THE ROYAL PARTY ARRIVES IN LONDON!

Great Crowd of People Poured Into City to Witness Reception to Their Royal Highnesses.

Miles of the Forest City's Streets Are Gaily Decorated With Vari-Colored Flags and Bunting --- Bright Sun Dispelled Threatening Clouds of the Early Morning--- The Civic Address to Royalty.

London the less has been honored by a visit from the heir to the British throne. It is now over 40 years ago since the present King of Great Brit- the 27th St. Clair Borderers. ain arrived in the Forest City, and during those 40 years wonderful changes have taken place. The Prince of Wales in 1860 saw a straggling town, surrounded by much uncleared forest and undeveloped land, and approached in many instances by the corduroy roads of the pioneer days. Today his son gazed upon a modern city, a loyal and a prosperous city. Stirring events have transpired since the youthful prince appeared at the memorable ball in the Tecumseh House. The good Queen mother has passed away and he, with the accumulated years beginning to show on his kingly brow, is reigning in her stead. In 1860 London was a comparatively small community in a sparsely poputrans-continental chain of provinces had not then been forged. Today loyally received by the commercial capital of an important section of a united nation.

The morning broke dismal enough, and at 9 o'clock the bright-colored decorations of the down-town district looked somewhat bedraggled. But the crowds which had been streaming into the city since yesterday were optimistic, and the event proved that their confidence was not misplaced. Shortly before 10 o'clock the skies cleared and the sun came out long enough to dry up the water-soaked flags and bunting. The streets began to fill with people at an early hour, and long before the the streets along the line of the royal procession had been secured. From the moment the royal procession left the Grand Trunk depot until it reached the reviewing stand in Victoria Park, the distinguished visitors were greeted with a continuous ovation. If the reception to the duke's father in 1860 is excepted, such a scene was never before witnessed in London. Wolfe Co., Que., Is Thrilled by an Almost Miraculous Case in Which a Most Popular Young Lady Is Saved From Death.

St. Joseph de Homme, Que., Oct. 11, (Special).—A very remarkable, indeed almost miraculous, cure has been effected here quite recently. This celebrated case and its happy termination has been the sensation of Wolfe county for some months past. Mademoiselle Eugenie Dube is well known and most popular, and for this reason many people have been interested in her illness and recovery. Her trouble commenced three years ago. Every possible remedy was tried, but everything failed. She was becoming very discouraged and had almost given up hope, when she heard of Dodd's Kidney Pills. She resolved to try them, and her grateful letter expresses her satisfaction at the perfect and permanent cure which she found "It gives me pleasure to be able to say that I am well again, after three long years of suffering. of Arms in Gold and Silver Design.

The civic address presented by Mayor Rumball to their royal highnesses today is one of the most costly and beautiful ever designed in Canada. The entire work of designing and illuminating, together with the gold and silver work, was done by Mr. John S. Barnard, the well-known Dundas street jeweler. The address, which is done on vellum and magnificently bound in leather, bears on the cover the royal coat-of-arms, in solid gold, and the coat-of-arms of the city of London in silver. The coats-of-arms are surrounded by a border of burnished silver, in one corner of which is a spray of wheat, and in the other a spray of clover, both wrought from silver, and emblematic of the fertility of Canada's soil. The right hand lower corner contains a bunch of maple

The address proper, together with the beautiful frontispiece, is exquisitely done in colors, the German text being used. Around each page is a wide border of hand-colored designs of Canadian flowers.

The address is a triumph of the designer's art, and is in all probability the most beautiful and costly received by the royal tourists in Canada.

The Royal Visit.

Our own good city of London has given a cordial and graceful greeting to the royal guests who have paid us a brief visit. The time was all too short; but it was sufficient to afford us an opportunity for an enthusiastic and loyal demonstration. We voice, therefore, the general feeling in refolding that so far the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York has been pleasant and successful, and in expressing the hope that to the end their tour will be marked by features that will form a bright Before this tour, the Duke no means an untraveled person. He had seen the world, and learned much of its life; but the present journey round the world has a special significance, both personal and im-Canada welcomes, then, the Duke and Duchess, for their own sakes, and for all that their visit represents.

It was natural that the noble Queen who reigned so long on the throne of Britain, after the Jubilee had symbolized once more the vastness of her dominions, should desire that her representatives and heirs should visit the distant lands which she could no longer cherish any hope of seeing. If this was the thought out of which the royal tour was planned, it was one that was quite in harmony with the interest and foresight that Queen Victoria always showed in matters that pertained to the welfare of her people. Round about the visit of the royal pair, lending it an increased interest and beauty. there gather memories of "Albert the throughout her long and eventful life displayed such high qualities as woman

We are a democratic people, and we owe a debt of gratitude to our late Queen for showing how completely democracy and constitutional monarchy can be harmonized. The result is that the throne, "broad-based upon the people's will," is stronger and more stable than ever before, commanding both the reason and affection of the people. This is a matter of conviction and of sentiment. The mass of the people at the present time believe that from the standpoint of utility, a constitutional monarchy is the best form of government; that it is good to have a permanent head of the Empire, above and free from party politics. The sixty years of rule which so recently came to a close enlisted on this side the sympathies of all classes of people; the royal head of the nation represented all that was noblest and purest in Its life.

It is not possible or desirable to introduce into a country like Canada much of the pomp of court life, or of Its elaborate etiquette; but these at best are mere symbols. Our patriotism may be pure, our respect real, our loyalty genuine, while we retain the simplicity which is most in harmony with our history and surroundings.

It has taken centuries of changeful life to produce the political order that we possess today, when all classes can work together for the good of the commonwealth on the basis of equal rights and common justice. Our duty is to move onward, taking advantage of all that is good from the past, and all that is hopeful for the future. Canada welcomes, therefore, the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York as representatives of the British Crown, and as noble guests who have shown in intelligent and kindly interest in our national life. We honor them for their own worth and for their graceful courtesy, as well as for the great prindples symbolized by their visit. We trust that the tour which began with the inauguration of the Australian Commonwealth will continue to be pleasant and prosperous in the fullest Jense, and that their visit to Canada will long be remembered on both sides. and will form another golden link in the chain binding the Old Land and the New to each other.

A Laurier Wanted.

The former consul-general and spe cial plenipotentiary for Portugal in the Transvaal, has written a pamphlet reviewing the situation in South Africa, and asserting that a Sir Wilfrid Laurier is needed in the at present unhappy country-"One whom the Dutch people could implicity trust and believe in, always close to the high commissioner, where there would be a chance soon of creating the desired harmonious whole, by mak ing the able proconsul better understood and appreciated." We can all wish that there may soon come a time when the South African colonies will have in the midst of them a counterpart of our own beloved Prime Minister. This is all that we can do to forward that aim, however. We cannot spare our own First Minister from the position which he holds with so much credit to himself and benefit to his fellow-Canadians and the Empire as a whole.

World, to the Duke, is not bad: "But now as to Jack. Tell the King, Duke, that you found him a healthy country lad, bothered a little with growing pains and just getting into long trousers. Boylike, he is measuring his height and chest, and weighing himself every other day. Some say that Jack is not growing as fast as he should, but Jack is the best judge of the vitality that is within him, and he is not kicking at the size of his shadow. My, what lung power he has and how he can eat! And what visions the young man has of the future greatness of his Canada! Jack is that." quite well satisfied with himself, and he is not going abroad looking for praise or consolation or sympathy. thing it is that he has not broken connection with the old folks at home. Brother Sam has frequently given Johnny nice big chunks of candy, and coaxed him to run away from home: he has frequently told him that the goblins would get him if he stayed out in the dark all by himself. But a boy that is accustomed to nights that are three months long isn't afraid of bogeymen, and candy was made for matinee girls, not for men who can stand up against 60 degrees of frost. Tell the King, Duke, that Jack is working first and foremost for British, and then, as far as possible, for Anglo-Saxon unity. If Sammy will only keep his head level, Jack will show the way, and the Anglo-Saxon will ere long rid the world of that prince of barbarians, Horrid Warfare."

FIRST SPEECH OF THE DUKE.

'Twas Not Completed Without Much Fear and Trembling,

But It Had the Desired Effect of Bringing a Deal of Money for a Worthy Charity.

The Duke of Cornwall is still fond of a joke, and enjoys telling a story against himself, says the New Penny Magazine. To make a public speech is as agonizing to a royalty as to any provincial lord mayor, and the duke's Her Majesty Queen Victoria Apfirst speech caused him many a sleepless night. Before the day came he summoned a family conclave. The old Duke of Cambridge was present on the occasion, and as he gave the word of command he expected to be obeyed. "Have your speech typewritten, my dear fellow; hold it in your hand, and refer to it when the moment comes." Our heir apparent made no demur, but when the moment did come he decided, like a manly young fellow, to trust to himself. Anyhow, he discarded his notes and began the speech. His trepidation may be believed when he heard the following exclamations pop off like minute guns at his side, every comma bringing with it a "Conceited boy!" "Idiot!" "Why didn't he do as I "Self-sufficiency!" surd!" etc. The dear old Duke of Cambridge, whom everybody loves so well, has a habit of thinking aloud, and he felt a not unnatural irritation under the circumstances that his youthful kinsman had asked his advice and not taken it. The speech proved a grand success. It was given at a charity dinner, and money flowed in so bountifully that the duke drove off in triumph to his father at Marlborough House. "There, sir! No speech of yours ever brought Prince of Wales was, if possible, more delighted than his son, and the two had a hearty laugh together over the day's proceedings.

WELCOMED THE PRINCE.

Their Prospective Sovereign.

Reminiscences of Mr. Samuel Mc-Bride in Connection With the Prince of Wales' Visit to This City.

Mr. Samuel McBride was found at his home at 430 Ridout street, and was asked by a reporter for his personal recollections of the visit to London of Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Mr. McBride replied: "I was an alderman at that time.

We were only a small place, but we made great preparations to give the prince a grand reception. The prince was given a drive around the city, east as far as Colborne street, and back along Dundas street and Queen's avenue —North street it was then. Dufferin avenue, or Duke street, as it was first called, was nothing at all at that time. Colborne street was about the eastern boundary, and Ridout street was the western limit of the city. The next day the prince went to Sarma. On the train were Sir George Cartier (Sir John A. Macdonald's right-hand man then), Sir John Carling, Mayor Moffatt, and several aldermen, me among them. Of course, the Duke of Newcastle was there, too-stubborn, bull-headed old dog he was. He kept a tight hand the prince-too tight, I think. We had luncheon at Point Edward, and then a sail out on Lake Huron. Then we came back to London. The prince was here two days and two nights, and the people turned out en masse from all over the country to welcome him. Everybody was pleased, and there was no fault found by anyone. Of course, the expenses were rather heavy on us, we being but a sma'l place, but then, nobody made any objection about

Col. Macbeth, clerk of the surrogate ourt, remembers the visit of the Prince of Wales to this city as though it were but yesterday. The colonel was then captain of No. 1 Company of Rifles, having been gazetted a few days before the prince's visit. As captain, he which accompanied the prince on his drive around the city, and also commanded the detail of his company which mounted guard at the Tecumseh House on the night of the ball there. Col. Macbeth says that among the officers of the prince's staff were Major Tisdale and Capt. Elliott. The latter was a member of the family to which Lord Minto belongs, while the former was one of the British officers who gallantly engineered the defense of the Turkish fortress of Karss against the siege of the Russians, this siege being one of the notable features of the Cri-

On Sept. 17, 1900, her late Majesty Queen Victoria gave her assent to the recommendation of the Marquis of Salisbury to the projected trip of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York to Australia in the following spring as a "special proof of her interest in all that concerns the welfare of her Australian subjects." The official announcement added: "Her majesty at the same time wishes to signify her sense of the loyalty and devotion which have prompted the spontaneous aid so liberally offered by all the colonies in the South African war, and of the splendid gallantry of her colonial troops.' ## AFTER THE GRAND REVIEW

How Londoners Did Honor to Royal Hands Distribute the Decorations.

> Their Royal Highnesses Spend a Busy Afternoon-A Joke-Notes of the Day.

Toronto, Oct. 11 .- After the presentation of medals to the South African veterans, the long lines of men who had stood on the common for two hours, swung into line and came down to the saluting base. The cavalry marched past first with fingling bridles and flashing sabres, over 1,500 of them, a magnificent sight. The artillery went past by batteries, six guns abreast and keeping admirable alignment. The Kingston battery of regulars, who had almost to a man been decorated a few minutes before for South African services, were cheered to the echo by the spectators, who remembered how they had fought the Boers. The infantry streamed along with the Guerda Bry streamed along with the Guards Brigade at the head of the column. The Foot Guards, of Ottawa, and the 48th Highlanders, of Toronto, had the most admirers. The Haldimand Rifles, with its Indian companies, was another popular corps. The last division was a recently-organized A. M. C. corps, under Lieut.-Col. Neilson, splendidly drilled and equipped. It, too, won the applause of the spectators. The duke and duchess, on passing through the streets on their way to Government House, were cheered by 40,000 spectators along the route. ACTUAL PARADE STRENGTH. The actual parade was 10,055 and 250 men were on guard duty. review consisted of slightly over 11,000 The duke, before leaving the grounds, expressed to Gen. O'Grady-Haly his deep admiration for the splendid turnout and the steadiness of the men. Several members of the staff said the parade was the largest of the whole tour. After dinner many of the corps broke camp and by 3 o'clock four train loads had pulled out. All day afterwards, Col. Nelles and the transport officers worked at the problem of dispatching the men, and by midnight the grounds were almost untenanted and the royal review of 1901 had become history.

IN THE AFTERNOON. Their royal highnesses spent an exceedingly busy afternoon and evening. Shortly after luncheon they drove up Queen's avenue, en route to the university, and saw a fine exhibition drill by the fire brigade, all the most modern appliances being turned out for their inspection. His royal highness saw the extension ladder and water sower in operation, and passed in review the members of the brigade. The next stop was Bishop Strachan's school, where the duchess was presented with a huge bouquet. Another stor was in command of the guard of honor which accompanied the prince on his of "The Maple Leaf," planted a maple Through the party then proceeded to the university where an address of welcome was read by Sir William Meredith, on behalf of the faculty. This was the students' especial function, and the reception accorded was one of the heartiest of the visit.

HIS FIRST JOKE. In his reply to the address, his royal highness made the first joke of the visit at the expense of a former under "I deeply appreciate," said he, "the high honor of a degree in your distinguished university, which you have just conferred upon me. At the same time you have reminded me that the undergraduate roll bears the name of my dear father-(applause)-and I further notice has remained in that position more than forty years." (Applause and laughter.) When he re-turns home his royal highness will be able to lord it as a graduate over the "freshies" of 1860. THE STATE DINNER.

The evening was devoted to a state dinner party and a public reception in the buildings, at which about 2,000 persons, the most prominent people, not only of Toronto, but of Central Ontario, passed before their royal the lawn outside, which was transformed into a veritable fairyland with electric lights and Chinese lanterns. THE MACKENZIE TARTAN. There were many guesses why the 45th Regiment of Victoria, of which Sam Hughes, M. P., is the gallant colonel, wore a tartan on their helmets in the royal review of today. It was the Mackenzie tartan, and there were those who, knowing the political proclivities of its commanding officer, saw in this upon the headgear of the soldiers of the King honor for a former Canadian premier and political leader of the colonel. But there are other Mackenzies. There is one, Mr. Malcolm Mackenzie, president of the Toronto Railway Company, who incidentally is honorary colonel of the 45th Regi-ment of his native county. He it was who a year or so ago presented the regiment with these tartans, and this is why they wore them before the duke today. LESSON IN MANNERS. As Gen. O'Grady-Haly rode to the parade ground this morning by the west end of the grand stand he passed a group of military. Apparently they did not recognize the commander-inchief of the Canadian forces, for not a hand was raised in salute. The major-general passed, apparently nothing was going to happen, but one of the knot was smoking a cigar. Take your cigar out of your mouth when your superior officer passes," came gruffly from the mounted chief 'Haven't you any manners?"

THE DUCHESS.

This afternoon the Duchess of York visited the Bishop Strachan School for Young Ladies on her way to the university. The carriage passed through the east entrance beneath an arch of red and white bunting up to the veranda, where the members of the council and their wives, with the staff of the college, were assembled. The princess was received by the Bish op of Toronto and the principal of the school. The bishop expressed his pleasure and gratitude at the honor done the Bishop Strachan School, and their appreciation of her graciousness in acceding to their request that she should visit them on her way to the University of Toronto. Miss Marjorie Holcroft, the baby of the school, presented her royal highness with a bouquet of purple orchids tied with white ribbon. The duchess then signed the purple of the school to the her name in the visitors' book after the signatures, Louise, Sept. 12, 1879, and Lorne, Sept. 12, 1879, on which date the Princess Louise with the then

A NEW FLAG.

H. H. McConnel, of this city, is one of many loyal Canadians who think Canada needs a flag which is more suggestive of a federation of provinces. He has, therefore, designed a flag along that line. It is among the many decorations of the corner of Carlton and Yonge streets. The design consists of a Union Jack and two rows of green maple leaves, four in the tor row and three in the bottom, represent highnesses; while thousands waited on ing the seven provinces, thus leaving vacancy in the lower row to be filled when Newfoundland enters with the Dominion. The new flag has been favorably commented on by a large number of citizens. VISITING PRESS MEN. The Canadian and foreign corre spondents who have accompanied the duke on his tour through Canada were tendered a luncheon by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Press Association at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. A number of short speeches were made, after which the visiting press men were driven through the manufacturers' arch and around the city. The decorations were much admired

It has been a journey worthy of the great Queen, whose idea it was. Originally planned by Queen Victoria as a mark of her approval of the Confederation of the Australian colonies, her grandson to open the first parliament of the Commonwealth in her name, it was but a step further when King Edward decided that the tour should be one of the whole empire. Thus it has come that Canadians are enabled to participate in the testimony of that oyalty to the sovereign which is the proud boast and privilege of all British subjects.

Six months have passed from the time H. M. S. Ophir left England bearing with her the good wishes of millions of British subjects in her voyage round the world, until she cast anchor in the harbor of Quebec. Sailing from Portsmouth on March 16, their royal highnesses passed down the Bri tish Channel and through the Bay of Biscay to the Mediterranean. There. where Gibraltar guards the entrance to that historic sea, couched like a lion ever on the watch for its foes, they received the first welcome from one of the outposts of the empire. Next came Malta, Britain's island fortress in the Mediterranean, and there they came in touch with the first of those mixed populations which live in liberty under the Union Jack. A few days later they were passing through the Suez Canal, which British diplomacy has made free to the world, and then on to Aden, the empire's outpost at the mouth of the

New Zealand, that land of contrasts and curiosities, both in nature and in politics, added its meed of devotion to the heir-apparent. The ponucal evo'u-tion of the islands of the Southern Sea -startling though it has been to more conservative communities-has appar ently not lessened by one whit the loyalty of its people to the throne and empire. That had been proven on the battlefields of South Africa, New Zealand having sent more soldiers in proportion to population that any other portion of the King's dominions, and it was emphasized by the enthusiastic welcome given to the future king and queen of Britain by the people of Auckland, Wellington, Lyttelton and Dune-din. The demonstration of legalty on tion of her journey.

After a visit to Mauritius, the British outpost in the Indian Ocean, where the population, largely of French descent, gave their royal highnesses a suitable welcome, the Ophir went on to Durban, and there the tour seemed to gather more significance even than in Australia. South Africa was still overshadowed by the cloud of war; yet both in Natal and in Cape Colony the welcome of their royal highnesses was of the most enthusiastic character. At Durban many of the colonials who had done such good service in the campaign in and around Ladysmith, received their rewards, while at Cape Town others of the soldiers of the first South African colony were given their medals. Perhaps the most striking feature of the royal reception in South Africa was the demonstration of loyalty on the part of the blacks, Zulus and Basuvieing with each other to do honor to the grandson of the great white Queen, whose rule had brought them liberty and love. The Ophir touched at St. Vincent, Cape Verde, for coaling operations, and there said farewell to H. M. S. George and Juno, which had escorted them all the way to Australia, and so far around the world.

After their trip across Canada from Quebec to Victoria and back again to Halifax, this truly imperial tour will be closed by a call at St. John's, Nfld., Britain's most ancient colony, and then

THE PEDIGREE

The thirty-seven generations from Egbert to Victoria, inclusive, give, at OF THE KING

Royal Family.

Genesis of the Reigning Monarch of Great Britain- A Chronologigal Table.

The pedigree of the Queen has long been a subject of controversy. A few years ago some of the English periodicals were overrun with correspondence in the nature of attempts to show both that the royal family is and is not English. The chief interest in this discussion grew out of an assertion made by the Prince of Wales, on the occasion of the dedication of the new docks at Southampton. His royal highness, in the very peginning of his address, said:

"We are much interested in the contrast which you have pointed out to us between our visit here today for the purpose of inaugurating a vast commercial enterprise, and that which my famous ancestor, Edward the Black Prince, paid five and a half centuries ago, when he embarked at Southampton (a town of considerable importance even in the days of the conquest), for France with his father, Edward III., on board a fleet of nearly 1,000 sail, to accompany that monarch to the giorious and celebrated field of Cressy.

These words had hardly appeared in print, when the Westminster Budget, the Gazette and other publications were flooded with protests. One correspondent wrote that "when the Prince of Wales alluded to 'my famous ancestor, Edward, the Black Prince,' he quite forgot that the hero of Poitiers left at his untimely death but one surviving son, the childless Richard II., who was dethroned and subsequently murdered at Pomfret Castle, in 1399, by his cousin. Henry IV.

And this correspondent added: "As a mere matter of historic fact the only drop of English blood which flows through the veins of the present royal house came from Margaret Tudor, the eldest daughter of Henry VII., and the wife of James IV., King of Scotland, who was slain at Flod-den Field, A. D. 1513. Her great grandson, James IV., King of Scotland, succeeded to the throne of England as James I. on the extinction of the illustrious dynasty of the Tudors by the death of that great and glorious English patriot, Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1603.

daughter, Elizabeth Stuart married a German, Frederick, Elec-tor Palatine, and she became, through marriage of their daughter, Sophia, with Ernest, Elector of Han-over, the granddaughter of George I., our first king of the German house of Welf or Wolf, whom the act of settlement and the Whig party placed on the throne of England, A. D. 1714, to the final and foul exclusion of the ancient and national dynasty of the Stuarts. Our Welf kings, the four Georges, and the fourth William, all married German wives.

"The German mother and husband of Queen Victoria were both Wettins of the petty Duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the late Prince Albert being the eldest son of Ernest Wettin, Duke of Saxe-Coburg, by his wife Dorothy Wettin, a princess of Saxe-Altenburg, whose union had a termination perhaps unique in the annals of German ducal houses of that class. The Prince of Wales, if that were sible, is even more German than the Georges."

No sooner had the foregoing statements been printed in the Budget than a swarm of indignant Britishers and loyal Englishmen invaded the columns of the Budget to protest against some of the assertions therein made and the conclusions drawn These in turn were followed by another troop of correspondents who as strongly affirmed the correctness of the statements set forth by the Prince of Wales' critic. At length an anonymous writer appeared in the columns of the Westminster Budget, on Sept. 13, 1895, with a note on Queen Victoria's with a note on Queen Pedigree, which he had elaborately worked out, and which seems to have set the long-drawn-out controversy At all events, it has ceased to be a disturbing theme of discussion in the public prints.

This person took the ground that an antecessor is a member of the family who has gone before, and he may be either lineal or collateral." The writer then showed that the Black Prince was the son of the Prince of Wales' forefather at the twentieth remove—i. e., was his uncle at the nineteenth remove—therefore clearly an antecedent member of the family. Here is the pedigree of Queen Victoria, as worked out by the writer referred to:

Something About Quaint Garb of Duke's Outriders.

Why Picturesque Scarlet and Collateral Hues Are Used as the Royal Livery.

Why scarlet? It is the royal livery. And why the royal livery? For answer we must go back to the old Roman emperors, and before them to the days of King Solomon. The old Hebrew prophets speak of the mighty as "brought up in scarlet," while Gibbon, the historian of the Roman Empire, says they were "born in the purple." Again, Solomon himself, describing the wealthy comfort of the virtuous woman, says that "all her household are clothed with scarlet;" but a thousand years later the rich man is pictured as "clothed in pur-ple and fine linen." What, then, is this color, used equivalently as the emblem of high station and royalty, and sometimes called "purple," sometimes "scarlet," and sometimes "crimson?" Are the three colors the same, or how do they differ?

The story is long and intricate; a very pretty question of philology and antiquarianism; we can here only condense its mere outline. "Purple" is the dye from the Mediterranean fish which the Greeks called "porphyra," and the Romans "purpura." Thus "Tyrian purple" was rare and expensive, and so became royal. "Scarlet" was a Persian dye, a little yellower than purple, introduced by King Solomon's ships, and used for royal robes. "Crimson," a little rosier than scarlet, was a later richer royal dye from the Persian and Arabic insect called cochineal. Thus, roundly, the colors "purple," "crimson" and "scarlet" are initially the same, and the first two are used even today by the poets without distinction. and its collateral hues are "the royal

But it is not alone the color of the duke's "outriders" that has fixed the popular attention—it is their quaint ostume and the trappings of their horses. Nobody here ever saw a man on horseback before with winkers on the bridle. The reason of the fashion is old and significant. The ancient outrider is the prototype of the modern pilot engine. His business is to look ahead, to clear the way, to make sure that the road is safe for his master's carriage horses to tread upon. He must have all eyes for the front, and, to insure the same virtue in his horse, the winkers have been worn from time immemorial to shut How London's Fine Regiment Obout the view of any distraction on the

The business of the postilion is different. He follows his outriding leader; he sits on the near side horse that he may cover the off side horse easily on his right with his whip hand. The 'footmen" sitting in the rumble at the back of the carriage were originally what their name signifies-runners or foot by the side of the carriage and of the team, ready to seize a bridle rein in emergency, or to attend on a carriage doorstep. In the pictures of London royal processions they may be seen thus on foot, with a leading rein to each horse. In many London carriages they have no seat, but stand up behind, catching hold of a strap, and holding a long white wand like a billiard cue, whereof the original purpose was to assist them on foot, and to help them mount or dismount as the carriage as moving. Their hair was powdered-a rare thing here, but a custom almost universal in London, and dear to Thackeray's Jeames Yellowplush. It is a survival of the days when, a hundred years ago, everybody wore a wig, as the outriders still actually do, and as many London coachmen still do. It is merely old-fashioned every-day dress, such as survives still in the conservative traditions of clerical costume, academic dress, heraldic uniform and the wig and gown and barristers and judges.

Lastly, the popular attention has been busy on the steel cuirass and plumed helmets of the duke's equerries, riding close and careful on guard. with drawn swords, at his side. The other functionaries of the equippage have been concerned with a safe, straight road. But the equerries are the duke's personal bodyguard. Their eyes are open wide and vigilant against any danger at the side-"a wall onto him on his right hand and on his left." Their title, high honor as it now is, was derived originally from the stable (ecurie), and they are the chief officers of the master of the herse, the third great court officer of the English crown, who has charge of the royal horses, carriages and outdoor progress of royalty. The ap-pointment is always conferred on gentlemen of the highest station. When the late Queen Victoria made her last great progress to St. Paul's, her son, the present King Edward VII., and her cousin, the aged Duke of Cambridge, were the two exalted subjects who performed this high and privileged duty. Lord Minto's suggestion that his majesty should send out a state carriage and its appurtenances for the royal visit has added a picturesque interest to the traditional entourage of the crown.

How the Prince of Wales Was Received Forty Years Ago.

The City Was Magnificently Decorated and the Enthusiasm Knew No Bounds.

It is now 41 years since the father of the Duke of Cornwall and York visited London. In 1860 the Prince of Wales' Oxford studies were interrupted by his visit to Canada and the United States, Embarking on board the Hero at Plymouth on July 10, the prince reached St. Johns, Nfld., fourteen days later. His reception there was enthusiastic in the extreme. After visiting Halifax, the prince proceeded to Quebec, Montreal, Cobourg and Toronto, coming thence to this city. The demonstration of that occasion was said by one who accompanied the prince to have been superior to anything elsewhere in Canada, where his visit was one continual ova-The prince and party arrived on the afternoon of Sept. 12. The Volunteer Artillery fired a salute and a guard of honor was made up of the Volunteer Rifles, Highlanders and Cavalry.

The city was magnificently decorated. Population and wealth considered, there has been no such demonstration here since. On a handsome pavilion erected near the station, the prince and party were received by the mayor, parliamentary representatives, councilors and citizens' committee. An address of welcome was presented, to which the prince made a suitable reply, express-ing his pleasure at the tokens he had witnessed of the progress of the young country. A party of two thousand children sang the National Anthem. In the evening there was a display of fireworks and a torchlight procession.

The next evening a ball was given at the Tecumseh House, at which 300 couples were present, and at which the prince danced all of the 21 numbers on the programme with some of London's beautiful maids and matrons. The ladies honored were Miss Moffatt, Mrs. Watson, Miss Becher, Mrs. Howell, Miss Prince, Miss Askin, Mrs. (Judge) Small, Miss Hamilton, Mrs. W. L. Lawrason, Miss Meredith, Miss Bell, Miss Gzowski (twice), Mrs. Rivers, Miss Hope Miss Dalton, Miss Payne, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. James Daniel, Mrs. Brough.

The following morning there was a turnout of volunteers, firemen, trades societies and citizens generally, and at 10 a.m. his royal highness took his de parture for Niagara Falls, returning later through London on his way to visit Chicago and other western cities. The royal salute as the prince Canadian seil at Windsor was fired by the London Field Battery.

It is now more than two years since, at the suggestion of Hajor-Gen. Hutton and Col. Smith, a number of ladies of London undertook to collect enough money to procure new colors for the 7th Fusiliers. These ladies hoped that a suitable time would present itself for the formal presentation; and when it became known that the Duke and Duchess of York were to visit the city it was hoped that his royal highness would honor the regiment by presenting the new colors. His royal highness was graciously pleased to grant this request, and now the 7th Fusiliers of London enjoy the unique honor in Canada of having had their colors presented by their future king. ### Happy Every Day.

Sidney Smith cut the following from a newspaper, and preserved it for himself: "When you rise in the morning form the resolution to make the day a happy one to a fellow-creature. It is easily done; a left-off garment to the one who needs it; a kind word to the sorrowful; an encouraging expression to the striving-trifles in themselves as light as air-will do at least for twenty-four hours. And if you're young, depend upon it, it will tell when your are old; and if you are old, rest assured it will send you gently and happily down the stream of time to eternity. If you send one person, only one, happily through each day, that is three hundred and sixty-five in the ourse of the year, and suppose you live forty years only after you commence that course of medicine, you have made 14,600 beings happy—at all events, for a time.

Holidays.

[London Times.]

The object of a holiday is rest and refreshment of mind and body, or both; and its best use is that which will best secure this object. To some pure idleness, mere cessation from work, is sufficient holiday. The farm laborer leaning over the gate, pipe in mouth, or the brain worker stretched upon the sand with vacant mind, or joining in the children's play, are makng real, though apparently uninteretting holiday. To others change of work is in itself a rest. Mr. Gladstone, ofter an exhausting parliamentary session, went down to Hawarden, got out all his books and refreshed himself by working harder in his library than many a professed student, and as hard out of doors at feling trees as any laboring man. Pure repose to an exceptionally active mind or body is not rest. It is dullness and boredom spoil a holiday. Change of scene and surroundings is often the secret of holiday refreshment. The townsman, whose life is spent or whose work is done amid the whirl of the streets, prefers some quiet seaside place or country village, as a holiday resort; and, conversely, to one whose life is passed in the quiet of the country, the city is an agreeable change. When we pass beyond this general principle that the essence of holiday-making is change, it is impossible to lay down any rule. The mere vegetable existence of doing nothing at all may suit

The mere vegetable existence of doing nothing at all may suit some temperaments. How far strong exercise should be the chief feature of a holiday de pends of course upon the age and constitution of the holiday-maker. Such forms of recreation may be easily overdone; and some, at any rate, of the fatalities which annually mark the Alpine climbing season are traceable. directly or indirectly, to imprudent exertion without previously getting into a fit condition for it. The middle-aged man of sedentary occupation who rushes out to Switzerland and at once begins a recreation that requires long and sustained endurance runs the risk of failure of his powers at some critical moment. "I, saevas curre per Alpes." whispers the seductive spirit of the mountain. Then the "cruel Alps" claim their victim; and a fascinating holiday amusement receives more than its share of the blame. Moderation in all things is a good motto for the

Now a Professor.

The story of how Professor Charles William Weick worked his way from a carpenter's bench, after he had married, to a good position in the faculty of Columbia University, New York, is full of inspiration.

"If a certain periodical had not come into my hands by a mere chance," he said, recently, "I suppose I should still be working at my trade. That paper containing an article entitled 'From Workshop to College.' I read and reread the article many times, and it proved the turning point of my career. The article gave a description of a young mechanic, who, with only port, and no one to aid him financially, was working his way through college, and was then in his third year.

"I decided then and there to obtain a college education, handicapped as I was by marriage, and having only a bank account. But with the encouragement of my wife, who promised to aid me in every way possible, I began to prepare myself in such studies as were required for entrance examination. I wrote to a number of calleges for catalogues and for informa-tion as to the chances of obtaining Friendship is only a reciprocal con- work in order to earn money to pay my expenses. Hardly any of these in-stitutions could promise me work. The president of one of them wrote to me saving that I was too old to think of going to college, and that I should stick to my carpenter's trade. I was not disheartened. A college president in the Middle West wrote me that, if I was a good mechanic, I could get work enough to defray a part of my expenses. After some further correspondence, I went to the college and convinced the authorities that I could do well the work of a mechanic.

"During these weeks I had many misgivings about giving up my good position as a mechanic to undertake what, at times, seemed to be only a leap in the dark. During these times of depression, my wife would invariably come to my rescue, encouraging me and reminding me of her promise to aid me in every way possible. Sh pictured the grand future rising before me, and at length persuaded me to pack up and be off, leaving her behind, to join me later. "Early in my college days I was fortunate in making a stanch friend of one of the professors, who aided me financially at times. My first work for the college was making a number of drawings for the laboratories. The bill was sixty dollars, and I had to wait a month for my money. In the meantime, my friend came to my assistance, and saved me from great embarrasment. During the first year I did not make a brilliant record, for I was not accustomed to hard study. was not accustomed to hard study, and, besides, I was often exhausted by manual labor. But I kept up my courage, and the next year made decidedly better progress. As a result of my graduation, I was given a good position in the faculty of Columbia University, and my success has been far greater than I dreamed of."—

Cure for Forgetfulness.

A successful business man said that there were two things which he learnthere were two things which he learned when he was 18, and which were afterwards of great use to him, namely, "never to lose anything, and never to forget anything."

Waste in Cooking.

Prof. Marshall, the noted English economist, estimates that $500,000,000 is spent annually by the British working classes for things that do nothing to make their lives nobler or truely happier. At the last meeting of the British Association, the president, in an address to the economic section, expressed a belief that the simple item of food waste alone would justify the above-mentioned estimate. One potent cause of waste today is that very many of the women, having been practically brought up in factories, do not know how to economically, and are neither passable cooks nor good housekeepers. It has been estimated that, in United States, the waste from bad cooking alone is over one htousand millions a year!

Carlyle Was an Artist.

He was certainly an artist-to the point, indeed, which makes it possible to say that he is quite misconceived in the plastic element in his composition is not prominently considered. He cared nothing whatever for art. It escaped him altogether. It had for him the curious moral connotation it might have

His praise of Dante's "song" is inferred from his appreciation of its burden, not due to a feeling for ts wonderful instrumental music. Froude says his ear was deficient and his metrical experiments a failure, which is true enough in general, though the translation of Goethe's noble verses in "Past and Present" is adequate and even moving. But any appeal purely to the aesthetic faculty ne suspected, and whatever he suspected he either derided or denounced. It is singular that this does not qualify his worship of Goethe. His lack of aesthetic appreciation, however, neither obscures nor obstructs his striking powers of artistic expression. His palse of unconsciousness of the feeble base of unconsciousness of the feeble base of unconsciousness of the feeble base of unconsciousness of is, as I have already said, manifestly a reaction from the discomfort and often the misery with which his extremely conscious composition was

Wealth of Economy.

In almost all the cases where men have accumulated great fortunes, attention to margins and remnants has been the secret of their success. Wealth did not come to them in huge windfalls, overwhelming them with opulence, but by gradual acquisitions, and by saving, year after year, the loose money which other men squander. By economizing the little sums which the thoughtless and improvident man deems not worth looking after-the pennies, and dimes and quarter dollars of which he keeps no reckoning-the pyramid of their fortune has been slowly and surely rear-

WONDERFUL RESULTS PROMISED FOR NEW CHEMICAL.

The first milestone on the journey to-ward bloodless surgery has been reached. Its name is adrenalin, that being the title of a chemical composition recently discovered by Dr. Jokichi Takamine, a well-known and highly-educated Japan-ese. Adrenalin is to medicine what liquid air is to science, the only difference, being that the chemical is under complete being that the chemical is under complete control, with unlimited possibilities before it .

By the local application of adrenalin, in solution of one part to 5,000, operations may be performed on the nose, ear and eye without the spilling of a drop of blood. Such operations have also been performed with adrenalin in solution of one part to 10,000 one part to 10,000.
Thus has it been demonstrated that the discovery is the most powerful medicine known, and at the same time it might be said the most expensive. Physicians buy said the most expensive. Physicians buy it at $1 a grain, or $7,000 a pound. The isolation of the blood pressure raising constituent of the suprarenal gland is of course the chief virtue of adrenalin, and its uses and devolpments along this particular line are unlimited. It has also been ascertained, however, that adrenaling a most powerful stimulary and the s a most powerful stimulant, and it has is a most powerful stimulant, and it has been hinted by physicians that it may be possible to resuscitate persons who have died of heart failure.

Premature childbirth may also be made obsolete, as it is said adrenalin can be made to revivify the heart of the dead child. Work along these lines is now being carried forward by Denty.

ABOUT OUR INDIANS.

e-beg." though in speaking to a white person they will use one word, "Indian." "Equae" means woman; it also means wife; for, like the old Greeks, and Indian calls his wife "his woman." And "squaw" is a corruption of equae. In talking to them I found that it was politic, as well as polite, to speak of 'you Indian women," instead of 'squaws." They don't like the latter. The "medicine men," who were the story-tellers, the seers, the histomans, the legend-mongers, the fortune-tellers of the tribes, have long accounts of the creation, and concerning the

But then this evil spirit has so much power, and exerts it so actively, that it is wise to placate him by sacrifices. etc. When I was a boy, the Grand River Indians below Brantford had a great pagan festival, and sacrificed a white dog. Could it be there was any truth in the old shadowy legend that some Jews once came to America, and were absorbed in the Indian population? And that this was the nearest they could come to the Jewish sacrifice of a sheep or a lamb? For the Indians never had sheep, before the white man brought them to America. And this placating the evil spirits became the lowest kind of paganism.

But for a hundred years the British influence and rule among the Indians has been all for peace and progress; and all the "bands" (subdivisions of tribes) in the settled parts of the Dominion are now Christian in profession. A good many years ago, visiting the Indians on the Saugeen reserve, near the mouth of the river of that name, I was introduced to "Little Joseph"-so-called (but without any idea of disparagement) on account of his diminutive stature. Joseph was a quiet, good-looking Christian man, Some years ago he was the only remaining pagan in the band. "No, he wouldn't change his religion. He would had, perhaps, as a matter of mere curservices of the missionaries. Joseph took sick, and was so near his end, that some of the Indians said, "Joseph is dead." But he took a turn; and the first thing he said, when he was able to speak, was: "I'm not going to be the servant slipped behind an India a pagan any more." A Highland Scot, in trying to impress me that his language, the Gaelic, was an original tongue, and not derived from any other, begged me to take notice that any language whose names of persons and things are descriptive, may be set down as an original language. I said, "It is exactly thus with the Ojibway." He said he had collected quite a list of words in Ojibway and Algonquin, which were identical in sound and meaning with the Gaelic. Some of this man's list, by circumstances not necessary to narrate here. fell into the hands of the famous Prof. Blackie, of Edinburgh, In relation thereto, the professor wrote to me. that he would like to see the whole list, "but," said he, "etymologies are very slippery things, especially in the hands of a half-trained Highland-

In my opinion, the want of occuration is no less the plague of society narrow the mind: nothing produces more trifling, silly stories, mischiefmaking, lies, than being eternally shut up in a room with one another, reduced as the only alternative to be constantly twaddling. When everybody is occupied, we only speak when we have something to say: but when we are doing nothing, we are compelled to be always talking: and of all torments that is the most annoying and the most dangerous. -Rauss a.

Constancy in friendships, attachments and familiarities, is commendable, and is requisite to support trust and good correspondence in society. But in places of general, though casual concourse, where the pursuit of health and pleasure brings people promiscuously together, public conveniency has dis-pensed with this maxim; and custom there promotes an unreserved conversation for the time by indulging the privilege of dropping afterwards every indifferent acquaintance without breach of civility or good manners .-

It is not so difficult to fill a comedy with good repartee as might be at first imagined, if we consider how completely both parties are in the power of the author. The blaze of wit in the "School for Scandal" astonishes us less, when we remember that the writer had it in his power to frame both the question and the answer; the reply and the rejoinder; the time and the place. # Perfect Health

Perfect health and strength denote the absence of disease. When you are weak it means that you lack that which is the foundation of strength-of life itself-Electricity. You may be afflicted with Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Lame Back, Weak Kidneys, Nervous Debility, Sciatica, Constination or any of the numerous diseases which lead to an early breaking down of the system. If you have any of these troubles they should be attended to at once. You have tried drugs and found that if they even stimulated you they did not cure, but left you with some new trouble as a result of the poison put into your system.

Electricity is Nature's Cure

for all diseases of the blood, nerves, muscles and organs. I have spent twenty years and almost unlimited capital discovering this fact and developing a body battery which gives a strong curative current to the wearer without the least discomfort. This perfected appliance is Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt.

It has cured 50,000 people, and the testimony is on file for all who want proof of what this grand remedy has done. The failure of medicine, of quacks, and even of other so-called Electric Belts, is no argument against Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt. No other treatment, no other belt is in the same class with it. Everything else may fail, but Dr. McLaughlin's Belt will cure. It HAS cured thousands who have tried other remedies without success. You can make arrangements by giving security and

CANADIANS ARE VERY MUCH AWAKE!

Possibilities in the Way of the Development of the Dominion.

[New York Tribune.] A potent sign of the times is the awakening of our Canadian cousins to their possibilities in the way of national de-velopment. It has long been a habit to nursing mothers and the public generally, and THOUSANDS OF MEN and WOMEN, now look upon the Canadians as slow and easy-going, but one who ventures across the line these days sees that, whatever hey may have done in the them are sleeping now. Let him go where he will, and he will find men and cor-porations proposing and discussing new chemes for opening territory heretofore eemed worthless. Rails are being laid on a road designed to push forward to James' Bay. A company is proposing to connect Lake Winnipeg with Hudson's Bay by canal and river thus making a short water and river. thus making a short water route Ly which the wheat and cattle of the Northwest may be carried to Europe. Men are pushing northward and westward by thousands. Round trip tickets, representing 3,000 miles of travel, good for three months, and sold at $18, have been issued by one railroad which sought to convince the Canadian public of the fertility of the Northwest.

Government explorers just returned tell of rich mineral lands and valuable forests of rich mineral lands and valuable forests in what has been supposed to be a part of the Barren Grounds. The same men say 40 miles of canal will connect the Mackenzie River with Chesterfield Inlet, and promoters are already planning to undertake the enterprise, with a view to undertake the enterprise, with a view to undertake the enterprise, with a view to making a water route to those vast undeveloped lands of the far Northwest. It may be a natural inclination to smile and say it is all nonsense to talk of developing a wilderness that lies so far north. But fet us look at Canada in the light of other and older countries of the same latitude. Most of us have a difficulty in accepting the proposition to open the shores of James' Bay with a railroad as anything but a joke. But, looking at the globe, we see that its southern shore is on the same parallel with London, Berlin and Warsaw. Fort Churchill, away up in latitude 58 degrees 30 minutes, has seemed entirely out of the question. But Christiania and St. Petersburg are on the 60th parallel. Archangel is further north Christiania and St. Petersburg are on the 60th parallel. Archangel is further north than the northernmost limit of Hudson's Bay, and Russia has a railroad running well into the sixties. Someone argues that Hudson's Bay is not navigable in winter. True. But the Baltic is closed during six winter months, and still Russia finds it a good outlet to the ocean. All of Denmark lies north of the southern limits of James' Bay. Russia raises wheat in the latitude of Davis Strait. Swedish peasants reap barley several degrees north of Lake Athabasca. All this tends to show that much more than Canada proposes to accomplish in her unopened north has already been done in the same latitude of Europe, and, though the Am-latitude of Europe, and, though the American climate is somewhat more severe than that of European points on the same parallels, the difference is not so great but that the old world's accomplishments may be enumerated in the new. A few years ago men who went to Manitoba and British Columbia to buy Manitoba and British Columbia to buy land were objects of pity. But they have made fortunes. Now we may well afford to suspend judgment upon the man who proposes to go further north, for in the light of facts and tendencies it is not rash to predict that Hudson's Bay will yet be seen from a car window that farms and mines and factories will one day touch elbows with the Barren Grounds below the Arctic, and that Davis Strait will see an endless line of steamers Strait will see an endless line of steamers carrying the products of a new Canada over a short line to Europe.

One of the things made painfully apparent during the present season is the fact that there are in London a large number of people who have apparently not the slightest regard for the comfort and convenience of their fellow-playgoers. They are the people who make a practice of entering the theater anywhere from 5 to 45 minutes after a performance has started, and who, in spite of the annoyance which their entry causes to those already seated, insist on pushing at once to their places. By the time they have reached their seats and adjusted themselves, they have succeeded not only in seriously discommoding those immediately around them, but have distracted the attention of everyone in e rear from the performance on the stage. considered within the scope of this column, it may be observed, in passing, that the preceding remarks will apply equally well to the conditions which exist in the dismissal of congregations. Many people are in such un-seemly haste to leave the sacred edifice that the pronouncing of the benediction is too often accompanied by the donning of outdoor apparel. That such conduct is not always a concomitant of a refined London audience can be testified to by anyone who attended any of Mr. W. H. Hewlett's twilight organ recitals last winter. On these occasions the playing of the National Anthem was marked by a respectful mary Anderson celebrated a birthday rising, and very few individuals left lately, and, she admitted, it was her their seats until its close. There is 42nd. She evidently does not mean to no reason why any audience, either in return to the stage, which she quit church or theater, should not follow an equally seemly and dignified course.

"I commenced singing and the study of music when very young. Becoming infatuated with the stage, I had to make a great many efforts before I succeeded in securing an engagement. One day Mr. William Morton, a former Pittsburger, and once a manager of comic opera, was written to in my behalf by his brother, who was my music teacher in that city. Mr. Morton called on Mr. Canby, Mr. Francis Wilson's manager, and he must have said some very flattering things about me, for a telegram summoned me to New York to see Mr. Wilson and Mr. Canby. When I sang for them I saw that they were pleased, so I was engaged in this fashion. Mr. Wilson said: 'Now, Miss Glaser, I am going to put you in the strict rule has been made by Manger Cairns that the drop curtain hall rise promptly at 2:15 p.m. for atinees and 8:15 p.m. for evening pershall promote you.' ## SCIENCE AND

THE SCRIPTURES

Rev. G. H. Hepworth Likens Science and Religion to the Bass and Trebel of a Oreat Organ.

And, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.-Matthew, iv., 11. We have absolute faith in the revelations of science, as indeed we ought to have. The wonders of the physical world have been so long in hiding that they now seem anxious to make themselves known, and the genius of re-search can hardly wander into any bypath without discovering some new law which can be made of practical benefit. So frequently has this haped by any fresh announcement. We recognize the age of miracles. We are in the midst of a daily increasing multitude of them, and if the future can keep pace with the past our children's children will be able to say that they have a new heaven and a new earth. Running parallel with these victories over material things is a quickened curiosity concerning things spiritual. Science and religion are like the bass and treble of a great organ when New York," has been engaged as touched by the hands of a master, produce results whih even ange's may listen to. They are simply different Sarah Bernhardt is said to be ac- parts of the same musical score, for quiring English quite rapidly. > the Scriptures only in part. One of the most essential elements of the Biblethe helpful presence of invisible beings and their ability to extend their good offices—is, oddly enough, locked upon with doubt and suspicion. In our religious conventions we insist on plenary inspiration, and at the same time ignore the fact that constant communication between heaven and earth is one of the corner-stones of the Bible. We are told in Holy Writ that God is always within reach of a prayerful voice, and Christ distinctly promised that he would come unto those who would call upon him and abide with them, and it is asserted that a cloud of witnesses interested in our welfare "hold us in full survey." But these facts are lost sight of amid the fogs of dogma and have never had and do not now have the hold on our souls

> We are, however, facing in that direction, and every step brings us nearto the perfect day. The time is not far distant when humanity will be greatly blessed by a fuller apprecia-tion of this truth, when souls will receive added strength through these channels, now choked, if not closed, by the narrowness of prejudice. We cannot live at our best until other world is as real as this one; until it becomes as easy as natural to commune with the dear ones who have gone as it is to hold converse with the dear ones in the household. If this seems strange and startling it ought not to be either the one or the other, for it is as plainly taught as are the Ten Commandments. I welcome, therefore, what rather conceitedly styles itself the Thought-whereas, it is in reality, the oldest thought of all. It may be somewhat fantastic and may go further than we are willing to keep it com-pany, but it emphasizes the immanence of God, the presence of Christ in human affairs, and the willing assistance of angels to enable us to do our work and bear our burdens, and in these respects we should bid it cordial welcome. He who turns our thoughts upward, bids us rely on the father for support, and assure us that, poor and weak as we are, we have all heaven on our side, does us a service for which we cannot be too grateful. And in an age in which men are clinging to wealth with insatiable greed, magnifying its importance beyond all due proportions, such thoughts are as refreshing as the breath from the sea on an August day. They have a place, and their voice is the voice of good

We have not yet outlived the Scriptures. There is nothing better in sight; neither is there likely to be. What we need is to reread them and think seriously of those passages which we have heretofore ignored. We shall be surprised, delighted and bleesed,

Used to That Sort of Thing.

[From the London Tit-Bits.] A gentleman took a country friend to the opera one night to hear the "Meistersinger" performed.

He was very anxious to see the effect of Wagner's glorious music on the countryman, and watched him keenly during the rendering of the overture, which, grand as it is, is a little noisy more especially when the bang of the drums and the crash of the cymbals occur at intervals. But the countryman's face remained absolutely unmoved. At last the Londoner could bear his friend's indifference no longer.

"Doesn't this glorious volume sound affect you?" he said.

review, weekly summary: Wholesale trade at Montreal this is sure to become very brisk the next two weeks. The reports of the Northwest trade are rather more satisfactory. There is a good feeling in trade circles, and business men generally continue to advise caution; they consider the future promising.

At Quebec business in general is re-ported as good as the preceding week. Fall trade is picking up, and retailers are doing considerable in heavy goods. Some of the large shoe factories received several orders during the week, and are again running full time.

The business week at Toronto has been broken by the festivities attending the royal visit. The unsettled weather in Manitoba has made some impression on trade, but there is a good deal of activity in Jobbing circles, and values of staple goods are being well maintained. Trade will develop much activity when the grain movement gets larger.

There has been a good inquiry in jobbing circles in London this week. Farmers' deliveries of grain have not been large, because the farmers have been busy with the fall work. Retailers are preparing for a larger movement later in the month, At Ottawa there has been a good inquiry from the retailers for seasonable

Bradstreet's report says: Some quieting down in the general demand for merchandise is noted this week. The lull in the demand for drygoods, cloth-ing and shoes is, however, not unexpected, being accounted for by the advanced stage of the season. The iron and steel, flour milling, boot and shoe, lumber, and a number of other indus-tries are all working at full speed, and the textile industries are likewise fully occupied, though the threat of a possible strike overhangs the print cloth situation. Gen. Buller's speech has made a tremendous stir. The newspapers are divided in their opinions of it. A majority of them, including some that are not hostile to Gen. Buller, regard

AN AMAZING BLUNDER. and greatly regret that the general did tice to not answer newspaper criticism. Several papers declare that his explanation that he heliographed to Gen. White suggesting that it might be necessary for him to surrender, and advising what to do in such a case, was actually instructions to surrender, and they condemn him accordingly. One paper compares the message to Sir H. Parker's famous order to Nelson to retire to Copenhagen, which posterity has unsparingly condemned. DAMAGING ADMISSION.

The Standard may be quoted as exwith the greatest moderation com-patible with such an opinion. It says: "Of the fatally damaging epi-sode of the heliograph message Gen. Buller admitted the worst that can be said against him. It is not the least surprising feature of the case that he does not evince any consciousness of the real character of his admission. By authorizing Gen. White to surrender he contemplated a humiliation compared with which all the other re-verses of the war would have been trivial. His motive, it seems, was a generous desire to shield a subordinate from responsibility, but if this was chivalry,

IT WAS NOT WAR. It was not leadership, it was not policy. The error was committed under circumstances which probably cate Gen. Buller's good nature, but only at the expense of his judgment, capacity and competence to hold a re-sponsible office. On sober reconsidera-tion of all that his admissions involve, it would be obvious to General Buller that he would best consult his own dignity and the national interests by resigning his command and of arduous service. He must see that he is no longer in his place at the head of an army corps." BULLER'S APOLOGISTS

Gen. Buller's apologists, who are in the minority, are impressed by his manly protest against hair-brained critics, who hardly know a musket from a field gun, and they unhesitatingly accept his explanation as manly and frank. The Telegraph, the chief of these, says, however, that Gen. Buller is mistaken in treating the heliogram affair as involving theft, or the improper divulgence of secrets. It intimates that the facts were country well know so far hack as August. fairly well know so far back as August,

Although thinking that Gen. Buller had ample justification for his indignant protest, the paper thinks it would have been enough if he had said that Earl Roberts, enough if he had said that Earl Roberts, who knew all the circumstances in which the dispatch was sent, as Gen. Buller's critics cannot know, retained him in his command, and subsequently deliberately continued him in office at Aldershot. That surely, says the Telegraph, was a complete and absolute vindication of Gen. Buller on an occasion which is responsible for so much ill-timed and ill-insible for so much ill-timed and ill-in-formed scandal, BOTHA'S PRECARIOUS POSITION. After fighting a rear action against Gen. Walter Kitchener on Sunday, Gen. Botha withdrew his principal forces to-ward Piet Retief. It was impossible to heliograph, owing to the dull weather, and it was extremely difficult to correct-ly time the movements of the columns forming the cordon about Gen. Botha. The Boer commander, according to the British, is still in a precarious position. It is said that if he manages to withdraw his force, it will be in a greatly depleted condition, and that he will lose all the transport that he collected for his Natal expedition.

SENTENCED TO DIE. Middleburg, Cape Colony, Oct. 12.—Sentence of death has been passed upon Commandant Lotter, the Cape Colony rebel, whose commande, composed almost entirely of rebels, was captured by Major Scobell south of Petersburg early last nonth, Lord Kitchener has confirmed the sentence.
Five of Lotter's comrades have been

SUITS LOYALISTS Cape Town, Oct. 12.-The Cape Times praises the enforcement of martial law in the newly-proclaimed districts. It says: "We believe martial law will be heartily welcomed by the loyalists throughout the newly-proclaimed districts, the more so as the nature of its administration will impose the rainimum of inconvenience upon all who are jealous for the maintenance of the King's authority and the speedy termination of the war. "At the recent conference of Gordon Sprigg, the Cape premier, with Lord Kitchener, it was demonstrated that there was a due necessity for the extension of martial law to the Cape peninsula. This should have no terrors for the levalists. It is the disloyalists who will quake with fear of the possible consequences of their nefarious conduct during the past two years.

The reason that the war office declined the services of the young Canadian with a medical degree from a Canadian college who wanted to return to South Africa was due to the fact that he had no English degree, and was not registered. LULU GLASER AS DOLLY VARDEN. Jack Fairfax, Dolly's guardian... Lieut, Marlowe, of the English navy

Lieut, Cragsby, of the English navy

"Trying it on the dog" is, in the parlance of the theatrical profession, the term given to the process of producing a new atraction in smaller centers before submitting it for approval to the supposedly more refined and critical audiences of the metropolis of the United States, New York. If "trying it on the dog" means the furnishing for the delectation of London audiences such wholly enjoyable evenings as that spent at the New Grand last night, then London theater-goers will be quite content to submit frequently to the "trying" process.

The lovers of opera in this city were fortunate in witnessing "Dolly Varden" at a period in its production when the company has been playing it just long enough to be familiar with their parts and lines, and not, on the other hand, long enough to have become wearied of the monotony of going through performance after performance for months, and perhaps several years. Nothing less enjoyable can well be imagined than the spiritless rendition of choruses and solos frequently heard when a production has run its second or third season. There was a gratifying absence of all this last night, and the choruses went with a dash and swing that contributed greatly to the success of the evening's presentation.

"Dolly Varden," as a vehicle of expression for that most charming of comediennes, Lulu Glaser, is an un-doubted success. The story of the piece relates to the adventure charming young country girl in London in the year 1730. Dolly Varden comes to the English city, accompanied by Jack Fairfax, her guardian, to attend the wedding of his sister, Lady Letitia Fairfax. Wishing to marry Dolly principally on account of her wealth, Fairfax fears to leave her alone at her home in the country. Dur-ing one of her madcap escapades Dolly ments Dick Belville, a handsome and manly young officer of his majesty's infantry, and falls in love with him. Fairfax is not long in discovering the wooing of the young people, and does all in his power to prevent their clandestine meeting, but all to no purpose, and in the end the scheming Fairfax is outwitted, and Dolly and Dick are fine of 100 francs. The announcement married. The action of the opera also of the judgment was followed by an ovation to Talhade on the part of his Fairfax and Lord Gayspark, an exquirelates the adventures of Lady Letitia friends and sympathizers, who shouted, as they crowded around and shook him by the hand: "Down with tyrants!" "Down with tigers!" and "Long live anarchy!" and "Long live anarchy!" vast estates, but the impecunious nava!

> 'Sweet and dainty as a sweet pea blossom," some one has described Lulu Glaser's impersonation of Dolly Varden as being, and the description applies aptly. From the time Miss Glaser comes on the stage as the unsophisticated country beauty, with her infectious laugh and artless desire to see the world, through her experiences as a would-be modish belle, to the time when the curtain drops leaving her the winsome bride of the man of her choice, Dolly Varden is the center of interest. Most of the humorous lines fall to her, and she shows herself abundantly able to carry them off with the necessary spirit. Lulu Glaser's personality alone will suffice to carry the new opera through success-

The music is bright, but hardly as catchy as a comic opera should be. Mr. Edwards is evidently blessed-or cursed—with too good a musical memory, and snatches and phases of familiar melodies keep cropping out. The most effective numbers are "Lover's Lane," a bass solo; Song of the Sword," male solo and chorus, "The Cannibal Maid," 'The Lay of the Jay," sung by Miss Glaser, and the pretty "Dolly Varden" refrain, sung by Van Rennselaer Wheeler, and running through the score.

Miss Glaser, of course, carries off the large share of the honors, but several other numbers of the ten operating characters come in for a portion. Miss Estelle Wentworth, used her fine soprano voice to full effect as Lady Leithia. Lesser parts were taken by Miss Adah Palmer Walker, soprano and Miss Amelia Fields, who both possess vibrant voices of good quality Van Rennselaer Wheeler, Richie Ling and Mark Smith are old time and well known favorites, while Tom Daniels newcomer, has a fine bass voice, which he uses with excellent judgment.

The costumes and scenery were perfect, the former being probably the finest ever seen on the local stage. The scenery, built for the largest stage in the United States, was seen to full advantage.

If "Dolly Varden" does not make good in New York, so much the worse for New York's taste. The audience last night was one of the largest the house has yet contain-Carnegie to become lord rector of ed. One of the most popular and effective figures on the comic opera stage is Josephine Bartlett, the wellknown contralto and character actress 1 so long identified with The Bostonians and their popular successes. Without the brilliant work of this artist, this well-known company would be badly hampered, for few singers on the lyric stage are so versatile. In "Robin Hood," "The Viceroy," "The Serenade," and other operas in the repertoire of The Bostonians, her merry and unctious per-formances shine to admirable advantage, and in grotesque impersonations she is unexcelled. Miss Bartlett is a beautiful woman with a most attractive figure, and is one of the few artists who are willing to conceal their personality in character disguises. Miss Bartlett will be heard here at the new Grand next Wednes. MRS. S. MASTERS. day, Oct. 16, during the engagement

But when the carriage rattled over the But when the carriage rattled over the stones of the little country town of Farley—when the hotel was reached—the large hotel with its balconies of shrubs, its lights in every window, the joyous strains of a military band re-echoing through the night—something made Pauline shiver as with a presentiment of evil. The night was warm for the end of January; the wind was soft, and the moon was sailing in a sky that looked dark blue; there were billowy glory clouds; it was not at all one's ideal of an English winter night, yet she shivered.

There was a crowd of the humbler classes standing on the pavement to watch the ladies alight. Paul Lafonte leaped out and gave his hand to Pauline. leaped out and gave his hand to Pauline.
"This ain't the one!" said a woman in the crowd, "this 'un ain't the belle; she's fine, but she ain't the belle!" Pauline wished she could box the woman's ears.

CHAPTER XXI.

Miss Bracegirdle supposed supposed that Miss Bracegirdle supposed supposed that the crowd, who were watching the arrival of the guests about to grace the large ballroom of the aristocratic "County Family Hotel," as it was called, were alluding to the non-arrival of the Lady Marjorie Hammond, when the chief spokeswoman amongst them announced that she, Pauline, was not the belle. "Yes, I wish that I was a Russian princess, and that she was my serf, and that I could have her beaten to within an inch of her life, the insolent wretch!" that I could have her beaten to within an inch of her life, the insolent wretch!"

Pauline spoke these words in Italian into the ear of Paul Lafonte, who only smiled and showed his white teeth, and said that the lower class of English were an ignorant, insolent set of people.

"I don't believe she will be the belle. Marjorie, in white silk, with pale plnk coral ornaments, will be the prettiest in the whole room. I love Marjorie."

There was a dressing-room elegantly There was a dressing-room elegantly fitted up for the use of the arriving guests, and here Pauline had ample opportunity for putting more finishing touches to her splendid toilet.

"Not the belie," she smiled scornfully at the ignorance of the assertion; "not the belle!" Was Lady Marjorle to be the belle on the strength of her blue eyes, with auburn lashes, and her auburn hair, and the velvety, peach-like softness of belle on the strength of her blue eyes, with auburn lashes, and her auburn hair, and the velvety, peach-like softness of her round pink cheeks? All very pretty, but very commonplace, these Devonshire dairymaid-like charms of Lady Marjorie, descendant of a long Norman line of ancestry though she might be.

Pauline was very proud of her own Austrian descent upon her mother's side; and she considered that she had the blood of Hungarian princes in her weins, for her mother's mother had been a great Hungarian lady.

"Poor I am," acknowledged Pauline to herself, with a smile, as she looked overher shoulder at her own reflection in the mirror; "but I am cream-white and aristocratic to my finger-tips. I am fitted to rule over all these heavy, stupid English country families, and—I will some day when I am Lady Chase."

Unconsciously she began to hum words of self-laudation and prophetic audacity to the melody of that fascinating air, "My Queen," which the band in the ballroom was them playing. There has yet to be a remedy discovered that is so prompt and thorough in curing intestinal indigestion year. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. And as this is the most common and severe form of indigestion it can well be claimed that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the most successful treatment extant for indigestion and

It is not unusual for persons who have long been suffering from chronic indigestion, biliousness and constipation to be thoroughly cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which have by far the largest sale of any similar remedy. Bracegirdle's dress so much as she did admire it had she known of Pauline's frequent pecuniary embarrassments. As it was, she took off her wraps and stood in the full glory of purple satin and the full glory of purple satin and the full blaze of brilliant amethyst ornaments, set richly in gold, smiling the while benignly upon Miss Bracegirdle, who regarded her as from a lofty height, and consigned her to a bottomless pit of contempt when she saw her ill-fitting white kid gloves and inhaled the odor of patchouli which the lady used.

Miss Stanly recognized Pauline at once as the young lady who had acted at Charteris in the amateur theatricals. Rosa Stanly was as independent and as self-satisfied in her own fashion as Pauline was in hers.

"How do you do" said Miss Stanly. "Is the countess coming, and Lady Marjorie? That's jolly! I have brought come; he hates dancing. Have you been acting lately? No! When are you comacting lately? No! Rosa Stanly burst into a loud laugh.

"Bless me, I like to know what people say of me—I know they say all sorts of things, but it never troubles me. Come, Mrs. Fothergill, tell me if my wreath is straight or not."

Rosa Stanly was dressed in a pale pink brocade; white flowers were in her hair, and her ornaments were of plain dead gold. She looked paler than usual, and altogether less plain than she generally appeared. The plainest women have "their moments," so say the French, and this night of the ball the stout young heiress really presented a more agreeable appearance than usual. She laughed; her teeth were white. She was in high good-temper; her little eyes shone, and despite the cast, the strong cast in them, they looked merry, good-natured little eyes.

"Ugly wretch!" said Pauline to herself.
"And to think that a girl like that should have thousands to spend. What a shame it seems!"

However, Miss Bracebridle called little Conny Ferrers, and went into the ball-room with a very good grace. She felt it was just as well not to offend a rich girl like Rosa Stanly.

The ballroom was as pretty as flowers, shrubs, and soft lamps in pale pink globes could make it. There was already a goodly number of assembled guests. His royal highness is the honorary colonel of the 7th Fusiliers of London, England. And so it happened that when, near the commencement of the march past, the duke saw a body of men approaching the reviewing stand, wearing the tall bearskin busbies and the scarlet uniforms of his own regiment, he leaned over in his saddle and spoke to Major-Gen. O'Grady Haly, commander-in-chief of the forces in Canada-"What regiment is this?" asked his rotal highness. "The Seventh Fusiliers, of London,

"But you do not mean—"
"Of London, Ontario," the majorgeneral said, Suddenly recollecting the duke's honorary colonelcy. His royal highness seemed immensely The incident of seeing a regiment named after his own and from a city of the same name as that to which his regiment belonged was a particularly HAPPY COINCIDENCE.

It was noted that the duke paid especial attention to the crack London regiment, as officers and men, in command of Lieut-Col. Smith, moved past to the tune of "The British Grena-

The Seventh Regiment won much favor in this city. They acquitted themselves well. Every one of the hundreds of London visitors present was rightly proud of the gallant Fus-In the murch past they were singled out for especial applause. They were distinguished by their brisk movements, soldierly bearing and perfect step of company after company, as they rolled along. The sight was a beautiful one. The sun shone resplendently upon the spotless scarlet uniforms and the polished arms and accoutrements. Relieving this wealth of color were the majestic black bus-bies that made the men look inches. The regiment looked decidedly trim. Lieut.-Col. Smith, Major Little, Major Cronyn, Quartermaster Reid and Adjutant McCrimmon were superbly mounted.

THE RED MEN.

Indians in red coats of his majesty he King were a novelty here. The red men who formed three companies of the splendid 26th Regiment, Middlesex, were a great feature in the military pageant wherever seen. On downtown parade and in review they were picked out from among their comrades and cheered to the echo. The Indians enjoyed the distinction their and red their efforts to appear to as good advantage as loyal soldiers of the King as any. In the march past, the 26th Regiment was among the last to pass the review stand, and this made their reception all the more noteworthy, for the multitudes had been gazing upon the passing army for an hour and more. Lieut.-Col. McEwen and his officers are to be congratulated upon the position which the regiment won in the admiration of the assembled hosts of citizens and country folk. The 21st Regiment, Essex, was likewise in favor-in fact, the western militia outrivaled their eastern comrades, if the approval displayed by the people may be taken to mean anything.

TWENTY-FIVE BANDS. Martial spirit was abroad in Toronto today. Tommy Atkins, no matter the uniform he wore, was the admired of all admirers. But to yet fur-ther enkindle these feelings, there review. Twenty-five bands of music were massed in front of the grand stands at the review grounds, and as many as one-half of them were playing at one time. When the duke, mounted upon a sleek white charger, and attended by his brilliant staff, appeared at the grounds, the bands of the first division struck up "Prince George." The effect was delightful. When his royal highness reached the second division, and proceeded to pass in front of the lines, the bands of this division took up the refrain. Then more bands were continuously playing. When the Highlanders, in their picturesque uniforms, appeared, the bands played appropriate Scotch airs. regiment is the pet of Toronto folk, and they were given a mighty cheer. And amid all this band music, critics said there were few to equal that of the 7th Regiment. THE DUKE OF ROXBOROUGH. There was a magnificent show of fine horseflesh in the review. The best mounts in the country had been secured for the occasion. Every officer bestrode a noble steed. The cavalry horses were almost without exception; fine animals. The First Hussars, under their able commander, Lieut.-Col. Stothers, look exceedingly "fit" among the mounted organizations.

The artillery horses were more excitable. A particularly ugly brute succeeded in tangling things up in his attempts to break the chains that held him, and was getting beyond control, when the Duke of Roxborough rode out from among the onlooking staff and at considerable risk grasped the reign of the plunging horse and pulled him into position. It was good horse-manship, and the crowds were not slow to recognize the fact.

SNAP-SHOTS. Not alone while en route and from the grounds and wherever he appeared on the streets was his royal highness was besieged in front of the very re-view stan l. His royal highness offered not the least objection, but appeared to assist the men with the camera in carrying out their purpose by moving to a position nearer the camera.

The duke was not attended constantly by his staff. He dismounted in front of the review stand and, taking off his busble fixed some of the straps, disclosing a head that is already slightly bald. In reviewing the troops his staff took a short cut past a couple of the field batteries. The wheeled and left them until he had ridden directly in front of the batteries that threatened to be neglected by the thoughtlessness of Miss Wilson, who was on duty in the South African campaign, was among the five or six hundred presented with medals by the duke. The veterans included quite a few London men, by the way. The equipment of the medical corps was complete to the presence of a dozen neavy covered wagons bearing the Red Cross and each drawn by two horses. No 6 Bearer Company, of London, in command of Capt. A. T. Hobbs, made a most creditable showing.

PRAISE FOR THE SEVENTH. Three well-known military men, who well know the 7th Regiment, spoke its praises here today. They were Col. the Hon. M. Aylmer, Col. Buchan and Col. Henry Smith. Each of these officers warmly commended officers and men upon their fine appearance. "I have not seen any regiment that beats the 7th Regiment in steadiness," said Col. Smith

TWO HARD DAYS.

Thursday and Friday were hard days. Not only was the work required exceedingly wearying, but it was neessary to work without eating. Thursday morning at 9 o'clock the 7th Regiment—and it was no worse off han others-left the camp ground There was the chance of a long day and the men had tucked away a sandwich each. The officers had no such privilege. The return was not made to the camp until after 4 o'clock in the afternoon. And most of these weary hours had been spent in the rain. The Seventh were a drenched, hungry crowd-but there was that same old swing. The subsequent attack upon the mess room was a savage one. This afternoon there was what Col Aylmer deemed an altogether unnecessary demand made upon the men. Following the review they were led upon a long tramp through the city streets. This was at the request of the citizens' committee

LIVED WELL. The 7th Regiment lived well in Toconto. The officers of the regiment engaged a caterer and required the best table for the men. There were hot meats and vegetables at every meal. Parnell's bread brought thoughts of home. The mess rooms of each body of soldiers were provided with tables, and hundreds of men regularly sat down together. The sleeping quarters of the 7th Regiment were in the carriage hall. Here straw was spread liberally upon the floor, and over this blankets were thrown. Tired soldiers of the King slept soundly thereon. The officers had separate quarters across the way; not superior, except that stretchers might accounted an in straw. The officers of the 1st Hussars spent their nights in Toronto in the Central Prison, though not under lock and key. They had comfortable quarters in the administration building of the big prison. An officer had a friend at court. Col. Gartshore spent a night the guest of the officers of his old troops.

The 26th Regiment were under cancanvas, but were very comfortable.

From every window there liberally to the appeals of the civic committee, and stores, offices, factories and dwellings were all gay with flags, bunting, evergreens and other decorative materials. Owing to the shortness of the royal visit, the citizens did not feel called upon to decorate upon such a costly, lavish scale as was the case in Toronto, where the stay of the royal party extended over several days. The appearance of the streets was, on the whole, distinctly creditable to the city, especially after considering the deleterious effect of the morning's rain upon the decorations

Looking along the streets selected for the route of the royal procession, the number of flags and the yards of bunting to be seen could only be reck-oned in the thousands. Practically every building had its quota of gay embelishment to testify to the royal visitors that the capital of Western Ontario was proud and happy to have them as guests, if only for a little more than a brief hour.

Especially effective were the deco rations on the various public build-

ATHLETE'S FAILURE

Was Not a Success Until He Was Put on the Right Food.

Cecelius X. Hale, of 1717 Barclay street, Baltimore, Md., now quite a famous runner, has had some interesting experience in regard to proper feeding. His testimony is worth the attention of any athlete, or, in fact, of any person who cares for good sturdy, powerful health.

"Up to about 18 months ago I had reen in many athletic contests, without much success. I about made up my mind it was time to stop, but a physical director of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, advised me to use Grape-Nuts food and Postum Cereal Coffee as principal factors in my diet.

'I accepted the advice and today am in possession of perfect health, and a great many medals won in different athletic events. I can now run a race and finish in fine condition, whereas, before I started on the right diet, I would find myself in a faint at the end of a race "Formerly I had more or less nervous trouble and severe headaches. I am and Postum Food Coffee I have forgotten what a headache feels like. My heart is in perfect condition, whereas while I was using ordinary coffee it would not stand the heavy strain. This statement is absolutely true, and I do not object to your publishing it, for it may bring back health and strength to some poor being suffering from ill health, caused by the use of improper food.'

There is a reason for this; in the first place, ordinary coffee will show its effect somewhere in the nervous system, frequently in weakening of therefore, necessary to quit the use of this drug, and in its place use Postum ings along the line of procession.

General disappointment was expressed, however, at the tawdry nature of the decorations by the outside contractor, for which the city paid a good sum. They consisted of shields, surrounded by banners, affixed to the trolley poles, with an ocasional streamer. The effect was much more like a circus or trained dog show than a reception to royalty.

The city hall was decorated in a most fitting and appropriate manner. The archway was draped with curtains, with a large coat of arms above. In large letters on a blue background was the word "Welcome." On either side purple draping extended across the building. Large Union Jacks flut-tered from the top windows, while shields of national flags and colors were tastefully arranged on the front of the city's chief building. The decorations on both the G. T. R.

station and city ticket office were much admired. Suspended from the face of the station veranda, from end to end of the long structure, was bunting of red, yellow and blue, entwined with evergreen. A number of shields with flags were arranged at intervals along the upper side of the veranda, and on the front of the building was a profusion of bunting and flags. In the apex was a crown surmounted by flags. At the city ticket office a sim ilar scheme of decoration was em-

The custom house decorations were ordered from Ottawa by the govern ment. Over the main entrance to the building on Richmond street, there was the British coat of arms, partially surrounded by Union Jacks. There were a number of shields with flags on the front of the structure, and from the clock tower, strung in several directions, were ropes, attached to which were scores of pennons, in various colors. There were a number, also, strung from the flag staff. At the postoffice the decorations, like those of the custom house, were ordered from Ottawa. A Union Jack was placed above the entrance, with national flags on either side. A num-

The C. P. R. ticket office was neatly decorated. A streamer of red, white and blue bunting was stretched across the bulding on Richmond street, and caught at regular intervals with rosettes of maple leaves. Flags were over the doorway. Above, bunting was placed horizontally across the building, while flags fluttered from the windows.

Probably the most elaborate and effective decoration done on any other than a public building was that of the Tecumseh House. The entire front on Richmond street was decked in the British colors, all the lower windows being beautifully draped with bunting, surmounted by the British coat of arms, with intervening ornaments of maple leaves and wreaths. The portico was one mass of bunting, the columns When the duke and duchess drove and side walls being overspread with the words, "Loyal Greetings," in large hundreds flags, small. All gave token of the good feelings entertained by the host and hosttoward the royal family and their visiting representatives. All the decorations were bought new by the pro-prietor of the Tecumseh House, everything offered at second-hand being re-

HOW THE DUKE'S CIGARS WERE LOST

Ten Thousand Went Down in the Wreck of the Lusitania.

London Express: Private advices to a London tobacco dealer give the in-·formation that some seven thousand of the costly cigars shipped for the use cf the Duke of Cornwall and his suite while in Canada have been recovered from the hull of the wrecked liner Lusitania, on the east coast of Newfoundland. In all ten thousand of the highest class of cigars, intended for royal use, were on the Lusitania, packed in hermetically sealed cases. They were consigned to the citadel at Que bec, to await the arrival of the Ophir. Each cigar was valued at 3s.

So choice were the costly "smokes" that, in case the crew might break open the cases, they were packed in the extreme stern of the ship and bolted behind heavy planking. When it became known to the islanders that the duke's cigars were part of the Lusita nia's cargo, a patrol was established to search for boxes on the beach. All the smokers on the island reveled n dreams of cigars without stint. Speculators wanted them also, but their dreams came to nothing. Divers, after ten weeks' work, have now got at the cigars, and, according to the cable, have saved seven thousand in good
