking parliamentary associations, both in Canada and abroad, and one of the differences between myself and my colleagues from the Quebec National Assembly is the thrust of my action in respect of language and culture.

I recognize the evident responsibility the Quebec government and the National Assembly have for the French language in Quebec, but I have always maintained that my own duty, as a Member of Parliament, was not to isolate Quebec but rather to foster, its development through the promotion of the French language and culture throughout Canada, and even North America. I consider myself as one of the many French Canadians from Quebec who share a special concern for French-speaking Canadians in the nine other provinces, and my goal, my ultimate desire is that one day, this country may be still better identified with its cultural duality. I understand that some French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec may be impatient. So were we at one time. I ask them to trust us, to let us go through this first stage, and we will certainly continue to support them.

Mr. Speaker, those who would now turn Quebec into a cultural ghetto are blind and self-centered. They are going against the best interests of Quebecers themselves, they ignore the progress made in the last few years, thanks—as the hon. member for Verdun said earlier—to Diefenbaker, Pearson, the Prime Minister, and thanks to Réal Caouette when he was elected to this House in 1962, sitting in the corner of the New Democratic Party. He sat there every day and fought for the rights of all Canadians, with a heart that was open to everyone. True, there have been many disappointments. We would have expected more from the Official Languages Act. Nonetheless, the French cultural presence in Canada is asserting itself. It is now going beyond the use of language, it is reaching the hearts, and the children of many of our fellow citizens are more interested in it.

Two years ago in September, while I was in British Columbia, I learned that the first French classes for francophone students were being set up grouping ten students at the same level. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what is the problem of the Minister of Education in British Columbia? He gets too many applications from anglophone parents who want their children to learn French. This means that mental attitudes are changing. We are told that the same thing is happening in cities such as Toronto or elsewhere, which is amazing since French schools are not available to anglophones unless they are willing to pay. But at present, in Quebec, Bill 101 prevents an anglophone educated in English to send his children to a French school if he wants to. What inconsistency, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker, it is with an open mind and wishing that the people of Quebec participate fully in the constitutional reform that I speak on behalf of Quebecers as do all the other members in the Quebec National Assembly, especially since many members of this House do not know Quebec as I do. As a member for Beauharnois-Salaberry, I support on behalf of my constituents the resolution now before the House with all its implications, deficient as it may be, because I consider that it is in the interests of Quebecers and all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, everybody wants our Constitution to be patriated. The amending formula is practically the one passed by the group of eight that included Quebec, with a slight amendment allowing that province to opt out with financial compensation for cultural and educational programs. As for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, its broader aims are hardly questionable, and the two main objections of the Quebec government concern education and manpower mobility. As for me, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the uncompromising attitude of the Lévesque government on those two points. A very large number of my constituents agree with me, and I am now speaking on their behalf. I believe that every Canadian is entitled to receive his education in his mother tongue, whether it be English or French.

I am also in favour of the right for all Canadians to seek employment in any of our provinces. Of course, adjustments should be made, as was the case for Newfoundland, to protect a province which is faced with excessive unemployment. Nobody is against that. On both counts, the Lévesque government was invited to suggest amendments to ease its fears and protect its jurisdiction. All we got in return were insults, propaganda, provocation and legal action before the Supreme Court. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to waste any more time!

Personally, I feel that the linguistic clause of the resolution which is commonly referred to as the Canada Clause is the minimum acceptable. I cannot help but rejoice when I realize that finally the Canadian Constitution, and not legislation of this Parliament or provincial legislature which could be changed to please such and such a premier, will recognize and enshrine as a principle the right of all francophones living in the nine other provinces to attend French schools, and the right of all anglophones living in Quebec to attend English schools. I think this is the seed from which Canada will develop within the next two generations—I do not mean tomorrow, Mr. Speaker—into the bilingual country our forefathers had dreamed about, and to which the Charter of Rights and Fredoms will add our clear determination to foster a better understanding, dialogue and brotherhood. Because of the urgency of the matter, the decision cannot wait. We must stop procrastinating. The time for aggravation and dissension in this country is over. Now is the time for action. We have an objective to reach, we will reach it this week, and I intend to be here to support the resolution before us.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on this matter last February we were in the heat of debate. It was still apparent that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was going to try to force the Constitution unilaterally upon the country with only the support of two provinces, certainly not with the support of the people of Canada.

● (2130)

So it was as a result of debate and as a result of the pressures brought on Parliament by this party that eventually the whole matter was sent to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court looked at this constitutional proposal over the summer. It did not come out with a quick decision, as was predicted. It looked at the proposal over the summer and finally said: "You really have to have a massive consensus of the provinces in order to make what you are doing here constitutional." This resulted in a federal-provincial conference, finishing in early November, and now we have the accord before us.

I say to you that the broad consensus of the nine provinces now is an important consensus. For any Member of Parliament, having debated and opposed what was happening on the basis that it was not constitutional and not proper, to now oppose it is to oppose the will of the people of Canada. I say that with respect to my good colleagues here on this side of the House who on Wednesday might well decide to stand up and oppose this constitutional package that it is no longer a unilateral package and not what was proposed in October of 1980.

What was proposed in October of 1980 and what is now before this House are two entirely different proposals. What was proposed in 1980 was something the Prime Minister, in spite of everybody, decided to force down the throats of Canadians. What is before us today is the result of months of hearings before a constitutional committee, a committee which, as members will remember, the Prime Minister did not want televised and did not want to have the powers to have witnesses brought before it. It was a constitutional committee that heard the concerns of native Canadians, the handicapped and those people who were worried about discrimination on the grounds of sex.

The package before us today is an entirely different package because it has a consensus of nine of the ten provinces. I say it is only because of the efforts of this party, only because of the indefatigable efforts of the hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) that this has been possible. This nation owes a great deal to the efforts of the Leader of the Official Opposition who deliberately, quietly and, with the assistance of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), was able to impress upon the premiers of this country and the people of Canada, with the help of the Supreme Court and the leaders of the provinces, that they had to get together and form a consensus.

There is one problem left, and that is that the province of Quebec, long the fortress of the francophone majority of Canada, the only province where French is the language of the majority, is unhappy and has refused through its premier to go along with this consensus. That is going to cause us a great deal of difficulty.

Part of the difficulty it is going to cause is the result of the attitude of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). The other day Mr. Lévesque suggested his province had a veto. Maybe it does and maybe it does not, but it does not do any good for Canada for the Minister of Justice, who is supposed to be negotiating on behalf of Canada, to laugh at the Premier of Quebec.

A great deal of the problems we have with the Province of Quebec in bringing this country together are a result of the internal workings of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, represented by Liberal members in this House—74 of them—in opposition to the majority party in the National Assembly in Quebec City. It is about time that Liberal members in the House of Commons tried to bring about a consensus in the province of Quebec in order to bring Quebec into this accord. It is about time they did something to bring the country together, rather than bringing their fights, their political concerns and their squabbles in the province of Quebec on to the national scene and, in the process, destroying our confederation.

We have proposed in the amendment to Section 40 of this measure the suggestion that there should be an opportunity for complete opting out by any province with respect to a matter that involves finance, and that a province which so opted out would be compensated when opting out on a particular power to the same extent as the average cost of the program across the country.

Miss Jewett: Why not just Quebec?

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend from Vancouver asks, "Why not just Quebec?" The answer is that this is one country and what applies to one province must apply to all provinces.

Miss Jewett: Nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: What applies to one province must apply to all provinces, and she says "nonsense". She says that because she would like to wind up having the two-nation theory in this country, but that is not the policy of this party. This is one nation and we do not have to be divided. Clearly what is applicable to the province of Quebec should be applicable to all provinces, otherwise it will not sell.

An hon. Member: What about Section 133?

Mr. Blenkarn: There is no particular problem with respect to opting out.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: We have had opting out in this country for a long time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if the hon. member would answer a question.

Mr. Blenkarn: Certainly.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said something very interesting. He said that what applies in Quebec should apply in the rest of the country. Quebec is bound by Section 133 of the British North America Act which obligates it to provide services in French and in English in its legislature and courts. I wonder whether the hon. member for Mississauga South thinks Ontario should be bound by Section 133 and, if so, will he publicly call for his premier to bind Ontario so Quebec and Ontario are treated the same?

Mr. Blenkarn: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) raises a question in relation to a problem that has been in existence in this country for some time. Let me suggest to the hon. member that he raises it to divide the country, because that is the proposal of the NDP. It is a divisive party if ever there was a divisive party. Its members want to break up this country. They want to put French on one side and English on the other side and cause a war.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: That is their attitude. I recognize the legal requirement for both French and English, and that after the resolution is passed, this provision will apply only to New Brunswick, Quebec and Manitoba. Perhaps it should apply to every province in the country.

Miss Jewett: You just said they should all be treated alike.

Mr. Blenkarn: They would propose amendments to make the situation even worse.

Miss Jewett: You just said they should all be alike.

Mr. Blenkarn: The laughing lady would say "they are all alike, they are all alike". Yes, they are all alike, but they would try to make this country more divided.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: Certainly she is that way; she wants to make problems.

Let us go further. They proposed an amendment that would provide that only Quebec should opt out. They proposed an amendment of that sort because they said that if we were really concerned about Quebec, we should provide such a clause only for the province of Quebec.

● (2140)

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is important that the clause with respect to opting out be the same for all provinces. The present clause is the same for all provinces, and we suggest that it be widened. We suggest that if it were widened, there would be a very good possibility that the government of Quebec, or eventually the people of Quebec, would find no difficulty in joining the accord. As long as Section 40 is left the way it is, the government of Quebec will always have an excuse to stay out of the accord. If we do not change Section 40, we continue to exacerbate the problem.

This afternoon the minister of state said that he would be prepared to accept an opting-out clause that would allow all provinces equally to opt out of amendments and be compensated. If the NDP were really interested in making this constitutional package work, why would they not go along with that? If they were, they would support the member for Provencher and the Leader of the Official Opposition.

In my opinion, there is only one conceivable problem in this package and that is that there is no quid pro quo, if you like, for Quebec's loss of a veto. If there were clear compensation for opting out, there would be no way for any Quebec government to say it is not protected. In fact, no province which has agreed to the accord could object, because the effect of the amendment by the hon. member for Provencher is to extend provincial rights rather than to restrict them. Therefore, it is clear that no province which signed the accord would object to the broadening of Section 40. If the amendment by the member for Provencher were accepted, it would be virtually impossible for Quebec not to join in the accord, and the only objection would come from the federal government, a federal government which wants to carry on the war in the province of Quebec to the detriment of all Canada.

I say that the amendment by the hon. member for Provencher must be agreed to because all the provinces which signed the accord will accept it, and if those provinces accept it, Quebec will have no logical, or even illogical, reason to say to the people of Quebec that they have been hurt by the constitutional amendment. It will have no logical objection to the Constitution.

The only ones who might be hurt are those who insist that federal power should be expanded. Is that the view of the government? The minister of state has said that he has no objection to compensation on an opting-out basis. Surely we can pass that amendment and make it virtually impossible for the Premier of Quebec to give any valid reason not to go along with the accord.

I would like to deal now with the matters before us concerning the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In my office in the House of Commons and in my constituency office I have a framed copy of John Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights. In a way, that Bill of Rights allows a government to change or alter rights if it specifically passes a statute to exempt a particular item from the Bill of Rights. That Bill of Rights is looked upon proudly by my constituents and others who come to my office as an important charter of their rights, even though in that Bill of Rights Parliament reserved the right to restrict rights by specific amendment in a particular section of the statute. The charter before us now allows the same restriction on rights. It provides for a government to override some basic rights on a five-year basis. That means that the political process—not the judges—will determine where rights really stand. It is perhaps more restrictive than the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights in terms of the ability of Parliament or legislatures to alter, control or vary rights.

It has been suggested that the "notwithstanding Section 33" is not a good one. I suggest that while I am not as happy as I might be with "notwithstanding" sections, there is essentially no difference between that "notwithstanding" section and clauses in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. Therefore, when people say that they will not support this charter of rights because of Section 33, they should read the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights.

I am proud of the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. It has flowing language which appeals to people. Perhaps one of the difficulties with the proposal which is before us is that the language could be better, perhaps more poetic.

However, this Charter of Rights and Freedoms is what John Diefenbaker would have liked to have seen entrenched in our Constitution. He tried to get approval for something like this, but found he could not. After more than a year, we may well be able to entrench basic rights in our Constitution, rights which are much like the rights in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights.

I am concerned that there is not enough protection in the charter now before us for the rights of the family. It concerns me that on Friday the House defeated an amendment which would have made it clear that only Parliament could legislate with respect to the question of abortion. I believe we made a mistake in that respect.

I do not think that the charter as it is prevents Parliament from legislating on the matter of abortion, but there is a matter which should have been made clear. I would have been happier had the right to life of the unborn been protected in the charter. Perhaps it will be the subject of an amendment some time in the future.

I am troubled that the right to protection of property is not in the charter. I would like to have seen the protection of the right to property so it cannot be taken away without due process of law.

● (2150)

We still have our Bill of Rights in the province from which I come. That Bill of Rights is in place, and the right to own property is protected by the Bill of Rights of that province. If we had worked a little longer, perhaps we might have been able to entrench the right to own property in this Constitution. I very much appreciate the position of the Prime Minister when he says that we have worked long on this matter and that we should now approve the Constitution and patriate it from England with an amending formula, but with that amending formula and in the upcoming discussions perhaps we can entrench the right to hold property and not have it taken away without due process of law. I think that is possible.

I think it is possible to make other changes that hon. members from time to time have requested. There have been valid suggestions, but it is about time somewhere in the course of things that we moved with what we have done so far, finished what we have worked on and left other things which must be worked on to the next round of discussions, to the next round of negotiations and to the next round of debate, because if we debate and debate and debate, we will never accomplish anything.

When we pass statutes in this place, many of us have ideas which would improve them, but we pass them nevertheless, not because we think they are perfect but because they are steps in the direction in which we want to go. In the course of human work nothing is absolutely perfect, so while under Section 33 rights might be curtailed, while there are no property rights and while the rights of the unborn are not protected, this Charter of Rights and Freedoms is a pretty good effort. It may not be perfect. It is not perfect, but neither are we perfect. We should move ahead at this time so that we will have an opportunity to improve as we go. However, let us now move ahead because it is time to move ahead. We have had full discussion. We have had long committee hearings. We now have the agreement of nine of the ten provinces. That in itself is evidence of massive consensus. We have massive consensus on what we presently have, and while it might be that none of us are absolutely satisfied with what we have, we are all generally satisfied. it would be wrong for someone to vote against this matter because of dissatisfaction with one item or two items. Those who might think that to vote against this resolution is to vote against the Prime Minister—and if it were there just to do that, I would do it myself—are wrong. They are wrong because the package before us is no longer the emanation of the Prime Minister. He may have been the driving force behind putting this resolution before Parliament but, after all, the government always has the right to introduce legislation and bring it forward. However, what is before us today is entirely different from what the Prime Minister brought before us. On the question of amendment alone, hon. members on this side will remember a non-confidence motion we proposed, that the Constitution of Canada be patriated with the Vancouver amending formula. That is exactly what we have. We will now have patriation of the Constitution, the British North America Act, after 114 years with the Vancouver consensus as an amending formula.

Mr. McDermid: Think of all the time we would have saved if they had listened to us.

Mr. Blenkarn: My hon. friend says, "Think of all the time we would have saved if they had listened to us." They did listen to us.

Mr. McDermid: It took them a year.

Mr. Blenkarn: If we analyse the content of the package before us, we find that to a large extent the package was crafted by members of my party sitting in the constitutional committee, making suggestions in debate and, through their premiers, negotiating with the Prime Minister at federal provincial conferences. We have had a great input into what is here. Indeed, all members of the House had an input. This is not a package hammered through by an arrogant Prime Minister, although his insistence has been important to Canada because, without his insistence, we perhaps would not have come this far.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is important that we as a nation establish finally our total sovereignty. No matter how we look at it and no matter how we speak out, it has always been a problem for all of us when speaking to people from other countries and when being asked how we amend our Constitution. We have had to say that we pass a statute and send it off to Great Britain, and they rubber-stamp it. Maybe they do and maybe they do not, but what kind of sovereignty is it for a nation not to be able to amend its own Constitution on its own?

The resolution before us allows the amendment to the British North America Act to be renamed the Canada Act by us in Canada, with an amending formula calling for the consent and support of seven provinces and this House. That is an important step forward in the sovereignty of this nation. There are those who come from other lands who, although perhaps not born of British heritage, cannot say that they inherited rights, as I say I have. My rights go back to the time of the Magna Carta. There are people who come from lands where arrest in the middle of the night is not uncommon. There are people who come from lands where the right to stand up and speak one's mind is unknown. There are people who come from lands where exercising the right to get together in large groups is illegal and exercising the right to print what they want to print or to speak out and say what they want to say lands them in the gulag.

Such people ask, and have always asked, where it says we in Canada can do these things, and I have pointed to the Bill of Rights. But these rights were not entrenched. This charter entrenches those rights, and while some of us may say that we have these rights and do not need to have them in writing, at least we can say to our constituents, to ourselves and to our children that we have rights. We can say we have the right to move about this country freely. We can leave this country freely if we want to. We can say what we want. We can write what we want. We can think what we want. We can gather together where we want. Those rights must be expressed. They are expressed in this charter, and I will be proud when I can hang this charter on the wall in my constituency office and send it to my constituents, because it is about time we had these rights entrenched in law. They are imperfect, perhaps, but they are entrenched for all Canadians.

• (2200)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REVIEW OF MANDATORY SUPERVISION POLICY. (B) OPERATION OF SYSTEM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I raised a question with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) concerning the practice or the method known as mandatory supervision which forms part of our so-called penal reform these days.

The Solicitor General recognized the problems inherent in this area. At that time he said he had asked for a departmental study to be conducted because he was dissatisfied with the concepts. He realized that shortly after assuming his portfolio. He said he received a study in July, circulated it through the criminal justice constituency and would wait until the end of October. Then he hoped to be able to go to cabinet and do something about this in a few months.

With all respect, I say to my colleague the Solicitor General, that is not good enough. We have seen a great deal of obfuscation and delay from this minister not only in this case but with respect to rights on behalf of the RCMP, a commitment he gave in 1980.

Coming back to this question of mandatory supervision, it has created a great deal of interest, particularly since the minister and I discussed it in the House. Sociologists, criminologists, jurists and people well acquainted with the problems have contacted me and, I am sure, members opposite.

The cases which I cited, one on the west coast and one on the east coast, are only two of many. There was a particularly violent and tragic murder of a little girl in Kingston not long ago. I wish to quote from a current edition of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, one of Canada's great newspapers. It indicates under the headline banner "Two sentenced for crimes committed during supervision" as follows:

> The parade of persons committing offences while on mandatory supervision continues at the Halifax law courts.

This is a recent issue of the newspaper. It only underlines the difficulties that will be faced by an innocent public until such time as the Solicitor General and his colleagues come to grips with the necessity of doing something to change the existing practice. I recently received a letter from an eminent sociologist who indicated to me that his research on the assessment of dangerousness, and I quote from his letter:

> —over the past 12 years, suggests that the Solicitor General and his staff are quite wrong in assuming that dangerousness cannot be predicted. A detailed examination of the Odo case would, I am certain, provide ample evidence of his murderous propensities.

I am inclined to agree. Recently a distinguished B.C. jurist, Les Bewley, visited the east coast. He made a similar observation with respect to the Odo case and, speaking generally, poured scorn on the current methods used in the parole service.

I want to say as well that despite the answer given to my colleague the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) by the Solicitor General a few days ago, I do not believe there is co-ordination between the penal and parole institutions and the prison authorities and police forces.

I believe people are being released into society whose conduct and attitudes are well known to the authorities who are holding them in custody. They do not take the time to inform the police that this type of person is being released so that there will be a proper evaluation and assessment of the fact that they are being released at large.

I am going to take the few moments remaining to me to read into the record excerpts from a couple of official documents which I know the Solicitor General must have access to since they are from his department. I do not mention the name of the convict at this time. Suffice it to say that this is a real insight into the kind of misguided treatment and perverted sort of ideals that are being practised by certain officials in his department.

This particular convict, and I am reading from the cumulative summary, is a hardened criminal. He has been in prison a great deal of his life. His version in the cumulative summary is as follows: "The inmate does not deny his involvement in criminal activities since his release. He prides himself in being a professional criminal who knows the correction systems well." It also says that he is demanding, directive and manipulative and has been continually dishonest.

You may wonder, Mr. Speaker, why I am making this point with respect to this convict. It is simply that this man was given, under the criminal injuries compensation act, a Saskatchewan statute, an award. Yes, this man was given an award. The reason was that his conduct was so reprehensible and repugnant to his peers when he was in prison that they beat him for what he was doing there. This particular institution is in Saskatchewan. The criminal appeal board, and I am quoting from page 2, "Examined the background of this incident and concluded that the applicant had done nothing to disentitle himself from an award. In fact, his conduct was above reproach and indicates an unusual degree of moral and physical courage." The House would be surprised if I were to name this man. "We are satisfied that he underwent a great deal of emotional turmoil, as well as physical pain, and we think he should be compensated liberally."

● (2205)

This criminal, who is at present facing very serious charges, was given $3,500 to compensate him for the pain and suffering that he underwent because his peers were so upset with his conduct that they took it upon themselves to administer a little justice.

Surely, Mr. Speaker and colleagues in the House, we have to give some credence to the apprehension and the outcries that come from the public when they see their children in some cases killed or mutilated by people who are out on mandatory supervision. I know the Solicitor General is aware of the problem. I hope the minister will speed up his timetable so that he may do something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but remark, in responding to the question for the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), on the case arising in Saskatchewan which he just mentioned to the House. The hon. member regrets the fact that a person was offered an award under the law of the particular province. That person was an inmate who was, I suppose, judging from the hon. member's comment in the House tonight, beaten up by his fellow prisoners. The hon. member said that his fellow prisoners took it upon themselves to administer a little justice.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that even if a person is a criminal, it is justice for any person to take the law into his own hands without due process of law. A person's character, a person's past behaviour may be entirely reprehensible. Surely the hon. member opposite is not advocating that anyone should be able to go out in this country and exercise justice as they see fit. We have laws of the land which are designed to prevent that.

One of the things to which the hon. member referred was the whole concept of mandatory supervision. As the hon. member is aware, this is a process which began in 1970. The reason for it was simple. Before we had two alternatives: a prisoner could be released from jail after he had served his sentence, with time off for good behaviour, put right out in the cold, right out from prison, maybe not being fully acquainted with the ways of the world; or he could be put out on parole with his sentence continuing.

A system of mandatory supervision, a half-way measure between these two was brought into existence, an attempt under which a person could be reoriented more gradually to the real world in an attempt to reduce recidivism, in an attempt to cut back on the number of times that that person would be committing a crime.

I am not saying, nor is the government saying, that this program has been a spectacular success. As a matter of fact, it has stimulated opposition, opposition from inmates, from police groups, from civil libertarians. According to our best estimates, and because this matter is now under study, about 25 per cent of the offenders who have been given this type of mandatory supervision are convicted of a new offence while under supervision, and about six per cent are convicted of crimes of violence.

● (2210)

We are not happy with this particular process. That is why the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has undertaken the study, the results of which should be known soon, and he will be acting on it.

THE BUDGET—IMPACT OF CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING (B) REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS BY AMENDED (C) ANNOUNCEMENT OF STUDY RESULTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, on November 16, 1981, I directed a question to the Minister of State for finance (Mr. Bussières) concerning the impact of the budget on the construction of rental units. The Minister of Finance for Mr. MacEachen if you recall, was out to lunch. Specifically, I pointed out that my investigations had shown that since the introduction of the budget, construction had ended on thousands of rental units from St. John's, Newfoundland to Vancouver.

I therefore asked the minister whether the government had anticipated that these projects would be halted, with thousands thrown out of work and millions of dollars worth of construction lost, when it brought down the budget.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that in the next 24 hours after asking that question, it became apparent from my continued investigation, that the impact of the budget was even more staggering than was first apparent. Just five days after the introduction of the budget, my office was able to identify 13,000 rental units on which construction was halted or suspended. A conservative estimate indicated that this figure represented at least a billion dollars' worth of construction and over 10,000 jobs. The direct cause of this industry shut-down was one particular measure in the budget. The government disallowed the deductibility of soft costs of MURBs, making most of these projects instantly uneconomic. What is worse, this measure was, in effect, retroactive since it came into force on budget night. It thus affected all projects already under construction or very close to being started.

Since the lead time on these projects is usually more than a year, it thus seriously undermined the economic viability of projects that had been planned in good faith many months ago.

The minister's response to my question on November 16 was extremely unsatisfactory in light of the gravity of the situation that we face. He replied only that the government's fight against inflation would alleviate the problems of the housing sector since lower interest rates would stimulate demand for construction and the economy would thus benefit. I referred to this as the enema theory of fighting inflation—flushing out the economy.

Fortunately, the ridiculousness of this reply was apparent even to the Minister of Finance since, when I repeated my question to him the next day, giving him the new figures, he replied at once that he was willing to amend the budget and grandfather this particular measure.

Soft costs will now continue to be deductible on projects which have been started before December 31, 1981, as long as work on them proceeds without delay.

While we welcomed that announcement, I must point out to the minister that he has not diagnosed the problems. With his measures he is treating symptoms rather than developing a cure.

In no way has the minister addressed himself to the housing crisis facing Canadians. He has done nothing to resolve the long-term housing issue. For instance, the grandfather clause applies to projects started this year only. What about next year when construction on rental units will come to a halt? The minister has lowered the marginal tax rate, thus freeing more funds for high income Canadians, but he has done nothing to divert these funds into the creation of housing units. Under the MURB program, 20,000 to 30,000 units would have been built next year.

The government program of offering interest-free loans to builders is totally inadequate. The $7,500 loan limit is certainly not large enough to make investment by developers very attractive. In Vancouver it was suggested that this amount might pay for the construction of a bathroom. The limit of the program, 15,000 units, will not even solve the problems of Vancouver. Further, the program will not take effect for several months because consultation with the provinces is required. The government offers no help to renters who pay more than 30 per cent of their income on shelter.

What is the long-term problem that must be addressed, Mr. Speaker? Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation says that there is a shortfall in building nationwide, and that Canada needs 220,000 new housing units each year. Next year Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation estimates that starts will only amount to 135,000. That means a vacancy rate of zero by 1983 in most markets, according to CMHC. It means that rents will increase 20 per cent to 50 per cent in some markets and perhaps 100 per cent in Vancouver. It also means that a black market in rental units may develop. Families will have to start doubling up. We will witness a substantial regression in housing conditions following 35 years of gradual improvement. The problem is that the production of rental units is uneconomic. CMHC says that the average metropolitan rent across the country is $400 a month. The average investor carrying cost on a newly constructed unit with a 30 per cent down payment is $750 a month. This leaves a cash deficit of $350 a month before even allowing for operating costs. This is why incentives are necessary to attract funds into the construction of rental units.

● (2215)

I suggest that the minister needs to understand what his budget measures mean to people themselves. There is already a crisis situation in Vancouver. There is already a waiting list of 20,000 people, with no place to go as there is no housing. Many units have already passed the $300 per month ceiling for rent controls, and rents on uncontrolled units will double. I have to deal with these people who come to me, in true anxiety, wondering where they can find the money to pay these increases. The vacancy rate is 0.2 per cent, and it cannot go much lower.

Let me give some examples of how people are feeling about these outrageous increases. I know one person, who is now paying $850 per month, who faces an increase of 63 per cent which will increase the rent to $1,390. Senior citizens are now paying $235 a month. On top of a rental increase of $20 a month, they must pay $142 a month for finance charges because the building has been sold.

Therefore, the need is for a long-term solution to the housing crisis in Canada. I suggest that the minister adjust himself to that problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while the government did anticipate some negative initial response, it did not expect the severity of the response to the minister's proposals in the budget relating to Multiple Unit Residential Buildings and other commercial real estate projects currently under development at that time. However, as soon as the magnitude of the difficulties caused by these proposals and the urgency of the situation was brought to the minister's attention, he proposed to modify the effective date of the budget measures.

On November 17, the minister announced that he will propose in the implementing legislation that a deduction be provided for soft costs incurred after November 12, 1981, relating to any building, provided that the installation of footings or any other base support of the building is commenced before the end of this year and that the construction of the building proceeds without undue delay.

Further, in response to representations that the proposal to restrict the interest expense will cause considerable difficulty for some Multiple Unit Residential Buildings under construction, the minister announced that he will propose that the interest expense be fully deductible on any funds borrowed by the first purchaser of a Multiple Unit Residential Building from the builder or developer, as the case may be. These announcements were made by Press Release 81-111 dated November 17, 1981.

The government is confident that these modifications, as well as other budget measures which provide interest-free loans for rental starts, will provide a stimulus to the construction industry and will avoid the threatened unemployment referred to by the hon. member.

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION—FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, last week, I directed a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) respecting the Constitution, more specifically, I asked him how he could explain to French Canadians that the constitutional resolution is said to protect francophones, while in fact it is only protecting the rights of francophones in three provinces, Quebec, New Brunswick and Manitoba. The minister replied that that was easily explained since, to his own and to everyone's surprise, in his own words, he had managed to get the nine English-speaking provinces to agree to protect the rights to education in the minority language.

However, I find it strange that the Minister of Justice should admit his surprise since several premiers, including Mr. Davis of Ontario and Mr. Bennett of British Columbia, have already stated that the minority language education rights clause would bring nothing new to the francophones of their provinces. The premiers themselves have admitted it, and there is nothing new there. It is only a confirmation of the status quo, which does not bring anything new nor is it cause for great celebration. The situation was summarized like this: minority language education rights will be granted across Canada, where numbers warrant and only up to and including the secondary level. However, the French-speaking minorities will have no control over their institutions nor will they have the right to address in their own language their legal and judicial institutions, that is, the provincial assemblies and the courts. All their legal documents such as wills, deeds, all types of contracts will be drawn up in English in seven out of ten provinces, since French will not have the status of a working language in those institutions. That is what I take exception to, Mr. Speaker. If the Constitution is to grant francophones certain rights, then it must also enable them to use the tools needed to uphold those rights. Francophones should have the right to address the courts in French throughout the country. Those are basic democratic rights which one cannot do without if one wants to live in French in Canda. Francophones should have the right everywhere in Canada to communicate with their provincial governments in their mother tongue as well, something which I suggest is essential to the survival of a linguistic group. If a constitution fails to assert that one of the two linguistic communities has the political and legal resources enabling it to express, to protect and to defend its values and its rights, then this community is forced to accept the challenge of seeking survival outside of and often despite the rules of the game.

• (2220)

Mr. Speaker, that marginalization will result in francophones outside Quebec, in the bottom of their heart, being forced to be more vigilant still and more dynamic in their fight to protect whatever limited rights they may have. If they want to maintain any hope, they will have to fight still harder at long last to achieve the status of full-fledged citizens. However, the accumulation of frustrations and setbacks resulting from our numerous fights in the past make me fear that many of my fellow citizens in several regions of Canada will grow too tired to continue the fight. The ever threatening assimilation and the disappearance of the French fact throughout Canada will be our lot and history will say that we are all responsible for it.

The Minister of Justice did point out to me that there is in this resolution a mechanism which will enable us to make changes. However, Mr. Speaker, I entertain very little hope of having our rights acknowledged one day, and I know there is no need for me to recall all the statements made by Mr. Davis and the other premiers to make myself understood here this evening, even if there are mechanisms for making changes. How can anyone believe that those changes will be possible later when people are so set against them today? That is indeed the price demanded by Mr. Davis in exchange for his support of the constitutional package. It is certainly not the people of this country who reject equality of treatment, and this proves once again that people are often ahead of their leaders. In Ontario, on a provincial basis, more than 53 per cent of the residents would agree to have Section 133 applied to the province. On a local basis, in my riding of Ottawa-Vanier, more than 73 per cent of the people want for the Ontario minority constitutional rights equal to those enjoyed by the Quebec minority.

What is the federal government waiting for? Who is responsible for the protection of the rights of Canadians in this country? The Government of Canada or the provincial governments? When I see how the constitutional discussions are conducted, the answer becomes very clear to me. The federal government proposes, but in fact the provinces are the ones which decide.

Repeatedly, the provincial premiers have shown their utter indifference to the needs of francophones outside Quebec, and I have no intention of putting my future in their hands. Mr. Speaker, as a French-speaking Ontarian, I am against entrenchment under those conditions, and I always will be. The provinces cannot be trusted to guarantee the survival of the French language and French culture in Canada.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on his good work on behalf of the francophones outside Quebec. He has become their conscience in this House.

However, we must realize what this government has accomplished, especially in the Constitution: first, official bilingualism at the federal level; second, equality of both language groups; third, education rights for minority language groups in all Canadian provinces, for the first time.

Since Mr. Chrétien answered the question put by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, I am going to quote his reply:

> I do agree that it is unfortunate that Ontario has not decided to make French one of the languages used in the courts and in the Ontario legislature. However, in our charter and in our constitutional resolution, we have provided for a mechanism that will enable the provinces to make such changes through bilateral agreements, and I would ask the provinces to consider such action as soon as possible.

Granted, Section 133 does not apply in all parts of Canada. Official bilingualism will not be a fact throughout our country. We regret this, and at the same time, we hope that the province of Ontario will agree to introduce this provision, and in so doing, demonstrate to francophones outside Quebec and to French-speaking Ontarians that they are not second-class citizens. We should realize how lucky we are as Canadians to have two languages and cultures that are among the richest in the world. I hope that we shall be able to take full advantage of this in the future. Our new Constitution is a step in that direction.

● (2225)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Orders.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 1, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR PRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Statistics Canada has confirmed what everybody, other than those in the ivory tower who advise the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), already knew, that this country is in a mammoth recession. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That the Prime Minister direct the Minister of Finance to withdraw the budget immediately and change the economic direction of the country, discharge from the public service his ivory tower dreamers, and produce a new budget to get this country back on the rails before this House recesses for Christmas.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEMAND THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Today we learn that the government's bureaucracy has finally got the message that the country is headed for economic disaster. Hopefully the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has finally got the message that his budget is counterproductive and obsolete. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House demand from this government a new budget which will provide for the needs of ordinary Canadians, that is, jobs, homes, and protection against high interest rates and inflation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CURB UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas according to Statistics Canada, the unemployment rate in Quebec has shown a dramatic increase of 44 per cent compared to previous months, and whereas Quebec alone has 36 per cent of the unemployed in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the House ask the government to set up special programs in order to provide assistance in areas most seriously affected in Quebec.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

ABSENCE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), observing the collapse of his budget and the onset of the worst economic climate in this country for decades, apparently seems to have copped out of the House of Commons question period. He is unavailable today, and his office is unwilling to disclose his whereabouts for tomorrow. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the government arrange to provide this academic expatriate and economic illiterate with an on-the-job training program to overcome the fact that his budget was prepared by his bureaucrats without very much input or understanding by the minister, and at least arrange to have him appear regularly in the House of Commons for questioning about the budget's disastrous, ongoing effects on Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TREATMENT OF VLADIMIR TSUKERMAN BY U.S.S.R. AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I believe this motion will gain the unanimous support of this House.

Vladimir Tsukerman is a Soviet refusenik who has been condemned by the Russian courts to three years in a labour camp. He had been participating in a peaceful protest against the refusal of the Soviet authorities to grant him permission to emigrate to Israel. He has been separated from his wife and child since 1978.

Whereas Mr. Tsukerman's right to leave the U.S.S.R. is in accordance with the provisions of both Soviet law and the Helsinki Final Act, and whereas he is now being further harassed by the authorities, who have moved him from the labour camp to prison without explanation, and whereas Mrs. Tsukerman is in Ottawa today seeking the assistance of Canadians and is presently in the Speaker's Gallery, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the government to express to the Soviet authorities its profound regret at this unlawful and inhumane treatment of Mr. Vladimir Tsukerman, that he be permitted immediate reunification with his wife and child, and that the Soviet Union respect its international human rights obligations.

Madam Speaker: For presentation this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSAL AFFECTING LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The budget of November 12, 1981, is a disaster for lower and middle-income Canadians who are relying on their life insurance contracts to protect their dependants or to supplement their income in retirement. The proposal to tax the build-up of accrued investment income on a policy or annuity every three years will result in a tax being levied on a value which cannot be received except by surrendering the policy and thereby losing the intended benefits. In view of the fact that the arbitrary application of the accrual tax concept to both insurance and annuity contracts will mean that a large supply of long-term capital for national development will disappear, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the above-mentioned budget proposal be withdrawn.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous support for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

SPEECH MADE BY DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the media this weekend brought to light the unhappiness of a Liberal candidate in Spadina who has become an habitual loser and has publicly complained that the Liberal Party is not far enough left, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House suggest to the loser that he go to 323 College Street, Spadina, the federal constituency office in Spadina, which is now under new management, and pick up a copy of a more progressive policy for Canadians and apply for membership in a more progressive party.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

THE BUDGET

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF ENERGY TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, yesterday the price of gasoline and heating oil increased by a further two cents a gallon. Since the last election the prices of these two items have increased by as much as 75 cents a gallon and 50 cents a gallon respectively. In view of the government's abject failure to live up to its election promise to keep fuel price increases to a reasonable level, which would not decimate consumers' income, and in view of the absence from the budget of any measures to protect householders from punitive home heating costs this winter, I move:

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to alter once again the proposed budget to include energy tax credits for middle and low-income earners.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED SUCCESSOR TO PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, whereas most good things come in threes, and in order to complete the self-immolation of the group currently masquerading as the Liberal Party of Canada, begun last year by their constitutional unilateralism and continued this year with a disastrous budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That the government be encouraged to take the third step apparently now under discussion, that is, that the Prime Minister resign, to be succeeded at least temporarily by the Minister of Finance, it being the view of the House that the dishonesty and economic stupidity shown by the minister in his budget show him to be perfectly suited to fill the present Prime Minister's shoes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING INVESTMENT INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the government withdraw from the budget those elements which will reduce the level of investments in Canada, the interest deductibility provisions, and thereby improve the number of job opportunities that renewed investment in the Canadian economy is bound to create.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ENVIRONMENT

LEGISLATION DEALING WITH COASTAL AND OFFSHORE MARINE POLLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Ministry of the Environment was aware of an oil spill in the Canadian Arctic in September, 1980, and whereas weather conditions and government indecisiveness prevented clean-up action for nine months, and even then it could only act by invoking a force majeure situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the government withdraw Bill C-48 and only reintroduce it when its provisions for environmental standards and pollution compensation are improved, and further that the government bring in immediate revisions to the Canada Shipping Act that will improve the guidelines and contingency plans for dealing with coastal and offshore marine pollution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I can get his attention. The Prime Minister is surely aware that we are now in a recession. Just six weeks ago the Prime Minister said the economy was strong, when in fact at that time we were already in the recession that we have today. Clearly this indicates that the budget was prepared with a distinct lack of understanding about the current state of the economy. For that reason I would ask him to explain to the House today how he can justify not withdrawing this budget and introducing a new one which addresses the clear economic problems of recession, lay-offs, and further bankruptcies.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member is not repeating the substance of what I said. I said that the economy had been very strong in the seventies and had been strong in the past three quarters, which is true. The Minister of Finance said explicitly that that sustained growth would not continue. It was in that knowledge and that belief that he made his present budget.

● (1415)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Where is he?

Mr. Trudeau: It remains true, Madam Speaker, that when I was speaking and when the budget was made, we had three successive quarters which, on a yearly basis, placed Canada at the head of the OECD countries in terms of growth only after Japan. That remains true in spite of the figures which were released yesterday. It is likely that by the end of this year, as forecast by the OECD, we will have a growth rate in real terms which will be stronger than every other OECD country with the exception of Japan.

This does not mean that the minister was not right when he said that this sustained growth would not continue and that there is very serious economic difficulty ahead. That is why he brought down the budget that he did.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the Minister of Finance?

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF ENERGY TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, if the minister brought down that budget knowing that we are in a recession and knowing that we have just had the largest single drop in the economy in 30 years, if the minister brought down that budget knowing what he does from the figures today, he should resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Where is he?

Mr. Wilson: The Prime Minister again showed over the weekend, in a radio interview, that he is still out of touch with the real world, or else he is misleading Canadians because he said in the interview which I heard that 12 million Canadians had their taxes reduced and that 800,000 Canadians had their taxes increased. This statement totally ignores the fact that all Canadians are going to be paying $1,400 per family per year for the next five years for increased energy taxes. Therefore many Canadians will have their taxes increased for that reason. Will the government consider introducing an energy tax credit in a new budget, in order to alleviate the impact of these huge tax increases on low-income Canadians and those Canadians who are being put out of work because of the recession?

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am amazed at the hon. member who is quoting these figures about the taxes. It was quite clear from what I said that I was talking about the budget and the effect of the budget on taxes. Now, the member is talking about taxes on energy which were established well before the budget and which have nothing to do with the budget itself.

Mr. Clark: The same people pay them.

Mr. Trudeau: And the same people mix the two ideas, I say to the Leader of the Opposition, when they ask a question.

Mr. Clark: The same citizens.

Mr. Trudeau: That is why I do not think these questions are honest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where is the Minister of Finance?

An hon. Member: He has not been here for six days. He must be hiding from Mr. Coutts.

REQUEST THAT COMPLEX BUDGET PROVISIONS BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question would have been for the Minister of Finance, but he is not in the House today and he has not been in the House for five out of the last seven days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is hiding.

Mr. Wilson: Obviously the minister has not the guts to face questions from the opposition who are speaking for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Last week, in narrowly defeating the Liberal policy conference resolution calling upon the Minister of Finance to withdraw the budget, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that Canadians do not understand the budget, that it is too complex. Will the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Finance to listen to his fellow Liberals and withdraw those parts of the budget which Canadians do find so complex so that they can advise the minister on its complexities, to enable him to understand just what impact it is having on the economy and the increasing number of unemployed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member opposite is attacking the Minister of Finance for not being here and is suspecting that he lacks courage. I just want to tell the House that the Minister of Finance many months ago had accepted an invitation to speak on St. Andrew's Day in St. Andrew's, Scotland—

An hon. Member: For five days?

Mr. Trudeau: —which I think, for some members of this House, is an honourable occupation and an honourable occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Nowlan: Is Walter Gordon there too?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: St. Andrew is the patron saint of the Ukrainians, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: I see that the event does not cause much interest on the other side, so I will sit down.

GOVERNMENT AWARENESS OF STATE OF ECONOMY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the continuing absence of the Minister of Finance I will address my question to the Prime Minister, who recently told British Columbians that they are "terribly unaware" of what is happening to this country. Since October figures show that housing starts are at a 20-year low, the number of people unemployed is at a record high, the number of farm bankruptcies is 150 per cent higher than in the same period in 1979, and auto sales are at their lowest level in five years, why was the government so unaware that the country is experiencing the worst recession in the last 30 years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just answered in response to the previous question that, far from being unaware, the Minister of Finance had indicated that there are going to be very difficult times ahead, and that is why he has a stimulative budget before the House now.

Mr. Wilson: You are more out of touch than I thought.

Mr. McGrath: How can you say that with a straight face, Pierre?

Mr. Epp: Maybe Coutts will give you another line.

Mr. Trudeau: These guffaws indicate the degree to which hon. members opposite are ignorant of what the budget contains. Not so many days ago one member of their party was reproaching us about the size of the deficit. When we have a deficit of the size of $10 billion to $12 billion, it is hard to see how hon. members opposite can guffaw as though that were not a stimulative budget. I wish they would get their act together.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer reminds me that one of his constituents from Mount Royal wrote to me and said, "If you and I did what these people propose, it would be called grand larceny and we would get 20 years in jail."

* * *

THE BUDGET

FORWARD AVERAGING PROVISIONS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance. If his colleagues would be quiet, possibly the minister could hear my question.

The minister recently assured high priced NHL hockey players that they will be as well off under the new forward-averaging provisions of the budget as they were under the old income-averaging provisions. Can the minister make the same commitment to other Canadians who use these averaging provisions, such as farmers, civil servants approaching retirement, and people who have been using these measures? Will he assure them that they are just as well off today as they were before this budget?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the forward-averaging formula proposed in the budget should be considered in conjunction with the reduction in marginal tax rates, because the two provisions combined enable the taxpayer who wants to take advantage of income-averaging to realize considerable benefits, while at the same time, paying a more equitable share of income tax, compared to the situation which existed under other past provisions.

* * *

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Having reversed himself after one election on the question of wage and price controls, and in view of his complete reversal after a subsequent election promise on the issue of low interest rates, I suggest to the Prime Minister that he is in no position to lecture hon. members on this side of the House on the question of honesty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Prime Minister has now managed, through a persistent policy of high interest rates, to put the state of the Canadian economy at its worst level in 30 years, will he now admit to the House that the budget brought in by the absent Minister of Finance is completely out of date, and will he assure us that he will bring in a new budget before Christmas to give Canadians some hope?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member should involve himself in a suggestion that there was dishonesty because of a question which was asked of me by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. If the hon. member would like to join this public disagreement here, he is quite welcome. In terms of reversing oneself, I know of no one in this House who has reversed himself more often on the constitutional question than the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

● (1425)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Good shot, Pierre!

Mr. Trudeau: I would admit that that was not because of a lack of honesty. It was because of a lack of courage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You have been kicked out of bed, Ed.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC PRIORITIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we are back to the Prime Minister's high level of debate. First he questions the integrity of members. Now he is back to his old macho level of challenging someone in terms of courage. Just for once we on this side of the House would like the government to answer honestly questions that are put to them honestly about problems of the Canadian economy. Considering that the man who lost the recent Spadina byelection is now saying to the Prime Minister that there should be a complete reversal of their economic priorities in order to accord with the priorities of the man who won that byelection, I would like to ask the Prime Minister this question. Will he admit that, if he does not change his economic priorities, the Liberal Party as a whole will suffer the same fate as Jim Coutts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if that were the future which were attending us, I doubt whether the hon. member would be asking us to change our policy. It is because he knows our policy is good that he is asking us to change it.

PLIGHT OF VANCOUVER HOME OWNER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister should go back to reading his briefing notes. He has his glasses back on. Just once we would like to see whether we can elicit some concern from the government. Yesterday a citizen in Vancouver spoke to a New Democratic Party commission outlining the following reality. His total family income is $40 more on a monthly basis than his mortgage payment. Since the government has brought in a budget that gives, to upper-income Canadians in the top two categories, thousands of dollars in tax reductions, and peanuts to those at the bottom, what is the Prime Minister prepared to do now to help that Vancouver family which represents hundreds of thousands of Canadians right across the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Public Works has repeatedly invited members of this House to submit such cases to him. If the facts are as recited by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, there would be something in the budget to prevent this person from having any foreclosure affect him.

The hon. member again raises the question of tax reductions to the rich. I point out to him the figures that were quoted by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, which are exact. This budget reduces taxes for 12 million taxpayers. For another 3,500,000 taxpayers the taxes will be about the same. Taxes increased as a result of this budget for fewer than 800,000 people. If the hon. member wants to find specific cases where some loopholes are still used by taxpayers, that is fine. He then should support the government which is plugging a lot of those loopholes. But I know that is too much to expect. The New Democratic Party is unable to support progress, providing that progress is not dictated by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

• (1430)

Mr. Hees: Pierre, you used to be so close.

Mr. Trudeau: I know we used to be so close, George. I even wanted them in my cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There is one thing which is characteristic of that party, whether it holds the balance of power or not, and that is that it is incapable of taking its responsibilities. It prefers to remain in the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

TRANSPORT

ADVERTISEMENT PUBLISHED IN THE "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, when it comes to the NDP, the Prime Minister loves them and he leaves them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I have a question that is directed to the Minister of Transport. The government yesterday ran this full page, full coloured advertisement in The Globe and Mail, which congratulates the government on its transportation policies.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member knows that he is not allowed to exhibit documents in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, it was just too good to pass up though. As the minister will know, in addition to congratulating the government on its policy, it also gives a picture of virtually every transport system that he is cutting off at the present time. How does the minister justify the wasteful expenditure of $16,000 for this advertisement, when at the very same time he is cutting back on service to Canadians on the grounds that he does not have the money?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I had a very fast look at that page. Unless I am mistaken, my own picture is not even there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: The obvious reason we took that page is that this is a special supplement on the part of the Financial Post with regard to transportation in Canada.

An hon. Member: Of The Globe and Mail.

Mr. Pepin: Of The Globe and Mail. On many occasions members of this House on all sides regret that the public, at large, is not sufficiently informed of services provided by the Government of Canada. Obviously this is an effort to remedy that situation.

* * *

CANADIAN UNITY

ADVERTISING BUDGET FOR CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. At the present time the government is asking for a further $8.9 million for an advertising campaign for the Canadian Unity Information Office, dealing with the Constitution. I shall ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the government's priorities. How does he justify spending a further almost $9 million advertising the Constitution, at a time when ordinary Canadians are losing their homes, their businesses, and their farms because of the government's policies?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General informs me that this morning he was present in committee to defend his estimates and that he did not have a single question on this type of spending. I wish the hon. member had thought of asking his question this morning in committee.

* * *

METRIC CONVERSION

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE ABANDONED

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I received a notice this morning from the American national metric council to the effect that the metric board in the United States has been ordered to disband. President Reagan said that "it has walked its last kilometre". My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Given the fact that there is a $40 billion expenditure taking place in the United States, and they have seen the wisdom of abandoning this forced march to metric, and in view of the fact that the Cattlemen's Association in the west has refused to convert to metric and the government has agreed to call off the regulations, will the minister agree to save the independent dealers, the grocery stores across this nation hundreds of millions of dollars, and call off the forced march to metric in the interest of business?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, it would have been more interesting for the members of the House if the information given by the hon. member in his preamble had been complete. The hon. member should have mentioned in the preamble to his question that the Reagan Administration has proposed to get rid of all federal councils, commissions and related agencies and to integrate them in the various departments as they are called in the United States.

The hon. member is probably aware that during the last few months the American metric commission was in existence before it became part of the Department of Commerce, the Reagan administration increased the commission's budget.

[English]

COST OF PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, that simply is not true. Since the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism wishes to speak for the small business community across this nation, how could he justify paying $300,000 out in subestimates to the dealers and merchants in Peterborough, Kamloops, and Sherbrooke, Quebec, to switch back to imperial measure, at a time when he is forcing the rest of Canada to convert to metric? Is he setting up a $10 billion account to put them back to imperial, when they cannot trade with the United States, which country intends to stay on imperial maybe forever?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): The reason is quite simple, Madam Speaker. It is simply because the previous government, because of its shortsighted approach, had postponed a measure that was already being implemented. Therefore, in all fairness we wanted to help the owners of grocery stores in Sherbrooke, Kamloops and Peterborough to get through that period without penalizing them for the delay caused by the previous government.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

INQUIRY WHY ONTARIO WAS CHOSEN AS BASIS TO ESTABLISH EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mrs. Suzanne Beauchamp-Niquet (Roberval): Madam Speaker, my question is further to a question concerning equalization payments which was asked in the House last week by my colleague from Montmorency-Orléans. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Could the minister inform the House why Ontario was selected as the standard for calculating equalization payments and also what the basis is for this proposal?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the members of this House will recall that last year, the House passed Bill C-24, one of whose aims was, if I remember correctly, to exclude Ontario, which had become eligible for equalization payments, from receiving such payments. Taking Ontario as the standard means that Ontario becomes the cutoff point and therefore is not eligible for equalization payments—this is acknowledged by the government of Ontario. It also means that the standard reference is a province where content and nature of the tax base are comparable to the situation in other provinces that are entitled to equalization payments, and these payments will bring their revenues up to levels comparable to those in the province of Ontario. We feel that by taking Ontario as the standard, we are fulfilling a twofold purpose; that is, we are enhancing the equity of the equalization system and correcting a number of problems that have been pointed out by the provinces in the past.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—LOSSES SUSTAINED BY PROVINCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Minister of State for Finance inform the House today or tomorrow, exactly how much provinces such as New Brunswick, Quebec and Nova Scotia as well as other provinces that are now eligible for equalization payments, are losing as a result of the change in the equalization standard? Can the minister give exact figures from year to year?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am sorry to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I did not bring the stacks of files where I would have been able to find the year-to-year figures for payments made during the last five years. However, if we consider the entire payment system, the provinces themselves have, in fact, asked for changes to be made in the formula. We are doing everything we can to respond to the critical comments of the other provinces with respect to this formula. One member told me, for instance, that Mr. Parizeau himself was indignant that Ontario should be entitled to equalization payments. Other provinces suggested broadening the tax base by adding 100 per cent of revenues from natural resources. Others again wanted to add municipal taxes. We are changing the formulas, and this will benefit the equalization system, because it will make for a more equitable system. Even the provinces have admitted as much. As far as giving exact figures for each province, I am not in a position to do so at this time.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, can the minister confirm in the House today that the rates and levels of equalization payments for provinces such as New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec will be reduced as a result of the change in standard, using Ontario as a reference?

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, the basic change in the equalization rules will enable provinces who are eligible to continue to receive billions of dollars under this program, and the federal government will continue to meet its commitment, which is entrenched in the Constitution, to provide provinces in financial difficulty with equalization payments. The provinces will see their payments increase over the next five years compared to the amounts they have received during the past five years.

* * *

● (1440)

[English]

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT AID HOUSING STARTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I think every acknowledged expert in the field of housing, both public and private, agrees that we require something in the order of 210,000 units per year in order to meet the housing requirements of Canada. This year we may reach 165,000 units. If we were to build only the housing which is acknowledged as necessary, we could create 110,000 jobs this year over and above the numbers now in existence. Will the Prime Minister direct the government to undertake whatever steps are necessary to begin the needed housing starts and to create employment all across the country which would be beneficial to every Canadian family?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in the budget which is presently being discussed by the House there is an allocation of some hundreds of millions of dollars to meet shelter needs, either by constructing housing or ensuring the building of rental units. I am sure the hon. member and other hon. members of the House could find more ways to spend more money and to create more houses. As I said earlier, the question is that we are already in a budgetary deficit situation of more than $10 billion.

Mr. Nielsen: You did it.

Mr. Trudeau: This was done because we believed and continue to believe in the importance of a stimulative budget. The question is: how much more can we afford to go into deficit, if we do not want to cause an increase in the rate of inflation and a further deterioration of the economy?

REQUEST FOR INCREASED INVESTMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Given that we know we need the housing, given that we know people are unemployed, and given that we know that those unemployed are in fact a drain on the economy—they have to receive money from somewhere in order to live, and they would rather work—surely it makes more sense to invest some money in housing now, money which will be recoverable through the payment of mortgages? It would put people to work in Canada today so that they could try to build for the future, rather than saddle them with untold debts and put them in positions where they would be unable to provide for their own needs. Why will the Prime Minister not take a more positive approach to this dilemma?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure what form of monetary or fiscal policy the hon. member is advocating. But certainly, when he says that surely we should invest more money, he should ask himself where the money will come from. It will come either from increased taxes or increased borrowing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member's backbenchers have a lot of the answers. I wish they would convey them to the questioner so that he could then ask his questions.

An hon. Member: We have.

Mr. Trudeau: And he would not listen to you; well, try again.

Mr. Rae: You are the one who does not listen.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member's backbencher tells us that he tried his best to convey to the questioner some sense of economic policy. That is what I am attempting to do as well. I wish I could have the help of the hon. member.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT PROGRAM—INCREASE IN COST

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will recall that last August an increase in the cost of new fighter aircraft of over $1 billion was announced, yet there is no supplementary estimate to cover any part of this increase. Can the minister tell us how he intends to find this extra $1 billion without reducing other programs and thus delaying the frigate program? Our need for ship replacements is becoming more noticeable daily.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the former minister of national defence should know that capital expenditure of defence is well planned for years ahead. We expected that inflation and other factors would increase the cost of some of our capital expenditures. Every year we conduct a review and an evaluation of the cost of our equipment program. It is not only fighter aircraft or frigates; it is everything we buy. This is why the Department of National Defence has a special economic model to forecast the impact that inflation will have on what we purchase. Everything is looked at every year and this is included in each budget. I thought the former minister of national defence would rise to congratulate the government for the level of importance it gives to the defence budget. We will be able with this budget to fulfil all of our commitments to NATO and to the defence of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF BRITISH FRIGATES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the people in NATO from whom I hear are not pleased about us being down to three ships afloat at the present time. The minister should be concerned about the state of our naval vessels. I should like to refer to one particular example. One ship which has recently had its life extended by an extensive refit is the Saguenay. This ship was one of the eight found to have severe boiler problems with cracks in its boilers; eight ships have cracks in their boilers and eight others are being examined for this condition. Has the minister considered making use of the British program where they are willing to sell up to 17 frigates at greatly reduced prices, so that we could use them as a stopgap measure to get us over the very difficult period ahead?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that, at the moment, according to the information I have, we have eight ships on the east coast and four ships on the west coast available and operational.

Mr. Clark: Are they above or below the water?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: One is the "Good Ship Lollipop".

Mr. Lamontagne: Perhaps we would be in a better posture as far as the navy is concerned—

Mr. Crosbie: If we had one.

Mr. Lamontagne: —if the Conservative government when it was in power for nine months had taken decisions, but it did not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: As far as NATO is concerned, they seem very pleased with our efforts concerning the 3 per cent real growth in defence spending. We are trying to reach that objective, depending upon the economy of the country and upon what we can realistically do. I think we are making a very good effort. I am very glad that we will again be able to fulfil all our commitments as far as Canadian security and NATO are concerned.

POSSIBILITY OF LEASING EQUIPMENT FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary and is directed to the same minister. In light of reports that our Canadian Armed Forces are seriously understaffed and poorly equipped, with some vehicles older than their drivers, in view of the impending closure of our excellent fighter aircraft base at Chatham, New Brunswick, and having only 19 Leopard tanks in all Canada, has the minister had any discussions with our American allies about leasing military equipment which approaches the state of the art in modern warfare and, thus, stretch the defence dollar further to provide more badly needed equipment and to free up dollars for more military personnel and better facilities? What is the minister's reaction to this proposition?

● (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is true that some components of our equipment are somewhat obsolete, and that is why we are gradually replacing them, be they tanks, frigates or aircraft. As to borrowing or leasing equipment from other countries, I think that is out of the question. We have enough equipment to meet our current requirements. With respect to tanks, I should point out that we do not need them here in Canada. We do keep 17 or 19 tanks for training here in Canada, but of course most of them are needed in Germany in case of a possible conflict. Therefore, we do not have to keep hundreds of tanks here in case of conflict. There is no danger on this side of the ocean.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON PERSONNEL RETIRING FROM SERVICE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No tanks.

Mr. Neil: The minister must be aware of the effect of the budget on those Armed Forces personnel who are retiring or who are about to retire. Until November 12, when the budget was handed down, severance pay could be placed in income-averaging annuity certificates, the annuity payments being used to supplement superannuation. Under the changes in the budget, a serviceman may no longer purchase IAACs. The result is that several thousands of dollars of severance pay are now taxed away immediately. I would like to ask the minister if he has made or intends to make representations to the Minister of Finance, to have this unfair provision withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the question of pensions for the Armed Forces is a question which is related to defence, of course; but it is also clearly related to the entire policy of the government concerning pensions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: I realize that the hon. member is talking about severance pay. This is a question which will have to be discussed. I think that what the hon. gentleman has asked today has also been asked by many of our people who are retiring from the forces. It will certainly be studied in co-operation with the Minister of Finance and other ministers.

* * *

● (1450)

BANK OF CANADA

LOWERING OF RESERVE REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, and is with regard to the lowering of reserve requirements by the Bank of Canada, on the part of the chartered banks. Even though that is very welcome at this time of tight money, would the minister use his powers, and the powers of the Minister of Finance to ensure that at least the additional revenues which will accrue because of the extra credit will be used to reduce interest rates rather than further increase the profits of the banks? I think these interest rates are excessive—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McRae: —and the spread between the treasury bill rate and the prime rate is one which should be reduced.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I will relay the comments of the hon. member to the Minister of Finance who, I am sure, will consider them very carefully.

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE TO DEAL WITH ISSUES AFFECTING WOMEN

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. To help ensure that women do attain equality in Canadian society, a principle and a goal about to be established in the new Canadian Constitution by virtue of the now restored Section 28, can the Prime Minister respond to the letter I wrote to him a few weeks ago, which his office acknowledged with interest, calling for the establishment of an all-party standing committee of the House of Commons to deal with all issues affecting women, and, as I said in my letter, to monitor the progress of Canadian women toward true equality? The importance of such a committee cannot, I think, be exaggerated. Would the Prime Minister not agree?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would agree that the hon. member's letter should be more than acknowledged, and should receive a substantive answer. I will see that that is done. I apologize for not yet being acquainted with the content of the letter. However, I do know how this House usually deals with requests for the setting up of yet another standing committee or another ad hoc committee. It is a matter which I refer to our House leader, who, in conjunction with the Whip, tries to see if we can find yet another standing committee which hon. members will be able to attend and still discharge their duties in the House. However, I will certainly ask that that be considered.

REQUEST THAT IMMEDIATE ATTENTION BE PAID TO ISSUES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I am sorry the Prime Minister said "yet another committee". The fact is that women's issues are scattered abroad in about a dozen or more standing committees. It is essential, at this time, that they be brought together to make Parliament responsible for these issues.

I would ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that the Indian Act and the necessary amendments to it will be postponed, yet again, for another year, much to the distress of his own minister responsible for the Status of Women, does he not think that we need to pay attention now—not a year or two years down the line—to all the issues affecting women, if we really believe what we have established in Section 28?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, certainly, if this government and this party are not already engaged in that process, we will be continuing consultations and our review of the law as it may be affected by the new Charter in these particular affirmations of rights.

Miss Jewett: You need a watchdog.

Mr. Trudeau: The work goes on. We will not wait for a year to begin studying this question, and I hope the hon. member's party will not, either.

Miss Jewett: Well, you're waiting. It says so in the paper. Talk to Munro.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REPRESENTATIONS ON BUDGET PROVISIONS AFFECTING RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, but it should more properly be directed to the Minister of Finance. However, he is not here today.

An hon. Member: Or yesterday.

Mr. Gustafson: My question concerns annuities for farmers which were removed from the budget, representing their lifetime earnings from the sale of their farms, the sale of their cattle, or the sale of their machinery. Has the minister received any answer to the request which he informed the House that he made to the Minister of Finance concerning this very serious area? Thousands of letters have crossed the desks of Members of Parliament concerning this serious situation relating to farmers. Has the Minister of Agriculture received any recognition from the Minister of Finance, or any answer relating to this situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that submissions are still being made to the Minister of Finance concerning this aspect and other aspects of the budget. They are to be considered, as the Minister of Finance said, in due time.

* * *

HOUSING

MINISTER'S REPORTED SUGGESTION TO YOUNG PERSONS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The minister responsible for housing, in his travels across Canada, has been making various suggestions to Canadians on how to get into housing. Yesterday, in Nova Scotia, he said that young Canadians should consider using orange crates to furnish their dream homes.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the dream of many young Canadians to own their own homes is unrealistic, and whether in fact they should resort to the kinds of actions that the minister has been suggesting to them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, no dream is unrealistic. Everyone should be able to dream what they want. However, when one places one's dreams outside the possibility of fulfilling them, one must accept a certain measure of frustration. I do not think that the Government of Canada or the Canadian nation can guarantee or should guarantee to every Canadian, of whatever age or of whatever condition, that each of them can own a house. I believe it is the Bible which says we have to work and earn our bread—

Mr. Epp: By the sweat of our brow.

Mr. Trudeau: —by the sweat of our brow. The hon. member, who is an expert on God, should be reading the Bible, which says that.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: What's a shame about that?

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION INTRODUCED IN BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I have in my hand a motion which was introduced last night in the British House of Commons by four British Members of Parliament from the various political parties, which reads as follows:

That this House calls upon the government to urge the Government of Canada not to ask this House to enact a Canadian Constitution which has appended to it a charter of rights which is seriously defective, which is in breach of the international covenant of civil and political rights, of which both Canada and the United Kingdom are signatories, and which is strenuously opposed, both by the Indian nations of Canada to whom the Crown is bound by treaty obligations, and by the province of Quebec whose French-speaking population comprises a quarter of the population of Canada.

● (1500)

Has the Prime Minister received a copy of this motion. If so, how does he intend to deal with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that reminds me somewhat of the previous question about dreaming.

* * *

PETITIONS

MISS JEWETT—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and forty-first report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) on Monday, November 30, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the executive assistant to the government House leader was kind enough to inform me with respect to the business of the House for the next two weeks. However, I would like confirmation from the government House leader in that connection.

I am having difficulty, Madam Speaker, because of the various private conversations that are going on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask hon. members to resume their seats, please?

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was informed that we will be continuing with the Constitution debate for the remainder of today and tomorrow, that we will be dealing with Bill C-48 on Thursday, and Friday, December 4, will be an allotted day.

On December 7 and December 9 of next week we will be dealing with the fifth and sixth days of the budget debate. December 10 will be an allotted day. Should we not be finished with Bill C-48 on Thursday, December 3, we will continue debate on that bill on December 8. If that debate is not finished on December 8, debate on Bill C-48 will continue on December 11.

I ask the government House leader whether I have the information accurately. When he answers that question, could he indicate whether he has given any consideration to the date upon which the House will be rising for the Christmas recess?

Mr. Crosbie: No recess this year.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, with regard to the first question, the information given by one of my assistants to the assistant of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is almost fully accurate. To set the record straight for the benefit of the hon. member, I would like to confirm that Friday will be an allotted day and that tomorrow, after the historical vote, we shall resume the debate on Bill C-48 which has been going on for quite a long time and has now reached the third reading stage. If we cannot dipose of Bill C-48 tomorrow afternoon before six o'clock, it will be considered again on Thursday. As for the business for next week, it has not yet been decided. I shall make the usual announcement on Thursday after the question period, but I can readily say to the opposition that the last allotted day for this supply period will be next Thursday, December 10. As for the second question concerning the date of the Chirstmas recess, I have not yet thought about it.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have one brief follow-up question for the government House leader. If Bill C-48 is concluded some time during the day of Thursday, December 3, has the government any business to disclose to the House for the remainder of that day?

Mr. Pinard: Bill C-78, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I always like to hear about these things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Would it be possible to work out an arrangement whereby information is distributed equably?

However, I have a question on another matter. The House order under which we are currently operating, as I recall, superseded an agreement that we had for 20-minute speeches for the balance of the debate. Are we still operating under the assumption that speeches will be limited to 20 minutes for the balance of the debate on the constitutional amendment?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it seems obvious to me that the order of the House made before the most recent one still applies. Consequently, there is still a 20-minute time limit on speeches except for those by the mover of an amendment or party leaders. The fact that we agreed to end the debate and that this agreement does not mention the length of speeches does not invalidate the previous order concerning the length of speeches. Therefore, in my humble interpretation, the length of speeches is still limited to 20 minutes.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Is it clear that speeches will be limited to 20 minutes? It is not all that clear in the order. Does the House now confirm that speeches will be limited to 20 minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I seldom find myself in agreement with the government House leader on matters of this nature, but I am afraid that I must concur with his interpretation that the pre-existing House order stands and is not superseded in any way by the House order agreed to last Friday.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would hope that were the case. But it says quite clearly in the House order "notwithstanding any Standing Order or other order". I assumed that referred to the agreement. However, I suppose I could be wrong, but I do not think so.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it says "notwithstanding any previous order or Standing Order". That applies only to the subject matter of the House order. There is nothing in the new House order relating to the length of speeches. Therefore, the previous House order dealing with that is still in existence and still applies.

Point of Order—Mr. Lawrence

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. LAWRENCE—USE OF CONSTITUENCY OFFICES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I rise reluctantly and regretfully on a point of order concerning a matter pertaining to constituency offices of hon. members. My understanding is that there is either a rule, a regulation, a guideline, an understanding, or, at the very least, a spirit involved in the operation of constituency offices which would prevent them from being used for any political partisan activity.

Today, prior to question period, under the guise of a motion moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) stood in his place and openly, and I think quite flagrantly, committed a violation of that spirit or agreement regarding constituency offices.

Unless I seriously misunderstood the hon. member for Spadina, he indicated that not only was political propaganda available in his own constituency office, but indeed he was eager to have at least one individual come into that constituency office to sign an application for political party membership.

I believe this is a matter which falls under your exclusive jurisdiction, Madam Speaker; it is not a matter about which I can raise a question with the ministry. How can I forcefully, openly and publicly bring this matter to your attention?

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, if I may comment on this point of order, I would be most happy to clear up the misunderstanding which the hon. member has raised. He has suggested that he may not have understood me properly. In fact, he did not. I was very careful to observe the rule or the spirit of which he spoke.

I suggested that a person could get a more progressive policy statement—my words were "a copy of a more progressive policy for Canadians"—if they came to the constituency office. I think that is quite a reasonable thing to suggest. I am sure that every constituency office, of whatever persuasion, undertakes to give the best statements it has regarding the affairs of Canada.

• (1510)

As to applying for membership in a more progressive party, I of course avoided giving any indication to which party he might apply, and I also avoided suggesting that anyone at the office would accept his application. But the fact is, Madam Speaker, we have many people coming to the constituency office in Spadina in all kinds of need and we do not turn anybody away. We attempt to give them some kind of direction as to where they can go to get the help that we cannot give. In this case I would certainly indicate to a person in such need where he could go to find a more progressive party than the Liberal Party.

Madam Speaker: It seems to me that the matter which the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) has raised has been dealt with in the House and the House did not give its unanimous consent to that motion. Therefore, the matter has been dealt with; as for bringing it out publicly, I guess the hon. member has done that.

I must remind members that the use they make of their constituency offices, of course, is subject to the rules, and this involves really administrative matters rather than matters of procedure. Members have the responsibility of using their offices for the purposes for which they exist, and they are accountable for the use of those offices.

MR. SKELLY—ABSENCE FROM HOUSE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on another point of order. I should just like to call to the attention of the House Standing Order 5, which states that a member shall be in attendance, sitting in the House, unless he has otherwise obtained leave. I would point out that there has been a great deal of difficulty for members in this House who wish to convey and clarify matters relating to the budget. They have faced extreme difficulty in that the minister has been absent for some six of the 13 days since he presented his budget.

It is my opinion that this is a shameful situation which makes things very difficult for elected members. I suggest that this House should call to the attention of the minister that we do require his presence here to answer for some of the more disturbing aspects of this particular budget. There are many people in this country who are facing very serious problems as a result of the budget, and it is not the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) who is responsible. So I wonder if this matter might be brought to the minister's attention.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in this regard, I think that it would be unfair not to mention the well-known fact that we have a Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) who is doing a tremendous job and who provides very complete and very responsible answers. If the hon. member has any reason to complain about the propriety of the replies provided by the Minister of State for Finance, I would ask him to have the courage to say exactly on what point he received an incomplete or inaccurate answer. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is one of the ministers who is most regularly present in the House of Commons. If he has been absent these last few days, his absence was well explained by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during question period. However, the hon. member is exceedingly well served because, whenever the Minister of Finance must be unavoidably absent from the House, he is very well seconded by a Minister of State for Finance and a devoted parliamentary secretary who make it their duty to provide full and accurate answers to all questions on financial matters.

Madam Speaker: First of all, I do not think that it is appropriate for members of the House to comment on the absence of any of their colleagues. It is up to the colleague in question to determine whether his duty as a member, or as a minister in this case, requires that he be away from or in the House. And he has the responsibility to do his duty wherever he believes that it is most required. The hon. members must not comment on the absence of any other member, and they must especially not refer to Standing Order 5, which, as the hon. member has noted, indeed provides that every member is bound to attend the service of the House. However, I must remind the hon. member, as I was quickly reminded earlier myself, that one of my predecessors stated that this rule was outdated. If it is, I wonder why it was not taken out when our rules and procedures were reviewed. However, in any case, I imagine that my predecessor stated that this Standing Order could no longer apply because of the fact that the duties of the members have become extremely varied today and because members must travel very frequently.

[English]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

MISS MacDONALD—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition to the House sponsored by the Ad Hoc Committee of Canadian Women on the Constitution. This petition requests the removal of Section 33, the overriding clause, from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It has been signed by 27 petitioners who feel that Members of Parliament should delete Section 33 in order to guarantee to Canadians their basic rights and freedoms.

[Translation]

MR. HERBERT—DEFENCE OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN GUATEMALA

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of 5,631 of my constituents who have referred to me, through the organization "Développement et paix" of Vaudreuil-Soulanges, a petition asking that the Canadian government denounce the inequities of which the defenders of human rights in Guatemala are the constant victims. They ask that the Canadian government protest to the government of Guatemala, that it urge the UN Human Rights Commission to conduct an investigation in Guatemala and that it forgo any direct or indirect assistance to that country.

[English]

MR. CORBETT—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I wish to lay upon the Table of the House a petition bearing the names of 380 citizens of the province of New Brunswick and other regions of Canada who just did not get the message, and do not understand that by now they are supposed to be thankful that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has cut them off from any form of decent rail transportation to the rest of Canada.

MR. FRETZ—REIMBURSEMENT OF OWNERS OF HOMES WITH UFFI

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by members of the Bertin household in the city of Port Colborne, is to indicate to the government that urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their home is apparently causing them physical harm. The nature of the petition is to demand that the government reimburse those home owners in Canada who have insulated their homes with UFFI for the removal of the insulation and for the installation of another acceptable kind of insulation.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that following your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary power vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

● (1520)

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED SLUMP IN ACTIVITY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), to move a motion for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the report just released by Statistics Canada showing that the Canadian economy has suffered the worst economic slump in 30 years, thus making the current government budget and its forecast completely obsolete and requiring, therefore, an immediate new job-creation budget in order to avoid what will become the worst winter for Canadians since the depression of the 1930s.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the difficulty I see which confronts even your consideration of whether or not the matter is urgent enough to be the subject of a motion under Standing Order 26, in view of the fact that the House order of last Friday is in place.

S.O. 26

Ordinarily a motion under Standing Order 26, if it is accepted, supersedes all other business and is dealt with at eight o'clock. I would like to quote from the House order made last Friday and which appears at page 13433 of Hansard for November 27, a House order which was agreed to by the New Democratic Party through their acting House leader, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), wherein it stipulates:

That the motion of the Minister of Justice for an Address to Her Majesty the Queen concerning the Constitution of Canada (Government Orders, Government Business, No. 56)—

And here is where the most important words occur, Madam Speaker, to which I wish to refer you:

—notwithstanding any Standing or other Order—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the Speaker has to deal with this matter immediately the motion is moved. The question is dealt with by the Speaker without debate. I will deal with it. I will not deal with it on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not debating it at all, Madam Speaker. I am raising a very serious point of order which I suggest prevents you from doing precisely what you say you intend to do, namely, that the House order that was unanimously accepted by all three parties stipulates that, notwithstanding anything in the Standing Orders, Government Order No. 56 be disposed of. Part of the disposition that the House has ordered should happen, notwithstanding anything in the Standing Orders, shall be that this day will be taken up by the Constitution as well as tomorrow, up until three o'clock.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the House order of last Friday is operative notwithstanding anything in the Standing Orders. Since the motion is made under Standing Order 26, no matter how much we may be in sympathy with it—and we are—we are prohibited by the very order of the House from dealing with the matter; and with great respect I suggest that you, Madam Speaker, are prohibited by that House order from even considering the matter that has been put forward, which ordinarily you would do.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on the point of order, I would draw your attention to what I consider to be a slight deviation from the point made by the House leader of the official opposition. Standing Order 26(9) states:

If it is determined that the member may proceed,—

That is, if the Speaker determines that the member may proceed.

—the motion shall stand over until 8 p.m. on that day, provided that Mr. Speaker, at his discretion—

I assume that means his or hers.

—may direct that the motion shall be set down for consideration on the following sitting day at an hour specified by him.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that we would be quite content to have it set down for tomorrow.

S.O. 26

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not often agree with the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. But as concerns his interpretation of the House order, I agree with him that the most recent order has priority over all Standing Orders and that Standing Order 26 therefore does not apply. I agree with his interpretation of the House order concerning the application of the Standing Orders. In any case, I believe that we should end this discussion and obey the provisions of Standing Order 26(4) which states the following:

Mr. Speaker shall decide, without any debate, whether or not the matter is proper to be discussed.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I cannot accept the last submission made by the government House leader because it would set a very undesirable precedent if the Chair proceeded in the face of a House order which is so explicit about suspending other Standing Orders and preventing your consideration of whether or not the matter is urgent.

If that kind of precedent were to be set now, if you were to consider it anyway, it would mean that any subsequent House order such as this, which all parties agreed would suspend existing Standing Orders, would not be worth the passage in the House. I would strongly suggest, Madam Speaker, that you accept my submission that this House order does in fact supersede all other Standing Orders and prevents the Chair from even considering the matter.

Madam Speaker: The point made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is a good one. Indeed, as Speaker, I feel bound by the order of the House which determines the business for today, and tomorrow to a certain extent, and his point is well taken.

However, Standing Order 26(9), as was pointed out by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), would give me the discretion, if I accepted the urgency of the matter, to set the debate for the following sitting at a specified hour. Therefore, I think the two points are quite valid.

The hon. member is shaking his head. I am saying that he is quite right that I am bound by that order of the House; but I have the other indication that Standing Order 26(9) tells me that I may take it under consideration, and because I am bound by the order of the House, that urgent debate could not possibly occur today. I would have to set it for another time.

Both hon. members are right in their interpretation of the Standing Orders and therefore I feel I must rule on the request for an urgent debate. I must tell the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) that although the subject matter of his application is, of course, very important and of concern to all hon. members, I think I can say it is of a continuing nature and it is difficult to see how I could allow a debate under Standing Order 26. This is particularly relevant when one realizes that the House still has two days remaining to debate the budget, during which debate such a matter can be brought up and will eventually come to a vote on the motion to accept the budget. This is a very efficient way of dealing with this urgent matter.

In addition, there will also be opportunities on the allotted days remaining in the current supply period in which members may bring up this subject for discussion.

I think my predecessor has ruled quite clearly and indicated consistently that debates under Standing Order 26 cannot take place in circumstances such as these, and for these reasons I have to rule out the application made by the hon. member for Oshawa.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are answered by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,648, 2,755, 2,756, 2,757, 2,762, 2,763, 2,764, 2,774, 2,775, 2,776, 2,777, 2,778, 2,780, 2,781, 2,788, 2,798, 2,799, 2,800, 2,801, 2,964, 2,965, 2,966, 3,123 and 3,168.

[Text]

FOOD PRICE SURVEYS

Question No. 2,648—Mr. Neil:

1. Does the government carry out any retail food price surveys other than those of the Department of Agriculture and Statistics Canada?

2. Does the government fund any consumer organization which carries out a similar survey?

3. Is consideration being given to utilizing the same survey staff for both the Department of Agriculture survey and the Statistics Canada survey in order to reduce costs and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. In so far as Statistics Canada is aware, only itself and Agriculture Canada carry out regular retail food price surveys.

2. In so far as Statistics Canada is aware, no consumer organization is funded to carry out a similar survey.

3. Statistics Canada and Agriculture Canada have discussions underway on the relationships between their respective surveys.

CENSUS CONTACTS

Question No. 2,755—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of C. Anderson, 375 Brock Street, Brockville, Ontario among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that this individual is president of the Leeds-Grenville Liberal Association?

2. Did this political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that C. Anderson is president of the Leeds-Grenville Liberal Association is a matter of public record.

2. The contacts are appointed by the minister responsible for Statistics Canada.

See reply to question No. 2,000 answered April 2, 1981.

Question No. 2,756—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Senator D. Wood, Suite 322, 1255 Laird Blvd., Montreal in the constituency of Mount Royal among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is a member of the Senate and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did this political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Senator D. Wood is a member of the Senate and that her party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,757—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of the Hon. Jack Horner, Pollackville, Alberta in the constituency of Crowfoot among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that Mr. Horner is a former cabinet minister?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that the Hon. Jack Horner is a former cabinet minister is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,762—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. Ross Milne, 32 Richmond Dr., Brampton, Ontario among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he was the former Member of Parliament for the constituency of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. Ross Milne was the former Member of Parliament for the constituency of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,763—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of P. G. Carroll, R.R. No. 1, Dunrobin, Ontario among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that this person was the former Liberal candidate for the constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton in the 1979 and 1980 federal elections?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that P. G. Carroll was the former Liberal candidate for the constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton in the 1979 and 1980 federal elections is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,764—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of C. Morris, R.R. No. 2, Simcoe, Ontario in the constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that this person was the past president of the Liberal Association for the constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that C. Morris was the past president of the Liberal Association for the constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,774—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343, which includes the name of Mr. Doug Sirrs, Box 6060, Wetaskiwin, Alberta in the constituency of Wetaskiwin among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the president of the Liberal Association for the constituency of Wetaskiwin?

2. Did political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. Doug Sirrs is the president of the Liberal Association for the constituency of Wetaskiwin is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,775—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. T. Lefebvre, Davidson, Comté Pontiac, Québec among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. T. Lefebvre is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,776—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. J. Campbell of 582 90th Ave., LaSalle, Quebec among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of LaSalle and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. J. Campbell is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of LaSalle and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Order Paper Questions

Question No. 2,777—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. J. L. Leduc of 56 Rue Champoux, Sorel, Quebec among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Richelieu and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. J. L. Leduc is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Richelieu and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,778—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. R. Simmons among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Burin-St. George's and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. R. Simmons is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Burin-St. George's and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,780—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. Bob Daudlin among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Essex-Kent and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. Bob Daudlin is the Member of Parliament for the constituency of Essex-Kent and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,781—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. G. Craig, R.R. No. 1, Walton, Ontario among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he was a candidate in the February 1980 general election for the constituency of Huron-Bruce and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. G. Graig was a candidate in the February, 1980 general election for the constituency of Huron-Bruce and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,788—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mrs. I. Dunn, 235 St. Andrews St., Victoria, British Columbia among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that she is a member of the Liberal Association in the constituency of Victoria?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in her appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mrs. I. Dunn is a member of the Liberal Association in the constituency of Victoria is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,798—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. J. A. Hennebury, 3 Howley Ave., St. John's, Newfoundland among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he was a candidate in the 1980 general election in the constituency of St. John's West and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did this political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. J. A. Hennebury was a candidate in the 1980 general election in the constituency of St. John's West and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,799—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. E. Bishop, 17 Montague, St. John's, Newfoundland among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he was a candidate in the 1980 general election in the constituency of St. John's East and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did this political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. E. Bishop was a candidate in the 1980 general election in the constituency of St. John's East and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,800—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mr. J. Kinley, 80 Victoria Road, Lunenberg, Nova Scotia among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that he ran against the present member for South Shore in the past three federal elections and that his party affiliation is Liberal?

2. Did this political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mr. J. Kinley ran against the present member for South Shore in the past three federal elections and that his party affiliation is Liberal is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

Question No. 2,801—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of Mrs. M. Gelfant, 1510 W. 36th St., Vancouver, British Columbia among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that she is the wife of the Prime Minister's personal dentist?

2. Did this affiliation play a part in her appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that Mrs. M. Gelfant is the wife of the Prime Minister's personal dentist is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,755 answered this day.

LOSS OF HANDHELD RADIO TELEPHONES

Question No. 2,964—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Transport in footnote No. 20 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances were the handheld radio telephones lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the handheld radio telephones?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The handheld radio telephones were stolen in a break and entry into the Low Point, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia light station. This building was being used as an operations centre during the early spring/summer 1979, in connection with the Kurdistan oil spill clean-up operations. The RCMP were informed but were not able to determine the name(s) of the person or persons responsible for the break and entry.

(a) Unknown.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) Yes.

(e) During the balance of the Kurdistan clean-up operations at Low Point, two watchmen were hired for the operations building, new locks were fitted, and the RCMP were requested to increase their patrols of Transport Canada property.

2. Handheld radio telephones are used by field operations personnel in remote locations, on oil slick lickers, on cleanup of oil from beaches, when servicing and repairing communications towers and other equipment, during land surveys, and in other work situations when direct voice contact cannot be made.

LOSS OF ZODIAC BOAT

Question No. 2,965—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Transport in footnote No. 20 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the Zodiac boat lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the Department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the Zodiac boat?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. This inflatable boat was on the wharf at Sorel, P.Q. near the marine emergency office and it disappeared during a weekend. It was verified that the watchman had not seen anyone on the wharf. A report was made immediately to the Sorel police but no results were obtained. The provincial police inspected a ship in Sept-Îles because part of the crew had docked in Sorel in a boat during the weekend that the theft had taken place.

(a) Unknown.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) No.

(e) No valuable equipment is left on the wharf.

2. The boat was used for marine emergency operations.

LOSS OF SCAFFOLDING

Question No. 2,966—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Transport in footnote No. 20 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the scaffolding lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the scaffolding?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The scaffolding was stolen at Longueuil, P.Q., at night-time, during the period the lighthouse at Traverse Longue Pointe was being constructed. Although the Longueuil police were given a statement their subsequent inquiry did not produce any result.

(a) Unknown.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) No, because other scaffolding was available.

(e) The only means of ensuring that a similar situation would not occur during lighthouse construction would be to engage a night watchman. However, experience has shown it is not profitable to do so.

2. The department uses scaffolding for lighthouse construction.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 3,123—Mr. Clarke:

1. During the period 1970-80 did the Federal Business Development Bank acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does the Federal Business Development Bank have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned:

1. The Federal Business Development Bank or its predecessor, the Industrial Development Bank, have not created any subsidiaries during the period 1970-80. However, in the normal course of providing its financial assistance to Canadian businesses, it occasionally makes equity investments in Canadian businesses. Because of the confidential nature of these transactions, we are not in a position to divulge the names of the corporations into which the bank has invested. However, the annual financial statements of the Federal Business Development Bank, which are widely distributed and available to any Canadian, contain statistical information on these investment activities. The bank does not seek control of the companies in which it invests and the percentage of equity acquired by the bank normally varies from 10 per cent to 40 per cent for an average participation of some 25-30 per cent. The latest annual audited financial statements at March 31, 1981 indicate that the FBDB had, at that date, 152 investment customers representing a total investment of $43,762,000 or an average amount per customer of $288,000. The present over-all book value of these investments is not appreciably different from the over-all cost of acquisition. During the ten-year period from 1970 to 1980, the bank, through its equity investment activities, provided approximately $64 million of equity funds to some 260 different companies.

2. The FBDB does not specifically seek to increase its ownership position in the companies in which it has invested. It usually tries to divest as soon as the principal objectives set by the company and the bank at the time of investment have been met. Divestiture will most often be achieved through the company or the shareholder buying back the bank's position.

GOVERNMENT DOCK AT YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.

Question No. 3,168—Mr. Nickerson:

During recent years were government vessels, such as Canadian Coast Guard ships, on several occasions unable to tie up at the government dock in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories because it was blocked by private craft and, if so, what plans does the government have to alleviate the problem, while at the same time allowing private vessels to use the dock when it is not required for official use?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Regional officials of Transport Canada are aware that government vessels have been inconvenienced because berthing space has not been available at the government wharf in Yellowknife. This wharf has been unsupervised for at least seven years, owing to the difficulty in attracting wharfinger personnel to a position with such low revenue potential. Although the city of Yellowknife was approached in August, 1980 to determine whether they would consider leasing the wharf, they showed no interest in such an arrangement.

Possible actions to alleviate problems include the posting of signs limiting the length of time a vessel may berth at the wharf, and designating a berth for vessels actively engaged in loading and unloading goods and people. However, these measures require enforcement on a continuing basis. Although Transport Canada regional officials will continue to monitor the situation at Yellowknife, if is unlikely that significant improvements will be seen until the services of a wharfinger can be retained.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

• (1530)

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary when he expects to be able to give me answers to the written questions on the Order Paper Nos. 3,380 to 3,438, which concern recommendations made in the "Obstacles" report. At the time the question was first asked in the House by myself on October 27, as recorded at page 12211 of Hansard, the minister indicated that it would be possible to provide answers on the following day.

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could give me an indication as to when I can expect answers to those questions.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I shall make inquiries on behalf of the hon. member and, hopefully, we will have the replies soon.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Monday, November 30, consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

SCHEDULE B

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités. Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires. Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète. Interprète

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques. Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques. Programmes de promotion sociale

Official Languages of Canada

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of Canada

16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

16. (1) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Canada; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions du Parlement et du gouvernement du Canada. Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of New Brunswick

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the legislature and government of New Brunswick.

(2) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions de la Légis- Langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick

Advancement of status and use

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

Proceedings of Parliament

17. (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.

Proceedings of New Brunswick legislature

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.

Parliamentary statutes and records

18. (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

New Brunswick statutes and records

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

Proceedings in courts established by Parliament

19. (1) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.

Proceedings in New Brunswick courts

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or lature et du gouvernement du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Progression vers l'égalité

(3) La présente charte ne limite pas le pouvoir du Parlement et des législatures de favoriser la progression vers l'égalité de statut ou d'usage du français et de l'anglais.

Travaux du Parlement

17. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux du Parlement.

Travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Documents parlementaires

18. (1) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux du Parlement sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Procédures devant les tribunaux établis par le Parlement

19. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux établis par le Parlement et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

(2) Le public a, au Nouveau-Brunswick, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec tout bureau des institutions de la législature ou du gouvernement ou pour en recevoir les services.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions du Nouveau-Brunswick

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Dispositions générales

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be con-

Maintien des autres droits et libertés

26. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne constitue pas strued as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

une négation des autres droits ou libertés qui existent au Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

28. Indépendamment des autres dispositions de la présente charte, les droits et libertés qui y sont mentionnés sont garantis également aux personnes des deux sexes.

Égalité de garantie des droits pour les deux sexes

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

29. Les dispositions de la présente charte ne portent pas atteinte aux droits ou privilèges garantis en vertu de la Constitution du Canada concernant les écoles séparées et autres écoles confessionnelles.

Maintien des droits relatifs à certaines écoles

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Effet de la dérogation

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Durée de validité

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Nouvelle adoption

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

Durée de validité

Citation

Titre

Citation

34. This Part may be cited as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

34. Titre de la présente partie : Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

Titre

PART II

RIGHTS OF THE ABORIGINAL PEOPLES OF CANADA

PARTIE II

DROITS DES PEUPLES AUTOCHTONES DU CANADA

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

35. (1) Les droits existants — ancestraux ou issus de traités — des peuples autochtones du Canada sont reconnus et confirmés.

Confirmation des droits existants des peuples autochtones

Definition of "aboriginal peoples of Canada"

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

(2) Dans la présente loi, «peuples autochtones du Canada» s'entend notamment des Indiens, des Inuit et des Métis du Canada.

Définition de «peuples autochtones du Canada»

PART III

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PARTIE III

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

36. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

36. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART IV

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

PARTIE IV

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Constitutional conference

37. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Conférence constitutionnelle

37. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART V

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

38. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces

Procédure normale de modification

38. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue repré-

that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

sente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Majorité simple

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Désaccord

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Levée du désaccord

Restriction on proclamation

39. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

39. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Restriction

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Idem

Compensation

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

40. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 38(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Compensation

Amendment by unanimous consent

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters

41. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivan-

Consentement unanime

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

Amendment by general procedure

42. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 41(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

43. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and tes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 43, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Procédure normale de modification

42. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 38(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 41*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 38(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

43. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

Amendments by Parliament

44. Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

44. Sous réserve des articles 41 et 42, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

45. Subject to section 41, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

45. Sous réserve de l'article 41, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Modification par les législatures

Initiation of amendment procedures

46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

46. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 38, 41, 42 et 43 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Initiative des procédures

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Possibilité de révocation

Amendments without Senate resolution

47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41, 42 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

47. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 38, 41, 42 ou 43, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Computation du délai

Advice to issue proclamation

48. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions

48. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolu-

Demande de proclamation

required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Constitutional conference

49. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

tions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Conférence constitutionnelle

49. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART VI

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

PARTIE VI

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

50. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

50. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

51. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

Idem

51. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

PART VII

GENERAL

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

(a) the Canada Act, including this Act;

(b) the Acts and orders referred to in Schedule I; and

(c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Repeals and new names

53. (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of Schedule I are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

PARTIE VII

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

Primauté de la Constitution du Canada

52. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

Constitution du Canada

(2) La Constitution du Canada comprend :

a) la Loi sur le Canada, y compris la présente loi;

b) les textes législatifs et les décrets figurant à l'annexe I;

c) les modifications des textes législatifs et des décrets mentionnés aux alinéas a) ou b).

Modification

(3) La Constitution du Canada ne peut être modifiée que conformément aux pouvoirs conférés par elle.

Abrogation et nouveaux titres

53. (1) Les textes législatifs et les décrets énumérés à la colonne I de l'annexe I sont abrogés ou modifiés dans la mesure indiquée à la colonne II. Sauf abrogation, ils restent en vigueur en tant que lois du Canada sous les titres mentionnés à la colonne III.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act, that refers to an enactment referred to in Schedule I by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in Schedule I may be cited as the Constitution Act followed by the year and number, if any, of its enactment.

Modifications corrélatives

(2) Tout texte législatif ou réglementaire, sauf la Loi sur le Canada, qui fait mention d'un texte législatif ou décret figurant à l'annexe I par le titre indiqué à la colonne I est modifié par substitution à ce titre du titre correspondant mentionné à la colonne III; tout Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique non mentionné à l'annexe I peut être cité sous le titre de Loi constitutionnelle suivi de l'indication de l'année de son adoption et éventuellement de son numéro.

Repeal and consequential amendments

54. Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Abrogation et modifications qui en découlent

54. La partie IV est abrogée un an après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie et le gouverneur général peut, par proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada, abroger le présent article et apporter en conséquence de cette double abrogation les aménagements qui s'imposent à la présente loi.

French version of Constitution of Canada

55. A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in Schedule I shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

Version française de certains textes constitutionnels

55. Le ministre de la Justice du Canada est chargé de rédiger, dans les meilleurs délais, la version française des parties de la Constitution du Canada qui figurent à l'annexe I; toute partie suffisamment importante est, dès qu'elle est prête, déposée pour adoption par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conformément à la procédure applicable à l'époque à la modification des dispositions constitutionnelles qu'elle contient.

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

56. Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 55, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de certains textes constitutionnels

56. Les versions française et anglaise des parties de la Constitution du Canada adoptées dans ces deux langues ont également force de loi. En outre, ont également force de loi, dès l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'article 55, d'une partie de la version française de la Constitution, cette partie et la version anglaise correspondante.

English and French versions of this Act

57. The English and French versions of this Act are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de la présente loi

57. Les versions française et anglaise de la présente loi ont également force de loi.

Commencement

58. Subject to section 59, this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Entrée en vigueur

58. Sous réserve de l'article 59, la présente loi entre en vigueur à la date fixée par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Commencement of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec

59. (1) Paragraph 23(1)(a) shall come into force in respect of Quebec on a day to be

Entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec

59. (1) L'alinéa 23(1)a) entre en vigueur pour le Québec à la date fixée par proclama-

fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

tion de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Authorization of Quebec

(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be issued only where authorized by the legislative assembly or government of Quebec.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (1) ne peut être prise qu'après autorisation de l'assemblée législative ou du gouvernement du Québec.

Autorisation du Québec

Repeal of this section

(3) This section may be repealed on the day paragraph 23(1)(a) comes into force in respect of Quebec and this Act amended and renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of this section, by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

(3) Le présent article peut être abrogé à la date d'entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec, et la présente loi faire l'objet, dès cette abrogation, des modifications et changements de numérotation qui en découlent, par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Abrogation du présent article

Short title and citations

60. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1981, and the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1975 (No. 2) and this Act may be cited together as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1981.

60. Titre abrégé de la présente annexe : Loi constitutionnelle de 1981; titre commun des lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1975 (nº 2) et de la présente loi : Lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1981.

Titres

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

MODERNIZATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
1.	British North America Act, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	(1) Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867." (2) Section 20 is repealed. (3) Class 1 of section 91 is repealed. (4) Class 1 of section 92 is repealed.	Constitution Act, 1867
2.	An Act to amend and continue the Act 32-33 Victoria chapter 3; and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Can.)	(1) The long title is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "Manitoba Act, 1870." (2) Section 20 is repealed.	Manitoba Act, 1870
3.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the union, dated the 23rd day of June, 1870		Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order
4.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting British Columbia into the Union, dated the 16th day of May, 1871		British Columbia Terms of Union
5.	British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)	Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1871."	Constitution Act, 1871
6.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the Union, dated the 26th day of June, 1873		Prince Edward Island Terms of Union
7.	Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.)		Parliament of Canada Act, 1875
8.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting all British possessions and Territories in North America and islands adjacent thereto into the Union, dated the 31st day of July, 1880		Adjacent Territories Order

ANNEXE I

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

ACTUALISATION DE LA CONSTITUTION

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
1.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	(1) L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé. (3) La catégorie 1 de l'article 91 est abrogée. (4) La catégorie 1 de l'article 92 est abrogée.	Loi constitutionnelle de 1867
2.	Acte pour amender et continuer l'acte trente-deux et trente-trois Victoria, chapitre trois, et pour établir et constituer le gouvernement de la province de Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Canada)	(1) Le titre complet est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé.	Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba
3.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Terre de Rupert et le Territoire du Nord-Ouest, en date du 23 juin 1870		Décret en conseil sur la terre de Rupert et le territoire du Nord-Ouest
4.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Colombie-Britannique, en date du 16 mai 1871		Conditions de l'adhésion de la Colombie-Britannique
5.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)	L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1871.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1871
6.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, en date du 26 juin 1873		Conditions de l'adhésion de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard
7.	Acte du Parlement du Canada, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1875 sur le Parlement du Canada
8.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant dans l'Union tous les territoires et possessions britanniques dans l'Amérique du Nord, et les îles adjacentes à ces territoires et possessions, en date du 31 juillet 1880		Décret en conseil sur les territoires adjacents

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
9.	British North America Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1886."	Constitution Act, 1886
10.	Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)		Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889
11.	Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
12.	The Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3 (Can.)		Alberta Act
13.	The Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42 (Can.)		Saskatchewan Act
14.	British North America Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1907."	Constitution Act, 1907
15.	British North America Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1915."	Constitution Act, 1915
16.	British North America Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1930."	Constitution Act, 1930
17.	Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.)	In so far as they apply to Canada, (a) section 4 is repealed; and (b) subsection 7(1) is repealed.	Statute of Westminster, 1931
18.	British North America Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1940."	Constitution Act, 1940
19.	British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
9.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1886.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1886
10.	Acte du Canada (limites d'Ontario) 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1889 sur le Canada (frontières de l'Ontario)
11.	Acte concernant l'Orateur canadien (nomination d'un suppléant) 1895, 2e session, 59 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
12.	Acte de l'Alberta, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 3 (Canada)		Loi sur l'Alberta
13.	Acte de la Saskatchewan, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 42 (Canada)		Loi sur la Saskatchewan
14.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1907, 7 Ed. VII, c. 11 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1907.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1907
15.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1915.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1915
16.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1930.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1930
17.	Statut de Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (R.-U.)	Dans la mesure où ils s'appliquent au Canada : a) l'article 4 est abrogé; b) le paragraphe 7(1) est abrogé.	Statut de Westminster de 1931
18.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1940.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1940
19.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
20.	British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
21.	British North America Act, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Newfoundland Act."	Newfoundland Act
22.	British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
23.	British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
24.	British North America Act, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Can.)	The Act is repealed.
25.	British North America Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1960."	Constitution Act, 1960
26.	British North America Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1964."	Constitution Act, 1964
27.	British North America Act, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Part I (Can.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1965."	Constitution Act, 1965
28.	British North America Act, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 38(1) (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1974."	Constitution Act, 1974

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
20.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
21.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi sur Terre-Neuve.»	Loi sur Terre-Neuve
22.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique (N° 2), 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
23.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
24.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Canada)	La loi est abrogée.
25.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1960.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1960
26.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1964.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1964
27.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1965.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1965
28.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par le paragraphe 38(1) de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1974.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1974

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Concluded

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
29.	British North America Act, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 31 (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975
30.	British North America Act (No. 2), 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Can.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975

And on the amendment of Mr. Epp, seconded by Miss MacDonald,—That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended by striking out Section 40 and substituting the following therefor:

"40. In the event that a province dissents from an amendment conferring legislative jurisdiction on Parliament, the Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of that province, taking into account the per capita costs to exercise that jurisdiction in the provinces which have approved the amendment."

And on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Deans,—That the amendment be amended by striking out, in the first line, the words "a province" and substituting the words "the province of Québec".

ANNEXE I (fin)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
29.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par l'article 31 de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975
30.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique nº 2, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Canada)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975

Sur l'amendement de M. Epp, appuyé par M^lle^ MacDonald,—Qu'on modifie le projet de Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 en retranchant l'article 40 et en le remplaçant par ce qui suit:

«40. Si une province n'est pas d'accord sur une modification qui donne compétence législative au Parlement, le gouvernement du Canada doit indemniser raisonnablement le gouvernement de cette province, compte tenu du coût per capita de l'exercice de cette compétence dans les provinces qui ont approuvé la modification.»

Et sur le sous-amendement de M. Broadbent, appuyé par M. Deans,—Qu'on modifie l'amendement, à la première ligne, en retranchant les mots «une province» et en les remplaçant par les mots «la province de Québec».

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Madam Speaker, although it may seem that all has been said that could be said about the Constitution and the draft resolution before the House, I feel it is important at this stage in the debate to recall the context of our representation and to analyse again some of the aspects of the decision we are about to make. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall go back to the objectives that guided the government in its decision to proceed with the patriation of the Constitution, because I feel it is of the utmost importance that Canadians should remember what those objectives were.

I shall also touch on some aspects of the contents of our resolution, including the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and, more specifically, on how they affect the quality of life of Canadians. However, I should not wish to continue my speech without mentioning the significant contribution made by some 300 people who, on behalf of their groups, told the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada about their vision of our country. And how could I forget the excellent work done by the members of this committee and especially by the co-chairmen, Senator Harry Hayes and the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal), the member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. Each in their own way, they have put their mark on one of the most decisive changes that has taken place in this country during the past 100 years.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to express in this House some thoughts I have had following our consideration of the draft resolution and the speeches we have heard in the House and in various areas in the country. During the past months we have seen at least two schools of thought regarding the manner in which Government in Canada is defined and structured. There are those who would like to have this country consist of independent units—sovereign, to all intents and purposes—and that is the position taken by the government of the province of Quebec. Our country would then be no more and no less than the sum of its parts. That is more or less the view taken by the leaders of that province.

Fortunately, there are also those, and I am sure they are more numerous, who sincerely believe that Canada is not, and should never be, merely the sum of its parts. We belong to those who refuse to let this country become a fortuitous juxtaposition of regions, linked only by the opportunistic needs of the moment. To us, Canada is an entity with regional particularities which are to be considered, certainly, but Canada is, above all, a nation. And a nation must be able to exist as such, notwithstanding its different units, and to exist, a nation must have a national government. That, is the concept of Canada our draft resolution wishes to express, and it is supported by nine provincial premiers and by the vast majority of Canadians, notwithstanding the electoral or patently chauvinistic considerations of the Premier of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, these two positions are confronting each other in this country today. And these are the forces that for 54 years have prevented our country from throwing off the shackles of the British North America Act. And it is because we had to rid ourselves of this anachronism which has frustrated our efforts for 54 years, and because no agreement existed and no agreement could be found, that we decided to proceed with the patriation of the Canadian Constitution. Some will say we are doing this unilaterally, but since the last federal-provincial conference in Ottawa, Canadians have been able to witness the flexibility of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who instead of forcing the provincial premiers to accept the Victoria amending formula, which he preferred, bowed to the demands of the provincial consensus which opted for the Vancouver formula, but without the fiscal compensation demanded by the provinces, a decision that was made for perfectly acceptable reasons. As a consequence, rich provinces were allowed to opt out of a federal program requested by most provinces and, in addition to opting out, which is allowed under the Vancouver formula, they demanded fiscal compensation and, as several of my colleagues have already pointed out, it would probably mean the end of our social programs such as medicare, old age security or unemployment insurance. Let us take unemployment insurance, for example. Can you imagine what would have happened if compensation had been paid under that agreement supposing that provinces such as Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario had opted out of the program and had been compensated besides, under the so-called Vancouver amending formula? Quebec or the maritimes would never had been able to pay for a similar program, an unemployment insurance scheme as we know it today, and provide benefits as generous as those paid at present.

It is to retain those advantages that before agreeing to some of the proposals put forward by the parties opposite, we have to accept what the Minister of State said yesterday in the House, namely, that extensive studies should be carried out so that in future negotiations or at future federal-provincial meetings, such matters might be considered. Therefore, we intend to patriate our Constitution and take that opportunity to make some amendments, the most important of which are undoubtedly the clauses dealing with natural resources, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the amending formula. Let us see first how a Charter of Rights and Freedoms is entrenched in the Constitution. It seems to me that by doing so, we are only complying with the wishes of most Canadians and following the example of some Canadian provinces. In that regard, it seems strange that, though all the premiers agreed on the principles the charter is meant to protect, several of them opposed their being enshrined in the Canadian Constitution.

● (1540)

We want it to be impossible in the future for legislators to change, the most fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens according to political circumstances. And to those who tell us, especially in Quebec, that our charter is too general in nature, we say that it embodies what we consider to be the basic minimum, that nothing is keeping the provinces from doing more. As for the effects of that charter on Bill 101 in Quebec, which have brought bitter complaints from some of the top brass in the Parti Québécois, let us see what they really are. First, the real purpose of the charter is to protect a principle on which all provincial premiers agreed in Montreal in 1978, including Mr. Lévesque, and I quote:

> That every child of the francophone or anglophone minority has the right to receive primary and secondary school instruction in his own tongue in every province wherever numbers justify it.

In Quebec, Bill 101 stipulates that the language of instruction for the children of that province is French, except for children one of whose parents went to an English primary school in Quebec. So, Section 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms alters Bill 101 slightly in that it gives a parent who is a Canadian citizen and whose first language is English the right to send his children to English schools. Immigrants, even those whose mother tongue is English, can no longer avail themselves of that clause which applies, as I said, to Canadian citizens only.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are a few changes which the charter will bring to Quebec Bill 101. As the elected representative of a Quebec constituency, I am delighted with these changes basically for two reasons. First of all, I am sure that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will not in any way affect the thoroughly French character of Quebec society, but on the contrary will to a certain extent ensure the continued existence and development of the French language in North America. That is a consideration of the utmost importance for me as well as for the other members of the Quebec caucus, in spite of what the PQ representatives would like Quebecers to believe. I should like to quote part of what the Minister of State stated yesterday in the House:

> The Quebec challenge is not to ensure that the French language and culture will prevail in Quebec. That goal has already been reached. According to official figures, 86.2 per cent of young Quebecers are now in the French education system; the number of students in English schools declined from 250,000 before 1975 to the current 168,000, a 33 per cent drop over six years. Even with the "Canada clause", the invasion of Quebec by English-speaking Canadians from other provinces is not to be feared any more. Indeed, the opposite will happen.

So, I fully agree with this position of the Minister of State. I sincerely believe that the fear some are trying to instil into us as Quebecers is unfounded. The other reason I am delighted with the terms of the charter is that Section 23, among others, will certainly restore the economic situation in Montreal to a certain extent and here is why. If head offices have been leaving Montreal—and as everybody is aware, they have since 1977, Mr. Speaker—it is because corporations thinks Bill 101 is unduly restrictive to Canadians who are moving to Quebec. As their English-speaking officials realized they could no longer send their children to English schools, following their transfer to Montreal or elsewhere in Quebec, many would refuse any transfer to Quebec and still do. The situation was unpleasant for some companies. That is why they decided to move their head offices out of Quebec. So I am confident that the charter will help counter this job drain resulting from companies which have been relocating outside Quebec since 1977. Mr. Speaker, I read an article on that issue in Le Devoir of November 18 where the concerns of the minister responsible in Quebec, Mr. Laurin, were expressed with respect to the help given to immigrants or at least to those who may come from the U.S. to set up companies here. Allow me to quote from an editorial by Jean-Pierre Proulx published in Le Devoir of November 18. I quote:

> How can one explain this unbelievable arrangement? It is fairly easy to imagine how things went. The Department of Trade and Commerce naturally wants to attract new business to Quebec. In our U.S. representations, officers from T. & C.

—the Department of Trade and Commerce—> —and the trade commissioners who go down there occasionally, try to persuade companies that their managers are better off in Quebec if they apply for permanent resident status, since many benefits would be provided for them such as: social security, free schooling for their children, low university tuition fees, opportunity for sitting on the company's board, etc.

But then they are asked:

> "What about the language of education?" . . . "What about Bill 101?"

That is the question government officers would rather avoid. They have no choice but to say:

> French schools. They try to show the benefits of the system, but they are not always very convincing.

Exceptions can be made. And that is what Mr. Laurin tries to do, he tries to make exceptions so that those executives can come to Quebec and send their children to English schools, he tries to get around Bill 101. Now, with the Constitution, residents from outside Quebec but who are Canadian will not have to try to get around Bill 101, and once and for all they will have access to English schools.

In addition, we must keep in mind that the constitutional proposal confirms once and for all the equality of English and French within every institution under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament. In other words, all the other provisions of Bill 101 are maintained, namely, those concerning the working language, those concerning the language of advertising, the language of trades and the language of the professions. The essential aspects of Bill 101 are not only maintained but indeed confirmed by the Canadian constitutional project.

The agreement on the new Constitution which the Parti Québécois government refuses to endorse would certainly be quite an advantage for all men and women in Quebec. But the PQ government, whose option is still the independence of Quebec, has absolutely no interest in compromising with its partners in the Canadian federation. But Quebecers do know where their interests lie because, whether we like it or not, we have every reason to believe that once and for all our project will put an end to all those 54 years of sterile rifts and constitutional status quo. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have shown enough patience and they are congratulating us.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add some comments on this very important resolution, especially now that we have an opportunity to seriously consider an amendment that, in my view at least, would enable us to initiate or to continue, or, depending on the parties concerned, simply to reopen or to pursue, absolutely essential negotiations with the government of my province.

I was listening just now to comments made by a member from the island of Montreal. It is true that most members in the House always wonder why the member for Joliette does not hold the same views as the members on the other side of this House. I am doing my best, Mr. Speaker, to report comments and remarks that I, too, have heard in the province of Quebec. I am not going to discuss the arguments put forward by the previous speaker, but I would simply like to say that it is pretty far-fetched to claim that this resolution is going to achieve what we have all been trying to achieve, namely, national unity and national harmony. This problem is not going to be settled, considering what is happening, what has happened and what can be expected to happen. We must persevere, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I am speaking today to this amendment, and I want to take this opportunity to ask my colleagues from Quebec to think about the impact of an agreement without Quebec. It was mentioned, and the House leader (Mr. Pinard) also mentioned, that we would have a historic vote tomorrow. Well, today, for Canadians and all my colleagues and my friends in Quebec, there will also be a historic vote, because the vote we are going to have today may help us to get out of this impasse and to achieve a rapprochement with Quebec on this agreement. In any case, the outcome will depend on the good will of the members in this House.

On April 16 of this year, and I think everyone will agree, an agreement was reached by eight provinces. Granted, the federal government was not a party to this agreement. It is recognized that the province of Quebec exchanged or, in the view of some people, abandoned, its veto right for the clause on compensation. It was on that condition that Quebec relinquished a tradition, according to some, a veto right, according to others. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has been making fun of most Quebecers who thought that we had a veto right. In a speech he made not long ago, the minister himself accused Quebec of making the mistake of giving up its veto right, and now he turns around and says that Quebec never had a veto right or that the provinces never had a veto right. If nonsense were a fatal disease, Mr. Speaker, the minister would not have made it to the House this week. And so, on Friday, I think, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) hastily told us that he was not taking any chances, and that if hon. members continued to propose amendments or try to make certain changes, this would jeopardize the agreement.

• (1550)

In this case, Mr. Speaker, everyone admits that there is no danger that the agreement will be broken, particularly with respect to that proposal. That was the wish of the premiers in April, as I have said. The two provinces not represented did not have any objection to all that. To my mind, there is no possibility that the agreement signed by the ten governments will be broken. It would be enough if the Right Hon. the Prime Minister were to show good will as well. On November 5 last, the Prime Minister of Canada, quite distressed, stated that he regretted the disagreement on the part of Quebec. But he also said, and I remember that very well, Mr. Speaker, that he hoped he would find solutions so that Quebec would be party to this agreement before sending it to London. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I dream, I believe and I still wish that Quebec will sign the agreement. Perhaps both sides have expressed doubts about the good faith of the government of Quebec, but who could prove it in fact? Has Quebec shown enough good faith? I do not know whether it has or not but I do know that the government here in the House and the Primer Minister whose responsibility it is to prove it has, have not done so.

I believe that if one side made a mistake, it was made in Ottawa and it was quite obvious. During the evening of November 5, the Prime Minister of Canada tried to convince Canadians and Quebecers alike by telling them, I think, that there may be room for closer ties and agreements. But as far as I know, never did the Prime Minister of Canada make a special effort to contact the Premier of Quebec. It would have been interesting to see the reaction of the Premier of Quebec, it would have been interesting to see Quebecers at least, to allow Quebecers to judge the good or bad faith of their own government. Of course the officials had lengthy exchanges, there was dialogue through the mass media, but I do not think there was any personal contact, and that is what I regret on behalf of all Canadians and all Quebecers. Under the circumstances I remember very well that, the same day, I think, our leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Clark) made a speech and took that opportunity to urge the Prime Minister of Canada to show his good faith, pointing out to him his responsibilities as Prime Minister of Canada. He asked him to do whatever was necessary to get Quebec back into the fold and to find those solutions to convince Quebec that it should sign the agreement, because we are indeed talking about a very important agreement for the future of the Canadian people. As my leader said, and I remember that very well, it would have been quite interesting to see the reaction of the Quebec government.

I am quite prepared to take an objective approach to the resolution, but I certainly disagree with the charge that the government of Quebec has acted in bad faith because I know that the necessary steps were not taken here in Ottawa. And I am wondering how it is that, out of 70-odd members, there were not at least a few to decide to go the extra mile than just be content with making accusations. If the government of Quebec showed a negative attitude, it is unforgivable that the federal government should have done the same because the central government has a role to play, namely to establish closer ties among the provinces. As a Quebecer, I cannot be satisfied with nor can I accept that agreement among nine provinces. No, I think that the historical vote we are going to have today might be more important than the one slated for tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Under the circumstances, thanks to the initiatives taken by our leader that were noticed and understood by our other colleagues, we put forward proposals and amendments to bring about a breakthrough and an understanding and, hopefully, an agreement with the Quebec government. I submit the Progressive Conservative Party acted responsibly on behalf of the nation. This is what responsibility is all about in a political party. Our committee on the Constitution did some hard work, and I am most happy to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). It is in line with the equity touted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget a few days ago. It reflects a sense of justice, it would go along the lines of that just society that this government never envisaged over the last 15 years.

For very different reasons referred to yesterday by the hon. member for Provencher, the provinces could give unanimous support to the amendment we are moving today. My colleagues will have an opportunity to speak for other provinces, and I wholeheartedly support the points made yesterday by my colleague from Provencher. But as far as Quebec is concerned this is vital, Mr. Speaker. I think my colleagues from Quebec are also aware of this. I realize the Prime Minister is not in total agreement, indeed he does not agree at all. But to what extent should they attempt in these final moments to bring the Prime Minister to his senses and to make him realize the importance of Quebec's participation in that accord before the London expedition is launched? The Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) made some comments on that yesterday, and I was pleased that he did not oppose the principle of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Provencher. Subject to certain constraints, as I can well imagine, he attempted to reassure us when he said: "Well now, maybe not in the first stage, but this could happen in the second stage, when this Constitution comes back and those amendments are all followed up." Well, it is very difficult to bank on the good intentions—which I am not questioning—expressed by the hon. member for Rosemont, the Minister of State. However, that is not good enough.

Mr. Speaker, all the members from Quebec are aware of this. The problem will not be solved by rejecting it outright, as did the Right Hon. Prime Minister on Friday when he said: "I will accept no amendment until the final vote!" Is that the just society he was talking about when he became Prime Minister in 1968? How can we stand idly by when we are allowed no discussion, no amendments? He said so in so many words! But government members should feel much more outraged than myself about that. None of these members would have cause or would have the right to move an amendment, even if it eventually allowed us to throw some light on our discussions. That is the height of arrogance, Mr. Speaker! We are being told: Move any amendments you want, they will be rejected, even if they are worthwhile! That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, not good enough indeed! We object to this procedure as parliamentarians, and I hope some people in my province will seize this last opportunity today to at least meet the first condition which the Quebec Premier considered essential when he refused to sign the agreement.

● (1600)

The Prime Minister of Canada said recently in Quebec City about the decision of the Supreme Court: We are now acting within the law; we are acting within the Constitution. It remains to be seen whether or not we are acting equitably. The rejection of all the amendments tabled since last Friday certainly does not reflect the just society nor the equity that should be shown by any government respectful of its people. Of course, as concerns this amendment which is especially important to the Quebec government and constitutes an essential condition for the Quebec government, I must repeat to my colleagues from Quebec what I said last Tuesday. Every one of us has always supported our governments in Quebec, at least since I have had the right to vote and as long as I can recall, every one of us in Quebec, whether Liberal or Conservative, whether Grit or Tory, has always congratulated our governments on opposing any federal intrusion in areas as vital as those which we are now discussing.

It is interesting to note that on these specific points, as my colleagues from Quebec are well aware, people like Lesage, Johnson, Duplessis, Bourassa and so on would have reacted in the same manner to the amendment now before us, for the same reasons and regardless of the philosophy or the program of their political party. No Quebec Premier, whether Tory or Liberal, would have tolerated the attitude and the decision facing us today. He would have congratulated the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and the hon. member for Provencher on suggesting a solution which is proper, acceptable and necessary when all risks are considered and it is our firm intention to build a just society and a country where everyone may live well and comfortably. All these former premiers would have done exactly what the Quebec government is doing now. And if this Parliament was to react positively to this amendment and if, as a result, the Quebec government was likely to be embarrassed, I believe that a great majority of Quebecers would endorse this proposal. Those who deliberately show ill will in any case would be placed in an even more embarrassing situation if they did not respond to that.

We are already getting indications from the Quebec government that this proposal is vital, essential and, at the very least, a first step in the right direction. How futile, that my party should have proposed it instead of the government which should have assumed its responsibilities. In any event, the government did nothing to help us on this side of the House to draw Quebec closer and induce it to sign this agreement which, according to Mr. Ryan, cannot be a Canadian agreement without the participation of Quebec. We are not dealing here with the separatists only. Mr. Ryan speaks on behalf of thousands of Liberals. He does not agree either with the resolution as a whole. I would not say that he is as adamant as Mr. Lévesque but he certainly does not agree with the resolution as it now stands.

Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I shall take this opportunity, once more today, to ask those 70 or so hon. members from my province to view this amendment as a positive step, a partial solution to the problem Canada and the government are facing at this time. I am sure Quebecers will be watching the vote very closely today on this amendment, which is of special value and significance to me as a Quebecer, as well as to others. And the generosity of this amendment, which responds to the concern of all the provinces is, in my opinion, consistent with this justice and equity of all the provinces. I could even think in terms of my own home town and say, well, I do not want the others to get this benefit too. I suggest that we are demonstrating equity and justice—not charity—when we ask that this amendment apply to all the provinces, and we rely also on our provincial premiers. To those who might be concerned about possible abuse, I say that they have a very poor idea of these premiers' fair play.

We rely on the other provinces concerning this amendment, and I hope that the hon. members from Quebec especially will help us compel the government to accept this amendment, because it provides an element of solution and makes a compromise possible in our common endeavour. I know that the hon. members from Quebec would be delighted to see the Quebec government sign this accord. Is it possible that one of the provinces which signed this document some 114 years ago be absent from such an important resolution? I hope Quebecers will not permit anybody to call them traitors on this amendment because it is of utmost importance to the future of Quebec, to the future of Canada, and if this amendment is lost, I wonder why we would continue this debate which is essential to the future of Canada. This resolution is quite imperfect, but without this amendment, I do not think that a Quebecer worthy of the name could continue saying anything good about this resolution.

• (1600)

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is with very mixed emotions that I address the resolution before the House this afternoon. On one hand—

[Translation]

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet) on a point of order.

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I had a question of privilege and I do not think you heard me. I want to ask the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), through you Mr. Speaker, if he would accept two questions on the points he just raised.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has used up all his time. Such questions may be asked with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: The hon. member for Joliette has referred to the good faith of the PQ government and to the more or less bad faith of the Canadian government. I wonder whether he could point out to me one instance where the PQ has shown good faith during the constitutional negotiations? That is my first question.

Second, when he suggests that the government refuses to assume its responsibilities with respect to new amendments at this point, I wonder whether the hon. member for Joliette is aware of the telegram which Mr. Bennett, the spokesman for the provinces, forwarded last week on potential amendments to the Charter. Accordingly, I would like thim to be aware of the fact that it is not the Canadian government which is rejecting new amendments—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Roberval has asked her questions, does the hon. member for Joliette want to answer?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to prove that the government of Quebec was showing any good faith, I merely said that there are people who are questioning its good faith. I did not condemn that, nor am I saying that they should not, besides, that is something I could not do.

As I said, I know that in Ottawa there has been no evidence of good will, since it was up to the Prime Minister of Canada to contact the Quebec Premier, but he failed to do so and the Minister of Justice merely ridiculed, criticized and laughed at the Quebec government. He has shown disrespect to a provincial government, whatever may be its political stance.

With regard to amendments, Mr. Bennett from British Columbia stated that a telegram was sent to the Prime Minister of Canada, but I have a feeling that the Prime Minister of Canada tried to warn us before receiving that telegram and that anyhow the British Columbia Premier was agreeable to the compensation formula. I think that it would have been easy for him to answer affirmatively if the Prime Minister of Canada had then seriously considered the amendment now before us.

• (1610)

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has made some entirely false statements which I would like him to withdraw.

Mr. La Salle: No way!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, it is with very mixed emotions that I address this constitutional resolution this afternoon. On the one hand, I am pleased that we have an agreement to proceed with patriation, an amending formula and a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There are many good clauses in the resolution which I support. As hon. members know, I have been a strong proponent of patriation, a Canadian Constitution and a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for a long time. Hon. members can read my speech in this House of March 12 this year, when I gave full-hearted support to the resolution which was then before us.

On the other hand, I am not happy at all with the revised charter, with the new amending formula, the new wording which applies to the charter, and the new wording on aboriginal rights. In particular, I am not pleased with the introduction of the "notwithstanding" clause into the charter, a so-called override clause, and, in particular, as it would apply to Section 2, fundamental freedoms, and Section 15, the equality clause. For me, these two clauses were key ones which I think would have helped protect Canadians on many issues which are not foreseen today.

Second, I was opposed to the introduction of the word "existing" in the aboriginal rights clause. I voted for the amendment to eliminate that word from that particular guarantee clause for our aboriginal people. It is my opinion that the addition of the word "existing" will lead to confusion and ambiguity and cannot help but limit the application of those protections for our native peoples.

I am also concerned that there is no veto power for the province of Quebec. In our original resolution, we did have such a power. We do not have it now. I think we have always recognized that Quebec, as the only province with a French-speaking majority, should have that protection in dealing with amendments put forward by other provinces. It seems to me that the amendment put forward by the NDP in this debate would go a long way to getting support among the people in the province of Quebec, if not from the Quebec government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Nevertheless, if it was only for those clauses, despite their tainted nature, I could probably have voted for the resolution, like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), holding my nose, because although imperfect, that type of Constitution is better than none at all. I say "if only for those clauses", because there is another clause which is so offensive to me and so unacceptable that I cannot vote for the resolution; that is, Section 59. I maintain that Section 59 is a discriminatory clause in a resolution which is supposed to do away with discrimination. That clause states that some of the protections contained in the minority language education provisions in Section 23 should not apply to the anglophones in Quebec.

The question of language rights is one of the most fundamental and basic issues to me, my people and my electorate. I must say that language rights are probably the most fundamental questions for both anglophones and francophones in this country. It is the issue on which most emotions are expressed. It is the issue on which most Canadians, when those rights are being attacked, will go to the battlements.

It is interesting to note that, of all the rights which are purported to be protected in this Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in the constitutional proposal, the only ones which are under attack at the present time by the people I represent are their language rights. This type of discriminatory clause comes about at a time when the signs of the people of my province are being taken down, when their social, educational and business institutions are under attack, when they are being squeezed, when they cannot get answers from the Quebec government in their own language, and so on. I say that those measures are the responsibility of the provincial government; but this backward step on behalf of the federal government comes at the same time these other things are happening.

Before the accord of November 5, the Prime Minister, along with the cabinet, the entire Liberal Party and our Liberal caucus, were prepared to go to England for patriation with Section 23 applying to all provinces, with the support of only two provinces behind them, Ontario and New Brunswick. At that time we stood firm that Section 23 and the other articles would apply, in their untainted form, to all provinces. I can recall the Prime Minister, other ministers, members of my caucus and myself saying that we would not compromise on principle as the Supreme Court had stated that we had the legal right to do what we were doing, and that while we were willing to improve the charter, we would not compromise and move backwards.

However, now, with nine provinces supporting, we have compromised and we are moving backwards. I want to remind the House that when the resolution was first introduced in this House in October of 1980, the very basis of the protections for minority language rights in education was mother tongue. It was not where one received one's education; it was mother tongue. The so-called Canada clause, Clause 23(1)(b), was only added later on, during the hearings at the committee stage, and was accepted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in late January, last winter. I forget the exact date. However, the original basis that this government put forward for protecting language rights in education was mother tongue, the language first learned and still understood.

The reasons given for this concession by my caucus, which I have not been able to convince them to abandon, are that this concession is necessary if we are to avoid tipping the balance in Quebec in favour of separatism. I simply cannot accept the argument that guaranteeing access to English schools for anglophones, based on their mother tongue, will tip the balance in favour of separation in any separation referendum, especially when those same rights have been guaranteed to francophones outside of Quebec. I simply cannot buy that argument.

That is the stated argument in favour of the concession, but it seems to me that there is an unstated argument which is the real reason for the concession; that is, that as an unfortunate result of the accord of November 5, we ended up with nine anglophone provinces supporting the accord and only Quebec in disagreement, which gave Mr. Lévesque the freedom to return to Quebec and state that the English-speaking provinces were ganging up on Quebec. I reject that argument. I do not believe for one minute that the English-speaking provinces were ganging up on Quebec. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lévesque was the first to abandon his allies by almost going along with the Prime Minister on a referendum formula the day before.

However, in any case, the real reason is that that sort of result in the constitutional conference was very convenient for Mr. Lévesque in fuelling the political storm that he wanted to press for his independence option. Nothing could have been better for him, from his political point of view, than to end up with a situation where nine English provinces, or so-called English majority provinces, were on one side with Quebec on the other. I do not know how he manipulated it, but he ended up with that, to his advantage.

Now, because of that situation, which was not this government's doing, nor the Prime Minister's doing—it was not anyone's doing but Mr. Lévesque's—we are making concessions to Quebec. There is no use making them to Mr. Lévesque; he would not accept anything but the right to separate. However, we are making those concessions on the backs of my constituents, which I think is unreasonable and unnecessary.

● (1620)

When I first heard rumours that the government might weaken its protection for minority language rights in education, on October 23 before the federal-provincial conference I put a question in this House. This matter was headlined in the Montreal Gazette and in the Ottawa paper, The Citizen, stating that the government might weaken its provisions for minority language rights. I asked the Minister of Justice on October 23, 1981 if that was correct. The Minister of Justice replied, as reported in Hansard at page 12115, as follows:

> Madam Speaker, what the Prime Minister said was that if there is any suggestion to improve on the charter, it will be welcome.

He went on to say:

> The goals are well known. We think it is about time that we had equality in schooling across the land for Canadians who speak English in Quebec and for Canadians who speak French in the rest of Canada.

That is what the Minister of Justice said on October 23 but which he does not stand for now. Because I was not satisfied and because I thought there might be implications to the answer that I did not see, I put that question to the government in the adjournment debate and I pursued it again after the constitutional conference on November 9. I elaborated on the question, stating firmly that we should not retreat on minority language rights, either in the English-speaking provinces or in Quebec. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson) replied, as reported in Hansard for November 9, 1981 at page 12682:

> The federal government has always supported, and continues to support, the principle of granting minority language education rights equally throughout this country. This is not the time that we intend to back off from that principle.

The government backed off a few days afterwards.

I want to make it clear that what I am going to support in this House is what this party has supported for the past year. I am not supporting some new radical idea by insisting on the full application of Section 23 to all provinces in Canada. That is what we all supported before November 5. It was supported by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the caucus and the party. It is a position that we have supported for over 16 years, ever since I have been here, both under the present Prime Minister and under the Right Hon. Lester Pearson. It goes back to the recommendations made in the bilingualism and biculturalism commission report in the early years of Mr. Pearson's mandate.

I want to quote a few other things which are very interesting. When the Prime Minister introduced the resolution on October 2, 1980, here is what he said:

> Every Canadian will be guaranteed the right to move freely to any part of Canada—

He went on to say:

> And, inseparable from that, the right of parents, be they English-speaking or French-speaking, to have their children educated in their own official language will be assured. Each and every premier, in Montreal in 1978, committed himself to the principle that "each child of the French-speaking or English-speaking minority is entitled to an education in his or her language in the primary or secondary school in each province wherever numbers warrant". We will put that agreement of the provinces, the agreement of the premiers into the Constitution.

When the Prime Minister entered the debate on the original resolution on March 21, 1981, he said this in speaking about Section 23:

> I now come to the language issue.

He went on to say:

> —under our original Constitution in 1867, the federal government . . . not only had the right but also the obligation to protect minorities in the area of education.

Referring to the British North America Act, he said:

> Under subsections 93(3) and 93(4), we now have the right to legislate in educational matters so as to protect minorities. Indeed, those minorities were then defined in terms of religion, whereas we now tend to define them in terms of language, and we know the historical reasons for that change. But the principle was there; the Fathers of Confederation—and that is the most beautiful and noblest aspect of our tradition—said: It is up to you in the federal government to protect in the field of minority language education.

He went on to say that in effect that was what he was doing by putting Section 23 in the Constitution.

A document entitled "A Time for Action" which was published in 1978, put forward the constitutional proposals which the Prime Minister had suggested at that time. The government, approved by the cabinet—I was in the cabinet at that time and I can recall approving—said this at page 9:

The renewal of the federation must guarantee the linguistic equality of its two major communities, the English-speaking and the French-speaking, and assure that Canadian institutions exist to help each group to prosper.

Further down page 9 we find these words:

—it does mean that the equality of our two official languages must be recognized and guaranteed, and that the practical implications of the equality must be accepted.

On page 22 of "A Time for Action" we find:

The government will be putting forward its proposals for a Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Further on in the same paragraph we find:

—would provide new protection for minority language rights. The government has expressed on many occasions its profound conviction that the citizens of Canada, whether they speak English or French, should be able, in those situations where numbers warrant, to receive basic government services and schooling for their children in their language. The Charter would be intended to provide a permanent constitutional guarantee that fair and reasonable treatment will always prevail.

I could go on quoting the Prime Minister on this particular subject. When we introduced Bill C-60 in 1978, the Prime Minister intervened in the debate and said words similar to those I have just quoted. Those who are interested can look at Hansard for June 27, 1978, at page 6785.

Another interesting document is one entitled "Position of the Federal Government with Regard to Quebec's Bill 101." This document was put out by the federal cabinet on October 6, 1977. We find in Clause 1 the following:

Bill 101 is of concern to the federal Government because it will adversely affect:

(a) the unity of Canada and the development of equal rights for the two official languages;

In Clause 2 we find the following:

The federal government considers that Bill 101 is inconsistent with the federal government's concept of a Canada in which the rights of all official language minorities in the country, whether anglophones in Quebec or francophones in other provinces, would be fully respected.

In Clause 3 we find:

The federal government is committed to the maintenance in Quebec of a society which is primarily French-speaking in character.

The clause goes on to say:

However, it believes this can be done by positive steps without coercion and without restrictions on the rights of the English minority in the province.

That is what the cabinet said in 1977 with respect to Bill 101. On the second page of this document, Clause 6 reads:

More specifically, the federal government totally opposes those provisions of Bill 101 which:

(a) deny the equal official status of French and English in that part of Canada formed by Quebec;—

In Clause 6(c) we read:

(c) deprive all Quebecers, except certain anglophones, of the right to choose freely the language of education of their children.

Again I will not have time to quote the government and the Prime Minister on every occasion they backed the principle that I am backing today. But I refer you as well, Mr. Speaker, to a document called "A National Understanding—The Official Languages of Canada". This document was approved and released by cabinet on June 21, 1977. In it similar statements are made with respect to equality of language rights for anglophones in Quebec and francophones outside of Quebec. Also we have the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada. I was a member of this committee. Several members of today's cabinet were also members. This same principle was approved.

Going back to 1968 when Mr. Pearson was prime minister and the present Prime Minister was minister of justice, other such documents were published. One of these documents is entitled "Federalism for the Future". What I am trying to demonstrate is that what I am supporting has been the long-standing policy of the party and that Section 59 goes against that policy. It is stated at page 18 of that document:

● (1630)

In a country such as ours, with its two founding linguistic groups, the preservation of individual rights also must mean the guarantee of the linguistic rights of both groups. For language is at once the extension of the individual personality and an indispensable tool of social organization: fail to recognize the linguistic rights of either French or English-speaking Canadians and their will to preserve Canada will be seriously weakened, if not destroyed.

The other document came out in 1969 at the constitutional conference of 1969 and is entitled "The Constitution and the People of Canada". I cannot find the exact quotation, but it goes on to say the same thing.

I have here Book I, the first edition of the Report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and at page 123, recommendation 9, which was the beginning of much of this, states:

Therefore, we recommend that the right of Canadian parents to have their children educated in the official language of their choice be recognized in the educational systems, the degree of implementation to depend on the concentration of the minority population.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the House leader was kind enough to tell me that he would give me extra time if that was necessary, but I will not abuse that privilege.

While I am making a strong plea today for the protection of the anglophone minority in Quebec in matters of education, I want to make clear that I have always been and still am a very strong supporter of francophone rights in Quebec and across Canada. I was and still am a strong proponent of applying Section 133 of the BNA Act in Ontario. I have spoken in favour of that in our caucus and in this House on several occasions.

When the problems arose with les gens de l'air, I supported bilingualism for air traffic controllers and for people flying aircraft in this country. When there was a question of expanding the French television and radio network throughout Canada and there were difficulties in the west in certain cities, I spoke in the west in favour of granting channels and stations to our French Canadian populations in those areas. I supported bilingual labelling and other measures of bilingualism all over this country.

I believe, and I think most English-speaking Quebecers believe, that every reasonable step must be taken to assure the individual and collective rights of French-speaking Canadians, not only to survive but to prosper and grow; but as the Prime Minister has said, and I have just quoted him, you do not do this by restricting the right of others. That is what I think is being done in this resolution.

I want to remind hon. members, and I realize that my time is up and I do not really have time to pursue this argument in its fullness, that anglophones in Quebec are not a small group and we are not recently in Quebec. We have been there for over 200 years, and in many parts of Quebec we were the first Europeans to settle in places such as the eastern townships, in certain counties and in northern or new Quebec. We are not all of British origin. We are of many origins, we are of many religions and we are of many colours. We are Catholics, Protestants, Jewish, we are white, yellow and black, we are not all bosses and we do not all live in Westmount. We come from many, many places and from many, many backgrounds.

I have to state that because some people will say to me: "You know, you have had it too good for so long". Many of us, I think two thirds, who are anglophones in Quebec never had it that good. Some of my colleagues with whom I have discussed this privately have said: "We had to give up Section 23(1)(a) for the province of Quebec and for Quebec anglophones because it is too difficult to administer and would entail tests". All I can say to that argument is that we had it there before November 5 and I never heard that argument once. We still have it for all the other provinces in Canada and I have not heard the argument once with respect to them.

I have also heard it stated in response to my argument that francophones in Quebec, because of Bill 101, cannot send their children to English schools and we are not protecting that right in the Constitution. The rights that are being protected in the Constitution are minority rights. The francophones in Quebec are in the majority. They elect the governments there, including the government that is there now and which put into place that provision that they cannot go to English schools; but majorities can take care of themselves while minorities cannot. They are continually in a position of being outvoted by majorities.

Another argument which has been made to me is: "Warren, you are only concerned about a very small group of anglophones. We are only leaving out maybe three thousand or four thousand people; they are the only ones who might suffer as a result of this." I thought we had an entrenched bill of rights to deal with small groups of people.

I can recall the Minister of Justice saying in the committee that we needed this entrenched bill of rights to deal with small groups like Japanese Canadians, Jehovah's Witnesses, Dukhobors and certain small political parties who were discriminated against by majorities in legislation—whether they were political parties, religious groups, linguistic groups, ethnic groups or whatever small groups. Even though there are only three or four thousand, that is enough for me. I thought that was the basis for a charter of rights, to guarantee those minority rights.

Finally, some are saying: "Well, you know, we are really only affecting your grandchildren, and so on; the present law in Quebec will protect you. Bill 101 protects you because you can get a certificate under Bill 101 that will allow you to send your children to French schools and then to English schools, and so on."

Once again, we said a charter of rights entrenched in the Constitution was necessary because provincial legislatures and Parliaments can vary ordinary laws from day to day and from month to month and nothing will stop them except the majorities which they have in their Houses. To say on the one hand that we need a charter of rights to protect minorities against ordinary legislative measures, and on the other hand that we can rely on a clause in Bill 101, is to me a contradiction. I must say that the particular clause they are referring to in Bill 101 does not protect minorities.

In the last week I have had many English-speaking Canadians in Montreal telephone me to tell me they were sent to French-speaking schools in Montreal when they were children, some for only two or three years, and now want to send their children to English schools but cannot do so. They even put them into English schools and they were forced out. That is the kind of thing I want to do away with, and that is the kind of thing the full protection of Section 23 would help.

I tried to convince my colleagues, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, of certain amendments. My first choice for an amendment would be to strike out Section 59 altogether and allow Section 23 to apply to all provinces in Canada, as it was going to do before November 5. That was not agreeable to anyone, or to very few people.

Secondly, I was willing to compromise. I said: Okay, let us have an amendment that will protect all those Canadians residing in Quebec now, giving them the full protection of Section 23. At least they are there now and have had those rights to protect them. That was not acceptable.

Then I said: Okay, let us use the principle that is in the Official Languages Act. Let us apply the full protection of Section 23 to all those Canadians residing in Quebec who live in counties with a minority anglophone population of 10 per cent. That is the principle you will find in the Official Languages Act. That was not acceptable.

Then I said: Look, I am willing to sit down with anybody to discuss other formulas for amendment, or mechanisms that would guarantee and assure the francophone majority of Quebec but at the same time protect the anglophone minority. I want to protect both. Obviously I got nowhere and I am now left with a situation in which tomorrow we are going to vote on a Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which originally was to do away with discrimination and protect minorities, but which has in it Section 59 which discriminates against the anglophone minority in Quebec with respect to education. Section 59 is a discriminatory provision in that it provides that parts of Section 23 will not apply to the anglophone minority in Quebec.

• (1640)

For me and my electors, Section 59 is a betrayal of all that I have ever supported and stood for in this House, and I have quoted passages supporting that going back 15 years. If it continues to be like that tomorrow at three o'clock, unfortunately I will have to vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by heartily congratulating the previous speaker, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for his impassioned speech. To my mind, he spoke with considerable eloquence, reason and force. It is refreshing to see someone on that side of the House speak with an element of independence and openmindedness.

For my part, I am pleased to participate in this, the final stage of debate in Parliament on the patriation of the Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Today is the second occasion on which I have spoken in the House of Commons on this subject. The first occasion was on October 20, 1980, just after the government introduced its resolution. I also felt privileged to participate in the work of the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and Senate on the Constitution, in particular when the then premier of my province, the Hon. Angus MacLean, presented a brief on behalf of Prince Edward Island.

Much has happened to the government's constitutional resolution since it was forced through Parliament by closure about a year ago. I think most of the changes have been for the better. Indeed, the package has been transformed—I do not think the word "transformed" is too strong to use in this context—from an odious document which would have violated the principles on which our system of government is based, into an instrument of constitutional reform that is a credit to the country.

If I may say so, the Progressive Conservative Party deserves a lot of the credit for that transformation. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is especially deserving of praise because it was his constructive opposition to the government's course that prevented the country from being saddled with a new Constitution which would have done irreparable damage to both parliamentary supremacy in this country and to our federal system of government.

Let it not be forgotten that had the Supreme Court been denied the time it needed to render its landmark decision on the constitutionality of the government's original resolution before Parliament passed it, not after, the matter would have been disposed of many weeks ago. The final product would have reflected neither widespread support across the country nor a consensus among the 11 governments of the land, both of which the package now enjoys. In fact, we may well have ended up with something akin to what I would call an illegitimate constitution in the sense that, lacking both public and official support, it would thus not have had the moral authority required to make it workable. It is to the lasting credit of the Leader of the Opposition that he provided the creative and constructive leadership necessary to stall the government long enough to allow the emergence of a genuine consensus in the country, triggered by the Supreme Court decision.

I would be the first to agree that the final package will be flawed in many respects. But whatever flaws may remain in the resolution at the end of the debate tomorrow, the package will nevertheless carry with it the backing of most Canadians through their provincial governments and through their representatives in both Houses of Parliament. The Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament have made a very valuable contribution to making that possible.

Certainly the new Constitution will be much more compatible with the nature of our country and with the nature of our parliamentary institutions because the PC party in Parliament and across the country took certain steps. It mobilized public opinion against the government's ill-conceived constitutional proposals. It ensured that there would be a full and fair and reasoned debate in Parliament. It fought to avoid having the constitutional proposals rammed through Parliament and rushed to Westminster last December before they could be considered in Canada. Finally, it encouraged all Canadians in every province of Canada to return to the bargaining table to seek a truly Canadian compromise.

In the same spirit, the PC party is proposing the amendment on provincial fiscal compensation now before Parliament in an effort to enlarge and broaden the national consensus on the Constitution so as to embrace the one province—Quebec—not yet reconciled to the package. Quebec's population of approximately 6,340,000 constitutes about 25 per cent of the total population of Canada. In terms of sheer numbers, that fact alone should cause Canadians to be concerned about Quebec's absence from the national consensus. Given that Quebec is the homeland of one of the two founding peoples of Canada, our concern should border on alarm.

I will leave it to the lawyers among us—and there are many in the House—and perhaps also to the courts—presumably the Supreme Court—to decide whether or not Quebec actually has a constitutional veto, a veto over future constitutional changes including the ones which we are now contemplating.

However that question may be answered, no matter what the Supreme Court or anyone else decides on that question, none of us can ignore that Quebec's opposition to what we are doing threatens the very survival of our country. It helps not a whit, in my opinion, to say, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has said in the House and outside Parliament, that the Premier of Quebec is acting insanely and without the support of his own people within the province of Quebec. Clearly Mr. Lévesque's position is not outrageously out of whack with majority opinion in Quebec, and in my view may well be closer to majority opinion in Quebec than the Minister of Justice is in his own stance.

In any event, one cannot easily distinguish between contempt for the concern of a provincial premier, and contempt for the people who elected him to be their spokesman. Due respect for the opinions of the people of a province requires respect also for the views of their premier and his government which was freely and democratically chosen. By ignoring, even snubbing, Mr. Lévesque at this crucial stage of the constitutional renewal process, the federal government may be driving yet another wedge between the people of Quebec and their national government here in Ottawa, as well as between one group of Canadians, Quebecers, and all other Canadians. In so doing, the federal government may be forcing Quebec into exactly the kind of enclave the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at least pretends he entered politics to prevent.

● (1650)

Several previous speakers from my party have already dealt in some detail with the amendment on fiscal compensation which we are proposing. I do not wish to repeat their explanations or their arguments; that would be redundant. Suffice it to say that the amendment would change the constitutional resolution so as to guarantee the right of any province—not just Quebec but any province—to be fully compensated should it decide not to participate in a constitutional amendment which would undermine, through the aggrandizement of federal power, the authority or rights it has traditionally exercised and enjoyed. The fact that the constitutional resolution does not now contain the provision we are contemplating in our amendment is a major stumbling block to the inclusion of Quebec in the national consensus. I think it behooves us on all sides of the House and in every party to do everything reasonable, everything practical and everything possible to accommodate the legitimate concern of Quebec on this vital matter.

However, though the amendment may well stem from the desire of my colleagues and me to respond in a meaningful way to Quebec's concern, other provinces cherish their special circumstances every bit as much as Quebec does. The fiscal compensation proposal would therefore be equally important to them. In the case of my own province, Prince Edward Island, the smallest province in the country, I can envision many circumstances under which the government of Prince Edward Island might consider it imperative to preserve its integrity and its autonomy as a separate province of Canada by opting out of an amendment which would transfer a given authority from the provincial level of government to the federal Parliament. An amendment affecting the province's right to regulate non-resident ownership of land is a case in point which comes immediately to mind. In circumstances like that it would be the smallest provinces—the poorest provinces such as Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—which could least afford to exercise their right to opt out if fiscal compensation were not guaranteed in the Constitution. If compensation were not provided or not guaranteed, the right to opt out would be academic. It would be theoretical in the absence of the fiscal capacity to exercise it. The right would exist purely on paper.

Certainly it would be prohibitively expensive for Prince Edward Island—and I use that only as an example—and, I expect, for all other Atlantic provinces, to opt out of a national program and then not only have to contribute its share of the cost of that national program but also have to pay the full cost of its own program in the same area.

The fiscal compensation guarantee called for in my party's amendment would effectively eliminate that double jeopardy. To my mind, the amendment adds an element of flexibility to the constitutional resolution which respects the manifold heterogeneity and diversity of the country. As the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) stated eloquently in the House yesterday—and I am glad to see him here for the debate today:

> Opting out and financial compensation provide a protection for the unique character of every province, a uniqueness which was recognized by the founding Fathers of Confederation, not only because of the special character of the province of Quebec . . . but also because of the special characters of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Ontario; and . . . the special conditions prevailing in the provinces which entered confederation after the original four.

I think it is notable that that sentiment, which means so much to the provinces on the Atlantic sea coast, should be uttered by a member of this House from the west.

I can appreciate the concerns of those hon. members who fear that giving every province the right to opt out of certain types of constitutional amendments with full fiscal compensation might seem an open invitation to provinces to withdraw from national initiatives, thus creating the checkerboard federalism against which the Prime Minister frequently rails. But I believe, and I think this is supported by history, that the practice of opting out—and we in Canada have been living with it for some time now, certainly throughout the sixties and since then—demonstrates that the potential for abuse is much less than is feared. The federal government's powers of moral suasion, especially through its unlimited spending authority and spending power, are strong enough to encourage provinces not to take advantage of the system any more than is absolutely essential to their respective legitimate interests.

I urge the federal government and those on the Liberal benches opposite who are not in the cabinet to be openminded about this amendment. From the beginning of the constitutional debate last year—we are practically celebrating the anniversary now—the government's major failure has been to be too dogmatic and even downright bullheaded. It has approached the whole constitutional exercise as though it were a Cartesian exercise; everything had to conform to legal and mathematical concepts and schedules removed from the real world of people, problems and traditions. Only when the government was forced by circumstances, especially the Supreme Court ruling, did it bend, did it give, and did it demonstrate an element of flexibility. The government argued and believe strongly, almost a priori—and I credit the government for this—that the provinces could never agree on a fundamental rewriting of the Constitution, and it acted accordingly, with predictably disastrous results. The government was proved wrong by circumstances. The provinces demonstrated the flexibility that the federal government said was not possible.

The government also said the Vancouver formula was unworkable and could not be contemplated. It was proved wrong again in that instance. Now that same formula, the Vancouver formula, has turned out to be the creative proposal which made possible the federal-provincial accord which is the basis of the constitutional resolution we are now about to pass.

Let us not close our minds in the same fashion to this other proposal, this amendment my party is putting forward now. It is a proposal intended to reconcile all Canadians not yet reconciled to the new Constitution at this, the final stage in the patriation process.

The constitutional amendment we have before us is not a complex one, but it is one which begs an element of flexibility to pass. All of us would gain a great deal by exercising now the required degree of flexibility which made possible so much progress to date. The Progressive Conservative Party's contribution to the debate all along has been to bring to bear on the constitutional question flexibility, reason and an understanding of the workings of modern federalism. Our amendment is presented in the same spirit. The final product will be much more compatible with the spirit of federalism and with our parliamentary institutions because all of us achieved a real measure of success by that standard. I remain convinced that Quebec could yet be won over; if not now, then before long. It is vital that all Canadians, Quebec included, feel they recognize themselves in the new Constitution.

• (1700)

In conclusion, may I say that everyone involved in the constitutional exercise this past year can take pride in what has been crafted. Although not perfect, it is far superior to the package originally proposed. We have struck a happy compromise between the fashionable desire for a Charter of Rights and Freedoms that is intellectually satisfying but badly flawed in terms of workability, on the one hand, and, on the other, the goal of ensuring that our political system avoids the rigidities that all too often go hand in hand with entrenched rights. I think we now have a constitutional package that will help protect people's basic rights without at the same time undermining the importance of conventions which in some cases are even more important than anything we might write into laws, let alone entrench.

Consistent with the Canadian practice of flexibility and compromise and consistent with doing what is possible, let us reach out this one last time on the eve of our historic vote tomorrow to bring Quebec with us as we forge a new Constitution for us and for future generations of Canadians.

Passage of the amendment before us may not in itself achieve the goal I have mentioned, but it would signal our common desire to at least try. Even if we should fail, our attempt would constitute a most fitting way to bring our historic debate to a conclusion.

The Constitution

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Fisheries—Condition of Atlantic fishing industry. (b) Reported proposal to reduce number for exporters. (c) Pre-budget discussions; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements—Equalization payments to provinces; the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight)—The budget—Provisions affecting income averaging annuities. (b) Request for postponement of provisions.

The hon. parliamentary secretary to Minister of Labour (Mr. Yanakis) has the floor.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien respecting the Constitution of Canada, the amendment thereto of Mr. Epp (p. 13492) and the subamendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 13497).

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be taking part in this debate at a historic moment in the existence of this country. I was in the House Friday, November 20 of this year, when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) presented the amended patriation resolution. I, too, felt that there was in this House a consensus that I have never seen before on such a fundamental issue. I could not continue these comments without some words of praise for the major architect of the plan to patriate the Constitution, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) who, through his insight, his sense of history, his love for justice and his perseverance and patience has made it possible for us to have a constitutional resolution with the scope of the motion being considered in the House today.

The Minister of Justice should also be congratulated on his perseverance during the lengthy negotiations he conducted with the leaders of our ten provinces. His objective was to do what no one had done before since the Act of Confederation, namely, to obtain the consensus of nine provinces. Those who are quick to criticize and feel that the patriation resolution does not go far enough in protecting the rights of all Canadians, should read again what George Brown said in 1865 before the Parliament of Canada:

> The whole great ends of this confederation may not be realized in the lifetime of many who now hear me. We imagine not that such a structure can be built in a month or in a year. What we propose now is but to lay the foundations of the structure, to set in motion the governmental machinery that will one day, we trust, extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Today, Mr. Speaker, history is repeating itself. We now have an opportunity to make that structure a reality, according to the resolution now before the House. After 114 years, Canada will at last become fully independent. And we shall subsequently be able to make improvements to our Constitution without having to go through the British Parliament. This week, in two unanimous votes in this House, we succeeded in entrenching in this resolution the equality of men and women and the recognition of aboriginal rights.

That recognition, Mr. Speaker, had been deleted from the original resolution at the last federal-provincial conference which resulted in the accord signed by nine provinces, and it was deleted supposedly because the premiers wanted to clarify the situation. Fortunately, as a result of incessant lobbying of the provincial governments by these two groups, the Minister of Justice managed to get a consensus among nine provinces, demonstrating once more the maturity of our country.

I would have liked to see included in the draft resolution a number of other amendments that would have an impact on the daily life of various groups in our society, such as the handicapped, the disadvantaged and others, and especially an amendment to our legislation on abortion in order to protect the unborn child against any attempts to infringe on its right to life. Of course, there is no end to the debate on such controversial subjects, nor is it easy to reach a consensus among the members on both sides of the House and to obtain the agreement of the provinces that signed the patriation plan. Unfortunately, we shall have to leave it up to the legislators and the provincial authorities to gradually improve the Charter, once it is in Canadian hands.

History is, in fact, repeating itself Mr. Speaker, because in 1931, Henri Bourassa, the then member for Labelle, gave upon his return from a conference in London, an account of some comments made by a member of the British House of Commons, and I quote:

> To be perfectly frank, we are rather tired of all this talk about the independence of the dominions, and it is high time you people in Canada, Australia and elsewhere start to prove that you are really worthy of the concessions we are prepared to make. On the other hand, if you are afraid of some minor consequences this might have in your own provinces, you cannot expect us to have more respect for you than you have for yourselves.
>
> Surely, the time will come when wisdom and self-respect in the Dominion or in the provinces will have reached a level where, with the concerted efforts of the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures, we shall be able to formulate measures with a view to exercising the right to amend our own Constitution.

The time is today, Mr. Speaker, or within the next 24 hours, when we shall vote on this resolution after over a year of debate. During this debate, the Tories have shown as much fatalism and created as much fear and as much discussion throughout the country as they did in 1964 during the debate on the Canadian flag which now identifies Canadians and Canada throughout the world. According to them, this flag would divide Canadians, but it has now created more unity among Canadians and it is the symbol of our pride.

The patriation of our Constitution will give us another opportunity to be proud and to celebrate on Canada Day next July 1. However, Mr. Speaker, even though this Parliament will vote in a few hours on the resolution to patriate our Constitution with an amending formula and a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I must admit that as a federal Member of Parliament representing a Quebec constituency, I am disappointed and saddened to see that Quebec, because of its government, is not party to the agreement. The Quebec government has chosen to isolate itself from the rest of Canada, but not because the Quebecers wished it, considering that they clearly showed during the referendum of 1980 that they wanted to remain a part of Canada. The Lévesque government has chosen to ignore the views of Quebecers. Quebecers have been betrayed, and I know that the responsible citizens of Quebec will make the Lévesque government pay for it the next time they go to the polls. How can the PQ government assume a separatist attitude when it has been elected following promises not to seek separation during its term of office?

After five years of a Parti Québécois government, we in Quebec have the most unstable economy since the beginning of the Canadian federation. If we look at the latest figures we find a deficit of nearly $3.5 billion, an unemployment rate reaching 10.8 per cent, the highest in Canada, especially among younger people, and an alarming number of plant shut-downs. Such is the price we have to pay for a government which is deluding itself. Mr. Speaker, the constitutional resolution now before us is the fruit of constant efforts by the Prime Minister and the premiers and by all the social groups which had a chance to appear before the Constitution committee which sat for many weeks to listen to the representations that all these people wanted to make to members on both sides of the House, who gave these matters their constant attention. Mr. Speaker, we have a charter which we should be proud of because it guarantees the rights and the freedoms of all Canadians.

Democratic rights, fundamental freedoms, mobility rights, legal rights and linguistic rights are all enshrined in the Constitution and apply from one end of the country to the other. This charter is not perfect, but it is a compromise which will need improvements over the years. Mr. Speaker, in introducing the resolution preceding confederation in the Parliament of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald stated:

The whole scheme of confederation, as propounded by the conference, as agreed to and sanctioned by the Canadian government, and as now presented for the consideration of the people and the legislature, bears upon its face the marks of compromise.

Of necessity there must have been a great deal of mutual concession. If we had not felt that we were bound to set aside our private opinions on matters of detail, if we had not felt ourselves bound to look at what was practicable, not obstinately rejecting the opinions of others nor adhering to our own; if we had not met in a spirit of conciliation, we never would have succeeded.

This resolution reflects the values, the aspirations, the hopes and the dreams of the majority of Canadians. Aristotle, the famous Greek tribune and philosopher, said this, and I quote:

A good constitution must express the identity of the nation and promote as well the validity and stability of a just and well-ordered society.

I believe we are very lucky to have as Prime Minister a man who is a worthy successor to the great Canadian Liberals who led this country, among others Laurier, King, St. Laurent and Pearson. Ever since he became Prime Minister in 1968 he has been working relentlessly to achieve something which no other prime minister had managed to do in 54 years of endless failures. The easy way out would have been to give up on the constitutional reform or put if off to a later date, and only a leader who truly understands Canada, our country with all its differences and needs, could see why we had to make progress if we believe in Canada.

If the Parti Québécois government still refuses to endorse the proposal to patriate the Constitution it is because it does not have the vision of the great Canadians who led this country. In conclusion, may I be allowed to quote Laurier:

"We are French Canadians, but our country is not confined to the territory over-shadowed by the Citadel of Quebec; our country is Canada; it is the fertile lands bordered by the Bay of Fundy, the valley of the St. Lawrence, the regions of the Great Lakes, the prairies of the west, the Rocky Mountains, the lands washed by the famous ocean where breezes are said to be as sweet as the breezes of the Mediterranean, our fellow-countrymen are not only those in whose veins runs the blood of France.

They are all those, whatever their race or whatever their language, whom the fortunes of war, the chances of fate, or their own choice have brought among us. As far as I am concerned, those are my fellow-countrymen. I am a Canadian. The rights of my fellow-countrymen of different origins are as dear to me, as sacred to me, as the rights of my own race. What I claim for us is an equal place in the sun, an equal share of justice, of liberty; that share we have it; we have it amply, and what we claim for ourselves, we are anxious to grant to others.

Mr. Speaker, that is our role here as Liberal members. That place in the sun we want as well for the people of Quebec who, for all practical purposes, are now isolated and all alone. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure all the electors of the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière that in the future I will do everything along with my colleagues so that Quebecers will choose a government which will join the other provinces with a view to benefiting from the advantages and the wealth that this great country has in store for all Canadians.

● (1710)

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this is the last day to debate in the House of Commons, as everyone knows, the proposal to patriate the Canadian Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and an amending formula. We are approaching the moment when Canada will become a constitutionally independent country. I want to say now how historically privileged I feel to have been able to take part in this process and how equally privileged I feel today to be able to comment in these final stages of the debate.

Since October, 1980, when this long and difficult process began following the proposal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for unilateral action, I have learned a lot about Canadian politics, about Canadian federalism, about my own party and about my colleagues and their parties. I think it has been a tremendous learning experience for every hon. member, although exceedingly painful at times, as is often the case with human growth.

If I might be allowed a comment at this point, the debate was not often what it could have been, in my view. The strongly held views of people with differing opinions were often held up to ridicule and made out to be something other than they really were. People who opposed a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, at least those who opposed it out of the long and legitimate tradition of parliamentary supremacy and common law, were often falsely caricatured, I believe, as enemies of freedom. People who supported unilateral action or unilateral patriation out of a genuine sense of urgency that this be done were often made out to be arrogant and uncaring conspirators who somehow were trying to foist a unitary state on Canada. One issue was played off against another. If one did not like the amending formula, one was against independence. Or if one thought it was as good as any other formula that had ever been presented, one was selling out certain regions of the country.

I say this by way of collective self-criticism, something we Members of Parliament should do more of, it would seem to me. In the final analysis, I do not think that we generally conducted ourselves in such a way as to help Canadians as much as we could have to understand what was really going on, what was really at stake and what significant changes were being contemplated in the life of our country.

Perhaps this is just the nature of politics, but I hope not. I fervently hope that the political process is capable of producing higher levels of debate than the great Canadian Constitution debate would have sometimes indicated, although there were high moments.

The problem, it seems to me, is one of respecting differences among us. Canada is a land of many linguistic and many cultural traditions. We have often heard this said. It is also a land of many different political traditions. It is just not the case that some Canadians are right and other Canadians are wrong. There is a range of perceptions in this country which must be given full respect. Of course, there are others which do not deserve such respect.

I am not saying that all views are equal to one another, but rather that there is a core of differing ideas about, and images of, this country which, if possible, should be reflected in the Constitution of Canada.

● (1720)

Our differences should be respected. We have quite appropriately done a lot of talking about respecting rights in this debate, while showing little or no respect for the differences among us. We have had precious little to say about other concepts which, in my view, are necessary to the existence of an authentic human community. I am referring to concepts such as responsibilities and obligations—the responsibilities of individual Canadians one for each other and the responsibilities of individual Canadians for the community, through their governments and other institutions, for the well-being of people socially, environmentally and politically.

But this was all outside the parameters of the debate to begin with. In a sense, what we have always had before us in this debate is a proposal finally to entrench the best political ideas of the now waning liberal era—that is, the rights of individuals versus the state and the rights of minorities. We do not make light of these victories. They are victories that people in my party and those involved in the political tradition in which I stand have long fought for. But they will not suffice by themselves to carry us into the post-industrial society of the twenty-first century, because an appropriate individualism in the liberal era has been accompanied always by an inappropriate individualism, indeed atomism, in our notions of the economy and of society as a whole. Because this is the case, we are in desperate need of recovering and recreating a sense of the whole, of the common good, and of society as an organic reality in which certain values as well as rights are respected.

In this respect I should like to say something about the significance of the public support demonstrated for the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights in Canada. This public support exceeds the limited wording and limited support found in the resolution as a result of the inclusion of the adjective "existing" in front of the concept of aboriginal rights. This public support is significant because a significant thrust of the now waning great industrial liberal era—and I am always using "liberal" in the small "l" sense—has been the urge to assimilate and homogenize all peoples into one big happy family of consuming and producing economic units.

Members of all political parties, at least the old line ones, have participated in this general vision of society. The aboriginal rights clause is one of the few places in the act before us where liberalism is transcended and a way is pointed into the future and away from the past, a past full of wrong relationships with the native people of Canada. Hopefully it points toward a future which will finally see a right relationship grow up between native and non-native Canadians.

To a great extent our historic approach to native people was conditioned by the absolutism of western Christianity and its missionary zeal for conforming everyone to its way of life. But like the Christian Jews in the Book of Acts who thought that Greeks would have to be circumcised in order to become Christians, western Christianity thought that the gospel meant that the Indians, and indeed everyone else, would have to become something other than themselves. Coupled with a not unrelated economic and military expansionism, we get the recipe for the type of attitude with which native people were met when confronted with traders, settlers and finally industrialists.

The situation in which we find ourselves today is quite different. In my view, it is one full of potential. Native people are beginning to recover a lost sense of self-esteem after having their culture looked down upon for many years. White people are no longer so confident that their ways are all that great. As the meaningless violence, pollution and shattered economic dreams become worse and worse, many non-native Canadians are coming to doubt whether the way of life they wanted to impose upon everyone, in the name of Christianity or in the name of its secular synonym, "progress" is not something which is fatally flawed, something from which we need to be freed.

We can obtain that help, in so far as we recognize the need for it, in a number of ways. One way to obtain it is from people who are not identical to us and can, therefore, tell us something about ourselves that we need to hear. Native people are such people, in so far as they have roots in a culture which was and is quite different from ours. This is not to say that all native people are eloquent critics of modern society. Indeed, some would mistakenly like to be like us, but many have resisted and rebelled against that in our industrialized and mechanical way of life which they found to be inhuman and harmful to mother earth and indeed to human life.

This resistance has often been despairing and self-destructive, but now it has an opportunity to become a creative and critical resistance, with political status which calls upon non-native Canadians to listen for our own good as well as the good of native people. As we move into the post-industrial era, whatever that might mean—and there is great debate about its meaning—we will need the advice of futurists, of philosophers and, we in the New Democratic Party contend, of democratic socialists. Also we will need the help of people with pre-industrial perspectives, something which, unlike Europe, non-native Canadians lack.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: We in this party look to the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal rights as a step in this important direction.

In the same way I think what has been happening in Quebec must be understood in this light. The Québécois are reaching out for a way to be a community, to be an identifiable people, and to have a chance to do and to be something unique by getting off the slippery slope leading to the North American melting pot. They want their uniqueness as not just another province recognized; they want to use their uniqueness in the service of the larger human community.

We in this party want them to do this. We believe they can do this within the larger context of Canadian federalism. It is to that end that we have moved an amendment to the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) which recognizes the uniqueness of Quebec within Canada and allows it to contribute to, and be a part of, the Canadian future.

I, like many other English-speaking Canadians, have felt somewhat like a spectator to the great battle raging within the hearts and souls of our French-speaking fellow Canadians. But if it be okay for the Prime Minister to come out and lecture those of us in the west, perhaps my humble advice will be heeded.

There are growing numbers of Canadians who see in the aspirations of Quebec people not the stubborn obstinacy of people who will not give in to the inevitable and who make life miserable for everyone else, to put it most negatively, but they see in those aspirations a local example or instance of something happening all over the globe, where people are trying to ground themselves and their sense of community in something more meaningful than the global consumer society, whether metropolis or hinterland. People seeking this renewed sense of community will be a regressive step only if we do not see it for what it is and affirm it. Particularity must find its place in the universality that must also come if the planet is to survive. The problem is falsely put, I believe, if it is put in such a way that we must choose between tribalism and uniformity. In this respect, Canada has a sombre responsibility. If we fail in dealing with this human problem, with all the good will and abundance that we have at our disposal, then who, I ask, can succeed? We must succeed.

• (1730)

In so far as the constitutional accord of November 5, as amended in the House to reinclude stronger protections for the equality of men and women, and the aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Métis does this, it deserves our support. It is not the divisive document that it once might have been. Although we will never know, because it never went ahead. But this new document does not represent a victory for one side and a loss for the other. It is imperfect. However, it is worth voting for, in my opinion.

Only time will tell if it will live up to its expectations. However, without constitutional political reform, that is to say, without reform of the Senate and the House of Commons giving the regions more power at the centre, without economic reform, and without social and economic justice, this document will not be enough. Without an independent Canadian economy, this document will only be the shell of a yet unrealized independence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Canada has a long way to go. We in this party will continue to work for these and other things that remain undone, like seeing that aboriginal rights are defined in a profound way, as opposed to a narrow, legalistic way. This we will be doing when we have the opportunity to move an amendment relating to the consent of aboriginal peoples to constitutional amendments affecting their rights.

Nevertheless, I think many hon. members would agree with me that there is a need to share with the Canadian people the feeling of relief that an agreement has been reached and that we have come this far. I also hope there is a willingness on the part of the Canadian people to forgive people of differing views and also politicians for sometimes seeming to be obsessed with the Constitution, because constitutions are and will be important, and this Constitution is important. I, for one, am glad that, all things considered, we took the time that we did.

I am confident that history will record that the contribution of my party, the New Democratic Party and its members, was a constructive and a helpful one, that our hearts were in the right place and thus we, along with others, can once again lay claim to a formative role in the future of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): During the course of this debate we have heard, quite rightly, of the vital social and cultural forces which have shaped our country since its inception. In contemplating a new Constitution, we have heard of the moral and legal responsibilities which we in this House must accept regarding, for example, the status of linguistic minorities, women and aboriginal peoples. Moreover, we have been eloquently reminded of our responsibility to the larger concept of our nationhood, to the very scheme which created a nation of two founding peoples. That concept expressed the kind of Canada that we not only wish to have, but which we must have if we are to face the future both united and strong. For over a century hon. members of the House in realizing this have attempted to create a nation based on cultural and linguistic justice. However, from the beginning they went further and also recognized the economic necessity behind the movement to union.

Confederation was, of course, achieved in the midst of a particular set of circumstances. Social, political and economic conditions of the mid-nineteenth century naturally constituted the starting point for the architects of confederation. As one might expect, their historic efforts bear the mark of their own time. The strengths and weaknesses of the federal structure which they created cannot be explained without considering the circumstances of its birth.

As hindsight demonstrates, some of those circumstances were peculiar to the turbulent era of the 1860s; but, in several ways, they have something in common with those of today. In 1867, Canada was in a period of great transformation, much as it is today. At the time of the confederation agreement, we were moving from water transport to the railway, from frontier self-sufficiency to the greater mutual dependence of industrial diversification, from colonialism to the nation-state. Economic factors in the movement toward confederation were rooted in the new economy of steam and railways. The British North American colonies were strung out across a huge continent divided by mountains, rivers, lakes and prairies. The union, it seemed, would really be possible only once the railway had been built. Intercolonial railways were the necessary physical basis of confederation; but at the same time confederation appeared to be the necessary political basis for intercolonial railways. Those who wanted either one or the other were inclined to a plan by which both could be achieved.

In every colony of British North America, the construction of railways inspired hopes for economic prosperity; but the debts incurred in the process, in turn, created new burdens. Moreover, the imminent abrogation of the reciprocity trade agreement with the United States underlined the need for greater internal trade within British North America. Our predecessors looked to the south and saw territorial expansionism, profound political upheaval and an aggressive economic competitor. They looked across the Atlantic and saw the weakening of the imperial connection. Those forces hastened confederation in spite of all colonial rivalries, differences and ambitions. The necessity for economic union had become clear.

Today, the movement to renew our Constitution also has economic roots. Today, we are linked by a sophisticated transport system, an increasingly innovative and complex economy, an economy of high technology and massive industrial and resource projects requiring the collective ingenuity and effort of all Canadians. We are, however, still divided by mountains of sorts, those artificial barriers which we have created amongst ourselves, barriers which can limit the realization of the full benefits of a true economic union.

Macdonald, Cartier, Langevin and Tupper were obviously not soothsayers. They could not anticipate the more diverse and extensive governmental responsibilities of our time. Macdonald, however, had no pretensions about the immutability of the original confederation agreement. He saw it as a skeleton, a framework which would not bind us down. Yet that elasticity, which was one of the most valuable characteristics of the agreement, has been eroded over the years, a victim of federal-provincial, social, political and economic divisions. Macdonald's concept of Canada was of a strong, united economic entity, a common market, one where all citizens could benefit equally from the free flow of goods, services, capital and labour.

We now have the opportunity to consolidate Macdonald's vision by meeting the demands of new economic challenges, challenges of telecommunications, industrial diversification, resource management and environmental protection within a renewed Canadian common market for the benefit of all of our citizens.

While the social ramifications of our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms are evident and have been much discussed, what has not been equally recognized is its economic importance. Those who have recently argued that they would prefer to concentrate wholly upon the current economic concerns rather than bringing the Canadian Constitution home with an embedded Charter of Rights and Freedoms would do well to examine that charter more carefully. With the recent energy agreements with the western provinces, Canada stands on the threshold of the greatest wave of capital investment in its history. If Canada is to have full meaning, all Canadians must have the opportunity to share in the material benefits of our future economic growth. The mobility rights in the charter can do much to provide that necessary equality of opportunity. Equally, the pending surge of investment will be greater if it can be carried forward against a background of a clearly understood Constitution. Uncertainty, whether commercial or governmental, is not an easy bedfellow of investment.

● (1740)

The realization of our full economic potential can only be achieved if large capital investment is matched with greater productivity and more Canadian sourcing of goods and services. But achieving the maximum benefits will be possible only to the degree that the Canadian federation is a true common market. In several important respects, it has become less so over time.

John A. Macdonald was quite certain about the right of Canadians to live and work anywhere. "We are one country", he said, "and we go from one province to another as we do from one town to another".

Today one half of all Canadians move every five years, one in 20 moving to another province. But this fundamental need of Canadians, living in a vast and, in many respects, undeveloped territory has been neglected by some provincial governments. In their eagerness to secure the benefits of local industrial development for the people of their provinces, they have, with notable ingenuity, erected arbitrary barriers to the flow of manpower, capital, goods and services within our country.

The British North America Act appears to rule out any obstacles to the free movement of goods within Canada, yet provincial contrivance and past judicial interpretation, largely in London, has succeeded in limiting even that essential element of our common market. Capital has also been hindered in its efforts to seek investment opportunities by certain provincial regulations of particularly myopic character. The result of all this is that many provincial regulations now weaken our common market, reducing the gains that could otherwise be made by, for example, greater industrial specialization. In short, we are ourselves hindering the realization of our true economic potential by restrictions which, paradoxically, would be impossible in the European Community today.

Labour and capital are not being used as efficiently as possible. Examples of provincial barriers to mobility are readily at hand. They limit the freedom of Canadians to work anywhere in Canada. Certain areas of the country with unusually high unemployment should be allowed positive work-related programs for their citizens, but without inhibiting equal access of all Canadians to employment.

Elimination of these barriers under our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms will provide Canadian industry with longer production runs, greater opportunity to supply the world-scale markets of megaprojects and to compete more effectively abroad. Canadian industry has typically been at an international disadvantage in terms of size, partly as a result of the high degree of foreign control. Its development is only further stunted by the internal distortions and barriers which we have erected among ourselves.

It becomes quite clear that John A. Macdonald's hopes for an economic union, providing for the unrestricted movement of capital, goods and labour, have fallen victim to the vagaries of time. The integration of the Canadian economic union remains to be completed. The free circulation of goods, services, capital and workers has not yet been assured. The Constitution of 1867 has been unable to accommodate economic programs necessitated by consequent progress in virtually every field of economic endeavour.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, history has repeated itself. Several forces associated with economic transition that led to the union of the British North American colonies are in some respects similar to the ones confronting us today. Clearly, economic changes inherent in our age demand the strengthening of our economic union.

But before we can strengthen the fibre of our economic union, we must ask why provincial governments have created these defensive barriers? The answer, it seems, lies in their notion of their respective provinces' historial place within the Canadian economic union. Many of the difficulties encountered as the national government has attempted to ensure the success of the national economy have contributed to an attitude of grievance and, in time, to a particular interpretation of our history. This sense of grievance has been evident in both the maritimes and the west where I was born and raised.

Some westerners, for example, have argued that the protective tariff in Macdonald's national policy, freight rates and the question of natural resource control all illustrate the inequitable nature of the economic relations that have existed between the western hinterland and the central Canadian region. Some who embrace that view of our history have contended that the policies which formed the backbone of our original economic union have been deliberately used to retard western development to the benefit of the more densely populated and economically diversified central region. This situation, in turn, they have argued, has historically kept the western region dependent upon central Canada. Partly as a response to this belief, some provincial premiers have recently erected the barriers already mentioned.

Indeed, the west, like the maritimes, has had to face the realities of an imperfect union, as in some sense have all regions of Canada. While complaints about the historic nature of the union and consequent responses are understandable, they are not entirely fair for they see just one side of history. I agree with Professor Careless when he suggests that "Western problems have to be judged in the light of the fuller Canadian record; regions are not closed entities, embattled armies of us against them, but interlinked communities in broad national and international frames."

The regional view of the west within confederation expresses one-sided judgments. The protective tariff, for example, was one part of an over-all national policy aimed at creating a Canadian union, including the west, by fostering a more diversified economy with a broader home market, an economy that would not be absorbed by an expansionist United States. Moreover, the development of the western region clearly depended in part on the capital generated by the older industrial central Canadian region. Undoubtedly, Macdonald and his contemporaries considered the west an area to be developed under the direction of the national government, but could the Fathers of Confederation think otherwise when a western regional community had yet to be created? Moreover, the regional view of economic union fails to consider the fact that industrial progress in central Canada was well under way before an important western market existed. Western metropolitan centres, not unlike those of the east, have in fact greatly benefited by protection of past Canadian economic policy.

The early federal control over the natural resources of the western provinces have left unhappy memories in the minds of some, memories which have resurfaced recently. It should be emphasized, however, that, given the limited western settlement and the difficulties of governing the west in the early years, central resource control was both justifiable and effective. Today, that control lies largely within the legislature of each province. The recent agreements between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada affirm that principle, but do so in a way which will not only greatly benefit the west but all regions of Canada.

It is simply a truism to state that the building of our economic union has been made possible largely by the economic mobility which has prevailed through most of our history.

• (1750)

Our constitutional task facing us today is to ensure that Canada is a country without internal barriers. Accordingly, a guarantee of mobility that is included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is the only way that we can assure ourselves of the prosperity and sustained economic growth that we all seek.

Many of the historical impediments to regional economic development seem to be eroding with new technology, the accumulation of capital and the realization of the importance of research and development. In Western Canada, natural resources have made possible the more rapid establishment of a diversified industrial base. Many decades ago, the transition from sail to steam retarded the economic development of the Atlantic region. Today, that region benefits from the advances of technology associated with the exploitation of its various maritime resources. Quebec too is witnessing the transformation of its economy through technological innovation. In Ontario, research and development are creating new products and industries which benefit all Canadians and which can compete in the international marketplace.

In our over-all economic possibilities, nature is on the side of Canada. It would indeed be an irrecoverable loss for both the regions and the larger Canadian union if the benefits of these great developments were to be confined merely to the province of their birth. The national economy, so important to the thinking of the Fathers of Confederation, would have realized far less than its original promise.

To accept the view that a true economic common market is unrealistic or irrelevant to Canada's future is to question one essence of the initial move toward confederation. It is not the extent of a country, Alexander Galt claimed, but the diversity of its economic interests which is the real guarantor of greater prosperity. We in this House must now provide the necessary unity to allow those diversities to interact and to achieve their full potential.

The constitutional guarantee of our economic union, to be embodied to a substantial degree in our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms, must suit the Canada of today and tomorrow. It is also essential in a more symbolic way. To both foreign and domestic investors, reassurance about the fundamental character of the Canadian economic union will help to provide the impetus to the next stage of our economic growth, which in turn will do much to resolve the economic and social uncertainties before us.

The constitutional proposal which we are now considering, motivated by the social, political and economic circumstances of our own time, will set the building blocks for a new Canada, the Canada of the twenty-first century. "Whatever you do" said John Macdonald, "adhere to the union. We are a great country, and shall become one of the greatest . . . if we preserve it; we shall sink into insignificance and adversity if we suffer it to be broken." Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there consent to call it six o'clock as requested by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I understand clearly the hon. member's intention, and that is that he calls attention to the fact he has been recognized. He will have the floor at eight o'clock, barring points of order or questions of privilege.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.55 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) had the floor.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a wonderful country. It has tremendous potential, tremendous natural resources and a robust, working people. There is every reason for Canada to be one of the great nations of the world.

When a country changes its constitution it has the opportunity to provide for and meet the needs of its people—Canadians in this case—in the modern world. It presents a further challenge to effect greater achievements.

The changing of a constitution could present a grave danger if it is done in the wrong manner. It could result in the country breaking up.

Tonight I would like to deal with a short review of what has happened in regard to constitutional change in Canada. I want to start by saying that the people of Canada should, and I say this reverently, thank God for men like the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) as well as the Progressive Conservative Party. Without our party the Constitution would have been brought home a long time ago and by now the country would probably be separated into three segments. That is what was happening when this constitutional resolution was first brought in. So divisive was the approach to constitutional change taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that millions feared we would never again be a united Canada, if indeed we continued to have a Canada at all.

The Trudeau package would have broken the country up or created a unitary state. In clear language, it would have created a socialist republic.

The struggle that ensued in the House and throughout Canada proved the worth of the British parliamentary system. When the Prime Minister announced his constitutional package on October 2, it was a unilateral package in a country which had never been used to unilateral policies. It had an amending formula which had been secured ten years before without support from many parts of the provinces, even though some premiers had signed it. It also contained a charter of rights. When the Prime Minister announced his constitutional proposal, there appeared to be a feeling among many people that this was the package which was to go to Westminster. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) jumped on the bandwagon and supported it. He thought it was wonderful. However, the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party stood up and said it was a dangerous and divisive package, and that message went across the nation and was talked about in our homes and at our work.

The Prime Minister wanted to get to Westminster as quickly as possible to have his constitutional package signed before the people of Canada really knew what was in it. But the leader of our party stopped him in his tracks at every turn before the Prime Minister was able to get to the airport.

The Prime Minister set many deadlines, and I will deal with a few of those deadlines now to illustrate what actually happened. The Prime Minister was going to send the package to England in May and have it back before the summer recess. In June of 1980 he indicated he was going to have it back by July 1. The Leader of the New Democratic Party was urging him to move it faster. The Prime Minister was going to go as fast as he could. Had it not been for the official opposition in the House, the resolution would have been over there and back. However, he had to keep changing his deadlines because more and more people of Canada were finding out what the package contained.

• (2010)

On November 11 the Prime Minister said we would have it on July 1 of the next year. On April 1, 1981, he said he would have it on July 1, 1981. He kept setting deadlines. Instead of trying to get input from the people of Canada, he endeavoured to push the package through.

A committee was set up, and closure was imposed. I was astounded by one part of a speech made by a parliamentary secretary yesterday when he said his sister or some other relative was in the gallery on the night of the closure and that she felt terrible. We all felt terrible because we were dealing with a document which offered this country freedom of speech, yet the government was closing off debate and refusing scores of our members an opportunity to speak by saying we could not talk about the Constitution of Canada. It was a very sad picture.

I say again that I am glad there were men who were ready to stand up to that, and the Progressive Conservative Party stood up to it.

I want to deal with a few of the items that were in the package at that time. The committee was going to have some nice, cosy little chats but, because of the force of the combined opposition, the government had to permit television, had to hear groups from across the country—the disabled, the Indians, the women and many others—and had to allow them to come and make representations. We stopped hon. members opposite in their tracks in that respect too.

Gradually people started to find out what was in that package. They knew about the unilateral action. The Prime Minister was proceeding without the consent of the provinces and without any consensus. He used the excuse that he was frustrated after 54 years—and that reference to 54 years was a misstatement too. Much progress had been made in those 54 years. The charter had never been mentioned until very recent years. It was an addendum.

Unilateral action was bad enough, but then the Victoria amending formula was suddenly presented to the premiers in 1971 in Victoria. Like the Premier of Alberta, all the premiers were convinced that they should sign on the spot without reference to their legislatures or their cabinets. That was how the federal government obtained their signatures. It was no wonder that when the Premier of Quebec got home and talked to his cabinet, he immediately said, "Take my signature off". We owe Quebec a great deal for that act because this country was saved from being divided. With it, the people of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba would have been second-class citizens. The people of the maritimes would have been second-class citizens. Only Quebec and Ontario would have had the power of veto for all time regardless of what their populations would be. That was the formula which would have gone to England in 1971, as if it had the support of the people. It had the support of a few men who were talked into it, without reference to their cabinets or their legislatures. That could never happen again.

Freedom of the press was included in the charter of fundamental rights and freedoms but, oh, no, we cannot include property rights because they are under provincial jurisdiction pursuant to the BNA Act. Well, so is education a provincial responsibility under the BNA Act, but there was no hesitation whatsoever in putting language of instruction in the charter. Mobility rights were also included. It would almost make me laugh if it were not so sad. For years hundreds of people from the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have been coming to Alberta and working. I do not know of any who were driven out. Even those who could not speak the language came, and they have jobs. I spoke to many of them at Fort McMurray, and they were glad to get jobs out there. There is no discrimination because they came from other provinces. There might have been some in Ontario and Quebec or there might have been some problem in the maritimes, but there certainly was not in western Canada.

Hon. members opposite talk about what a wonderful thing it will be that mobility rights will be included in the Constitution, but I look at Quebec and see that one cannot hold a job if one does not speak French. What good are mobility rights to people in western Canada who speak only English? They are no good at all. This is a backhanded way of saying we are doing something in the charter. Mobility rights will be meaningless unless we can speak French when we go to Quebec, at least under the present laws, which are illegal.

Mr. Caccia: Shame on you.

Mr. Taylor: Just try to get a job there today. Many people are leaving there, many Canadians of French origin are leaving there because they object to what is going on. I talked to one in Calgary just the other day. He became fed up. If this government wants to promote unity across the country, why does it allow favouritism in one province?

Mr. Caccia: What favouritism?

Mr. Taylor: The Quebec government is stopping people from putting up English signs and stopping them from working if they speak English, and the government here does nothing. Hon. members opposite talk nicely, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) is doing now—he is chattering away to himself—but it did not take the Liberal government long a few years ago to declare the policies of the Alberta government ultra vires. Oh, no, it did that almost overnight, but the policies of Quebec which are ultra vires the BNA Act go on and on. This is not right at all. Hon. members opposite should not try to tell me it is.

I do not believe people should have special privileges. The section on the language of instruction will not make any difference in the province of Alberta. In Alberta a student can progress from grade one to university in the French language if he wants to do so. We do not stop people from putting up French signs. We do not stop them from putting up Ukrainian signs or Polish signs, but in Quebec there is a rule that English signs cannot be put up, this in a country which is predominantly English. Forcing all signs to be in French is completely wrong.

With respect to special privileges, we introduced an amendment to make compensation payable to everyone on the same conditions. The New Democratic Party introduced a subamendment proposing that we pay only Quebec. That is special status. That was what the original charter did, too. It provided for special status for one or two provinces and did not worry about the rest because their populations were not large enough. The people of Canada did not go for that. Hundreds of people in Ontario and Quebec do not go for it either.

I do not agree at all with the New Democratic Party subamendment respecting compensation on the basis of special privilege. We have fought for the equal status of every province, and one province should not have special consideration. There is too much special consideration already. Hon. members in the Liberal Party have been buying their continued power. No wonder the people vote Liberal time after time.

Let us look at what the Liberal Party does with DREE grants. In 1981 Newfoundland received $3.5 million; Prince Edward Island, $1.2 million; Nova Scotia, $5.9 million; and New Brunswick, $18.5 million. These are all have-not provinces. Quebec received $70 million; Ontario, $8.9 million; Manitoba, $3.4 million; Saskatchewan, $2.5 million; Alberta, nothing at all; British Columbia, $1.3 million; and Yukon, nothing at all. The total amount received over 13 years by Newfoundland was $28 million; Prince Edward Island, $20 million; Nova Scotia, $75 million; New Brunswick, $100 million; Quebec, $494 million; Ontario $88 million; Manitoba, $83 million; Saskatchewan, $29 million; Alberta, $35 million; British Columbia, $10 million; and Yukon, $.1 million.

It is clear that hon. members opposite keep buying their way back into Parliament. There has been favouritism and special status. I do not go for that at all. I did not like favouritism when I was in school, and I do not like it in the nation, either.

The government refused to include property rights. Everyone in this land wants to own property. I know the British North America Act says that. It also says that education is a provincial responsibility. There is no difficulty putting in language, none at all. There are other items in the charter. What was it like then? There was unilateral action. What is it like now after the struggle in Parliament and throughout the country? Now we have consensus.

● (2020)

The Prime Minister did not want this to go before the Supreme Court of Canada. He said many times that would not be done. However, he was forced to do it by the will of the people. The opposition put up a fight and insisted on it. We had to carry out a filibuster to do so, but we did it for the good of this country. Now we have consensus. The Liberal members are now trying to take credit for the consensus. We would not have had it had this resolution not gone to the Supreme Court of Canada.

We now have an amending formula, not the Victoria one with its veto but one with equality for the provinces, one with consensus. At least seven provinces must consent in order to change the Constitution. There was to be no reference to the Supreme Court, but it was referred. There was no equality for women. There is now equality for men and women in the charter. There were no aboriginal rights in the original charter. They were taken out. They are now back in, albeit with no definition. I hope the government is not trying to fool our aboriginal people by holding out a carrot: aboriginal rights without definition. We have asked the government to define these rights and to be fair to our native people. The Indian people in particular have suffered for a long time in this country. They should not be fooled. I hope they will not be.

There was no opting out before. Now there is. There was a nice cosy deal between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the New Democratic Party with regard to natural resources. Now the provinces are not getting what they already had under the British North America Act. However, the premiers did not fall for that. In the new package, provincial ownership is confirmed. There is a "notwithstanding" clause as well.

I said that this is a wonderful country. I am going to support this charter. However, it does not deal with abortion. I wish that protection were given to unborn children. It does not do anything with regard to capital punishment. This country is rampant with criminals. The police are not able to do their jobs.

Yes, Canada is a wonderful country, but it is going down the tube. We are killing incentive, driving out investment, discouraging savings for retirement or building a house. Farmers cannot even get a mortgage. Millions are unemployed. Our new Constitution will not solve any of these problems. What we need is a fresh government with new policies that will let free enterprise work in this country.

The Constitution is a different package now. I intend to support it. When it comes back with a new amending formula, we will be able to make changes in order to prevent abortion on demand, killing of unborn children, and murderers being let off scot-free or put in prison for only ten years or so. I am going to support the package on the strength of the idea that with the new amending formula we will be able to make changes when it comes to this country.

I again want to pay tribute to the leader of this party, the hon. member for Provencher and other members, particularly at the committee stage. I pay tribute to all those in this party who stood behind our leaders who carried out such a valiant fight. It was worth while. We now have a package we can send to Westminster.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House for a little over seven years, and I have never heard anything as stupid as the comments just made by my colleague from Bow River who, to a degree most unusual in this House, has been making a spectacle of his ignorance. I suggest he take the figures he was quoting for DREE grants and divide them by the population of each province, a very simple mathematical operation, and he will see that Quebec is not getting more than its fair share.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the constitutional conference at the beginning of November this year, the Premier of Quebec gave three reasons why he felt that Quebec could not sign the accord entered into by the federal government and the nine other provinces of Canada. First, he mentioned his disagreement with Section 6 of the draft resolution which dealt with mobility rights. Second, he indicated his disagreement with Section 23 which, he felt, would seriously restrict Quebec's constitutional powers with respect to education. Third, he did not agree with the absence of fiscal compensation from the amending formula.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the issue of mobility rights warrants a lengthy discourse. I fail to understand why anyone would object to the entrenchment of such a clause in the Charter of Rights. Why, in the Common Market, workers can move freely from one sovereign state to another sovereign state, while here in Canada, there are any number of barriers that prevent Canadian citizens from moving from one Canadian province to another, all within the same country. I feel that this objection is not well founded and is basically an expression of the separatist leanings of the Quebec government. I do not intend to dwell further on Section 6. Personally, if this were the only problem, I would unreservedly support the resolution which is now before the House.

Now, regarding the second objection made by the government of Quebec and which concerns the minority language educational rights guaranteed under Section 23, that is an entirely different matter. Basically, Mr. Speaker, what we must ask ourselves if we want to consider this issue seriously is: Does Section 23 truly guarantee that francophones outside Quebec and anglophones living in Quebec will have the same rights? Curiously enough, if one merely reads the wording of Section 23, it would seem that the section is more favourable to francophones outside Quebec, because under Section 23, any person with French as his mother tongue, whether that person was educated in Canada or outside Canada, would be able to go to French schools outside Quebec. While in the case of anglophones in Quebec, because of the restriction included in Section 59, it would be necessary to have been educated in English in Canada.

● (2030)

But in practice, Mr. Speaker, what are the real facts? In practice, I think that true equality will not stem from that section, if only because the where-the-number-so-warrants restriction will cause a lot more problems to French-speaking people outside Quebec than to English-speaking Quebecers. It is simply a matter of being somewhat familiar with the geographical distribution of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and to be aware of the concentration of English-speaking Canadians in the western part of Quebec to realize that in the case of English-speaking residents of Quebec, the where-the-number-so-warrants restriction will not be a source of major problems since, in any event, even outside the greater Montreal area, the entire structure is already in place. One of my colleagues told me that in a certain village of the Gaspé area they have one English school for 15 families. With respect to French-speaking people outside Quebec, everything will be left to the discretion or interpretation of the courts, and we have no guarantee that their interpretation will meet the needs of French-speaking Canadians. I will come back to that later on, Mr. Speaker.

Second, Section 23 does not give French-speaking people outside Quebec the possibility of getting organized or of setting up their own structures which they will be able to control themselves, namely, school boards. We are all fully aware of the 35 per cent of French-speaking Ottawans who, for years now, have been complaining and urging the government of Ontario to allow them to control their own institutions. The answer has always been the same—no. Compare that with the situation prevailing in Quebec, and I would suggest that nobody can argue the contrary.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, the French-Canadian Association of Ontario sent a letter to the members and the senators of the Canadian Parliament. I will not read it because I may run out of time. In it they stated just how essential it was to guarantee their future in Ontario, more particularly in the Ottawa area, and to what extent it was also possible to find a satisfactory formula to enshrine that right in the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, I think that by putting the Canada clause in the Constitution we are asking Quebec to take a certain risk. Well, the province could take that risk or pay the extra costs to the extent that they would be offset by equivalent benefits for French-speaking people outside Quebec. It was with that in mind that I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on November 17 to propose a draft of Section 23 whose result would have been to use the treatment reserved for the English minority in Quebec as a standard to define the rights of French-speaking people outside Quebec.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, our French-speaking brothers outside Quebec have good reasons to be concerned. Indeed, whether it is the Federation of Francophones Outside Quebec, the French-Canadian Association of Ontario, the Association of French Canadians of Alberta or the Association of French Canadians of Saskatchewan, they are the people who have to live in those conditions every day, and I think they are in an ideal position to assess the situation and the kind of life they lead in Canada. And all those people tirelessly repeated again last week that they had come to Ottawa to let us know that Section 23 does not do them justice.

Other statements are also of course a cause for concern. For instance, after the ratification of the agreement by the ten, Premier Bill Bennett went back to British Columbia and replied to someone who mentioned that the school rights of francophones had been entrenched in the Constitution: you know, what we have done basically is simply to entrench what we are already doing. And what are they doing in British Columbia? In about ten schools, there are French, classes, not French schools, but simply French classes. This means that when the children go out in the schoolyard, they must speak English. Of course, in such conditions, the school becomes a marvellous assimilation tool. But the last straw, Mr. Speaker, was the publication of a letter written by the Ontario Premier to a woman voter in which he said that, basically, the inclusion of Section 23 in this resolution was not designed to change anything at all in Ontario—Heaven forbid—but rather to counter what was being done in Quebec both under Bill 22 of Mr. Bourassa's Liberal government and under Bill 101 of the Parti Québécois government.

In the face of such statements, Mr. Speaker, I believe we have every reason to be at the very least sceptical and to have serious doubts about the equality which is supposedly reflected in this Section 23. Of course, paragraph 23.(1)(a) now provides for an opting-in alternative, which in a sense is a step in the right direction, but I realize the potential unfairness to our anglophones who have shown their good will. What is somewhat paradoxical, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it will finally be the anglophones who have shown good will by sending their children to French schools who will have to pay the price of this section. Personally, this makes me sad.

Mr. Speaker, I suggested two solutions to this problem in a letter to the Prime Minister. Since it was agreed to let the notwithstanding clause apply to the provisions of the Constitution which concern the basic freedoms, the legal guarantees and equal rights in order to alleviate the concerns of some provinces, I suggested to the Prime Minister that this also apply to linguistic rights. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if this clause can apply to such important issues as the right to life, the right to security and all the basic freedoms that are traditionally included in charters of rights throughout the western world—the notwithstanding clause applies to all these issues; the only matters to which it does not apply are Section 23, Section 6 and the democratic rights—it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the same could be done for linguistic rights. Or does this mean that in this country, we have linguistic rights, or first-class rights, and certain other rights, or second-class rights?

We have serious cause for reflection on this matter. It seems to me that in return, Quebec could have promised to amend Bill 101 and replace the Quebec clause by the Canada clause. This would have put linguistic rights on the same footing as the other rights, it would have maintained Quebec's jurisdiction over educational matters and would also have reassured Quebec anglophones. I believe this would have been an honourable compromise because, at the moment, the Canada clause does not pose any problem for the francophone majority in Quebec. There might be 5,000 more anglophones in the English school system in Quebec out of a population of 185,000, which represents from 2½ per cent to 3 per cent more anglophones students in the English school system. This would have caused no problem. In the long run, it would have been an insurance policy for Quebec because the supremacy of the Quebec National Assembly would have been maintained in case, which is most unlikely, present conditions should change in Quebec for any reason and this province should become, which is not impossible, the Alberta of the year 2000 with the immigration of a great number of workers from other provinces in Canada. In such a case, the Quebec government would have all the flexibility and all the powers required to remedy the situation.

Anyhow, even if the Péquiste government had refused to make such a commitment, the coming into power of a federalist party at the next election, the Quebec Liberal party, would have allowed us to do that and I can assure you that under the present political circumstances in Quebec, there is every likelihood that the Parti Québécois will be defeated. Mr. Speaker, the time allotted to me is running short so that I will now deal with the amending formula. Such as we know it, the amending formula gives a veto right which is theoretical with a financial compensation restricted to educational and cultural matters. In all other areas, it would be difficult for a province such as Quebec to resist centralization if ever the other provinces, seven, eight or nine of them, wanted it. For example, it could happen that seven, eight or nine provinces decide that from now on housing would strictly come under federal jurisdiction. In such a case, the Quebec government could choose to keep its jurisdiction or take the risk of financially penalizing its taxpayers who, if Quebec decided to stick to its principles and jurisdictions, would have to keep paying their taxes to the federal government to finance programs in seven or eight other provinces and, moreover, if Quebec wanted to provide the same services in the province, then additional taxes would have to be paid.

Mr. Speaker, is that an amending formula with financial compensation, what is so often called shortsighted separatism? I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that with the financial compensation or the opting out, there was never any question of removing federal powers to give them to the provinces. On the contrary, it is essentially a defensive measure to enable a province such as Quebec to preserve its present constitutional powers. It is said that it would create a balkanized Canada. We should never forget, Mr. Speaker, that anyhow, in extreme cases, the federal government has a veto right and that under the amending formula, it could always object.

Mr. Speaker, are the poorer provinces threatened in any way? At this point, a distinction must be made between financial and fiscal compensation. In the case of fiscal compensation, I agree that because total tax points differ from one province to another, there might be some danger, but in the case of financial compensation which is based essentially on the following criterion, that is, the amount the federal government would have spent in the province availing itself of the right to opt out, there should be no problem.

Mr. Speaker, time flies and I should like to speak of the negotiations per se. I feel that the time is almost up, as we say, that down deep in the heart of all Quebecers, there lies a secret wish. They dream of the day when their two great political idols, the two bright stars of Quebec's political sky, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Quebec Premier, make peace, shake hands and start solving the problems of concern to Quebecers. I appeal to all, Mr. Speaker. Some will say I am being naive, I know, but I think history will have more to say about the contribution of those two men if they settle their differences because, as you know, the storm is gathering over the horizon. Even more serious problems will have to be resolved. The time has come to solve those constitutional problems because, whether it be the international or the economic situation, tomorrow we will have to concentrate exclusively on bread and butter issues. And, Mr. Speaker, there will be much disappointment. I am afraid Quebecers have lost this war through attrition. What I mean is that Quebecers are so bored with all these talks about the Constitution that they are ready to let us do whatever we feel like doing. And that is the reason Quebecers have not opposed this resolution the way they should have. People truly believe that once the constitutional issue is settled—if I may really use the word "settled" in this context, for a great many things could be said about this—we will be able to quickly solve the other problems which concern them.

I should like to conclude by saying that during the few remaining hours—we can no longer say weeks or days—we must do everything possible. I think that there is a strong possibility that reason will prevail in this country, and that Canadians and Quebecers would be extremely grateful to their elected representatives who could finally shake hands and who would direct the action of their respective governments more toward bread and butter issues.

● (2040)

[English]

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) would accept a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The time of the hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) has expired. Accordingly I would seek the unanimous consent of the House for there to be an exchange of questions and answers. Is it agreed that the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) may ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member's speech and with a great deal of sympathy for what he had to say. It struck me that there was a fundamental contradiction in what he was suggesting. In the first half of his speech he emphasized the importance of the minority rights of francophones outside the province of Quebec, with which I am in complete agreement. Therefore, if he is so much concerned with the rights of francophones outside the province of Quebec—

[Translation]

—why is he willing to let the rights to education in the minority language be subject to the notwithstanding clause, since that would not actually protect the rights of the French minority groups which is one on the things we gained and achieved with Section 23?

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple. I gave the interpretation which the Premier of British Columbia, for instance, lends to Section 23, and we know what the Premier of Ontario thinks of that section, so that actually if Section 23 is subjected to a notwithstanding clause the results will be about the same with regard to the minorities outside Quebec. I would very much appreciate it if the hon. member were to personally intervene and use his influence as future leader of the Ontario NDP at Queen's Park to get the Premier of Ontario to finally provide justice to Ontario's French-speaking minority, especially in the Ottawa area where they represent 35 per cent of the population. We cannot say that it is a very small minority. In Quebec's case, a notwithstanding clause would allow the National Assembly to maintain its legislative authority and as you know, you do not have to worry about Quebec, history shows our degree of tolerance.

● (2050)

[English]

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I join the debate in its concluding moments with the hope, which I am sure all hon. members have, for a successful constitutional future for Canada.

I would like to start by suggesting to the hon. member for Montmorency-Orleans (Mr. Duclos), who spoke previously, that he should interpret the comments made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) in the context of the effort that the hon. member for Bow River had made to bring forward to the House, a point of view which is indeed shared by many people in Canada for historic reasons. His effort was honest, and he made an attempt to bring those issues forward to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: In coming to these concluding moments, I think that most of us will agree that the resolution as it stands before us now asks as many questions as it answers. As time goes on and as history views us, we may indeed see many problems which are not now obvious and many difficulties which are not now apparent. In spite of that, I think most of us would like to offer congratulations at this time to all those who have taken part in this debate, with particular reference to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: —and with particular reference and best wishes to the hon. member for Hochelega-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal).

While we have in the House a certain sense of having done our part, having participated in this debate, the country at large undoubtedly feels a sense of relief. That sense of relief is best illustrated in a letter sent to me by one of my constituents. It expresses a peculiar kind of relief and contains a slight contradiction. However, I would like to quote a short paragraph from the letter, which reads as follows:

> One might have hoped that the government might have addressed itself to economic and unemployment problems in recent years rather than to the Constitution except that, to have done so, on its dreary track record might have led us over the brink of economic disaster instead of simply up to it where we now teeter.

In a way, that is kind of a backhanded comment; but it is a comment which I think really illustrates the mood of the people, certainly the mood among my constituents and, I suggest, the mood of the people in Ontario and other provinces. It is the kind of thing which suggests that there has been a "notwithstanding" clause which is far more important in the country at large than the "notwithstanding" clause that the premiers have put in the Constitution, a clause which relates to the charter. In other words, the country has a genuine hope and an honest desire to see a constitution for Canadians that is made in Canada, one that is our very own. However, notwithstanding that, many people in Canada have identified their feeling that other issues are also very important and could have been dealt with in the long period of time we have taken to deal with the Constitution.

As others have said repeatedly, the original resolution was brought forward to the House last October. We had two basic problems with that resolution. We had a problem in terms of the process, and we had a problem in terms of the substance of the charter which was presented to us in the first instance. The original resolution suggested a unilateral federal action. It was a process which, over the past year or more has been modified and on which the government has been seen to be accommodating. We have indeed had a process which most of us would see as fairly complete, one which started first with the extension of the parliamentary committee which dealt with the substance of the charter and which allowed numerous Canadians from all across the country to present their cases, concerns and hopes to the government.

We also saw a parliamentary debate which was difficult for most Members of Parliament. It took a long period of time, and finally it ended in an additional process being added, that is, consideration by the Supreme Court of Canada as to whether or not the actions we were taking and the position which had been established by the official opposition was indeed accurate. The Supreme Court of Canada decided that the government itself did not have the right to take unilateral action and that consensus was required if not legally, at least in terms of our constitutional conventions. Following that judgment by the Supreme Court, we were taken into the next phase so that the cadence and the rhythm of the process was maintained. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) made the additional effort of bringing the whole constitutional issue before the premiers.

During that conference, it was stated on numerous occasions that it was not possible to achieve this kind of consensus, that it was not worth while engaging the premiers in additional discussions, and that no fruitful benefits would flow from that activity. However, as a result of that additional process, we reached an accord which brought back to Parliament a modified resolution which included many aspects of the discussions in Parliament of the many concerns which had been brought forward. The resolution was then presented to the House of Commons and was then subjected to an additional review. As we all know, that review resulted in two major amendments which accepted the fact that there was an equality of rights for women, which was not subject to the "notwithstanding" clause that had been introduced. Also, there was a modified acceptance of aboriginal rights and treaties. I think this must be considered to have been a due process of law, a part of the procedure that was worth while, and that it was indeed a part of the tradition of the Parliament of Canada to act on constitutional matters or those which affect the federal government as the supreme authority.

At that point, however, I think that one of the basic flaws in the whole issue became apparent. It became most apparent on Friday of last week, four days ago, when the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and then the Prime Minister spoke. The case was well put by the hon. member for Rosedale in terms of the need for additional adjustments to the resolution in order to establish some of the things which would, particularly in the future, relate to federal government actions. These actions and the kind of proposal which was made and brought forward by this party through the hon. member for Rosedale suggested, particularly in the areas of moral concerns, that Parliament would be supreme. It was not intended to change the amendment. This had nothing to do with the substance of the charter or the accord on which the provincial premiers had reached consensus. It had nothing to do with denying any of the contributions by other groups and agreements during the development of the charter and the resolution. It dealt with an additional affirmation that Parliament was supreme in matters which were under federal jurisdiction.

The Prime Minister quite properly pointed out that these matters not only related to the area of abortion, but also related to matters such as capital punishment and, in the future, could relate to issues such as euthanasia or conscription in times of war. However, in this instance the Prime Minister came up with a major inconsistency when he denied the opportunity to include that affirmation in the charter and in the constitutional resolution before it left our House. I think that that in itself should register on the minds of Canadians across the country. That should also tell us something about the intransigence, rigidity and inflexibility of the Prime Minister in dealing with this whole matter. There have been a number of times when he has dug in his heels and has, in fact, caused more problems than he has solved by not dealing, in an open and forthright manner, with the problems which have originally been created on matters of specific substance which were introduced in the resolution last October.

The other major area of concern involves the matter of Quebec. The hon. member who spoke previously spent some time dealing with his concerns regarding language rights and other issues within the province of Quebec. I think that in keeping with what the hon. member for Bow River has said, all of us should share equally his concern that the province of Quebec be treated as part of the Canadian family. Indeed, anglophones within Quebec should have the same rights and privileges as Canadians across the country and should have the same rights as francophones in other provinces. It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), who was on an open-line show this morning, discussing this matter in some detail. It appears he is taking up the banner and will spend a good deal of his considerable energy to make sure those rights are protected within that province.

● (2100)

The fact that the Prime Minister at this important point in time will not make that extra effort and take that final step or whatever gesture is required to allow Quebec the opportunity to be incorporated in the first instance in this charter is just another major inconsistency and flaw in the approach that the Prime Minister has taken.

I believe the charter is imperfect. There is no question that there are and that there will be many matters within the charter about which all of us will have concerns and provisions which we will come to regret. There is no question that in the area I represent, and I think in many areas across the nation, the question of property rights, which has been described by many other members before me, is an important matter. It is a matter that many of us would like to have seen included in this charter and seen affirmed for the rights of future Canadians.

Property rights seem to have been possible in other countries. The right to own property seems quite reasonable. Property rights have a major impact on individuals across the country who feel increasingly that provincial or federal actions seem to threaten their right to own property. The right to own property seems to be one of the basic tenets of a democracy. This is only one example of many of the inadequacies that are within the charter.

I believe as time goes on that many of these matters can be dealt with. We have a situation now where many of the pundits and critics of this whole constitutional discussion, although new things are happening quickly from day to day, are changing their minds about certain parts of the resolution. After the provinces had reached an accord and after the premiers had met with the Prime Minister, some people found very good reason to be concerned about the fact that the final step should be taken by 11 individuals in our country because the impact of what they were doing and the long-term consequences affected all Canadians. The reactions of the critics and the people who are looking at the constitutional resolution in the context of today are only momentary. History itself will be the only measure of whether or not this is a good or a bad resolution.

I think it is important that we go forward from the time of the vote on this resolution as it passes from Parliament. We should go forward in the spirit of hope that successive governments will have the good judgment and patience to deal with the inadequacies within the charter and that Members of Parliament will maintain the faith and the confidence of their constituents and will exercise their authority and their responsibilities in such a way that this charter, whether or not it is inadequate now, will serve the purpose of all Canadians.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is a basic principle in politics that a government may be free to make any decision it wants, but it will have to live with the consequences. Or to put it another way, history always presents the bill, one way or another. However, it seldom happens that a government which has shirked its responsibilities and shown itself to be unworthy of its people's trust, is cynical to the point of bragging about it. How else are we to interpret statements by the Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs as reported in Le Soleil of Saturday, November 7, 1981, on page B-2, where the minister states that he created the common front of the eight provinces in September, 1980, and that since that time, the common front had always been artificial, so much so that it would have collapsed had not Quebec kept it going. This means that Quebec made the ultimate concessions. Finally, Quebec had set up the gang of eight for the sole purpose, says Mr. Morin, of using it as a political weapon to sway public opinion in Quebec. And Mr. Morin adds that one of the means used to create this artificial common front, as he calls it, was to work on the claims of each province, whether they concerned natural resources, fishing rights or even, admits Mr. Morin, some provinces' obsessive hatred of Mr. Trudeau.

And these are the people, Mr. Speaker, who got themselves elected on April 13 by telling Quebecers that they would be the trusted defenders of Quebec's traditional rights. And what have they done? They have tried to permanently weaken Quebec. In fact, when our government offered them and the government of Ontario a veto right, they joined forces with seven provinces who did not have a veto right and the first price they had to pay was to drop the veto right they had, so that they could proudly say: We are just as good as Prince Edward Island. They refused to join the two governments that did have a veto right. At least five times, in January, 1977, in October, 1978, in October, 1980, in February, 1981, and at the beginning of this month, in November, 1981, the federal government offered the government of Quebec a veto right. As I said before, a government may be free to do as it likes, but it cannot escape the consequences of its actions. It would be a lesser evil if this weakening of the province had occurred only in terms of such fundamental statements or constitutional provisions, Mr. Speaker. But when a government weakens its most precious resource, namely, its men, women and children, then it is no longer worthy of the trust it has received.

I shall recall, if I may, how Quebec's population has evolved. In the 1960s, the population of Quebec increased by more than 100,000 per year. I shall also give figures for the last three years, when the population growth was almost nil. The population dropped by 3,000 inhabitants in 1978, increased by not quite 11,000 in 1979 and by 20,000 in 1980. It is true that the rate of growth throughout Canada also dropped during the same period, but certainly not as much. During the 1960s, the growth rate of the population in Quebec represented 30 per cent of the growth rate throughout Canada.

From 1976 to 1980, Quebec's share in the population increase of Canada went down to 10 per cent! A contrast between these two periods could not be more striking and it is certainly dramatic, to say the least. Of course, the Quebec government could pretend that it is due to a lower birthrate; unfortunately, it is due to a phenomenon which is the direct and the immediate consequence of its own policies, and I am speaking about international and interprovincial migrations. On a net global basis, outgoing movements of population amounted to about 5,000 people between 1961 and 1976, except for the years 1970 and 1971, and we all know why. On the other hand, these movements reached an average of over 33,000 people a year during the period 1977 to 1980. The worst year was 1977-78 when there was a record net emigration of 54,122 people. And since the immigration figures in Quebec are quite high, the gross numbers of immigrants are even more revealing. The net outflow in 1977-78 represents the difference between 32,345 immigrants and 96,467 emigrants. In other words, nearly 100,000 people left Quebec in 1977-78. This means that both constitutionally and as far as our most precious resource, our people, are concerned, the policies of the Quebec government have been extremely harmful.

Not only have they weakened this province of which they were the trustees, but they have even betrayed the traditional positions of Quebec governments. History will show, Mr. Speaker, that they have systematically refused to support our fight for French schools throughout Canada. They have systematically rejected the appeal of francophones outside Quebec who were asking that their rights be entrenched in the Canadian Constitution. Everyone will remember what they stated in the document which they tabled in Montreal on July 8, 1980, during the last months of their mandate, where they alleged that the entrenchment of the rights of francophones outside Quebec in the Constitution would freeze their rights for the future. What hypocrisy! While we were trying to give them eternal protection, they had the audacity to pretend that this was a means to freeze rights which do not exist today. We have only to read the brief submitted by the L'Association des francophones hors Québec to see this. When we read the works of Canon Groulx—and if there is someone who always faithfully defended the traditional position of Quebec, which as a province, has always recognized its responsibility, as the focus of French-speaking Canadians, to work for the extension of their rights, it was Canon Groulx—we can find in his book entitled "Les minorités canadiennes-françaises déclarent" that it is the role and the responsibility of the federal government to entrench the rights of francophones in all Canadian provinces in the Canadian Constitution.

History will show, Mr. Speaker, that these rights which tomorrow will belong to the French Canadians in all Canadian provinces can never be taken away from them because we are giving a veto to Quebec, which does not even request it in this sense, by entrenching in the new Constitution for the first time the equal status of French and English in all the institutions of the central government. If ever someone wanted to remove this provision, Quebec has been given a veto, and all I hope is that separatists will not be in power in Quebec if ever, in a moment of aberration, certain provinces were to try to take away these French schools which are finally guaranteed by the Canadian Constitution. And to further illustrate, Mr. Speaker, how hypocritical they were, let us record in Hansard the following agreement signed on August 18, 1977, in St. Andrews, New Brunswick:

● (2110)

[English]

The premiers agree that they will make their best efforts to provide instruction in education in English and French wherever numbers warrant.

[Translation]

We merely have to read that clause, Mr. Speaker, to realize how they betrayed the French Canadian minorities outside Quebec. And the best way to understand it is to read again Section 23 of the constitutional resolution and more especially Section 24(1) which reads as follows and I quote:

Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Consequently, if it ever happened that a provincial government did not comply with the Charter which provides for French-speaking schools, French Canadians could appeal to the Supreme Court and the latter would find that in my constituency of Matane fewer than 20 anglophone families have a school at Métis Beach, the smallest town in the constituency, a school from grades one to eleven, and even if one has no legal training one knows that a constitutional provision must apply consistently throughout the country and since in Métis-sur-mer in my constituency, there are hardly fifteen English-speaking families who have a school for fewer than 40 children, it is the best guarantee that the Supreme Court will enforce the same standard in all the other Canadian provinces. It is no longer a matter of the best effort, as signed by the Parti Québécois in St. Andrews. The Supreme Court has the right to impose sanctions and under the above-mentioned section it will take the necessary measures to correct the situation. There is the difference between the Quebec representatives who sit in Ottawa and those who betrayed them in Quebec City. As I said, Mr. Speaker, history will show that everything that was put in that resolution for French Canadians at the national level, either for schools in all the provinces or with respect to full bilingualism in New Brunswick, can be ascribed to the francophone representatives sitting in this Parliament.

Mr. Rae: Not only the francophones!

Mr. De Bané: What is worse, Mr. Speaker, is that not satisfied with betraying French Canadians and refusing to support their claims, they dared ridicule the claims of Franco-Ontarians. History will note that on the day before the conference was officially opened, Mr. Morin, as reported in the La Presse edition of Monday, November 2, scoffed at the suggestion that Ontario might offer Franco-Ontarians the benefits of Section 133. Not only did they shamefully refuse to support Franco-Ontarians, but added insult to injury by deriding the suggestion that Ontario might grant its French-speaking residents the benefits of Section 133. Not content with lying and betraying, they demonstrated the utmost duplicity by deceiving their own supporters. The House will recall that in Ottawa on April 16 they signed a document which they were prompt to hide. They signed this document only three days after telling Quebecers: Re-elect us and we shall be strong enough to fight for your rights. In this agreement they secretly signed in Ottawa on April 16, there is a Section 4 where they recognize once and for all and forever the limits of Labrador which will belong from now on to Newfoundland.

In the meantime, what are they saying to their supporters? That the federal government is trying to deprive Quebec of its rights on Labrador, as they claim in a document entitled "Le Québec est trahi" which PQ supporters are distributing in the Province of Quebec to demonstrate that the federal government is trying to take Labrador away from Quebec. Yet, they are the very people who came joyfully to Ottawa to sign this document. I think that there ought to be a limit to a party which boasts of its openness and yet betrays the traditional rights and legitimate claims of French Canadians, and its own supporters as well. Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard of a political party which carries duplicity that far? And when they return to their supporters, they say that Canada is a country with two founding nations and that this dimension must be respected, I am anxious to quote from the agreement they signed on April 16. What does it say? With your permission, I should like to read it for the edification of hon. members and future records:

The amending formula we have just signed recognizes the constitutional equality of provinces as equal partners within confederation, and that formula is aimed at protecting Canada's diversity. There is no more reference to duality, Mr. Speaker. "Such a formula enshrines legal equality between all provinces". Quebec wants to emphasize, to stress it is equal to Prince Edward Island. And he added: Being rational, that amending formula is obviously preferable to ours from Victoria, which gave forever a right of veto to Quebec, "because it recognized the equality of provinces within Canada". They do not want to let go of that ten. Hold Canada and equality with Prince Edward Island!

They state in the accord signed April 16 that in certain areas there must still be 11 rights of veto. Examples given are monarchy and the office of lieutenant-governor. This is what Quebec under the Parti Québécois insisted on signing. They wanted to ensure that as long as Prince Edward Island wants to keep monarchy in Canada, monarchy we are going to have, because this is one of the few questions on which they insisted all provinces should have a right of veto! The function of lieutenant governor and monarchy!

As far as compensation is concerned, Mr. Speaker, which they make such a case of now, it is worth reading what they signed in the April 16 Accord. Here is what is provided on the matter of compensation: "If a province opts out, the Government of Canada must provide reasonable compensation to the government of that province, taking into account the per capita cost of exercising that responsibility in provinces which approved the change" which means that if Quebec opted out of the unemployment insurance program, under the formula signed by the Parti Québécois, it should be offered only the per capita cost of unemployment insurance in provinces where there is no unemployment insurance. But we can see, Mr. Speaker, in our compensation formula, that it does not use a formula that would be so detrimental to Quebec. It refers to fair compensation. We do not have a formula such as that one that would be an empty phrase, because if the Vancouver compensation formula that is provided for here were possible in the case of unemployment insurance, clearly Quebec could not even afford to opt out. Since the unemployment rate in Alberta, for instance, would the unemployment insurance per capita cost in Alberta be the standard? Mr. Speaker, those are the people who touted themselves as big negotiators before the people of Quebec. I appreciate why Mr. Claude Morin in that article I just quoted from, admitted, and I quote Mr. Morin from page B-2 of Le Soleil of November 7:

English-speaking provinces, says Claude Morin, prepared the April 15 accord—

—and I would add that he had no hesitation signing it. This he did three days after obtaining a mandate from Quebecers under the assurance they would stand up and defend Quebec's interests. This he could do, Mr. Speaker, under the guise of nationalism. As Mr. Louis Falardeau wrote in La Presse of November 25, and I quote:

The Parti Québécois government was very careful not to reveal that it was the only one against enshrining the rights of women in the constitution.

Mr. Speaker, how many crimes can be perpetrated while wrapping themselves in the flag of nationalism. That flag belongs to all Quebecers but they are now trying to rob it so as to make it their own. They have appropriated for their own party that name which belongs to all Quebecers. Does anyone know of a democracy in the world where a party has tried to take the name which belongs to the entire nation? In France, is there a party called the French party, in Italy, the Italian party, in the United States, the American party? Well, the PQ party had the nerve to try to steal the flag which belongs to everybody and the name which belongs to everybody as well, in an attempt to weaken us. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have here spokesmen for Quebec who are doing their utmost to foil, counteract, work and fight against that attempt to weaken their province. And I can say that we will not stop because what we are doing today is only the first step. And the conclusion we have just drawn is that the province of Quebec is much greater than the Parti Québécois, and French Canada a thousand times greater than the Parti Québécois!

● (2120)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Portage-Marquette.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yurko: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would like the Chair to look at Standing Order 29 which indicates that the Speaker should have recognized the first person who stood. But in saying this, I offer the floor to my hon. friend.

Mr. Mayer: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I listened as best I could to the hon. minister who just spoke. I would hope that members opposite would do me the courtesy of listening to what I have to say. It is very important that we all take part in the process which has been going on here and has been going on in this country for the last 14 months. It is important that we all make an effort to understand the process because what we see and what is recorded in the press all too often is not really what the process is all about. It is about the complications that are brought about by the process.

It is unfortunate, because the people who elect us to this House of Commons, whether they like it or not, will be affected for many years to come by the very important debates we are engaged in here.

With those remarks, I hope to get some attention from the hon. members from Quebec. I come from western Canada where we also have problems in terms of how we envisage ourselves in confederation. I believe it is in somewhat the same fashion that the people of Quebec think of themselves in confederation. I firmly believe that if we are going to have the kind of dialogue which is needed in this country, to achieve good will between ourselves we must pay attention to each other and genuinely understand what we are trying to say to one another. Without that common courtesy or that extra effort to understand each other's point of view, it becomes very, very difficult to maintain any dialogue or understanding of what our points of view are.

● (2130)

In order to look at this process in terms of the way I would look at it or the way the constituents I represent would look at it I have to ask some questions on their behalf. Rightly or wrongly, the perception among many people is not necessarily about what the process entails but about some of the conflicts and some of the things which come out of the process that the press picks up. The perception is that much of the problem we have and much of the wrangling which has been going on have to do with the personality conflict between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of the province of Quebec. Rightly or wrongly, that is the perception many people from my part of the country have, and that is something which needs to be taken into consideration. It needs to be taken into consideration by the Prime Minister, not only as it affects the people of Quebec but also as it affects the perception of what is going on and the way the rest of the country looks at the process in which we are engaged.

Most people feel—and I agree—that there is no place for personality conflicts or ego trips when we get to rewriting our Constitution. I concur in that point of view very strongly. It becomes even more of a question which needs to be addressed when we ask ourselves why we got into what many people think of as this constitutional wrangle in the first place. We did not get into it because there was a great necessity to get into it. We got into it by choice. If we were to ask most people on the street, they would say the threat we are facing is not that our constitutional negotiations will break down but that our economy will break down. They wonder, and rightly so, why we have spent so much time and why there has been so much disagreement on the Constitution when things which really affect people, such as interest rates, economic conditions, inflation and their ability to feed and clothe their families, are so very important. As I said, this is not the case with the Constitution.

If we are going to rearrange the Constitution with which we have lived for over 100 years, we need to get into the arrangements by the proper process so that we can proceed with as much good will as possible. We need to proceed as expeditiously as possible so that we can address what most people think is the main threat to their immediate future, and that is the economic threat.

I find the situation we are in to be very unfortunate; nevertheless, we must proceed. We have to address constitutional questions.

Mr. Crosby: What are we going to do about it?

Mr. Mayer: My colleague asks, "What are we going to do about it?" I have said this before, and I think it needs to be said again: in many ways writing a constitution is like planning something. In many ways the planning part of any exercise can be the most exhilarating and the most exciting because it involves many possibilities. When a person plans a trip, he sits down and decides where he is going. He might be planning to build a house or buy a car. Anything we plan can have a very exhilarating effect. That is really what we are doing in this country. We are planning the future, and this should have had an exhilarating effect on us. Many people have come to the point where they do not feel the exhilaration. We have missed out on an opportunity to harness the energies Canadians have to work together. I think that is unfortunate, and many people in this country look on that as being unfortunate. That is reflected in the position which most people take: they are tired of the wrangling which goes on between politicians, and they want to get on with the job and get it finished. Even though many people understand that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is not as perfect as they might hope it would be, they are willing to accept it and get on with the job.

The people of the constituency of Portage-Marquette wonder why it is that provincial and federal politicians continually fight with each other. Let us suppose some objective person came here from a foreign land or from another planet. That person might think that the people whom federal and provincial politicians represent were two entirely different sets of people. However, the people who send us here to the federal House are the same people who send provincial politicians to the provincial houses. It should be much easier for us to agree than it is, yet in the past it has seemed that that has not been so at all in determining what should be done. Instead of thinking about the common good and solving problems—which is the wish of the people who send us to the federal Parliament and who send representatives to the various provincial legislatures across the country—all too often we have engaged in petty political rhetoric for some very questionable short-term brownie points.

The people I talk to at home keep asking about this over and over again, and I have to say that I really do not have a good, honest answer for them, except to say that the only way to solve problems is to send better people to represent them in Parliament and the various legislatures across the country.

We in western Canada feel very strongly about certain parts of the Constitution and about certain matters contained in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One of them is property rights. My area of the country was settled by people who settled there wanting economic freedom, economic equality and a chance to own some property of their own. They wanted a stake in their communities, their provinces and their country. When we are talking about certain basic rights being included in the charter, it is perfectly natural that those of us who are far removed from the problems of language rights which Quebecers have want to be accorded the same kind of courtesy and willingness to understand why we feel as strongly about property rights as some people in other parts of the country feel about rights that are near and dear to them.

I find it very disturbing to come here as a relatively new member—I have been here two and a half years—and to see unwillingness to listen to another man's point of view. it is difficult to understand why an hon. member says the kinds of things he says on behalf of his constituents and does not realize that other people have concerns about which they feel very strongly. However, some people show an unwillingness to listen, and that is something all of us feel badly about. The process we have gone through to get to where we are with respect to the Constitution has not lent itself to that kind of understanding. The process has not been correct.

I do not want to dwell on the past because in many ways this document is not a document of the past. It is a document of the future, and the only way we should be looking at it in terms of a document of the past is to ensure that we can learn from the process we have gone through. It has been far from a perfect process. If we could do it again, we would have found a better system by which to arrive at where we are today. If we go ahead the way we plan to go ahead tomorrow, it will be unfortunate if we do not realize what we are doing. We are looking at a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, an amending formula and a Canadian Constitution. We are looking at a prescription for how this country will live and work together in the future. We should not be looking back and making recriminations; we should look back and try to learn from the mistakes we made in relation to process.

From the point of view of the Conservative Party it is perfectly legitimate to say that our leader quite rightly pointed out almost 14 months ago to the day, on October 2, 1980, that we should learn from these kinds of things. If we are going to be changing the Constitution again in the future—which we will because, as I said, it is a document of the future, and it will have to adapt to future circumstances—we should be able to learn from our mistakes.

One of the mistakes we will have to live with for some time to come is the mistake we have made with respect to attitude. The most valuable resource any country has is its people, and the attitudes of those people reflect the ways in which the country works and lives together.

I do not think a bill of rights will make much difference in attitude. If we were able to come back to this country 50 years or 100 years from now to see how we are doing in terms of civil liberties and basic human rights, I think the most important question we would have to ask in order to determine the situation would be: what are people's attitudes toward themselves and toward their government? What are the attitudes of representatives toward the people they are elected to represent? Unless we have the proper attitude and are willing to live and work together and, in the process, understand someone else's point of view, it seems to me that a bill of rights will not be very important.

I have found this constitutional process to be unfortunate. I make that observation to underscore the point that the process of this constitutional renewal, as I said previously, has not been exhilarating and exciting for the country. The process has degenerated. We therefore have more problems in terms of the various levels of government than ever before. We had provincial governments suing the federal government over the Constitution, VIA Rail and the National Energy Program. That does not help improve our attitudes in this country. It is something we have further alienated as far as the process is concerned. Our attitudes in this country have hardened.

● (2140)

A very legitimate question to ask the French-speaking people in this country is how exactly they see the role that the English-speaking components of confederation should play in this process. We have a French-speaking Prime Minister from the province of Quebec very much at war with the Premier of Quebec. We in western Canada feel very much left out of that argument. It is not that we want to be included in it. However, if we are going to be affected by the outcome of that argument, it would be very nice for us to at least understand what the argument is about. There is not that kind of understanding in the country of the process that we are going through to renew the Constitution. That is a very unfortunate effect of the process we have gone through to get to where we are tonight.

Let me take one further point. Once the Constitution is passed and we have a bill of rights, that is not the end. People will have to be elected to this Parliament and to provincial legislatures. The people in the country who elect us will have to be very vigilant and concerned about what goes on in the House. This entails a large measure of dependence on the press and requires a sense of responsibility from it. Too often the productive things that go on in this place are not judged as being newsworthy. Too often it is only the sensational news that is reported, and that is unfortunate.

I suggest very strongly that it is a continual process in terms of the institutions in this country. It is very difficult to bring in a bill of rights the way we have done without doing something about the way the Supreme Court is appointed and the way it functions. That is something that should be looked at.

We need to look at the way the Senate operates. When this country was first put together over 100 years ago, and we had an Upper and Lower chamber, the government was not as involved in our daily lives as it is now. Now the average Canadian in this country works for a government of one form or another from the beginning of the year until some time in June. There should be more accountability to the taxpayers than there is at present. An excellent way of achieving that would be some form of elected Senate. I do not know specifically how it should be done. However, that is something to which we should address ourselves.

We do not need constitutional renewal to fix up some of what goes on in one part of the country versus another. The western section of the Canadian Transport Commission should be given much more authority. The International Joint Commission which functions in this country has never had a member from western Canada, yet over half the boundary between Canada and the United States is in western Canada. Those are some of the things we need to do institutionally in this country so that we have the determination and good will to be able to work together.

What I am asking in terms of the continuation of this process is that we look for ways to bring ourselves together. The question we should continually ask is how do we bring ourselves together? Unless we learn from the mistakes we made in the process that we are concluding here this evening and will vote on tomorrow, we will be continually asking those questions without learning from our mistakes. We will not learn through reference to our own past actions.

I repeat, we have to be very concerned about attitudes in this country. We must realize that we do not change attitudes by a simple piece of paper. That has to come about by good will and understanding on all sides of the House and in all parts of the country. I feel very strongly that this document should not be used to recriminate against past positions or mistakes. Instead, we should learn from the process we have gone through. The new Constitution should be very much a viable and living document of the future. We should be able to adapt and use it in our changing circumstances. This is a rapidly changing world in so far as technology is concerned, whether we like it or not.

What we are seeing this evening is an end to this part of the process. It is up to all of us, those who are elected, those who sent us here, in fact all who care about this country, to see that this process does not end here. It must be a continuing process. We must continue to improve on the document for the betterment of Canadians from one end of this country to the other.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, we are nearing the end an important debate. In fact, I am next to the last participant in this House of Commons debate. My speech will be quite a bit shorter than I had originally planned because the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) would like to rise for a few minutes in order to move an amendment, and I have agreed to allow him the time to do so.

I want to say that although I had reservations about it almost exactly 14 months ago when the constitutional reform was introduced by the government, I agreed to support it after having given the matter considerable thought. First of all, this resolution allows for further reforms in the future. Something just had to be done in the face of the inertia of the provincial forces that were blocking patriation of the Constitution, the adoption of an amending formula and the entrenchment of a charter of rights in the Constitution. Second, Mr. Speaker, I simply could not but support a measure that entrenches forever the right to the French language, the equality of the French and English language in all federal institutions in this country, from sea to sea. This resolution also guarantees the educational rights of the French minorities in the English-speaking provinces. Third, I decided to support this measure because our party, under its present leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has fought for years to achieve progress in the constitutional debate, to effect a rejuvenation of this very important aspect of Canadian politics. That is why I decided to support this measure. At first, there were several people in my province who had reservations, much as the Franco-Ontarians now have reservations because Section 133 does not apply to Ontario. Initially, many Acadians entertained the same reservations with regard to New Brunswick. Pressure was exerted from the very beginning to try to get the government to amend the resolution so that Section 133 or some similar measure would apply to New Brunswick.

I did not like that procedure, Mr. Speaker. I preferred the one which was used afterwards, that the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly move to present a motion first to the Joint House and Senate Committee on the Constitution, a motion carried by the Legislative Assembly, which is mostly English-speaking, a motion to entrench the equality of both languages in New Brunswick, to agree to institutional bilingualism. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, constitutional rights will not necessarily ensure that the French language will progress, expand and be protected in the future. They are a form of insurance, an additional guarantee, but what will ensure the development and expansion of the French language is the importance and the concern that Acadians themselves will have for this issue.

So long as francophones in New Brunswick, Acadians and others, strive to preserve the French language, nothing will prevent this language from being preserved and from expanding. The entrenchment process is an important one. What I like about this resolution is that it allowed my province to act first in its own Legislative Assembly, where, as I say, most members are English-speaking because most New Brunswickers are anglophones, and it is this process, the very fact that we have the political maturity to provide for this equality which history did not bestow upon us that I applaud. But my guiding philosophy in this regard, Mr. Speaker, has always been based on a thorough knowledge of history; one has to know what has occurred in the past, yet at some point—one has to come out of it and start looking toward the future.

• (2150)

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate the member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) allowing me to rise to my feet for a few minutes before the NDP amendment regarding consent is moved at ten o'clock.

I would like to deal briefly with the much misunderstood and maligned concept of consent as it appears in the amendment now before the House. The intent is to set up a process whereby constitutional change that would affect the rights of aboriginal peoples would require the simple democratic consent of the same people who would be affected. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is both an intellectually and historically correct mechanism to protect the fragile rights that have been trampled, abused and overlooked since confederation and before.

The arguments that have been put forward both inside and outside of the House to the effect that the process is unworkable and that the definition of the aboriginal peoples is impossible are not sound arguments. With regard to the first argument, history shows that a democratic vote is taken not only in municipal, provincial and federal elections but in relation to many other electoral bodies in this nation on a regular basis. The second argument about defining participants in such votes is a challenge in some areas but is not unworkable. In fact, it is a task that must be quickly addressed for use at the constitutional conference next year. A vote by members of this House against the concept of consent should be seen for what it is: a claim to the right of Parliament and of the provinces to continue to ride roughshod over the interests of our first citizens and first nations.

Let us not forget too quickly or shy away from the task that is now before us, which is to set our minds and increase our efforts to negotiate a settlement of renewable and non-renewable resources, a settlement of the traditional uses of resources, and a settlement in an evolutionary way of the cultural matters of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

It may prove at times to be a costly process, it may prove to be difficult and in some cases unpopular, but it is a task that our generation must finally take seriously and respond to.

Questions were raised by the Conservatives earlier about the absence of a role for the territorial governments in amending Section 35. I wholly support such involvement, and if this is a concern, let us have such an amendment from the Conservatives and they will find unanimous support for it from this party. They cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. The eight premiers of Conservative persuasion are the very ones who brought the provinces into the forum and excluded the Territories. The Conservatives have become experts during this debate in speaking not only with a forked tongue but in talking out of both sides of their mouths.

Since the accord and the amending formula historically preclude the involvement of the territorial governments, it was the open intention of this party to avoid the arguments put forward by the Liberal-Tory coalition that such involvement would bring a new and unsupportable element into the Part V amendment procedures. To ensure that future changes affecting the aboriginal peoples north of 60 found fair hearing, we now introduce the necessary protection of a two-thirds majority vote resolution of the House and Senate. This is a new concept but is one found agreeable to the process which ended on November 5 when it was agreed that two-thirds of the provinces must put forward resolutions for the general amending procedure.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, I have covered all the objections raised by the Conservative spokesman on the Constitution, the member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and I look forward to hearing the real reasons why the Conservatives object to the consent provision, which is an act of democracy and protection for the future amendments of aboriginal rights through Section 42.

I make a plea to the common sense of the government members, Mr. Speaker, to their collective sense of morality for adherence to the principle of protecting the rights of Canada's first peoples, the most abused and underprivileged minority in Canada.

Should we end this debate without a clear sense of direction and a clear legislative mandate, the ifs and maybes will haunt Parliament. Parliament will be haunted if the highly paid corporate and provincial legal muscle is left the elbow room to send the rights and the aspirations of the aboriginal peoples the way of the buffalo, passenger pigeon and Dawson caribou.

As I said earlier to members from both the Liberal and the Conservative parties, if their objections are based on reducing the House-Senate vote to a simple majority and to require resolutions of the territorial governments, then they have our support, and we urge them to introduce such a subamendment. Hon. members have ample opportunity to do so, both in time and through the House order.

I would point out that refusal by the House to move seriously on this issue will come to the attention of both the Parliament of the United Kingdom and various international bodies that deal with the issues of human rights.

The international covenant on civil and political rights was entered into by Canada on March 23, 1976. Part II, Article 2 reads as follows:

> Where not already provided for by existing legislative or other measures, each state party to the present covenant undertakes to take the necessary steps, in accordance with its constitutional processes and with the provisions of the present covenant to adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights recognized in the present covenant.

Support for the amendment on consent now before the House will go a long way toward achieving the principles of the covenant.

In concluding, I am pleased to again enter into this debate on behalf of the NDP and the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I think it is an important note on which to end the debate. There still exists a number of serious flaws in the resolution, flaws that detract in both a symbolic and legal sense from the direction I feel this Parliament has taken on the substantive issues of recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights.

First, of course, was the unnecessary addition of the word "existing" to the positive affirmation of old Section 34, which achieved unanimous all-party support on January 30, 1981. The vote on that issue has now been taken. Although three Conservatives and two Liberals voted with the NDP to have the word removed, the Liberal-Tory coalition succeeded in keeping the word "existing" in the resolution. That is a flip-flop from their position of only nine months ago, but it is nothing new to this House nor to the native people of this country.

However, a more serious problem has been created by the removal of what was subsection (c) of the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada set out in Part II and Section 55 of the resolution which was passed by committee and filed with the Supreme Court of Canada on April 24, 1981.

Following the November 5 first ministers accord, the rights of aboriginal peoples as well as the protection of the amending formula were dropped.

As we now know, with the vote of November 26 on Section 35 which recognizes and affirms the rights of aboriginal peoples, this House has taken half a step back toward the position held by Parliament prior to November 5.

Part of that step was taken in response to a question of privilege that I raised regarding the tragic flaw found in the French text of the amendment tabled by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). For some reason, the legal concept of recognition did not appear in the French text. Under pressure from the NDP, and not the Liberal-Tory coalition, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Chrétien) conceded there was a flaw and found unanimous consent in the House to amend the constitutional resolution and include the word "reconnu".

Let me now return to the need in the resolution before the House to have the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada protected by Section 42, amended by the general amending procedure. Surely no member of the House, after voting unanimously to entrench a positive affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights, would want those rights to apply in a checkerboard fashion in some provinces and not in others. Surely no member of the House would want native organizations to participate in the constitutional conference set out in Part IV, Section 37, Subsection (2) with the prospect of up to three provinces opting out of the agreement achieved at such a meeting. Surely this is tantamount to political blackmail and is at great variance from the good-faith negotiations intended by the House.

On Friday, the Prime Minister indicated that no further changes to the resolution would be accepted, and he indicated that such a position is supported by the participating premiers. That is easy to say and to do, but how does the Prime Minister explain the additions to the resolution that have occurred since November 5?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before entering into the adjournment proceedings, may I bring to the attention of the House that, pursuant to the order adopted on Friday, November 27, 1981, the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) is now deemed to have moved the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

● (2200)

That the proposed Constitution Act, 1981 be amended

(A) by adding immediately after Section 47 the following new section:

"48. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada set out in Part II may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, when so authorized by resolution of a two thirds majority vote in the Senate and House of Commons and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected;

(b) in the provinces, when so authorized in accordance with Section 42 and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected; and

(c) for the purposes referred to in this section, consent of the aboriginal peoples shall be obtained by a procedure determined by the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples of Canada; and

(B) by renumbering the subsequent sections accordingly.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

An hon. Member: He is not here.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS—EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my reading of the budget paper entitled, "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties—Proposals of the Government of Canada" leads me to believe that over the next five years the federal government will reduce its total contributions to the provinces, not in absolute terms but from what they would otherwise be if the existing formula were continued, by about $1,947 million or approximately $1.9 billion, with only Quebec obtaining an increase. In my view this is the net figure after taking into consideration additional provincial revenues of $3,743 million or approximately $3.7 billion which arises from income tax changes.

The new formula proposed by the federal government measures the fiscal capacity of provinces on a much more comprehensive basis by including municipal revenues and natural resource revenues which have to some extent at least been excluded in the past as capital from non-renewable resources. The significant difference in the new formula is that payments would be made to provinces with the capacity to raise revenue which is less than that of Ontario, rather than the national average as it is now. Of course this excludes Ontario from receiving equalization payments and raises the question in my mind that the payments will be less over all than if the national average were used. I am convinced that this is the case when we consider the enormous resource revenues generated in the west. I hope the minister will be able to show me tonight where I am wrong on this point, but at this moment I am not convinced that that is the case.

One point which is clear from the answer I received from the minister in the House is that he intends to discontinue the 1972 revenue guarantees. Thus, no safety net is provided for the provinces. If Ontario moves into recession, the revenue reductions will be very severe.

Recently we have seen 30-year record levels of unemployment and inflation, declining real wages, the biggest tax burden since the war, the gutting of the rail passenger system, and, in the fiscal arrangements in the eighties paper to which I referred earlier, proposals to reduce the financial commitment to equalization, to health and to post-secondary education. This is the reason I asked the question in the House. With the headlines in the paper today indicating the worst economic slump in 30 years, I am very much afraid that my worst fears are on their way to being realized. I will be absolutely delighted to have the minister prove that I am wrong.

My principal concern at this point is the negative effect which a reduction in transfer payments will have on the Atlantic provinces where a very high percentage of total provincial revenues is obtained from this source. Just slightly under half of the total provincial revenues come in the form of transfer payments from Ottawa. The result would simply be a disaster. The best way to reduce transfer payments to the Atlantic provinces is by an increased commitment to the principle of regional development which would, through the establishment of industrial plants, create more jobs and more taxpayers and thus build an expanded revenue base for the provinces which would eliminate their dependence on transfer payments. In my view this is the positive way to go and the way in which the government should proceed.

● (2205)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) on behalf of my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) for his question. I want to tell the hon. member that I come from a province much like his own, and I too was very concerned and did a fair amount of research upon hearing the terms of the new equalization package. I can tell hon. members that upon doing my homework, I found out the net savings to my own province, Newfoundland, a province which is not unlike the hon. member's, in terms of its financial ability to provide goods and services to its citizens. There was a net gain of $70 million in the first year. In a moment, I will point out the net gain to the hon. member's province.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has put forward a proposal for a generous new system of equalization to cover the five-year period from 1982 to 1987. The proposed new formula is intended to enable the government to continue to carry out the historic purpose of this very important program. This purpose is to make it possible for all provinces to provide a reasonable level of public services at a reasonable level of taxation. The government's commitment to this goal remains as strong as ever.

The proposed new formula would achieve this goal by bringing virtually the whole range of provincial-local revenues from their own sources into the equalization formula, thereby anchoring it to the most comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity ever used in the twenty-five year history of this program. These revenues would be equalized by means of an Ontario standard. As a consequence of that measure, any province that applies average provincial rates of taxation to its own tax bases should be able to provide the same level of public services that Ontario could supply by applying such tax rates to its own tax bases in Ontario.

The projected results of this proposal are set out in a paper attached to the November 12 budget. They show large increases in annual payments under this program. These increases would be approximately $600 million a year, each year over the five-year life of the program, taking it to a level of approximately $7 billion by 1986-87. I want to point out to the hon. member for York-Sunbury that the increase in the case of New Brunswick in 1982-83 is estimated to be more than $90 million, or over 22 per cent. These increases are very large and indicate the government's continuing commitment to the equalization program.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury has asked whether it is the government's intention to achieve savings under its new equalization program. The answer to this question quite simply is no. The government's intention rather is to maintain this program at a level of pay-out that will ensure that it can continue to fulfil its original purpose. The relative amounts that would be paid if the present equalization formula were to be continued are not relevant. As the Minister of Finance has said, the present formula has serious defects and, as a consequence, is no longer compatible with the purpose of the program. Accordingly, the payments that might be paid if the present program were to be continued are no longer relevant.

In closing, I want to assure the hon. member for York-Sunbury, on behalf of my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, that the department and the officials of the minister are, indeed, quite willing to sit down with the hon. member at any time to answer any questions or to provide any information regarding the program as announced in the budget.

THE BUDGET—PROVISIONS AFFECTING INCOME-AVERAGING ANNUITIES, (b) REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this adjournment debate to try to express a point of view which is probably shared by every Canadian who has worked hard, every Canadian who has attempted to save, and every Canadian who has attempted to use his or her own funds to provide adequately for retirement in what should be some of the best years of one's life.

● (2210)

The budget that was brought down on November 12 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) affects retirement plans, plans that were already in progress, already made and set under the existing rules established by the government that allowed the purchase of income-averaging annuity contracts up to March 2, 1982. These existing rules were completely ignored. They were wiped out by the November 12 budget. This budget affects the retirement plans of farmers, of small businessmen, of fishermen, of civil servants, of people who save through RRSPs, of people who have contributed years of service to this country in the Armed Forces and who have received severance pay. This budget has taken away the dreams of people who have spent years working at a wage which in many cases was below the average wage in Canada. They felt that by accumulating and acquiring assets and letting their capital appreciate they would be able to provide for their retirement years out of their own funds.

The government and the Minister of Finance have shattered all their dreams. The government has taken away their ability to provide for their retirement years without regard to legislation existing before November 12 and without regard to these people who were trying to save with their own funds.

I have asked questions in the House. The minister says that you can pay your tax forward and save a lot of money. What he is saying now is that Revenue Canada is a savings bank. You cannot save by paying forward 50 per cent of additional income in one year if you are going to continue to have any income at all from investment.

I want to read into the record several letters that I have received. I am doing this for the benefit of the government, the Minister of Finance and the parliamentary secretary. In passing I would just like to comment that I do not expect the Minister of Finance to be here to answer questions on the adjournment debate because he is not here to answer questions during Question Period. But I do expect the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) to be here. As capable as the parliamentary secretary who is here to answer may be, his responsibilities are not to respond to members for his colleague who is given an additional salary to be here. I have some reason to suspect that he is not here by reason of a statement he made which appeared in Hansard. He stated that farmers have the lowest tax rate in Canada. That may be the assumption which the government used in bringing forward this budget.

The first letter I have here concerns a Mr. Wilson of Wiseton, Saskatchewan, who went to the local district taxation office where he was advised that he would be eligible to acquire an income-averaging annuity contract to shelter his unusually high income generated from the sale of his farm assets and grain on hand. All of a sudden, this is not so.

The next letter concerns a widow in the Rosetown area of Saskatchewan. She had a taxable income of less than $10,000. She sold one quarter section of farmland in order to provide for her retirement. However, she finds under this new policy that she now has to pay $30,000 in capital gains.

The third letter is from a family in Neilburg, Saskatchewan. I will read part of this letter into the record as follows:

> Because of poor health, I have had to give up most of the work, keeping only a few cattle and hiring custom work or renting out the cropland. Our vacations have been very few. We do not have a cabin at a lake, nor a mobile home, nor boat and motor as some farmers do. Our automobile is a 1966 Chev which we bought used in 1972.

The letter continues:

Our land was to be our savings and retirement program.

We sold one quarter section of land in 1980 and are committed to sell one quarter this fall, 1981, and had committed ourselves to sell the last two quarters next year, 1982—

But the government changed the rules in the middle of the game. The letter concludes:

We feel that if the new budget is unfair to even one person, it is not fair at all.

We have another letter from a family in Flaxcombe, Saskatchewan, which reads in part:

This is going to severely penalize all farmers, particularly those who want to keep the farm in the family, for the land will have to be sold to the highest bidder in order to pay the capital gains tax.

● (2215)

Here is another one from Cut Knife, Saskatchewan, which says this man sold his cow herd last spring and his accountant suggested he should purchase income-averaging annuities in December, but now this has changed and his retirement money is going to go to the government.

The reason these people waited to purchase their income averaging annuities, Mr. Speaker, was that they had time under the existing legislation. They were receiving a good interest rate on short-term investment over the last six, eight or ten months so they were not in a hurry because the law was established as far as they were concerned and they would have the ability to purchase these annuities prior to March 2.

A gentleman from Unity, Saskatchewan, rented out his farm, sold all his machinery and grain, because the person taking over would need the storage for his machinery and grain, and received a total of $142,000. He now finds himself liable for $65,000 in net average taxes, whereas if he had purchased a $100,000 income-averaging annuity over ten years, his income would have been $23,560, his taxable income $17,000, and he would have had to pay $4,800 in tax.

This budget affects businessmen, farmers, fishermen and retired civil servants. It is not fair, it is not equitable, it is a farce and we should immediately go back to the situation in relation to IAAC which existed prior to November 12. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to tell the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) that my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans), I am sure wanted very much to be here tonight to answer these questions. Unfortunately, due to unforeseen circumstances, he was caught out of Ottawa. He is not even in the city this evening. Again, I apologize on his behalf. We thought we should show the courtesy of at least having a representative here on his behalf to answer the questions tonight. In that sense I give you his answer.

I want to tell the hon. member that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and indeed the parliamentary secretary, appreciate the concerns of the hon. member regarding the fairness and equity of the budget measures. The measure ending the deduction for income-averaging annuity contracts meets this objective of fairness, particularly when viewed, as it should be, in the context of other budgetary measures to lower tax rates and to introduce a new system of forward income-averaging.

I certainly concur with the hon. member's concern regarding the retirement prospects of a farmer or a fisherman or any other Canadian but, in the case of a farmer who has decided to sell his farm as retirement income, it is important to examine the new forward income-averaging system carefully. I think that if the hon. member goes to the numbers and works them through he will find that in many cases an individual can be better off under the new system than under the old system, based on IAACs. The individual will have more cash available under the new system in the year of the sale, for example, to invest or consume as he pleases, and he will have much greater flexibility in future years in timing the recognition of his income for tax purposes.

Of course, it may be that in certain circumstances the transitional rules proposed in the budget may cause undue hardship. In that regard I want to reassure the hon. member, because I know his concern is a genuine one, and re-state what the minister has already stated, that the Department of Finance, the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary will be taking those kinds of situations under very serious consideration and will, of course, be taking very seriously the representations the hon. member has put forward tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 2, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

RAILWAYS

SERIES OF ACCIDENTS IN MIAMI SUBDIVISION IN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, there have been five serious train derailments in the 60-mile Miami subdivision of the Canadian National Railroad in Manitoba during the past year alone, and two workers have been badly injured. Today trains are forced to travel at ten miles per hour rather than take the chance of running off the track. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House demand that the Minister of Transport take immediate action to have the Miami subdivision made eligible now, not in 1983 as is currently planned, for the federal rail rehabilitation program before there is any loss of life or further injury.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT TO CANADA OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM POLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the following motion:

That this House welcome to Canada the parliamentary delegation from the Polish People's Republic, led by Marshal of the Sejm, Stanislaw Guckw with the hope that the visit will strengthen the already strong and friendly relationship between our two countries, and that this House extend to the parliamentary delegation from the Polish People's Republic our support and best wishes for a continuing independent and economically strengthened Poland.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

BANK OF CANADA

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF GOVERNOR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the latest drop of 4 per cent in Canada's GNP during the third quarter of 1981 and Statistics Canada's forecast that "things will get worse before they get better", and in view of the most recent increase in unemployment of 130,000 people, the highest in 30 years, and whereas the Bank of Canada Governor continues to support the inflationary high interest rate policies pursued by the government and the Bank of Canada, as illustrated in his speech yesterday by his ill-informed and uncaring statements such as "minimum wage rates keep people out of work", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House immediately call for the resignation of Gerald Bouey, the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF NATIVE PEOPLES' LAND CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the imminent passage of the constitutional resolution which will recognize and affirm, for the first time, aboriginal and treaty rights for native peoples in the Constitution of Canada, and in view of the many treaty and land claims under negotiation between Indian Bands and the native peoples across Canada with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier):

That this House of Commons encourages and recommends to the Minister of Indian Affairs that the federal government increase its efforts to reach early agreements on treaty and land claim negotiations with the native peoples of Canada on a fair and equitable basis.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

BEEF INDUSTRY—DEMAND FOR EXPLANATION FROM MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the federal government is the single largest advertising account this country has and the supplementary estimates allocate additional funding for advertising by the federal government. I move, therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the Minister of Agriculture explain to the House why he is unable to do anything for the Canadian beef industry, while at the same time the federal government has an ever growing budget for advertising.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

ROLE PLAYED BY SASKATCHEWAN IN HAVING WOMEN'S AND NATIVES' RIGHTS ENTRENCHED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the resolution under Standing Order 43 which passed on November 19, 1981, moved by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni), I wish to report to this House that lobbying the Saskatchewan government was unnecessary because the province of Saskatchewan had already stated its support for women's rights in a telex to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) the previous day. To set the record straight, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House congratulate the province of Saskatchewan for its positive role in having women's and natives' rights entrenched in Canada's Constitution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

• (1410)

HEALTH

APPROVAL FOR TREATMENT OF EPIDERMOLYSIS BULLOSA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, yesterday officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare approved the process and medications used by Romanian scientist, Mr. Pavel Kozak, in his treatment of a previously incurable and potentially deadly skin disease called epidermolysis bullosa. In view of the fact that this approval brings Mr. Kozak's treatment one step closer to being made available to Canadians in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House recognize and support Mr. Kozak in his effort to make this treatment accessible to the hundreds of Canadians who suffer from this disorder, a treatment without which they have little hope of recovery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

LEGISLATION SOUGHT TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, yesterday at the NDP economic hearings held in Edmonton, representatives of the private housing industry, HUDAC, told us the following:

For many Albertans and many of the 60,000 people expected to migrate into Alberta next year, there will be waiting lists for apartments, doubling and tripling up, illegal or below standard shelter, or people being forced to leave because they cannot find shelter.

The situation is even worse in British Columbia with higher housing costs and rents. Since every one of many persons presenting briefs from both sides of the mountains was convinced that the budget will make conditions much worse, I move:

That the Minister of Finance come down from the mountain top and bring in legislation to reduce mortgage interest rates to 12 or 14 per cent, which even HUDAC now recommends.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BANK ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENTS TO GUARANTEE LEVEL OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that thousands of home owners across the country are forced to renew mortgages at outrageous interest rate levels and those home owners will receive no assistance from the November 12 budget, as will very few other home owners, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House instruct the Liberal government to bring forward immediately amendments to the Bank Act that will guarantee that mortgage interest rates will be within the means of all Canadians and that these amendments will be applicable to all existing mortgages whether they are up for renewal or not.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT OF PROSTITUTION SECTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of yesterday's decision by the Supreme Court of Canada dismissing appeals by the Crown on two soliciting charges in the City of Vancouver, British Columbia, and in view of the very serious threat to the residential neighbourhood in the West End of Vancouver as a result of the problems of street prostitution there, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That this House call upon the Minister of Justice to bring forward at the earliest possible time amendments to the Criminal Code which would make it very clear that not only the woman who is a prostitute can be charged but also the customer who is harassing innocent women can be charged, and as well, that the minister bring forward Bill C-53 at the earliest possible time.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCES SOUGHT FOR EQUIPMENT USED FOR TRAINING PURPOSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in view of the recommendation of the all-party parliamentary report

"Work for Tomorrow", and recognizing the severe shortage of skilled workers in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the federal government grant accelerated depreciation allowances to companies using equipment and machinery for training purposes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that some hon. members on this side of the House have just come from economic hearings held in Vancouver and in Edmonton, and in view of the fact that we have heard from the Energy Services Association and the Canadian Petroleum Association, one of whose members was quoted in the Toronto Star today as saying that "he didn't expect Waddell to stand up in the House, and speak up for his cause", and in view of the fact that these groups are clearly suffering, especially the small servicing companies, because of the energy deal between Alberta and Ottawa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the government take another look at the 12 per cent petroleum and gas revenue tax as it pertains to the small servicing and small drilling outfits so that we can help them survive these difficult times.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WRITS OF ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR ABOLITION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who has responsibility at law with respect to writs of assistance. The minister knows that writs of assistance provide the holder with extraordinary legal ability to carry out searches and seizures without search warrants. There is no discretion provided to the court with respect to issuance, no back-up material need be filed outlining the reason for issuance, and there is no time limit imposed upon the duration of these writs.

As the Minister of Justice will know, the Solicitor General has been putting out floaters with respect to the lifting of the moratorium imposed by the minister's predecessor, the Hon. Ron Basford. The Solicitor General has put out other floaters with respect to the prosecution of Nazi war criminals in Canada, which has now been repudiated by the Minister of Justice.

The Minister of Justice has now had an opportunity to consider his position and the position of the government in this matter. I wonder whether the minister will stand in his place and make an unequivocal declaration that the moratorium on writs of assistance will not be lifted and, indeed, that writs of assistance will be abolished by the government.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, yesterday I had an opportunity to appear before the committee, and I said that the moratorium imposed in 1977 by my predecessor, Mr. Basford, was still in place and that for the time being, we had no intention of making any changes.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPUDIATE PROCESS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice knows that today is the day on which we will be voting on the constitutional package, which involves a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As the minister well knows, that Charter contains the principle that the individual in Canada should be free from unreasonable search and seizure, yet he stands in his place and supports the continuation of writs of assistance. By not repudiating the Solicitor General the Minister of Justice is allowing the Solicitor General to make policy for the government by default.

In view of the fact that today is the day to demonstrate that there is bona fide on the part of the government with respect to civil liberties, I want to ask the minister once more to accept his responsibility and repudiate, once and for all, these lifetime licences to break and enter the homes of Canadians.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said that the moratorium is still in place, and I do not intend to change that. When the RCMP appeared in committee, it was explained to the members that there are circumstances when police officers are on duty in which they need some instrument to be able to discharge their responsibility. The number of writs has now been reduced to eighty, and we would like to see further reduction. I repeat that we do not intend to change the moratorium, but I do think at one point we will have to look at alternative mechanisms to help the police discharge their responsibility and at the same time make sure that the rights of Canadians are well protected.

FORMULATION OF POLICY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, what the minister suggests would be quite all right, but when questioned in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs Commissioner Simmonds of the RCMP indicated that writs of assistance would not be the cure in connection with the drug problem in Canada. The minister's assumptions are indeed wrong in this particular instance.

The minister also knows that the Law Reform Commission, which reports to him, is undertaking a study on the efficacy of writs of assistance. A report on that study will be released in April of next year.

All I want the minister to tell me is who in fact is in control of this matter. Will the minister stand and indicate that the Solicitor General will be building the policy in this matter? Is it the policy of the government to allow ministers to go around the country, at great expense, promoting their own particular fetishes and ideas respecting policy? Possibly in the case of the Minister of Finance he might have done some good in that respect, but is the Minister of Justice going to allow the Solicitor General to keep promoting this, and will the minister stand mute while this policy comes into effect by default?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, after the small speech of the hon. member I do not have to add anything. I stated the policy of the government very clearly. The moratorium is still in place. We are concerned about the problems of the RCMP in discharging their responsibility. At the same time we are concerned about the need of Canadians to have their rights protected. I think the situation is well in hand at this time, and if there is some change I will announce it to the House of Commons.

* * *

● (1420)

THE ENVIRONMENT

CLEAN UP OF OIL SPILL IN ARCTIC WATERS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee released a study that documented how it took the federal government nine months to handle an oil spill from the vessel Edgar Jourdain at Hall Beach in the Arctic, involving something like 20,000 gallons of diesel fuel. Given that the study established in great detail that the government's response to this oil spill was characterized by "bureaucratic indecision, interdepartmental wrangling and an unwillingness to act", will the minister admit that the Edgar Jourdain incident demonstrates beyond any doubt that the government is incapable of handling any kind of oil spill, whether major or minor, especially in Arctic waters?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is not the information I have. My information is that the Edgar Jourdain was grounded in September, 1980, and that burn-off operations were carried out in June, 1981. The public hearing was held in April, 1981. I have questioned my officials on this subject. They explained to me that the burning-off operation could not be conducted because of the weather. Consequently, they had to wait until spring to do it. With respect to the hearing, there is nothing abnormal in the time it took to set it up. I was told that throughout, local government, industry, all the interested parties, were kept fully aware of what was happening.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the minister should go back to the drawing board. He should certainly go to a different group of officials and get the real facts, including the fact that it took the Department of the Environment six weeks to respond to a request from the owners of the vessel Edgar Jourdain for guidance in disposing of the petroleum on board that vessel. In view of the minister's confusion and the fact that there is a conflict between what officials of his department are saying and what environmentalists and conservationists are saying, will he support a full inquiry into the Edgar Jourdain incident with a view to preventing a similar disaster and a similar shambles in the future? Will be at least admit the need for an inquiry to look into the whole matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to emphasize that public hearings were held on this matter in April, 1981. The hon. member is doing his job and I will do mine. Now that he asks me to look into the matter further, I will, and report to him very rapidly.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In an unbelievably callous and insensitive speech in Montreal yesterday, Governor Bouey, known in many circles as Bouey XVI—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: —admitted that six years of monetarism had not worked because of high energy costs, low productivity and international inflation, and that the only thing it had produced was a recession. He said, "One has to see how it works out." I would ask the Prime Minister how the government can continue to implement that policy for the next five or six years, as promised by Governor Bouey, when we know we are going to be faced with high energy costs, low productivity because of high interest rates, and international inflation. When will the government learn from its experience and stop this monetary foolishness?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: —it is rather interesting to hear the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood come out with his criticisms of Governor Bouey, who simply said that after six years the policy has not worked as well as he would have liked to have seen it. Obviously when inflation is running at 12.7 per cent, it is not working as well as the governor would like to have seen it or as we would like to have seen it. The fact is that the only way we are going to control inflation is to follow policies that include monetary restraint and support from the fiscal side of the government policies as well. The current budget implements those policies to support monetary policy. We think that is the way we are going to get inflation under control, real growth going in the economy, and to get the situation back on its feet.

• (1425)

STATEMENT MADE BY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether I got Edgar Bergen or Charlie McCarthy, but I would like to go back to Charlie McCarthy, if I can.

Let the record show, Madam Speaker, that when the Prime Minister was asked a fundamental question on the economy, he was unable and unwilling to answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: My supplementary question, Madam Speaker, deals with another comment made by Governor Bouey when he said that minimum wages of $160 a week were a cause of both unemployment and inflation, and when he said that workers had to accept even lower wages although they have fallen behind inflation for the last four years. My question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is a fundamental question of policy. Does the Prime Minister agree, Madam Speaker, with Governor Bouey that wages of $160 a week, or $8,320 a year, are excessive, and if he does not agree with Governor Bouey why does he not fire him?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question of minimum wages is, to a great extent, a provincial responsibility. The governor may have made some comments within the context of the over-all economic situation. Madam Speaker, the government is more concerned with trying to get the economy back on its feet and running efficiently, creating jobs and increasing incomes for all Canadians, than to deal with this. With the kind of questions the hon. member is asking, then any dummy should be able to answer them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: That is precisely why I asked the question of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, when they lob them like that it is hard not to hit them back.

REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE INTRODUCED TO CURB EXCESS PROFITS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): This is my final supplementary to the Prime Minister. I wish he would just try to take an interest in problems that really do concern the average Canadian and that hit the average Canadian where it really hurts. Given the fact that Governor Bouey was quick to defend the chartered banks' profits, which have been at record levels as announced just in the last two or three days—50 per cent for the Royal Bank, 40 per cent for the Toronto-Dominion Bank, profits in the hundreds of millions of dollars—and given the fact that the budget has clearly failed to address the central economic questions facing the country, why will the Prime Minister not introduce additional measures to the budget which will deal with the problem of excess profits, which will deal with the problem of the economy in a recession, and which will provide some hope for Canadians facing the most difficult winter in 25 years?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question of bank profits is one that the Minister of Finance has looked at in the past, and he continues, as he said earlier, to be concerned with that question of the growth of bank profits. But the hon. member has to realize that if we are to get the country growing and going again we must have an economic position that does not respond with fiscal policies, that is, the big levers of our economic strategy, to problems that even the hon. member himself would indicate will last for a period of perhaps two quarters. If we re-inflate the economy through massive fiscal stimulus, then the hon. member will be complaining next year that inflation is higher then than it is now, investment will be lower and confidence in the economy will be less. We do not plan to follow that kind of an approach, at least not this government, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST FOR AID FROM GOVERNMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has become more than evident that last month's budget, which the minister supported, is having a devastating effect on small business and most other sectors of our economy. While the government's excuse is fiscal restraint, yesterday the minister dipped into funds made available through the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program to buy off his already disenchanted home town of Windsor with a $6 million interest free loan, in order to help Hilton Hotels expand their chain to his city. Could the minister justify this action when he knows full well that $6 million interest-free would create more full-time jobs in small business, for example? When will the government stop catering to large multinationals and start helping the small guys?

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program is designed to help create new long-term viable employment in the communities designated under it. It permits assistance to eligible commercial activity which makes sense in the community. When there is a potential for a hotel business to serve conventions and tourism, creating some 300 permanent jobs and perhaps double that amount in indirect jobs connected with the project, I do not see why my hon. friend opposes that for any community in Canada which is justified for inclusion under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING RETIREMENT INCOME

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Finance, but I understand that he is out of the House eating haggis when he should be in the House eating crow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dantzer: Therefore I will direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister is aware that certain proposals in the budget seriously and viciously attack retirement income. To mention only two, they are the removal of interest deductibility on loans to purchase RRSPs, and the taxation of insurance dividends. The minister must know that this seriously jeopardizes the third tier of the retirement system, that is, personal savings. Since the minister has spoken a great deal about pension reform, is she in favour of these vicious proposals?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I do not accept any more than any other Canadian that some people in top income brackets can benefit from tax privileges in the name of putting aside good pensions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: I know very well that we have figures proving that in Canada those with good pensions, aside from public servants at all levels of government—this is okay because that is the pension we want other Canadians to reach—are senior executives. They are equipped with abnormally good pensions. I am against that. By the way, I wish I knew the difference between eating crow and haggis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

MINES AND MINING

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. They budgetary provision which will restrict the deductibility of interest costs will have, and is already having, a strong negative impact upon the availability of investment capital to junior mining companies. Also we read that the major giants of the mining industry, Inco and Noranda, have registered massive third quarter losses. What is the hon. minister recommending to the Minister of Finance in terms of changes to the budget to rectify these very serious problems?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I answered the hon. member's question the other day. Perhaps he did not examine the answer very thoroughly. I explained to him that the Minister of Finance had taken into account one of the recommendations of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which the prospectors and developers strongly proposed for several years. That was the change to capital gains for those investors who are particularly interested in exploration and development. The international markets are the reason for the decline in the profits of the two major companies, Inco and Noranda. I am sure the hon. member is well aware of that. We are as concerned as he about the viability of the Canadian mining industry.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the minister is aware, the ministers of social services for the Atlantic provinces have expressed concern about some proposals which the minister is considering to the unemployment insurance reform package. They are primarily an increase in the number of work weeks to be eligible for UIC benefits from ten to 15 weeks, and the introduction of a regional differentiated single phase benefit structure. Notwithstanding the fact that if the minister's program is put into effect it will put untold hundreds of people on the welfare roles and that the program is shared under the Canada Assistance Plan, will he reconsider and advise the House if indeed it is his intention to put those programs into effect? If so, will he reconsider those decisions in order to show a little consideration for the Atlantic region?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, once again the hon. member is engaging in the exercise of faulty future forecasting. I should simply like to point out to him that a task force report put forward a number of recommendations for discussion. We have been spending a good deal of time over the past summer and fall consulting with business, labour, and provincial governments to discuss the entire area of reform in the unemployment insurance package and in the labour market area, including many reforms that would allow repeaters and new entrants to gain benefits at an earlier date than they now do. Those reforms are still being discussed. We will be holding further meetings with the provincial governments before any decisions are made. When the decisions are made, they will be brought to the attention of the House.

* * *

HOUSING

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. At recent task force hearings in western Canada, knowledgeable representatives of the construction industry made it very clear, based on the government's present economic leadership and the decisions brought down in the budget, that they are predicting a literal collapse of the housing industry in Canada in the next six months. Also they made it very clear that many people who are trying to obtain access to housing or rental accommodations find it difficult to understand why, in a country clothed in forests, with ample land, with builders willing to build, with contractors willing to contract out, with sawmills willing to operate, and with people wanting to buy houses, they cannot obtain access to houses. What will the minister do? Will he admit that the present high interest rate policy is the major stumbling block?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in the last week I have had the opportunity to conduct many economic conferences in one part of the country or the other. I should like to respond to the hon. gentleman by telling him that in the various regional offices of CMHC I have met with various representatives of the industry across the country. As late as a half hour ago I met with the national executive of HUDAC in Ottawa. The scene is not as desperate or as bleak as the hon. member would point out. We have to consider that the starts this year will be considerably higher than last year. Every respectable projector of housing starts for next year shows starts improved over this year. This means that they will be in the area of somewhere over 175,000 units. In addition, with the $350 million directed to assist and increase starts in the country announced in the budget a few weeks ago, with one in four housing starts supported by the government, and with the support of the provinces which I requested in the last few days, I am positive that housing will be in a very good position and that the industry will be handsomely supported.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I suspect that the minister is the only person who is encouraged by what he is hearing these days. Certainly representatives of the industry are not commenting that way at all.

* * *

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST INDUSTRY BE ASSISTED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In our discussions with management and labour on the west coast of Canada, we found that the British Columbia forest industry is in its worst slump in 35 years, with production down nearly 40 per cent in logging operations along the British Columbia coast. Earlier we heard the minister's efforts at industrial restructuring in Windsor with a $6 million interest-free loan to a company which will enventually be taken over by the struggling Hilton corporation. Is this his idea of assisting auto workers in Ontario? Will he be using the same approach to assist logging and forestry workers in British Columbia?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware the project in question will remain under Canadian control. The project was widely praised by representatives of the workers in the Windsor area.

With respect to British Columbia forest industries, it is an unfortunate fact that the major market for their production, the United States, is in a state of severe economic decline; economic growth there has just about drawn to a halt. At the same time we are continuing our efforts to assist the British Columbia forest products industry to maintain and strengthen its position in the United States and in world markets. We have the program of co-operative overseas market development which we are running jointly with the B.C. forest industry and the B.C. government. We recently renewed our agreement to support that program, providing increased funding over three years. This program has a successful track record, increasing our experts to other than U.S. markets from $200 million to $1 billion in the last ten years. We look forward to the successful operation of that program, giving further strength and growth to the B.C. forest products industry and the workers in that important sector.

• (1440)

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM THE REPUBLIC OF POLAND

Madam Speaker: I wish to call to the attention of the House the distinguished presence in our gallery of a delegation of parliamentarians from the People's Republic of Poland, headed by Marshall Stanislaw Guckw, the Speaker of the Polish Parliament.

* * *

PETRO-CANADA

ALLEGED DIFFICULTIES IN RENEWING CREDIT CARDS

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it consists of three parts.

First, owners of Petro-Canada service stations are complaining that credit cards are not being renewed as fast as they should be, and as a result, they are losing a lot of business. It seems there are hardly any credit cards. Second, people are complaining that when they dial the Zenith number to call for information on conversion of heating systems, the number is always busy and they never get through. Third, in the agreement signed with Hydro-Quebec, does it say that Hydro-Quebec is to provide services as soon as possible? There are still complaints that people have to wait three months before they even see the inspectors. Can the minister comment on that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I find very encouraging that the Canadian public is showing a great deal of support for Petro-Canada service stations, and that is also why there has been some delay in providing credit cards. In fact, the number of credit card applications is very high, and I have been told that Petro-Canada cannot keep up with the demand at the present time. All I can say, is that people will have to be patient for a while and they will get their cards.

Regarding the second point, I shall check with my department to see what is happening. Probably there have been quite a few queries from home owners wanting to switch to gas or electricity or other types of heating, and if necessary, we shall put in additional lines to meet the demand. As for the last point, I shall forward my colleague's remarks to the authorities at Hydro-Quebec and ask them to look into the situation, with a view to dealing with the public's requests as quickly as possible.

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON INVESTMENT IN FILM AND TELEVISION INDUSTRIES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I only have a 12-part question. In the absence of the Minister of Finance may I put my question to the Minister of Communications who will know that the proposed changes in the budget, notably the change in the capital cost allowance and the non-deductibility of interest, have put into jeopardy millions of invested dollars and hundreds of jobs in the film and television industries in Canada. Would the minister please tell the House what representations he has made to the Minister of Finance to abandon these proposals that put the clear lie to the minister's fine words regarding the Canadianization of our cultural industries?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has underlined the very real usefulness of the capital cost allowances in getting the Canadian film industry on its feet. It was introduced in 1974, I believe, and it has permitted not only the existence and the survival but the flourishing of the Canadian film industry. Anyone who has followed the Canadian film industry also knows that it has had a very difficult year in 1980-81. All of the forecasts for this year were that, from a high of $170 million last year, there would probably be, at the maximum some, $40 million to $70 million worth of films produced in this country this year.

It is the intent of the government to see to it that there continues to be a good program production industry in Canada. We intend to see that that industry not only continues to survive but continues to flourish. As a matter of fact I believe the Canadian film industry is now beginning to produce the type of films of which all Canadians can be proud and which will justify the continued existence of a capital cost allowance of the type we have had up to now.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON DREE PROGRAMS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The latest Statistics Canada figures show the most severe drop in employment in Canada is in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces. Has the minister considered the effect that continuing high interest rates have on DREE programs that are operated extensively in these areas and, if so, what measures is he taking to prevent the positive and important effect of DREE programs from being eroded?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member and in fact, I am pleased to be able to do so, that most of the DREE budget is spent in the Maritimes and Quebec. Furthermore, there is a basic rule in our federal system that each government must bear the consequences of the policies it puts forward and implements. And now the government of Quebec has imposed on that province the highest gas prices in North America, a policy that will certainly not be conducive to regional development in Quebec. I feel that in a federal system, it is elementary that each government should bear the consequences of its actions. And when Quebec businessmen, for instance, complain that under the province's tax system, they pay 26 per cent more income tax than elsewhere in Canada, that does not help regional development either.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON VOLUNTARY SECTOR AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State who will know that the Canadian Council of Social Development has warned that the budget will cripple an already overloaded voluntary sector and that it has reported that the budget will increase the burden on municipal governments. Both bodies provide many social services for Canadians. Has the minister asked the Minister of Finance to change the budget so that it does not penalize individual volunteers and local governments across Canada in their caring efforts?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): No, Madam Speaker.

EFFECT ON INSURANCE POLICIES AND RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the acting minister. Insurance companies and citizens planning their future are being severely penalized by the budget's new means of taxing. Canadians will no longer be able to maintain the Canadian tradition of self and family protection through self initiated RRSPs or insurance plans, and many will have to turn to welfare. There will be no incentive to buy retirement policies, and this will cause lay-offs in the insurance industry. Will the acting minister guarantee this House that he will do everything in his power to have these tax penalties on insurance policies and RRSPs cancelled in the next overhaul of the budget?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I understand that the hon. member is asking a question with regard to insurance policies and RRSPs. I think he is under the same delusion as his leader who seems to think that in some way the government's proposals tax the contributions put in RRSP accounts. The government's proposals do no such thing.

The hon. member should inform his leader that when he makes the statement that the government's policies are taxing the moneys that are borrowed to put into an RRSP, that is not true either. The government is simply saying that the interest on moneys borrowed can no longer be deducted from other income, other earnings, other non-investment earnings. Certainly there is a great benefit to Canadians in putting money into RRSPs even if that money is borrowed, because they will be able to deduct the contribution from income. If someone borrows $3,500 and is in a 25 per cent tax bracket, he will save about $1,150 in taxes in the year that occurs.

* * *

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUBSIDY TO MEET INTEREST LOSSES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister explain to the House why the Export Development Corporation must be given a subsidy in the last quarter of 1981 and in the calendar year 1982 of $36 million to meet interest losses?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Export Development Corporation borrows in world markets wherever it can get the best deal. At the same time there has been a very strong demand for loans. In order to maintain the level of operations which are so important to Canada's export industry, we have to provide this amount as provided for in the supplementary estimates.

● (1450)

GUIDELINES GOVERNING BORROWING POLICY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, what are the guidelines that the cabinet imposes upon the Export Development Corporation in its borrowing policy so that the subsidy granted to the corporation does not run away unchecked? What are the guidelines? Does the minister insist upon passing on the transactions of borrowing abroad at high rates of interest, or lending money at extraordinarily low rates?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Export Development Corporation seeks the best rates it can when it borrows, and when it lends it does not seek extraordinarily low rates for the loans it makes. It seeks rates which will be competitive with competition abroad, enabling our export industry to remain strong. I hope my hon. friend is not opposing our efforts to enable the Export Development Corporation to meet foreign competition and strengthen our export activities across the country. We want to strengthen its activities. We want to strengthen our exports. I am sorry that my hon. friend seems to oppose this.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—MEASURES TAKEN RESPECTING DETENTION OF FOUR CANADIAN WOMEN

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the House of the representations made by his department concerning four Canadian women in Guatemala who were arrested in a case of alleged kidnapping and the use of forged documents in order to adopt children in Guatemala?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have helped the four women who are being held prisoners in Guatemala in various ways. We have helped them to retain counsel, we have already improved their situation in prison, including admittance to hospital of one of the women. We have communicated on their behalf with their families and in fact, we have done everything we could do in the circumstances, subject to Guatemalan law. We have heard that one of the four prisoners has been charged with forging official documents and the three others have been accused of collusion. There is, however, a real possibility that the four women will be released on bail by the end of the week.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR WORK RELATED EXPENSES IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In the travels of the New Democratic Party economic task force, a number of presentations from both industry and labour regarding taxation of work related benefits were heard. These groups expressed unanimous concern that many projects in the north and in remote communities will not take place—

Madam Speaker, can we get the Minister of Labour back into the House?

An hon. Member: He is over there.

An hon. Member: Do your homework.

An hon. Member: You don't know who he is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, will the government recognize that many work related expenses are necessary for people working in remote and northern communities? Will the minister make sure that these expenses, like subsidized food, subsidized housing and trips back to home communities, will not be taxed?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is also aware that the tax measures will make it possible for 12 million Canadians to pay $200 a year less in personal income tax.

QUERY RESPECTING TAX LEVELS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have another question for the minister. If the government really thinks that the workers in this country have benefited from this budget, why did the government only reduce the taxation rate for those who are earning the most in this country? Why did the government not provide the exact same tax reduction for those people who will be taxed more on benefits? Why do those people not also receive a tax reduction through the budget?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member does not seem to be aware that the tax measure will bring down the tax rate for millions of Canadians, including millions of workers.

* * *

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—QUERY RESPECTING COMPENSATION FOR AFFECTED HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is behind the curtain. It concerns urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I am told that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is the only minister who can answer this question. Here he comes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He doesn't have any answers.

Mr. Siddon: He was out talking to the press a minute ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wenworth): Let us see if the minister gets the same applause from all home owners who have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes. What kind of compensation has the government decided for those home owners who have UFFI in their homes? Who will be compensated, and how many dollars are involved?

Mr. Nielsen: As announced by the minister.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware that last June we announced a five-point program to assist UFFI victims. We set up an information centre, and we also set up a mechanism for responding to all requests and concerns of these home owners. We have carried out tests in 2,400 homes throughout the country. The National Research Council has been given some $2 million to conduct research on ways of neutralizing this product or helping home owners to more changes without incurring the prohibitive cost of—in the worst event—having their homes demolished. So that I feel the government has already done more than its share to help these victims.

Furthermore, I can inform the hon. member that a second series of measures is being considered by cabinet, and will be announced in due time.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE SOUGHT BY NEWFOUNDLAND FISHING COMPANY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister has had a request from Lake Group Ltd. for financial assistance. Lake Group Ltd. is the second largest fishing company in Newfoundland. I am advised if that company does not hear about financial assistance in the next few days that it will have to close its eight plants in Newfoundland, putting 2,500 people out of work directly. The company will cease to buy fish from 1,600 inshore fishermen, and 20,000 people who live in the communities where it has fish plants will have no way to make a living. They have asked the minister for some indication of support, up to $15 million, so that they can carry on in the present very difficult economic conditions in the fishing industry.

Can the minister advise the House whether a decision has yet been made with regard to assistance? If a decision has not been made, will it be made this week, and will the minister produce the $15 million to save these jobs, which is nothing in comparison to the hundreds of millions of dollars whacked out in central Canada to try to keep computer companies and the like going, that are now gone forever?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the problem the company in question has been facing goes back a number of months. It was only last week that we were approached with a proposal. We are now studying the proposal. I do not think the hon. member, who was a former minister of finance for a short time, would want me to put these funds forward before I have examined the facts and made sure that the proposal is one that I can present to cabinet successfully.

Mr. Crosbie: When will you make a decision?

● (1500)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 1, consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :

que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin, sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

SCHEDULE B

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Interprète

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Programmes de promotion sociale

Official Languages of Canada

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of Canada

16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

16. (1) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Canada; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions du Parlement et du gouvernement du Canada.

Langues officielles du Canada

Official languages of New Brunswick

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the

(2) Le français et l'anglais sont les langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick; ils ont un statut et des droits et privilèges égaux quant à leur usage dans les institutions de la Légis-

Langues officielles du Nouveau-Brunswick

legislature and government of New Brunswick.

Advancement of status and use

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

Proceedings of Parliament

17. (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.

Proceedings of New Brunswick legislature

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.

Parliamentary statutes and records

18. (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

New Brunswick statutes and records

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

Proceedings in courts established by Parliament

19. (1) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.

Proceedings in New Brunswick courts

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or lature et du gouvernement du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Progression vers l'égalité

(3) La présente charte ne limite pas le pouvoir du Parlement et des législatures de favoriser la progression vers l'égalité de statut ou d'usage du français et de l'anglais.

Travaux du Parlement

17. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux du Parlement.

Travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans les débats et travaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Documents parlementaires

18. (1) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux du Parlement sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Documents de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Les lois, les archives, les comptes rendus et les procès-verbaux de la Législature du Nouveau-Brunswick sont imprimés et publiés en français et en anglais, les deux versions des lois ayant également force de loi et celles des autres documents ayant même valeur.

Procédures devant les tribunaux établis par le Parlement

19. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux établis par le Parlement et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick

(2) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

(2) Le public a, au Nouveau-Brunswick, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec tout bureau des institutions de la législature ou du gouvernement ou pour en recevoir les services.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions du Nouveau-Brunswick

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

The Constitution

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Dispositions générales

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be con-

Maintien des autres droits et libertés

26. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne constitue pas strued as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

une négation des autres droits ou libertés qui existent au Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

28. Indépendamment des autres dispositions de la présente charte, les droits et libertés qui y sont mentionnés sont garantis également aux personnes des deux sexes.

Égalité de garantie des droits pour les deux sexes

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

29. Les dispositions de la présente charte ne portent pas atteinte aux droits ou privilèges garantis en vertu de la Constitution du Canada concernant les écoles séparées et autres écoles confessionnelles.

Maintien des droits relatifs à certaines écoles

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Effet de la dérogation

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Durée de validité

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Nouvelle adoption

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

Durée de validité

Citation

Titre

Citation

34. This Part may be cited as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

34. Titre de la présente partie : Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

Titre

PART II

RIGHTS OF THE ABORIGINAL PEOPLES OF CANADA

PARTIE II

DROITS DES PEUPLES AUTOCHTONES DU CANADA

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

35. (1) Les droits existants — ancestraux ou issus de traités — des peuples autochtones du Canada sont reconnus et confirmés.

Confirmation des droits existants des peuples autochtones

Definition of "aboriginal peoples of Canada"

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

(2) Dans la présente loi, «peuples autochtones du Canada» s'entend notamment des Indiens, des Inuit et des Métis du Canada.

Définition de «peuples autochtones du Canada»

PART III

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PARTIE III

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

36. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

36. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART IV

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

PARTIE IV

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Constitutional conference

37. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Conférence constitutionnelle

37. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des peuples autochtones

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

Participation des territoires

PART V

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

38. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces

Procédure normale de modification

38. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue repré-

that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

sente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces. Majorité simple

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification. Désaccord

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte. Levée du désaccord

Restriction on proclamation

39. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

39. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord. Restriction

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 38(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification. Idem

Compensation

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

40. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 38(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement. Compensation

Amendment by unanimous consent

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters

41. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivan- Consentement unanime

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

tes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 43, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

42. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 41(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

42. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 38(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 41*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 38(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

43. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

43. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

Amendments by Parliament

44. Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

44. Sous réserve des articles 41 et 42, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

45. Subject to section 41, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

45. Sous réserve de l'article 41, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Modification par les législatures

Initiation of amendment procedures

46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

46. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 38, 41, 42 et 43 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Initiative des procédures

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Possibilité de révocation

Amendments without Senate resolution

47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41, 42 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

47. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 38, 41, 42 ou 43, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Computation du délai

Advice to issue proclamation

48. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions

48. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolu-

Demande de proclamation

required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

tions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

49. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

49. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

Conférence constitutionnelle

PART VI

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

PARTIE VI

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

50. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

50. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Compétence provinciale

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Exportation hors des provinces

The Constitution

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

51. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

Idem

51. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

PART VII

GENERAL

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

(a) the Canada Act, including this Act;

(b) the Acts and orders referred to in Schedule I; and

(c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Repeals and new names

53. (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of Schedule I are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

PARTIE VII

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

Primauté de la Constitution du Canada

52. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

Constitution du Canada

(2) La Constitution du Canada comprend :

a) la Loi sur le Canada, y compris la présente loi;

b) les textes législatifs et les décrets figurant à l'annexe I;

c) les modifications des textes législatifs et des décrets mentionnés aux alinéas a) ou b).

Modification

(3) La Constitution du Canada ne peut être modifiée que conformément aux pouvoirs conférés par elle.

Abrogation et nouveaux titres

53. (1) Les textes législatifs et les décrets énumérés à la colonne I de l'annexe I sont abrogés ou modifiés dans la mesure indiquée à la colonne II. Sauf abrogation, ils restent en vigueur en tant que lois du Canada sous les titres mentionnés à la colonne III.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act, that refers to an enactment referred to in Schedule I by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in Schedule I may be cited as the Constitution Act followed by the year and number, if any, of its enactment.

Modifications corrélatives

(2) Tout texte législatif ou réglementaire, sauf la Loi sur le Canada, qui fait mention d'un texte législatif ou décret figurant à l'annexe I par le titre indiqué à la colonne I est modifié par substitution à ce titre du titre correspondant mentionné à la colonne III; tout Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique non mentionné à l'annexe I peut être cité sous le titre de Loi constitutionnelle suivi de l'indication de l'année de son adoption et éventuellement de son numéro.

Repeal and consequential amendments

54. Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Abrogation et modifications qui en découlent

54. La partie IV est abrogée un an après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie et le gouverneur général peut, par proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada, abroger le présent article et apporter en conséquence de cette double abrogation les aménagements qui s'imposent à la présente loi.

French version of Constitution of Canada

55. A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in Schedule I shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

Version française de certains textes constitutionnels

55. Le ministre de la Justice du Canada est chargé de rédiger, dans les meilleurs délais, la version française des parties de la Constitution du Canada qui figurent à l'annexe I; toute partie suffisamment importante est, dès qu'elle est prête, déposée pour adoption par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conformément à la procédure applicable à l'époque à la modification des dispositions constitutionnelles qu'elle contient.

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

56. Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 55, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de certains textes constitutionnels

56. Les versions française et anglaise des parties de la Constitution du Canada adoptées dans ces deux langues ont également force de loi. En outre, ont également force de loi, dès l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'article 55, d'une partie de la version française de la Constitution, cette partie et la version anglaise correspondante.

English and French versions of this Act

57. The English and French versions of this Act are equally authoritative.

Versions française et anglaise de la présente loi

57. Les versions française et anglaise de la présente loi ont également force de loi.

Commencement

58. Subject to section 59, this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Entrée en vigueur

58. Sous réserve de l'article 59, la présente loi entre en vigueur à la date fixée par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Commencement of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec

59. (1) Paragraph 23(1)(a) shall come into force in respect of Quebec on a day to be

Entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec

59. (1) L'alinéa 23(1)a) entre en vigueur pour le Québec à la date fixée par proclama-

fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

tion de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Authorization of Quebec

(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be issued only where authorized by the legislative assembly or government of Quebec.

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (1) ne peut être prise qu'après autorisation de l'assemblée législative ou du gouvernement du Québec.

Autorisation du Québec

Repeal of this section

(3) This section may be repealed on the day paragraph 23(1)(a) comes into force in respect of Quebec and this Act amended and renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of this section, by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

(3) Le présent article peut être abrogé à la date d'entrée en vigueur de l'alinéa 23(1)a) pour le Québec, et la présente loi faire l'objet, dès cette abrogation, des modifications et changements de numérotation qui en découlent, par proclamation de la Reine ou du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Abrogation du présent article

Short title and citations

60. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1981, and the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1975 (No. 2) and this Act may be cited together as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1981.

60. Titre abrégé de la présente annexe : Loi constitutionnelle de 1981; titre commun des lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1975 (nº 2) et de la présente loi : Lois constitutionnelles de 1867 à 1981.

Titres

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

MODERNIZATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
1.	British North America Act, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	(1) Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867." (2) Section 20 is repealed. (3) Class 1 of section 91 is repealed. (4) Class 1 of section 92 is repealed.	Constitution Act, 1867
2.	An Act to amend and continue the Act 32-33 Victoria chapter 3; and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Can.)	(1) The long title is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "Manitoba Act, 1870." (2) Section 20 is repealed.	Manitoba Act, 1870
3.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the union, dated the 23rd day of June, 1870		Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order
4.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting British Columbia into the Union, dated the 16th day of May, 1871		British Columbia Terms of Union
5.	British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)	Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "1. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1871."	Constitution Act, 1871
6.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the Union, dated the 26th day of June, 1873		Prince Edward Island Terms of Union
7.	Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.)		Parliament of Canada Act, 1875
8.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting all British possessions and Territories in North America and islands adjacent thereto into the Union, dated the 31st day of July, 1880		Adjacent Territories Order

ANNEXE I

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

ACTUALISATION DE LA CONSTITUTION

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
1.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	(1) L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé. (3) La catégorie 1 de l'article 91 est abrogée. (4) La catégorie 1 de l'article 92 est abrogée.	Loi constitutionnelle de 1867
2.	Acte pour amender et continuer l'acte trente-deux et trente-trois Victoria, chapitre trois, et pour établir et constituer le gouvernement de la province de Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Canada)	(1) Le titre complet est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba.» (2) L'article 20 est abrogé.	Loi de 1870 sur le Manitoba
3.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Terre de Rupert et le Territoire du Nord-Ouest, en date du 23 juin 1870		Décret en conseil sur la terre de Rupert et le territoire du Nord-Ouest
4.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant la Colombie-Britannique, en date du 16 mai 1871		Conditions de l'adhésion de la Colombie-Britannique
5.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)	L'article 1 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «1. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1871.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1871
6.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, en date du 26 juin 1873		Conditions de l'adhésion de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard
7.	Acte du Parlement du Canada, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1875 sur le Parlement du Canada
8.	Arrêté en conseil de Sa Majesté admettant dans l'Union tous les territoires et possessions britanniques dans l'Amérique du Nord, et les îles adjacentes à ces territoires et possessions, en date du 31 juillet 1880		Décret en conseil sur les territoires adjacents

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
9.	British North America Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1886."	Constitution Act, 1886
10.	Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)		Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889
11.	Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
12.	The Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3 (Can.)		Alberta Act
13.	The Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42 (Can.)		Saskatchewan Act
14.	British North America Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1907."	Constitution Act, 1907
15.	British North America Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1915."	Constitution Act, 1915
16.	British North America Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1930."	Constitution Act, 1930
17.	Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.)	In so far as they apply to Canada, (a) section 4 is repealed; and (b) subsection 7(1) is repealed.	Statute of Westminster, 1931
18.	British North America Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1940."	Constitution Act, 1940
19.	British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
9.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1886.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1886
10.	Acte du Canada (limites d'Ontario) 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (R.-U.)		Loi de 1889 sur le Canada (frontières de l'Ontario)
11.	Acte concernant l'Orateur canadien (nomination d'un suppléant) 1895, 2e session, 59 Vict., c. 3 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
12.	Acte de l'Alberta, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 3 (Canada)		Loi sur l'Alberta
13.	Acte de la Saskatchewan, 1905, 4-5 Ed. VII, c. 42 (Canada)		Loi sur la Saskatchewan
14.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1907, 7 Ed. VII, c. 11 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1907.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1907
15.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1915.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1915
16.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1930.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1930
17.	Statut de Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (R.-U.)	Dans la mesure où ils s'appliquent au Canada : a) l'article 4 est abrogé; b) le paragraphe 7(1) est abrogé.	Statut de Westminster de 1931
18.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1940.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1940
19.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Continued

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
20.	British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
21.	British North America Act, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Newfoundland Act."	Newfoundland Act
22.	British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
23.	British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
24.	British North America Act, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Can.)	The Act is repealed.
25.	British North America Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1960."	Constitution Act, 1960
26.	British North America Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1964."	Constitution Act, 1964
27.	British North America Act, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Part I (Can.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "2. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1965."	Constitution Act, 1965
28.	British North America Act, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 38(1) (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1974."	Constitution Act, 1974

ANNEXE I (suite)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
20.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
21.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (R.-U.)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi sur Terre-Neuve.»	Loi sur Terre-Neuve
22.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique (N° 2), 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
23.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (R.-U.)	La loi est abrogée.
24.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Canada)	La loi est abrogée.
25.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1960.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1960
26.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (R.-U.)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle de 1964.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1964
27.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 2 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «2. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1965.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1965
28.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par le paragraphe 38(1) de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle de 1974.»	Loi constitutionnelle de 1974

SCHEDULE I

to the

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981—Concluded

Item	Column I Act Affected	Column II Amendment	Column III New Name
29.	British North America Act, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 31 (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975
30.	British North America Act (No. 2), 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Can.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "3. This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975."	Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975

And on the amendment of Mr. Epp, seconded by Miss MacDonald,—That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended by striking out Section 40 and substituting the following therefor:

"40. In the event that a province dissents from an amendment conferring legislative jurisdiction on Parliament, the Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of that province, taking into account the per capita costs to exercise that jurisdiction in the provinces which have approved the amendment."

And on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Deans,—That the amendment be amended by striking out, in the first line, the words "a province" and substituting the words "the province of Québec".

And on the amendment of Mr. Manly, seconded by Mr. Fulton,—That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended

(a) by adding immediately after Section 47 the following new section:

"48. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada set out in Part II may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, when so authorized by resolution of a two-thirds majority vote in the Senate and House of Commons and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected;

(b) in the provinces, when so authorized in accordance with Section 42 and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected; and

(c) for the purposes referred to in this Section, consent of the aboriginal peoples shall be obtained by a procedure determined by the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples of Canada."; and

(b) by renumbering the subsequent sections accordingly.

ANNEXE I (fin)

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

	Colonne I Loi visée	Colonne II Modification	Colonne III Nouveau titre
29.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Partie I (Canada)	L'article 3, modifié par l'article 31 de la loi 25-26 Elizabeth II, c. 28 (Canada), est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé de la présente partie : Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 1 de 1975
30.	Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique nº 2, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Canada)	L'article 3 est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit : «3. Titre abrégé : Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975.»	Loi constitutionnelle nº 2 de 1975

Sur l'amendement de M. Epp, appuyé par M^lle^ MacDonald,—Qu'on modifie le projet de Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 en retranchant l'article 40 et en le remplaçant par ce qui suit:

«40. Si une province n'est pas d'accord sur une modification qui donne compétence législative au Parlement, le gouvernement du Canada doit indemniser raisonnablement le gouvernement de cette province, compte tenu du coût per capita de l'exercice de cette compétence dans les provinces qui ont approuvé la modification.»

Sur le sous-amendement de M. Broadbent, appuyé par M. Deans,—Qu'on modifie l'amendement, à la première ligne, en retranchant les mots «une province» et en les remplaçant par les mots «la province de Québec».

Et sur l'amendement de M. Manly, appuyé par M. Fulton,—Qu'on modifie le projet de Loi constitutionnelle de 1981,

a) en ajoutant, immédiatement après l'article 47, le nouvel article suivant:

«48. Une modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les droits des peuples autochtones du Canada énoncés dans la Partie II ne peut être faite par proclamation du Gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada que conformément à la procédure suivante:

a) dans le Yukon et les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, lorsqu'elle est autorisée par vote du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes à la majorité de chacun des peuples autochtones qu'elle touche;

b) dans les provinces, lorsqu'elle est autorisée conformément à l'article 42 et acceptée par la majorité de chacun des peuples autochtones qu'elle touche; et

c) aux fins mentionnées à cet article, l'acceptation des peuples autochtones s'obtiendra selon une procédure convenue entre le gouvernement du Canada et les peuples autochtones du Canada.»; et

b) en renumérotant en conséquence les articles qui suivent.

The Constitution

Madam Speaker: Order, please! It being 3 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to the order made on Friday, November 27, 1981, to dispose of government business under No. 56.

[English]

The question is on the amendment to the amendment by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

● (1510)

(Division No. 130)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Duclos
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kristiansen
La Salle
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Skelly
Waddell
Young—34.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Cossitt
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dinsdale
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Forrestall
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hnatyshyn
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Huntington
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
King
Korchinski
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Loiselle
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
MacLellan
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Thomson
Tobin
Tousignant
Trudeau
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—235.

● (1600)

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment defeated.

The next question is on the amendment by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, perhaps we could have consent to dispense with the ringing of the bells.

Madam Speaker: Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Epp) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 131)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gass
Greenaway
Gurbin
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Korchinski
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKinnon
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Speyer
Stevens
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—87.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Irwin
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Kristiansen
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Loiselle
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Manly
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murphy
Nicholson (Miss)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Skelly
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Trudeau
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis
Young
Yurko—174.

● (1610)

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment defeated.

The next question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: The House will now proceed to the vote.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Manly) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 132)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Cossitt
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kristiansen
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Skelly
Waddell
Young—33.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dinsdale
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Forrestall
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hnatyshyn
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Huntington
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
King
Korchinski
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
La Salle
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Loiselle
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nielsen
Nowlan
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Thomson
Tobin
Tousignant
Trudeau
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—235.

● (1620)

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment defeated.

The question is now on the main motion in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

[Translation]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended? All those in favour of the motion as amended will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: We shall now proceed to the recorded vote.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1630)

(Division No. 133)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Daudlin
Dawson
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dinsdale
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Forrestall
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gass
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hnatyshyn
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Howie
Irwin
Jarvis
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
King
Korchinski
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lewycky
Loiselle
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKinnon
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murphy
Murta
Nicholson (Miss)
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Skelly
Smith
Speyer
Stevens
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Thomson
Tobin
Tousignant
Trudeau
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis
Young
Yurko—246.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Bloomfield
Cossitt
Domm
Duclos
Gamble
Gauthier
Gilchrist
Gustafson
Hudecki
Huntington
Jelinek
La Salle
MacKay
Manly
McKenzie
Mitges
Neil
Oberle
Patterson
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Stewart
Towers—24.

● (1640)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Whereupon the members of the House rose and sang

O Canada

Madam Speaker: If it would not be too much of an anti-climax, we should proceed to routine proceedings.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I might make an appeal to the government House leader and the House leader for the official opposition to call it six o'clock for today and to proceed with the business tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I feel that the best way to celebrate this historic day is to show an exceptional willingness to expedite the business of the House. We have a very full legislative schedule, and I think it is important that we should try to get the third reading of Bill C-48 this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, surely Canadians should learn how to enjoy themselves. This is an historic day; let us adjourn the House and celebrate it. There is only an hour left. We would allow third reading to take place right now.

An hon. Member: No.

Madam Speaker: We obviously do not have the consent of the House to adjourn the House.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, December 1, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,695, 3,096, 3,103, 3,124, 3,142 and 3,143.

[Text]

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR HIGHWAY RESEARCH

Question No. 2,695—Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore):

1. In the past five years, what amount was allocated by the government to highway research and science?

2. Does the government presently maintain research facilities to research highway technology and, if so, what are the facilities?

3. From 1976 to 1980, what amount went toward research of urban transportation?

4. Since 1970, did the government commit funds to provincial or municipal governments for building an urban transportation system and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works, Regional Economic Expansion, Supply and Services and Transport as follows:

1. The Transportation Development Centre of Transport Canada (TDC) in the past five years has allocated approximately $200,000 to highway research and science.

The Department of Public Works also made a contribution of $50,000 in 1976 to the Ontario ministry of transportation and communications to aid in developing a better code for the design of highway bridges. In addition, $84,000 was allotted in the last five years for contracts to study bridge vibration and thermal and construction stresses, and $20,000 was contributed to two studies under contract by Department of Supply and Services.

The Department of Supply and Services through its unsolicited proposal program contracted for the following three studies:

(i) Study of transverse distribution of vehicle loads on highway bridges, $30,000 DSS and $10,000 DPW.

(ii) Analysis and design of box bridges and voided slab bridges, $49,950 DSS.

(iii) Study of the effectiveness of intermediate diaphrams in distributing five loads in beam and slab bridges, $18,000 DSS and $10,000 DPW.

2. TDC does not maintain research facilities to research highway technology.

3. From fiscal years 1976/77 to 1980/81 TDC spent approximately $10,250,000 toward research of urban transportation.

4. The TDC has since 1970 often cost-shared R & D projects with provinces and/or municipalities on R & D projects to improve components of various urban transportation systems. The costs of these R & D projects are included in the amount described in part 3 above.

Through the Transport Canada Urban Transportation Assistance Program, established in 1978, approximately $47.4 million has been approved for urban transportation projects of various sorts and $97.5 million has been approved for the construction of railway grade separations.

Since 1970, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed a total of $167,689,071 in grants and $20,037,-111 in loans to provincial and municipal governments for building of urban transportation systems.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Question No. 3,096—Mr. Clarke:

1. During the period 1970-80 did the Centennial Commission acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does the Centennial Commission have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): The Centennial Commission ceased to exist on April 1, 1968 pursuant to Appropriation Act No. 1, 1968, 1967-68.

LOTO CANADA

Question No. 3,103—Mr. Clarke:

1. During the period 1970-80 did Loto Canada Inc. acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does Loto Canada Inc. have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ACQUISITION OF SHARES BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 3,124—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to each corporation partially-owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada, during the period 1970-80 did the corporation acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. In each case, does the corporation have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The government has collected information on all corporations in which it holds an interest since 1977. The names of all partially-owned corporations as well as their subsidiary and associated corporations have been published by the Office of the Comptroller General on the basis of questionnaires sent to the parent corporations. This list, revised in 1980, was tabled on October 6, 1980 to an answer to question No. 46.

As a partial shareholder the government is not privileged to receive financial information other than that available to all shareholders.

2. Corporate planning is the responsibility of the board of directors. It would not be appropriate for the government to violate commercial confidentiality by obliging its nominees on the board to divulge investment plans.

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Question No. 3,142—Mr. Cossitt:

Was the government charged for long-distance telephone calls not placed through government operators or on government long-distance lines during the fiscal year 1980-81 and, if so, what amount?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: yes, based on the information reported by departments for the fiscal year 1980-81, $26,325,000 was billed directly by the carriers to individual departments.

TELEPHONE CALLS BY MP'S

Question No. 3,143—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to telephone calls made by Members of Parliament and their constituency office staff on their allotted government code number and on connections where the government operators made note of the number of the call, were the numbers made available in any way to the government or to any other source?

2. Other than requests from individual Members of Parliament who might be checking misuse of their code numbers, were requests received by the Department of Communications or by any other government department or agency for numbers called by means of any member's code number and, if so, in each case (a) what was the date (b) what was the constituency involved (c) who was the person requesting such information (d) what was the reason given for such a request?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. The Government Telecommunications Agency requires certain information for billing and planning purposes on calls made by the use of government call codes. The information, which is entered on mark sense cards by government operators consists of: point of termination, point of origin, called number, call code number, and connect and disconnect times. This data is provided only on written request to authorized officials of departments or agencies to which the call codes have been specifically assigned. The Sergeant-at-Arms is the authorized official for Members of Parliament. Any requests by members who might be checking misuse of their code numbers are channeled through his office.

2. No, other than noted above, GTA has not received any requests from government departments, agencies or other sources for numbers called by means of any member's code number.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 57 in the name of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and internal working papers.

I ask that the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

[Text]

COPIES OF ALL STUDIES AND COMMUNICATIONS RESPECTING COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR LOSSES DUE TO GRAIN EMBARGO

Motion No. 57—Mr. Hovdebo:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, copies of all papers, studies, calculations and communications between the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board) or any other cabinet minister concerning compensation for Canadian farmers to losses sustained during the grains embargo.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 57 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, when I last spoke to the House about Bill C-48 it was on November 10, and the government did not see fit to continue with this bill until now. It was obviously not very important to the government. Frankly, we would prefer the government not to proceed any further with this bill. It contains some of the worst legislation ever to come before this House.

● (1650)

I had related to the House the effect this measure was having on small business in Canada. I also related that members of the NDP and the Liberal Party stated how concerned they were about small business in Canada. This legislation affects small business and how small business relates to the oil industry. Over the past year many small oil companies have shut down. Many have left for the United States and Australia. Many have gone out of business. All of this is because of the efforts of this government to nationalize the oil industry.

I also related to the House how numerous members from the other side said that we would have energy self-sufficiency by 1990. I mentioned that in 1974 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that we would have oil self-sufficiency in 1980. He said that from 1974 right through to 1980, but we do not have it at this time. Now he says we will have energy self-sufficiency by 1990. This is the same Prime Minister who in 1974 said they had beaten inflation. We all know that inflation has not been beaten.

The Independent Petroleum Association, the Canadian Petroleum Association and the National Energy Board all say that we will not have oil self-sufficiency by 1990, but this socialist Liberal government says we will.

We presently consume 1.8 million barrels a day and produce 1.4 million barrels a day, resulting in a shortfall of 400,000 barrels daily. According to the latest figures, by 1990 our production will be down by 700,000 barrels a day. The government has no means at the present time to recover that shortfall. Technology is not in place to do this and the government knows it. The government will admit this but not in public. They say they will put the technology in place to do that. How can we do that and at the same time allow the oil rigs to leave the country?

We do not have the technology on the east coast, in the Beaufort Sea or in the Arctic, the three areas affected by this bill. All the oil companies are prepared to say is that they are working on it. They worked for ten years in the North Sea to bring in those wells. This government says that within the next few years it will bring in the wells in the Arctic, on the east coast offshore and the Beaufort Sea.

Yesterday representatives of the Independent Petroleum Association appeared before the Senate banking committee. They reported that approximately 256 rigs are drilling in Canada at present, 150 rigs are idle, 180 have left Canada, 34 are under construction and will leave Canada. Of the 620 rigs in Canada, only 256 are drilling.

The ratio of rigs to wells drilled in Canada in one year is approximately 20 to 1. The government is telling us that we are going to drill between 6,000 and 7,000 wells this year compared to the 10,000 which the oil companies and drilling companies told us we could drill in 1981. This is all due to the Canadianization program which the government has backed us into.

We call this program of Canadianization confiscation. Members opposite have repeatedly stood and said that this only pertains to the oil industry. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) stood in this House and related the special place which the oil industry has in Canada. He said that Bill C-48, which provides for a degree of government involvement in frontier lands, lands that belong to all Canadians, represents a pragmatic response to a particular set of circumstances.

Last weekend one of the Liberal hit men, Jim Coutts, called for Canadianization of other industries such as mining, forestry, farm machinery, telecommunications and the auto industry. They have been hiding behind this. We have known for a year that this is what they intend to do. All one had to do was talk to members of the staff of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They will admit privately that it is nationalization, not Canadianization. To go further, last weekend the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) urged the government to adopt a national cultural policy similar to the national energy policy, even though the national energy policy has supposedly been shut out with the new energy agreement. However, we know it has just been changed.

On November 3 in a statement in this House, the parliamentary secretary glossed over some of these provisions. He said that the rule prior to 1977 was that if you drilled on any federal lands, you had to give back to the Crown 50 per cent of those lands and they would in turn put them up for bid once again. That was changed in 1977. Those were terrible conditions and the government was going to improve the situation, allowing a person to keep all the lands on which he drilled. The government said it would waive the royalties. In exchange for that, it asked for 25 per cent ownership in everything that is drilled. In other words, a Canadian company or the government must own 25 per cent of all wells drilled.

Along came Hibernia. Where was the government? Canadian companies did not want to get involved, so they approached Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada did not want to get involved in Hibernia, but because of the legislation it had no choice. It was forced to come in—fortunately, hopefully, for Canada in the future. This field will end up to be a very exceptional one in terms of oil fields in Canada.

• (1700)

From 1977 to the present day the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources skipped over it completely. He never even mentioned this back-in clause of Petro-Canada, this supposedly 25 per cent Canadianization. He glossed over it entirely and stated that they were going from a 50 per cent ratio of Canadian ownership to what we have at the present time, a 25 per cent back-in clause, or confiscation. He does not even know half of what is in this bill, but he is quite prepared to read a statement prepared by the department. That is what he has done in the house most of the time: he is quite prepared to read statements that the department prepare for him. He does not even know the legislation that is in effect at the present time.

With this bill the government says that we will have self-sufficiency by 1990. Where is it? It is certainly not there in their actions. It is certainly not evident in the budget that was just provided. As everyone is aware, the 1980 budget was really a national energy policy that was bootlegged into the House. The 1981 budget has done nothing more than take the heat off the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and transferred the burden to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Surely most hon. members in the House assumed that the Minister of Finance was too smart to get caught in this bind.

We need to look no further, Mr. Speaker, than at what happened in Toronto last weekend when 1,500 Liberals met to talk about how they would turn this country into a socialist state. And a socialist state they do intend. We have no self-sufficiency plan for Canada. All we have is a housing industry that is falling apart, a forest industry in B.C. that is in desperate straits, a fishing industry on the east coast where 50 per cent of the fishermen are unemployed. Is this the government that will provide benefits for Canada? Will it provide an energy policy that will solve the problems of Canada when it cannot even solve the other problems? It is almost ridiculous the way this Liberal government goes on and on assuming that the Canadian people will keep voting for them because they will give them something around election time.

Many hon. members on the other side will not see this House after the next election. In fact, one can almost start to say goodbye to most of them now. So many of them will not return to this House that if one were to say goodbye to each one of them, it would take a long time.

Certainly many members on the other side are pretty concerned about their seats at the present time because a few people, without consultation with industry, without consultation with the provincial governments, have introduced a bill which will not provide self-sufficiency for this country.

They talk about Canadianization. This back-in clause is nothing but confiscation, Mr. Speaker. I should like to refer, in particular, to one clause, I believe it is Clause 38. Can one believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who heads up PetroCan, is also the arbitrator of any disputes? So if PetroCan and an oil company, in partnership, have a disagreement, then according to the provisions of Clause 38 the matter shall be submitted for arbitration in the manner provided for by order of the Minister. In other words, the minister will decide the means of arbitration and then the minister will arbitrate. Not only that, but when he does arbitrate, under Clause 38 his decision is final and binding on all affected parties. What a ridiculous bill!

As one further studies this bill it gets worse. At times I do feel sorry for some of the members opposite who are prepared to vote for such terrible legislation; they have allowed themselves to become so degraded that they are more interested in the patronage which the Liberal Party has given them over the years and when it tells them that if they vote with the party they will receive more patronage in the future. Unbelievable!

Many hon. members on the other side call themselves Liberals, but this bill is just another rubber stamp on the socialist policies that we have had for 13 years. There are not many members on the other side who are prepared to stand up and call a spade a spade, but that is what it is—socialism. Socialism is the key word for the next election. Do we want socialism under these members opposite or do we want free enterprise? Do we believe that the individual is supreme or do we believe that the state is supreme?

These socialists on the other side are not building a system or a better Canada; they are tearing it down. How can one say that they are building a better Canada when they put people out of work? Is there any member on the opposite side who is prepared to say that this energy policy is creating more jobs? I ask them to stand up and tell me how many jobs have been created in Alberta in the last year. Tell me how many jobs have been lost in Alberta over the last year? Thousands of them. What member on the other side is prepared to say that not one job has been lost in Alberta over the last year? Stand up now. We have silence, Mr. Speaker, because they are all mutes over there. They are not prepared to stand up on that point.

An hon. Member: The hon. member does not know what to say.

Mr. Wright: The hon. member opposite says that I do not know what to say. All he has to do is look to his right and observe the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources read a statement prepared by his department and he will find out who knows what to say.

There is no question that this country is worse off today than it was ten years ago. Why do we have inflation today? Why do we have unemployment? The budget does not address the problems of Canada, Mr. Speaker. This bill does not address the problems of Canada. How many Liberals can actually stand up and defend such action? How many are prepared, without a written statement, to stand up and say that this is terrible legislation? Yet, Mr. Speaker, this is the worst legislation that we have ever seen in this country. All of us look forward to new legislation when a Conservative government comes to power to replace the onerous legislation before us at the present time.

• (1710)

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am pleased to be here with such a full House to discuss Bill C-48.

An hon. Member: A full House!

Mr. Shields: We all realize the significance of today. Surely this is why so many members are absent. I am sorry the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) cannot be here; after all, Bill C-48 is key to his policies.

I have some comments I should like to make. We have been through the amendment stage and committee stage, but I say to the people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories, "Look out, a massive grab of wealth is being perpetrated by the federal government; it is known as the Canada lands." When we talk about the Canada lands, we are talking about Yukon, Northwest Territories and the Beaufort Sea. History clearly repeats itself.

Mr. Tousignant: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: The hon. member had a chance to rise to make his comments before the Chair recognized me, but he did not do so. I only ask him to show me a little courtesy; I may say something he will understand. I hearken back to the days when Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta were being carved out of the Northwest Territories.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member who is saying we should not rise in the House, that we are not the ones who are moving the amendments, they are, so we do not have to rise.

[English]

Mr. Shields: Certainly it is interesting when a backbencher of the Liberal Party rises to say that we are speaking on amendments. We are speaking on the bill. All the amendments have clearly been dealt with.

For a moment I should like to discuss history. We should recognize that Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba at one time were all part of the so-called massive Canada lands, as is the case with the Northwest Territories. At one point they were just territories. When Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were brought into confederation, they did not have ownership and control of their natural resources. Indeed, there was a rape of the industrial, mineral and resource bases of those provinces until 1930 when the central or controlling provinces clearly recognized that they must give control of natural resources to Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba so that they would be treated in exactly the same manner as any other province in confederation. Clearly members of the government are not learning from the people of the Northwest Territories and Yukon. They are not treating the people who were born and raised in the north, or those who moved to the north, with any degree of foresight. They are robbing those people of their heritage. It is as much their heritage as the heritage of people born in Quebec, in Newfoundland or in Alberta. The problem has not been addressed. It astounds me when I think about it.

All regulatory control of resource development will be the direct responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In some minor cases it will be the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). There is a clear conflict. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does not have to account to the people or the governments of the Northwest Territories or Yukon. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, where it is applicable, does not have to account to the governments of the people of the Northwest Territories or Yukon. A very serious mistake is being made by allowing Bill C-48 to proceed in its present form. Virtually the people of Yukon and Northwest Territories are being told, "Forget it, you will never have the wherewithal to become a province".

If one has travelled extensively in Canada and in the north, one will realize that a number of things stand out about the people of those areas—their individuality, their strength and their determination to develop the territories in exactly the same manner that the founding people of Quebec, Ontario and Alberta established their provinces, those immigrants from other parts of the world and those people from other parts of Canada who established and hued out those provinces. The people of the north are exactly the same kind of people. They are still pioneers and they are proud of it. With Bill C-48 they are being told to forget it because the mighty czar of energy, mines and resources will control what goes on in the Northwest Territories and in Yukon, the so-called Canada lands. Also they are virtually being told that they will never be able to carve out a province as did the founders of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

One cannot consider Bill C-48 without talking about aboriginal rights. Effectively it eliminates aboriginal rights in many ways. It undermines the negotiations and the commitment of the federal government. It clearly undermines aboriginal and native rights in the north. If the government is clearly interested in native people in the north, it should come to grips with the problems there; this should be done now. They should make settlements prior to development and prior to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources moving in with the discretionary powers that are outlined in this bill.

● (1720)

There is a debt here that has not been paid, Mr. Speaker, and that will become evident when development begins. The signals are there already. The people of the north, the Dene people, the aboriginal people, the Indian people, are not going to allow the uninterrupted development of the natural resources in the territories until they know that they will be treated fairly by the government. That is a warning that we should heed, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-48 gives very wide discretionary powers to the minister. In committee discussions I put forward what I thought was a logical argument but it fell on deaf ears. I suppose it will fall on deaf ears again today. The minister has wide discretionary powers to decide what oil company, what private consortium, what public consortium, is going to be able to develop this or that area and who is going to get this or that lease. If a find is made, the minister may determine how big that find is. He may say that he wants three more wells to be drilled. The private company that has sunk the hole and found reserves could be at odds with that and say that the find does not justify three wells and would not be commercially viable. The minister could overrule the company and say, "You will drill three more wells; if you do not, we will take the lease away from you." That is the kind of discretionary power the minister has.

I do not think that these are the kind of powers the minister wants. I have not seen any legislation that has passed this House in the short time that I have been here which opens the door to such abuse. There is the opportunity for pork-barrelling, for favouritism, for nailing someone you do not like. The minister has put himself in the position of Solomon and clearly, Mr. Speaker, he is not Solomon.

Bill C-48 has an enormous impact on Canada, not just on the gas and oil industry alone. The enormity of the program was recognized by the minister when he introduced the national energy policy and said that the decisions relate to energy but that they will impinge on almost every sphere of Canadian activity, on every Canadian and on the economic and social structure of the country for years to come. He also said that they would have major and positive implications for the federation itself. I would ask my colleagues to examine that statement and try to digest it in the context of Bill C-48.

I agree with the minister that Bill C-48 has that kind of implication. We are either going to develop into a country with individual initiative, individual thought and the individual gamble that will be rewarded, or else we are going to develop into a country that will cater to the mediocre. We will develop into a nation of enterprise, of individual initiative, or else—and Bill C-48 is a clear indication of this—we will develop along the lines of a socialist state.

During the debate that culminated in the House today, we on this side wanted a very small provision put into the Constitution of Canada, and that is the basic right to own property. The Liberals refused, however. A study of Bill C-48 indicates why they refused. Of course, they were spurred on by their socialist friends in the corner, the little red rump. But at least the people in the corner are honest; they tell us exactly where they stand. They are for government ownership and for socialism—for the mediocre. They say that constantly so at least we know their views. We do not hear that kind of statement from the Liberal benches, however, because they disguise their views, but that is what has happened.

The whole thing is designed so that preferential treatment will be given to the Crown corporation. No compensation is provided for the initiative of an entrepreneur who goes out and finds oil, but there is a 25 per cent back-in provision. That will only pay immediate costs. There are laws in this country that deal with expropriation. Certainly governments can expropriate property, but compensation is paid and there is recourse to the court of appeal. Although there is some provision in Bill C-48 for compensation, there is no appeal provided.

I have already mentioned the discretionary powers of the minister and they scare me, Mr. Speaker. A great deal of time and money has been spent in putting a staff together that has the necessary expertise to develop an oil property. An instance of this is the Hibernia play. No single company could afford to go out to the Hibernia and drill a well offshore. No one company could stand the risk involved and so a consortium was formed.

As many as 22 companies could be involved in a consortium which was drilling only one well. Each company could take as little as one half of 1 per cent of the action or 10 per cent of it, depending upon how much they can risk. But together, the companies determine who will be the over-all operator. They may select Dome because of its experience in the Beaufort Sea, or they may select Petro-Canada as the company having the most knowledge.

Under this legislation however, that will no longer be the case. The minister may determine at any time, with any consortium with which Petro-Canada is involved, who shall be the operator. It does not matter if Petro-Canada has only 1 per cent of the action. The minister may make a determination and say to a company: "You are going to allow Petro-Canada to be the operator." A great deal of time, effort and expense is involved to put the staff with the necessary background and expertise together. It will be absolutely devastating if the operator were removed for political reasons. But that is what we are giving the minister the power to do. Clearly if you do not like the way the operator is running the project, it is the consortium that sits down and says: "We do not want you there. We do not think you are doing it the way the majority of us would like you to do it; therefore, you will be removed." That is not the case with Bill C-48. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his senior bureaucrats, the mandarins, can determine who is going to be the operator of the consortium if Petro-Canada is part of it. That is total and absolute abuse.

• (1730)

There are national and international implications to Bill C-48. Clearly we have not looked at them. We have not examined the stability of our legislative framework. Clearly we have not looked at the protection of personal property rights. Clearly we have not looked at the sanctity of a contract. But these very things are absolutely necessary if we are to gain a degree of stability in our investment climate in the eyes of our national and international business community. We need investment in this country. But no one will invest in this country, no one from outside Canada will invest, and many in Canada will not invest in their own country without the protection of property rights. People will not invest in Canada if we do not have a legislative framework that gives us stability.

Canada has always through its courts strongly defended property and contractual rights. Canada has been known worldwide as being a safe climate in which to invest because individual rights were protected, corporate rights were protected and property rights were protected. The provisions of this bill violate every one of those concepts.

I urge hon. members across the way to think through this bill very clearly and I ask them once and for all to sit down and read it. I urge them to look at the implications for the people in the Northwest Territories and Yukon, the implications for the native people, the aboriginals and the Dene. But more than that, I tell members across the way to look at what this bill is telling the rest of the financial community in the western world. This bill is telling the financial community very clearly not to invest in Canada because we do not protect property rights and individual rights, nor do we have a legislative framework giving stability. We confiscate in Canada as they do in banana republics. That is what we are saying by passing this bill, so I urge hon. members to think it through clearly.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it may not be an accident that we are discussing this particular bill immediately after the House has just expressed itself on a question of grave and fundamental importance, that of a change in our Constitution.

My hon. friend and colleague who just preceded me made some references to the fact that one should read Bill C-48 if one is to understand some aspects of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which now, at least in the House of Commons, has been entrenched in the Constitution. It may not be an accident because there were certain aspects of this Charter of Rights and Freedoms which gave me and some of my colleagues from all sides of the House serious and dramatic difficulties, and may I just touch on one.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the major objectives of Bill C-48 is energy self-sufficiency by 1990. What that means is not only massive and costly exploration and development efforts in Canada lands, but massive amounts of money, incalculable amounts. Some say between $300 billion to $500 billion is required to carry this out. Naturally, when one embarks on that kind of effort, knowing the incredible risks involved and the chances that have to be taken to develop new oil, one also knows that little things, such as environmental and human concerns, cannot stand in the way once the bulldozers move into a promising area.

Let me touch on one issue. I shall compare this with what happened in Quebec when that province decided to move with almost indecent haste to develop the James Bay power potential. There were certain environmental concerns that had to be considered. They were quickly bridged, but the people created more of a problem. Most of the people there were native people. Some had to be moved to another area. Some of them were unwilling to go, but there was no time to negotiate. Therefore, some kind of a settlement was legislated. We talked with the native people. We asked them what they wanted. They did not like the price. The native people were told that while the negotiations were going on the bulldozers had to operate. As we know, the native people sought refuge in the courts and obtained an injunction to stop the work. Work on the James Bay development was shot down until an accommodation and a settlement were reached, a settlement of the legitimate rights and a price for which the native people of James Bay asked.

I want to return to the Constitution. We entrenched certain native rights in the Constitution today. They were not the same rights that were in the resolution that emerged from the parliamentary committee, that great exercise that was displayed to all Canadians throughout our country for months on end. That resolution said that native rights should be respected, recognized and affirmed. While it was not perfect, it was a step in the right direction. As you know, sir, the way we have been treating our native peoples in this country is a national disgrace, and it has earned us the condemnation of other countries and of international tribunals. We are being looked at almost like South Africa in the way it is treating its native peoples.

● (1740)

The resolution that came before the House and is now entrenched in the Constitution had a word added to it, and that word is "existing". In other words, only the rights which now exist are recognized and affirmed. It does not matter how many times the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) says this word really does not mean anything. First of all, he is intellectually dishonest in saying that, in that legislators, particularly the Minister of Justice, are not supposed to be writing words into fundamental laws that have no meaning, unless they are wantonly and deliberately trying to confound the courts. We are not supposed to be writing words into the Constitution that have no meaning. No, the Minister of Justice knows what the word "existing" means and why it was written in.

If we were to apply the new charter with respect to the rights of the native people in the James Bay situation at the time they went to the courts to seek refuge and obtain an injunction, the judges would have had no other way to interpret their demands than to say: "You have no existing rights; your rights have not been established and do not exist, so how can we grant you an injunction on the basis of something you do not have? We have a clear indication from Parliament, from the Premiers of all the provinces, and we assume there will be ratification by the government of the United Kingdom, that the only rights you have are rights that now exist." We know what would have happened. The work would not have been stopped, a settlement would have been legislated and, undoubtedly, it would have been something much less than what the James Bay people finally achieved for themselves.

It may not be an accident because there are other things in this Constitution and some aspects of this charter of rights that are more important because of omissions rather than because of things that are written; for instance, the omission of property rights, which my colleague touched on.

Property rights relate to the right to own and enjoy property, which is the very basis, foundation and beginning of western civilization. It is now a secondary kind of right, it is no longer a fundamental right. It would have been very difficult to do what the minister or his agent, PetroCan, is doing in relation to the Canada lands, if we had written in the Constitution one of the main features of the Diefenbaker bill of rights, and that is the right to the ownership and enjoyment of property, because the companies in the north who have now had their property confiscated would probably have been able to make a claim in the courts on the grounds of the Constitution. Naturally, that is no longer so. The statement my colleague made that members should read Bill C-48 if they are worried about the ominous consequences of what we have done here today is probably quite right.

I have said that the basic principles and objectives of Bill C-48 are laudable enough, and they are two. The first is a greater degree of Canadian ownership. I personally would not like to put a percentage figure on that, but certainly 50 per cent is a reasonable objective, particularly since we had already achieved that Canadian ownership content before we began with Bill C-48. Of course, I have to qualify that by saying that that includes all the energy play and not just drilling, the companies actions and the service sector, which was mainly owned by Canadian companies.

The other component principle or objective is self-sufficiency. Naturally that has to be a main objective, and it is certainly one that my party has pursued very actively with great energy and vigour.

Let us talk about Canadian ownership for a moment. We all know that we have to generate and assemble the kind of capital required to carry out what is necessary to be done in ten years. Not only will we have to find 400,000 barrels a day of new oil by the year 1990, but we have to replace almost one million barrels a day of oil that is now coming from the conventional shallow reserves in Alberta, which in the main will have been depleted by the year 1990. New oil will have to be found to replace that.

We all knew that in order to assemble the necessary capital to carry out these massive exploration and development schemes, the price of energy would have to rise. All of us agreed it simply did not make sense that we should sit in an energy-poor world and charge for our own resources within our own country a fraction of what it was worth in the international world. We also knew that if we were to go closer to the world price, if we were to double the price of gasoline and heating oil, someone in the energy sector, particularly the oil companies, would be making excessive profits—their profits would not be reasonable in relation to the cost of production and the other factors involved.

The oil companies all expected us to bring in a measure that would protect the Canadian consumer and give the companies a direction on how their profits would have to be reinvested. They fully expected that royalties and economic rent would be adjusted so that the government could either tax or charge away through economic rent some of those profits which would have been in excess of a reasonable profit reflecting costs of production.

The oil companies thought the government already had all the tools necessary to do that without confiscating their assets and without actually entering the energy sector itself. We could have adjusted our economic rents, as we do with any other natural resource sector. In the lumber sector, which I know most about, the provincial governments adjust their stumpage rates to reflect the world price of lumber. Whenever the price goes up, stumpage goes up; whenever it goes down, stumpage goes down. Right now in British Columbia, at least, stumpage is at a bare minimum. The companies pay very little for the resource they are taking from the public domain.

The oil companies expected that to happen, but they also knew this could have been done another way. There could have been guidelines and directions on how oil companies' excess profits should be reinvested; in other words, they could not pay them out in dividends, and they could not take them out of the country. We could have said that excess profits have to be put back into development and exploration.

• (1750)

Further to that, the oil companies fully expected that the government would tell them where to explore and develop. This has to happen on Canada lands and they cannot go anywhere where the government does not make proper leases available to them. The government knew that it had all the tools necessary to protect Canadian interests in the energy sector, but it did not choose any of these conventional tools because, to the draftsmen of this bill, Canadian ownership meant government ownership.

I would like to talk for a moment about the way Bill C-48 was drafted. I served on the committee which received this bill for consideration. It contains 85 clauses and it became quite clear, even in the early stages of committee discussion—even before it went to committee—that as soon as the government let it be known what it was about to do, it became quite obvious what some of the consequences of this action would be. Naturally, we came to committee prepared and armed with certain amendments and proposals that we thought would improve the measure and at least restore a degree of confidence that was lost in our ability to manage our resources.

It was an incredible situation and I do not know if there is any precedent for it, but we were told in committee that the government would not accept any opposition amendments of any kind. At the same time, however, the government laid before the committee no less than 115 amendments of its own, none of which redressed some of the more serious aspects of the bill which has now led our energy sector into a serious situation.

The bill was actually drafted by this committee. The bureaucrats were there, sitting around and saying, "If you do not like this, we will move another amendment." There were 115 amendments introduced by the government to approve a bill which should never have come before the committee in the first place. It was obvious that the term "Canadian ownership" meant government ownership and that Petro-Canada was to become an agent of the minister, not to participate in the energy play on Canada lands, but to take over control. Canada lands were identified as our northern territories, the Yukon, the offshore and certain other regions. Petro-Canada was given 25 per cent of every lease in operation on Canada lands.

My colleagues have spoken on this aspect and pointed out that, because of the incredible risks often associated with some of the major development plays in the north, particularly the risks associated with developing new technology, it has been a tradition with the oil companies that whenever the risks get high they seek to share them with their partners in the industry.

For example, we do not yet know how we will bring oil ashore from the Beaufort Sea and how we will protect the infrastructure under the ice pack from scouring and so on. Nor do we know how we will bring Hibernia oil ashore and transport it to the marketplace. That has still to be developed and there are serious risks involved.

Well, these oil companies have a partner now. It is called the governor in council and its agent, Petro-Canada, who will own 25 per cent outright. In most cases, even if it states that Petro-Canada will own 25 per cent, which is not entirely assured, if a company is still below Canadian ownership content of 50 per cent, Petro-Canada will confiscate the rest. But even if it is only 25 per cent, in most cases Petro-Canada will be the major shareholder in the larger plays.

Earlier in the debate I said that we have not yet considered the incredible risks and contingent liability that the minister has placed on the backs of the taxpayers of Canada as a result of this particular action. We are going to be the major players and the major risk-takers in the oil patch. By "we" I am referring the Canadian taxpayers. If it costs approximately $400 billion between now and 1990, it will cost the Canadian taxpayer $100 billion to pay his share in the energy play on Canada lands.

Many people are confused about why our interest rates are so high when at the same time we have such a high rate of inflation. It has never been a mystery to me. When a government is out in the marketplace trying to raise large amounts of capital and pay 2 per cent or 3 per cent above market rates of interest, it is no wonder that interest rates are high. When a government maintains a $13 billion or $14 billion deficit and then goes into the marketplace to borrow money to pay last year's interest, there is no doubt that interest rates will stay high.

Interest rates are one of the key factors of inflation because a businessman who cannot pass his costs of doing business on to the consumer will not stay in business very long. That is why we have both high inflation and high interest rates. It is something which has never been written into the textbooks. That is why economists are shaking their heads in utter disbelief; they do not have a solution to the situation because Adam Smith, Friedman and Galbraith did not write it into the textbooks. They have never had to deal with a government like ours, which taxes the poor and fundamentally changes the way it should behave in the marketplace.

The government is spending $3 billion alone to buy up private companies and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) says that that is only a beginning. He has not yet actually spent $3 billion because he does not have it, but he has accepted a liability of $3 billion to purchase these two oil companies, which were doing quite well, were producing quite a lot of oil, although they were more active in the retail market than they were in the exploration and development field.

The government does not just want to be sure we are energy self-sufficient by 1990, it also wants to be sure that the Canadian taxpayer has a share in the corner service station. It is incredible to think that the government would go to Petrofina and say that it would like to buy their oil company but that it does not have the money. It told them: "Our credit is good, though, and New York will lend us the money, but we do not want to go to the taxpayers, and tell them what we are about to do and to increase the deficit even further, because that is such a public thing. What we want is for you to carry the credit."

We are yet to be told, Mr. Speaker, what interest rates the minister has committed us to when he made the Petrofina deal. All we know is that this Belgian company is no longer owner of a Canadian oil company, but it is holding $1.5 billion of Canadian credit. If it were possible to imagine anything like that, it would boggle the mind to consider that that situation will continue until 1990 and that that is the kind of liability which the minister is placing on the backs of Canadians.

I see our servant is reaching for the mace, so may I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House now stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 3, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO ARCTIC OIL SPILL CLEAN UP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the incompetent and sluggish way the federal government handled a comparatively minor oil spill this past year from the vessel Edgar Jourdain at Hall Beach in the Arctic demonstrates the government's complete inability to respond effectively to any kind of oil spill in Canadian waters, much less a major one. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House calls upon the government to launch a full public inquiry into the Edgar Jourdain incident with a view to overhauling Canada's oil spill clean-up capabilities.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

PROCESSING OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The major chartered banks have stated publicly that they have increased funds for the Small Business Development Bond program and one bank has specified that it has increased the fund to $650 million, but as yet there is no evidence that the banks have increased the availability of this money to our farmers and small businesses which are on the verge of bankruptcy. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House directs the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism to report on the meeting federal officials were scheduled to have with the chartered banks earlier this week, and that he ensure on an ongoing basis the banks honour the commitment to process bond applications immediately in order to prevent any further foreclosures in the hard-pressed farming and small business industries.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HEALTH

SUPPORT FOR TREATMENT OF EPIDERMOLYSIS BULLOSA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, on December 1, officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare met with Mr. Pavel Kozak and encouraged him to continue his efforts to establish relations with Canadian physicians in his treatment of epidermolysis bullosa. In view of the fact that this acceptance brings Mr. Kozak's treatment one step closer to being made available to Canadians in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House recognize and support Mr. Kozak in his efforts to make this treatment for epidermolysis bullosa accessible to scores of Canadians who suffer from this disorder.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its agreement to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[Translation]

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

CONDEMNATION OF REFUSAL TO STAND FOR SINGING OF "O CANADA"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas more often than not, the words and actions of all politicians are analysed, dissected, and severely and sometimes unfairly criticized by some journalists who behave like bloodthirsty predators, I therefore move, seconded by the member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau):

That the House take this opportunity to repay these people in kind and censure those who cannot be bothered to rise and stand at attention as a sign of respect when the national anthem is sung, as was the case yesterday in this House, and as happens elsewhere on other occasions, in the hope that they will accept this as constructive criticism, just as a politician must accept criticism that is all too often unfair or unjustified.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

BOARDING OF CANADIAN VESSEL BY FRENCH NAVAL OFFICERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On December 1, David McTaggert, Canadian skipper of the Greenpeace III, a vessel of Canadian registry, was boarded in international waters by officers of a French warship as McTaggert was protesting further nuclear testing in the South Pacific. A similar incident occurred in 1973 at which time Mr. McTaggert was injured, removed from his vessel, and incarcerated by French authorities. The Government of Canada later offered Mr. McTaggert an ex gratia payment to espouse his cause.

I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

● (1410)

That once the allegation of boarding is confirmed, our government protest in the strongest possible terms this act of piracy on the high seas, condemn further nuclear testing by France in the South Pacific, and urge that that country become a signatory to a treaty banning further nuclear weapons testing, both atmospheric and underground.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REFORMS ON WORKERS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, certain reforms to the unemployment insurance program are being promoted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). Atlantic Canadians, and particularly the seasonally employed, would be especially hard hit, and there is little doubt that many of these people would end up on welfare as 40 per cent of the saving would come from that region. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this government be instructed to clean up its fiscal fiascos from within and not to take out its blundering ineptness on the backs of Atlantic Canadian workers by forcing them into the nation's growing line-ups to the soup kitchens.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

DEMAND FOR ACTION BY GOVERNMENT BACKBENCHERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal backbenchers in this House gave the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) a standing ovation after he presented his budget on November 12. The Liberal Party cheered him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: And what for? Taxing immigrants for sending help to their aged mothers in their homelands, destroying the hopes of farmers who want to sell their land and retire, killing incentive to invest and throwing hundreds of Canadians out of work—that's what for! Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House urges the Liberal backbenchers to stop being clones of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and start reflecting the wishes of their constituents and throw this budget into the—you know what.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

SUGGESTION MINISTER REFRAIN FROM ADVOCATING REMOVAL OF RENT CONTROLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the predictions of the minister responsible for housing that uncontrolled rents will double by the end of next year, his suggestions to provinces that the removal of rent controls would be viewed with favour by the federal government, and his recommendations to Canadian families that they make do with orange crates for furniture, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the minister responsible for housing conditions in this country refrain from calling on the provinces to remove the protection of rent controls, an action which would make basic shelter so expensive for many Canadian families that orange crates would become the only furniture that they could afford.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TOURISM

SUGGESTION MINISTER PURSUE NATIONAL POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) voted in favour of his government's constitutional resolution because he believed the national interest must prevail over regional or provincial interests. Yet this same minister is prepared to scuttle a national tourism policy, stating, "I have no intention of pursuing a national tourism plan without Quebec." I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House instructs the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism to work consistently in the national interest and, specifically, to pursue a national tourism policy with or without the support of any province or territory.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the budget affects Canadian taxpayers' cash flow, their insurance and retirement planning, their investment preferences, and places severe restrictions on the amount of retiring allowances available to the average Canadian worker that can be placed tax free into registered retirement savings plans for the future protection of their families, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the present budget be withdrawn.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1415)

RAILWAYS

HONOURING OF COMPANY PASSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter that is urgent and pressing. In view of the fact that the right to travel on company passes has been part of the wage and pension package of railway workers, and since the railway companies and VIA Rail no longer honour the passes of retired CN employees in western Canada on the sole remaining western transcontinental passenger train, which goes over CPR tracks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the Minister of Transport direct the railway companies to honour all passes on VIA trains and that the minister require Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to compensate VIA Rail fully for the cost of transporting their pass holders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

ADVICE TENDERED BY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I trust that the gathering of the clans in Scotland was more pleasant than the reception he received on his return to Canada. Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada has for some time been pressing to have the government adopt a tougher fiscal policy. We have a classic example of bad timing in this latest budget because the government is now increasing tax revenues by 31 per cent and Mr. Bouey is saying he is going to continue the high interest rate policy just as we are going into the deepest recession we have had in 30 years. Will the minister explain why, after years of ignoring Mr. Bouey, he has chosen to increase taxes by 31 per cent and push us more heavily into a recession and heavier job losses?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon.

member for mentioning the fact that I had an opportunity to visit in St. Andrew's, Scotland, and to celebrate St. Andrew's Day in that historic city. The welcome I received when I got back was as warm as the welcome I received in Scotland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has asked a very complex question about the budget strategy. It is all laid out in the budget speech. The hon. member knows that in an effort to reduce interest rates, and in an effort to counter inflation, I took some very substantial actions to reduce the deficit over the next year. If he will look at a recent speech made by his leader before the budget, that was the very prescription which he offered.

I am attempting in the budget to recognize that the underlying problem in the Canadian economy is high interest rates and high inflation. Until we get a better grip on both these problems and get further downward movement, then the prospect of resuming growth in the economy will be very bleak indeed. I ask the hon. member to take more than one or two months' outlook, to take a rather longer-term outlook and understand that the basic purpose of this budget is to restore the conditions for growth and job creation in the country.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, having been away from the House for six of the last eight days, the minister probably has not had a chance to get caught up on what is going on in this country. I want to ask him a question that is very pertinent. On Tuesday in this House, while he was away enjoying Scotland, the Prime Minister made the statement that this was a stimulative budget, that it was going to stimulate employment in this country. The minister has said quite clearly that it is a deflationary budget. Will he explain to the House who is right? Who is calling government policy? Is it a stimulative budget as the Prime Minister stated, or a deflationary budget as stated by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member must realize that he has been among the strongest critics of the rate of increase in government expenditures. He has used the incorrect figure that there is a more than 20 per cent increase in the rate—

Mr. Wilson: Twenty-two per cent.

Mr. MacEachen: He has used more than a 20 per cent rate of increase in annual expenditures. The rate is lower than that.

● (1420)

An hon. Member: It is your figure.

Mr. MacEachen: If we take the test of rate of growth used by the former minister of finance, it is quite considerably less.

Mr. Clark: But is it?

Mr. MacEachen: I would suggest if the hon. member were to look at the expenditure cutting that has taken place in the United States, for example, or if he were to take a look at the expenditure cutting that has taken place in the United Kingdom, then he would find that the comment of the Prime Minister is rather relevant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER CREATION OF JOB-PROMOTIONAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, that answer is straight out of the Highlands of Scotland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I think that the minister might have been taking a little too much of what was in the Highlands of Scotland when he was over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: The minister talks of restraint. The only restraint is on those in the private sector who are paying higher taxes, who are suffering under high interest rates and who have seen many of the job-promotional tax incentives removed by the budget. These are the taxes that are financing the 22 per cent increase in spending about which I have been talking. I challenge the minister in Committee of the Whole to debate that point with me.

Because this is a recessionary budget, what measures is the minister considering in order to offset the deflationary impact of the budget and to create some job-promotional programs which will face the very serious problem of recession in this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member again for giving me such a high compliment on my last answer by saying that it came straight from the Highlands of Scotland. That is a pretty good mark, as far as I am concerned.

Some hon. Members: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I cannot make up the hon. member's mind for him during question period. He has to make up his own mind.

Mr. Wilson: I have.

Mr. Clark: We have.

Mr. MacEachen: And the members of his party have to make up their minds and decide whether they want a policy that is geared now to winding down inflation—

An hon. Member: It is your policy we are after.

Mr. MacEachen: —and high interest rates. Do they want that? Or do you want a stimulative budget? Do you want to add massively to the deficit? Do you want to increase interest rates further and cause further stagnation in the economy?

The problem with the hon. member's questions, Madam Speaker, is that they arise from a total lack of any policy with respect to the current situation.

Mr. Clark: They quote the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacEachen: It is one day increase spending, and the next day it is reduce the deficit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSING

QUERY RESPECTING ADVICE TO BE GIVEN BY MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for housing. I can assure the Chair that it has to do with a situation for which the Minister of Finance is responsible, and that is the serious housing crisis in the country. Apart from the advice that he gave to young people in the Atlantic provinces to make do with orange crates for furniture and to lower their expectations to that which existed over two decades ago, and apart from the advice that he had for the provinces to reduce rent controls, may I ask the minister responsible for housing what advice does he have for Canadians who are facing a 20 per cent increase in housing costs, who are facing a 50 per cent decline in housing starts, and who are facing zero vacancy rates? What advice does he have for Canadians as they move into next year with the worst housing crisis in this country since the Second World War?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, yesterday I indicated that in the last week or so I had the opportunity to exchange views with the ministers of housing from the various provinces and with the Premier of Manitoba. In that exchange I had the opportunity of pointing out the details and provisions of the Canada mortgage renewal plan in the budget. I had the opportunity of working with the provincial ministers and getting their views on the budget provision to increase rental assistance through the rental stimulus program in the budget, and to explain to them how the $350 million allocated over the next two years in the budget would assist housing across the country.

● (1425)

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FROM MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, perhaps the minister would explain to the House what he meant when he advised the young people of the country to make do with orange crates as furniture and to lower their expectations. I think the House is entitled to an explanation from the minister responsible for housing, as are also the 80 families in the Mississauga-Toronto area who are being evicted by CMHC in order that the corporation may take advantage of the shortfall in the market which the minister and the corporation created. Perhaps he could explain that to us as well.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the last question first, I would be delighted to explain the point. I appreciate that in the former government the hon. member was responsible for another portfolio. It was not housing; I believe it was fisheries. With his responsibility to the House as critic for housing, he should have looked at the records and should understand that it was the government of which he was a member and that it was the minister of housing of that government, who sits two seats away from him today, who authorized the policy, the acquisition of the project, and the sale of those 80 units.

Mr. Blenkarn: But you are doing it.

* * *

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON HEALTH CARE SCHEMES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Having shared the low road with the opposition finance critic, I hope he will take the high road and answer my question. Last week I had the opportunity to question some of the minister's colleagues about the proposed cutbacks in federal transfer payments to the provinces.

The minister should be aware that changes in hospital policies were announced yesterday by the Ontario health minister, Dennis Timbrell. As a result of these changes there will be fewer and fewer beds available to those without private health insurance, thus foreshadowing the creation of a two-tier health care system in Ontario—one for the affluent and one for the poor. In our view this is but a bad foretaste of things to come in some other provinces. How does the minister square yesterday's announcement with the impression he likes to give that health care will not be adversely affected by the cutbacks proposed in the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no difficulty repeating what I have said in the House before, and what I have repeated before the finance ministers. Under the new proposals which I have made to the provinces, the expenditures or the transfers to the provinces will increase each year in phase with increases in federal expenditures.

Miss MacDonald: It is still a cutback.

Mr. MacEachen: I see no justification, on the basis of the projections which I have put forward, for a cutback in medicare or hospital insurance. If a province wants to take a step along those lines, it is the business of the province. But to blame it on the federal government is just an old political trick, to which the hon. member must have become accustomed over the years.

ACTION TAKEN BY PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the minister will have to think twice if he thinks the culpability of the federal government for the erosion of medicare will be forgotten in this corner of the House. In the budget paper of November 12 entitled "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties—Proposals of the Government of Canada", the minister expressed the intention of the government to clarify "basic principles or national standards for medicare". My question is simple. Does the Minister of Finance regard this latest step by Ontario, in which the use of user fees for hospital care is being greatly encouraged, as a step back from the standards he intends to negotiate with the provinces and, if so, what will he do about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should like to mention to the hon. member that in the proposals which I have put before the provinces it is intended that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will have discussions with the provinces with respect to program conditions over the next year. Also it is indicated in the same document that the Secretary of State will have discussions with the provinces with respect to post-secondary education. It will not be the Minister of Finance who will be responsible for discussions on program standards in the health field, or for the determination of national objectives in the field of post-secondary education. These matters will be dealt with by the program ministers.

● (1430)

NATIONAL MEDICARE STANDARDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the document to which I referred is part of the budget papers brought down by the Minister of Finance. I have a further question for the minister about the clarification and enforcement of national standards for health care in Canada.

Can the minister tell the House, and through the House tell all those Canadians who are rightly concerned about what they see as the erosion of medicare, whether he supports the position taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the elimination of extra billing by physicians should be made a requirement for full federal funding of medicare? If he does support this position, why is there no mention of extra billing or, for that matter, of any other concrete problem in the medicare system, such as user fees, as objectives in that section of the budget concerned with national standards for medicare?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the answer is fairly clear. There is no detailed outline of program standards because that particular subject matter will be discussed between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and her provincial counterparts. It will be her responsibility to lay out her proposals to them which, obviously, will be the proposals of the Government of Canada.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

TRANSFER OF INMATES FROM QUEBEC TO INSTITUTIONS IN OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. I would like to ask the minister whether it is a new policy of his department to make sure that inmates serving sentences in penitentiaries in Quebec will have more difficulties from now on receiving visits from their relatives? My question stems from the bad news released today to the effect that some inmates presently kept at the Ste-Anne-des-Plaines Penitentiary would be transferred to far away institutions in other provinces. What is the minister going to do to make sure that this does hot happen?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, we are moving toward full capacity in the maximum and medium institutions in the province of Quebec. This is the reason that I approved, and that the government approved, the construction of two new institutions in that province. I am aware of the policy that, in view of the overcrowding, some inmates should be moved from the province of Quebec to adjoining provinces. The criteria being used were brought to my attention for the first time this morning, and I must say that they seem unfair to me. I am looking them over and, if a more fair way can be found to decide which inmates should be moved, a more fair way will be followed.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR FORECAST OF WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. There are well over one million Canadians unemployed today. This figure upsets all the minister's forecasts for unemployment, and the budget is only making things worse. The minister is reported as having said recently that he must ignore the country's unemployed in order to continue his fight against inflation. I would say that is just heartless.

How long will the minister continue to ignore and condemn thousands of Canadians to a winter of unemployment before he changes his restrictive budget policies? Specifically, can the minister tell us what the jobless rate will be for this winter? does he have an estimate for the jobless rate this winter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be the last person in the House to suggest that I would ignore the plight of the unemployed, because I deeply believe that the creation of jobs and economic growth must be the long-term objective, and because I believe that the main obstacle to economic growth and job creation in the country at the present time is the high inflation rate. It is because of these considerations that I have established the policy contained in the budget. My objective is to create the conditions that will provide jobs in the country.

The estimate of unemployment for this year is laid out in the budget papers. I could get that statistic, but it is available to the hon. member in the budget papers.

Mr. Clark: It is already out of date.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the budget figure that the minister refers to is already out of date and he should know that, or he knows far less about the economy than even he professes. The figure in the budget papers is 7.2 per cent for this year and 7.8 per cent for next year, but unemployment is already running at 8.3 per cent. That is why I thought the minister had some new estimate. Perhaps he should stay at home more often and we could get these answers.

EFFECT OF TAX CHANGES CONTAINED IN BUDGET

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to pose another question to the minister which refers to the analysis of the budget made by the Canadian Council on Social Development. The Council says it is a budget which takes from the wealthy and gives to the rich, and points out that taxpayers in the $50,000 to $75,000 bracket will receive an additional gain of some $85 million this year, whereas homelessness and personal bankruptcy can be expected to rise as inflation continues to erode the already meagre purchasing power of single parents, the elderly, the disabled and working poor. I want to ask the minister why he has chosen to fight inflation on the backs of single parents, the elderly and the working poor, when he is prepared to give $85 million to those in higher income brackets.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has suggested that I ought to stay at home. I think the trick is to decide when to be away, and when to be at home. She has never learned that trick, because she was away at a rather crucial time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The word "trick" is operative. No one doubts your trickiness, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the tax increases—

Mr. Clark: Try another trick.

Mr. MacEachen: —that are taken into effect in the budget come mainly from high income earners in the country. We have provided tax decreases for a wide range of taxpayers. Less than one million taxpayers will have increased taxes and a large proportion of them will be in the high income brackets.

We have also restructured the federal tax credit in order to flow substantial benefits into the 1.5 millions low-income families in the country.

Mr. Clark: Try another trick.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the purpose of the budget, not the distorted account that the hon. member is giving in her question.

* * *

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

QUERY RESPECTING MEASURES TO PREVENT CLOSURE OF INDUSTRIES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Considering the minister's replies, it is clear that the situation during the next six or twelve months will probably be worse than it is today, and if I understood correctly, the minister has acknowledged that his budgetary measures can do nothing in the short or medium term to remedy the situation. The minister is also aware that thousands of companies and industries are shutting down, thus putting thousands of people out of work. I should like to ask the minister whether he has an estimate of the number of industries that are experiencing problems at the present time, and that will be obliged to shut down within the next six or twelve months, and if so, on the basis of his projections and estimates, what measures does he intend to introduce in order to prevent more industries from causing irreparable harm, as is the case at the present time?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the government is constantly assessing what measures might be taken to assist in the development of the economy. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has recounted, time and time again, the various steps which have been taken to assist affected industries. I would tell the hon. member that, when further new measures are developed, they will be announced in the usual way.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER NEW BUDGET WILL BE PRESENTED BEFORE CHRISTMAS RECESS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. It is clear the minister admits that his budget cannot meet the present needs of Canadians, including construction, homes and the needs of farmers. Estimates and critical reports to prove this have been received—as the minister is no doubt aware—from various sources. In the circumstances, to reassure the people of Canada who are bearing this burden and are anxious about the future, can the minister inform the House whether he intends to table a new budget before the holidays or at the beginning of next year, considering that his budget and budget policy have failed abysmally?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member obviously failed to notice in the budget a very substantial measure for housing in the country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —which will contribute to the construction of rental—

Mr. La Salle: Big farce, Mr. Minister!

Mr. MacEachen: —housing in Canada and will ensure that no Canadian home owner will lose a home because of high interest rates. As the hon. member noticed, that—

Mr. Clark: It is false.

Mr. MacEachen: —particular series of provisions affects housing. I could go on and add that, concerning agriculture, we have ensured, through the Farm Credit Corporation, a program which will substantially reduce—

Mr. La Salle: Fifty million! They need $500 million!

Mr. MacEachen: —the interest rate for farmers who are in financial difficulty. We have targeted that program in accordance with the requests of the Minister of Agriculture and others who were zealously concerned about ensuring that those farmers in financial difficulty would be protected.

Mr. Clark: It's your fault, Gene.

Mr. MacEachen: That is precisely what we have done in the agricultural sector.

* * *

INDUSTRY

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC.—SCOPE OF GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, deals with his announcement last week concerning an investigation of Industry, Trade and Commerce involvement with Consolidated Computer Incorporated of Ottawa. We now know, through the committee and the appearance of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that over the years the taxpayers of Canada took a record $125 million bath on the government's involvement in this high tech loser. I wonder whether the minister could explain to the House how he expects the people of Canada to believe, in view of the record of the secrecy and inept management of the government on this matter, that any kind of full accountability or full disclosure will result if the government investigation is limited to some sort of in-house navel gazing.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is not a case of in-house navel gazing. I think the ministers of the Treasury Board decided it would be their responsibility to conduct an investigation into the affairs of CCI to try to determine what led to the position in which the government now finds itself. I have said that I have no objection to having the results of that investigation made public, and there may be other avenues which should be explored. I understand that the other night, before the committee, there was some suggestion that another form of inquiry should be made. Perhaps the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee might look into it. We are all anxious to get at all the facts.

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL ASSIST IN INVESTIGATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): I am pleased to hear the response of the minister. I think he is aware that some very serious allegations have been made concerning the government's involvement in this company, such as cooking the books to disguise a growing debt during the—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rose: —the seventies and eighties. The federal government ended up paying a disproportionate share, compared to the government of Ontario, of the debt that this company built up over the last few years. Government actions over the last few years have been based on delay of disclosure rather than managerial logic. Since the minister suggested that the Public Accounts Committee might suggest a further or different kind of an investigation, would the minister support a Public Accounts Committee request or motion that the Auditor General's department, a body which is independent of the government, be asked to assist in the investigation of this shameful waste of taxpayers' money?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I would imagine that the Auditor General has been fully apprised of the circumstances of CCI and will undoubtedly be conducting his normal investigations as the Auditor General of Canada. I reject any suggestion of wrongdoing or anything else, for that matter, at this stage. I think this is a matter which merits investigation.

I appreciate the hon. member's concern. He may be concerned that this looks like it was conceived and managed by the policies of his party. That is not the case, either. We are trying to get at the facts, and we will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPLY TO ALLEGATION CONCERNING RENT CONTROL REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. On November 30, in a question directed to the Prime Minister, the Leader of the NDP alleged that the minister responsible for housing recently asked the new Manitoba government to abandon rent controls. I would like to ask the minister whether or not this allegation is true, or whether this is another example of opposition hyperbole and distortion.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, again, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to answer that question—

An hon. Member: I'll bet you are!

Mr. Cosgrove: —because, indeed, the allegation or statement by the Leader of the New Democratic Party was, at best, inaccurate. I would like to indicate to the House that I have met with Premier Pawley and with the other housing ministers, and we have discussed the initiatives in the federal budget. It was after that that Premier Pawley raised the question of rent controls because his government was contemplating introducing the same. However, I would say that, from his discussion of his program, he took into account not only the concerns of renters, but also the concern of renters when it comes to rehabilitation of buildings, the concerns of young people who are coming into rental accommodation, and concern about the dampening effect of any legislation. My impression was that the premier, taking all of those things into account, would come up with the kind of regulation or rent control from which I think all provinces might have something to learn.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT—TIMING OF DISTRIBUTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. On previous occasions he told us he was unaware of what was in the budget pertaining to housing until just before the budget was introduced, and that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation only worked on budget advertising after the minister became aware of budget provisions. How does he explain the fact that Graphic Artists Studio S&B, 400 St. Antoine Street West, Montreal, was given details of budget advertising from CMHC on the Monday before the budget? I have in my hand a Purolator slip showing that Studio S&B were the senders of the questionable ad, in this case to the Cobourg Daily Star for Vickers and Benson.

Will the minister confirm to the House that what actually happened was that the distribution of the advertising started at 6 p.m. the night of the budget, two hours before the budget was brought down? Will he tell us whether he misled the House, or whether his actions were due to total incompetence?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the brief answer is that no person was aware who was not authorized and under normal budgetary security—all employees or civil servants in the employ or control of the federal government, no person beyond those was aware—

Mr. Beatty: They were not civil servants.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Vickers or Mr. Benson?

Mr. Cosgrove: —or had in their possession the particulars of the ad which, I repeat, contained two things, an "attention" to home owners, and a phone number to call for particulars of the mortgage renewal plan.

QUERY RESPECTING PREPARATION OF ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): I realize that it would be unparliamentary to say that the minister was purposely misleading the House. However, I draw to his attention the fact that it was confirmed to me by Mr. Peter Crombie, Vice-President of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that what the minister has just said is not according to fact.

I would ask the minister whether he is prepared to change the version of the story he has just told us, and whether he is prepared to admit to this House the fact that CMHC obtained details from the Department of Finance on the Monday before the budget, perhaps not all of them, but some which were in the budget pertaining to housing; that they gave this material immediately to Studio S&B in Montreal, where four or five employees of that particular organization were fully aware of budget provisions three days in advance, and subsequently, during that time, drew up the advertisement in question. Certainly he is incorrect in telling the House that the ad was only started after he heard what was in the budget during budget afternoon.

Will the minister admit that he has misinformed this House? If he has, will he resign and get out for someone who is competent?

Mr. Paproski: Just tell the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: Stand clean.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will stand by my previous answer today and on other occasions in this House. I would say to the hon. gentleman that the employee he is referring to, Mr. Crombie, was in a lockup prior to the budget and he was there until the normal time when the media and all authorized people in that lockup were released.

* * *

● (1450)

AGRICULTURE

MINISTER'S SUPPORT FOR BUDGET

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. With the continuing deterioration of economic conditions for farmers across Canada, and with the net negative impact of the budget on agriculture, Canadian farmers are asking and wondering what the Minister of Agriculture has been doing for the last two years of Liberal government. The Minister of Agriculture has been hanging over both sides of the farm gate for some time on this issue and I think it is time to take a position. I would like to ask him whether at this time he supports the government's budget and, second, will he bring forward to the House the details, in general or in specifics, of the program he says he has in his back pocket now? When can farmers expect effective leadership from this minister and this government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that the farmers who have taken advantage of the government's programs which have been presented by this government and this minister are not the ones he is talking about. The ones he is talking about are the ones whose leaders refused to enter into those programs, that is, those producers who are in dire straits at the present time and in need of help. There has been help provided in the budget for these farmers. Under the Small Business Development Bond, unincorporated farmers can borrow. There is no limitation on the amount of money banks can lend under that program.

Having regard to the other program he refers to on marketing, he knows full well that the leadership provided in his own area through the Ontario Cattlemen's Association, associated with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, have a plan they want to discuss with their national organization before they present it to me. I think it is only fair that the one I have should wait until I see what they are going to present to me. We cannot continue to wait forever, and I agree with the hon. member on that. If they do not present something to us pretty soon we will present our plan to the hon. member and to everyone else who wants to see it.

The House of Commons committee on agriculture has asked that we have a meeting in camera. We are considering at the present time whether that could be within the rules and regulations by which the committee is bound. We want to decide whether we can do that kind of thing in a committee of the House of Commons. The members of that committee could look at the situation to see what they think of it, and perhaps make improvements, recommendations, etc., and I am willing to listen to them at any time.

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATE PAYMENTS MADE BY FARMERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Canadian farmers know that before the budget the Minister of Agriculture left the impression in the agricultural community that he would resign if there was not any assistance forthcoming to farmers in the November 12 budget.

The Minister of Finance, in a previous answer to a question asked by my colleague from Quebec, mentioned that the budget reduced substantially the interest payments made by farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation. The minister should know that the reduction amounts to an average of $15 per farmer at a time when interest is amounting to about $7,000 on average. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is satisfied with that figure. If he is not satisfied but remains in the cabinet and does not resign, he is then saying by implication that $15 per farmer in terms of assistance through the Farm Credit Corporation, which the Minister of Finance says is substantial, is satisfactory and he is happy with that. We know the minister is trying, but surely we can expect better results than $15 per farmer.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, this all depends on how the hon. member figured out the $15 per farmer. Those farmers will be able to obtain those loans at an interest rate of 11.75 per cent. They will be in a position to have a moratorium, if necessary, on those loans, etc., and that type of thing. In addition, hon. members always forget about how much money has been given to farmers interest free. Under the Wheat Board through advanced grain payments, the farmers have already received over $200 million interest free, and through advanced payments on other crops they will receive $136 million interest free. When they say we are doing nothing they are trying to get across the wrong impression. This government is doing more than any other government in all the world, in any free society that I can think of, for agricultural producers, and we have some of the best programs of all.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—CANADIAN POSITION ON POSSIBILITY OF NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT OF INTERNAL CONFLICT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because time is passing very rapidly and the proposed election in El Salvador is coming closer each day, I understand the minister will soon meet with a representative of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, which I would say is the opposition in El Salvador. If that is true, will the minister please explain to the House what expectations he has for the possibility of a negotiated settlement in El Salvador at this meeting, and at the same time will he please explain what amendments he would like to see in the resolution now before the United Nations so that he could support that resolution?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman asks a number of questions. I am not sure I can answer them all very fully in one reply. I would say that we are hopeful we will have a reply from the El Salvador government to our démarche within a comparatively few days because, of course, we have suggested a process of meeting between the government and the FDR in El Salvador, and I have agreed to see representatives of the FDR at their request to discuss our démarche.

With respect to the vote in the United Nations, which I understand will take place this afternoon, the sponsors have shown themselves unwilling to accept any amendments. I do not anticipate that any will be made, and I do not anticipate that we will, therefore, support the motion.

FUTURE CANADIAN ACTION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I would just like to ask again what the minister would have wanted in an amendment that he could have supported and, second, will he be willing to work with those people who do support an amendment so that negotiations of some kind will occur?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, one of the most serious problems with the motion as it is presently posed is that it interferes with the domestic affairs of El Salvador. I can assure the hon. member, as I would assure hon. members at any time, that we will certainly be prepared to work with any parties in the search for peace in any part of the world.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CMHC ADVERTISEMENT—REPORTED STATEMENT MADE BY CORPORATION VICE-PRESIDENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary and it is to the minister responsible for housing. The minister will know that Mr. Peter Crombie, the vice-president of CMHC, has told a member of this House of Commons that four or five people from a printing house in Montreal called S&B, were called in by the government before the budget and given information which subsequently appeared in the budget. I wonder if the minister will either confirm or deny that what Mr. Crombie said was the case?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, from past experience regarding simple suggestions of conversations of members opposite with employees of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation or other people about protestations or allegations, I have found that at times they are less than factual, and I would be very reluctant to respond to such a question without having the particulars of it and having an opportunity of talking with those officers.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister earlier said categorically that only public servants had been involved in the reading or in the exposure of this budget information before the budget presentation. He said that categorically in this House. Now he is admitting he is not sure because he wants to check to see whether the four or five individuals from S&B were involved. Will the minister undertake to inquire today whether or not Mr. Peter Crombie made this statement that there were four or five representatives of S&B, not public servants, who were involved? Will he inquire whether those four or five people were sworn to secrecy, as outsiders were sworn to secrecy in the Walter Gordon budget, and will he then report to the House of Commons. And if, in fact, there was information made available to people who were not public servants, information which subsequently became part of the budget, will the minister agree to conduct a full parliamentary inquiry into all aspects of this matter?

• (1500)

An hon. Member: Let the truth come out.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the answer is no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—REPLY OF MR. COSGROVE ALLEGED MISLEADING

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): A question of privilege, Madam Speaker. From the statements which this House has just heard, I have no alternative but to say that the minister has deliberately misled this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I must ask the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) to withdraw those words. As he knows, they are not accepted as parliamentary expressions and cannot be used lightly. I will ask the hon. member to withdraw those words.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to withdraw the words if the minister would agree to have this matter referred to a committee—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Cossitt: —for a full investigation. If he is not afraid, if he has nothing to hide, then he will agree to do this. If he has something to hide, he will not agree. If he has nothing to hide he will stand up now and agree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. However justified the complaint of the hon. member may be, the withdrawal of unparliamentary language must be unconditional. I think the hon. member will know that these are the rules by which we govern ourselves and I am sure he would be the first one to want to abide by those rules. So I would ask him not to put any condition on the withdrawal but to simply withdraw those words.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, with due respect to the Chair, I do not feel that I can go back on what I know to be the truth, having heard it from the vice-president of CMHC and others. Having sufficient evidence, I cannot stand up and say I was wrong in what I said, because if I believe in what I said I have to stand behind it.

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member who just made an argument ought to know that it has nothing to do with whether he was wrong or not wrong. These questions are debatable in the House. What is not acceptable are the unparliamentary words he used. What the hon. member has to do, and I am asking him to do this unconditionally and he knows the conditions under which I ask him to do this—is to withdraw the unparliamentary words he has just pronounced in the House. He does not have to say another member was right or that he did well or approved of his conduct. I am sure it was a slip of the tongue and the hon. member will want to withdraw those words.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I wish I could honestly say that it was a slip of the tongue, but I have to honestly say that it was not. I would be telling less than the truth if I contradicted myself in that regard. I do not feel, in view of all the things which have been said during the preceding week or two, both in the House and by the minister about what I said when he went to a fund-raising dinner in Toronto. I know the facts to be as they are. I cannot say otherwise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Do I take it that the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville does not want to withdraw the unparliamentary words he has pronounced in the House?

Mr. Cossitt: I can only say, Madam Speaker, that I feel I must let my words stand.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Madam Speaker: Then it is with great regret that I have to name the hon. member.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in the circumstances, I regret that I must move that the member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of today's sitting.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Moved by Mr. Pinard, seconded by Mr. MacGuigan, that the member for Leeds-Grenville be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of today's sitting.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard), which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1510)

(Division No. 134)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand	Burghardt	Cullen
Appolloni	Bussières	Daudlin
(Mrs.)	Caccia	Dawson
Axworthy	Campbell	Deans
Bachand	(Miss)	De Bané
Baker	(South West Nova)	de Corneille
(Gander-Twillinga	Campbell	Demers
Beauchamp-Niquet	(LaSalle)	Desmarais
(Mrs.)	Campbell	Dingwall
Bégin (Miss)	(Cardigan)	Dion
Benjamin	Chénier	Dionne
Blackburn	Chrétien	(Northumberland-
Blaikie	Collenette	Miramichi)
Blais	Corbin	Dubois
Bloomfield	Corriveau	Dupont
Bockstael	Cosgrove	Duquet
Breau	Côté (Mrs.)	Erola (Mrs.)
Bujold	Cousineau	Evans

Messrs.

Ferguson	Lapointe (Beauce)	Pepin
Fisher	LeBlanc	Peterson
Fleming	Lefebvre	Pinard
Flis	Lewycky	Portelance
Fox	Lonsdale	Prud'homme
Garant	Lumley	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Gauthier	MacBain	Roberts
Gendron	MacEachen	Robinson (Burnaby)
Gimaïel	MacGuigan	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Gingras	Mackasey	Rompkey
Guilbault	MacLaren	Rooney
Harquail	MacLellan	Rose
Heap	Maltais	Rossi
Henderson	Manly	Roy
Herbert	Marceau	Savard
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Massé	Schroder
Hopkins	Masters	Simmons
Hudecki	McCauley	Skelly
Johnston	McRae	Smith
Kaplan	Miller	Tardif
Keeper	Mitchell (Mrs.)	Tessier
Kelly	Munro (Hamilton East)	Tousignant
Killens (Mrs.)	Nystrom	Trudeau
Kristiansen	Ogle	Turner
Lachance	Ostiguy	Veillette
Lajoie	Ouellet	Watson
Lalonde	Parent	Weatherhead
Lang	Pelletier	Whelan
Laniel	Penner	Yanakis
Lapointe (Charlevoix)		Young—134.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre	Gass	McGrath
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Gilchrist	McKenzie
Beatty	Greenaway	McKinnon
Blenkarn	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	McKnight
Bosley	Hargrave	McLean
Bradley	Hawkes	McMillan
Cardiff	Hnatyshyn	Mitges
Carney (Miss)	Howie	Murta
Clark (Yellowhead)	Huntington	Neil
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Jarvis	Nielsen
Cook	Jelinek	Oberle
Corbett	Kempling	Paproski
Crombie	King	Patterson
Crosby (Halifax West)	Korchinski	Reid (St. Catharines)
Crouse	Kushner	Schellenberger
Darling	Lambert	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Domm	La Salle	Siddon
Ellis	Lewis	Speyer
Elzinga	MacDonald (Miss)	Stevens
Fennell	MacKay	Taylor
Forrestall	Mayer	Thomson
Friesen	McCain	Towers
Gamble	McCuish	Wise
	McDermid	Wright—71.

● (1540)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

And Mr. Cossitt having withdrawn:

Privilege—Mr. MacKay

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I ask the government House leader to confirm the business for next week, assuming that tomorrow's allotted day has not changed.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact, today we will deal with Bill C-48. We hope to give it third reading. Tomorrow will be effectively an allotted day.

[Translation]

Regarding the business of the House for next week, Monday and Tuesday will be reserved for the budget, and the debate should be completed by Tuesday evening. Next Wednesday the House will consider Bill C-78, assuming that Bill C-48 will have been passed. Next Thursday will be the last opposition day of this supply period. Finally, next Friday I hope we shall be able to obtain the unanimous consent of the House to deal very quickly with Bill S-23 which has been passed by the Senate and concerns the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKAY—REPLY OF MR. COSGROVE RESPECTING EVICTION OF FAMILIES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise on a brief question of privilege which also involves the minister of housing. I should like to read a very brief portion of the question which the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) asked today. He said that he thought the House was entitled to an explanation for the evictions from the minister responsible for housing.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Might I ask the hon. member to let me know what is the question of privilege and, after that, he might read something in support of his question of privilege. But I should like to know from the outset what is his question of privilege.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, the minister has left a very misleading and inaccurate impression with the House of Commons and its members with respect to the facts which existed when he referred to conditions mentioned by the hon. member for St. John's East. I will be very brief, but I wish to set it out, if I may.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: The fact that the hon. member is not satisfied with an answer given by an hon. member does not constitute the basis of a question of privilege. The hon. member stated quite clearly that that was the basis of his question of privilege. I suppose he is now preparing to give me the facts with which he does not agree. Obviously that is debate and not a question of privilege. Unless the hon. member has other things to tell me—and he has not told me in the first instance that there was foundation for a question of privilege—I will not be able to hear him.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, with all respect, I do not wish to be inflammatory but I regard it as a matter of personal privilege. Because what the minister said was not in accordance with the facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: I must have a moment to set this out; otherwise I cannot develop my question of privilege. Basically the minister said that myself, as former minister of housing, and our government were responsible for the eviction of the 80 families who were referred to earlier. The question my colleague asked was very simple. It is true, as the minister said, that we on this side of the House were responsible for the policies which he attributed to us, but certainly not for the eviction. This is stretching the truth—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is quite obviously debating. This is not a question of privilege. I understand that he might fully disagree with the minister and would like to debate the question, but this is not the time for it. There are other occasions in the House when he can debate such matters. I ask him to do it at that time. The hon. member does not have a question of privilege; I regret that I cannot accede to his request.

* * *

● (1550)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I should like to return for a moment to House business. We were interrupted by the question of privilege. I want to ask the government House leader and the House leader for the official opposition if it might be possible to schedule a meeting for next week in order to project what the House business will be between now and a point around December 18 to December 22.

I suggest to the government House leader that we did have certain pieces of legislation that we thought would be dealt with earlier but that have not yet been dealt with. It might be useful if we could get an idea of exactly what the government wants to go through the House before the Christmas break, regardless of how long that is.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall be pleased, as usual, to speak with my colleagues. It will be much easier to plan business for the following week when we have completed certain bills that have been under study for quite a long time. I intend to meet with my colleagues next week or, if necessary, before that, to plan even further.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a question on House business that I should like to direct to the President of the Privy Council. As he knows, for some time the government has been promising to bring forward Bill C-53 for second reading in this House. This legislation is long overdue and as the minister and the House know, it would redefine rape as a violent assault instead of a crime of passion. I should like to reaffirm the intention of this party to allow the bill to be referred to committee with no further speakers from this party in order that it may be considered and we may deal with the necessary amendments.

Is the President of the Privy Council prepared to bring this bill forward at the earliest possible opportunity in order that we may consider this badly needed legislation which was promised in the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I said before, this bill is very important and we would like to send it to committee provided we can come to an agreement among all the parties. We are certainly prepared to send the bill to committee without any speaker at second reading stage, if that is the desire of the hon. member. Another party is involved, however, and I would be prepared to talk with that party in due time to see if it is ready to accept the offer made by the hon. member.

I have already stated what the business is to be for the remainder of this week and the whole of next week. Perhaps we could bring that bill in next Friday afternoon, if we get Bill S-23 through of which I spoke earlier. It may then not be necessary to call Bill C-53 next week if we agree before hand to send it to committee without further speakers. This party is prepared to let the bill to go to committee without any additional speakers.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, certainly we will await with interest the response of the other party on this side to that offer, which I readily accept. Another matter which was promised in the Speech from the Throne and on which I would like to get some clarification as to the government's timing on it was the transfer of the offence of possession of cannabis from the Narcotics Control Act to the Food and Drug Act. The government has promised for some time to make this long overdue legislative change. I would ask the President of the Privy Council to indicate where this matter stands on the parliamentary timetable.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will be glad to consult with the Minister of Justice and report to the hon. member, before Christmas, I hope.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there is a purpose in having House leaders for the parties. The chief purpose of that arrangement is for members to work through their House leaders. I suggest that the hon. member, who in my view has been grandstanding, should work through his House leader, who made a very sensible suggestion today with respect to holding a House leaders' meeting at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of discussing the very thing that was the subject matter of the exchange between the hon. member for Burnaby and the government House leader.

This kind of exchange between the hon. member, who is not his party's House leader, and the government House leader will add nothing to the harmony of the forthcoming House leaders' meetings. I can give an undertaking for this party that members will not undercut me and go directly to the government House leader. I would hope that the same kind of co-operative discipline could be encouraged in the NDP. Let us do our job in a very calm and sensible fashion, rather than try to make political points through exchanges such as that which just occurred.

If exchanges such as this one are to become an established practice, there is no way that I can ask my own members not to follow the same course of conduct. I am sure that all hon. members would agree it would not be conducive to the most efficient carriage of business in this House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, it is always such a pleasure to hear from the official opposition's House leader. I should like to suggest, however, that he look after his business and I will look after mine.

I am quite satisfied that when one of my colleagues asks me if it would be proper for him to raise a matter, I have the authority to say yes or no, which I did. I shall continue to do that. If the House leader for the official opposition would like some lessons, I am available after six.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, through you, that I will have nothing to do with his business.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, it is painfully obvious that it takes two of the NDP to do the job of one for any other party.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FRIESEN—CIVILIAN INTERNMENT CAMPS—AVAILABILITY OF TRANSLATED DOCUMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I am a member of a minority group that remembers very well the way we were treated in World War II. That is why I am concerned about the cabinet document published on June 10 regarding civilian internment camps. It is for that reason that I put down a motion for the production of papers regarding that document. I am now told by one of the officials of the House that it will be months before the papers that will be necessary to debate that document will be translated. It was my impression that the facilities of this chamber are supposed to be bilingual. This is an emergency security document. I was under the impression that the document would be translated relatively simultaneously to its production and that we would therefore be able to debate the matter in the House.

Point of Order—Mr. Friesen

I should like to ask the government House leader whether it is going to be months before this document can be translated and when we will be able to debate that motion in the House. I am very concerned about the issue and I know that other hon. members are also concerned about the matter of civilian internment camps, in spite of the fact that we now have a so-called Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not know what documents the hon. member is referring to when he says that certain documents have yet to be translated, but as minister responsible for emergency measures planning, I can confirm that there is an order in council which has been published and which only contains instructions for departments, on how to plan for and cope with emergency situations, and these instructions cannot be implemented without an act of Parliament, which would be subject to a complete debate. So, if the hon. member is referring to an order in council, it has been published, and if he is afraid the order in council goes against civil rights and liberties, in that case it is a little early for him to entertain this fear, because the provisions will not become effective until a bill is debated in the House and receives complete and final approval. However, I can confirm that there are no plans to do so in the short term. So if that is what is causing his concern, there is absolutely nothing, to my knowledge, that justifies the anxieties of the hon. member. But in any case, I shall find out exactly to what document he is referring, and if there is a case for speeding up its translation, I shall be glad to take appropriate action.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, if the government House leader will check order in council 1305, an emergency planning order which calls for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to have authority to establish civilian internment camps, it is significant to note that the new document makes no mention of the RCMP or any other police force that would be used to authorize or to establish those internment camps. The order is supposedly a rewriting of the document of 1965, when the RCMP were used as the administrators of those camps.

I am concerned about this order. I wish to be able to debate it in the House. We are being stalled by the government because of its translation services. I would like to have an assurance from the government House leader that these documents will be translated forthwith so that we can debate that motion on the floor of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I must answer here, because it seems to me the hon. member is a little confused. He says he is concerned about the order in council, because in one part of the order, instructions are given to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) for making certain arrangements and plans in the event of emergency situations. Once more, if the hon. member reads the entire order in council, which has been translated, is available and has been published, and which to my knowledge is the only document that deals with emergency planning, he will see that certain instructions are given to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) for planning and making preparations for assisting those who will need medical care in the case of a major disaster or crisis in this country. Such plans will become effective only if an act of Parliament is debated, and the hon. member will then have the debate he desires in the House, but he will have it only if we agree to introduce a bill. For the time being, we have no intention, in the short term, of introducing a bill to implement the plans contained in the order in council. If the hon. member wants to have a debate on emergency planning before the government decides to introduce a bill, I must remind him that there are opposition days when he may enter a private member's bill in his name on the Order Paper, and it will be debated in due course. But as far as the government is concerned, we do not intend to introduce a bill on emergency planning during this session. Furthermore, the order in council to which the hon. member is referring has no enabling authority. These are only instructions to ministers and respective departments, on planning in the event of a national emergency, whether it concerns the Solicitor General, public health, energy or any other area. This is what is known as sound planning. So I really wonder what the hon. member is complaining about. If there are other papers to which he is referring that have not been translated, I should appreciate it if he would give me a more specific reference, and I shall make arrangements to have them translated.

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, just on the same point of order, there is quite a high degree of concern on the issue of Privy Council Order 1305 which was gazetted, I think, on May 21 of this year. It comes under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, I believe. I am wondering why that vehicle has been used to put the nation on notice that the RCMP have been removed as the operators of civilian internment camps. There is a high degree of concern about this in the country at large. Also, why has the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) been given new powers to rearrange prison populations to make room for civilian internees?

Also, I have not been able to get to the bottom of the confusion regarding this order in that outside the body of the text for the Solicitor General, "in the event of war" is contained in the heading. There is, again, some confusion in that under the new charter of rights, the War Measures Act and emergency planning powers are broadened, and a court, on black and white definition, could say, "Yes, you may invoke your existing emergency planning orders", and away you would go.

On the other hand, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has given a very deliberate and solid address on this issue that we have in our files. He has pointed out that even in the event of an emergency, without the legislation he is talking about, these planning orders would be invoked. Therefore, it would be of great assistance to many people in Canada at large and to some of us in the House if he could clarify just where this Privy Council Order 1305 stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I must reply regarding the hon. member's last statement. It is incorrect to say that this order in council will be implemented without a bill being passed. For the order in council to become effective, it is absolutely essential to have a bill or to have a debate in this Parliament pursuant to an existing act.

As the minister responsible for emergency planning, I can assure him that is true. The order in council is not brand new. It was substituted for a previous one, because it was felt that emergency planning should be adapted to present-day realities. Once more, these are instructions given to ministers to plan for emergency situations, so that all Canadians in all regions, at the federal level, will be better prepared in the event of a natural or man-made disaster or of civilian action prior to a war.

But, once more, and I want to make this quite clear, the order in council will not be implemented unless there is an act of Parliament following debate in this House. I hope I have been able to dispel any doubts in this respect. And as for its compatibility with the Charter of Rights, since the hon. member raised the question, I would like to say once again that these powers—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! Really, we are involved in a debate on an order in council! The hon. member asked a question about papers which, according to him, had not been translated, which fact prevented him from functioning in committee. The President of the Privy Council has answered that question. It seems to me that since then, there has been a debate on the merits of an order in council, and that a point of order or privilege is no longer involved. That being the case, I think enough has been said on the subject.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in a sense, this is a new point of order because of the comments made by the government House leader who, indeed, is the minister responsible for emergency planning. I speak in the capacity of a member of the Senate and House of Commons Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which had the opportunity of reviewing this very unusual order, an order that came not by virtue of any legislation, but rather by the royal prerogative indigenous to government.

My colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), quite rightly points out the essence of his complaint, and one in which I join as a member of that committee and of this House of Commons, that this very unusual order which has been proclaimed by the government imposes sanctions against any public servant who refuses to carry out the instructions.

The point I am making is that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), in addressing the joint federal-provincial ministers with respect to emergency planning, indicated in his speech, which I can show to him, that there will be no alternative for the government in the event of an emergency but to act extra-legally, that is, outside of the law, if—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is not raising a point of order. He is debating the question again. This is not the time to debate that particular question. I cannot accept it under a point of order. There is no point of order that I can see. The hon. member has been speaking for three or four minutes and he has not raised a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: May I explain my point of order in just one sentence?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My point of order is that this is a highly unusual matter, and it is absolutely essential, considering its urgency, to have the document put before this House and the return presented. That is to say, I think there should be an undertaking by the President of the Privy Council, who misrepresented the position he took last summer, that the document will be provided immediately.

• (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague from the Saskatchewan Small Claims Court is entirely mistaken. He is misinterpreting statements I have made. In any case, I have clarified them if that is how he understood some of the statements I made at the federal-provincial conference. I made it quite clear that the order in council cannot become effective unless a bill is debated in Parliament in this regard.

Madam Speaker: That has already been said. Really, this is just further debate. Here we go again. I just said there was no point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House on behalf of the Ad Hoc Committee of Canadian Women on the Constitution signed by many Canadian men and women urging the removal of Section 33 of the constitutional resolution, which was passed by this House last night, which would allow an explicit override of the fundamental freedoms, legal rights and equality rights in the Constitution. I can only hope that perhaps those members of the other place might have another look at this provision and delete this section, which so effectively guts the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I thank the Chair for recognizing the Leader of the Opposition to present a petition. I have the duty to present three petitions today on behalf of the residents of communities in Ontario.

The purpose of these petitions, signed in one case by 32 concerned Canadians from Welland, Ontario, in another case by another 31 citizens of Welland, Ontario, and in another case by some 130 citizens from Stoney Creek, Ontario, is to indicate to the government that the mortgage interest crisis that is forcing them out of their homes and into dire straits is continuing unabated despite the Liberal budget.

The nature of the petitions is to demand that the government lower interest rates and provide for deductibility of mortgage interest.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that as a result of the urgency of their request you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow for discussion of their concerns.

MR. McMILLAN—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by members of the recently formed Prince Edward Island Home Owners' Association based in my riding of Hillsborough.

The petition laments that current high mortgage interest rates have placed home ownership beyond the reach of most Canadians. It notes that many Canadians faced with the renewal of mortgages at interest rates substantially higher than before risk losing their homes because they cannot afford the new payments. Specifically, the petitioners call upon Parliament to take all necessary measures to lower mortgage interest rates immediately to a level that will effectively deal with Canada's housing crisis.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the petition includes a plea for help for those individuals and families who had to renew their mortgages in the last year when interest rates were at their peak.

I share the views of the P.E.I. Home Owners' Association, and it is on that basis that I beg leave to table this petition in the House on their behalf.

MR. SKELLY—REIMBURSEMENT OF OWNERS OF HOMES WITH UFFI

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I also have the pleasure of presenting a petition signed by several hundred home owners in the community of Powell River, British Columbia, who are currently suffering from health and financial problems associated with urea formaldehyde insulation in their homes. They present a request to the government to aid them financially to rid their homes of this material, and seek aid with testing and health information from the government.

* * *

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra) moved that the eleventh report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House on Monday, November 23, 1981, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,640, 3,175, 3,265 and 3,305.

[Text]

SETTLEMENT OF NATIVE LAND ENTITLEMENTS

Question No. 2,640—Mr. Anguish:

1. Did the government retain or is it retaining the services of the hon. member for Verchères in the settlement of native land entitlement claims and, if so (a) what is/was his role and title (b) what are/were his responsibilities (c) in what manner, under what authority and on what date was he appointed (d) does he receive remuneration for his work and, if so, in what amount (e) does he receive expense money for his work and, if so, what amount did he receive?

2. Did the member meet with groups to discuss the claims and, if so, which groups and what was the date and location of each meeting?

3. Was the member permitted extra staff entitlement for his work and, if so, under what budget and how many persons were involved?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) The hon. member for Verchères was named special representative for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for Saskatchewan Land Entitlements.

(b) He co-ordinates and negotiates the resolution of Saskatchewan Land Entitlements.

(c) Initial appointment by P.C. 1980—3282 of 4 December 1980, effective October 1, 1980—March 31, 1981. Appointment confirmed by P.C. 1981—1180 of 7 May, 1981, effective April 1, 1981—March 31, 1982.

(d) No.

(e) Mr. Loiselle's travelling expenses in relation to Saskatchewan Land Entitlement amounted to $3,068 in 1980-81. No travelling expenses have been paid in 1981-82.

2. Yes. While parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, between March 4, 1980 and September 30, 1980, the following meetings took place:

Federation of Saskatchewan Indians
July 24-25, 1980; Saskatoon, Sask.
Peter Ballantyne Band
Sask.
The Hon. Ted Bowerman
Sask.

After his appointment as special representative, he met with the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians December 14-16, 1980, Regina, Sask. Numerous other meetings were held in Ottawa during 1981 with F.S.I. representatives and entitlement Bands, as well as representatives of other government departments.

3. Departmental staff have supported Mr. Loiselle in carrying out his responsibilities.

MR. TIM PORTEOUS

Question No. 3,175—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,761 which stated in part that Mr. Tim Porteous was never an employee of the Public Service, what is a complete list of all the positions he held with any government agency, council, office or any other government body?

2. Does the government, when answering questions on the Order Paper, interpret the words Public Service as literally as possible or does it realize that this term is often used to cover employment of any kind paid for from public funds, by exempt staff, or by Crown corporations?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Canada Council advises as follows:

1966-68 executive assistant to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

1968-73 special assistant and executive assistant to the Prime Minister.

1973 to now associate director of the Canada Council.

2. Ministers' staffs are not employees of the Public Service. Please refer to the Public Service Employment Act.

STATISTICS ON WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Question No. 3,265—Mr. Nickerson:

1. Does Statistics Canada, for the purpose of compiling statistics on weekly newspapers within a certain geographic region, select one newspaper as being representative of those published within that region and does it require the newspaper to provide more detailed information than others in the region?

2. Has the Slave River Journal of Fort Smith, Northwest Territories been for several years the designated representative newspaper for the Northwest Territories or any part thereof?

3. If a newspaper objects to being the designated representative newspaper in a region for what it regards as more than its fair share of time because of the additional paper burden placed upon it, can it take steps so that it no longer retains this honour and, if so, what are the steps?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. Statistics Canada for the purpose of compiling statistics on weekly newspapers for a province or territory does not select only one newspaper as being representative of that region. Neither does Statistics Canada require a newspaper to provide more detailed information than others that are in the same size stratum.

2. The Slave River Journal at Fort Smith, Northwest Territories, has been part of a systematic sample of newspapers reporting to Statistics Canada but is not the only newspaper for the Northwest Territories included in the sample.

3. Businesses are required to respond to surveys collected under the Statistics Act. However, small businesses, such as the Slave River Journal, wishing to be exempted from the burden of completing the annual census of manufactures may do so by facilitating access to data already supplied to Revenue Canada by providing Statistics Canada with the necessary identification tax numbers.

In the case of the inventory, shipments and orders survey, the sample is revised annually in accordance with the theoretical requirements of a stratified systematic random sample. The Slave River Journal, which for a number of years was part of the survey was not selected for the revised sample for 1982. But it is quite possible it will be reactivated on the next update cycle. In the case of sample surveys no exemptions can be granted.

COLLECTION OF DEBTS

Question No. 3,305—Mr. Rae:

1. Were separate contracts worth $3,600,000 awarded to Associated Credit Bureaus of Canada, Toronto and Canadian Bonded Credits Ltd., Don Mills?

2. Were the contracts tendered and (a) if so, what were the competing bids (b) if not (i) for what reason (ii) on what basis were the companies chosen?

3. (a) Who were the principal officers or owners of the companies (b) what services were required under the contracts?

Order Paper Questions

4. (a) What kind of debts will be collected by the companies and from how many persons or companies (b) what amount is expected to be collected (c) what control will be exercised by the government over the tactics used by the companies?

5. Is it the usual practice for the government to contract out work to collection agencies and, if so, for what reason are public employees not used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned, 1. The following contracts were awarded:

Value	Name of Contractor
$ 4,800,000	FCA International Ltd.
3,600,000	Canadian Bonded Credits Limited
3,600,000	Associated Credit Bureaus of Canada

2. (a) Yes. Requests for proposals were invited from all firms (21) who had expressed an interest in this program. Bids were received from FCA International Ltd., Canadian Bonded Credits Limited, and Associates Credit Bureaus of Canada;

(b) (i) N/A;

(ii) The bids were evaluated by a joint DSS/Secretary of State committee utilizing predetermined evaluation criteria. The three bids were considered to be responsive and contracts for a portion of the business were awarded to each of the three firms.

3. (a) The principal officers are:

	Name	Title
FCA International Ltd.	Mr. J. D. Lubotta	President
	Mr. G. R. Stephens	Executive Vice-President
Canadian Bonded Credits	Mr. A. Levitt	President
	Mrs. Ann Ruth Levitt	Director
	Mr. R. Watters	Director
Associated Credit	Mr. K. Belgrave	Vice-President and General Manager
Bureaus of Canada	Mr. D. Emberly	Chairman of the Board

(b) The firms are to provide collection agency services with regard to defaulted student loan accounts, including the tracing of delinquent borrowers.

4. (a) The firms will collect outstanding student loans. From 1964 to June 30, 1980, some 85,000 students had defaulted on their loans for a total of $156.3 million.

(b) Approximately $48 million by the three firms concerned, during the period August 1, 1981, to June 30, 1984.

(c) The firms are required to furnish these services in accordance with the Canada Student Loans program directive to collection companies for the collection of delinquent Canada student loans. The Department of the Secretary of State, Student Assistance Directorate, is monitoring the services provided. It is a condition of the contracts that the services provided are subject to inspection and acceptance by the Crown.

5. These services have been contracted out for more than 12 years. The Department of the Secretary of State does not have sufficient person years to carry out such a program. Furthermore, it would be highly impractical and uneconomical to take on such a program on an in-house basis. The selected contractors provide Canadawide (and even worldwide) coverage which is not the case for the Department of the Secretary of State. Also, contrary to public servants, the contractors are not paid on a time rate basis but on a production basis. Treasury Board has directed that the business be spread competitively among several private sector firms.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, in the few minutes I have left to speak on the bill, having started my remarks yesterday, I would like to say that we are fortunate in the sense that the bill was delayed, as a result of the constitutional debate, for two reasons. First of all, it gave us the opportunity to measure some of the serious aspects of the bill against the new Constitution. We find after examination that there are some very serious flaws in the document with regard to the right to own property and the way native peoples in Canada lands will be treated when the decision is made to begin serious exploration and development in these Canada lands or in the north.

It is always interesting to speculate what people outside this chamber who are watching every move we make think about some of the matters we are discussing here. I cannot help but briefly review the discussions that took place just before I rose.

There is not anyone in the whole country who has followed with interest the debate leading to changes in our Constitution who did not hear someone say that never again will any member of any ethnic group—and the reference was always made to Japanese Canadians who were incarcerated or interned in 1943 or periods during the Second World War—be subjected to that kind of treatment in our country once we have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and a new Constitution.

I am sure there are probably thousands of people out there who must be confused, having heard the discussions that just went on here, to learn with alarm that we have a government which has passed an emergency planning order whereby the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) is compelled and ordered to establish civilian internment camps.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Oberle: The truth always hurts, but I just cannot help myself—

An hon. Member: You are going to put everybody in internment camps up in Uranium City.

Mr. Oberle: My colleagues and friends in the House know, of course, of my ethnic background and the very deep emotional feelings I have with respect to this measure. I am sure there are many thousands of Canadians who are watching this procedure and must be alarmed by the prospect that this government could come into the House and say there is an emergency in the country—

Mr. MacLaren: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know that we sometimes are fairly elastic in our view of relevancy in our discussions, but surely this exceeds even the most generous definition of elasticity. I do not know what civilian internment camps have to do with Bill C-48, the Canada oil and gas act.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): For the sake of the hon. member's understanding, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) did connect the two in terms of discussing Bill C-48. The Chair found that he was perhaps straying a little, but I felt it appropriate to give the hon. member an opportunity to close off the analogy and move on to Bill C-48.

Now that the point has been made, perhaps he would consider doing so.

Mr. Oberle: As you well know, Mr. Speaker, I am usually the last one in the House to abuse the rules of the House, but I would have been remiss had I not made the reference.

There are certain aspects of Bill C-48 which are not at all unrelated to that kind of autocratic and Draconian measure. As I said in my remarks yesterday in leading up to this point, one of those aspects is the fact that this government—this again is a totally unprecedented act on behalf of any government in western democracies—under the powers which we are about to grant it under Bill C-48, will confiscate private property and private assets, either the intellectual type of capital or actual physical assets which are associated with leases in the north.

With Bill C-48, the government will receive the power to go to Canada lands in the north or offshore and confiscate up to 25 per cent of the assets of any company that have not yet been developed in the sense of the issuance of a production certificate. If this is not an area in which we should be seriously concerned, I do not know whether we should ever concern ourselves with anything again.

We have had time to learn of the serious flaws in the bill as they affect domestic companies, the economy in general, and certainly as they affect the potential of becoming energy self-sufficient by the year 1990. We have also had time to reflect on and come to grips with some of the serious condemnation and concerns voiced to us from outside our country. This matter interests me particularly because, as I have said in committee and in the earlier part of the debate, I am very much concerned about the reaction that we are to expect from the United States as well as other countries as a result of what is now clearly causing serious damage to certain treaty obligations that we have with the OECD countries, with the government moving against companies and giving preferential treatment to its agents over foreign companies which may have been or are presently operating in Canada lands in the field of energy exploration and development.

It is a fact that the government has brought about this condemnation and we had better brace ourselves for some very serious action that some of these countries will feel obliged to take against us. I shudder to think what would happen if the United States government, in its wisdom, said that if that is the way Canada treats U.S. companies in Canada then it should reciprocate in kind and treat Canadian companies likewise in the United States. If this reciprocal action resulted in certain trade restrictions in the free flow of goods between our countries, I shudder to think of the prospect of restrictions on our lumber and wood fibre industries, for example, because the consequences would be very serious and the effect on our economy would be incalculable.

Bill C-48 has already had very serious effects on our domestic economy. The Petroleum Services Association of Canada recently appeared before a Senate committee and in graphic terms showed the senators the effect Bill C-48 has had on their businesses even before being passed through the House of Commons. The Petroleum Services Association consists of roughly 150 companies which represent a wide variety of activities generally servicing the oil patch and the oil fields. The association employs roughly 15,000 Canadians and is not at all an insignificant sector of our economy.

This particular service association recently conducted a survey and found that the number of employees on staff fell from 7,998 to 6,743. These particular companies which responded to the questionnaire, some 77 out of 150, registered a loss of employment of 1,255 people. The total number which left the industry had between them 4,914 years of experience.

The value of capital expenditures was cut back in Canada to the tune of $97,239,000. The gross sales over the period dropped by $131,639,000.

Bill C-48 was designed to bring about energy self-sufficiency by 1990. We all know that this would require a massive influx of capital, technology, people and a massive effort, almost an emergency and warlike effort, to move to the north and bring about new development and exploration to recapture what we once had, energy self-sufficiency.

I cannot believe at all that the minister should be so stubborn as not to realize what he is doing. Instead of increasing the activities in the north he is, of course, very seriously crippling the oil economy in the north. Also, he is not chasing the multinationals, they are already in the United States and all over the world; he is not chasing them out, he is chasing out Canadian companies.

I come from an area of British Columbia which is the only producing part of that province. The major share of fossil resources are located in the northeastern area of British Columbia. The oil exploration and development industry has been a very significant part of the economy of that part of the province. I would like the minister to share the picture we all had when he announced the great potential to regain energy self-sufficiency in Canada. We all shared in the excitement of that proposition. He set in motion events which he could not control because he did not believe that there were still people in this country who would respond to a challenge in the way that people in my part of the country would. He set in motion a massive effort for people to come to grips with this challenge and respond in a positive way so that British Columbia could participate in supplying its share of energy resources to meet the needs of Canadians.

The city of Fort St. George had roughly 20,000 people at that time. There were approximately 300 hotel and motel rooms in the city. Over a two-year period, in response to this great challenge, everyone got out and said that this is where the action is. There were roughly 23 drilling rigs; the number was increased to about 100 operating in the area. Private entrepreneurs responded by building hotels and within a two-year period, 1,000 hotel rooms were available. The capacity to accommodate people in hotels and motels increased from 300 to 1,000.

• (1630)

Likewise, young companies enticed to service the oil patch responded. They took incredible chances. They went to banks everywhere and borrowed, increased their capacity, bought trucks and equipment and machines shops, hired new people, built on to their shops and bought new tools and machinery to respond to this incredible challenge.

Then came Bill C-48 and the minister pulled the rug out from under this exciting venture. Today three major hotels, including a Holiday Inn in Fort St. John, are in receivership, and two of the major machine shops are shut down. In the area with the greatest potential in our country there is above average unemployment today.

I just wanted to take these few minutes to serve notice on the minister that people who walk away from their businesses on which they have worked all their lives do not behave rationally. People have been fooled by the government which held out a great promise. These people believed in it for a short period of time. They made commitments on the basis of that promise. They do not act rationally when they feel the rug being pulled out from under them. I dare say the minister had better be careful, because if that situation exists in many other parts of this country—and I think it does—people will take measures which are not ordinary or rational. When I go home I get a feeling of anger and frustration which frightens me because I am called in by some of those oil businessmen who are now forced to dig up their roots, move down to the United States and take with them their equipment and their technology. Of course, they cannot take with them their people because the people would have difficulty getting immigration visas.

I just wanted to spill my heart out to my hon. colleagues. This is a serious situation. I am deeply troubled by it, and I plead with the government at this late date to come to its senses and to make whatever changes can still be made to this bill so that it is at least in some way conducive to the laudable goals and objectives we have set for ourselves, namely, to recapture energy self-sufficiency and to bring about a greater degree of Canadian ownership by 1990.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I participated at the report stage of Bill C-48, and I am now taking the opportunity to address a few more remarks in perhaps a broader context. I will stay within the confines of the bill. I might wander a little, but I will rely on Your Honour to bring me back to reality.

Since becoming a member of the House of Commons I have had great opportunities to travel the Arctic quite widely. I took one very valuable trip up there with a group of colleagues. It was a formal trip. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) was the member in charge of that group. We travelled widely. We looked at the infrastructure of the transportation system the federal government had financed. I am speaking now of a trip back in 1974 or 1975. We had extensive meetings with the native peoples. We sat in their houses and talked out the communication problems and the other problems they had. We talked about federal government programs which had been delivered into the north for these people, and one of the things I found quite heart-rending was that a program would be in place, and two or three years later, just as the people were understanding the program, getting comfortable with it, starting to benefit from it or understanding what the original thrust of the government was, the program would be withdrawn and something new put in its place. I have never forgotten the frustration of the native people. They were wondering why there could not be a little continuity with some of the federal programs which were delivered into the north.

Back in the first half of the 1970s the federal government put millions of dollars into the infrastructure of the transportation system starting from Hay River and up through the Mackenzie Valley. It was all predicated on the explosion which was going to start to take place in the Canada lands. At that time there were about 5 trillion cubic feet of gas locked in in the Mackenzie Delta. There was oil up in the Mackenzie Delta. Massive rigs and land fills were being constructed in the Beaufort. Tuktoyaktuk was starting to expand to get ready for Dome. It looked as though things were pretty bright indeed. There was also the Mackenzie Valley pipeline consortium. That pipeline was to move gas from the Prudhoe Bay fields. The consortium was seeking permission to run that transportation system across the north slope and down the Mackenzie Valley. The federal government had been putting in the transportation infrastructure with some foresight and some wisdom. It was quite impressive.

Also with foresight and wisdom the federal government put in vocational training schools in that area so that native people could be taught to repair diesel engines, to handle heavy equipment, and taught the semiskills and the skills that would be necessary.

One of the things the native people said repeatedly was that their only fear in all that was of hobnail boots trampling over their culture and through their villages. I think all the members who went up there—and I think three parties were represented on that trip—recognized it as being of paramount importance that the construction crews which would be going through the north should be kept isolated and that we would have to protect the culture and the families and the homes and townships in which the northern people lived. That does not mean to say that a highway had not been built. Inuvik attracted entrepreneurs. It was getting ready to be the hub and the distribution base for much of this activity, as were other centres down the Mackenzie Valley.

Then all of a sudden came the Berger report, and overnight all that planning, spending and infrastructure was stopped dead in the water.

Then I had the opportunity to return and travel up through the Mackenzie Valley and again over the high Arctic to meet the people and re-meet many of those I had the opportunity of meeting on the first trip. The devastation in Hay River was really heart-rending. Young native people who had been in the schools learning trades all of a sudden had their futures pulled out from under them. We keep hearing the words "We need an industrial strategy" and that only with forward planning will there be a future for a young person who wants to get out, get working and acquire a piece of property, a home or a van or truck. People with goals and people with jobs are, as a rule, very happy people.

I have said several times in the past—and I do not want to bore hon. members—that one of the tragedies of the Thirtieth Parliament was that we stopped dead the move toward the settlement of Indian land claims in the north by losing that $7.5 billion to $8 billion transportation project. We are now starting to see some rethinking on the part of the New Democratic Party. We have had our look, but we lost the opportunity to build that transportation system. Because it was not built, energy in the Prudhoe Bay field is being wasted because, through four stage pumps, gas coming up with the oil is reversed back into the ground. That has been going on for years and years now, and that is a total waste of energy. It is really a crime, and not just against the United States; it is a crime against the world, which is becoming increasingly short of traditional fuels.

Had we proceeded with the Mackenzie Valley line at that time—for minimum megadollars—the United States could have been given a transportation system across Canada which would have left a taxation base behind in Canada and used our steel-making and pipe-making capacity to the full. It would have given us a new and vital transportation system. It would have created work again in the machine shops of Ontario and Quebec. We would have had almost a fully employed people from that period on. Politics interfered with that. Now that pipeline is something in a $24 billion to $30 billion package. The pre-build is going on in the west. The expense of the transportation system alone to get that Prudhoe Bay gas to the United States is horrendous. It has a tremendous inflationary impact. I am one who favoured the Mackenzie Valley line. I was very sorry and regretful to see what our failure to proceed with that project did to the native people and to the dreams and hopes of the people in the Mackenzie Valley.

• (1640)

I would like to come to the combination of the delay we have had to this period and the importation of foreign oil at world prices, getting into the struggle of the national energy policy through Bill C-48 which we are still debating in this House and which was interrupted by the constitutional debate and the constitutional accord with the first ministers.

We have been importing oil from abroad at a terrible cost to this country. There has been a great regional distortion in that the west, primarily the producing province of Alberta, in a two-year period delivered some $9.6 billion in compensation payments back into the system.

The last time I was up I was not allowed to place some statistics on the record. However, there was a feeling that there was a justification for drawing on money from the province of Alberta because the provinces of central Canada had paid more than world price for the early delivery of oil as the pipeline was being built from the western-producing areas. I now have the opportunity to finish that comment. In the years 1962 to 1972, the difference between imported world prices and the prices paid by Ontario consumers for western oil was $639 million. That was over ten years. In the short period of time that we got into these compensation payments after OPEC moved up, the province of Alberta delivered back $9.6 billion in compensation payments for our friends on the east coast.

One of the mistakes we made in the Thirtieth Parliament, and I do not know whether it was a mistake or political, was that we said we would tax oil because the generators in the Atlantic provinces were oil-fired. What we should have done, if we were going to be totally fair as a nation, is we should have taxed energy so that all provinces using hydroelectric energy, oil, gas, any form of energy, somehow or other participated in this equalization payment and this need to help the people of the Atlantic provinces who had entered heavily into oil-fired generation.

I have said, and I think with complete justification, that Bill C-48 and much of the constitutional debate has been a massive revenue grab of western and east coast resources. We have been very slow in this country moving to world oil prices. As a result, we have been very slow in moving to energy conservation. We have been very slow in moving to energy self-sufficiency.

Ottawa was addressing this problem in 1973. It established a national goal to be achieved before 1980. This is our ability to plan. In 1976 Ottawa scrapped the objective and replaced it with oil self-reliance, another study. In 1980 oil self-sufficiency was reinstated.

Our government saw the feasibility of achieving energy self-sufficiency by the year 1990, but it required an agreement with the producing provinces. That was almost in the palm of our hands. Now energy self-sufficiency has given way and is the third priority after Canadianization and revenue-sharing. That seems to be about the extent of Ottawa's ability to bring this nation to energy self-sufficiency.

In the five years between 1975 and 1980 the industry in the west contributed approximately $23 billion to federal and provincial treasuries in royalties and taxes. In addition, the oil industry contributed $24 billion to Canada's merchandise trade balance through exports of oil and gas. Then a mystery comes along. The poor people of Canada wonder whether there is a gas shortage.

Some years ago I started to read the bunk and propaganda that was beginning to come out. I felt I should reconsider the fact that I had a gas-heat installation in my business and a gas furnace in my house. I wondered whether I should start studying something that would give me continuity of energy. Lo and behold, just a couple of years later we found that we had more doggone gas locked in the ground, capped wells everywhere and cash flow pressures on the entrepreneurs and explorers.

With our energy nationalization and rush to corporate concentration in advance of the November 12 budget, we created some $17 billion of call-and-demand on our international reserves. It has put tremendous pressure on the Canadian dollar and thus is affecting the interest rates that are causing tragedies. It could trigger a domino effect across Canada and the United States if we do not get some discipline and order into our lives.

Unfortunately it has been a grab for revenue. Unfortunately, a political regime, a new economic order, has moved in and interfered with the opportunity we were given in the mid-seventies to be fully employed, to have that gift and heritage at large in Canada working so that we could make a positive donation to the world by withdrawing our demand for foreign energy resources. That is the tragedy.

There has been no excuse for this country not to have been fully employed and fully at work since the early mid-1970s.

We had a pipeline to build from the north to south of the 49th. We had a Syncrude plant which was an engineering marvel. We had an engineering body in place composed of Canadian and foreign engineers who should have been phased into another tar sands plant so that we would not lose that tremendous ability we have in engineering design, management, trade skills, engineering skills and our transportation infrastructure. All of that could have been gently and easily rolled over and phased into a second tar sands plant. Did that happen? No.

I remember when Sun Life nearly went bankrupt because of early pioneering work in the great Canadian tar sands. I remember the engineering tragedies it had, the metallurgical and other problems such as temperature and breaking up the tar sands. I remember the diggers breaking down and the belts breaking. I remember the struggles they had with the technology for separating the oil from the sand and then having to rebuild and redress the land as these great mining operations took place. I remember the negative cash flows they kept reporting. I remember years ago the seriousness of all this pioneering, this front-end entrepreneurial and innovative investment in rather large dollars. What does the national energy policy do, Mr. Speaker? It penalizes this company for that forward-looking investment into the future that was so necessary for us to become energy self-sufficient as a nation.

● (1650)

Why do we do these things, Mr. Speaker? We should be looking for national revenue as a good, solid taxation base where the decision-making process is at large in the country, using all of the talents that the magic of creation can give us. There is no decision-making base in Ottawa. The bureaucrats prepare laborious papers on the various options available to ministers to make decisions.

Today small companies throughout western Canada have to receive permission from some desk in IT&C in order to have an assessment for duty and tax and conform to all the other regulations to proceed with something that yesterday they used to be able to proceed with by picking up the telephone, having an expert assess the rules & regulations and then have a customs broker say that their interpretation is correct. If there was some doubt, the customs broker would telephone them in Ottawa so as to receive a ruling from the department. In a matter of hours, days, or weeks at the most, one could start the project; thereby the cash flow that small business always loses would turn around. That is the way it used to work.

I know of one company that last April needed about five or six items assessed for the duty rate or to see whether duty was applicable. It is a simple matter. They could then give that assessment, the professionals in the brokerage industry could assess it, and the company could start to move into the market again, in an area where it is all imports anyway—no Canadian manufacturing. The original request was made in April, and as of December 3, 1981, that single desk in IT & C has not been able to deliver its decision to the company in Vancouver. One thing after another is slowly coming to a halt as we force more and move structuring on the economy and force the private sector to come back here for permission to blow its nose.

That is the cause of almost one million unemployed in the country. The government has taken all of the ability to make decisions away from the private sector.

Aside from Bill C-48, the national energy policy, we come to the day of the budget, November 12, 1981. When one considers what the government has done with the budget, coupled with the national energy policy of this government, things will grind to a complete halt. On November 12, the government pulled the cornerstone from under fair taxation policy. The first indication of retroactivity applied to the Canadian people was in Bill C-48. On November 12 the budget imposed retroactivity as a Liberal government policy upon the industrial, the job-creating and wealth-creating sector of Canada. When one has retroactivity in taxation policy, coupled with government policies that remove the ability to pay the tax, what one has done, in fact, is pulled out from under the private sector their decision-making base.

In 1971 a new taxation policy, the Carter principles, were introduced to this country—a buck was a buck. The market sector has been adjusting to that taxation philosophy for ten years. Most people were just becoming comfortable with the new rules. A decision-making base was in place. The game was starting to work. All it needed was some fiscal policy to lighten it up and some common sense planning in energy for it to proceed.

What happened? On November 12, the most infamous budget ever was introduced to the House. It applies retroactivity as a policy of this government, and at the same time it taxes wealth, leaving the taxpayer without ability to pay. That just furthers the confiscation aspect that is so evident in the national energy policy under Bill C-48.

There have been some wonderful speeches made by prominent industrialists. In a meeting some time ago I learned—and it had not occurred to me—that the major oil finds in Canada had been discovered by one company. It is interesting to note—and I am speaking of the new deep field under Pembina, as well as the Hibernia field out on the ocean bottom—that one company with its scientists and its expertise was able to put together software programs in seismology that allowed a new sensitivity and a new reading from that data. That is what enabled the discovery of a new, big find in Alberta, under traditional fields, and that is what gave us Hibernia.

That is a foreign company that has been a good corporate citizen of Canada for many years. That was a technology that was not developed in Canada but was developed offshore. They just happened to put the combination of minds together so as to provide this technology to enable these new, big finds to be made.

It is interesting to note that they are still at work. They still seem to be interested in new properties as a result of this lead they have in seismic technology. They are interested in starting exploration and drilling off British Columbia. However, there is a moratorium in place, further evidence of the federal government and provincial government being unable to resolve problems that would provide jobs.

Exploration activity is important to the north coast of British Columbia. There are towns waiting to be the service and distribution outlets for the boats that service these off-shore rigs. All of that is in place; the play is starting to take place; the land is under option. Everything is waiting for the federal and provincial government to get together and stop the moratorium so as to allow some of this west coast exploration to proceed.

The point I am making is that the official policy of this government is totally negative with regard to implementing forces that will allow us to achieve energy self-sufficiency. We shake our heads and wonder why we have the government wanting to move in and do everything; we have the government moving in and wanting to take over retroactively; we have the government not wanting to put up the front-end risk money within the Canada lands for gas and oil finds. But when there is a positive find, it moves in and takes 25 per cent.

With regard to that issue, I should like to discuss the problem that the industry is still encountering as a result of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) dealing with the producing provinces of Alberta, B.C. and Saskatchewan. We have read quite a bit about the success of finally reaching agreement with the province of Alberta, with the province of British Columbia and with the province of Saskatchewan. Politicians came to these agreements in spite of the fact that industry representatives kept saying, "Look, guys, you are taking too much in this money grab; you are not leaving us enough to operate or to risk a dime".

● (1700)

May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis)—Corporate Affairs—Export Finance Corporation of Canada; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements—Application of new formula to have-not provinces; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—The Budget—Effect on insurance policies and retirement savings plans.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motions for papers, private bills and public bills.

Does the House agree to stand all items under the heading of notices of motions for papers?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to the consideration of public bills of which I have a startling number.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HERBERT—PRINTING OF BILLS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I brought forward on a couple of previous occasions. If all goes as projected one of my bills may be called; if the opposition is concerned, I will be using my own time. The point I have raised before is that presently a lot of bills are listed on the Order Paper and marked as "Text received". In other words, these bills have not been printed.

Earlier in this session, as well as in previous sessions of Parliament, I have raised the point that when bills are listed but not printed, it is very difficult for the hon. member to do his work. If he is questioned on listed bills by the public, he is unable to respond, not having seen the bills in question. I pursued this matter again in the present session, and it was agreed that hon. members would be allowed a certain time in which to put their houses in order. After a certain period of time those members who had not produced any text saw their bills dropped from the Order Paper. However, those bills of hon. members who had produced texts within the time limit specified by the Chair remained on the Order Paper.

The problem we are facing now is that since the listing nothing further has happened. The bills still remain on the Order Paper, and beneath them it reads "Text received". This may be because the text received was not in good order for printing or the legal advisers of the Chair have been unable to put the material into proper form for printing. But for a multitude of reasons, the bills themselves are not available to hon. members at large.

When I brought forward this matter before, I followed it up with a letter to the Speaker. I received a response from Madam Speaker—I do not have the letter in front of me but I will try to state fairly her decision—in which she essentially decided that the matter rested with hon. members. If we do not regulate the problem, we could see considerable abuse in the next session; this is what really bothers me. Originally I suggested that I have perhaps 100 or so subjects which I should like to pursue. I could do so very easily by having them listed as bills, and the titles would convey a certain representation in themselves.

Under the new arrangements of this session, presumably within a limited period of time I would have to produce some sort of text. Nevertheless, this would not be particularly difficult. However, I suggest that the text I would produce would not necessarily result in the law officers who advise the Chair being able to produce a printed version. Although the Chair may have made some attempt to throw this matter back to hon. members to regulate, surely the good order of the House is that it is the responsibility of the Chair. Unless something is done about this item, I see the possibility of considerable misuse in the next session.

Probably Mr. Speaker is not willing to make any further comments this afternoon. I know another Speaker occupied the chair when I brought forward the matter previously. I felt it was appropriate to bring it up today because, in my opinion, it has not been satisfactorily attended to. Furthermore, if it is to be my time which is used up, obviously it is better to bring it forward today than on another occasion.

I suggest Mr. Speaker give further consideration to the matter. There has been no ruling so far by the Chair on this item. Despite Madam Speaker's letter, Mr. Speaker might think of some manner in which the problem could be resolved to prevent the abuse which could result if no further ruling comes from the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the hon. member for bringing the matter to the attention of this particular occupant of the Chair. It was I who, approximately a year ago, undertook to assist the hon. member in this regard. My recollection is that there was some success in asking hon. members to produce texts for bills, not just names or titles of bills. If I recall correctly, we provided a warning period of approximately 30 or 60 days so that bills which had no body but had titles were removed from the Order Paper.

I understand the hon. member's point. I thank him for giving me some notice of his point of order. As I understand the issue, on short notice, it may be an extraordinary job to take several hundred bills with partial or total contents and verify that they are complete, orderly, meet the standards of the parliamentary law counsel, and translate them. The hon. member made a valid point when he said that the situation left the matter subject to abuse.

What concerns me more is that a very important right of every hon. member of Parliament is the right to seek to put a private member's bill before the House. Unless that effort results in the printing of the private member's bill, in effect the hon. member is deprived of a considerable portion of his rights as a Member of Parliament. I do not want to turn it into a question of privilege, but I think the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has a valid point. If a member deposits a bill but for some reason it cannot be printed and circulated, surely a very important part of the process of Parliament has been denied to the member, as well as to other members who may appreciate the points made in the bill.

I will undertake to look once again at the subject matter, having due regard for the letter from Madam Speaker to which the hon. member referred. Bearing that in mind, this may well explain why, as I indicated earlier, I have before me a startling number of private members' public bills. Rather than try to refer to each and every one of them, and having given consideration to the comments of the hon. member for Vaudreuil, may I ask if there is unanimous consent that all orders preceding No. 139 be allowed to stand. Also I should point out that No. 139 stands in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil. Therefore, shall all orders preceding No. 139 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

• (1710)

CROWN CORPORATIONS

MEASURE RESPECTING OPERATION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved that Bill C-339, respecting Crown corporations (not agents of Her Majesty), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure what gets printed for the heading of the remarks I am about to make so I shall read from the bill. Clause 1 reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding any other act, the Crown corporations specified in Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act are not agents of Her Majesty.

The explanatory note which accompanies the bill reads as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to put Crown corporations on the same level as private companies, to render Crown corporations subject to private law and to take away their privileges under public law.

Crown agencies are distinct entities established as instruments of public policy that have been directly delegated by Parliament, the government or another Crown agency, to specify continuing responsibilities and the decision-making powers that assure them a degree of autonomy from Parliament and the government in pursuit of their tasks.

The responsibilities are assigned to the agencies, not to ministers. Ministers must account to Parliament for the exercise of continuing responsibilities and managerial powers. The extensive and increasing resort to Crown agencies has revealed serious deficiencies in the system which, if left unattended, will only add to the existing state of confusion concerning the status and accountability of a large number of Crown agencies which now comprise virtually a second public service.

It is coincidental that in the response to a question on yesterday's Order Paper concerning Crown corporations, reference was made to an answer received in November, 1980, concerning the number of Crown corporations. I found it an interesting comparison to the number of Crown corporations that had been listed in a rather lengthy study called the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, or what is commonly known as the Lambert report. In 1979 the Lambert commission came to a conclusion about the number of Crown corporations. At about the same time an answer given by the government to a member's question showed that there was a discrepancy of approximately 40 between the high and the low. The high figure given in October, 1980, was 464 Crown corporations.

The regimes of accountability are tied primarily to financial management arrangements, while larger issues of accountability to Parliament for mandate and to the government for policy have not been adequately covered. This inadequacy for accountability will result in some decline in confidence in the Crown agency as a valid instrument for the implementation of public policy objectives.

According to the Lambert report, as of January, 1979, the official count was 429. As I mentioned earlier, just a few months later we were given a response by the government that the count was 464. I suppose there is some logical reason for this difference of 35 Crown agencies. I recognize the problems as many of the Crown agencies are dormant subsidiaries.

The first group of Crown agencies includes regulatory agencies, administrative or deciding tribunals, temporary bodies such as royal commissions and operating agencies like the National Film Board and central agencies. Departmental Crown corporations encompass such different entities as advisory and granting councils like the Medical Research Council, and regulatory agencies such as the Atomic Energy Control Board. Wholly-owned Crown corporations with varying degrees of commercial orientation and financial self-sufficiency include marketing agencies, such as the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, a number of corporations conducting business for the government, such as Defence Construction (1951) Limited, and a smaller number operating in a wider market like Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The 21 proprietary corporations are mainly engaged in commercial operations, for example, Air Canada and VIA Rail Canada Inc. But they also include financial guarantee and insurance concerns like the Export Development Corporation and the Farm Credit Corporation.

Other government corporations seem to have few common characteristics other than the fact that they have been purchased, created, or sponsored by the federal government, and range from the Bank of Canada through de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and the Standards Council of Canada, to the Belleville Harbour Commission.

Under the heading "Mixed Enterprise Corporations" are listed 24 enterprises, ranging from the Canada Development Corporation to the Blue Water Bridge Authority. These are share capital corporations owned or controlled jointly by the federal government and other governments, organizations, or individuals.

I should like to quote from page 279 of the Lambert report where the following passage occurs:

> It is simply not possible to rely on the present schedules to the Financial Administration Act, which cover such a small number of the agencies and where the criteria for classification are minimal and inconsistently applied.

I should also like to put on record one of the recommendations contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability which appears on page 289 of the report and reads as follows:

> 16.1 the Schedules to the Financial Administration Act be replaced by a more comprehensive set of schedules in accordance with four categories:
>
> (1) Ministerial and other designated departments
>
> (2) Independent deciding and advisory bodies
>
> (3) Crown corporations
>
> (4) Shared enterprises
>
> and that when any re-scheduling occurs such decisions be tabled for the information of Parliament.

The Financial Administration Act of 1951 established a general framework for the government, Parliament, and almost the entire spectrum of Crown agencies with respect to financial management and reporting. A change since 1951, as a result of the growth in the number of Crown agencies and the failure to include them in the schedules, is the weakening of the Financial Admnistration Act as the cornerstone of the management and accountability relationships among Parliament, the government and the semi-autonomous agencies.

● (1720)

Since 1951, a large number of government corporations, such as the Canada Development Corporation, the Canada Council and de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited have been created or acquired without being scheduled under the FAA. As a result, provisions for their accountability to the Crown are essentially idiosyncratic, founded either on the provisions of their particular constituent acts or on the powers available to the Crown under the general corporation law under which they were incorporated.

The management and accountability relationships of agency and proprietary Crown corporations to the government and Parliament are largely founded on the financial control provisions of the FAA. These include government power to approve annual capital and, for agency corporations, operating budgets and resulting contracts and major expenditures. For the Crown corporations which operate under schedules C and D, the minister would appear to have the power to issue policy directives in the form of unanimous shareholder agreements. These corporations include Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Loto Canada Incorporated, Eldorado Nuclear Limited and the Northern Transportation Company Limited.

The government readily admits that it does not have the capacity to give policy direction to Crown corporations. Public sector boards must reconcile themselves to some continuing surveillance and controls. It is in this light, I believe, that the following recommendation has been made concerning the Crown agencies that the Lambert commission has named. Recommendation 18.12 of the Lambert report reads as follows:

> The annual reports ... be automatically and permanently referred to the appropriate standing committees of the House of Commons, and that they provide a thorough description of the activities of the preceding year including both achievements and problems, a record of reports issued and directives received, and plans for the coming year.

The managerial requirement for insulation from the political process can, at times, be in conflict with the need to be responsive to the national interests as determined by the government. Although it may be somewhat tiresome so to do, I feel that in conclusion I must read yet another recommendation found in the Lambert report. Recommendation 19.21 reads as follows:

—the designated minister be required to undertake a review of the mandate and operations of Crown corporations not less than once every ten years and further that the results of such reviews be tabled in Parliament and referred automatically for study and appropriate action to the relevant standing committee.

Obviously, the point is that at the moment we have some difficulty and conflict between the assumed independence of many of the Crown corporations and the fact that they are operating with some policy directions from ministers or from the government. We have some difficulty, as Members of Parliament, in adequately questioning and receiving reports from these various Crown corporations. We sometimes get an attitude, if they do appear in committee, that they are independent, either of the government or of Parliament. It is sometimes very difficult for us to impress upon these same Crown corporations that they owe their lives to this Parliament. In fact, the continuing operation of many which receive moneys in the estimates each year is conditional on approval of the estimates.

We made this point somewhat forcefully a few years ago when we were having difficulty with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We tried to indicate to the corporation that the public had a right to know what was going on within the corporation, since the public purse was financing the operation to the extent of almost $400 million at that time. As to today, of course, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation uses up approximately $600 million from the public purse.

We took a rather unusual step, back in those days, in illustrating that while we perhaps did not have any specific lines of reporting to hon. members, we had one ultimate weapon. That, of course, was to cut their budget. This we did, with some success, back in 1973 when we were operating a minority government. It caused quite a stir at the time, and this point is obvious to everyone, because even though the government's estimates are listed in the name of a Crown corporation, any cut in the moneys which is assumed to flow to a Crown corporation would be a cut in the government's estimates. However, the point was made. The point, of course, is simply that many Crown corporations owe their continuing existence to the moneys which they receive through the estimates. In that respect, I suppose Members of Parliament can exercise some measure of control. However, this is a rather indirect and, I think, unwieldy type of weapon. I believe the minister has given some indication that he intends to introduce a bill at an early date which would change the reporting responsibilities of the Crown corporations.

For what it is worth, during my last remaining couple of minutes I would express my personal opinion that if the Crown corporations are to be executing the policies of the government, then the government should be directly responsible for the operation of the Crown corporations. That is a personal point of view. I doubt that that point of view will get very much support. However, I feel very strongly that if the government is responsible for the financing, if the government must answer for the hundreds of millions of dollars that are transferred to the Crown corporations every year, and if the government is to answer in this House for the method and manner of operation of the Crown corporations, then the best way to resolve the difficulty is to ensure that the government also exercise control over the operation of the Crown corporations. In that way we would get rid of any difficulty that anyone might have, and we would not have the conflict of interest which exists at the present time.

I guess that I am dreaming, but that is the way I would like to see it. I would like to see the government take over the responsibility entirely. However, if it is not to be that way, and I presume that arguments will be produced to illustrate why it cannot be that way, then we must at least see a better reporting responsibility to Parliament so that the hon. members themselves will be able to ensure that the moneys which are being spent by the Crown corporations are being wisely spent in the interest of the general public.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I had not originally intended to speak on Bill C-339 this afternoon. However, I was so moved by the cogency of the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that I thought I might contribute a few comments and lend some support to his bill.

I must confess that when I first looked at Bill C-339, and especially when I read the explanatory notes, I had a sharp reaction. I would like to read the explanatory notes which state:

The purpose of this bill is to put Crown corporations on the same level as private companies, to render Crown corporations subject to private law and to take away their privileges under public law.

● (1730)

My knee-jerk response was that this legislation was a poorly disguised effort by the sponsoring member to knock Crown corporations per se. After listening to the hon. member for Vaudreuil, it was clear to me, however, that that was not the motivation behind the bill, and I welcome the fact.

There is a habit in this House, and I think across the land, to knock Crown corporations, to view them, a priori, as somehow antagonistic to the public interest. They are viewed at worst as monsters, at best as an unnecessary drain on the public purse. Often in that connection the point is made that Crown corporations are unwieldy, are the victims of elephantiasis, are unaccountable to Parliament and to the public, and are in many ways less satisfactory as an instrument of public policy than are, say, government line departments. I would be the first to admit that many in my own party hold such views.

Sometimes the views I have described or summarized are accurate; and all of us can think of some corporations to which these descriptions might apply. Certainly there are inefficiently operated Crown corporations in Canada, as there are in any democratic society.

I would argue, though, that on the whole Crown corporations are an effective instrument of public policy. Some perform very useful functions. In fact, often the functions they perform could only be fulfilled by Crown corporations, or they could be performed best or most effectively by Crown corporations rather than directly by a department of the federal government or the private sector.

Crown corporations are set up because there is the need to have from time to time an arm's length relationship between certain government agencies and politicians so as to avoid interference, to give the agencies an element of freedom, to allow them to pursue a course without day-to-day interference by bureaucrats—and I use that word in the best sense of the word—by politicians or, for that matter, by the public or the media. That is why the CBC, Canadian National Railways and many others were established as Crown corporations: to give them a degree of independence from bureaucratic, public or governmental interference.

I take considerable pride in the fact that it was a Conservative government which fathered a number of our great Crown corporations. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a case in point. Canadian National and the National Film Board and others could also be mentioned.

All of us now and then have problems with the CBC or with Canadian National or with any of a number of others. We complain, strongly and legitimately so, about how they do this or that or do not do this or that. But most of us, I think, would admit that these corporations perform most useful functions that could not be performed nearly as well if they were directly under the thumb of a government minister, of a department, of Parliament or, again, for that matter, of the public.

The railway system in Canada—and I am thinking now of the Canadian National Railway system, rather than of the Canadian Pacific—forged a country out of a vast and thinly populated land. It literally helped Canada become a unified country, from one coast to the other. If the railway had been left entirely to private enterprise, the job would never have been accomplished. In fact, as we all know, most of the component parts that led to the formation of the Canadian National Railways system were once in private hands. Private interests just did not perform the job that needed to be done. The government had to grab the bull by the horns, take the initiative, bring these component parts together, and out of them form a state corporation, if you will, on the basis of which we forged a country out of, as I say, a diverse and thinly populated land.

The CBC is another case in point. Just as the railway brought Canada together geographically, so also did the CBC bring Canada together culturally. To repeat, while we have problems with the CBC—especially when we politicians do not make the national news at night, or for whatever reason; allowing for such possibilities and setting them aside—we must recognize that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation does a darn fine job in this country. Those of us who knock it do so outrageously unaware of the facts.

Having expressed the importance in principle of Crown corporations as vehicles for national policy, I hasten to add that we have allowed some of these corporations to get out of hand, often wildly. There may well be, as the hon. member for Vaudreuil has pointed out, too many Crown corporations. I suspect that is the case when the government is unable to answer the simple question, "How many corporations does the federal government own?" We have probably reached the point where there are too many. That question was actually put to the responsible minister at a meeting of a standing committee of the House. But the minister could not tell the questioner, a member of the House, how many Crown corporations within a hundred were responsible to Parliament.

Crown corporations have been permitted to become unwieldy, to become gross, much larger in size and much better endowed in funding than needed to be the case given the job at hand. I share with the hon. member for Vaudreuil his concerns about some Crown corporations' lack of responsiveness, of accountability to Parliament and to the public, and of manageability. And I share his concern also about their sheer ineffectiveness in getting the job done that they were set up to do. Many of the points he made, are, in my mind, valid and are ones with which most of us in the House could agree.

Yet, to stress once again the importance of Crown corporations, let me express some real, fundamental, and genuine personal fears about Crown corporations in Canada. The first is that I think too many of them are concentrated in central Canada. I am talking now primarily about the headquarters of Crown corporations. For the life of me, I cannot understand why, by definition, Crown corporations, government departments, agencies, commissions, boards, or what have you, have to be located in almost every instance in central Canada, often in Ottawa; if not in Ottawa then in Toronto or Montreal, but still in central Canada in any event.

• (1740)

To my mind, we in Parliament should pursue, as a matter of public policy, the objective of spreading the industrial benefits of government as widely as possible across this great dominion. Crown corporations, or government in any form, are as much an industry as General Motors, Chrysler, Ford or General Foods. They generate salaries and, in turn, those salaries have a rippling effect throughout the economy. Every community that is directly touched by a Crown corporation benefits.

Why should Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal—central Canada, in general—be the exclusive beneficiaries of the direct presence of government? When a Crown corporation is headquartered in Montreal or Toronto, for example, its purchasing is automatically done in the community in which it is located. If we located the headquarters or main arms of Crown corporations in areas other than just central Canada, that would benefit all the communities concerned and, I suggest, the country as a whole.

Apart from the economic dimension, another reason to spread Crown corporations across the country is that government, in whatever form, should be as close as possible to the people it is intended to serve. Not every Canadian lives in central Canada. Prince Edward Islanders, myself included, are Canadians every bit as much as Ontarians and Quebecers. We have a right to be directly served by Canada's Crown corporations and by other agencies of government through having the instruments of the state located as close as possible to us.

I do not expect every Crown corporation to be moved to our tiny province. Maybe none of them could be. But, certainly, the region of which we are a part is entitled to be considered a suitable setting for some Crown corporations. It is important that government, in every way, be geographically near the people it must serve. In short, we want a piece of the action and, as Canadians, I think we are entitled to it.

A disproportionate number of major Crown corporations is currently headquartered in Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal—in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. If Crown corporations must be housed in central Canada, I would feel much better if northern Ontario, for example, were considered, and not always Toronto or southern Ontario in general. Northern Quebec should also be considered. It is not out of the question. There is nothing etched in stone which says that a Crown corporation is necessarily inefficient or ineffective because it is headquartered somewhere other than in big metropolitan areas of Canada. It is now possible, with modern communications and technology, with computer systems and other modern methods available, to harness a nation, to have government spread out in a way which perhaps was not possible when most Crown corporations were established in their current locations.

The second and final point which causes me great concern is that, to the extent that Crown corporations have any presence in what is sometimes disparagingly called the hinterlands or the periphery of the country, many of them are steadily withdrawing direct services from those parts of the country.

We are all familiar, for example, with the VIA Rail question, which has been well debated already in the House; so, the facts are widely known. But suffice it to say that in my province of Prince Edward Island, for example, there has been a steady withdrawal of Canadian National. I think that fact has profound implications not just economically or in terms of transportation but also in terms of the visibility of the federal government on the Island. The same is true of the whole Atlantic region and of many parts of western Canada. To use Prince Edward Island as an example again, we first lost direct passenger service on Prince Edward Island in 1969. We later lost a major part of the Carload Centre, which is the main office for the administration of the movement of heavy freight to and from the province and within it. Canadian National then took away the main part of the Car Repair shop, where rail cars are repaired and maintained, both on a routine and emergency basis. Lately we lost half of the Canadian National Express office. The VIA Rail cutbacks were but another step—and probably not the last one—toward the total elimination of Canadian National's presence on Prince Edward Island. If Canadian National is to be withdrawn completely from our province, ignoring the resultant economic and transportation and service disadvantages, just consider the impact on the psyche of the people there. They will see something of their national government removed from them at the very time when that same part of government, CN, is being aggrandized elsewhere in the country.

I think it is important that Air Canada, the CBC, CN and all other Crown corporations have a strong and visible presence in every part of Canada. The more their presence is chipped away in certain parts of the country, the more Canada itself is withdrawn, in a very tangible fashion, from the citizens affected.

Concerning the Atlantic provinces, there has been a propensity—almost an obsession—on the part of the federal government to consolidate the provision of its services either in the heartland of the country, the major metropolitan areas—including Vancouver, for that matter—or in major centres within the outlying regions, to the exclusion of places like Charlottetown and similar smaller centres. I believe this is bad for national unity. It could be demonstrated—but it would take more time than I have available—how harmful to national unity that practice is. It is also bad in terms of sound management. And, most important, it is bad because it is one step farther on a course which will alienate Canadians from one another and pit one region of Canada against another. I think we can be administratively efficient, rational and effective in government without resorting in every instance to bigness—to what I call governmental elephantiasis.

In conclusion, I apologize for being somewhat loquacious because I know that at least one other member wishes to speak. I have considerable sympathy for the rationale of the bill put forth by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), which we are now debating. I congratulate him for his initiative in sponsering the bill and urge all members to give it favourable consideration.

• (1750)

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I would like to put some of my perceptions on this problem on the record. I suppose I should congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing this proposal forward, but it never ceases to astound me that government members should criticize Crown corporations and their operating procedures. I have heard this criticism in private members' hours and in committees. Government members attack the bureaucrats involved with public agencies, but somehow there is a lapse in logic, a failure in perception. They attack the servants but not those who set the policies. I never hear them in question period criticizing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) or the others who are ultimately responsible for the government policy which should direct these corporations. Government members should insist on accountability and clarity of policy, but that never happens. I wonder how that lapse occurs. I am constantly astounded by these attacks.

I wish hon. members opposite would bend their efforts in a much more meaningful way.

I can certainly identify with the comments made by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), but again I have some serious questions about his party's approach. The hon. member put on the record clearly that truth is a phenomenon that occurs only in the eye of the beholder. Anyone who says the creation of Canadian National Railways was an achievement should hide his head. It resulted from the bankruptcy of the old Canadian Northern Railroad and, I suppose, Grand Trunk Pacific. There was a colossal mess. In the early part of the twentieth century the Liberal Party supported promoters and wheelers and dealers so that they could rip off the public enormously. The whole system collapsed in a mess, and, at about the time of World War I, the taxpayers of Canada picked up the mess and paid off the financiers and wheelers and dealers. CNR was not a mechanism to weld Canada together or to bind the thin band of population across the country. It was a pay-off to the banks and financiers who operated it in such a manner that it could not function properly. I wondered whether the Liberal Party would take credit for fathering such a monster! Over the years it became evident that the government was required to run it in a responsible fashion, and over the years it has eventually developed into a very credible transportation system.

However, we still hear constant criticism. The federal cabinet is the group that makes policy, and it is very unfortunate that the criticism of hon. members opposite is not directed to the individuals responsible.

I would like to deal with some questions of principle. A Crown corporation is an agency of public policy. I am certain all members of the House believe in a mixed economy. I am certain of it because of the remarks of the hon. member for Hillsborough and the hon. member for Vaudreuil. If we are going to intervene in a mixed economy, we should do it in a very effective way, yet we leave Crown corporations hanging, neither fish nor fowl. We tell them to act like private corporations, to make profits and not to create expenditures for the government.

Clearly one of the basic problems here is that this government has not made up its mind as to what it wants to do with Crown corporations, and I will give a couple of examples. This government is not prepared to clarify its policy. It is not prepared to say that Crown corporations are agencies of public policy. It is not prepared to say that Crown corporations are created for social purposes and that they should be effective and accountable. That does not happen. They are left to hang.

With respect to accountability, we do not see reports to the committees of this House on a regular basis. No reports are laid before Parliament and studied by committees. The committee system is virtually incapable of handling this properly, and I lay that at the feet of the government, but the government attempts to reflect opposition criticism regarding its policies.

The credibility of Crown corporations in this country is stretched very thin when they are used as a mechanism of patronage. They are a means of pork barrelling to an extent that would make a bank robber blush. One of our most prominent Crown corporations inherited a defeated Liberal cabinet minister. Who knows what connections or capabilities the individual had? He might have been the best president ever appointed to that corporation, but the public in Canada did not believe that or accept that. It severely strains the credibility of any organization when one of its prime functions is patronage. This is just not acceptable.

Getting back to the question of being neither fish nor fowl, I would say that Air Canada is probably one of the best airlines in this entire country. There is no doubt about that, but the purpose of that airline is not clear. What does the government intend to do with it? I leave Vancouver weekly, often on the old "red eye special" coming down here at midnight. I have a choice. I can travel on a one-third full Air Canada aircraft or a one-third full CP aircraft. As time passes, the airlines use stretched DC-8s, then DC-8s and then 727s, often with only a third of a load. I cannot see the sense in promoting two or three national air carriers in a market which does not warrant it. What is the policy? What social goal is to be achieved? These things are not clear.

With respect to Petro-Canada, I think it was on October 23, 1973, during a period of minority government that Tommy Douglas stood in the House and made one of the most definitive speeches on energy policy ever made. He advocated and demanded that an energy Crown corporation be created. It was not until the next Parliament that the government managed to address that. It was perfectly content to let foreign multinationals run the country. The government spoke in horror of what would happen if we ever let public enterprise, which, it was said, could not run a peanut stand, into the oil industry.

The government finally did create Petro-Canada but left it spinning its wheels for years, from about 1976 until 1980. No definite purpose had been established for it. Now we see Petro-Canada as a jewel in the dubious crown called the national energy policy. Petro-Canada now has a clear window and a mandate, but I would bet dollars to doughnuts that even Petro-Canada will be corrupted when it comes to throwing benefits to the private sector and placing the burdens on the taxpayer and the public sector. There will be that kind of split. This is what we get continually from both the other parties in the House, and it is a very serious situation.

Government members cannot have it both ways. They want to criticize Crown corporations, but let them go after the government. Let them go after the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Communications, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). Let us not go after the Crown corporations. Let us direct our attacks properly. I regret it when members of the governing party criticize Crown corporations but do not go to the source. They should be criticizing the policies of their own government.

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to take part in a debate, although I have been on my feet during question period and on motions. Before I get into what I would like to discuss—I think this is a very important matter—I wonder if we might be able to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Chair to understand that was the hon. member's maiden speech?

Mr. Burghardt: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If that were the case, congratulations certainly would be in order!

The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure where I left off.

Mr. Deans: Don't worry about it.

Mr. Huntington: I thank the House leader of the NDP very much for his advice. He tells me not to worry about it, and I won't. Thank you, sir.

I will start at the point where we are looking at a massive oil import bill in the 1980s when we really should have achieved energy self-sufficiency. This country should have full employment and full use of its productive capacity. We should have applied our minds, brains and interests sensibly toward putting in energy transportation systems that were and are still necessary, and ensuring we have the refinement capacity that we need for the heavier and sour types of oil. We should have moved faster in delivering gas to the east coast as an oil substitute. We knew these programs would have to be put in place eventually. If they had been put in place in a timely, planned manner, we would not be looking at an energy shortfall of some $8 billion this year. In the period 1981-1985, it is estimated that imported energy costs as a result of the shortsightedness, and in fact blindness of this government, will amount to between $55 billion and $60 billion. This will place further pressure on our balance of trade account and on our foreign exchange reserves.

I have read many of the speeches of senior executives of major companies in the industry. I was very impressed with the quality and the amount of research that went into them. I read that the former chairman of the National Energy Board and now vice-president of the Royal Bank's global energy group, estimates that the spending required in this country in the next 20 years on energy alone will be approximately $1.4 trillion in current terms.

We see all kinds of moves on the part of the government to keep us from foreign ownership and to prevent foreigners from having more than 50 per cent of the industry. I guess there is some political sympathy for that. Surely the priority is energy self-sufficiency as fast as we can get it.

It is interesting to note that if you go back in history you find that emerging nations have been developed by foreign interests. As they come up to a wealth-creating capacity, they start to buy back the ownership of their interests. How is this country, with government policies and a budget such as we were given on November 12, ever going to create the wealth needed to supply the demands of capital in the quantities that these senior executives within the country estimate are required just in the energy field?

We only have something like seven years' supply, 7 billion barrels of conventional crude oil remaining in western Canada. Our shortfall is something like 400,000 barrels a day. We now have to deliver ourselves into tar sands and in situ processes. We are having to take, use and put into refining capacity sour and heavy type hydrocarbon oils. All of this is dead in the water while this country struggles with uneconomic matters and budgets that interfere with anything positive in the way of creating wealth, creating our own capital and paying for things ourselves. The combination of the constitutional package, Bill C-48 and the budget, that package of three pieces of legislation, will mean almost total socialization of the counry. The members across the aisle have not learned from those countries that have already tried the state ownership route that it will not bring sufficient wealth to a country to enable it to support the welfare system and answer the demands of the citizens put upon it.

• (2010)

The tragedy is that in the field of energy the free enterprise system has a proven record. It has served the people of Canada very well. It is true that massive amounts of money have been made through free enterprise, but also massive sums have been paid in taxes, and that has been an important element in the cash flow and in the treasury of this country.

I venture to say that if we look at the history and at the spending pattern of the government and if we look at the history of PetroCan, we will find that in two or three years from now PetroCan, with its massive power over the industry, will again be surrounded with the same group of Liberal friends as it moves in to exploration. I would be surprised if that had not already happened, Mr. Speaker. The losses will be for the people of Canada to bear and the wins will be for the selected backers of the Liberal Party of Canada.

These three pieces of legislation are a massive intervention against the market and the private sector. I do not think there is any member of the House who can say that Parliament is still in control of the programs or the spending power of the nation under the series of Crown corporations that we have put in place. Too many of them cannot even be audited by the Auditor General, and we have not addressed the whole matter of control and accountability over Crown corporations in the Financial Administration Act. Also, no matter how hard the Standing Committee on Public Accounts works, all of these matters keep slowly being buried in the process of more and more studies.

It is a tragedy when the House cannot control the affairs of the nation and have the bureaucrats account for their actions. Bill C-48 has cut the heart out of Canadian operators. It is not only the multinationals that are injured by this bill. They are injured all right, but they have to stay here. They have no place to go. In the other markets of the world they are already established. It is the wholly Canadian-owned companies that are hurt by this bill, the operators, the geologists, the drilling companies, the trucking companies, the supply and service companies, the technologists. They are laying off people, and you can just see the lay-offs within the different sections of the energy industry that are taking place all across the country.

The National Energy Program delivers to Canadian operators something in the neighbourhood of $4 to $7 per barrel in profit. In the U.S. it is a profit of $15 to $25 per barrel. It is no wonder that the trucks are taking the rigs south. It is no wonder the Canadian operators are moving their working capital, talents and expertise down south where the whole exploration industry is booming, where there is a demand and a call for the industry. All of the rigs in Canada are quiet. Only a fraction of our capacity is being utilized. We have not given the industry an incentive to go from shallow well technology into deep well technology as a result of the national energy policy of the Liberal government.

As a result of this, we will have to face some tragedies, and that is the reason the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has such a low profile these days. He came in very proudly and announced he had an agreement with Alberta, and then a subsequent fast, quickie agreement with British Columbia, and then an agreement with the province of Saskatchewan, the oil producing provinces. The premiers thought everything would stabilize. He could not hear the voices of the advisers, the presidents and the knowledgeable people in the industry who kept telling him that the government was not leaving enough cash flow for the private sector to take a meaningful part in exploration and development.

It is now my understanding that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the premiers of those provinces have realized they have made a serious mistake. I gather that they are now returning to the drawing tables to draft a program under which they will have to take less for themselves and allow more for the industry so that it can get going.

How will we create this $1.4 trillion in current dollar terms in the next 20 years unless we give the companies in that creative sector, that engineering and risk-taking sector, room to move and some incentive to risk their dollars? Most of the winning technology today is a combination of outside and domestic technology. Why should we penalize so severely the foreign technology and know-how that we need? Why should we make this country so unattractive to the Canadian operators that they now have to go to other markets of the world to survive?

The 8 per cent gross revenue tax effectively reduces corporate earnings by 25 per cent. The retroactivity policy involving 25 per cent of all the holdings of oil and gas companies in the federal or Canada lands should not exist in a country that is bragging about its fair taxation policy.

The principle of retroactivity that exists in Bill C-48, which is now very definitely a Liberal government policy that was announced to the nation on November 12, means that retroactive earnings will now be taxed. Never before has a free country had to contend with this. Not only has retroactivity become a government policy, but they have now removed from under the taxation base of Canada the ability to pay retroactive tax so that you have to pay that tax from other earnings.

I was saying before five o'clock that we were just getting used to the ten years of recovery from the taxation policy set down in 1971. As soon as the oil operators in the country have started to get a handle on the rules of the game, low and behold, on November 12, the government pulls the rug out from under the taxation system and absolutely destroys the decision-making base of this country.

This country cannot progress in conditions where anyone in the industry who is willing to work and take a risk has to wait for some government bureaucrat at some desk in the concrete towers of Ottawa to say yes or no. The country in those circumstances is bound to come to a complete halt. Is socialism worth it, Mr. Speaker? That is what will be delivered to the people of Canada. It will destroy the base that has made this country great. That is what the November 12 budget does, together with Bill C-48. It is the same socialist, elitist thinking that is in Bill C-48 that is also in the November 12 budget. How we can hang on to the bounty, the welfare and the pension plans that we have learned to expect from our system of government in Canada is beyond me.

In the months preceding the budget, with the PetroCan acquisition of Petrofina and CPI acquisition of International Paper, and all the concentration of ownership within the business community and the state sector, we have delivered $17 billion on our foreign exchange reserve account. If one cannot imagine how serious that is, one just has to remember that the reserve base was at $3.7 billion and the government had to borrow $1 billion to bring it back to over $3 billion just a few weeks ago. Yet lying in the wings, as a result of the degree of corporate concentration that this government has allowed through its national energy policy and its pre-budget era, we have committed ourselves to $17 billion on demand in our foreign exchange account. Can we imagine the pressure it will have on the Canadian dollar? Will there be any chance of interest rates coming down to a reasonable spread above the inflation rate of the land? The incompetence of the government and the mismanagement of the economy will be recorded in the annals of history in terms of absolute treachery and what has been done to a once viable and healthy country.

● (2020)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was not allowed to continue. It was worth listening to his comments. I congratulate him for giving hon. members something about which to think.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schellenberger: Hon. members opposite may laugh but these words will haunt them in years to come. We have spent a good deal of time on Bill C-48. It deserves a good deal of our attention because it was poorly drafted. Even the government brought in over 100 amendments to satisfy its own officials that in fact the bill would work. It would not accept any reasonable amendments from the opposition parties, therefore we must now state that the bill is not deserving of passage. It should be taken out of the House, pulled apart and redrafted so that Canadians receive the oil and mineral wealth of the north and offshore. The government should provide incentives to create competition. Then companies would go into areas with tough weather conditions, ice—periods of time when there is no daylight and so forth—conditions which make it difficult to explore. There must be incentives for people and companies to go into those areas as well as offshore. Most of us cannot even visualize drilling on a rig a number of miles offshore in rough waters.

Tonight I should like to outline the picture of energy we now face and to determine why the bill will not work or will not be of assistance in reaching the goal of self-sufficiency. Also I should like to deal with a number of groups who have mentioned the reasons for their concerns in regard to the bill. On a net basis we presently import some 400,000 barrels of oil per day, which is roughly 22 per cent of our daily needs of approximately 1.8 million barrels per day. At current world prices of some $44 per barrel, oil imports cost Canada some $17.6 million per day or $6.4 billion per year. The situation will become worse in the next few years.

At present our domestic oil supplies come from fields in western Canada and from the Syncrude and Suncor plants. Western Canadian reserves of conventional, light and medium crude, which account for 90 per cent of present production, are now more than 60 per cent depleted. Production from existing fields is declining at a rate of approximately 10 per cent per year. Production capacity of existing fields is now about 1.1 million barrels per day. By 1985 it will have declined to about 850,000 barrels per day, and by 1990 to only 500,000 barrels per day. Obviously the Government of Canada had to get a grip on the situation, establish some priorities and devise a strategy to move Canada toward self-sufficiency.

I should like to refer to some potential sources of increased domestic supply. There are undiscovered conventional supplies of oil in western Canada—there is no doubt about it. We can extract additional barrels of oil from heavy oil and from the tar sands, but the National Energy Program and present negotiating conditions are not allowing these plants to go ahead. But the potential is there. Also there is an ability with present technology to draw the in situ capacity from depleted wells in the conventional fields of western Canada. The first such plant, the Imperial Oil plant at Judy Creek, is now on hold because there is not sufficient incentive for the company to invest money to bring the plant onstream.

Of course, we know there is oil in the frontier areas of Canada—the north, the Beaufort Sea, the Mackenzie Delta, and off the east coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador. It is clear that the National Energy Program is geared toward the offshore and the north. Its whole approach to self-sufficiency is that we can catch up on our imports and control them through conservation. It is an important theory because conservation is an easy way to protect the consumption of barrels of oil. However, our record in the past has not been good. It is improving, and hopefully it will continue to improve. Part of the plan is the use of conservation until the late 1980s when oil from offshore and from frontier areas can be brought onstream. Supposedly we would have self-sufficiency by 1990. When we consider the budget and what is contained in this bill, it is obvious that the government is geared toward gutting the industry in western Canada and promoting, as much as possible, government control of the industry offshore and in the north. As the hon. member for Capilano said, as a result hundreds of millions of dollars are being forced offshore, south of the border; thousands of trained professional people are being lost to the United States; and hundreds of rigs are no longer drilling in our basin. Of the 10,000 exploratory wells that were expected to be drilled in western Canada in 1981, only 6,400 will be completed, while a significant part of the oil service industry has been emigrating to the United States in search of employment and adequate returns. Major enhanced recovery initiatives, such as the Imperial Oil Judy Creek project, have been shelved.

It has been estimated by the Canadian Petroleum Association that, in terms of activity levels, the industry has stepped backward about three years as a result of the National Energy Program. It has had a devastating effect upon oil drilling in my area which produces two-thirds of the conventional oil in the nation. The largest Canadian industrial park, which has as its main components oil servicing and oil well drilling companies, has been devastated; $100 million has been lost in that small region of Canada, along with thousands of jobs. It is difficult to understand why the government would create a policy which has driven many experts away from that area of Alberta into the United States.

I should like to refer to a few statistics which have appeared constantly in Edmonton newspapers. For example, hundreds of trailer camps sit idle in Edmonton industrial yards. During the past year more than 650 people have been laid off in the industrial trailer camp manufacturing industry in Alberta. Since the fall of 1980, the Territorial Company in Edmonton has cut back its manufacturing and service staff from 500 people to 271. Six other industrial camp producers in the Edmonton area cut their staff by 30 per cent to 75 per cent. These are people who just a few years ago put their money on the line. They bought a piece of property, put up a building, hired their neighbours to come in and build the trailer camps that would provide catering capacity for the oil drilling industry. Some of them bought small service rigs to assist in the drilling industry. Many of the companies that drilled were unable to make a decent return, and so had no choice but to either leave their rigs idle or move to the United States.

● (2030)

During the past year, manufacturing employment in Alberta has dropped by 8,000 jobs. That is a significant number in a province that had been booming. The demand for workers has increased in other areas, and that has absorbed some of the people who had been thrown out of their jobs.

Other areas, such as the construction industry, have been able to absorb some of the unemployed. The Edmonton Journal conducted a survey of specific businesses. The result shows that more than 1,200 people have already been laid off in the industrial camp manufacturing and camp catering sector. That is a small but intense sector. Company officials predict that the prospects for this winter look even worse. Some industry estimates place the employment impact at between 20,000 and 25,000 jobs, including about 8,000 jobs lost in the oil patch and 15,000 jobs lost in related industries.

Many of these people were producing for the north—for camps and catering facilities working in the Beaufort Sea. I hope that activity will continue in that area so that more people are not laid off there.

There is a lack of incentive for business in the bill, Mr. Speaker. It has been demonstrated that profitability in the United States is about four times higher than in Canada. Quite clearly, then, the government has placed its energy priorities in the offshore, and Bill C-48 was supposed to set regulations to attract industry into that area.

The bill is also supposed to regulate the Canada lands. Obviously there is a great deal of potential in these areas, so we could have expected the government to bring in a bill that would provide incentives and encourage companies to work in the north. But there are only disincentives. There are back-in provisions and there are extraordinary taxes. It does not even allow the deduction of interest as a legitimate expense. Instead of incentives, we find provisions in the bill that will go a long way toward reducing competition, discouraging investment and deterring the industry.

The taxes contained in the bill will have the effect of discouraging all but perhaps three or four companies from working in the north. Of course, Petro-Canada will be the favourite son. As far as real competition in the north and the offshore is concerned, however, there will be virtually none.

Anyone who has heard me speak on this bill in this chamber before will know how strongly I feel about the value of competition in a sector that is supposed to make us self-sufficient in oil and gas in the future. Competition has been very successful in the past, but it has virtually been made ineffective by this bill. I do not intend to go through that argument again. I have already spent some time explaining why the bill will have that result again.

Competition is essential when we deal with an industry such as the resource industry with its implications for our businesses, our economic wellbeing, our very lifestyle and our employment situation. This is the one industry that was growing rapidly and employing new people. At one time it was growing so rapidly that we could not supply enough geologists and chemists to meet the demand.

One of the reasons why competition in this industry is so important is that we now have on the books a bill that states that companies must table their core samples and drilling results after one year.

In many cases, company geologists will find that, although another company drilled a hole a year earlier and found nothing, they, using a different technique and with different abilities and different intellectual capacities, can go back into that area, drill again and find gas and oil. One of the largest gas fields in North America was discovered in this way. A large company had drilled in northwestern Alberta, but it was a dry hole. A year later another company, Canadian Hunter, checked the results, went back to that area and drilled again. It found the largest field of natural gas in North America.

Other small companies with good geologists have been extraordinarily successful in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. They have studied the core samples of other companies, and a year later have found what was missed. That is what competition does, Mr. Speaker.

Two or three companies can explore a huge area, such as the offshore in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. They can have the same geologists, the same people throughout their whole bureaucracy, so there is no big gap in intellectual capacity. If they do not make a find then, as things stand under this bill, other companies will not be interested in going in to test again because they will not be able to afford it.

This area has the greatest potential for oil and gas in North America but we are putting a law on the books that provides incentives for only two or three companies. I find that very hard to understand, Mr. Speaker.

On the one hand, the government is saying that we need to be self-sufficient by 1990 and that we can do that by developing the north and the offshore. On the other hand, it seems to bend over backwards to discourage the very activity it seeks. The only area in which it has been successful is the nationalization program which results in many hundreds of millions of Canadian dollars going out of the country when they are needed to develop our own industry. And this money does not produce one more barrel of oil, Mr. Speaker.

The taxation regime which this bill puts in place imposes a 10 per cent basic royalty; a 40 per cent participating royalty after a 25 per cent return on investment; an 8 per cent gas and oil production tax; and a unique 25 per cent back-in tax. As the hon. member for Capilano said, no other country in the free world has done this. The total of these taxes is over 83 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

The government can claim that it plans to give an exploration grant depending upon the degree of Canadian ownership, and that it does not allow deductions for legitimate business expenses such as interest. That is a very small incentive for an area of so much risk such as the north. Most companies would not consider going into an area like that unless the potential return on investment was between 20 per cent and 25 per cent.

● (2040)

Some countries in the world have used a different system to encourage companies to go into high risk areas. In these countries, a company which finds a well that has a production capacity is allowed to use all the wealth from that oil production to pay off its debt first rather than to pay large interest costs and other costs such as royalties and taxes. Once the debt is paid off, the government then comes in with its royalty and profit tax. This system is much more successful than ours and is having tremendous success in countries such as Norway. I believe that is something we should seriously consider for our northern regions because of the high costs of exploration in those areas. As well, as I said before, we will really only allow three or four companies into the north, companies which can operate under this tax regime.

Let us look at the effect that that may have on self-sufficiency. Let us take a look at a small area around the town of Leduc in the Nisku-Drayton Valley of the province of Alberta. We have been exploring in that area for over 30 years. Tens of thousands of holes have been drilled by hundreds of companies, and the success rate over those 30 years has been very good. Even today, in that very area, we are still discovering oil and natural gas. Just a few weeks ago we drilled a new well which is producing 700 barrels of oil per day. Therefore, if only three or four companies start operating in the north, in an area which is 50 to 60 times the size of the area I have mentioned, unless they are extremely lucky, they will not achieve the same kind of production that could come on stream in the next four or five years if we had good competition and a number of experts working in that area.

The back-in provision in Bill C-48 causes me a great deal of difficulty. I cannot disagree more strongly with this tax. These were not rules upon which companies went into the north and risked their capital. People went into the north, took the risks and stayed a long time away from home, often for questionable returns. Those rules were not there at that time. Companies went up into that region because they expected to find something. They were prepared to take profits that they were earning from producing wells in other parts of Canada and place those profits in the north through incentives that we made available such as a depletion allowance.

Now the minister is saying, "Well, we have a right to this back-in provision because the Canadian taxpayer has, in fact, already paid for it." That is just a lot of nonsense! If incentive is provided for a company to go in there, it does so in good faith. However, when it has made a discovery and a back-in provision is put in place, it is no wonder it puts little trust in the government. How can one have any trust anymore? What private company will put its capital on the line when it is not sure what the government will come up with two years or three years down the way?

Even if we, as a government, wanted to put in a provision which would allow a 25 per cent part of the play to a Crown corporation, surely we should have made that effective in 1982 or 1983, which would have allowed companies to prepare for it. I know that the Dome Petroleum Company, which has spent a lot of time and effort and has been very successful in the north, has placed before us a proposal regarding the 25 per cent back-in in Canada lands. I think it is a proposal which should be given consideration. However, if we want to impose such a tax, and I certainly do not think we need to, surely we should have put the tax in place as of 1981, 1982 or 1983, with 5 per cent one year and 10 per cent the next, or something of that sort. That would have been more fair to the companies which are spending time and effort in that region.

As my time in this debate draws to an end, I want to place on the record the concerns of another group regarding this bill. They are the concerns of the people who have lived in the north for many years. The majority of them are native people. They have particular concern with this bill because it is coming at a time when their land claims are just now moving toward settlement. If a lot of drilling does go on in that area, they are unsure whether they can lay claim to the land where a drilling rig is situated. That concern is not defined in this bill. It is not settled anywhere. I can see only one section which pertains to this matter, Section 5(7), which states:

—nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right or claim that pertained to the aboriginal peoples of Canada prior to the coming into force of this Act—

While the section is included in the hope that it will, in fact, protect native people, they are very concerned about this bill. Nothing in this bill will exempt lands from being claimed. It is unlikely that lands under development will be surrendered by the government to natives claiming them. Harry Daniels, the outgoing president of the Native Council of Canada, has pointed out the very problem that lies in this section. He stated that:

—once the drill rigs are up and production centres on the drawing boards and approved by government, there will be no turning back. Do you really think that under those circumstances the government would withdraw those lands?

These are legitimate concerns. When we look at the COPE settlement, lands that were under exploration at the time were withdrawn from the negotiating area.

Another area of concern is the Norman Wells development. Under this bill, the area around the Norman Wells production sources and refining area is not included. Section 10(2)(d) provides for equitable participation by the aboriginal peoples affected by the particular exploration agreement. This is fine, and this is a good section. However, where will these people get the equity? From where will they get the money? In most instances, these people have no funds at all. They have no capacity for raising funds to participate in an equitable sense. In the southern provinces, in Saskatchewan and Alberta, we have set up trust funds for future generations to participate in the wealth from oil and gas. It would seem to me that we could learn something from this and apply it to the Northwest Territories and Yukon, as well as the native people in that area. It would make sense if we were to put a section in this bill setting up a trust fund which would come from the earnings of oil and gas production in the area, so that these people could use that money to begin equitable participation in the north and, hopefully, make some discoveries on their own. However, without that type of suggestion or initiative, there is simply no way that they can get the equity, the billions of dollars that it costs to drill a well offshore in the Beaufort Sea or in the Mackenzie Delta. This is something which should have been considered, and Section 10(2)(d) will really be meaningless unless we have some way of providing the initial capacity for equity in the north.

For all these reasons, and there are many more which my colleagues have stated, this bill should be withdrawn, pulled apart section by section, and redrafted so that under the new provisions we can reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990 or soon thereafter. If we put this bill in place now, even though some of its rules will assist, we will not reach that goal. We will not have the kind of competitiveness necessary in the north. We will not have the necessary oil companies and people in that area, and we will fail our country miserably.

For that reason, I say that it would be impossible for me to vote in favour of Bill C-48. I hope that the House will seriously consider all the reasons that my colleagues and I are putting forward.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2050)

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I saw the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House this afternoon and it was my hope he would be here tonight because there is something I wanted to say to him. It takes a big man in this life to admit a mistake. The National Energy Program is surely a mistake of tragic proportion for Canadians. The Minister of Energy has had an opportunity, since becoming the minister and having spent some time as critic when we were in government, to learn something about the oil industry. In all fairness to the minister, I think he is a big enough man to admit a mistake.

This National Energy Program will be changed. We are not going to change it here tonight on third reading, but it is going to be changed because there is no incentive left for the oil industry to go out and explore for the oil and gas we desperately need. Strangely enough, there is still 40 per cent of the Canadian population who believe we do not have a problem even today. Some 40 per cent of Canadians do not think we have a problem in terms of future oil and gas supplies. They think this has all been rigged, and that somehow the government and the major oil companies have perpetrated a fraud on the Canadian people. The National Energy Program will be changed, and I would have thought that the Minister of Energy was a big enough man to recognize the need for such a change at this time.

The minister has said there are some anomalies in the program and that Premier Lougheed and the Alberta government can sort out these anomalies and give the industry a few little handouts here and there which will encourage the industry to go back to work. This is not something that requires a band-aid solution, and the Alberta government cannot do it all by itself.

Let me assure you that the National Energy Program needs to be changed in its basic, fundamental thrust. It is completely out of tune with the reality of the industry and the needs of the Canadian people. Essentially, the reason for that is that there is no incentive left.

I have been involved in the oil and gas business for 20 years. The new oil prices under the National Energy Program are very attractive. If I could believe, first of all, that we were going to get that kind of price for our oil and, second, if I could trust the government not to go in and confiscate what I had found, I might be prepared to go and look for it, but I do not trust the government. Therein lies the fundamental problem with the investors today who want to go out and invest in the oil and gas industry.

The investor does not believe in the prices which have been projected forward and, moreover, he believes that if he does find it, the government will not allow him to keep it. Why should he believe that? Every time any investor has gone out and found oil or gas in this country, the federal government or provincial governments have stolen it from him. Why should an investor trust a government today? I would not.

I am prepared to accept the fact that part of the downturn in the oil and gas industry we have seen in Alberta—and we have seen a massive downturn in activity—is a result of the fact that we cannot export our gas. We have huge reserves of shut-in gas in Alberta today and we cannot export it and we do not have the pipeline to deliver it to eastern Canada in place as yet. I accept that fact as part of the reason our industry has suffered a slowdown. The National Energy Program has gone much further than that in causing the disaster we are experiencing in my province of Alberta today.

Let me return to the main objectives of the National Energy Program. When the program was introduced a year ago in the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said the objectives were security of supply, fairness in terms of revenue sharing and an opportunity for Canadians. I guess there is not a member in the House or a person in Canada who would not agree with these noble objectives. We all want energy security, we would like to think revenues are being fairly shared and, above all, we would like to think there is an opportunity for Canadians. Those are admirable objectives.

Has the National Energy Program really provided us with a program to achieve energy security? Do we in fact have a fair sharing of revenues, and has the program created an opportunity for Canadians? From my perspective, the energy program has failed on all counts. In spite of what the Minister of Energy continues to say, there is absolutely no hope that we will be self-sufficient in oil by 1990. I am not going to go back into my arguments; I spoke for 40 minutes a few weeks ago explaining why we are not going to be self-sufficient in oil. This is a myth and a delusion and the Minister of Energy and the officials of Energy, Mines and Resources know it to be a myth and a delusion. It is a sham to pretend to the Canadian people that we can be self-sufficient in oil in 1990. That is simply a falsehood. It is done to sound nice to the Canadian people. It is decisive and it represents confidence, and Canadians above all need confidence. "Let us not face the truth; above all, let us not face the truth. Let us bury our heads in the sands and let us deceive one another", they say.

I can recall Mr. Gillespie, the former minister of energy, saying in 1974, "There is no problem, Canadians, we have a program in place for you and we will be self-sufficient in 1980." Oh, yes, we are self-sufficient in 1980. Certainly we are; we are buying 400,000 barrels of oil a day. This government and the minister of energy are no less deceitful than the minister who preceded him, Mr. Gillespie.

The National Energy Program will result in the need to at least double our imports of foreign oil before the end of the decade. This is a matter of simple arithmetic. There is no great complexity to this at all. Our domestic reserves are declining. Our total consumption is estimated to remain about the same, and there is no viable method in place for making up the difference in the next decade. The minister knows it and Energy, Mines and Resources people know it. Those are the facts. This is not only my opinion, it is the opinion of many knowledgeable authorities in Canada who are not trying to deceive the Canadian people. That is energy self-sufficiency for Canadians? That is oil self-sufficiency by 1990? Forget it, because it is not there.

● (2100)

Let us talk about fairness in revenue-sharing. I suppose that fairness in revenue sharing depends on your point of view. If you are the federal government, you would be rubbing your hands in glee because you just took $55 billion from the Canadian people and you think that is a fair share of revenue. The Alberta government did all right, too. They did not do any worse than the federal government. It got a big slice of pie. The province of Ontario got its pound of flesh.

The consumer is paying 75 per cent of the price for gasoline and heating fuel in the form of government taxes and royalties between the federal and provincial levels. The government leaves the industry 25 per cent to find the oil, produce it, refine it and deliver it to our automobiles. Some may say that is all right, that there is nothing wrong with 25 per cent, that it seems like a good number because, after all, these oil companies are making huge sums of money.

Can we really look at anything in terms of the absolute amount of money which is made? In this case we are looking at literally billions of dollars which oil companies have to spend to build an oil sands plant and hundreds of millions of dollars to drill in the Beaufort Sea and Hibernia. These are also large sums of money which have to be spent. I suggest that the oil companies' rate of return, the amount of money they receive from their invested assets, is less than that of the manufacturing industry in Ontario. In 1980, the oil industry in Canada had an 11 per cent rate of return on its total invested capital, as compared to 13 per cent for all manufacturing industries in Canada.

Is 25 per cent adequate? If it is, why is the oil and gas exploration industry not taking advantage of this opportunity? If this opportunity is so great, why are 150 rigs in western Canada shut down for lack of work, and why have the 214 rigs drilling in western Canada left the country? Tell me why an additional 48 rigs will leave the country in the next few months? And why is it that 161 oil well servicing rigs are not working today and 92 oil well servicing rigs have left the country? An additional 52 oil well servicing rigs will be sold or shipped out of Canada in the next few months. The difference between a drilling rig and an oil well servicing rig is that a drilling rig is used for the original discovery and the oil well servicing rig comes in afterward to be used for remedial work and to make the oil well continue to produce at a sustainable level.

If the National Energy Program is such a great opportunity, why is it that the oil and gas industry has lost the services of 8,000 field workers? Those 8,000 men have worked on those drilling and service rigs as well as all the other equipment involved in the oil industry. Why did 8,000 of these workers lose their jobs? Many of them have left Canada and will not be back.

If this is such a great opportunity, why is it that our independent oil companies have moved in droves to the United States, Australia and other countries? If 25 per cent of the revenues is such a great deal in Canada, why are these companies moving out of Canada in droves? These companies have moved $3 billion worth of capital out of the country in the last year. Did the government not think Canadians wanted to explore in Canada if given an adequate opportunity and the incentive? Does this indicate a fair sharing of revenues to you, Mr. Speaker?

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that some elements of the oil and gas industry have expressed disappointment about the impact of the energy agreement on cash flow. Well, how about that? He goes on to say, "I believe this approach reflects, in most cases, a preoccupation with short-term prospects". When a company is literally facing bankruptcy, as many small oil and gas companies are today, and I do not exaggerate that fact for a moment, is it not surprising that one would be looking at shorter term prospects? If you need evidence, just talk to a banker in Calgary. He will tell you that there are at least a hundred small oil and gas companies which will not be around at this time next year if there is not a change. If you want to buy oil and gas reserves, there is ample opportunity to do so because there are many for sale in Calgary and Edmonton today. As I said, if you were in this position, would you not be looking for shorter-term prospects? After all, you may not be around long enough to look at long-term prospects.

The minister of energy says, "I would think that the ability to explore and develop in Alberta, or anywhere else, would not be enhanced by conveying to investors an overly dark picture of industry prospects on the basis of some short-term and entirely predictable factors." What does he mean? Does he think that oil companies can persuade investors to risk their money on oil and gas exploration by simply telling them that the National Energy Program is a wonderful opportunity and that these investors should get on board? Does he really believe that private investors are that naive? Is the minister suggesting that the industry should be telling private investors that the National Energy Program is a wonderful opportunity to make money? Is he suggesting that we lie to them and try to deceive them into investing their money?

Investors know the facts and have read about them. That is why the oil and gas index on junior oil companies listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange has declined by more than 35 per cent since the introduction of the National Energy Program. I might say that the junior oil companies in Canada have suffered more than the industry as a whole because they have been affected to a greater degree than any other part of the industry. They do not have the cash flow to sustain their operations as do the multinationals which have downstream benefits from petrochemical and refining operations from which they will be able to sustain themselves.

However, the junior oil and gas companies have risked large ammounts of money in the search for oil and gas reserves, and in many cases they have those reserves in the ground and have not yet had the opportunity to develop a sufficient cash flow to sustain themselves because their assets are invested in exploration. They invested their assets in the ground before the National Energy Program began because they felt they had an opportunity to make a dollar.

The minister says that there has been a dispute between the industry and the government over netbacks on oil and gas. Netback is a term commonly used in the industry and it means the net amount left over after expenses and taxes have been taken from gross revenue. The minister went on to say that when the government calculates the netbacks, "we assume the producer is reinvesting heavily and therefore qualifies for tax write-offs." Well, indeed he does. There is no question about that. If he reinvests, he qualifies for tax write-offs. The minister went on to say that the government uses what the government calls an effective tax rate. The effective tax rate is the rate of tax paid after having taken all write-offs. This statement is absolute nonsense. Do hon. members assume that an investor or anyone else does not have to pay his full rate of income tax? Is that the assumption we should make? Sooner or later every investor knows that if he is going to put a dollar into his pocket, he is going to have to pay a dollar to the Crown.

• (2110)

One does not assess business opportunities based on avoiding income taxes. That is what the minister is asking the industry to do, and that is what he is asking the investment community to do. He is asking them to assess their opportunities based on the fact that they can continue to write off, write off, and write off. However, there comes a day when perhaps one does not want to write off any more. Perhaps a person does not want to be in the oil and gas business anymore. An individual investor drills a well and finds oil and gas. Perhaps he wants to go on and do something different and pay his taxes. Perhaps he does not want to reinvest in another oil or gas well. Should he not be allowed to assess his investment without having to take into consideration the fact that he is compelled to go back in and reinvest his profits in an oil and gas venture? The minister's statement is absolutely dishonest, and he knows it. Investors make decisions on paying their income taxes, not avoiding them.

Finally, the third cornerstone of the National Energy Program is opportunity for Canadians. I would like just one Canadian to tell me what opportunities have been created for him by virtue of the National Energy Program. Let hon. members opposite tell the 8,000 rig workers who have lost their jobs what a great opportunity the National Energy Program has provided for them. Maybe the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) would like to go and talk to those 8,000 workers in Alberta and tell them what a great opportunity it has been for them. Let him tell the investors in the small Canadian oil and gas companies what a great opportunity it has been for them. They just lost 35 per cent of their investment, but let the parliamentary secretary go and tell them what a great opportunity it has been for them. Let him tell all the contractors and the engineering firms who were making plans to help build Cold Lake, the in situ project in Alberta. Let him go and tell them. Let him tell all the contractors and engineering firms connected with the Alsands project what a great opportunity it has been for them. Let him tell the manufacturers of equipment in Ontario and Quebec what a great opportunity the National Energy Program has been for them.

Finally, let him tell the consumers what a great opportunity they have had when gasoline prices and home heating fuel prices have doubled since the National Energy Program. A super opportunity! Let him tell the thousands of people in Calgary who were formerly employed in the oil and gas industry and have had to move their families and their homes to the United States to make a living what a great opportunity the National Energy Program has been for them.

In summary, the National Energy Program, in terms of energy security, fairness and opportunity, is an unmitigated disaster. It is a disaster for which all Canadians will pay dearly. They are paying dearly for it right now in the prices of oil products such as gasoline and home heating fuel, and the tragedy of it all is that they are not getting a thing for it. The provincial and federal governments are getting it all, and the consumer is getting nothing. He is not getting energy security, he is not getting opportunity and he is not getting fairness.

I have said that the National Energy Program has denied investors the incentive to invest in their own country and denied workers jobs. Above all, Canadians have been denied the economic growth that would come from a healthy oil and gas industry.

Let me turn more particularly to Bill C-48 which we have before us this evening. Bill C-48 is particularly important because it deals with the opportunity to find truly enormous reserves of oil and gas in our frontier areas offshore, in the Arctic and in the Northwest Territories. On one point I agree with the federal government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and that is with respect to the prominent role Canada lands should play in the future development of energy in Canada. On that point I fully agree. Discoveries in Canada lands should account for an increasingly larger share of exploration and development in the future. The importance of Canada lands to Canada cannot be stressed too much. They are absolutely critical to our energy security and, moreover, they provide us with an opportunity of untold proportions to build a strong Canadian economy by putting people, capital and equipment together to capture the enormous wealth under Canada lands and waters. We really have a fantastic opportunity. We have an opportunity no other country in the world I can think of has to build a strong economy and give the best standard of living to every Canadian, if we want to go out and grasp it and develop our resources in the Canada lands. However, there will have to be some prerequisites to that. We will have to allow the private sector to go out and do it because no government can do that for us, unless we completely nationalize everything in the country and abandon all concepts of the private sector.

The amount of money required to develop our resources in the frontier areas in the Northwest Territories and offshore is staggering. The Royal Bank, to quote a number—I do not know whether hon. members want to believe it or not, but others have come up with the same number—has said that we need $400 billion in the next decade to do that job. I really wonder whether we want to pay taxes to that extent and let Petro-Canada do it. I am not going to get into the Petro-Canada argument tonight, but I will say that Petro-Canada has not done one doggone thing for Canadians since it was invented. It has not found any oil or any gas. It has just cost taxpayers a bunch of money. However, this wealth cannot be captured without incentives to industry, and this is where Bill C-48 completely fails to come to grips with our future. Not only do we have a lack of incentives for industry but we also have confiscation and a regulatory environment which will discourage exploration. That is what Bill C-48 is all about. It is about confiscation, retroactive confiscation and regulation.

This government has a mentality which says, "Jeepers, we cannot allow anybody to make a dollar. If we allow somebody to make a dollar, that has to be wrong". The mentality is that it has to be wrong if we allow anyone to make a dollar, so we will not let anyone make a dollar. The government says we should not allow our resources to be developed by that rotten, dirty old private sector!

My most serious concern—and it has been expressed time and time again in the debate on Bill C-48, not only by myself but also by other members of our party—is the retroactive 25 per cent back-in provision outlined in Clause 27 of the bill. I will acknowledge that the government has moved from its original position of expropriation without compensation. I suppose we can give the government a small amount of credit for at least recognizing that it should not steal without giving a little bit back. The government moved to a scheme which is intended to provide for recovery of prior expenditures made by the initial oil finder. The government will reimburse a company, if it goes out and finds oil, a small portion of its costs. This is called ex gratia compensation, but it is totally unfair. It provides only for prior expenditures made in the discovery area related to successful and developed hydrocarbon accumulations, and ignores the inherent value of the reserves taken by the Crown.

● (2120)

It sounds like a nice argument. The government tells you to go out, find it and then it takes 25 per cent and pays what it cost. However, it will not pay for dry holes that have been drilled. If 12 dry holes are drilled at a cost of $50 million a hole, which is what it costs in Hibernia and the Beaufort Sea, the government will not pay for that. However, if there is a find, it will pay 25 per cent of the $50 million.

Do hon. members really believe that is fair? I have used the word expropriation. It is a strong word. Nobody likes expropriation. To a lot of people expropriation means stealing. Is it difficult to imagine what other term would apply in a situation where assets are literally seized unilaterally without any semblance or attempt at negotiated settlement?

The Saskatchewan government expropriated to potash companies. I will give the provincial NDP government some credit, and it is not often I have cause to say anything good about them. However, at least it sat down and negotiated a reasonable deal based on the fair market value.

The Quebec government wants to take over the asbestos corporation. It is sitting down and talking to the owners, negotiating in good faith what it believes to be a reasonable market value. Not this government, no sir. It expropriates with no semblance of compensation cost. It reminds me of Iran and Libya. Those are the kinds of governments those countries have. They just walk in, take it, and if you do not like it, lump it.

The definition of adequate compensation in the case of a government expropriation is always a contentious issue, but Canadian governments in the past have always recognized a basic fundamental principle that fair and equitable compensation for expropriated assets is not related to historical cost but is based on the market value of those assets.

I find it paradoxical that Petro-Canada, the federal government's own oil company in its acquisition of Petrofina and other companies, accepted fair market value as the appropriate benchmark in its takeovers. It paid a premium over and above the market value for the companies it acquired. I cannot understand why the proprietary rights to petroleum reserves should be treated differently. Will somebody explain that? I do not understand it. Why is it that the federal government pays a premium over fair market value for certain assets and will expropriate other assets at a fraction of the cost? It does not make any sense to me.

Witnesses have stated in connection with the Hibernia field—and for those who do not know where it is, it is offshore Newfoundland—that the present value of the proposed compensation that the federal government proposes to pay when it expropriates the 25 per cent interest is in the range of five to ten cents per barrel of oil, after tax. In the case of Sable Island, which is a gas field, we hope, the value of the compensation works out on an after-tax basis to a mere one cent per 1,000 cubic feet of gas. These estimates of ex gratia payments have been calculated using the government's own formula.

The market value of the reserves taken by the Crown is difficult to determine because such estimates must be based on unknown factors 10 to 20 years hence. It is particularly difficult to establish market values of fields such as Hibernia and Sable Island where the prospective economic and regulatory environment is still unknown. This is also true in the Canadian Arctic. Let us forget about the economics of offshore Sable Island and the Arctic. Let us accept a recent study of an independent consultant in Canada who values Canadian conventional oil reserves at $2.50 per barrel for oil and 40 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for gas. The point I am trying to get across is that ex gratia payment offered in Bill C-48, ranging from five to ten cents per barrel and one cent per 1,000 cubic feet of gas, does not come anywhere close to the fair market value of the reserves being seized.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and other members of the government argue that the back-in provision is simply payment for taxation foregone as a result of earlier tax incentives. Where is the logic in an argument that uses a system of tax incentives which was introduced with the specific intent of encouraging high-risk and high-cost exploration to justify retroactive measures? It reminds me of the budget; what was an incentive yesterday is a loophole today. We provide incentives for people to find oil and gas, then change the rules in midstream and confiscate part of their assets at the same time. Is that an incentive? Furthermore, this reasoning ignores the fact that once commercial production is established, the government realizes its share of the proceeds automatically through royalty and tax payments.

In Bill C-48 we have a 10 per cent basic royalty right off the top and a 40 per cent incremental royalty. The government gets its pound of flesh. On top of that there is income tax. It is not as though the government were not getting anything. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources also said that the back-in provision is needed to capture so-called economic rent, but fiscal measures are already included in Bill C-48 which are used for this purpose, namely the 10 per cent basic royalty and the progressive incremental royalty. The economic rental argument is fundamentally different from the tax incentive argument which was originally used to defend the retroactive back-in. The fact is that the rationale used by the government is indefensible.

The proposed 25 per cent back-in provision is particularly difficult for a number of companies. This 25 per cent back-in provision is in addition to a 25 per cent interest already acquired by Petro-Canada under previous legislation. Under the 1977 amendments to the Canada oil and gas regulations, Petro-Canada obtained a 25 per cent interest in a number of prospects in the Canada lands. With the passage of Bill C-48, this right of Petro-Canada no longer exists and will be replaced by the 25 per cent retroactive Crown share.

Bill C-48 states that where Petro-Canada has acquired a 25 per cent interest after April 30, 1980, the back-in provision of Clause 27 will not apply. In other words, if Petro-Canada acquired the back-in after April 30, 1980, the Crown does not have the right to acquire a further 25 per cent interest. This measure was intended to avoid double dipping by the Crown during the transitional period. However, there are a number of cases—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (2130)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the members present did not give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) to continue, as he is one of the very few members of the House who has any knowledge of the oil and gas industry. It is an indication of how little the hon. members care about knowing the effects of the legislation that is now before us, how little they care about learning what the facts are and how little they care about what they are doing to the industry.

An hon. Member: Where were you in committee?

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member wants to interject, he has to do it loud enough for me to hear, otherwise I will not be able to respond to him.

An hon. Member: What about your age?

Mr. Nielsen: I still did not hear him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker: The hon. member did not miss anything.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Calgary South passed to me a couple of sections from the universal declaration of human rights which he did not use in his speech today but which are very pertinent to our study of this bill. It is a declaration of human rights, which has been signed by Canada and most freedom-loving countries of the world. The first stipulation sets forth that everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others. The second stipulation is that no one shall arbitrarily be deprived of his property. Canada signed that universal declaration of human rights. Now in Bill C-48 we are doing precisely the opposite to the declaration that they signed.

The debate of the bill on second reading, Mr. Speaker, has been most informative, as it has highlighted what I believe to be the arrogance and the authoritarianism of the Liberal Party, the Liberal Party designed in the most unmistakeable terms. Every suggestion that has been advanced by the Progressive Conservative Party for the toning down of the harsh and rigorous provisions of Bill C-48 has been turned down by the Liberal majority in the House. At the same time, the left wing of the Liberal Party in the House, the NDP with scarcely a shred of independence left to it, did everything it could to make this socialist bill more socialist than it is. That is their record and that is their tarnished image and reputation. Of course, the NDP will only be satisfied with a measure embodying complete state control. That is true. That is a fact. Not one of them will stand up and deny that fact.

An hon. Member: Why deny it?

Mr. Nielsen: Did I hear a denial over there? No, I thought not. What they mean to do is to have a complete takeover of the oil and gas industry. From all indications, from my assessment, Mr. Speaker, this is what is waiting in the wings for us.

Meanwhile, the NDP has taken what comfort it could from this measure as an opening gambit in the government's takeover and confiscation policy.

The debate to this point has been an illustration of the divine right of Liberalism to manage—or to mismanage—the affairs of the nation, and to impose on Parliament and the country whatever new theoretical aberration springs from the minds of the policy-shapers in the bowels of the Langevin Building across on Wellington Street.

I am disturbed as a Yukoner and as a Canadian. I am disturbed—

An hon. Member: The hon. member does not have to keep repeating that.

Mr. Nielsen: I am disturbed by the monstrosity—they never get disturbed over there and they certainly would not get disturbed over a bill such as this that is so close to their bosoms. I know what they will do, Mr. Speaker. They will stand against the government on this bill.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not because they do not like the bill for what it is. They will stand with the Conservative Party against the Liberals, but not for the same reason.

An hon. Member: That is for sure.

Mr. Nielsen: They will stand with us because the bill does not go far enough. They want the whole ball of wax. They want to nationalize the whole issue.

An hon. Member: Keep it up.

Mr. Nielsen: That is pure socialism. That is what they stand for. These hon. Grits—

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Chair might, on our behalf, intervene and find out from the hon. member whether or not environmental protection or aboriginal rights is against the policy of the Conservative Party, as well as giving Canadians a window on the industry? It is a very important point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Skelly: Or is that too disturbing?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: I never cease to wonder at the ignorance of hon. members who pose questions such as that, whose familiarity with the lands that this legislation affect is almost nil. I could ask the hon. member who just posed the question whether he has ever been to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Skelly: Is that true of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar)?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Skelly: Yes, the hon. member did ask a question. I represent a riding that is intimately affected by this particular bill, environmental protection and aboriginal rights.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member, Mr. Speaker, would not know Old Crow from Nunatsiaq. The hon. member probably would not even know the direction in which to travel in order to get there. That is his mentality. He is not alone; he is in good company. Generally speaking, that is the southern mentality.

An hon. Member: We know who is the old crow.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not hear that interjection.

An hon. Member: We know who is the old crow.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member like me to tell him where Old Crow is?

An hon. Member: I said that we know who is the old crow.

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members laugh, but actually it is the name of an individual who was highly respected by the people of the village of Old Crow. It is from the name of that old gentleman, who has long since deceased, that Old Crow got its name. The hon. member should not make fun of the ancestor of the Indian people of the village of Old Crow from whom its name comes.

These lands, this appellation that the government puts on Canada lands—and I must say to my colleagues, "do not get sucked in by that phrase Canada lands"—the lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, were not known as Canada lands before the provinces were carved from the Northwest Territories of that day. The subliminal attempt of the government to condition the minds of Canadians to think of these lands above the 60th parallel as Canada lands, hence belonging to all Canadians—to use the expression of the hon. member who interrupted me a moment ago—is just another window on the minds of the nation. It is an attempt to manipulate the public mentality to the point of believing that these, in truth, are Canada lands held in trust for all Canadians and that Yukoners, those in Nunatsiaq and those in the western Arctic, will never enjoy the fulfilment of their manifest destiny, as half the citizens of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are enjoying those lands and those resources in the fullest of time as provinces in this confederation of ours. That is the purpose of using that phrase "Canada lands". As I stated, it is a subliminal attempt to condition and then to manipulate, but again it is a product of the Langevin Building and the Michael Kirbys of the world. I am greatly disturbed as a Canadian by this attempt to expropriate arbitrarily these lands, the nature of the exercise, and the failure of the government to consult either the industry or the governments of Yukon and Northwest Territories. It was a blatant disregard of the rights of the people of the area, including native Canadians. There was not one word of consultation with the elected legislatures of the two territories before the legislation was introduced—laught that one off! There was not one word of consultation with native organizations in either of the northern territories—laugh that one off!

● (2140)

Mr. Keeper: Who voted against consent?

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the hon. member, but I am sorry I do not know the name of his riding.

Mr. Keeper: It was the Tories.

Mr. Nielsen: I take it the hon. member means the motion requiring the consent of aboriginal peoples with respect to any changes to the Constitution concerning aboriginal rights.

Mr. Keeper: Right on!

Mr. Nielsen: He should look at the amendment, he should look at what they did. Those hon. members introduced an amendment which required provincial legislatures to rule on any matter of change in the Constitution affecting aboriginal rights. When it came to Yukon and the Northwest Territories, they did not choose the elected legislatures to be the deciders; it was the federal government. So much for their respect for the rights of northern Canadians; they bypassed them completely. That is why I voted against the amendment. Native Canadians feel betrayed by this bill to the same extent and with the same depth of feeling as they feel betrayed by the constitutional agreement and by the amendment. The majority of the elected representatives of the Northwest Territorial Legislative Assembly are native. They bypassed them with their amendment. What on earth do they exist for in Yukon and Northwest Territories if they are to be bypassed? Are they to be a mere rubber stamp to be ignored consistently?

Mr. Deans: Why did you not offer a subamendment?

Mr. Nielsen: I just finished explaining it.

Mr. Deans: We would have been happy to accept one.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) knows.

Mr. Deans: Instead of always being on the attack, why not be positive?

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member would just zip his lip and await my reply, in a moment—

Mr. Deans: I think I will ask a question.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member like to speak? I will follow him.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I would.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) yields the floor now, he will not be recognized after.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Why did you tell him, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. That would be an interesting discussion after ten o'clock. Now we will hear the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: In the interests of truth and of full information, I am sure the House would want to hear the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain and give unanimous consent to my continuing afterwards. If the Chair would put the question in that way—

Mr. Evans: We will let him ask a question.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member wants to ask a question, let him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As was suggested by the hon. member for Yukon, the Chair must seek unanimous consent. If there is unanimous consent, anything can be done. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cousineau: Let him ask a question.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise simply because the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) encouraged me to ask him a question on the record. If the hon. member did not like the amendment which we placed before the House asking for the consent of native peoples north of the sixtieth parallel respecting any matter pertaining directly to their affairs within the Constitution of Canada, as it will ultimately turn out to be once it is sent back here by the British Parliament, rather than simply rising and voting against it, why did the hon. member not do as we did when we found the amendment of the official opposition regarding Quebec deficient? Why did he not offer either an amendment or enter into a discussion with us to make an amendment to our proposal, which would have brought it into conformity with what he thinks is in the best interests of the people he represents? Thereby he would have allowed the House of Commons to deal with the issue in a way which would have been both honest and responsive to what he feels. I do not deny that he feels strongly that there would be a more appropriate way to deal with the problems of native and aboriginal peoples in the areas of Yukon and Nunatsiaq.

I am somewhat puzzled that the hon. member would decide to make a speech tonight about an amendment which was placed before the House of Commons two days ago and voted on yesterday afternoon. He said nothing about it at the time it was before the House, but tonight he rose and made objection to the content of the amendment when he knew full well that, in the normal spirit of co-operation, we would have been delighted to have taken into consideration any legitimate concern he might have felt. I am quite positive my good friends and colleagues, the hon. members of the New Democratic Party who represent native communities in every part of Canada, would have looked very, very seriously at any sensible proposal. I can only assume—and I put this to the hon. member quite honestly and sincerely—the reason why he did not do that was that he did not think of it at the time, and the reason he is doing it now is that he is attempting to make political mileage, which I am quite sure he will not succeed in doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, when that question is measured by the inch, it has to be a record by any standard in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deans: It is also not bad. Answer it.

Mr. Nielsen: How does one answer a question by the inch?

Mr. Deans: Try answering it by the yard.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member will not even let me respond. Why was he so paranoid? Why was he and his party so paranoid and so obsessed with the idea that above the 60th parallel only native people live? Are there no other northern Canadians there? Their amendment was in the form it was because of their mentality. I might point out, with respect, that the hon. member for Nunatsiaq was not in his seat. It makes me wonder whether he was consulted.

Mr. Deans: Oh yes, he was.

Mr. Nielsen: If he had been, he would have told the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, or whoever was responsible for drafting the amendment, that indeed there are non-native Canadians living above the 60th parallel. They should have thought of that when they drafted the amendment. They should have been alive to the fact that they are legislative assemblies populated by elected representatives in both territories. What they did for the provinces in the amendment, they could have done just as easily for the two Territories. They could have passed those legislative assemblies the same power they sought to pass to provincial legislatures. To be fair to them, the reason is that they did not think of it. If I have complained once in the House, I have complained a hundred times that, through no fault of their own—perhaps it is only the fault of our historic development—the southern Canadian mentality does not reach above the 60th parallel; they do not know what is there.

Mr. Deans: Would the hon. member accept one more short question?

Mr. Nielsen: Sure, I do not mind.

• (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair would need some guidance on whether this is a discussion between two members or whether we ought to be discussing the bill that is before the House.

Mr. Deans: Given that the hon. member claims for himself that marvellous insight into the affairs of northern Canada—and I do not deny that he has insight—why did he not choose to move an amendment that would have given to those elected persons in northern Canada, the powers that he now claims they ought to have had?

Mr. Nielsen: Insight into northern affairs, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Answer the question. You are practising to be a cabinet minister.

Mr. Nielsen: For however short a time it is, I have been there. The hon. member has not and probably never will. I lived there. I have no more insight about Hamilton Mountain than has the hon. member for Nunatsiaq.

Mr. Deans: Why did you not move an amendment?

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member had read the House order, he would know that the amendment was deemed to have been put at ten o'clock. There was no opportunity to amend it because of that House order, and he knows that.

By way of a counterquestion, I can put it to the hon. member that if he had been really sincere, he would have come to me and would have said, "Do you believe that this is good for northern Canadians? Have you any suggestions to make about how it could be made palatable and acceptable both to northern Canadians and to the government? Have you any suggestions about how we can design this so that it will be acceptable?"

He did not do that, Mr. Speaker. I have very grave doubts—although I seem to recall that he indicated that he did—that he even consulted the hon. member for Nunatsiaq about the wording of that amendment. It only went half the distance, and I think they know now that there was a very grave omission in that amendment. I do not think that the New Democratic Party, or the present composition of that party, will forget in future that there are elected legislatures in the north. In future, when they address subjects of that nature, they will make sure to treat those legislatures in the same way they would treat provincial legislatures. They have learned a lesson.

I say that the native people of northern Canada feel betrayed at a time when native claims are being negotiated. This bill can only bring about needless complications. Passage of this bill at the present time will only add to the complexities of native claims and will only make settlement of them more difficult. That was made very clear by the native organizations that appeared and testified before the committee.

I have said before that Yukoners regard this bill as a gigantic land grab of Yukon and Northwest Territories by the government. The Progressive Conservative has always hoped that these territories would one day become provinces. What will happen when that day comes? What will happen if the people of Yukon and Western Arctic decide by a referendum that they wish to join confederation as provinces and petition the federal government to that effect? What happens when those resources have been exploited by the government, not for the benefit of the Yukoners who stand to gain absolutely nothing and not for the financial benefit of all Canadians or even northern Canadians, but for the financial benefit of the Liberal government?

We are witnessing the curious spectacle of a government which has shown no ability to run those operations already under its control, setting out to engage in operations which require a high degree of skill and know-how which, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary South, this government certainly does not possess and which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his parliamentary secretary have not displayed, even to my limited knowledge of the industry. The mess the government made of the budget can only lead one to this conclusion.

This is a government which cannot even run the Post Office, a relatively simple operation, yet it claims to be able to run the highly technical oil and gas industry in a highly competitive world. It could not run the Post Office and so had to get rid of it. It is a government which not only cannot make the trains run on time but cannot even make them run at all, yet it sets out to bring in new oil and gas supplies.

It is a government which took a healthy economy and allowed it to run down, to be destroyed, while the ministers responsible and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were flitting about from pillar to post at public expense. Now it expects to produce a healthy oil and gas industry. This is beyond credulity, Mr. Speaker. Meanwhile, those areas where the government has a responsibility and could show leadership, such as conservation and alternate energy sources, are being neglected. Member after member has risen in this House to protest the arrogant and dictatorial nature of this legislation. There has been no reaction from the government, except one of profound boredom, unless an hon. member happens to make an amusing point. The minister is not here, the parliamentary secretary does not listen and the others just sit there, dumb.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That expression is parliamentary and it happens to be true.

The bill in itself is bad enough and dictatorial powers are bad enough in a country that still calls itself a free country, but statism and nationalization masquerading under the glib term of Canadianization—another one of those subliminal tags—are a betrayal of every single principle of a free economy.

All these things, bad enough in themselves, are immeasurably worse when one thinks of these powers in the hands of the particular group operating the federal government at the present time. I shudder to think how much worse it could become if, by even the most nightmarish stretch of the imagination, that power were to pass into the hands of the little red rump. This government has made no secret of its determination to manipulate the controls of the Canadian economy. It is a group which engaged in a secret uranium cartel, the details of which cannot be known because the Prime Minister swore all the participants to secrecy and appointed one of them, Senator Austin, to the cabinet where his lips are sealed as long as he wants to remain there. This same Senator Austin, who is apparently concerned with the rights of native Canadians under the Constitution—that is his new responsibility—has said that he is in agony over the removal of native rights from that agreement. What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker! This will undoubtedly bring great consolation to those native Canadians who have been left out and who have been betrayed.

I wish I had another 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted, pursuant to Standing Order 40.

Adjournment Debate

● (2200)

[English]

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—EXPORT FINANCE CORPORATION OF CANADA

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the opportunity provided me under Standing Order 43 of the House of Commons to pursue a topic I raised in question period on November 23, 1981. The topic was Export Finance Corporation of Canada Limited. One of the tasks of the special parliamentary committee on national trading corporations was to look into how Canada can increase its export trade and thereby help small and medium-sized businesses. The special parliamentary committee had difficulty obtaining information on the Export Finance Corporation of Canada Limited.

Before setting up any new corporations or systems, it is always wise to see what existing systems are doing and whether or not they are successful. Because I did not receive a satisfactory answer from witnesses appearing before the committee, I tabled a question on the Order Paper dated June 19, 1981. Question 2,559 specifically asked:

What was the date of incorporation of the Export Finance Corporation of Canada Limited and what was its purpose?

Did the corporation meet its obligations and goals and what is its present status?

The answer given to me by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of Canada was that such a corporation was federally incorporated on June 4, 1959, under a special act of Parliament assented to on that day. The department stated:

The object of the corporation was to finance and facilitate exports and imports and the exchange of goods and services between Canada and any nation of the Commonwealth of Nations or other nations, and between agencies or residents of Canada and such nations, or agencies or residents thereof.

The department's answer went on to say that in so far as the act was concerned, the company had met its legal obligations by having filed its financial statement and annual summary for the year ending March 31, 1981, with the director of corporations. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, however, was unable to comment on the performance of the company with regard to its goals and objectives.

Not receiving an answer to my tabled question, I raised the question during question period in the House on November 23, 1981. I would like to quote my question from Hansard at page 13079:

Would the minister inform this house on the success or failure of this corporation in meeting its objectives in financing and facilitating exports and imports?

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs replied:

Madam Speaker, of course it is not a simple matter to determine a corporation's ability or inability to achieve its objectives.

—there is no legal or even political obligation that would allow us to make sure whether or not it is meeting its objectives successfully.

As a parliamentarian in this House of Commons, I feel I have the right to ask for such information and to be provided with the accurate data. I pursued my question further. On December 1, 1981, I received further information from the deputy minister addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). The deputy minister confirmed that such a corporation was incorporated on June 4, 1959. His reply states that the corporation was given ample financing powers to achieve its objectives. At the time of the incorporation, the capital stocks consisted of ten million shares with a par value of $5 each. The deputy minister went on to say that the corporation is currently dormant. The current capital base stands at $20,000 and is owned by seven major Canadian chartered banks. The board of directors, which meets once a year, consists of 14 officers from these banks and is currently chaired by Mr. J. J. Dowsley from the Toronto-Dominion Bank. If the corporation is dormant, why did I receive, on form 3, an annual summary under Section 133 of the Canada Corporations Act, dated March 31, 1981, from the active board of directors, 14 of them to be exact? The answer from the deputy minister goes on to state:

In April, 1968, the Board of Directors of the corporation decided after consultation with the Minister of Finance and the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, to stop accepting new business due to the imminent incorporation of EDC in 1969, and to the pattern and direction of short-term interest rates in the New York market that made fixed rate medium and long-term export financing rather difficult for the corporation.

● (2205)

If the board of directors in 1968, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, and the Export Credits Insurance Corporation decided to stop accepting new business due to the incorporation of EDC in 1969, then how can the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of Canada state that the company has met its legal obligations by having filed with the director of corporations its financial statement and annual summary for the year ending March 31, 1981?

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. McCauley) whether the seven major Canadian chartered banks are using the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. as a gimmick to avoid payment of taxes to the government?

There are just too many unanswered questions surrounding the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. Therefore, I appeal to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) of Canada to tell the House what is the status of this corporation since it stopped accepting new business since 1969, and why is it still in existence? Have the banks benefited from any tax write-offs by keeping it in existence even though it is doing no business at present? Since Canada is losing its fair share of exports on the world market, will this corporation be reactivated to finance and facilitate exports?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis). He knows quite a bit about the subject and there is no point in my reviewing what he already knows.

As he has stated, the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. was incorporated by special act of Parliament in 1959. It was founded by the major Canadian banks. Through a series of mergers, the present shareholders are the Bank of Montreal, the National Bank of Canada, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Toronto-Dominion Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Mercantile Bank of Canada and the Royal Bank of Canada.

The underlying intention of the special act was to involve the chartered banks in medium-term export financing. In 1968 the operations of the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. became inactive owing to prevailing circumstances at that time.

Section 6 of the act includes the following wording:

> The corporation, in the furtherance of its objects and not excluding the other powers necessary to their achievement, may
>
> (A) Purchase, discount, rediscount, sell, negotiate with or without its endorsement or guarantee notes, drafts, cheques;
>
> (B) Purchase and sell securities, coin, bullion and exchange and guarantee securities;
>
> (C) Make or underwrite a loan or a series of loans;
>
> (D) Participate with buyer and seller in an export-import transaction;
>
> (E) Deal with financing applications for resale to a lender within or outside Canada on a commission or fee basis;
>
> (F) Purchase with its funds preferred or common stock in any other corporation.

The corporation was active until 1969 when circumstances were such that the corporation ceased active operations, but has maintained its corporate existence by making yearly filings of its annual summaries and financial statements with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Each year since that date the directors have discussed the advisability of reactivating the corporation. They intend to keep it in existence until such time as it can be usefully reactivated. While the corporation was active, it operated successfully. As an example, the 1963 annual report of the chairman of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, now replaced by the Export Development Corporation, indicated that during that year, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation sold to Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. $27 million of notes it held which were guaranteed by the Export Insurance Corporation. In 1964 similar sales of notes were made to Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. in the amount of $23 million.

In April 1969 the president of Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. spoke with officials of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation concerning the pending creation of the Export Development Corporation. It would appear that interest rates and the replacement of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation by the Export Development Corporation were among the factors causing Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. to become inactive. The corporation remains in good standing as a special act corporation.

● (2210)

THE BUDGET—EFFECT ON INSURANCE POLICIES AND RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak tonight on the effect of the budget on insurance policy holders, insurance companies and RRSP holders. I placed a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) on December 2 regarding the effect of the budget's new tax measures on the ability of average Canadians to save through insurance and RRSP policies. The parliamentary secretary answered only the part of my question dealing with RRSPs. But what about insurance policies?

I was pleased to see that, on November 19, a Liberal backbencher, posed the same question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the minister stated:

> I would be happy to consider any refinements that can be possible in these measures.

So I hope we will be hearing about some of these refinements tonight because there is considerable concern across the country at this devastating new tax.

Changes are needed now because average Canadians simply cannot afford these new taxes. They will cause higher unemployment, greater reliance on government operated pension plans, more welfare recipients, less self-initiative in general, because people can no longer attempt to fend for themselves, and here, Mr. Speaker, I offer a few examples of what individuals and insurance companies are saying about the new tax proposals:

> As women now outlive men by an average of six or seven years, and inflation has led to a diminution of their available resources, industry has pointed out that 80 per cent of individual life insurance policies in 1980 were bought by people with incomes of under $25,000. If working guidelines around the arbitrary application of the accrual tax concept on both insurance and annuity contracts cannot be worked out a large supply of long-term capital for national development will disappear. Personal initiative to province income maintenance on death and retirement will be discouraged, leading to increased pressure on government and will aggravate Canada's ability to compete in world trade. The insurance industry will not be able to sustain its field or home office staffs. This will increase unemployment and, more importantly, harm millions of Canadians who cannot afford accountants and lawyers, but rely on our agents for counsel.

That is agents of insurance companies, Mr. Speaker. Here is a statement by a life insurance salesman who lives in Winnipeg. He states:

> I am bound to protest against the recent budget proposals which single out for attack whole life insurance, which is the best means of protecting dependants against the premature death of the main supporter of the family.
>
> As you know, many people, including government, have been expressing great concern about the elderly poor, especially widows. To the extent that new tax measures discourage the purchase of permanent life insurance there will be no more elderly poor and more widows who will be dependent on the taxpayer for support. I know of no other advanced country which attempts to tax the income on life insurance savings, an income which no one can touch during the lifetime of the policyholder, and if it is touched under the present system, the gain will be taxed. In other advanced countries the provision of protection to dependants through life insurance is positively encouraged, not discouraged.
>
> As you know, permanent life insurance provides a means for gathering millions of small amounts of savings into large investment pools which have done much in the past to develop Canada. The inhibiting of these savings will slow down the development process.
>
> If the government is really serious about being positive in its attempt to develop this country, it should be seeking to encourage savings through life insurance rather than by taking negative action to scare people away from protecting their families.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have received this from a constituent who is very concerned about these new tax measures, and she points out:

> I can appreciate their attempt to close tax loopholes for the rich, but not threaten the financial security of millions of ordinary Canadians while all they are trying to do is save for retirement or an untimely death which could bring a great hardship on a young family.

Another constituent, an employee of an insurance firm, states:

> There are three portions of the proposals which concern me particularly:
>
> 1. The budget would require a policyholder to report accrued investment income on his or her policy or annuity every three years even though no income is actually received.

● (2215)

> 2. A portion of many life insurance policies will be taxed on death—a proposal similar to one made in 1977 which on closer examination received the disrepute it deserved.
>
> 3. In addition, the budget proposes that the amounts paid by employers for health and dental benefits be included in the taxable income of employees.

If deferred profit-sharing plans are virtually eliminated, this will affect many small-business owners and their families who are trying to build adequate retirement plans. Non-related DPSP employees will have their contributions reduced up to $2,000.

Interest on borrowed money for deferred income plans such as RRSPs and DPSPs will no longer be deductible.

It is vital that a concerted effort be made to persuade the government to desist from its apparent plan to discourage individual estate and financial planning. Many Canadians are proud enough to want to be totally independent and not have to rely on government welfare and pension plans, which are inadequate, unreliable and costly.

I hope we hear some words of encouragement from the parliamentary secretary tonight that the government is considering dropping these taxes on insurance policies.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond tonight to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) because there are some misconceptions. Some information has not been widely disseminated with regard to these two topics, RRSPs and whole life insurance, and I think it should be.

First of all, the budget makes no change in the amounts deductible as RRSP contributions. The only difference is that now there is no special incentive for borrowing money to make RRSP contributions, since the interest on money borrowed to put into an RRSP will no longer be deductible from non-investment income. Individuals using their own funds, however, and investing these in RRSPs are not affected. Canadians can still obtain great benefits from contributing to RRSPs because of the deduction for the contribution itself. A person, for example, contributing $3,500 to an RRSP who is in a 25 per cent tax bracket will save $875 in taxes in the year that that contribution is made, which is a major saving.

The tax on accrual of investment income earned with life insurance policies will not affect the retirement savings of most Canadians. The investment income on life insurance policies purchased through RRSPs will continue to be sheltered from tax. For other policies many low and middle-income people will find that the investment income will not be taxed because of the $1,000 investment income deduction which is currently in the tax system. This deduction ensures that for taxpayers with no other investment income any amount of investment income from life insurance policies up to $1,000 will be exempt from tax in a year.

It is important to note that before the budget, many lower and middle-income individuals had to pay tax when they surrendered life insurance policies before death because all of the investment income was taxed at one time when it was taken out of the whole life policy. Now that income can be reported as it accrues, and it may escape tax completely because it is covered by the $1,000 per year investment income deduction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.19 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 4, 1981

The House at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, whereas as the font of all Canadian wisdom, our own Delphic oracle, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has made it clear that Canada's high interest rates are not the fault of the big spending policies of the government but are somehow our fault, and in fact are primarily the fault of one poor but omnipotent reporter in the press gallery, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House express its deep and reverent gratitude to the Prime Minister for his latest pronouncement, which indicates clearly that, for the man who says he cares so deeply about gaps, the gap between himself and the truth has not narrowed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous, consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, 80,000 fewer young Canadians are employed now than at this time last year. This deplorable situation has arisen because of many years of gross neglect of our real problems by a Liberal government preoccupied with everything and anything but economic and industrial planning. Band-aid solutions and temporary make-work programs are not the answer. Long-range planning priorizing research and development is. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this government come to its senses and immediately appoint a minister whose sole responsibility is research and development and that the entire field of research and development in Canada be given top priority.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

MEASURES AFFECTING LAID-OFF WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that thousands of workers across Canada have lost jobs because of this government's stupid mismanagement of the economy, and in light of the fact that prior to the November 12 budget workers who lost jobs through permanent plant closures could convert retiring allowances into RRSPs without being subject to tax, a possibility the budget has now foreclosed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the Minister of Finance rescind any new tax burdens on workers who have been victimized by permanent lay-offs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SUPPORT FOR SALES CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas CMHC quite rightly is conducting a sales campaign on the properties it owns in order to recoup its heavy costs from these properties, and whereas this campaign, again quite rightly, includes special marked-down mortgage rates as an incentive for investors buying large groups of properties, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni):

That this House urges Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation

(a) to continue its sales campaign to restore its financial health;

(b) to consider expanding its sales incentives so that individual buyers can get the same marked-down mortgage rates; and

(c) to consider including current residents whose mortgages are backed up by CMHC so that they too can have marked-down rates and other incentives on their renewals to help them keep their homes instead of dumping them back on to CMHC.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, it is appropriate that the House should be dealing with this motion today because it coincides with the release by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation of the latest statistics showing another sharp decline in housing starts. Today we are facing the worst housing crisis in the history of the country. It is perhaps without parallel since the Second World War. Today Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation reported another 30 per cent decline over one year in the number of housing starts.

We are told by none other than the minister responsible for housing himself, in a document which was leaked—the minister later tried to disown it but it has his signature on it; it was submitted to his cabinet colleagues—that we need 220,000 housing starts a year. We are told by the same authority that the best we can hope for is 135,000 housing starts. That is a shortfall of 80,000 housing starts. Included in that is the critical situation facing the country in rental accommodation.

• (1110)

We are told by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and by Statistics Canada that the major metropolitan areas of the country are now facing a zero vacancy rate. We have already arrived at that unhappy state in the city of Oshawa. We are close to it in the city of Toronto. We are almost there in the city of Calgary. If anyone reads this morning's Citizen, he will see we have practically arrived there in the city of Ottawa.

What does that mean? Let me again quote the authority of the Minister of Housing as contained in that famous leaked document. The minister predicted that this situation, this dire shortfall in rental accommodation in the country, would create a black-market situation. He even went so far as to talk about key money.

Anybody who remembers World War II will know what key money is. Key money is that black-market device whereby, if you are desperate for an apartment, you go to the doorman, give him $100, and in exchange for that $100 pay-off he will advise you that there is an apartment available. He will then take you to show you the apartment. For another tip, he will arrange to give you a lease on that apartment, in exchange for which you have to pay him every month you are there.

That is the black-market situation we are facing in this country which has been created by the deliberate negligence of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The minister predicted to his cabinet colleagues that not only are we going to have a black-market situation, but a situation where young people will have to stay with their parents, where people will have to double up, share apartments and share kitchens. The only parallel you can find to that situation today is in the Soviet Union. We have a Moscow kind of housing situation in Canada today.

What do we get from the minister of housing? He tells the young people of this country to lower their expectations, to sit on orange crates, to go back to the standards we had 20 years ago. What a shameful performance from this minister! What a shameful performance from this government! This government stands indicted by its own negligence. I can refer to none other than the motion put forward by one of their own supporters. If the Minister of Housing had any principles he would stand in his place today, say he has failed, and that he will resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is apparent that the hon. member has referred to a document prepared in preparation for the budget. I am very pleased that he has joined with me in my concern expressed to the cabinet which was responsible for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introducing into the budget $350 million to address the very problems that the hon. member raised. I am very pleased that he identified the question of rentals because it is that kind of program that this budget addresses.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise to support this motion that has just been put before the House, 100 per cent. I say to the minister who has just spoken that with the profit figures of the banks which are out today, if the government will put an excess profit tax on the banks, just to leave profits at the same high level they were last year, it will have $700 million additional revenue that could be put into housing which the people of Canada need. That would be concrete action.

Madam Speaker: Order. It being 11.15 a.m., I must interrupt the debate for oral questions.

• (1115)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVISE BUDGET PROVISIONS AFFECTING INVESTMENT AND JOB CREATION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am sure the minister is aware that this morning Statistics Canada issued a report which indicates how badly the situation with respect to employment is going in this country as the days go by. The minister will know that the report this morning indicated that there are 40,000 jobs lost in one month alone, which brings it to a total of 128,000 jobs lost in this country since August, and that there are 37,000 more people this month looking for work. Will the minister bring into the House revisions to his budget which will allow for the expansion of investment and the creation of jobs? If he will, when, and if not, why not?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member obviously observed that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate dropped in Canada according to the statistics this morning.

An hon. Member: The minister brags about it.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe that the important thing is that instead of having an increasing seasonally adjusted unemployment rate, we have a decreasing unemployment rate for this month.

An hon. Member: By how much?

Mr. MacEachen: And that compares, it seems to me, at least favourably with the United States, where there has been a sudden increase in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in this month.

As the hon. member has recounted his statistics, Madam Speaker, he might have put them in a perspective so as to note that there is a decline in the seasonally adjusted rate this month, in contrast with the United States where there is an increase. The hon. member has asked about the government's intention with respect to the budget and its economic plans. I would tell the hon. member that the strategy in the budget is intended to reduce inflation and inflationary expectations. In my view, that is the best possible way to provide for resumed economic growth and job creation in Canada.

An hon. Member: Tell that to one million Canadians.

* * *

THE BUDGET

REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, it is tough to be seasonally adjusted if you are unemployed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: That is the fact of the matter. Madam Speaker, the minister has also received representations from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They have asked the minister to reopen the budget and look for revision in ten specific areas, chief of which is with respect to interest deductibility so as to allow for the expansion of investment and the creation of more jobs by small and medium-sized businesses. I should like to ask the minister two questions in connection with their brief to him. Will he give consideration to all of their points but, in particular, will he give consideration to a revision in the limitation of interest deductibility?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have heard the views expressed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I will have an opportunity to deal in detail with the representations that have been made, many of which are based upon misinformation. I believe that once the full information gets out to the small-business men in Canada, they may take a different view of the accuracy of the representations that are coming from the leadership of that association.

I have already stated that I was prepared to listen to representations coming forward with respect to the impact of the budget, Madam Speaker. I indicated that in the House, and it applies as well to the measure relating to interest deductibility. I am quite prepared to examine the impact of that measure and to lay out further facts which would indicate that the notion that, in some way, the changes will impact heavily upon investment in Canada is greatly exaggerated. I believe we ought to keep that in perspective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF PROVISIONS ON EMPLOYMENT IN INSURANCE INDUSTRY

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the insurance industry in this country employs in the order of about 60,000 people, and tens of thousands of others depend upon the viability and strength of the insurance industry. The insurance industry, as well, has made representation to the minister asking him to revise those aspects of his budget which interfere with the stability of their business.

• (1120)

There are thousands and thousands of jobs now at risk in the insurance business. These people know figures, they know facts. They want to know whether or not the minister will give consideration to the things they need to ensure that their businesses remain stable and that their jobs are maintained. Will the minister look at their brief and bring in revisions to the budget which will allow the insurance industry to survive?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat that I am open to suggestions from the hon. member as to how the situation can be improved.

Mr. Nielsen: Do you want to meet with our caucus tonight?

Mr. MacEachen: I would say, however, that we will have an opportunity in the House of Commons to consider all these measures in detail. They have to come before the Committee of the Whole. It will be possible then to hear the views of hon. members and to provide the full information which is required in order to make a judgment on the points the hon. member raised this morning.

RETROACTIVITY OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING RETIREMENT INCOME

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my questions are also addressed to the Minister of Finance. If he is asking for suggestions from our party, he should withdraw the whole budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: While the minister has been away the budget has come under heavy attack, even from members of his own caucus. Many budget proposals are unfair because they are retroactive. They impose heavy tax penalties on people who made their plans in good faith. To alleviate the real anxiety of many Canadians, will the minister grandfather those provisions which restrict income tax deductions on pension rollovers, severance pay and income annuities, particularly for farmers because it is often the only retirement plan they have, so that people may plan in some confidence for their retirement? Will he state the changes he might make today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member suggested that I withdraw the budget. I want to assure her that this is not a Jerusalem budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, it has been suggested to me that it is a Damascus budget. Since the minister did not answer, since he will tell his Liberal caucus but he will not tell the House of Commons, I will proceed to my next question.

A second major criticism is that under the budget the minister is collecting taxes from people before they have the money to pay them, forcing them to banks or into bankruptcy. For instance, the minister is taxing income accumulating in life insurance policies before it is paid. He is taxing capital gains on the sale of property before payments are actually made. Where does the minister expect Canadians to find the cash to pay his new taxes on income they have not yet received?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: Borrow it from the banks!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the budget debate resumes on Monday. We will be in Committee of the Whole in due course on all these measures.

An hon. Member: Where will you be?

Mr. MacEachen: It is not my intention to debate the over 122 measures which are in the income tax changes, each day on orders of the day. I assure you, Madam Speaker, that is not my intention.

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

TAXATION OF PROFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance said that his budget is not a Jerusalem budget; it is certainly not a New Jerusalem budget!

Almost all the bank profits are now in, with Toronto-Dominion up 40 per cent; Royal up 50 per cent; and today the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce up 62 per cent. If the government levied an excess profits tax that would still leave the profits of those banks at the same high level that they were at last year, the government would have an additional $700 million. Why will the minister not do that and bring mortgage relief to the thousands of Canadian families who need it from coast to coast?

● (1125)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is completely rhetorical. He is not asking for any information, he is making a little speech. And I thought it was all right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO BANK ACT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister obviously does not care one whit about the thousands of families who are losing their homes. That is clear day after day in the House. Last week he said he did not have the authority to require the banks to put up mortgage money that the average family could afford. In light of the truly exorbitant bank profits, will the minister now commit the government to changing the Bank Act to make it mandatory for the banks to bear their share of the burden for our housing problems and provide mortgage money for the average family at rates that family can afford. If so, we on this side of the House will guarantee passage of that bill within a matter of days, if not hours.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has repeated a false statement, that thousands of Canadians are losing their homes as a result of high interest rates. That, of course, is a false statement, and the hon. member has repeated it again and again, "thousands of Canadians are losing their homes." That is false. We have made provision in the budget to ensure that no Canadian family will lose a home because of high interest rates. That is a fact, but the hon. member refuses to acknowledge that fact.

The hon. member says, "You know, if you bring in a bill to discipline the banks, I will support it." I do not take the hon. member's suggestion as serious. When we brought in a bill to put taxes on the oil and gas companies, did we get any help from the NDP? When I moved in the budget to deal with the tax expenditures, as he had been requesting for weeks before the budget, did he stand up and vote for that? Not at all.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SPECIAL JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I can tell the minister that, if in addition to closing a few loopholes he had also not reduced the tax on the two richest categories, he might have got some support from this side of the House.

I will put my last question to the minister. Since we now have 900,000 plus unemployed—I am sure that touches him very deeply—and we have a need for an additional 50,000 housing units in this country and there are unemployed Canadians in almost every sector, will he consider bringing in special measures that will create the houses that are needed, and that will provide jobs for men and women who would rather be working and paying taxes than collecting unemployment insurance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes a suggestion, and then, if one accepts it, he always adds further requests, as he did during the whole constitutional debate. That is why I am a bit nervous about acceding to any of his proposals with respect to the banks or anything else. If I brought in a bill to discipline the banks he would say, "You have not included the credit unions, and I will not support you until you do that."

* * *

MINES AND MINING

ANNOUNCED CLOSING OF MINE AT URANIUM CITY, SASK.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday Eldorado Nuclear Limited announced a shutdown of its operation at Beaverlodge mine in Uranium City, Saskatchewan, throwing 830 employees out of work and devastating Uranium City. That is a tragedy indeed. The uranium support and supply centre of Saskatoon will also suffer very serious and adverse consequences as a result of this move. In the past Eldorado kept Beaverlodge operative when the price of uranium was $6 per pound. It had a device for stockpiling through Uranium Canada.

In view of the tragedy that will befall northern Saskatchewan, will the minister impose a moratorium on the shutdown of this mine so that we can examine the alternatives and consider the viability of the mine? This is especially important in view of the fact that Eldorado has recently moved 45 new families in and has made significant capital expenditures on this operation at a time when we are suffering unprecedented lay-offs in the country.

Mr. Nielsen: Get the old cartel going.

● (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the decision has been taken by Eldorado with a great deal of concern and a great deal of consideration. As a matter of fact the decision has been taken not to close the mine until June, 1982, in order that there will be ample time for the necessary measures to be taken to ensure that the families concerned will be able to find other employment and find another—

Some hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Lalonde: —location. In the mining industry there is demand for competent workers, if my hon. friend does not know about it. This is a decision which has been taken as a last resort. It would cost the company over $500 million over the next five years to continue operation of this mine.

As my hon. friend knows, mining is non-renewable. Mining at Uranium City is in an area where ore is declining. There has been a decline of the quality of the ore by something like 40 per cent; plus there has been a decline in the price by 50 per cent. Two other mines under private ownership in the area have closed in the last few years. Eldorado has tried to continue the operation of this mine as long as possible.

I have made personal examination of the issue. Unfortunately, I have had to come to the conclusion that the Eldorado decision was the right one in the circumstances.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE BE ALLOWED TO ASSESS SITUATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I for one, am not prepared to accept the answer of the minister. I would suggest to the minister that this decision would not have taken place if the mine were located in the minister's riding of Outremont. It is reminiscent of the fiasco which occurred when the government wasted hundreds of millions of dollars in the relocation of the refinery at Port Hope at the direction of the minister.

Some hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are a number of questions which must be answered before a precipitous step of this sort can be taken. For example, the minister has indicated that the spot market is low. The fact is that Eldorado has a number of long-term contracts. At what price is uranium being sold at long-term contract? Other questions, indeed, involve the question of stockpiling—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seems to be enumerating many items. I would like to know which one is the object of the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, that is the problem. There are so many questions left unanswered by the minister that I will ask him the following question. Eldorado Nuclear is a Crown corporation which is accountable to Parliament. I think parliamentarians have a role in this matter. Will the minister not agree to forestall this closure to allow a parliamentary committee to make an independent assessment of the viability of the mine and the alternatives available to Eldorado in connection with this mine?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that yesterday the President of Eldorado Nuclear Limited met with the Premier of Saskatchewan and has examined this issue. I would also like to tell the hon. member that I resent the kind of insinuation he has attributed on a purely partisan basis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: What do you know about being partisan?

Mr. Lalonde: As ministers of the Crown we are acting for all Canadians, and are trying to make decisions in the interests of all Canadians. The decision has been taken by Eldorado Nuclear on its own, as a Crown corporation.

I remind my friend that I am appearing before the parliamentary committee on national resources on Monday night. If he wishes Eldorado to be present, I would certainly be very happy to make arrangements for Eldorado to answer any questions my friend may have to ask. Therefore the hon. member does not have to make a big fuss about it. If the committee wants to hear Eldorado, Eldorado will be there on Monday night.

Miss MacDonald: Ten minutes for 800 jobs.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. On previous occasions, including yesterday, the minister told the House that information I presented with regard to CMHC being aware of certain budget information three days in advance of the budget was incorrect. Yesterday he completely denied that anyone outside government, namely, Studio S&B in Montreal, knew anything about the budget in advance. I presume that the minister is aware that Ray Hession, President of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has publicly stated that the facts which I gave were correct. I also presume he is aware that last night the CBC television news quoted the vice-president of CMHC as saying that my facts were substantially correct.

I therefore ask the minister, will he now change his story for the fourth or fifth time? Will he now tell the House exactly what did happen? Finally—

An hon. Member: Will he tell the truth?

Mr. Cossitt: —will he resign his portfolio because he has displayed absolutely nothing else but total incompetence? He apparently does not even know one thing about what is going on inside his own department.

Mr. Nielsen: Come clean!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the ad to which the hon. member has referred is one that I have in my hand. It is a document which stresses "attention to home owners". It has telephone numbers which they can call to solicit information on the budget material. This ad was published the day after the budget, and it was published in most newspapers the weekend after the budget was announced.

Mr. Nielsen: We know all that.

Mr. Cosgrove: It was not delivered to the newspapers until after the Minister of Finance had completed his speech in the House.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials had charge of the security of this document—

An hon. Member: What about S&B?

Mr. Cosgrove: —until such time as it was delivered to the newspapers after the speech. They were assisted by some employees of the firm of S&B in Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: They were assisted by typesetters who assisted in setting up the document. It was prepared by CMHC in anticipation that the recommendations to the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —by me would be accepted and—

Mr. Nielsen: Ah, ah!

Mr. Cosgrove: —would be in the budget as announced. When that was confirmed, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation authorized the release of those documents which were in sealed envelopes until that time, to be distributed to the newspapers, as I have indicated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: But the printers had it before.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, in view of the tendency of the minister to go out on limbs and let himself be sawed off, I will not direct my supplementary question to him because I would not want him to fall again. I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

It now seems that there is substantial evidence to indicate that the House may have been intentionally misled. I choose my words with regard to this matter as carefully as possible. In view of the admission of the president and the vice-president of CMHC that they had budget information in advance which they gave to S&B Studio in Montreal, also in advance of the budget, will the government support referring this matter to a parliamentary committee for a complete investigation of all the facts; and, if it will not support this, why will it not? If it has nothing to hide, why would it not support such a thing? Can the Prime Minister tell us now whether he will support such a thing so that the air will be cleared, or will he simply save time by asking for the resignation of an incompetent minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if I were the hon. member I would not ask for the minister's resignation. I would ask him supplementary questions which the hon. member said might cause him to fall off the limb. Surely that is what the hon. member wants. He wants the minister to fall down. Why does he not ask him supplementary questions?

Mr. Cossitt: Why does the Prime Minister not answer my question?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member wants the minister's resignation.

Some hon. Members: Send it to a committee.

Mr. Trudeau: He does not want his resignation. Does the hon. member want his resignation or not?

Mr. Cossitt: Pitiful!

* * *

[Translation]

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE OF EVENTUAL PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC IN FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. Even if the flags are flying at half mast in Quebec on government buildings, Quebecers still want to keep developing their economic and social sectors within a federal framework, Madam Speaker. Last week, the Minister of Agriculture confirmed that Mr. Garon, the Quebec minister, would not let a delegation from the federal government attend the Salon de l'Agriculture, although the federal government had contributed $96,000 for the Salon.

Madam Speaker: Order please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Roy: My question is as follows: Has the government of Quebec indicated an interest in the federal-provincial conference on the tourist industry which happens to be an important branch of the Quebec economy? Has the government of Quebec shown an interest in participating in this important event or will Quebecers once more be penalized by a government that is clearly separatist.

Madam Speaker: Order please.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question, and I am sorry to have to inform him that the government of Quebec, through its spokesman for tourism, Mr. Biron, has publicly announced that it would not take part in the federal-provincial conference on tourism to be held next week. I very much regret this decision, Madam Speaker, since we have been working with all my colleagues in the provinces and territories for more than two years in order to develop a national tourism plan at the request of the industry itself, the provinces and the federal government, following consultations with the private sector in 1978 and 1979. The plan is about to be finalized, and I do hope that, perhaps not next week at the conference but sometime during the weeks and months to come, our colleagues in the Quebec government will agree to take part in this important exercise that will benefit both the Canadian economy and the Quebec economy.

* * *

● (1140)

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT URANIUM CITY, SASK. BE DESIGNATED SPECIAL ASSISTANCE AREA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member from Saskatoon. It is directed to the Minister of Finance. I think the minister is aware that, by his decision yesterday, Eldorado Nuclear in effect is wiping out a town of 3,000 people. I think there are 700 or 800 miners but everyone else depends on the mine, including all the small-business men.

This involves loss of jobs, houses, and the livelihood of the small-business men.

Would the Minister of Finance now declare Uranium City a designated area for special assistance, which I believe could be done for a region of high unemployment. This was done for Cape Breton and for Windsor. Could he guarantee the people of Uranium City, Saskatchewan, that their area will be designated for special assistance because of this tragedy to the ordinary person living there?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, over the last few weeks Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. has been working with the various departments of the government trying to make use of all programs available under federal government authority so as to make sure the families concerned will have the utmost support from those programs. In addition, the president of Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. met with Premier Blakeney and has offered to transfer to the government of Saskatchewan all the assets owned by Eldorado in Uranium City at Beaverlodge so that the government of Saskatchewan can use those facilities in any way it wants. We are taking all the steps that are possible to ensure that the families concerned will be looked after.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have two questions. I understand there is still a fair amount of money in the program for designated areas. First, could the minister tell us by early next week whether he will designate this area as an area for special assistance? Second, could the minister give a commitment to the 3,000 people of Uranium City that there will not be any financial losses because of a decision made by a federal Crown corporation, a decision which was beyond the means or responsibility of any worker or resident of Uranium City?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I cannot give the assurance that I will be able to give an answer by the middle of next week. As I have said, the decision to close the mine will become effective only in June, 1982. We have tried to give as long a lead time as possible for all the adjustments to take place. I am sure there will be considerable discussions with the government of Saskatchewan and within the federal government as to the best action to take in that regard.

Obviously, when a mine closes there are other people affected besides the miners themselves. I do not know whether there has ever been a case of guarantees that no financial damage would be suffered by anybody as a result of the closing of a mine, whether closed by a Crown corporation or by a private corporation. Indeed, the same thing applies when a new mine starts up—there is nothing to prevent people from making money. When a mine comes into operation and is developed, many people benefit. However, when the ore has been extracted, naturally a mine has to close.

THE BUDGET

CMHC ADVERTISEMENT—SWEARING OF STUDIO WORKERS TO SECRECY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked earlier of the minister responsible for housing. The minister stated in the House today, as he stated on national television last night, that he took a long shot, and by happenstance and good luck it paid off. That is what he is trying to ask this House to believe, and that is what he is trying to ask the country to believe.

An hon. Member: You are fishing.

Mr. McGrath: I can assure the hon. member I am not fishing, because we have got him this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: If the minister was only taking the long shot, how then can he explain the statement of the president of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which appears in today's press. Mr. Hession stated that the artists and others at graphic artists Studio S&B, "underwent strict security screening and briefing and were sworn to secrecy before they were permitted to work on the advertisements." If this, in fact, was not a budget document, which by the way subsequently appeared word for word in the budget, and if this was just a long shot, can the minister explain to the House why it was necessary to swear these people to secrecy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I know that the hon. member in the previous government was the minister responsible for fisheries. I wish he would get away from that ministry and direct his attention toward the area of housing. In that vein, I wish that he would get down—

Mr. Siddon: You should sit down.

Mr. Cosgrove: —to the merits of the problem facing the country and the problems of home owners that were brought to my attention daily by members opposite, including himself, namely, the problem of meeting mortgage renewals and high interest rates. I hope the hon. member will appreciate that in response to that, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials and myself on behalf of the government prepared programs to address that problem. That is why we were in a high state of readiness. That is why we had programs that were ready for public announcement the day after the budget was read in this House by the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the minister talks about a high state of readiness. What I am intrigued with is why there was such a high state of secrecy if this was not in fact a budget document.

CONVENTION OF BUDGET SECRECY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I direct my next question to the Minister of Finance. He will know from a statement made today by the president of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that certain employees of the graphic artists firm Studio S&B, St-Antoine Street, Montreal, were sworn to secrecy and underwent strict security because they had in their possession a document which turned out to be the policy of the minister responsible for housing, word for word as it appeared in the budget of Thursday night, November 12. These people had this information several days prior to the budget.

There are people who could benefit financially from having that information in advance, not to mention the fact that budget convention requires strict secrecy, armoured cars and lockups. Can the minister tell the House whether he has satisfied himself that there was not a major leak of the budget? I remind him that one of his predecessors, Mr. Gordon, the minister of finance in nineteen sixty—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The question has been asked and now the hon. member is continuing to make further comments. Therefore, I must interrupt him.

An hon. Member: Let us have an answer.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not heard anything that would lead me to the conclusion that there was a budget leak of any kind.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER

QUERY RESPECTING FUTURE PLANS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Some of the answers which the Prime Minister gave yesterday in his press conference left considerable doubt as to his future plans. Being a betting man, he is thoroughly familiar with the process of creating bookmakers' odds on future events. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what he would consider at this time to be reasonable odds on the proposition that he will remain as leader of his party and lead the Liberal Party in the next general election?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am not in the betting business and I am unable to give odds to the hon. member, mainly for the reason that my answer yesterday indicated that it sometimes is difficult to resist a draft.

I do not know if there will be a great movement across the land or across the aisle for me to stay on for—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I see the leader of the New Democratic Party applauding my suggestion. In that case, if the draft is even coming from the opposite side, I will say that it is likely I will stay on after the next election, that is if the hon. member will continue to represent the good people of Northumberland.

ODDS ON NEXT GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would seriously take into consideration staying on as leader of the Liberal Party and leading his party in the next election. If he would do so, that would change the odds on the Conservative Party forming the next government from good to overwhelming.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member may well be right. Unfortunately I could not go on to say that it would increase his odds of being in the next Conservative cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT FARMING INDUSTRY RECEIVE PORTION OF FOREIGN AID FUNDS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday I caused to be delivered to him 60 letters from farmers within the York region, one of which was a letter from Mr. Harold Lapp of Markham. All of the letters dealt with the crisis in the farming industry and with the pressure that is put upon farmers to vacate their farms and give them up, in some cases as a consequence of bankruptcy.

The point which Mr. Lapp made will be of interest to the Prime Minister. It is that, in order to pursue the Prime Minister's goal of increased food aid and assistance to Third World countries, it is necessary that there be some technical assistance available from the agricultural industry. Mr. Lapp pointed out that if present trends continue there will be no farming industry to make that assistance available to the Third World.

In light of the circumstances, as they affect farmers, will the Prime Minister now make some of the increased foreign aid which he advocates, available to the farming industry in Canada in order that we maintain that industry here?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did receive the letters referred to by the hon. member which he received from his constituents, and I take them seriously. I received them by way of representation from the hon. member and from some of his constituents.

I must say that I was disappointed to see that some of the letters were arguing the point of view put forward by the hon. member, that we should not help the starving peoples of the world as much as we are. I was a bit disappointed at that, and I must say that I am surprised that a member of the Conservative Party is taking that point of view.

Mr. Gamble: Of course, the very point is that unless there is an independent farming industry in Canada, the only aid that will be made available through that industry will be through state farms. As a member of the Conservative Party, of course I am not in favour of that.

* * *

HOUSING

QUERY RESPECTING POLICY

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has said in the House five times that no Canadian will lose his home as a result of high interest rates. The only policy that I have heard advanced, both by the minister and by the minister responsible for housing, is a policy which would place in the hands of Canadians, at a maximum, $250 a month for 12 months by way of a grant. Quite frankly, that is not enough to save Canadian homes. Does the minister have a policy which he has not yet announced in the House to save Canadians who are at risk of losing their homes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if and when there will be further decisions made with respect to the housing industry, they will be announced in the House in the usual way.

* * *

[Translation]

HATE LITERATURE

NOTICE PUBLISHED BY SAINT-JEAN-BAPTISTE SOCIETY IN "LE DEVOIR"

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I hope that the minister had time to look at Le Devoir, the well-known newspaper, this morning. The last page was a full-page advertisement paid for by the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste of Montreal. Madam Speaker, I would qualify that advertisement as hate mongering, as demagoguery, and as another attempt to mislead Quebecers as to what we are doing here.

My question for the Minister of Justice is as follows: Concerning this obnoxious advertisement—my Conservative colleagues should take a good look at it—I wish to ask the minister whether he intends to take any legal action against the newspaper that published this slander throughout the province today, and misrepresents our work as the people's representatives in the House of Commons.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I don't know whether there is a case for legal action or not. What I do know, and have observed in the course of my public life, is that mud throwing is the weapon of the weak.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON ORDERS ISSUED AGAINST CLAIMANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure the minister is aware that last weekend there was a conference of organizations concerned with refugees which considered the task force report which came out at the minister's request, and which commented on the weaknesses of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee and its proceedings.

Considering that the Immigration Act requires the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to read the transcript of evidence of each person claiming refugee status and to make a direct judgment on each claim, and considering that the minister's task force has recently reported that, in violation of the Immigration Act, half of the transcripts were never read by the committee, and considering that almost three quarters of all claimants have been rejected—no doubt including all those who were denied their legal right to have their transcripts read by the committee—will the minister agree to the request made by the standing conference of organizations concerned with refugees to declare a moratorium on all removal orders and all departure notices affecting refugee claimants whose claims have been refused within the existing process?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we did establish a task force with the very specific purpose of examining the whole refugee determination procedure, to ensure that it lived up to the spirit of the act which was passed by Parliament and came into force in 1978.

I am already acting upon a number of those recommendations and I will be establishing new guidelines for the Refugee Status Advisory Committee as well as appointing new members to that committee. We could not, however, entirely close down the entire system because, as the hon. member knows, we are faced with an enormous backlog of people who came in during the past year to claim refugee status on somewhat spurious grounds. In fairness to them and to the public, we want to continue processing those claims. But we are prepared to entertain any further recommendations for change, and for that reason I have called a conference which will be chaired by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. It will be held in the new year, at which time we will be glad to undertake an examination of the representations made by the conference.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROCESSING OF CLAIMS MADE BY WORKERS LAID OFF IN HAMILTON, ONT.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question for the same minister. The Steel Company of Canada has announced that it will not be recalling about 20 per cent of its work force as a result of a downturn in the steel industry. Would the Minister of Employment and Immigration set up a special UIC task force to go into Hamilton and meet with the company, the union and the affected employees, to speed up their claims for unemployment insurance so that they will not be caught up in the process as the workers at Heckett and at Crosstown Mobile Car Wash were?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The situations sound quite different. In the case of Heckett Engineering and the Mobile car wash, they were under Section 44 of the act which deals with groups of workers who are not directly involved in a strike position but are subject to the liabilities under the act. As the hon. member knows, we have already cleared up those two cases.

In the case of workers who are directly involved, we would be quite prepared to look at any particular problem which might be occasioned by the large numbers which would be involved. I would be prepared to examine that, but I want to make clear to the hon. member that these are two different situations and require two different responses.

* * *

HOUSING

PROJECTED RENTAL INCREASES IN OTTAWA-CARLETON REGION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. He is aware that in the Ottawa-Carleton region the major rental owner is Minto Management Limited which is intending to raise its rents substantially to some 7,000 to 9,000 tenants. We have one of the lowest vacancy rates in Canada, and there is very little choice in housing in a situation that is virtually a monopoly.

● (1200)

Would the minister please tell the House where in the budget there can be some specific help granted to Ottawa-Carleton so that there can be a choice made in housing? I have looked at the budget. I think the provisions in terms of alternate housing are next to useless. Will the minister make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance that he increase measures for the availability of housing stock so that people will have a choice and not be subject to a monopoly?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in the budget announcement dealing with stimulus to rental construction one of the conditions of that housing and its identification for stimulus is that it be located in markets which indeed do have tight vacancy rates. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that the city of Ottawa does not have a tight vacancy rate when compared with other metropolitan areas such as Vancouver, Victoria, Saint John, and metropolitan Toronto. These, by comparison and by normal standards, are not high.

I also bring to the hon. member's attention that the city of Ottawa has requested an increase in allocation under Section 56(1), which relates to non-profit and co-op housing. We have already responded to Ottawa's request for an increase in rehabilitation funds, which permit people to stay in their homes longer. I know those two programs are well received by the city. We are taking into account its request for further allocation.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Thursday, December 3, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stated in this House this morning that no Canadian will lose his home because of high interest rates. As Your Honour is aware, many petitions have been presented to the House on behalf of people who are going to lose their homes, and I would like to know, if possible, from the Clerk of the House how many petitions have been submitted to the House in this respect, how many individuals have stated in their petitions that they will lose their homes and how many regions are represented by those petitions.

The Minister of Finance has misled the House because he has sat here and listened to those petitions being read—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wright: Inadvertently.

In addition to that, many real estate firms have sent letters to every member of this House stating that people are losing their homes. The real estate board and HUDAC have written numerous letters.

Madam Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member gets into debate, I think I can satisfy him by saying that the petitions as they were presented to the House are at the disposal of hon. members, who may examine them and compile statistics. Perhaps we can assist hon. members in compiling those statistics, but the point of order raised by the hon. member I can answer immediately.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Wright: Will Your Honour make those available?

Madam Speaker: They are available as a matter of course.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MANAGEMENT AND MEMBERS' SERVICES

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, I wish to table the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, in both official languages.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF TIME ALLOCATION FOR THIRD READING OF BILL C-48

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that notwithstanding consultation with the representatives of the parties, it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 75A or 75B for the third reading stage of Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. I therefore wish to give notice that at a later date, I shall move pursuant to Standing Order 75C that one sitting day be allocated to the third reading stage of this bill.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but I did not get the translation, and the minister's French is a little too rapid even for me. When did he say he would be moving that motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: At a later date.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,782, 2,804, 2,961, 3,162, 3,164 and 3,465.

[Text]

CENSUS CONTACTS

Question No. 2,782—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,343 which includes the name of J. Maxim, 618-9th Ave. N.E., Calgary, Alberta in the constituency of Calgary East among the names and addresses of contacts used by Statistics Canada for the 1981 census, is the government aware that this individual is the president of the Calgary East Liberal Association?

2. Did such political affiliation play a part in his appointment by Statistics Canada and, if so, what part?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The fact that J. Maxim was the president of the Calgary East Liberal Association until February 11, 1981, is a matter of public record.

2. See reply to question No. 2,555 answered December 1, 1981.

SOVIET INSTITUTE OF U.S.A. AND CANADA

Question No. 2,804—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

To the knowledge of the government, during the past five years, did Canadian public officials or private individuals appear as guest speakers before the Soviet Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) was the speaking engagement solicited or did it occur as a result of an invitation from the Soviet authorities (c) were other Canadians, official or otherwise, present during the presentation and, if so, what were their names?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): To our knowledge during the past five years the only Canadian public official to appear as a guest speaker before the Soviet Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada was Mr. Ivan Head in 1977. Mr. Head at that time was the Prime Minister's foreign policy advisor. He was invited to speak before the Soviet Institute and to our knowledge no other Canadian public officials were present during this speaking engagement. In June, 1981, at the request of the Alberta government, Mr. Horst Schmidt, the Alberta minister of economic development, visited the Soviet Institute in question for discussions with its senior representatives. Three Canadian Embassy officers were present during this visit: Ambassador Geoffrey Pearson, Minister Counsellor Peter Hancock and Second Secretary Robert Poetschke.

Against this background, while agencies of the federal government, such as the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC), do have official exchange programs with the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences, a branch of which is the Soviet Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada, we do not have any specific exchange programs of an institution-to-institution nature with the Soviet Institute in question. As such there has not been a federally-sponsored program involving Canadian officials or private individuals either on exchange with or speaking at the Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada. We understand that there have been occasions over the past five years where on an ad hoc basis, private individuals or Canadian official exchangees doing research in Moscow, have been invited by the Soviet side to speak before the Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada. While it appears that in most cases these invitations have been initiated by the Soviet side, there have been instances when Canadians visiting Moscow for business or touristic purposes have visited the Soviet Institute. Against this background it has generally not been the practice of the Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada to invite Canadian officials, including embassy representatives, to participate or sit in on these private visits or speaking engagements. In view of the personal and unofficial nature of these speaking engagements, the government considers that it would not be appropriate to identify the names of those individuals who have visited the institute.

PSC—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,961—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the Public Service Commission of Canada in footnote No. 19 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the office machinery lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the commission undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: Most of the thefts reported during 1979/80 took place in Public Service Commission training centres and involved theft of training aids rather than office machinery as such. The items were normally reported stolen overnight or during a weekend.

(a) Various unknown persons.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) The stolen equipment was replaced from existing inventory.

(e) Yes. Contracted security services were awarded to different firms; tightened internal security procedures were developed and published; and an employee security awareness program was promoted within the commission.

DND—CONTRACT WITH ADGA SYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL

Question No. 3,162—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence place a $50,000 contract under contract number 03GR3200248 (2GR81-00226) with Adga Systems International for engineering consulting services and, if so, what specific services is the company providing?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, awarded a contract to Adga Systems International. The purpose of the contract was to provide the Department of National Defence with scientific and engineering services to support design, development, procurement, test evaluation and modification of experimental electronic warfare (EW) communications, radar and infra red/electro optical (IR/EO) equipment.

Order Paper Questions

DND—CONTRACT WITH A. LAVENDEL & ASSOCIATES

Question No. 3,164—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place three contracts with A. Lavendel & Associates for assorted aircraft parts and airframe spares, as indicated in volume 8, No. 31 of the weekly bulletin of "Business Opportunities"?

2. Is the company an aircraft parts manufacturer and, if so, for what reason did it receive the contract?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Department of Supply and Services did place the three referenced contracts on behalf of the Department of National Defence with A. Lavendel & Associates.

2(a) No. Lavendel is not an aircraft parts manufacturer but a Canadian agent. Governmental policy provides for the inclusion of manufacturers, agents and distributors on the Department of Supply and Services source lists. When responding to a bid, an agent plays the role of a prime contractor and, if successful, secures the needed items through appropriate means and delivers said items according to the terms of the contract. In supporting aging, out of production aircraft such as the CF-104, it happens frequently that bids are received only from such organizations and necessity dictates that needed spares be obtained from them.

2(b) A. Lavendel was awarded the referenced contracts on the basis of being the lowest bidder for most items awarded to the company and on the basis of best delivery for certain items urgently required in connection with the CF-104 depot level inspection and repair/service life extension program (DLIR/SLEP).

MR. JEAN NOEL TREMBLAY

Question No. 3,465—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,581 stating in part with regard to payment of public funds to Mr. Jean Noel Tremblay, "See Energy, Mines and Resources' reply to question No. 5 tabled February 24, 1981.", is the government aware that Mr. Jean Noel Tremblay is not mentioned in the reply referred to and is the government prepared to issue a corrected answer to question No. 2,581?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The hon. member is referred to the reply to question No. 5, tabled in the House of Commons February 24, 1981 as an order for return, Sessional Paper 321-2/5.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax-East): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the custom over the years with respect to responding to questions placed on the Order Paper and the courtesy that is extended with respect to starred questions. I ask the indulgence of the parliamentary secretary because of the urgency of questions dealing with the loss of some 60 destroyers, and now two more, leaving us with just one.

My question is question No. 3,494. It is a long question and I will not repeat it, but in essence it asks for a report on the status of our destroyers and destroyer escorts. What is the nature of the damage? What will it cost to repair them? When will they be operational? What contingency plans are we putting in place in the interim? Have we advised our NATO allies and, if so, what was the nature of that advice? To what degree does the present status of our fleet which, with the exception of one ship, is inoperable in terms of destroyers, affect our stated roles and commitments both here at home and abroad?

I think the parliamentary secretary will realize the significance of the Canadian navy's having no ships. For the edification of the House and the people in this country who are concerned, he might want to look at whether he will be able to respond to these questions early in the new week.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will convey that representation to the minister. I point out, however, that the question is a complicated one. It is dated November 27. However, I will see what can be done to expedite the answer.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same kind of point of order. I have risen on previous occasions about question No. 2,035, which is dated January 27 of this year, and question No. 2,519, which is dated May 21. The first question had to do with the cost of the trip by service aircraft by the Prime Minister to Austria last year. The second one had to do with the number of people using Falcon aircraft in one quarter of this year. All these expenses are borne entirely by the taxpayer, and I believe the taxpayer of the country has the right to know what he is spending his money on.

It is rather ironic at a time when we have a freedom of information bill in this House that the government is not disclosing information which hitherto it did. It is not unusual to ask what the cost of travel has been for ministers and prime ministers, and up until now it has always been forthcoming.

On November 26 I asked the same question, and I pointed out that on each occasion when I had asked it before the parliamentary secretary had said, "I will take notice of the representation and make inquiries." I asked him what kinds of answers he gets to those inquiries, and he said, "I will take further note; I am still awaiting the response from my earlier inquiry." I am beginning to wonder if any of the ministers know who the parliamentary secretary is or what he is supposed to be doing and accomplishing in this House, because he is certainly failing abysmally in getting answers to important questions of long standing.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will again take note of the hon. member's representations. I have indicated that I would make inquiries. I have made inquiries, and I have been advised that the answers will be forthcoming before too long.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1210)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ATLANTIC FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South) moved:

That this House condemns the failure of the government to foresee or avert the crisis facing the Atlantic fishing industry, regrets that Canadian-owned fish processing plants facing closure have not attracted the same active support from the government as have foreign multinationals in other parts of Canada experiencing similar difficulties, and urges the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to listen sympathetically and respond positively to the four Atlantic Ministers of Fisheries when he meets with them on Monday, December 7, 1981.

He said: Madam Speaker, the issue that is in front of the House today is extraordinarily important. The tragedy is that the situation that is facing the east coast fishery was clearly foreseeable. For many months the government has been in a position to know that some kind of plan of action had to be put in place. If one looks at the newspaper headlines from as early as August of this year, one will see that they are indeed enlightening. I quote from The Globe and Mail of August 13: "Fish production cuts widespread, east coast situation may get worse." August 12, The Globe and Mail: "National Sea Products to shut three major plants." Again in August: "National Sea shutdowns leave 1,800 out of work."

My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), wrote to the government in August. The hon. member is a former minister of fisheries. An article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald was headlined: "McGrath warns Atlantic fishery about to collapse." An item in the Financial Post was headlined: "Rough waters for fish exporters." More recently, on October 21, we see in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald: "Fishery hit hard by poor U.S. market." The October 21 edition of the St. John's Evening Telegram says: "Rompkey says Ottawa is prepared to help." That, of course, refers to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey). In October 17 The Globe and Mail we see an article headlined: "Hard times down east."

I am glad to see that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has been able to return to the chamber because I know the minister is concerned. He has told us so. The minister knows there are problems in the east coast fishery because he has told us there are problems. As I said to the minister in committee earlier this week, a very great parliamentarian named Winston Churchill once said of problems: "Don't speak to me of problems, the problems will speak for themselves; come up with a plan of action." This government has not come up with a plan of action. That is why it is to be condemned for a situation on the east coast which is getting worse and for which there is no response whatsoever from the Government of Canada.

The minister was in committee, as I said, where he told us what the problems are. He told us about the problems of marketing, commodity quality, problems over capitalization and the problems of too many licences and more fish plants being built than he thought was appropriate. However, during all this time, except for a short interruption, it has been the Liberal Party in power and this minister who has been the minister of fisheries.

There is no answer. We know there are plants facing imminent collapse in the Atlantic fishery. It is no secret that one company in Newfoundland is in critical condition. It is no secret either that that company has put before both the provincial government and the Federal government a plan of action which will require some support and help from both levels of government. I know the minister knows all about this. However, there are other plants the minister may be hearing about unless something is done.

It is incredible that after all these months the minister will only on this coming Monday get together with his provincial counterparts. When we asked him what he is going to say to his counterparts, what sort of plan of action he might put forward on behalf of the federal government, this is what he said:

> But I intend to say to my provincial counterparts on Monday, and in fact to give them all the information we have, because I think there is a certain amount of misinformation floating around.

The minister smiles. There is always a certain amount of misinformation floating around, especially when ministers are making speeches.

Mr. LeBlanc: Especially when the opposition is asking questions.

Mr. Fraser: When the opposition is asking questions, the misinformation is what comes back by way of answers. The minister is saying here that when he meets with the provincial ministers on Monday, he will give them all the facts. Isn't that interesting.

What facts does the minister think he can give them that they do not already have? Is he going to tell them there is a plant in imminent danger of collapsing because it does not have the financing it needs? Is he going to tell them that there are other plants that will be closing unless they receive help soon? Will he tell them that in Newfoundland there is 30 to 40 per cent unemployment in these areas? Is the minister going to tell them again that we should not catch so many fish or we should fix up the fish better before selling them?

Is the minister going to tell them what he told the world in his speech of October 3? Talk about misinformation. Everybody asks what was meant in that speech. The minister said we have to export less fish, or at least we need to have less people exporting fish. The minister smiles. He says, "Yes, now the hon. member of the opposition has it straight." He says we have finally found out. He made the speech on October 3, but is only now getting it sorted out and only because we are asking questions. When the minister talks about misinformation, he adds to it.

What is the minister going to tell his provincial counterparts? Is he going to tell them that he intends to bring in legislation to cut down the number of exporters? What is his real position? Should we be exporting fewer fish or selling fewer fish? Should we not be selling more fish in more markets?

I can go along with the minister when he says there has to be better quality control. I understand, as does everyone else, including the ministers who will be meeting with him on Monday, that the American market is not what it was a few years ago.

What these ministers will want to hear is not what they already know. They are not coming to Ottawa to be told that there is a lot of misinformation floating around, as the minister told us in committee a few days ago. They will be coming to Ottawa to hear from the minister what is the federal approach. We have not heard that. We hope we will hear it today.

It is the responsibility of this government and this minister to tell us what is being done and to put a plan before the provincial ministers. No one is suggesting that this minister or the federal government must necessarily come up with all the answers or be fully responsible to do everything that is needed. But the federal government is the lead government in this matter. The federal government must present a plan. We want to hear from the minister today. We do not want any misinformation. The minister smiles. I do not know whether that is a smile of shame or anticipation. In either case, we will be grateful for some information today.

• (1220)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, it is not really a laughing matter; I know the minister knows that. The situation on the east coast is extraordinarily serious. We are not talking just about corporations; we are talking about people; we are talking about families; we are talking about men and women whose very livelihood and future are threatened. When one considers that the annual incomes of fishermen in Newfoundland, as a consequence of the very difficult time they are now facing, are down to around $4,000 a year, and that is including unemployment insurance, then we are facing not only an economic tragedy but a social tragedy.

We would like the minister to speak to us today and to tell us what he is going to do, Mr. Speaker. We do not need to be told what the problems are, we can see them. I would hope that the minister is not going to say that by asking questions we are spreading misinformation.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely the custom demands that we are entitled to hear a reply from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), to whom the motion is addressed and to whom the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), were addressed. He is the one who is responsible and he is the one who has to give an account to this House. If we are to have an orderly debate today, surely we are entitled—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is rising to be recognized, he can certainly be recognized. The Chair is looking at this stage to hon. members who are seeking the floor.

Mr. Fraser: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is simply this: through you, Mr. Speaker, we would appreciate hearing from the minister as to whether or not he is even going to speak to us. This is quite extraordinary!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is out of order at this stage.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. members put on a show of waxing indignation, which they are both pretty good at doing, as a matter of courtesy—I looked around because I expected that there would be a speaker from the New Democratic Party. Obviously I think it is fair in normal, human, intelligent discussion, that I listen to the points of view and then I try to respond as best as I can. In fact, my preference, would be to speak towards the end of the debate; but I am told that hon. members want me to speak earlier. As a matter of courtesy to the House, I am allowing other hon. members to bring forward the points they wish to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I was also a little bit hesitant to stand up because I expected that the minister would address himself to the questions posed by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), that we would all gain a great deal of knowledge from the kind of replies that he might give and that that would give those of us who may not be as intimately associated with the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast the opportunity to examine some of his current thinking and perhaps make an appropriate response. We could make a more positive, intelligent and detailed response once we have heard from the minister. However, we have other members in our caucus who will be able to listen to the wisdom of the minister when his time comes. We will be very pleased to put up not just one speaker today but others. If we have time for one more, we will be very grateful to participate.

I think when we listen to the concerns of the Atlantic fishery—and I have relatives in Prince Edward Island in the Atlantic fishery who tell me that while the lobster or the inshore fishery—

An hon. Member: There are a lot of Roses in Newfoundland as well.

Mr. Rose: Yes, but they are not my relatives, as far as I know. But if they are Roses, they are bound to be very nice, enlightened, intelligent and honourable people! If the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) knows them, I am sure he can confirm that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would call the attention of the hon. member that the Chair is not familiar with the parties to whom he is referring.

Mr. Rose: I do not know whether that was an attempt at humour on the part of the Chair or what, but it did disturb somewhat the excellent line of reasoning and logic that I was attempting to develop at the time. Mr. Speaker, whether we are talking about the east coast, with which I am less familiar, or the west coast, with which I am more familiar, the state of the fishing industry in Canada is deplorable. Whether we are talking about marketing, about too many vessels too highly capitalized chasing too few fish, or whether we are concerned about an extremely important problem facing the fishing industry on the west coast—and I am sure it is the same on the east coast—the problem is one of energy prices. The energy component in cost of doing business, of farming or even catching fish has been a serious disadvantage, a serious inhibitor and a serious income depleter of west coast fishermen, and I am sure energy costs also injure the east coast fishermen. The west coast fisheries has been in a crisis for a number of years. We now learn from recent events that there is an imminent crisis for the east coast fisheries.

I was about to say before the Chair rose on its own point of order that while we have learned that the lobster or inshore fishermen have done fairly well in Prince Edward Island this year, other fisheries have been far less successful. We have also learned from news reports and from questions posed in the House that there are a great number of processing plants that are being threatened in the Atlantic region. No one can treat these matters lightly, especially when we have an economy facing a recession. There are 128,000 fewer jobs available in Canada in all industries, including processing, manufacturing and the resources industries, than there were just three months ago. We are told marketing is down and we have too many people in the business. On the west coast, the Pearse commission has recommended a royalty in which the fishermen will be asked to finance themselves into oblivion through a buy-back program. We have a similar situation now happening in the east coast fisheries. It is odd that in the days when perhaps one third of the world goes to bed hungry every night, when we are beseiged by groups such as OXFAM and Save the Children, church agencies and other relief agencies, apparently we have a glut of fish on the east coast.

We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who goes to Nairobi and makes a speech at the alternative energy conference saying how much Canada needed and wanted to become involved in assisting the Third World. I am suggesting to hon. members that fish aid is one way to assist the elimination of a good deal of the world's hunger, disease, oppression, and perhaps even the rising militarism of the Third World. We need an expansionary budget policy not only in the fishing industry but to stimulate our whole economy, so that we might then be in a better position to assist the Third World.

Canadians are suffering through high interest rates and the lack of a visionary and expansionary budget. Not only the fishing industry but all segments of our economy suffer, from housing to manufacturing. Someone once said that if your neighbour loses his job, then you are in a recession; but if you lose your own, you are in a depression. In the last month 40,000 job opportunities have disappeared in this country.

I would just like to suggest that there is no point in looking for the villain of the piece much beyond the federal government. The federal government is the one that is and has been traditionally, historically and constitutionally responsible for fishing. Fisheries have almost entirely been under the jurisdiction of the federal government. If salmon stocks are down and enhancement programs are failing, the department has to close or threaten to close the Fraser river to 450 gill netters in my riding. This is because stocks are down, escapements are too low, or there is overfishing in one segment, overcapitalization and increased efficiency of gear used by modern fishermen. If there exist so many fish boats that they have to start buying them back with fishermen's money, on whom do we lay the blame? Don't blame me, I'm NDP!

• (1230)

I look forward, not just with interest but with fascination, to what kind of remedies the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) is prepared to propose to solve the very serious problem affecting not only the area from which I come but the area he represents. I know he will be hobbled in his efforts by lack of funds. He will be like the minister of housing; he will express all kinds of sympathy and he will ask everyone to accept it, but what they need is his help.

Whether or not the minister of housing knew about the budget in advance seems to be open to some question or dispute. At least on the night of the budget he said that he was very pleased he would not have to resign because he got through a program which, at its biggest, might provide 15,000 homes. He cut off all hope of increased rental accommodations. We in the Vancouver area could have used the 15,000 homes in Vancouver. He cut off all hope in my riding that there would be more rental units built soon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): In my area as well.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) indicates that he could use those homes in his area. At the same time, over the last ten years the government has pumped $125 million into Consolidated Computers, which has turned out to be a real dog. By the time we discover the ins and outs of that joint venture, we will be a good deal older than we are now; I understand Treasury Board is looking into it.

Seriously, if the fisheries minister does not have the power, the finances or suggestions for improvements, not only in the management of fisheries but in an effort to expand and assist processing at this time of crisis, perhaps it will be necessary to bring forward a subsidy program in order to stimulate world trade. This could be done, even if he had to do what was done for Third World countries through powdered milk shipments; there has been a subsidy program for dried milk for years. The government must do something. The need is urgent. It is of crisis proportion.

I did not rise immediately after the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver South because I wanted to hear what the minister would offer. I hoped it would be something more than sympathy or kind words. I anticipated that he would rise to tell us that he had convinced the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who is also from the Atlantic provinces, that he will have to change some of the budget provisions and spring a little more money to assist because words will no longer solve complex problems. The government must do more than fine tune; it should reverse the direction of the mad lunacy of its economic policy which has brought the country virtually to its knees. I am referring not only to the fishing industry, but to the housing, agricultural, resource and marketing industries as well. In fact, today we heard talk about Uranium City.

In closing, may I repeat that we look forward with a great deal of anticipation, hope and even prayer that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans from the province of New Brunswick will, in his usual civilized and very eloquent way, lead us out of this fish wilderness into a new day of hope not only for Atlantic fishermen but for west coast fishermen as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to make a few brief remarks before the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) replies. I am not an expert in fisheries. As a matter of fact, I live on the west coast in the only riding on the lower mainland which is landlocked; it does not border on the ocean or on a major river. Trout Lake is in my riding. It is about the size of the House of Commons!

This does not mean that I cannot have some interest in fisheries. Like other Canadians who are indirectly affected by the plight of fishermen on the east and west coasts, I am concerned about the situation. Their struggles are our struggles; their difficulties are our difficulties. If any group is in need of help or assistance from the government and in need of some sympathy from the larger forces of public opinion outside the government, surely it is the fishermen of the country.

Recently as a member of the energy committee I met with some west coast fishermen of the UFAW in Vancouver. I personally heard their particular concerns. While they are fishing on the west coast, I think their concerns have relevancy to east coast fishermen with which this motion deals.

The motion refers to "the failure of the government to foresee or avert the crisis facing the Atlantic fishing industry." As the energy critic of the NDP, I wanted to raise this point before the minister replied. I am referring to the difficulties faced by fishermen because of energy costs. This was one of their concerns when I spoke with them in Vancouver. There was almost a desperate feeling at the meeting. I heard personally from trollers their concerns about great increases in energy prices and how they were being squeezed. They told me that they could not really increase the price of fish, but they were being squeezed by costs, especially energy costs which were continually rising; eventually it will not be worth fishing. They told me about the difficulties. They mentioned the Pearse report and the difficulties concerning it.

I do not want to focus on that particular matter now, but I should like to focus on energy costs. The minister must know that as a result of the energy agreements between Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the Government of Canada, the price of energy will increase greatly over the next four years. As a matter of fact, the cost of diesel fuel will double.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but I understood that he was rising to make a few brief comments in the form of a question before the minister replied. Consequently, I yielded the floor on that basis. I was wondering whether he intends to continue.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member stopping me in full flight. I intend to make my remarks short. I just wanted to lay the groundwork. Costs are doubling. Fishermen have told me that they are already suffering. We must remember that diesel fuel costs will rise greatly next year. They told me that there was some sort of a subsidy in gasoline at the present time. But my question is simple. Is the minister prepared to approach the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and ask him to revise his budget, and to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to redistribute some of the $20 billion the government will receive from those energy agreements over the next five years? Will they redistribute some of that money to the people in society who really need it, those who will be hit by higher costs?

I am not referring to drivers of automobiles; perhaps they can look after themselves. It will be tough but they will have to do it. Some of the groups would be fishermen, farmers, and seniors who have to pay extra oil costs. Can we not do something to reduce energy costs to fishermen, perhaps by changing the federal tax paid on the diesel fuel oil that they use.

● (1240)

I hope the minister will not say that that cannot be done. Under Bill C-48 which we have been debating, Dome Petroleum and other companies like it will be given a 93 cents subsidy on every dollar spent on drilling. That is a massive subsidy. I am very familiar with the petroleum incentives program and under that program we will provide something like $2,000 million in subsidies over the next five years. That is nearly $3 billion, Mr. Speaker. Can we not do a little bit for the fishermen and help them with the cost of their fuel?

This motion stands in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who has always shown great concern for the fishing industry and for the ordinary people of this country. His riding is neighbour to mine. I hope that in the course of his reply to that hon. member the minister will announce some concrete proposals to help in this situation. Perhaps he could specifically address his remarks to the question of energy costs for fishermen. That is a problem about which I think something should be done.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in some ways I wish that the debate were a little less formalized and that we could proceed with questions and answers. In many ways, there are a lot of questions to be asked on these issues. The motion stands in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). I must confess that when I read it I was suprised to see that it begins as follows:

> That this House condemns the failure of the government to foresee or avert the crisis facing the Atlantic fishing industry . . .

If there is one area in which I gave ample warning for years, it is in the area of the danger of returning to the boom or bust cycle, having experienced the bust cycle of 1973-74. In fact, I might tell the House that one of the people with whom I co-operated very positively at that time is the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

When I inherited the fishery in 1974 there were two main problems. One was the low catch rate because of overfishing by foreign fleets, particularly off the northeast coast of Newfoundland and Labrador. The other problem was the low throughput in the processing plants. We addressed those two problems and if anyone bothers to read the policy document published in 1975, they will see that the first priority was the establishment of Canadian jurisdiction over the offshore zone, which meant that we would control the amount of fishing, the restoration of stocks and the stock expansion that followed. So I find that there is not very much substance to the charge of the opposition that we did not foresee the possibility of a crisis developing.

The record will show, and I will quote it, that I have publicly warned about the danger of overexpansion in the past few years and about the need for processing companies to get their act together in the highly competitive marketing field. Unfortunately many of my words fell on deaf ears.

On May 19, 1977, speaking in St. John's, Newfoundland, I pointed out that the new 200-mile zone, which many were hailing as opening the door to a huge fishing bonanza, was "less a pot of gold than a garden needing work and care." My actual words at the time were:

> We are going to need great self-discipline to avoid repeating errors of the past: overcapacity, overlicensing, overfishing.

Later that year, speaking in Yarmouth, I expressed grave concerns about expanding the fleet, a move that was being pushed very hard, particularly by the provincial politicians and mainly in Newfoundland. I said on that occasion that "for advice on fleet expansion and the like, we look first to the state of the stocks and to the fishermen." I also said: "Even when we replace fishing units, we must make sure it is not disguised expansion." These were not isolated statements; I repeated them consistently, both in this House and elsewhere.

The federal government, with the responsibility for managing this country's ocean fisheries—and this was pointed out by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose)—went to the limit of its mandate to attempt to keep the industry on an even keel. We said repeatedly that more discipline was needed in export marketing to compete with the single desk marketing operations of our Scandinavian competitors. But the processors told us bluntly: "Keep out of marketing, that's our business." So we kept out, and today that is where the most serious problems exist. Perhaps we should have insisted on getting involved in marketing at the government level. If we had, I am sure the screams would have been long and loud from our friends sitting on your immediate left, Mr. Speaker.

The record will also show that we have resisted the pressure for a massive expansion of the fishing fleet. We have deliberately held in check the growth of the offshore fleet. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) should listen to that—we resisted the massive expansion of the offshore fleet. That was done with great difficulty in the face of the $900 million fleet expansion proposals announced with much fanfare by the provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia at the time. I am not partisan, but one of those governments shared my political faith.

As another measure to attempt to keep the fleet's catching capacity in line with the available resource, we introduced the foot-for-foot replacement policy. Again, this policy was unpopular in many quarters, but if we had not stuck by our guns the present situation would undoubtedly have become much worse.

Fleet overcapacity is certainly a factor in the current situation on the Atlantic coast, just as it is on the west coast. A recent study of vessels fishing within 200 miles of Nova Scotia showed that if the fleet capacity were brought in line with the available resource, an annual saving of around $25 million could result. In other words, we have a sector of the fleet that is inefficient to the tune of $25 million.

The other major factor in the current situation facing the Atlantic fisheries is, of course, the overexpansion of the processing plants. I have some interesting figures regarding the growth of processing plants in Newfoundland. The minister of fisheries for Nova Scotia became quite indignant after reading only what the agencies carried, and with some reason, I think, because that province has kept the lid on its processing capacity rather successfully. I wish Newfoundland and Quebec had done the same. In 1973 there were 61 registered plants in Newfoundland. At the latest count that total has mushroomed to 225, a 269 per cent increase in 1973 and a 53 per cent increase since 1977. The federal government cannot be blamed for this state of affairs as plant licensing is strictly a provincial jurisdiction. I am not trying to pass the buck when I say this; I am trying to establish some facts. In fact, during the period 1977-79 my department received 48 requests from the province of Newfoundland for us to comment on new licensing applications. We advised against the licensing of 34 of the 48 on the grounds that the resource could not maintain that number. In spite of our advice, 22 of the 34 were built anyway.

● (1250)

Although there is no question that this mad rush to build processing plants in the mid and late seventies has substantially contributed to what is currently ailing the Atlantic fisheries, I can understand and, to a certain extent, sympathize with those in the provinces who are responsible for the decisions. The apparently rosy prospects for the fishing industry following the introduction of the 200-mile limit were obviously a great temptation to open the floodgates in provinces which were grappling with high unemployment and lagging economies. I am sorry that they did what they did, but at the same time, as I said, I can understand it. However, at the moment my sympathy cannot help the situation.

It is important to look back and assess the situation in which the Atlantic fishing industry found itself in 1977 when the 200-mile zone was brought in. In many ways, the industry was riding the crest of the wave. The resource picture was reasonably good. Fuel was comparatively cheap. There was no need to steam hundreds of miles to get to the resource, and our number one market was just across the border. Canada enjoyed huge advantages which most countries, and our competitors, did not enjoy, such as close proximity to the resource, close proximity to the market, and a good fishing tradition. Additionally, the infrastructure was all there, ready to be put to work. We already had overcapacity, and if ever an industry had a chance of a lifetime, surely that was it.

However, what happened in the space of four short years? I previously mentioned that one of the moves which courted disaster was overinvestment. However, that is not the only shortcoming that I lay at the door of the industry. Despite our pleadings, processors did not move in the direction of orderly marketing but continued to engage in destructive price undercutting among themselves. In fact, a good part of this year's problem was triggered as a result of dumping by competing processors in the U.S. market.

Again, in the face of repeated warnings and cajoling by my department, industry did not make a determined attempt to consistently market top quality products. The day has gone when our export customers or our domestic customers, for that matter, will accept anything that is put on the counters. Big fast-food chains, such as McDonald's, want fish of first quality, day in and day out, not just five days out of six. If they cannot get it from us, they will go elsewhere, and I am afraid that they do.

One can also lay a measure of blame on the industry for a lack of initiative and imagination concerning the introduction of new product lines. I imagine that is one of the reasons consumption of fish in Canada has dropped off somewhat lately. Again, this does not apply to all companies. As is evident, I believe, in the riding of the hon. member for South Shore, some have made very creditable efforts. Consumers are always looking for something different in their food diet, but I am afraid they are not getting too much from most of our major companies. However, we can only advise on this matter, we cannot direct.

I might add that officials from my department and officials from other governments have been thoroughly looking at the marketplace and its potential in recent years. However, when we have offered advice, I am afraid that in many cases it has been thrown back in our faces.

The motion before the House seeks to condemn the government for not providing active support for processing plants facing closure. By that, one supposes that the government is being criticized for not throwing a large sum of taxpayers' money into bolstering companies which are in difficulty. If that were the quick and easy way to solve the troubles of the fishing industry, then I imagine that I would be very enthusiastic about it. However, simply pumping money will not do the trick. We have surely learned that since 1974. That is not the panacea many people are seeking. It might be, perhaps, a band-aid solution, but it will not be a permanent cure. What is needed to cure the ills of the fishing industry is a basic restructuring, a reordering of the way we operate, in order to reduce input costs in relation to market prices, thereby increasing profitability.

When we look at the current fish export statistics, the picture does not look all that grim. For the first nine months of 1981, Canada's total fish exports were worth more than $1,100 million compared to $898 million for the same period last year, which means an increase of 22 per cent. At that rate, it looks as though we will once again hold the top spot in world fish exporting. We will be the main fish exporting nation for 1981.

Here are some figures for the same nine-month period. Exports of fresh and frozen seafish, whole or dressed, are up 32 per cent in quantity and 24 per cent in value, while exports of fresh and frozen seafish, fillets and blocks, total 130,000 tonnes valued at $330 million, compared to 118,000 tonnes and $282 million last year. Exports of smoked, salted and cured fish increased by 21 per cent in quantity and 35 per cent in value. Canned fish exports are 12 per cent higher over this period last year.

If these export totals are coming up consistently higher than last year—and let it not be forgotten that exports are the life blood of the Canadian fishing industry—then one might be excused for asking why so many of our fish producers are in trouble. If the catch is up and the prices are up, then the problem obviously lies in weaknesses and inefficiencies in the processing and marketing structure. Certainly, high interest rates and a soft U.S. market are contributing factors to the current situation over which we have little or no control. However, a large proportion of the problem is one which is within our power to control. I might say that the problems began to emerge before high interest rates reached the level that we saw some eight or nine months ago.

How, then, will we tackle the problem? The motion before us asks that I listen sympathetically and respond positively to the four Atlantic ministers of fisheries when we meet on Monday of next week; but I hope their suggestions will be a little more constructive than the ideas which they were espousing a few years ago. However, I intend to do more than be a sympathetic listener. Contrary to what one may have been led to believe from the remarks of the hon. members opposite, for weeks officials of my department have been concentrating their efforts on the best ways to restore the Atlantic fishery to the state of health it should and could be enjoying. I will be placing a number of options before the provincial fisheries ministers from the Atlantic coast which could be undertaken to set us on the road to recovery. They are not stop gap measures but, rather, moves that should be of long-term benefit to the industry.

I would now like to mention some of those possible options. One option, obviously, would be for the government to become directly involved or take equity in an integrated fishing company in order to learn, and also possibly to forestall an undesirable level of concentration. Another suggestion would be the nationalization of the offshore fleet to prevent large, integrated companies from exercising excessive influence over the supply of raw material and to introduce, as I said when I related some earlier figures, an element of rationalization and efficiency in the catching of offshore fish.

There are those who say that government should be a participant but not a total shareholder. That option, which I call the Panarctic model, could be one of the midway points in any decision we could reach. Obviously, we must rationalize the capturing of fish and avoid the sort of mad race for the fish that we saw last winter.

With the permission of the House, I would like to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock this afternoon, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) had the floor.

Mr. LeBlanc: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, when we rose for lunch I had indicated a number of possible actions which I would be discussing with my provincial counterparts and with different segments of the industry. I would hope members of this House, as we come to this House for legislation, if and when that legislation is required, will support our position.

I had talked about suggestions that had been made for perhaps direct government intervention in some processing enterprise. As well perhaps the fleet should be brought together under one management system or possibly a mix of government and industry participation in order more properly to utilize the existing capacity, and possibly reduce it in some cases.

I had started to talk about the rationalization of the harvesting capacity. A suggestion which is being looked at very seriously is one of allocating the offshore quota to participating companies on a share basis which would allow them to make their plans for harvesting and resist the traditional race for the fish which, as we saw last winter, brought about some of our present difficulties. In some cases we may want to reduce the size of the fleet. This appears to apply to the west coast fisheries. This, of course, is a program which would be undertaken in full consultation with fishermen and fishing enterprises.

There has been some suggestion that the small and medium-size processors lack the capacity to play a role in the offshore and perhaps by getting together in some consortia arrangement this would be a good way of allowing them to participate, yet not have everyone buying capacity or aggravating the fleet problem.

As far as the distribution of fish among processors is concerned, we could go for organized and national harvesting. There are those who suggest auctions as a method of making fish available to those processors who do not want to buy large trawlers.

It has been suggested that we look at reducing the cost of fuel to increase our competitiveness. I must say that this appears on the surface to be rather attractive. However, I have to say that the implication for all Canadian industry is pretty serious if we do go to one industry. There is already an effort to help fishermen and farmers with the cost of fuel, and certainly in relation to our competitors we do enjoy advantageous fuel costs.

There is one area in which some movement is necessary, and this is the area of rechanneling investment in processing. I am a believer of modernizing existing capacity, not increasing it. In many cases plants can be made quite competitive and profitable by upgrading. We have already started working with DREE in this endeavour in quite a few areas. I hope we can negotiate a federal-provincial agreement to limit the capacity of the processing sector. I know that some provinces have voluntarily restrained the processing capacity movement, but I will be taking a much firmer line on this issue to my provincial counterparts. Some are advocating foreign investment, not so much control but equity in operation, which in some cases would perhaps give us access to markets which we have traditionally been unable to enter. This will be the subject of considerable discussion in the months to come.

• (1410)

I have to say a word about the improvement of quality and quality consistency. We have insisted on putting some money into this program and have been quite successful in some areas. I have written to my provincial counterparts under whose jurisdiction this matter rests and asked them to regulate the landing of fish so that at least fish would be landed in the best condition, preferably bled and gutted. I will be discussing this matter with the provincial ministers next Monday. To discuss this issue when so many other industries have set standards which they meet consistently shows that we still have some way to go. For example, I ask hon. members if we could even consider that non-pasteurized milk be put on the market without some considerable consumer resistance. I am not saying that fish which is sold in Canada is bad, but that we do not have a system which guarantees absolutely consistent high quality. Surely this must be a goal which we must seek.

Mr. Pepin: Canada approved.

Mr. LeBlanc: My colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), says we should have "Canada approved." Certainly we should have "Canada approved" and we do, to some extent. However, the standard can be higher than that which we have thus far maintained.

Another question I would like to deal with is market discipline and market orderliness. I have no doubt that jawboning is not going to be sufficient in this area. Some sectors of the industry have already indicated that they believe that this is not only inevitable but desirable. Only through some legal framework which forces discipline will companies not be tempted to undercut each other in the marketplace.

I might say that the hon. member for Vancouver South has tried to make me sound as if I were against an increased effort in marketing. Obviously he knows that this is not what I was suggesting. I was suggesting that we should do the same as our best competitors—particularly the Scandinavians—to get a number of people marketing as a group, as Canadians. In some cases, of course, there may be up to six or eight partners in one marketing organization.

But the philosophy that we must catch every fish in the sea is also one that must be carefully considered. This year I advanced the idea to the industry that we should perhaps catch according to the market potential and market predictions. These quotas could always be adjusted during the season if the estimates are low. Some countries have been doing this very successfully.

Within the framework of these policies, we must make room for the protection of the small processor and the small operator. I have no doubt that whatever co-ordinated marketing effort comes about, there has to be one location where the small operators can find a haven without having to be forced into working with a major player who would, of course, overshadow him.

An hon. member has mentioned the use of fish as food aid. We are using some now and will be using more in the future and my cabinet colleagues have responded favourably to this policy. One of the difficulties is that some countries are not equipped with the holding facilities necessary to distribute and handle certain species of fish, especially program products. We are talking increasingly with CIDA about producing and preparing for the food aid program, particularly using saltfish which does not require the same amount of conservation expense.

Over-the-side sales for species of fish in which the Canadian industry has very little interest must become organized and not left to the whims of people who may have a market because they have a relative in some part of the world. I believe if the industry stopped having a total knee-jerk reaction to this question but came in with the government in a joint operation where we could take advantage of certain markets where vessels are used to freeze fish bought directly from our fishermen, we might be able to gain some considerable advantage. I am amazed at those who advocate that Canadian fishermen should be total prisoners of the local fish merchant and that somehow it is immoral if we let those who want to come in from offshore buy about 2 per cent of the fish that we have on the east coast. I can tell the House that the fishermen do not consider it immoral. In fact, in some cases it is the only weapon they have to negotiate.

Of course, there are those who say that you can bust your way into the markets of the world, that you do not have to have agreement with the Common Market or an arrangement with foreign nations because somehow Providence has ordained that the world must buy our fish. I am afraid that is a very naive outlook. The idea that somehow it is not right for foreigners to buy fish from Canadian fishermen, possibly using their vessels to freeze fish in some cases—again in a very well controlled situation—that somehow we are betraying the plant workers, to me is akin to saying that we must have the largest warehouses in the world filled to capacity regardless of whether we have the markets.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue if there is unanimous agreement. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. LeBlanc: I thank hon. members. I will finish by briefly saying that the options I have listed are being examined and discussed and we have had good working sessions with the Fisheries Council of Canada and with representatives of the industry. The problem is not new but was recognized. In some cases it has taken a more dramatic form and we are now trying to address that situation. In fact, it is only in the last week to ten days that we have had firm proposals.

As far as the federal jurisdiction is concerned, where we are responsible for the setting of quotas and their allocation through the licensing system, and for the establishment of the fleet capacity and its impact on the market, I think we have fulfilled our role well. In the two areas which escape our jurisdiction, namely the processing capacity and quality control—however, in quality control we share a joint role—unfortunately we have not had full co-operation.

That being said, the policy of trying to establish a vigorous fisheries industry which has professional fishermen, that is, people who do not see it as employment as a last resort, but people who invest their livelihood and skills into fulfilling what is a very rewarding profession when it is managed properly. That remains the goal of this government.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the limited time that I have available to me this afternoon, I have somehow to resist the temptation to respond to all of the areas covered by the minister in his speech. There is one area, perhaps, which I will not go into right now but requires some passing comment. It is the last comment the minister made with respect to the over-the-side sales. He said that these must become organized and that companies must get involved.

I merely want to remind the minister that during our administration we put together a rational over-the-side sales policy which included all the players and had the support of all the players. Unfortunately, it was scrapped by the minister when he resumed his responsibility of Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I say that with sadness because if he had continued he would not have been in the difficulties in which he found himself last summer. But perhaps he likes to be in difficulty.

● (1420)

We meet here today in this debate in the midst of a crisis situation which is, in my opinion, unprecedented and unparalleled. A recent publication from the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy by Professor Donald J. Patton of Dalhousie University which arrived on my desk yesterday said this:

> The Atlantic fishery is currently facing serious problems, with almost all major companies suffering substantial losses on their fishing operations. Poor markets, high interest rates and unprofitable fishing have led to widespread production cuts. Hundreds of employees have been laid off through plant shutdowns in a region of the country that already has high unemployment. But while there appears to be no immediate relief in sight, these problems should not obscure the long-term value and importance of the fishery as an industry—

Then he went on to say:

> It is becoming increasingly clear that unless difficult policy choices and actions are taken now, Canadians will not fully benefit from the future development of their fishing industry.

When the minister spoke today we expected that he would take the House and the country into his confidence and let us hear about some of these difficult choices. We all agree they are difficult choices. Unfortunately, all we heard was the minister's usual song: blame others, blame the provinces, blame the processors, absolve yourself.

The minister reminds me of Alice in Wonderland. He is there, but he does not quite know what is going on around him. As the Mad Hatter said, it gets curiouser and curiouser.

A few days ago in this House my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), put a question to the minister with respect to the plight of one of the companies referred to by Professor Patton. He talked about the fact that this company was in serious difficulty and that unless it heard from the minister within the next few days with regard to a proposal it had before the government, it would be forced to close down. That shutdown would result in the lay-off of 2,500 people directly employed by that company and 1,600 fishermen who depend on that company.

I am sorry the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) is not in his seat. If that company goes under, that spells doom to nine towns in Newfoundland, most of which are in the riding of Burin-St. George's. It will be a death sentence to the towns of Bonavista, Grand Bank, Fortune, Burgeo and Gaultois, and I could go on. Nine towns in the province of Newfoundland with a total population in excess of 20,000 depend exclusively on this company for employment. This company has a payroll in excess of $40 million.

I do not believe the minister is taking this seriously. If that were the only company in trouble, I suppose the proposal could be seen in isolation; but we cannot look at it in isolation because the minister and all of us know there are other companies in trouble. Other companies have proposals before the government to bail them out. We are talking about an industry that is totally Canadian owned, an industry which employs in its fish plants over 8,000 people, an industry which owns a fleet of 150 trawlers employing over 3,000 trawlermen, and an industry which produces over $500 million in goods and services in the Atlantic provinces.

We are talking about the keystone of the very fragile and weak Atlantic provinces economy. That places a particular responsibility on the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). We are entitled to expect some direction from him. We are entitled to expect some indication of assistance from him. He talks about band-aid treatment. He says he will not give in to band-aid treatment, and that is how he describes an infusion of capital. He talks about long-term solutions. Unless he applies band-aid treatment now, he can forget long-term solutions because many of these companies will be forced to close their doors, and in the process we will lose what is left of the most important and, indeed, the only important market we have, the United States market.

Where does the minister sit? He is a member of the inner cabinet. He was a party to the decision to bail out Chrysler, a multinational employing Canadians. I make no comment on that. He was a party to the decision to bail out Imperial Oil, another multinational, again employing Canadians. I make no comment on that. He was there when the government bailed out Massey-Ferguson. He was there when the government wrote off over $100 million for some obscure computer company of which we had never heard.

Where is he when the Atlantic provinces fishing industry is bleeding to death and is on its knees? He does not take the industry seriously. He thinks it is bluffing. He referred to that in his speech today. Every time the industry gets into trouble, it comes with cap in hand to the federal government. That may have been true in the past. That has happened before. It has happened several times before. It has not happened since the declaration of the 200-mile economic zone. It has happened now because of circumstances beyond the control of the industry, such as high interest rates, a softening of United States markets, increased competition as a consequence of the strengthening of the U.S. dollar, the weakening of European currencies and a change in consumer habits in the United States market.

We all saw it coming. The minister says he saw it coming. The minister says he warned the industry about a boom-and-bust psychology. He saw this coming and did nothing. What happened last summer when the Nickerson National Sea organization announced it was closing down three major plants, one in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick and one in Newfoundland, because it could no longer afford to carry inventories due to interest rates? That was in August. The minister knew, as we all did at that time, that that was merely the beginning and that the closing down of these Nickerson National Sea plants would set off a chain reaction, and it did. At one point in time, in my province alone, over 15 fish plants were down. It happened to coincide with a failure in the inshore fishery in many areas. The minister probably will come back with statistics to refute that, but let him tell that to the inshore fishermen who have to get by with little or nothing this year. It coincided with the failure of the inshore fishery, but the fact is that at that time the minister had a responsibility to move in and he did not. He did nothing.

I and others asked him to sit down with the industry because in that industry there are people who are highly professional and highly qualified. There are highly professional and skilled people within the various provincial fisheries departments. I know from my own experience with the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans that there are highly skilled professionals who are probably the best fish managers in the world. I get the impression that the minister sat there in isolation and did not take their advice. Perhaps he even refused to see them. Certainly he refused to sit down with the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland who repeatedly requested meetings with him. I think in his entire tenure since 1980 he has had only one or two meetings with the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland. Indeed, during that period he has had only one meeting with the Atlantic provinces ministers. Granted, there is a meeting taking place on Monday or Tuesday in Ottawa with the Atlantic provinces ministers and the minister responsible from Quebec. I maintain that meeting is six months too late; it should have taken place late last summer or early last fall. We have lost valuable time.

• (1430)

Basically we are facing the problem which speaks to the need for market diversification. The minister talked about quality control. Certainly we need to improve the quality of our fish. We need to put in place incentives to produce better quality fish. However, the bottom line is that unless we diversify and reduce our dependence on the U.S. market, there will be more trouble down the road. All the band-aids or long-term solutions in the world will not address the problem.

This is not the time to talk about a reduction in production capacity or a reduction in fleet size. I was hoping the minister would talk about the problems of fleet renewal. Most of these companies face that problem. Many trawlers are out of date, antiquated and have to be renewed.

We talk about overproduction capacity. The minister cannot, like Pontius Pilate, reach for the silver bowl and absolve himself in that area. No, he cannot absolve himself from responsibility. The minister has the power, which has been described as a draconian power, under the Fisheries Act totally to manage the industry. He has no power to manage or license plants on shore. However, the fact is that if we had a rational system of fisheries management where you do not have a boom-and-bust catching situation, the plants would not have to expand in order to accommodate that. This is part of the problem, what we used to call the glut, except it is a man-made glut.

Why does the minister not sit down when putting together a fisheries plan and rationally discuss this with the fish processors, the fisheries unions and the provinces? The minister knows where I stand on jurisdiction. He knows full well that fisheries management can no longer be the sole prerogative and responsibility of the federal government, constitutional rights notwithstanding.

The minister has to share those managerial responsibilities with the provinces, the producers, the representatives of the fishermen, whether it be the Newfoundland Fish Food and Allied Workers or the fisheries associations of the maritime provinces. He has to take them into his confidence if we are going to have a situation that is orderly fisheries management in the Atlantic provinces.

The minister has finally succeeded in antagonizing everyone. He has everyone against him including the fishermen's unions, the fishermen's associations, the fish processors and the provincial governments. Why? Because the minister has chosen in the midst of the worst crisis to face the industry to sit in his ivory tower in Ottawa and pretend that everything is fine. It is business as usual—don't get excited, don't make any waves.

I expected the minister to come to my province when these plants closed down last summer, and most are still down, and meet with the government, the Newfoundland fishermen's union and the processors. He had a chance encounter with them when he was in Marystown to preside over the launching and christening of a new fisheries patrol vessel which I had directed to be built in Marystown. He had a chance encounter, and a very unsatisfactory one at that. He does not have to take my word for this; he need only talk to the members of the Newfoundland fishermen's union, the processors and the people along the south coast of Newfoundland to know how totally unsatisfactory that encounter was and how totally unsatisfied they were with the responses they received from the minister.

All the minister does is muse and philosophize when the situation requires action, action which this minister has the power to carry out. He talks about basic restructuring and exports. Why has the minister not been able to get guarantees from the European Economic Community? It is not enough that we should allocate quotas within our zone. I agree with him that may be necessary in order to break through the tariff barrier which now discriminates against Canadian fish. However, if that is necessary, it should only be done with guarantees. At this point in time we do not have the guarantees.

Why can the minister not get the support of the Government of Canada? If the British government is providing opposition and giving him problems, why does not the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talk to Margaret Thatcher? Their industry in terms of their total economy is not nearly as important as ours, especially in the case of the Atlantic provinces. I am sure the British government would be reasonable if they had a responsible approach from the Government of Canada.

We know full well that the German fleet is tied up with no place to fish. That should be our ace in the hole, but we have not been able to use it effectively. In my opinion, we have not been able to deal effectively with the opposition we are receiving in Brussels from the British government. That is the responsibility of the minister and his colleagues in cabinet, and nobody else.

Who is responsible for the high interest rate situation today? The Government of Canada. Who is responsible for the failure to diversify our marketing opportunities? The Government of Canada. Who is responsible for failing to meet with the industry and the provincial governments and look for and accept their advice? The government that has the major responsibility under the Fisheries Act and under the Constitution of Canada, the Government of Canada.

It is not enough to go on attacking provincial colleagues and blaming the provinces and processors, blaming everyone but yourself. The fact is it is this minister who got us into this mess. All is not hopeless, all is not lost; he still has the power to get us out of it. But I am not sure he fully appreciates or understands the seriousness of the situation.

The Lake Group may be forced to close its operation if it does not hear within the next few hours a positive response from the Government of Canada. Not only the Lake Group, but many major processing companies in the Atlantic provinces are facing the same problems, such as cash flow problems, marketing problems and bank problems. They are heavily into the banks. How long are the banks expected to carry on? How long will this minister continue to allow the banks in Montreal and Toronto to call the shots in the Atlantic provinces? We have an intolerable situation which I do not believe this minister fully appreciates.

During my brief tenure as minister of fisheries, I set up on the coast of British Columbia an advisory council that I could deal directly with and receive policy advice from. Even the minister admits that has worked well. That was the first of three advisory councils we were to establish, one in British Columbia, one in the maritime provinces and one in Newfoundland. Just like the over-the-side sales policy we put together, the minister threw that out the door as well. If we had that mechanism in place today and a minister who was prepared to listen, I suspect we would not be in the mess we are at the present time. This minister does not fully appreciate the gravity of the situation that we face in Atlantic Canada today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. McGrath: I thank the House. I shall not take up the time of other hon. members who want to participate in this debate.

• (1440)

The fact is that the minister does not appreciate the gravity of the situation that the Atlantic provinces are faced with today, an area that is plagued with chronic, high unemployment. If this industry is not rescued at the present time—and only the federal government can do it, the same as they rescued the Chrysler Corporation, Massey-Ferguson and Imperial Oil—then it will take years and years for us to recover. I warn the minister that he is playing Russian roulette by sitting in the House and pretending that the situation is not as bad as it appears to be. He is playing with dynamite when he pretends that the situation is not as serious as we make it out to be.

It is about time the minister stopped chastising the bad boys, because there are no good boys or bad boys. There are serious problems which the industry is prepared to face up to. They have told the minister that they are prepared to sit down and talk about rationalizing marketing, to eliminate and reduce the cut-throat market situation that we have paid for and that has cost us dearly. They are prepared to sit down and talk about it and rationalize it. They are prepared to get their act together. They are prepared to assist the minister in terms of quality control and product diversification. They are prepared to do all of these things. But they cannot do them, Mr. Speaker, if they have a minister they cannot communicate with.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, a debate like the one we are having this afternoon clearly confirms the interest of the members of this House in an industry that is extremely important to Canada, namely the fisheries industry, and I believe that both the government members and the opposition parties realize that the basic purpose of today's debate is to find positive solutions to providing for a genuine renewal of our fisheries industry.

I listened earlier to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Newfoundland, and I could not help smiling when he referred to various measures that should be taken, because I remember that when he was Minister of Fisheries, he gave permission for trawlers of 100 feet and over to fish in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence. In my constituency, the gulf means 400 miles of coast line, from Sept-Iles to Blanc-Sablon, including Anticosti Island. Obviously that decision was severely criticized by the inshore fishermen. What we are trying to do today is to define ways of helping fishermen. There is a danger, when discussing the fisheries industry, of always thinking in terms of profits for the large processors, and forgetting the fishermen. In fact, throughout his speech, with only a few exceptions, the hon. member to whom I was listening spoke in generalities and blamed the department and the minister for the present situation in the fisheries industry.

I think it would be somewhat overconfident to say merely that the fisheries industry is doing as well as any other industry. Everyone knows what the world economic situation is like, and obviously the fisheries industry is just as sensitive to national and world development problems as other industries are. Now, what do we have to do? Trying to evaluate the situation is one thing, but finding solutions is an entirely different kettle of fish!

This morning and this afternoon, the minister talked about programs for restructuring the fisheries industry. I think there is an interesting aspect to this subject and it would perhaps be useful to invite the opposition parties, the fishermen and the co-operatives and processors to think about what is involved in restructuring the fisheries industry. In Quebec there is an additional problem because responsibility areas tend to overlap. I purposely included fishermen, co-operatives and processors, and I feel we should also involve the provinces in defining responsibility areas, because this is truly a field where all concerned should not only be consulted but should also have a say in the matter, if we are to draft legislation and regulations that will help fishermen to truly develop the industry within this sector. Of course, I could speak about fisheries throughout Canada, but I should like to see the Department of Fisheries focus its concern a little more on my part of Quebec's middle and lower north shore, because it is a region that is anxious to see a renewal of the fisheries industry.

The minister talked about thoroughly reorganizing the department and the fisheries industry, and although we do not necessarily want to be the ones to initiate such changes, neither do we want to be a step behind. We want to be treated as equal partners and we want to get our point of view across. In this respect, I must congratulate the minister who, during his eighteen months in office, has helped us tremendously to modernize our fishing facilities. When discussing fisheries or any other subject, it is very easy to talk in generalities, because in the final instance, everyone is for motherhood and against sin. Helping people is fine, but hitting on the best way to do this is another story, and I must admit that in this particular area the present minister has done excellent work in our region. I know that the member for St. John's East, Newfoundland, is familiar with my area—his sector is not very far from mine—because once you get to Blanc-Sablon, you are just opposite Sainte-Barbe, and I think the people in Old Fort Bay, Middle Bay and Saint-Paul often deal with Newfoundland.

In this easternmost part of Quebec, the problem is the lack of infrastructures for fisheries. There is also the marketing aspect, how to sell the fish, but if we do not have the infrastructure, our fishermen today will never be able to bring new life to the fisheries industry or be able to interest the younger generation in the industry. I see my colleague from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold) who also obtained funds through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in order to provide for appropriate facilities for the fisheries industry in his area, and that, too, is a tremendous boost for the fisheries industry, not only in eastern Quebec but throughout Canada.

Another positive contribution is the fact that DREE is working together with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to provide comprehensive assistance projects. And I say this with great feeling today, because the north shore fisheries have always been neglected, and we want to put an end to this, because we have people who are highly motivated to develop this sector, and we shall no longer let ourselves be victimized—I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East, Newfoundland—by the big processors who are rushing to apply for large grants in order to build even bigger ships to provide work for a few highly modernized, very well equipped, even too well equipped fishermen, while our inshore fishermen are left to fend for themselves. Our inshore fishermen must come first on our list of priorities.

I would now like to talk about the role of research in bringing about a renewal of the fisheries industry. No one has mentioned research yet. Nevertheless, it should be one of the department's principal tools for considering solutions for the future. I think Canada is particularly fortunate in having oceans to the north, south and west: the Arctic, the Pacific and the Atlantic. We have a resource that belongs to all Canadians, and we still tend to be very conventional in how we make use of that resource. Our universities should be given a chance to develop an interest in modern approaches to the fisheries industry and to look for ways of making us far more competitive, not only on national but also on international markets.

● (1450)

Now that the Gulf region is gaining its own identity, I would also invite the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) to try and set aside a specific location in the Gulf area for research in Quebec. As you know, the people of Quebec have traditionally been fishermen and the Gaspe Peninsula depends on the sea and on fishing, as do the Magdalen Islands and the north shore. We would like to be able to increase our presence in the Canadian fishing industry. We shall be able to do so if the government gives us the means to be very active in the field of research. I wanted to say this because this sector has perhaps been left to cope for itself in the past. We have been content with unsophisticated fishing methods, but to be able to compete with Scandinavian and northern countries, we need extremely sophisticated techniques in the fishing industry.

Another basic element, Mr. Speaker, is information. In my own region, we know that information is distributed, but its quality and regularity could be increased. Our fishermen, whether in Blanc-Sablon, La Tabatière, Old Fort Bay, Middle Bay, Saint-Paul, Harrington Harbour, Chèverie, Natashquan or Rivière-au-Tonnerre, do not have enough information, and in this regard, if I may make another positive suggestion to the Minister, I would ask him to co-operate with the Department of Employment and Immigration to hold winter courses which are better adapted to the needs of our fishermen, as they have perhaps more time in that period of the year to receive information from his department. It is often said that information is power, the newspapers being called the fourth estate. I believe that it would be a good thing for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to provide this power for our own fishermen. I say this because it is a comment which I heard during our travels along the middle and lower shore. The fishermen want to fish regularly, they are not lazy as is often suggested in the industry, but they would like to be in constant communication with the department because when comes the time to innovate and to create, they would truly be well informed and would achieve a major sense of self-fulfillment and commitment, as well as greater co-operation with the department.

Another element which concerns my area and which will certainly interest the hon. members opposite, especially those from Newfoundland, is the question of quotas. In this regard, I believe that the department does not deserve to be congratulated because, while we are very proud of our minister and even of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans officials, a major mistake was made this year when setting the quotas, and as a result a ban on fishing has to be imposed at the beginning of October. A week later, the department reconsidered its decision and said that there was no problem and that fishing could continue. In our region, this brought about the early closing of some fish processing plants. I wonder, Mr. Minister, if it might not be advisable to have separate quotas for the province of Newfoundland and for the province of Quebec, at least for that zone of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, so as to make sure that there is no conflict between the quotas of either province. Of course, any man fishing with a trawler of 100 feet or more and working with the latest in the way of fishing gear is way ahead of a competitor using traditional fishing methods. I draw that to the attention of the minister and, if possible, I would like to hear his ideas on that because, with respect to quotas, the fishermen are not on the same footing, and I think it is important to do justice to our inshore fishermen.

Another point I would like to raise has to do with the quality and processing of the fish and the new plan. I think that the department wants to innovate in fisheries, not only in Quebec but in all fishing zones in Canada generally. In Matane this week officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans held an important meeting with groups of fishermen, and the minister gave them a few reports to look over, and those fishermen and those associations made a few remarks to the minister. I hope that the time for meetings is not over or drawing to a close, but that such meetings will only be suspended for a while and that the minister will take concrete measures to implement his policies.

I know that DREE is willing to invest fairly large sums of money in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and that people are ready for action. We must not try to do everything at once of course, but we must take one step forward because if we do not stop consulting people right and left, both at the federal and the provincial levels, we risk discouraging the fishermen. The people want to feel that the department and the minister are willing and ready to act. They have to get this feeling otherwise the fishermen will no longer show their good faith and willingness because they will be inclined to say: it is always the same thing, we always get the same statements and we are no longer interested in co-operating with the department.

So I would urge the minister, after the Matane meeting, to get things moving, to free some funds so that in 12 to 18 months from now, we may see the results of his political will. One last point, because I think my time is almost up, concerning the responsibilities of the federal fisheries department and the provincial level. It is crucial, Mr. Speaker, that the spheres of authority of all parties involved be clearly defined and identified. We are quite happy that the constitutional debate is over, but it is most important, now that there will be negotiations on the distribution of power that the definition and the limitations of all governments be clearly identified, otherwise it becomes a buck-passing game in which each side says : this is a provincial responsibility or this is a federal responsibility and the buck goes back and forth. We have to put an end to this administrative buck-passing game and define clearly the spheres of authority of each party and of each institution involved.

I have here a book written by an author from Sept-Îles on the North Shore, Louis-Armand Santerre, entitled "De Sept-Îles à Blanc Sablon, 750 kilomètres par voie d'eau." The book explains or tells the history of the Quebec lower and mid North Shore, which covers half of my riding of Manicouagan.

I would urge the speakers who will follow me to make down-to-earth statements because some of the people I am talking about, do not even have a television set and come from a long line of fishermen. That is most unfortunate because often, when listening to hon. members and even to ministers during our proceedings in this House, we get a feeling that things are being said generally, vaguely, so that ultimately no one in particular is concerned and no specific guidance is given to those who will have to decide on the measures to be taken to find solutions to present problems in the fishing industry. I am being explicit because our people have to know, to hear exactly what solutions are being put forward by the opposition. I myself, as a member of the party in power, am trying to be critical of the department itself while avoiding sterile speeches condemning this or that individual. What is important is finding solutions. I insist that hon. members who speak after me must concentrate on solutions.

All hon. members must denounce the problems facing us, that the fishing industry is now up against. But the people of whom I spoke a while ago would like to hear from those hon. members who are directly concerned with fisheries what proposals and solutions are possible. That is very important, because in our meetings with our constituents these bread and butter issues are always being raised. Here, we hear very seldom about them. We hear a lot about hon. members' pious wishes and good intentions, as well as their rather vague ideas, but nobody ever really tries to define the problem. What I should like the minister to tell me is how we are going to proceed to modernize our fishing gears? How, with the assistance of our universities, are we going to develop new techniques to catch and condition fish? What new techniques could we develop? How could we secure the co-operation of universities, co-ops, industries, fishermen and the various provincial governments? How could we ease the regulations to make it easier for fishermen to get out there and catch fish? How could we guarantee fishermen a minimum income, when it is not possible to extend the scope of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation Act over a wider territory than the one already identified?

Could we not set up for the fishing industry something similar to the Canadian Wheat Pool as we did for wheat, to guarantee our fishermen income stability, because the problem of this industry stems from the fact that there is no income security there, a factor which discourages our youth from joining the industry, while western farmers enjoy income security thanks to a relevant legislation. Fishermen in my area do not have income security and certainly would like to get it. The whole issue of unemployment insurance benefits for seasonal fishermen is being raised again: they will try to find ways to find additional income. That is why I wanted to call hon. members' attention to this problem. I am aware that my time has run out, but I merely wish that by next year, we might have taken a step forward in the right direction. I am most grateful to hon. members for listening to me and to you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to express my views.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this special debate which I hope will highlight the financial crisis which presently faces the east coast fishing industry. I submit to you, sir, that it is a great day in the life of anyone when he can go fishing. This activity, whether it be for pleasure, protein or profit, is being seriously restricted at the present time in Atlantic Canada. This is a fact which the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) learned firsthand in November when he had the pleasure of visiting my riding and I had the honour of hosting the visit.

Within the past week, those of us in the official opposition who are interested in the problems facing the fishing industry met with the leaders of this industry from the Pacific region, from New Brunswick, from Prince Edward Island, from Nova Scotia and Quebec as well as Newfoundland. All of these people told the same story, that unless a miracle occurs between now and the end of June, 1982, the entire industry on both coasts faces complete and total financial collapse.

When we consider the number of people, towns, cities, villages and auxiliary industries that are dependent on the fishing industry, this is truly a startling revelation. Many of us who have been associated with the industry for a long time knew from firsthand knowledge that all was not well in certain sectors of it, but few of us realized the depth of despair and the pessimistic outlook which was portrayed by industry leaders.

Despite a remarkable resource development and recovery since the 200-mile limit was declared in 1977 and a favourable outlook for further stock growth of codfish in the Gulf and east of Newfoundland, the entire east coast fishing industry is operating today in a fog of uncertainty. National Sea Products, one of Canada's largest fishing companies, has seen its financial situation deteriorate steadily. On November 4, it put out a press release stating that the company's net loss for the nine months ending October 3, 1981, was in excess of $3 million. Over the 21-month period ending October 31 the company's net working capital declined from $20.8 million to half a million dollars, yet the minister seems to think that this is not a serious situation.

H.B. Nickerson and Sons, another Canadian fishing company, has had similar cash flow problems. The Lake Group mentioned by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is also facing serious financial problems. This large Newfoundland company closed its trawler operations at Grand Bank, Fortune and Gaultois and I believe that only the Fortune plant has been reopened.

In all cases, spokesmen for these companies gave similar reasons for their financial problems. They cited four principal factors for the rapid decline in the industry, namely, growing market weakness for their products, high interest rates, operating cost increases and inappropriate government policies.

It would seem that the soft markets for Canadian fish have been due to weak demand in the United States in recent months for several key products, plus what I can only call the strained attitude which seems to exist between Canada and the United States, brought about by the hamhanded manner in which this government implemented its Foreign Investment Review Act as well as its national energy policy. We see this attitude reflected in the stalemate which exists in the negotiations on the fishery and boundary treaties covering the controversial Georges Bank area.

I fear that Canadian fishermen will long remember the lack of this government's ability to reach an amicable political solution on the Georges Bank issue which, I submit, could have been obtained if a conciliatory attitude had been taken by Canada when dealing with our best friends and our largest trading partner.

Mr. LeBlanc: What do you advocate—that we give in?

Mr. Crouse: The minister interrupts and asks what I am advocating. I will repeat it so that even he will understand. I have great admiration for the minister and I know he has worked hard but he could work a little harder on this one.

I said that I submit the situation could have been different if there had been a more conciliatory attitude taken by Canada when dealing with our best friend and our biggest trading partner. That is what I advocate.

The lines of communication are down. They are not clear between our two countries. There is too much static. No one will ever convince me that further consultation rather than confrontation would not have brought about a more desirable settlement of what I call a very thorny issue between our two countries. Our fish markets are soft as well because of a relative drop in several European currencies which has eroded Canada's price advantage. There have also been very weak prices and poor demand for Canadian herring in Europe. This is due to the resumption of the North Sea herring fishery.

Another item affecting our sales has been tariff and non-tariff barriers in Spain, Japan, the European Economic Community and in Portugal. These have been raised in an attempt to force Canadians to agree to granting further fish allocations inside our 200-mile limit. This, of course, should not be happening.

When speaking in Marystown on October 3, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) said that there had to be realism when it comes to negotiating with other countries for advantageous entry into their markets or for the removal of barriers to those markets. He also said that if it costs us a few thousand tons of fish from our waters to sell many more thousands of tons of Canadian fish products, then we must assess the deal and not perpetuate some myth that we must catch every fish in our zone. Such a concept is fool's gold, he said, and that what is required to achieve entry into markets must be done.

This is high sounding rhetoric, and the minister is obviously following the course he expounded. He is giving away fishing quotas to foreign fleets—within our 200-mile zone. When he does not give them what they think they should have, they come and take what they feel they are entitled to. We learned this fact only on Thursday of last week when I pointed out that 25 Spanish draggers and two Mexican trawlers were fishing on Flemish Cap in the northwest Atlantic fisheries zone. They have reportedly been overfishing in that one small area near the Grand Banks where cod stocks are endangered, thereby making a mockery out of this country's quotas on fish.

• (1510)

I asked the minister in committee if he had any idea as to how many tons of fish the Spanish and the Mexicans are catching, what effect this overfishing would have on Nova Scotia and Newfoundland cod stocks, and what action the government was taking to encourage these nations to discontinue their destructive practices. The minister's officials replied that they did not know how much fish was being taken because neither Spain nor Mexico are members of NAFO. Therefore, they are not obligated in any way to abide by NAFO rules or to report catches.

We were told that the impact on our cod stocks is indirect. The government is making representations, through NAFO, against the countries following this practice. I think this points out a weakness in our Department of External Affairs. I submit that Canada, through that department, should be making diplomatic protests, loud and long, to the Spaniards and the Mexicans. This apparently has not been done.

Since the minister holds strong views which, as I just reported, he stated in Marystown, I think he should also tell us how many tonnes of fish he has given away to foreign countries and what advantages he has received for Canada with regard to getting entry into their markets. I am sure he is aware, and if he is not, I will tell him now, that this policy is not acceptable to the Canadian industry, for although the industry desires to get new markets, it is not prepared to be blackmailed into giving tonnage to others in return for market concessions until all or any benefits which we may receive as a nation are given or frittered away. This is not the way to manage Canada's fisheries resources.

I mentioned a moment ago that the lines of communications between Canada and the United States are cluttered with static and the message seems unclear. This analogy is equally true within Canada. In my own riding, for example, in Riverport, Nova Scotia, the Riverport Seafoods plant burnt down along with the government wharf on the afternoon of September 26.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I saw that.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) says that he saw the wreckage of that plant. I took him out and showed it to him. The fire resulted in disaster and desolation. This disaster caused a loss of employment to more than 300 people. It is estimated that the loss of the plant would take some $4.5 million annually—

Mr. Pepin: What did you do about it?

Mr. Crouse: —out of the economy of one county, Lunenburg County. This plant was a jewel in the Nickerson group of fisheries companies owing to the work ethic of the people who reside in that particular area. It seems old fashioned to say that these people still believe in the old but time honoured code that they should give a honest day's work for an honest day's pay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: They also ask for unemployment insurance benefits only as a last resort. As soon as the plant was destroyed, I wrote to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, informing them of the loss. I asked them to take whatever steps were necessary, and to meet with company officials and indicate their plans for the reconstruction of the wharf. This was necessary, of course, for the wharf is used by the public and the large fishing fleet of both company owned and privately-owned ships. However, since the fire, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has played cat and mouse with the citizens of Riverport in Lunenburg County. He obviously does not know or he does not care about the depth of their concern over the daily loss of their employment opportunities.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crouse: I submit that the minister has added unnecessarily to their anxiety and worry over the future.

Again, on Tuesday, I asked the minister in committee what his plans were for the reconstruction of the wharf at Riverport. He replied, "The company in question has to decide if it is going to rebuild, and as soon as there is a firm commitment to rebuild, we obviously will be preparing the plans which might be slightly different from those for the previous wharf." In all honesty, I suppose that that type of answer is better than nothing. However, I ask the minister and the government, which has two cabinet ministers from Nova Scotia: why is it impossible to get at least one direct answer from anyone over on that side which would indicate that they plan to rebuild that wharf at Riverport in Lunenburg County? There has been a wharf on that site for decades. The fishing fleet and the homes of the captains and the fishing crews are there. I submit that Riverport citizens will not easily accept or readily forget the form of shell game that this minister seems intent on playing with their fortunes and their future. I ask the minister to reconsider his stand on that issue immediately, and since the wharf reconstruction is nothing more than economic pump priming, that he immediately start with plans for its replacement.

Another factor affecting the fishing industry has been the high interest rate policy of the government. This policy has increased the industry's fixed costs, and especially inventory holding costs, to which such a seasonal industry is especially vulnerable. In addition, operating costs, especially those for fuel, for fishing gear and for labour have been outpacing general inflation while market slumps have kept the over-all market price for the product below cost.

This government has not provided any help whatsoever to assist the fishing industry to overcome its high fuel costs and its bloated interest costs, which are a direct result of government policy and for which the cabinet ministers in the House and, in fact, the entire government, must assume entire responsibility. In fact, on November 30, 1981, in response to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), the minister said, "interest and fuel increases are only"—what did he call it? He said they were "irritants".

They are some irritants! It reminds me of Winston Churchill's famous phrase: "Some chicken, some neck." Some irritants, the government's fuel price increases and the high interest costs!

While these factors have triggered the current crisis, the cumulative impact of federal fisheries policy since the mid 1970s has so weakened this industry economically that it cannot withstand the present downturn. Licensing and quota allocation policies have induced too many participants to enter the fisheries industry. This has increased and concentrated fish landings in the summer when the fish flesh is soft. It is not of premium quality, and the markets are weak.

Seasonality, I say to Your Honour, is the most serious structural weakness in the industry today. The minister has the full responsibility. He has told us many times that he has the responsibility for controlling the Atlantic fishery. Therefore, he must take full responsibility for this unfortunate situation. Today, when the minister was speaking, he referred to me, for which I thank him. One always likes to hear one's riding mentioned in the House. The minister referred to "The hon. member for South Shore" when he said that it was he, the minister, who had resisted the expansion of the offshore fleet. I am like the minister, and I, too, wish the debate were a little less structured because we could perhaps get our points across a little better. However, at that time we were pointing out that some of the fleet was obsolete. In fact, some ships became so old that their continued use would endanger and could now endanger the lives of their crews. We were also saying that, to be competitive, the industry should upgrade its ships to take advantage of new technology, including some freezer trawlers for the inshore as well as the offshore fleet. That is what we were saying at the time.

Today the minister also mentioned some of the options he is considering. I hope I am quoting him rightly because I do not want to misquote him. One option was to buy into one of the large companies in order to learn more about its managing policies. He also said that the government may bring the fleet in under one management system. In other words, what he said indirectly was that the government is thinking about nationalizing the fishing industry—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crouse: —which is comparable to that which has already been done in the oil and gas industry. This is precisely the worry and the concern of the entire industry. If it is carried out, the government will have to raise the taxes of all Canadians even higher in order to bolster its unemployment insurance fund.

I hope the minister will understand when I say that I believe Canadians should have some freedom to operate a business in a free democracy. Therefore, I am opposed to direct government intervention in the fishing industry. The government has clearly demonstrated that it cannot operate the railroads. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will have to agree with that, as he has been apologizing for weeks. The government cannot operate the Post Office. It cannot operate the airlines. In fact, I have come to the view that it cannot operate anything. Therefore, socializing the fishing industry may well spell disaster for all segments of the industry.

I now come back to the minister's speech in Marystown. That was a beauty! The minister said, "Quality not only should be upgraded, it will be." I wonder how often I have heard him make those statements. Despite his acknowledgement that there is a need for better fish quality, this government has consistently refused to require that all fish be gutted, washed and iced at sea, largely because of opposition. The minister is getting it from certain groups of fishermen. This is difficult for me to understand because, speaking on a more personal note, when I and some friends built our first dragger in 1947, we followed the course of cleaning and icing our fish at sea in order to land prime quality. That was in 1947. The only alternative to landing a better quality than one does by icing the fish at sea is to establish a Canadian fleet of freezer trawlers. That would enhance quality. Technology has designed freezers that will work efficiently in small areas. Freezer trawlers can be anywhere from 60 feet in length, but for some unknown reason this type of concept or program has never been promoted by the minister.

• (1520)

Again referring to the minister's speech that he made in Marystown, he complained that the provinces licensed too many processing plants. He said that in the case of Newfoundland that was done by more than 200 per cent. This statement causes me to ask the minister directly: if the provinces have excessive processing capacity, why does the minister aggravate the problem by promoting and subsidizing over-the-side sales, that is, direct from the fishermen to foreign factory ships? The minister is simply compounding that problem.

Mr. LeBlanc: They do not buy.

Mr. Crouse: The minister says they do not buy, Mr. Speaker. I will accept that, and I will deal with that in a moment.

But this policy diverts raw material and potential employment opportunities away from Canadian processors, thus creating unrealistic price expectations that are incompatible with the private sector development of the industry.

I see that my time is almost up and I will conclude as quickly as I can, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that the inshore fishermen should receive the same price from the Canadian processors that is offered by communist factory ships. However, if the government can subsidize the factory ships of communist countries by guaranteeing them additional catches of squid or other fish species if they do not fill their holds with mackerel or herring, then I believe the federal government should pay the difference between the processors offered price and the foreign factory ships through the fisheries prices support board. This should be done in the form of a subsidy and given to our inshore fishermen.

In the long run, if that type of policy were followed it would bring a greater over-all return to Canada than that received under the present policy. Also, it would be fair to all fishermen and workers, and it would not favour only a select few, which is happening under the present policy.

To place the fishery on a profitable footing in the medium to long term I submit that we must establish policies leading to the restructuring of the entire industry. I submit that the Canadian fishing industry is well placed to make a significant and ongoing net contribution to national and regional wealth, but this can only be achieved by the private sector if it is able to make some profit.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, the minister and my honoured colleague have addressed a number of the issues, which clearly shows that far from failing to foresee the problems currently facing the Atlantic fishing industry, the government has warned all the participants right from the beginning of the pitfalls and the problem areas which would have to be dealt with on a continuing basis if the promise of the 200-mile fishing zone were to be fully realized for the benefit of all.

I have just a word to say on the 200-mile limit. Since the extension of the Canadian jurisdiction to 200 miles offshore, on the east coast and in Canada generally we have increased our share of the total catch of groundfish. This has increased the market value of Canadian fisheries production. In fact, a study recently completed by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, entitled "Canada's Fish Markets for the 1980s", forecast that Canada could export $3.25 billion worth of fish and fish products. This could be achieved by 1985. This is a 44 per cent increase in real earnings over 1980. The study reported that, to reach this goal, the quality of Canadian fisheries products must be improved if they are to appeal to the sophisticated tastes of consumers in other countries.

Since the implementation of the 200-mile limit, I do not feel that our industry has grown to the extent that the policies have tried to make possible. In my view, the industry has not done anything about meeting the requirements of the export markets. We may put the blame on the federal government for some things, but surely we cannot blame the government for the fact that food cannot be sold in world markets. Nor can we put the blame on the minister. The minister has tried over the past few years, and has discussed measures with the industry which he has proposed they adopt, to increase the market value of our groundfish and other fish.

There are many factors which have caused the distressing state of our east coast fisheries. I will dwell on four only. First is markets. This year I have seen intensive fishing of groundfish by the offshore fleet. This was done even after a poor 1980 year. The fleet caught its quota in the first three or four months of the season to the detriment of other areas, mine in particular. I saw the haddock they caught. Some fishermen had never caught haddock before and some plants had never processed haddock before. When our season began, our own industry could not participate in that market, which had been there for years, because of the dumping by the offshore fleet and by the dumping of the processors into the existing markets.

The big four fisheries firms compete among themselves. They dump into an existing market. They catch their quota right at the beginning of the fishing season. Some of the European competitors can provide better quality, and with the favoured exchange rate there is a serious marketing problem for Canadians. We have not been able to overcome the tendency of the big four to control their existing markets and to fail to find better markets or to put better fish on the existing markets.

Another problem is quality about which I shall speak later. But first I want to speak about our high interest rates. I have not seen any of the provinces, who are directly responsible for some of those processing plants, get into the fray by helping the processing companies. Instead, they come to the federal government. I am sure some solution will be found, but I would like to see some effort on the part of the provinces in coming to a solution.

Another problem is overcapacity. This year we saw plants open which had never before operated at that particular time of year. In fact, some had not operated at all for quite some time. We may well have overcapacity in some of the fishing areas. Perhaps our vessels will have to go looking for new sources of fish beyond the 200-mile limit and develop some of the underutilized species. We have not risen to that challenge since the 200-mile limit was imposed. This too is one of the main reasons that we are suffering at this time.

My colleagues have discussed the three basic factors which must be part of any analysis of the ill health of the fishing sector, namely the resource, the capital and labour employed in both harvesting and processing, and last, but certainly not least, is the marketplace. I have already discussed in general form some of the marketplace factors which I think have existed this last year.

At the outset I wish to remind hon. members opposite that time and again, even before fisheries' jurisdiction was extended to 200 miles, the minister emphasized the fact that while Canadians were gaining a fishing zone, they were also losing an excuse for poor performance in the fishery. The time has come when we can no longer excuse ourselves for poor quality fishery products and inability to compete.

● (1530)

Until now we have been unable to control the marketplace, yet we have, off the east coast, one of the greatest potentials for industry, particularly if one considers that we are dealing with food and the need for sources of food which exist in the world today and will exist in the future. This subject has been much talked about but we have never taken the concrete action required to control the marketplace rather than allowing the marketplace to control us as is the case today.

Obviously, there are some aspects of the marketplace which we cannot control. We cannot set the world price, nor can we demand that people eat Canadian fish rather than fish caught by fishermen from other countries, just as we cannot demand that people not eat chicken or pork.

There are some aspects to the industry which are under our control and upon which we must take action. We must stop fishing in a general way and begin fishing in earnest to meet market requirements. First we must determine, before the net is put into the water, where there is a market, and what product will sell. If we find we have a particular species which would sell in the market, we should offer a top quality product so that we may obtain the top price.

I would like to turn now to processing, quality and marketing. I believe that if we on the east coast can improve the quality of our fish, our marketing capabilities will follow. The processing, quality and marketing policies are also in the process of changing dramatically. Of course, processing is an integral part of the fisheries policy because it is the processors who provide a market for the fishermen's product. The processor also provides much of the shore-based employment in the region.

The primary responsibility for this sector lies with the provincial governments. However, the federal government remains involved in areas such as inspection regulations, export marketing and regional economic development.

Quality enhancement was one of the most important aspects of fisheries policies which were discussed in the recent document called, "Policy for Canada's Atlantic Fisheries in the 1980s". A major program has already begun. It will be maintained in an effort to ensure that the quality of Canadian fish products will continue to improve.

We have had a fishing inspection program for many years which was aimed in the beginning to ensure the health and safety of consumers. However, steps have already been taken to improve quality. For example, the department has given financial assistance to help upgrade handling and storage facilities. The department has provided equipment to the inshore fishermen to improve the on-board handling, off-loading and dock-side handling and transportation. These measures have helped but, we are told, much remains to be done. The implementation of this assistance is what I am concerned about and what I will be watching for in the next few months.

After extensive consultation with people in the fishing industry, the government has embarked on a major quality enhancement program. The major elements of the program involve vessel certification, quality protection on board, dockside grading onloading, dockside handling and transportation to plants, improved quality control in processing plants and finally, finished product grade standards.

In terms of vessel certification, regulations are being amended to require that all vessels have adequate on-board facilities for storing and chilling the fish in a manner which will preserve its quality.

On-board quality protection is an area in which Canadian fishermen have not measured up as well as their competitors. Competitive industries require that fish be bled, gutted and iced on board and prohibit the use of forks and pumps which damage the edible portion of the fish, and they insist that the fish be stored at depths which prevent physical damage. In many sectors of the Canadian fishery, all of these prohibited practices are in use. I know that in this area the minister has given an ultimatum to fishermen about bleeding and gutting. However, I do feel that there are instances during certain times of the year when fish are caught that it is hard to believe that they would be of better quality by having them bled and gutted. I hope through consultation and meetings with the fishermen that this problem will be considered.

The department proposes that Canada should at least adopt the practice of chilling or icing the fish on board and restricting the depth of storage to 90 centimeters or less to prevent damage. I can assure the minister that in my area a good percentage of the fishermen are doing this already. There are perhaps other areas where fishermen are not doing this, and that may be one of the quality problems. It was not quality which prevented the sale of haddock last spring and summer. Those fishermen had had good markets and good prices for their fish. It was the fact that the inventories of the big companies, which the offshore fleet had caught so early in the spring, had been dumped on the market that brought the prices down. Haddock is not a commodity which we find in many other areas of the European markets coming into the United States. It happened to be a good selling product in the southern part of the province and this was detrimental.

Returning to the measures which are already in place, the discussion paper went on to say that by making these measures universal as well as by paying higher prices for fish gutted and bled on board, the department hopes to see a major improvement in quality. I have already stated in the House that I do not feel that gutting and bleeding fish is the only measure which makes for top quality fish. When fishing boats are out for extended periods of time, fish should be bled and gutted before processing back on shore, but when fish are returned almost immediately it is hard to believe that bleeding and gutting would make the fish of better quality.

Another area considered by the discussion paper was dockside grading standards which are being developed at this time. The standards will be based on firmness, odour, exterior appearance and degree of bruising or blood spotting. As previously noted, the department stated that first quality fish would be those bled and gutted on board, and I repeat that I question this being the only way to produce first quality fish.

If this program is to be successful, a concentrated program to train and/or licence graders is essential. To my knowledge there is no quality training program in Nova Scotia which would upgrade the quality of fish in the processing industry. The proposal now being considered is to elicit the help of the provinces in this task to undertake the training at fisheries training schools and in colleges.

If quality is a prime consideration, I certainly hope that the provinces play their part in the program.

The quality enhancement program at dockside will prohibit the use of forks and pumps which damage the edible portion of the fish. In addition, the department is working on a port-by-port basis to ensure an adequate water supply at all unloading ports. It is hoped that there will be a fully approved water or modified unloading system at each port by 1985, according to the discussion paper.

I welcome this because one of the chief ports in my province, the town of Digby, has a bad water supply problem and has not been able to find funding under DREE. Perhaps in the renegotiation of the DREE agreement, there will be some assistance in solving this problem.

Guidelines are being developed for good manufacturing practices which will ensure the production of high quality products. Voluntary compliance with the guidelines will begin this year and the possibility of including them in the regulations which govern plant registration will be considered.

● (1540)

The department is also drafting a finished product grade standard for a number of products including crabs, frozen pickerel fillets, frozen sockeye and pink salmon, groundfish fillets, frozen herring fillets and cured herring products. These graded products will be subjected to inspection, and the granting of an export licence will be conditional on their meeting the standards. I believe this will achieve one of the expectations of the industry respecting marketing better quality products.

In the marketing field the major new direction outlined in the discussion paper is the initiation of an export licensing system, and on that point, I remind the House that the minister has been seeking an orderly marketing system for the past number of years. I do not think the hon. member who spoke just before me was implying that we should register a complaint because the two countries to which he was referring are fishing on the open seas. They have a right to the open seas, as does any other country. Until there is a law of the sea agreement, we would not have any jurisdiction to oust them from the open seas beyond our 200-mile jurisdiction. If we did, I am sure that would be considered a major provocation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Fish war.

Miss Campbell: I would not even call it a fish war. I think it would be a provocation against a state. It is unfortunate that the two countries referred to do not belong to NAFO.

There was some mention about the EEC agreement, and we must remember that Canada negotiated to get orderly marketing arrangement with the EEC. Only recently has that been ratified by the EEC and, to my knowledge, the Canadian provinces and processors which were opposed to this have not stated whether or not it should be ratified by this country. However, the process of the negotiations did involve the provinces and the processors. It is my understanding that a decision will be made very shortly on the EEC agreement.

I know time is passing. There are many problems, but I believe they can be solved. This fisheries minister has always been able to sit down and discuss problems. It is a matter of the industry showing good faith. I remember back in 1974 and 1975 when this minister brought in a support program for the groundfish industry, which was failing at that time. The industry promised it would come up with better standards and better marketing conditions for its fish. It seems to me that those conditions have not improved since then, and I for one did not feel it was necessary at that time for assistance from the federal government. I felt that the industry should have improved its own fish operations because there clearly was irresponsibility on the part of some of the big companies in expanding to meet a demand which they were not working to increase in the marketplace. I wish the minister luck with the problem. It is a major one, but I know he has resolved other problems in the past. He is having a meeting with the provincial ministers on Monday. To my knowledge, he has been meeting with representatives of the Fisheries Council over the last few months at least every six weeks. This demonstrates his willingness to discuss the problem. There may be some hon. members opposite who are not as willing to look at this problem.

I speak from experience because last spring when the problem arose with respect to the haddock fishery in South West Nova and at the southern end of my province, the minister met with both fishermen and processors. A $14 million stabilization plan was brought forward by the Fisheries Prices Support Board. However, the people who had put the inventory into the market were not willing to accept the plan and, to the best of my knowledge, did not come back with any alterations to the plan, and have yet to come forward respecting that $14 million program for haddock inventories.

I am pleased to have taken part in this debate today. I would have liked to comment on other matters such as sector management, which I feel needs to be discussed. I can see that the general over-all feeling respecting sector management is good in the sense that there will be Gulf sector, Newfoundland sector, Scotia sector and Fundy sector. However, there are problems which are worrying the people. The resource in a given area should be for the fishermen in that area, and there should be no lines drawn, particularly in the Scotian shelf area, between different areas. I realize that there will be discussions on sector management before its full implementation, and I look forward to some of those discussions.

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I too am happy to participate in the discussion this afternoon on the fishing industry on the east coast. Over the years the east coast fishery has been a valuable sector of the economy of Atlantic Canada, but in the last number of years it has been declining in importance, and we have had a great number of problems in the industry.

This afternoon my comments will be about a proposal the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is considering. It is a proposal regarding transferable property rights. I read a paper on this matter and, according to my understanding of the contents of that paper, one objective of the proposal is to allocate to certain sectors of the industry the right to own the fish that are in the oceans. They will have the right to catch those fish at places which are convenient to their operations. Another objective of the proposal is to provide for a more uniform and even flow of fish to the processors in order to avoid a boom and bust or a feast or famine situation. I agree with this objective, and I can certainly endorse the principle, but there are some concerns I have about the proposal which I would like to voice at this time.

As I said earlier, the paper is a note on transferable property rights. It defines the proposal, explains its application and briefly discusses the benefits and some of the problems which could be expected.

The report defines transferable property rights as a distribution of fish quotas to individual fishing enterprises which may catch the assigned quotas at whatever time and, in principle, by whatever method they choose. Transferability implies that the quotas can be sold, traded, loaned, rented, etc. as can any element of private property. It tries to clarify that they would not constitute personal property as such, but once allocated initially by the Crown, there should be an implicit notion of contract which would protect the recipient against arbitrary withdrawal of the right. Nonetheless, it is almost certain that the federal government would enact regulations to place some restrictions on freedom of transferability to prevent quotas concentrating in too few hands, or in foreign ownership, for example. One of my concerns is that these quotas will be assigned to certain companies, and on the east coast at the moment, unfortunately, there are large fishing companies which are in extremely poor financial condition. They are almost bankrupt. If, heaven forbid, they do go broke, I am concerned that their rights might be transferred to other companies which may not even be located in the same province. Those companies would then have control of the fish and take it to that other province, eliminating completely a fishing industry in the former province. That is one of my basic concerns about this proposal.

● (1550)

The paper suggests that this proposal could in principle be applied throughout the industry, but for practical reasons it is most feasible to first test the concept in the offshore sector. The first and most important step in the application of the policy would be a division of the total quota, the total allowable catch, in a given stock among fleet sectors. Once the offshore share of the TAC is determined as a percentage, this amount of fish would be allocated among trawler operators over a certain long period of time and according to some initial formula. The major benefit of the transferable property right according to the proposal, as I understand it, is that many of the problems we now struggle with under the common property system will be eliminated. That may be so. Only time will tell.

We are all aware of the race mentality which is a result of fleets naturally trying to maximize their share of a quota. The result has been short seasons which operate regardless of when fish are schooling. Large fleets are maintained to maximize the catch, but they sit idle for long periods of time after the quotas have been caught.

Similarly, processing plants are pushed to their limit during the season and then must lay many of their workers off when the glut of work disappears. After all, the fish have been caught, the processing plants have to lay off the workers. These feast and famine cycles have plagued the industry as long as the government has found it necessary to impose limitations on the period of the fishing season.

We must recognize that the problem is not an industry-generated one, but an infliction caused by the government's decision to regulate. I am not saying we should not act to protect our fishing resource, but the problem is created by the government, so we have a responsibility to act to solve it. For that reason, we must examine very seriously any proposal which changes in a very major way our existing fishery. However, before embracing it as our survivor, let us examine it critically to see if it truly is a superior system.

The introduction of transferable property rights would be a complete reversal of our current theory of fish ownership and resource management. Presently we expect fish to be common property. Harvesting of it is controlled by licensing and restriction of the season. The transferable right claims that fish should not be common property but should be allocated by a yet undetermined system to the fishing enterprises. In theory, the race to harvest would end and the fishermen could concentrate their efforts on economical and efficient methods. That is something we all want. This would logically lead to a much more consistent flow of fish from the trawlers to the plants, eliminating the boom-and-bust aspect and the race mentality.

The discussion paper points out that the fishery is the last major resource industry where participants have no property rights in the resource itself. This is undoubtedly correct. However, we must be concerned about our method of distribution of the ownership. The concept is one that is most important in a country which operates under the rules of a free marketplace. Ownership of a resource as important as fish is of great economic value. If we do not distribute that resource fairly or equally, it will be very hard for any government to justify seizing the property for redistribution. In fact, the proposal of giving away a resource owned by the Canadian people is an important consideration we should all reflect upon. The rights to fish present to any owner a great possibility to generate a profit. The fish in the Atlantic Ocean are of great value. We should determine the cost of that licence. Will it simply reflect the cost of the paper work and administration, or will it reflect the true economic benefits gained by the new owner? The answer to those questions depends on how we define property rights.

Let us at this time take a close look at the beneficiaries of the transferable property rights and just how they may respond to its enactment.

The trawler fleets currently are of sufficient number to be able to harvest a large number of fish over a short period of time. That is what happened last summer. The trawlers caught the allowable catch for the year in a very short period. Consequently, the season closed. The fish plants closed and a great many of the plant workers were out of work after a very few weeks.

With the elimination of a formal season, the fleets will concentrate their efforts when and where the fish are schooling. This will result in a much more efficient harvesting of the stocks and a more even supply of fish to the processing plants. This is something we all desire. The probable result is a gradual elimination of older, less efficient trawlers which would lead to employment for less men but over a longer period of time. This will effectively lead to even more fishermen being out of work.

I hope the minister realizes the likely consequence of the establishment of the transferable property rights, and is prepared to try to establish alternative employment opportunities for those affected. That is one of my main concerns. We will have fewer people working longer periods of time. It is an important goal to try and attain. However, there will be greater numbers of people out of work. They will not be able to find alternative work.

The processing plants will be subjected to even more substantial changes. A more constant supply of fish will eliminate the peak period when all of our processing plants are running at 100 per cent production levels. It is reasonable to foresee a large number of the small, older and outdated plants going out of business. Not only will many jobs be eliminated, but this will likely happen in areas such as Prince Edward Island where smaller plants exist. They will lose out. The larger centres will benefit.

Our discussion today centres on the plight of our fish processing industry and the discussions the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) will have with his east coast provincial counterparts on Monday. I certainly hope that the minister will suggest that transferable property rights be examined as a possible solution. I hope at that time he recognizes it for what it is, a plan to stabilize the cyclical nature of the industry.

The fact that the industry is geared to the cycle will mean further strains on it in order to adjust. The transferable property right is at best a partial solution. The consequence and responsibility of causing unemployment and losing part of the industry must be addressed by this government in its meeting with the provinces.

At this time I would like to express my concern of this "notes" proposal that transferable property rights be introduced exclusively in the offshore fisheries, with the remainder of the industry being introduced to it at a later, as of yet undetermined, date.

We must realize that the theory and principle behind these management programs are opposite and contrasting. How will we explain to the struggling inshore fishermen why the government has given offshore trawlers exclusive ownership of a large quantity of unharvested fish while they must continue to struggle with the inequities of the present common property system? If fishing regulations are not uniform, conflict in the industry will intensify.

I realize that application and enforcement of transferable property rights will be much easier if it is restricted only to the offshore fleets. Setting quotas and enforcing restrictions on catches will be, without a doubt, a huge task. If it is not done equally or if quotas are not closely adhered to, the system will break down. When a decision is made, it must be made in the context of all the fisheries. A fair and equitable system must be established to win the respect and co-operation of all involved.

I am sure that the minister is aware of problems created when the government fails to stick to its own set of rules. I rose in the House on October 14 to bring to the minister's attention the anger and frustration of P.E.I. scallop fishermen in the Northumberland Straits.

Actions such as this have caused much frustration and distrust of this government and have encouraged the belief that we have no management plan for our fisheries. The most enlightened aspect of the transferable property rights proposal is that the fishermen would gain more control over their fishing operation because they would not be subject to the unexplained whims of the minister.

In closing, I would like to encourage the minister and his officials to listen hard to the concerns and requests of the provincial ministers of fisheries when they meet in Ottawa on Monday. They are in closer contact with the fishermen and understand well the problems the east coast fishermen are now experiencing. The transferable property rights system has merit, but major problems still exist within it. They must be addressed and solved before the full merit of the new system can be judged by the House.

• (1600)

I want to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that the principle as outlined in the proposal would stabilize the fishing industry, eliminate the boom and bust cycle or the glut of fish being caught in the short season, the plants operating over 100 per cent capacity into long hours of the night, and then all of a sudden the quota being caught and the plants closing down for the season. The principle behind this policy is largely to eliminate that. It is something I endorse on principle. However, as I said earlier, there are many things in the proposal that are of great concern to me and I hope that they will be brought to the attention of the minister. I hope the minister will pay attention to some of the concerns that will be explained or voiced to him on Monday by the ministers and deputy ministers of fisheries from eastern Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, to say that the fisheries industry in Newfoundland is in dire straits would be a gross understatement.

The year of 1981 has been a disastrous year in fisheries, not just for fish plant owners but for thousands of fishermen and fish plant workers. In my few remarks today, Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the House my own opinion about this situation, mostly as it relates to the inshore fishermen, particularly in my area. The major problem for the people on the northeast coast of Newfoundland this year was the lack of fish.

It was incredible, as I went around my constituency this summer, to see ten to twenty communities where absolutely no fish was caught, and then two or three other communities where the fishing could be described as being from good to excellent.

The scientists claim that it was because of the temperature of the water. While accepting that rationale, there are other factors that should be noted, factors that go beyond the short run and factors that go unnoticed because of lack of attention, generally speaking, to the long run.

I have always maintained that if fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland could sell all the fish they catch, and if that fish were going into final production in Newfoundland, even at times when we have a poor inshore fisheries, the return to fishermen, fish plant workers and fish companies would not be classified as the disaster that it was this year.

The time is long overdue for provincial and federal governments to be working with the industry for the long run. It is not good enough that at times of economic distress in fisheries, governments turn on governments, searching for excuses to lay blame and, in some cases, to make up for their own shortcomings. There has been no plan or united approach to the fishermen.

Provincial governments control the issuing of licences to processors and buyers. The federal government controls everything from the low water mark out into the ocean, and never the twain shall meet. The big losers in this game that is being played about who is to blame in this disjointed approach are the fishermen, the fish plant workers, the fish plant owners, the Newfoundland people, the Canadian people and the people in other countries who want to purchase that product.

Let me be more specific. I shall first talk about the fishermen. In the federal riding of Gander-Twillingate there are 10,000 fishermen. Most of them have small boats, and a minority of them own what we call long liners.

In 1981, the vast majority of these fishermen had an absolutely disastrous year. Can one imagine a fisherman getting up at 3 a.m. steaming out to the fishing grounds, hauling his nets and returning home at 8 p.m. and not having made enough money to pay for the fuel that he burned in his boat for that day! That happened to thousands and thousands of fishermen day after day and week after week. The year of 1981 for most fishermen was the year when they had to go out in stormy weather late in October and into November just to try to get that extra stamp for unemployment insurance so that it would help them over the winter, or to provide them with enough income so they could at least keep body and soul together until the unemployment insurance cheque arrived. They made practically nothing this year.

Yes, there were fishermen who had a good voyage on the northeast coast this year; but for every one of these fishermen, I could show you 20 who did not have a good voyage. These experienced men and women—and that is the majority—who have thousands of dollars of debts on their equipment and on their boats hanging over their heads and who have bill collectors hammering on their doors, continue to experience extreme hardship.

While this natural disaster, this scarcity of fish continued, the provincial government's loan board deducted fishermen's loan payments as the fish came into the plants. As a result of its audits, the federal government deducted money as the fish came over the wharf. UIC nailed them with overpayments. The men went home with as little as $40 a week in their pockets in the months of July and August, the very months that they were supposed to be making most of their money.

To listen to hundreds of people recite that same story was incredible to me. I shall never forget it. In trying to help the primary producers, I spent a great deal of time this summer appealing to UIC, making formal appeals to them, and to the Department of National Revenue, and appearing before umpires on their behalf, writing reams of correspondence on each case. Eventually, out of total frustration I publicly denounced the provincial and federal government departments concerned. At a time when there were no fish, the system dealt these fishermen blow after blow. In fact, Mr. Speaker, at this very minute on Fogo Island in my district there are 484 cases of overpayments according to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The man receives a letter from the Unemployment Insurance Commission which says, "You owe us $8,000 from our audit for the last four years. If you have already sent your payment, then disregard this notice. If you have not, you have to do it immediately or we will pursue some form of collection".

While delving into this matter I was informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, from which I received no co-operation, that if I delved into the matter much more, because there was an RCMP investigation by the fraud squad, I could be charged with interfering with the judicial process.

• (1610)

There are only a thousand households on the island. Last week I sent out householders containing a questionnaire and statements to sign. If the system calls that interference with justice, then it should charge me right away.

When I said that there were no fish, I meant there was no cod fish. When we on the northeast coast of Newfoundland talk about fish, we talk about codfish. Generally speaking, it was a poor year as well for squid and other species. This leads me to the subject of fish and fish plants in the area which I know best, where 10,000 fishermen have experienced a poor year on the northeast coast.

I have heard the arguments today on both sides of the House. The argument used by the federal government and by the fishermen's union in Newfoundland is that there are too many fish plants. This argument is used in condemning the provincial government for issuing more processors' licenses these past five years than at any point in our history. It has caused some problems with the larger plants now experiencing trouble on the south coast of Newfoundland. It may have its merits. Even if the provincial government now admits or claims that it is part of the problem, there is another side to the story.

The biggest issue in the fishery industry on the northeast coast of Newfoundland has always been that fishermen cannot sell every fish they catch. There are not enough plants to buy all the fish fishermen catch. When a community is told that it will obtain a fish plant and that the plant will sell underutilized species, species which it has not been able to sell in the past, the announcement is greeted with cheers. It is welcome news to see employment come into a community where there are only a few jobs in a local store, perhaps one in the post office, perhaps two men working with the department of highways in the winter, where families are on welfare and there are no employment opportunities. I defy any politician to deny these people employment opportunities. Also I defy any provincial or federal politician to deny that it will improve the quality of fish because they do not have to be trucked 200 miles to the closest plant.

If there were more dialogue between the provincial government and the federal government, I am convinced a happy medium could be found. Then and only then could both governments discuss the real problems in the fishery which are prevalent in good and bad years. I believe these problems are at the core of the whole affair. Solving these problems would go a long way to relieving a situation such as the one this year. For example, in good and bad years we dump tens of millions of dollars worth of fish. In some countries it would be considered a continuing national scandal and disgrace until it was corrected. With the starving millions of the world, how can we justify the use of only female capelin in our fish plants while the male capelin are dumped into the water? Approximately 60 per cent of the capelin caught are dumped because they do not contain spawn. How can anyone justify, every year there is a good fishery, the dumping of 30,000 pounds of herring from one small boat if the plant is overloaded or there is an August glut? This is the case boat after boat. How can anyone justify the dumping of fresh squid because of a boat quota by the fish plants or the over-the-side sales to foreign boats? No one can justify the figure of $20 million to $30 million of dumping off the Newfoundland coast in good years, just as no one can justify the dollar value of fish dumped this year, a bad year in the fishery. A fisherman can go out at three o'clock in the morning, spend all day on his boat but not make enough money to pay for boat fuel. He passes over miles of mackerel; he can see them on his sonar. He cannot catch them because he cannot sell them. That is the reality on the northeast coast of Newfoundland; this is happening.

The real problem must be addressed, but I do not honestly believe it will ever be addressed because the experts who are supposed to know, say that it is impossible to correct, that it cannot be solved. I am referring to the problem of what happens to the vast majority of fish after they are landed. The man on the street presents the argument; the man on the northeast coast of Newfoundland asks simple questions which I have heard hundreds of times in conversations in kitchens late at night over cups of tea. The questions are: Why do we export most of our fish in a relatively raw state? Why do we export so much fish in cod blocks, in barrels or in frozen blocks? The answer given by everyone who is supposedly an expert is always "tariff barriers". The issuing of a processor's license on the northeast coast of Newfoundland in 90 per cent of the cases is the issuing of a license to semiprocess or not to process at all.

I am not suggesting that this problem could be overcome within one or two years or even three or four years, but surely that is the direction which should be followed eventually to final production. Are we to accept the simplistic argument of tariffs for all time? Are we doomed forever by shortsighted government policy which indicates in effect that fish will be exported from a fish plant in Canada to a fish plant in Massachusetts? Fish are being shipped from a fish plant in Newfoundland to a fish plant in another country to be processed, to be sold, to be marketed in that country and then possibly even sold back to us. We export our jobs, we export our profits, we export our economic advantage. If there is one thing that we have in Newfoundland, it is fish. We did not have much this year, but we still have fish. Yet, because there is no long-term planning for the industry, no economic planning, no provincial planning and no consistent rapport between the two levels of government, we are losing the one great advantage we have over other countries.

The provincial government controls everything from the low water mark on land and the federal government controls everything from the low water mark out into the ocean. Because never the twain shall meet for long-term planning, we will continue to export our fish from Newfoundland fish plants to fish plants in other countries, we will continue to dump fish, we will continue to persecute fishermen and we will continue to play games, all for the short term. The time is coming when fishermen, fish plant workers and fish plant owners will come to the conclusion that the solution of problems in the fishery is much too important a question to be left in the hands of politicians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1620)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I can really accept the closing remarks of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Politicians have become so involved in this matter that I do not know how the problems of the industry can be unravelled or how it can be put back in the hands of private enterprise and responsible individuals who did not do so badly prior to the interference of the politicians. Perhaps we should get the politicians out of this and let the industry operate on its own, as it did for many years.

I do agree with what the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate said however, with respect to the activities of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), with whom the hon. member should be very well acquainted. I would suggest to the hon. member that he should arrange a special meeting between the minister and the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Hon. members could then explain to the minister in person the problems with the harsh, unreasonable assessments that are being made retroactively for three, four, five or even six years. I am respectful of the community I shall name, Mr. Speaker, but these assessments are made by somebody born, say, in the community of Estevan, trained in accounting and transferred to St. John's, Newfoundland, where he or she is ordered to reassess the income tax returns of the fishermen. A person like this knows no more about the realities of the fishermen's business than a goose knows about Providence, and this ignorance is illustrated in the reassessments. This procedure is cruel and unreasonable. There is no understanding of the difficulties and the costs that fisherman incurs when trying to make a living.

I urge the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to invite the Minister of National Revenue to meet with the fisheries committee so that the inequities, the cruel, unreasonable and illogical inequities of retroactive income tax assessment, can be revealed to him. Not all those reassessed are innocent, of course. Some have been careless about filing their returns, but for every one of those there are probably two dozen innocent people mortgaging their homes and their boats and going without necessities in order to pay taxes on assessments made by people who do not know what they are doing.

I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and I offer my sincere support to him in any action he wishes to take against such unreasonable behaviour by an otherwise responsible minister.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has problems and, to a large degree, these emanate from the fact that for the last ten or 15 years successive ministers have decided they could run the industry better than it had been run hitherto. The minister who initiated such behaviour may have had some grounds for it, but things have not improved.

I think we should examine the licensing structure, Mr. Speaker. The licensing regulations change without notice. For instance, there is the case of a man who has a licence to fish in the Bay of Fundy and the Atlantic for scallops. When he goes to renew his licence, he finds that now he is constrained to a seven-mile limit. Unfortunately, however, he does not look at the licence when he picks it up and misses the fact that he is no longer allowed to fish in the broad area he used to. When he goes to inquire, after he has been apprehended outside the seven-mile zone assigned to him, he is told that he is no longer eligible for the licence for that area. So he has been deprived of his fishing area without notice—and without noticing. Now it is too late for him to re-establish himself.

What happens in such a case, Mr. Speaker? I will give you the example of a young man in my constituency who bought a boat with which he expected to do some scalloping. He had a letter from the minister which indicated that he was eligible at one time for a licence. He bought a boat worth $100,000, mortgaged his home, but now he finds that he does not have the kind of scallop licence that he thought he had and there is no way he can get enough scallops within the seven-mile zone. Now he finds he cannot get the licence for which he thought his boat was eligible when he bought it. I suppose that officials in the department will say that he should have known that. I submit, however, that a fisherman has no way of knowing from one day to the next what his licence will be. The information is not posted or circulated to licensed fishermen in advance. The change is imposed at the will and pleasure of some regulatory individual in the department.

The young man to whom I refer happens to be a very strong supporter of the minister's party, but I plead publicly on his behalf—give him the licence that he must have to save his home, to save his boat, to save his honour! I will plead for others who support me or who support the people on our left, because it is my job in this House as a representative of a fishing community to seek fair play. I do not care what a person's political stripe is; if my services are needed, they are available. I say publicly that this man, along with many others, should get his licence.

I should like to put on record another example of a licensing problem, Mr. Speaker. A person in my constituency bought a boat which already had a licence. When he went to transfer a licence from a boat that is now unsafe to the new one, he was told he could not do that. He could not transfer a licence which he had owned to a boat which he now owned. He was told he would have to get another boat if he wanted to use the licence from the unsafe boat. I have known this man for only ten years. He and his family have worked like dogs. Whenever there were fish and scallops to be had, he was out there, no matter how long it took. He has equipped two sons, and a third one is working for him. To date he has surrendered a total of eight licences because he wanted new boats. He needed the diversity of fishing capability which he had in those licences, but they have been taken from him. In my view, this is partly because Halifax has the control of fish and fishing licences for New Brunswick. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the officials in Halifax could not care less what happens in the Bay of Fundy or in the province of New Brunswick.

I am sure that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) would join me in appealing to the minister on behalf of communities which have no opportunity to make a living other than through the fishing industry. For generations that has been their sole source of support. When the licensing and quota regulations fall on an isolated community with such severity that it can no longer make a living, then I submit that the minister has to look into the situation. The islands of Campobello, Grand Manan and Deer Island are isolated fishing communities. There is no other way that people can make a living in those communities. When quotas and licences and disadvantages are imposed upon those people by regulation to the point that they cannot make a living, then I ask the minister, in the name of mercy and consideration, to look into matters. Licences should not be taken away. The value of licences should not be reduced by regulation without notice, or the communities will be destroyed. We are all very concerned about the amount of fish left in the ocean. Mr. Speaker, people have been fishing in those areas for nearly three centuries and there are still fish there. I agree that we must have quotas and that there has to be an element of regulation, but if the people have been able to look after themselves for that period of time, that indicates to me that they should have a little recognition and help, and not be totally neglected. Fairness and justice is the least they can expect.

• (1630)

Yesterday, I believe the deputy minister discussed aquaculture, a subject which has been close to my heart for over 20 years. My interest started when I first saw the work which could be done and the wealth created from fish culture, or aquaculture. It is a subject which our government has not chosen to support except, perhaps, for a little research. However, it has had some knowledge of the subject. For instance, concerning salmon aquaculture, I believe that a man was seconded from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. His name is MacDonald, and he worked with a subsidiary of Devco in the rearing of salmon on a farming type of basis. He made very important progress. In my last conversation with that man, he said that if he could get someone to help him a little financially, he was quite prepared to risk all his savings in the establishment of a fish aquaculture program to rear salmon. That information has not been available to other people.

Therefore, in the province of New Brunswick, there was eventually evidence that, in fact, salmon could be reared in a farming type of set-up. I commend the government for eventually extending a grant to a company to do some experimentation in fish rearing after it was proven that it could be done. This proved to be successful and it illustrated the fact that, beyond question, it was profitable if properly conducted. The man to whom I referred was joined by three other people whom I know. They were all assured by departmental officials that this program would receive support for five years from the department. After that time, they would be on their own. Almost all the support these people needed was in the supply of fish from the fisheries department and its fish hatchery structures. This year they were advised that they will not get an adequate supply of fish next year. Therefore, that support has been withdrawn.

As I have mentioned in the fisheries committee, at least two people have made a final commitment to donate $500,000 each. If they have a season in which they do not have fish to sell, their very existence will be threatened. Their bank credits will probably be withdrawn, but other payments to financiers, particularly governments, will continue.

There has been a breach of faith, and I appeal to the minister. These people probably need 120,000 fish in total. Let us provide them with the fish which are being reared in Atlantic Canada. Their demand is not such that it will seriously affect the amount of fish which would ordinarily be put out for the sports or for professional fishermen.

I compliment the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) for very strongly advocating more research. This is a case where it is proven that research can be done. However, now we find that, on the one hand, we have some people within the public service structure who do not wish to extend research for public use, and, on the other hand, people who would like to see research extended and put to practical use. The whipsawing that is going on within the department is apparently what is depriving these people of the fish they need.

I say to the minister through Your Honour that it is time that he took this in hand and that the word of responsible officials was kept so that these people will be serviced as they were promised. I ask Your Honour whether you, as a responsible man, would commit yourself to $500,000 of ultimate expenditure on a whim or a chance. Your Honour would not, but these men did. Now the supplies are not there. I appeal to the minister to supply them with the fish which had been assured to them by the promise of support.

Today we have been discussing the quality of fish at length, and I would like to speak a little further concerning the matter. Licensing bears some influence on the matter. A couple of herring seiners decided that they could land better fish if they owned a third boat between them. They spent something approaching $400,000, and surely over $300,000, to buy a boat and equip it with refrigeration equipment so that if they were fishing a distance from shore they could put the fish in the new carrier and properly convey it home, refrigerated and in top quality. What happened then? They obtained a licence for the boat into which they had invested so much money, a licence to use the boat near home. From that distance, they could have brought the fish to the processors in a scow in good quality. However, when they wanted a licence to fish in distant herring regions, they could not get one. As far as I know, they never did.

Are we talking about quality? I say to Your Honour that officials of the fisheries department who denied that licence were talking out of both sides of their mouths. That refrigerated boat was badly needed in the fishing industry. However, it is useless and it is virtually restricted to shore use.

Again, by virtue of licensing regulations and restrictions, the size of the boat is restricted. There is no way that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will grant a man the right to build a boat which is a little bigger so that it will have the same capacity after refrigeration equipment is installed. How, in the name of all that is reasonable, can one get quality if a man is not allowed to build a boat which is a little bigger to refrigerate the fish he catches offshore? Let us become reasonable and rational in this licensing and regulatory structure.

I think the point blank statement which has been made in respect of the processing industry requires some questioning because, to a very large degree, fishing is a seasonal operation. There are times when fishermen will catch a lot of fish. I think it was the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who again pointed out that we are wasting fish because the processing capability is not there. Processors establish boat quotas and fish are dumped overboard, either at the port or offshore before they get to port, because the quota of the processor in Gander-Twillingate has been exceeded. This is not unusual in the herring industry or in other industries where the catching capability exceeds the processing capability. Because that industry is seasonal, the processing industry must be larger than that which can be kept occupied for 12 months of the year. It must be able to accept the peaks and valleys of delivery. Fishing in the ocean is perhaps not as uncertain as fishing in a stream. However, it is not certain enough that we can say to the processing industry that it has too much fish, while fishermen are saying to hon. members of the House that they cannot sell their fish because there is not sufficient processing capability. We cannot have it both coming and going. We must accept some realities.

It was my privilege to spend a week viewing some of the aspects of fisheries on the west coast. It was also my privilege to have been born in Carleton County, New Brunswick, and to have lived beside a fish hatchery for many years of my life. The fish hatchery was built in 1927. I was in and out of it, very regularly, for the next 20 years. I guess I could not have managed it, but pretty nearly. I learned a lot: from grinding liver to feeding fish, and picking fish to stripping fish. I want to ask the minister and the government, through Your Honour, how the government of Canada could support five fish hatcheries and one holding facility in the province of New Brunswick from 1927 until about ten years ago, but now it cannot. Can the minister tell me how, in the thirties, we could strip, set and hatch 20 million eggs in those five hatcheries, and today, we can only put 250,000 eggs in a hatchery which formerly hatched up to five million eggs a year? While this is happening on the Atlantic coast, we are spending $150 million in a five-year program in British Columbia. I do not begrudge British Columbia one cent as I know it needs the funds. However, I say to Your Honour that a minister who would be party to the expenditure of that sum of money in British Columbia, opening up plans for a second phase of the same program in British Columbia, has a duty and a responsibility to operate those five hatcheries in New Brunswick which we could operate in the thirties. We could operate those hatcheries in the 1930s when we did not have enough to pay six months' interest on today's budget. The budget of Canada at that time might not have been much bigger than the minister's own budget. Relatively speaking it was small. We cannot operate those hatcheries there now. We had the facilities. We had the staff. We had the expertise. But it has gone. That is why we cannot supply fish to these people.

● (1640)

I see the minister shaking his head. I tell him not to shake his head. His officials knew full well what these men were doing because they were in contact with the aquaculture people. If I am not mistaken two years ago—and I might be out a year—his department did not set the eggs it had, and offered to sell them. One year ago the department did not have enough eggs and refused to buy any. That is my understanding. Salmon eggs were offered to the minister's department. These eggs were not bought. They were sold. There are not enough eggs set now to give the support promised to the aquaculture people. We do not have a salmon enhancement program nor do we have any surveillance of the salmon that are now in the sea. We need both of those.

The importance of salmon to the tourist industry is extremely significant to Atlantic Canada. The importance of salmon commercially and the importance of salmon for the tourist industry is extremely significant to British Columbia. Let us get some balance here. Over-the-side sales are something which may on occasion be necessary. I will not condemn them completely. But when that fish product comes from behind the Iron Curtain into markets into which our fishermen and our processors sell the rest of the catch at lower prices, our processors cannot pay a better price than they do. That is why they cannot be competitive with sales of mackerel and other fish because they are dumped into our potential markets after we have subsidized the foreign fleet by issuing an additional quota. Certainly they can pay more for the fish. But there has to be an adjustment of over-the-side sales, if any, to recognize the competition in the same markets with our fishermen and with our own processors into which the over-the-side sale is eventually marketed.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on this opposition motion on a very important matter. It goes without saying that this motion condemning the failure of the government to forecast or avert the current problems in the fishing industry concerns me deeply, as it does our government, because I could go as far as to say, Mr. Speaker, that I represent one of the great fishing constituencies in Quebec. And when I read this opposition motion condemning the failure of the government to forecast or avert the crisis facing the major fishing companies in Canada, I must say that I can't help smiling because of the naivety of the members opposite and their strange conception of the facts.

I was listening this morning to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) when he attempted to show to the Canadian people and the two opposition parties in his reply that since his appointment as minister, he is one of those in the Canadian government who has shown most concern for the fishermen, their families and the economy of their region since confederation. He pointed out that, on his appointment to this department in 1974, he looked fully into all these problems, that he had to stand up to the major companies to protect our small fishermen, that our friends opposite have strongly protested against the measures proposed by the minister to protect one particular category of fishermen in Canada, and that he is now being blamed for not having forecast that crisis. However, I believe. Mr. Speaker, that he had indeed forecast it and that he was determined to do something to avert it, but that our friends opposite would not have allowed him to do so. During those years, if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans had been allowed to try to get involved in the processing industry on an equal footing with our major companies, we would probably not be facing such problems.

During the short time when they were in power, the same people who are now accusing us of doing nothing managed to grant these major companies certain privileges and rights that the minister had withdrawn under the previous government, so that these major companies once again had the advantage over inshore fishermen of the Gaspé peninsula, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. And they are now blaming the government for its failure to prevent the current difficulties. If the opposition had really wanted to protect the interests of ordinary people, of fishermen, if it had co-operated, the minister would probably have succeeded, as he has done in all the areas where he has taken action, to better avert the crisis and to adjust government policies to meet the problems experienced in certain regions.

On reading, further on in the motion, that the government is being asked to give the fishing industry the same active support it gave some multinationals in this country, I feel our hon. friends have completely overlooked what the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Employment and Immigration did jointly with their community development projects in Newfoundland. I shall come back to that later. But I mention it in passing just to point out to you that this motion, which is meant to prove that the government has done nothing, is absolutely harebrained and unfounded in fact.

Mr. Speaker, of course the big companies that hire thousands and thousands of workers are extremely important. Even I have some of their plants in the riding I represent here in this House, especially in the Magdalen Islands; their plants process the fish there. In that particular region, we have not felt the impact the other provinces have, perhaps because we have better administrators locally or because someone having foreseen a drop in prices and demand, this season's operations were planned accordingly. Looking at another aspect of the problem, we have to recognize that some multinationals are very important and beneficial for our economy; still, we must also keep in mind the countless small inshore fishermen on whom both small and medium-sized businesses depend for their fish. Naturally, when a big multinational has problems and shuts down, the whole economy goes down with it. However, if in another area where there are several small businesses in operation you have a couple of them doing bad, you could still have two or three others which would be going fine because they supply markets located in other areas or other countries.

These small businesses which very often are operated on a family basis or by a co-operative or a syndicate of businessmen living in the same area, are very much aware of the needs and interests of the whole community. And that is why it is tremendously important, Mr. Speaker, that we pay attention to these small companies which we are trying to set up in business in Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the other Atlantic provinces, because they deal, as I mentioned a while ago, with limited numbers of fishermen in their effort to provide their respective small communities with the amenities of life which are sought by all concerned.

And that is why since 1974 the Minister of Fisheries in the Canadian government—except during that short nine-month period which fortunately did not last any longer, because during that short period, as I said earlier, it was the small fishermen who had to bear the brunt of some of the policies of the then government—this Minister of Fisheries has been able to implement extremely worthwhile and conclusive policies so that small Canadian fishermen have rediscovered the challenge and the incentive of returning to their occupation and now realize that their trade or their work was the same as all others in Canada rather than a third rate trade as it had been in the past unfortunately. It was our government and our Minister of Fisheries who managed over the last seven years to inspire confidence in Canada's fishing industry and in small fishermen so that at last they were able to look upon that very important vocation as a source of rewarding work to support their families and supply food to their fellow citizens.

But how is it that our government was able to give those people an opportunity for progress on a labour market similar to all others? Many programs have been established in Canada. There was the fishing boat construction program, among others, a very important program created by this department under which fishermen could apply for direct grants to build their own boats. The same goes for the construction of wharves. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer specifically to a very important program which has proved to be beneficial to all the residents of the Gaspé Peninsula, northwestern Quebec and the north shore of Quebec over the past year; it was set up in co-operation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which generously offered enough funds to improve the fishing facilities in our areas again to enable fishermen to indulge in a more congenial occupation and carry on their fishing activities safely.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion transferred $10 million to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to complete those harbour facilities. I recall that about a year ago I urged the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) to secure such funds because, under the standard criteria of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and considering the volume of catches in our regions, we could not set aside enough money to complete those facilities when we were adversely affected by bad weather and physical considerations which were preventing us, with the money we did have, from building facilities large enough to allow protection from the existing hazards. In my constituency of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine alone, Mr. Speaker, we are going to spend $2 million this year only to build wharves. In Bonaventure, on the mainland, we are going to build two wharves for a total of $500,000 coming from DREE's first envelope of $10 million, and in the Magdalen Islands, we will be in a position to allocate, for the building of wharves, $1.5 million transferred from another DREE program jointly with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and I will revert to this matter later if time permits.

Another important program, Mr. Speaker, that has enabled those fishermen to achieve profitability is the one promoting quality. My colleague from Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) said earlier that last week a most important symposium on quality was held in Matane. Again, this government has made tremendous efforts to try and improve the quality of our fish. It goes without saying that with depleting stocks, fishermen must be made aware that the higher the quality, the higher the prices and the lesser the need to catch more fish. Under this program, we experimented with new plastic bins and we also tried to improve the cooling capacity of the fishing boats, these measures have vastly improved the quality of the fish.

Unfortunately, for this program the federal government did not receive from one sector all the co-operation it could have. I am talking of course of the Quebec government which, unfortunately does not seem to pay all the attention it should to the fishermen of the province. As has become increasingly obvious in the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker, the government in power in Quebec seems to be acting over the heads of people and putting political ideology above the interests of the people it was elected to govern. At a time when the government of Canada takes extraordinary measures to try and improve the quality of our fish and of the fishing facilities, that government increases unashamedly the price for bait, for ice, which fall under provincial responsibility, and also for fishing gear. So we hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Quebec will put ideologies aside and will, this time, work in the interests of the people.

Before closing off, Mr. Speaker, as I see my time is running out, I would simply like to say that the program I was just talking about, and which is applied in Newfoundland in the area of community development projects, allows fishermen who are out of work, for the reasons we already know, to work the required number of weeks to be eligible for unemployment insurance. In the riding of Bonaventure itself, we will set up this year an important $275,000 program and we will also use substantial funds from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in order to provide the materials required and create jobs for these fishermen and especially to improve port facilities which otherwise could not be improved. Contrary to what this opposition motion suggests, I believe this government and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans are intent on protecting Canadian fishermen and providing them with the means necessary, as I indicated before, for a decent life and an adequate salary, like all their fellow Canadians.

● (1650)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have now expired.

Therefore, on the proviso that all hon. members present and the one hon. minister present have a very good weekend, this House now stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1). Good evening.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 7, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FINANCE

TAXATION OF DISCOUNT BENEFITS GRANTED TO RETAIL SALES EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The government has decided to discriminate against all retail sales employees by taxing the long-standing purchase discount benefits offered by their employers, which inevitably means an increase in consumer prices at a time when this country can least afford it. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this House condemn this arbitrary and totally unfair taxation and inflation-fuelling policy which will hurt all retail employees and all Canadian consumers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

THINKING BEHIND GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal government is all mixed up. The Liberals reward Governor Bouey for raising bank interest rates by increasing his salary to over $100,000. The same government "rewards" the farmers who produce the food to feed Bouey and the rest of us by cutting their capital cost allowance in half, providing too little for the Farm Credit Corporation to even begin to meet the needs, and enacts budget provisions that make it impossible for farmers who have been working 40 and 50 years to retire. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That this House recommends that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of Canada be referred to the best psychiatrists available to ascertain if this twisted thinking can be cured before the whole country goes down the tube.

I will personally pay the costs if a cure can be found.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPRESSION OF CONCERN ABOUT TREATMENT OF ANDREI SAKHAROV BY U.S.S.R. AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my motion concerns the fate of the Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House express its grave concern to the Soviet authorities about the reported forced hospitalization and treatment being accorded to Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrei Sakharov, and his wife, both of whom are on a hunger strike, and further, that the House consider this action and the refusal of the Soviet authorities to permit their son's wife to join her husband in the United States, to be violations of human rights as set out in the Helsinki Final Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

BANK OF CANADA

INCREASE IN SALARY OF GOVERNOR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in light of statements attributed to the Governor of the Bank of Canada that the high level of the minimum wage contributes to inflation, and in light of the fact that the recently announced salary increase of the governor exceeds the yearly level of the minimum wage, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

S.O. 43

That the governor be invited to live for 12 months on only his increase in salary and that he then prepare a submission for Parliament on his views regarding inflation and minimum wage earners and, failing this, that he be asked to resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

RESPONSIBILITY FOR HIGH INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, in an interview last Thursday the Prime Minister stated that the blame for high interest rates lies with the banks, the market economy, and individuals who want good returns on their Canada Savings Bonds, not his government. What he should have said was that interest rates are determined by the government's Bank of Canada rate, the government's Bank of Canada control over treasury bill prices, and government borrowings. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the government admit that it alone is responsible for high interest rates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

RESIDENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, recent reports have indicated the regrettable and shameful fact that the Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan has, as his official vice-regal residence, two rooms in a downtown Regina hotel, where he finds it increasingly difficult to accommodate his wife, and he feels that he may not be able to offer appropriate quarters to the Queen on her next visit. I move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That this House assure the Governor General of Canada and Mrs. Schreyer that no notion is being entertained of transforming Rideau Hall into a heritage tourist attraction and thus requiring that he and his wife move into furnished rooms in a downtown hotel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT OF TAXATION PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the claim of the November 12 budget that 12 million Canadians will realize federal income tax reductions amounting to $2.4 billion, yet total federal revenues are projected to increase by more than some $9 billion in the same period, I move seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the Minister of Finance be directed by this House to admit that more than $10 billion of new federal revenues for 1982 will come one way or another from every Canadian consumer in the form of cunningly disguised energy taxes, increased federal sales taxes, inflated prices due to taxes on production and other concealed surtaxes, all of which will be especially damaging to low and middle income Canadians who will face an over-all federal tax burden of more than $400 per capita or almost $2,000 for the average family of four.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—COMPENSATION TO HOME OWNERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas tests conducted by the federal government have revealed that about 40 per cent of the homes insulated with urea formaldehyde foam constitute a serious health hazard, and whereas the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has acknowledged the government's moral responsibility in this matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the minister provide immediate assistance to these victims of a negligent government.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

THE BUDGET

SUGGESTED CANCELLATION OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of some urgency. One of the many areas in which the recent federal budget creates undue and unwarranted hardship for Canadians is that of tax penalties related to life insurance policies. Under the terms of the budget, a policyholder would be required to report accrued investment income on the policy or annuity every three years, even though no income is actually received. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance, having recognized the misguided advice he received from department officials and having thus changed parts of his budget, now take immediate steps to cancel this insane tax measure with respect to life insurance policies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

MINES AND MINING

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO PROPOSED SHUTDOWN OF MINE AT URANIUM CITY, SASK.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this House support a full-scale inquiry into the proposed shutdown of Eldorado Nuclear's uranium mine and mill at Uranium City before any further action is taken towards the shutdown of that operation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

TAXATION OF DISCOUNT BENEFITS RECEIVED BY RETAIL SALES EMPLOYEES

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The minister's budget papers indicate that he intends to include in taxable income any discount received by a retail sales person on the purchase of goods from the retailer. This policy means that every retail sales person must now receive a higher salary, which will then be passed on to the consumer. Will the minister reconsider this budget provision, as it will only contribute to inflation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked me to consider his representations. As I have said on previous occasions in the House, I have been listening to many representations since the presentation of the budget. I would be happy to include his particular aspect in that review.

EFFECT OF EMPLOYEE DISCOUNTS ON PRICES

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the hundreds of thousands of retail employees across the country, and particularly retired ones, will keep the minister's answer in mind the next time they go to the polls. My supplementary question is a simple one. Does the minister not realize that employee discounts have kept down prices in department stores for decades?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member presents a question which is not rhetorical, I would be glad to answer it.

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE CHANGED

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, it may be a first for the parliamentary telecast. I should point out that special arrangements have been made in all Woodward's department stores in Alberta and British Columbia in order that they could hear the answers this minister is giving to these questions. The Retail Council of Canada pointed out that 1,500,000 retail employees are affected by this budget proposal. If we include families, why will the minister not reassure over 5 million Canadians that he will change this horrendous, unfair budgetary policy which affects all Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member ought to be a bit more certain about his facts before he lets out all these dire prophecies to the employees of these companies. What I have said in my budget is that certain taxable benefits were to be considered and that administrative arrangements would be made by the Minister of National Revenue. Until these are made available, I do not think the hon. member ought to raise fear in the way that he is doing.

Oral Questions

BANK OF CANADA

EFFECT OF ACTION ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, one of the principal causes of the slowdown in retail sales which we have suffered in the past few months has been the very high interest rate policy followed by the government. Last week, following its monetary policy, the Bank of Canada clearly took specific action in the marketplace to maintain interest rates at current levels, or possibly even to push them higher. Since high interest rates are the single most important factor in causing the current recession, record bankruptcies and high mortgage rates, why did the bank take the action of attempting to force interest rates higher?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously the purpose of the government is to achieve a lowering of interest rates. As the hon. member realizes, in the past several months there has been a rather rapid decline in interest rates. We have the lowest rates now since a year ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member referred to the operations of the Bank of Canada last Thursday, presumably at the treasury bill operation.

Mr. Wilson: Through the week; through the week.

Mr. MacEachen: I have not discussed the day-to-day operations of the Bank of Canada. It is not my intention to carry out the functions of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, but clearly it is the intention of the governor, as well as it is the intention of the government, to bring about as rapid a decrease in interest rates as can be justified in current inflationary circumstances. As the hon. member knows, the basic thrust of the budget was to provide some support for the decline in interest rates through very substantial reduction in our financial requirements, and thereby reduce pressures on the market and give some rather important signals to the community that we were serious about reducing inflation. That is the basic thrust of the budget. It is intended to support a decline in interest rates over time.

* * *

● (1420)

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. Last week we had the Governor of the Bank of Canada saying that he was responsible for interest rates. Later in the week the Prime Minister said that the high interest rates were the fault of Canadians. Because there is obviously some confusion between the two parts of the government, because there is some very major concern on the part of Canadians over the very high bank profits announced in the past week, would the minister explain to the House why he will not refer the matter of interest rates and bank profits to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for a full review of these two very important factors?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will give consideration to the hon. member's representations. He is suggesting that the question of bank profits and interest rates be referred to the standing committee. That is a matter to which I will give consideration because I believe that the question of bank profits in particular is one that ought to receive, certainly, the scrutiny of the House of Commons. It has been receiving that scrutiny on a daily basis by questions in the House. It is a matter of concern in the present circumstances. I will be glad to consider whether that particular question should be referred to the committee.

Mr. Clark: And interest rates too. The minister nods.

* * *

HOUSING

NUMBER OF FAMILIES PAYING INCREASED MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works who is in charge of housing. The last thing the people of Canada want at this point is a committee looking into bank profits; they want an excess profits tax to be levied and the money used for housing.

On Friday the Minister of Finance once again showed that he did not take housing as a serious problem. This was followed on Saturday in Thunder Bay by a spokesman for the housing industry who appeared before the NDP task force on the economy, saying, "Somebody is pulling the wool over our eyes," referring to the statements of the minister and others. That same businessman noted that in Thunder Bay alone there were more than 60 homes up for sale, subject to power of sale. Although those families do appear in statistics, will the minister admit that there are thousands of other families in Canada who have to pay $200 or $300 or more in increased mortgage payments now, who do not show up in statistics nor do they get any benefit from the government's budget?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, this morning I had the opportunity to discuss these very concerns with the minister of housing for the province of Ontario. He was responsive to the initiatives that were taken by the Minister of Finance in setting aside $350 million for the next two years through the budget which would, first of all, assist people faced with mortgage renewal problems who had difficulty after they had to put a fair amount of their income toward mortgage renewal. The officials and the minister of housing for this province felt that would be of assistance to many families at this time, Thunder Bay being one of the cities affected.

On the second point of interest rates, there is no question that the reduction in interest rates over the last five to seven weeks has made it much easier for people to meet increased interest rates over and above those that pertained when they took out the mortgages they are now seeking to renew.

REQUEST THAT EXCESS PROFITS TAX BE LEVIED ON BANKS TO PROVIDE HOUSING FUNDS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister's answer provides not one bit of benefit for the 60 families in Thunder Bay. That is the first point. Second, he did not answer the question that, notwithstanding the slight drop in interest rates, in my judgment, and in the judgment of those with expertise, outside the House of Commons and the industry, we are still left with thousands of families who are suffering because they have to increase their monthly mortgage payments. The minister did not deal with that. However, I would like to ask him another question.

● (1425)

Considering that the final bank profits are now in, and they are up $1.7 billion, will the minister take some reasonable action and speak to the Minister of Finance and request that we have fair taxes for the banks; and specifically considering the fact that if their profits were at the same level at which they were last year, we would have $700 million in additional revenue which we could use for housing, will he request the Minister of Finance to levy an excess profits tax to get that $700 million from the banks and put it into housing?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has already indicated, subsequent to the introduction of the budget, that he believes the banks can do more to assist Canadian home owners, even with the provisions introduced in the budget which are taken for granted. As I have indicated, there has been an allocation of $350 million toward meeting mortgage renewal difficulties and toward stimulating new rental construction. I believe that, as well. I know that some of the banks, for example, have come up with mortgage renewal plans that will cost the banks some few millions of dollars. I would hope that the industry, including the trust companies which, by the way, have a larger portfolio in mortgages for home owners than do the banks, and all other financial institutions, including credit unions, could be more flexible and could allocate on a voluntary basis a larger proportion of their portfolios toward solving the problems of home owners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will try asking a question of the Minister of Finance. I say to the minister, first of all, that some 150,000 Canadian families renewed mortgages at the excessive rate of 23 per cent in August, September and October. As a result of that interest level, the banks are currently taking in an additional $20 million a month from these families. A short time ago the minister promised he would do something about these Canadians who have been particularly badly hit. Today, will he tell us one plan of action or one specific proposal that he intends to bring forward to the House to help these people who are going seriously into debt?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the same question was raised some days ago by the House leader of the New Democratic Party, and at that time I said that I intended to have that matter referred to the group which was established by the government to maintain consultation with the Canadian banks. That is the follow-up that I am taking in order, if possible, to assist those particular home owners caught in that period of very high interest rates.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF LAW ENFORCEMENT MINISTERS OF THE PROVINCES

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of the law enforcement ministers of the provinces who are attending a conference in Ottawa and who have honoured us with their visit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CANADA POST

COST OF MAILING MUNICIPAL PUBLIC UTILITY BILLS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. The minister will be aware that the corporation proposes to force municipalities to send their public utility bills via first class mail at the planned 30 cent rate. These are bills which, in the past, have been delivered either by their own employees or by organizations such as Boy Scouts or Girl Guides for 9 cents to 10 cents per unit. This represents a 200 per cent increase in the cost of delivering these bills.

Is the minister not aware of the tremendous cost burden that this will place on these municipalities at a time when all levels of government are reducing their assistance to municipalities?

If he is aware, is he prepared to take some steps to correct this injustice?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Post Office has always had exclusive responsibility for carrying the mails in Canada. When we considered the Canada Post Corporation Bill, this matter was discussed at length and all aspects were carefully examined. Examples such as the one just given by the hon. member were raised at the time and were discussed and dismissed. I should also like to remind the hon. member that this bill was passed unanimously by the House, all members present on both sides of this House approving the bill.

● (1430)

[English]

EFFECT ON SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I could see a step being taken to force the municipalities to do so at the 17-cent level, which would not be such an immediate burden to them, but to enforce something which has not been enforced in the past and at the same time to increase the rate to 30 cents is something which is not acceptable and cannot be carried by these municipalities.

The proposal that large municipalities can pre-sort in excess of 5,000 bills and thus pay a reduced rate of 21 cents whereas small communities with less than 5,000 subscribers have to pay the full 30 cents, is somewhat puzzling. Surely they can sort 1,000 letters in small post offices as easily and as quickly as 5,000 in larger ones. Does the minister not feel that this is an act of further discrimination against small communities that do not have 5,000 subscribers, and will he take some steps to correct this?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I feel it is not a matter of cost but of principle as to whether or not carrying the mails is to be the exclusive privilege of the Canadian Post Office. And as soon as we make any exceptions to this rule, it is obvious that only profitable routes would be attractive to private businesses, so that in remote areas of Canada, mail services would have to be provided by the Canadian Post Office. Now, in order to guarantee and protect postal services in the smaller municipalities, we must keep our exclusive rights in cities where the volume is much larger, so that the Canadian Post Office may collect sufficient revenue in order to provide the same level of service in all parts of Canada.

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON CAPE BRETON MINERS MOVING TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. A number of unemployed coal miners from Cape Breton have been offered jobs in Fernie, B.C., to commence February, 1982. They accepted these jobs on condition they receive a housing subsidy, but this now becomes a taxable benefit under the minister's budget. The employer is concerned that many of these miners will now decide not to move. Can the minister tell the House whether he is planning any changes to his budget to encourage these miners to accept these jobs and thus gain employment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing my attention to this particular case. When I have any announcements to make about any adjustments, I will be letting the House know.

Mr. Dick: How soon?

* * *

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

DESIGNATION OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. An article in the Toronto Star this past weekend stated that in the near future a minister would be designated to co-ordinate the government's efforts and the government's response with regard to the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether he is in a position to announce which minister will take the responsibility of co-ordinating the government's efforts in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker. I have asked the Secretary of State to study the excellent report of the committee presided over by the hon. member for Don Valley East. Various government departments now are seeking ways in which it can be implemented and the Secretary of State will ensure the co-ordination of that work. The Minister of Justice is also involved in the study of amendments which might be required to various statutes so as to try to make the disabled more equal members of society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT BRANTFORD ONT. BE DESIGNATED UNDER INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the city of Brantford is presently experiencing one of the most severe unemployment crises in Canada, with general unemployment soaring to 17 per cent and as high as 23 per cent in the manufacturing sector, can the minister, as the chairman of the cabinet committee on ILAP, tell the House if he is presently considering Brantford as a community for designation under the program? If Brantford is designated, could the minister ensure that the financial commitment is such that the community, so depressed by massive lay-offs in the agricultural implement sector and related industries, will benefit more in immediate job creation than the earlier ILAP grants to Windsor and Sept-Îles?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the situation that exists in the city of Brantford. I have had correspondence, and my staff, I believe, has had meetings with representatives of the city. I want to say that it is one of a number of communities which is presently under consideration for possible assistance under ILAP.

QUERY RESPECTING MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but he is absent today. Therefore I will put my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the House what progress has been made as far as he is concerned in designating Brantford under ILAP? Also, what measures is the minister contemplating to create immediate jobs for the thousands of workers who are laid off in Brantford and whose unemployment insurance benefits have either run out or will run out in the next few weeks, thus adding tremendous financial strain and burden on those thousands of families in Brantford and district?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has said, the city of Brantford is one of a number of communities being actively considered for possible designation under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. With respect to the current situation in Brantford, I hope that my hon. friend and the community will recall the steps we took to help ensure the continuing operation of both White Farm and Massey-Ferguson. Without the active intervention of the federal government in co-operation with the government of Ontario, both firms would not be there today to provide the employment they are providing and to provide a basis for a return to work as the American and other markets improve in the coming months.

With respect to the plight of those whose unemployment insurance is expiring, I am sure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will soon be announcing the forthcoming winter segment of the Canada Community Development Program which will provide an opportunity for employees in communities such as Brantford to get short-term direct employment, and assist them to requalify for unemployment insurance. This is being done while the government is actively looking at the possibility of designating Brantford under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. The situation there and in other communities with similar difficulties is one we consider to be very serious, and we are looking at in a most serious fashion.

Mr. Broadbent: Would you repeat that answer?

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC.—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. First, I have to compliment the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for having recently announced the sale of Consolidated Computer, for a loss by the way of $91 million to the federal government. As the President of the Treasury Board is so concerned about the government loss of money that he is having an internal inquiry in his department, I ask him whether he will refer this matter to one of the standing committees so that we can have a public inquiry to find out why the government lost $91 million in this venture.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this question is not unlike one I responded to last week posed by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. We would have no objection whatever to one of the standing committees looking into this matter. It seems to me it might be something which the Public Accounts Committee might want to take on. We have indicated also we would have no objection to making the results of our own investigation public. If that is of any interest to the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, then the hon. member might direct the question to him.

MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In 1975 I requested the government to launch an inquiry into why it lost $38 million in Microsystems International. That was not done at the time. Since these are related industries in the computer field, I was wondering whether the President of the Treasury Board would refer that matter as well, because we do not want these things to continue, and maybe there could be some help and some direction given to the officials.

• (1440)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, hon. members will know that a great deal has happened in government since 1975 in terms of improved accountability, improved internal audit, and improved controls. Hon. members of this House I hope are interested in assuring that taxpayers receive value for their money. If there are any lessons to be learned from these past experiences we will be most grateful. That is why, as I said, we certainly have no objection whatsoever to the Public Accounts Committee on its own initiative looking into the CCI matter. The other matter can also be addressed by the Public Accounts Committee, I presume, but, as I say, since 1975 so many reforms have taken place I hope that kind of problem will not arise again.

* * *

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON SENIOR CITIZENS HOLDING LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am concerned about the impact of the budget on older men and women who for many years have owned permanent cash value life insurance. Many find that they have insufficient income in their later years and they use the cash value of their policies to purchase annuities to supplement their retirement income. Because the budget proposes to increase the disposition cost retroactively, it would appear that older people will have to pay more tax and, therefore, will have less money available for their retirement income. Is it the minister's intention to decrease the retirement income of senior citizens, as the budget measure proposes and, if that is not his intention, what is it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, to be brief, the answer to the first question is no, and to the second part of the question the answer is, to establish a greater sense of fairness in the tax system.

USE OF CARS FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, 80 per cent of these people who purchased these life insurance policies in the first place earned less than $30,000 a year, and are the ones who are going to suffer as a result of this measure.

My supplementary question to the minister concerns a phone call made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to one of my constituents on Friday afternoon. My constituent was told that the government is now discussing the budget measure which imposes a new tax on those who must use their cars almost exclusively for business purposes, and he was told "we will have to make provision for such people". Since I presume the parliamentary secretary was speaking on behalf of the government, I should like to know what provision the government is making for these employees, sales persons and others, who use their cars primarily as mobile offices.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I find it surprising that a private telephone call between the parliamentary secretary and some unidentified citizen is now the basis of a question in the House of Commons. I will be glad to find out from the parliamentary secretary what was actually said, before I answer the hon. member's question.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION EXTENDED TO MR. IVAN HEAD TO ADDRESS SOVIET INSTITUTE OF THE U.S.A. AND CANADA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who may be behind the curtains. If he is not coming in perhaps I could address my question in his absence to—

An hon. Member: He is coming in.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in reply to a question on Friday, indicated to me that Mr. Ivan Head, who was at the time the Prime Minister's foreign policy adviser, had been invited to speak before a group in Moscow at the Soviet Institute for U.S.A. and Canada, and that no other Canadian had been invited to attend that particular meeting. Will the minister indicate to me how it was that this invitation came to be extended to Mr. Head, and why it was that there were no other Canadians at the meeting?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that was somewhat before my arrival on the scene. I will have to take that question as notice, and undertake to get an answer for the hon. member.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON 1977 MEETING

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, perhaps I might direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister since he was in office at the time in 1977 when Ivan Head was the foreign policy adviser to the Prime Minister and spoke to the Soviet Institute for the U.S.A. and Canada in Moscow, without any other Canadians being there. Did the Prime Minister receive a report following that particular meeting, and what was the nature of that report, if he is prepared to let us have it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot recall, but it seems to me that this question period is reserved for urgent questions, and if this one goes back to 1977 I would think the proper way to ask it would be to place it on the Order Paper.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PLANS TO CO-ORDINATE GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister's response that the Secretary of State is to be responsible with regard to disabled persons. Is the Minister of State in a position to advise the House of his plans to co-ordinate the government's response to the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, basically the responsibilities I have been given are those of co-ordinating the responses of the various departments and agencies of the government to the recommendations contained in the "Obstacles" report. Each department will be responsible for its responses to the particular recommendations. I might say that my role is that of co-ordinator.

If I might be permitted, I should like to add that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is today speaking at the United Nations General Assembly debate on the International Year of Disabled Persons to report on Canada's progress in response to the needs of disabled persons in Canada.

* * *

MINES AND MINING

ANNOUNCED SHUTDOWN OF MINE AT URANIUM CITY, SASK.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding Eldorado Nuclear's announced shutdown of the Beaverlodge Mine at Uranium City. I hope the minister realizes that this will not only allow Eldorado Nuclear to throw 830 some odd people out of work, but will affect the contractors, as it were, in regard to that mine and mill operation, as well as the total community of 3,000 people who will be left without a source of livelihood. What consultation was there between Eldorado Nuclear and or the minister's department, the municipal corporation of Uranium City, the employees of the mill and the mine, and the union at Uranium City?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, concerns expressed by members of the NDP would carry a little bit more weight if, at their 1981 national convention, they had not passed a resolution which reads in part as follows, "that the NDP supports the phasing out of existing nuclear projects, including uranium mining".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I would hope that the NDP would be a little bit more consistent in its position.

As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, as I indicated last week, indeed I was advised a few weeks ago of the intention of Eldorado Nuclear to close the mine as it is impossible to operate this mine in current circumstances because of the fact that the ore is diminishing.

● (1450)

As a matter of fact I refer the hon. member to the statement made to the Saskatchewan New Democratic Party energy minister who said, and I quote, "All mines eventually run out of ore and must close." This being said, we have taken extra steps to try to ensure that this closing will take place in the most humane and in the most accommodating way for the people concerned. All departments which have responsibilities in this area have been invited to co-operate, and we have received the assurance from the government of Saskatchewan of full co-operation in order to take care of this regrettable situation.

ATTENDANCE OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR OFFICIALS AT STANDING COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I don't know how the minister can make such a mockery of such a serious issue as closing down a community of 3,000 people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: If the NDP were to close down a mine, we would certainly make sure that the people were taken care of first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: I would like to know how the minister can justify the closing down of one operation in the nuclear cycle while another is intended to be subsidized in eastern Canada at hundreds of millions of dollars. I refer to the heavy water plants at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. They are subsidized with hundreds of millions of dollars, with no foreseeable market for heavy water anywhere in the near future. I would like to know how the minister reconciles that.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Question please.

Mr. Anguish: My question to the minister is: will he assure us that the officials of Eldorado Nuclear will be at the meeting tonight of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to answer questions that we have in regard to this serious problem?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the mockery to the people of Canada is the kind of resolution that has been passed by the New Democratic Party convention in 1981. The mockery is for the hon. member to stand up in the house and take positions which are in full contradiction to the position of his own party across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: In response to the question raised by the hon. member, I invite him to read Hansard once in a while. I was in the House last week and I indicated that the officials of Eldorado Nuclear would indeed be before the committee tonight, if my hon. friend has any questions to ask.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE ON ISSUE OF COMPENSATION TO PROVINCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that over the weekend, and after the passage of the resolution in the House of Commons, the Minister of Justice said—and I believe I am quoting him correctly—the government was "still open to discuss" the final compensation issue. He also gave as his view that if the agreement of the province of Quebec could be secured to that matter, the agreement of the other nine provinces would be relatively easy.

Could the Prime Minister tell us, first of all, whether the Minister of Justice was stating a policy of the government in his responses, and second, whether there is any initiative which the federal government is considering to take now to bring the people of Quebec into the constitutional Accord before the constitutional resolution leaves Canada in the next few days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the answer to the last question is no, we are not taking any positive initiative now. The government has said, and the Minister of Justice and I have said, that the Constitution will still be amendable once it is in Canada. If there are reasonable solutions to problems which Quebec sees, we will discuss them in Canada among Canadians, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition always said we should be doing. That is our position at this stage.

I think even the Leader of the Opposition was convinced last week that Mr. Lévesque would not sign anything with Canada. The Leader of the Opposition offered him a compromise on compensation, and another on language, I believe. The Leader of the Opposition, in his speech, said that he would really ask these questions of Mr. Lévesque—and I may be paraphrasing—to see whether Mr. Lévesque really believed in Canada or not. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, he got a negative answer from Mr. Lévesque on those proposals that he made.

It seems to me that we cannot now hold off the patriation of the Constitution and the intention of Canada to have an amending formula which will permit us to continue discussions between provinces, hopefully including Quebec.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RECOMMENDATION MADE BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO BRING DISABLED PERSONS UNDER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS CODE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. May I congratulate him on assuming his new responsibilities for the disabled. It is an action that we on this side have been recommending for the past ten years. I would like to ask the Secretary of State, as my first question to him, what action is he contemplating on the two basic recommendations, at least the last of the two basic recommendations that our Special Committee on the Disabled made in respect to action which must be taken during the International Year of Disabled Persons if we are to establish credibility?

Because of the long delay in government action on behalf of the disabled, we suggested that Parliament Hill become completely accessible during the International Year of Disabled Persons. That has been accomplished. Prior to that, the disabled came through the garbage entrance.

Even more fundamental is the second recommendation that the disabled must be brought under the terms of reference of the Canadian Human Rights Code during the International Year of Disabled Persons. We have just three weeks to go. Will he be able to act upon that vitally important recommendation of the committee, which action is necessary if our credibility is to be maintained?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I would like to pay tribute to him for his long-term and very sincere interest in this very difficult question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: At the same time may I acknowledge the extremely valuable work that has been provided by the hon. member for Don Valley East as chairman of the committee, and his continuing interest in this field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: I hope that both of these hon. members, and others, will be available to assist me in relation to the responsibility of co-ordinating responses to the recommendations. The hon. member is probably aware of the fact that the government has already acted upon 56 of the recommendations in the report. My officials are working on this issue, and I expect to be able to file a report on the government's achievements with regard to phase 1 of the recommendations before the Christmas recess.

I have recently undertaken the task of co-ordinating phases 2 and 3, and will be reporting in due course to the House with reference to those. I hope that the information which the hon. member has asked for will be well covered in the report that I will table before the Christmas recess.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I thank the hon. minister for his response and point out that the 56 recommendations that have been accepted are really the easy ones, and the one important recommendation now is to assure human rights to the disabled community before the year is ended. The reputation of our committee is dependent upon that. It was a most special committee, indeed. All seven members from all parties buried the partisan hatchet in the interest of the disabled during their international year.

Will the minister assure the House now that that legislation will be on the Order Paper, and perhaps he could work out an agreement to have passage of that legislation with minimal debate before the end of the International Year of Disabled Persons?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may be aware of the fact that the Minister of Justice is studying the application of the particular recommendation and measure which he has mentioned. I will undertake to obtain more information on its present status from the Minister of Justice.

May I also say to him with reference to his remarks that some of the measures which have already been undertaken may be those that were the easiest for the government to respond to, I think that is the case with some of them. Obviously, there should be quick responses in those circumstances. In others, I think there were considerable difficulties which were overcome and that substantial progress has been made. Despite the hon. member's understandable zeal, he will realize that some of the recommendations which require physical alterations, and some which require changes in law and the expenditure of substantial amounts of money, will obviously take longer to meet than the easier ones. However, we are committed to moving forward very rapidly to meet all of these recommendations.

* * *

● (1500)

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON PROVISION OF SERVICES TO PROVINCES

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It has to do with the new federal-provincial agreement on RCMP services. I suspect it is an appropriate question today. Can the minister indicate to the House how the negotiations are progressing, especially with regard to services in New Brunswick?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am glad to inform all hon. members that the RCMP contracts have been agreed to in principle by all of the provinces and territories which have been utilizing these services. A contract is being drafted. It has been signed by a number of provinces. A number of others are waiting only for drafting and a proper occasion at which both parties can meet and sign it. As to the particular question, I went to New Brunswick on Friday under the impression that there were some outstanding matters between the parties. I am glad to report there are none. The agreement is being drafted now and may well be signed before Wednesday.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Fourth report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, in both official languages—Mr. Smith.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

PETITIONS

MR. COOK—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, as is my duty as a member of this House, I wish to present a petition on behalf of the employees of Woodward's Stores Limited of Vancouver, British Columbia. The purpose of this petition, signed by 1,420 employees of the downtown Vancouver store, is to indicate to the government that the highly regressive measures introduced in last month's budget will increase their cost of living as employee productivity and retirement benefits will now be subject to taxation.

The nature of this petition is to demand that the government reconsider these punitive tax measures in order to restore the morale of all Canadians, to maintain the concept of rewards and incentives for employee productivity and to ensure that the members of Canada's work force are not rendered wards of the state.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea and that you might use the discretionary power vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

If I can bootleg one line, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) suggested that I was causing concern among retail clerks. That is not true. This petition demonstrates that.

Madam Speaker: Order. That does not come under petitions.

Time Allocation

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-48—MOTION MR. LALONDE

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the third reading stage of the bill; and that 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have just presented a notice of motion concerning Bill C-48. This bill has been before the House for a whole year and I think that the situation could not be summarized more aptly than it was on December 11, 1980, almost a year ago today, by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who was the opposition energy critic at the time, in a statement he made regarding the tabling of this bill, and I shall quote Mr. Wilson in English:

[English]

This delay is shocking, Mr. Speaker. It is irresponsible to expect companies to operate in an environment when they have no idea what the ground rules will be . . .

This delay, going back to 1970, has cost Canada valuable years in reaching oil self-sufficiency. It is important that we get on with the job now.

That is what he said on December 11, 1980.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I must say the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre has never spoken wiser words. In fact, I have never objected to having any bills, and especially Bill C-48, being given detailed and attentive consideration by the members of this House. I have even encouraged such consideration and debate during the past year. Today, however, it seems to me that most if not all members of the House have had a chance to expound on this subject. According to our calculations, 235 members have spoken to this bill at various stages. For six months, the Committee on National Resources and Public Words held public hearings and considered amendments to the bill. We heard 140 witnesses during over 70 committee meetings which totalled over 130 hours. Hundreds of amendments to this bill were proposed and the government accepted about one hundred.

For the sake of comparison, Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the House that this bill has been discussed twice as long as the Foreign Investment Review bill and three times as long as the Bank Act bill. I feel that this gives us a good indication of the extent to which this very important bill has been considered by Parliament, and that, as the member for Etobicoke Centre on the opposite side said so eloquently, it is extremely important to proceed with its adoption. The Committee on National Resources and Public Works tabled its report in July. We started debate on the bill in July, and when the session resumed this fall, Bill C-48 was practically the only legislation for consideration before the House until the debate on the Constitution. In fact, we debated and voted on fifty-seven motions proposed by the government and the opposition, motions that had already been considered in committee.

Madam Speaker, granted, there is a time for consideration, reflection and study, but there is also a time for making decisions. Parliament is not exclusively engaged in contemplation. Furthermore, Parliament should not be prevented from deciding on the bills that are before it. There comes a time when decisions must be made. Parliament must decide on matters that are of primary importance to Canada. Bill C-48 is one of the main parts of the government's energy policy and the program for Canadianization of the oil industry in Canada. It must be obvious to everyone that we must decide now what is to happen in this respect. I feel that one year to consider a bill should be ample to allow all members of the House to make their positions known and to vote knowledgeably on this bill.

Therefore, I hope, Madam Speaker, that all members will agree that the House proceed without delay to adopt the bill on third reading, a bill that has received every necessary and reasonable consideration. I should like to point out that the government has been extremely patient and has shown every consideration for the wishes expressed by the opposition, both at the committee stage and during consideration of the bill in the House. I hope the members of this House will agree to proceed without delay to pass the bill on third reading.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I find it strange, Mr. Speaker, that this motion would be moved at a time when I am only half way through my speech with regard to the bill. I am not suggesting for a moment that the minister had anything personal in moving the motion at this stage, although I will say when he speaks of bringing the matter on, speaks of the length of the debate on the bill, that if the government had not been so singularly obsessed, in almost a paranoid fashion, with the constitutional debate and their eagerness to pass that resolution, we would have accomplished a good deal more in the House of Commons in connection with the economic ills of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The minister belittles the stature of Bill C-48 as a bill, although he has admitted that it is one of the major components of a national energy policy. We have seen only the tip of the national energy policy, of which this bill is a part.

Closure in any form is a most reprehensible course of action for any government to take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: What it is doing is muzzling the opposition. What it would like to do, of course, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has described us all as nuisances—forty feet off the Hill we are nobodies—is to get rid of the opposition entirely. We are mere nuisances over here. To heck with any debate on subjects as important as Bill C-48. If the truth were known, the government would like to introduce this kind of measure on every single piece of legislation introduced to the House, notwithstanding our record of co-operativeness.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Whose record?

Mr. Nielsen: I was waiting for the jeers and the laughter from the government side. If they had done their homework, they would find that since this Parliament began we have come to agreement with them on 33 occasions with regard to dozens of pieces of legislation.

An hon. Member: Wonderful!

Mr. Nielsen: If they want, I can state them all for the record. How many times have these hon. members over there imposed closure? They take the cake. They would like to walk off with Parliament entirely; but they take the cake, the prize for imposing closure. In this session of Parliament they have invoked closure no less than eight times.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: That is an historical record. Never before in the history of the Canadian Parliament has any government muzzled the opposition on eight separate occasions.

An hon. Member: It is a reflection on the opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: They have done this twice by pure closure and six times by Standing Order 75C. That is a most shameful record. Rather than adopting this course, this arrogant government, instead of whining that we are speaking too much, should be adopting the open mind and attitude of obtaining suggestions from knowledgeable people, such as the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who know the oil and gas industry, I might add, a good deal better than the minister and his supporters on the other side.

That is why debate is important and why these members should not be muzzled by closure. It is not a question of the nature of the measure before us; it is a stigma that the government will not be rid of because of their propensity and obsession, every time they do not get their own way, for imposing closure. "We have heard enough", they say. "You have spoken enough; we do not want to hear you any more; now shut up." That is exactly what closure means. This government stands indicted for imposing closure more times on an opposition than any other in the history of the Parliament of Canada. They should be ashamed of that.

An hon. Member: They have no shame.

Mr. Nielsen: They have no shame is exactly right. They are too damned thick-skinned, arrogant and uncaring to have any shame about them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): For a number of reasons we shall oppose the government's motion of closure. The problem in the House has to do with the way the members are not made aware of the program that the government intends to proceed with during the course of any one session.

There are some serious problems that go to the very root of the government's intention to use closure time after time. I suggested some months ago during a discussion similar to this that there were other ways to order the business and affairs of the House that would allow all of the members to be involved. I suggest again that that would be one of the more constructive approaches that we might take to avoid the need to use closure under Standing Order 75C on an occasion such as this.

We are asked to make a decision that enough has been said about a very important piece of legislation. It is not for me to decide, nor is it really for the government to decide, whether enough has been said, whether all that should be said has been said and every opportunity has been given to members so as to influence the course of affairs of the country in a constructive, sensitive and sensible way. While it may be possible for me from time to time to think that enough has been said on any one topic, I suggest that that does not necessarily mean that it is the considered judgment of the vast majority of the members of the House that that is true. There are times when topics are raised in the House that I frankly think, after the first speaker has spoken, that we have heard enough; but that does not mean that in truth that is the case.

I should like to suggest that once one starts to use closure—and I think this is where the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is quite correct—with each attempt, with each usage, it becomes easier. Therefore, the test of whether or not every opportunity has been afforded all members to express their genuine concern on behalf of the people they represent becomes a test that, in essence, is not really applied equally or fairly in every instance.

I should like to suggest to the government one thing they might consider to avoid this kind of confrontation arising time after time. I believe at the beginning of every session members of the government, such as the House leader and perhaps others within that group who manage the affairs of the government for the House, should get together with the representatives of the official opposition and the NDP. Then they should sit down at the beginning of the session and go over the program for the particular session that the government anticipates it would like to see proceeded with and completed. We might then together prioritize that program in order to have our input in what areas we believe will be very controversial and how those areas can be best handled both in terms of the time allocated in the House and the time allocated in committee to deal with such matters.

● (1520)

This is not intended in any way to inhibit the government's right to proceed with other matters which from time to time arise. But it allows us to look in the over all at all matters to be considered by government, within reason, and then to make a determination as to which of those matters are likely to evoke the most debate, which of those matters are likely to create the greatest uproar, and which of these matters are likely to take the longest period of time. Then we could, together with the government, make an effort to establish an order which would allow the government to proceed with all its business. At the same time it would allow the opposition to review adequately in the House, in committee and if need be back in the House, as was the case with this particular piece of legislation, all ramifications of the legislation. If we are ever to get to that point, the need to use closure would be so infrequent that we would not likely see Standing Order 75C used at all for the balance of this Parliament.

I put to those who manage business for the government that it is not nearly good enough to manage business on the basis of one week to the next. One cannot expect people to deal adequately with the legislative program of the government unless they are aware of what it is. One cannot deal with legislation if one is given notice of the intent to have the matter debated in the House and referred on Thursday for the following Monday discussion. In dealing with such matters in the Ontario legislature during minority government, it has been my experience that we were well able to look at the government's over-all program, to come to grips with those matters which were of vital importance to the majority of members and to put them into an order which enabled us to establish a time-frame within which they could be dealt. To the best of my recollection, we never had to use closure during the five years that I was House leader of the official opposition and of the third party during the time of minority government in Ontario.

We will not support this motion because it is a further slide down the slippery slope. I do not want to go any farther down it. I think we have seen enough closure in the House. Now we want to see co-operation and orderly dealing with the business of the House. The only way it can be done is if the government takes the opposition into its confidence in terms of what it proposes to consider over the course of a session and together we establish a way in which those matters can be dealt with adequately by everyone and proceeded with through the House and committees to achieve the ultimate result of passage.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us relates to Bill C-48 which the House has been considering for almost a year. During that period, the draft legislation has been subjected to most careful and detailed scrutiny which has surpassed that given to most legislation before the House. The complexity of the bill and the magnitude of the task that the legislation must accomplish requires no less than the careful scrutiny the bill received.

Over a six-month period, the bill was before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. At more than 70 meetings of that committee, hon. members heard testimony from officials and received deputations and representations from a variety of Canadians from the Arctic, from sub-Arctic areas and from the Atlantic and Pacific regions—in fact from all Canadians who have a real interest in the development of petroleum resources in the Canada lands. In all, 140 witnesses appeared before the committee to give their views on the bill. Some of their suggestions, when incorporated with those presented by hon. members of the opposition, assisted the government in putting forward some 100 amendments for the draft legislation. Since the adoption of the amendments, another 57 amendments have been brought forward in the House, most of which simply repeated suggestions put forward in committee. We have allowed every opportunity for a fair and full debate. Perhaps we have even been overly flexible with respect to the length of debate on Bill C-48. Indeed, there were some 235 major interventions on the bill during the course of consideration in the committee and in the House. The bill has, in fact, been before us for a period longer than the constitutional resolution. There comes a time when the House must make its decision. That time has now arrived. We on this side of the House assume responsibility for taking that decision.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) spoke against time allocation on Bill C-48, but he knows as well as I the reasons why such allocation has now become necessary. It is the obstruction on the part of hon. members of the opposition which has delayed the passage of this important legislation.

Mr. Deans: Not us.

Mr. MacLaren: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) denies obstruction. But I remind him that colleagues in his party made clear their purposes in committee. For example, on October 19 the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), when referring to members of the New Democratic Party, said:

> We had to resort to a filibuster and to delaying tactics. This was hard on everyone, including government members who had to sit and listen.

Hon. members opposite said that it was necessary because we would not listen.

Mr. Deans: That is correct.

Mr. MacLaren: The fact is that we did listen. Hon. members opposite know that perfectly well. The wide range of amendments which the government brought forward and were adopted at committee stage amended the legislation in such a way as to take into account the valid proposals of hon. members, particularly concerning the rights of native peoples and the fragile environment encountered in the frontier lands, whether offshore or in the Arctic.

Clearly unanimous approval of every aspect of Bill C-48 was not to be expected, but there is no question that the legislation is long overdue. For years we have operated under anachronistic legislation which would have been improved at an earlier stage by Bill C-20, but that bill died at a time when a general election was called.

● (1530)

I have no disagreement with the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who, almost a year ago today, made the following statement:

> The broad objectives of this legislation are worthwhile and certainly acceptable. One might go so far as to say that they are motherhood; they are intended to increase production and Canadian ownership, as well as to provide a very stable tax environment. I agree with the minister when he says that it is important to have this legislation.

I agree with that, Mr. Speaker. It is basically for this reason that we have brought forward a motion for time allocation at this stage. After all, if hon. members opposite and the energy spokesman for the official opposition consider that the bill is important and even that it is a "motherhood" issue, it would clearly be wrong to continue the prolonged obstruction that it has encountered.

This bill has been brought forward against a background of significant progress in the implementation of the National Energy Program. During the past year major agreements have been reached with the governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. At the moment we are engaged in serious discussion with the governments of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and British Columbia with regard to offshore resources.

An attractive price regime has now been established. That is one incentive for the more rapid development of the petroleum resources in the frontier lands which, when taken in conjunction with the petroleum incentive program, will ensure that Canada achieves oil self-sufficiency to match our self-sufficiency in other energy forms.

Against this background, I cannot understand how the official opposition can justify their continued obstruction of a bill which will ensure, among other things, greater Canadian participation in the Canada lands. For many years, we on this side and some members of the New Democratic Party have urged that legislation be put in place to ensure that Canadians have a greater opportunity to participate in the development of their own petroleum resources. This bill contributes to that objective, Mr. Speaker. When coupled with other aspects of the National Energy Program, it will ensure that, for the first time, Canadians have a real opportunity to participate in their own petroleum development.

That policy has the broad support of the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker. A recent survey conducted by the Canadian Petroleum Association showed that 84 per cent of the people surveyed support the thrust of the legislation now before us. Not only does the great majority of the public support such a policy, but so does the government of Alberta which has undertaken to offer petroleum incentives which, among other things, will enhance the Canadianization of our petroleum industry. So also does the government of Saskatchewan. So does the government of Ontario also for example, supports this Canadianization, as we have seen from its recent acquisition which will involve it to a greater degree in the Canadian petroleum industry.

We cannot sit and listen indefinitely, Mr. Speaker. It is time for Parliament to act; it is time for the government to act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy of the parliamentary secretary never fails to amaze me. He can stand up and spout things that I know he does not believe. He can take the most outrageous misinterpretations of statements made by members of this party and put them forward as fact. I must say that he serves the right minister in terms of the fidelity with which he treats facts and presents them to the House.

The parliamentary secretary said that my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), had indicated that it is about time this bill came forward because we have been waiting ten years for it. I should like to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker. Ten years is approximately right; in fact, it is 11 years. In April, 1970, the then minister of energy in the Liberal government said that the government was withdrawing the rules and regulations for Canada lands in order to replace them soon with better rules and regulations. "Soon" was seven years! In 1977 the government brought forward a set of regulations which were not good, but were not bad. As a result of what they brought forward then there was a spurt of activity in the north. Then came the National Energy Program which brought to a halt much that was being accomplished and that we had expected would continue in the north.

The parliamentary secretary said that great progress had been made as a result of the National Energy Program. He pointed to the agreements made with the provinces as examples of progress. As a result of those agreements, however, the federal government abandoned its crude oil pricing schedule for domestic crude, it abandoned the export tax on natural gas and it abandoned the proposal to treat old oil and new oil in the same way. What he calls the great progress in the National Energy Program was really backtracking from some of the more absurd proposals that were brought in in the first place. That is what the government defines as progress, Mr. Speaker.

Judging from statements he made at the Liberal Party convention in Toronto a couple of weeks ago, I know that the parliamentary secretary will join with me in hoping that we see progress in the budget very soon because there is a need for more backtracking there as well.

The parliamentary secretary says that we should be pleased with the national energy policy and what it is achieving. I have before me the latest issue of Oilweek magazine which quotes the minister as saying, "I wish to refer hon. members to the figures published in Oilweek magazine". So the minister uses figures from this publication. A chart in the magazine shows that on November 18, 1981, there were 281 rigs drilling, while on November 18, 1980, there were 446 rigs drilling. Is that progress, Mr. Speaker? In one year half of the drilling capacity in the country has been wiped out. The parliamentary secretary seems to think that is progress. A little more progress like that and there will be no rigs drilling at all, Mr. Speaker. That will be just marvellous progress!

There is no question that this bill has been before us for a long time, Mr. Speaker, but we have not been dealing with it exclusively for a full year. I can recall taking a few months off last summer and talking about the Constitution and the budget. Other subjects were raised during the year that interfered with the debate on Bill C-48 as well.

It has taken so long to go through the House because it is a bad, bad bill. It is one of the worst bills ever brought forward by any government. It establishes a precedent for the democratic free world. I have researched this subject, Mr. Speaker, and it appears that this is the first time in any democracy that a government proposes to confiscate private property without compensation. It is the first time any democratic government in any democratic free nation has presented this kind of legislation. That is an incredible precedent, Mr. Speaker, and a year is not nearly long enough to discuss the bill fully.

Perhaps the parliamentary secretary should go over to the Senate and listen to the discussion on the bill there. He claims that everything that needs to be said has been said, but if he were following the proceedings before the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce he would realize that a lot more needs to be said.

Far from being perfect or even getting a passing grade, this bill is a bad piece of legislation. We would do Canada a service if we were to toss it out. If we were really interested in Canada and not in the political reputation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), that is what we would do. If we were dealing with something other than political pride, then hon. members opposite would join us in throwing this bill out, throwing it back to the bowels of the civil service where it came from, because it is an atrocious piece of legislation. I would certainly identify with the problems which were alluded to by the House leader for the New Democratic Party concerning the way this House functions, the necessity to co-operate, and so on.

• (1540)

