STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INTERPRETATION OF STANDING ORDER 60

Mr. Speaker: Recently hon. members discussed the proper construction of standing order 60. The house will recall that on the 18th June, 1952, I made a ruling with respect to this standing order which was to the effect that on the second day, that is, when the order is called for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on a resolution dealing with money a full discussion of the resolution is not in order. However, in view of the ruling made by Mr. Speaker Glen in February, 1942, I ruled that a debate was permissible provided it was directed to the negative of the motion. When that ruling was made some hon. members expressed doubt whether it could be put into effect. It was not long before I came to the same conclusion and I think all members agree that my ruling of the 18th June last must be revised. Most members, if not all, who spoke recently on the point of order were of the opinion that there should be no debate at all or that a full debate should be allowed on the resolution.

Standing order 60 was adopted in the House of Commons in 1867 in almost the identical wording it has today. Debates took place from time to time over the years on the second day. In 1905 Mr. Sproule, who later became Speaker under the administration of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, objected to this procedure. He is reported at column 320 of Hansard of that year as follows:

> On Friday next will not the Speaker have to leave the chair, in compliance with the motion just made, and allow the house to go into committee of the whole without a motion to that effect being made again, and will not this preclude any debate before the house is in committee?

However, his opinion did not prevail and debates continued to take place until 1912. Between 1912 and 1919 there were 140 resolutions and I can find only two instances where any debate took place. On October 15, 1919, pages 1013-14 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker Rhodes, who was Speaker under the administrations of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden and the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, ruled that the motion was not debatable but that a vote could take place upon it. His ruling was generally respected until about the year 1930, after which the number of debates on this motion gradually increased.

It is to be noted that in February, 1942, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King objected to a debate at this stage and Mr. Speaker Glen gave the ruling to which I have referred. Subsequently, in 1946, Mr. King again contended that the motion was not debatable and quoted a communication from Dr. Arthur Beauchesne to that effect. See Hansard, page 761 of that year.

Along with standing order 60 it is necessary to consider standing order 38. It is to be noted that when Sir Robert Borden sponsored the resolution amending standing order 17 (a), which is now our standing order 38, in an amended form, he is quoted at column 7406 of Hansard of April 9, 1913, as saying:

> What we have sought to do is to provide that all substantial motions, which bring into question the propriety of passing any bill, measure, or vote, shall be debatable in the future as they have been in the past, but that purely formal motions, which, under the existing rules, would be used only for dilatory purposes, shall not in future continue to be debatable. That has been our object, and we propose to carry it into effect in a reasonable way.

From these words there seems to be no doubt that the intention of Sir Robert Borden while safeguarding the freedom of speech was to eliminate the occasions on which repetitious debate could arise. That I consider to be the spirit in which standing order 38 was adopted.

The resolution is not debatable on the first day by virtue of clause 1 (a) of standing order 38. On that day the house makes a decision that the resolution should be considered by a committee of the whole house at the next sitting. I must determine whether debate is permissible on the second day. It seems to me that a debate on the resolution at this stage cannot be permitted. The house has already decided that it should go into committee at the next sitting to consider the resolution. It is surely, therefore, wrong for the house to consider at the said next sitting the resolution with the Speaker in the chair on the following grounds:

(1) That once a question has been decided by the house it cannot be reopened in the same session. See Beauchesne's third edition, citation 332.

(2) That when a resolution has been referred to a committee of the whole house that resolution cannot be debated in the house until the committee has reported.

What debate, if any, can be permitted on the second day, or is a further motion of any kind required when the order under government orders is called "that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following resolution . . .". As stated above, since the house has already made a decision that that particular resolution is to be considered by the committee it is obviously irregular to have any further debate on that point. Therefore, the only possible subject matter for debate is as to whether the Speaker should leave the chair at that particular time, or later that day, or on some other day. However, even that subject matter is not debatable. Standing order 17 (2) provides that "whenever government business has precedence, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit", and of course it is the practice for the government to announce the night before just what business will be called the following day. In this way no one is taken by surprise.

From the above it would appear that the motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on a money resolution moved on the second day under the provisions of standing order 60 is purely a procedural motion. It stands on the order of proceedings for the day, and were it other than a procedural motion it would, under standing order 38, be debatable. But procedural motions are not debatable. This was decided by Mr. Speaker Lemieux on June 18, 1923. See Hansard, page 4013 of that year. He said:

> A bill is regularly on its way to the committee of the whole house and the motion has been made that I do now leave the chair. It is a purely formal motion.

It is doubtful if any motion at all is really necessary, but as Mr. Speaker Lemieux has ruled, and as Mr. Speaker Rhodes has also ruled that the motion should be made, and that, though the motion is not debatable, the members have a right to vote thereon, I will follow their rulings.

Accordingly in future once the house has decided that the Speaker will leave the chair at the next sitting of the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider a resolution I will put the motion when the order is called, but the motion will not be debatable although members will have the right to vote thereon.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I cannot accept the ruling; but in view of the fact that it is obvious there must be a review of the rules, as has been indicated on different occasions during this session, I prefer not to divide the house but to leave the matter in the record in that way.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FISHERIES

INCREASE IN CARAPACE MEASUREMENT OF LOBSTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the senior member for Queens (Mr. McLure) asked whether the lobster fishermen in Prince Edward Island had requested that the carapace measurement of lobsters for canning purposes be increased to 2½ inches. The direct answer to this question is that they did not, but further explanation is essential.

At the beginning of the 1952 season it was decided and agreed that for canning lobsters a change should be made from the existing over-all length measurement of 7 inches to the more accurate carapace measure. Our scientists recommended 2⅜ inches as being the closest figure to 7 inches since it would give an average length of 6·9 inches and a range of 6·5 to 7·5. During the year we had constant complaints that the catches included lobsters much too small from fishermen in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, who, it must be remembered, also fish lobster districts 7B and 8. Our scientists re-investigated in the light of one year's experience and recommended the increase to 2½ inches on the basis of conservation. This new measure will give a size range of 6·8 to 7·9 inches and an average size of 7·3 inches.

In October, 1952, the proposed change was explained and discussed with fishermen and processors at well advertised and well attended meetings at Moncton, Antigonish, Summerside and Shelburne. Considering as a whole the reactions at the first three meetings where fishermen and producers handling canning lobsters were heavily represented, the obvious conclusion was that the great majority of lobster fishermen and processors favoured the suggested increase.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the parliamentary assistant tell us the meaning of the word "carapace"?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that there is much urgency in the hon. member's question, but in reply to it I may say that carapace is the upper shell of a crustacean.

DROP IN COD PRICES—SITUATION OF FISHERMEN IN MARITIME PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the Department of Fisheries aware of the serious situation now facing the cod fishermen and the packers of fillets in the maritime provinces as a result of a substantial drop in prices on the United States markets with a large quantity of last year's pack still held over—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question which he can ask briefly, I will allow him to do so.

Mr. Robichaud: —or hanging on the market—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid I cannot allow that question.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to make it shorter.

Mr. Cruickshank: Send it over television.

An hon. Member: Write him a letter.

Mr. Casselman: Don't put on the steam roller.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Robichaud: Is the Department of Fisheries aware of the serious situation of the cod fishermen and the packers of fillets in the maritime provinces?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether that is the type of question that should be asked on orders of the day. I cannot allow the question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIFLE RANGE AND OTHER PROJECTS AT BAIE-DU-FEBVRE, QUE.—PROTEST AGAINST INSTALLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Defence in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. I have not had the information yet.

EMERGENCY POWERS ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION OF ACT FROM MAY 31, 1953 TO MAY 31, 1954

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 279, to amend the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is the minister going to speak?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, my position in interrupting my friend the hon. member for Greenwood is that if I do not say something in moving the second reading of this bill, I shall not have an opportunity of making a reply; and if I have no opportunity of making a reply, I shall not have an opportunity of answering certain misstatements of fact and of law which now deface the record of this debate. Hence I wish to deal fairly briefly in my present remarks with the—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I regret that, with the noise in the chamber, I could not hear what the minister said. If it would not be asking too much, might I ask him to start over again because I assure him that we on this side of the house could not hear what he said.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask hon. members not to carry on conversations in the house. If any hon. members desire to leave the house now that we have reached the orders of the day, may I ask them to do so as quietly as possible. That request applies not only to today but to every day. When hon. members who have other duties to perform are leaving the chamber, I would request them to leave as quietly as possible.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion of my friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), may I say that I had opened my remarks by saying that I regretted having to interrupt my friend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), but that my position is that if I do not speak in moving the second reading of the bill I shall not later have an opportunity of making a reply, and for that reason would be deprived of the chance of correcting what I must regard as certain serious misstatements of fact and law which deface the record in this debate.

Mr. Drew: Is that word "debase"?

Mr. Garson: Deface.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Change the face of.

Mr. Garson: The issue in this matter has been discussed perhaps at great length, but somewhat desultorily in committee and my only purpose in my present remarks is to bring together in as brief a compass as I can the basis upon which we of the government are asking that the Emergency Powers Act should be extended for another period of one year.

As we have made clear, in 1951, when the act was first passed, and on a number of occasions since, we have been seeking in the Emergency Powers Act not an extension or an increase in the powers of the governor in council, but on the contrary a diminution, an important diminution, in these powers. Once it is a fact that the nation is in the emergency of apprehended war, and the wide amplitude of powers under the War Measures Act become available to the governor in council under the War Measures Act, then the passage of the measure which we are now considering, the extension of the Emergency Powers Act, does not increase, it substantially diminishes the powers of the governor in council and subjects the orders in council passed in the exercise of those powers to the prompt tabling in parliament, and to a scrutiny by parliament, and to annulment proceedings that may be taken in a summary manner in respect of anything that is done pursuant to the Emergency Powers Act.

I concede at once that the validity of our argument depends in large measure upon one fact, and that is whether there was an emergency of apprehended war in 1951 when the Emergency Powers Act was first passed, and whether that emergency still continues today.

We of the government took the position in 1951, and were supported on that occasion by every opposition party, by I think every member of the house who took part in the debates, with the single honourable exception, I must confess, of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), who throughout this matter has been in disagreement not only with the government and with the C.C.F. and the Social Credit parties, but with all the other members of his own party as well.

Mr. Fleming: Why spoil a perfectly good statement by an addition at the end that is not right?

Mr. Garson: Well, I will quote in a few minutes to show that it is quite right, but I want to make it clear that he has preserved a consistent position from beginning to end in this matter, and his main embarrassment has arisen from the fact that he is a member of the Conservative party, and the position which he has taken consistently for the most part has been diametrically opposite to that taken by his party.

Was there an emergency in 1951? The Prime Minister, in seeking the passage of the Emergency Powers Act at that time, clearly indicated that there was, and the Leader of the Opposition agreed with him at that time. He said, quoting the Prime Minister, as recorded at page 500 of Hansard of February 20, 1951:

> He—

That is the Prime Minister.

> —has indicated that the emergency is the increased menace in the Far East which demonstrates the full extent of the threat of communist imperialism. He has quoted from some words I used in the debate on the speech from the throne. I agree that those words were intended to convey my own belief that there is an emergency of the nature which he described.

And indeed, sir, the support which was accorded the Emergency Powers Act in 1951 by every opposition party would make no sense, unless it was based upon a recognition by them of the existence of an emergency which alone would make an Emergency Powers Act justifiable.

Does that emergency still continue? That is again a straight question of fact. We say that it continues. We say that at a time when thousands of our citizens are fighting in Korea and many of them losing their lives, at a time when we have a brigade group on the Elbe, and six squadrons of the R.C.A.F. in Europe, and six more shortly to follow, and at a time when many countries throughout almost every part of the world give fresh evidences every day of a continuance of violence and actual or potential war, we continue in a position of emergency which justifies the continuance of this act.

That is not only our opinion. Just the other day the Leader of the Opposition expressed these views, as reported at page 2952 of Hansard of March 13, 1953:

> These are grave and serious hours. The news that comes to us from Europe today removes any suggestion that we are in a comfortable period where there are no great dangers in front of us. The events of yesterday and today, the cold-blooded murder of British airmen and the interference with the flight of a civilian aircraft going into Berlin, indicate the extent of the danger which is there all the time.

Again, the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), the military critic of the official opposition, has expressed the present position in even more forceful terms when he says that there was real war in Korea and apprehended war in Europe. I do not think that it is necessary, before a group of intelligent people, to harp upon such a notorious fact. I would not do so but for the circumstance that perhaps the strongest argument which has been made in opposition to the extension of this bill has been that by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), and made with his usual eloquence and cogency. But it was weak only in one important respect, and that is that it was based upon the single premise that there was now no emergency, that there never had been an emergency. My hon. friend's premise does not exist in fact. Now, faced with this emergency, what was the position of the—

Mr. Fleming: I think the minister has agreed that his question to me and my answer related to whether there is such an emergency as justifies the government in invoking the War Measures Act. I said very clearly that there is in my submission no such emergency.

Mr. Garson: Well, is my hon. friend's present interjection to be taken as an admission upon his part that he thinks that there is some emergency of a lesser character?

Mr. Fleming: There is certainly none that justifies the introduction of this measure.

Mr. Garson: But my hon. friend will not deny that there is an emergency.

Mr. Fleming: Well, again the minister has asked me a question that is rather hypothetical. I am prepared to make my answer perfectly definite, that with respect to these two measures that have been referred to, namely, the War Measures Act and this Emergency Powers Act, I say most categorically that in my view there is no such emergency as justifies the government in invoking the War Measures Act, or in asking parliament to extend the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. Garson: I was quite clear upon that point, and I think that I frankly admitted in the remarks that I made just a moment ago that that is my hon. friend's opinion, and I thought that in this he was in pretty solitary splendour, that there is no emergency which would justify the extension of this act at the present time.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I make it clear that he is not in solitary splendour in that view. We have been supporting it right along.

Mr. Garson: I suppose my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition would probably contend that that was his attitude when he made the remark in this house that I quoted to him a moment ago. I will deal with that in a minute. The hon. member says he denies there was such an emergency.

Mr. Drew: I did not.

Mr. Garson: The hon. member cannot rise unless it is a point of order.

Mr. Drew: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition is rising on a point of privilege.

Mr. Drew: On a point of privilege, I wish to make it clear that the minister has misrepresented what I said. I did not say there was no emergency.

Mr. Garson: I will quote to my hon. friend what he said, himself. And then will he get up in indignation and say that he is misrepresented?

Mr. Drew: I will be up, don't worry about that.

Mr. Garson: This is what my hon. friend said, and I will repeat it:

> He has indicated that the emergency is the increased menace in the Far East, which demonstrates the full extent of the threat of communist imperialism. He has quoted from some words I used in the debate on the speech from the throne. I agree that those words were intended to convey my own belief that there is an emergency of the nature which he described.

And this emergency which the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) described was an emergency which he was invoking then under the Emergency Powers Act, and which he said at that time that he could have used to invoke the War Measures Act. And it was discussed by my hon. friend in these terms, because he went on to say this:

> I would point out, however,—

The Prime Minister did not go far enough to suit him.

> I would point out, however, that this emergency is not new. I would point out that when another bill was introduced in this house last September we sought to emphasize that there was an emergency of this very nature. True, the seriousness of the emergency is being recognized more generally, but the emergency that exists today was the emergency which existed in just as definite reality last September.

Now will my hon. friend get up and explain away that language? As I was saying the government in 1951 was faced with the alternative of remaining in a position where it could at a moment's notice, if an emergency arose which required the exercise of extraordinary powers, invoke the very wide powers of the War Measures Act. At that time the Prime Minister made it perfectly clear that we were seeking to have much more limited powers under the Emergency Powers Act than were then available to us under the War Measures Act, and that we were seeking to surround those powers with much greater control by parliament than parliament might exercise under the War Measures Act.

The powers that are given to the governor in council under the War Measures Act are so extensive as to enable him to exercise almost any of the wide powers which are ordinarily exercised by parliament, and he could do so secretly and in derogation of civil liberties, freedom of speech and so on.

When therefore the hon. member for Eglinton, with a lack of grasp of legal principles which is not characteristic of him as a rule, gets up and says in this House of Commons that the essential differences as between this measure, the Emergency Powers Act, and the War Measures Act—and I would ask hon. members to listen to this—are relatively insignificant, and that virtually, to all intents and purposes, this Emergency Powers Act is the War Measures Act—now, if that is the view held by a competent legal member of the Conservative opposition, you can imagine what sort of views are held by some of his colleagues. And that very view is a totally erroneous one.

For what are the powers which are withheld by the terms of the Emergency Powers Act? They are the powers, first of all, of arbitrary arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation; second, the powers of censorship or the control and suppression of publications and writings and, third, the powers of spending money without the authority of parliament.

Perhaps the language of the Emergency Powers Act is so plain and clear that my hon. friends are not too much impressed by it. But perhaps if we put that same language in the terms of Magna Carta, and say that the powers of arbitrary arrest, arbitrary detention, arbitrary exclusion and arbitrary deportation are a denial of those provisions of Magna Carta which say that no free man shall be taken or imprisoned or be outlawed or exiled or otherwise destroyed nor will we pass upon him nor condemn him but by the lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land. It might then make a greater impression upon hon. members.

Do they not attach some importance to that kind of freedom? My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, when he is displeased with the utterances of some gentleman—Mr. Barkway, for instance, over the radio—could if his party were in power and by order in council under the War Measures Act have Mr. Barkway thrown into prison and left there, regardless of habeas corpus or remedies.

Mr. Fleming: Or your comments with respect to the editor of Saturday Night.

Mr. Garson: Yes, I would be glad to make reference to the editor of Saturday Night. By virtue of the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act Mr. Barkway, Mr. Woodsworth and the editor of Toronto Saturday Night can make all the speeches they like, and can write all the editorials they like, however false or offensive they may be, and there is not a thing that the Leader of the Opposition or I can do about it—and I am very glad that that is so. And I hope it always will be so.

Because surely, Mr. Speaker, if political liberty, if freedom from arbitrary arrest, freedom from arbitrary detention, freedom of speech and freedom of the press is relatively insignificant, then what is significant in a free country?

Mr. Fleming: May I ask a question?

Mr. Garson: No, not until I have finished with this paragraph. If that is not important, then what is important? The fact of the matter is that by virtue of the Emergency Powers Act we have forgone and we have deprived ourselves of the power to interfere with freedom of the press and freedom of speech by the provisions of this act. And so far as the editor of Toronto Saturday Night is concerned, he is in the position of an editor in every free country. It is up to him as a patriotic and responsible citizen to supply the discipline from his own integrity that is not imposed by the state. But if he wishes to misrepresent the laws of his country in writing an editorial, although I may disapprove of it, there is not a thing I can do about it. That is the way we want to keep our freedom of the press.

[Mr. Garson.]

During the course of the debate upon this subject the Leader of the Opposition brought in a reference to Charles I and his difficulties with parliament. I think that allusion to Charles I was particularly unhappy because the very thing which this Emergency Powers Act, to which he is objecting, provides and assures is that parliament shall continue to have control over the expenditure of public moneys. If I remember rightly, the main problem of Charles I arose from the fact that he was always trying to get money that parliament would not vote him, and when he made promises to parliament in order to get a vote from them and broke his promises, when there was a long continued course of breaking such promises, that was one of the main causes which led up to his being dethroned.

My hon. friend had the whole course of English history to which to refer in order to get an example and yet with his usual sense of fitness he picked upon Charles I as his reference in support of his argument in this particular matter, when in point of fact one of the main causes of the difficulties of Charles I was the expenditure of public moneys in accordance with an appropriation by parliament, which is guaranteed and protected by the Emergency Powers Act.

I should have thought that a measure of this sort would in the third year of its existence continue to receive the same measure of support which it received from the opposition parties during the first two years of its existence, because they all supported it then and, if I may express the view with deference, I think they should continue to support it.

Mr. Fleming: They did not support it.

Mr. Garson: Is my hon. friend still saying that they did not support it?

Mr. Fleming: I still recall to the minister what he apparently continually forgets, that two years ago this measure was passed on division on third reading and again last year it was opposed.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to deal with this aspect of the matter but since my hon. friend has interrupted me I think perhaps I should. A couple of days ago we heard my hon. friend speak in this chamber. I have heard him make some excellent speeches here from time to time, but I thought that he was far from being at his best two days ago.

Mr. Fleming: That is not what you told me afterwards.

Mr. Garson: No; what I told my hon. friend afterwards in a private conversation was that I could not object to his main legal points, but I expressed no opinion about the matter that I am now going to discuss.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) referred to the private conversation and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) has replied. I do not think it is customary to refer to private conversations in the house.

Mr. Garson: I referred to it only to leave a correct impression. My hon. friend made a most remarkable argument here the other day. He showed his great patriotism to his party by appointing himself its scapegoat in connection with the point he made of his not having voted against this bill. Metaphorically speaking, he drove himself out into the wilderness. What he told us was this: On the second reading of the bill I must take some personal responsibility—

Mr. Fleming: There was no division in 1952.

Mr. Garson: He said in effect: here was every member of my party wrought up about this bill, violently opposed to it, going to fight it to the last ditch, but I was not there to give them the nod and therefore they did not do it.

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege, those were not the facts. The facts are on the record. That is not what I said. It was not a matter of my giving the nod. The facts do not admit of any difference of opinion because they are there on the record. As I said, the Leader of the Opposition had spoken strongly opposing the continuation of this measure. I said that I was to continue the debate when the next turn came around to the official opposition, and that that was to be followed by a division. I was not here at the very second by reason of a misunderstanding with the hon. member who was speaking for the C.C.F. I arrived about ten seconds later and the measure was passed by that time. It was not because anybody was waiting for a nod. There was to have been a division.

Mr. Garson: We have heard this story before. Under the rules of the house we have to accept it, and I do accept it. I say that it makes my hon. friend not only the scapegoat but the bell-wether for his party. What he is saying in effect is that a party which is strongly opposed to a measure and is fighting it tooth and nail will not get up and vote against it unless he is there to move a motion or make a speech or something of that sort.

I do not think that there is any member in this house of any party—including the Conservative party—who if he is strongly opposed to a bill, is not quite capable and has not enough sense to get up and vote against it when the proper time comes. The same remarks could be made about the excuse he made on the extension of the legislation in 1952. In that connection I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has a question of privilege which he could raise. The explanation was given to this house by the hon. member for Eglinton that he thought that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was going to speak a lot longer than he did and that it was his fault for making that mistake.

Mr. Knowles: An error in judgment. Can I not shorten my speeches once in a while?

Mr. Garson: That is what I thought. In 1951 we had the support of all parties. If the Leader of the Opposition wants me to do it, I can read page after page from his speech in 1951. But I have read a lot of it on previous occasions and I think we can dispense with that now.

Mr. Fleming: That was before the bill had come in.

Mr. Garson: That is right, before the bill came down.

Mr. Fleming: No one then had seen the bill.

Mr. Garson: My understanding of the position of the Social Credit party and the C.C.F. party—they will correct me if I have misunderstood it—is that they supported the bill, like the Leader of the Opposition and his party, in 1951, because they were anxious to have controls put on at that time for the protection, as they claimed, of the Canadian people.

Mr. Knowles: You did not do it.

Mr. Garson: Being anxious to have controls put on, and recognizing as intelligent people that the governor in council would have no power to put on controls unless he was given emergency powers, they said, "We agree to give you emergency powers in order to put on controls." Now, the best that can be said for the argument of the hon. member for Eglinton, if effect is given to the whole of it, is that the position of his leader and his colleague—I do not include him in this because he was opposed to controls—was that they took the position: We are all in favour of controls. We admit that to put on controls you have to have emergency powers. We are opposed to your using the War Measures Act for this purpose. Yet we will not support the Emergency Powers Act. Well, if the Conservative party would not support the emergency powers how were they going to get the controls they were then advocating?

Mr. Fleming: They could not support that bill after they saw it.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friends from the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties say that they are not against the principle of these emergency powers, but they supported them in 1951 and, if I understood my hon. friend the leader of the C.C.F. party the other day, he would be inclined to support them now if we would only use them.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, that is when parliament is not sitting—and if you used them in the interests of the people of Canada. I mean use when parliament is not sitting.

Mr. Garson: When parliament is not sitting. So, my hon. friends of the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties are not opposed to the matter in principle. They are voting against it—if they do vote against it—not because they feel that we were wrong in seeking the powers but because we have not used the powers in the manner in which they thought we would use them. That is very different from opposing the emergency powers in principle.

Now, I would say to them that for all they know and for all we know, we in a government such as ours which, frankly, does not believe in controls if they can be avoided may be faced within another three weeks, six weeks or nine weeks with the iron necessity of introducing some limited measure of control over some segment of industry. I want to ask my hon. friends of the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties whether they think, in accordance with principles which they have enunciated and the support which they have given this measure on previous occasions, it is a consistent principle with them to say to the government now: Because you, as a majority elected by the democratic votes of the Canadian people, have not exercised these powers in the way in which we, in the minority, have said you should exercise them, we should go so far as we can to take them away from you—so that you will not have them to meet an emergency or exigency if it arises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Garson: Is that a consistent course to follow? I submit not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Coldwell: Is the minister asking me a question?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. gentleman states he does not believe in the principle of this measure, yet he is asking for power under it. Having received that power once, he failed to use it in the interests of the Canadian people. That is why we say: If you do not believe in the principle of controls, and as you have not used the powers we gave you, then why should we renew these powers so that you may use them against the people?

Mr. Garson: I am sure that my hon. friend misrepresents the position when he says we do not believe in controls.

Mr. Drew: You just said that.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Yes, the minister has just finished saying that.

Mr. Garson: As a matter of fact, this government in the period of the war, when circumstances were such as to warrant a system of control, had one of the most thoroughgoing and successful systems of controls in the civilized world.

Mr. Fleming: Under the War Measures Act.

Mr. Garson: Yes, quite right, under the War Measures Act. However, from the fact that we do not, under present circumstances, concur with my hon. friend in thinking that we should now put in a system of controls pursuant to these powers it does not by any means follow that circumstances in the kind of world in which we live today might not arise, under which a month from now we would think it just as necessary to put in controls as we did on previous occasions.

Mr. Fleming: Would the minister be good enough to indicate circumstances under which he conceives that might be necessary?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I said before and I repeat again that the asking of a question of that kind indicates that the questioner does not understand the basic characteristics of emergency legislation. The real reason that we have to have emergency powers is precisely the fact that we are not able, not being prophets, to prophesy what exigency may arise under which the emergency powers will be necessary. If we could prophesy that, then it is quite true that we could bring down amendments to our existing statutes and we would not need the emergency powers at all.

An hon. Member: He knows that.

Mr. Garson: Why does my hon. friend think the War Measures Act, passed in 1915, with much greater powers than the Emergency Powers Act which he is getting so indignant about, has remained on the statute books since that date, even in times of genuine peace? It is because, when you have to deal with war or any other serious emergency, it is impossible to foretell the circumstances you will have to face. A man who would be simple enough to answer the type of question my hon. friend has just asked should not be discussing this subject at all.

An hon. Member: He wants it for election propaganda.

Mr. Garson: Yes, I think my hon. friend asked it to see if I was simple enough—but the answer is that I am not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts and in view of the fact that we have curtailed our own powers, that we have subjected them to a much greater and closer scrutiny in parliament than they would receive under the War Measures Act, at a time when we have to face an indeterminate period of cold war, this legislation is the proper course to follow in the interests of the civil liberties of the people of Canada. We think we are entitled to support from every member of this house on second reading of this bill.

Mr. Fleming: The minister said he would answer a question which I sought to ask at an earlier stage when he was speaking about arrest. We will all agree with him about the importance of that provision, but I would like to ask him, in the light of the importance which he attaches to the exclusion of that power from the bill: why did the government in the first instance bring down in this Emergency Powers Act a measure which gives them unlimited power of arrest? What then did he have to say about Magna Carta?

Mr. Garson: I do not know what my hon. friend is trying to do unless he is attempting to embed in Hansard some gag which he can drag out on a later occasion for political purposes. My hon. friend knows perfectly well I have answered that question twice already.

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. Garson: I simply refer him back to Hansard of two days ago for one of those occasions, and I just cannot at the moment closely identify the previous occasion. However, it was my hon. friend who raised this point, and properly so, when the bill was before the house. He, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and I worked on the section of the bill as it reads at the present time in order to meet the point which he raised then and, as well, the point that we had to have protected.

There is no sinister reason whatever for the omission of the word "arrest". It was because we were informed by the law officers of the crown that if we did not omit the word "arrest" we would not even have any way of enforcing orders in council which we passed under the Emergency Powers Act. I told my hon. friend when the bill was going through the house; I told him two days ago, and I will tell him again if it will serve any purpose, that the power of arbitrary arrest is not of much value to a tyrant without the power of arbitrary detention. Under the laws we have in this free country, if you arrest a man arbitrarily and put him in jail, his lawyer goes down and takes out a writ of habeas corpus and obtains the man's release.

Mr. Fleming: How can you have detention without arrest?

Mr. Garson: You cannot have detention without arrest. All the provincial statutes, and the Criminal Code, provide for arrest. The only arrest that is contemplated under this act is the ordinary arrest that takes place all the time where a man is taken and put into a cell, and his lawyer comes along if necessary with a habeas corpus application. He does not need that in most cases as he just goes down to the jail, provides bail and the man gets out. All this pother that my friend has created certainly has no point to it at all.

Mr. Fleming: It has a great deal of point. You know it does, and that is why it troubles you.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if there had at any time been any uncertainty in the mind of any hon. member about the danger of passing legislation of this kind, then that doubt should have been removed by the extraordinary argument made in this house by the minister who will be primarily charged with the responsibility of the enforcement of this act. I have only been in this house a few years compared with a number of the hon. members here, but I doubt if at any time since confederation there has been an argument by a supposedly responsible minister of the crown which has borne so little relation to the reality of the case.

Mr. Garson: I was quoting you a lot of the time.

Mr. Drew: The minister has said he was quoting me on a number of occasions. He did, but in a manner that is unfortunately becoming too habitual with him. He left exactly the opposite impression to what the facts actually were. The words he quoted concerning what I said on this act were at the stage when we were called upon to consider a resolution that it was expedient to introduce a measure to empower the Governor General to do and authorize such acts and things as would be provided for under an emergency measure. The act was not before us.

Emergency Powers Act

In supporting the resolution which stood in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), we were told by the Prime Minister himself that the government intended to define the authority given by the measure, to give us an indication of what it was that the government proposed to do. At that time we were under the impression, and this is very clear from what is on Hansard, that we were going to have a bill placed before us which clearly defined the circumstances under which any emergency measures could be adopted. My words very clearly indicate that this was our thought, and that this was the basis upon which our remarks had been made. There can be no doubt about that. On page 501, a short time after the words quoted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), as recorded in Hansard of February 20, 1951, I said this:

> I very much prefer that there should be presented to this house legislation which will make it clear what powers are being assumed by the government. I shall go further and say that it is of the utmost importance that such powers as the government seeks and as this parliament is asked to approve should be defined with the utmost clarity so that the public is not left in doubt as to what those powers are. Also, the area of our economy within which legislation of this kind is to operate should be stated clearly so that those who are likely to be affected by legislation of this nature are not going to be in doubt as to whether they will be affected or not, and by that very fact possibly contribute substantially to the inflation which has disturbed this country so much today.

That was what was said when we were dealing with the resolution to the effect that it was expedient that an emergency measure be brought in.

Then, on March 1, the bill was brought before the house. On page 800 of Hansard for March 1, 1951, I had this to say:

> At the time the resolution was before the house, which resolution had the effect of bringing into the house the bill itself, and while the bill was not yet before hon. members, the Prime Minister in his remarks indicated that it was desirable that this bill should place before this house and before parliament their responsibility for legislation and for what would be done. Following his remarks I expressed my own approval of the thought that had been expressed by the Prime Minister, to the effect that parliament was to be called upon to exercise its responsibility, and that parliament was to have the opportunity to deal with whatever measures were to be taken.

I then pointed out that was not the course that was followed. I could not have made it clearer that we were opposed to a bill of the kind that was introduced. I am not going to read extensively from that debate, because on that occasion I quoted Lord Hewart's famous book "The New Despotism", and pointed out by quotations from that book, and their application to this present measure, the danger of the course that was being recommended to this house by the Prime Minister and the government on this occasion. That was when the bill was before us.

Then, on March 5, the bill was in committee, and there again I dealt with this subject and left no doubt whatever about our opposition to a bill which gave such wide-open power to the government. On March 6, this bill was up for third reading, and on that occasion there was no doubt whatever as to what our position was. The only reason that at this stage of this discussion I am called upon to go back to what was said on this earlier occasion is the complete misrepresentation by the Minister of Justice of what did take place, after that misrepresentation has been brought to his attention time and time again.

Mr. Garson: Will the hon. member—

Mr. Drew: Unless it is a point of order or a point of privilege, I propose to continue my remarks.

Mr. Garson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask my hon. friend a question. If he does not want to answer it, I am content.

Mr. Drew: I shall proceed with what I was going to say.

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I might ask it before my hon. friend takes his seat.

Mr. Drew: The minister can follow whatever course he sees fit at that time. On page 952 of Hansard for March 6, 1951, I had this to say:

> Over and over again throughout history there have been tragic examples of free legislative bodies handing over their authority to meet an emergency and then not being able to recapture that authority at some future time when those with a different point of view were unwilling to surrender those powers.
> To the statement that I have just made the Prime Minister can answer that this bill will terminate next year. In that respect may I point out, Mr. Speaker, that if in the present emergency this bill is necessary, then it will be necessary next year to renew the measure, or an even stronger one, because we are passing a complementary measure, the Defence Production Act, which is to continue for five years and which obviously will go in double harness with this bill now before us. Therefore unless the government is going to introduce or bring into effect by proclamation a still stronger bill, this legislation will continue for some years, and there may come a time when, through pressures, through force of circumstances that we cannot now envisage, a government of another day might be unwilling to abandon the powers so obtained.
> The Prime Minister may also say: This is in the hands of parliament. In answer I would say that we have not seen too much evidence, during this session or preceding ones, that there is that measure of independent expression of opinion by the large number of supporters of the government in this house which would suggest to those who are concerned about the trend we now see that we might hope that within this house there would be a vote which would place any effective restraint upon a government which commanded a majority of that kind. Unless we return to established and tested principles of parliamentary democracy we may in fact at this hour be in the twilight of freedom here in Canada, no matter how much we believe in freedom itself. We Canadians can pay the penalty of surrender just as other people have paid the penalty of surrender of those principles which protected the freedom in which they believed.

Then, Mr. Speaker, having indicated in such clear and unequivocal terms our objection,—

Mr. Garson: May I have the page number?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be interrupted in the middle of a sentence nor do I intend to be interrupted except on a question of privilege or a point of order.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think it has been the custom, among courteous members of parliament, that when another member wishes to know the page of Hansard which is being quoted, the hon. member who is quoting will give it to him.

Mr. Rowe: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Drew: That was not a question of privilege and the minister well knows it. The minister well knows that I gave the date and the page from which I was quoting; it is 952.

Mr. Rowe: The hon. member gave it before he started quoting.

Mr. Drew: May I just point out that, having indicated clearly our objection to this measure and our objection to the principles that were inherent in a wide-open bill without any definition of the circumstances under which these wide powers could be invoked, we indicated our objection to the bill by the accepted practice of saying "On division".

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss at all the extraordinary process of reasoning by which the minister has once again, in spite of the fact that this has been pointed out to him before, tried to distort the facts as to what took place in this house by suggesting that we supported the measure on that occasion. We opposed the measure, and we opposed it on every possible occasion when the measure was actually before us. The words he quoted by way of indicating our approval were words that were used at the time that the bill was not before us and when we presumed that the bill was going to define the authority of the government.

Let me now come to the remarkable mental gyrations of the Minister of Justice in the contentions that he has put forward. He has said: They approved this measure before—which of course is not so—and then they say, "Because you did not do what we, a minority, think you should have done, we now say that we will not support what we supported on an earlier occasion."

Mr. Garson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I never said any such thing as applied to my hon. friend's party. My remarks were entirely confined to the Social Credit and C.C.F. parties; they had no reference to my hon. friend, and his statement is quite wrong.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, my statement is not wrong in any word. My statement referred to what the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Drew: I insist on finishing my sentence, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I have stated what I said and I believe that, by the rules of the house, my hon. friend, whether he likes it or not, is under obligation to accept my statement.

Mr. Drew: The minister well knows that I am compelled to accept a statement that was made, but the statement he made was not earmarked in relation to anyone in this house. The statement he made was a general statement. Since he now says it referred only to others besides the members of the Conservative party, that in no way changes the purport of what he said. It does not change it in any way. It is an equally distorted form of reasoning.

Mr. Knowles: It makes it worse.

Mr. Drew: It only makes it worse, in fact; because he apparently thinks that we are mind-readers and that we know which of these mental gyrations of his is intended to relate to one part of the house or another.

In that particular case let me remind the minister that I heard no suggestion that this bill was not now being supported because the government had not said that it would do what the minority said it should do. As I recall it, what was said in that respect was that there was a great deal of objection on this side of the house to the fact that the government had put forward this bill with the assurance that it was going to deal with controls and that we objected to the government's asking for a renewal of the same bill when they had shown that that was not their intention and they had never invoked the powers for that purpose.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The government never gave that assurance.

Mr. Garson: And the Leader of the Opposition knows that perfectly well.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, that was the reason that was given on behalf of the government as a reason for putting this measure forward. It was stated on behalf of the government that this would be stand-by power so that they could deal with this extremely important question; and on many occasions—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is not an assurance.

Mr. Drew: —and by different members of the government that was stated.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the only supportable reason why emergency powers of that kind could properly have been adopted on that occasion was the argument put forward by the government; and the very words that I have read from the Hansard of that day indicate quite clearly that what was in our minds on that occasion was the statement of the government that they were going to employ this measure for the purpose of dealing with inflation by some type of controlling measures under this act. That is perfectly clear. The fact is that if it was not their intention, then, in so far as we may accord some freedom of judgment on the part of the hon. members of this house on the other side, this bill was passed under false pretences; because the argument that was put forward long before the time it was discussed in this house was an argument which indicated that the government proposed to deal with the dangers that were in everybody's mind at that time because of the pressure imposed by the dual demands on our economy of defence and peace requirements.

The Minister of Justice has, with his customary graciousness, referred to my concept of history and has, with his customary accuracy, pointed out the fundamental difference between what is now before us and what was in issue at the time of Charles. He tells us that the expenditure of money, which was very much in the minds of those who were discussing constitutional issues in the time of Charles, is removed from consideration here. But the Minister of Justice forgets the act that he is supporting and forgets the exception in that act.

Mr. Garson: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Because in section 2, subsection 2, paragraph (c), we find that the third of the general exceptions provides that the power conferred on the government does not include power to make orders in relation to:

(c) expenditure of moneys otherwise than in accordance with an appropriation by parliament—

And these are the important words:

—except expenditure of moneys from any fund or account established by order or regulation in connection with a scheme of control for the purposes of that scheme of control.

Mr. Speaker, that exception makes it possible for the government to deal with almost any plan it seeks to put into effect, because it could put into effect a plan of general control which would embrace any particular part of our economy and then proceed to allocate money without coming back to parliament for approval of one cent of that advance. I wish to make it quite clear that I am not suggesting for one moment that at some subsequent time the government would not have to come back to parliament and place that item before parliament. But that would be too late for parliament to exercise its fundamental and primary power to advance moneys at all and to control the expenditures before they are made.

Then we have heard a lot about arrest and the extent to which the government has gone to deny this power of arrest in the act now before us. But there again we have a joker and a very powerful joker indeed, because the exception in this case is to be found in section 2, subsection 2(a). There we find that the subject matter excepted from the power of the government to pass orders in council or regulations under this act is as follows:

Arrest, except as incidental to proceedings under section three, detention, exclusion, or deportation of any person.

Now, arrest; that is the word which the Minister of Justice emphasizes. The exception in regard to arrest to arrest except as incidental to proceedings under section 3, and section 3 reads:

—and regulations made under or pursuant to authority conferred under this act have the force of law while this act is in force.

In other words, this act may make orders in relation to any of the daily activities of our people, and having made that order, it has the force of law, and if there is a breach of that law, then there can be arrest in relation to that law under the very section to which the minister has referred with such emphasis.

This act is an act which extends once again emergency powers that were supposed to be granted for a particular purpose and at a particular time. It was pointed out at the time this act came before us that there was danger that it was not just going to be for two years, but that it would be extended indefinitely once it got on the statute books. Let us see just what has happened. First of all there was the emergency legislation during the war itself. Then the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act; it was put forward not because of the need of emergency legislation so much as simply a device to continue the orders still in force. And then when all these orders had disappeared and had been rescinded we were asked to support a new emergency order, and that order was passed in 1951.

It is true there was not the same extended opposition to that measure that there has been on this occasion, because it was recognized that if there were to be those steps taken which the government indicated it proposed to take, then it was necessary that some emergency authority be granted. May I remind the government on this occasion, and the minister particularly who puts this argument forward, that we have made it clear on this occasion that we believe it may be desirable to have certain emergency powers clearly defined under specific acts which will mean that the government can act only in circumstances known in advance by the members of parliament who delegated that authority to them.

We have pointed out that even if the problem of box cars arises, which is so much in the mind of the Minister of Justice, he can deal with them by an amendment to an act that already deals with box cars. And if there are to be certain other emergency provisions, they may be included in other legislation now on the statute books which would make it possible for the members of this parliament to know within what general range of circumstances the government is going to be able to take the emergency action that is contemplated.

I repeat that we cannot disregard the fact that there is emergency legislation already in existence of which we do not know the details, and in regard to which we certainly have no idea as to the steps that have been taken under that secret order. I repeat that if one secret order can be made, any number of secret orders can be made in exactly the same way. I point out that, when the minister speaks about the way in which we have been assured that any measures passed under this act will be subject to the review of parliament, this is a meaningless assurance in view of the fact that it would be necessary for those who object to what the government had done to be able to obtain a majority vote from the members of this house.

Without saying anything about the voting habits of hon. members which might incur the displeasure of Mr. Speaker on this occasion, may I simply say that we have not had any evidence which would support our belief that we would be likely to gain the support of the majority of hon. members when we must in that case have a large number of those who in the ordinary course of events do vote so regularly in support of the government. And yet any real power of review, any real power of change, any real power of protection on behalf of the people of Canada is entirely dependent upon that reality which not one of us can disregard. Therefore we have in the first place the possibility of secret orders, any number of them, although there is only one today, or so we are told; and also the reality that in the case of these orders not placed under terms of secrecy by an order in council under the Regulations Act, we have in fact no real chance to change them, and in any event steps would already have been taken which would have committed the government very substantially before any discussion could take place in regard to these matters.

I indicated before, Mr. Speaker, that we were not suggesting that this is a problem that is related only to our parliament. I pointed out that this is a problem that relates to all parliaments which have been called upon to exercise emergency powers during those past few years, and I should like to read into the record words that, even in spite of his susceptibility in respect of anything that he thinks might savour of politics, cannot be regarded as an adverse political comment when I say that what I am quoting was put forward in the British House of Commons by the leader of the Liberal party there. This is what Mr. Clement Davies had to say on October 23, 1950, in the British House of Commons in regard to this trend about which I believe more concern should be expressed by hon. members, not just those who are members of the opposition:

> It was sad to see how little interest was being taken in a matter that concerned the sovereignty of parliament by members of all parties. During the last thirty years the tendency had been to surrender back to the executive powers that had been won from them over the centuries. There was a tendency to initiate a new judicial power, to create administrative laws, making the executive to a large extent judges in their own case. The sovereignty of parliament was threatened. All the time we were being called on to surrender more and more of our rights and privileges to the government of the day. This continuous erosion was far more dangerous to liberty than any attack from the other side. We were awake to that and could resist it, but the drip, drip, drip of erosion was more likely to destroy the house.

Mr. Speaker, it is this erosion of the powers of parliament that should cause more concern to private members on the other side of the house than has been displayed at any time during the discussion of the measure now before us. It is this erosion of the powers of parliament which is indicated by the fact that a measure which was brought forward under different circumstances in 1951, and with different arguments, is now put before us with the suggestion that we should concur in the extension of the order, without any resistance, because it has already found its way onto the statute books, and as a result of arguments in its support that have no validity today.

Let us repeat that while the government may regard this as an emergency, the emergency today is not in the nature of the emergency that was before us at the time this matter was under discussion in 1951. At that time the Korean situation was extremely uncertain. At that time there was none of the combined strength that now does give ground for hope that the free world presents a sufficiently united front to defeat aggression.

At that time we did not have the great and powerful organizations which today bring together so effectively the strength of the nations of the western world. True, the situation is serious. True, there is a war, and a terrible war for those who are engaged in it, now taking place in Korea. True, there is a threat in many parts of the world. But the simple fact remains that, with that measure of stabilization which has come about, short of war, invasion, insurrection, or apprehended war, it is not likely that any one of us is going to live through a period which will be any less of an emergency than that through which we are now living.

We know that there is an act on the statute books that can be employed, if invasion, war or insurrection, real or apprehended, should occur. That being so, we believe that the government should now be trying to find ways and means by which we can create long-term plans under this kind of life which we are going to live probably for the rest of our lives, which will preserve the rights, powers and sovereignty of parliament; and, particularly in this country of ours, not only preserve the sovereignty of parliament but protect and continue, in its full balance of authority, that federal system which is the basis of our national unity.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few, I hope, fairly brief observations and in doing so I would call a few witnesses from outside the chamber.

Sometimes the duty of the opposition is a little frustrating. Often we feel there is a kind of iron curtain dividing this chamber, so that arguments that we feel are convincing seem to get stopped in transit.

Mr. Adamson: An ivory curtain, not iron.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I shall bring witnesses from outside. Sometimes I believe delay is a good thing; and in this instance, owing to the delay, there has been time for public opinion to begin to catch up.

As I said a moment ago, often in the opposition we seem to be frustrated because we do not seem to get the help to which we feel we are entitled from outside the house. I am happy to have here some clippings which will show that apparently there is a widespread feeling throughout the country that this is a bad measure. It would seem that the country is beginning to realize we are not just talking about words, when we oppose emergency powers, but that we are talking about things which can be real and important.

I should like first of all to read a leading editorial, or part of it, from the Calgary Herald of February 10, which is headed "The Prime Minister Uses Strange Words", and states:

> Last week the House of Commons debated a government motion to extend the emergency powers bill for another year. This bill, in effect, gives the cabinet dictatorial powers, enabling it to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is customary to quote from sources outside the house opinions as to what is taking place in the house. That has never been permitted. It is true that I have allowed reading of a limited number of factual editorial opinions; but I cannot allow a controversy between someone outside the house and someone in the house. I think our rules are clear on that point. Citation 265 in Beauchesne's third edition states:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Also see citation 266.

An hon. member is expected to express his own opinions; but I think he can see the position in which the house would find itself if a debate were to be permitted between someone in the house and someone outside the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me I have heard scores of quotations read by hon. members during the course of debates. Indeed, I myself in the budget debate, I recall clearly, read during the course of my speech twelve or fifteen comments referring to the effect of the budget, and commenting as to the wisdom or the lack of wisdom in what was contained in the budget.

I find it difficult to understand why comment concerning the wisdom of the government in introducing an emergency powers bill is different from comments concerning its wisdom in introducing the budget. I have vivid recollection of quoting freely from the press in my speech in reply to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott).

Mr. Fleming: May I say a word on the point of order. Surely the essential difference is that an editorial which comments upon a measure before the house may be read. It is perfectly proper for an hon. member to read an editorial under such circumstances. It may not be proper to read editorial comment upon a debate or upon the course of a debate in the house. My understanding is that where editorial comment is to be found in the press relating to measures before the house, it is perfectly proper to read it. As I understand it, that is what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) was about to do, to read a comment on the measure, not on the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I heard the hon. member's opening remarks and I think he is commenting upon a speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent).

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, Mr. Speaker, a comment on a speech by the Prime Minister, a very short speech. As a matter of fact, it was a comment on the Prime Minister's comment that he did not want to listen to the debate. That is what I referred to here.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that should be permitted at this time. That is the type of remark made outside the house which I think should not be referred to within the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I must defer to your ruling, of course. I pass on to a quotation from Mr. Elmore Philpott in the Vancouver Sun, which I think you will pass because it certainly is merely a comment on the measure and has nothing whatever to do with the debate. This is from the Vancouver Sun of February 15:

> It is no doubt true that there will be no serious abuse of the emergency powers, if they are granted for another year. But it is worth remembering that neither this Prime Minister nor this government will last for ever.

I hope that is not unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker.

> Nobody knows who will head our government a year hence. A bad principle is a bad principle—and this is a very bad principle. A bad precedent is a bad precedent—and this is a very bad precedent.

Now I wish to come to a quotation from the Post-Record of Sydney, Nova Scotia. I think you will agree that this is discussing the principle of the measure and is not in the remotest degree discussing the debate. There is one brief reference to the debate, but the article is discussing the principle. It reads:

> Thoughtful Canadians will endorse George Drew's timely reaffirmation that parliament is the supreme authority representing the people and that authority should not be delegated to a handful of cabinet ministers.
> It is somewhat alarming that a major principle of our freedom—something that is perfectly obvious—has to be stated firmly in the Commons to a cabinet that shows disconcerting signs of forgetting it.
> The Progressive Conservative leader would have failed in his plain duty had he not protested against extension of the government's Emergency Powers Act for another year. Mr. Drew has called attention to an unfortunate trend in Ottawa. An aroused public opinion needs to remind the government it is assuming too much.
> The government says it has good reason for holding on to a law which gives it wide power of emergency action over almost all phases of Canadian economic life. It has, however, not given parliament any reason whatever and has failed to convince the nation.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is commenting upon what the government is proposing with respect to the matter.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is merely this writer's opinion of the measure on which we are asked to act.

Mr. Speaker: I gather it is that writer's opinion of the proceedings in the house with respect to the measure, not on the merits of the measure itself.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): With deference, it seems to me it is commenting on the merits, on the whole principle involved.

Mr. Speaker: May I read this reference again?

Paragraph 265 of Beauchesne's third edition reads:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Surely that article is referring to and commenting upon what has been said by an hon. member in the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As I listened to what you were reading I thought it might refer to some statement made about somebody. This is merely referring in a general way to the principle which is involved here.

Mr. Speaker: I think the article was referring to the debate. I have allowed factual editorials to be quoted here, but not where it raises an opinion about or criticizes the actions of some member of the house or of the government. That is for the members here to do.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I confess that I am in difficulty because I understood you to say that you objected, not to the quotation of an editorial opinion on the subject but of an editorial opinion as to statements made by people in this house. I submit that I have not been doing that except possibly in the case of the first editorial. I now come to the Ottawa Citizen where the editorial is of the same nature according to my view. I will read it for your approval or otherwise. It reads:

In 1950 and 1951, shortly after the fighting in Korea began, most Canadians would have agreed that a state of apprehended war did indeed exist. The government was obliged then to exercise special power to rule by order in council in the interest of security. But there is some doubt, at least in parliament, that a state of "apprehended war" still exists. It is a shifty definition of an emergency, changing with the times, and meaning almost whatever the government wants it to mean.

This was disclosed in Wednesday's debate. Mr. Garson, the Minister of Justice, said—

Perhaps I should pass over that. I continue:

This seems to mean that in the government's view, unrest anywhere in the world—

I should have said that the reference was to the Minister of Justice's worry about unrest in South Africa:

This seems to mean that in the government's view, unrest anywhere in the world results in a state of "apprehended war", is a threat to Canada's security, and warrants passage of the Emergency Powers Act. Yet surely this cannot be what the government actually means. Clarification of the circumstances which would justify the Emergency Powers Act is badly needed. Otherwise, a Canadian government could seek very wide powers on the ground that oil expropriation in Iran, disturbances in Bolivia or—

Mr. Garson: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is now raising a point which is argumentative as between somebody outside the house and somebody in the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I will pass that over.

Mr. Garson: I was not objecting to my hon. friend's quoting from the newspaper; I was objecting to the substance of what he was saying which does not correctly represent my viewpoint on the matter. I must repudiate what he is quoting.

Mr. Speaker: That is the difficulty which arises when the opinion of someone outside the house is quoted with respect to what an hon. member has said in the house. That is what I am endeavouring to prevent.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is all subject to your approval. I just read a short paragraph and I shall continue with the closing paragraph from the Ottawa Citizen which I think will escape your ruling. It reads:

The world being what it is, there will always be an excuse to ask for emergency powers, whether the threat to Canada's security is real or fancied. This cannot be what parliament wants.

Here is one from the London Free Press of February 9 which I think is all right.

It is strange that Canada should be re-enacting wartime emergency powers at the same time Washington is freeing its economy from wartime controls.

The Emergency Powers Act, which was passed in Ottawa after the outbreak of the Korean conflict, runs out on May 31, and the government is asking that it be extended for another year. All opposition parties object to this, largely on the grounds that there is no definite emergency, and that the government has used the emergency powers for purposes that might well be served by regular legislative channels.

That is not editorial comment on the merits of this bill; it is a statement referring to opposition parties in the house.

Mr. Speaker: It is something in the editorial columns, but it is more or less a news item, and I do not think I should permit the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I thought it was quite free from the difficulty of comment from this or that member, and that it was a general statement. However, I will leave the matter and quote from a short paragraph which occurs later.

Mr. Sinnott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On three or four occasions you have requested the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) to refrain from reading from newspapers but he continues to do so. I would like the house rules adhered to.

Mr. Ferguson: Beauchesne, 3,444!

Mr. Speaker: I have never ruled that no extracts whatsoever could be read.

An hon. Member: He would not understand anyway.

Mr. Speaker: I think the house understands the rule.

Mr. Hees: Not the member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott).

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood does, and I will leave it with him.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I thought the hon. member for Springfield would have realized that I was trying very, very hard to fit myself into your ruling and read nothing to which you would object. There is just a short paragraph from the London Free Press which I think is all right. It is an expression of editorial opinion.

It would seem as though there is some wisdom in the opposition plea that emergency powers should only be granted in a real emergency, and there is considerable doubt whether the present "cold war" constitutes such an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, these extracts do not seem as popular as I had hoped they would be, and perhaps I will not read any more of them. I have read enough to show that there is quite a widespread feeling in the country that we are not just discussing a long word, "emergency", that does not mean anything to anybody, but that it does concern things which very importantly affect our day to day life.

I would like to make a few brief comments resulting from the extracts that I have read. I have only been in this house a short time, but even in the short time I have been here I sense a constant increase, almost subconscious perhaps, almost automatic perhaps, of executive power. I suppose this was inevitable when there is such an overwhelming majority as against the last parliament, when the majority was quite moderate and when I think once it fell to as little as five. Whatever the reason is, the change is there.

Perhaps what has impressed me as much as anything is the incident to which I was going to refer when you stopped me. It is the fact that a man as courteous and considerate as the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), conscious of his duty, should feel that this matter of emergency powers was not of sufficient importance to warrant him staying and listening to two members on our side of the house who, I think, are as competent as any two people in this house to discuss this all-important question. The very fact that the Prime Minister did not stay made me feel more than ever that we have reached a stage where it is assumed that you have the power and you hardly need to justify it at all. The government are so used to getting what they want.

Now I just want to spend a few minutes examining what need there is for this government to have these powers. I would like to know how many of us have actually taken the trouble to find out what power the government has, and I will confess that until I tried to prepare myself to make this short speech, and until I had read the Emergency Powers Act and what is much more important the Defence Production Act passed in 1951, I was not aware of the extent of the powers which the government had. At least I was not aware of them in any real detail.

I would like very briefly, and I know that this is not the first time this has come up, to refer members to a few of the chief powers contained in the Defence Production Act. After all, the emergencies we are thinking about are associated with war and defence. If in fact this Defence Production Act gives the most far-reaching, comprehensive and almost unlimited powers to the minister in connection with matters of defence, then I think it is very relevant to consider whether further powers need to be granted. Let me draw attention to a few of the powers which are contained in this Defence Production Act. I shall read just a few words to give you the flavour. Section 11 states:

> The minister shall examine into, organize, mobilize and conserve the resources of Canada contributory to, and the sources of supply of, defence supplies and the agencies and facilities available for the supply of the same . . .

Later on in the section these words appear:

> . . . and generally shall take steps to mobilize, conserve and co-ordinate all economic and industrial facilities in respect of defence supplies and defence projects and the supply or construction thereof.

I shall now read just part of section 14:

> The minister may, on behalf of His Majesty and subject to the provisions of this act, acquire, store, maintain and transport and sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of such materials or substances as may be designated by the governor in council as materials or substances essential to the needs of the community of which it is advisable to maintain stocks to safeguard against possible shortages . . .

Section 15 is a long section and I shall only read the beginning:

> The minister may, on behalf of His Majesty and subject to the provisions of this act,
> (a) buy or otherwise acquire, . . . supplies;
> (b) manufacture . . .;
> (c) construct or acquire defence projects . . .;
> (d) arrange for the performance of professional . . . services;
> (e) purchase or otherwise acquire, sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of real or personal property . . .;
> (f) make loans or advances . . .

And so on. Section 16 provides the money. The minister has a defence production revolving fund. Section 17 gives the minister wide powers to contract.

> The minister may . . . enter into contracts for the carrying out of anything he is authorized to do under section 14 . . .

Mr. Speaker: The bill before the house is the Emergency Powers Act and the hon. member is now discussing another act. I have no objection to him making brief reference to it, but I do not think he should continue further with that act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Well, with deference, Mr. Speaker, my argument is, as I shall seek to show, that these further powers are not necessary. I seek to show that partly by drawing attention to the very wide powers which the government has outside the Emergency Powers Act altogether.

Mr. Speaker: I might just stop the hon. member there and say that I thought he had quoted quite extensively from the other act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wish to make only one further reference and I shall put this act away. I point out that there is embodied in the Defence Production Act what was formerly called the essential materials act, under which additional wide powers are given. I will say no more about that matter.

There is, of course, the "offences" section about which I wish to say a word. It is a section which I suppose governments must always have, with the ugly word "guilty", and appropriate punishments are provided.

All these powers were given by parliament to enable the urgent problem of defence to be dealt with. I have just stated the real purpose for which they were given. I defy anyone who will read the Defence Production Act to suggest any power which is lacking to carry out defence measures—short of the case of the great emergency which would bring in the War Measures Act—under the Defence Production Act, of which we have all approved and under which we have given these wide powers to the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe). He is very good at getting powers and we are very good at giving them to him, but it should not become a universal habit.

There is another thing I should like to mention. We are now eight years from the war. One would have thought that the time had come when transitional emergency powers might be at an end. If we extend them this year it seems to me we are almost slipping into the situation to which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) referred earlier, we are almost recognizing them as the normal accompaniment of the situation in which we are now and which is likely to continue for a good many years. In other words, if we are willing to let them go through this year it would be much more competent for the government to say next year, "You did it last year, why don't you do it again now?"

I want to say a word about the original speech delivered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), in which he gave the reasons for the passage of this act. I must say, with deference to him, that I did not think he gave us many reasons which were very effective. It was a long speech. I did not count the words, but it looked to me like several thousand. I did not find any very convincing reasons. He did one thing which surprised me. He laid great stress on the fact that the orders in council would be tabled in parliament. Well, does the minister think there is much significance in that? Does the minister think that when these things come to parliament as faits accomplis the opposition is going to be able to do anything about them? It is really secret legislation.

Mr. Garson: That is up to the opposition.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is secret legislation passed without discussion and without the public having any knowledge of what is happening. Surely the minister does not seriously ask us to think it is much help when, some time later, these orders in council are tabled. I wonder if there is any case on record in any democratic assembly, in which the government has a substantial majority, where the action of the government was voided? In other words, it seems to me it is just the old business of locking the door after the horse is stolen, except that we would not even be able to lock the door. We would just know that the horse was stolen. As I say, I find it difficult to believe that the minister was serious about that.

The minister and the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) have spoken already about the War Measures Act and this act. I must say the words are extraordinarily similar. I appreciate the differences as set out by the minister; nevertheless there is a broad similarity. Both acts start with words that are so familiar in any act with broad powers:

> The governor in council may do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations, as he may by reason of the existing international emergency deem necessary . . .

I am not going on with that. The powers are broad, and if I may say so the minister seemed to go back again and again to the idea that we should give him great credit because the government refrains from invoking the full powers of the War Measures Act but is taking this instalment instead. My argument is that it does not need either. The Defence Production Act gives ample powers, and if a real emergency comes the War Measures Act is there. We do not need this in-between measure at all.

At page 2093 of Hansard for February 19, 1953, the minister went over the orders in council that were passed, and they were trivial enough, as he said. Most of them were repealing previous ones. There was nothing of substance there. I think the minister will admit that. Indeed, one of the great arguments the minister makes is that the government has done really very little so there is nothing to worry about, but it is desirable nevertheless to have these powers.

There is one other thing the minister said to which I take great exception. At page 2093 of Hansard for February 19, 1953, he says:

> They are powers which are taken in an emergency to deal with matters which must be dealt with more rapidly than parliament can deal with them whether it is in session or prorogued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I seriously question those words. The suggestion there is that parliament is not competent to act promptly in an emergency; that it would not recognize an emergency when it saw one. My recollection is that in 1940 when real war descended upon Britain, in a matter of hours they passed unprecedented legislation giving the government full power over the economic life of the country. That is my recollection. If I were better informed about the proceedings in this house I am sure I could adduce instances just as striking. I do not know whether the minister quite intended to say that, but to me it is a rather shocking suggestion that the government must have powers independent of this parliament, even if this parliament is sitting, because this parliament cannot be trusted to have enough sense to exercise its powers. Therefore they have to give them up to people who are competent to exercise them. I resent that suggestion very much.

It seems to me the suggestion makes parliament a laughing-stock. We do not stand too high in public esteem now, and I am sometimes humiliated to think that our position is not what it should be. I think our position would be degraded still further if the people believed we had accepted that view. They would say "you accepted that; you voted for that, did you, after the minister had said that even when you were in session you were not competent to act promptly?"

The other argument the minister made—I am sure he made it with great sincerity—was when he said, "well, just look at us; do you think we could ever do anything wrong?" I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if this government could be sold at its own valuation of itself I think all the members of it would emerge rich men. I do not know that the rest of us are obliged to take that view. One of the worries is that there are people who say, "well, these are men you like; you know they are men of standing; you know they will never do anything wrong." I think it is in circumstances of that kind that the most foolish sort of legislation can be passed.

I am going to go back six or seven years and remind hon. members of something which was done by a government—some of the same members are in this government now—most of the members of which we knew and liked and in our private life respected. They did, however, take high-handed action of the kind which I think, in retrospect, they must question themselves. Actually they did a gross injustice to innocent men. I am going to read a paragraph or two from a speech made in this house on the spy trials by a former deskmate of mine, whose death we all regret, the late A. L. Smith. I do feel that when we are asked to pass legislation on the grounds of, "Oh well, you know to whom you are giving the power; they will never misuse it", the matter should be investigated. The minister gave two reasons for passing this measure. He said that the government will scarcely ever use it and, second, if they do use it they will always use it right, if that is good grammar.

I want to read briefly from a speech delivered by Mr. A. L. Smith. I read, first of all, from Hansard of March 19, 1946, page 83. I should like to remind those who did not have the privilege of knowing Mr. Smith that he was a man of great experience in legal matters, and he spoke with weight in this house. He said:

> What has happened historically is this. On September 5 last, or early in September some time, the Prime Minister became apprised of some information in the hands of a man who was an employee of some sort in the Russian embassy here. The only point I make about that is this: That information has been in the hands of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for a period of over five months.

Then I read from page 85 of Hansard for the same date:

> Prior to February 15 certain people were detained. In short, they were arrested. They were arrested without warrant, and they were arrested not because, as in a case under the Criminal Code, as the Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand) well knows, they were actively caught committing a crime. They were arrested under the special provisions, if I may say so, contained in the order in council which I have just read.

I wish to remind the house now, in case I forget, that my recollection is that of the eighteen who were charged and who were treated in the way I propose to set out, seven were acquitted. I think the figures are eighteen and eleven. To continue reading from Mr. Smith:

> The fact that people are arrested does not normally mean very much. People are arrested every day. I have been arrested myself. As a matter of fact, it was not a very serious charge and I got out of it without any difficulty. But I really know what the thing means. When you are arrested you cannot do what you want to do. You do what the policeman tells you, or else. That is the position of a man when he is arrested. But here is where we really start to differ with the normal procedure. These people were held incommunicado. What does this mean? We all know it means that they were not allowed to communicate with anyone, and I am quite sure their movements, their letter-writing and all that sort of thing, would receive excellent supervision, not to use a stronger word.

The next thing I wish to read from Mr. Smith is this, at page 87:

> Just what has happened? We read in the newspapers that when Mrs. Woikin, the lady who came from Blaine Lake in Saskatchewan, appeared before the magistrate she was quite distracted and greatly disturbed, and endeavoured to plead guilty. I do not know Magistrate Strike but he must be an awfully good chap, because he refused to accept that plea. That was the physical and mental condition of this woman after having gone through experiences which I can perhaps better imagine than speak about. I am not going to use my imagination, but I have some idea of the things that run through the minds of people who are incarcerated in lonely silence.

And here is the last thing I wish to read:

> May I close by saying just this. It is true that we have had this commission. It is true that persons have been suspected of crime because, as the Prime Minister indicated, the documents pointed to them. It is true that they have been brought before the commission without warning, without protection, without an opportunity to see their families or to get legal advice. In six months, Mr. Speaker, this spy scare will be forgotten. Unfortunately our people are a bit too apathetic about matters of this kind. But I say to you, sir, that during your lifetime and mine the people of this country will always regret and will never live down the fact that we threw aside and abrogated the rights and liberties of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I have thought it right to read those excerpts because I feel earnestly that—although happily there are some signs of public awakening—the public have grown apathetic to these things. I think they should be reminded of exactly what has happened and, as I say, what has been done by men who were prepared to say, just as is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson): "Look at us, see the kind of men we are, and don't be afraid to hand us power."

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that I think the government has all the power it needs. It has the Defence Production Act, with the wide powers that I have attempted briefly to indicate. It has in reserve—if the terrible emergency really comes—the War Measures Act, and in the meantime it has parliament. I do not think there is any need for anything else. In my opinion no valid reason has been given.

I feel disappointed that we are asked to pass this measure again. Perhaps the best one can say is that if this legislation is forced down our throats again, we at least have the satisfaction of believing that we have made some impression on public opinion. I hope it will go on spreading with a kind of chain reaction until the public wakes up to the realities of this thing.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) that I think this debate would have been considerably shorter had he not risen this afternoon and made a rather provocative speech. He said he had to make a speech because otherwise he could not reply; but I believe the very fact that he moved the second reading of the bill would have been sufficient to give him a right to reply. I think the speech he made when he initiated this afternoon's debate could have been made perhaps at its conclusion, if he wished to make it.

Mr. MacInnis: Or not at all.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, or not at all; but if he wished to make it, I think it could have been made at the conclusion of the debate. In that way I think the business of the house would have been facilitated. I am not one given to lecturing other people, because I know my own failings at times. But I do say this. The ministers who have been most successful in the past in getting their estimates and their bills through were the ministers who were least provocative in introducing their measures. I mentioned Mr. Motherwell the other afternoon. He comes back to my mind in that connection. When Mr. Motherwell was dealing with his estimates, hon. members used to come down in the house looking forward to a rather pleasant afternoon, because in the pleasantest possible way he would talk about everything under the sun except the matters in his estimates, and he would get them through more rapidly than would any other minister in the cabinet. I remember this distinctly. I think it is not a bad bit of advice for one to give a minister at the present time.

We are opposing this measure at this time, as the minister stated this afternoon. We are not doing it because we feel that, as a minority, we should have, in 1951 or 1952, imposed our will upon the majority or upon the government. I think we have a right to give our support to a measure because we believe that measure is going to be used in a manner in which we expect it to be used. Equally we have a right to withdraw our support when we see, after the experience of several years, that the measure has not been used as we anticipated it would be used.

We anticipated—and indeed we believed in 1951 that this was largely implied in the remarks in support of the bill from the government side of the house—that it would be used to protect the people of this country from the rising prices of foodstuffs and other commodities and particularly in relation to sky-rocketing rents which were then beginning to afflict the people of Canada and which have risen much more since that time. For those reasons we gave our support initially to this measure. Because our hopes have not been fulfilled, we withdraw our support at this time. In other words our support was given because we believed that something was going to be done. When that something was not done I believe—without being in any way accused of trying to impose our minority will upon the majority of this parliament—we are equally bound to withdraw that support.

Having in view what the government has failed to do under this measure, I cannot anticipate any emergency arising as to which, under the various statutes that have already been mentioned this afternoon, the government would not have all the power necessary to deal with any situation that might arise. If a situation arose with which the government had not the power to deal, then the War Measures Act is there—if it is insurrection, civil strife, war or apprehended war—and parliament can always be called. The minister may say: "But what is going to happen if parliament is dissolved and we have two months without a parliament?"

I admit immediately to the minister that, on the surface, that would seem to create a difficulty; and I may tell him quite frankly that we have discussed this measure from that angle. But we believe that, under the statutes that have been enumerated this afternoon—and I am not going to put them on the record again—the government has the power to do all that is necessary. One statute that has not been mentioned is the sedition act under which the government can deal with acts of sedition quite adequately at any time. Then of course there is something which I know the government does not wish to rely on but which is there for an emergency. They have always the power inherent in the constitution to deal with matters that arise under peace, order and good government.

Consequently I do not think the government has made out a case for the continuance of this act under the conditions that we have today or that may be apprehended in the future. It seems to me the only thing which could happen in the future which would involve those powers, the greater powers, is war or apprehended war. I do not think we are likely to have insurrection or civil strife in this country. Indeed I sincerely hope not.

A great deal has been made of a secret order in council. I referred to it the other afternoon, and I said I had neither seen it nor read it. That is the truth. I was searching my memory to recall if I knew anything about this measure which I had forgotten, which was passed on July 4, 1951. My good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) returned yesterday, and he reminded me that in the autumn of 1951 he put a question on the order paper, and the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) approached me and asked if I would suggest to the hon. member that it would be in the public interest not to press that question. I suggested to the Prime Minister that he see my hon. friend at that time.

Well, I have no knowledge even now of what that order contains, yet I do know that it had to do with the matter of external security. I must leave it at that because that is the extent of my knowledge of the measure. I would like to say that because I may have left the impression the other afternoon that I had no knowledge such an order existed. My memory was not as good on Tuesday afternoon as it usually is, and I want to say that I did know in a general way something about the order in council.

I do not like the idea of secret orders in council under any circumstances. I admit there are occasions when the government must act with the knowledge that to give all the information to the press openly would defeat a desirable national objective. I admit that immediately.

Of course this is not the first time orders in council have been passed that were put secretly in the drawer. I would remind my hon. friends to my immediate right that on December 31 of either 1931 or 1932—I am speaking entirely from memory without having looked it up this afternoon—Right Hon. R. B. Bennett passed two orders in council one of which permitted the banks to publish balance sheets that were substantially false, in other words to value securities at a level that was not warranted by the situation that then existed, and the same thing was done for life insurance companies. Those two orders in council came to the attention of this House of Commons. I remember when the Right Hon. Mr. Ilsley, Mr. Justice Ilsley now, and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) raised the matter a couple of years later and brought the situation to light.

I did not like that being done. The contention was made that that was done in the public interest, to prevent a panic and a run on one of the great banks—I am not going to name it—and to reassure people who had held policies particularly in one of the great insurance companies, and again I am not going to name it.

But whether or not these orders in council were justified is not what I am discussing. I am merely saying that I do not like the idea of secret orders in council, and the emergency powers bill now before us, approving an extension of the act, would give the right to pass such orders in council, that is to say secret and confidential orders, and I do not like the idea of it.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask him this. My recollection of what happened is perhaps not perfect. He referred to the returns as false returns. I wonder whether he would alter that. I think they were allowed to use arbitrary valuations.

Mr. Coldwell: I will change the word from "false" to "incorrect". I think that is the correct statement.

Mr. Knowles: They were still secret orders in council.

Mr. Coldwell: Never mind the secret orders in council. The fact was that the balance sheets that the banks and insurance companies were authorized to publish valued certain securities at incorrect and inflated figures, and if my use of "false" appears to be too strong, then I will ask the hon. gentleman to accept my statement that the balance sheets or the valuations were incorrect. I think I am justified in saying that.

Mr. Ferguson: May I interject for a moment? I have a fair knowledge of what the hon. member is speaking about. I think the hon. member would be on surer ground if he said they were correct values on that date. The values were there, but they were not the market values of the securities, because the market values of those days were not the true values of the securities.

Mr. Coldwell: I have always understood that the market value a person could get for his security was the value of it on a given date, and I must leave it at that.

Mr. Ferguson: What the hon. member is discussing is a very serious thing, and I can prove what took place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member must not make a speech.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not think we need to argue the point. My point was that these were secret orders in council, and indeed it may have been contended that they were in the public interest; but they were more substantially in the interests of the institutions that were protected from runs on them at that particular time. They had an element of hope for the future in them, if that will satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. Ferguson: That is fine.

Mr. Coldwell: What I was also going to say was this. Parliament can always be called to deal with any matter that the statutes at the present time do not give the government the right to deal with in respect to powers that are granted under the war emergency measure; and because the powers we granted in 1951 have not been used as we hoped they would be used we feel that parliament is not justified in extending them now.

I was interested in the historical argument this afternoon between the Minister of Justice and the Leader of the Opposition. My impression of the reign of Charles I was that the main problem was not how money was spent but how money was raised. The right to levy taxes formed the principal point of contention between Charles I and his parliaments. However, that is by the way; but I always like to have history more or less correct when it is referred to, and I think that is really the historical position. I merely want to say, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to vote against the second reading of this measure if and when a vote is called.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Prime Minister speaks now will he close the debate?

Mr. Knowles: No; he did not move the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It will be the Minister of Justice.

Mr. St. Laurent: I would not ask to intervene at this moment, but it so happens that there are other requirements that will prevent me from being in the house this evening, and it may very well be that this debate will conclude before the end of the day.

I wish to take only a very few minutes. I find it fortunate that the debate today is quite objective, and that opinions are being expressed as to the desirability or otherwise of there being this continuation of the Emergency Powers Act. I suppose if we were on the other side of the house, and had been on the other side of the house in 1945 and since, we would have been repeatedly, in 1945 and since, predicting dire consequences for parliamentary institutions and for the Canadian constitution by the existence of such emergency powers. But I do not think anyone would contend seriously that our parliamentary institutions today are any weaker than they were before 1945, or that our constitution is not on as firm a base or not as fully respected now as it was in 1945.

It is, I think, a legitimate part of our parliamentary institutions that there should be criticism of anything out of the ordinary that is proposed or recommended by the government, and it is wise that there should be constant reminders in this national forum, from which reports go out that help to shape the opinions of people throughout the country, and constant warnings that we must never consent to abandon the democratic forms that have been won, through centuries, for the common people in our free democracies.

But we in the government have the responsibility of watching over the safety and security of the state. We hope we will have no more occasion to use emergency powers than we have had in the past, just as we hope we will have no occasion to use those forces being built up by ourselves and the 13 nations associated with us in the North Atlantic alliance. Nevertheless times are such that we do not dare do without the upbuilding of those forces. We do not dare do without the power and responsibility to do such things as might be required for the safety of the state.

Reference has been made to the words of the constitution—"act for the peace, order and good government of the country". Well, the government cannot do that. That is a general power given to the Canadian parliament. The government can act only if it has a delegation from parliament to do so. And this emergency power is a delegation by parliament to do that which might be necessary for the peace, order and good government of the country.

We hope there will be no occasion to use it. But we feel that, having the responsibility of watching over the security of the country in these troubled times, the power to act promptly and effectively should exist. No one can challenge the right and propriety of any hon. member at this time to say that in his opinion the situation is not sufficiently grave to warrant or to require this measure, whatever may have been his views in previous years. We have become a little bit inured to the existence of the cold war, and there are moments when we are inclined to regard the situation as fairly calm and stable. I think that was the frame of mind of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) when, speaking in the house on February 20, he said:

> We are asked to declare that it is expedient that emergency legislation of this kind should be re-enacted. Not one argument has been placed before us to demonstrate why it is expedient. Not one illustration of any kind has been submitted to the members of this house to indicate why the government needs this emergency legislation, and could not deal with any situation that might arise by the ordinary processes of parliament.

Then three weeks later, on March 13, as reported at page 2952 of Hansard, he expressed this warning:

> These are grave and serious hours. The news that comes to us from Europe today removes any suggestion that we are in a comfortable period where there are no great dangers in front of us. The events of yesterday and today, the cold-blooded murder of British airmen and the interference with the flight of a civilian aircraft going into Berlin, indicate the extent of the danger which is there all the time.

And it is there all the time. We are becoming used to living under this threat. Nevertheless the threat is there; and we believe that, just as it is necessary to continue to recommend to parliament the appropriation of more than two billions of dollars to provide for our part of the strength that is being built up by ourselves and our associates, because of that threat, likewise we feel it is advisable to have the power which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) implied might exist in the government to do those things required for peace, order and good government.

This cannot be done without a delegation of power; and we think that the delegation of power does not destroy the power of parliament and does not diminish the power of parliament, but rather that it is an exercise of the power of parliament that the circumstances still justify and still make it prudent to have in existence.

Hon. members have said: Tell us the circumstances in which this power would be used. Well, if we could do that we would not need emergency powers. It is just because we cannot foresee what will happen and what may arise, or what may have to be dealt with, that the emergency power was granted in the first place and, in our view, continues to be a proper precaution to take under existing circumstances.

There have been references to a secret order. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), the leader of the C.C.F. group (Mr. Coldwell) and I think the leader of the Social Credit group (Mr. Low) have said that they had not seen the order. That is quite true. We had to pass the order, and take the responsibility for passing it. But I mentioned what it was. I am not sure whether I spoke to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar or whether, in his absence, I spoke to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, I did mention to one or other of them, as I mentioned to the Leader of the Opposition and to the leader of the Social Credit party, what the order dealt with, and what the order that was going to be tabled, showing that it had been exempted from publication, referred to.

I did not feel at that time, nor was it suggested to me by any of the three of them, that I should ask them to take the responsibility of considering the order. However, it is an order which is a part of what we are doing, in company with our associates, for the common defence of ourselves and of them. Without it, it would leave a gap in the concerted arrangements for their security as well as for ours. If any one, or all three, of the leaders of those parties would like to see the order, confidentially, I have no objection. As a matter of fact I would feel happier if they had seen it. But I did not think it was proper to put that burden upon them unless they suggested that they should share the responsibility which was ours.

That order has been in existence since July of 1951. It is enabling us to do what all the other governments and associates in this North Atlantic treaty alliance are doing. We have been doing it to our satisfaction and to their satisfaction. May I not ask if any hon. member in this house has had any indication from any source whatever that as a consequence of that order there has been any disturbance to the freedom or the conduct of our Canadian citizens? It is an order that was passed under the Emergency Powers Act. Because it was passed under the Emergency Powers Act it cannot have to do with censorship, it cannot have to do with the taking of property, and it cannot have to do with the detention of individuals.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) says that the word "arrest" is qualified by the words "except as part of proceedings under section 3". When the act was introduced we did not think that the word "arrest" was required because arrest is nothing but detention that commences simultaneously with the arrest. However, that view was not accepted by some hon. members in the house who are most competent lawyers and who felt that the word "detention" was not enough to exclude arbitrary arrest. There was a provision worked out to exclude arbitrary arrest. The only arrest that can be made is as a part of court proceedings.

That being the situation I can only repeat to the Leader of the Opposition that I would be only too glad to show him this order, confidentially, because if it were not a secret and confidential order it would not be effective, it would not serve the purpose for which it was passed. I would be glad to show it to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) if he felt that he wished to see it. Personally if I were not a member of the government I would prefer not to see it. All those who have anything to do with it would prefer that there be no occasion for having orders of that kind, but we do have to assume our responsibility.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

The hon. gentleman referred to the events of 1946. I had something to do with the events of 1946, and I think I have as much concern about my own freedom, my own civil liberties and the civil liberties of my fellow citizens as the average citizen. I have never felt that any apology was required for the proceedings that were taken to break up the spy ring that was discovered at that time. Views may differ upon that. It may seem to some that the absolute inviolability of the rights of the individual should be preferred to the security and safety of the state, but I cannot agree. There do come times when it is necessary to do things that you regret to have to do but that seem to be required for the safety of the state.

Fortunately when I joined the government it was no longer necessary to order any further internments. I know that a very substantial portion of the burden that my predecessor as Minister of Justice carried from the outbreak of the war until his premature death arose out of the responsibility he had to take to apply the defence of Canada regulations and order the detention of persons upon suspicion.

That is something we are not brought up to do. That is something we shudder at having to consider. Nevertheless there was not much sabotage accompanying the outbreak of the war, and I think our security officials and the R.C.M.P. are doing a very effective job to suppress or prevent disastrous sabotage in the event of the outbreak of another war. All those who are parties to the North Atlantic alliance share with each other top secret information because of our confidence that there are measures being taken for the proper protection against or the anticipation of sabotage and espionage.

It is unfortunate to have to live in a world where that has to be done. It is unfortunate that we cannot feel that everybody in the world is going to behave in a manner befitting a Christian gentleman. But that is not the world we are living in. There are certain things that we are reluctantly forced to do if we attempt to discharge the responsibilities that happen to be ours.

Some have said to me, "Why do you not say that if the existence of this secret order is objected to we will repeal it?" As long as I have any responsibility as a member of a government I will not take that position. Whatever may be the criticism we have to bear, if what is required seems to be required to discharge an appropriate responsibility, I believe we should discharge it.

I remember that when the question of conscription arose, for several months I had to bear the onus of having done something that most of the people in my province thought was wrong because I could not tell them why I had done it. In 1945, when the fighting had ceased, I was then in a position where I could use the information which had motivated my conduct and explain to them why I had acted as I did. The response was satisfactory and I felt that I was vindicated by the applause which greeted the explanation that I gave at that time. But for months my repute was not very high among the people of my race. If I had to do it again, I would do it again. I think one must do what he thinks is right. One must accept the consequences. One may make mistakes, but if he thinks that what he is required to do by his responsibility is right, he should do it without fear of the criticism that may be the outcome of such conduct.

I know that our people do not like secret orders in council. I do not, and I know that our people do not. I know that some of them will be worried about what may be in this secret order. If the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the C.C.F. group and the leader of the Social Credit group were to say that they would look at it, it would mean some sharing of the responsibility and might be some reassurance to the public that what is there is not a threat to the things which we hold so precious. We have no right to ask anyone to share that responsibility.

That order has to continue in existence or we have to go to our associates and say we are not going to do our part to discharge the responsibility that has been assumed by the 14 countries of the North Atlantic treaty. That is not something any member in this house wants to have done.

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) a question? I followed with great interest his explanation with regard to this particular secret order in council; but our contention, of course, is that, whatever this secret order might have been, a similar one could be passed. However, in regard to what the Prime Minister has just said, I thought we had made our position clear. If not, I ask this question now. Would it not be possible to have an act which authorized the government to pass such measures as would be required to carry out their security or other definite requirements in relation to the mutual obligations of the North Atlantic treaty or other matters? I ask this question in relation to our repeated proposition that we would like to have a specific order defining certain authority without disclosing what that might be, instead of a general thing under which this is done. Obviously this legislation was not passed originally in contemplation of the enactment of that secret order.

Mr. St. Laurent: No, and that just illustrates my point. When this legislation was originally contemplated, I may say, we asked the law officers to make it just as restrictive as would be sufficient to meet unforeseen circumstances. They told us we would have to make it very sweeping or we could not be sure that it would suffice for anything we might have to do under it but which we were not able to forecast at that time. That is the reason for its sweeping terms.

I am not quarrelling with the law officers but they do use very sweeping language so they may not at any time be open to reproach because what they did was not broad enough to meet a situation which might develop. Not later than yesterday I was considering, with one of the senior officials, whether we could not have something else that would not appear to be so sweeping. Well, so far we have not come to the conclusion that we can take the risk—and it does involve a risk—of something less extensive; because we are not in a position to foresee how and when and for what purpose the power may have to be used. It has been very little used in the past and I hope it will not have to be used at all, just as we all hope that these armed forces that are being built up by the North Atlantic nations will not have to be used at all. However, they exist, and without them we would not feel the security we do feel because of their effect upon world affairs.

I am not complaining of the criticism, of the warnings, of the appeals to the public to watch against the building up of any autocratic machine. Here we are appropriating over $2 billion a year just to ward off any possibility that we, or our successors, may have to be subject to any regime of that kind. But the warnings are frequently couched in words that remind one somewhat of the young shepherd's cry of "wolf!" when there was no wolf.

It is not advisable to exaggerate dangers. At the end of this year, or when we come back, whether we are on this side or the gentlemen opposite are on this side, or if some gentleman sitting farther down from the Speaker's chair occupies my place, I do not think any of those Canadians would misuse the powers that were given for the purpose of enabling them, if circumstances should require, to act promptly and effectively for our common safety.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question? If the government insists that this measure must be continued as set out in the bill before the house, why should it not be for only one year?

Mr. St. Laurent: It is only for one year.

Mr. Green: No. The provision is that it may be extended for a further year simply by an address to both houses, which means that there can be no questioning but merely set speeches in one debate.

Mr. St. Laurent: I am sure there would be no objection, if that were satisfactory to the house. What we feel is that the legislation should be in existence; but there are sufficiently frequent sessions of parliament to renew it from year to year as long as it may have to be in existence. If it were more satisfactory to have it only for one year, without any statement about how it can be further continued, there would be no objection. That is a matter of form and procedure that can be dealt with. But I understand that the real objection is to its existence at all beyond May 31, 1953.

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. St. Laurent: That is the real objection. We have given, perhaps, not reasons but just fears; and there have been newspapers which have said that this is just the result of fear. It is. It is just the result of fear that makes us recommend these huge appropriations for our defence services. Perhaps we are too fearful, but most of us prefer to continue even though the inspiration may be fear of what might happen, though that is coupled with the hope that it will not happen.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Expiration of sections 1 to 3.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, in the debate on second reading the point was made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra that this bill departs from the form of extension contemplated for the present year. When the bill was first enacted in 1951 it provided for extension after the end of one year by addresses of both houses of parliament. Last year the bill was extended for one year by that method. On various occasions during the debate on the resolution stage and on second reading, something has been made—or an attempt has been made to do so—by the Minister of Justice of the fact that more was not done in 1952 in the way of opposition to the bill. One reason was that there was only one opportunity. The address simply provided one opportunity for debate; and when that passed rather unexpectedly or suddenly, the opportunity was gone for the entire session.

The house has now approved—in my opinion erroneously—the idea of an extension for one year. With respect, Mr. Chairman, I urge that if this section is to be approved in the committee in any form at all, it should not be approved in a form that contemplates still further extensions of the extraordinary powers conferred by this bill upon the governor in council.

This section does two things. In its present form it does extend the life of these powers for another year, until May 31, 1954. That was the effect of the resolution which the house approved and which paved the way for the introduction of this bill. But this section does not stop there. It goes further and provides for a still further extension—and lays down a method by which it can be achieved—beyond May 31, 1954. At the various stages when this measure has been under debate already this session we were told in the most soothing terms that the government had no thought whatever of extending these powers beyond a year. Now when we see the bill, Mr. Chairman, and in this committee have an opportunity of examining it in detail, we find that the government's intentions with respect to the extension of these powers are not nearly so innocent as the house was led to suppose by the statements made on behalf of the government.

The extension is there, of course, to May 31, 1954. But the government are preparing for further extensions, and they are preparing to make them in the most simple and expeditious manner possible, and one that will admit of the barest minimum of debate in the House of Commons. We of the official opposition are just as strongly opposed to the extension of these powers for one day as we have been at any time. We are absolutely opposed to it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, just prior to the dinner recess I was drawing attention to the fact that the bill, as we examine the provisions of section 1, goes further than the terms of the resolution. That resolution which was approved by the house, and which was the forerunner of the present Bill No. 279, simply proposed the extension of this act for the period of one year to May 31, 1954. Now we find on examining clause 1 that the bill does more than that. It not only extends the effective operation of this bill to May 31, 1954 but it goes on to contemplate and provide for further extension beyond that date.

We have been told from time to time in this debate, Mr. Chairman, that the government were simply proposing the one-year extension and were not asking this house to commit itself in any particular beyond that date. If that be the case, Mr. Chairman, then there is in my submission no justification for making provision in this bill for further extension at all; and there is no reason, in my submission, why this additional provision should be allowed to remain in the bill.

We had experience last year of the continuance of this measure, with the extraordinary and virtually absolute powers which it confers upon the government, when we had opportunity of considering it on only one occasion. That is the fundamental flaw, it seems to me, in a provision of the kind we have here, that the bill may be extended simply upon addresses passed by both houses. That means there is only one stage of debate, only one opportunity. It is a sudden death matter as far as that one stage is concerned, and if I may be permitted once more to refer to a certain occasion that has already been referred to several times, I will assure the Minister of Justice that if it had not been such a sudden death matter last year he would have had his full opportunity of seeing divisions, and more than one of them.

This year this matter has come before the house in what I think is in procedure the proper way, namely a resolution followed by the introduction of a bill which is open to debate at several stages. Therefore I propose that section 1 of the bill should be amended; that the new clause 4 should have all the words including and following the word "except" stricken out so the section cannot then be made the excuse for going beyond the one-year extension.

In making that observation, Mr. Chairman, I hope no one will think that we on this side of the house are receding one iota from the position we have stoutly taken throughout this debate, that there should not be any extension at all now; that this measure is completely unjustifiable as an extension of those vast powers under present conditions. But so far as the point I am now dealing with is concerned, this rider that has been tacked on to the one-year extension should, in my opinion, be stricken out.

I will so move, Mr. Chairman, or if the government wishes to have someone over there move that Bill No. 279 be amended by striking out all the words in clause 1 thereof after the words "one thousand nine hundred and fifty-four" I shall be content. That would leave the clause confined simply to this extension to May 31, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-four.

Mr. Garson: I have listened with a great deal of interest to my hon. friend's remarks, and I think he will agree that all this present bill does is to extend the act for one year more. It is true that provision is made for a method of further extension, but there is no further extension at this time. In order that there should be no doubt as to our bona fides in this matter we are quite prepared to accept the amendment which my hon. friend has suggested; and if my colleague the Minister of Public Works would so move we might have both clauses 1 and 2 of the bill amended accordingly, which would mean that section 4 of the Emergency Powers Act would read:

Sections one to three of this act expire on the thirty-first day of May, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-four.

The remainder of the wording would be stricken out. Then in part II clause 2 would read:

Sections 1 to 3 expire on the 31st day of May, 1954.

The remainder of the section would be stricken out.

Mr. Knowles: On that point, since the Minister of Justice has just drawn attention to the fact that in clause 2 the reference to sections 1 to 3 and the 31st day of May, 1954 are in numerals rather than in words, I should like him to explain why it is in numerals in one place and in words in the other.

Mr. Garson: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will recall that at one time we had quite a lengthy colloquy with regard to the method by which the Revised Statutes of Canada are being drafted. The necessity for having part II in this bill arises from the fact that we have to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada at the same time that we amend the statute, and that in the Revised Statutes of Canada we are adopting the very sensible procedure of using numerals instead of spelling out the numbers in words.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Are these amendments agreed to?

Amendments agreed to.

Sections 1 and 2, as amended, agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Bill reported on division.

The Chairman: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Garson (for Mr. St. Laurent) moved that the bill be read a third time.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, very briefly on this motion for third reading I wish to set forth, not by way of restatement but rather of re-emphasis, the reasons for our opposition to this measure. The matter has been debated at all stages, and I have no wish to repeat the very sound and numerous arguments advanced from this side of the house against the measure.

Nothing the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said this afternoon removed any of the objections to the bill. Undoubtedly he was at his soothing best in his speech this afternoon. Unlike the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), in the contributions he made to the debate at various stages, the Prime Minister appeared to be seeking to avoid being provocative. I believe he did his best to make the house feel that this was not a very serious matter, and that hon. members should be content to put their full trust in the government.

We are not prepared to legislate on trust after that fashion. In the first place we say there exists today no such emergency as justifies either the invoking of the powers set out in the War Measures Act or the extension of the very wide and virtually absolute powers conferred by this bill upon the governor in council.

This afternoon the Minister of Justice was at pains, in a repetition of an attempt put forward frequently, and always in futility, to make it appear that, after all, the measure is not so very sweeping. Well, I simply leave it to hon. members to compare this measure with the War Measures Act, and they will see that, with the exception of arrest, detention, deportation and censorship, there is no difference in the measures. The powers, with those exceptions, conferred by this bill upon the governor in council are just as sweeping and just as absolute as the virtually unlimited powers conferred upon the governor in council by the War Measures Act, and which were exercised by the government during the second world war.

We say to this parliament that nothing in the present situation could possibly justify such an abdication by this sovereign parliament of its powers in favour of a group of people we call the government. We say the whole approach to this matter has been unparliamentary. The Prime Minister this afternoon, again in soothing terms, asked us to believe that, after all, the government was preserving, as he said, the forms of parliament; and he said no one would suggest at all that our parliamentary institutions in Canada are in danger, or that there is any danger to the constitution.

Well, it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister was not following the course of the debate more closely, because that is precisely what we in the opposition have been saying about the measure; that it is of a kind that strikes at the very foundation of our whole parliamentary system. We say this measure is of a kind that strikes at the foundations of the constitution of this country, because if you accept the fact that an emergency exists, then under the Nolan decision by the privy council a year ago it follows that all parliament needs to do is to say that a national emergency exists, and then it remains for parliament to take over virtually all powers, regardless of whether they are of the provinces or of the dominion. Then, with a measure like this, those powers virtually flow to the governor in council.

So if we give legislative sanction to this bill in its present form we are saying for another year that this government may enjoy virtually untrammelled powers, powers that cannot be challenged in the courts, powers that will be beyond challenge by parliament—certainly beyond challenge by parliament until it meets in 1954—and beyond challenge by the provinces, regardless of the extent to which the government, in the exercise of these powers, may trespass upon the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the provinces.

All those things are possible under the bill. It is not enough to have a statement by the Prime Minister saying, "Oh, these things are not likely to happen unless circumstances arise which we cannot adequately foresee and cannot sufficiently define now". Well, we need not worry about the coming of some supreme emergency, because that situation could be taken care of in the same way the situation was met in September, 1939. We therefore need not have any fear about that supreme peril arising while parliament is not in session. We say again, and say with all possible emphasis, that we do not believe in vesting these powers in the government, at the expense of the powers of parliament and at the expense of the powers of the provinces under the constitution.

We do not believe powers should be given to the government to legislate by order in council, even while parliament is in session. That is what it has been doing from the time of the enactment of this measure two years ago. It mattered not whether parliament was in session; the government went ahead and legislated by order in council.

The essence of the parliamentary system is surely this, that the elected representatives of the people make laws that are to be binding upon the people, and make them in public so the public may see how those laws are made and may criticize them. It is surely the very antithesis of the parliamentary method that laws should be made in secret and, in cases such as the one referred to, and admitted this afternoon by the Prime Minister, have these secret laws binding upon the people of this country, who are expected to know the laws. Yet even the House of Commons does not know what that law is, a law that is just as binding upon us and upon all the people of Canada as any measure enacted in parliament in the proper constitutional and parliamentary manner.

The Prime Minister this afternoon asked us to believe that this was necessary. He pointed to NATO, as though that were some precedent that should lead this parliament into the vesting of these untrammelled powers in the government. That is no precedent for this measure of parliamentary suicide.

On the contrary, whatever is necessary to be done in that respect can be done by parliament. The day is long past when it can be said that the summoning of parliament is a slow process. When a national emergency arose in connection with the railway strike two years ago it was found possible, even when there was not a train running in this country, to bring parliament together within 48 hours. So it cannot be said any longer in Canada that there need be delay in summoning parliament, if it is necessary that laws be enacted to meet any situation.

Mr. Boisvert: It does not take long to sabotage the railways.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert) has touched upon another question. That point was dealt with specifically by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) this afternoon. We all want steps taken to deal with the possibility of sabotage. We should not wait until sabotage has happened before we take measures to deal with it. Those measures must be taken in advance. But the point is that if legislation is required in that respect, let parliament be asked to make specific provision for it. Surely we are not to be told that we must turn the whole constitution upside down and put confederation in jeopardy just to clothe the appropriate authorities in this country with the power to anticipate and prevent sabotage. The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert) is not going to contend that that is necessary, that the whole constitution should be turned upside down in order to meet that situation.

Mr. Boisvert: Is the constitution turned upside down?

Mr. Fleming: I am saying to my friend that this measure puts it within the power of the government to subvert the whole constitution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, yes.

Mr. Fleming: I say that is the effect of this measure. I am saying to my hon. friend that whatever steps are required to be taken to deal with or to anticipate the possibility of sabotage and to prevent it do not require a measure of this kind. A measure adequate to deal with that subject could be passed in the ordinary course, just as we are passing legislation all the time, without vesting these untrammelled powers in the government.

As the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) says, you cannot prevent sabotage simply by legislation. Surely what is required is action on the part of the authorities; and if there is any power required by the authorities to deal adequately with the possibility of sabotage and to prevent it, then certainly the government will have the utmost co-operation from every part of this house in passing the necessary legislation with that end in view. No one need have any doubt about that.

We will not be misled by pleas that measures of this kind are necessary. They are not necessary. If the supreme emergency arises we are equipped with the provisions of the War Measures Act to deal with it. As has been pointed out, there are ample powers vested in this government under other measures to meet everything that may arise in the period before this parliament may be called upon to meet again.

[Mr. Fleming.]

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) talked about necessity, and in effect asked this parliament to assume that it is necessary that a measure of this kind be taken to safeguard the national safety. It will take a much stronger case than the Prime Minister put forward today to justify the plea that the safety of Canada is in such peril and jeopardy today that this parliament should be called upon virtually to abdicate in favour of the government, and to put it within the power of the government to subvert the constitution.

A great statesman, Pitt, recalling that necessity has been made the plea for every infringement of human liberty, said, "Necessity is the argument of tyrants, it is the creed of slaves". It is going to take more than the kind of speech we heard this afternoon, the soothing speech of the Prime Minister, to justify this parliament enacting a measure of this kind.

We are the custodians of the parliamentary processes, of the parliamentary institutions of Canada. What justifies this parliament in putting it within the power of a group of men in the cabinet to subvert, if they choose to do so, the whole parliamentary system and the constitution of this country? It may very well be that they are all prepared to stand up here and tell us they do not intend to do it, but that is not the basis upon which any parliament should proceed to enact far-reaching legislation of this kind. It is not what they are likely to do, it is a question of whether in principle we as a parliament can justify this abdication of power. I say we cannot.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the debate on this measure commenced away back on February 6 the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), speaking for this group, made it clear that we were prepared to listen and give consideration to whatever case the government was able to make for the continuation of emergency powers. I think it is fair to say that during the weeks that have elapsed since February 6 we have given serious consideration to the attempts that have been put forth by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and others to persuade parliament that this legislation should be enacted. But I must say that we in this group are not convinced.

I suggest that perhaps there is considerable significance in our opposition to this measure in view of what has been pointed out on a number of occasions, namely that we have supported this sort of legislation in previous years. But as we considered the failure of the government to use this legislation to meet the needs of the people of the country, and as we considered the way in which they have used it simply as a convenience, we feel it is time that parliament should rethink its position with respect to this matter and should discontinue the granting of emergency powers.

In our view no case has been made out for the necessity of this legislation. In fact it seems to us that the government simply finds it convenient to have this kind of legislation on the books, and it has been used only as a convenience. Having had it for so long they cannot imagine themselves without it.

This afternoon the Prime Minister made a fairly interesting speech. One thing he said was that in his view it was the right of the opposition to level legitimate criticism at anything that was out of the ordinary. To me that was a most revealing comment. In using those words the Prime Minister made it clear that in his view this request is not out of the ordinary. That is precisely what is wrong with it. This government is asking for these emergency powers for its own convenience, and the tragedy of the situation is that this legislation has become not extraordinary but ordinary in so far as this government is concerned.

The Prime Minister said something else this afternoon of which I took particular note. He said that if the situation had been reversed over the last number of years and the Liberals had been sitting on the opposition side of the House of Commons they would have fought legislation of this kind. Truer words were never spoken. Just imagine for a moment members like the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart), the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Garson), as the Minister of Justice would be in that case, and the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. St. Laurent), as the Prime Minister would be in that case, sitting on this side of the house and some other government asking—

Mr. Stick: Don't leave out the rest of us.

Mr. Knowles: There are quite a number who would take the same position. There would be the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick), the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and others who would be railing for all they were worth against any government that would ask parliament to give them the kind of blank cheque that is involved in this legislation. I suggest that it is a very sorry picture when the Liberals, of all people, have become so used to asking for wide powers of this kind that even when they realize that if they were on the other side they would oppose them, they go on asking for them year after year.

The Prime Minister, after he had admitted that the Liberals in opposition would oppose legislation of this kind, in the very soothing manner he adopted this afternoon said this to us: But can anyone say that parliament is any weaker because we have had this kind of legislation enacted several times in the years since the end of the war? The Prime Minister asked that question in a tone of voice that seemed to imply that he could not imagine anyone saying yes. But I rise, Mr. Speaker, to say that parliament is weaker because it has become so accustomed to passing this kind of legislation. The very fact that it can be passed without any criticism or objection from any Liberal member of the house suggests that parliament has become accustomed to providing the government with this convenience, this easy way of dealing with problems which they find it awkward to bring before parliament in the usual way.

To the extent that parliament has become accustomed to granting powers of this kind to the executive, I suggest that this institution has in fact become weaker; and that the time has come when parliament should rethink this whole question and should call a halt to the granting to the executive of these powers to take steps of this kind without coming to parliament.

This question has been debated at length, and all the issues have been rehashed over and over again. It is not my purpose to continue further at this time, but I do once again express the view that the time has come for parliament to reassert its position, to reassert its strength in this matter, and that in fact we should defeat this measure at this time.

CROWN LIABILITY

TORTS AND CIVIL SALVAGE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. 105, respecting the liability of the crown for torts and civil salvage—Mr. Garson—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 3—Liability in tort.

Mr. Fleming: In section 3 we find the central section of this bill. I am sure there are many in this house who welcome the opportunity of legislating in the terms of this section, for many on this side of the house have been urging for years that the immunity enjoyed by the crown in respect of torts committed by the crown or its servants does not coincide with the facts of this day. We have moved in this parliament by slow stages to the moment we have now reached.

The exchequer court was established in 1875 and the Petition of Right Act was passed in 1876, but still the immunity of the crown continued. Section 19 of the Exchequer Court Act in 1887 opened the way for actions against the crown in certain limited cases of negligence. By degrees that provision was widened but was still confined to claims arising out of the negligence of servants of the crown.

Then in 1945 I recall a debate in this house, Mr. Chairman, when it seemed that the present Prime Minister had closed the door on any hope of removing what is, under present conditions, surely an anachronism in the medieval conception of the immunity of the crown from processual coercion and what Maitland has called "the grandest of the sovereign's immunities". This position certainly does not reflect the mind of the people in this day when there has been a change in the public attitude toward the royal prerogative and the royal immunity from process, a change in circumstances reflected in the extent to which the crown is engaged in business of all kinds and crown corporations are functioning alongside privately-owned corporations, and also reflected in the great increase in civil wrongs that the increasing number of employees of the crown have committed.

In 1945 I said that the present Prime Minister seemed to have dashed all hopes that this anachronism of the law might be removed. On December 13, 1945 during the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Justice, as recorded on page 3467 of Hansard for that date, I had the temerity to ask the then minister of justice this question:

When may we look for some action in the direction of elimination of petitions of right in actions against the crown?

Mr. St. Laurent: Not while I am Minister of Justice.

Then further down, in reply to a further question upon the same point, he said this:

What would be involved in abandoning that position would be an acceptance of the jurisdiction of the provincial courts in claims against the crown.

Now, at long last, we have in this bill the acceptance of the jurisdiction of the provincial courts, up to a point, in claims against the crown.

Then in 1947 a major forward step was taken in the parliament of the United Kingdom with the enactment of the crown proceedings act, and the way was thereby opened for actions to be brought against the crown in the United Kingdom, without fiat, in respect of all torts committed by servants of the crown.

In this parliament in 1950 an important step was taken when, in the amendment to the Petition of Right Act, the requirement of petition of right was dispensed with. But it still left the crown with immunity against any possibility of action being brought in respect of torts committed by servants of the crown in any case except one of negligence under the provisions of section 19 of the Exchequer Court Act. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in this step that is taken in this present bill, we may see the culmination of a good deal of effort, the fruit of many pleas put forward by hon. members of the House of Commons that this old anachronism should be swept aside and the way should be opened to bring action against the crown in the courts in respect of torts committed by servants of the crown.

I think the Minister of Justice was quite right in referring to this as a far-reaching bill. There are some aspects of it which will call for comment, Mr. Chairman; but unquestionably the attitude of this committee will be to welcome this measure and to say that we are glad to see it. We should like to have seen it before, but we welcome it now.

May I now come specifically to one or two points in connection with section 3 of the bill.

The Chairman: In order to facilitate orderly discussion, may I suggest that we take the subparagraphs seriatim. For instance, the first will be section 3 (1) (a).

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, by section 3 (1) (a), and perhaps by others as well, the question is raised generally as to the legal test of torts. In section 3 (1) (a) we have the provision that the crown is to be hereafter liable in tort for the damages for which, if it were a private person of full age and capacity, it would be liable in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown.

Legislative jurisdiction in respect of torts in Canada is vested in the legislatures of the provinces. In this respect I take it to be the intention of the government to submit itself to the law of the province. Indeed I do not think the measure would be very meaningful if that were not the full intention of the bill. But it occurs to me that we should have in this bill more explicit provision with respect to this matter; for when parliament legislates for the purpose of making the crown liable in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown, parliament might in effect be legislating in ten different ways in ten different provinces. It happens that the laws of most of the common-law provinces of this country, in the field of tort, are quite closely parallel. They are not identical in all respects. But so far as the common law with respect to torts is involved here, it is reasonably uniform in the nine common-law provinces. But no one will say that the law in relation to delicts in the province of Quebec is the same as the common law in relation to torts.

Mr. Lesage: It is very close.

Mr. Fleming: It is very close indeed, but it is not precisely the same. I think in a provision of this kind some plainer words are required to make it quite clear that we are to submit the crown in the right of the dominion to the law of the province in each case. We are simply enacting a general provision here that the crown is to be liable as it would be if it were a private person in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown.

Let us carry this matter a step further and consider the extent to which the problem could be complicated by provincial statutes in relation to torts. For instance, let us take the case of negligence. We have the negligence act in the province of Ontario—which about 23 years ago introduced important changes in the law of negligence in relation to contribution between joint tort-feasors and in respect to the old doctrine of ultimate negligence and contributory negligence. Now when we are legislating in terms like these, making the crown in the right of the dominion liable for torts just as is a private person, are we to understand that we are in any province submitting the crown in the right of the dominion to provincial statute law in respect of torts?

That is something which I think is of great importance. For instance, with regard to the law of defamation, are we making the crown in the right of the dominion subject to the provisions of the libel and slander act. There are many other statutes in relation to the whole field of torts that one could enumerate.

It is a much simpler matter for a provincial legislature to enact legislation of this kind. For instance, in the province of Ontario the legislature passed similar legislation in 1952 under the title of "An act respecting proceedings against the crown." Like the bill now before us, it owed its inspiration largely to the legislation in the United Kingdom in 1947. But there is no problem of this kind in the way of a provincial legislature passing laws to make the crown in the right of the province liable for torts of servants of the crown, because you have no problem of two legislative bodies making laws in the same field there; you have no problem of territorial overlapping. It is simply a case of the provincial legislature passing laws in a field in which it has exclusive jurisdiction.

In this dominion field we are in a quite different situation, and it seems to me that what is required here to carry out the intent of the legislation, as I understand that intent, would be a further provision or an amplification of the present provision to make it quite clear that when we legislate to make the crown liable for torts of servants of the crown, we are doing so with respect to each province and making the crown liable for a tort according to the law of the province where the tort was committed.

I am sure this matter must have been considered by the law officers of the crown; but it seems to me, with all due respect to them, that we want some more explicit provision than we have here. I can well foresee that, under a provision of this kind, there will be a good deal of litigation arising, perhaps calling for interpretation in the highest court of the land, as to the extent to which parliament, by a general enactment of this kind, intended to submit the crown in the right of the dominion to legislative enactments of the legislatures of the provinces.

Before I pass on and deal with another point, perhaps the Minister of Justice would like to deal with that question.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure I agree with my hon. friend as to the difficulty which is posed in a federal state like Canada in passing a federal law of the character of the one which is now before us. It is more difficult here, for example, than it was in Great Britain which is a unitary state. It is much more difficult here than it is in the province of Ontario where the provincial legislature, which has jurisdiction to pass the law making the provincial crown liable, has jurisdiction also over property and civil rights, and the one jurisdiction meshes with the other satisfactorily.

In applying ourselves to that problem here we were convinced that we had no authority to attempt to foist upon the provinces a separate federal code of laws with regard to the torts applicable in those cases in which the federal crown was the defendant in the provincial courts or in the exchequer court. Nor could we hope to have the laws of any one province adopted and applied in all the other provinces under this act. The problem really is by apt words to make the crown liable in each province as if it were a private person of full age and capacity.

My hon. friend should not jump to the conclusion that because the draftsman has achieved this in a few words these words are necessarily inadequate, because good draftsmanship at times can be both succinct and accurate, and this is one of the occasions on which I think that is true. Section 3 reads in this way:

> The crown—

That is the federal crown, the crown in the interpretation section is defined in this way:

> "Crown" means Her Majesty in right of Canada.

In effect, then, clause 3, subclause (1) reads:

> Her Majesty in right of Canada is liable in tort for the damages for which, if she were a private person of full age and capacity, she would be liable first in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown.

And so on. My hon. friend is a lawyer of some eminence himself. If he can suggest any other wording that would be more apt here I am sure we would be glad to give it consideration; but I think if he will reflect upon the matter he will find that this wording is suitably applicable in every province in which a claim may arise. The purpose of this legislation is to create a liability upon the part of the crown which did not formerly exist. We have created that by saying that the crown shall be liable in Canada as if it were a private person of full age and capacity. To me that means that in any province, whether it be Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba or British Columbia, the plaintiff who is seeking a remedy against the crown can treat the crown in that province as if it were a private person of full age and capacity, and proceed to enter suit against the crown; and on the strength of this legislation which states that the crown is liable.

Although we have no power here over property and civil rights, I do not think it would be disputed that we do have the power in respect to liability upon the federal crown in the manner which we have done in this legislation. And with great respect to the rather important point which my hon. friend has brought up, I think it is very fully covered in the wording which is now before him.

Mr. Fleming: With respect to the view expressed by the minister and the law officers of the crown, who I am sure have advised the minister on this matter, it seems to me that something further is required to make it quite clear that the crown in the right of the dominion, or as it is put here, Her Majesty in right of Canada, is submitting herself to the laws of the provinces. Now you simply have a provision that the crown is liable in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown. We have to refer to the provincial law to determine what a tort is.

When you legislate, when you consider what a tort is, Mr. Chairman, are you in a common-law province simply considering the common law, or how do you determine what a tort is, having regard to these expressions used in this section, in the light of the substantial body of statute law in reference to torts that has been enacted in each of the provinces and which is not completely uniform? There is a substantial measure of uniformity in the common-law provinces, but we have not uniform legislation in all the provinces with respect to torts. Would it not meet the point, and is it not necessary that we should clearly stipulate here that we are submitting Her Majesty in right of Canada to the law of the respective provinces in this regard because otherwise there is going to be litigation to determine what we mean by a tort. You have to refer to the provincial law for that.

Mr. Garson: Let us take a concrete case. Suppose John Doe in the province of Ontario has a tort committed against him by a servant of the federal crown in that province. Relying upon this section 3, he brings an action against the federal crown either in the exchequer court or perhaps in one of the district courts or county courts in Ontario.

Mr. Fleming: County courts.

Mr. Garson: In that action surely it would not be difficult on the part of the judge who is hearing the case to read this clear language and come to the conclusion that the crown is, as it states, liable in tort for the damages for which, if it were a private person of full age and capacity, it would be liable in respect of the tort committed by a servant of the crown. All that the judge has to ask himself is whether if this tort that is in question in this action had been committed by the servant of a private person of full age and capacity, would that private person be liable. That is a simple question. And if the private person would be liable in that province according to the law, either common law or statute law, then the requirement of the section is applicable and the plaintiff has his case against the federal crown. We can put this provision in five or ten times as many words, but I do not think it would be any clearer than it is now. Indeed, I think it would be much less clear and not any more accurate.

Mr. Fleming: Perhaps there is no point in prolonging the discussion. I do not think the interpretation of this section is nearly as clear as the Minister of Justice thinks. I think there may be some very real questions raised in some of the courts with respect to the meaning of this clause.

Mr. Garson: May I ask my hon. friend this question. What argument would he bring up as a lawyer involved in the case to the effect that the section was not applicable and the crown was not liable? What would be the basis of his argument?

Mr. Fleming: It would run to this effect, if I were arguing against liability—that would be the way in which the point would arise.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Fleming: Parliament had not submitted the crown in the right of the dominion or, as it is put in the bill, Her Majesty in the right of Canada, to the full scope of the provincial law unless it were spelled out in plain words in this legislation. When we talk about torts are you going beyond the common law, for instance, in one of the common-law provinces in relation to torts, or are you submitting Her Majesty in right of Canada to provincial legislation with reference to torts? Because provincial legislation has sometimes destroyed common law torts. It has oftentimes varied them drastically and in other instances has expanded and created offences which did not exist under the common law.

If I were trying to prepare an argument against liability in such a case, I think I would urge that the prerogative of the crown is not limited in any legislative enactment except in plain terms, and that when parliament enacted legislation in the terms of this bill it did not go so far as to submit the crown to provincial legislation. I think quite an argument could be made, with the exercise of a little thought and a little ingenuity in trimming down what I understand to be the intent of this measure.

Crown Liability

I take it we are on common ground as to what we hope to achieve in the bill. We hope to achieve unlimited liability in respect of torts in so far as the crown is concerned. There are limitations in some respects later on in the bill, but so far as its general enactment is concerned my understanding is that it is intended that there should be no limitation whatever upon the liability of the crown in respect of torts committed by servants of the crown.

Mr. Garson: Perhaps the liability could be stated with somewhat greater precision than the hon. member has just stated it. There is a limitation. That limitation is the one imposed by the provincial laws. But the intention is to make the federal crown liable to the full extent to which a person in a private capacity would be liable under the provincial law.

My hon. friend says an argument of that sort could be made. He has just finished making it, in fact. But if he does not mind my saying so, I think it is a somewhat specious argument. I do not think it would get very far if challenged. The language is clear when it states that the crown is liable in tort for the damages for which, if it were a private person of full age and capacity, it would be liable (a) in respect of a tort committed by a servant of the crown.

I suggest to my hon. friend that a tort in any province is what the law of that province says is a tort. And what might be a tort in one province might not necessarily be a tort according to the law of another province. But in a given case in a court in the province in which the tort has been committed and action is being held, I do not think any judge would have difficulty in deciding what "tort" means there.

In proof of the reasonableness of that argument—because I admit I cannot prove it is right, due to the fact that it has never been tested; nor can my hon. friend prove that his argument is right because, as I say, there has been no decision made on this legislation—we have in the Exchequer Court Act and have had for many years section 19, which defines a claim against the crown as follows:

> The exchequer court shall also have exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters: . . .
> (c) Every claim against the crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment upon any public work.

There is no reference to any provincial law at all. This section is applied from province to province. I have heard of no difficulty experienced in that regard in the exchequer court. We think, on the basis of the experience of the Exchequer Court Act, that we do not have to worry much about the wording which has been adopted in the crown liability act.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to raise a further point, relating to liability in respect of torts committed by members of the armed forces of the crown, or what would otherwise be torts if they were committed by civil servants of the crown.

It seems to me this bill is lacking in that it does not make some provision with respect to that subject. I have not heard put forward any explanation as to why the bill does not deal plainly with it. There are detailed provisions in the United Kingdom act, the crown proceedings act of 1947, in relation to this subject. Section 10 of the United Kingdom act has extensive provisions in relation to injuries suffered by persons as the result of wrongs for which members of the armed forces, while on duty, have been responsible.

We are not dealing with the converse case. The converse case is dealt with in section 4 of the bill, where some wrong is suffered by a person such as a member of the armed forces, who then has the right to pension. I am not dealing with that case but rather with a wrong or damage suffered by some person which, if it had been committed by a private individual, would be considered a tort. In this instance it is committed by a member of the armed forces.

On previous occasions when this subject has been under discussion I have drawn attention to some of the orders in council passed during the war dealing with this matter. I do not need to review them in detail. There were wartime orders in council, and there were orders in council passed under the War Measures Act subsequent to the cessation of hostilities.

For instance, I have before me a certified copy of order in council PC 43/1880, passed on May 14, 1947. And I have another one, PC 254½/2727, passed on May 28, 1949. I had some experience in this connection several years ago as the result of being consulted by a citizen who had sustained substantial damage in consequence of acts on the part of members of the armed forces which, if they had been committed by private persons, would have been definitely tortious.

This was the case of a man holding a fishing licence in lake Ontario. He had his nets out, suspended by floats; and although this area was not within the range of the ships on which naval ratings were then being trained, nevertheless they did engage in gunnery practice over his licensed area, with the result that not only was his fishing take for that year destroyed but there was also substantial damage to his nets. As a matter of fact his nets were rendered virtually useless. The concussion shattered the floats supporting the nets and, as a result, he sustained substantial damage. I recall taking the case up with the Minister of National Defence, and putting very strong evidence before him. I had a substantial number of affidavits from eyewitnesses. The attitude taken was: There is no liability here. The result was that there was no remedy open to that man, none whatever.

Whatever justification there may be in time of war for absolving the crown from any responsibility for damage inflicted by members of the armed forces under circumstances which, if the act were committed by a private individual, would be tortious and actionable, I submit most strongly that in time of peace when such acts are committed by members of the armed forces a right of action against the crown should result in favour of any citizen whose rights are thereby affected.

Mr. Garson: What was the nature of the tort committed against my hon. friend's client? Would it be the tort of trespass or the tort of negligence?

Mr. Fleming: I would not wish to define it too closely. There was an act of trespass, and negligence may be involved. However, I do not think in a case like that one need be confined by definition in the manner suggested. After all there may be damage to equipment or property. If the Minister of Justice came along and I happen to have a heap of fishing nets out in lake Ontario and he destroys them, I believe I have a right of action against him for the damage he has done to my personal property.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend would have to bring an action in court against the defendant. I always hesitate about committing myself to a definite opinion upon the basis of just an oral presentation of the facts like this, but I would think that under the new statute my hon. friend's client would clearly have a claim against the crown under those circumstances. I would think it would be for the tort of trespass on his property so damaged. I do not think my hon. friend entertains any doubt that under this new statute he would have a claim.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, I have; because this statute is confined to torts committed by servants of the crown. The definition in section 2(c) is that a servant includes an agent, but there is no reference to its including members of the armed forces. I do not think the members of the armed forces are treated as servants of the crown in this statute.

Mr. Garson: Yes, they are; if that is my hon. friend's difficulty, it is covered.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister prepared to have it clearly provided for here? The definition of servant should certainly be expanded if it is intended to include members of the armed forces.

Mr. Garson: I grasp my hon. friend's difficulty now. If his difficulty as he now states it is that members of the armed forces, whom his client suspects were guilty of this wrongful act, would not be considered servants of the crown in his opinion, I would point out to him that by an amendment to the Exchequer Court Act passed in 1943, section 50A was inserted, which reads as follows:

> For the purpose of determining liability in any action or other proceeding by or against His Majesty, a person who was at any time since the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-eight, a member of the naval, military or air forces of His Majesty in right of Canada shall be deemed to have been at such time a servant of the crown.

That has been the law now for nearly ten years and I think that would have taken care of my hon. friend's difficulty.

Mr. Fleming: I am not at all sure that it would, because here we are opening new ground and making provision for actions to be brought in the provincial courts as well as in the exchequer court. It seems to me that the better method to deal with this would be to expand the definition of servant in section 2(c) of this bill and provide that it shall include members of the armed forces.

Mr. Garson: Surely my hon. friend will agree that a provision in a statute does not lack force because it happens to be in one statute rather than another. Could you get anything that is clearer than this:

> For the purpose of determining liability in any action or other proceeding by or against His Majesty,—

That is pretty broad.

> —a person who was at any time since the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-eight, a member of the naval, military or air forces of His Majesty in right of Canada shall be deemed to have been at such time a servant of the crown.

How could you make it any clearer than that?

Mr. Robichaud: Following the main argument of the hon. member for Eglinton I am convinced that there is need for further clarification of section 3 with reference to jurisdiction. In my submission the addition of a few words after the word "liable" in line 3 of subsection 1 would make the section much clearer. I have listened with much interest to the explanation given by the minister to the effect that in the Exchequer Court Act there is no such specific provision.

The Deputy Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member is introducing an amendment to section 3?

Mr. Robichaud: I am not introducing an amendment, I am simply referring to the argument put forth by the Minister of Justice when he said there was nothing specific—and he is right, and that is the very point—in the Exchequer Court Act. He said there was no necessity of having more specific words in section 3 of the bill. I submit that under the Exchequer Court Act any actions in tort in all the provinces, that is actions arising from negligence, are now triable in one forum only, the exchequer court. Nevertheless it was felt necessary to provide in the general rules and orders of the exchequer court that when such suits or actions arose in common-law provinces then the practice had to conform with and be regulated by the practice and procedure in force at the time in His Majesty's supreme court of judicature in England. When a matter arose in the province of Quebec it had to be regulated, as to practice and procedure, by the laws in force in His Majesty's superior court for the province of Quebec, or in the absence thereof by the laws in force in His Majesty's supreme court of judicature in England. In the rules and orders different provisions are therefore made for cases that might arise in the common-law provinces and, on the other hand, in the province of Quebec.

Under this bill tortious acts are triable in all provinces of Canada. I agree with the point raised by the hon. member for Eglinton, that unless more specific provisions are embodied in the section there will be room for argument and certainly room for confusion. If words such as "under the laws of the province where the tort or offence was committed" were added after the word "liable" in the third line of section 3, in my submission it would cure every possible confusion in the section. We would then have in the section specific words making the laws of each province applicable to the tort in issue. I bring this, with due respect, to the attention of the minister.

Subsection agreed to.

The Chairman: When I left the chair we were on section 3, subsection 1 and were passing on to subsection 2. Have subsections 2 and 3 been carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Subsections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Special provisions respecting liability.

Mr. Fleming: Will you follow the same procedure and call the subsections seriatim?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On section 4, subsection 1—No proceedings lie where pension payable.

Mr. Fleming: Does not the minister think that in a case of this kind it would be fair to extend the right of choice to the individual concerned? Here we have the provision that if pension or compensation has been paid or is payable out of the consolidated revenue fund in respect of the tort in question, there is no right of action.

Mr. Garson: That has been considered, Mr. Chairman, but the purpose of the pension act, where there is a pension act, is to treat every one of a class of people in respect of death or injury, etc., on an equal basis. We think that upon balance it is preferable to leave them to rely on their pension rights. Then everyone in that group of people is treated on an equal basis.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But I wonder if the minister has thought this out very carefully.

Mr. Dickey: He has.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Supposing a person has only been in employment a short time. He would not have paid very much into the fund and not very much of a pension would be payable, yet he might have an action for several thousands of dollars in damages. Is that not so? I am thinking there might be a case where an employee of the government, through some neglect on the part of his fellow servants of the crown, received an injury that resulted in death. His widow would therefore have an action in tort against the crown which might run into several thousand dollars whereas the pension to his widow would be insignificant. Would you not be prepared to give this further consideration on these grounds?

Mr. Garson: I am speaking from memory now, but I think in a case of that sort there would not be any pension payable to the widow which would interfere with the action in tort.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the pension not in itself a bar? Because a widow would have a right to pension might she not be debarred from taking action in court, if she were entitled to a pension under this clause?

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I did not make myself clear, but where a civil servant should happen to injure another civil servant there is no pension payable in respect of that injury and therefore there would be a claim for damages in tort, with no offsetting pension payment to complicate the matter in a case of that kind.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Then supposing an employee on a government ship is injured and is entitled to compensation, for instance a merchant seaman's compensation. He might have an action for many thousands of dollars, which would be superior to the pension he would receive or that his widow would receive in case of death. His widow only receives $50 a month, so would it not be right in such a case to give an election to the person concerned?

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend is asking my personal opinion I would think not. The parallel I would draw there is where, in those provinces that have workmen's compensation acts, the amount of pension that is payable to workmen in industry for different types of accident or death, without any lawsuits or difficulties of that sort, is received by him at the cost of not having any action for damages against his employer on the basis of employers' liability.

We have in our own government service here what we call the Government Employees Compensation Act which is the same as the workmen's compensation act in the provincial sphere. It applies only to our own civil servants. These are cases of one not being able to have his cake and eat it too. If a fund is set up to compensate people for injury or losses of one kind or another, the justification for devoting tax moneys to the support of such a fund is that the problem is taken care of by that payment of such compensation, and any rights which the injured person may have to recover damages from the person responsible for his injury are at the same time extinguished.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 2—Liability for acts of servants.

Mr. Fleming: On subsection 2, and the same remarks apply to subsection 3, are we to understand that the second part of the subsection following the word "unless" has reference to the provincial law?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Again I am saying that I think appropriate words ought to be inserted there not only for the sake of clarity but I think to carry out the intent that has been expressed and is generally shared. I think it would be highly desirable to have in subsection 2 after the word "would" in the fourth line such words as "under the law of the province". Similarly in subsection 3, the same words might be inserted after the word "unless" in the fourth line. I am not at all sure that difficulty is not going to arise over this question of provincial law in ways that we may now not be able fully to take account of here. It is so easy to pass these enactments without seeing the opportunities for dispute over them later on when people come to determine their legal rights in the light of the words we are using.

I just offer the suggestion again, and I am only trying to make this measure as effective as possible for the purpose which has been described and which all members of the house support. I think words such as I have suggested would make it much clearer.

Mr. Garson: I appreciate indeed my hon. friend's solicitude in the matter and acknowledge the helpfulness of his suggestions. However, I would not want him to think that these points he has named, and some others that he has not yet named, had been ignored when the words of this section were being considered by the draftsmen.

There are a number of problems that arise which perhaps have not occurred to him. For example, what would the situation be if the tort took place on a Canadian ship on the high seas? What provincial law would apply in a case of that sort? What if the incident took place on Sable island? If you say that the law of the province applies, is it the law at the time this present bill is passed here, or is it the provincial law as that law may be amended in the future? If any amendments are passed to our law, how do they dovetail into amendments to relevant provincial amendments which are also passed?

When one weighs considerations, and others, I think my hon. friend would agree that if they were put on one side of the scales, and on the other side of the scales was placed the section I quoted from the Exchequer Court Act, which is in simple language and has stood the test of time for a number of years without any of these difficulties which my hon. friend speaks of having occurred, then on balance the prudent thing to do is to follow the successful precedent in the case of the Exchequer Court Act and adopt the simple language we have here.

In recent years, amongst other things, since we set up the drafting branch in the Department of Justice we have been trying where possible to simplify our laws and thereby make them a lot easier for everyone to read.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 3—Motor vehicles.

Mr. Green: Does this subsection mean that a person who has been injured must sue the driver of the motor vehicle and obtain judgment against him as well as suing the crown in order to recover anything from the crown? It reads:

No proceedings lie against the crown by virtue of subsection (2) of section 3 in respect of damage sustained by any person by reason of a motor vehicle upon a highway unless the driver of the motor vehicle or his personal representative is liable for the damage so sustained.

Now, the driver of the motor vehicle can only be held liable if there has been a decision against him. For that reason I take it that the driver has to be a party to the action.

Mr. Garson: Would my hon. friend just elucidate that point a little?

Mr. Green: My doubt arises out of the wording of the clause. In effect, the clause says that the crown will not be liable for damages unless the driver of the car is also liable. The driver of the car can only be found liable if he is a party to the action and judgment is obtained against him. I am asking whether the result is not that, in each case, the plaintiff will have to sue not only the crown but also the employee of the crown who happened to be driving the car. Furthermore, he would have to obtain judgment against that driver.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, this is a case where an attempt has been made to follow a provincial provision which seems to be uniform in all the provinces, to the effect that the owner of a motor vehicle cannot be made liable unless the driver is liable. We have adopted that provision, which is in nearly all the motor vehicle traffic acts of the various provinces, and made it applicable to the proceedings here so there would not be any doubt on this point.

Mr. Green: In effect, then, the plaintiff would have to sue the driver personally as well as the crown; that is correct, is it not?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Green: Then on section 4, subsection 4, I should like to ask the minister to give some thought to the time within which persons who are injured must give notice to the crown. The clause, as it is worded, sets the time limit at seven days. I know from experience that, for example, a person may be injured in a government building or outside of a government building because it has not been kept in proper shape. He may be taken to the hospital, and the first consideration is to see that proper medical attention is given to him. Probably his people do not even think of going to a lawyer for ten days or even two weeks. I suggest that this seven-day limitation is very unfair and should be extended to, say, thirty days.

I notice that in the explanatory note the reason given for this short time is that otherwise the employees of the crown will not be able to check up on the condition of the building. However, if this injury is such that it will give rise to a proper claim, then the crown employee will know about it at once. There is the opportunity for him to examine the premises and make his report. On the other hand, if the crown employee does not know anything about the accident, then when the plaintiff comes into court his story is going to be looked upon with a great deal of doubt by the judge if nothing whatever was said to the crown employees who were in the building.

I know that in the case of a claim arising in British Columbia it would be very difficult to get notice off within the seven days. I do not think it is a reasonable time, and I would ask that an extension be given.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, take the case, for example, of a claim made against the crown by a plaintiff who alleges that he stepped upon the sill of a doorway that was covered with ice and was not properly sanded. He fell and injured himself severely. I am sure the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra would agree with me that the validity of that claim would depend upon whether the plaintiff could establish that the defendant crown was negligent in not sanding the doorway. If, in respect of an ephemeral condition like ice, the defendant is not given prompt notice so it can inform itself as to the facts, it is going to have little chance when the case comes to court of establishing its version of the condition of the doorway at the time of the accident. Seven days is quite a long time in relation to a condition which can pass away in much less time than that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would you make the time shorter, then?

Mr. Garson: The information will get around amongst lawyers that there is this sort of limitation, and they will see to it that that notice is given. Then, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra very cogently says, the plaintiff's case is a lot better if he can show—or his lawyer could do that—that he went to the employee of the crown and said, "Look, I have hurt myself. Here is where I fell and see this ice here; there is no sand on it". This clause, if it is properly applied and if the plaintiff is well advised and diligent, will help the plaintiff's claim rather than hinder it. I think my hon. friend is quite right when he says that if there were no provision like this at all, and it developed that no complaint had been made to the crown for a period of ten days or two weeks, the judge would be rather sceptical when no other person had seen it, as to whether the injury was actually caused by this allegedly icy condition or whether it was due to the plaintiff's own negligence.

Mr. Green: But I do say that in most cases there would be an employee of the crown right on the premises at the time of the accident. He would know about the accident, and it would be his duty to make a record of the condition at that time. This would be the normal case. If the person has been seriously injured he may be in hospital for quite a long time. In fact, the more seriously injured he is, the less likely it is that he will be able to get off any written notice with the details of his claim within a period of seven days from the time of the accident. There certainly should be some leeway given so that a man would not be necessarily out of court after the seven days. There should be some provision so that in a bona fide case, where the person was unable to get in a notice within the seven days, he would not be deprived of his action. I think the section is too tight as it is worded at the present time.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to support what has been said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. This section as it stands is very harsh. It is not a qualified bar to an action, it is an absolute bar. If that notice in writing is not given in seven days it is an absolute bar.

We are told we are creating a remedy for people who suffer wrongs, but here is a section which says that if notice in writing is not given in this prescribed manner within seven days that right of action is completely destroyed.

The minister has taken a very simple case. He has assumed that the individual is perfectly conscious after the accident; and in the case he put, of course seven days is longer than the injured person needs. But let us consider the case of a man who may be unconscious for a month after the accident. What is to be done then? He may be far from friends, far from family and far from home when this happens. It may be all very well for the crown to insist that it should have prompt notice in order that it may investigate the conditions that are complained of. But there is another side to the story that I think has not been taken into account and certainly has not been mentioned by the minister.

Let me give the minister a parallel case, because I have had a good deal of experience with this particular provision. Under the provisions of the Ontario highway improvement act the crown in the right of the province is liable for damages suffered by any person using the queen's highway as a result of conditions of disrepair. There the requirement is that notice in writing of injury shall be given within ten days; it is not seven days but ten days. Then there is this further provision, that failure to give the notice is not an absolute bar if the failure to give the notice is such as not to have resulted in prejudice to the crown.

I think on reflection the minister will realize that where a provision of this kind is written in terms of absolute bar to the action, a limitation of this kind is not only unreasonable but harsh, Mr. Chairman. Take, for instance, the case of a man who has sustained perhaps an extremely serious injury. It may be a concussion resulting in a prolonged period of unconsciousness far exceeding seven days, with nobody else to give notice on his behalf. Then he is told that he has completely lost any right he had against the crown and there is no right to be relieved of this bar. It is not a conditional bar; it is an absolute bar.

Mr. Garson: Can my hon. friend give any further details with regard to the modification of the bar in the case of the Ontario statute to which he referred?

Mr. Fleming: Yes. I have not the exact language of the statute here but it runs to this effect. If the court—and it is left to the court to decide when the case comes before it in due course—is satisfied that no prejudice has resulted to the crown from failure to give the notice within the prescribed period, the court has power to relieve the plaintiff from the effect of the failure to give the notice. I think that is a reasonable provision.

I would urge on the minister that even with such a saving provision, a period of seven days is still too short. It is going to take some considerable time for the general public to come to know of this new legislation which is creating new rights. It seems to me that a period of seven days is unreasonably short in the case of new legislation giving rise to new rights. If the minister will follow a suggestion, I would propose that this section should not be written in terms of absolute bar but only conditional bar, and that the period within which notice may be given should be considerably extended beyond the seven days.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Driedger, the parliamentary counsel to the Department of Justice, has heard this discussion and I have just suggested that he might retire for a moment and see what he can do to modify that clause in accordance with the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Before he retires, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a suggestion. Heretofore in some workmen's compensation acts a similar provision is made, that notice must be given within seven days. But it is also provided that if a plaintiff can show that the failure to give due notice was not owing to any fault of his or was owing to reasons for which he can give a full and valid explanation, then the court may extend the time in which notice may be given, or at least it is not obliged to throw out the action because the limit of seven days was not observed.

May I add another suggestion and say that I have never heard of any complaint because a period of at least two years—or six years perhaps in some jurisdictions—is allowed to a private person within which to take action for negligence. I therefore believe it is imaginary and theoretical to speak of the damages which might accrue to the crown because a longer period than seven days was allowed.

The Chairman: Shall section 4 stand until later?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Section stands.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Proceedings in rem.

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to submit to the minister that, in my opinion, section 6 is taking away a privilege which heretofore was enjoyed by the subject in proceedings under the Exchequer Court Act; because under the provisions of section 6, proceedings in rem are not authorized. In rule 4 of the general rules and orders of the exchequer court, not only were proceedings in rem allowed but there was provision for a joinder of proceedings in rem and proceedings in personam.

I can quite imagine, even under this statute now, a case where as the result of the commission of a tort by a servant of the crown, anything involved in the commission of the offence may be liable to condemnation, as we call it under the exchequer court practice, and the offender may be liable as well to answer for his act. Why would not this condemnation and claim for damages for an unlawful act of the offender be joined in one and the same action? In other words I cannot understand why, on the one hand, we say in effect that we give the subject more privileges now in an action against the crown because we give him another forum—we give him the privilege of suing in his own province—but on the other hand we whittle away some of the rights which he heretofore enjoyed under the practice of the exchequer court. In this one instance, under the exchequer court practice, the subject had the right to an action in rem and to condemnation of the matter involved. But now under this bill the action in rem is not authorized. I should like to have some explanation from the minister as to the reason why an action in rem is not now authorized under the statute.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, although I am by no means an expert in admiralty law, I understand that the purpose of an action in rem is that the ship or thing itself may be attached by the process so that the damages which are recovered in the lawsuit can be obtained or the payment of them can be exacted before the ship or thing is released. Where a ship is in a harbour, if you do not attach it in rem and it sails away I can understand you will have a hard time collecting judgment. But there is great permanency to the federal crown as compared with a ship of that kind. Therefore there is no purpose in tying up a crown ship by an action in rem because the federal crown will always be able to pay any damages that are charged against it. The purpose of the action in rem therefore never having existed in relation to the federal crown, there is no reason why the action itself should be retained.

Mr. Robichaud: Why then, under the present practice in the exchequer court, is this rule 4 still in existence? I will quote it for the record:

Rule 4

Joinder in rem and in personam

Where, by reason of the commission of any offence, any thing is liable to condemnation, and the offender is also liable to a penalty, such condemnation and penalty may be enforced and recovered in one and the same proceeding; but no judgment for any such penalty shall be given against any person who has not been served with the information.

That is the present practice of the exchequer court, Mr. Chairman. With the minister I quite admit that the crown is not likely to run away; and I quite admit that it is a different case from that of a ship belonging to a foreign power or a foreign company. I am willing to admit all that. But what I wish to know is why, when we have an action in rem authorized under the present practice of the exchequer court, this right of the subject has been taken away under the present statute. In the minister's comments so far I see no explanation.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will read the section he will see that its wording is as follows, and the first four words in the section are extremely significant.

Mr. Robichaud: I have read it carefully.

Mr. Garson: The wording is:

> Nothing in this act authorizes proceedings in rem . . .

It may be that we are indebted to my hon. friend for having pointed out this section in the exchequer court rules, and it may be that they should be repealed now; I do not know. We will have to look into that, but there is nothing in this act which authorizes proceedings in rem.

Mr. Robichaud: That is exactly my argument. I thought I would bring to the attention of the minister the existence of rule 4.

Mr. Garson: Could we revert to clause 4 and see if this would meet the objection?

The Chairman: Clause 4, subsection 4.

Mr. Garson: There would be subsection (5) to read as follows:

> (5) In the case of the death of the person injured, failure to give the notice required by subsection (4) is not a bar to the proceedings, and, except where the injury was caused by snow or ice, failure to give or insufficiency of the notice is not a bar to the proceedings if reasonable excuse for the want or insufficiency of the notice is established and the court or judge before whom the proceedings are taken is of opinion that the crown in its defence was not prejudiced by the want or insufficiency of the notice and that to bar the proceedings would be an injustice.

Mr. Green: I suggest that the minister have this looked over again before we deal with the bill on another occasion. There is an exception in there, snow and ice. It so happens that I know of a case where a woman was quite badly injured because of the ice and snow not being removed from an immigration building at the boundary near Vancouver. She was taken to hospital quite badly hurt. I do not believe her husband came in for some days. Certainly in that kind of case the seven days might easily have gone by, yet the immigration officials were right there. They knew about the accident that had happened. They knew exactly the condition of the building, yet if the section is worded as the minister now proposes to word it there would be no chance to sue.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 of subsection 4 stand?

Subsection stands.

The Chairman: Shall we agree to carry clause 7 which is the last clause of part I? Shall section 7 carry?

Section 7 agreed to.

The Chairman: On the next occasion we shall consider part II, clause 8. Shall I report progress?

Progress reported.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ADAMSON—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN "FINANCIAL POST" OF MARCH 28

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): May I rise on a question of personal privilege? I do so at this late hour tonight in order to get it in today because the article which I find offensive appeared in Saturday's Financial Post, which came out today, and I wish to make this correction as a matter of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. The article appears on the front page of the Financial Post under the heading "Opposition girds to fight all-Canada gas line plan." The paragraph I object to reads as follows:

> The activity centred on a movement to oppose trade minister Howe's recent pronouncement of federal gas policy: An all-Canadian east-west route via northern Ontario.

I was the last to speak for the opposition, and what I said was the very antithesis of what the article suggests. I wish to protest against this suggestion as a matter of personal privilege. I advocated the greatest use of the natural gas, the quickest way to market the gas and the way which would give the greatest service to all Canada, particularly that part of Canada which is deficient in fuel at the present time. That is the purport of what I said, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move that the house do now adjourn. Tomorrow we shall take up first interim supply, further supplementary estimates; then Bill No. 105, respecting the liability of the crown for torts and civil salvage. Then another matter we should like to bring up is the resolution of the Minister of Fisheries providing for the approval and confirmation of the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, signed by Canada, United States and Japan in Tokyo, and if we have time we will take up Bill No. 107, to amend the Post Office Act.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.08 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

BROADCASTING—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. W. A. Robinson (Simcoe East) presented the first report of the special committee on broadcasting, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING—SECOND REPORT

Mr. Hughes Cleaver (Halton) presented the second report of the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that this is a majority report.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved:

That votes Nos. 467, 471 and 476 of the main estimates for 1953-54, approved and reported upon this day by the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, be referred back to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF WING COMMANDER R. H. ROHMER—CANADIAN DEFENCE AGAINST AIR ATTACK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I have given his office. Has the minister any comment to make on the address delivered in Toronto yesterday by Wing Commander R. H. Rohmer, D.F.C., in which he stated that Canada is absolutely defenceless to air attack—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Ferguson: Don't you want to hear the truth?

Mr. Pearkes: —and that it is high time the people of Canada were told the truth?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. As the hon. member knows, he must not give any information—

An hon. Member: He is reading a speech.

Mr. Ferguson: This is a matter of national importance.

An hon. Member: Horses to you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is not possible for the Speaker to be heard if there is noise in the house. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) is asking a question. He is entitled to ask the question if the matter is urgent, but he must not give any information when asking the question. He must simply ask his question.

Mr. Pearkes: I have asked my question, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He has given a speech.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): I can only answer the question fully by going extensively into the situation regarding the production of aircraft. This question was covered before by my colleague the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe), in a statement in the house on February 16, in so far as the production by A.V. Roe Canada Limited is concerned.

In answer to the hon. member for Nanaimo, I can tell him that we have today six squadrons of Sabre fighters abroad, the most formidable fighter aircraft in operation today. The importance of the Canadian Sabre squadrons was indicated by references to them in the press growing out of the recent incidents in Europe. Three more squadrons are on their way over. We shall complete our full commitment of an air division of twelve squadrons to NATO by the date set and we shall do that in the belief—which I think is shared by all Canadians—that the best place to defend Canada and to prevent aggression is as far away from our shores as possible.

As I have indicated, a report on the production of the CF-100 has already been made to the house—that is the other fighter aircraft we have in production—and this report and others available to me on the production of the aircraft and the engines indicate that it should be possible for us similarly to complete the planned build-up of our defences in Canada with these all-weather fighters designed particularly to do that job. It was not possible to do this before because the aircraft with which to do it did not exist anywhere in the world. Had we gone into production of any earlier type we would have had a major part of our productive capacity engaged in producing planes which were either already obsolescent or which were not suited for the purpose. Instead of that we engaged in producing the CF-100 which is believed to be the leading long-range all-weather fighter aircraft, and it is specially designed, equipped and qualified to meet the needs of Canadian defence.

At all times during the past year and a half we have had a number of squadrons of Sabres for our defence pending their transfer to the other side, and we have had a large number of aircrew and aircraft in the operational training units. Exercise Signpost last July was the first major demonstration and exercise of air defence.

There is nothing new in the situation and it has been made plain from time to time. In "Canada's Defence Program" the white paper I put before parliament last session, in June, 1952, and which was widely distributed, I referred to the air defence of Canada; and after mentioning radar installations and communications I said:

> At the same time fighter defence in Canada, both regular and reserve, is being built up. At present the fighter squadrons for this purpose are equipped with Vampire and Mustang aircraft. These will be replaced by CF-100's as they become available. In addition, there are a number of squadrons equipped with F-86E's and designated for the NATO air force in Europe. In the meantime they are available for the defence of this continent.

The statement then made was completely in accordance with the facts as they then existed and it has been amplified and repeated time after time ever since. It has been made perfectly plain that the first squadron of CF-100's was in process of formation. We could not establish it—equipped with this first all-weather long-range fighter to meet Canadian needs—until the planes were produced, and there were no suitable planes in production anywhere else.

Mr. Speaker, I have referred to the production of F-86's and CF-100's. As to the production of F-86's, there may be some people still who are sorry that we did not take their advice and go into production on some other types of fighters which are now obsolete. I do not believe that the Royal Air Force of the United Kingdom, which is receiving a large number of these fighters, would take that view. I do not believe that the United States Air Force, to which we sold a number of these fighters for use in Korea, would take that view. I do not believe that the countries of NATO and Britain, which are now being defended in part by our fighters abroad, would take that view either. I do not believe that the people of Canada would take that view because the F-86E and its production have been magnificent successes and major contributions to our combined defence.

Similarly, a year from now I believe that we shall look back on our decision to make the CF-100 and the Orenda engine in Canada as a major contribution to the defence of North America and of Canada itself.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is he aware that Wing Commander Rohmer is in partnership with a certain Conservative candidate in Toronto?

Mr. Fraser: And treasurer of the Liberal party.

INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTATION OF BEAGLE HOUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it true that we are importing beagle hounds from the old country to be used to encourage the men of the flying corps at Camp Borden to take exercise? Is that true or not true?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): No.

FISHERIES

INCREASE IN CARAPACE MEASUREMENT OF LOBSTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister been informed by his deputy that the Prince Edward Island fisheries federation strongly protests the new carapace measurement for lobsters? If so, what comment has he to make with regard to the matter?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been informed. I have no further comment to make at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VANCOUVER, B. C.—REFERENCE TO INSTRUCTIONS BY JUDGE TO PRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister been informed of an order made yesterday by Mr. Justice Manson in open trial in Vancouver instructing the press not to report certain statements that had been made, and an incident that took place in the trial? Can the minister say whether it is permissible for a judge to issue such an order to the press?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the incident of which my hon. friend is speaking is one which comes under the administration of justice in the province of Ontario and he might—

Mr. Knowles: This was in Vancouver.

Mr. Garson: I beg your pardon; in the province of British Columbia. The question which he is asking in this house might more properly be asked in British Columbia of the attorney general there.

POSTAL SERVICE

PRISONERS OF WAR, KOREA—NON-DELIVERY OF PARCELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the minister received any complaints about parcels, addressed to prisoners of war in Korea, which are not being delivered? If so, does the minister wish to make any comment on the matter?

Hon. Alcide Cote (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I must thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of this question. The answer is that no such complaints have been received. As a matter of fact, I am advised that there is no parcel post service at the present time between Canada and prisoners of war in Korea, and no such parcels have been tendered for acceptance; neither has there been any request for such service.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): If I may supplement the answer, may I say that there is only one Canadian prisoner of war that we know of.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAN-AMERICAN UNION—STATEMENT BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO COLOMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I sent him last night a press clipping and notice of my question for today. It is this. In view of the fact that the Canadian ambassador to Colombia, Edmond Turcotte, indicated this week that Canada eventually might join the Pan-American Union if the union tendered such an invitation, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether the government has any steps in this direction in contemplation at the moment and whether that statement accurately reflects Canadian government policy?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The Department of External Affairs has no information other than the press report to which the hon. member for Peel refers about a statement attributed to the newly-appointed ambassador to Colombia concerning Canada's attitude to the organization of American states.

The position of the government of Canada in this respect has not changed since I last referred to this subject on February 12, 1949, when I spoke at a press conference in Washington. Speaking of the Organization of American States, formerly known as the Pan-American Union, I said:

> Our government has been giving thought to the Pan-American Union over a great many years and our relations with the members of the Pan-American Union have always been most satisfactory. The angle from which this has been examined is as to whether our actual participation in the Pan-American Union would be productive of any real advantage for any of its members. Our cultural, our trade relations, with other members of the Pan-American Union have always been very good and they will improve constantly. So far it has not appeared to us that there would be any decided advantage in a formal membership in the Pan-American Union.

Mr. Graydon: Will the Prime Minister convey to the Department of External Affairs some message whereby they may find out whether the ambassador to Colombia had been correctly reported or not?

Mr. St. Laurent: The Department of External Affairs has already asked the ambassador to Colombia to give a factual report on what is referred to in this press clipping.

Interim Supply

GRAIN

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF REPORT OF BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister have the annual report of the board of grain commissioners referred to the agriculture committee during the present session?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The annual report of the board of grain commissioners has not been received by the minister. I understand it is being printed at the present time. When it is received I shall be glad to consider the situation of that day and give my hon. friend an answer.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Abbott moved:

That a sum not exceeding $534,871,213.17, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the items to be voted, as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1954, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto, a sum not exceeding $207,500, being one-quarter of the amount of item 433, a sum not exceeding $372,512.84, being one-sixth of the amount of items 199, 201, 204, 205, and a sum not exceeding $2,223,289.17, being one-twelfth of the amount of items 19, 37, 62, 435, 436, 439, of the said estimates be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1954.

He said: Mr. Chairman, the bill to be founded on this resolution will provide for the usual one-sixth of all the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year which commences on the 1st day of April, 1953, and an additional one-quarter of one special item, namely, the international trade fair, where the major portion of the expenditures have to be met in the early part of the year; and an additional one-sixth of four other special items, which include the sessional expenses of this house and the other place; the unemployment insurance commission; certain additional costs for the transfer of labour; and an additional one-twelfth of six other special items, two of them in the Department of Agriculture, one of them relating to the experimental farm service and the other freight assistance on western feed grain where an expenditure of an additional amount is due early in the year, and three items in trade and commerce, electricity and gas inspection service, weights and measures inspection service; and the dominion bureau of statistics, certain census expenses.

In no instance of course is the total amount of any item being released. These special items are substantially the same as the ones that I asked for in the first interim supply at the last session. The form of the bill is the same as the bill which was passed at this time last year. As usual, I give the undertaking that the passing of the bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize and discuss any item in the estimates which will come up for consideration from time to time during the remainder of the session, and the usual undertaking is given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as the result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is it not unusual to have interim supply in the year preceding the year in respect of which it is granted? In other words, is it not unusual to ask that these moneys be given before the end of the fiscal year itself?

Mr. Abbott: Well, my recollection is that it is the customary thing to do it in that way. On April 1 we must have money to pay civil salaries and the expenses which are incurred in the fiscal year. I am speaking from memory, but my recollection is that it is usual, a day or two before the end of the fiscal year, to ask for interim supply. It seemed to me that it might be convenient to deal with interim supply and to deal with the final supplementary estimates at the same time, and I brought it on today.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1954, the following sums be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely:

1. The sum of $534,871,213.17, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1954;

2. The sum of $207,500, being one-quarter of the amount of item 433 of the said estimates;

3. The sum of $372,512.84, being one-sixth of the amount of items 199, 201, 204, 205 of the said estimates; and

4. The sum of $2,223,289.17, being one-twelfth of the amount of items 19, 37, 62, 435, 436, 439 of the said estimates; as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 291, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1954.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

560. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural prices support account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural prices support board during the fiscal year 1952-53, including authority to credit to the account the net revenue received into the agricultural products board account from the sale of New Zealand meat received in exchange for beef shipped to the United Kingdom, $32,346,000.

Mr. Charlton: I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat, because I should like to have some information on this item. Is there anyone here who can give it?

Mr. Abbott: I think I can, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Agriculture could not be present today.

Mr. Charlton: How much surplus beef bought last year is still on hand, and what amount has been sold?

Mr. Abbott: First, with respect to hogs, on April 1, 1952, the agricultural prices support board held 5,492,520 pounds of canned pork produced to their specifications and had a further 92,768,454 pounds produced to their specifications up to March 31, 1953. It is estimated that by March 31 the board will have resold 25 million pounds of canned pork, principally in the domestic market, at a net loss to the board of $6,075,000. Various pork cut programs involving 101,437,581 pounds of product have been carried out and it is estimated that about 10 million pounds of these cuts will remain on hand as at March 31, 1953. The total loss on the cuts resold to March 31 is estimated at $2,738,828.08, which is mainly represented by the payment of certain storage, transportation and other handling charges which had to be added to the fresh cost in calculating the net loss.

Then, I presume the hon. member would like to have similar information with respect to cattle. In this connection the major program has been one of acceptance of carcass beef for shipment to the United Kingdom in return for which New Zealand beef has been sold in the United States to offset the cost of the Canadian beef. Other programs have included the purchase of live cattle and the operation of the Canadian Co-operative Processors' plant at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, the acceptance of some boneless beef and carcass beef which are presently stored in Canada, and the acceptance of some specially prepared boneless beef which has been resold to the Department of National Defence for use by Canadian and commonwealth troops in Korea.

Up to March 31, 1953, it is estimated the board will have purchased 159,533 cattle and accepted product in the form of carcass and boneless beef as well as some live cattle. As at March 31, 1953, the board estimates it will hold in storage in Canada product equivalent to 38,555 cattle including those held alive on community pasture. About two-thirds of these cattle are stored in the form of frozen carcass beef and most of the balance in the form of boneless manufacturing beef. No cattle have been purchased since the lifting of the American embargo on March 1, 1953.

The board exported 70,210,913 pounds of carcass beef, the equivalent of 112,410 cattle, to the United Kingdom at a cost of $31,384,000. For purposes of establishing the net loss on this operation to March 31, 1953, estimated revenue from the sale of New Zealand beef received in exchange for the beef shipped to the United Kingdom has been used as an offset in the amount of $8,377,595, this operation resulting in a loss of $23,006,405 in the beef account. As there are still some intergovernmental arrangements to be finalized in connection with a part of this program, some further minor adjustments may be necessary in this account, but these will be adjusted in a final audited statement and presented for approval when the board makes its recoup vote for 1953-54, at the end of the following fiscal year.

The board accepted 1,505,647 pounds of boneless beef in the buffer zone area which the board has had canned, and sold the bulk of this product to Greece with a small quantity being sold in the Canadian market. The net loss on this product was $588,988.92. Some 812 cattle were bought and resold live at approximately cost, and the board is still holding 39 live cattle on community pasture in western Canada valued at $7,741.89 including all added costs up to March 31, 1953. The board has sold some 2,457,913 pounds of boneless beef prepared to American army specifications to the Department of National Defence for use in supplying Canadian and commonwealth troops in Korea. This operation has been carried out at no loss to the board. The board still holds 14,806,507 pounds of frozen carcass beef, 5,930,184 pounds of boneless manufacturing beef and 26,563 pounds of beef offals in Canadian storages.

This, I think, gives fairly complete statistical information concerning the operations of the board up to the present time.

Mr. Argue: Has the buying of beef from packing houses now ceased?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. McLure: I take it, in respect of all these items, that we can get all the information required at a later time, when the main estimates are before the committee?

Mr. Abbott: That is right. I should have explained that these are our year-end supplementaries. With certain exceptions, no new question of policy is involved. It is simply a case where, in preparing the main estimates, we have not voted amounts sufficient fully to implement agreed policies. These sums are to provide for payments of the necessary amounts before the end of the year.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

B—National Gallery of Canada—

562. Payment to the national gallery purchase account for the purpose of acquiring works of art, in conformity with section 8 of the National Gallery Act—further amount required, $276,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This supplementary vote seems to be out of all proportion to the amount voted last year. Could the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration give some explanation of the purchases made?

Mr. Harris: Hon. members will recall that about a year and a half ago we appointed a new board of trustees for the national gallery and passed an act incorporating the national gallery in a somewhat modern manner. The board of trustees took their duties seriously and after much study suggested to the government the purchase of three paintings which they thought should be added to the gallery at this time to indicate, shall I say, a little greater interest in the gallery than has been the case heretofore.

[Mr. Abbott.]

I think the committee will realize that in the past we have voted sums ranging from $80,000 to about $130,000 to cover the annual purchases of small items of art and the like. There happened to be an opportunity to acquire three rather valuable and distinguished acquisitions for the gallery and in view of the fact that the board was made up of prominent citizens who are on the civil side but nevertheless acquainted with the art world it was felt proper that we should meet their wishes at this time as an earnest of our desire to have the gallery really constitute a national body for the dissemination of art throughout the country.

Mr. Graydon: Before these paintings are purchased will the minister cast his talented eyes in art over them?

Mr. Harris: May I say by way of amendment my own eyes have been passed over the paintings.

Mr. Adamson: What are the pictures?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Who are the artists and what did the pictures cost?

Mr. Harris: I could give the names and the figures in private and they will be made known eventually, but at the moment I should like to ask the indulgence of the committee as the desire is not to disclose the names until they are really acquired.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): They have not been acquired yet?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Graydon: That would not be a secret order in council, would it?

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

B—Crown companies—

563. To provide for expenses incurred by Defence Construction (1951) Limited in procuring the construction of defence projects on behalf of the Department of National Defence—further amount required, $232,016.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to know more about this item. Although the amount of $232,016 may seem small when compared with the huge figures we have to deal with in connection with national defence, nevertheless I want to know a little more about it. First of all we have the Department of National Defence, then we have the Department of Defence Production, then we have Defence Construction Limited and then Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I understand that there are one or two additional items for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

My understanding is that Defence Construction Limited has only a small staff, but that a large staff of engineers is carried in national defence and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I would like to know why we have to have this additional $232,016?

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend is aware, an amount has already been voted for Defence Construction Limited to provide for expenses in connection with the construction of defence projects. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation acts as agent for Defence Construction Limited and for the government in a great many of these things. This amount represents, first, an additional amount to cover administration and supervision on construction of four large projects by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which were done by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and which really reimburses that corporation and, secondly, for the building and maintenance program and capital assistance construction program from the Department of Defence Production.

There was originally voted under this vote $3,308,500, of which $3 million represented Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation management fees and $308,500 direct expenses of Defence Construction Limited. It is now estimated that a total of $3,640,516 will be required, of which extra there is some surplus in the direct expense vote of Defence Construction Limited, but $415,000 additional will be required for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is really an interdepartmental bookkeeping entry.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): So far as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation goes, it is perhaps easy to understand because I think they do go out and undertake building operations, but as I understand it, Defence Construction Limited is only a small organization which does a certain amount of managerial work. I do not understand that they do any construction themselves.

Mr. Abbott: Quite correct.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not understand that there are obligations they have to undertake and I would assume that all they have to look after is staff.

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This item of $232,016 has nothing to do with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as that comes later; this is all for Defence Construction Limited. I think we should receive more information as to just why this vote is necessary.

Mr. Abbott: I did my best to explain it. The original vote, which this is supplementing, was $3,308,000—that has already been voted—and it was estimated that of that $3 million would be required for the services of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is now estimated that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will require $2,415,000.

It was originally estimated that the direct expenses of Defence Construction Limited would be $308,500; it is now estimated that their direct expenses will be $423,644, the additional amount being made up as follows:

Salaries	$82,931
Travelling and living expenses	32,681
Telephones and telegraphs	4,301

And so on. I take it that my hon. friend is particularly interested in the increase in the direct expenses of Defence Construction Limited.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): If I have the figures correctly, they are $82,000, $32,000 and $4,000, making a total of $118,000 to cover the additional expenses of Defence Construction Limited. Am I correct?

Mr. Abbott: The figure I have is $115,144.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As I understand it, these figures do not include anything for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps the minister's parliamentary assistant could give more of a breakdown than I have. I think it includes something for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Dickey: There is an addition to the management fee which is paid by Defence Construction Limited to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the management that they do for Defence Construction Limited of defence projects.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That amount is what?

Mr. Dickey: The amount that I have just mentioned totals $415,000, but there are certain items that have been offset to reduce the amount that has to be voted as a further supplementary to $232,016.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am sorry, I must plead whatever amount of stupidity is necessary, but I still do not get this.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps this item could stand and a little later the parliamentary assistant could make it clear to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not want to hold this up at all but up to the moment I do not know where I am.

Mr. Dickey: If I may say a general word, I think I may be able to resolve the hon. member's difficulty. He apparently does not quite appreciate the function of Defence Construction Limited.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Oh, I think I do.

Mr. Dickey: He says it is a small organization with a small staff. That is true, but it is the corporation which enters into construction contracts in the defence construction program and it is the body that pays out all the money for those construction projects. In order to supervise those projects it has as an agent Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and is required to pay quite considerable sums to that corporation for the services that it performs for Defence Construction Limited. As the minister indicated, the estimated amount to be paid to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this fiscal year was $3,308,500.

Mr. Abbott: That is the total vote.

Mr. Dickey: I am sorry, that is the total vote for Defence Construction Limited. But there is an additional requirement of $232,016. There is required an additional management fee cost estimated by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at $415,000. There are direct expenses incurred by Defence Construction Limited resulting from additional functions assumed during the fiscal year as follows: Salaries—(a) administration of building and maintenance, thirteen positions, and capital assistance, seven positions, with respect to programs which were taken over from the Department of Defence Production in July, 1952. I might say there that the president of Defence Construction Limited appeared before the defence expenditure committee a day or so ago and gave very full evidence about what had taken place at that time. Then (b), services such as central registry, mail room, plans and specifications, formerly performed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, ten positions, and assumed by Defence Construction (1951) Limited in July, 1952.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How much is that?

Mr. Dickey: That is an additional $18,000; (c) administration of Cold Lake project, twelve positions, taken over from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in February, 1953, $12,000. Against those expenses there are recoveries under these headings. There are quite a few of them. There are recoveries under furniture and fixtures—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Give us the total.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

Mr. Abbott: If my hon. friend would like to do a little arithmetic I can give him the amounts by which the estimates will be underspent. There is $1,799 on furniture and fixtures; $29,928—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is the total I wanted.

Mr. Abbott: —professional and special services, $180,000 on the $280,000 paid by Defence Construction Limited to the United States government. It is estimated that $180,000 of that amount will be refunded. Then there is $18,128 being the amount refunded by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. These are offsets against the gross additional requirement of $530,000 odd, making a net of $232,016.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As far as I am concerned, this is a kaleidoscope. We are getting new figures every second. I thought I was getting somewhere because the parliamentary assistant told me they needed $415,000 more.

Mr. Dickey: That was additional management fee and this other is offset.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I thought I understood that was additional. Then there was $30,000 more in additional direct expenses and another item making $445,000. I think I am getting somewhere now.

Mr. Dickey: No.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then I thought the next figure he gave me was recoveries of $429,000, and if my arithmetic is good that means we have a spread of $16,000. I am sorry, but now that we have embarked on this I want to know where that $232,000 is. I have not found it. I suggest it would be sensible—

Mr. Abbott: It is just a matter of arithmetic.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I know it is but you and the parliamentary assistant have the figures there.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps this will condense it a little more. Here is the total vote of the supplementary: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation management fee, $415,000 additional requirement.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Check.

Mr. Abbott: Defence Construction Limited, direct expense, additional amount required, $115,144.

Mr. Graydon: Check.

Mr. Abbott: Against these totals there are the following amounts estimated as not being required in the primaries already voted: $1,799 underspent on furniture and fixtures;

$29,928 on professional and special services; $180,000 with respect to Canusad operations. That is a refund from the United States government. Then there is an amount refunded by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, July to March, $18,128. If my hon. friend will add up those groups—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): You give me the total.

Mr. Abbott: —and subtract I think he will find the additional amount which I need is $232,016 over and above the amount already voted of $3,308,500.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister give me first the total of these offset items, the ones he has just read? I will take his total.

Mr. Abbott: I will be delighted to do that. I will add it up.

Mr. Graydon: Abbott's ready reckoning.

Mr. Abbott: Yes. I am sorry I have not got my slide rule here.

Mr. Coldwell: I thought the hon. member for Greenwood could add.

Mr. Abbott: I thought he could too.

Mr. Graydon: You add on so much that somebody has to subtract.

Mr. Abbott: I add it up to $228,855, but I have not checked my addition.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then I think you are cheating yourself. I did not want to do that addition. I wanted the minister to take the responsibility for that. But I now have the figures with respect to the two items he gave me, $415,000 and $115,000. That makes $530,000.

Mr. Abbott: There is $100,000 for special reserve.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is a new figure. We have not had that before. It is an additional credit.

An hon. Member: That is one Dickey forgot.

Mr. Abbott: No, perhaps I forgot about it.

Mr. Knowles: This seems to be all dollars and no sense.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am always ready to submit to the minister but I do not think he has it figured out yet.

Mr. Abbott: We will do a little more addition and see what we can get.

Mr. Graydon: Could the house be quiet while this is going on? You cannot figure out things when there is a noise.

Mr. Hodgson: Send for Sinnott.

Mr. Abbott: I do not balance either.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I think I have made the best suggestion yet, that the item should stand so that the figuring can be done later. It will save a lot of time. We are going to get that figure.

Mr. Abbott: The parliamentary assistant is going to read you some more figures.

The Chairman: Shall this item stand until later?

Mr. Dickey: I think this will clear it up. If the hon. member will take these figures, I think he will find they are correct, if he will just let me read them. There was an additional management fee and the cost estimated by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is $415,000. Then, there are direct expenses. I gave the hon. member the three headings totalling $82,931.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is the total.

Mr. Dickey: That is the total of the three headings that I read. There are travelling and living expenses of $32,681; telephones and telegraphs, $4,301; additional work referred to under previous headings accounts for increases in items such as building and maintenance, $9,000; sundry expenses in connection with the Cold Lake project, $6,000; rent for head office, etc., $26,958, which gives a total of $561,871.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Giving the parliamentary assistant the benefit of the doubt, we will work on that figure.

Mr. Dickey: Now, the recoveries that have been referred to by the Minister of Finance are as follows: Recoveries on furniture and fixtures, $1,799; professional and special services, $29,928; United States government recovery of fees, $180,000, plus $100,000 from the special reserve. This totals $280,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is the special reserve?

Mr. Dickey: That is a reserve carried against that vote which is now put into the vote in order to reduce the amount required for this supplementary estimate.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is that a surplus?

Mr. Dickey: No, it is a special reserve carried against the necessity of charging against this particular vote. Received from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation an amount of $18,128, being payment for special services no longer performed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, included in the overhead paid to the corporation. The total for these estimates is $329,855 which, when subtracted from the total amount required of $561,871, gives the amount of this vote, $232,016.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I think we can now give the parliamentary assistant first prize for addition, but not first prize for timing.

Mr. Harkness: If I understand this matter correctly, this vote is necessary because the cost of supervision on major projects was in the nature of $458,000 more than it was estimated it would be; is that correct?

Mr. Dickey: $415,000.

Mr. Harkness: Leaving aside the offsetting items, the vote is necessary because the supervisory services have been much more extensive than was expected.

Mr. Abbott: Construction has gone ahead more quickly.

Mr. Harkness: Is the basic reason why these supervisory costs are so much more than was estimated because a considerable number of cost-plus contracts were undertaken which meant a great deal more supervision than would be necessary otherwise?

Mr. Dickey: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Higgins: Is it under this item that the defence projects are constructed in the different provinces? Is this the item that takes care of that?

Mr. Dickey: That is right.

Mr. Higgins: In what provinces are there defence projects being constructed?

Mr. Dickey: They are in all ten provinces.

Mr. Higgins: What is in Newfoundland?

Mr. Dickey: I have not the details of the projects under construction in Newfoundland, but there are projects in all ten provinces.

Mr. Harkness: The parliamentary assistant says that this extra supervisory cost was not due to cost-plus contracts. I believe the Minister of Finance said it was due to the fact that construction had gone ahead more rapidly than they expected. I cannot see how that is really the case, because the amount of money we voted for construction has not been exceeded. We are not being asked to vote extra money for construction, either under defence or under defence production. It would appear, therefore, that the minister's reason for this extra amount—this very large amount—for supervisory costs is not explained. I should like to know what the explanation is for this very large increase in supervisory costs.

Mr. Dickey: The explanation quite briefly, Mr. Chairman, is that Central Mortgage and Housing performed on the site supervision for all defence construction contracts. When the main estimates for this work were prepared some 16 to 18 months ago, Central Mortgage and Housing estimated that their charge for these services would be a certain amount. In a very large program of this kind there are many factors which it is difficult to forecast with absolute certainty. The experience has been that there is an additional amount required by Central Mortgage and Housing to meet their expenses for these supervisory activities, and they have had to go to their employer, Defence Construction Limited, and indicate that they require additional money.

Now, that is the explanation. It is a combination of factors which I do not think could possibly be all assessed by the hon. member or by myself. It is the result of the defence program and the work that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is doing.

Mr. Harkness: As I understand the explanation now, it has been due largely to poor estimating as to what the cost of this supervision would be. I wonder if the minister or the parliamentary assistant could tell us how much of this $415,000 was actually expended for cost-plus contracts.

Mr. Dickey: I do not think the hon. member is quite correct in saying that this is the result of poor estimating. It is the result of a number of factors that could not possibly be foreseen at the time the estimates were prepared. These programs are very complex, and become more complex sometimes as they go along.

I do not think it is possible, certainly we have not got the figures here, to indicate the impact of any cost-plus contracts on this particular item. All I can tell the hon. member is that the number of cost-plus contracts is less than 2 per cent of the entire program, and the value of those contracts is something less than 8 per cent of the entire program. I think that the additional costs would bear some relationship at least to those figures.

Mr. Harkness: I am sorry but I must take issue with the total of the cost-plus contracts and the percentages which the assistant has given, because those figures do not jibe with what we were given in the defence expenditure committee. The figure we were given there is 3·8 per cent, and that was only for the non-security defence projects. All of the security defence projects were on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. Dickey: No, the figure given to the defence expenditure committee was the figure I have quoted, less than 2 per cent. It is true, as my hon. friend points out, that the strict security projects are on a cost-plus basis, and they are on a cost-plus basis for the simple reason that they are strict security projects. They are not included in the figures I have given.

Mr. Harkness: I think the minister is giving the percentage of the number of contracts, but he is not giving the amount of dollars involved. The percentage of dollars involved in the cost-plus contracts is very much greater.

Mr. Dickey: I gave that. Excluding the security projects, it is under 8 per cent of the total program.

Mr. Harkness: Now we have gone from 2 per cent to 8 per cent.

Mr. McIlraith: No, you have not.

Mr. Higgins: Reverting to the question I asked the parliamentary assistant a moment ago, the figures I am trying to get are those relating to plants established for defence projects, apart from defence installations. Have you built factories?

Mr. Dickey: There are projects of construction under the capital assistance program in various provinces to meet production requirements but nothing, I think, under this vote.

Mr. Higgins: Nothing under this item?

Mr. Dickey: No.

Mr. Green: A few days ago figures were produced by Defence Construction Limited showing the amount of defence construction contracts awarded from November 22, 1950.

Mr. Dickey: Was that in the committee on defence expenditure?

Mr. Green: I do not know. I have a figure here—

The Chairman: So that the hon. member may understand the situation, may I point out that if these figures were produced before the committee on defence expenditure, unless they were reported in the house they cannot be used.

Mr. Green: I believe that the figures have been published.

Mr. Harkness: They appeared in the press.

Mr. Dickey: If I may do so, I would suggest that the president of Defence Construction Limited is appearing at the present time before the defence expenditure committee and that I am sure any question that might be asked relating to evidence before that committee could best be dealt with there.

Mr. Green: I do not happen to be on that committee, and these figures were published in the daily press. All that I wanted to ask the parliamentary assistant is this. The figures cover the period from November 22, 1950, to December 31, 1952, and they show a total of $401,160,000. Then there is a breakdown into the expenditures in each province. The expenditures in British Columbia are about 5 per cent of that figure. They are given as $20,922,000. Can the parliamentary assistant explain why that figure is so low? It seems to be greatly out of line with the requirements in a coastal province where there are extensive defence installations.

Mr. Dickey: That question was asked in the defence expenditure committee the other day, and the best thing I can do is to repeat the answer that was given, namely that construction of defence projects is carried out on instructions from the Department of National Defence. The Department of National Defence decides where and when they want construction done, and they make those decisions on the grounds of military necessity.

Mr. Gillis: Can the parliamentary assistant give us a breakdown province by province? It appears that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has a document that gives him a breakdown as to the amount of money that has been spent in each province.

Mr. Dickey: The document which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has in his hand was a return that was tabled in the defence expenditure committee. The hon. member can certainly get a copy. I shall be delighted to send him a copy.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Terminable services—

565. Contribution to the United Nations refugee emergency fund, $100,000.

Mr. Graydon: I desire to make one inquiry only in connection with item 565. I may say that item 566 was dealt with yesterday in the external affairs committee and I think the explanation of that will be found there. Just what is this additional contribution to the United Nations refugee emergency fund?

Mr. Abbott: As the committee may recall, the United Nations refugee emergency fund was established under authority of a resolution passed at the sixth session of the United Nations general assembly. The high commissioner for refugees was appointed by the United Nations to provide international protection for refugees upon the termination of the international refugee organization. Because of the serious plight of refugee groups in various areas, the United Nations high commissioner has had to concern himself with the problem of care and maintenance, and it is for this purpose that he has sought contributions to the emergency fund.

The objective of this fund was set at $3 million. Cabinet approved a Canadian contribution of $100,000 to this fund on Thursday, February 12, 1953, and recommended that the necessary provision be made in the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1952-53.

As I understand it, it is really to provide for a continuation and clean-up of the work of the international refugee organization.

Mr. Graydon: Did any of these nations behind the iron curtain give us anything in the way of a contribution to this extremely valuable project?

Mr. Abbott: My understanding is that they did not.

Mr. Green: Will there be a vote for this project in the coming fiscal year?

Mr. Abbott: I cannot recall offhand, but I am inclined to think that there is. However, I would have to verify that. In any case, it would probably be a supplementary estimate, as is the case this year. It would depend on circumstances.

Item agreed to.

Colombo plan—

566. Notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund to be known as the Colombo plan fund to which shall be credited, on or after March 31, 1953, the unexpended balances on March 31, 1953, of votes 113 and 114 of the Appropriation Act, No. 4, 1952 (the amounts so credited to be a charge to those votes) and any amounts provided by parliament for the purposes of the Colombo plan; and to provide for payments out of the Colombo plan fund, in the current and subsequent fiscal years, (a) for grants and loans to governments of countries in south and south-east Asia to assist in their economic development, and for special administrative expenses in connection therewith; and (b) for technical co-operation with those countries including the engagement of services of technical and professional experts in accordance with regulations established by the governor in council, the persons so engaged to be contractors and not servants of the crown, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. The purpose of this vote is to enable the fund which has been voted for the Colombo plan to be carried over and to be utilized in succeeding fiscal years. As the committee knows, it has not been possible to expend usefully all the money voted during the current year; and because of the long-range nature of the purposes for which the Colombo plan has been developed, it seemed desirable that provision should be made that funds of this kind, when voted, should not lapse at the end of the current fiscal year. That is the purpose of this particular vote. I am sure it is a case in which no question can be raised with regard to the use of a so-called dollar item in order to make this provision. This fund will be analogous—but not with the same purposes—to the Ottawa improvement fund. The moneys will be voted and they will be there when the bills come in to be paid and when the projects are approved.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister say how much will be left over at the end of this fiscal year to put into the fund?

Mr. Abbott: I am not sure that I have readily available here how much would otherwise lapse, but I believe there is a fairly substantial amount.

Mr. Knowles: It will also be possible, will it not, for us to get a report on the operation of this fund after it has been established?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. I had assumed that when the corresponding item in the main estimates is called, the Secretary of State for External Affairs would probably want to make a fairly complete statement as to the progress which was made. The sole purpose of this item is to make sure that the amount we voted in our main estimates last year will not lapse on March 31.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Does that apply to the previous year?

Mr. Abbott: It covers both years. Last year we transferred it to the Canadian Commercial Corporation, as may be remembered.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

567. Departmental administration—further amount required for the purchase of books and other reference material for the departmental library, $4,000.

Mr. Abbott: I should like to say just a word on this item. This additional amount in item 567 is to enable the department to purchase the library of the late Dr. Clark. I do not know that the purchase price will be exactly that amount, but Dr. Clark had an extremely valuable technical library consisting of publications and of books. The major part of those books and periodicals going back a great many years will be of great value to the departmental library in the Department of Finance. While we have a sufficient amount in our general vote to enable us to buy this library, I felt that in the circumstances it would be more appropriate for me to put a special item in the supplementary estimates in order to call it to the attention of the house. I felt sure it would carry the warm support of all hon. members.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Certainly, speaking for myself—and I think for others—I would say that this seems to be a most appropriate thing and that the library will have a special value because of the association carried with it.

Mr. Lennard: I certainly do not object to this item but I do not know why it is stated in the details that it is for office stationery, supplies and equipment. It makes a farce of details of this kind.

Mr. Abbott: That happens to be the primary vote under which items of this kind are put. The purchase of books and periodicals comes under that item and that is why I made a special point of explaining that the particular types of books that were being acquired were the ones I have mentioned.

Item agreed to.

Payments to municipalities—

Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property—

568. To provide for payments to municipalities in accordance with the Municipal Grants Act; and to provide for payments to municipalities under order in council of July 19, 1950, P.C. 3456, in respect of the cost of medical and hospital services and supplies furnished to federal employees and other persons specified therein—further amount required including authority to regard the admiralty properties in the city of St. John's, Newfoundland, as federal property notwithstanding that formal transfer of administration has not been completed, $153,856.

Mr. Pearkes: Does this include any addition to the grant to the municipality of Esquimalt?

Mr. Abbott: It does.

Mr. Pearkes: I hoped my remarks made during the budget debate would have softened the minister.

Mr. Abbott: I know my hon. friend will be happy to learn that the town of Esquimalt will receive $42,114, which I am told is satisfactory.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I notice this refers to the admiralty property in St. John's, Newfoundland. How much will St. John's receive as a result of this change which was made?

Mr. Abbott: There is a payment to St. John's arising out of the taking over of the admiralty property—I think that is what my hon. friend refers to—of $48,184. The amount required there will be covering arrears as well, of course, and local improvement grants.

Mr. Brooks: What qualification is necessary for a municipality to receive a grant?

Mr. Abbott: I do not suppose my hon. friend wants me to endeavour from memory to explain the rather complicated formula on which we make these grants to municipalities. Generally speaking, in order to obtain any grant under the general section the value of federal property in the municipality must exceed 4 per cent of the total assessed property in the municipality, and then 75 per cent of the excess is eligible for tax grant on the usual basis.

In addition we pay local improvement taxes, and then in addition where property is acquired from a municipality there is a tapering down transitional grant under a section of the Municipal Grants Act which permits payment of municipal taxes on a reducing scale over a period of a certain number of years, I think it is three or four years, and then it goes into the general fund.

Mr. Brooks: What about crown companies?

Mr. Abbott: Crown companies are handled on a separate basis. All crown companies are expected to make arrangements with the municipality for the payment of taxes.

Mr. Brooks: I was thinking of my own town of Sussex. Do they get anything at all from this fund? Sussex, New Brunswick, has a military field and a number of other government properties.

Mr. Abbott: At the present time Sussex does not receive a grant, no.

Mr. Graydon: I want to take but a moment of the committee's time in connection with this item. I have come to the very strong conviction with respect to the question of the relationship between the federal government and municipalities, particularly where there is a concentration of federal properties in that municipality, that some new arrangements should be made with respect to the payment of taxes by the federal authorities. That fact has been largely borne in upon some of us because Toronto township particularly has been experiencing considerable financial difficulties which are perhaps to be expected in the changing conditions that they find there. It seems to me that at the present time there is not very much justification really for the federal government not being a taxpayer in the municipal field the same as anybody else. I know the minister has had arguments from time to time that seemed convincing at that time, but when they are applied practically I do not think they are very convincing at all.

I make this appeal to the minister and suggest to him that there should be some change in the legislation governing the relationship of the federal and municipal jurisdictions. You see what is happening in some of these places. Your department is charging the municipalities excise taxes on what they buy and at the same time you are not paying your share of taxes in the municipal field. I know that is a bald statement and perhaps oversimplifies the problem, and I have no desire to do that. I do want to point out to the minister, however, that in our own province—and perhaps it applies to other provinces as well—they have made themselves available for taxation by the municipalities. I can remember a year ago, when that was done in Ontario by act of the legislature, asking the minister if we were going to do that in the federal field, and the minister said, no, it was not the policy of the government at that time to do it.

I do not want to be unduly critical in this thing, but I am convinced in my own mind that it is the wrong principle to follow, and I have taken the opportunity of this discussion at this time to impress it again upon the minister. I think the whole thing should be reviewed, and there should be at least some classification, if you like, of federal property. It may be that there are some federal properties, although none come to my mind, that should not be taxed by the municipalities. Perhaps there are some instances, but the minister would know more about that than I do. The municipalities have to bear such a tremendous load now that in many instances they are unable to do it. Some review should be made of the legislation, and I ask the minister at this time to do it. I do not want to take up any more of the time of the committee discussing this matter.

Mr. Abbott: I thank my hon. friend. As he knows, the present system was suggested to the house only after a great deal of study. It represented the best judgment we could exercise as to what should be done. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is the first time in the history of Canada since confederation that any federal government has attempted to pay anything in the way of municipal taxes to municipalities.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Mr. Abbott: No; no preceding government has ever attempted to do it. It was always stoutly resisted. We did work it out. It may be possible that the formula can be improved, but nevertheless it was arrived at after a great deal of careful study and, in my present view, represented a very great advance over what had existed before, and is reasonably fair. I do not suggest it is the last word, and I think perhaps we may continue to examine it; but it has provided a considerable measure of assistance to a great many municipalities where there was excessive concentration of federal property. But we can look into it again.

Mr. Tustin: I should like to say to the minister that it was a step in the right direction, but I should also like to urge upon him the necessity of giving further consideration to this matter. I have in mind a very small municipality in my own constituency where the Department of National Defence expropriated a good part of the land for a bombing range. We were very glad to have that bombing range, but it made it extremely difficult for this small township to carry on. There is one other thing I should add to that. There are very many heavy vehicles travelling over the roads in that small township, and the township had to spend a considerable amount of money to try to keep up the roads. The Department of National Defence did make some small grant to that municipality to help it to maintain the roads. What I wanted to say particularly this afternoon was that the minister should give further consideration to this matter and endeavour to give some assistance to the smaller municipalities because of the fact that years ago the dominion government did not own nearly so much property as it owns today, and it is making it more difficult each year for some of the municipalities to carry on.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be very glad to do that.

Item agreed to.

Contingencies and miscellaneous—

569. To authorize the write-off to consolidated deficit account of costs incurred in 1946 in engraving blank bonds in anticipation of a loan which did not materialize, $68,419.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister give the best explanation he can of this item? This is an amount of $68,419, and makes reference to the engraving of blank bonds. What kind of paper was used, and what kind of engraving?

Mr. Abbott: After the close of the ninth victory loan in 1945, but before the time of Canada savings bonds, certain bonds were prepared in blank, in anticipation of a further victory loan in 1946. As my hon. friend will appreciate, these victory loans were in substantial amounts. Engraved bonds, with all the security precautions, had to be prepared; and the Bank of Canada, as the fiscal agent of the government, arranged with the bank note companies to prepare the necessary bonds for a tenth victory loan issue. It was then decided that that would not be required. Those bonds have been held ever since. They are of no use for further bond issues; and this item is simply to write off that item in the books.

Mr. Knowles: Could they not be sold as wallpaper?

Mr. Abbott: I dare say.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): When this item was called, I was on my feet to ask a further question concerning item 568. I thought the hon. member who then spoke was going to make some further comment on that item. I wish to ask the minister a broader question which arises in connection with the municipal situation. This is a matter that was dealt with by my colleague, the hon. member for Ontario.

My question is this: Recognizing the difficulties with which municipalities are faced, quite apart from the special situation of government property which does not pay taxes, and which I shall not take time to discuss now, by reason of the fact that their sources of revenue have not expanded with their obligations, would the minister say a word as to whether the government feels that is a matter which would be a proper subject for consideration and discussion in the near future? Does he feel the whole question, that affecting the plight of the municipalities, is one which ought to be gone into?

Mr. Abbott: I am not quite sure what my hon. friend wishes me to say. It is clear that all three levels of government—federal, provincial and local—have problems in raising the necessary money to defray the costs of the services their people demand. The municipalities undoubtedly have difficulty. I sympathize with the councils of municipalities who have to raise these moneys, because I know something of the problem, myself. Having to raise funds necessary to pay federal expenditures, I have known the problem for a long time.

The municipalities are the creatures of the provinces, as we know. They can obtain from the provinces such taxing powers as those provinces see fit to confer upon them within the constitutional limits imposed by the provinces. I have always felt it was improper that there should be direct financial discussion between the federal government and the municipalities because, as I have said, the municipalities derive their power from and are the creatures of the provinces. Any discussion as to financial requirements of municipalities must, in the first and every instance, be directed to the legislative body which brings them into existence. Then in the discussions which take place from time to time between the provincial and federal governments it is quite proper of course to take into account all those discussions concerning the requirements of the junior taxing bodies in the provinces.

But, other than that, I do not think it would be proper for me to express any opinion. I would feel strongly that there should not be any general discussion as to the division of taxing authority between federal and municipal authorities.

Mr. Knowles: Speaking again with respect to item 569, may I ask how much money there is in this consolidated deficit account?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I would have to take that question as notice.

Mr. Low: It is a minus quantity.

Mr. Abbott: I can assure my hon. friend it is not carried as an asset.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Item 570.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I suggest that we take items 570 and 571 together.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

570. To provide for a government contribution to the superannuation fund in an amount equal to the estimated current and arrears payments of individual contributors in the previous fiscal year —further amount required, $532,715.

571. To authorize and provide for a further special government contribution to reduce the unamortized portion of the civil service superannuation account liability, $25,000,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister tell us exactly where the fund stands. Is the amount of $532,715 actuarially correct? Where does the contribution of $25 million leave the actuarial position?

Mr. Abbott: The $532,715 is required for the current year contribution, and really represents an underestimation in the main estimates. The additional amount required is due primarily to some salary increases, and more particularly to the fact that there are a number of civil servants who have been given permanent status during the year, and therefore a larger amount is required for the current government contribution.

Then, as to the status of the fund itself, perhaps the committee would like me to give a brief review of the situation as it is at the moment. At December 31, 1947, the total estimated liability was $341,149,000 and the balance in the accounts amounted to $89,544,000, leaving a deficit of $251,605,000. By December 31, 1951, the deficit had increased to an estimated $312,000,000, even after a special contribution in the amount of $75,000,000 had been made.

This deficit position was carefully studied in order to determine what should be done to reduce it and to prevent the creation of a new one. The deficit had been caused almost entirely by two main factors. First, the government had only matched contributions of employees for their current service and not those for their prior service and, secondly, since the contribution rates are calculated on the basis of a normal progression up the established salary scales, when there is a general salary increase, the contributions already made are actually inadequate in relation to the larger pension which will be received.

I indicated that the government proposed to continue the policy initiated at the close of 1950-51 to wipe out the accumulated deficit by means of bulk contributions over a reasonable period, and in order that the causes of that deficit would not continue to have effect I indicated my intention to show on the government balance sheet the full estimated actuarial liability of the superannuation fund at the end of each fiscal year and to credit to the account each year thereafter an amount equal to interest reckoned at 4 per cent calculated on the amount of the full actuarial liability of the fund rather than on the actual balance in the fund.

In the final supplementary estimates last year, I included an item to make up for the portion of the deficit related to past service contributions which had not been matched. A further item was included in those estimates to match the increase in the net liability of the fund which was created by the general salary increase, effective December 1, 1951, and finally a third item in those estimates constituted a bulk contribution to further write down the existing deficit. These contributions reduced the outstanding deficit in the account to $214,000,000 as of March 31, 1952.

Reference to the public accounts for 1951-52 will indicate quite clearly to hon. members that the policy which I announced last year at this time is being followed.

Item 571 in the estimates now before us is simply a further bulk contribution designed to reduce the outstanding deficit in the account from $214,000,000 to $189,000,000.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How does the position compare with that of two or three years ago?

Mr. Abbott: The high was $312,000,000.

Items agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

The Chairman: Shall we take items 573, 574 and 575 together?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Fish culture and development branch—

573. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment—further amount required, $350,000.

Fisheries research board of Canada—

574. Headquarters administration—further amount required, $8,000.

Special—

575. To provide for assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities, subject to the approval of the governor in council—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would the minister make a statement?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): The first item has to do with a slide on the Babine river, which is one of the tributaries of the Skeena and one of the important salmon streams in the west. A little over a year ago the salmon were noticed falling back in the river. An aeroplane was flown over and it was found that quite an amount of the bank had slid in and choked the river, something similar to what happened at Hell's Gate in 1913. Last summer the department built by day labour a 60-mile road into the slide and last fall we let a contract for $498,000 to the General Construction Company, who were the lowest tenderers, for the removal of the slide before April 30, 1953. This is the time of low water when the work can be done and when no salmon are passing. The amount required in this fiscal year toward that contract is the $350,000 covered by this item.

Mr. Green: Will the work be finished on time?

Mr. Sinclair: The contract is to be finished by April 30 and it contains a penalty clause for every day thereafter. We are quite sure that it will be finished. The work is going very well according to the reports of our own engineers.

Items agreed to.

Fisheries research board of Canada—

574. Headquarters administration—further amount required, $8,000.

Mr. Higgins: Has any decision been arrived at with respect to the headquarters of the fisheries research board in the east?

Mr. Sinclair: The reason for this extra $8,000 is the decision which was taken by the fisheries research board of Canada to bring their publications up to date. The amount of research in the laboratories has been outrunning the facilities to publish the results of their experiments and the fishing industry is most anxious that these be made available. Last year we had a special item of $14,200 for the publication of the scientific research by research stations and experimental stations. That work has gone out and this extra item will enable them to bring their publications up to date.

Mr. Higgins: Has there been any decision about the headquarters in the east?

Mr. Sinclair: The question of establishing headquarters of the new northwest Atlantic fisheries commission will be made by the commission, which is composed of representatives of ten governments. Two towns in eastern Canada and one United States town are being considered.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): When will the report of the fisheries research board be out?

Mr. Sinclair: I must confess that I do not know whether it is out or not. It should be out very shortly because they had their annual meeting over a month ago.

Item agreed to.

Special—

575. To provide for assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities, subject to the approval of the governor in council—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Could we have an explanation of this item?

Mr. Sinclair: The availability of supplies of bait at convenient centres has long been one of the difficulties facing the fishing industry and different plans to overcome it have been tried. Order in council P.C. 3451 of August 3, 1948, established regulations for providing assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities. These provide for assistance in the provision, maintenance and operation of bait freezing and storage facilities up to a maximum of $10,000 in each case.

In the main estimates last year $30,000 was provided for the three applications which it was expected would be processed that year. Actually a fourth bait depot at Jordan Bay, Yarmouth county, Nova Scotia, is being considered and this extra $10,000 is for that purpose. There is a fifth application presently being studied by the department.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Where are they?

Mr. Sinclair: Two in Nova Scotia and three in Newfoundland.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Where are they in Newfoundland?

Mr. Sinclair: East Coast Fisheries Limited, Colinet island, St. Mary's Bay, Newfoundland; East Coast Fisheries Limited, branch, St. Mary's Bay, Newfoundland; Fishery Products Limited, Trepassey Bay, Newfoundland. No decision has been arrived at on these three as yet.

Item agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

576. Office of the secretary to the Governor General—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. Lennard: I should like to have a little more information on this. Why was not a similar amount required in the years 1946 to 1953?

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow this item to stand and I will ask the Prime Minister to come in. It is to bring last year's arrangements in line. As my hon. friend will recall, the present Governor General is not subject to income tax on his income.

Mr. Lennard: I might ask at the same time—

Mr. Abbott: Shall we allow the item to stand?

Mr. Lennard: Was not the previous Governor General subject to income tax in his own country?

Mr. Abbott: I believe not.

Mr. Lennard: I would like to know.

Mr. Abbott: Not with respect to his Canadian income.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Minister of Finance make it clear that the Governor General is free from income tax with respect to his income from the government?

Mr. Abbott: I believe that is correct, but I am speaking from memory.

Mr. Knowles: He pays income tax on his private income, but not on his salary of approximately $50,000.

Mr. Abbott: Ten thousand pounds.

Mr. Knowles: His salary of $48,667 is not subject to income tax.

Mr. Abbott: I shall send for the Prime Minister. I might say that there is a similar item in the main estimates which will come forward, so perhaps we could pass this.

Mr. Knowles: The minister says that there is a similar item in the main estimates but—

Mr. Abbott: Let us not have a discussion on it in the absence of the Prime Minister.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Pensions and other benefits—

589. To authorize in respect of members of the Royal Canadian Air Force on leave without pay and serving as instructors with civilian training organizations operating under the British commonwealth air training plan who were killed, payment to their dependents of amounts equal to the amounts such dependents would have received under the Pension Act, as amended, had such service as instructors been military service in the armed forces of Canada, less the value of any benefits received by such dependents under insurance contracts which were effected on the lives of such members of the Royal Canadian Air Force by or at the expense of the civilian organizations—further amount required, $1,224.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I might give a word of explanation about this item. When we amend the scale of pensions under the Pension Act there is one group of Canadian airmen who were on loan to the civilian operated schools who do not qualify for pensions under the act and we have to introduce a supplementary item to bring their pensions up to the same scale. Next year an appropriate provision will be made in the main estimates.

Mr. Pearkes: Could you not amend the Pension Act?

Mr. Abbott: I have wondered about that.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL AND ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

National research council—

590. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment—further amounted required, $725,450.

Mr. Green: Could we have an explanation of this item?

Mr. Abbott: When the main estimates for 1952-53 were being prepared, a very careful review was made of the estimated requirements for the various construction projects. After due consideration of the nature of this project and comparison with expenditures made in previous years on other construction projects it did not appear that expenditures on this project would exceed $1,300,000 for this fiscal year.

The progress made on this project throughout the year has been outstanding. Progress payments for the first seven months of this fiscal year amounted to $1,199,984. Although the monthly progress payments for the remainder of the fiscal year will be on a lower scale, it is quite evident that the amount provided in the main estimates will not be sufficient to meet requirements for this project. A number of transfers of anticipated savings were made between allotments in this vote to provide funds to continue the progress payments. Finally it was found necessary to request authorization to make temporary loans from other projects where liquidation of encumbrances were not anticipated until near the end of the fiscal year, in order to avoid work stoppage on this project.

Mr. Green: What project is this?

Mr. Abbott: There are various projects for the electrical engineering and radio building of the national research council at the large project out on the Montreal road. The progress of work has been much more rapid than was expected when we prepared the estimates a little over a year ago.

Item agreed to.

Atomic energy control board—

Atomic energy project (now Atomic Energy of Canada Limited)—

591. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $310,000.

Mr. Green: Could I have a brief explanation of this and the following item?

Mr. Abbott: The main item here is the additional cost involved in connection with the accident. You know the difficulty with the one pile at Chalk River. This is the additional expense which will be incurred in this year in connection with repairs to that first pile.

Mr. Brooks: What is the total amount?

Mr. Abbott: We are asking for an extra $310,000. The original vote was $7,089,371.

Mr. Brooks: I understand that the cost of repairs is small, approximately half a million dollars.

Mr. Abbott: That may be. I think the work is well advanced and we are asking for an extra $310,000. It has been possible to make some transfers from other allotments.

Mr. Brooks: It is much less than was expected.

Mr. Abbott: So I understand.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: We shall now revert to item 576, governor general and lieutenant governors, $50,000.

GOVERNOR GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

576. Office of the secretary to the Governor General—further amount required, 50,000.

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Chairman, it will have been noticed by hon. members that in the estimates for 1953-54 there is an increase of $56,000 provided in the item for the office of the secretary to His Excellency the Governor General. Here there is $50,000 which is not the whole amount of the difference between everything paid for the Governor General's remuneration and allowances and the actual expenditure incurred to discharge the duties and responsibilities of that office. The reason for the proposed increase is that the annual grant for the maintenance, operation and upkeep of government house has not been adjusted to any significant extent since 1914, and since that time costs have of course at least doubled.

The principal increases come under the headings of salaries and wages, provisions, fuel and light. The result has been that during the past year there has been a difference of something of the order of $5,000 a month between the one-twelfth of the annual provision and the expenditure. It happened that His Excellency's predecessor was able to carry on without there being any increases at all in salaries from those that had been established when he first came to Canada. But with respect to several of the services for which provision had to be made, there was just about twice as much required as had continued to be paid during the term of Lord Alexander.

I think the comptroller of the household is very careful, and these matters were carefully checked by officials of the comptroller of the treasury department so that we might have a realistic picture of what was being done. Those are the actual costs. One of two things had to be done. There either had to be a very substantial reduction in the scale according to which government house has been carrying on, or there had to be an increase to cover the additional expenditure. We thought that it would be the feeling of the Canadian public that there should not be any reduction in the scale on which government house is carried on in Ottawa.

I think most hon. members have been guests at government house, and I do not think any of us have felt that it would be proper that there should be a substantial curtailment in the scale of the expenditures made there. For that reason we are taking the responsibility of recommending to parliament that the required increase should be granted. Unless the scale is to be diminished, we do not think that the people of Canada would desire that the incumbent of that office should have to make the expense of carrying out his public responsibilities a part of his own personal expenditure. The remuneration, which at the time of confederation was set at £10,000, or the equivalent in dollars at the fixed rate of $4.86⅔, and the allowances are all paid into the same account and are insufficient to cover the expenditures which are not, it seems to me, of a scale that is out of proportion with what should be done by the representative of the sovereign in our capital.

When one reads of what went on twenty-five, thirty or forty years ago with respect to entertainment at government house, one realizes that it was possible to do things then that have not been done in these last few years because it would have meant a more grandiose scale than has become the set pattern in the last few years. We felt that the pattern of the last few years should be continued at public expense and it should not be such as would have to be contributed to substantially from the personal income from other sources of the one who had the honour to be designated as the sovereign's representative.

Mr. Lennard: I want it understood that I was not objecting to the amount. I was merely seeking information.

Mr. St. Laurent: Quite so.

Mr. Murphy: I think the minister did not finish his explanation with respect to item 591.

Mr. Abbott: We are on item 576.

The Chairman: We can deal with that later if the hon. member wishes to do so, but let us conclude the discussion on item 576.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all appreciate the remarks the Prime Minister has made as to this item. I know that any criticism anyone offers of this kind of item is sometimes looked upon as carping, but it does seem to me that the total cost of the establishment at government house is getting to be quite a large figure. If my arithmetic is correct, if I can add at least as well as some of those who have been trying to add this afternoon, we will now be spending on the salary of the Governor General and the maintenance of government house a total of $228,129 a year. That includes the salary of the Governor General of $48,667, the $10,000 salary of the secretary, which is provided for in two parts, and something over $170,000 for the office of the secretary, including the running of government house and various allowances. I am looking at page 26.

Mr. Abbott: This is not a new item. It will be $206,224.

Mr. Knowles: Well, the items are on page 26. One has to break them down because they include the lieutenant governors as well. One has to pick out the items that relate to the Governor General and the administration of government house. I think my figures will stand up, and they add up to $228,129. The items on the page include $177,000 for the lieutenant governors. If you subtract that, you arrive at my figure. It is just a question, Mr. Chairman, whether that is not a little too large a sum for this establishment.

I know that comparisons are always difficult to make, and this one may be a bit embarrassing; but I cannot help but compare what it costs for us to maintain the Governor General and his residence with what we pay to the Prime Minister and the maintenance of his residence. It is a much smaller figure. I believe there is $23,000 altogether in salaries and allowances, and $25,000 for the maintenance of that house. We are in a rather awkward position. The Governor General is the titular head of the country, yet he is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister who is the political leader of the country. There seems to be a great difference between the $25,000 for the maintenance of one establishment and the $228,000 for the maintenance of the other establishment. I hear people say that the Prime Minister does not have to entertain, but I understand he does have to do a certain amount of entertaining.

The suggestion was made that the Governor General should not be required to dip into his own funds. We pay him this salary of $48,667, which is not subject to income tax, although it has been pointed out that he pays income tax on his own private income. Now, the Prime Minister says that there have been few changes in the total amount we have paid for this establishment since 1914. I have not the books before me to look up the figures for the various years that far back. I am interested, however, in the figures for the year ending March 31, 1952. The amount requested by the Minister of Finance for the Governor General at that time represented a slight reduction. In other words, in that year apparently some effort was made to cut down the total amount being spent for this establishment, and there was a reduction in this very item we are now discussing of $2,468 as compared with the 1950-51 fiscal year. It seems strange that it was possible, just two or three years ago, to apply the concept of economy and pare things down a bit at government house, but now we are told that there has been this substantial increase of $50,000. I understand that this increase is in relation to the allowances for the purchase of goods, the hiring of help and so on. You have to look at that in relation to what was spent on allowances before. The amount before was $50,000, so it is not just a little increase in proportion to the current rise in the cost of living, it is actually a doubling of that amount. The Minister of Finance has had a fair amount to say about this item that is now before us being comparable to the item in the main estimates. May I point out that the item in the main estimates is, in effect, the beginning of a new policy of paying $100,000 of allowances instead of $50,000. This policy does not begin until the start of the new fiscal year on April 1. We are now being called upon to make this increase retroactive to last April 1. Frankly, I wonder whether there is not room, even with all the respect that we have for the office and the respect and regard we have for the person who occupies the office, for the kind of economy approach that was tried back in 1951-52, rather than this substantial increase.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to object to this item. I must say that I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. When we consider that the Governor General represents the sovereign in this country, and when we realize the tremendous expense the sovereign must be to the people of England—to which I understand we make no contribution—I think the contribution which we in this country make to the Governor General is certainly not out of line for a country of our size and wealth.

My understanding from what the Prime Minister said is that it is costing us $5,000 a month more for the upkeep of the present Governor General that it did in the past; that is $60,000 a year. In his remarks he said he thought the Canadian people would wish to pay this amount in order to maintain the standard which we, as a great country, should have.

I should like to say that I feel the Canadian people should have been ashamed of the niggardly fashion in which they have treated governors general in the past. It seems to me that if we have been paying $60,000 too little in the past to our governors general, it is time we were bringing that position up to the standard of a country like Canada.

Mr. St. Laurent: I was aware, in a general way, that the situation was difficult before Lord Alexander retired, but I did not know what the actual figures were. When the situation was brought to our attention some months ago, it was gone into, and I can assure hon. members that it was very carefully checked because we were not at all anxious to have to bring before parliament any recommendations for the change in the allowances that were made just after there had been a change in the incumbent of that high office. The officials went into the figures very carefully with the comptroller. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre feels that there could be economies made, and that was looked into. It was found that in the actual expenditures, there did not seem to be any item that could be dispensed with without changing the scale on which the responsibilities of representing the sovereign were discharged in Canada.

This being the situation, it was felt that this recommendation should be made. The hon. member says there is a difference between the expenses there and the expenses of the house provided for the Prime Minister. Well, there is a very substantial difference in the size of the two establishments and the number of personnel required for their proper upkeep. All of that does have to be taken into account.

Mr. Low: And the office work is done at Rideau Hall.

Mr. St. Laurent: This amount does not only provide living accommodation for government house, it also provides for the whole administrative branch of the Governor General's office. In addition to the amounts that are required for the upkeep of 24 Sussex street, there are offices supplied to me here in the central block, there are offices supplied in the east block and there is personnel supplied to assist me in the discharge of my duties. All similar personnel is included in the details that are given on page 214 of the estimates for the Governor General's office.

The hon. member for Royal is quite right. This is an extremely modest sum when compared with the substantial sums that have to be provided out of the budget of the United Kingdom for the maintenance of the office of our beloved Queen of all the countries of the commonwealth. He is quite right. There is no contribution made by the Canadian public for the maintenance of the dignity of the monarchy as it exists for the benefit of all the countries of the commonwealth.

In each of the countries of the commonwealth there is a representative of the sovereign. But from what we know of the establishment out at Rideau Hall I do not think any of us feels that for the Canadian nation it is an extravagant establishment. I do not think that the travelling done by His Excellency in visiting the various parts of Canada is not worth, for the maintenance of our institutions, the amounts that are expended to have us all, from one ocean to the other, realize that although we have our provincial legislatures we have a central authority, a central parliament that is the parliament of all of us and at the head of which is the personal representative of the sovereign of all the commonwealth countries.

Mr. Tustin: The Prime Minister in his remarks mentioned the fact that the salary of the secretary to the governor general was in two parts. I notice that in the estimates the statutory amount of $2,400 is set out.

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes.

Mr. Tustin: Then we are asked to vote $7,600 to make his total salary $10,000.

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes.

Mr. Tustin: I wonder why it is done in that way?

Mr. St. Laurent: It is done in that way because at the time the office was established at confederation the salary of the secretary of the Governor General was fixed at $2,400, and that statute has never been changed. But it was found, over the years, that it had to be supplemented. Perhaps it would have been wiser to amend the statute itself; but instead the practice that has been followed ever since the first increase was made in the $2,400 is that of having it made through the estimates.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to ask a simple question of the Minister of Finance. Am I to understand that the representative at government house is to get an increase in salary of $50,000 a year, additional to the $50,000 for expenses?

Mr. Abbott: There is no change in the salary.

Mr. St. Laurent: No, there is no change in the salary. The salary is the salary that is fixed, I think, in the British North America Act itself. The allowance was $50,000 and it is now being made $100,000. But that is the expense allowance. I can assure the hon. gentleman that not only the expense allowance but also the salary is spent in the maintenance of the office.

Mr. Hodgson: The reason I asked that question is this. At the time we were getting a Canadian representative, it was quite common talk that this procedure was going to save the Canadian nation a great deal of money; that is, in having a Canadian representative.

Mr. St. Laurent: I never heard that suggestion.

Mr. Hodgson: Now it is costing $50,000 more per year.

Mr. Low: I just want to say that I agree with the Prime Minister. I think the Prime Minister is quite right. If we are going to maintain in this country the monarchical form that is represented by His Excellency the Governor General, then we have to make it a dignified institution. My own calculations tell me that the amount of money that is being spent to maintain that institution is not in any way excessive. In fact I think it is well spent. The time of change from one incumbent of the office to another is the time we would discover if there was any disparity between what should be spent and what it was possible to spend under the old arrangement. If I am informed correctly, under the former governor general many of the staff members stayed on out of sheer loyalty, and at salaries and wages which were much below what they could have demanded elsewhere.

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes; and we felt that what was necessary had to be provided as soon as Lord Alexander left the office.

Mr. Low: Yes. I thought that point should be brought out because when new staff are hired they certainly ought to be hired at going wages and salaries, which would naturally push up the cost. I just wanted to support the Prime Minister and say that I think he is quite right.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: I understand that the hon. member for Lambton West had a question to ask on item 592.

Mr. Abbott: He has left. If he gets back before we get through, it can be dealt with.

Mr. Green: When that item came up the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not in the chamber. He is here now.

Mr. Abbott: Is this item 591?

Mr. Green: No; item 592. The parliamentary assistant is here now. Perhaps he might explain.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL AND ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

Atomic energy control board—

592. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, and to provide for payment to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing and other works constructed at Deep River during 1952-53—further amount required, $666,750.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I could give an explanation. I am informed that this supplementary estimate is required in order to transfer expenditures properly chargeable to construction or acquisition of buildings, et cetera, but budgeted for under construction of the new reactor. It is really a transfer item.

Mr. Green: No. Item 592 has something to do with housing.

Mr. Abbott: It has nothing to do with housing at all. It is a transfer item.

Mr. Green: It says "Construction or acquisition of buildings".

Mr. Abbott: That is the title of the primary item; but the explanation is as I have given it, that the original vote was $2,852,000 and this supplementary item for $666,000 is required in order to transfer expenditures properly chargeable to construction or acquisition of buildings, et cetera, but budgeted for under construction of the new reactor. I have the details of it here, if my hon. friend would like to have them.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Engineering branch—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects—further amount required—

600. Nova Scotia ($21,000, less the amount of $20,999 available from savings in other listed projects detailed in previous estimates for 1952-53 for this province), $1.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to have an explanation of this item with special reference to Nova Scotia.

Mr. Abbott: This is a dollar item, Mr. Chairman, and a quite appropriate dollar item. Provision was made in the main estimates for the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor ferry project, to prepare plans for the construction of new dock facilities at Yarmouth. It is now desired to actually acquire a site and this dollar item permits the vote, which is sufficient to cover that amount, to be used for that purpose.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This is only put in as a dollar item. How does the department tell? How is it going to get the money necessary to meet the expenditure?

Mr. Abbott: It is already voted, but voted for plans, and not a broad enough vote to cover acquiring a site.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Dominion bureau of statistics—

605. Statistics—further amount required, $99,278.

Mr. Lennard: There is a matter that I wanted to bring to the minister's attention in connection with statistics, and it will not take many minutes for me to do so. I might as well do it now as later on this session. In my opinion some of the officials of the bureau of statistics have an exalted idea of the effectiveness of what they consider to be some bright ideas in the field of obtaining figures. I might refer to two forms, namely E 60A and E 49, that are put out by the bureau of statistics. They are questionnaires that are handled by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. These questionnaires are very simple, though some of the questions are hard to answer.

Please help by answering these questions. For use of dominion bureau of statistics in estimating total tourist and travelling expenditures.

1. Number of persons in your car including driver.
2. Length of stay in the United States.
3. Approximate total amount spent in the United States on this visit by you and those in your car for all purposes (examples: gas, oil, repairs, lodging, food, beverages, merchandise, amusement, etc.).

On about six occasions during the past six months I have crossed and recrossed the border at very widely separated points from Alberta to Quebec, and on only two occasions was I questioned. On both those occasions I could not give a correct answer because I did not know. These questionnaires are not signed. The person's name is not included on them. I would be safe in saying that answers to them represent not more than 50 per cent of the people who cross the border during the year at various points. The cost of these forms was brought down in an order for return some weeks ago. They have cost something over $50,000 in the past several years. That would not include the cost of operations. I feel that it is money thrown down the drain; that it is money wasted to supply forms and questionnaires such as these at a border point because all it has is a nuisance value. It is irritating.

I have a form here that is supposed to be answered by visitors from the United States. They do not have to answer it; it is not compulsory. If it is answered I would say that nine times out of ten the wrong answer is given, because even if the individual thinks he is giving the right answer I am sure it will be the wrong one. I know that is what happened in my case. On one occasion I gave an answer that I thought was the correct one, but twenty-four hours later I realized that I had not included any figure for the cost of my gasoline because I was obtaining my gasoline through the credit system. I should have added at least $10 a day for my expenses while I was in the United States last fall.

It is ridiculous for the bureau of statistics to think they can obtain proper information from such inquiries as these. I am quite sure that they do not, and it is money wasted. The Minister of Finance wants to know where we can save money. This is a small amount, but I daresay if the number of employees that have to service these forms was taken into consideration it would probably run into several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Abbott: I will see that my hon. friend's remarks are brought to the attention of the bureau.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Marine services—

Marine service steamers—

609. Operation, maintenance and repairs—further amount required, $60,000.

Mr. Green: Can the parliamentary assistant give us a brief explanation of these different items?

Mr. Benidickson: This one is an additional amount required over what was foreseen when the main estimates were brought down for repairs. It is the cost of repairing the bow of an icebreaker which was damaged in the ice in the waters off Labrador, I think in July of last year.

Item agreed to.

610. Construction or acquisition of vessels and equipment, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $6,760.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Perhaps the parliamentary assistant could give us an explanation of each of these items.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, there may be a general explanation. These items represent small amounts by which we underestimated the requirements of these particular primaries. For instance, in the case of this item, it is an additional amount to cover the final settlement with Newfoundland Shipyards Limited in connection with the construction of the Newfoundland general service work boat Sea Beacon.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What was the price?

Mr. Abbott: The amount voted was a very large amount, $4,351,000, but I have not the figure for that particular boat.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It would be only a small amount.

Mr. Abbott: The next little item, $1,145, is an additional requirement to provide for the extension of a grant made to the provincial department of education, Vancouver, British Columbia in respect of an agreement covering the training of able seamen at the port of Vancouver, and the others are of a like nature. The largest is item 614, which has to do with the St. Lawrence ship channel. There is, as the committee is aware, an outstanding contract on a quantity basis. If dredging proceeds a little more rapidly in a given year there is an additional amount required, and this represents in fact an underestimate of the amount of dredging that would have to be paid for during the year.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What was the total expenditure last year on the St. Lawrence dredging work?

Mr. Abbott: I do not know that I have that amount readily available, but I may be able to get it in a moment and I will give it to my hon. friend. The main estimate would show that. Perhaps I can answer my hon. friend's question by saying that parliament has already voted $2,821,326, and this additional amount of $311,978 will bring it up to something over $3 million.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): As I remember it, there is an outstanding contract covering a five-year period running to $13 million on the St. Lawrence, if my recollection serves me correctly.

Mr. Abbott: That is right. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can tell us what has been spent up to date.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I do not have it on an annual basis, but the hon. member is correct that the total contract runs to approximately $13 million over a five-year period. This is simply extra work that was done this year, and of course will come off the total contract.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Is this extra work supplementary to the contract that is outstanding, or is it on account of the contract? If it is on account of the contract, why is not the entire $13 million available for disbursement, if it has been earned on the contract and the contract has been let?

Mr. Abbott: Because we only estimate each year roughly how much cash will be required for this contract. We do not vote an amount for five years. This years we voted $2,821,326 against whatever payment would be required this year under that $13 million contract. In fact dredging was done to require this extra payment of $311,000 odd.

Mr. Green: That does not represent any change in policy?

Mr. Abbott: No change in policy, no change in price.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Green: Merely that more work was done than was expected would be done.

Mr. Abbott: Precisely.

Mr. Benidickson: Favourable weather, equipment available.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Can the minister tell the committee who the contractor is for this $13 million that has been authorized over a period of five years.

Mr. Benidickson: Marine Industries Limited of Sorel, after calling for tenders on March 10, 1952.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Tenders were called. I should like to know whether tenders were received.

Mr. Abbott: Tenders were received.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Or whether the tender was allotted to the one contractor.

Mr. Benidickson: There was an additional tenderer, and the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): How many tenders were received.

Mr. Benidickson: Two, I believe.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Who was the other tenderer?

Mr. Abbott: Canadian Dredge and Dock Company Limited, Toronto, whose tender price was $13,943,500.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): And the successful tender was how much?

Mr. Abbott: It was $13,021,900.

Item agreed to.

Railway and steamship services—

North Sydney, Nova Scotia—Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland, car ferry and terminals deficit, 1952—

615. To provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1952-53 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the national company to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in the payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the North Sydney, Nova Scotia —Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland, ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1952, $1,915,532.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would the Minister of Finance explain the word "deficit" used in this item? At the present time and for the last two years construction has been going on at North Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Robinson): It being five o'clock, the house will proceed to the consideration of private bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT REGARDING POLL CLERKS AND ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 224, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is very simple. It is based upon a reduction of the force needed to carry out the work of an election on election day, through the elimination of the necessity of having candidates' agents at each poll.

At the present time there is a practice, which is fairly general, by which all candidates—certainly all candidates in opposition to the government party—appoint scrutineers at each polling place, in order to see that the poll is conducted fairly. In my opinion the majority of that work is unnecessary. Nevertheless, unless there is some machinery set up whereby each polling place can be manned by officers who represent the two opposing political interests, the necessity for those scrutineers, officially known as agents at the polls, will be continued. And no candidate I know of—speaking for myself, I certainly would not—would be prepared to do without having agents at the polls, even though I am reasonably convinced that the polls are operated honestly and according to the act.

The first part of this bill makes an amendment to section 26(4) of the Canada Elections Act, whereby the poll clerk is appointed through the constituency returning officer, but by the right of the candidate representing the party which obtained the highest number of votes at the last preceding federal election, with the proviso that if the highest number of votes was obtained by a candidate supporting the leader of the government, then the candidate obtaining the next highest number of votes would appoint the poll clerk.

This would result in the deputy returning officer being, as he is at the present time, an appointee of the returning officer for the riding, and the poll clerk being an appointee of the candidate representing the party which obtained the highest number of votes, not being the party of the leader of the government.

Under the act at the present time the situation is that the riding returning officers are appointed by order in council. The government is responsible for the election, and I think that is perfectly right and proper. The returning officers, however, are appointees of the governor in council, of the leader of the government, and appointees of the party in power. They have the responsibility of choosing the deputy returning officers, who are their appointees and consequently are adherents or supporters of the government in power.

The deputy returning officers, in turn, appoint poll clerks; and the poll clerks are therefore, under our present regulations, supporters of the party in power. You have, therefore, a complete chain of the party in power—returning officer to deputy returning officer to poll clerk. The consequence is that any candidate not being a member or a supporter of the party in power, is forced to provide agents at the polls. The providing of agents at polls is one of the great expenses of election day. The average number of polls per constituency in Ontario is 140. Assuming that the candidate pays his agents a minimum of $5 per day and provides them, as he generally does, with lunch and transportation and other things—

Mr. Mutch: Do you have to pay them? Never heard of it.

Mr. Adamson: I am speaking of what are the facts.

Mr. Mutch: That is Toronto.

Mr. Adamson: His total expense will run to hundreds of dollars, and in my opinion that is largely unnecessary. The amendment I am proposing to make the poll clerk a member of a party in opposition to the government would eliminate any chance of suspicion that a poll was not adequately carried out. The providing of agents, as I have said, is an expensive matter to the candidate, yet their functions are not of great use. However, a candidate would find it most difficult to dispense with their services. I would not be prepared to advocate that that be done. That is the basic reason for this amendment. I am trying to simplify operations on election day and cut down the expenses of non-government candidates, and make the poll a less congested place than it is at the present time.

Since I introduced this bill I have received a number of communications from people who have been deputy returning officers, who tell me that they agree with the principle of the bill as in their opinion agents at the polls are unnecessary. As I have said, that is one of the unnecessary expenses to which the non-government candidate is put on election day. So much for the basic principle of this amendment.

The term I have used, "leader of the government" is a term used in the office consolidation of the Canadian forces voting regulations in subsection 50, where both the terms "leader of the government" and "leader of the opposition" are mentioned specifically. This bill provides that the representative of the party which led the poll or ran second to the successful candidate can appoint the poll clerks. In other words, in a constituency not held by the Social Credit or the C.C.F. party, where their representatives ran second to the government candidate in 1949, they would be entitled to appoint the poll clerks.

There is also a provision in the bill that if a candidate representing an opposing political interest is not capable of appointing poll clerks the returning officer shall have the right to do so as he sees fit. There is a time limit on the appointment of poll clerks of two days following nominations, which gives 12 days from nominations in most constituencies and 26 days in others in which the appointment of poll clerks can be made. In other words, poll clerks must be appointed 12 days prior to the date of polling. So much for the first part of the bill.

The second part of the bill deals with advance polls. I find that the Revised Statutes of Canada differ in some particulars from the green election book A-34 as far as advance polls are concerned. The Revised Statutes of Canada, being the official statutes, take precedence over the general election instructions for returning officers. If the point which I now bring to the attention of the house is not cleared up prior to election day there may be some confusion in connection with one or two constituencies.

For instance, in the Revised Statutes of Canada, which we have not as yet received but which I have seen, there is no provision for advance polls at Atikokan, and I think at one or two other places, whereas Atikokan is definitely named in the instructions. It is a simple matter, but it is one which I feel should be cleared up before the general election takes place.

There is one other remark I should like to make with respect to part II of the bill. The township of Etobicoke, which makes up a large part of the constituency of York West, is not mentioned as a place where an advance poll can be established. The townships of Scarborough, York North, York and York East, all being very largely urban municipalities at the present time, have the right to have advance polls, but the township of Etobicoke with a population of over 60,000 does not have that right. I would earnestly request that the house give the township of Etobicoke the right to have advance polls so that it will be treated the same as these other townships in the Toronto metropolitan district.

I realize that introducing a bill to amend a complicated piece of legislation such as the Canada Elections Act at this stage of the session presents some difficulties. However, the amendments I am suggesting are simple in character, and I would ask the government to give earnest consideration to them. In my opinion they would simplify operations at the polls on election day. They would provide for the manning of the polls to be done by two opposing political interests, thus avoiding the necessity of having candidates' agents at the polls and reducing very materially the expense that every candidate who is not a government candidate must assume to carry out the functions which in the name of his party he is bound to carry out on election day.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house provides for four distinct amendments. I have noted what my hon. friend has said about Atikokan and the township of Etobicoke. I am sure we will give consideration particularly to these matters because they affect the taking of the vote immediately.

On the other hand, the question of the poll clerk being an appointee of a political party instead of an appointee of the deputy returning officer is new to me, and certainly in my recollection it is new to the elections committee. I take it that the other amendment he suggests is the reason for that change, and that the thought behind it is to cut down the cost of holding elections on election day. Therefore I assure him that the government will give serious consideration to these suggestions.

I would point out, however, that the chief electoral officer has been away a good deal in the past two months and we have not had an opportunity to discuss with him the import and consequences of the amendments suggested. Therefore, on the understanding that I will have that discussion with him, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Harris the debate was adjourned.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: We were considering item 615, Department of Transport.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Before the parliamentary assistant commences the explanation, I had not finished what I had to say. I have gone through the estimates of last year and have added up the amounts of money that were voted for this particular project. As I said, there are terminals at North Sydney where the ferry receives freight and passengers for transportation to Port aux Basques in Newfoundland. At the other end of the run, at Port aux Basques, the government is now building new terminal facilities. But I do not see where any question of a deficit comes into the picture. It is a capital expenditure that is being made there.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member for St. John's West is perfectly right that this item is appearing for the first time in the estimates, and in view of that I think the committee should have a brief explanation. The operation of the ferry service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques is an obligation of Canada under article 32 (1) of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada. The present ferries and terminal facilities at Port aux Basques form part of the Newfoundland railway and steamship facilities that were acquired by Canada under the confederation pact. These were entrusted to the Canadian National Railways for operation and management effective April 1, 1949.

The deficits in the operation of the ferry service have been included up to now in the accounts of the Canadian National Railways. In May, 1950, the government, in considering ways and means of relieving the Canadian National Railways of heavy annual deficits, decided that the operation of the ferry service was an obligation of the government as part of the terms of union with Newfoundland, and that the deficits in operation should not be assumed by the railways but should be provided for as a direct obligation of the government. It is proposed that this be done from January 1 of 1952. If my hon. friend will look at the next item in the supplementary estimates he will see that we have a similar item there for the operating deficit of a similar service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): If I understand the parliamentary assistant aright, it means that the Canadian National Railways handle goods and passengers arriving at North Sydney, put them on board the steamer, take them across and collect any moneys for the goods and passengers that are transported.

Mr. Benidickson: No.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The cost of that operation is then charged to the C.N.R., whereas the freight may be paid in Toronto or Montreal.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend will remember that we had a discussion recently in the railways and shipping committee on a similar point, and I can assure him that revenues from through freight and express are credited to the ferry service on a pro rata mileage basis. Passenger revenue, including cabins and berths and so on, are credited on an actual mileage basis for the type of transportation that is used. With respect to meals, mail and other revenue, these are credited. I might put the revenues for the past year on the record. Receipts from passengers, freight, express, cabins, meals and mail amounted to $987,368. Expenses, which were operation and maintenance of ferries, docks and yard tracks, and stevedoring, etc. amounted to $2,902,900, so that the net operating deficit was $1,915,532. But the value of the transport from the mainland to Newfoundland is credited pro rata for the various services that are performed, even though some of these items may be on a through basis.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This seems an extraordinary item, because if there is any point at which the enterprise should be profitable it is between North Sydney and St. John's, Newfoundland. The steamer is filled with goods going across, and it is generally filled with passengers each way. In addition, there must be a subsidy for carrying the mail.

Is the parliamentary assistant satisfied in his own mind that everything that should be credited to that operation is credited to it? I do not know whether he was in the committee on railways and shipping yesterday when I was given information by the general manager concerning a question which I had asked about the movement of freight over that line. I was told that that was a difficult thing to say because the freight was collected at certain places, and it would involve an enormous amount of trouble to see how much of it should be credited between Port aux Basques and Sydney.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend will recall that part of the difficulty was with the matter of allocating head office expenses and the like. This is considered a matter of prorating on mileage, and the accounts submitted by the Canadian National Railways are audited and examined by our auditors, who are officers of the finance department.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Will you tell me where to find this item in the Canadian National accounts? I could not find it. I have searched for it, but could not locate it.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I told my friend that up until January of 1952 the item appeared in the regular accounts of income and outgo of the Canadian National Railways. Since then it is paid by the government.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Will the hon. member tell me why?

Mr. Abbott: In line with the same policy we follow with regard to the Prince Edward Island ferry.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Why do you call it a deficit? It seems to me that by using that expression you are assuming that this is for the benefit of Newfoundland. I submit that the people who get the benefit are those who are selling the goods and those who are transporting it, the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Abbott: Does my hon. friend suggest that there should be higher freight rates or fares on the ferry?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, I do not suggest anything of the kind. I do believe that the operation between North Sydney and Port aux Basques must be profitable if there is any profitable portion of the Canadian National Railways, because the freight sheds are congested with goods. It takes from five to six weeks to get delivery of an article because of that fact. It is hard for me to see where the loss occurred on any freight received for that journey, at any rate. Is there any reason why you call it a deficit? Why could you not call it a subsidy to the Canadian National Railways instead of calling it a deficit?

Item agreed to.

General—

618. To provide for reimbursement of the Department of Transport stores account for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed, $23,799.

Mr. Green: Could the parliamentary assistant explain this vote? It seems to be a new one.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, by authority of section 60, subsection 2 of the Financial Administration Act, it is made possible to write off from the Department of Transport stores account a deletion from inventory for certain items. This particular item is made up of Moncton fire losses and stores $2,894; obsolete stores, $18,597 and adjustment of inventory, $2,308.

Mr. Green: Has there been such an item in the estimates before?

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I might answer that. My hon. friend will recall that the Financial Administration Act is fairly new. I think we passed it last year. In conjunction with the Financial Administration Act there was a Department of Transport Stores Act which provided for this revolving account. As I understand it this is really to authorize the making of an appropriate accounting entry in that revolving account to write off, for the purposes of our balance sheet, certain losses that have either occurred or obsolete stores. That is my understanding of the purpose.

Mr. Green: Will there be an annual vote?

Mr. Abbott: I think we would have an annual vote for this account every year, probably in the final supplementary estimates.

Item agreed to.

Civil aviation division—

621. Contributions, as specified in the details of the estimates, to other governments or international agencies for the operation and maintenance of airports, air navigation and airways facilities—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. Green: What is the explanation of item 621?

Mr. Benidickson: This involves Canada's contribution to the maintenance of aviation trunk line facilities to the south Pacific. The trustee for the contributing countries is New Zealand, and when expenses were pooled the south Pacific air transport council submitted a charge of $10,000 under our percentage of cost. This is the item.

Mr. Green: That is additional to the vote we have passed?

Mr. Benidickson: It is additional to the $112,500 in the primary estimates. I may say that this brings the contribution up to date. It involves some retroactive accounting over a period of two or three years.

Item agreed to.

Air transport board—

622. Subventions for air carriers, as detailed in the estimates, $125,000.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, will the minister explain this item? It seems to be a subvention for an air carrier, and this air carrier happens to be serving the west coast and Vancouver island so I have no objection to the vote. I believe this is a new departure. I should like to know whether there have been any other cases in which there have been subventions to an air transport company, and whether this signifies the adoption of a new policy by the government to aid aviation?

Mr. Benidickson: The possibility that something of this kind might be required in air transport, as it has been required in the past in connection with the maintenance of essential railway and steamship services, was anticipated, and authority for it is in the Aeronautics Act. My hon. friend will agree that in that part of the country with which he is so familiar there has been a considerable amount of recent activity, but at the same time unfortunately there has been a certain amount of curtailment of steamship services.

As a result of the elimination of certain steamship services people who are dependent upon either air or steamship for their necessary transportation would not, this winter, have had regular service. The air transport licensee could only operate during the winter months at a deficit. On the recommendation of the air transport board, and in accordance with the Aeronautics Act, this was declared to be a necessary service and consequently an agreement was made that the operator would receive for six winter months this amount of money so that the service would be maintained in the winter months.

Mr. Abbott: I might add, as the parliamentary assistant has stressed, it is rather an emergency situation. It was essentially a temporary arrangement. When it was considered by the government, on the recommendation of the air transport board, it was felt that after getting over this difficult winter period the air line in question would probably be able to continue on a self-sustaining basis. This amount was to get it over that difficult hump and, as the parliamentary assistant has said, to provide essential transportation which would not be available in any other form during that period.

Mr. Knowles: Might I, under this item, ask the parliamentary assistant if he can say whether there will be a statement of government policy at an early date in respect to the transporting of freight by air across Canada? I have in mind the fact that the Canadian Pacific Air Lines has made application for the right to operate a service that would compete with Trans-Canada Air Lines. In that connection I also have in mind the fact that a good many years ago, I believe in 1944, there was a statement of policy in this connection by the then prime minister, Mr. King, and confirmed by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). This statement of policy was to the effect that all main lines of air transport in Canada were to be operated by the government's chosen instrument, namely Trans-Canada Air Lines.

The statement of policy went further than that. It included statements as to what was to be done with respect to international flying as well. In my submission there have been some amendments of that policy—particularly international policy—across the years but there has never been any restatement of the policy itself. Can the parliamentary assistant say whether there will be a statement at an early date so we may know whether that statement which I believe was made in 1944 still holds with respect to main line flying in Canada?

Mr. Benidickson: I will certainly draw the hon. member's remarks to the attention of the Minister of Transport. I think the hon. member will be the first to realize that on a matter of policy of that kind the minister would be the one who would be qualified to speak.

Item agreed to.

Canadian maritime commission—

623. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $5,334.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to have some explanation of this item. In the note on page 22 I see that it is for steamship subventions for coastal service from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia to Boston. I should like to know what the total payments have been for that service and why this supplementary amount of $5,334 is now asked for.

Mr. Abbott: That service, I am informed, is provided by Himmelman Supply Company of La Have, Nova Scotia. Last autumn the cabinet approved an increase in the subvention from $28,000 to $36,000, effective August 1, 1952. This additional $5,334 is supplementary to a vote of nearly $4 million, but it is required to provide for that purpose.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What special service does it concern?

Mr. Abbott: Yarmouth to Boston.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What traffic does it carry? What special service does it perform?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I have not that information readily available. It was approved in the main estimates and recommended, of course, by the maritime commission. But it is simply to provide an extra amount in addition to an amount already voted by parliament for that purpose.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): As I understand the Minister of Finance, it is not a subsidy for the Yarmouth-Boston service. It is to a company or concern doing certain transporting of freight.

Mr. Abbott: That may be so. I am afraid I am not familiar with the details of these services. It is the case of an additional item where the main item has been approved. I could get that information for my hon. friend. However, I think he is right and that it is providing a freight service between Yarmouth and Boston.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister whether that service is being continued, whether it is going to apply to the ensuing year or whether the contract is terminated.

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I would have to get information about that point and see in the main estimates, but I will see that that is done.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Pensions and other benefits—

624. Pensions for disability and death, including pensions granted under the authority of the civilian government employees (war) compensation order P.C. 45/8848 of 22nd November, 1944, which shall be subject to the Pension Act—further amount required, $1,600,000.

Mr. Brooks: Can the parliamentary assistant give us some information on this item?

Mr. Mutch: There is very little to say on this. It is additional money required to fulfil the commitments of the department to pensioners, primarily the regular pensions in the service but also including those other war pensions paid under civilian acts but administered by the pension commission. It is an underestimate of what we would require this year.

Mr. Abbott: It is a straight underestimate. That is what it is.

Mr. Brooks: Are they veterans of world war II who have died since the end of the war?

Mr. Mutch: I could not hear the question.

Mr. Brooks: I notice they are only for world war II. Are they veterans who have died since the end of the last war?

Mr. Mutch: No. It is part of the general fund for the payment of war pensions, in Korea as well.

Mr. Abbott: It supplements the main vote of approximately $125 million.

Mr. Mutch: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous payments—

625. Employers liability compensation—further amount required, $700,000.

Mr. MacInnis: Will someone explain the purpose of this item?

Mr. Mutch: There was an arrangement made in the period between world war I and world war II with each of the provincial governments designed to encourage the employment of disabled veterans in industry generally. That has continued over a period of years, and it has worked satisfactorily. It is now felt that the employment of pensioned veterans has reached a normal situation. Arrangements have been made with each of the provinces to retire this current plan by payment of $700,000 to take care of those commitments already made. Formerly we assumed the responsibility for the difference between the pensioners' pension and the liability incurred in industrial accidents.

Mr. Abbott: It is now recognized that disability pensioners are no greater risk—and I believe I am right in this—

Mr. Mutch: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: —for workmen's compensation purposes than are ordinary employees. That has been determined in the light of experience. We are concluding our arrangements with the provinces, and now they will be treated just as ordinary employees.

Mr. MacInnis: With this payment, there will be no further payment on this score?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Brooks: It does not include Korean veterans?

Mr. Abbott: No. It is purely a civilian matter.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

628. Post discharge rehabilitation benefits, including the training of merchant seamen and salt water fishermen pensioners—further amount required, $325,000.

Mr. Green: What is the situation now with regard to post-discharge rehabilitation benefits for merchant seamen?

Mr. Mutch: Those are mentioned because they are the only civilian exceptions to the rehabilitation program which qualify under this. Basically this money is needed to extend benefits to Korean veterans. But we mention these other groups because they are the only non-veteran groups which are affected to the extent that they are still a problem.

Item agreed to.

LOANS, INVESTMENTS AND ADVANCES

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

629. To provide for the restoration of the special account in the consolidated revenue fund established by section 35 of the National Housing Act by the amount paid out of the special account in respect of housing and land development projects undertaken jointly with the governments of the provinces during the fiscal year 1951-52, $1,500,000.

Mr. Gillis: I notice the minister is not in his seat.

Mr. Abbott: I can give the required information.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to get this information. There are in this country a large number of people who secured loans from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation back in 1945 or 1946. At prices prevailing at that time a home could be built for, say, $6,000 or $8,000. During the process of building those homes prices went up terrifically, a fact which left those people in the position of being from $2,000 to $3,000 short of the amount of money required to complete the home. That was owing to inflated prices. Many of them went in debt to the company that furnished the lumber. I myself have had several cases brought to my attention and I have had a great deal of correspondence with the Minister of Resources and Development asking if it was not possible to restore the supplementary loan privilege—which was contained in the act and removed—or if there was not some way in which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could finance that outstanding account by way of a second loan through that organization. There were several cases where the lumber dealer was owed $2,000 or $3,000 and was issuing instructions to have a writ issued against the property holder, and threatening to take the property from him and all that kind of stuff.

The minister and I never got anywhere by way of negotiation. The matter just stood in abeyance. On several occasions he suggested that these people should go to some other company, get another loan and finance it in that way. However, the people who were affected and for whom I was doing business with the minister were not in a position to do that. Getting another loan meant another $50 a month by way of payment; and they were ordinary people and could not afford it. A lot of people across the country are affected in that way.

I rose this afternoon because of an item that appears in the Journal of this afternoon. It is an account of remarks made to the Rotary Club in Hull by a gentleman named J. C. Paradis, manager of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In his remarks to the Rotary Club in Hull he said that a new policy had been inaugurated by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which would enable homes to be financed directly between the people concerned and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that it was no longer necessary to farm the money out to the insurance companies.

Without going into a long harangue about the thing, can the minister tell us whether there has been a change in the policy of financing as suggested by this gentleman and whether it is possible now, in the type of case I have just described, to make a direct application to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and perhaps get a new mortgage, including the amount that is owed to the lumber dealer, and have it refinanced by Central Mortgage and Housing?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I was a little premature. I cannot give an answer as to that, the general policy of lending by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I did come prepared to deal with this particular item which relates to arrangements between the provinces for financing special developments jointly by the provinces, the federal government and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I shall bring his remarks to the attention of the Minister of Resources and Development, and perhaps he can bring them up again when the main item comes up in the main estimates.

This particular item relates to section 35 of the National Housing Act, which has to do with the special account of $50 million, and this reimburses that account in the amount of $1,500,000 advanced under those arrangements that I have just mentioned with the provinces.

Mr. Hodgson: I have a situation in my constituency along similar lines. I had it up with the department but have not got any place with it. I have a veteran who served five years in the army, and four of those years overseas. He is a carpenter. He started out to build his own house. He has the house just about to the point where he can live in it, and he has run short of money. He has been trying to get a loan from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but they have turned him down because they did not see the site first, did not see the starting of the thing and all the rest of it. This house is going to be worth between $10,000 and $12,000 when it is finished. It would take about $2,500 to finish it, and he has been more or less turned down.

Mr. Abbott: I can only say, as I said to the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that I shall bring my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the minister.

Item agreed to.

Transport—
Air services—

632. To authorize and provide for the operation of a revolving fund in accordance with the provisions of section 58 of the Financial Administration Act for the purpose of financing the purchase of materials and supplies to be held in northwest communication system stores for use on both capital and maintenance works, the amount to be charged to the revolving fund at any one time not to exceed $125,000, of which $100,000 has already been provided under vote 559, Appropriation Act, No. 4, 1952, $25,000.

Mr. Green: Could we have an explanation of this item?

Mr. Abbott: This is the revolving fund. The department recently submitted to treasury board that the $100,000 revolving fund provided for capital and maintenance works carried out by the northwest communication system is inadequate and should be increased to $125,000. That is the northwest communication system running up along the Alaska highway. Treasury board agreed to that, and of course I had to put the item in the supplementary estimates authorizing the increase from $100,000 to $125,000.

Item agreed to.

633. To provide for recoverable advances to enable extension of northwest cmmunications system facilities between Edmonton and the Yukon-Alaska border, $130,000.

Mr. Green: What about this item?

Mr. Abbott: That is under somewhat similar circumstances. On November 24, 1952 treasury board considered and approved the following project and directed that the Department of Transport be charged with the full cost of the facilities in the form of a refundable loan; that funds received as a provisioning charge or rental income be transmitted immediately to the Receiver General as a reduction of the loan, and that is what is known as the Beaverlodge project for the expansion of facilities of the northwest communications system, operated by the Canadian National Telegraphs on behalf of the Department of Transport. The expansion is required to meet certain requirements of the joint Canada-U.S defence network, specifically the new Beaverlodge establishment. It is considered that we will get revenues from a portion of that operation, and it was considered that it would be appropriate to make this as a refundable advance rather than a payment.

Mr. Green: This is a new line entirely, is it?

Mr. Abbott: My understanding is that it is an extension of the existing facilities.

Mr. Green: Is the minister able to say from where it runs?

Mr. Abbott: I am informed from Beaverlodge to Edmonton.

Mr. Green: Where is Beaverlodge?

Mr. Benidickson: At lake Athabasca, at the radar development; and it involves some voice channels and teletypes. We are in a dominant communications position in that section, and therefore are asked to extend our services. But these particular facilities are going to be rented, and there will be a repayment over ten years by the people who want the service.

Mr. Green: I asked the question because the description says: "between Edmonton and the Yukon-Alaska border" which apparently is incorrect.

Mr. Benidickson: I said lake Athabasca.

Mr. Green: I understand now. Where is Beaverlodge?

Mr. MacDougall: That is where Gunnar Gold is located.

Mr. Green: Which is correct; is it the Yukon-Alaska border, or is it in Alberta?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid we would have to get the exact geographical location from my hon. friend. This description indicates to me the nature of the extension.

Item agreed to.

Veterans Affairs—

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

634. To provide for purchase of land and permanent improvements; cost of permanent improvements to be effected; removal of encumbrances; stock and equipment; refunds to veterans (sections 9A and 19); and for protection of security under the Veterans' Land Act—further amount required, $600,000.

Mr. Brooks: Could we have an explanation of this?

Mr. Abbott: This is an estimating problem again. The expenditures have run somewhat higher than the estimate. The main estimate was $18 million, and the supplementaries were $2,500,000. We need to have still another $600,000.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1953, the sum of $77,680,383 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 292, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending 31st March, 1953.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CROWN LIABILITY

TORTS AND CIVIL SALVAGE

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 26, consideration in committee of Bill No. 105, respecting the liability of the crown for torts and civil salvage—Mr. Garson—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 8—"Provincial court" defined.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this is a clause which gives jurisdiction to certain provincial courts, limited to what are known as district or county courts, where the maximum jurisdiction is $1,000.

Mr. Garson: No, it is not limited to county courts.

Mr. Green: Let us, for example, take the province of British Columbia. I understand that in that province the jurisdiction is given only to the county courts, where the limitation is $1,000.

Mr. Garson: It is limited as to amount. If the jurisdiction of the county court is not high enough, then it can be taken to the superior court of the province.

Mr. Green: But the limit is $1,000, is it not?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Green: Why is it not made possible for courts of original jurisdiction in each province to deal with these matters? For instance, in British Columbia why should not the supreme court in that province be allowed to deal with the claims?

Mr. Garson: Well, for many years the exchequer court has been traditionally the court in which actions between the subject and the crown have been carried on. By reason of the fact that actions from all provinces of Canada between the subject and the crown are carried on in the exchequer court, a uniform jurisprudence has been built up in all of these cases. We think it is desirable that that practice should be continued.

However, it did seem to us desirable that in respect of smaller negligence claims, and the like, where the amounts involved did not exceed $1,000, and where in most provinces it would be possible to have such cases tried in the county or district courts, right in the same community, the subject should be permitted to bring his action in his own county court in his own local district. I am referring to a local district such as the Okanagan or the Kootenay districts of British Columbia.

Therefore we have made this provision. We do believe, however, that where larger amounts are involved and where, as a rule, the more difficult points of law are involved, it is desirable to have actions of that kind brought in the exchequer court, where they will be adjudicated by the same panel of judges in all the provinces of Canada. Since, as my hon. friend knows, the procedure in that court has been considerably simplified in the last few years and the exchequer court sits in different parts of Canada, the alleged inconvenience of suing in the exchequer court is not as great as at first blush it might appear.

We think that in a statute which is opening up a wide, new field of jurisdiction, as regards causes of action, this is at least the appropriate provision to make.

Mr. Green: There is the possibility that the jurisdiction would be extended to the higher courts?

Mr. Garson: Only, I think, if it appeared that there was a need. We are inclined to the view that, with this provision taking care of all the smaller cases in the county courts, there is no particular hardship in suing in the exchequer court, which sits periodically in the different parts of Canada and in which court, I believe, procedure is much simpler than in the average provincial superior court. We think this will work. If it does not work, then I believe we have shown by our conduct in relation to this act that we are quite open-minded and always willing to try to accommodate the public need.

Section agreed to.

Sections 9 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On section 14—Rules of court.

Mr. Robichaud: Before we proceed to part III may I suggest to the minister that in my submission it would be advisable to have in part II a section providing for discovery and inspection of documents, and for examination for discovery.

I have checked the Ontario statutes, where I find an act respecting proceedings against the crown. In that act section 10 makes provision that the crown may be required to make possible discovery of documents, and to produce documents for inspection. Although couched in different language, there is a similar section in the crown proceedings act of the United Kingdom where, in section 28, provision is also made for examination for discovery.

I suggest it would be very helpful if there were added to the bill a section making provision for the inspection of documents and examination for discovery. May I also suggest that there should be provision in the bill for examination of parties outside the jurisdiction, a point which I consider of some importance. I make my remarks brief, so that we may not be delayed in proceeding to part III.

Mr. Garson: If the experience under the Exchequer Court Act over a period of years had demonstrated that there was great need for discovery in that court, such as my hon.

friend is recommending, then perhaps it might be considered. However, I think my hon. friend will agree that it would be more appropriate to amend the Exchequer Court Act, because if discovery is necessary it should be provided not only for actions of tort covered by the present bill but for all actions taken against the crown in that court. Therefore I think it might be better for us to consider the suggestion which my hon. friend has made in connection with the Exchequer Court Act rather than this bill.

Mr. Carroll: I believe there is provision in all the provinces for discovery under the Exchequer Court Act.

Mr. Robichaud: I was not thinking of discovery in the exchequer court, because that is provided for already by the general orders and rules of procedure of that court; and I would refer to rules 129, 130 and 131.

Mr. Garson: I misunderstood my hon. friend. I thought he was talking about discovery of documents, not examination for discovery. If my hon. friend's point is that he wishes changes made by this legislation in the rules of procedure of the provincial courts, then I think it would be preferable for us not to change any of the rules of procedure of the provincial courts even if we have the power to do so. I think it would be wise to see how we get along with this bill under the existing rules of procedure in the provincial courts. For my own part, if it was thought desirable to change the rules in the provincial courts I think it would be preferable to communicate with the attorneys general of the provinces to see if they were prepared to change the rules in relation to actions brought under this legislation.

Mr. Robichaud: As provision for examination for discovery exists in all provinces there is no need to change the rules of procedure.

Mr. Garson: If it exists in the exchequer court and in all provinces, then why is my hon. friend urging that it should be provided for here?

Mr. Robichaud: I feel it would clarify this bill if it were included. We are passing a new statute to apply to all provinces and we would not be infringing upon provincial rights by making discovery a part of this statute.

Mr. Garson: I am afraid I must differ with my hon. friend. We are dealing with substantive matters in this statute. I think my hon. friend will agree that a provision for examination for discovery is procedural in character. It seems to me that it would be wiser, particularly if he is right when he says there is provision already for examination for discovery in the exchequer court and also in the provincial courts, to let these provisions apply and have this statute deal with substantive law, which is what in the main it purports to do.

Mr. Robichaud: There may be some doubt as to whether discovery would apply to proceedings under this statute.

Mr. Garson: Section 14 reads:

> Except as otherwise provided by this act or the regulations, the rules of practice and procedure of the court in which proceedings under this part are taken apply in those proceedings.

Section agreed to.

Sections 15 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On section 22—Service on deputy attorney general.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: More discovery.

Mr. Robichaud: It is not more discovery, but we may discover something else. This section reads:

> The governor in council may make regulations (a) prescribing rules of practice and procedure in respect of proceedings taken in provincial courts under part II.

I think this fits in with the remarks just made by the Minister of Justice when he said we should not pass laws dealing with procedural matters. I suppose by that he means that he would not want to invade what is recognized as exclusive provincial jurisdiction; yet power is being sought in this very section to prescribe rules of practice and procedure. I have studied the matter very carefully, and I am dubious whether this parliament has the right to prescribe rules of practice and procedure in respect to proceedings taken in provincial courts.

I would appreciate if the minister would point to any authority giving us the right to do that. I submit with due respect that this provision would be ultra vires of the dominion parliament. As a matter of fact there have been cases decided by the privy council with reference to this matter in which procedure has been declared to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. I would refer the minister to the case of Attorney General of Quebec v. Reed, reported in 10 Appeal Cases, 141. In that case the privy council was quite clear on the point. I should like to quote from the judgment at page 144 as follows:

> One of the things which are to be within the powers of the provincial legislatures—within their exclusive powers—is the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organization of provincial courts, and including the procedure in civil matters in the courts.

I think that is applicable to the present situation. There seems to be no doubt that questions of procedure and practice in civil matters in provincial courts are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces and therefore we have no right to pass statutes which invade those exclusive provincial rights. I should like to quote now from Lefroy's "Legislative power in Canada" at page 293, where reference is made to the judgment in McKilligan v. Machar, wherein Killam, J. said:

The provincial legislature has the authority to regulate the administration of justice in the province, including procedure in civil matters in the courts.

I do not take issue with the power of this parliament to pass this legislation, but I have been unable to find any other statute of a similar nature where parliament went as far as it undoubtedly is the intention to go under section 22, namely to prescribe rules of practice and procedure in respect of proceedings taken in provincial courts, including provisions with respect to fees and costs.

In the privy council case which I cited this very question was dealt with inter alia. The Minister of Justice may have some authority, a later decision, to which he can point where this privy council case was overruled. If so I shall be delighted to have the authority on which his law officers are now proceeding; but so far as I have been able to find out I am very dubious whether we have the power to pass such regulations as are provided by section 22. It may be that the minister has some authority. It may be that he has cases. It may be that he will say that the section should go through, but I am sure it will mean an appeal if this parliament attempts to pass regulations to govern the rules of practice and procedure in provincial courts.

Mr. Garson: I thought I understood my hon. friend to suggest a few moments ago that we should prescribe rules of practice with regard to the discovery of documents and the like in provincial courts. But if his actual position is that he is opposing any enactment of this sort in the present bill, I would point out to him, as authorities, that the same thing has been done in the Bankruptcy Act, the Companies Act, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Canadian Citizenship Act and the Canada Elections Act, to name only five. I apprehend that as long as the provision which is included in the federal statutes is properly ancillary to the carrying out of the pith and substance of the act which itself falls within federal jurisdiction, it is intra vires under the Canadian constitution.

Mr. Green: Is the position not a little different here? The minister's basic plan is to allow these cases to be tried in the county courts in the same way any other case might be tried in those courts. Why not let the provincial rules applicable to those courts apply? The minister has referred to the Canada Elections Act, the Canadian Citizenship Act and two or three others, but those deal with subjects that do not come under provincial courts in any other way than by virtue of the federal statute. Here we have an entirely different situation in that the minister is opening the door to lawsuits in the provincial county courts. Why not let them be lawsuits of exactly the same type and governed by the same rules as the lawsuits which are brought in those courts at the present time?

Mr. Garson: I am in complete agreement with my hon. friend. I indicated a few moments ago that as long as the provincial rules of procedure are adequate there would be no disposition upon our part to change them. But it may be, having regard to the rather wide list of new causes of action which are provided for in the present statute, that in certain provincial procedural statutes there will be a gap that requires to be filled. In that event, and only in that event, would we want to invoke this clause which my hon. friend will see, if he will read it, says that the governor in council "may" make regulations. We do not have to make them, and I can assure him so far as I am concerned as Minister of Justice that we will not make any at all unless it is necessary.

Speaking only for myself, my disposition would be that if we were going to make any such regulations we would certainly write to the provincial attorney general and confer with him as to the necessity. Perhaps it would be possible for him to change his own rules to accommodate the point we had in mind. In other words, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has suggested we would very much prefer, for obvious reasons, that in any proceedings taken in provincial courts under this present statute we should abide by the rules of those provincial courts.

Mr. Green: Why not delete clause (a) and depend on clause (e) to meet that situation? It is wide enough to cover anything that is required. Then you get away from the very broad wording of clause (a) which in effect says that the governor in council can step in and prescribe rules for the county courts in British Columbia, Ontario or anywhere else. I think that is an unnecessarily wide provision.

Mr. Garson: In the light of the explanation I have just given surely there is no harm, when we are bringing in a wide list of new causes of action against the crown that have not been used before and to which the provincial rules may not be closely applicable, in taking this power which we may not and which I hope we shall not exercise. It is there if we require it. If we do not require it we certainly will not use it. I do not see how it can possibly do any harm.

Mr. Green: The statute does not set up any new causes of action. All it does is to make the crown subject to certain causes of action that have been in existence for a long time.

Mr. Garson: Of course it all depends upon how one looks at it, but I do suggest to my hon. friend that there are a number of sets of facts which arise in Canada in which the crown, upon the passage of the bill, would be involved as defendant. In each of these cases there is no cause of action now. Hence, with all deference, I would suggest that we are creating causes of action.

Mr. Green: But they are similar to causes of action against private individuals.

Mr. Garson: Oh, yes, but never against the crown until the present time.

Mr. Robichaud: The minister has sought to place me in a dilemma by making reference to my previous remarks concerning the advisability of embodying in the statute provisions for the discovery and inspection of documents. But may I say to the minister that when I made my first suggestion before we got through with part II I did so with the intention of finding out exactly what the minister's position was in regard to my suggestion. I submit now that by passing the regulations provided for in section 22 the minister will, in my humble submission, certainly be invading the exclusive rights of the provinces to prescribe rules and regulations as far as practice, procedure and other matters are concerned.

Section agreed to.

Sections 23 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: We shall now revert to section 4 which was allowed to stand. Hon. members will recall that subsection 4 of clause 4 was allowed to stand for the purpose of possibly moving an amendment.

Mr. Garson: Yesterday when this clause was before the committee the hon. member for Eglinton referred, as hon. members will recall, to the provisions of what we take to be the Ontario municipal act calling for the giving of notice in cases of claims against municipalities. He suggested, if I understood him correctly, that the provision which was applicable in the province of Ontario might be made applicable here rather than the wording which we have employed. We have examined the provision in question. I have no hesitation, Mr. Chairman, in accepting it. I might suggest that we add a new subclause to clause 4 of this bill in the terms of the Ontario section, and then have it passed. Might I read the Ontario section:

> In the case of the death of the person injured, failure to give notice shall not be a bar to the action and except where the injury was caused by snow or ice upon a sidewalk, failure to give or insufficiency of the notice shall not be a bar to the action, if the court or judge before whom the action is tried is of the opinion that the corporation in its defence was not prejudiced by the want or insufficiency of the notice, and that to bar the action would be an injustice, notwithstanding that reasonable excuse for the want or insufficiency of the notice is not established.

In other words the claimant, even although he cannot establish a reasonable excuse for not having given the notice, will nevertheless have a claim if the court or judge before whom the action is tried is of the opinion that the corporation, in its defence—in our case it would be the federal crown—was not prejudiced by the want or insufficiency of the notice, and that to bar the action would be an injustice. Might I suggest that we have that put into the form of a new subclause to clause 4 of the bill.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the minister that he delete that exception which refers to snow or ice. I doubt very much whether that provision is in the Ontario statute. Of course I do not know whether or not it is, but it does seem to be an unnecessary restriction. Why not leave it to the judge in any case to decide whether or not relief should be given against the failure to give notice within seven days?

Mr. Garson: I think my hon. friend will agree that if the judge is going to decide something, you have to give him some criteria upon which to base his decision. The criterion which is stated here is that the crown has not been prejudiced in its defence by the failure to give that notice within the prescribed period. What we are doing here is really meeting my hon. friend's view that he has just expressed. It is hardly fair to the judge to leave it completely in his discretion. He has to have some standard upon which he can judge whether or not it is proper or not to grant the relief.

Mr. Green: Why not leave it to the judge instead of putting in the exception for snow or ice? As I pointed out to the minister last evening, I had a person come in to see me whose wife had been injured because of the ice on the sidewalk in front of the immigration office at the border below Vancouver. The wife was quite seriously hurt, and the husband was very worried about her. She was taken to hospital and there was great concern about her. If I remember correctly this man did not come to the office until one week had elapsed, so that under this provision the judge would have no power to exempt him from the provision requiring the seven days' notice because the wording refers to snow and ice. I think the matter should be left to the discretion of the judge. Surely we can trust our judiciary that far, without saying that when the accident was caused by snow or ice they have no right to give further time. I am sure the Prime Minister would agree that that is an unnecessary restriction.

Mr. Garson: This section was before the committee yesterday, and the hon. member for Eglinton took exception to the section upon the ground that there was no saving subsection such as the one I have just quoted which would protect the claimant in cases such as the one to which my hon. friend has just referred. The hon. member for Eglinton referred to this provision in the Ontario statute. I understood him to say that he regarded that as something which should be in this bill. As I have said, in an endeavour to meet the views of the opposition in a reasonable way, we have examined the Ontario section and we are offering to adopt it.

Now the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra says he wants to improve on the Ontario section to some extent. I wonder if we might not leave the matter as it is. If any difficulty develops under it, then we could consider amending it again. From the fact that this provision has been in the Ontario act I would assume that it must have been found to be fairly satisfactory or there would have been public opinion in favour of changing it.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Eglinton did not disagree with me last night at all. We were both asking that the exception of an accident arising from snow or ice be deleted. No suggestion was made by the hon. member for Eglinton that he agreed there might be such an exception. I would suggest that we give the trial judge the right to decide whether or not notice has been given within a reasonable time, rather than putting in that restriction against the type of claim arising from snow or ice. I have given the minister one example which I have had in my own practice where it would be absolutely unfair to deny these people the right to claim because they did not file within the seven days. All I am asking is that the minister take out the words excepting snow and ice.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is well aware of the reason for their inclusion in the Ontario statute or in similar statutes of that nature. Where the damage arises from a condition of snow or ice, unless the defendant is acquainted with the condition which is alleged to have caused the injury the defendant has no opportunity at all of examining what is essentially an ephemeral condition. It is gone in a short time. Then the defendant is entirely at the mercy of the plaintiff as to what the condition was. The condition has passed away, and the defendant is handicapped in making his defence.

I am sure the provision in the Ontario statute was put there not because of any unfairness on the part of the Ontario legislature or the Ontario municipalities, but because the need for it in cases of that kind was recognized. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra that the hon. member for Eglinton, like himself, was not at all enthusiastic over this provision about snow and ice. As I understood it, though, he did not have this section with him. He was advocating that we consider it. We have looked it up, and we are quite prepared to adopt it to meet the suggestion he made.

Mr. Green: You see, the case I have mentioned could have been decided by a judge because in that case an immigration officer was right there and knew about the accident within a minute after it happened. The crown would not have been prejudiced in any way if it had not had notice within seven days. Now, this case would come before a judge, and the judge would say, "Well, the crown has not suffered because notice was not given within the seven days." He would allow the suit to continue. If the minister puts in this restriction, this suit is automatically wiped out because it arises out of snow and ice. I suggest that is going too far. I would ask the minister to take out those words and leave it to the trial judge to decide in every case.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask the minister the length of notice required under the Ontario municipal act?

Mr. Garson: Under the Ontario municipal act it is seven days.

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member for Eglinton after having proposed this saving clause also said this, and I am quoting from page 3335 of Hansard:

I would urge on the minister that even with such a saving provision, a period of seven days is still too short.

If the only obsession in the minister's mind now is the possibility of a case arising from slippery conditions due to snow or ice, my submission would be just the contrary. By this I mean that seven days is too long. You should make it seven hours if that is the only thing in the way. I am certainly in accord with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to eliminate this notice in the case of snow and ice, because in my province if it is seven days or even seven months, it is all right; but in some places, for slippery conditions, seven days is far too long. Why not eliminate the snow and ice condition entirely in the proposed amending subsection?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Surely the hon. member for Gloucester has exploded the unreasonableness of the exception for snow and ice because, as he says, if you have conditions of snow and ice, seven days is far too long, exactly as he says. I think he shows the unreasonableness of the exception.

Mr. St. Laurent: The unreasonableness of asking to accept what is in the Ontario legislation?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We have a high opinion of Ontario, but they are not always perfect.

Mr. Abbott: There are too many sea lawyers around here.

Mr. Garson: With great deference to my hon. friends on the opposite side who have just spoken, I suggest that in matters of this kind great consideration should be given to the experience of municipal administrators over a period of years. These provisions that appear in municipal statutes do not get there because some person has had an abstract idea. They get there because they are based upon the experience of the municipalities over the years.

What my hon. friends—I think somewhat unreasonably—are asking is that in a statute which is creating a wide list of new causes of action against the crown we should, without any experience upon which to base our provision in the statutes, adopt a wording which is much more onerous upon the crown than that which is provided by the Ontario legislature for the municipalities of that province. I think where we are making the considerable concessions that are being made in this statute, it is surely reasonable that we should adopt in this section the same sort of provision which has prevailed in the Ontario statutes for some years and apparently has been found to be consonant with public opinion generally.

The Chairman: I might ask for the amendment so that it can be put. Mr. Fournier (Hull) moves:

That subsection 5 of clause 4 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(5) In the case of the death of the person injured, failure to give the notice required by subsection (4) is not a bar to the proceedings, and, except where the injury was caused by snow or ice, failure to give or insufficiency of the notice is not a bar to the proceedings if the court or judge before whom the proceedings are taken is of opinion that the crown in its defence was not prejudiced by the want or insufficiency of the notice and that to bar the proceedings would be an injustice, notwithstanding that reasonable excuse for the want or insufficiency of the notice is not established.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Robichaud: I quite agree with the minister that this is a new act, but I cannot understand why they should go to the Ontario municipal act to find the terminology for the proposed saving clause. After all, if they want some precedent for terminology or phraseology in this act or the provisions thereof, they have something right in Ontario, in chapter 78, which is an act respecting proceedings against the crown which is well drawn, in my submission. There is no similar provision in the Ontario act, which was only adopted last year, making an exception for snow or ice or slippery conditions. Neither is there a similar provision in the English act. I do not know why we should look to the Ontario municipal act to put this saving clause in section 4 of our act.

The Chairman: Since the amendment is an addition to subsection 4, subsection 4 therefore should be carried. Shall subsection 4 carry?

Subsection 4 agreed to.

Mr. Higgins: Just one question. In the last sentence of the explanatory note, I find this language:

It is felt that the crown should not be prejudiced by claims after an opportunity for investigating is gone.

I have a question arising out of that section. Will the minister say what month in the year he would regard as being "before the snow flies"?

Mr. Garson: I think that is a question which answers itself.

Mr. Abbott: Res ipsa loquitur.

The Chairman: Shall section 4 carry?

Section agreed to.

NORTH PACIFIC FISHERY

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR HIGH SEAS FISHERIES

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure providing for the approval and confirmation of the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, signed by Canada, the United States and Japan, in Tokyo, on the 9th of May, 1952, and for carrying out Canada's obligations under the convention.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean was drafted at a tripartite fisheries convention held in Tokyo in the fall of 1951. This conference was attended by delegations representing the governments of Canada, Japan and the United States.

The Canadian delegation was made up of the recent minister of fisheries, Hon. Mr. Mayhew, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite); the deputy minister of fisheries, Mr. Bates; the legal adviser of the Department of Fisheries, Mr. Ozere; a representative from the external affairs department, Mr. Menzies; John L. Hart, director of the Pacific biological station; and John M. Buchanan, representing the fishing industry of British Columbia. Japan was given an ad hoc sovereignty by the supreme command of the allied forces for the purposes of negotiating the convention. Upon the coming into force of the Japanese peace treaty, the convention was signed on behalf of the three governments on May 9, 1952.

The convention is made in respect of fishing in the high seas of the North Pacific ocean. Territorial waters are excepted and claims to territorial waters unaffected.

The principal provisions of the convention relate to agreement on the part of each of the three contracting parties to abstain from fishing in the high seas outside the territorial waters for any stocks of fish which are (a) under scientific management, (b) legal regulation, and (c) fully exploited by one or two of the contracting parties. Under these provisions Japan immediately agreed to abstain from fishing for salmon, halibut and herring on this side of the Pacific ocean. These three species constitute the backbone of the fishing industry in British Columbia. We have agreed to abstain from fishing for red salmon in certain areas of the Bering sea, where our fishermen have never conducted any fishing operations, and where the United States have developed the salmon fishery without our participation.

By way of exception to these general principles, under which each of the parties agreed to abstain from exploiting the resources conserved and developed by one or two of the other parties, the treaty recognizes that, because of intermingling of fish and fishing operations, and because of joint conservation programs, neither Canada nor the United States would be asked to abstain from the exploitation of the fishery resources on this side of the Pacific from the gulf of Alaska southward. This exception is of particular interest to Canada, since our fishermen have not historically established fishing operations along the greatest part of the coast of the United States, including Alaska; whereas United States' fishermen have been fishing in the high seas off our territorial waters in many areas along the coast of British Columbia, and therefore could not be asked to abstain because of this historic exploitation.

Subject to these exceptions, any other stock of fish that in the future meets with the three conditions of full exploitation, scientific management and legal regulation may be included in the annex of the treaty, and the party or parties which have not participated in this exploitation may be asked to abstain from future exploitation.

The treaty provides for the establishment of a commission composed of representatives of the three countries, whose functions will include determination of whether any stock of fish qualifies for abstention under the principles of the convention. The commission would also decide whether any joint conservation measures are required in respect of any stock of fish exploited by two or all of the contracting parties. In case only two countries are interested in a certain fishery, the representatives of the two countries concerned would alone make the necessary recommendations; otherwise the recommendations of the commission are to be unanimous.

The commission has no regulatory powers, but only the power of making recommendations which can only become effective if agreed to by the governments of the three countries. Each government is to pay the expenses incurred by its national section. Joint expenses are to be paid in the form and proportion recommended by the commission and approved by the three governments. Search and arrest of fishing vessels on the high seas, operating contrary to the provisions of the convention, are agreed to. Such vessels when seized are to be turned over to the country to which they belong for trial and punishment. This procedure is in line with the procedure now provided for in our two treaties with the United States on salmon and halibut.

The convention will enter into force on the day of exchange of ratification and will remain in force for ten years, and thereafter one year from the day on which any party gives notice of termination. The treaty has already been ratified by the government of the United States and approved by the diet of Japan, and it is thought desirable that it should be ratified by the government of Canada as soon as possible.

By a protocol to the convention the commission shall, as soon as possible after its establishment, investigate the waters of the convention area to determine if there are areas in which salmon of United States, Canadian and Asiatic origin intermingle, and recommend suitable lines of demarcation in place of the provisional line now agreed upon.

The convention was referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries for study. The committee on June 10, 1952 unanimously recommended that the House of Commons approve the convention. Implementing legislation will be required to carry out Canada's obligation under the convention. This resolution envisages such implementing legislation.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, as the parliamentary assistant has said, this convention was examined carefully in the standing committee on marine and fisheries a year ago. It is therefore not the intention to have a protracted debate at the resolution stage here. But in view of a certain amount of misunderstanding which existed on the west coast, and a good deal of controversy which took place, I would appreciate the opportunity of making a few remarks on this subject.

It was considered by many people that it would have been preferable to have included this convention in the general peace treaty, but we learned in the committee that that was not considered either practicable or desirable when the Japanese peace treaty was being drawn up at San Francisco, and the committee accepted the explanations which were then given. As a result of the impossibility of the inclusion of special fishery clauses in the general peace treaty, this tripartite treaty or convention was drawn up.

I understand that the convention is aimed in general terms at the conservation of fisheries resources in a very large area of the Pacific ocean, with special treatment for a limited period of time, namely eleven years and one day, or longer, to fisheries which are being fully exploited and are already subject to conservation methods, as has just now been described by the parliamentary assistant.

Japan is excluded, in certain sections of the high seas off the coast of the United States territory of Alaska and British Columbia, from fishing salmon, herring and halibut for the period described. Canada and Japan have agreed to abstain from fishing salmon which originates in the waters of the rivers of Alaska flowing into the Bering sea.

One unique point regarding the fisheries on the west coast is that, historically, Canada and the United States have been the only powers which have fished in the high seas off the west coast of Canada. I do not think there is any recorded incident in which a foreign fishing vessel, other than those of the United States, has fished off the west coast of Canada. Of course, in the past Japanese fishing vessels have been off the Alaska coast, in the Bering sea. But fear exists among many people in the industry that this immunity may not last forever and that, owing to the rapid development in fishing vessels, including the increase in their size, it may be that foreign fishing fleets will come to the high seas off the coast of British Columbia in the not too distant future.

It is known that at the present time Japan has trawlers to a gross tonnage of 664 tons, and that they have modern steel clippers that they use in their fishing industry. But Japan is not the only country developing fishing fleets ranging over the ocean for thousands of miles, and so there is the fear that not only may Japanese fishing fleets come off our coasts, but also the fishing fleets of other nations who border on the Pacific ocean.

For many years we have spent a great deal of money and effort in the conservation of our fish. I say "our" fish because I mean our Canadian fish, our British Columbia fish, the fish born and bred hundreds of miles up the rivers of my province. And then the salmon, having spawned, work down the rivers and pass out through our territorial waters into the high seas. In the majority of cases they have to pass through waters surrounded by Canadian territory for some considerable distance before they actually get into the ocean. Naturally I refer to such passages as the strait of Juan de Fuca and Hecate strait between the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland of British Columbia.

North Pacific Fishery

I think it is appropriate at the moment to call attention to the importance of the fishing industry to the Japanese nation, as it is indicative of her interest in that industry not only at the present time but also in years to come. In pre-war days—and I am referring to the time before world war II—the Japanese fleet was catching from 3 to 5 million tons of fish each year, and that country was exporting about a million tons. During the war, of course, her fishing activities were very much restricted, and were confined to fishing close to the islands of Japan. Her export trade was completely cut off.

After the war, beginning in 1951, although still under certain restrictions placed upon her by the occupying powers Japan did carry out extensive fishing operations. She was encouraged to do so. Her total catch that year was 3,500,000 tons. In 1952 she increased that catch by at least 20 per cent. I have here a report from World Fishing, a trade magazine of the United Kingdom dealing with fishing, which has this to say about Japanese endeavours at the present time:

> Japan is apparently losing little time in making use of her new fishing freedom. Plans reported to be under consideration for 1953 include five or six salmon expeditions involving 200 catchers, further whaling operations, a crab expedition, a trawling venture (chiefly for cod) employing five boats and a fish carrier, and a fish-meal factory ship expedition with 25 catchers.
> Japan is already looking far afield for possible extensions to her fishery activities.

It is the fear of the extension of those fishing activities by Japan and by other countries that looms over the fishermen of British Columbia. They have expressed considerable disappointment that an opportunity was not taken, when the convention was prepared, of defining in article I more clearly what our territorial waters are, because this treaty deals with the high seas and of course the high seas come right up to where our territorial waters may be.

In Scott's "Law and Customs of the Seas", which is a textbook of the Royal Canadian Navy, navigable waters of the world are divided into internal waters, territorial waters and the high seas. This classification begins on the landward side and requires of course two lines, one demarking the division between internal and territorial waters, and the other defining the line between territorial waters and the high seas. Quite obviously the internal waters of a state comprise all those waters, salt or fresh, which lie on the landward side of the line dividing the internal waters from the territorial waters. This will include all rivers, fresh lakes, harbours and the like.

A well-known authority, Mr. V. K. Johnston, who wrote a quite complete article in the British Year Book of International Law a few years ago, sets out the claims of Canada to certain waters, particularly Hudson bay. The waters of Hudson bay are controlled by Canada, and Canada has laid claim for many centuries to those waters as being internal waters of Canada. That claim has been established in the statutes of Canada. Other countries have done the same. Japan had claimed the Inland sea as her own internal waters. Russia has claimed the White sea. The United States has claimed Chesapeake bay. Those are just some examples of the claims that have been made to internal waters.

Many plans have been suggested for the drawing of a base line to indicate the territorial waters. As far as Hudson bay is concerned, that bay is 1,000 miles long by about 600 miles wide. This huge expanse of water is joined to the Atlantic ocean by Hudson strait, another stretch of water some 500 miles long and 46 miles wide. In 1906 the government of Canada placed a measure upon the statute books claiming the waters of Hudson bay to be territorial waters of Canada.

I cite that as an instance of what Canada has done in the past in the way of claiming a wide stretch of salt water which is connected to the Atlantic ocean. On the west coast we have not had the continued incidents of foreign countries fishing off our coast, but we feel that the time has come when steps should be taken to declare that the waters between the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland, through which fish born in the waters of British Columbia must pass to get to the Pacific ocean, should be declared to be territorial or internal waters.

We believe that that can be done now, and we regret that it was not included in this convention. There should have been a clear definition claiming for all time, not just for ten or eleven years, that Hecate strait constituted territorial waters of Canada and that Japan should be prohibited for all time from fishing for salmon, herring, halibut or any other fish in those Canadian waters.

We recognize the historic right of the United States to fish there. For years United States fishermen have been fishing in these waters and have observed and will continue to observe the conservation regulations which we have laid down for the protection of our fish. But that does not necessarily apply to Japan or other countries bordering on the Pacific ocean. We feel that this convention should have afforded an opportunity to establish those waters as Canadian territorial waters. Even if that were not done, we feel that for all time there should have been a claim made by Canada to preserve the salmon, halibut, herring and other fish that inhabit those waters.

It is not unusual for countries to claim fishing preserves or rights over certain waters of the high seas outside of their own territorial waters. For instance, the United Kingdom has laid claim to the oyster beds in St. George's channel, which are more than 20 miles from the coast. The United Kingdom claims that she has certain fishing rights there and she exercises certain regulations over the breeding and harvesting of those oysters. In the same way sponge fisheries off the Tunisian coast are specially protected although they are well outside territorial waters. Similarly, fishing and conservation regulations have been made by Mexico and some of the South American republics.

I am not going into the question of how a base line should be drawn, but we do have the example of Norway. That nation recently made the decision to draw a base line from point to point, some points being 40 miles distant. These fixed points were on headlands, small islands and rocks stretching up the whole length of the west coast of Norway. We feel it is high time that steps were taken to declare Hecate strait as Canadian waters, and to say that we have the right to conserve our fish in those waters.

I understand that a committee has been set up and is going into the whole problem, and also that this matter will be referred to a committee of the United Nations which is discussing the question of territorial waters. I repeat that we regret that opportunity was not taken when this convention was drawn to define clearly where our territorial waters were on the west coast and establish once and for all our right to the fish which breed in Canadian waters and pass through Hecate strait and other waters surrounded either by the shores of the mainland of Canada or islands off the west coast.

If Canada can lay claim to the vast area of Hudson bay, surely she has the right to claim Hecate strait which is also surrounded by Canadian territory. Hecate strait is an insignificant piece of water when its size is compared with Hudson bay and Hudson strait. The strait is not more than 30 or 40 miles wide at the widest point between the mainland and the Queen Charlotte islands.

Those are the objections we have to this convention. We do not feel that we can go so far as to object to its ratification, but we do urge that the committee which has been set up to deal with territorial waters should proceed with the utmost dispatch and try to reach an agreement with the other countries concerned so that now, before it is too late, before foreign fishing fleets come off our shores, all nations will know that Canada claims that sheet of water.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Fournier, Hull (for Mr. Sinclair) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 293, to implement the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The house in committee on Bill No. 107, to amend the Post Office Act—Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville)—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—P.M.G. may contract where amount $1,000 or less.

The Chairman: I might point out that this bill was carefully considered by a special committee appointed to consider it, and was reported to the house without amendment.

Mr. Pearkes: May I have a copy of the bill?

The Chairman: I am informed that if the hon. member looks in his file of bills he will probably find Bill No. 107, to amend the Post Office Act. In any event I am asking the officers of the house to have additional copies of the bill distributed.

Mr. Graydon: I should like to ask a question on clause 1. I did not have the privilege of sitting on the committee. I noticed in the committee's reports that some effort was made to have the rural mail couriers appear before the committee. It did not seem to me that a very courageous attempt was made to get them, but it appeared that the committee had asked one of the regional presidents, Mr. Webster of Acton, to come. I know that he has not been very well, and I have no doubt that is the reason he did not appear. Was any real effort made to get these people before the committee?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): As a matter of fact Mr. Webster was contacted by telephone. First he said he would try to come, but he also said that he was sick. When he was called the day after he said he could not come, that he was sick and that he had no substitute. He said he would send a telegram. We had received from Mr.

Webster, as the representative of the association, an itemized statement of his views as to what he considered should be included in the bill, and the bill met almost exactly what he had requested. Two letters from Mr. Webster were filed in the committee. My hon. friend may want to know the details, and I might read one of those letters. It reads as follows:

> On behalf of the rural mail couriers of Canada may I express our thankfulness for introducing a bill mentioned in the press of today, that will give you the authority to again increase the wages of deserving couriers without them having to throw up their contract and re-tender. We trust that this will in no way interfere with the committee under discussion to study rural mail for a Canada-wide survey that satisfied couriers can only exist when they receive some equality of payment according to the amount of work involved.
> For some time now statistical price records have changed very little and yet at the same time labour is asking and receiving substantial increases dating well into the future. This too is in the minds of many couriers, especially among the lower contracts. For example—a four to five hour day, furnishing all equipment and supplying gas, etc., for $3. This is not an isolated instance either. Again we say "thank you" as we look forward for something better for our rural mail couriers.

That letter is signed by S. H. Webster, secretary of the rural mail couriers' association.

Mr. Graydon: That is in the committee's proceedings?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): It was filed in the committee. Then there is another short letter. I do not like to impose unnecessary repetition on the committee, but I may tell my hon. friend that we had in mind that they should be consulted and they were invited to come down. From what I have read in their letters, and from the conversation Mr. Webster had with the chairman of the committee, I presume that he is quite satisfied with what has been done.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I am in a similar position to the hon. member for Peel. I was not a member of the committee, and I have not been able to familiarize myself with its deliberations. I have had representations from quite a number of couriers in my constituency and in Nova Scotia generally. I am interested in the letter the minister has just read. I understand that Mr. Webster is dominion president of the couriers' association?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Secretary.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to know if any representatives of the couriers of Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces generally appeared before the committee. I know that as an organization and as individuals they have been very much concerned about the deliberations and recommendations of the committee. Was there direct representation from the maritime provinces or from Nova Scotia; and did the department, having in mind the long distance they would have to come and the time they would be here, make any proposal to them to defray their expenses so they might give evidence in this matter that affects their interests?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I do not know of any representations having been made by the people mentioned by my hon. friend. I may tell him that Mr. Webster said, in a telegram which was also filed in the committee, that he was representing all the couriers of Canada, and I presume that their problems are to a certain extent basically the same.

Mr. Dinsdale: I had the privilege of serving on the committee and I can substantiate broadly what the minister has said. It is my impression that Mr. Webster indicated that he was going to submit a brief on this matter which was to be considered by the committee as soon as it was available.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): When Mr. Webster was first contacted he said that since he could not come he would send something. I think he was invited to send a brief. But the next day, since he was also unable to prepare a brief, he said it would be all right to go ahead with the bill if all members of the committee agreed to do so. I take it from the information I have received that he himself decided not to send a brief.

Mr. Cruickshank: I also served on that committee, and I think it was my understanding, like the hon. member for Brandon, that we would have a brief submitted by Mr. Webster. I have no recollection of that being changed by wire or otherwise to the effect that he was not going to submit a brief. I do not think it is in the evidence that he said he was satisfied.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I have received my information from the chairman of the committee. He told me that Mr. Webster first talked about a brief that he would send, since he could not come down because he was sick.

The Chairman: Are we not going outside what should be the limits of discussion here at the moment? I do not want to curtail the discussion, but it seems to me that to argue what should have taken place in the committee, or what did not take place, is going too far away from what has been allowed by practice in the general discussion on section 1.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): We have had a report by this special committee, and it is upon their findings that this legislation is being recommended. As I gather from the report the minister makes to us tonight, Mr. Webster, acting for the couriers of Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada, is satisfied and recommends this legislation which the minister is submitting to us for implementation.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I do not want to repeat what was said in the committee, but I shall be glad to refer my hon. friends to the proceedings and evidence of the committee of Wednesday, March 18 and Thursday, March 19, pages 36 and 58. They will find there the answer to the questions they have asked in this house.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, if we are going to try to put this discussion on a regularized basis, then I should like to see the report of the committee if the minister has it. The minister shows me the proceedings and evidence. What I want is the report.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I might explain now that the committee is still sitting and considering that part of its reference dealing with the general administration of rural mail. The bill itself has been reported without amendment, and I might add that it was a unanimous report.

Mr. Graydon: Where is the report so we could have it?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): It is the bill itself.

The Chairman: Perhaps I might say that before me on the table is the report of the committee, which is the bill; that is all we have before us.

Mr. Brooks: As I listened to the debate my understanding was that Mr. Webster was supposed to appear before the committee. He was ill and did not do that, and did not submit any report. I have heard the hon. member for Fraser Valley, who was a member of that committee, and also the hon. member for Brandon both say they understood that Mr. Webster or someone else was supposed to appear before the committee. Evidently the committee has made a report without hearing the evidence it should have heard.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I do not want to repeat what I have said, but I may add that there might be a little misunderstanding. Mr. Webster was asked to come. He was sick at the time, and he could not come. He was hoping, though, that he would be able to prepare something to send to the committee. The next day he said that he was not only unable to come but he was unable to prepare a brief without delaying the proceedings of the committee. The position was explained by the chairman of the committee, and that appears in the pages of evidence which I cited earlier.

Mr. Brooks: Did the committee definitely understand that Mr. Webster, who represented the couriers, was satisfied with the bill?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Oh, yes.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the genial Postmaster General one other question. If the committee is still sitting, what is it going to consider?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I think my hon. friend should recall the committee's terms of reference. They were first to consider the bill and second, to consider the general administration of rural mail service. Those are two different things. The bill has been considered and there was a unanimous report on the bill presented to this house, but the committee is still sitting to consider the second part of the reference.

Mr. Hodgson: I want to ask a question about the explanatory note which says:

—while a contract is still in force, increase the amount payable thereunder during the unexpired term thereof.

Does that mean that you can increase the amount if the contract were for, say $1,200 or $1,400?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Might I ask my hon. friend the paragraph to which he is referring?

Mr. Hodgson: I refer to the explanatory note on the opposite page to section 1, the fifth line. Does that mean you can increase the amount of the contract if it is under $1,000?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): A readjustment may be made for contracts not only under $1,000 but also for contracts over $1,000. It relates to all postal contracts except those mentioned in section 29 which are, incidentally, contracts with railroads, etc.

Mr. McLure: I still cannot understand why this bill is before us when the committee appointed to consider it is still meeting and has not submitted a report. I did not receive any definite report. A committee report, to the effect that they recommend this bill, should have come before the house and be on the record. I do not think there is any great hurry, Mr. Chairman, to put this bill through. I know this bill is going to give the Postmaster General almost absolute powers. In almost every section you will see a reference to the fact that where the Postmaster General considers it in the public interest, he may do so and so. The whole bill is made up of references to the fact that the Postmaster General shall have this power, and he may do this or he may do that.

If this committee is still in session and is going to make any recommendations at all concerning contracts, we cannot deal with this bill because it has to do with contracts more than with anything else. I cannot understand why we should pass this bill and then perhaps have the committee bring in a different report. If they did that we would have to discard this bill and work from the report which the committee made. If that is not the case, it must be an attempt to get Bill No. 107 passed and then go back to the committee and say, "We have no more use for you; close up and put in a unanimous report on everything we have done in Bill No. 107". That is not going to be satisfactory to anyone.

The Chairman: May I interrupt the hon. member, because it is a point of order upon which he is rising at the moment. He is saying we should not be considering this bill at this time. I might refer the hon. member to page 380 of Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, March 19, where he will read:

> Mr. McCubbin, from the special committee appointed to consider Bill No. 107, an act to amend the Post Office Act, presented the second report of the said committee, as follows:
> Your committee has considered the said bill and has agreed to report it without amendment.

This is the bill, which is now to be studied in committee of the whole after having gone through first and second readings.

Mr. Cruickshank: That was unanimous.

Mr. McLure: Then that is the end of the committee.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: The hon. member has a perfect right to see the chairman of the special committee, ask him to call it into session, and then make what representations he wishes to that committee, although he may not be a member of it. It is a standing practice for a member who is not a member of a standing or a special committee to ask, when the committee is sitting, that he appear before it and make his representations. But at this moment what is before the committee of the whole is a bill amending the Post Office Act; and we should be dealing not with the proceedings before the special committee but with the sections of this bill. I think hon. members will agree that so far we have heard discussion of nothing but proceedings before the special committee and that, in my submission, is entirely out of order.

Mr. Ferguson: I am not a member of this committee but, from reading this bill, I want to say that it is a step in the right direction for the rural mail carriers of Canada. Items this bill will cover have come to my attention time and time again in connection with various rural mail carriers throughout my part of the country in connection with the money they were going to receive.

If they were not receiving an adequate sum of money for the services rendered to the people in that part of the country, and if they felt that was the case, they would write to the Post Office Department, and in most cases they would have to call for new tenders. Then some person would proceed to tender who had no conception of the work involved, and he might be awarded the contract because he was able to deliver a bond or he was able to show that he had proper equipment to carry on the job. But at the end of six months or three months that man would realize that he was going to go bankrupt if he continued at that price, and then he would throw up the contract. In the meantime the man who had asked for a reasonable sum of money would have been upset and would have turned to another vocation in order to provide his livelihood. The net result would be that the recipients of the mail, the people of this country who are looking for mail delivery, would be upset and would not get the mail service to which they were entitled.

From reading this act I think I can say there is no doubt about it that it is one step in the right direction—and I want to compliment the committee—so that our mail carriers will probably get somewhere near an adequate remuneration for the services they render to the people of Canada. Further steps can be taken and improvements can be made, but definitely this bill provides for an improvement in the conditions under which these men have been working, and I am glad to see it.

Mr. Cruickshank: May I say one word in that connection. I think there are three members of the committee present. We endorsed this bill unanimously. The reason we were trying to rush it through was largely that mentioned by the hon. member who spoke previously, namely that the sooner we get it through the sooner we can do something for the underpaid rural mail carriers.

Mr. Pearkes: May I ask one question. I am not a member of the committee, but I have received a communication from a rural mail carrier who delivers mail in my own district and who is a man of considerable experience and intelligence. He asks if fair remuneration will be provided for every carrier for his services and for the use and maintenance of automobiles and other equipment as well as an added sense of security. Is provision made for the maintenance of his automobile?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): All items of cost will be considered in making the adjustments.

Mr. Robichaud: I am not a member of the committee, but in my constituency I think there are a small number of rural mail carriers. Perhaps Gloucester has the smallest number of rural mail carriers of any constituency in my province of New Brunswick. I have, however, received several representations—

The Chairman: Order. I might point out generally—

Mr. Robichaud: It is just a question.

The Chairman: Yes, but if I allow the hon. member to ask a question having to do with conditions of rural mail carriers, then I will have to allow others to do so. I might refer the hon. member to page 197 of Votes and Proceedings. There he will find the order of reference establishing the special committee to which was entrusted the task of first considering this amending bill, and further of studying the regulations, general administration and operation of the rural mail delivery service, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print its evidence and proceedings from day to day and so on. Therefore his problem can still be submitted to the special committee. At this moment let us examine the bill.

Mr. Robichaud: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but my question was in line with the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo.

The Chairman: Yes. It was precisely because the hon. member for Nanaimo asked a question that I realized that the hon. member was going to ask a similar one; and that is why I stopped him.

Mr. Robichaud: So I am victimized.

The Chairman: Shall we pass on to section 2?

Mr. McLure: I should like to ask one question. Suppose we pass this section—

Mr. Knowles: Do you mean before the snow flies or after?

Mr. McLure: Then suppose the committee sat tomorrow, or Monday, or some day. They cannot deal with this matter any more in that committee. They cannot bring in any recommendations. They have already stated that they are not going to make any changes in or offer any criticism whatsoever of the section we are on. Is that the understanding, namely that the committee have no more work? As I said, they have now closed up.

The Chairman: Of course all I can say at the moment is that the order of reference of the special committee is right there in Votes and Proceedings. The chairman of the committee and the members thereof decide their own procedure. As far as they are concerned, we in the house have nothing to do with it. But what we have here before us is a bill to amend the Post Office Act. That is what we are dealing with. Shall we pass on to section 2?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, may I say one word. Through the years I have tried to give to this rural mail problem as much constructive thought as I possibly could. Having gone over the various proposals that have been made from time to time, I must confess that I am practically driven back to the position that I do not know any other way out at the moment than that which the bill has provided.

It may be that there are other ways out, but I do not know of any. You cannot put them on a civil service basis because they will not go on it. They do not perhaps want to rout out a lot of them who are there now. You cannot leave them on a tender basis without some kind of elasticity or latitude because it is a throat-cutting job with a great many people and the result is that that is where much of the injustice has arisen. While I have been arguing and would continue to argue that we have to watch out that we do not get this on a straight patronage basis, one of the things that was interesting to me when the debate took place previously was an observation made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. I must confess that I thought there was quite a bit in what he said.

Mr. Weir: There always is.

Mr. Graydon: I would not have thought it would be necessary to mention that. You would almost think it was the exception to the rule, but I would not agree with you on that.

Mr. Weir: I was just helping you out.

Mr. Graydon: As far as I can see, this seems about the best that can be done, at least for the time being, with regard to giving them some elasticity and some satisfaction in knowing that when they are too low in price, are not able to make any money, and are running on starvation rates, the minister can do something for them. That is really the agreeable part of it. It may be that we shall run into many difficulties with this new system. I do not know; but at least it is important that we try it out to see if it will work.

At the same time I should like to caution the minister. He will have to watch that it does not get into the position where it is a straight patronage matter on rural mail routes, not only for the sake of party advantage to anybody but for the sake of the Postmaster General himself. He would be put in a very invidious position if it got into that situation. I am thinking too of the deputy postmaster general, whom we must always have in mind. In any event, it does seem to me that it is deserving at least of a trial, and that is why I rise to endorse it. I do not know of any other way out. If I did I would be presenting it to the committee just now.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Lowest tenderer to be accepted except for cause.

Mr. Hodgson: Section 2 reads:

> Where more than one tender has been received, the contract shall be awarded to the lowest tenderer who has offered sufficient security for the faithful performance of the contract, unless the Postmaster General is satisfied that it is not in the public interest to accept the lowest tender . . .

There is a clause in the Post Office Act that says practically the same thing, namely that the Postmaster General need not give the job to a certain fellow. He may be the top man in the competition for a post office job or even for the job as courier, but the Postmaster General need not give him that job. There is a clause in the act which says "for cause". This has happened twice in my riding, and it was absolutely nothing but the barest unadulterated patronage that was used in both cases. I do not blame the deputy postmaster general, because in one instance he was not in town. He was away on his holidays.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): May I say to my hon. friend that section 2 is not changed at all except for the two words "treasury board".

Mr. Robichaud: With respect to the deliberations on clause 2, has any consideration been given to the proposition of discontinuing altogether the granting of rural mail contracts by tender and replacing that with a new system comparable to other similar postal services?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): May I repeat that this section has not been changed at all except for the addition of the words "treasury board".

Mr. Higgins: If a contract is let for $1,000 what would the minister require as sufficient security?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): What we mean is two guarantors, two men who will vouch for the applicant.

Mr. Hodgson: Where there are two tenders and one is lower than the other; when for cause or in the public interest the lowest tenderer does not get the job, if I go to the Postmaster General and ask what is the public interest that requires this, will he be so frank as to tell me, or will he be like an individual who said to me once before when I went to him, "Well, my officials have something to say."

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): My hon. friend may obtain all the information he wants. He may also ask for the production of papers, that is, papers that are not considered confidential.

Mr. Hodgson: I am glad to hear that, because that is quite a change from your predecessor.

Mr. McLure: I should like to ask a question on this clause. If the Postmaster General finds that one man's route is 15 miles and he is getting $1,000 and the next fellow has a mail route of 24 miles and is getting only $800, will he immediately say that this is not fair and raise him to $2,400.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): That is precisely the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to do away with unfairness, to see that people who are suffering injustices get just treatment.

Mr. McLure: Don't start at the lowest tender, because these people have been robbed all their lives; they have been working for nothing. I should like to have some assurance that you will start at the highest-paid ones and work from there, and not from the lowest ones and work up.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I might satisfy my hon. friend by saying that the readjustment will be made in an objective way after we have received information from the Department of Labour and from our officers in the field. I do not want to give all the details, but instead of readjusting arbitrarily we shall find out what is paid for comparable services in the same area and we shall pay an adequate remuneration to the contractors.

Mr. McLure: Comparable services in something else besides driving the mail?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Driving the mail and driving something else, perhaps. Similar work might satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. McLure: At that rate you will not have any mail couriers at all after the first year.

Mr. Brooks: Where you are increasing the amount paid to a lot of these men who have been using worn-out equipment, will the department see to it that their equipment is brought up to the standards necessary?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): We always look at all the angles. Public interest was mentioned. That is one way of expressing what we are looking for. We want to see that the taxpayers of this country receive good service, and we want the man who is giving the service to be paid adequately. To achieve that we are looking at the security, the solvency of the men and the equipment, and a comparison of the routes, the number of boxes, the length of the routes; and all these considerations will be looked into and taken into consideration in the decision we are going to make.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Before clause 2 of the bill carries may I ask the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) if any consideration has been given, when drafting the said clause, to the proposition of discontinuing altogether the granting of rural mail contracts by tender and replacing it with a new system comparable to other similar postal services, a suggestion which has no doubt been made to him.

The Chairman: Unless I am mistaken, that is the same question the hon. member put, in English, a few moments ago.

Mr. Robichaud: I received no answer when I put that question in English. I thought I might get one by putting it in French.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member will agrée that that is merely repetition.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Contracts with railway, etc.

Mr. Higgins: A lot of first-class mail is now being carried by Trans-Canada Air Lines without the additional three-cent stamp on it. Is that an additional cost to the post office or not?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I do not think that has anything to do with the bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Adjustment of contracts.

Mr. McLure: We want a little more time on this. It is now ten o'clock, and if it is in order I will move the adjournment of the discussion, because I want to get more information and I cannot get it from the committee now. The committee is going to be defunct in a short time, and I must get it from the Postmaster General.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): If my hon. friend wants to get more details I know hon. members will agree to sit five or ten minutes longer.

Mr. McLure: You can't get it in five minutes. It is ten o'clock, and I move the adjournment of the discussion.

Mr. Weir: The hon. member can stay awake another five minutes.

Mr. Herridge: We have had excellent committees studying this matter and they have brought in excellent reports. Surely we can get it through tonight for the sake of the Postmaster General, who has to leave.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we carry on with the study of the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Contracts with railway, etc.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, we have made fairly good progress with this bill, especially since some of us were not members of the committee. It is now after ten o'clock, and I think the hon. member for Queens was reasonable in suggesting that we should adjourn at this time and take it up again later. I do not wish to hold up the work of the committee, but I think we have advanced far enough, certainly as far as could be expected tonight.

Mr. McLure: That is right.

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to give the impression that we were anxious to pass the bill over the opposition of hon. members. However, as has been already suggested, the sooner we have finished with it the sooner we will be helping the carriers in this country.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): And may I add this. I know all hon. members are interested in this bill. We are now approaching section 8, and there are only nine sections in the bill. The ninth is the section stating when it shall come into force. If we were to adjourn the debate right now all we would be doing would be preventing its coming into force, because we have carried the other sections. Of course I understand that if someone does not want it to pass at this time, it is his right; but could we not dispose of it, inasmuch as we are approaching the last section?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Does not the Minister of Public Works realize it is after ten o'clock, that we have now made considerable progress, and have had a long day?

Mr. Weir: But we are so near the end of it.

Section agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

The Chairman: Then is it agreed that we shall proceed with section 9?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, if it is understood and recognized by everybody that this bill has been railroaded through the committee and through the house, then we will all have to agree with what is being done. But so far as I am concerned I think it is very evident that there has been an effort to railroad the bill through the house.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Next sitting.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): If it is the view of hon. members that we should pass it under those circumstances, then I presume we will have to acquiesce.

Mr. Weir: No; you can object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member objects to having third reading, then I shall gladly say that third reading shall be at the next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): On Monday we shall take up—and don't be frightened; they are all small—Bill No. 227, to amend the Customs Tariff; Bill No. 226, to amend the Excise Act, 1934; Bill No. 143, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944; Bill No. 148, to amend the Statistics Act; Bill No. 223, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935; and then we have these three bills in the name of the Minister of Resources and Development, Bills Nos. 110, 230, and 109.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. B. McCulloch (Pictou) presented the sixth report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TELEVISION

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): In order to clarify statements which already have been made and to answer questions asked by several hon. members with reference to television, I wish to make this brief statement.

In my statement of December 8, 1952, I mentioned six centres in which Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television stations are to be established immediately, and indicated that applications would now be received for private stations to serve other areas. I pointed out that under the plan the private stations licensed would carry national program service of the C.B.C., besides having time for programming on their own. I also said, as reported at page 409 of Hansard of December 8, 1952:

> Since the objective will be to extend services as widely throughout Canada as is practicable, no two stations will be licensed at the present to serve the same area. A television station can serve only a comparatively small area. Canada is very large and it will require a good many stations before television can be brought to the people in most parts of our country. It is desirable to have one station in as many areas as possible before there are two in any one area.

These words make it clear that it was not the policy of the government to create monopoly in television or to limit any one area indefinitely to one television station.

The principle of one station to an area is to apply only until an adequate national television system is developed. At the rate that applications for stations are now being received it may not be long before there is a sufficient degree of national coverage to justify the government and the C.B.C. giving consideration to permitting two and perhaps in some cases more than two stations in certain areas. It is anticipated that, in due course, private stations will be permitted in areas covered by C.B.C. stations, and the C.B.C. may establish stations in some areas originally covered by private stations.

The ultimate objective of the C.B.C. is to have at least one station in every province of Canada where that is practicable. We understand that private applications have been under development in the five provinces where no C.B.C. station is now under way, and the government does not want to discourage immediate establishment in these areas of private stations which will further extend national service coverage. For that reason licences granted for private stations in those provinces will contain a provision that, before establishing a competing station, the C.B.C. will ascertain whether the area is likely to afford adequate financial support for two stations. If not, it may offer to purchase the private station at a fair and reasonable price rather than set up a new one.

Mr. Drew: In connection with that, may I ask whether the understanding is that the minister would regard an adequate national television service as having been established if there is at least one station in every province.

Mr. McCann: That is the ultimate objective, and that, along with private stations, will constitute the national coverage.

Mr. Drew: Well, am I not correct in my understanding that the distance that one can be reasonably sure of good television broadcasting conditions is not more than fifty miles at the present time?

Mr. McCann: That is correct, as far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. Drew: That is correct, is it? With the recognition—

Mr. McCann: That is the minimum.

Mr. Drew: With the recognition of that limitation, do I gather that the minister says that one television station established in each province would be regarded as adequate television facilities across Canada?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McCann: No, I did not say that. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that probably if the statement were studied any questions might be asked at a later date.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the minister a supplementary question in view of this statement? Has attention been given to the representations that were reported to have been made that the corporations controlled by foreign capital should not have a dominating interest in stations licensed by the C.B.C.?

Mr. McCann: I am unable to answer that because my knowledge is not official; it is only what I have seen in the newspaper, and I have not yet had a report from the C.B.C. with reference to the meetings last week.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF STATION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue arising out of his statement on television made earlier this afternoon. I understand that the corporation plans to set up stations—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should not make a statement. I will allow him to ask his question, but he should not make his statement.

Mr. Higgins: What plans has the minister for television in Newfoundland?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): In the general plan ultimately the C.B.C. would like to have a station in every province.

Mr. Higgins: How long is ultimately?

Mr. McCann: As long as you want to put it.

STATIONS TO BE ESTABLISHED BY PRIVATE INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I wonder if the minister heard the announcement over the radio today that television stations were going to be set up by private organizations at Quebec city, Windsor and Sydney. Could he add to that list?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I did not hear the announcement over the radio but I am acquainted with the recommendations that are to be made by the C.B.C. to the radio division, Department of Transport.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What other cities besides Quebec city, Windsor and Sydney?

[Mr. McCann.]

Mr. McCann: It is proposed to recommend that licences be granted for Sydney, Nova Scotia; Saint John, New Brunswick; Quebec city; Hamilton; London, Windsor and Sudbury; one in each instance.

Mr. Pearkes: What about Victoria?

Mr. McCann: We have no application yet, and we cannot deal with them until we get them.

Mr. Gillis: Might I ask the Minister of National Revenue who secured the television licence for Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. McCann: No licence has been given. According to the announcement that has been made, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will make a recommendation to the radio division, Department of Transport, to grant a licence. Offhand I do not know who it is. I think it is the same people who have the radio station. I do not know their corporate name.

Mr. Gillis: CJCB.

Mr. McCann: Cape Breton Broadcasters.

CANADIAN FORCES

TABLING OF GENERAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND BELGIUM

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): I should like to lay on the table copies in English and in French of a general agreement between Canada and Belgium, signed at Brussels today, concerning the transit through and the stationing in Belgium of Canadian forces. I might say that the object of this agreement is to arrange for certain small lines of communication and supply units of the 27th Canadian infantry brigade group to be stationed in Belgium in fulfilment of NATO requirements.

When arrangements have been completed with the Belgian government it is proposed that these units, which are now in Germany, will move into the Campine area near Antwerp.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS—THE PREMIER OF FRANCE AND MEMBERS OF HIS CABINET

Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find it fitting that I draw the attention of the house to the presence of the distinguished visitors who have just entered the diplomatic gallery, in company with the French ambassador, His Excellency Mr. Guérin; I refer to the President of the council of ministers of the French Republic, Mr. Rene Mayer, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Georges Bidault, and the Minister of Finance, Mr. Maurice Bourges-Maunoury.

It is important that mention be made of this visit in the official record of the House of Commons so that its readers may also be acquainted with the honour bestowed upon us this afternoon by the representatives of France, in thus attending one of our sittings.

It is important too that we say to our distinguished visitors in our capacity as representatives, in this house, of the people of the whole country, that we wish them to carry back from their short visit among us the vivid impression that all Canadians, from coast to coast, wish to carry out in an efficient and fruitful manner their co-operation with our mother countries, as well as with the other European nations, in order to defend this civilization for which we are indebted to them and of which our democratic institutions are an essential expression.

(Text):

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Say it in French, please.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I join with the Prime Minister in expressing the welcome that is in the heart of every hon. member to the distinguished representatives of France who are with us here this afternoon. To the Prime Minister and his associates may we say that under our democratic system we also have an opposition, and that opposition is part of our democratic procedure. But may I assure them, through you, sir, that in our welcome this afternoon there is certainly complete harmony, complete understanding, and only one thought, and that is to welcome them and to wish that in their high responsibilities they may guide their great nation to the destiny that we all wish it to share in these troubled years ahead. There are deep bonds of affection between our country and France that are not measured alone by the fact that France was one of the two countries from which those races which joined to make a nation came to these shores many years ago.

Then, there is the other point that is of great importance to all Canadians from every part of Canada. Hundreds of thousands of young Canadians came to know France, through the service they gave in a common cause. Many thousands of those Canadians sleep forever in French soil. The hearts of hundreds of thousands of Canadians here in Canada are forever deeply bound to the soil and people of France.

All those who have had the privilege of seeing what has happened in these past few years have great admiration for the magnificent work that has already been done to rebuild a nation which, for the second time in a single generation, has felt the devastation of war. The recovery of France, its physical rebuilding, and the unity of purpose which has become so apparent is of great advantage not only to France itself, but to the whole free world.

May I say to the distinguished visitors: I join the Prime Minister in the words he used when he said that it was the wish and hope of every Canadian that your cause may be advanced in every way. And I simply join with him in expressing what I know is the hope of every one of us, that the recovery and rebuilding of France may proceed to meet your highest dreams, and that in the years ahead France may take her proper place among the nations of the world in giving leadership to that ideal of civilization which is our common heritage.

QUESTIONS

AID TO MINING COMPANIES

Mr. Fair:

1. What is the amount of subsidies or other aid paid to mining companies (other than gold) during the past 13 years?

2. During the same period, what subsidies or other aid have been given to oil or gas companies?

Questions

Mr. Prudham:

Department of Mines and Technical Surveys:

1. Nil.

2. Nil.

Dominion coal board:

1. (a) As far as subsidy payments for coal are concerned the following table covers amounts paid during wartime. These were mostly to protect the general cost of living and were paid to mine operators who were unable, without sustaining losses, to meet increased labour costs arising out of awards of wage increases approved by the proper authority. The item "cost of living bonus" was paid to the operators for distribution to their employees for the same general purpose.

Production subsidies	$36,917,011
Grants for direct development of coal mines	394,302
Grants for housing of coal miners	14,984
Wage equalization payments	685,700
Cost of living bonus	3,453,286
	$41,465,283

These are reported upon in the report of the royal commission on coal at pages 551-2, 556-7-8-9 and 560.

(b) There is a subsidy paid to coal mine companies on coal sold for export or ship's stores on the west coast. The total paid to mining companies for this purpose in the years 1938-1952 was $792,907.

(c) In addition to the amounts paid to mining companies set forth in (a) and (b) there is the matter of payments made to the Dominion Coal Company and Old Sydney Collieries Ltd. BUTTER

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Minister of Agriculture. Is the government ready to make an announcement on butter prices?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Under authority of order in council, P. C. 2023, of April 27, 1951, the agricultural prices support board was authorized to purchase first-grade creamery butter during the period May 1, 1951, to April 30, 1953. Under authority of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 9 of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, the agricultural prices support board now proposes to offer to purchase from May 1, 1953, to April 30, 1955, first-grade creamery butter produced in Canada, and under authority of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 9 of the said act proposes to prescribe the following prices therefor:

Fifty-eight cents per pound basis delivery Halifax, Saint John, Montreal and Toronto.

Fifty-seven cents basis delivery Vancouver.

All purchases to be subject to such terms and conditions as may be specified by the agricultural prices support board. I may say by way of explanation that four years ago we established floor prices of 58 cents basis Montreal and Toronto. Three years ago we reduced that to 53 cents. Two years ago we put it back to 58 cents and made it apply for two years instead of one. This year we are just extending the policy as it has been for the last two years for the next two years.

the Rev. Stanley Wright, formerly of Tisdale, Saskatchewan? If so, what acknowledgment, if any, has been made of the protest?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian ambassador took up his duties only on March 23. He has been asked to make inquiries and report. When the report is received instructions will be given to him to suit the circumstances.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIFLE RANGE AND OTHER PROJECTS AT BAIE-DU-FEBVRE

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) if he is now ready to answer the question I put to him last Wednesday about the firing range at Baie-du-Febvre?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE IN SASKATOON—LOANS BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Resources and Development. In view of the severe housing shortage in Saskatoon and in view of the fact that mortgage money for building is almost unobtainable, will the minister authorize Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under section 31A of the National Housing Act to use its own funds to provide housing loans?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to make loans under section 31A of the National Housing Act where such loans are not being made available by lending institutions. In 1952 there were two major lending institutions making loans under the National Housing Act in Saskatoon. One of these lending institutions intends to make about the same number of loans this year and the other lending institution is giving consideration to whether or not they will operate in Saskatoon. These circumstances are now being reviewed with the lending institutions by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and it is hoped that National Housing Act loans in about the same amount as in 1952 will be available this year. It is not the policy of the government to authorize Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make direct loans under section 31A in areas in which the lending institutions are operating, which is the case at the present time in Saskatoon.

I might add that in 1952 there were 651 new starts in Saskatoon compared with 410 in 1951. As of January, 1952, there were 264 units under construction whereas on January 1, 1953, there were 468 units under construction, thereby ensuring a good level of completions this year.

FISHERIES RESEARCH BOARD

INFORMATION AS TO TABLING OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): On Friday last, when the supplementary estimates of the Department of Fisheries were being considered by the committee of supply, the hon. member for St. John's West asked the Minister of Fisheries when the report of the fisheries research board would be available. In reply thereto, I may say to him that at the present time the report is being printed by the queen's printer, and as soon as copies are available they will be tabled.

PENSIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—RAILWAY, POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to make a statement with respect to pensions for former members of the Newfoundland railway, postal and telegraph services?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I am not in a position to make a statement because this is a matter which concerns not only the Department of Transport but other departments. It is a very complicated question and, as the hon. member knows, it is also receiving the attention of my colleague, the Secretary of State, as indicated in the letter which he was good enough to send over to me. Until such time as there is greater opportunity to consider the points at issue, I am afraid I cannot make a statement.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

WOODFALLE SCHOOL, ROCKCLIFFE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley)? When will his department finally decide to table the file which is the subject of a motion for papers appearing in my name and adopted by the house on January 28 last?

I had asked, at that time, for a copy of all correspondence exchanged in connection with the teaching of religion and French at Woodfalle School, Royal Canadian Air Force station, Rockcliffe, Ontario. This order appears at page 193 of the Votes and Proceedings of January 28.

(Text):

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately my knowledge of the French language is not profound enough for me to have gathered completely the purport of what my hon. friend has said, but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 227, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Jutras in the chair.

On section 1—Schedule A amended.

Mr. Fleming: The explanatory note indicates that the purpose of the bill is to implement the budget resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff. I must say that, notwithstanding a very diligent review of the budget resolutions in relation to the Customs Tariff, I do not find any corresponding with the first section of the bill having to do with cigarettes. Will the parliamentary assistant to the minister favour us with an explanation of section 1 of the bill?

Mr. Lesage: If the hon. member for Eglinton will look at the resolutions, he will see that resolution No. 2 covers section 1 exactly.

Mr. Fleming: Resolution No. 2 under the Customs Tariff?

Mr. Lesage: Under the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Lesage: Page 6.

Mr. Fleming: Can the parliamentary assistant give us the Hansard reference?

Mr. Lesage: I do not have Hansard in front of me but I have the budget resolutions as they were distributed to all members, and I remember quite vividly that a week ago Thursday we adopted resolution 2. We dropped resolution 1 and adopted resolution 2.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Mr. Fleming: I was referring to the Hansard containing the budget speech of the minister followed by the budget resolutions. On looking at these it strikes me that it may well be that a couple of the resolutions were not printed in the Hansard of April 8. If the parliamentary assistant will look at page 1262 he will find there under Customs Tariff resolution No. 1—

Mr. Lesage: The budget was brought down on February 19 this year. April 8 was the date of the bringing down of the budget in 1952.

Mr. Fleming: I am sorry; I have the wrong copy.

Mr. Murphy: I should like to ask a question regarding the duty on cigarettes inasmuch as we are now getting certain American cigarettes that are regularly imported into Canada. I tried to get the information from the department this morning. I called the minister's office. I am told that there is a difference between the tax and duty on United States cigarettes coming into Canada and the taxes on our own cigarettes. I should like some information about that. At the same time I should like the parliamentary assistant to tell me whether the fact that a pack of twenty imported cigarettes is lighter in weight than a similar package of twenty Canadian cigarettes also enters into the picture so far as the cost to the consumer, the rate of duty and the customs tariff are concerned. The reason I would like to have an explanation is that there is an ad valorem tax. I assume it is based on value and, inasmuch as tobacco that goes into American cigarettes may be purchased at a price lower than we have to pay in Canada, that would also enter into the picture. If by any chance there is a difference in the tax it would, of course, be reflected in our growers' prices as well as the manufacturers' prices. I hope I have made that clear.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I am holding in my hands two tables showing the combined duties and taxes on cigarettes of various sizes imported into Canada, together with the corresponding figures for excise duties and taxes on Canadian cigarettes. The first table shows the figures before the proposed changes and the second table shows the figures after the proposed changes. If it is agreeable I would like to have these two tables placed on Hansard at this point.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Jutras): Is that agreeable to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: The tables are as follows:

	$ 8.75	$ 9.85	$ 9.85

Mr. Fleming: Does the statement cover both customs duties and excise taxes?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, and I am going to explain. The table shows, for instance, that up to February 1, or February 20 in the case of the customs tariff, the customs duty on regular size cigarettes, Camels and Chesterfields for example, imported from the United States, was $2 per pound plus 15 per cent ad valorem, a total of $5.53 cents per thousand cigarettes. The customs duty of $2 per pound is the equivalent of $5 per thousand cigarettes. The ad valorem duty is the equivalent of 53 cents. Then there was an additional duty of $2 per thousand and an excise tax of 2 cents on each 5 cigarettes. If you add the sales tax of $1.10 you get a figure of $12.63 for the total aggregate customs and excise taxes on American cigarettes imported into Canada. The addition of the excise duty, excise tax and sales tax on Canadian cigarettes before the proposed changes give a figure of $10.95 which means that the difference, the protection for the Canadian cigarettes, is $1.68.

In this bill it is proposed to take off the $2 additional duty on imported cigarettes, not only American, and reduce the excise duty on Canadian cigarettes from $6 to $4. The reduction is the same in each case and, consequently, the spread will be the same—$1.68—which will remain the protection in favour of Canadian cigarettes. That means that American cigarettes cannot compete on the market any more now than they could before the proposed changes.

There is a difference with respect to king size cigarettes and that is the reason for the proposed change in the excise duty instead of the excise tax. Up to now there was no additional customs duty on imported king size cigarettes, and the combined customs duty, excise and sales taxes on imported king size cigarettes was $11.98. Because of an excise duty of $11 per thousand on Canadian-made king size cigarettes, had they been manufactured, the aggregate of such excise duties and sales taxes would have been $16.46, which would have given a spread in favour of the American or other imported cigarettes of around $4.50. Therefore, in the proposed changes in the Excise Act, which we will study in a few minutes, the duty will be dropped from $11 to $5. The protection in favour of any Canadian-made king size cigarettes from now on will be $2.12 per thousand.

I believe that all that I have said can be much more easily understood by looking at the two tables which are very clear and give every tax and duty in detail.

[Mr. Lesage.]

Mr. Murphy: There is just one point which I would like to have clarified. I understand from the parliamentary assistant that $1.68 is the difference between the combined duties and taxes on Canadian cigarettes and American cigarettes. The tax on the imported cigarettes is that much greater. Is that right?

Mr. Lesage: That is right.

Mr. Murphy: There is the question of weight. Do you know what our ordinary cigarettes weigh per thousand? The way you have it figured there, at $5 for customs duty, that would be two and a half pounds per thousand cigarettes. However, do our cigarettes weigh more than that?

Mr. Lesage: Our cigarettes weigh 2·49 pounds per thousand. Our ordinary cigarettes are about the same weight as the ordinary American cigarettes. No Canadian king size cigarettes are manufactured and I suppose that one of the reasons is that there was a combined excise duty, excise and sales tax of $16.46 per thousand. That will now be reduced to $9.86.

Mr. Murphy: Do you happen to have the invoice price of American cigarettes—for instance Shirley cigarettes?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that it has been $3.55 until lately when the price increased to $3.90.

Mr. Murphy: I wonder if this could not stand, because I would like to take a look at the schedule you have. It will only take me a few minutes, and I will give the copies back to you.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a few questions to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lesage). These questions have nothing to do with cigarettes but rather with a tariff item having to do with the act to amend the Customs Tariff, but which, unfortunately, does not appear among the tariff items to be amended—

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Could I ask that we stick, for the time being, to the question of cigarettes. I do not want to prevent the hon. member from speaking about an item which is not mentioned in the list, although we could prevent him from doing so, under the rules of the house; however it seems to me that the discussion would be very much simplified if he would only wait until we came to the next clause of the bill.

Mr. Robichaud: If it will suit the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance better I will be happy to accept his suggestion and I will tell him immediately what interests me, as he probably has guessed—it is the tariff item that pertains to ropes used by fishermen in the fishing industry.

Mr. Lesage: I think I can reply immediately. It is our intention, when we examine the bill to amend the Excise Tax Act—and I think that will come up tomorrow—to move that the sales tax be abolished on all ropes used in the fishing industry, including all those measuring one and a half inches or more in circumference.

As far as the small protection on ropes measuring more than one and a half inches is concerned, such protection is necessary, according to the information I have been given, because there is in Canada a rather important rope manufacturing industry. Therefore, although the government's policy is to make international trade as free as possible, it remains that Canadian industries—within the framework of international agreements to which we are party with regard to tariffs—are entitled to a certain degree of protection.

It is the best answer I can give to my hon. friend, although I would add that following his speech on this subject, I discussed the matter at length with the tariff commissioner and officers of the Department of National Revenue, and I was given the assurance that the question will be studied by them before the next budget is prepared, because they want to obtain information both from those engaged in commercial or industrial fishing operations and the people who manufacture such ropes.

Mr. Robichaud: I wouldn't like to miss this opportunity of expressing my appreciation to the parliamentary assistant for the remarks he has just made, ensuring me of a rather substantial reduction with regard to the excise tax on cables and ropes used by our fishermen.

Now I have certain observations which I would like to put in Hansard with regard to the tariff on ropes and cables. Would the parliamentary assistant indicate when it would be best for me to do so, because I would like to say a few words on the matter before we pass on to the next bill.

Mr. Lesage: I think that the hon. member may as well make his remarks immediately, because I am waiting for the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) to finish examining the statements I have just given him, before proceeding with our discussion of the duty on cigarettes.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant a question. Would he have any information on the quantities of hempen or manila cables imported into Canada from British commonwealth countries during 1952?

Mr. Lesage: In 1951, ropes imported from all countries amounted to 1,861,000 pounds and were valued at $658,600. Over one million pounds were imported from the United Kingdom and approximately 637,000 pounds from The Netherlands, or Holland.

Now I must say that those figures include all kinds of rope, including that of less than one and a half inches in circumference.

Mr. Robichaud: Those figures are for 1951?

Mr. Lesage: I do not have them for 1952.

Mr. Robichaud: You do not have them?

Mr. Lesage: No, not for 1952.

Mr. Robichaud: You mentioned Holland and The Netherlands; I understand that those countries—

Mr. Lesage: It is the same country.

Mr. Robichaud: I understand that the most-favoured-nation tariff applies to those countries?

Mr. Lesage: The British preferential tariff, applies to the United Kingdom, while the most-favoured-nation tariff applies to Holland.

Mr. Robichaud: Now, according to the present rates of duty, manila rope or hemp of more than one inch in circumference is, according to tariff item 575, subject to a rate of 20 per cent under British preferential tariff, of 22½ per cent under the most-favoured-nation tariff and of 25 per cent under the general tariff; are my figures correct?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, but importation of manila ropes and other vegetable ropes is not covered by item 575. Our importations, I think, under item 575 do not amount to very much—

Mr. Robichaud: Refer to item 539.

Mr. Lesage: Importation of rope and lines is covered by item 539.

Mr. Robichaud: I have looked over the list of customs duties and I feel somewhat perplexed as to item 539—which we both mentioned a moment ago—and item 575; could you make this clearer?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, it has to do with nylon rope. Nylon rope is the one which has a wire through the middle; it is imported under item 575 whereas those of vegetable origin are imported under item 539. I could also correct the figures given by my hon. friend in so far as the commonwealth preferential tariff is concerned; it is 17½ per cent minus a discount of 10 per cent, under item 539, with regard to the rope my hon. friend referred to a moment ago. In other words the duty on rope valued at $500, at the rate of 15¾ per cent, will therefore be $78.05 and the sales tax $57.88, totalling $135.93 and not $160 as was claimed by my hon. friend. He will see tomorrow that with regard to this year's budget there will be a reduction from $160 to $78.05 since the sales tax will disappear through an amendment which I intend to move.

Mr. Robichaud: May I interrupt my hon. friend? I had based my calculations on $1,000 and not on $500, as far as item 575 was concerned. That is why there is a difference.

Now will the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance tell me if there have been any changes or amendments with regard to item No. 539, in the past 20 years, shall we say?

Mr. Lesage: My hon. friend will understand that I have not all the relevant information before me, because this tariff item has not yet been amended this year; but, according to the information I have at hand, there has not been any change in the last few years.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I made some inquiries—and I believe that I have already referred to that in my remarks to the house—and was assured that there have been no changes, either in item 575 or in item 539, in over 20 years; therefore, the information I have on the subject would be correct.

Now, it is a fact that the rope or cable which does not exceed 1½ inches in circumference—that is, the rope used in commercial fishing—comes in free.

Mr. Lesage: I regret to say I did not understand.

Mr. Robichaud: You did not understand and I know why, it is because you were talking with the minister; therefore I shall repeat what I said. It is a fact that the rope or cable used for commercial fishing purposes and not exceeding 1½ inches in circumference enters free of duty under the present customs tariff. The tariff item which deals with that is No. 682.

Mr. Lesage: You are right, that is exact; under No. 682.

Mr. Robichaud: On the other hand, any rope or cable over 1½ inches in circumference, even if it is to be used for commercial fishing purposes, is subject to the rate of duty which I mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. Lesage: Everything hinges on the interpretation given by my hon. friend and on the words used to define the lines or ropes used for fishing. If the hon. member includes the rope which for instance is used to secure the fishing craft to the pier or wharf, then his interpretation is not exact because such rope enters duty free. The duty applies only to rope used solely for fishing purposes, when such rope exceeds 1½ inches in circumference.

Mr. Robichaud: I assure my hon. friend that I do not mean the rope used as fittings on the ships themselves, because such rope becomes part of the ship.

But I mean any rope over 1½ inches in circumference which is used for fishing—for instance the rope which is used to link up lobster traps or generally used for fishing; such rope is subject to the rate of duty we mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to repeat what I said, but for the last 15 or 20 minutes we have been a little out of order.

The Chairman: Order. Then if these items are not mentioned, I am sorry that my attention was not called to that fact sooner; I would ask the hon. member to confine himself to the items under disscussion.

(Text):

Mr. Murphy: Perhaps this can be clarified. What is bothering me is the ad valoreum duty. Am I correct when I say that that is based on the invoice price of the cigarette, which of course would be based on the cost of the raw material?

Mr. Lesage: The ad valorem duties in general, and it includes this case, are always based on the fair market value in the country of origin.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Would it be agreeable to hon. members if I were to call the schedule page by page?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

415a (iii)	Refrigerator parts, of iron or steel or of which iron or steel or both are the component materials of chief value	per cent 7½	per cent 20	per cent 35
443d	Gas control devices of a class or kind not made in Canada:
(1)	for use on cooking apparatus or on apparatus for heating buildings or in the gas line between such apparatus and the meter; and parts thereof	Free	per cent 7½	per cent 30
(2)	for the manufacture or repair of, or for conversion to, gas-fired apparatus for cooking or for heating buildings; and parts thereof	Free	7½	30

Mr. Knowles: I should like to make a few comments and ask a few questions which I would relate to item 415a and also to item 443d. The parliamentary assistant will note that these items refer at least in part to refrigerators and cooking apparatus. I would appreciate it very much if the parliamentary assistant could tell us just what the present situation is with respect to duties on refrigerators and on stoves. I have in mind various kinds of refrigerators and stoves, but in particular electric refrigerators and electric stoves because they are so largely used in this country.

As hon. members realize, these articles have become almost necessities in the average Canadian household, and I am sure it is correct to say that a great many Canadians are painfully aware of how much more these articles cost in this country than they do for example in the United States. That has always been the case, but with the increase in the cost of these articles the differential has become even greater, and many of our people wonder whether it is not time, particularly with a Liberal government in power, for some of these customs duties against these articles to be reduced or removed so that our people might be able to purchase for their households these articles at more reasonable prices.

As I say, I should like to have from the parliamentary assistant a statement as to what the situation is with respect to customs duties on stoves and refrigerators. I should also like to hear from him whether he can inform us what consideration has been given by the government to reducing or removing these duties so that electric stoves and refrigerators might come down to more reasonable prices for the Canadian consumer.

While I am on my feet and making these references to electric stoves, may I also ask the parliamentary assistant whether he can tell us why there is a ban against the importation of certain new types of electric ranges. I do not wish to give free advertising to any one particular manufacturer, but I could send across to him and to the officials who are with him this little folder advertising a certain type of electric range known as the table top type which is becoming very popular amongst the women of the United States and popular in anticipation amongst the women of this country. I know that the Canadian Association of Consumers has circularized its members to ascertain from them what type of electric stove would be most desirable at the present time. The percentage who have expressed preference for this table top type is very high. Women in Canada know about it, but only through reading advertisements in American magazines showing these innovations. Yet I am told there is a complete ban against the bringing of this type into Canada at all. It has been suggested to some of the distributors who have made inquiries that these articles do not meet the electrical standards established in this country. In reply to that I am told they do meet the standards approved by underwriters laboratories in the United States and it would seem—

Mr. Lesage: There is no federal ban on these stoves. If there is any difficulty it will have to be taken up with the hydroelectric authorities in the provinces.

Mr. Knowles: That is not the information I have.

Mr. Lesage: It is the information I have from the officers administering customs.

Mr. Knowles: Then I shall take up that aspect of the matter at a later time with the officials. I am glad to hear the parliamentary assistant say that, so far as the federal government is concerned, there is no such ban. I hope this is not a form of protection under a false guise.

To return to the other question, I would ask the parliamentary assistant to give us the picture respecting customs duties on refrigerators and stoves, and what consideration has been given to the adoption of a more Liberal policy with respect to the importation of these important articles.

Mr. Lesage: Item 415a deals only with refrigerator parts, not with complete refrigerators. It reduces the British preferential tariff from 10 per cent to 7½ per cent and the most-favoured-nation tariff from 22½ per cent to 20 per cent. These changes bring the item into line with the tariff rates prevailing for complete refrigerators, with the exception of the rate on the British preferential tariff where the 7½ per cent on parts will be lower than the 17½ per cent on complete refrigerators.

Mr. Knowles: Has any consideration been given to either reducing or eliminating the tariff on these items?

Mr. Lesage: Consideration is given continually. It was reduced at Torquay, and the subject is continually under review. The same applies to all these tariff items. This is in line with the general policy of the government I indicated the other day, under which foreign trade should be as free as possible. On the other hand we have some industries in Canada manufacturing both refrigerators and stoves.

May I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that under 443d, as originally drawn in the resolution, only gas controlled devices for heating apparatus were mentioned. When the resolutions were under discussion the Minister of National Revenue moved an amendment to include gas controlled devices for use on cooking apparatus, so that it would not apply only to heating apparatus. Those devices, as well as the timing apparatus, are not made in Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Do the tariff rates on cooking apparatus as a whole correspond to the rates listed opposite item 443d, or do they correspond with the refrigerator rates? Could we have the figures?

Mr. Lesage: The rates are 15 per cent and 22½ per cent.

Mr. Knowles: On stoves?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, on stoves.

Mr. Knowles: And on refrigerators the rates are 17½ per cent and 20 per cent?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, and 35 per cent.

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me the parliamentary assistant has not made out a very good case in support of his contention that this government believes in as free trade as possible, when he has to announce that there are still in existence tariff rates as high as these on items as important to the Canadian consumer as refrigerators and stoves.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to revert to customs tariff item No. 403 at page 2140? I overlooked that item because you mention the page instead of the individual numbers. This new item relates to wire cable. May I ask the parliamentary assistant to give me the value of imports of wire cable in 1951?

Mr. Lesage: The imports were approximately $50,000 per year. That is an approximate figure.

Mr. Robichaud: About $50,000?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, approximately $50,000 from what the officers can estimate.

Mr. Robichaud: In connection with that figure of $50,000 could you tell me how much was imported from British commonwealth countries and how much from countries subject to the most-favoured-nation tariff?

Mr. Lesage: I do not have exact figures, but I am told that imports are mainly from the United States. That is the best reply I can give to my hon. friend.

Mr. Robichaud: Would it be correct to state that wire ropes and cables for use in commercial fishing operations are imported mostly from the United States?

Mr. Lesage: Wire cable imports for other use than for rigging ships, sinking wells, forestry operations, amounted to $1,535,509 in 1952. Of this amount, of $1,535,509, as I said a moment ago, $50,000 represented wire cables imported for use in commercial fishing operations. May I add that half of that amount of a million and a half represented the value of imports from the United States, less than half the value of imports from the United Kingdom and the rest, that is to say approximately $100,000, from Germany, Holland and Belgium.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask the parliamentary assistant to be more definite and tell me, for instance, what is the total value of imports from the United States as compared with those from the British commonwealth?

Mr. Lesage: United States, $767,471; United Kingdom, $648,412; Germany, $75,375; Netherlands, $26,787; Belgium, $11,271.

Mr. Robichaud: Now, could the parliamentary assistant indicate what quantities of these importations are for use in commercial fishing operations?

Mr. Lesage: I said I could not, Mr. Chairman, since these figures are not kept separately by the officials of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Robichaud: But where do they get the figure of $50,000 which, according to them, is supposed to represent the imports of metal rope used exclusively in commercial fishing operations.

Mr. Lesage: That is the information I got from the officials of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Robichaud: But where do they get it?

Mr. Lesage: I have no idea. I do not think they would be able to give me that information.

(Text):

Mr. Fair: When the budget resolutions were under discussion some days ago I brought up the question of small gasoline engines and the conditions under which they are allowed to enter the country. I understand that the parliamentary assistant was going to give this matter some consideration because in my opinion, and I think in his also, some of the conditions attached to the importation of these engines are not very practical. I wonder if consideration has been given to this matter?

Mr. Lesage: May I say that the engine does not have to be bolted to the machine or attached to the machine; it is permitted to come in duty free if it is on the same skid as the machine. As I said the other day, consideration will be given to the possibility of allowing more latitude to farmers in this connection. I would state however that small engines are made in Canada in considerable quantity, the three horsepower and five horsepower size particularly. It is estimated that about 70 per cent of all small engines used in Canada are now admitted duty free for use with agricultural implements or agricultural machinery. I repeat that the situation with regard to small engines for use on the farm will be further reviewed. We hope to be in a position to arrive at a decision before the next budget is presented. These matters require a lot of information and that is in the process of being gathered.

Mr. Fair: That is a little better than we had a year ago. These engines can be brought in from the United States at prices lower than you must pay in Canada. The previous regulations made it necessary for the engine to be bolted down. If you are using a small engine with a fanning mill you do not bolt it down, you simply set it on the ground and possibly drive in a stake or two to keep it in line with the mill. The regulations should be made practical as well as possible. If that were done I do not think there would be so many kicks coming in from the farmers. The forms that have to be filled out by the dealer and the farmer are simply impractical and impossible to live up to if you are going to make general use of engines on the farm.

EXCISE ACT

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 226, to amend the Excise Act, 1934.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make just a brief comment on the motion for the second reading of this bill. This is a short bill and its provisions are quite clear. I recall that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) had this to say in his budget speech on February 19 in connection with this particular proposal, and I quote from page 2132 of Hansard as follows:

> A further reduction in the levy on cigarettes seems desirable. It is clear that following the reduction made last year there was a quite definite increase in cigarette sales which, from the point of view of the revenue collector, is very encouraging. Smuggling, I regret to say, is still a difficult problem. I have accordingly decided to recommend that the excise duty, and correspondingly the customs duty, on cigarettes be reduced by $2.00 per thousand which, for a package of twenty cigarettes, means four cents off. Not knowing in advance what effect this further cut will have on the volume of consumption, or the amount of smuggling, it is impossible to estimate what the revenue loss from this move will be. A fair estimate is that it will not be more than $17 million.

I speak as one who does not smoke and who is not personally affected by this present bill. But as a non-smoker I wish to say that I think the taxes on cigarettes and tobacco are still too high. I wish to say also that if we have a smuggling problem at the border today with respect to cigarettes it is largely the creation of this government by the boosting sky-high of excise taxes and other impositions on cigarettes, particularly the large advances in taxes that were made two years ago.

At that time you will remember that the total government imposition on cigarettes in this country amounted to almost three times the taxes in effect in the United States. If you are looking for an explanation of the smuggling I think it can be placed right on the doorstep of the government because of its policy of high taxation. We are glad to see this very modest reduction in taxes being made. It is a step in the right direction. However, it seems to me that it is going to take more than this modest step to break the habit which the government by its unwise policy has taught many people to form.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Robichaud: In the schedule to this bill I note, under the title "Marine and Fisheries", rope and cordage of cotton, hemp—

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend is mistaken. We are on the bill to amend the Excise Act and not on the Excise Tax Act. We are on Bill 226 which is merely concerned with the tax on cigarettes. The other will be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. Robichaud: I am sorry, I had Bill 225 before me.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

PROVISION TO EXTEND OPERATION FOR A FURTHER PERIOD, ETC.

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 143, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944.

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two on this bill. When the Minister of Finance brought the measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944, before the house considerable discussion took place at the resolution stage and the majority of those who spoke at that time were in complete accord with the terms of the resolution which raised the figure under the act to $200 million to the end of March, 1953, and to $300 million to the end of March, 1956.

Mr. Lesage: Might I correct my hon. friend. It did not increase the figure from $200 million to $300 million. It created a new period with a new amount of $300 million. The $200 million which was approved in 1951 will be exhausted in a few weeks. That is why we are pressing the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. Catherwood: It is $300 million to the end of March, 1956.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Lesage: That is quite right. It is a new amount.

Mr. Catherwood: There was complete agreement with the proposal made at that time. We all recognize the increasing demands involved in farming operations, particularly arising because of the fact that agricultural operations are constantly becoming more mechanized, and increasing use of the facilities of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is most necessary. In outlining the results achieved since the measure was first introduced in 1944, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance presented some very interesting figures. They indicated that up to December, 1952, almost one-third of a million loans had been negotiated, totalling $350 million. That is a very remarkable figure.

I think it is also amazing that the total losses guaranteed to the banks and paid by the government only amounted to something like $38,000 over the eight-year period, or an average of $4,800 per year. I think that indicates clearly that generally speaking farmers are very sincere and honest and will always make every effort to meet their obligations when at all possible. In view of the fact that there was only an insignificant loss averaging $4,800 per year over the period of eight years, and in view of what the Farm Improvement Loans Act means to the farmers, while we probably cannot do so in our consideration of the present measure I should like the parliamentary assistant to recommend to the minister and his staff that serious consideration be given to increasing the guarantee to the banks from 10 per cent to 20 per cent, with the understanding that the banks might lower the rate of interest to farmers from 5 per cent to 4 or 4½ per cent.

I know that the minister has studied the matter very carefully in his department and has given it serious thought, but we must remember that today many young people are drifting away from the farms and are not following that occupation. In fact I understand that the average age of farmers today is well up in the fifties. If we are to make full use of the purposes for which these loans were first made, then I think we should give earnest consideration to broadening the terms under which such loans are made. No one realizes more than I that this is a good act. That was pointed out at the resolution stage and we all agree, but I think we can make it a still better act.

Personally I would hesitate to recommend that any young man should commence farming operations today because of the fact that it takes a considerable amount of money to finance such operations. We have to consider the fact that these loans have helped so many of our farmers considerably. I know personally that they are of great benefit to agriculture, and if we want to help our young people in particular who are starting to farm then I suggest that it would be most acceptable and beneficial if the rate of interest on such loans could be reduced to 4 per cent. The fact that only $4,800 a year has been paid out over a period of eight years indicates that farmers make every effort to repay their loans in full, and I know they will continue to do so. A considerable amount of money running into millions of dollars has been paid out under the agricultural prices support legislation, and I believe that under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act we can give considerable help to our younger farmers. I trust the parliamentary assistant will recommend to his department that serious consideration be given to what I have suggested.

Mr. Jean Lesage (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I say now—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are now dealing with the second reading of a bill. I think it would be more regular if all other members who want to speak on the bill would do so now. Then the parliamentary assistant can reply.

Mr. Lesage: I merely wanted to advise the house that, when we are in committee, I intend to ask a cabinet minister to propose an amendment so that the maximum loan may be increased from $3,000 to $4,000 in order to meet the request of many hon. members.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the announcement the parliamentary assistant has just made deals with the point about which I was going to question him. At the resolution stage members of this group indicated their support of the measure. I am sure we all agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Catherwood), but it was also our hope that when we got into committee on the bill the government would indicate that consideration had been given to the plea to raise the maximum amount of loan permissible under the act. We welcome the announcement that has just been made that there is going to be an increase in that amount, but I think there will be disappointment that consideration was not given to the higher figures suggested during the course of the debate at the resolution stage.

After all, the cost of setting up business as a farmer has certainly gone up a great deal more than would be indicated by an increase in the maximum amount of loan from $3,000 to $4,000. The figures suggested during the course of the debate were $5,000 or $6,000. We hope that even yet consideration may be given to a higher figure than that which has been suggested by the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation of the suggested amendment, but like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I should like to see the maximum amount increased to at least $5,000 because the cost of farming operations has certainly increased considerably since the bill was first passed. Perhaps it is not yet too late for the amount to be increased to $5,000 rather than $4,000.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Limitation of liability in respect of loans made during loan periods.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, when we were in committee on the resolution stage the hon. member for Nanaimo asked me if it were possible to give a breakdown of the tables that I had put on Hansard, showing the amounts and numbers of loans, as between Vancouver island and the rest of British Columbia. I have here the figures for each district of Vancouver island and I would seek agreement of the committee to have the table printed in Hansard.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: The table is as follows:

Farm Improvement Loans Act

The hon. member for St. John's West asked me, when we were at the resolution stage, if it were possible to give a breakdown of the eighty claims that had been paid by the federal government to the banks up to the end of December, 1952. I have here a table showing by provinces the number of loans, the amounts of the loans and the classification of the loans according to their purposes. If it is agreeable I will table the figures in Hansard at this point.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: The table is as follows:

As I said a few moments ago, when we were on second reading, after considering representations made from all sides of the house on the advisability of increasing the maximum loans from $3,000 to $4,000, the government has come to the conclusion that it would be advisable at this time to do so and see how this increase will work. I do not have to repeat all the reasons which brought the government to that conclusion, but of course the representations made by members of the house from all sides have been taken into consideration. I would, therefore, ask the hon. Minister of National Revenue if he would kindly move an amendment to the bill.

Mr. McCann: I would move:

That Bill 143 be amended as follows:

1. Insert the following as clause 1:

"1. Paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section 3 of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944, chapter 41 of the statutes of 1944-45, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'(d) the principal amount of the loan did not at the time of the making of the loan, together with the amount owing in respect of other guaranteed farm improvement loans previously made to the borrower and disclosed in his application, or of which the bank had knowledge, exceed the sum of four thousand dollars;' "

2. Strike out lines 4, 5 and 6 on page 1 and substitute the following:

"2. Sections 4 and 5 of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:"

[Mr. Lesage.]

3. Insert the following in part II as clause 3:

"3. Paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section 3 of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, chapter 110 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(d) the principal amount of the loan did not at the time of the making of the loan, together with the amount owing in respect of other guaranteed farm improvement loans previously made to the borrower and disclosed in his application, or of which the bank had knowledge, exceed the sum of four thousand dollars;' "

4. Strike out lines 20, 21 and 22 on page 2 and substitute therefor the following:

"4. Sections 4 and 5 of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:"

5. Renumber clause 3 as clause 5.

The Chairman: Hon. members will notice that if this amendment carries the bill will have five clauses instead of three. Shall the amendment carry?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONSTITUTION, OPERATION, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 223, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

He said: I would like to make a statement on the bill, if I may.

The main purpose of the bill that is before us today is to extend to August 1, 1957,—

Mr. Fleming: I thought, Mr. Speaker, that you were calling the Statistics Act. In the order announced by the minister on Friday night the next bill concerned the Statistics Act.

Mr. Howe: Unfortunately the parliamentary assistant is in a committee and we propose to change the order for that reason.

The main purpose of the bill that is before us today is to extend until August 1, 1957, certain vital sections of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which would otherwise expire at the end of the current crop year. So that hon. members may consider the legislation in its proper perspective, I intend to outline briefly the record of the Canadian wheat board, to review events that have occurred since a similar extension of powers took place in 1950, and to set forth the position as I see it today.

The Canadian Wheat Board Act was enacted in its original form in 1935. The 1935 legislation empowered the board to accept wheat, to pay a specified price, and to distribute the profits of the board, if any, in the form of participation payments. It was what we nowadays refer to as a voluntary board; a floor price was provided but the farmer could, and from time to time many of them did, sell on the open market rather than to the board.

In September, 1943, to meet wartime emergencies and under the authority of the War Measures Act, all commercial stocks of western wheat were taken over by the crown at the prevailing prices and the wheat board became the sole marketing agency through which western producers could sell their wheat. This was the beginning of the present system of wheat board marketing. In effect, the board became a wheat pool handling all western wheat, making an initial payment at time of delivery and declaring interim and final payments as the wheat was sold out of the pool.

Until 1947, the wheat board operated under emergency legislation, first the War Measures Act and later the transitional powers act. By that time it had become quite clear that an overwhelming majority of western producers preferred this board method of selling their wheat. Agricultural organizations were unanimously in favour of continuation of the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for western wheat. Accordingly, in 1947, the Canadian Wheat Board Act was amended giving the board the necessary powers to continue marketing wheat as it had been doing since 1943.

So popular, in fact, was this system of marketing wheat that strong representations were made to the government by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that the system should be applied to western oats and barley. The 1947 legislation enabled this to be done. But because a high proportion of oats and barley is marketed within provincial boundaries, and because we were anxious that the extension of the monopoly powers of the board to these grains should have the full support of provincial legislation and all three provincial legislatures, the government agreed to implement the relevant sections of the act only if the three prairie provinces passed complementary legislation. They did so, and the wheat board commenced the handling of oats and barley on the same basis as wheat on August 1, 1949. Again in 1950 the act came before parliament for another extension and again there could be no doubt whatever of the western farmers' overwhelming support for the prevailing system of handling their wheat, oats and barley. The government had no hesitation in recommending a further extension for three years to July 31, 1953.

A further proof of farm support came in 1951 when a plebiscite was held on the subject of the marketing of oats and barley. Thirty-four thousand farmers in Manitoba voted on this question:

> Do you wish to continue to sell your oats and barley as at present—that is, through the board?

A total of 30,622 or 89 per cent voted "Yes".

To many hon. members these are familiar facts. I give them here so that all members may be aware of the continuous support that has been given by western farmers to the present system of grain marketing and why the government has no hesitation whatever in recommending a further extension for four years. It is truly remarkable that in spite of the attacks that have been made from time to time on grain marketing policy, both within this house and elsewhere, the present wheat board method of handling grain continues to be supported so strongly. To me this support indicates that the methods of handling grain which have been followed have met the requirements of the day, and that the members of the wheat board have discharged their duties with a high degree of competence.

It is not my usual practice to refer to the services of particular public servants, but I should like on this occasion to express a word of appreciation of the great service rendered to the people of this country and in particular to the farmers of western Canada by the chief commissioner of the wheat board, Mr. George McIvor. Mr. McIvor has been connected with the board from its beginning, first as sales manager, then as board member and for the past 16 years as chief commissioner. Throughout that period he has discharged his duties with a high degree of competence and good judgment.

I should also like to express my appreciation of the work of the other members of the board, Mr. W. C. McNamara and Mr. W. Riddel. Both these men came to the board after serving the producers of western Canada in an executive capacity with the Saskatchewan pool elevators, and they brought to the board an invaluable experience in the handling of grain.

The present method of marketing western wheat has been approved on two occasions by parliament: in 1947 and again in 1950. On both occasions it was possible to point to satisfactory operating results, results which returned good prices to the producer. Now, in 1953, over nine years after the wheat board became the sole marketing agency for western wheat, it is appropriate to look back over the record. The striking fact about that record is the high and stable level of returns to producers. In 1943-44 the producer received a total return for No. 1 northern wheat, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur, of $1.37 per bushel; in 1944-45, $1.43½; in the five-year pool period 1945-46 to 1949-50, $1.83; in 1950-51, $1.85½; and in 1951-52, $1.83½.

In other words from August 1, 1945, to July 31, 1952, a period of seven full crop years, the price realized by the board and paid to the producer was between $1.83 and $1.85½ for No. 1 northern, basis in store at the lakehead. When one is looking for reasons why the board method of handling wheat has met with such solid and unvarying support from farmers, I think this unprecedented record of stability at good prices is one of the most important.

I know there are some who claim that if farmers had had an opportunity of selling their grain on the open market, and if there had been no British wheat contract and no international wheat agreement, the average returns to farmers would have been even higher. That may be so. No one will ever know. What is plain to see is that under the method of marketing actually in effect returns have been stable at reasonably satisfactory levels, and the same to all farmers delivering the same grades of grain.

Moreover, I suggest that it has been most fortunate for the farmer and for the country at large during these past two years or so that the wheat board has had such complete control over the western crops of wheat, oats and barley. Without that control and the way in which it was exercised to market the 1950, 1951 and 1952 crops, we should today be in a very much less satisfactory position than we are.

Let me recall what happened to the 1950 crop. The spring of that year was late. The crop progressed favourably, however, and by the middle of August was estimated at more than 500 million bushels. Then on August 19, 20 and 22, frosts were widespread. The yield was reduced by 75 million bushels, but even more startling was the effect on grades. When the crop was finally marketed, 40 per cent graded No. 5, No. 6 and feed. The wheat board set to work to sell this extraordinary volume of low-grade wheat. By October 20, 1951, when the unsold balance was transferred to the new crop account, only 70 million bushels of the No. 5, No. 6 and feed grades remained on hand out of the 147 million bushels originally received by the board. The total payment on 1950 crop No. 5 wheat eventually worked out at $1.64 per bushel, No. 6 wheat at $1.51 per bushel and feed wheat at $1.44 per bushel.

Although I have referred only to wheat, it should be remembered that the oats and barley crops were also large and were also frost-damaged, although perhaps not to the same extent as wheat. If the large quantities of low-grade wheat had been treated as a distress commodity, or sold in excess of available markets, the basis on which other feed grains could have been sold would have been seriously prejudiced. The successful disposal of this low-grade wheat required skilful handling.

As we came to the end of the 1950-51 crop year most of us believed we were out of the woods, and that we would not see such troubles again for many years. Well, it is true that we did not see the same problems. Instead, we got an entirely new set, on an even larger scale and even more difficult to handle. The 1951 crop was again a big one, well in excess of 500 million bushels, but before it could be harvested the rains came. Hon. members from the prairie provinces will remember that it rained almost continuously from early fall until the coming of winter. There was not more than a week or two of even reasonably good harvesting weather. An early snowfall buried the remainder of the crop. About 285 million bushels of grain were left under the snow all winter. As a result over 250 million bushels of tough and damp wheat, oats and barley were delivered to the board. In addition, there were added to the board's stocks of low-grade wheat left over from the 1950 crop, 115 million bushels of No. 5, No. 6 and feed wheat.

The happy ending to all this is now history and is well known to the house. The miraculous spring of 1952 broke the back of the problem, but not before a magnificent job of drying, handling and marketing had been accomplished. I would not want to give the entire credit to the Canadian wheat board for the job that was done, nor would the board wish me to do so. The results are a tribute to the splendid co-operation of all those agencies involved in the handling and marketing of western grain. The handling companies, the railways, the mills, the transport controller and the board of grain commissioners all deserve a major share of the credit.

Nevertheless I do suggest that the existence of the board as the sole marketing agency for western wheat, oats and barley was essential to the achievement of the excellent results that were attained. Being in full control, the board was in a position to move the low grades to market steadily and yet avoid distress selling. The proof is in the prices finally realized for the 1951 crop.

I well recall, as will many of the western members, the doleful predictions that were made early in the season about the prices that would be realized for the 1951 crop. A few months ago the Western Producer, in an editorial, recalled those predictions. This is what the editorial said in the issue of November 27, 1952:

> It is just about a year ago that a prominent western agricultural authority warned an audience of farmers that when they had received their initial payment 'they had it'. There would be no more. We don't want to embarrass him now by mentioning his name. But for that matter he need not feel embarrassed. He was in good company, there were thousands of farmers who thought just as he did. For the life of them they couldn't see how the oceans of low grade, tough and damp grain could be moved out at any price. Even his opponents were beginning to pity Mr. Howe and the wheat board for the jam they would find themselves in, holding millions of bushels of off-colour wheat, possibly rotting on their hands, on which they had advanced a substantial initial payment and for which they could find no market.

That is the end of the quotation. The oceans of damp and tough grain were successfully dried or sold to customers who were willing to accept grain with somewhat more than normal moisture content—and at this point let me express a word of appreciation to those overseas buyers who co-operated with the board by accepting tough grain. The large quantities of off-colour, low-grade wheat did not rot on our hands. The board combed the markets of the world for buyers, and they found them at prices which were attractive to the buyers and yet gave a reasonable return to the producers. When the unsold balance of the 1951 wheat crop was transferred to the present crop account in October, 1952, only 66 million bushels were of grades No. 5, No. 6 and feed.

In other words, from the 1950 and 1951 crops, producers delivered to the wheat board 262 million bushels of No. 5, No. 6 and feed wheat, grades which in a normal year comprise a very small proportion of deliveries. By October, 1952, when the 1951 crop account was closed out, only 66 million bushels of these grades remained unsold. As a matter of fact the board has been so successful in selling these lower grades that today they are considered not as a problem, but rather as giving a desirable variety to the qualities that can be offered to buyers.

I have already announced in this house the total returns to producers from the 1951 crop, and the final payments have already been distributed; but so that hon. members may have the facts before them during this debate I repeat the figures which, of course, are basis Fort William-Port Arthur: No. 1 northern, $1.83½; No. 2 northern, $1.81½; No. 3 northern, $1.79½; No. 4 northern, $1.73⅜; No. 5 wheat, $1.60½; No. 6 wheat, $1.52½ and feed wheat, $1.49½.

Small wonder that observers like the Western Producer should point to the wide disparity between the doleful predictions that were made and the most satisfactory results that were achieved. I hope hon. members will pardon me if I say that during the past few years some of us have become used to hearing doleful predictions which, happily, were not realized.

I have been dealing mostly with the results of wheat operations. But as I have already said, the wheat board has been handling oats and barley on the same basis as wheat since August 1, 1949. Here again I think it is possible to point to satisfactory operating results. Deliveries from each of the three crops of oats and barley—the 1949, 1950 and 1951 crops—were virtually all sold within the crop year. In November, 1952, when the transfer was made to the present crop accounts, there were no oats or barley to transfer except those which were covered by futures contracts. Prices realized will be found in the wheat board reports. Let me, however, put on the record now, total returns to producers for the leading grades in each of the three years, again basis Fort William-Port Arthur:

	1949	1950	1951
Oats	$	$	$
2 CW	.84	.84 7/10	.83 3/8
No. 1 feed	.79 1/2	.78 1/2	.77 3/4
Barley
No. 3 CW 6 row	1.50 1/2	1.33 4/8	1.29 1/8
No. 1 feed	1.31 4/8	1.23	1.21

We are now in the crop year 1952-53. As hon. members are aware, the 1952 crop was the largest ever harvested on the prairies of Canada—664 million bushels of wheat; 346 million bushels of oats, and 281 million bushels of barley. It was a high grade crop. Almost 80 per cent of the wheat will grade No. 3 northern or better. Although the protein content, as might be expected, is a little below average, we are once again able to offer our customers the high grades and heavy weights per bushel which, over the years, they have come to associate with Canadian wheat.

Our problem this crop year is rather different from the problems experienced in the past two years. We have no worries about excess moisture, and low grades do not form an undue proportion of our stocks. Our main problem is to move the grain forward from the farms into position for export. Sales have been excellent, surpassing any previous crop year at this date, and with a little luck I think we shall establish new records for export clearances of grain from Canada, even exceeding the record established in 1951-52 when 509 million bushels were moved out of this country.

I have already mentioned the contribution made to the movement of earlier crops by the transport controller. During the present crop year the value of Mr. Milner's work in co-ordinating the lake and rail facilities of this country has been immeasurable. In spite of the steel strike and its aftermath, grain clearances down the lakes in Canadian vessels during the 1952 season established new records. Deliveries by producers since August 1, 1952, have been greater than in any post-war year.

[Mr. Howe.]

Although our sales are heavy and our export clearances of record proportions, there will be a big carryover of grain at the end of the current crop season; but this does not necessarily mean that Canada is beginning to accumulate burdensome surpluses. We shall have a big carryover simply because for three years we have harvested extraordinarily large crops and in 1952 raised a crop almost twice normal size. It is a good thing for the world that we did raise big crops, for the world has been especially dependent on North America for essential food supplies. And, if nature is less bountiful in the future, we may be thankful that we have something left over at the present time.

When I was preparing for this debate I came across something I said on April 20, 1950, during the debate on the 1950 amendments to the wheat board act. This is what I said, as reported at page 1734 of Hansard:

> One can be either an optimist or a pessimist about the ability of Canada to dispose of her wheat at reasonable prices in the trading world of today. I prefer to be an optimist. In fact, if I were not an optimist at this stage, I would be a poor selection for the minister in charge of our wheat selling organization. I believe that we can sell our surplus wheat at prices that will return a profit to our farmers in the future as we have in the past. The reputation of Canadian wheat is unquestioned in world markets. Under the trading conditions of today, price and quality are not always the determining factor to the extent that they were in pre-war days, but price and quality still count for much. Canada has established a reputation in world wheat markets for fair dealing, which will stand us in good stead. The deficit countries of the world will continue to require wheat, and I believe that Canadian wheat will continue to find a market in those countries. The Canadian wheat board has demonstrated its ability to handle Canada's wheat marketing problems efficiently, and I have every confidence that this ability will be further demonstrated in the years to come.

That is the end of the quotation. Perhaps if I had known what was going to happen to our crops in 1950 and 1951 I might not have put myself so clearly on the record as an optimist. In the event, however, optimism was fully justified.

I am still an optimist. I continue to believe that Canada will be able to find markets for her grain at satisfactory prices. I do not mean that the world will beat a path to our door clamouring for our wheat, or that we shall always get the prices we would like to get. What I do believe is that importing countries will require wheat in substantial and growing quantities over the years to come, and that Canada is in a good position to get a share of the market sufficient to dispose of her exportable surpluses at reasonably satisfactory prices.

Hon. members are aware that negotiations are under way for a renewal of the international wheat agreement. You will not expect me to comment at this time on the progress of the negotiations. We hope for a favourable outcome, but we shall not be easily satisfied. It is the government's view that an international wheat agreement can be of benefit to both exporting and importing countries, but if mutually satisfactory terms cannot be agreed upon we can, as we have done in the past, sell our wheat successfully without an agreement. If and when an agreement is signed in Washington, legislation will be presented to parliament to ratify the agreement. The amendments in the present bill are not contingent upon renewal of the international wheat agreement. I have heard suggestions that the continuation of the wheat board in its present form is contingent upon an agreement, but this is not so. The two matters are quite unrelated.

As I said at the outset, the main purpose of the bill before us is to extend until July 31, 1957, those sections of the act which give the board powers to continue as the sole marketing agency for western wheat, oats and barley. These powers might have been extended indefinitely, but it is the government's view that they ought to come before parliament for review and extension every few years. There are also a few amendments of a more technical nature, including one to close out old and inactive crop accounts.

The government has received a number of suggestions regarding use of these unclaimed funds for which no owner can be discovered. As none of the suggestions seem to meet with general approval, it has been decided that funds that have been unclaimed for six years or more will be transferred to a separate wheat board account to be used for such purposes as the governor in council, upon the recommendation of the wheat board, may deem to be for the benefit of producers.

This bill is recommended to the house as the continuation of legislation that has enabled western grain to be marketed successfully, and that carries the support of an overwhelming majority of western grain producers.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, this discussion on this bill at the present time, on the motion for second reading, has caught me a little off base, with the result that I do not have with me my notes and statistics on the subject. As the minister has said, the main purpose of the bill is to continue the present system—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I point out that since the minister has spoken he has concluded the debate.

Mr. Coldwell: No; he just moved second reading.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps I was slow in rising. It was my intention only to open debate when I made my statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then the hon. member may proceed.

Mr. Harkness: As the minister has said, the main purpose of the bill is to continue the present system of marketing wheat for another three years. As he has further stated, the great majority of wheat producers in western Canada appear to be in favour of this system of marketing their grain. Under those circumstances I do not think any useful purpose can be served by prolonging unduly the debate concerning this particular method of marketing.

The minister gave a laudatory account of the way in which the wheat board has handled the marketing of grain in the last two or three years, an account in which I think a considerable number of people would not entirely concur. However, on this occasion I do not want to revive arguments we have heard in the house on several occasions in the past concerning the way in which our grain has been handled, the prices secured for it and the losses incurred, estimated at many hundreds of millions of dollars. A large number of people believe that this has resulted from the way the grain was handled.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): Do you believe that?

Mr. Harkness: I certainly believe very large losses were experienced.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): Why are you in favour of the bill, then?

Mr. Harkness: As I say, the great majority of farmers in western Canada are in favour of this method of marketing grain. This is a democratic country; and if that is what the majority of producers of wheat want, by way of marketing that wheat, then certainly I am one who is prepared to give it to them.

I think wheat producers would be much better satisfied with the board if its composition were somewhat different. The legislation makes provision for from three to five commissioners. Up to this moment only three have been appointed, and it is the hope of many farm organizations that the other two appointees might be representatives of the wheat producers themselves, so that producer representation on the board might dictate policy to an extent greater than has been the case in the past. I think producer representation to that extent would strengthen the board, and that this suggestion should be followed.

Alternatively the wheat producers have asked for an advisory board with powers considerably increased over those held by the present so-called advisory board, and that such a body might consist of representatives of the wheat producers. It is the view of the wheat producers that this advisory board should have much greater influence than have any of the producer representatives at the present time with respect to policy decisions.

These are suggested reforms of the wheat board which have been sought for a considerable period of time, and should now be put into effect.

In his speech the minister has given a general account of the amount of wheat marketed and the prices secured for it in the last two or three years. I am sure all hon. members were pleased to hear that as much had been marketed as he indicated, and that prices have held up as well as would appear to have been the case. I am sure, too, that all who are concerned with wheat production will hope that the minister's optimism in respect of the marketing of the present crop is justified. I am not making any predictions in the matter; therefore I am not putting myself in the position of the gentleman whom the minister to some extent castigated during the course of his remarks.

Then I am not particularly clear as to the effect of the section in the bill dealing with unclaimed balances. I have no doubt, however, that we will have a full explanation of how exactly it will work and what disposition will be made of these balances. The bill is somewhat vague in that it says only that these balances shall be disposed of in the interests of the producers as the governor in council may decide. I think we should have some more information on that; but, as I say, perhaps the place to get it is when we are in committee on this bill.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us from the prairie provinces are glad to know that embedded in our statutes today is the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which has been on the statute books since 1935 and is now to be extended to 1957. Those of us who can look back over the last 30 years on the prairies can remember the long, arduous fight that was put up by the farmers of the prairie provinces to obtain this board, and the controversies that arose in 1935. I remember those controversies very well because I was a new member of the house and took some part in the discussions of those days.

However, I hope that as far as we in western Canada are concerned, those controversies are ended. We have seen this board in operation and we know the benefits that have been conferred upon the people who produce grain. We know that the farmers in the wheat growing industry have achieved something in the nature of stability.

During the course of his remarks the minister gave the details of the quantities of wheat that had been sold through the board over the last year or so. That was indeed a most satisfactory statement. As he said, we shall probably have a large carryover this year which undoubtedly the world needs if ways and means can be found of paying for the wheat and giving our farmers a reasonable return for their labours when the grain is marketed. No one can foretell what the future holds, but it is obvious that the world will need quantities of wheat for a long time to come.

I believe we have been fortunate over the last period of time because there were short crops in Australia and in Argentina, and also rice was not available from Burma and Indo-China for India and Japan. That gave us additional markets for our wheat and helped considerably. I hope those countries have acquired a taste for wheat so that we may have markets even though other countries increase their cereal production, and even though our cereal production is maintained or increased, as we all hope it will be.

We may talk about the value of our minerals and our forest products, which I noted the other day have exceeded the value of our agricultural production, at least in the export market; nonetheless grain is still one of the major factors in our economy and one of the foundations of our economic stability. In this country we all hope the farmers will be able through good weather and through the methods they are now using in the production of grain to continue at least this high production, and that the world will find ways and means of taking that production in a manner which will be satisfactory to those who produce the crops.

The minister was not in a position today to say anything about the prospects of renewing the international wheat agreement. I hope an agreement will be reached. I hope the price under that agreement will be satisfactory. As I have said already, we do not know what the next few years will bring. We may have a higher production and other countries like Australia and Argentina may have a higher production. Northern Africa under the French regime may be exporting wheat again, or new lands may be opened up for cereal production. We cannot get any information regarding the outlook, but we may see wheat available for export from the Soviet union.

We remember how they exported large quantities of wheat and took low prices in the early 1930's. We remember what that did to our market for Canadian wheat. It is often said that the depression in the prairie provinces was due to crop failures. To a large degree it was; but it was also due to the exceedingly low prices obtained for wheat when it was sold on the speculative market without any real attempt at maintaining real stability. In my own constituency farmers hauled their wheat to the market at 19 and 20 cents per bushel at the country elevator. That was ruinous. The wheat board and international agreements have permitted Canada and other producing countries to attempt to give some stability to the market along with a more reasonable return to the producers.

Therefore I hope the international wheat agreement will be renewed. I hope our government will do everything possible to get such an agreement. I hope the consuming nations will realize that our farmers' costs of production have increased drastically over the past five years, and that they will be willing to pay a price which will give our farmers a reasonable return for their labour. Various prices have been named to me by some of my constituents ranging from $2.05 up to $2.35 per bushel. They are most anxious, however, that a reasonable market be assured to them once again through a satisfactory international wheat agreement.

I hope ways and means will be found of achieving a satisfactory agreement and, as far as our country is concerned, of permitting the nations that will buy our wheat to obtain the dollars to pay for that wheat from this country. In other words I would like to see a still further downward revision of our customs duties and tariffs. These tariffs have bedevilled trade as far as our farmers are concerned over a period of years. These are barriers against our own income. They are not just barriers against manufactured goods coming in to compete; they are barriers against the returns which must pay for the things we can produce and need to export.

So I am happy this afternoon to have the opportunity of supporting this bill, and to see that it is the intention to maintain the act until August 1, 1957. When the time approaches for its renewal I feel sure that our farmers will want to see the wheat board act renewed again.

The hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) said a few moments ago that undoubtedly the minister would give us some information with regard to these unclaimed balances when we are in committee on the bill. I should like to say at this stage that as I read this section of the act it gives our farmers some assurance that before any disposition is made of the accumulated surpluses a real attempt will be made to adjust the fund so that those who are entitled under it to payments on certificates will get all that can possibly be paid to them. Then, when that is over, any undistributed balance should be used for the benefit, as it is put here, of producers.

How can these balances be used? Various methods occur to those of us who have thought about this matter in the past. The money might be distributed for the improvement of cereal crops, for assistance in the production of new and better types of wheat. It might be used for agricultural education, particularly in those branches of agriculture that have to do with cereals. In any event, it should be used for the benefit of producers.

That brings me to support a view already expressed by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) with respect to the wheat board. Over the years our farmers have asked for more adequate producer representation on the wheat board, and we have discussed that matter back and forth in the house. It is perfectly true that persons who understand the actual mechanics of the marketing of wheat must be on the board, and in the person of Mr. McIvor I think we have a man who has been a very good chairman of the board in the past. But our grain producers want more adequate producer representation. It might be wise to consider enlarging the board to seven members, but in any event of the five members now on the board I think two or even three should be directly interested at all times in the production of wheat.

As far as an advisory committee is concerned, that is another way of giving the producers representation; but our farmers would be much more satisfied with the operations of the board and the negotiation of agreements by it if they felt that they were more adequately represented than they have been in the past.

The wheat board act was placed on the statute books after many years of effort on the part of western farmers and those of us who supported them. I remember the period before 1921 when we had a wheat board. I remember the interim period after 1921 when we were without one. I remember the years between 1930 and 1935. I remember the controversy that followed the passage of this act in 1935; but one thing that those of us who come from the prairie provinces and represent agricultural constituencies can say is that today there is unanimity among prairie representatives in the House of Commons and substantial unanimity on the part of the farmers themselves.

Surely no one wants to go back again to the old open market method, with its dealings in futures and gambling on the grain exchange. In those days farmers hauled in their wheat in the fall, received low prices, and the speculator benefited the following spring. No one wants to return to that situation. The wheat board act has been something of a charter for the western wheat grower, and I am very happy this afternoon to be able to support the bill for its continuance until 1957.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, as a representative of western agriculturists I am very glad to see this bill introduced this afternoon. I am not speaking only for myself, because all in this group will give the bill their full support. I can look back a little over 30 years to the time when the first wheat board legislation was introduced, in 1919. I must say that we regretted very much when that legislation was done away with a few years later. As the result of it being done away with, the farmers then got busy and organized the wheat pools. The province of Alberta did the job first, and Saskatchewan and Manitoba followed. I am glad to say that the pools are still doing a good job.

In my opinion the Canadian wheat board, which has been talked about and opposed for many years in certain parts of Manitoba, still continues to do an excellent job. It is doing a good job of selling and a good job of satisfying agriculture as a whole in the western provinces. The handling of the crops of the past two or three years has been referred to by the minister. I can remember quite well that on September 25, 1950, and on the same date in 1951, the weather broke and at that time very little of the crop had been threshed. That brought about particularly tough conditions, and we had a lot of out of condition grain. I am glad to say that the vast majority of the farmers are very well satisfied with the prices that have been obtained for them by the wheat board.

As the minister has pointed out, the 1952 crop is the largest that western Canada has ever grown, and to a very great extent that accounts for the degree of prosperity existing in agriculture at the present time. I am sure, though, that we would have been much better off if certain safeguards had been provided when framing the international wheat agreement. We have pointed out our reasons for suggesting that in the past, and I hope some safeguards will be placed in the agreement that is now under discussion. I also hope that in the near future the minister will be able to give us the definite information that an agreement has been concluded. Whether or not an agreement is successfully concluded, I believe we need the wheat board to market our grain. It has done an excellent job in the past; and if an international wheat agreement should not be successfully completed then the board will be able to carry on and I am sure it will do a good job.

I should like to see this legislation made permanent rather than go out of existence after July 31, 1957. I agree with the minister that it is a good idea to have matters reviewed now and again, but even though the legislation were made permanent such a review could undoubtedly take place. I hope that neither the present minister, as long as he holds his office, nor his successor, whoever he may be, will change their minds about the benefits that accrue to western farmers and Canada as a whole as the result of the operations of the Canadian wheat board. Over the years that the present chairman, Mr. McIvor, has held his position, I believe he has done a very satisfactory job indeed. That is true not only in his handling of his regular work, but when many of us have had complaints about shortages of box cars and other matters Mr. McIvor has always been right on the job and has taken immediate and effective action.

I want to pay my compliments to the chief commissioner on this occasion. I believe the closing out of certain accounts will be satisfactory. I am glad to learn that efforts will be made to find the owners of the moneys in those accounts. It is true that many farmers move around quite a bit and do not realize that they have credits in the wheat board account. It is good to see that the moneys will be retained for a certain number of years before being disposed of in some other manner. I also hope that the government will see to it that the moneys are properly spent in the interests of agriculture when these accounts are finally disposed of.

Dealing with our internal wheat policy, I am not yet in agreement with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I have told him that on several occasions. I cannot see yet any sound reasoning why we subsidize our Canadian people at the expense of the prairie wheat growers.

Mr. Coldwell: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fair: On more than one occasion the minister has stated that he was not going to have the Canadian taxpayers subsidize the wheat growers of Canada. To get the matter straight, instead of that I would suggest that the Canadian wheat growers, the wheat growers of the prairie provinces, are subsidizing not only the people of Canada but also to a certain extent those of other countries. I say that because certain precautions have not been taken to safeguard the interests of the wheat growers. I have pointed out on different occasions that the cost of production has increased very materially since the contract was made.

At the time the agreement was being entered into we pointed out that these conditions could occur. I believe it was only a week ago today that I pointed out that the index of farm machinery prices has increased by 54 points during the past five years and that freight rates, I believe, have increased by some 87 per cent during the past few years. There is no safeguard there at all; and do not forget that the Canadian farmers, the wheat growers on the prairies, bear the brunt of every one of those freight rate increases.

I have not prepared a speech on this matter and I will not say any more at the present time. We shall perhaps have something to say on the different sections as they are being discussed. I do want to say that we are glad to see this legislation introduced, and we shall give it our full support.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Constitution of board.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would tell us if any consideration has been given recently to filling the five commissioner appointments, as they will now be called, particularly with producer representatives.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I would gladly fill the other two vacancies if I could find men as competent as the three men who are on the board at the present time. My hon. friend talks about producer representatives, but I might explain that the purpose of this board is to sell wheat, not to grow it. I suppose we could specialize on the growing end by appointing a producer but I do not see that it would strengthen the selling end very much.

The present members of the board are the same men whom the wheat pools themselves have called upon in the past to sell their wheat. They are all from the sales departments of the wheat pools, the men whom the farmers hire. I think they are the type of men necessary to handle this enormous business of selling wheat, oats and barley from the prairie provinces.

Mr. Harkness: As the minister well knows, the idea of having representatives of the producers on the board is not for the purpose of producing grain. It is for the purpose of allowing the producers to have a greater hand in determining matters of policy for the selling of grain. The grain belongs in toto to the producers, and theirs are the interests to be served. It would seem reasonable that they should have some representation on the board to help determine policies to be followed in matters of entering into agreements and so forth, as far as the selling end is concerned. I am sure there would not be undue difficulty in getting two men from the ranks of the producers who could serve an extremely useful purpose, men who would have knowledge for selling purposes as well as knowledge of the producers' problems.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not think this means that farmers have had any lack of confidence in the men who have been selling our wheat at all, but I think it is quite important to have the closest possible co-operation from the producers. If the producers feel that they are more or less directly represented by two producers who understand their problems, they will feel more satisfied with what the board does. Those men, moreover, would be able to report back to other producers of wheat. I think the idea is to keep the closest possible liaison between the board and the producers.

What I, at least, have to say is not implying any criticism of the present board; but in the interests of close co-operation with the producers the board, I think, might include at least two producers.

Mr. Howe: I might explain that the selling of wheat is itself a highly technical matter. It takes years of training to know really what the mechanics are. I do not think my hon. friend would suggest that we should have a board of five, three with technical knowledge and two without technical knowledge. The whole board is not always in one location. We have never appointed to the board a man who has not had years of technical training in the actual selling of the grain, and I would hesitate to change that pattern.

As far as keeping in touch with producers is concerned, the board attends meetings of the producers every year—their annual meetings, the annual meetings of the pools and farmers' unions. The board is always prepared to answer invitations to farmers' gatherings and, in fact, welcomes the opportunity to discuss the business of the board with producers. In addition there is the advisory board which meets at frequent intervals, and that board is made up at least in part of producers, the other part being millers and retailers. The meetings provide a useful contact with those with whom the board does business.

I cannot endorse the idea that it would be wise to put men on the board who know all about producing wheat but who have no technical knowledge of selling.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, the pools have been very successful.

Mr. Howe: They hire this kind of man.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes; but if you look at the people who operate them you will find they are very largely producers.

Mr. Bryce: You say that the advisory committee meets every month. How many members are there and can you let us have their names for the record?

Mr. Howe: The composition of the board is specified by parliament in the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It is a board to consist of not more than eleven members, but I do not remember who they are. It is a board that is very useful.

Mr. Bryce: There are producers on that board?

Mr. Howe: Oh, yes; largely producers.

Mr. Bryce: Could you put on the record who they are?

Mr. Howe: I would be glad to get the information, but I do not have it here.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, to put my thinking straight on this matter, is it not so that since the closing of the grain exchange there has been no open market and that, in reality, the wheat board does not sell wheat? It is the government that strikes trade agreements with other countries, the agreements such as the British wheat agreement or the world wheat agreement; and the wheat board, therefore, in reality becomes the technical adviser to the government. Is that not what is really happening today?

Mr. Howe: Well, there are agreements, but the selling of wheat under an agreement is a technical operation—day by day pricing, charging and forwarding. The over-all agreement is made by the government but the spacing of the wheat, the forwarding of the wheat, and the sales are made by the wheat board. In other words, we probably could not sell any more wheat in May if we wanted to because all the forwarding capacity and all the dock space is fully booked. All these matters have to be considered. They are technical matters.

Mr. MacInnis: The international wheat agreement is an agreement on price, is it not?

Mr. Howe: Yes; it is an agreement on price.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us what the purpose is of changing the wording from "member" of the board to "commissioner"? What advantage is there in that change?

Mr. Howe: There is no particular advantage except that it is difficult to write to a man and call him "Dear member of the board". The title of "commissioner" is a little bit more distinctive, that is all. There is nothing more in it than that.

I can now give the names of the members of the advisory committee. I find this list in the annual report of the wheat board already tabled. The members of the advisory committee during the crop year 1951-52 were: L. Hutchinson, chairman, Calgary, Alberta; D. I. Walker, Toronto, Ontario; J. C. A. Nijdam, Winnipeg, Manitoba; F. H. Clendenning, Vancouver, British Columbia; J. Theo Roy, Montreal, Quebec; J. H. Wesson, Regina, Saskatchewan; R. C. Brown, Winnipeg, Manitoba; F. Pettypiece, Auld, Ontario; J. A. McCowan, Summerberry, Saskatchewan; P. Farnalls, Halkirk, Alberta; C. E. Hayles, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Of those—

Mr. Charlton: Three are producers.

Mr. Howe: Six out of the eleven are producers.

Mr. Charlton: Did the minister say that six out of the nine were producers?

Mr. Howe: I will count them again.

Mr. Charlton: The minister had better do that.

Mr. Sinnott: Can the minister give any specific reason why rye cannot be brought under the same board?

Mr. Howe: Just because the government has not made provision for including rye in the pool. Rye is a crop that is not used in Canada. It is sold outside of Canada. It is not a crop that the government is particularly anxious to encourage. It is a crop that fluctuates widely in price. My feeling is that if anyone wants to grow rye, he had better sell it himself.

Mr. Bryce: The minister does not need to tell the farmers that; they know it.

Mr. Charlton: Can the minister say whether he has figured out how many growers there are on the advisory committee? Can he also tell us what is the salary of the commissioners and what that of the two additional commissioners will probably be?

Mr. Howe: Six out of the eleven are producers. The salaries of the commissioners are paid by the producers of western Canada, and I do not think I should disclose the salaries to the committee. They are not paid by the federal treasury.

Mr. Fair: Is it correct to say that all expenses of the board are paid out of the producers' money that is returned for their wheat?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Fair: I think that fact should be made plain, because some people feel that some of the expenses are coming out of the dominion treasury, and that is not correct.

Mr. Howe: No. All expenditures of the board, including salaries of the commissioners and of all its staff, are paid by the producers.

Mr. Fair: Will the minister say whether any consideration has been given to making the Canadian Wheat Board Act permanent rather than having the three-year or four-year extensions?

Mr. Howe: Yes. Consideration has been given to that possibility but it was felt that with an act of this kind, as conditions vary from year to year, it was just as well to let every parliament make up its mind as to what it should do about wheat marketing. Personally I would have no objection, but in considering the matter the government thought a four-year extension was a wiser procedure than to make the act permanent.

Mr. Fair: I do not think there will be any disagreement whatever among the provinces concerned because they include only Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Peace river block in British Columbia. I think they are all fairly well decided about what system they want.

Mr. Howe: I am sure that is true, Mr. Chairman; but I see no objection to allowing them to say so every three or four years.

On section 5—Transfer of undistributed balances.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister give us any more information with regard to how the unclaimed balances are going to be dealt with? I should like to know particularly what steps are being taken at the present time to ensure that holders of certificates which are long overdue are found. In other words, are these unclaimed balances advertised as are dead bank balances? What other steps are taken in order to get that money into the hands of the people to whom it rightfully belongs?

Mr. Howe: Every effort has been made to locate the persons to whom this money is due. Advertisements have been used. Letters have been sent. The help of the wheat pool organizations has been requisitioned to try to trace them down. The balances that it is proposed to set aside at the moment are those from the 1940 crop wheat account, the 1941 crop, the 1942 crop and the 1943 crop. The total of these four accounts is $247,289.78; and from other operations, the 1942 crop oats and barley equalization fund, $58,905.57; the 1943 crop oats equalization fund, $98,717.59 and the 1944 crop barley equalization fund, $52,431.63. The balance from the wheat amounts to $247,289.78 and from the other operations, $211,054.59, making a total of $458,344.37.

Mr. Coldwell: Has the minister any idea how many certificates are involved?

Mr. Howe: No. I understand the fund in hand is made up of cheques issued and uncashed and certain certificates that the board was never able to call in. It was on account of the difficulty in calling in certificates that that system was abolished. Today cheques are sent to producers without calling in certificates. These funds have been carried on the books of accounts, as I say, for more than six years. There are other funds accumulating each year. Today it is largely as a result of uncashed cheques. There are ample funds accumulating from following crop year accounts. Of course we honour these cheques or claims whenever they are made.

There has been some discussion about the use of these funds. It has been suggested that they be put into a current pool. There are objections to that procedure because the members of the current pool have no particular claim on the funds. One hon. member has on the order paper a resolution proposing that a fund be set up for young men and young women in the prairie provinces who are sons and daughters of wheat growers, which would provide for scholarships in prairie universities. There was some objection to that suggestion. Since no two representations seemed to agree, it has been decided to set the funds aside in a special account, and at such time as agreement can be reached on using those funds for the benefit of the prairie producers, that method will be followed.

Mr. Bryce: I should like to pursue that matter just a little bit further. A few minutes ago the minister said the members of the wheat board were hired because they knew their business, which is that of selling wheat. When it comes to dividing up the funds, I think the farmers should be given the same consideration; because the farmers put those funds there in the first place through neglect in collecting them. I think it is done by the governor in council on the recommendation of the board. The reference there is to the wheat board?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Bryce: May I put it this way. I should like the minister to give this further consideration so that the producers, the people who put the money there in the first place, would have something to say as to how it should be spent. The hon. member who puts a resolution on the order paper year after year would have it go for the benefit of farmers' sons. That money should be paid to train men in agriculture, to make them veterinary surgeons or something like that, that would contribute something to the livestock industry. A little further consideration should be given to the matter.

Mr. Howe: I may say that I thought it was an excellent suggestion myself, but on questioning hon. members from the wheat-growing provinces I found that there were as many ideas as to how the fund should be used as there were members. I was told that the suggestion, however good it was, would not carry a majority of the members of the house. I found that each growers organization had a different idea, and none of them approved of the scholarship idea. They each had suggestions that were varying.

The wheat board is a producers' board, and the purpose of having recommendations of the wheat board and the approval of the governor in council is to make sure that there is a general agreement among the producers as to how this money should be used.

Mr. Bryce: I agree with the minister on that point, that the producers should decide and not parliament.

Mr. Sinnott: I have a suggestion to make. Since the minister has said it is very difficult to find men who have the ability to sell Canada's wheat crop, I would suggest that a portion of this money be set aside to train men for that purpose.

Mr. Ferrie: With regard to these undistributed balances, the main thing I see is that under my suggestion the capital stays intact. You use only the interest. I cannot see why anyone should have anything to say with respect to this money. It does not belong to anybody. If it did, then the right and proper thing would be to have it go to the treasury. We want to prevent it from going there. Another government might say that it does not belong to anybody; it belongs to the government, and nobody can claim it. My suggestion is that this money be invested in government bonds and that the interest be used for the benefit of the boys and girls of western Canada, to help them get an education.

This money is not really under the control of the government. The government has one thing to do with it, really, namely to put it in the treasury. We do not agree with that. As long as this board exists there will be money of that description. If that fund is there it can be added to and the interest could be used, and we would not need to interfere with any other pool money.

Mr. Harkness: If I understood the minister correctly, this provision having to do with six years' unclaimed balances that go into this fund will not in any way prejudice the owner of a certificate which is more than six years old.

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Harkness: He will still be paid for it in spite of the six-year provision?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

STATISTICS ACT

TRANSPORTATION OF PASSENGERS—UTILIZATION OF SERVICES OF OFFICERS IN OTHER DEPARTMENTS, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 148, to amend the Statistics Act.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Explain.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this bill does not involve any change in the nature of the work being done by the bureau of statistics; it does not involve any matter of principle in relation to that work. It rather has to do with a number of small changes in the authority of the bureau in respect to certain of the techniques of operation.

It is of a nature that the amending clauses contained in the bill are not directly related one to the other. For that reason it is probably something that could best be discussed in committee, but I should say a word, perhaps, about each of the clauses in the bill.

The first part of clause 1 merely deals with an omission in the act when it was passed in 1948, in that the definition dealing with transportation statistics omitted the term "persons", so the bureau could collect statistics of transportation as to goods but not as to persons. Then there is a change in the language used in the definition of public utility.

Section 3 authorizes the minister to utilize the services of employees of other departments, and in addition the effect of it is to make them subject to the penalty for breach of the secrecy provisions of the act. The necessity for that section comes about in connection with the use of census records under the old age security legislation. It merely authorizes the minister to utilize the services of employees of another department. The effect of that is, of course, as will be seen, to prevent a duplication of work by an employee of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the bureau of statistics.

The next clause has to do with the returns made by hospitals, mental institutions and the like. It permits a lesser degree of secrecy with respect to parts of these returns and the publication of them. The publication of information given by hospitals and other similar non-commercial institutions is of such a nature that it must be related to a particular institution to be valuable. This change meets with the wishes of the institutions and the health and similar authorities supplying and using this information.

Paragraph (c) of that clause permits the publication of the names and locations of firms and their products. Formerly that exception was not made, and there was a question about the right to publish certain trade information. Hon. members will notice that the language used in this paragraph is very narrow; publication is confined to the names and locations of the individual firms and the types of products processed.

The next clause concerns the census of population and agriculture. Under the present section the provisions are absolutely rigid, so that it is necessary for the bureau to include in the census questionnaires information it may already have. The modified language in section 4 permits more flexibility, and should result in the cutting down of questions on census forms.

Then section 5 in the bill has to do with statistics on inland waterways. Part of those statistics is already authorized, but there is no comprehensive statistical information authorized in respect of inland waterways, and the point is clarified in section 5 of the bill.

Section 6 merely provides that statistics relating to criminal offences will be collected at periods more agreeable to the proper working of the courts and the provincial authorities giving the statistics, rather than on the rigid basis defined in the older legislation.

Sections 7 and 8 have the same effect. They simply change the rigid period for the giving of information concerning criminal statistics, as set out in the old legislation, and make the system more flexible. I understand this meets with the approval of those who will give the information.

There is not much more that could be said usefully on this motion for second reading. It seems to me that the points might more properly be dealt with when we are in the committee stage.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the changes contemplated in this revision of the Statistics Act do not seem to be extensive. I trust they will not produce the effect of piling up more useless statistics, at considerable expense to the people of Canada who have to supply them.

Mr. McIlraith: These amendments are designed to cut down rather to increase.

Mr. Harkness: I hope that will be the effect. I have heard a number of complaints from businessmen concerning returns they have to make to the statistics branch. The information I receive in many cases is that the material they have to supply is completely useless.

I have been approached on this matter on numerous occasions, and have a considerable pile of correspondence from what I believe to be the largest distributor of motor car products in western Canada. This organization has had to employ considerable staff, at great expense, to engage in the process of filing these numerous returns. It handles items of equipment and the like. The information I have indicates that this distributor, and one other concern in eastern Canada, are the only people doing this particular kind of business. He believes the statistics he has to turn in are quite valueless; nevertheless he has to keep turning them in year after year. If he does not he is subject to the penalties, stated as follows in the act:

Every person who, without lawful excuse, . . .
(b) refuses or neglects to furnish any information or to fill up to the best of his knowledge and belief any schedule or form——shall be liable, upon summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding $100 and not less than $20, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months and not less than thirty days, or to both fine and imprisonment.

It seems to me there should be a bit of housecleaning, so far as the statistics branch is concerned, particularly in the matter of information which is not going to be of any particular value. There seems to have been a great tendency to pile up statistics. It is the sort of thing that snowballs. I am sure there is a great deal of validity in the complaints I have received concerning the statistical information which businessmen must file. I believe the work of the statistics branch and of private business could be speeded up by cutting down much of the useless information now required. I would hope that some effort might be made in that direction.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Other public servants.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is this not a very wide power to give a minister, when he is given control over officials in all departments in the manner set out here?

Mr. McIlraith: It does not give the minister control over them, but only the authority to utilize their services. It is not authority to take control of them from other departments. It is authority to use services made available from other departments.

On section 9.

The Chairman: Perhaps I might point out at this time that, as hon. members will have noticed, in each bill, in order to amend the revised statutes there have been duplicates of some of the sections carried in the first part of the bill. Therefore in this bill, as in others, and as in bills which will follow, sections 9 to 16, comprising part II of the bill, are merely duplicates of part I.

I point this out because I take it for granted that hon. members, having carried the original sections, will wish to carry the duplicate sections. Therefore I shall call the last sections quickly, and when I do so I hope hon. members will keep this fact in mind.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD ON STATUTORY BASIS

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. 110, to establish the historic sites and monuments board of Canada.

He said: A famous Nova Scotian and Canadian statesman, Joseph Howe, once said that "a wise nation fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past". One expression of the interest which we Canadians have in the history and tradition of our country is the recognition we have given to the importance of preserving and marking our ancient monuments and historic sites. These things recall not only great moments of the past, but thoughts and doings of other days, different from our own and yet a part of all that we are.

The object of the bill now before the house is to provide for the placing of the historic sites and monuments board of Canada on a statutory basis. Public interest in the board has increased greatly in recent years and more emphasis has been placed on the value of its work. The royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences recommended a more comprehensive program of preserving and marking historic sites and monuments. The reconstitution of the board under the authority of an act of parliament would give fuller recognition to the importance of its function.

It is many years now since the federal government first recognized its responsibilities to honour and preserve this national heritage. The national parks branch, which was established in 1911, administered several historic sites, being primarily interested in scenic preservation. In June 1919, following extended representations from numerous organizations and individuals across Canada, the then minister of the interior nominated an honorary historic sites and monuments board to advise the department in the selection of sites and events of national historic importance and thus worthy of commemoration. This first board was composed of a chairman, Brigadier General E. A. Cruickshank, LL.D., F.R.S.C., of Ottawa, and five other recognized authorities on the history of the different parts of Canada. Among the members was the commissioner of the parks branch, who was the officer representing the department of the interior. The board served without remuneration, but the members received an allowance of $10 a day and their ordinary travelling expenses when attending meetings away from their places of residence.

In 1923 the board was reconstituted and the members were appointed by the governor in council. It was provided in the order in council that "the board is honorary, serves without remuneration and acts in an advisory capacity to the Department of the Interior, in regard to the historic sites of national interest". The reconstituted board consisted of seven members, and Brigadier General E. A. Cruickshank was appointed to carry on as chairman.

Subsequent orders in council were passed from time to time, adding to the membership of the board and filling vacancies as they occurred. The board is presently composed of thirteen members, including one member from each province; the dominion archivist; a representative from the national parks and historic sites division of the Department of Resources and Development and a retired official of the department. The members of the present board are:

Professor Fred Landon, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., F.R.S.C., London, Ontario—chairman.

Professor D. C. Harvey, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.C., archivist, the public archives of Nova Scotia, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The Honourable E. Fabre-Surveyer, LL.M., B.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.C., the judges' chambers, superior court, Montreal, P.Q.

The Reverend Antoine d'Eschambault, D.S.T., D.J.C., Genthon, Manitoba.

Professor M. H. Long, M.A., F.R.S.C., department of history, the University of Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta.

Walter N. Sage, Esq., M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S.C., F.R. Hist. S., head of department of history, the University of British Columbia, Vancouver, British Columbia.

The Honourable Thane A. Campbell, M.A., LL.D., chief justice of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

W. Kaye Lamb, Esq., M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S.C., dominion archivist, public archives of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario.

Charles E. A. Jeffery, Esq., M.B.E., editor, The Evening Telegram, St. John's, Newfoundland.

Alfred G. Bailey, Esq., M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S.C., dean of arts, the University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, New Brunswick.

Campbell Innes, Esq., M.A., honorary superintendent, Fort Battleford national historic park, Battleford, Saskatchewan.

W.D. Cromarty, Esq., Ottawa, Ontario.

C.G. Childe, Esq., B.Sc., national parks branch, Ottawa, Ontario.

The board meets each year. In addition to the meetings a considerable amount of work is carried on by correspondence. The work of the board has been increasing and it is possible that in future more than one meeting each year will be necessary.

Hon. members will note that the board's function is advisory only. The implementation of their recommendations is subject to the approval of the minister and to funds being voted by parliament.

Hon. members may ask what criteria can be adopted in deciding whether an historic site is of national interest and significance rather than of only local interest and importance. What the board has done is to recognize certain broad and flexible divisions of Canadian history within which lie events and persons properly of interest to Canadians wherever they may be. These divisions reach back to prehistoric times, which have bequeathed to us relics of Indian life such as are to be found in Ontario and in British Columbia. Then follow the discovery and early exploration of Canada; the earliest French settlements in Quebec and Nova Scotia; the events of the Seven Years war in America; the defence of Canada during the American war of Independence and the war of 1812; the rebellion of 1837 and subsequent "patriot" invasions; the Fenian raids and the uprisings in the northwest in 1870 and 1885; and the exploration of the Canadian west from lake Superior to the Pacific ocean and northward to the Arctic.

In addition to this pageant of our history there are included as well the political development of Canada from the struggle in Nova Scotia for responsible government onward through confederation and the creation of new provinces; the entry into confederation of Newfoundland; our economic development; the social development of the Canadian people; and lastly the achievements of distinguished Canadians both at home and abroad.

Hon. members may be surprised to know that since 1919 the historic sites and monuments board has examined for their historical significance the circumstances surrounding more than one thousand historic sites. It has declared 623 of these sites to be of national importance.

Recommendations by the board, whose functions as I have said are purely advisory, would, under this bill, be submitted to the Minister of Resources and Development. On his approval, appropriate action is taken by the national parks branch, which has the responsibility for marking and preserving historic sites, subject of course to parliament providing the necessary funds. Already 429 historic sites have been marked or acquired. The remainder, together with future additions, will be dealt with as circumstances permit. The extent to which new projects can be undertaken is, of course, necessarily limited to the appropriations made available. In the three fiscal years ending 1952-53, total appropriations for the construction and operating costs of historic sites and national historic parks have averaged some $226,000 annually.

Perhaps I should refer now to the authority under sections 11 and 12 of the National Parks Act for the establishment of national historic parks. These sections provide that the governor in council may set apart any land, the title to which is vested in Her Majesty, as a national historic park to commemorate an historic event of national importance or to preserve any historic landmark or any object of historic, prehistoric or scientific interest of national importance and to bring it under certain provisions of the National Parks Act for administrative purposes. There are now eleven national historic parks in Canada, from the fortress of Louisbourg in the east to the recently acquired Fort Battleford in the west, administered by the national parks branch. At the present time certain sites are being considered as national historic parks in our newest province of Newfoundland. On the recommendation of the historic sites and monuments board, important preservative action has been taken in these parks, and several museums established to house important exhibits relating to the early histories of the surrounding districts.

In recent years there seems to be a growing desire in Canada to have commemorated the achievements of distinguished Canadians. Names of such prominent Canadians as Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King and others have been established in perpetuity in a variety of ways both in the minds of our citizens as well as in plaque and statue. It may be of interest to hon. members that the board recommended at its meeting in May, 1952 that memorial tablets be erected in honour of the late Viscount Bennett at Calgary, Alberta, and at Hopewell, New Brunswick. Arrangements are under way at the present time to have this recommendation carried out. I might also mention that the board has for consideration at its next meeting the question of suitable commemoration of the birthplace of Sir Robert Laird Borden at Grand Pré, Nova Scotia.

The bill now before the house provides for the establishment of a board of twelve members; ten to be appointed by the governor in council and representing each of the provinces. The other two members would be the dominion archivist and the chief curator of the national museum. The chairman is to be appointed by the governor in council. The appointed members would hold office for periods not exceeding five years and any retiring member may be eligible for reappointment.

The powers and duties of the board as set forth in the bill are to receive and consider recommendations respecting the marking or commemoration of historic sites, the establishment of historic museums and the administration of such places, and to advise the minister in carrying out his duties under the act.

The bill defines an historic place as a site, building or other place of national interest or significance, and power is given to the minister to mark such places and to provide for their care and preservation. Authority is also sought subject to the approval of the governor in council to establish historic museums and to acquire land for such purpose.

I believe that hon. members will regard this bill as a tribute to the outstanding work successive historic sites and monuments boards have done over the years. It recognizes the need for permanency in this important phase of our Canadian growth and development as a nation. As Canadians, we cannot but be impressed by the greatness of the legacy our history has left to us to cherish and preserve. By continuing to work toward our objective of preserving the historic sites, buildings and objects of national interest, we shall be making a significant contribution to the education and inspiration of all our people and of visitors from other lands.

Mr. P. C. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I know that all members of the house are interested in and find themselves in sympathy with the statement that has been made by the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters). As he pointed out, no part of Canada has more historic sites, with only a few of them having been marked, than Nova Scotia. No part of Canada has had more individuals, whose record in the life of Nova Scotia and the life of Canada as a whole is more deserving of commemoration, than the province of Nova Scotia. The minister quoted in his remarks the well known words of Hon. Joseph Howe, one of the great Nova Scotians, with which words we are all in agreement. A great deal could be said about and direct references made to the past and present of Nova Scotia.

The minister referred to two prime ministers of Canada, Sir Robert Borden and Viscount Bennett. There are two other Nova Scotians who also became prime ministers of Canada, Sir John Thompson and Sir Charles Tupper. They were both great Canadians who left their imprint on the life of Canada. I have said before and I repeat that Canada would not be what it is, and perhaps would never have existed as it does today, if it had not been for the work carried on by Sir Charles Tupper in the days of confederation. In my native town of Amherst we had four fathers of confederation, Sir Charles Tupper, Hon. Robert Barry Dickey, great-grandfather of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey), Hon. Edward Chandler and Hon. Jonathan McCully.

The historic sites and monuments board has provided for the commemoration of these four great fathers of confederation in a very meagre way. In the sixtieth year of confederation four tablets were erected on the post office in the town of Amherst commemorating the names of these fathers of confederation. More permanent monuments should be erected to each of these famous men whose birthplace was in or near Amherst, Nova Scotia. There were five fathers of confederation from Nova Scotia, and four of them came from the county of Cumberland.

I know that all will be pleased that the board is being placed upon a more permanent basis than it has been in the past, although great credit is due to Sir Robert Borden, Viscount Bennett and the other prime ministers of Canada for what has been done and the appropriations that have been made from time to time, small though they have been. To name one other historic site in the county of Cumberland, there is the birthplace of Simon Newcomb, one of the greatest astronomers in history. A monument was erected to him at his birthplace at Wallace Bridge in 1930, if I remember rightly. There was a large gathering there on that occasion and among those who attended was Dr. Charles A. Eaton, who was born within a few miles of that site. Dr. Eaton, who was a member of congress in Washington for 28 years, died in January of this year, and it would be most appropriate indeed if a monument could be erected in his memory at his birthplace at Pugwash, Nova Scotia.

I gather from the statement by the minister that it is proposed to pay the members of this board a fee in addition to their expenses. As I understand it, they have carried on up to the present being only reimbursed for their out of pocket expenses and no fees have been paid to them. That is to the credit of the men who were members of the board, and it might be just as well if that practice could be continued. Members of the board, who would be willing to serve in the same way as their predecessors, could be selected from each of the provinces of Canada.

For many years Dr. J. C. Webster, of Shediac, who unfortunately died recently, was the maritime representative. In his day he did more to build up the prestige of the board than any person who ever sat on the board. He must be given credit for the erection of the museum at Fort Beausejour. He enlisted the co-operation of Prime Minister Bennett in the 1930's when it was very difficult to get appropriations; and the museum at Fort Beausejour was built. It has been enlarged and extended since, and tens of thousands of visitors from Canada and the United States go through it every year. The same work has been carried on at Louisbourg and at Annapolis.

As I have pointed out there are a great many similar sites and birthplaces that should be preserved and commemorated in the province of Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada. There are many individuals, such as the fathers of confederation, such as Dr. Charles Eaton and many others, to whom monuments should be erected in Nova Scotia. I doubt whether there is a proper monument erected at the birthplace of that great Nova Scotian mentioned by the minister in his address, Hon. Joseph Howe, although he has a monument at the provincial building, Halifax.

I was greatly pleased a few weeks ago to hear the Prime Minister announce that a monument was to be erected shortly to the memory of Sir Robert Borden. I believe there should be a statue erected to the memory of all the fathers of confederation, and all the prime ministers of Canada. As years go by, if this is done, it will be for the benefit of the younger people of Canada as well as all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I am entirely in sympathy with the proposals in this legislation, and I hope the minister will secure larger appropriations than have been available in the past to carry out the invaluable work of this historic sites and monuments board.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, a number of my constituents are particularly interested in this bill and in the subject of historic sites. I think it is a very nice, quiet, non-partisan subject after a very busy day; and I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, considering the bills that have been put through the house this afternoon, that neither the government nor the minister will mind members taking a few minutes to express opinions on the bill.

I rise to support the bill, and I am very pleased to see that the historic sites and monuments board of Canada is now going to have a statutory basis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I think it is quite right to say that an intelligent awareness of history is a sign of maturity in the individual and in the community. A sense of history is necessary for a sense of continuity or understanding of the society in which we live. I understand that the board is composed of historians of recognized standing across the country. They have done worth-while work throughout the years with but very little public understanding and appreciation. For that I blame the government and to some extent the officials of the department concerned. I trust that this legislation is a step in the direction of correcting that situation. I might say as well that I am of the opinion that the members of the board have been somewhat of the nature of shrinking violets, because they have not given enough publicity to the excellent work they have been doing throughout the years.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased to hear that favourable comment from the member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart).

I understand that it is the board's function to make recommendations to the minister concerning the marking of historic sites. According to the last report of the Department of Resources and Development, for the year ended March 31, 1952, there have been 429 sites marked or acquired, and there are 194 recommended for attention at a later date. On the basis of the rate of progress since 1923 it appears to me that it will take at least 20 years to give effect to the recommendations in hand at the present time. Mr. Speaker, I wonder why there is this unusual delay. This is not an expensive work and it does not occasion the outlay of a great deal of money. To me it indicates a certain lack of policy and vigour in proceeding with this work in which a large number of people across this country are interested.

I understand that some of the provincial government make grants, and that actually some municipal governments contribute to the marking of sites of provincial or local importance. It is quite safe to say, from a reading of the various estimates throughout the years, that money which has been available from either federal, municipal or provincial sources has been insufficient to adequately mark the historic sites of this country.

Before going on to the meat of my speech, shall I say—and I trust it has some meat in it, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: —I do want to pay tribute to the good work that has been done by the following organizations across this country: The Canadian historical society; the Champlain society; the British Columbia historical society; the Kootenay historical society.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: The last two organizations are greatly interested in marking the very important sites we have in the Kootenay district and in British Columbia. I would like to mention a few individuals, and I have time to mention only a few. The first is Dr. Lamb, director of the archives of Canada. I think we are very, very fortunate in having a man like Dr. Lamb in charge of our archives. I would also like to mention Mr. Willard E. Ireland, provincial archivist for British Columbia and Mr. Bruce McKelvie, unofficial historian for British Columbia, who did an immense amount of work without remuneration and without thought of return in bringing to light historic sites and events. I would also mention Miss Molly Cottingham who spent three years writing, for her master's degree, an excellent history of Kootenay West which has not been published yet. There is also Mrs. Kate Johnson, a neighbour of mine, who last year published a history of Nakusp and the Arrow lakes. I must also mention Mr. R. G. Joy, unofficial historian of Nelson and the late Mr. B. Aitkins of Revelstoke. Both these gentlemen have made a great contribution to our knowledge of Kootenay history. Also there is Mr. John Nelson, a historical writer living in the north Arrow lakes at Galena Bay; and Mr. E. Picard who lives in my own village of Nakusp, who has collected a great deal of the early history of the district, some of which I have handed on to the national archives here. I mention those people, Mr. Speaker, because those who were willing to give their time to this sort of work are making a great contribution towards a more complete knowledge of our history, our social development and so on.

I just want to bring to the attention of the house one interesting incident that occurred at Arrowhead in the north Arrow lakes. In that district lived this gentleman who went there in the early days, Mr. John Nelson of Galena Bay, who has located Indian graves that had been unknown previously, the sites of Indian camps and things of that sort. He has done this work over a period of many years and has written many interesting articles, and has supplied information for other people who were writing books.

In the early days of our country there was a Frenchman known as Jean Baptiste who came in from Quebec some time after Hudson Bay days and lived there until the early part of this century. While he was there the main company in the district at that time were a group of Englishmen who came from Great Britain, and he and some other French Canadians got on with them very well indeed. He was so surprised at what good-natured people these Englishmen were and how easy they were to get on with that he made a large flagpole, erected it on his property and on it flew the Union Jack on every public holiday. And when he came to leave, I think about the year 1905, he said to his friend Mr. John Nelson that he had so enjoyed his experience in western Canada and his association with these people of British extraction that he asked Mr. Nelson, to whom he gave the flagpole, to continue to fly the Union Jack on every national holiday. That gentleman has continued to do that up to date, and the flag was flown at half mast on his hearing of the death of the Dowager Queen Mary.

I just mention that incident, Mr. Speaker, as one of interest in connection with the activities of one person who has spent a lifetime gathering the notes and the information which will be of value in the years to come.

While the board has done a great deal of work—and I notice there are 194 sites that have been recommended still to be dealt with —I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the house a few things that I think should be given consideration in the constituency of Kootenay West. I am not sure whether they are national, provincial or entirely local in scope, but I am going to mention them at this time. I am quite sure some of them are national in scope.

I think a suitable cairn should be erected somewhere at the crossing of the Columbia, either on the Robson or Castlegar side of the Columbia, to commemorate the discovery of the Columbia by David Thompson. At the present time Fort Kootenay is marked on the upper Columbia quite close to the headwaters and away from the travelled route, but there is no cairn or monument erected anywhere on the Columbia which can be seen by large numbers of local people and visitors. Once again I suggest that a cairn should be erected at the crossing of the Columbia, either on the Robson or the Castlegar side, so the people of the district and particularly the children of the district will be inspired to know of Thompson's discoveries in the early years of the last century.

Then as a boy I went to school and played with a small band of Indians. When I was a boy the surviving Indians of the Arrow lakes district were mostly living in a band in the upper Arrow lakes, with a few of them at the junction of the Kootenay and the Columbia. I went to school with those Indians. Apparently for centuries before the coming of the white man these people had lived there in peace, security, and relative plenty. Yet today, within 100 years of the coming of the white man, we find that tribe so decimated that there is only one surviving squaw. I think that the memory of that quiet, small band of Indians—the Arrow lakes band—should be commemorated by the erection of a cairn or monument.

Then I think something should be done to mark the first discovery of gold on the mainland of British Columbia at the junction of the Pend-d'Oreille and the Columbia. Many of my constituents are interested in the mining and refining of base metals. The first discovery of base metals was at the Bluebell mine near Riondel on Kootenay lake. I could go on and mention a number of others of importance.

While we frequently mark historical sites to record achievements of individuals who have painted large brush strokes on the canvas of history, in my opinion the policy of the board should also be directed towards marking the sites on which occurred events of great permanent social significance. I want to draw to the attention of the minister one or two locations in my constituency in which events happened which had a tremendous effect upon the development of the district and an impact upon the whole British commonwealth.

In the 1890's United States capitalists first became interested in the Slocan country in connection with the mining of lead, silver, gold and other minerals. As a result there was a great impetus in mining in the 1890's in the Kootenay district. Miners came, some from the old countries, some from Cape Breton, and some from the states to the south. A reading of the record on my part clearly indicates that these Americans were primarily interested in quick profits, and not at all in the welfare of their men.

The need for organization soon became evident and the miners in the Kootenay in 1895 joined the western federation of miners. When the union sought collective bargaining and satisfactory conditions for the miners, they were met with stiff opposition by the companies and the result was frequent strikes. As a result of these conditions, Mr. Speaker, the first organized support for the principles of socialism in British Columbia occurred at Sandon, British Columbia, in 1895, when the Kootenay miners, who were affiliated with the western federation of miners, advanced a program which was similar to that advanced by the C.C.F. group in this house, and supported Labour candidates for the legislature.

I remember quite well the story that during one strike the union hall in Silverton and the office of the management were on the same party line telephone. So that the management would not know what the miners were intending to do from day to day, they got two Scotsmen from Cape Breton who spoke Gaelic, one on one end of the line and one on the other; and for a period of over a month all conversations were carried on in Gaelic, much to the consternation of the mine owners and the management. In fact the management were under the impression that foreigners had taken control of the camp, and as a result they asked the government of British Columbia to send in the troops.

In this connection I want to say that at that time the late Senator Green was the provincial member of the legislature for the Slocan district. I must say that although he was a Conservative, to his undying credit it was on account of the efforts of the late Senator Green—who was the uncle of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green)—that the government of British Columbia was restrained from sending troops into Sandon and the Slocan area to quell the strike. As a result, whether he ran for the provincial legislature or later to become a member of parliament, as a Conservative, he received the support of the miners because of the action he took in preventing the troops from coming in to break the strike.

Another interesting thing in connection with that situation was that the present Senator Thomas Farquhar was president of the western federation of miners in Sandon during the period of the strikes and those most difficult days. Senator Farquhar was then very active as president of the union, and is still remembered by a few of the older miners for his work on behalf of organized labour and his support at that time of a socialistic policy very closely resembling that of the C.C.F.

Well, as a result of this difficulty and other labour conditions in British Columbia, as I said before, there was a consolidation of support for socialistic principles; and I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, to the minister that an event of such social significance should be recognized. It would be well worth while for us to strike a plaque or erect a cairn to indicate the birth of socialism in British Columbia at Sandon.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased to see that I have the support of some of the Liberal members.

The first socialist paper in British Columbia was the Lardeau Eagle, published at Ferguson, British Columbia, by Mr. R. P. Pettapiece, who I think is retired and still living in Vancouver. How about another cairn to mark the publication of the first socialist paper in Ferguson, British Columbia, which is a small mining camp at the present time?

I want to bring to the attention of the house one event of particular and international significance. Owing to the labour troubles in the Kootenays in British Columbia at the beginning of this century, the federal government appointed what was called a royal labour commission to investigate the whole situation and former prime minister Mackenzie King, who was then deputy minister of labour, was the secretary of the commission. When that commission reported to the government it recommended the legal prohibition of socialism in Canada, and prohibition of the publication of all socialist literature. Anyway, this clash between the owners and the workers continued, and as a result of the continued organization of the workers the first move was made in Rossland that resulted in labour for the first time in the British commonwealth being able to strike without suffering action for damages.

The first right that labour won was the right to organize; the second right was to strike without the union being sued for damages, and that right was first won in the British commonwealth in the town of Rossland, British Columbia, in my constituency. In that connection I just wish to quote briefly from the Labour Gazette of 1904: An act to amend the law relating to trade unions was passed in British Columbia; and from the Labour Gazette I quote the following:

> This act is of extreme importance in trade union history, not only in British Columbia but also in Canada and the British empire. The statute originated from circumstances similar to those that made necessary the passage of the trade disputes act in Great Britain in 1906, but it will be noted that the provincial statute was passed four years earlier. From July to November, 1901, about one thousand miners at Rossland, organized as a local of the western federation of miners, struck for higher wages and union recognition by the Le Roi Mining Company. In October the company sued the union for damages and asked for an injunction to restrain local unions for attempting to persuade others not to work for the company; the company was particularly annoyed when members of the union succeeded in getting imported strike-breakers to cease work. The courts awarded $12,500 and costs to the company and a receivership was established. Following this decision in British Columbia protests were made regarding the law relating to trade unions as they were later in Britain following the Taff Vale decision. Martin's legislation was a direct response to these protests and in general provided simply that no trade union was to be liable in damages for any wrongful act in connection with a labour dispute unless such act had been authorized or concurred in by the members of the union or by its officers acting within their powers under the rules of the union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was an event of international significance. I again suggest to the minister that the place where for the first time in the British commonwealth a trade union won the right to strike without being liable to damages is a place where a significant social event occurred and justifies recognition by the historic sites and monuments board.

Mr. Gillis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Higgins: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to see that I have support from Cape Breton and from Newfoundland. I have mentioned a few places that I think should be given consideration by the board; I could go on, but I do not want to delay the house too long. In general I support the recommendations outlined in the report of the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences, but I wish to place particular emphasis on the following paragraphs:

a. That the historic sites and monuments board undertake a much more comprehensive program in the future and that it be provided with funds adequate for its important responsibilities.

I do want to emphasize that, Mr. Speaker, because I think the government has been very stingy so far as funds are concerned for use by the historic sites and monuments board. Then I go on to paragraph c.

c. That where the site alone of an important historical event has survived without buildings or other evidence of the past, markers be devised with suitable aesthetic and imaginative appeal and with inscriptions more legible and shorter than those now commonly used; and that consideration be given to the commissioning of Canadian sculptors to create suitable and worthy memorials.

There is room for more imagination with respect to the type of marker and cairn used. Paragraph e. reads:

That the board review and establish clearly its policy on the preservation of historic sites—

That is very important. The public should be informed of the policy of the board. As I said before, so far as general knowledge of the activities of the board is concerned, the public know very little about it. The policy of the board should be clearly established, and should be published so that all Canadians know what work the board is undertaking. Then I go on to paragraph f:

That the board by every means, but without encroaching on matters of provincial responsibility, maintain close and friendly relations with provincial authorities which have responsibilities similar to its own; that there be the fullest possible exchange of plans and information; that the board consider whether periodic conferences with provincial authorities might not be practical and desirable.

That is an excellent recommendation. There should be more done along the line of defining the jurisdiction of the historic sites and monuments board, the jurisdiction of the provinces, and the jurisdiction of municipal and local authorities. Then I go on to paragraph g:

That in general the board act as a clearing house for information on all questions pertinent to the appropriate and accurate restoration, preservation and marking of Canadian historic sites and monuments.

The board is a natural clearing house; and if they find a recommendation is made that comes strictly within the purview of provincial or local authority they simply pass it back and inform these people accordingly. In addition to that I suggest there should be close co-operation with national and local historical societies; with teachers' associations, women's organizations, service clubs and other organizations that are interested in this work. I do think there should be a recognition by the board of the related organizations in the provinces and the local districts. This should be some form of official recognition of the work undertaken by people who have spent years gathering information, looking for sites, and making very valuable contributions towards a permanent record of our history. This recognition would not cost very much.

It would be only proper if the gentleman of whom I was speaking in the north Arrow lakes section were to receive some recognition in the form of a scroll, or something of that type, showing an appreciation of the work he has done in connection with the preservation of sites and the gathering of historical information, and others likewise.

I believe there should be co-operation at all levels. While I have offered some criticism of the board and its work, I wish to express my appreciation of the work it has been doing throughout the years. And before concluding may I express my personal appreciation and admiration of the work done by voluntary effort on the part of the board and officials associated with it. I would hope that in the future it might be provided with funds sufficient to give effect to the recommendations of the royal commission on the arts, letters and sciences.

The work of the board in my opinion is to restore a sense of history and tradition in our people, and in the lives of those who have been cut adrift from a real partnership in that history by the trivia of modern life.

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, as Nova Scotia is steeped in history I should like to take a few moments to speak in this debate. The Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) have mentioned Joseph Howe. I was very glad to hear his name mentioned, as indeed I am at all times, for about the time of confederation that great Nova Scotian, who fought and obtained responsible government for Nova Scotia and thus for the rest of Canada, said that a wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great public structures and fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

I suggest that the works Joseph Howe advocated and revered are being carried out efficiently and well in all ten provinces of Canada by the minister. He is following the precepts of Joseph Howe; he is conscious that sites and monuments must be preserved for posterity and that our great men of history must be honoured.

Mr. Speaker, we from the bluenose country are very proud of our history and the part played by our forefathers in the development of Canada. Nova Scotia has the proud distinction of being the only province of Canada and the first colony of Great Britain to possess, through royal charter, a flag of its own. The flag of Nova Scotia traces its origin to the charter of New Scotland granted in 1621 to Sir William Alexander, afterwards the Earl of Stirling, by King James VI of Scotland and I of England.

And here, sir, may I say that we have no desire to flaunt this flag; for I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is one flag for Canada, not ten; as far as I am concerned personally that good old historic flag, the union jack, is adequate. Indeed, we do ourselves honour thereby. Our people must possess a full appreciation of our history; they must place a value on the links with the past. Too many of these links have already been lost through sheer neglect—to cite only one, the routes of the early explorers.

What appeals to me, sir, and I am sure it must also strike every hon. member in this house, is the fact that all provinces of Canada are receiving equal attention from the Department of Resources and Development; no one part is favoured. I am sure, if I might be permitted to speak for Nova Scotia, I could name many parts of the province that have had suitable monuments erected or parks opened in commemoration of some great historic event. May I mention only a few: Shelburne, the Loyalist town; Louisburg and her forts; Wolfe's Landing; King's College, the oldest university in the Queen's overseas dominions, or rather in the British commonwealth as it is known today. Then there is Liverpool, Nova Scotia; Lunenburg, the home of the minister; Annapolis, the home of the "Firsts" in Canada, and where Champlain built his first trading post. And I must not overlook Halifax and Dartmouth, two places full of history which are very well monumented and marked by the historic sites board. For this we are very grateful to the minister for his co-operation and consideration.

Among the places suitably marked in Halifax are: The site of the first printing press in Canada; a plaque in commemoration of the battle between the Shannon and the Chesapeake, when the Shannon defeated a very brave foe and towed her into Halifax; the site of the first post office in Canada; a monument erected on the grounds of Dalhousie university known as the Castine cairn, erected to commemorate an expedition of combined forces of the army and navy, when it invaded Maine and captured Machias. A customs office was set up; and if the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) were in his seat tonight he would be interested to know that they collected this money, brought it back to Canada and established a university.

Then there is the site of the first zoo in North America; a monument to Captain Samuel Cook, the world explorer once stationed in Halifax; and there are many other things. But all attainments are climaxed by the minister's department taking over the rehabilitation of historic Citadel hill, Fort St. George, and the old town clock, saving them for posterity. Both of these were built by the Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria. The fort gets its name from the duke's father, King George III.

In this connection I wish to refer to the invaluable contribution to these developments by our Nova Scotia archivist, Dr. D. C. Harvey. He is not only making a fine contribution in that capacity and in the field of historical writing, but he has given devoted service on the historic sites and monuments board. His work is best summed up in the words "modesty and integrity", qualities which arise, in part, from a keen historical sense and which all citizens would do well to emulate. Let me pay tribute here also to Major William Coates Borrett, whose work has been of particular interest to Halifax city. He is making his mark in the restoration of Citadel hill.

Across the whole length and breadth of this country there is ample evidence that Canadians as a nation, and this Liberal government of today, possess a full realization of the importance of preserving our records and keeping alive the glories and achievements of the past. These will be an inspiration to the present generation and the generations to come, for as time goes on immigration will bring in those not so familiar with our history. Our historic sites and monuments from Newfoundland to the Yukon should be a panorama of past achievements in one form or another.

Already the Citadel hill restoration has created interest in all parts of Canada and the United States, for no less than 40,000 visitors registered there last summer. My colleague, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey), and myself would like at this time to make the hon. minister aware that Nova Scotians are most grateful for his farsightedness, his broad vision, his devoted interest and his introduction of Bill No. 110.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, when this bill has been passed, I trust that the historic sites and monuments board of Canada, being then on a statutory basis, will feel sufficiently secure in their position to be able to go ahead and suitably mark and otherwise deal with historic sites without giving consideration to religious or other matters which may come into the question.

I say this because of what happened a year or two ago. An association was formed in and around Calgary for the purpose of restoring and suitably marking the first church built in southern Alberta, at Morley, between Calgary and Banff, on the Stony Indian reservation. This association wanted some official backing and financial assistance. They wrote to me and asked me to take up the matter with the minister and the historic sites and monuments board. I spoke to the minister about it and he seemed quite favourably disposed. He thought perhaps it was a good idea to have this church restored and properly looked after. However, he said the thing would have to be referred to this historic sites and monuments board. It was duly referred there and the answer came back that they did not make it a practice to mark or otherwise deal with sites in connection with which there was any religious association, or something along that line. As a result that particular church and site, at which the first church was established in Alberta, has not yet received any help or been recommended for recognition.

It seems to me that considerations of that kind should not enter into the matter. As I say, I would hope that when this board is set up on a statutory basis it will feel sufficiently secure in its position to deal with these questions of historic sites which come to its attention on their merits and not from the point of view of religious, racial or other considerations which may affect the site and its marking. I mention this matter again at this moment, not only to recommend it once more to the minister but to bring it again to the attention of the historic sites and monuments board in the hope that something definite will be done with regard to this particular historic site.

Mr. G. M. Murray (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, the bill before this house will perform a most important service if it merely keeps the story correctly recorded. We are proud of our historical background in the Cariboo. Anyone who lives as I do on the banks of the Peace river would naturally be interested in the history of that northern area.

In 1805 a magnificent trading post was established at the headwaters of the Peace river by Alexander Mackenzie of the North West Company at Fort McLeod. Fort McLeod appears in all the histories of British Columbia and western Canada. When Alexander Mackenzie made his historic journey overland to Bella Coola he made a journey that stands out in the history of America. He directed that Fort McLeod on McLeod lake be established.

One would think that an historic site of that kind would be marked by a cairn or monument, possibly to the great highlander Mackenzie. But time marches on and what do we find? About one year ago "Fort McLeod, B.C." was removed body and breeches to Alberta and placed in the riding of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). The name was taken off the official records of Canada. This fort, established as it was in 1805, was taken to Macleod, Alberta, and attached to that small cattle town down below Calgary, possibly for the enjoyment of United States tourists.

That incident was most regrettable, and is something which should be corrected through the provisions of this bill which is before the house. There is an ancient moral law that you must not change boundary lines or historical monuments in a country.

It is a great pleasure to us that Dr. W. Kaye Lamb, a native son of British Columbia who was born on the banks of the Fraser river, now the dominion archivist and one of the most distinguished members of the public service of our country, is a member of this board. I know Dr. Lamb will co-operate in seeing that in future there are no more of these gross deeds committed such as changing British Columbia historical place names. I hope that in due time Fort McLeod will be returned to its ancient and beautiful site on McLeod lake in northern British Columbia, on the pine pass highway.

There is one other matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister in the hope that under this bill something will be done to improve and make beautiful the cemetery at Barkerville, British Columbia, which contains the ashes of some of the most gallant and distinguished pioneers our country has known. Barkerville cemetery at the present time is overgrown with thorns, thistles and other wild things. The fence is broken down.

There should be a permanent monument to these men who were actually the first gold seekers in British Columbia, regardless of what the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has to say about it. In 1858 they were taking small quantities of gold out of Williams creek at Barkerville, and in 1860 the value increased to millions of pounds annually, though the mines were five hundred miles from the Pacific coast and accessible only by means of a very rough trail.

In that historic cemetery are the remains of the great Cariboo Cameron who came from Glengarry. He went into Barkerville in the early sixties and made a vast fortune in the mining of gold which he took back to Glengarry and spent handsomely on his relatives and friends. He then returned to Barkerville to make a second fortune. The story of Cariboo Cameron is one of the epics of Canadian frontier life, as is also that of Twelve-foot Davis, who was one of his associates.

The remains of men of that type lie in Barkerville cemetery. Something should be done to make this cemetery a permanent memorial to the early pioneers of our country, as has been done at Halifax and elsewhere.

I want to say a word with respect to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and his fine tribute of a purely political nature, which I do not think had any place at all in this debate, in which he referred to Hon. Joseph Martin, who was premier of British Columbia in 1900. If I heard him correctly, he identified Martin either with the socialists or with what at that time was the embryo of the C.C.F. If he did that he did an injustice to one of the great men of that day, Joseph Martin, a Liberal and Liberal premier of British Columbia for a very brief period, but one of the great reformers of his time. He was a native of Milton, Ontario, who sat not only in the British Columbia legislative assembly but was at one time or another attorney general of Manitoba, a member of the Canadian House of Commons, and to top it all went over to England and became a member of the British house for East St. Pancras. He was a distinguished lawyer and statesman, perhaps a bit rebellious and original in his approach to matters of state but nevertheless a very great man.

Together with the late Mackenzie King and the late Ralph Smith of Nanaimo, who was president of the federation of labour in Canada at that time, he brought about labour legislation which had such an influence upon the industrial life of our country. Let us keep the record straight, give credit where it is due and certainly erect appropriate memorials. As a matter of fact some of these Liberals do not need anything in brass or stone. Their names and their works live after them, and that is about the best memorial any man could wish for.

Mr. H. P. Cavers (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, when I heard the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) refer to a famous Nova Scotian, Joseph Howe, I thought it was a creditable thing that he should refer to a celebrated figure of his native province. However, it occurred to me that probably we are not carrying out the suggestions of Joseph Howe as we should be. Our neighbours to the south have found it to their advantage to take note of and mark some of their famous historic sites in order that their newer citizens and the young people of their country may have some interest in their past history.

In the constituency which I represent we have Fort Mississauga at Niagara-on-the-Lake which is not only a place of local interest but one of international importance. It was a celebrated fort in the war of 1812. In recent years it has fallen gradually into a dilapidated condition, a state of disrepair. I suggest that the board which is being set up might consider the restoration and preservation of the fort in its natural state in order that it might retain its place in the historic life of the country.

I should like to refer to another place which, although probably not an historic site, certainly is a hallowed spot; that is the memorial tower in these buildings. I am informed that the Book of Remembrance contains the names of veterans of the war of 1914-18. I should like to see a book of remembrance prepared commemorating the names of those persons who gave their lives in the second world war. I am not prepared to say whether there is sufficient space to house a book of this kind in the present memorial tower, but I believe that certainly some place in this building should be set aside as a sacred spot to house a book of remembrance containing the names of those persons who gave their lives in the second world war.

I believe the permanent board that is being set up to look after matters of historic importance might consider these facts. If they undertake their work in a conscientious manner—and I know they will—there are many places throughout the length and breadth of the country that should be suitably marked in order that they may stand as monuments to the efforts of people who in past years have helped to build the history of the country.

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would not have entered the debate if it had not been for the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) making some reference to the first case of trade unionism in the British empire. Apparently the house is not aware of the case of the Tolpuddle martyrs. I want to bring to the attention of the house that the first member for Bytown, Mr. S. Derbyshire, was the defender of these martyrs. He was one of the counsel employed to defend them in 1834. I think that shows that predecessor parliaments in the days of Upper Canada were founded on a spirit of tolerance and justice. I merely wanted to mention that because it appears to be a historic fact that has not been remembered.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, sometimes during a session there are occasions when one can look over our country and pick out bits of history that need to be recorded. I am very happy indeed that the historic sites and monuments board does such recording almost continuously. A short time ago I became interested in reading something of the early explorations of the prairie provinces. What intrigued me first of all was to learn from Rev. J. W. Whillans, of Vancouver, that in the call letters of the C.B.C. station at Watrous, Saskatchewan, CBK, the K stands for Kelsey, the man who first travelled along the North Saskatchewan river in 1690. That story has only recently come to light in our archives. I believe his diaries were read after having been lost for almost two centuries.

We know very little about the early history of the prairie provinces, and it seems to me that a great deal more research should be done for the purpose of marking historic sites and remembering those who have explored the regions which today have become settled and are becoming more important to our country and more prosperous as the days go by. As I understand it, there are few monuments to this young man who at 20 years of age was sent to Churchill by the Hudson's Bay Company. After he had been there for a while he was sent out to get furs and to try to negotiate with the bands of Indians who then roamed our western plains. On that journey he spent two years. I am told there is a cross to his memory at The Pas, but I believe that is the only monument to his memory to be found anywhere on the prairies or elsewhere in Canada. Yet it was this forgotten young explorer who first saw the North Saskatchewan river flowing through the prairies and who penetrated to the South Saskatchewan and the Battle river. He probably was the first English-speaking explorer to see either northern Saskatchewan or northern Alberta.

It seems to me the board, with the assistance of the archives and the government, might do a little more to give us a story of the early explorers, both of the French who saw the southern plains first and of this young English explorer who saw the northern part of the prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and probably Alberta—for the first time in the year 1690.

Since we are discussing these historic sites and historic monuments, there indeed is a field that might be explored a little more than we have been able to explore it in years gone by. There is, too, the problem of the preservation of historic spots. In my own province of Saskatchewan we have the rifle pits around Duck lake where the last Riel rebellion was fought. Some may object to calling it the Riel rebellion because it was the protest against the threatened loss of the lands of the French-speaking metis who were in that area of Saskatchewan. The rifle pits are being obliterated.

These historic sites, so few of them, which are marks of our early years in our prairies and indeed in other provinces, should be carefully preserved so that in future years students and others interested may visit them.

After all, to appreciate the history of a country and its people, one needs to know something of what they did, how they lived and what they went through, particularly in their early years. I think the reason we find it sometimes difficult for boys and girls, students of our primary schools and high schools, to become interested in the history of our country, which is very fascinating, is because we have not marked some of those spots, and we have not shown them where certain events of interest to our country occurred in days gone by. I think perhaps those of us who had the opportunity when we were young of living in a historic city, for example, and of learning our history by visiting places in those cities—the city gates, the city walls, the city castle and the old cathedral with its wonderful craftsmanship of the middle ages—have a greater interest in the history of our people and our country.

It seems to me that this parliament might do more, as outlined in the Massey commission recommendations, to assist with the marking of historic spots and with their preservation so that young Canadians in years to come can better understand the history of French Canada, the history of English Canada, the history of Acadia, and of the explorers who crossed the Rockies and went down the rivers of British Columbia. Canada might, of course, have owned the western states of Washington and California if our forebears had indeed known more about the country.

I just wanted to rise, when this opportunity was given to the house, to suggest that a great deal more should be done to encourage the board and the government to mark places of significance in the early history of Canada. One of the individuals whose life, explorations, diaries and works should be studied is the young man whose surname gives the call letter to CBK at Watrous, the young man who served the Hudson's Bay Company and explored our northern prairie region, Henry Kelsey, who thus deserves more recognition than he has received.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on this matter by reason of the fact that a few moments ago the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray) spoke and registered some little complaint. In listening to him I gathered that it was assumed that Fort McLeod had been taken from his constituency and moved to mine. Now that is just not so. It is true that there was a community in the Cariboo constituency known as Fort McLeod, but Fort Macleod has been an historic spot in southern Alberta for around 75 years. That figure would not perhaps impress those from eastern Canada very greatly, but 75 years back, nearly a hundred years back, there was nothing at all in western Canada except Indian tribes.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Fort Macleod was known in those days and established as an outpost by what was then the North West Mounted Police. The town of Macleod, from which the constituency which I have the honour to represent is named, was in the early days known as Fort Macleod. Eventually the post office there became known as Macleod, and it was so indicated in the post office guide.

In the early days that fort was a landmark in the southern part of Alberta and the post of the historic North West Mounted Police. I am reminded by my leader here that Fort Macleod of that area was for many years the only outpost of the North West Mounted Police west of Regina. It was largely because of the establishment of Fort Macleod in southern Alberta that law and order was brought to western Canada, at least to the regions beyond Regina.

The old barracks of the North West Mounted Police stood for many years in the town of Macleod, but one by one they were allowed to deteriorate until today there is not much of the original buildings left standing. I believe it is a shame that this fort with all its historic significance was allowed to deteriorate. Had this present measure been effective right along throughout the years perhaps these buildings would not have been allowed to deteriorate and almost completely disappear.

I therefore welcome this measure and ask the minister to exercise his authority under it, as will many other hon. members for certain sites in their own constituencies. I believe that Fort Macleod in southern Alberta has a sort of priority in claim to be restored and for suitable monuments to be placed there. Many books have been written about the experiences and the life of the people in that part of the country in the early days.

I might mention this, Mr. Speaker, in connection with what was said by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray). He assumed that the fort was moved. That is not so. What happened was simply this. Interested and civic-minded citizens of the town of Macleod, seeing what was happening in respect to the old fort, wanted to call a halt to it. Recognizing that the town of Macleod had a historic background, they desired only to restore the original name, and they took appropriate action. Today that town is now known as the town of Fort Macleod. I believe it will now become necessary to amend even the Canada Elections Act to have the constituency known as the constituency of Fort Macleod. That is desirable, in any event.

I might say this. Perhaps I am a bit rusty on my western Canada geography, but quite frankly I may say that I did not know there was a post office named Fort McLeod away up in the Cariboo country until the name of the town of Macleod in southern Alberta was restored to its original name of Fort Macleod. Then I addressed a letter to one of my constituents in Fort Macleod and had it returned by the post office authorities, who said that the only Fort McLeod they knew of was in British Columbia. That was the first time I had known that there was a Fort McLeod in British Columbia.

The only thing that has happened is that the town of Macleod has now reverted to its original name of Fort Macleod. It does have a history, and an exceedingly important one. I ask the minister to take this fact into account when he exercises his authority under this particular measure.

(Translation):

Mr. A. M. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to add a few words to the interesting and constructive remarks made this evening concerning the bill now before the house. I make it a point to speak in my mother tongue because I deem that it is appropriate and advisable that a French voice should intermingle with others tonight to speak briefly about the establishment of a historic sites and monuments board for Canada, as expressly provided for in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the descendants of old France have been, along with those of the emerald isle and of the Anglo-Saxon race, the architects of Canadian history. That is why I rise tonight to bring my small contribution to this debate.

The historic sites and monuments board of Canada, which is provided for in the bill, should be, as I have pointed out, truly representative of the country, not merely from a geographical or purely provincial point of view, but especially from the ethnical point of view. The government should not forget that. I wish to stress that the ethnical factor must not be overlooked and that one of the members of this commission should be of Acadian descent, a son of old Acadia. Consequently, I am making the suggestion to the Hon. Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) that at least one representative of Acadian origin should be appointed to this commission. After all, Mr. Speaker, we Acadians have a history and it is quite a history, some chapters of which were extremely tragic and even prompted one of the greatest American poets, Longfellow, to immortalize the history of Acadia in his poem "Evangeline".

We have our own mentality, our own ways and customs. We have also our culture. I say that we make up a very important element in the French population of this country. We should be represented on this commission. I contend that, if there is no historian of Acadian origin on this commission, very important chapters of our history will be overlooked.

I therefore suggest to the minister that since the Acadians now make up one of the most important groups out of the total population of New Brunswick, it would only be fair and logical that the representative of our province on this commission be an Acadian. We do have highly competent historians. Why should a place not be found for them on the commission?

Those are the remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wished to make with regard to this debate. I could of course go on to mention the very important historic sites in our province of New Brunswick, especially in the northern part, but I realize that the minister, coming as he does from the maritimes, will see to it that after the demands of the western provinces have been satisfied, those of the maritimes will be looked after, but especially that the Acadians will have one representative out of three. Once more I stress the importance of having a historian of Acadian origin as a member of this commission. Before resuming my seat, I thank the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) for having mentioned Acadia in his remarks.

(Text):

Mr. Maurice Boisvert (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to this legislation. I think it is appropriate that a voice from Quebec should be raised in support of this motion. History is the background of any civilization and, as everybody in this house knows, Quebec is the background of the national history of this country.

We do not envy any historical site in any other province. We are in full agreement with all those who have taken part in this debate and who have claimed that historic sites in various provinces should be brought to the attention of the children and also of the grown-up people. Nevertheless I think great consideration should be given to the historical sites of the province of Quebec because we have sites whence came discoverers of the western provinces, of the western part of the United States and of many other places in America.

I am therefore asking the minister that, in organizing the body which will take care of the historical sites of the province of Quebec, he give great consideration to those various sites in our province which are known by us but not always by everybody else in this country. I have confidence in the government that our province will not be neglected in the organization of a scheme which will appeal to the people of Canada in regard to these sites. If they come to my constituency they will discover quite a lot of historical sites that should be known by many people in our country.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I think representatives from nearly all the provinces have had something to say on this bill with which everybody is in agreement. I do not think there is any voice that could be raised against a constitutional board of this kind; but I am wondering whether it is going to make any difference to the work that has been carried on by voluntary organizations for so long. They have found and marked over four hundred spots in the dominion and I think there is only one place now that has not been given due attention, namely the new province of Newfoundland, which tomorrow will commemorate the fourth anniversary of its entry into the Dominion of Canada.

When we came into the Dominion of Canada four years ago we may not have brought very much material wealth, but we brought a wealth of historical tradition, because we can lay claim now to being the oldest part of this dominion, having been discovered in 1497 by John Cabot, and having had people settled there before Champlain came to Quebec. We had efforts at settlement made in 1610 by John Guy, but there are people in Newfoundland today who claim that their ancestors were settled in Newfoundland before John Guy attempted to found his colony. We have on the east coast of Newfoundland an area between Bonavista and Trepassey which is full of historical places. There I could mention Cupids, where John Guy attempted to found his colony; Ferryland, where Calvert, Lord Baltimore, attempted to found a colony until he was driven off by the hostilities of the French fleet and went to found a colony at Baltimore, Maryland. Then we have Carbonear and Bonavista, two places which were able to hold out against the attacks of the French army, which had come overland and captured all the fishing settlements except these two places. We have Placentia, which was for many years the headquarters of the French occupation, and where the French Franciscans appointed from Quebec by Monsignor de St. Valier were established for many years and where were found up to a few years ago Basque tombstones going back to the sixteenth century. I saw them myself, but I believe they were removed by people who came and saw those ancient monuments and took them away.

We have a good many other historical places which I hope will soon be marked. I do not know of anything that has been marked down there since we came into confederation, except a monument to Alcock and Brown, who were the first airmen to fly directly across the Atlantic. We had the first trans-Atlantic wireless, the first trans-Atlantic cable and many other interesting historical associations that have yet to be marked. But the principal part, it seems to me, is that area that I have described: Bonavista, which was supposed to be the first place in North America which was seen by a person coming from Europe, and St. John's, which was supposed to be the first place that Cabot entered.

I certainly agree with the previous speaker with respect to the importance of Quebec. There is no doubt that Quebec has a glorious history, from the time of Cartier, Champlain, Maisonneuve and all those wonderful Franciscan, Sulpician and Jesuit missionaries who went with the explorers across this country and into the trackless wilderness and lived for many years with the Indians, endeavouring to bring to them the virtues and benefits of Christian civilization.

It seems to me that perhaps the historic sites and monuments board has not given as much consideration as it should to some of the places where these people laboured. I am thinking particularly of Huronia, where the Ontario government and private archaeologists have done so much work in digging up the remains of the forts at Midland where the Jesuit Brébeuf and his companions were martyred over three hundred years ago.

There is no doubt there is a great work ahead for this board, and now that they are going to be put on a new basis where they will receive compensation for their services, I hope the work they do will be such as will merit the gratitude of hon. members and the people of this country. I hope, too, that it will mean a new inspiration to the youth of this country to labour as those distinguished people whose names I have mentioned, or who have been mentioned in this debate this evening, have laboured for the benefit of those who were to come after them.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I want to take a little different line from the previous speakers I have heard—and I have only heard a couple. Nevertheless I am not particularly interested in having any new historic sites erected in my riding. The very name itself is historic enough. It is one that will be historic here long after many other ridings are no longer remembered.

We have three historic monuments in my riding, Mr. Speaker, that I am particularly interested in. The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray) spoke of the historic sites in my riding. I presume the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) has also spoken. He has a very historic site in his riding, Bamfield, an outstanding part of his riding. I am not so much interested in the board as in the sites that we have now, namely at Alexander, Yale and Hope in my riding.

Not so long ago I got a letter from somebody in the department asking me for the name of an individual who would take care of one of these sites—and this is not patronage; if my hon. friends in the opposition think so I will give them that part of the patronage. In the province of British Columbia we either give our services for nothing or we believe that the labourer is worthy of his hire. We go to a lot of trouble and write a lot of books about these historical sites; we give people degrees and they put D.P.Q.'s and O.B.C.'s and other titles after their names, but what do they offer a man to care for one of these sites? They offer him $40. If I were a minister I would not even have my tongue in my cheek if I offered anybody the sum of $40 a year to care for a site.

I live in British Columbia near one of these sites.

An hon. Member: Are you trying to delay the passage of the bill?

Mr. Cruickshank: We have ample time to get it through before ten o'clock. I live in a place where there are real sites. I want to mention one. At Hope there is a cairn on the bank of the Fraser river to mark the site of Fort Hope which was built by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1848, about the year some of the members over here were born. They offered a caretaker the sum of $40 to look after that site for one year.

We have another site here, and the caretaker does not even get $40. At Yale a large boulder with an inscription is being placed to mark the site of old Fort Yale, one of the terminals of the Cariboo wagon road built in 1862-65, which extended north 400 miles to the gold mines of the Cariboo, the area to which one of the speakers referred this evening.

These are historic sites. At Yale they had to discontinue their vegetable gardens because the gold was getting mixed in with the roots of the carrots and killing them off. They pay $35 a year for the care of that site.

And then, under this bountiful historic sites branch, there is the cairn to mark the site of Fort Alexandria, built in 1921. This was the last post established by the North West Company west of the Rocky mountains, and the farthest point reached by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his descent of the Fraser river in 1793. Adjacent to this point is the old Cariboo road across the Fraser, and the first suspension bridge ever built in the province. It was constructed in 1863.

The nearest residents are the people in an automobile camp located about two miles away. The only other people in the locality are those on an Indian reservation about eleven miles away. Back here in the east they will get a man to come and look after the grass, possibly without charge. In the cases I have mentioned they pay $40 a year in one instance and $35 in another.

And if we are going to have monuments erected to historic structures, let me say that I travelled on one of them tonight, one of the original street cars brought over by Christopher Columbus. They are still operating right here in Ottawa. If we are going to look after historic sites, then I believe in looking after the ones we have right here.

I do not wish to speak longer, because I would like to see the bill go through before ten o'clock. I am going out to British Columbia on Wednesday, and I want to be able to tell the people of Hope that they are not going to be insulted by having only $40 a year paid to care for a memorial, and at a time when Ottawa is surrounded by monuments to the dead and to the living. The monuments to the dead are all around the building, maintained at great expense, while the living are being looked after by the taxpayers of Ottawa.

I am serious about this. I ask the minister to give a reasonable amount to pay for looking after these historic sites, and not to insult the people in British Columbia, particularly those in the Fraser valley, by offering only $40 a year to look after an historic monument.

(Translation):

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the best way to preserve these relics of the past which will be for growing generations undying memorials, is to contribute to the preservation in our historic sites of these old houses, old sections, such as the fortified walls of Quebec, for example. Let us remember these immortal verses of the poet who said once:

Voulez-vous qu'une tour, voulez-vous qu'une [église]
Soient des monuments dont l'âme idéalise
A la fois la forme et la hauteur,
Attendez que de mousse elles soient revêtues
Et laissez travailler à toutes les statues
Le temps, ce grand sculpteur.

Mr. Speaker, we have in the old city of Quebec, symbolized in the maze of our streets, an epic of our history. The old city of Quebec was the first to be founded on this North American continent. I am myself a member of the Quebec town planning commission and whenever a problem relating to the preservation of an historical monument arises, we are faced with the following question: Where will we find the money to preserve it? Where will we find the money to restore it, to compensate the owner? Where, finally, can we find what is needed to ensure that this building retains its historical appeal?

I congratulate the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) who has seen to the setting up of this board. I wonder though if it would not be possible for this board, set up by the federal government, to co-operate effectively with the similar boards already set up in our municipalities. In this way Quebec may be ensured this perpetual reminder of its historical landmarks and the rising generations, as well as the tourists who visit this country, will therefore see how we respect these old stones which, in every case, mark a passing stage in our history.

In my capacity as a member of the Quebec town planning commission I have often noticed how commercialized vandalism had invaded our old city, at certain times, so as to satisfy the claims of an exaggerated materialism. In each case we have always been unable, for lack of money, to find a solution to this problem.

I know that the hon. minister is well disposed towards the old province of Quebec and I presume that his enlightened patriotism will enable him to find some means of ensuring the survival of the local boards which were created in order to preserve these old houses of ours. He will thus contribute to the maintenance in Quebec of a group of historical monuments, an action for which the province of Quebec will be grateful.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Bater: I wish to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the house. This legislation is to put in statute form what has existed for about 25 years. We have had a commission looking after historic sites; and the government thought in its wisdom, and I thought myself, that we should put this in statutory form. There is nothing new in it. We have had some very nice speeches. I applauded most of them, and enjoyed all of them. Why could we not pass this bill tonight?

Mr. Drew: Yes, I think so.

Mr. Bater: Then I shall withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Board established.

Mr. Churchill: I wish to say a word or two with regard to this section, as I have been waiting most patiently listening to some of the very interesting speeches that have been made. I am concerned with the actual functioning of this board, and I think the attention of the committee should be directed to the fact that not all the recommendations of the Massey commission have been carried into effect in drawing up this bill. There has been one major omission and one addition which I should like to query and ask the minister to comment upon.

This section provides that the chief curator of the national museum of Canada shall be a member of the board. I question very much the necessity of that provision, which was not a recommendation of the Massey commission. I do not see any connection between the national museum and the historic sites and monuments board. It is not a question of personalities at all, or who happens to be the chief curator of the national museum at the present time, or who may hold that position in the future. I repeat that there is really no connection between that position and the work of the historic sites and monuments board.

In fact if the recommendations of the Massey commission are carried out with regard to the national museum there will be more than sufficient work for the curator of that museum to attend to without having any additional burden placed upon his shoulders as provided for in this bill. The objectionable feature is that it creates a statutory obligation upon the chief curator of the national museum to attend meetings of the historic sites and monuments board and have placed upon his shoulders responsibilities connected with the work of that board. As the Massey commission points out, the national museum will be concerned with such matters as geology, botany, zoology and natural history, all of which have nothing particularly to do with historic sites and monuments. I shall not deal further with that point.

My second comment is that the Massey commission recommended that two members of this board be nominated by the Canadian historical association, and I quote from page 348 of the report as follows:

> Two members to be nominated by the council of the Canadian historical association, similarly for five-year terms and similarly eligible for reappointment for one further term.

I think there is a great deal of merit in that recommendation, for several reasons. The present and future members of the board may be either professional historians, if I may use that term, or amateur historians, as are many members of the House of Commons. They may very well be people who are keenly interested in the history of Canada. On the other hand, from time to time the membership of the board may comprise those who have not an adequate knowledge of the history of Canada, such as obviously is in the possession of the members of the council of the Canadian historical association. I think it would be most useful to have, as has been suggested, two members of that association appointed to this board. It would have value in that you would have on the board competent and trained historians. It would have value in that the Canadian historical association would have a continuing interest in the functioning of the board, and at its annual meetings or on other occasions would presumably have reports from the members of this board and would give close attention to what the historic sites and monuments board was doing.

I think it is in the general interest of this board and of Canadians that there should be wide interest throughout Canada in the work of this historic sites and monuments board, and that can be provided by members of the council of the Canadian historical association who are trained historians and have a background connected with this work.

I would imagine that if it were given the privilege to do so, this organization would from time to time appoint to the board men of outstanding qualities and with special interest in historic sites and monuments. Those are the two things I wanted to draw to the attention of the minister and I would appreciate his comments.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, very briefly may I say that the national museum has an archaeology section which is concerned with the excavation of historic sites in many parts of Canada, including some outstanding ones now being made on Manitoulin island. It seemed important to the members of the historic sites and monuments board, to myself and to the government that the curator of the national museum, which is responsible for archaeological work on behalf of the federal government, should be a member of this historic sites and monuments board.

I think the recommendation that there should be members of the Canadian historical association on this board is a good one, and for the information of hon. members I would say that most members of the board are also members of the historical association of Canada and therefore almost all of them meet the qualifications set forth by the hon. member in his remarks to the committee.

Mr. Churchill: Although they may be members of the Canadian historical association, I suggest that if that association had the responsibility of nominating two members on its own account instead of its being done by the governor in council you might get a more satisfactory result.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Winters moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall take up the third reading of Bill No. 107, to amend the Post Office Act; then Bill No. 225, to amend the Excise Tax Act; then Bill No. 230, to provide for the government of the Yukon Territory; then Bill No. 109, to authorize the grant of assistance to a province for the conservation of water resources; then Bill No. 293, to implement the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the North Pacific ocean; then Bill No. 37, to amend the Indian Act; then Bill No. 190, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act. If we have time we would like to pass the resolution respecting the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 31, 1953

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE QUEEN MARY

OBSERVANCE OF PERIOD OF SILENCE

Mr. Speaker: This morning, as hon. members know, the funeral service of our late dearly beloved Queen Mary was conducted at Windsor by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition have suggested to me that it would be fitting if, before the business of the day is entered upon, hon. members would rise for a few minutes of silence.

Whereupon the house rose in silence.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, March 30, 1953

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Tuesday, the 31st March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Seventh report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN

ERECTION OF STATUE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Hon. members, I believe, will be interested in a report on the progress made since I announced on February 5 that it is the intention of the government to recommend the erection of a statue to mark the services to Canada of the late Sir Robert Borden.

Since that time the matter has been carefully considered by the board of trustees of the National Gallery of Canada and I now have their recommendation, which has been concurred in by the government.

It is proposed to have the design selected as the result of a competition which will be open to sculptors normally resident in Canada. The base is to be of stone or granite and the figure, which is to be standing, is to be of bronze. The dimensions of the statue will be similar to those of the statue to the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the grounds of the parliament buildings. The announcement of the competition is being made immediately and it is hoped that the closing date for designs may be set early in the summer so that the statue may be completed in time for unveiling next year on the 100th anniversary of Sir Robert Borden's birth. The cost is estimated at between $40,000 and $50,000.

The winner of the competition, of course, will be awarded the contract for the statue, but in order to promote interest among sculptors and also so that not all but one will spend time on producing a design at a loss to themselves, it is proposed to make six additional cash awards of $300 to the six sculptors whose designs are considered most meritorious following the winning design.

Steps will be taken to announce the competition widely through Canada and I am hopeful that the designs which will be produced will be of high quality and in keeping with the service rendered to Canada by the man who was prime minister during the difficult days of world war I.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAN-AMERICAN UNION—STATEMENT BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO COLOMBIA

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) inquired about a report that had been published in the newspapers attributing to the Canadian ambassador to Colombia a statement that Canada might eventually join the Pan-American Union if the union tendered such an invitation, and he inquired whether there had been any change in the government's policy. The answer will be found in Hansard of Friday, March 27, at page 3341. He then asked whether the department would inquire of the ambassador whether this report of the statement attributed to him was correct or not, and I told him that an inquiry had already been sent to the ambassador. The department received on Saturday the answer which I would have communicated yesterday had the hon. member been in his seat. It is as follows:

Did not say Canada would accept invitation if tendered but question of pressmen was whether partnership in commonwealth was obstacle to joining because of link to crown and reply was that there existed no constitutional or juridical impediment since Canada as independent nation is free to determine own policy regarding membership in any international or regional organization as shown by membership in many such. Definitely did not, repeat not, say that Canada might eventually join if invited. Local press correctly interpreted sense of my words as clippings to be airmailed shortly will bear out and I cannot understand how different meaning was conveyed to Canadian newspapers unless press news agency misunderstood, because whole press conference in Spanish without interpreters. Incidentally press conference was great success eliciting in all papers testimony of most gratifying liking and admiration for Canada. Colombians all wonderfully friendly.

NEWFOUNDLAND

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRANCE INTO CONFEDERATION

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I have your indulgence for a moment. As it is March 31, 1954, I believe possibly—

Some hon. Members: 1953.

Mr. Higgins: 1953 is right. I thought I might say 1954 and then it might be remembered. As it is quite possible that the snow will fly before the next parliament meets and that this is the last parliament that some of us from Newfoundland may be in, I should like to say on behalf of the Newfoundland members of parliament, on this fourth anniversary, how happy we have been in this parliament and to convey to you, sir, our sincere thanks for your kindness to all of us.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might make a few remarks in addition to those which have been made by my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): As I have not been here on any other occasion when this anniversary came around, I think I may also claim the indulgence of the house. If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to make a personal reference. As some hon. members may know, I was in the party opposed to confederation. Although I was not free and in politics at the time but was in the government service, I did not wish to see confederation. Four years ago today I was in the city of London, England, and I bought all the morning newspapers to see what they had to say about what was taking place. Most of them had nothing to say whatever; there were two or three references to the act of union that was being consummated, and one expressed regret and said that it was too bad to see an old dominion going out of existence.

I felt extremely sad at that time, and there were many others in Newfoundland who felt as I did. Since that time I have come to regard the situation in a different light. After having been proud of our almost continuous association with England since 1497, and having been boastful of the fact that we were England's oldest colony, to be cut adrift like that without a word hurt a great many of us. But now we see that England had her own problems and that probably what she was doing then was being cruel in order to be kind. On this side of the water there was rejoicing and I personally received, from friends I had made here when I was for four years at the University of Toronto, an extremely cordial welcome into the union which I did not appreciate then as much as I have appreciated it since. Time has dissipated to a great extent the sadness which I then felt, and I am inclined to think that the majority of people who felt as I did in 1949 feel much as I do now. We were inclined to think then that it was a forced union, and I am not inclined to differ from that opinion yet; but still I believe it was to our mutual advantage.

I have heard here many nice references to our country, and I appreciate them greatly. It is extremely interesting and nice to hear the glowing accounts which visitors to Newfoundland bring back as a result of their visits. The latest one I heard was that of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier); and I am glad to know that in the city of St. John's, where the majority of members are of a political persuasion different from his own—

Mr. Chevrier: I doubt that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): —he was accorded a cordial welcome, and that he enjoyed his visit there. After four years I think that the feeling has changed a great deal towards union with Canada. I think we can appreciate the great benefits which union has brought to us and I think we can look forward with hope to taking greater advantage of it in the future. I believe that this union will work out to our mutual advantage.

LEAD AND ZINC

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORTS INDICATING HIGHER U.S. TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of recent press statements indicating higher United States tariffs on imported lead and zinc, would the minister care to comment on the situation disclosed by an article in the New York Times, a copy of which I have sent to him?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know of no move toward higher duties against Canadian metals. I read the article in the New York Times but such information as I have received does not indicate that any move of the kind is contemplated.

Prices for metals are still satisfactory, except for marginal producers. Lead and zinc have been much higher in price, but today I think the price can be considered to be normal, having in mind costs of production. The price of copper, of course, is extremely high. While Canada would protest any legislation which would tend to bar our metals from the United States market, I do not think that any such action can be expected.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REQUEST FOR RECEPTION OF DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) a request has been placed in my hands which in turn I should like to place before the Prime Minister. I am sorry I have not been able to advise him of this. Will the Prime Minister be in position to receive in Ottawa a delegation in connection with the South Saskatchewan river project? It is pointed out that this matter is of some urgency owing to the fact that many farmers will be commencing seeding in two or three weeks and thus would not be free to make the trip.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been correspondence with a group about a delegation coming to Ottawa to discuss the South Saskatchewan project. The government has been giving consideration to the reports and information available in connection with this project and is not yet in a position to fix a date on which to receive this delegation, although it intends to receive it.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTRACTS FOR CONVEYING MAIL

Hon. Alcide Cote (Postmaster General) moved the third reading of Bill No. 107, to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. P. C. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the house very long but this is an important bill which affects many people all over Canada. I had some remarks to make on the second reading of the bill and I asked that it not be rushed to the extent it was being rushed at the end of the last sitting. I give my support to this bill to amend the Post Office Act. As I stated on the second reading, I was not a member of the special committee and I have not full information as to the evidence submitted. I am disappointed that there was no representative of the mail couriers asked to be present. I certainly expected that there would be someone representing the mail couriers of Nova Scotia.

I am in agreement with the viewpoint that has been expressed, that many of these couriers have been underpaid for their services and the cost of their equipment. This condition has prevailed over many years, but nevertheless on the whole excellent service has been rendered. Some increase was granted in the war years, but many of the couriers were not advised and had no opportunity of applying for the increase. Only favoured persons received an increase on their contracts at that time.

This bill puts extensive authority in the hands of the minister, the deputy minister and the officials of the department. I am satisfied that the officials are capable, want to do their best in giving good service and will not allow partisan interference to undermine their efforts if they can prevent it. We have the personal assurance of the minister, and I assume that this will apply to his successors, that he will not allow partisanship to dominate the department. It is on this assurance that I give support to the bill.

I do not want the house to think that I believe that this has always been the case, that there has been no partisanship even in recent years. Couriers and the staff are entitled to their political opinions provided the service is not interfered with. To show that I am not gullible I am going to recount the details of one instance in my county during the last two years.

The contract for the mail service on Oxford R. R. No. 2 was for $700 per annum and expired on December 31, 1952. It was held by Mr. George E. Wood. This contractor was not satisfied and he gave three months' notice of the termination of his contract. New tenders were called but only one offer was received from the same contractor, Mr. George E. Wood, for $1,200. The Post Office Department considered this to be too high and refused to renew at that price.

The Post Office Department obtained a revised offer from Mr. Wood of $1,100, but considered that price too great also. A tender was then obtained from Leigh L. Smith at $80 per month or $960 per year. Mr. Smith had previously held the contract and had never missed a trip during this entire period. Instructions were issued on December 10, 1951, that the department was awarding the contract for one year to Leigh L. Smith at $960 per year. Mr. Smith was advised accordingly by an official of the Post Office Department.

I asked for the file which the minister sent to me. This file contained a copy of a letter dated December 3, 1951, signed by G. Herring, director of communications and addressed to C. E. Bragg, Collingwood, Nova Scotia. This reads:

> In connection with the invitation of tenders for the conveyance of mails over Oxford rural route No. 2, I wish to inform you that the department intends to award a one-year contract to Mr. Leigh L. Smith, Box 128, Oxford, who submitted the lowest offer at the rate of $960 per annum.

Everything was in order up to that point and was most creditable to the minister, to the deputy minister and to the officials of the department. But partisanship, discrimination and interference then took charge. There was another letter on this file from the Department of Resources and Development. I am not going to accuse the minister of anything, but this letter was on the file; and it reads as follows:

> Minister of Resources and Development
> Ottawa, February 11, 1952
> Mr. George Herring,
> Director of Communications,
> Post Office Department,
> Langevin Block,
> Ottawa.
> Re: Oxford Rural Route No. 2,
> Mr. George Wood, Oxford, N.S.
> Dear Mr. Herring:
>
> In accordance with our telephone conversation of this afternoon with respect to the recommendation of a carrier for the above-mentioned route, I would like on behalf of Mr. Elmer Bragg, of Amherst, to recommend that the contract for this service be continued by Mr. Wood of Oxford, who has had 12 years experience on the route. I am informed that Mr. Wood is prepared to carry on the service at $960 per annum.
> It would be appreciated if the necessary action could be taken to have Mr. Wood maintain the service at this price.
>
> Yours very truly,
> Robbins L. Elliott,
> Private Secretary.

Mr. Smith was then notified that the department would not proceed with the signing of the contract. I am supposed to believe that there was no political interference. I know that the officials of the Post Office Department were just as incensed as Mr. Smith and I. I tell the minister now that if there is to be political jobbery carried on under this bill, which we of the opposition are now supporting, we will hold him responsible. He and his department will not be keeping faith with us, with the staff or with the public with respect to the passing of this bill.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on the bill before it receives third reading. Last Friday night, March 27, the bill received second reading and was considered in committee. At that time the chairman of the committee of the whole pointed out that the bill had been carefully considered by a special committee appointed to consider it and had been reported to the house without amendment. However, considerable discussion took place, and it seemed that nobody in the committee that evening could find any report that had been made by the special committee that had been established to deal with this most important matter.

I want to say at the very beginning that I am not opposed to the bill except for one reason. There seemed to be a great hurry to get it passed the other night, and in my dealings with the Post Office Department, especially with respect to the building of post offices, I have never found them in a hurry in my life. It took seven years of talking before they showed any signs of taking action, and I could not understand why they wanted to rush this measure through so rapidly the other night. As a matter of fact, under the rules of the house it should not have been reported from the committee. At ten o'clock we were still discussing the bill, and the committee should have risen, reported progress and asked leave to sit again. In spite of the fact that a great number of members objected to what was being done, the bill was reported from the committee and it is now before the house for third reading. I think that is contrary to the rules of the house.

I believe the bill should still stand over until the special committee has had another meeting or two. We looked to this committee to deal with the problems of the rural mail couriers throughout Canada, but after the bill has received third reading they will not have the authority to do so any more and the whole matter will be whitewashed. I doubt if they will have any more meetings. Looking at the reports of the proceedings of the two or three meetings they did hold—I think there have been two printed so far—there is nothing in them except the statements of the Postmaster General and his deputy. As I have said before, this legislation simply gives them more power. It does not take any power from them but adds to their powers so that they can be almost as dictatorial as they wish to be. We are back in the old days of patronage so far as the letting of contracts is concerned.

The special committee should make recommendations before the bill passes. They were appointed for the purpose of making recommendations with respect to the mail couriers and their problems. We even find that no representatives of the mail couriers were heard. That should not be. I think at least some of the mail couriers have a right to be called before the committee and heard, and if they were in any other walk of life they would be. If it should be decided that it is not necessary to hear them, then there are members on the committee representing every province in Canada and they should bring forward recommendations on behalf of the mail couriers in their provinces.

I have discussed the question of the rural mail couriers year after year when the post office estimates have been before us. We have no opportunity to discuss the pros and cons of this bill which is being pushed through so rapidly and we are no better off than we were. The only opportunity we will have will be when the estimates of the department are being considered, and we will have to spend a great deal of time then to get the information we desire. I have referred many times to the great discrimination that exists in the letting of contracts to mail couriers. I cited two or three instances recently and I should like to cite a couple now.

I have in mind a mail courier whose contract ends in 1955 and another one whose contract ends in 1956. The man whose contract ends in 1955 has to drive a distance of 61 miles. In the summer he can use a car. In the fall, winter and spring he must use a horse and cutter or horse and wagon. All these factors should have a bearing on what he is paid under his contract. As I said a moment ago, he has to drive 61 miles every day to complete his route. For that distance he gets the princely sum of $1,440 a year, a very small wage even if it were all profit. It takes him most of the day to complete the route. We all know that if he uses a car it will take at least three gallons of gas. He has 136 stops where he has boxes to attend to, and that means that he must use more gas. Taking into account the gas and oil that he uses, and without allowing anything for repairs to his car, we find that it would cost him $1.65 for that one item which, taken from his $4.80, leaves him with a very small wage for himself, to say nothing of other expenses he might have.

We find that the man driving only 31 miles compared with the other man's 61 received $125 more. If that is not discrimination, then I do not know what discrimination is. That has been going on, and the Post Office Department now says that it wants more authority so that it can remedy such situations. If they were going to be able to remedy them under the bill, then I would vote for it a dozen times if I had a dozen votes. But they are only taking more authority into their hands without giving any assurance. The only assurance I know of was that mentioned the other night in the committee by the Postmaster General. When he was being questioned about the bill he said, as found at page 3387 of Hansard for March 27:

> We always look at all the angles.

I suppose "we" means his associates in the Post Office Department.

> Public interest was mentioned. That is one way of expressing what we are looking for. We want to see that the taxpayers of this country receive good service . . .

I can stop right there and say that there is no arm of the service, nothing in federal appointments and federal work done, to compare with the rural mail couriers who are doing an almost perfect job of work. I do not believe that there is a member in this house who will have very much complaint to the effect that people are not getting a thorough service from the mail couriers.

The Postmaster General goes on and says:

> —and we want the man who is giving the service to be paid adequately.

I agree with that.

> To achieve that we are looking at the security, the solvency of the men and the equipment, and a comparison of the routes, the number of boxes, the length of the routes; and all these considerations will be looked into and taken into consideration in the decision we are going to make.

Well, there is a recommendation that should come from the special committee, but they have not brought in any report as yet—any more than the evidence that was laid before them. They have made no recommendations.

When this bill passes, Mr. Speaker, the special committee will have no more power because the bill is already recorded as passed. I think that some action should be taken and that this should be passed over for a week or so. There is no great rush at the present time; they are not going to solve all of these cases; so let this committee bring in some recommendations that will be of benefit.

[Mr. McLure.]

Again, I want to say that I am in favour of anything that will give more security and more wages to the mail couriers. Many of them today are not making 25 cents an hour. Yesterday I received a letter from one man who drives 56 miles. At this time of year it takes him 9½ hours to complete that 56 miles, as he cannot use a car. He stated that he had to turn out the other morning at seven o'clock to start his route and he did not get through until half-past five. Of course, he might have had a half hour rest while getting his dinner somewhere on the route. However, when that man adds up what it costs him to feed his horse during the day I do not think he would be receiving any more than 15 cents or perhaps 16 cents an hour for the 9½ hours he put in.

This is a most serious matter and yet we are rushing this bill through as though it were just another bill passing. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this bill should be given further consideration, not only in the special committee but also in the committee of the house.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in this connection as a member of that committee. I think that the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure) has either been misinformed or possibly does not understand—and that is the kindest way I can put it. It is the first time since I have been in the house that it has been said that no member of a committee knew what they were doing. I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it may be all very well for home consumption in Hansard, but the previous speaker never made one suggestion as to how we could improve conditions for the rural mail couriers. He suggests that the special committee did not consider the matter; but I want to assure him, as a member of that committee, that we did consider it. We asked for suggestions as to how we could best improve the plight of the rural mail couriers. We did not have any better suggestions. We do not say and have never said that this bill is perfect. We knew of nothing better to bring in at this time to assist the mail courier—the very man whom he has read about today—and he must be an exceptional man to drive 56 miles in the snow with a horse in one day. That man is a very good man and certainly he must have an imported horse to do it.

Mr. McWilliam: From the Fraser valley.

Mr. Cruickshank: No, we do not have any horses like that, and we do not abuse any kind of animal. It is wrong to say that the committee did not endeavour to do anything. The member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), a very superior member in any party, let alone where he sits, realized that we were trying to do something. The opposition had as good members on that committee as there were from other parties. They were just as sincere as any members of the committee and they would have liked to bring down something that would have solved the problem. However, they also realized, as the hon. member for Queens apparently does not, that conditions vary in each riding within a province, and that in each province of Canada climatic and other conditions also vary.

I would like the hon. member for Queens to take an hour and a half or five hours of the time of this house—well, not of this house because we have business to do—and come up to my office or, if he likes, up to the committee room, and make one concrete suggestion about how he would solve this problem in all provinces of Canada.

The new bill, I think, is discretionary and it is an endeavour to assist the very men he has been mentioning who are underpaid but who work on a voluntary bid. Nobody told them to bid the rate they did on their particular contracts. They had a right to bid as they saw fit and possibly they bid too low. The minister now has at least discretionary powers to assist in that particular route and in other routes. So, Mr. Speaker, I very much resent the insinuation that this committee, composed of members of all parties, did nothing. They made a sincere effort and we discussed the matter among ourselves. If the hon. member for Queens will read the evidence he will see where we asked whether anyone had anything better to offer in the interests of the rural mail couriers. We received nothing more concrete. We considered, as I am sure the hon. member has too, the possibility of establishing a mileage basis, or a set salary and a gasoline allowance, as well as whether these should be civil service appointments. In our judgment we know of no better system at the present time to assist the couriers—and above all to assist the man to whom he has just referred—not next year, not ten years from now, but as soon as this bill is passed.

Mr. H. A. MacKenzie (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I think I should make a few comments on this at this time as I was a member of the committee. Bill 107, which was presented to amend the Post Office Act, was a very simple bill. Two years ago a bill was introduced to amend the Post Office Act which gave the postal authorities jurisdiction or authority to adjust salaries where necessary on any contract up to $1,000 but not beyond that. To me that was quite an unfair piece of legislation. If it was fair to adjust salaries up to $1,000 it should also have applied to contracts for $1,100 or $1,200 or any other amount. This bill merely extends the legislation of 1951, to embrace a contract of any size so that the authorities after inquiry may make adjustments.

I can quite readily see that it was not very fair to try to renew contracts on the same basis as applied four years ago because the couriers have a lot more work to do in suburban areas. They have literally hundreds more of boxes. If I understand the bill, and if I understand the Postmaster General, each case will be gone into individually and adjustments will be made or will be provided for to take care of any situation in any rural route regardless of where it may be situated.

I believe that this amending bill is at least a step in the right direction and that it was pretty well considered. The member for Queens, who has just spoken, has said that there were no recommendations. However, at the time we probably could have made some recommendations but they would not affect this bill. The post office committee will make suggestions to the government and I hope that they will be unanimous in an effort to put this whole policy on a much higher level than it is today.

Unfortunately I was not able to attend the last committee meeting on the 19th when the bill was adopted, but I do feel that the matter of the tender system should have been given more consideration. Probably the system could not have been changed, but I think it should have been discussed a little further. I have said many time in this house, and I still say, that there are no other employees in the postal service carrying Her Majesty's mail who have to obtain employment through the tender system except the rural mail carriers. There is something to be said along that line. So far as the bill itself is concerned, it is certainly a step in the right direction and I believe all members approve of it.

Once more I want to clarify the fact that the committee is not defunct in any sense of the word. We are going to meet and we are going to make recommendations which we hope the Post Office Department will accept, and which we hope will bring about some improvement in the rural mail carrier service.

Mr. Speaker: At this time may I remind the house that this bill does not deal with rural mail contracts generally. May I read the explanatory note.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Post Office Act to provide that the Postmaster General may, in certain cases, enter into contracts for conveying mail involving an annual expenditure of one thousand dollars or less, and may also, under certain conditions, while a contract is still in force, increase the amount payable thereunder during the unexpired term thereof.

I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the principle of this bill and not discuss rural mail contracts generally.

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), when he directs his criticism against the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure). I think that in this house we should be prepared at all times to accept different views and though I was also a member of the committee I accept the criticism of the hon. member for Queens because I feel it is part of the duties of a member of parliament to criticize legislation which is not in line with his own thinking on a particular measure.

Before this bill is given third reading, I should like to make some brief comment. I was appointed a member of the committee to consider this bill just the day before the bill was studied clause by clause. I did not have time to study it in the manner in which I would have liked. However, I feel that the bill itself is very good, and I am going to support it. I realize that this is just the first of a series of successive steps in legislation which I hope will be advantageous to our rural mail carriers. I believe that the main feature of the bill is the opportunity it will provide the rural mail carriers for negotiating with the department, provided, of course, the contract is under $1,000, for an increase in the tender.

If a carrier feels that the payment is not on an equitable basis for a comparable service in that area, then this legislation provides an opportunity for negotiation. However, I feel that there is room for improvement, and I trust the minister will give consideration to that phase of the matter. Since the bill received second reading I have received six or seven letters from the rural mail carriers in my constituency. They all feel that something should be done concerning the tender system. On a number of occasions in this house it has been my privilege to advocate that after a term of satisfactory service some consideration should be given to a change in this method. After a carrier has proven that he can fill the position of carrying the Queen's mail in a satisfactory manner, I think we should have some system whereby his re-engagement can be arranged without having to re-tender.

There are many other matters which this committee could continue to study. I feel that this bill is definitely a step in the right direction if we are to ultimately achieve the end for which it was set up. The committee is still in existence and can continue studying the matter. From the indications the minister has already given, I know that it will endeavour to continue to do everything it can for the betterment of the position of the rural mail carriers of Canada.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): When this legislation was first introduced I made a few remarks concerning it. I have noted what you had to say, Mr. Speaker, with regard to remarks being relevant to the bill. I cannot see how we can discuss the problem that is closest to us unless we say something about rural mail at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Doubtless there will be other occasions upon which the hon. member can discuss the problems of the rural mail carriers. I think hon. members want to discuss the bill in accordance with the rules of the house, and one of the rules is that on third reading discussion must be relevant to the bill and not to the Post Office Act generally.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I shall be very brief. I am afraid there is going to be considerable disappointment throughout the country over the results of the labours of this committee. I have noted what the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Catherwood) has said, so I am led to believe that there is some means of reviewing the contracts which now exist. I think a good many of the postal employees serving rural areas are going to be very disappointed. I have noted also what the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. MacKenzie) had to say. It seems rather strange that only those who are rural mail carriers are expected to submit tenders in order to obtain their job. Surely some system for the delivery of rural mail can be worked out which would be somewhat comparable to the systems employed by other government departments.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the house agrees with me that members should discuss the principle of this bill. I do not like to interrupt an hon. member, but the business of the house must be carried on according to our standing orders and rules. I think I must insist that the discussion of this bill be relevant to this bill, which relates to the increasing of the amount payable under certain contracts. Hon. members may reserve their remarks concerning mail contracts generally to some other time.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): I have not very much to say about the bill which is before us. When it was before us on Friday night, I was probably one of the members who were anxious to get the bill through the house, and for that I have to accept responsibility. Since Friday night, however, I have received many letters from rural mail carriers. There is one feature of this bill which gives the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) and his officials a great deal more authority, but at the same time they have to accept a greater degree of responsibility. As I see it, this measure will have a tendency to do away with tendering for mail contracts. The Postmaster General under this legislation has the right—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This bill has nothing to do with the doing away with tenders and contracts. I cannot allow discussion on it at this time.

Mr. Hodgson: All right; I shall try to keep right to the point. However, it does give him authority to raise the price of a courier's mail contract, provided that he sees fit to do so and he considers the—

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): No. May I interject, Mr. Speaker? Not if I see fit to do so in an arbitrary manner but if, after having compared the services given by the contractor, with comparable services outside and within the postal organization, we consider fair and just to make a readjustment of the contract.

Mr. Hodgson: I do not say the minister will see fit unless he considers it, and when he considers it he will probably do something about it. At least this legislation gives him more responsibility and gives the couriers a better break. There is no doubt about that. This legislation does give our couriers a better break. I may say that there are more rural mail couriers in my riding than in any other riding in the province of Ontario. It is a rural riding of a large area.

We have received courteous treatment from the Post Office Department before. I hope that this bill will get the approval of the house immediately, and be implemented so that some of my couriers can go to the Postmaster General or to his department when they feel that they are entitled to an increase, and that they can talk the situation over and probably come to a conclusion satisfactory to both parties concerned.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron North): I was a member of the committee and I attended all meetings that took place this year. At the last meeting that was held I understood we were to have another meeting before this bill was passed. Apparently it went through on Friday night, and I was not here. The committee as a whole did the very best it could. Perhaps this bill will help to improve the lot of the mail couriers. I am not exactly satisfied with it. I do not think anybody else was entirely satisfied either, but perhaps it will be an improvement.

I would suggest—as a matter of fact I will move—that the bill be referred back to the committee so that if there is anything that anybody has to say it can be brought before the committee before the bill gets third reading. I think that is logical and it should be granted. A lot of letters have come in within the past few days, and if there is anything that we can do to help I am sure the Postmaster General would be one of the first to accept the suggestion. He was one of the first to accept all the suggestions made in the committee. There was no friction whatever in the committee; we were all trying to do our best to improve the situation. I think the bill should be sent back to the committee so that we could have at least one more meeting before it receives third reading.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): On a number of former occasions I have been one of those who have been rather critical of the Post Office Department. I want to take this opportunity to say that I am, as a member of the committee, supporting the bill. We should place on record the fact that the mail carriers' association, the representative of mail carriers across Canada, informed us that they were so pleased with this bill that they did not want to appear in person or to send a delegation to the committee. It was on the strength of the correspondence from that association that I, as one member of that committee, decided that this bill merited our support. I do not think the association feels that this is by any means the final answer to their difficulties, but they made it clear that it was certainly a step in the right direction, which they approved. I trust that similar committees may continue the work which this committee has begun until other difficulties may in that way be ironed out.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): I should like to say a word or two on this bill because I was a member of the committee from New Brunswick. In my constituency there are a lot of people who are interested in the outcome of this legislation. In fairness to them I think I should take part in this debate for a few minutes. We were all interested in seeing that our rural mail carriers received more remuneration for the services which they performed.

The Post Office Act was placed before us and the amendments, it seemed to me, improved the situation that existed. It is true that it puts power in the hands of the department of the Postmaster General, but having heard the evidence in the committee and having received a statement from the Postmaster General, it seemed to me that I personally had no better alternative to suggest and no member of the committee and no association and no one else came forward with a better solution.

As has been said by other hon. members, we apparently heard all those who wished to be heard, and I feel that this bill will go a long way to improve the conditions under which the rural mail couriers work, which these amendments were drafted to do. That being so, I would not want hon. members to feel that I had refused, or did not wish, to take part in this debate because I was not satisfied with the bill. I feel that it would go a long way toward improving the very things which our rural couriers, at least the ones in my constituency, were asking to have improved.

At the last meeting it was pretty well agreed that there was not very much more we could do about this bill. I was given to understand that there would be another meeting at which further matters in connection with rural mail couriers would be considered, and I am looking forward to seeing the committee meet again, at which time other matters will be considered. I hope an opportunity will be given to consider them. As far as this legislation is concerned, I do not think that we can do anything but support it on the assurance of the minister, which he gave us, that the rural mail couriers will be treated fairly in the review of their cases when they come up for increased remuneration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron North suggested an amendment, but there was no formal motion.

Mr. Cardiff: I do not want to delay the bill. I am wholly in accord with the bill. If it lacks anything it lacks a provision that states sufficiently the compensation that the rural mail couriers should receive. That is the only objection I have to it. We were to have another meeting before the bill passed; I have no objection to the bill passing at the present time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 225, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriate time to discuss a subject that has been mentioned on different occasions in this house before. Now, however, is the opportunity to relate the discussion directly to the proposal that is before us.

In this legislation we are dealing with an amendment to the Excise Tax Act which makes changes in our general excise taxation structure. Hence, this is an appropriate occasion on which to consider suggestions that should be made in connection with changes of that kind. The proposal before us represents the suggestions which the government now wishes to make. I wish to discuss another matter which I believe should be dealt with. I think this is the appropriate time to raise it. By presenting it at this time the opportunity is then afforded the government to see the proposal and to indicate its willingness or otherwise to accept the suggestion which has been made.

From the municipalities throughout the whole of Canada there has been an increasing demand that consideration be given to the fact that they are called upon to pay excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax on those things they buy for their own service of the people in their own communities. This applies also to purchases made by boards of education for the equipment that goes into the schools where education is given to the children of this country. It does seem to be an anomaly that the dominion government should recognize the fact that it is not appropriate to apply the excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax in the case of purchases made by provincial governments but that it should insist that municipal councils and school boards pay those taxes. The thing even goes further than the payment of taxes in the ordinary way. If municipalities within their own boundaries manufacture goods for their own requirements, these taxes still apply, although the goods are going to be used within the very municipal boundaries within which they have been made.

This is a matter of great importance at this time. Certain steps that have been taken by this government have imposed still heavier burdens upon the municipalities. This is not the occasion to argue the wisdom or otherwise of the course which has been followed. It should be pointed out, however, that there are in Canada many people who believe that civil defence is part of the general defence requirements of Canada. If that is so, then it does seem doubly onerous that those municipalities which are called upon to purchase special equipment for civil defence should find themselves not only bound to buy equipment which they do not think they should pay for in the first place, but on top of that they are called upon to pay sales tax and other excise taxes to the senior government which imposes that necessity upon them.

This aggravates a situation which already is a source of great concern to many municipalities. Some municipalities, situated in what are obviously danger zones, have heavier obligations in this respect than have municipalities which would not be likely targets of air attack. Therefore they not only are called upon to meet a feature of defence which is part of our general problem of national defence, but are called upon to pay excise taxes including sales tax on the equipment they must buy as well.

This subject has been further aggravated in many communities by the fact that, with the extension of the acquisition of land for various purposes by the government of Canada, more and more land is exempted from taxation within some communities, a fact which throws a still greater burden back upon those municipal taxpayers who in turn must pay those special taxes imposed by the dominion government.

There are many anomalies in connection with this situation. Let us think of some of the highways that go through various provinces. Those highways may follow a route which carries them through large urban municipalities. Up to the boundary of that municipality the road-building equipment or road-repairing equipment acquired by the provincial government pays none of the special excise taxes including sales tax, but the municipality supporting the continuation of that highway through the urban area, with its own equipment, is called upon to pay these excise taxes upon that equipment serving exactly the same purpose up to the two boundary lines of the municipality. Surely that is utterly inconsistent with the fact that in this case the provincial government and the municipal governments—which is what the municipal councils in fact really are—are performing similar duties on behalf of those taxpayers whom they serve. Surely if it is appropriate that this exemption apply to provincial authorities performing the same task, the exemption should apply to those who continue that responsibility through the intervening segment of the same undertaking.

This illustration could be carried forward into a great many other activities but I shall leave it there because it seems to me that the illustration I have offered does indicate the anomaly that presents itself.

The municipalities of Canada for a number of years have been emphasizing their difficulties in this respect, and I think I should place on record the resolution which was adopted by the mayors association and which was presented to the government of Canada. It deals directly with this point. It reads as follows:

> Whereas municipalities are required to pay the federal 10 per cent sales tax on all items purchased as well as on equipment and articles manufactured by municipalities for their own use and not for resale; and
> Whereas the provincial governments, their boards and commissions, do not pay the federal sales tax nor is the tax exigible on certain items purchased for use by hospitals and electrical utilities; and
> Whereas municipal governments, under the British North America Act, derive their being from the provincial governments and, as such, represent the delegated power of provincial governments; and
> Whereas therefore the continued imposition of the federal sales tax on the purchases of and equipment produced by municipalities would appear to be discriminatory; and
> Whereas municipal governments are hard-pressed to hold the rising costs of local government within the narrow limits of their sources of revenue, a situation over which the federal government has expressed its solicitous concern; and
> Whereas municipal governments, while desirous of co-operating fully with the organization and provision of adequate local civil defence, are nevertheless finding that the local costs of civil defence are adding an additional and onerous burden on their already severely restricted revenues:
> Therefore be it resolved that the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities strongly urge the federal government to exempt the municipal governments from payment of the federal sales tax on all municipal purchases; including articles manufactured by municipalities for their own use and not for resale.

I submit that this resolution should commend itself to the government and that this is the appropriate time to draw to the attention of the government the fact that an amendment should be included in this present bill now before us which would meet this most reasonable request made by the representatives of many municipalities throughout Canada. In very moderate and conciliatory language this resolution points out that the rising costs of municipalities necessitate taxation within the narrow limits of municipal sources of revenue, which limits are more seriously curtailed by the extent of the tax dollar which is being taken from the Canadian taxpayer by the Canadian government at this time. It is all very well to say that the municipalities still have their flexible sources of revenue. They have only the sources of revenue which are left open to them after the dollars have been drained off in very large measure by the government of Canada.

If the taxpayers in these municipalities—after all, the taxpayers in the municipalities of Canada are the same taxpayers who pay provincial taxes as well as taxes to this government—were freed from the heavy burdens that are imposed by the central taxing authorities, they would be in a much better position to contribute to local requirements. Therefore the extent to which taxation by the central government constantly encroaches upon the tax dollar is a matter of real and direct concern to the municipal authorities responsible for local taxation.

We have seen the percentage of the tax dollar go up day by day until it appears that last year 78 cents out of every tax dollar was absorbed by this government, leaving only 22 cents available for both the provincial and the municipal authorities. Within that limit the municipalities must seek their opportunity to obtain the money that is required for the vitally important duties which they must carry on on behalf of the people living in those communities.

If we will only think for a moment of the duties performed by the municipal authorities it will become apparent that in the daily lives of our people it is those duties which are most directly related to the needs of our people. Water supply, light, sewage, roads, other services including fire and police protection; all these things are provided by the local governments. It is to the local government that the Canadian in most cases looks for the security and comfort and amenities of his daily life. Therefore, we must recognize the vital necessity of giving to these municipal authorities an adequate measure of independent authority over their own affairs which will assure the most effective services within this country of ours.

When we talk about building up Canadian society, let us remember the extent to which this society of ours rests upon the municipal structure.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Including education.

Mr. Drew: That of course is most important of all in the field of education. The whole character of our people in the years ahead, the whole future of our country as a civilized society, is going to depend upon the kind of education that we give our children. In very large measure today the burden imposed upon the municipal taxpayer for taxation is seriously aggravated by these excise and sales taxes which are incorporated in the purchases made necessary by the expanding needs of education. Surely if there is one place where exemption in regard to excise and sales tax should apply, it is in the educational requirements upon which to a very great degree the whole future of our society is going to rest.

There is no miracle by which we can carry out the duties of government in the provinces or in the municipalities without taxation. Nevertheless there must be some places where the justice of the application of taxes must be given full consideration. I recognize that there is a difference between the status of provincial governments, municipal councils and the school boards; nevertheless when we speak of the municipalities as creatures of the provinces I would recall the fact that they are fairly lusty and vigorous creatures. They are not creatures to be disposed of by the whim of any government, either the government in Ottawa or any provincial government responsible for the administration of municipal laws within the province. These are real and vital communities within our combined social structure.

I do suggest therefore, as has been pointed out by the federation of mayors and municipalities, that since municipal councils and school boards exist under laws passed by the provincial legislatures, and are to that extent local emanations of the provincial legislative bodies, it would be consistent to apply to those municipal authorities the same exemptions as are applied to the provincial governments.

I would point out that there might be created an invitation to follow a course which might present some difficulty. I would think that if taxes of this kind are to be continued there will be another invitation to centralize authority. After all, one way in which the municipalities could be relieved from this would be for them to turn over certain of their responsibilities to the provincial governments in return for payment and then the provincial governments could buy this machinery and equipment without paying any excise or sales taxes. Thus you would have centralization into provincial hands and still further centralization into the hands of the government at Ottawa. I realize that that appeals to the centralist party from which this government is formed. It believes in centralization for the sake of centralization.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Drew: Let us be under no illusion about that.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, nonsense. This has nothing to do with the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Drew: Every act they have taken for several years has been that of centralists who believe that, by their little less than divine wisdom, the control they exercise in this way will be for the benefit of the people of Canada and will relieve them from the unfortunate consequences of having their affairs dealt with by those more closely associated with their daily needs. By every device within the power of this legislative body payments of that kind should be held within the control of municipal authorities because that is where the most direct supervision is exercised. I heard the Minister of Finance interject the word "nonsense". May I remind him that it is most unlikely that you will find horses on the payroll under any municipal government.

Mr. Abbott: Like the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson), my friend can think of nothing but horses, and I am not sure which part.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, this is merely an illustration, as was pointed out in the report which brought it to the attention of the government, of the complete breakdown in the supervision of the business of government, of which that was an example.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I only need to say "order".

Mr. Knowles: Just say "Whoa".

Mr. Abbott: Fair enough, Stanley.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize the fact—

Mr. Lesage: That is the only language he understands.

Mr. Drew: —that municipal councils are under a constant measure of supervision which makes it most unlikely that any of those fantastic irregularities which have occurred within the knowledge of every hon. member of this house would be likely to happen. Therefore the more we can encourage the retention of the authority of municipal councils over their own affairs, the better it will be for the taxpayers of Canada, who are the same group of taxpayers whether they pay taxes to the municipal, provincial or central authorities.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why this should be given consideration. In the early days, when the thought first arose of exempting property belonging to the government of Canada from municipal taxation, the amount of property affected was relatively little in any municipality. With the increasing intervention of government in many fields of activity, even in competitive industrial enterprise as well as the ordinary services of government, it has expanded to the point where in many municipalities it has become a very serious problem to the municipalities themselves. In no municipality is that more clearly shown than in the capital of Canada itself.

The present method provided for dealing with this subject is one that does not meet the requirements of the municipalities. The legislation described as an act respecting grants to municipalities has satisfied no municipality in this country. In the first place the procedure is involved. Why it should only apply to municipalities in which 4 per cent or more—

Mr. Abbott: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but on the second reading of an act to amend the Excise Tax Act are we going to debate the adequacy or otherwise of the provisions of the Municipal Grants Act? If we are, I do not know what the rules of the house are made for.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt if it would be in order. In fact, I am inclined to think that the discussion thus far has been beyond the principle of the bill before the house. The bill before the house is an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, and discussion should be relevant to the bill and not to the Excise Tax Act generally. I merely mention that to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to Beauchesne's third edition, page 228, paragraph 657, which reads as follows:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of judges.

Under that rule it is my intention to move an amendment that the bill be not now read a second time but that consideration be given to the subject matter which I have been discussing, and I shall so move at the appropriate point.

Mr. Speaker: The point arises whether that would be relevant to the bill. The law of relativity must always prevail. I would have to be satisfied that there is some reference in the present bill to the question which the Leader of the Opposition has raised. It will be necessary to show that the subject matter which has been discussed is relevant to the bill before I could allow the amendment.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any technical position particularly, but there happens to be nothing in the bill to amend the Excise Tax Act which relates to exemptions from sales tax on municipal purchases. I had intended, as I undertook to do, to make a brief statement on that matter. A number of members have spoken on it, including the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will forgive me if I say that he has shed no new light on the subject so far this afternoon. I do intend to say something about it when he completes his remarks, as I undertook to do when the matter was discussed at some length in the general budget debate.

Mr. Drew: I submit that it is directly relevant because schedule III of the bill now before us includes the exemptions which are proposed, and I am under the impression that exemption of municipal councils and school boards is as important as yogurt, yeast, and one or two others which I see on first glancing at the list of exemptions included in the schedule. I would point out that it is within the power of the government at this time, under the bill and under a schedule to be introduced by the government, to deal with an exemption such as that which I propose. Therefore I move:

That Bill No. 225 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes, including the 10 per cent sales tax, on all their purchases of machinery and other equipment, which taxes impose a particularly heavy burden on municipal taxpayers because of the government's continuing failure to introduce legislation providing for taxation of all government properties in municipalities on the same basis as that of ordinary municipal taxpayers.

Mr. Abbott: That is a nice propaganda resolution.

Mr. Lesage: Learning from Vishinsky.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to leave the question of whether or not this amendment is in order to the good judgment of Your Honour. I must say, on the first reading, that it seems to me that at any rate the latter part of the resolution has nothing whatever to do with the proposed amendment to the Excise Tax Act which is before the house. If Your Honour cares to take some time to consider the question of whether or not the motion is in order, I should like to state briefly, as I undertook to do, the reasons why the government felt it could not this year recommend any change in the law respecting sales tax paid by municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister does so, he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles: Not if he speaks to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: That is correct.

Mr. Abbott: I will be prepared to speak to the amendment under the reservation of my objection that it is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I can give the question of whether or not the amendment is in order some consideration and I will not make my ruling at this time.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Abbott: I would appreciate being able to make my brief statement on this question now, because I have a treasury board meeting which I am anxious to attend and I anticipate I will be able to do so. If I could make my statement it would be some help to me.

During the last year in particular I received a great many requests from literally hundreds of municipalities asking that they be granted an exemption from sales tax on their purchases, and I received the resolution of the federation of mayors and municipalities which was read into the record by my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). A number of speakers in the course of the budget debate raised this question, as I think they did on the budget resolutions as well.

As I said a moment ago, and perhaps my hon. friend will forgive me if I say it now, he has thrown no new light on this very important and difficult question. I do not feel I can recommend the exemption that was asked for and I would like now to give to the house the reasons for taking the position which I have—a position which, I may say, I found it necessary to take in previous years.

In the first place, I want to assure the various municipal officials that I am not lacking in sympathy for the problems which they face in raising the necessary moneys to finance local government services. It is not a pleasant business to tax people to find moneys to provide things they want and are asking for, as I have every reason to know, since I have to do it myself. However, I am sure that these municipal officials will realize that I must be something less than enthusiastic if by relieving their burdens I add to my own problems. The municipalities, to use the words of my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, are legal emanations of the provinces. As I said to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) the other day, I think it would be highly inappropriate for the federal government to assume any direct responsibility for the financial problems of municipalities. Clearly the federal government should follow the line which it has been following of dealing directly with the provincial governments themselves in financial matters, rather than attempting to assist municipalities directly by tax relief measures.

Now, as to the matter of sales tax on materials purchased by the municipalities, and coming down to the first principle, if articles are subject to sales tax in the hands of individuals I find it a little difficult to see why they should be exempt from tax if they are purchased by a corporation for use by individuals. I think it is reasonable to say that perhaps in their very understandable request for tax relief in this appeal the municipalities have not a great deal of logic on their side. It is true that the provinces are exempt from sales tax on articles purchased by them for provincial use; and a similar provision, I understand, applies to provincial boards. But, in addition to the substantial losses of revenue, which would be involved if municipal purchases were exempt from sales tax, and which would have to be made up from somewhere else, there is a very real practical problem involved in complying with this request. As the house is aware, the sales tax is put on at the manufacturer's level and the ordinary manufacturer has no way of knowing who the eventual purchaser of his product is going to be—whether it will be a municipality or an individual businessman. Accordingly, if an exemption of this kind were granted it would be necessary to fall back on the device of taking either a certificate as to use or the adoption of a system of refunding. Either method is fairly cumbersome and involves a great deal of paper work. When we stop to realize that there are over 4,000 municipalities in Canada, and that the range of articles that can be purchased is an extremely wide range, I do not think I need to emphasize the difficulties of attempting to administer any such exemption. In saying that, I feel sure it will be appreciated that I am not in any way reflecting on the integrity and good will of the municipal officials.

Taking all of these factors into consideration, I have come to the conclusion this year, as I have in past years, that an exemption of this kind cannot and should not be recommended. That is the reason why it is not contained in the amendment before the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, while not agreeing with all of the arguments which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) put forth in support of this proposition, I wish to say that we thoroughly agree with the contention put forward by the federation of mayors and municipalities, that municipalities be exempted from the requirement to pay excise or sales tax on their purchases.

I have listened to the defence just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) for his failure to accede to this request and I must say that I, for one, am not convinced that he has made any case for his failure to recommend this change.

Not only have we had the position stated by the Minister of Finance here today, and on other occasions, but he has also favoured some of us with excerpts from letters which he has written to some of the cities and municipalities which have made representations to him. I have in my hand a copy of a letter which the Minister of Finance wrote to me on March 18 of this year in reply to my representations in support of a resolution on this matter submitted to the government by the council of the city of Winnipeg. In this letter to me the Minister of Finance has given me excerpts from the letter which he wrote to Mr. Gardner, the Winnipeg city clerk; and one of these arguments which has already been given us but which is spelled out here seems to me to be quite unconvincing. I am quoting from the minister's own letter to the city of Winnipeg.

> An exemption from sales tax for materials and supplies purchased by municipal governments would result in lower costs to the municipalities and therefore should bring some net reduction in municipal taxes but municipal taxpayers are usually also federal taxpayers as well, and tax savings gained at the municipal level might have to be given up in their payment of federal taxes.

It is that point to which I should like to make answer. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), and indeed others who have spoken on this matter thus far in today's debate, seem to ignore the fact that municipal taxation is levied on a different basis from that of federal taxation. There is a good deal that is wrong with the basis of federal taxation, but at least it comes nearer to the ability to pay basis than any other jurisdiction in this country is able to come. If this policy did work out as the Minister of Finance suggests, that there would be a slight reduction in cost to citizens as municipal taxpayers which they would have to make up in their capacity as federal taxpayers, I suggest that is all to the good. It would mean that that difference would be transferred from a basis which is predicated upon ownership of real estate to an ability to pay basis, at least in so far as that principle is involved in federal taxation. I submit therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the main argument in terms of principle that the Minister of Finance has used in his letter to the city of Winnipeg really does not hold water.

Of course, it is the same people who must pay taxes, whether they pay them to municipalities, provinces or to the federal government. Our whole concern in respect to the question of taxation is that it should be put, as nearly as possible, on an ability to pay basis. The two forms of taxation which come closest to that are the personal income tax and the corporation income tax. We feel, therefore, that it would be better that municipal taxpayers as such should enjoy some relief from municipalities not having to pay the sales tax, even if they do have to turn around and make up for that by paying it in federal taxation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other argument which the Minister of Finance used today, and he used it in this letter which he wrote to the Winnipeg city clerk to which I have already referred, is the question of administration. Again I must confess that we are not convinced that that is an insurmountable obstacle. After all, the minister admits that the administration of this tax is already a complicated procedure, with many exemptions as to commodities and many exemptions as to purchasers already involved in the legislation. I, for one, cannot see how it is possible to draw a line between provincial governments and hospitals on the one hand, and municipalities and school boards on the other. I feel that the federation of mayors and municipalities is quite correct in pressing the government for an exemption from the payment of the sales tax.

Actually of course, Mr. Speaker, this raises the whole question as to the fairness of the sales tax. If it is unfair, as we are contending, to impose it upon municipal taxpayers in their capacity as municipal taxpayers, we take that position because we feel that it is unfair to impose it upon them as individuals. Our opposition to the sales tax goes much further than just our opposition to municipalities being required to pay it. We oppose the sales tax in principle. We realize that a great many attempts have been made, particularly in recent years in this house and in some of the committees that have dealt with this matter, to build up the sales tax as a socially desirable method of obtaining revenue. In my opinion it is still a bad form of taxation.

In the course of this session we have heard a great deal said about secret orders in council—at least about one secret order in council which is in existence in this country today. I do not like secret orders in council, not even one of them. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that hidden taxation is even more sinister and more harmful to the average Canadian than is a secret order in council. That is what we have in the sales tax. Maybe you cannot call it a secret tax because it is there on the books. Anyone who wants to read about it can learn about it. However, it is a hidden form of taxation. It hits all of those people who are not in income brackets sufficiently high to be paying personal income taxes. As a matter of fact, I feel that the Minister of Finance admitted that the sales tax is that kind of hidden tax that gets at everybody, whether or not they have sufficient income, in this same letter from which I have already quoted and which he wrote to Mr. Gardner, the city clerk in Winnipeg. He said this:

> It is naturally the desire of the federal government to keep the sales tax base as broad as possible.

He was stating that as an argument for imposing these taxes on municipalities and school boards. I suggest he has let the cat out of the bag. What he likes about the sales tax is that he catches all those poor people to whom he is giving the impression, by his income tax exemption levels, that they are not being taxed. The plain fact of the matter is that every single man who has an income of less than $1,000, every married man whose income is less than $2,000, and every married man with two children whose income is less than $2,300, though he may not be paying the personal income tax, is certainly caught in the taxation net through this hidden tax which we know as the sales tax. We agree, therefore, with the stand taken by the federation of mayors and municipalities. We agree with the stand taken by the city council of my home city of Winnipeg, that municipalities and school boards should be exempted from paying this tax. We go much further and say that the whole basis of taxation should be pulled away from this taxation on the basis of what one has to purchase and moved in the direction of taxation on the basis of ability to pay.

I give the government little credit—very little; that is all they are entitled to—for moving a little bit in that direction. In looking at the figures which were given to us on February 19, we discovered that the total revenue from excise taxes in the year ended March 31, 1952 amounted to 22 per cent of the total revenue of the federal government. In the year ended March 31, 1952 the estimate was that excise taxes would account for only 19·5 per cent of the total revenue; that, of course, is just one form of indirect taxation. If you add all the forms of indirect taxation together, you find that they accounted for 36·6 per cent in the fiscal year 1952 and 34·3 per cent in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953. As I say, I am prepared to give the government what little credit is coming to it for having adjusted things so that that percentage is shifting slightly. But our contention is that for 34·3 per cent of the government's revenue still to be coming from what I will call secret or hidden taxes, is unfair to those in the lower income brackets, those little people whom the Minister of Finance would have us believe are not paying income taxes but who are caught in this legislation. This Excise Tax Act is indeed, Mr. Speaker, an income tax act for the little fellow with very little income.

Mr. Lesage: It is 34 per cent.

Mr. Knowles: That is what I said. Not only do we, as I have indicated, oppose the sales tax in principle, on the basis of which we are opposed to municipalities and school boards being required to pay them, but likewise we give our support to the representations that have been made to the Minister of Finance by the Canadian welfare council. These representations were included in a letter addressed to the Minister of Finance on September 23, 1952, over the signature of Mr. Lawrence Freiman, who was chairman of the committee on sales tax and vice-president of the Canadian welfare council. In that letter Mr. Freiman pointed out to the Minister of Finance that there are a number of welfare agencies but that only a few of them, mainly on the basis of their operating institutions, are exempted from the payment of the sales tax. But it was pointed out by Mr. Freiman that—perhaps I can best do it by reading one paragraph from his letter, which is as follows:

> The social welfare agencies in Canada not now covered by the sales tax exemption are an important group with programs designed to prevent individual and family breakdown and to reduce expensive public care. Indeed, the excluded group could with accuracy be called the main source of voluntary welfare in this country. It included such agencies as children's aid societies, family welfare bureaus, visiting nurse associations and community chests and welfare councils, and all the organizations are easily identifiable because of their right to issue receipts for contributions which give exemption from income tax.

It is those groups, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of whom the Canadian welfare council made representations to the Minister of Finance. Here again you have a group of people who are rendering a service to the community. They are doing it on a non-profit voluntary basis, and our community is certainly better for the activities of all these individual groups which are represented by the Canadian welfare council. They made very precise suggestions as to how this might be handled; they gave the conditions that might be required before the exemption could be granted, and in my view the letter which Mr. Freiman wrote dealt adequately with any administrative problems that might arise in the minister's thinking about this matter. All told, it seems to me that here is a group which is as deserving as the other institutions that are granted exemptions now, and equally deserving as the school boards and municipalities on behalf of whom representations are being made at the present time.

The Minister of Finance replied to Mr. Freiman's letter under date of October 10, 1952, as follows:

> Dear Mr. Freiman:
> I am sorry that my reply to your letter of September 23 has been delayed.
> I have noted the council's suggestion that the sales tax refund benefit which is available to certain charitable organizations of an institutional nature should be extended to other social welfare agencies which are organized and operated exclusively as charitable organizations but are not providing institutional care.
> I will be pleased to consider this recommendation when I am studying sales tax proposals during preparation of the next budget.
>
> Your very truly,
> D. C. Abbott.

I cannot help but note that sentence which the minister writes so frequently. His stenographer must have some special little symbol for that whole sentence, because he uses it so often:

> I will be pleased to consider this recommendation when I am studying sales tax proposals during preparation of the next budget.

If that consideration was given we see no evidence of it in the legislation now before us. That is the position we take, Mr. Speaker. We are opposed to the sales tax in principle. We point out that the little man who has really inadequate income is, through the medium of the sales tax, called upon to pay what is a hidden or secret tax, and at the present time hidden taxes all told amount to 34 per cent of the total revenue of this government. Because we are opposed to it for the little man in his own right, we are also opposed to having him pay it indirectly through the expenses of municipalities and through the costs of these various welfare agencies; and we hope, despite the fact that the minister has taken a negative position today, and has had to leave the house to attend a meeting of the treasury board, that consideration will yet be given to the unfairness of the sales tax as a whole and to the unfairness of its application to these two groups.

I anticipate, Mr. Speaker, indeed I sense it, that before this debate goes much farther there will probably be some discussion on a point of order. I will not get into that until it is raised, but I do hope that even if Your Honour feels it necessary to suggest to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) that he make some slight change in his amendment, such as the dropping of the last phrase of it, nevertheless a way will be found for this house to be permitted to vote on the question which has been presented to us this afternoon, involving as it does our opposition to the sales tax.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure that I can throw any more light on the question than has already been thrown on it, but I do feel that those of us who have been speaking in this house for quite a number of years on the sales tax, and advocating its removal, showing thereby that we are opposed to the sales tax in principle, ought to indicate our support of the principle of the amendment which was introduced by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon and say something by way of reply to the reasons which were given by the Minister of Finance for the position he has taken in respect to this appeal by the federation of mayors and municipalities.

At the outset I want to indicate my support of the brief that was presented by the federation of mayors and municipalities to the Minister of Finance. Contrary to what the Minister of Finance said, I think there was much logic in their position and in their case. The Minister of Finance said there was not. I hope I shall be able to show that there was at least a little logic, perhaps as much as the Minister of Finance has shown in the position that he has taken.

For a good many years I have been working with a view to getting this job done, and lending what little help I could to finally convince the Minister of Finance that he should grant exemption from sales tax to the municipalities and school boards across Canada on the equipment that had been purchased by them. They are entitled to it. They have been asking for it for a good many years, and they have been showing excellent reasons why the Minister of Finance should grant it.

Having said that, I should like to turn for just a moment to some of the things the Minister of Finance said in his statement this afternoon. He said he was not lacking in sympathy for the case of the municipalities. Perhaps not, but the municipalities in the country are likely to judge more by deeds than by words in a case of this kind.

Mr. Knowles: Not only the municipalities.

Mr. Low: Not only the municipalities, of course, but also a very large number of individuals who are directly or indirectly affected by the position taken by the minister. He says that it is a mistake for the federal government to assume any direct responsibility for the municipalities that are legal emanations of the provinces. I admit that the municipalities are legal emanations; they are the children of the provincial governments. That is quite true. But there would be considerably more logic in what the minister said if the federal government had not already laid down a precedent. I am going to mention only one; there are probably many that could be mentioned.

A number of years ago, during the depression years, the municipalities of Canada were in a bad position financially as a consequence of extremely low prices for farm products and the heavy burden of relief costs. The federal government was induced at that time to put through this very house a bill called the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act by which the then minister of finance was able to extend directly to the municipalities loans at a rate of interest of 2 per cent on self-liquidating projects. The provincial governments were drawn into it indirectly to give what they called a continuing guarantee, but the assistance was granted directly to the municipalities.

I therefore contend that the government thereby laid down a precedent for taking other action that might be considered as direct assistance to the municipalities. The minister therefore cannot just shrug it off like that and say, "It is none of our affair" because these are the legal children of the provincial governments. I do not think his reason in that respect holds any water.

The second thing he said was that if he granted the request by the federation of mayors and municipalities his department would lose a substantial amount of revenue. I think that is perhaps the best reason he gave today, namely that he would lose some substantial revenue. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance should comply with the request of the municipalities, school districts and others in the country for the removal of the sales tax on equipment they have to purchase, he could make up that revenue in some other way and, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has so well said, in a way that would be more fair and equitable. Certainly the principle of taxation according to ability to pay is much to be preferred to taxation where you can grab it easiest. The principle that seems to be followed today is to get the taxes just as easily as you can and to make others the collectors of taxes, not go out and do it yourself; make other people do it for you.

I suggest there is much reason in what my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said. Certainly an income tax or some such thing based on ability to pay is to be preferred to a tax like the sales tax which does have the effect of pyramiding consumer prices, a situation which throws an unjustifiable burden upon those people least able to bear it. I have always opposed the sales tax in principle for the reason that it was applied at the manufacturer's level and had the effect of pyramiding prices; and in this house on a good many occasions I have given my reasons for being opposed to it in principle.

The Minister of Finance said there was a practical difficulty in the way of granting the request of the federation of mayors and municipalities. He said that the excise tax is imposed at the manufacturer's level and that therefore to comply with their request would involve a system of refunds and a good deal of paper work. I think perhaps that is true, Mr. Speaker; I must say that in all fairness to the minister. I can quite well visualize what a complication of paper work would be involved in trying to deal with purchases made by 4,000 different municipal governments in this country if the exemption were to be granted on all their purchases. I can quite well understand that, because it would perhaps involve everything from mops, mop sticks, soap and things of that kind up to machinery that costs a great deal of money.

An hon. Member: Horses?

Mr. Low: I do not know whether they use horses out in the municipalities or not, but I think we have already said too much about horses. Let us therefore leave them out for the time being. If there is a practical difficulty, however, I suggest that nobody created that difficulty but the government itself that devised the kind of tax that is imposed at the manufacturer's level and that would require the kind of complicated paper work the minister suggested would be involved if exemptions were to be granted.

But let me just make this suggestion to him. If he would make a start now and grant the exemptions requested by the mayors and municipalities and school boards on heavy machinery and equipment that is required for their road-building programs; on equipment, costing a good deal of money, used for the purpose of conveying children to school, such as vans and that sort of thing; and on that costly equipment that is used in civil defence —if the minister would begin by exempting those items only I think he would find that the paper work would not be too extensive.

Certainly the government does not shrink today from exemptions to various sections of Canadian society such as the farmers, with respect to customs duty and such things as that on equipment used exclusively in farming. That process of exemption does involve making refunds. The refunds have to be applied for. Paper work is necessary. While it is perfectly true, Mr. Speaker, that it becomes complicated and in many instances the applicant for the refund has to wait many weeks or months for his money—and that fact has been drawn to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) on several occasions during these past few weeks—in spite of those things I feel perfectly satisfied that if the Minister of Finance would now begin to accede to the request of the federation of mayors and municipalities by granting exemption from sales tax on heavy equipment that is essential for civil defence and for the transport of children to schools, he would be showing his good faith and perhaps would be taking a step toward eventual complete exemption that might be arranged, with little complication, later on.

I just want to conclude by saying this. I do not think for one moment that there is any good and sound reason why the Minister of Finance could not at least begin to take the action that has been requested by the mayors and municipalities. May I say this. I think he owes it to the municipalities of Canada to help them in these extremely trying times. The municipalities are carrying terrific loads. Many of them are growing rapidly. They are bursting at the seams. In their efforts to look after the people who are coming into the municipalities as Canada grows and expands, they are hard put to it to find the revenues with which to provide the extension of services. The unusual demands for education place another burden upon the municipalities and upon the taxpayers in those municipalities.

When one considers that many municipalities in this country are servicing federal property and are not receiving one cent of taxes from the federal government for so doing, unless they come in the class that has been provided for in this municipal arrangement that takes into consideration, I think, only the larger cities where there is a concentration of government offices and buildings, and government property, I think under those circumstances one could very truthfully say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) owes it to the municipalities of the country to grant their request. I want it known that I support the brief that was sent in by the federation of mayors and municipalities.

As to the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), whether it is found to be out of order or in order I want to say now that I will support it if it comes to a vote.

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of saying that I support that portion of the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which dealt with the request of the Canadian welfare council. I think he pointed out, and I want to reiterate what he said, that on behalf of some 51 community organizations the Canadian welfare council are asking and have asked for sales tax exemption on purchases made by social welfare agencies. They are asking for the same exemption that has been given to hospitals since 1930.

They are not unaware of the fact that by legislation in 1950 the government gave relief in the way of refunds to a limited number of clearly defined institutions. That is, they would pay the tax and later make application for refund if they were able to establish eligibility. This worked out in a satisfactory manner and has not been subject to any abuses. That legislation gave recognition to the principle of exempting from sales tax the purchases of genuine social welfare agencies operating in the public interest.

We have now had a little more than two years' experience in dealing with genuine agencies under the refund method. I understand that the government were disposed to grant this exemption to genuine welfare agencies, but they were not sure that they could define a genuine welfare agency. In the brief referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dated September 23, 1952, which was forwarded to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), the following qualifications were suggested which I think should be placed on the record as indicating the criteria for a genuine social welfare agency:

> We would suggest for your consideration that an agency should be eligible for the refund privilege on sales tax only if it meets all of the following conditions:
> (a) is certified by the Department of National Health and Welfare as a bona fide social welfare agency, organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes, the proceeds of which are used in the public interest and not for the benefit of any special individual or group;
> (b) qualifies (through Form T-511) as a charitable organization permitted to issue receipts for donations which exempt them from income tax;
> (c) is incorporated as a non-profit organization for charitable purposes;

I appreciate that it is rather late in the day to raise this question to which the minister said he had already given consideration, and which he undoubtedly did. But I just wanted to let the minister and the parliamentary assistant know that I intend to pursue this vital matter on behalf of the social welfare agencies at the next sitting of parliament. I am serving notice now so the minister can place this matter at the top of his priority list when he brings down his next budget.

(Translation):

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, the matter now under discussion has of course been brought up on several previous occasions in the house, especially during the debate on the budget. Nevertheless, I would like to say a few words on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). I do so, first because I come from the province of Quebec and, secondly, because my province has the largest number of towns and is therefore more seriously affected than any other by the federal government's stubbornness in imposing excise and sales taxes on purchases made by municipalities.

The various municipal councils and the associations of mayors and municipalities were undoubtedly greatly disappointed to find that the budget did not contain any exemption in that connection. The government perhaps tried to sweeten the pill a little by granting an exemption to certain members of our municipal councils with regard to their expense accounts. But I sincerely believe that, in their hearts, our mayors, councillors and school trustees would have gladly done without that exemption and would rather have obtained an increase in revenue in order to be able to administer their budgets, which are getting more and more complicated.

The needs of the municipalities increase every day and the expenses also increase steadily, while, unfortunately, municipal revenues have practically reached the limit. As a matter of fact in 1930, for instance, the municipalities were getting a total of $307 million, while the federal government was getting only $301 million; however, in 1948, the federal government was getting $2,484 million, while municipalities had barely succeeded in raising their own revenues to $469 million, which means, in fact, that real estate in Canada is taxed to the saturation point and that municipalities will have to find other sources of revenue or at least relief from taxes as absurd as those imposed upon them at the present time.

In short, the problem boils down to the limitation of federal-provincial rights, to the delimitation of taxation fields. Therefore, I believe that it is still most urgent to convene a new federal-provincial conference in order to revise our taxation fields and enable the federal and provincial governments, as well as the municipal councils, to levy taxes in a reasonable and logical way according to their needs. For, actually, this tax which is imposed on municipal corporations, is more or less a federal tax levied on a property tax. Take, for instance, the case of a school tax based on the value of a certain property. This tax is levied by the municipality and under the B.N.A. Act the federal government takes a part of it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but since it is now five o'clock, we must take up private bills.

(Text):

PRIVATE BILLS

MID-CONTINENT PIPELINES LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 189, to incorporate Mid-Continent Pipelines Limited —Mr. Larson—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

The Chairman: I might point out that this bill has been considered by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and was reported to the house with one amendment with respect to clause 6 of the bill.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Chairman, due to my absence from the house for several weeks, while I was in hospital and recuperating, I was unable to participate in certain rather interesting debates in the house, including that dealing with Mid-Continent Pipelines Limited. However, I have read with considerable interest the speeches made on the bill, and I might say that they were notable on several counts. First of all, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for the first time during my period in the house, outlined that thing which was something of a mystery for a long time, government policy on natural gas. He coupled with that comments on oil policy.

On some points, notably oil, he and I agree. On others, including the basic policy on gas for eastern Canada, there is unfortunately sharp disagreement. In some degree this also applies to some of the opinions expressed by certain of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative party. Even in a happy family, such as our group in the house, there cannot and should not always be uniformity of opinion. From that statement I trust it will be clear that I am speaking as an individual member and not as a spokesman for my party. The opinion with respect to our gas pipe-line policy eastward from Alberta which was closest to my own views was that of the hon. member for Peace River. Since there is not always such a measure of agreement in our respective views on other matters, I hasten to congratulate him on his gas policy speech.

I believe his speech certainly gave greater weight to economic realities than that of the minister who spoke for the government, although there have been other occasions when the reverse would apply. I am sure all in this house share a common view on our Canada. We place our country first in our hearts and actions, ahead of considerations for any other nation. "Canada first" and "Canada always" are neither empty phrases nor the private property of any one party or any one man. We all place Canada first for always, but how each of us does so in reaching our objective in each problem facing Canada may vary widely.

On the general proposition of greater markets for Alberta and other western gas and the securing of a gas supply for the eastern prairies and eastern Canada, there are different approaches to a solution, each with the objective "Canada first". To me the term "Canada first" applied to our natural gas means a careful weighing of all the factors involved in order that our country will derive the maximum possible benefit from this resource, including gas already discovered and awaiting a market plus the much vaster quantity still hidden below the western provinces and requiring both dollars and incentive to uncover. This weighing of all factors is a far broader and, I believe, more beneficial definition than any interpretation of "Canada first" as meaning only that all gas pipe lines much be laid over Canadian territory only regardless of economics, and that all Canadian markets must be served with Canadian gas regardless of economics.

The setting up of such prerequisites to approval by Ottawa of gas pipe lines can be far more costly than generally realized, costly to Canadian consumers, producers, producing provinces and the Canadian economy as a whole. The over-all cost to Canada's economy could amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. I believe the price is far too high to allow nationalist emotions to override common sense. Since last May, when I outlined to the house a proposed national gas policy, there have been some important developments. Planning for gas markets on a larger scale than before is now required because of the continuing rapid expansion of proved gas reserves in the west and also because of the increasing wastage of gas in the Alberta oil fields where gas must be produced whether or not it has a market.

In other words, we have entered an era of gas plenty rather than shortage that will likely continue for many years provided the incentive is continued for large-scale exploration. Maximum value with minimum waste can only be achieved in my opinion by pipeline route planning designed to capture maximum markets on both sides of the border on a sound basis with the least possible delay. To do so we must carefully consider more than the three alternative pipe-line projects east that were before us last year. Let me emphasize that I am neither supporting nor opposing any particular would-be builder of a pipe line. I am not concerned with what one of several pipe-line proposers, or what combination of proposers, actually builds what I trust will be only the first of several major pipe lines eastward from Alberta.

I am very much concerned, however, with the selection of a route because that decision will be vital in its long-term effect upon the west and upon all of Canada. The mating of gas reserves to markets should be, as has largely been the case with our crude oil, on the soundest possible economic basis, meaning simply to ensure the best possible price for gas producers and the lowest possible cost to gas consumers. Let me emphasize that our gas, like our oil, is a long cost-distance removed from the major markets beyond the prairies. Even with the most economic mating of reserves to markets, our wellhead worth of gas and oil is and will continue to be substantially lower than the wellhead value of the same quality products in major United States producing states, which are better located in relation to major markets.

Despite that handicap we can continue to attract hundreds of millions of exploration dollars, which are essential if the underground treasures of the west are to be fully uncovered. We can reduce the handicap of long cost-distance by keeping the economic climate healthy. Part of that climate involves, in my view, the application of sound economics and common sense, not emotionalism and nationalism, to the linking of reserves to markets. In the routing of the Interprovincial oil pipe line from Alberta to the east, sound economics won out over what I believe to be the emotional appeal of construction confined solely to Canadian territory. With further savings in oil transport costs to be achieved in a few months by the extension of the pipe line 600 odd miles from Superior to Sarnia, the wellhead worth of western Canadian oil will be further increased a few cents to about 15 cents per barrel above the price that would apply if an all-Canadian route had been followed.

That represents, on our current proved oil reserves alone, about a $300 million saving for the Canadian economy. The Canadian government through corporation taxes, and the governments of oil provinces through royalties, will collect over half that increased value as the oil is produced. Indeed, they and Canada will benefit even more, for the balance of the added value will go to those who risked capital in oil and gas development—

The Chairman: Order. May I ask the hon. member to discuss the bill. We had a discussion on policy on the occasion of the debate on second reading. It would seem to me that the general discussion that is allowed on the first clause of a bill must relate to the various clauses of the bill. If we open the gate again to a discussion of policy, I am afraid that we will be renewing the debate which took place on second reading and which is already concluded. I will ask the hon. member to bear that in mind.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are all primarily directed to the bill under discussion. As I said earlier, dealing with oil and gas pipe lines brought into discussion on second reading—

The Chairman: The remarks of the hon. member are directed to all pipe-line bills, including this one.

Mr. Nickle: They will direct themselves to this particular bill.

I would like to complete my comments in relation to the oil line because it has a very direct bearing on the particular pipe line before us. I mentioned that there would be a huge saving to the Canadian economy, about $300 million, because of the routing of this pipe line by way of the United States to Sarnia. I might say that big saving to Canada is not at the expense of the eastern Canadian consumer. The consumer in the east pays no more and no less than he would if his petroleum supply were from outside Canada, for Alberta oil must be laid down in Ontario refineries at no more than the laid-down price of United States oil. The western producer and his government partners get that competitive price less the transport cost; and the lower the transport cost—in other words the more economical the pipe line—the higher is the wellhead return.

The pricing of natural gas to the producer and consumer is also based upon competition not only from gas from other fields but also from the other principal fuels of home and industry, namely fuel oil and coal. In some markets, those close to gas fields like many Alberta communities, and others close to some pipe lines, the cost of gas is or may be lower than that of other fuels. In other markets such as the vast fuel market of eastern Canada our western gas at best can only approach or meet the cost of fuel oil or coal.

At worst, by which I mean through use of the most expensive rather than the lowest cost pipe-line route, western gas would not be able to meet competition of other fuels without one or more forms of assistance. First, there might be some major form of either direct or indirect subsidy paid by the Canadian consumers as a whole or by the eastern consuming provinces. Second, there might have to be a substantial degree of equalizing of costs to consumers along the entire pipe-line route, designed to bring costs down in markets most distant from the gas fields, and raise costs in markets along the route. This would have the effect of prairie province consumers along the route being forced to help subsidize gas in eastern Canada. Third, there might be a cutting down of wellhead values for gas in the fields serving the pipe line, thus forcing the producer and all who share in the proceeds of his gas production to help subsidize gas for eastern Canada; or we might have a combination of the various forms of subsidy I have already mentioned.

Certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not unaware of most of the points I have made in regard to oil and gas pricing and related matters.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, we are having a debate that would be proper on second reading of the bill. As I understand it this bill received second reading and, having been dealt with by the appropriate committee of the house, it is back in committee of the whole for detailed discussion of the sections. The whole speech of the hon. member is related to the general principle and is one that should have been given on second reading. I am just wondering how far afield we are going to go at this point.

An hon. Member: He is reading the speech, too.

Mr. McIlraith: It is just a point as to the propriety of the speech at this time.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, may I submit for your consideration a fact which I think will perhaps commend itself to hon. members on both sides of the house. The member for Calgary West has been greatly interested in the subject under consideration.

An hon. Member: We all are.

Mr. Drew: As I think many hon. members are aware, he was seriously ill for a short time and, unfortunately, for that reason was unable to take part in this debate at an earlier date. I would concede immediately that the rules are not designed to meet such a situation. Nevertheless in view of the length of the debate which has ranged on this bill, I feel that it would be appropriate if the courtesy were extended to the hon. member of presenting views which are related to the general problem before us.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not understand that the hon. member was asking indulgence to make the speech under those circumstances. If he is, I am very glad to withdraw my objection. I raised it purely as a point of procedure, but in view of the circumstances I am quite prepared to grant the indulgence.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member for Calgary West unanimous consent to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nickle: May I express my appreciation through you, sir, to the Leader of the Opposition and to the hon. member for Ottawa West. I must say, however, that some or all of the points I am dealing with might quite properly be brought up during the consideration of section 6 of this particular bill dealing with the restriction of pipe-line construction by this particular company to routes within Canada.

I had mentioned that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was certainly not unaware of most of the points I dealt with concerning oil and gas pricing. He spoke on March 13 in this debate dealing with the Interprovincial pipe line, and referred to suggestions that the pipe line should have gone from Alberta to Port Arthur, and then around the north and east side of the great lakes to Sarnia, rather than enter the United States and thence cross Michigan to Sarnia. At that time the minister made this statement and I quote from page 2928 of Hansard:

> It is worth noting that the distance from Gretna, Manitoba, to Sarnia by the present route is 939 miles, while the distance by the route advocated . . . is 1,341 miles.

Mr. McIlraith: "—advocated by the Leader of the Opposition."

Mr. Nickle: "—advocated by the Leader of the Opposition."

> The cost increase involved in building the pipe line following the latter route would result in an additional expenditure estimated at $67 million. Such a line would touch no important refining centre and thus would be of no important value to the area it would traverse. Remembering that the cost of the line must eventually be paid either by the producers or by the users of gasoline and other petroleum products, or by both, the government is not disposed to exercise its authority to saddle these consumers with an additional and unnecessary $67 million of expenditure, nor would the national interest be served by so doing.

In that basic conclusion I fully concur. It supports the case I have presented many times since the pipe line was first proposed in 1949. However, the minister is not quite correct on one point. The consumer of oil moved over the line would not have to pay the extra $67 million, for the cost to him has a ceiling set by competition with foreign oil. The extra cost would be recovered by a higher transport charge passed back to the producer, and would thus be a burden upon the oil producer, the provincial governments and other royalty owners, and the federal treasury through loss of taxable income.

The minister showed his basic awareness of the economic weakness of a gas pipe line from Alberta to eastern Canada over the Canadian north-great lakes route when he commented unfavourably upon an oil pipe line over the same route. He also showed his realization of the economic unsoundness of this line or the weakness of the line when he wrote Premier Manning of Alberta concerning gas pipe lines last January 3. The minister quoted his letter during his speech on March 13. After advising the Alberta premier that before any export permit for gas to the United States would be authorized under the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, Ontario, Quebec and prairie markets must have Alberta gas made available, the minister then went on to say:

> I am aware that, for the period when natural gas is first made available in Ontario and Quebec, and until the load can be built up, such a pipeline project is unlikely to be profitable, either for the producers of gas or for the owners of the pipe line. Nevertheless, there is evidence that a pipeline project for Ontario and Quebec can be worked out and that the project will be profitable over a period of years.

During his speech the minister made reasonably clear the particular route about which he was thinking. On page 2930 of Hansard for March 13, 1953, the minister said:

> I am convinced, after thorough study of the matter, that the only reliable supply of natural gas for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec must be from western Canada by means of an all-Canadian pipe line.

I am glad to see that the minister has just entered the chamber. The minister's statements might be summarized as follows. An oil pipe line from Alberta to eastern Canada, by an all-Canadian route in preference to the route chosen, would be plain silly because it would be 400 miles longer and would cost $67 million extra. It would be an extra drain on the Canadian economy, and would serve no useful purpose. A gas pipe line over the same costly all-Canadian route would also lose money for the producers and in addition for the owners of the pipe line for some time—the number of years he did not indicate—but that is the only gas line my government will approve because that is the only reliable way of getting gas to eastern Canada. I am paraphrasing the statement by the minister.

Like my chief, the Leader of the Opposition, like the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and like all others who have spoken in this debate from all parties in this house, I strongly support putting the west's gas to use for Canada and getting natural gas to as many Canadians as possible. I submit, however, that there are several alternatives to an Alberta to Quebec gas pipe line built entirely on Canadian soil, each of which would be more economically sound, would provide a better deal for Canadian producers and consumers as well as for the backers of the pipe line, and would better serve the interests of the gas provinces and Canada as a whole.

These alternatives are: (1) A gas exchange treaty with the United States; (2) a pipe line from Alberta to eastern Canada dedicated to serving only Canadian consumers and following one of the two shortest cost-distance routes. Such a line would cross the prairie provinces, serving this market, then parallel the Interprovincial oil pipe line along the south side of Lake Superior and then re-enter Canada either at Sault Ste. Marie or near Sarnia; (3) a comparable route from Alberta to eastern Canada, with Canadian consumers having first priority on gas throughout, but with no barrier being placed on sales to United States consumers of gas available in excess of Canadian needs.

The first alternative would involve a sincere top-level effort by Canadian and United States governments to try to work out a long term, firm treaty for exchange of gas between the two countries. The purpose of such a treaty would be the matching of gas fields to gas markets in the two nations on the most economic basis; that is in a pattern designed to give producers in both countries the highest possible wellhead value, and consumers in both nations gas at lowest possible cost. Over the past year the leader of my party and others, including myself, have advocated that the government initiate negotiations with the United States to determine the feasibility of gas exchange. There is no evidence that any such negotiations have been initiated. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in fact, confirmed this last May when he answered "no" to a direct question by me on the matter. He appears to further confirm it by his comment in this house on March 13, which appears at page 2930 of Hansard:

> I am convinced that the rulings of the federal power commission which recognize the great and growing demand for natural gas in the United States debar any possibility of such an exchange.

How can the minister, or anyone else, actually know that a common sense gas exchange treaty is impossible of achievement until a real effort to get one has been made? Certainly at present the restrictions as to outside delivery of Canadian gas under the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, and the restrictions on United States gas under the United States federal power commission, may prove more costly to producers and consumers in both countries than their replacement by an exchange treaty based on the most economic matching of gas fields to markets.

It is a fact that a number of Pacific northwest and middle western states in the United States could be supplied with lower cost gas from Canada than from the United States fields. This would at the same time ensure that British Columbia, which is too small a market to support a pipe line unless that line also serves the United States northwest, could be supplied with Canadian gas. It would ensure, too, that Canadian gas producers, and their government partners in the proceeds of production, could get the best possible return from this resource. It is also a fact that United States gas from Texas and Louisiana could be piped into Ontario and Quebec at a cost to Canadian consumers from 10 to 20 per cent lower than the cost of Alberta gas delivered by even the most economic route.

The doubts of the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning gas exchange, and the fears of others both in this house and elsewhere in Canada that dependence upon a foreign source of gas would mean insecurity, both as to supply and price, are shared by the United States in the Pacific northwest and Washington. There is the fear that dependence on Canadian gas could mean insecurity of supply and price. Such fears might, in fact, result in rejection by the United States of the Westcoast Transmission Company's proposal for a gas line from the Peace river fields of northern Alberta and British Columbia down to Vancouver, Seattle, Portland and other communities. At this stage of the federal power commission hearings on the Westcoast application, and the alternative proposal for dedication of the Pacific northwest to gas from more distant United States fields, the odds are probably no better than even money that Westcoast can win out.

If this government is strongly desirous of Peace river gas reaching the Pacific it will likely have to give—despite the restrictions of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act—the federal power commission a guarantee that the act would not be used to cut off gas supply to the United States northwest for at least twenty times the duration of the present one-year export permit, and further guarantee that gas costs would not be raised to prohibitive levels by application of the act's power to impose an export tax of up to ten cents per thousand cubic feet. When and if the government presents that guarantee—without which British Columbia might not get a gas pipe line—this government might logically raise in Washington the broad question of a large scale gas exchange treaty.

If we cannot get an exchange of gas, our own self-interest dictates that we try to secure certain United States gas markets in order to ensure gas for our Pacific coast and economic outlets for certain of our gas reserves. Since this would be of obvious value to the United States, too, gas supply to specified United States markets could at least be used as a lever to secure (1) concessions on United States markets for such items as the Canadian petrochemicals, which will be a vast by-product of gas export from Alberta; and (2) United States guarantees of precedence for Canadian consumers on gas pipe lines passing over United States territory between Canadian fields and markets.

If exchange of gas is proved impossible, let us consider the alternative routes for a pipe line between Alberta and eastern Canada. But first there are certain misconceptions in the east and in this house as to what a gas pipe line might achieve. The first misconception is the view that Alberta gas would be cheap gas in the east. That is not so. Gas delivered at the Alberta end of a pipe line would likely cost in the range of seven to ten cents per thousand cubic feet. The eastern home owner served by the line would likely pay 15 to 20 times that wellhead cost. The eastern industrial consumer would likely have to pay 4 to 8 times the wellhead cost.

Of necessity I use a broad range of estimated costs, for these would vary with the pipe-line route chosen; the nature of direct or indirect subsidies, if such should be provided, the degree of success in building up markets through the years in competition with other fuels, especially industrial markets which would be expected to absorb 70 per cent or more of the pipe line throughout. Every potential consumer, householder or industry, would have to make his own decision to use or not to use gas, based upon its cost in comparison to other fuels, the cost of changeover from one fuel to another, and the comparative convenience of fuels. By any pipe-line route, Alberta gas will not be cheap gas in the east; but it could be cheaper by one route in preference to another.

The second misconception in the east is the view that a pipe line would make gas available to all Ontario and Quebec. Actually a transport pipe line serves only the markets along its route; and supplies of gas to other towns or cities or industries 25, 50, 100 or several hundreds of miles distant from the main pipe line are dependent upon the economics of the particular branch or lateral lines that would have to be built to serve markets off the main line. For example, markets far larger than any now indicated would have to be available in northern Ontario to justify any branch lines from a main line north of lake Superior. Just as many smaller Alberta communities, some within 25 miles of gas fields or pipe lines, are too distant cost-wise to get natural gas, a far greater number of Ontario and Quebec communities cannot hope to be served with natural gas when a pipe line is built from the west.

The most costly section of a pipe line from Alberta to the east via Canadian territory would be the more than 800 miles in northern Ontario between the Manitoba border and the Sudbury area. The difficult terrain in that range would raise the mileage cost of construction by from 100 to 150 per cent above the cost of construction along the rest of the route. That 800-mile section would be a major contributing factor in making cost of a line over that route far higher than the cost of a line to eastern Canada via the United States. That big extra cost the producer, the consumer and the Canadian economy would have to pay.

What would be the benefit of an all-Canadian pipe line north of the great lakes? The market survey made for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, the first proposer of a line over the all-Canadian route, anticipates that the total requirements of the communities to be served between Saskatchewan and Quebec inclusive would be 86 billion cubic feet the first year of pipe-line operation, building up to 105 billion the fifth year. Of that fifth year total, the survey indicates that only 4·6 billion cubic feet, or just 4·4 per cent of the total, would be the requirement along the costly 800-mile stretch including Port Arthur and Fort William and eight smaller communities between Manitoba and Sudbury which are the only markets contemplated to be served between Manitoba and Sudbury. The population represented is about 2 per cent of the total who could be served by an Alberta to Montreal pipe line.

Unless the government has information not available to the market surveyor or this house concerning very large additional markets for gas north of lake Superior, this question must be raised: Does the serving of less than 4½ per cent of the potential market and 2 per cent of the potential consumers justify the expanding of two score or more extra millions of dollars? Such extra cost, we must remember, would have to be borne by gas producers and their provincial government partners through lower wellhead values; by consumers with particular emphasis on the householder consumer; and probably also by the taxpayers generally through some form of subsidy.

Would not one of the following routes better serve Canada as a whole in view of their lower cost and sounder economies? One, from Alberta across Saskatchewan and Manitoba, swinging south of lake Superior across northern Michigan, re-entering Canada at Sault Ste. Marie, thence to Sudbury and south to Toronto, then branching east to Montreal and Ottawa and west into southern Ontario, serving all communities along the route; or in lieu of that, the same route across western Canada and north Michigan, but branching at Mackinac strait, with a branch swinging east to serve the Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury areas and the main line swinging south across Michigan to re-enter Canada near Sarnia, thence moving east through southern Ontario to Toronto, Ottawa Montreal and other communities. Or, three, either of these two routes to eastern Canada, coupled with a branch-off to Minneapolis-St. Paul, where a market for 35 to 50 billion cubic feet yearly would be immediately available with an existing utility company, to absorb surplus gas from Alberta during the five years or more that would be required to build up markets in eastern Canada.

Each of these alternatives offers benefits to Canadian consumers greater than would be obtained from a line north of the lakes. This is particularly true for consumers on the prairies and, if the Sarnia route is used, the consumers in southern Ontario, who would be brought nearer, in cost-distance, to the west's gas.

The supply provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, would reap the benefits of better wellhead gas prices, aiding their economies directly through improved government revenue from gas sales, and increased incentive for continued large-scale exploration for more oil and gas in the west.

I am not unmindful of the lakehead cities. I trust their potential market would prove sufficient to justify construction of a branch pipe line from any main line that might be built to eastern Canada.

In conclusion, the Alberta conservation board will commence hearings May 11 on applications to move gas westward from that province. It is likely that the hearings will include much evidence on the economic and engineering aspects of all proposed pipe-line routes and markets. The studies by that board will be in line with the policy recently stated by Premier Manning, a policy with which as an Albertan I fully agree. He said:

> In approving the export of surplus gas, the government will adhere to its policy of giving first priority to other Canadian markets if, in the opinion of the conservation board, the economic factors involved are not incompatible with the interests of Alberta producers and the province as a whole.

I trust that this Ottawa government will make it possible for the board of transport commissioners to make a full and complete study of all possible routes for gas, by not binding that board to consideration only of applications for pipe-line construction along routes entirely on Canadian territory.

Between Alberta's conservation board and Canada's transport board our nation has the opportunity to obtain from impartial studies the answers to the vital questions concerning natural gas supply for eastern Canadians and utilization of the west's gas resources in the manner best calculated to serve Canada's interests.

I trust that opportunity will not be lost because of emotional appeals or mere political considerations that could prevent full impartial studies, by tying in advance the hands of the investigators, the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the measure before us now contains an amendment which calls for consideration by the members of the committee at this time. That is the recommendation:

> That sub-clause (a) of clause 6 of this bill be amended by deleting the words "or outside" in line 14; by deleting the words "and/or international" in line 19; by deleting the words "the main" and "line or" in line 26, and by inserting after the word "that" in line 26 thereof the word "all".

The effect of this amendment, on being adopted and forwarded, was that the bill now before us would provide for a pipe line entirely within Canada to the east. That is what we were actually considering. I believe it is appropriate that we should bear in mind that this amendment has a considerable effect and that we should have due regard to what is actually before us in that respect.

The question as to whether the company which will be incorporated by this bill, if the bill is passed by the house, or any other corporation would obtain a licence from the board of transport commissioners when the time comes for them to make their application and have it considered, is not actually in issue before us at this time. I think, however, it is appropriate that certain comments be made in regard to this subject when we bear in mind the fact that the bill now before us relates only to a line entirely within Canada.

The question before us is not whether it is wise for the province of Alberta to permit the export of gas from that province. That is something which is under the control of the government of the province of Alberta. It has been stated by the premier of that province that the Alberta government has decided that it is their intention to permit the export of gas. We are therefore not called upon to argue the merits or otherwise of such a proposal from the point of view of the residents of Alberta. There are those who think that the people of Alberta would be wise to insist that the natural gas produced in that province be entirely used for the residents of that province. Again I emphasize the fact that this subject does not come before us for consideration. The government of Alberta has taken its position in this respect.

The question before us is as to what happens after the gas leaves Alberta. That question does fall within the authority of a tribunal which has been set up for the purpose of considering applications for permission to handle natural gas. As far as we are concerned at the moment, we are dealing with an application for incorporation which contains the provision that the pipe line shall run east from Alberta entirely within the boundaries of Canada.

I realize that in considering this subject it is natural that the point of view should be shaped in some measure by the part of Canada in which we live and also by the experience any of us may have had with regard to matters of this kind. However I think there has been one clearly expressed purpose—and may I say that the purpose has been expressed from both sides of the house—namely that it is the best interests of Canadians which should be considered in dealing with a question of this kind.

Our party has put on record consistently its belief that in the use of natural gas, as in the case of other resources, the legitimate self-interest of Canadians should be the first consideration of the representatives of the people of Canada who meet in the House of Commons. At no time has the assertion of that simple but understandable policy been intended to convey—nor, I suggest, could it properly have conveyed—any demand that there should be no export to the United States of either natural gas or other resources where it was consistent with our legitimate self-interest that this should be done.

I agree that economic factors must be given consideration. It would be folly to deny that cost and the other economic factors related to any operation of this kind should be carefully examined in deciding whether it is wise to have a pipe line of this kind entirely within Canada.

The history of dealings betweeen Canada and the United States is one of friendly exchange of resources where that exchange is to the common advantage of both countries. We have had unhappy experiences; and I have no doubt there have been occasions when the people of the United States as well thought we might have done something more favourable to them. Nevertheless, on the whole the relationship between these two countries has been one that may be regarded with admiration by everyone living here or elsewhere.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for the second reading of Bill No. 225, to amend the Excise Tax Act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude the remarks I was making this afternoon on this very important matter of the sales tax imposed on municipalities.

Our municipalities are faced with enormous problems. In most cities and towns municipalities are requested to increase the various services and I think it is absolutely illogical for the federal government to impose that tax on purchases paid for out of funds derived from property owners.

All of which means that our taxation system in Canada should be revised, so as to put an end to the discussion that has been going on for several years regarding the delimitation of the various taxation powers and give back to our three levels of government the sources of revenue they need for their administration. In my opinion the time is ripe, more than ever before, for the federal government to abandon its centralizing policy and convene, as soon as possible, a federal-provincial conference where the whole taxation problem could be settled once and for all from the federal, provincial and municipal aspects, so as to alleviate the burden of small property owners and encourage Canadians, and more particularly our young people, to become home owners and thus ensure the prosperity of Canada, a country where real estate is one of the mainstays.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words only on a particular point. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) stated this afternoon that the municipalities of the province of Quebec are the most seriously affected by the federal sales tax on their purchases.

The hon. member for Three Rivers gave no reason to justify such a statement. However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to this house one reason that I found myself, and it is that, in the province of Quebec, both municipalities and school boards must pay the provincial sales tax.

As all the hon. members know, I am sure, the people of Quebec pay a provincial sales tax. Well then, neither the municipalities nor the school boards of the province of Quebec are exempted from this provincial sales tax on their purchases. If the hon. member for Three Rivers is right when he says that it is not logical for the federal government to impose a sales tax on purchases made by municipalities, it is much more illogical for a mother to impose a sales tax on her own children.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the question I will hear any hon. members who would like to speak to the point of order.

I might say that this afternoon I raised the point of order because, in the first place, I questioned whether the amendment was relevant to the bill. There is also another point that strikes me, and that is whether the amendment does not attach conditions to the passing of second reading of the bill.

The amendment reads:

That Bill No. 225 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes . . .

et cetera. It occurs to me that either the amendment is a negative of the motion for second reading and sets forth a different proposal not contemplated in the bill or it attaches conditions to the second reading of the bill. I am prepared to make my ruling or to hear hon. members if they would like to speak to the question of whether or not the motion is in order.

In my opinion the amendment is out of order for the reason that it is either a negative of the motion for the second reading of the bill and sets forth a different proposal not contemplated in the bill, or it approves the second reading of the bill with certain conditions attached. The latter part is without doubt irregular and, for the reasons which I have mentioned, I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it one of your reasons, if not the chief reason, for ruling the amendment out of order is the last part of the amendment. I propose now to move an amendment which will be free from that difficulty and which I hope Your Honour will find satisfactory. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green):

That Bill No. 225 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes, including the 10 per cent sales tax, on all their purchases of machinery and other equipment.

I want to make a few brief comments, Mr. Speaker. I noted particularly that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) said he did not think it was desirable for the federal treasury to take direct action in respect of the financial position of the municipalities. I think I understand the point he has in mind. But the point he is discussing there is the taking of action in the sense of meddling or interfering with the finances of the municipality. This seems to me to be an entirely different matter. This proposal is merely to relieve them. It is not a question of interfering, except the kind of interference that we all like very much when it happens.

One thing the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) said this afternoon which I think it relevant to repeat, and which I should like to stress for a moment, is the position with regard to education. The federal government has dealt generously with education at the top level, and has given great relief to many of the universities who are in great need of it. But at the lower end of the scale we all know the accumulating difficulties which are facing school boards, and the tremendous rise in the cost of education.

Whether or not we should make education such an expensive thing I shall not pause to discuss now. We have done it. It is a tremendous problem for the municipalities, and I am thinking particularly of the school boards. For that reason it seems to me that the relief which is here proposed is something which would be of great benefit to the community. We, of course, in this party have advocated a general lowering of the sales tax for reasons which I do not need to repeat. I suggest that this is a particular area in which relief might be given which would pay off thirty, sixty or one hundredfold in respect of the assistance which would be given to hard-pressed municipalities and perhaps to still harder-pressed school boards.

Mr. Green: When I spoke on the budget debate, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out to the minister and the house that in the building of the Granville street bridge the city of Vancouver is paying to the dominion government between $500,000 and $600,000 by way of sales tax on the materials going into that bridge. One has only to compare that fact with the fact that if an individual were building a $16·5 million office building in Vancouver most of the material going into that building would be free of sales tax. That is because of the exemption contained in that portion of schedule III to the act which concerns the group of materials which are described as "certain building materials". One of those items is structural steel to be used exclusively for the framework and support of buildings. This exemption would apply, therefore, in the case of a building but does not apply in the case of structural steel used for a bridge.

I do not know how that situation can best be remedied, whether it should be done by a change in the schedule to the act or whether there should be some exemption for municipalities written into the body of the Excise Tax Act. However, I wish to point out to the minister that that is a very unfair situation.

The money which is being paid by the city in sales tax on the materials used in the bridge is raised largely by levies on the homes of the residents in that city. It is sufficiently onerous for them to have to build the bridge without adding another $500,000 or $600,000 by way of sales tax.

I realize that the situation is a difficult one. It is not as simple as it looks on the surface, but I do urge upon the minister that some steps be taken at this session to relieve the municipalities from the need of paying sales tax on such expenditures as for the materials for a bridge or public works within their own boundaries. I do not think a very good case could be made out for making home owners pay a sales tax under those conditions.

Mr. Speaker: The amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) is, as he has said, in one respect different from the amendment which was previously moved. I ruled that the previous amendment was out of order, and one of the reasons for so doing was that the latter part of the amendment which has been omitted from the present amendment was not in accordance with our rules. In making my ruling I mentioned other reasons which also apply to this amendment. The amendment is either a negative of the motion for second reading and the substitution of a proposal not contemplated in the bill or it attaches a condition to the second reading of the bill. The condition is that further consideration be given to another matter which would have to come into the house by way of legislation. If it could come into the house by way of amendment to the bill in committee, then obviously the amendment should take place in committee and not in the house.

At page 498 of Beauchesne's third edition there is a ruling by Mr. Speaker Black with respect to a similar motion. At that time a bill was before the house for second reading, and the amendment was that all the words after "that" in the main motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor, that in the opinion of this house further consideration should be given to a certain matter referred to in the amendment. Mr. Speaker Black ruled the amendment out of order for several reasons, one of which was that the amendment attached conditions to the second reading of the bill in that it called for further consideration of the matter set forth in the amendment before the bill could be given second reading.

Toward the end of citation 662 of Beauchesne's third edition, I find that such an amendment must not attach a condition to the second reading of the bill.

For the reasons I have given I must rule that this amendment also is out of order.

Mr. Drew: Are you not prepared to hear any comment on this before making a ruling?

Mr. Speaker: I did not know that any hon. members wanted to comment upon the question of whether or not the amendment was in order. I asked for views on the previous amendment and no one responded, but I shall be glad to hear the Leader of the Opposition if he desires to speak.

Mr. Drew: My point, Mr. Speaker, relates to the fact that there was a discussion in regard to the original amendment which was proposed. The present amendment is different in the fact that there is no extraneous comment other than the direct request that the bill be not now read a second time, but that consideration be given to legislation which would add to those exemptions already included the exemption in regard to excise taxes, including the sales tax.

That is the effect of the amendment as now proposed. I would point out that this is in fact the only form and the only time that presents itself to make a proposal of this nature. We now have before us the Excise Tax Act. Undoubtedly to achieve the result that is desired it would be necessary for the government to consider the form in which the amendments would be made. The intention of such a motion as this is to give the government the opportunity to consider a proposal that certain changes be made in the act to widen the exemptions which are provided.

As I mentioned in discussing the earlier amendment before us, this act does set out in schedule III a number of exemptions. Our contention is that these exemptions should be widened to include the exemptions I have mentioned. This cannot be achieved simply by moving that these particular exemptions be added to the exemptions included in schedule III, because it would in fact require a reconsideration of the form of the act and additional provisions which would deal with this additional form of exemption. Nevertheless the principle is precisely the same as that now contained in the act.

Mr. Speaker: Could the amendment not be made in committee?

Mr. Drew: I do not believe that it is possible to deal with an amendment of this kind satisfactorily in committee. Perhaps Your Honour will recall this very subject came up for discussion on March 27, 1950, at a time when a motion was moved in connection with the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and the following motion was presented by way of amendment:

That Bill No. 16 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introduction of a permanent agricultural products export act which would provide for the setting up of an export board, to fill present contracts, negotiate future contracts, and develop new markets abroad for surplus agricultural products.

On that occasion the very same question was raised as to whether this could not be dealt with in committee, but it was considered at that time that the more satisfactory way was to have a reconsideration of the measure as a whole; because while the principle was similar to that already contained in the bill before the house, it would require a general reconsideration in order to produce a satisfactory result. On that occasion Your Honour upheld the contention that the motion should stand, and the amendment was in fact then put to a vote in the house in the form in which I have just read it.

I could read a number of other motions of a similar kind and in similar form which have recognized that it is essential that there be reconsideration of an act where the principle is similar, but where undoubtedly there would be a number of amendments in which obviously the government's discretion must guide the form those amendments would take.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, if I may add a word; as my hon. friend has pointed out, the purpose of his amendment is that the government should give consideration to amending this act to provide that exemption should be given to municipalities from sales tax imposed on them. I indicated this afternoon that the government had given careful consideration to that question and had decided that it could not make such a recommendation to the house.

As my hon. friend has quite properly pointed out, such a recommendation could only be made by a member of the government, since it affects the revenue. The hon. gentleman and his supporters have had the opportunity to demonstrate that they are the champions of the municipalities at any rate for—

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Drew: I am glad the minister recognizes that.

Mr. Abbott: —at any rate for the purpose of this debate, and I suggest for the reasons that Your Honour has already given that the motion is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has referred to a previous ruling that I made. I think at that time, as he stated, it was proposed to introduce a new bill rather than an amendment to the present act. The present amendment does not propose that the bill before the house should take the form of a new act; it proposes that the bill be not now read a second time, but that the government should give consideration to another matter set forth in the amendment. In my opinion that is equivalent to a negative or to attaching a condition to the second reading of the bill, and for that reason and for the reasons I stated previously I cannot allow the amendment to stand, but must rule it out of order.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, in view of the previous ruling, and in view of my understanding of what that ruling was, with deference I feel I cannot agree to accept this ruling and I therefore appeal from it.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against it will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

And the members having been called in:

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

On the motion for second reading of the bill respecting the excise tax, Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood) moved an amendment which I ruled out of order on the grounds that it was a negative with an alternative proposal or that the amendment attached conditions to the motion for second reading or that it anticipated the committee stage.

From my ruling Mr. Drew and others appealed.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin). Had I voted, I would have voted against your ruling.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, we have been considering this afternoon the toll taken of the hard-pressed municipalities by the federal government in the form of sales and excise taxes. We have been considering the extent to which these exactions impose upon the municipalities burdens which it is grossly unfair that the federal government should impose. We have been considering the heavy and growing burdens that the municipalities have been called upon to bear. Indeed the weight of responsibility that has been cast upon the municipalities has been literally growing by leaps and bounds as social services have multiplied, as educational facilities have been extended, as housing burdens have been passed on to an increasingly greater degree to municipal governments.

The total incidence of these burdens has resulted in a situation where the municipalities are today literally overwhelmed. At the same time they have been called upon, apart from such assistance as has been afforded to them by the provincial governments, to function with the same limited tax base that was given to them 85 years ago, when their burdens were infinitely less than they are today. The time has long passed when there should be a fundamental review of the whole question of tax burdens and administrative responsibilities as between the different levels of government in this country.

We of the opposition have today properly pointed out how unfair it is for the federal government, when virtually asserting that with only one slight modification it shall have full exemption from taxation by the provinces and the municipalities on federal property, to impose burdens upon the municipalities in the form of taxation. If this taxation were imposed upon the municipalities by means of a direct levy, open and visible, then many people in this country, who may not be as fully aware of this problem as are those who bear responsibilities for municipal government, would indeed be shocked. Yet just as onerous a burden is being cast upon the municipalities by the federal government today in this indirect and hidden form.

This form of indirect imposition is all the more onerous because it is levied not on the end consumer but upon the manufacturer or producer. In previous debates we have been shown how this tax levied at the manufacturing or producing level goes on attracting to itself mark-ups, and mark-ups on mark-ups, and mark-ups on mark-ups on mark-ups, as it passes from the hands of the manufacturer to the wholesaler, to the jobber, to the retailer, and finally to the consumer.

This 10 per cent sales tax levy is costing the municipalities not 10 per cent but about 20 per cent on an average. The federal government derives a benefit of 10 per cent and the rest is distributed along the line among those through whose hands the goods have passed before they eventually reach the hands of the municipalities. This form of taxation upon the municipalities is in that respect much more burdensome and more reprehensible than would be a direct tax levied upon the municipalities by the federal government.

Among all the anomalies, among all the injustices in the federal tax structure today that are simply crying out for reform there is none more pressing than the one we have been discussing here today of this iniquitous imposition by the federal government upon the municipalities.

There is one other form of imposition by way of excise and sales taxes that the federal government is levying today which I think ought to be commented upon at this stage of the proceedings. I refer to the extent to which social welfare agencies, which are doing such admirable work in all parts of this country, are being taxed by the federal government through these sales and excise taxes. This has been the subject matter of representations to the federal government, but apparently they have not been effective in winning support from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) or his associates.

Three years ago you will recall that this house did legislate limited relief for certain types of institutions of a charitable nature. By chapter 15, section 6 of the statutes of 1950 a new section 105A was added to the Excise Tax Act. The effect of that useful and commendable amendment is that institutions of the nature described in the section were permitted, where they purchased goods for their own use and not for resale, to make application to the minister for the refund of an amount equal to the tax paid. The class of institution which was permitted to enjoy this right was described in the following words:

> (a) a bona fide public institution whose principal purpose is to provide permanent or semi-permanent shelter and care for children or aged, infirm or incapacitated persons who reside in the institution; and
> (b) in receipt annually of aid from the government of Canada or a province for the maintenance of persons specified in paragraph (a).

It will be seen that in the amendment of 1950 parliament gave recognition, although limited, to the principle that institutions engaged in social welfare work coming within certain definitions should not be subject to the payment of federal excise or sales taxes, and that where they purchased goods subject to those taxes and paid the tax, they should be entitled to make application to the minister for a refund of an amount equivalent to the tax paid. In my submission that limited recognition of principle should be extended.

There are many welfare agencies in this country whose work on behalf of the people is simply invaluable but which do not qualify within this definition of institutions. They do not give institutional care of the kind mentioned in section 105A. Indeed, many of the social welfare agencies which are members of community chests in all our cities and larger communities in Canada are without any status under this section and are being subjected to federal taxation. It would shock the conscience of many people, Mr. Speaker, were they aware of this fact, to know that the federal government is taxing charitable organizations engaged in social welfare work. You go to the average citizen in the street and tell him that the federal government is imposing federal taxes upon social welfare agencies engaged in purely altruistic work and you will, in my belief, shock his conscience. The fact of the matter is that this is going on year after year right under our noses; and notwithstanding that representations based upon very solid considerations have been submitted to the government, the government so far has turned a deaf ear.

May I remind the house that these groups which do not enjoy any of this benefit today are very large and important ones. Take all the welfare agencies, for instance, that are engaged in the prevention of individual and family breakdowns, that are engaged in work that saves the public treasury at all levels of government a great deal of money. Among the various classes of welfare agencies that do not qualify under the definition are many children's aid societies, family welfare bureaux, visiting nurse associations, community chests and welfare councils.

How extensive is the problem, Mr. Speaker? The Canadian welfare council recently conducted an inquiry, and they obtained returns from community chest and welfare associations throughout the country. Based upon that investigation they came to the conclusion that in the year past these welfare agencies purchased goods which were subject to sales tax—I am eliminating entirely all goods that were purchased free of sales tax—to the value of $2,149,000. They also estimated that the sales tax cost them approximately $506,000; and here we have to take account of the fact that mark-ups were included on many of these goods as they passed from hand to hand before they eventually reached the consumer, in this case the welfare agencies.

Perhaps it is just a little unfortunate that this tax does not take the form of a direct, open, visible levy by the federal government on these welfare agencies. Then the public would become aware of the iniquity of the federal imposition of taxes upon social welfare agencies. But again the problem is in the same position entirely as the federal imposition of tax upon municipalities. It is hidden, it is indirect, and the public is not aware of the extent or nature, or indeed of the fact, of these impositions.

I appreciate that there are administrative difficulties involved. I am not saying the problem can be reduced to such simple proportions that, by the mere changing of a word or two in the act, the end result which is so desirable can be brought about. But I am satisfied that if the intelligence and ingenuity of the government and its advisers were applied to the problem, with a recognition of the fact that it is fundamentally wrong that the federal government should tax welfare agencies, the problem could be resolved in a very short space of time. I appeal to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). I know the problem is not new to him. I know that mine is by no means the first appeal that has been made to him.

Mr. Abbott: It was being made back in Mr. Bennett's day.

Mr. Fleming: I do not recall when the first appeal was made in the house, but I urge the minister to undertake a study of the problem with a much more favourable approach to it than he has demonstrated in the past. I am informed that he has had extensive briefs on the subject, and I have no doubt that he has studied them. I have no doubt also that he has been concerned about what may be regarded as certain administrative problems that this question involves.

Mr. Abbott: That is a euphemistic way of putting it—yes.

Mr. Fleming: But I am satisfied that if the minister will apply to this problem the same ingenuity that he has applied to some other questions, and will follow the methods by which he has endeavoured to treat certain other problems, this problem is by no means impossible of solution. We have had a recognition of the principle in section 105A. To that extent the federal government and parliament have recognized that it is fundamentally wrong—I go further and say that it is iniquitous—that the federal government should be taxing social welfare agencies engaged in purely philanthropic work. I urge with all the earnestness at my command that the government take this problem in hand, and that without further delay the Minister of Finance undertake the redress of a situation which, in my humble opinion, if brought home to the man in the street would shock his conscience to its foundations.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word with respect to this matter because, while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) expressed our view very well and very forcibly and made a plea to the minister for the removal of this tax from municipalities and social welfare agencies, I want to say something about the tax itself. As has already been said, when the 10 per cent tax, 2 per cent of which we of course understand now goes for social security, reaches the ultimate consumer it has been pyramided to 15 per cent, 16 per cent or even—

Mr. Abbott: I do not think experience justifies that, but it is a matter of assertion on both sides. My information is that is not the case.

Mr. Coldwell: Suppose we leave it that the tax is pyramided, without mentioning any figures.

Mr. Abbott: I am not even prepared to concede that, but my hon. friend can make his argument.

Mr. Coldwell: The minister will not disagree with that, so we will leave out the figures. In that sense it is a tax imposed by the federal government which, when it is finally paid, involves an imposition greater than the tax, whatever the extent may be; and I am not going to argue about that.

Mr. Abbott: In a highly competitive business it is pretty modest.

Mr. Coldwell: To that extent I say the tax is bad in any event.

Mr. Abbott: That is true of corporate income tax, too; any indirect tax; customs duties.

Mr. Fleming: If levied at the manufacturer's level.

Mr. Abbott: That is where the corporation tax is levied in most cases.

Mr. Coldwell: As a rule an indirect tax of this description is pyramided. If it is the corporation tax and the corporation levies it upon the public then by the time the public pays it, it is probably more than the tax imposed by the government. There is no disagreement between the minister and ourselves that a tax of this description, when paid by the consumer, is usually higher than the amount imposed by the government.

Mr. Abbott: Not necessarily.

Mr. Coldwell: I said "usually". I qualified it. I said "usually" and the minister says "not necessarily". I think we mean the same thing in that respect. What I say is that when this was first imposed the public of Canada regarded it as a tax that was not a good tax. Indeed, when my hon. friends in the Liberal party left office in 1930, as I remember it there was a 1 per cent sales tax. Then the Progressive Conservatives came into power.

Mr. Knowles: The Liberal Conservatives.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, the Conservatives came into power and they increased the tax to 4 per cent.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Oh?

Mr. Coldwell: And what did the Liberal opposition say of it at that time?

Mr. Fraser: They raised Cain.

Mr. Coldwell: I did not say that, but I think that is a very adequate way of putting it.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. King said it was "iniquitous".

Mr. Coldwell: The great Canadian who subsequently became minister of finance, Hon. J. L. Ralston, opposed it strenuously. On June 4, 1931, speaking in this house and protesting the increase from 1 per cent to 4 per cent, Mr. Ralston said this:

> It is the ordinary, everyday consumers, the men and women who are hard put to make ends meet—

That was at that time, of course.

> —men who are out of work, who are now called upon to pay the extra amount in connection with the sales tax.

They are the ones who are the hardest hit. There were many out of work at that time and, of course, there are some people out of work now. There are people living on old age pensions and there are people who are maintaining homes on small wages and incomes. The sales tax reaches right into the homes of our people. It applies on articles of clothing, furniture, and a long list that I am not going to put on the record because it has been put on the record before; but there is a long list of essential commodities of life which are subject to this sales tax. As I say, there was never a truer indictment of this tax than was made on June 4, 1931, by the Hon. J. L. Ralston when he was speaking on behalf of the Liberal party in this house.

Then I remember the election of 1935; I was a candidate, and I was elected at that time. I remember that the Liberal candidates across the country paid particular attention to the sales tax. I remember too a broadcast made by the leader of the opposition of the day in which he criticized the sales tax. We thought, although we were never quite sure what the then leader of the Liberal party meant when he spoke, that if they were elected they were going to do away with that sales tax. Instead of that they raised it to 6 per cent; and then it was raised to 8 per cent.

Mr. Abbott: It was raised to 6 per cent by the Tories.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, shortly before they went out of office; and raised to 8 per cent by the Liberals.

Mr. Abbott: And it stood there for 15 years.

Mr. Coldwell: It stood there for years until you increased it to 10 per cent.

Mr. Abbott: For social security.

Mr. Coldwell: Of course 2 per cent is taken now for social security.

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Coldwell: For whatever purpose the tax is used, it is not a good tax. It is a regressive tax.

I personally believe that the sales tax is one of the poorest forms of taxation that we have. It is a hidden tax which people do not know they are paying; and a tax which is levied on many of the essential commodities of life at a time when the cost of living is high. It is oppressive on many families and on pensioners with small incomes. This tax takes from them a very great deal in their contributions to Canada.

It might be said that everyone should pay taxes. Well, I will not disagree with that statement except to say that if people pay taxes they should at least know they are paying them and know what they are paying in the form of taxation. Therefore I want to support what my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had to say on our behalf this afternoon, and to appeal to the minister to consider the representations that have been made (a) to remove the tax from municipalities and (b) to remove the tax from these social and welfare organizations.

As far as municipalities are concerned today their burdens are heavy, and one of the great burdens, of course, is the burden of education. The government refuses to make grants to the provinces for the purpose of education, and I think an attempt at least should be made to relieve the burden on municipalities in connection with this tax.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make that appeal to the minister for a reconsideration of the proposals he has made to this house in this regard.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to support those who have been urging the exemption of municipalities from the sales tax on municipal purchases. I am not as sure as some of the members are that the minister will not listen to this appeal. In his budget the minister has shown some interest in the municipalities. In his revision of the income tax he has at least brought the municipalities in line with provincial governments and with the federal government in the matter of elected representatives and has made provision whereby their expenses may be deducted for income tax purposes. That would seem to indicate that the minister is showing some concern for the municipalities, and I think it is not an impossibility that even at this hour the minister may consider the justness of the appeal that has been made at the present time.

The minister has been quite concerned over the question of double taxation for corporations. I wonder if he has taken into consideration the extent to which this sales tax, levied upon municipal purchases, is a double tax in so far as property taxpayers within the municipality are concerned. The sales tax is collected on municipal purchases, and the home owners are the people who pay municipal taxes. They are also the people who pay these indirect taxes, just as every other Canadian pays them.

In addition to the sales tax which the ordinary home owner in the city pays together with every other Canadian citizen, he pays an extra sales tax when he has to support the municipal government, because the municipal government has to raise money with which to reimburse the federal government for the sales tax. There is a phase of double taxation.

Mr. Abbott: It is not double taxation at all; it is just the opposite.

Mr. Noseworthy: It is just as clear a case of double taxation as it is in the case of corporations, with which the minister is very much concerned. I know the minister does not see it that way; but the home owner in the city, who bears municipal taxes, pays his ordinary sales taxes to the federal government the same as the rest of us do. In addition he pays, through his real estate tax and through taxes on his home, an additional sales tax to the government because the municipality has to pay taxes on its municipal purchases.

There is another point I would like to call to the minister's attention. While our municipalities are creatures of the province, and while the minister may say that it is the business of the provincial governments to bring relief to the municipalities, the cost of municipal government today is in no small measure due to federal government policies. Municipal taxes have increased within recent years because of inflation, and inflation is the direct result of the policy pursued by this government. The government could, had it desired, have checked inflation after the war just as it checked inflation during the war years. It chose to let inflation run, probably not wild but wild to some extent at least. It was the government's deliberate policy to take off all controls, so the government must bear some responsibility for inflation which has brought an extra burden to bear upon the home owners who pay taxes within the municipalities.

Then the increased industrialization, from which the federal government has obtained great benefit and for which the federal government takes credit, has affected the urban municipalities, and particularly the urban population. Within the ten years since the previous census was taken the urban population increased about 24 per cent. This influx is due directly to industrialization, for which as I said the government takes great credit and from which the government derives great benefit by way of taxes. This industrialization has thrown an extra burden upon the municipalities. As a result also of the government's immigration policy there has been a further influx of population into our urban centres. The government brings thousands of people into this country, presumably as agricultural workers, and they are supposed to stay on the farms. Before they are in this country more than a few months we find them back in the cities. I say that on each of these counts the federal government should, in my opinion, assume some responsibility for the extra burden which in recent years has been thrust upon the municipalities.

It is true that the exemption of purchases by municipalities from the sales tax will reduce federal revenues. It should be much easier, though, for the federal government to make up the difference than it is for the municipalities to bear the extra burden which inflation, and in the case of urban centres immigration, has thrown upon them.

Today we have a serious housing situation in the urban centres. One of the greatest difficulties confronted in the building of homes is that people cannot afford to build even moderately priced homes because of the increased taxation which education by itself will throw upon the municipality. This government is unwilling to bear any share of the cost of education at the elementary or secondary school level. Here is an opportunity, by following the precedent the minister set in the matter of elected employees of the municipalities and their income, for the government to bring some relief to the municipalities by exempting them from these taxes.

I am quite sure that the Canadian people as a whole, even though they might be called upon to bear the same amount of over-all taxes were such exemptions granted, would rather see the federal government grant those exemptions and make up the resultant loss in revenue by other means at the disposal of the federal government. They do not wish to continue to impose this burden upon the home owners of this country.

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I have, upon many occasions, registered our opposition to hidden taxes. We have had very definite reasons for doing that, and I need not take very long in order to recount some of those reasons.

In the first place we have condemned hidden taxes, the sales tax and excise tax, inasmuch as they do not in any sense bear a relationship to ability to pay. The poorest person in the land finds the cost of many of his essentials inflated purely as a consequence of hidden taxes. We have condemned these taxes because of what was so well stated by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), namely that you find yourself paying taxes upon taxes—in my opinion a bad principle, a dangerous procedure. We have condemned these taxes because of the fact that they are an extremely important factor in causing inflation, in causing prices even today to remain at extremely high levels. Because of these hidden taxes, many of the things which should properly be in the category of necessities have now become luxuries. In fact it was only a short while ago that I read this. The question was asked, what is a luxury? The answer was, a luxury is a necessity plus Abbott's taxes. I think that in some respects there is a lot of truth to that assertion.

I was rather astounded to read only today that in 1952 the wages paid in the automobile industry approximated $131 million, but that sales and excise taxes exceeded that amount by almost $6·5 million. To me that was a most astonishing revelation, provided, of course, that the figures are correct; and I have no reason for assuming that they are not. In other words when people talk so glibly about high wages being such an important part of the high cost of motor vehicles, they should bear in mind that approximately $137 million in taxes was taken out of that industry or charged to the purchasers of motor vehicles in the year 1952. There is one matter about which I desire further information. I understand it is customary for the motor manufacturers to have suppliers of parts for these vehicles. Are sales and excise taxes paid on the parts that go into the automobile, and then is sales tax imposed upon the final product? In that case it would mean the imposition of a double sales tax.

I think I know, Mr. Speaker, why certain governments cling so tenaciously to that hidden tax. They are less likely to be blamed for what they are actually doing. All too frequently a purchaser will blame the retailer for the high price which is made up in a substantial part of hidden taxes, or he will blame the wholesaler or the manufacturer and say that they are responsible for the higher prices. Governments resist removing these hidden taxes.

For these and other reasons we again take very strong exception to these hidden taxes. When speaking in the house on March 2, I believe it was, I raised the question of the taxes which are imposed upon municipal purchases. It is rather an interesting thing, Mr. Speaker. There was a time when the opposition of the Minister of Finance to making this concession was the necessity for revenue. That argument was laboured, and possibly at the time it was laboured it was a rather difficult one to counter by one's argument then. Of course that argument has lost much of its validity and we are now faced with the argument that it would be extremely difficult to administer. It has been pointed out, for example, that in the United States it is being done. Concessions are made to the states by the national government as far as state purchases are concerned. There has been no insurmountable obstacle facing them as far as administration is concerned.

Now that argument has become less valid, so the minister labours the fact that he does not believe we should reach down and deal with creatures of the provincial governments. They may be creatures of the provincial governments but they are also definitely victims of the federal government, because after all federal government policy has its repercussions even in the municipalities.

One need not labour the problems with which the municipalities are confronted. We recognize fully that right across this country the provincial governments have been going farther and farther in their attempts to relieve the burden borne by the municipalities, and they have been doing a good deal in many instances in helping to remove that burden. But certainly one of the most effective ways of helping them through their difficulties would be by the federal government doing for the municipal governments what they now do for the provincial governments. As I pointed out before, the municipal government is a legislative body exercising authority granted to it under the municipal act, and in its sphere carrying on a public service in the same way that the provincial government carries it on in the wider sphere, and in the same way that the federal government carries on its responsibilities within its sphere of jurisdiction.

One could take more time, but my purpose is not just to take time. On behalf of my colleagues I again wish to register strenuous objection to these hidden taxes. Certain of them should be removed completely and others should be reduced. We also go on record as urging the federal government to give careful consideration to these requests of the municipal governments that the sales and excise taxes be removed on the commodities they purchase.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I will not detain the house very long, and I am not going to attack the minister, either. I rarely speak on taxation in this house; but first of all I do not feel that people in my particular circumstances are overtaxed, and I have never felt that they were. I also realize that a taxation policy that will satisfy everyone is a pretty difficult thing to achieve. I did say something on this subject when I spoke in the budget debate. On that occasion I made a slight mistake because I said I thought that in the aggregate this tax was not a very large factor in the total financial set-up of the municipalities. Since then I have had evidence put before me from my own city of Vancouver to indicate that I was not quite right when I said that. All I wish to say is that to me it does not seem right that one level of government should impose taxes that bear heavily upon another level of government.

If there are any of our governments, municipal, provincial or federal, that are having difficulties in financing the needs of the particular areas they govern it is the municipal governments. The proof of that fact is that while the federal government for the past eight or nine years has reduced our national debt every year, hardly a municipal government in Canada has not gone still further in debt during that same period. They cannot continue going into debt. There will come a time when they will not be able to meet their obligations, and then nothing will be left to be done but for the provinces to set up commissions, as they did in many municipalities during the depression, and try to carry on in that way.

Therefore without blaming the minister at all for many of the things that have happened, for inflation and all that sort of thing, over which this government may have some control but which in some respects at least is a part of the world-wide condition over which no government has complete control, I suggest to the minister that he reconsider this matter. I would be one of the first to agree that there are many things this government could have done but did not do, but I do not think this is the time to mention them. However, I do tell the Minister of Finance that at the present time the municipal governments need some sort of relief, and anything the federal government can do—and this is one thing they could do, even though it may be a little difficult to administer—would be of considerable help.

Every new settler that moves into a municipal area creates a burden on that area far greater than the amount of taxes that family contributes to the municipal exchequer, and the cities and municipalities have been growing exceedingly rapidly during the last few years. It is one of the results of our prosperity, but that prosperity does not extend to the finances of the municipalities. I repeat, if anyone wants to know which of our governments is finding difficulty in financing all he has to do is to note that during the past eight or nine years the federal government has been able to reduce its debt while at the same time the municipal governments in Canada have had their debts increased. Something will have to be done and done quickly for these municipalities.

Some things could be done for them here, and I urge the Minister of Finance not to be too definite in his refusal to do something, because sooner or later he will have to change his mind.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I want to take only a very few minutes. This afternoon I gave, rather too briefly perhaps, the reasons which actuated the government in feeling that it could not recommend for the municipalities an exemption from the imposition of the sales tax. My friend the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) suggested this evening that this was in fact imposing a double tax. Of course that is not the case. I tried to point out this afternoon that I could see no reason why, in a tax which is payable by individuals on the purchase of commodities, they should be relieved of that tax because they are purchased through a corporation, in this case a municipal corporation. In fact, if municipalities were exempt from the payment of this sales tax it would be necessary to make up the revenue somewhere else, and it would have to be done by increasing some tax or increasing the rate of tax and imposing it on people who are in fact the same people because everybody resides in a municipality. I say that because, of course, it is not in fact a double tax.

I know there has been a great deal of talk about the sales tax. This debate this evening has almost developed into our annual debate on the evils of the sales tax. I have dealt with that matter before. I have endeavoured to show that, with the wide list of exemptions—in the case of the small income man nearly two-thirds of his purchases being exempt from the sales tax—this is not a regressive tax. We get from the tax, or I estimate that we shall get from the sales tax this year, about $590 million. If that revenue is to be forgone, we must get it somewhere else. We could get it by increasing the personal income tax on the average by about 50 per cent; and I know that would be an extremely popular method with my friend the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) who is a strong opponent of the sales tax. We could get it perhaps by increasing the corporation tax further. But let me hasten to say here, to those who oppose hidden taxes, that the corporation tax is today our greatest hidden tax and produces substantially more than the sales tax produces.

I know that it is the job of people in the opposition to oppose taxes. My friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) cited Mr. Ralston's denunciation of the sales tax in 1931. I venture to say that if he were sitting on your right hand, Mr. Speaker, or if my friend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) were sitting on your right hand, he would be defending the sales tax just exactly as I am doing this evening. In my opinion—and I have said this before—with the steeply progressive personal income tax that we have and with the heavy corporation taxes that we have, the general sales tax with the list of exemptions which we have now developed is a perfectly fair and equitable tax.

Reference was made to 1935. My recollection is that in 1935 we obtained 23 per cent of our revenues from direct taxes and 77 per cent from indirect taxes and in other ways. This year we estimate that we shall obtain 57·5 per cent or thereabouts of our revenues from direct taxes and about 33 or 34 per cent from indirect taxes. I therefore think it is fair to say that there has been a recasting of our tax structure which has made it, in my judgment, much more equitable than was the tax structure which existed ten or fifteen years ago.

We have much heavier obligations. Nearly 25 per cent of our total budget goes in the form of social security payments of one sort and another to our people. Those are transfer payments, and the moneys have to be raised by taxation. As I say, anyone who occupies the position that I occupy and who forgoes revenue from the sales tax must get that revenue from somewhere else. I have heard no suggestions made in this house that the rate of personal income tax was too low, or that the rate of corporation tax was too low, or that the special excise tax rate was too low, or that the rate of tax on cigarettes was too low, or even that the rate of tax on liquor was too low. So let us face the fact that if we are going to remove some of these taxes we have to be prepared to put them on somewhere else.

I do not like to do unpleasant things any more than anybody else. I should be exceedingly happy personally to accede to this widespread demand and request that the municipalities should be exempt from the sales tax. But as I pointed out this afternoon, that would involve a very substantial loss of revenue which would have to be made up somewhere else. It would involve serious administrative difficulties, and I am using a euphemism when I say that. It would involve serious administrative difficulties to see that it was fully and fairly administered over the approximately four thousand municipalities in Canada. In my judgment one of the tests of a good tax is that it should be fully, thoroughly and efficiently administered. So far as I am concerned I came to the conclusion, after most careful consideration, that it would not be appropriate that this exemption should be made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I simply say—

Mr. Abbott: The debate is closed. I closed the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I point out—

Mr. Drew: I was simply going to explain why we were not going to divide the house.

Mr. Abbott: I beg the pardon of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). I am sorry to have interrupted.

Mr. Drew: I was going to explain that rather than divide the house, in view of the fact that a motion had already been presented, we were going to permit this motion to pass on division and would deal with the sections in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Drew: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

The Chairman: Before we start the study of this bill, may I draw to the attention of hon. members the fact that this bill, like all others this session, is divided into two parts and that the second part is merely a duplication of the first part. If hon. members look at page 5 of the bill and the explanatory notes with regard to part II, they will see this language:

> This part makes corresponding amendments to the new revised statutes.

I should like to point out to hon. members that, as they know, duplication of debate is not in accordance with our rules and that this bill in effect consists only of clauses 1 to 14 inclusive. Therefore when we reach clause 15 we should be in a position to carry it and the clauses following it more quickly. As a matter of fact I would ask hon. members to agree to a certain procedure. When we reach part II, which is merely to bring the amendments in accordance with the new revised statutes, I would suggest that at that moment I stand up and say: "I take it that hon. members, having approved the original sections, approve the duplicates."

I should like to have agreement on this matter. Some hon. members, because they have seen clauses passed quickly, have said that the chairman had rushed certain clauses through when, as a matter of fact, those clauses were only duplicates of the originals which were carried only after there was opportunity for a debate. I should like agreement at this time so that it will be clear for all bills still to come and to be studied in committee. When we reach the duplicate sections, let us impose upon ourselves some self-restraint, and let us avoid duplication of debate. If that procedure is agreed upon, that is the one I will follow from now on.

On section 1—"Net premiums".

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks. On March 5, when I was speaking on the budget, I expressed regret that the government had not considered the time opportune to abolish the 10 per cent sales tax on wire rope or cable and on all kinds of rope or cordage of manila—

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is now referring to matters which should come under section 13. As a matter of fact, following recommendations made by the fisheries council of Canada and by my hon. friend, it is intended to have an amendment moved when we reach that section. We are now dealing with section 1, which has to do with insurance.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the hon. member?

Mr. Robichaud: As long as I have an opportunity to say something on the section.

Mr. Lesage: I am giving the hon. member what he asked for.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On section 9—Refunds.

Mr. Green: This section has to do with refunds. When the resolution was under discussion I brought to the attention of the parliamentary assistant the difficulty that seems to have arisen with regard to refunds of the sales tax on furnaces. Has there been any clarification of that situation since that time? Some press dispatches indicate that firms are paying back the money and then making application to the Department of National Revenue for refund, while other firms are saying they are not to pay anything back.

It would seem to me that in most of these cases the consumer will have paid the tax. Why should there not be some provision whereby the consumer could make application for the refund? Certainly the manufacturer must have passed on the tax to the consumer. If that money is paid back to the manufacturer without any obligation upon him to pass it on to the consumer it will merely mean that the department is subsidizing the manufacturer. I should think if anybody is entitled to a refund it is the consumer.

Mr. Lesage: I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, but I cannot add anything to what I said on March 19 when he raised this question. The matter of the refund of tax from the manufacturer to the wholesaler and then to the retailer and then to the consumer is something to be settled by the parties themselves. Frankly I do not believe the officers of the department can devise machinery which would work in such a way that we would be sure the refund would go to the consumer in each case.

One of the arguments in favour of this amendment was that in many instances it might be impossible for a manufacturer or wholesaler or retailer to know to whom a sale had been made. It is possible that a sale might be made on a cash basis to a passerby, and how could you reimburse him? In that case the retailer would profit.

Under this amendment the refunds will be made only to those who have paid the tax and who have applied for a refund. Under the old section it was possible for a manufacturer to claim the refund of taxes he had paid during the twelve months preceding the application of a third person who had appealed to the tariff board, in spite of the fact that the said manufacturer had never made any application to the board. Now refunds will be made following a decision of the tariff board only for the twelve months preceding the application made by each individual payer of the tax.

Mr. Green: Is there any obligation on the manufacturer to pass on the refund?

Mr. Lesage: That could be an ordinary civil obligation. I know my hon. friend is a lawyer; the consumer might claim it from the retailer, the retailer from the wholesaler, and the wholesaler from the manufacturer if the manufacturer had been reimbursed. I do not know whether there is the same rule in the common law, but under our civil code in Quebec we have a rule which is called that of "l'enrichissement sans cause". I do not know how that would be translated into English, but in effect it means that no one can enrich himself upon the rights of someone else.

Mr. Green: Has there been any procedure set up under which a consumer could apply to the department for a refund? If not, why should there not be some such procedure?

Mr. Lesage: I have not been administering the department, but I can imagine the administrative difficulties there would be if following the decision of the tariff board a consumer could make application for the refund of the tax. He would not have paid the tax in the first place.

Mr. Green: Oh, yes.

Mr. Lesage: It would have been included in the price he paid. This is not a direct tax, it is an indirect tax.

Mr. Green: That is the whole trouble.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to discuss a matter I should have dealt with under section 7. I note that the amendment involved in section 7 relates to the packaging of certain types of goods and the levying of the sales tax upon the goods and the package when they are packed by someone who has purchased them from the manufacturer in bulk to be repackaged for sale by himself. I believe this principle will have quite a limited application. It will become part of part XI of the Excise Tax Act which relates in general to automobiles, toilet articles, clocks, watches, jewelry, cigarettes and tobacco products. This section will not even cover that field fully.

This question of a tax on packaging has a wider aspect. I am told that representations have been made to the government in relation to larger articles for domestic use, such as electrical goods. I understand that it has also an important aspect in relation to competition between importers of United States manufactures, on the one hand, and Canadian manufacturers on the other.

This whole question turns on the method by which excise and sales taxes, and customs duties also for that matter, have been calculated with respect to packaging. The packaging itself has attracted a lower rate than the goods, and in the cases that have been brought to my attention I understand that the assessments have been levied separately in the case of importations, with the result that the Canadian manufacturer, who has to pay the sales tax on his article fully packaged, has been at a disadvantage.

Perhaps the parliamentary assistant could make a clarifying statement on this matter. I believe that it has been actively before the department since 1950, when an administrative ruling was introduced which changed the basis of calculation of the excise on the packaging, which ruling had been in effect,

I am told, as far as administrative practices were concerned right back to 1906.

Mr. Lesage: Is the hon. member talking about customs duties or excise tax?

Mr. Fleming: It applies to all. I am told that the ruling itself related to excise and customs combined but the problem that is presented, as I am informed, does touch on all aspects of the question of how packaging is to be treated, whether for customs or excise or sales tax purposes.

Mr. Lesage: I do not believe I can add much to the answer I gave the hon. member on that very point on March 19 when we were at the resolution stage. It is to be found at page 3114 of Hansard. The hon. member raised exactly the same question at that time.

Mr. Fleming: Not exactly the same question.

Mr. Lesage: At that time I said:

—when a wholesaler or distributor bought these products in bulk quantities from the manufacturer, the 15 per cent tax and the sales tax have been levied on the manufacturer's price for the bulk candy. The wholesaler could then package the merchandise for retail sale. On the other hand, if the manufacturer had packaged the goods and sold direct to the retailer, the sales tax and the 15 per cent excise tax would be based on a price which would include all the costs of packaging plus the trade mark-up.

The amendment is made so that this discrimination will not exist any more.

Mr. Fleming: I quite follow my hon. friend. I am trying to be brief about this, but as I understand it here we have the recognition of a principle that the man who purchases goods in bulk from the manufacturer and then does his own repackaging should be assimilated to the position of the manufacturer for sales tax purposes.

Mr. Lesage: That is it.

Mr. Fleming: I do not think anybody is quarrelling with the principle. I am wondering, though, about the recognition of this principle in the case I have put, which is of wider import. I am not trying to take this discussion afield. I am trying for the moment to see how recognition of the principle with respect to the packaging of candy and confectionery stacks up against the principle to which I have referred, and which has important consequences for Canadian manufacturers in relation to competition on the part of manufacturers of United States products. Take the case of refrigerators. That is a specific case in point.

Mr. Lesage: I am informed with respect to the case in point, refrigerators, that there is no excise tax. There is a sales tax which applies to refrigerators, and it is based on the duty paid value of the refrigerator when it is imported, including boxes.

Mr. Fleming: Do the wrappings not attract a different rate from the refrigerator?

Mr. Lesage: No, it is the same rate.

Section agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 11.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In the first place I call attention to the note with respect to clause 11. My understanding is that clause 11 really does extend the scope of the tax to some considerable extent, but I will come back to that in a moment.

Mr. Lesage: No, it does not extend it. It just divides it. There is merely a division and a clarification in order that we may know exactly what proportion of the tax comes from radio and what proportion comes from television, and that is for the purpose of statistics.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The parliamentary assistant is repeating what is in the note on the right hand side of the page, but I think the note perhaps does not take the opposition fully into the government's confidence. What I want to point out is that so far as I can see there is an extension of the tax. The matter is well set out in a dispatch from the Winnipeg Free Press which confirms information that I myself got elsewhere, and I shall read this extract.

The Chairman: Order. As the hon. member knows, in committee remarks must be strictly relevant to the clause, and it is not in order to read long extracts from newspapers.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, this extract sets out the argument which I wish to make. If you wish me to do it in my own words—

Mr. Abbott: It would be much better.

The Chairman: I cannot allow the hon. member to read such extracts.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): All right, Mr. Chairman. My understanding is that the section as now written covers certain things, wired music operations, community antenna operations and piped operations such as used by a company called Rediffusion Incorporated in Montreal, which operation has been before the tariff board. The company argued that it was not included under the words "telecast receiving units" and on February 17 the tariff board upheld their appeal. I submit we now have an act which, by reason of the extension of the wording, is going to make quite sure that the appeal board does not go astray and confirm the ruling already given, which is that these particular articles are not taxable. That is what I mean by saying that I think the scope of the section is widened, and that is what I mean by saying that I think the last sentence of the explanation is, to use an admirable word which the Minister of Finance has used twice already, a euphemism.

Mr. Abbott: It is a very polite word.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The last sentence in the descriptive note reads as follows:

> The item has been further clarified by using more descriptive terms.

That is a very euphemistic way of saying that the effect of the section has been considerably extended. I think the minister will agree with that. Even he could not be more euphemistic than that. Mr. Chairman, it is ten o'clock. Perhaps I might be given the opportunity to put what I have to say in better shape for tomorrow.

Mr. Lesage: May I say one word. I agree with what my hon. friend means even if I do not agree with all the words he used, but I cannot agree with him when he says that it extends the meaning of the section. As a matter of fact it clarifies the section to make it certain that the tax applies to all television equipment for programs distributed by any means whatsoever. May I also say that, according to my information, the decision of the tariff board is being appealed from.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): If the parliamentary assistant means by clarification that it puts into words what the Department of National Revenue thinks should be the law, if that is his definition of clarification then that is a definition which I do not fully accept.

Mr. Lesage: We believe it was the intention of the legislators.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask one question. This section, as we followed the statement made by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, is designed to provide revenue for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. May I ask in what form provision is to be made to devote to the use of the corporation revenue acquired through the tax imposed by this section?

The Chairman: Is it the wish of hon. members to carry the section this evening?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No.

The Chairman: If not, why not report progress?

Mr. Fleming: Can I have an answer to my question?

The Chairman: It is ten o'clock, and hon. members are not ready to pass the section. Why not report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Mr. Fleming: He has the answer all ready, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lesage: There will be a special provision in the Canadian Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Fleming: There will be amendments to that act introduced later this session?

Mr. Lesage: That is right.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with this bill and then we will take Bill No. 230, to provide for the government of the Yukon Territory; Bill No. 109, to authorize the grant of assistance to a province for the conservation of water resources; Bill No. 293, to implement the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean. Then we have two resolutions which I think can go through without very much discussion. One concerns the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and I think debate will take place more properly on second reading of the bill. The other is the resolution to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ARMED FORCES OVERSEAS—NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain):

1. Has any special provision been made by the Post Office Department, to facilitate transmission of newspapers and magazines to the Canadian armed forces overseas?

2. Does any concession granted apply only to Canadian publications, or are United States periodicals included?

3. Can more than one copy of periodicals be enclosed in one cover at the concessional rate?

4. Is there any other method of sending magazines in bulk to the Canadian troops overseas?

5. What is the volume of news and periodicals forwarded by mail in 1952, to Canadian forces in the Far East?

Mr. Cote (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville):

1. Yes, a special reduced postage rate of 2 cents for the first four ounces and 1 cent per four ounces thereafter, instead of the usual rate of 2 cents for the first two ounces and 1 cent for each additional two ounces has been granted.

2. The reduced rate mentioned applies to recognized newspapers and periodicals regardless of the place of publication when mailed at Canadian post offices.

3. Yes, provided the copies enclosed are not individually addressed the reduced rate would apply up to the weight limit of six pounds, nine ounces.

4. Yes, it is understood that the Canadian Legion and other welfare agencies have made arrangements with the Department of National Defence for the transport through its own non-postal channels of bulk reading material to the Canadian forces serving overseas.

5. 202,396 pounds.

COD FILLETS IN STORAGE

Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries any information on the large quantities of fillets from last year's maritime provinces' catch still in storage unsold or still held on the American market?

2. Has the Department of Fisheries been informed of a substantial reduction in the price of cod, during the coming fishing season, consequent upon the losses sustained by maritime provinces' packers of fillets on last year's catch?

3. Has the said department under advisement any plan to set a reasonable floor price for maritime provinces' codfish for the 1953 season or some other system of assisting or subsidizing the cod fishing industry?

Mr. MacNaught:

1. Stocks of frozen Atlantic cod fillets held in Canada on March 1, 1953 amounted to 3,915,000 pounds as compared to 942,000 pounds on March 1, 1952.

The department has no information on stocks of Canadian fish held in the United States.

2. Prices of cod to fishermen for the 1953 summer season have not yet been established. Currently, prices at Halifax are approximately one-half cent per pound below those paid at the same date a year ago. Prices for the summer season are normally established early in April when the fishing ports of New Brunswick, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and Cape Breton open for fishing.

3. The fisheries prices support board is keeping a very close watch on the current situation and will be prepared to make recommendation to the government should conditions warrant such action when the new price levels are established.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF MARKETING NEWFOUNDLAND SALTED COD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. G. W. Ashbourne (Grand Falls-White Bay): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) I should like to address a question to his parliamentary assistant. Is the Minister of Fisheries able to inform the house whether the government has made any decision as to the method of marketing Newfoundland salted cod fish at the end of the five-year period established in the terms of union?

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay was good enough to give advance notice of this question.

In the terms of union the government of Canada agreed to continue for a five-year period the organized marketing system for the export of salted fish. That system, operated by the Newfoundland fisheries board, grants an exclusive export licence to a group known as the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, known as NAFEL.

The government has taken note of the views of the Newfoundland fishermen and merchants that some plan of organized marketing is necessary. Newfoundland salt fish production is among the world's largest and carries therefore its own selling problems. Certain of the large markets have single buying agencies that make a single selling agency in Newfoundland desirable. Dollar shortages in the main markets add to the difficulties. To try, therefore, to revert to independent merchant selling next year would be to court the danger of market disruption—a danger that would affect the maritime and Quebec salt fish trades as well as Newfoundland. Some system of organized marketing for Newfoundland is necessary.

The existing system of merchandising through NAFEL has provoked certain criticisms from fishermen and others. To take account of their criticisms, the federal government proposes to make certain modifications to the present system.

1. Since the fishermen's organizations are not represented on NAFEL or its directorate, the Newfoundland fisheries board is being instructed to establish by July 1, 1953, a consultative committee on salt fish marketing. This committee will make continuous review of NAFEL's operations in the marketing of salted fish, the state of the markets, relative prices, costs, and other associated matters. This committee is to be convened by the fisheries board and to include fishermen's representatives, representatives of NAFEL, and a representative from the provincial government of Newfoundland. At these meetings the fisheries board has been instructed to see that a full revelation of facts on marketing is made to the committee.

2. The government intends to continue the powers of the Newfoundland fisheries board with respect to the marketing of salted fish for a further three-year period as from March 1, 1954.

3. The exclusive export privileges of NAFEL will be modified by changes in its agreement with the Newfoundland fisheries board.

The most important of these will be a broadening of the opportunities for interprovincial trading. The Newfoundland fisheries board will be prepared to permit sales of wet salted and pickled fish between Newfoundland exporters, including fishermen or groups of fishermen, and buyers from the mainland and continental U.S.A. To protect the Newfoundland fishermen, however, these buyers should make prearranged sales with such Newfoundland exporters in the form of contracts and these contracts shall be arranged before April 30 each year. Copies of contracts are to be deposited with the Newfoundland fisheries board, which will issue the export permits during the season. These transactions may be arranged between buyers and sellers without the intervention of NAFEL and will, therefore, be free of any levy by NAFEL. This provision for prearranged sales should minimize the possibility of fishermen putting up more wet salted or pickled fish than the markets can absorb.

If mainland buyers do not make such forward contracts and if they wish merely to make spot purchases of Newfoundland fish, either wet or dried during the year, they may do so through NAFEL as at present.

Mr. Ashbourne: I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Fisheries whether this extension of salt bulk and pickled fish trading between the mainland and Newfoundland, to which the parliamentary assistant has just referred, will be effective this season?

Mr. MacNaught: We have just received a communication from the government of Newfoundland asking us to make this change effective for this season. As I indicated in the statement I just made, the Newfoundland fisheries board has an agreement with NAFEL for the 1953 season, as it has had for every other season. This contract cannot be altered without six months' notice unless with the consent of NAFEL. If NAFEL is willing to modify its contract to permit this extension—and I understand that it is willing—then the government has no objection. Not having contemplated this change, the federal government has been adhering to the undertaking in the terms of union that the marketing system would be unchanged for a five-year period.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not think that I am taking advantage of today—

Mr. Knowles: This is the 1st of April.

Mr. Higgins: That is right. With respect to matters such as the statement made by the parliamentary assistant this afternoon, it would be much easier for people on this side of the house if they could have the advantage of having the information supplied to them beforehand. The parliamentary assistant made a long statement which was very difficult to follow, and I suggest with all humility that such a course might be adopted. I want to ask one question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Higgins: All right. I will proceed when you are through, gentlemen. Can the parliamentary assistant tell me what the situation will be this year with respect to the normal markets for Newfoundland salt codfish?

Mr. MacNaught: A day or so ago the hon. member for St. John's East asked me if I was prepared to make a statement covering that problem, and for his information and the information of the house may I say that I expect to be able to make such a statement tomorrow.

FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO PETITION REQUESTING RESCINDING OF INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in view of reports in this morning's papers. Has the government received the petition from the eight provinces requesting the governor in council to rescind the recent decision of the board of transport commissioners in allowing the freight rate increase? If so, when will consideration be given to this petition? I am directing this to the government because of what the Minister of Transport said the other day.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I am not too sure, but I understand that the hon. member's question has to do with rescission of the decision of the board.

Mr. Coldwell: The petition requests the rescinding of the recent order of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Chevrier: I see in the press that eight provinces have filed an appeal.

Mr. Coldwell: That is why I asked the question.

Mr. Chevrier: I have been informed by the clerk of the privy council that an appeal has been received. I have not seen the notice of appeal, but I take it that it would not be for rescission at this time. As my hon. friend knows, and as was explained by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), in all of the cases that have been appealed there has been no rescission. I take it that in due course the notice of appeal will be set down on the agenda for discussion at one of the ordinary meetings.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS—THREATENED STRIKE AT LAKEHEAD—SITUATION AT VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour and Mr. Frank Hall have been doing a splendid job in handling the threatened strike at the lakehead.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIvor: My question of privilege is to thank them emphatically at this time for their most efficient work.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Arising out of the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William, may I ask the Minister of Labour what is the present situation with respect to the strike on the west coast?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first as to the lakehead dispute a conference was held in Ottawa, as I think hon. members know, last Friday and Saturday on my request in connection with the dispute that had developed at the lakehead on the question of the interpretation of a provision of the agreement which was made last September between the lakehead terminal elevators association and the brotherhood of railway and steamship clerks, freight handlers, express and station employees. The dispute now involves the application of the provision of the agreement respecting the reduction of hours from forty-eight to forty hours per week.

I met five representatives of the association and five representatives of the brotherhood who were here last Friday. The discussions, which were assisted by officers of the Department of Labour, terminated Saturday afternoon and the parties authorized the Minister of Labour to make the following statement, which was made:

> The Hon. M. F. Gregg today announced that the representatives of the grain companies and of the brotherhood of railway and steamship clerks, freight handlers, express and station employees had completed their discussions in Ottawa. Both representatives of the companies and the brotherhood stated that they were moving towards an agreement.

This week the two negotiating parties who were here have been holding meetings, each with its own main body, and I hope to have replies from both of them within a few days.

Mr. Green: My question was with regard to the strike on the west coast.

Mr. Gregg: I cannot add very much on that. As hon. members will remember, a proposal was addressed to both parties by our representative, Mr. Wilson, before he left Vancouver, that recommended that agreement on several points be reached, that work be renewed and that the dispute over the wage increase be referred to an arbitrator who would be chosen by both parties and whose decision would be final. I have not had a final report as to the views of the two parties regarding that proposal.

Mr. Green: Has the minister given any thought to having the parties come to Ottawa in the hope that this strike can also be settled?

Mr. Gregg: Before coming to a decision on that matter, I should like to have a reply from the two parties with respect to what is, in my opinion, a very sound proposal for settlement that is now in their hands.

CIVIL SERVICE

REQUEST FOR HOLIDAY ON SATURDAY, APRIL 4

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. Has he given any consideration to granting a holiday on Saturday next to civil servants in Ottawa and district to put them in line, at least for this week, with other civil servants in the rest of Canada on a five-day week?

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): No consideration has been given to that matter thus far.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house in committee on Bill No. 225, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Robinson in the chair.

On section 11.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that the committee was considering clause 12.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, clause 11.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No. Just before the committee rose last evening I was drawing to its attention the terms of the note on clause 11 which, after explaining that the excise tax on radios was being separated from the excise tax on television sets, winds up with this sentence:

> The item has been further clarified by using more descriptive terms.

I said last night that my understanding was that that was a considerable understatement because according to my information this section in fact extends the operation of the act. That is my information. If it does, then it is in effect and in fact a section whereby money is being raised or, in other words, a money bill. The parliamentary assistant shakes his head when I say that the effect is extended. I therefore ask very definitely whether it is not extended at least to the extent of bringing within its purview the articles on which an appeal was made to the tariff board and concerning which the tariff board said that they were not covered. The phraseology in question is "telecast receiving units". I am proceeding on the assumption and on the belief that this section does extend taxation, and that it is therefore a money bill. I am pointing out, Mr. Chairman, that it is not supported by any resolution. I go further on that basis, Mr. Chairman, and I point out that it is improperly before the committee because, if it is in fact a money bill, and if in fact it is raising money, it should have been preceded by a resolution, and that is not the case.

Therefore, following that, I wish to ask whether in fact on February 19 notices were sent to the relevant officials advising them that the additional materials brought under the act would from that day on be subject to tax. I would like to have that question answered first, if I may.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully differ with the opinion of the hon. member for Greenwood. I have to express the opinion, which is the opinion of the law officers of the crown, that the tubes, sets and apparatus to which my hon. friend has referred are subject to tax under section 6 as it was, and as it can be read on the page of the bill opposite section 11. The apparatus is described as radio broadcast, telecast and music receiving sets. The installations are mostly in private homes. The sets are imported completely manufactured and include some seventeen tubes in addition to the cathode ray television tube and the loud speaker. The value, duty free, is around $216.

Now, let us look at what the old section says:

> Phonographs, record playing devices, radio broadcast or telecast receiving sets or tubes therefor, apparatus for receiving radio broadcast and music . . .

The opinion of the law officers of the crown has been and is that all the apparatus, the sets and tubes which I have mentioned as being included in these rediffusion sets, are covered by section 6 as it was; and that the new words of subsection (b) of new section 6 are only for clarification purposes. The law officers do not agree with the decision of the tariff board. A tax has been levied in the past. There was an appeal to the tariff board which was granted for these rediffusion sets as they apply to television but yesterday a request for leave for appeal was heard by a justice of the exchequer court who has reserved his judgment. The legal position now, at the time I am speaking, is that in the opinion of the law officers of the crown the new wording does not extend the taxation, it only clarifies the section.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I find that very hard to understand, but let me ask this definite question. Does the parliamentary assistant agree that the tariff board did reach a conclusion that certain of the articles now covered by this wording on which taxation had been collected were not properly taxable? Is that a fact?

Mr. Lesage: That is not a final decision; it is being appealed from.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does the decision not take effect from the time it is made?

Mr. Lesage: Not if there is an appeal.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I can relieve my hon. friend's doubts about the legality of the matter. Conceding, for the purpose of argument, that it does extend the tax, if he will look at the terms of the resolution upon which this bill is before the house he will see that it reads, resolved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act—

And I pause there.

—and to provide, amongst other things:

and it enumerates a number of things.

The opinion of the law officers is and has been for some time that it is quite sufficient, in order to comply with the provisions of the British North America Act, that the resolution should be merely in the terms "resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act". That justifies any amendment that it may be desirable on the part of the crown to introduce. As a matter of practice it has been usual to enumerate in the resolution the principal changes; but I am pointing out to my hon. friend that even if this provision did extend the ambit of the section, which, as my parliamentary assistant has indicated, we do not believe, the resolution preceding the introduction of this bill is quite sufficient in law to justify such action.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Do I understand the minister to say that the general words of the section to which he has referred would authorize an increase in taxation to any limit?

Mr. Abbott: Quite. To any limit at all.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is a new idea to me.

Mr. Abbott: It happens to be true.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am taking the minister's word but may we have an opinion from the law officers? I would be interested to hear what they would say.

Mr. Abbott: If my hon. friend would take the trouble to see the law clerk of the house he would reassure him of that very quickly.

The Chairman: Shall section 11 carry?

Section agreed to.

On section 12.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, there has been quite a lengthy discussion on tires and tubes for replacement purposes on farm trailers. At page 3114 of Hansard for March 19, for instance, the hon. member for Huron North said:

There is going to be some difficulty about this. The tires for a trailer or any farm machine are not suitable for speeding on the highway. They just cannot be used on a car because if you used them at any speed you would wear off the tread in a few moments. There is a great difference between a tire used for farm work and one used on the highway.

My answer at that time was:

I will say again what I said this afternoon, that according to the proposed amendment the test of the exemption would not be on the tires and tubes themselves; it would be on the vehicles on which the tires and tubes are to be used. Following the representations made by my hon. friends this afternoon, I said that speedy consideration would be given to the possibility of applying the test to the tires and tubes.

Consideration has been given and the officers of the Department of National Revenue have been in touch with the representatives of the manufacturers of tires and tubes to discover whether it is possible to have a test on the make of the tires and tubes used on farm machinery. It has been possible to find a wording which, I believe, will cover the situation. If my hon. friends will look at section 12 as it reads now I will tell them the purpose of the amendment which I will ask the Minister of National Revenue to move. The intention of the amendment is to make three exceptions in line 36 after the word "therein". We will there make a special paragraph which will be numbered (i) which will read as follows:

When used exclusively for the original equipment of such self-propelled machines, automotive vehicles, trailers or other wheeled attachments,

Then, (ii) reads:

When used exclusively for replacement purposes on machinery designed for and used only for farm purposes.

Then, the addition is in (iii), which reads:

When designed and catalogued for farm machinery and used on farm trailers used exclusively for farm purposes.

I believe that covers exactly the problem that was raised by hon. members. May I repeat the important words:

When designed and catalogued for farm machinery and used on farm trailers used exclusively for farm purposes.

May I add it appears from the discussions the officers of the Department of National Revenue have had with the manufacturers of tires and tubes that there are no tires and tubes which are made especially for trailers. The situation is that tires are made for farm machinery, and those tires are bought by some farmers for use on their trailers. I see that the hon. member for Battle River is nodding his head, so he approves of my statement of the position. I believe he is one of those who have made representations in order to obtain such an amendment.

Mr. Fair: That is the point I was going to make. It is clear, then, that tires and tubes for farm trailers will be sold without the tax?

Mr. Lesage: When designed and catalogued for farm machinery; that is what was requested.

Mr. Charlton: As I understand it, then, replacement tires for farm trailers, to be used exclusively on the farm, if it is an implement tire, is tax free?

Mr. Lesage: That is exactly the position.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask a question there? There are some farmers who have one farm in one end of the township and another farm at the other end of the township. They would have to go on the highway and pull that trailer, perhaps with a tractor, from one farm to the other. Would that still be considered used exclusively on the farm?

Mr. Lesage: May I repeat the wording, which I believe will satisfy my hon. friend? It says:

When designed and catalogued for farm machinery and used on farm trailers used exclusively for farm purposes.

It does not say it has to be used only on the farm, but exclusively for farm purposes.

Mr. Fraser: If that farmer put the trailer behind his car and drove to town, perhaps with a load of grain, would it still be considered a farm trailer?

Mr. Lesage: It is still used for farm purposes, so it is still a farm trailer. But if he travels long distances at a high speed with this type of tire, it will cost him a lot of money.

Mr. Fraser: He will have a blowout.

Mr. McCann: I move:

That section 12 of the bill be deleted, and the following substituted therefor:

12. Section 13 of schedule I to the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"13. Tires and tubes:—

(a) Tires in whole or in part of rubber for self-propelled machines or automotive vehicles of all kinds, including trailers or other wheeled attachments used in connection with any of the said machines or vehicles . . . fifteen per cent;

(b) Inner tubes for use in any such tires . . . fifteen per cent;

the tax on the articles enumerated in paragraph (a) and (b) of this section does not apply to the goods mentioned therein

(i) when used exclusively for the original equipment of such self-propelled machines, automotive vehicles, trailers or other wheeled attachments,

(ii) when used exclusively for replacement purposes on machinery designed for and used only for farm purposes, or

(iii) when designed and catalogued for farm machinery and used on farm trailers used exclusively for farm purposes."

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 13—Repeal and substitution.

Mr. Lesage: May I propose that we take the schedule page by page?

Mr. Knowles: If that is agreed to, and since I am in an agreeable mood, perhaps I might be permitted, as a matter of privilege and without entering into an argument, to place upon the record the fact that I, for one, cannot agree with the statement made by the Minister of Finance a moment ago when he was replying to the hon. member for Greenwood as to the terms of a resolution preceding a bill imposing taxes. As I say, no point of order has been raised and no point of order has to be settled. I do not think it would be fair, however, to those of us on this side of the house for that statement to be left on the record without any suggestion that there is an argument on the other side. I should like to place on the record the fact that citation 515 of Beauchesne's third edition reads as follows:

Debate and amendment on the stages of the finance bill or other bills imposing taxes are governed by the ordinary rules of relevancy and, if any of the provisions of the bill should be found to go beyond the resolutions of the committee of ways and means or other committee of the whole house, as agreed to by the house on report upon which the bill is founded, a further resolution must be passed by the committee of ways and means or other committee of the whole house, and agreed to by the house before those provisions are considered in committee on the bill, or the bill must be amended so as to conform to the resolutions to which the house has agreed. Amendments to the bill which are not covered by resolutions of the committee of ways and means or other committee of the whole house are out of order. Amendments have also been ruled out of order as not relating to the finance of the year.

Mr. Lesage: What date is that?

Mr. Knowles: It is from page 185 of Beauchesne's third edition.

Mr. Lesage: What date is that?

Mr. Knowles: It is taken from May, and it is an old principle that was laid down quite a few years ago.

Mr. Lesage: I understand that the minister said the legal opinion of the law clerks is now that—

Mr. Knowles: I am surprised to hear my hon. friend, who is a lawyer, deprecating an opinion because it is an old one.

Mr. Lesage: That is not what I said. I said it was an old citation. My friend knows that even courts have reversed their own previous judgments and opinions.

Mr. Knowles: It was not my purpose to get into an argument over the matter.

Mr. Lesage: I just want the record to be straight.

Mr. Knowles: That is what I want. I have great respect for the opinions of the law officers and law clerks, but after all it is their function to advise us and the practice is determined by parliament. I submit that up to this time parliament has made no change in this practice which calls for a resolution setting out what is coming to precede all bills that impose taxation.

Now, as I said before the interruption of a moment ago, it was not my purpose at this point to enter into an argument over this question because I think it can be contended that the particular matter we were debating today is referred to in the resolution, at least in a general way. I do feel, however, that the general rule which the Minister of Finance sought to lay down should not go unchallenged. In my view it is still a requirement of this parliament that a bill imposing taxation should be preceded by a resolution setting out the terms of that proposed taxation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Perhaps I might be allowed to say one word. When the Minister of Finance made this statement, the strength of which surprised me—I respect him, both as a lawyer and in his capacity as a minister—I asked that I be furnished with the opinion of the law officers of the crown. While it was not clear whether I was to have it in writing, I do hope that I may have it in writing. In any event, there was a strong statement made by the minister which I found very surprising, but which I nevertheless took, but I am asking that I may be fully satisfied as to the authority upon which he made it.

Mr. Graydon: Who said the law officers of the crown were infallible, anyway?

Mr. McLure: Who are they, anyway?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 13 carry?

Mr. Robichaud: No. Last night when I rose in this chamber and attempted to make a few brief remarks on clause 1 of the bill now before the committee, I was informed by the parliamentary assistant that my remarks should come under section 13; and the chairman at the time asked me whether I was satisfied to defer my remarks until section 13 came before the committee. I submit that it is now time for me to make the few brief remarks I wish to make, if the parliamentary assistant does not object.

Mr. Lesage: I proposed a few moments ago—and I thought it was agreeable and would make for more orderly discussion—that we take schedule III page by page, because section 13 deals with schedule III. I suggest that we let section 13 stand until we have adopted schedule III. I believe that would make for orderly discussion.

Mr. Graydon: I understood last night that it was agreed that the hon. member for Gloucester would have the opportunity to speak when section 13 was called. I think that understanding ought to be adhered to now.

Mr. Lesage: Yes, I know. I have discussed the problem and the question which the hon. member for Gloucester wants to raise, and I know it is covered on page 11 of that schedule.

Mr. Graydon: How do you know what he is going to say?

Mr. Lesage: He has said it many times.

Mr. Graydon: He might change the record this time.

Mr. Lesage: Yes. But schedule III is a long list of exemptions from the sales tax. If we go over this without any order, I do not know how we shall get through.

Mr. Fraser: Would it not be better to allow the hon. member to speak now?

Mr. Lesage: All right. I have amendments that will cover his point.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Graydon: Let us hear his point anyway.

Mr. Robichaud: As reported at page 3487 of Hansard it was the parliamentary assistant himself who said as follows:

> Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is now referring to matters which should come under section 13. As a matter of fact, following—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We have already disposed of the point and decided that the hon. member is privileged to proceed. Will he now confine his remarks to section 13?

Mr. Robichaud: For the sake of brevity, Mr. Chairman, I shall bow to your ruling. I wish to assure the parliamentary assistant that my remarks will be indeed brief because the statement which he made last night in this committee containing the assurance that an important amendment was going to be made today to schedule III of the bill now before the committee under the heading "marine and fisheries", whereby rope and cordage of cotton, hemp, manila, nylon or other vegetable fibre of all sizes and descriptions to be used in fisheries will henceforth be sales tax exempt, makes it imperative for me to refrain from making any lengthy remarks because this amendment is perfectly in line with the suggestion which I offered to the Minister of Finance in my speech on the budget on March 5.

Mr. Lesage: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you.

Mr. McCann: The hon. member will get credit for it.

Mr. Robichaud: In order to comply with the principle which seems finally to be à la mode in this committee, namely the principle of brevity, I shall refrain from making any further remarks and shall content myself with voicing appreciation, on behalf of the fishermen of Gloucester county in the province of New Brunswick, to the Department of Finance, the Minister of Finance and the parliamentary assistant for having acceded to the request and the suggestion which I made in my budget speech.

Mr. Graydon: The hon. member deserves a great deal of credit for it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I would not want this clause to pass and the hon. member for Gloucester to go home thinking that he has been responsible for this change. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that these changes were brought to the attention of the minister and his parliamentary assistant by other maritimers who are greatly interested in the fishing industry. I do appreciate the fact that my hon. friend mentioned the matter on the floor of the house and that the fisheries council of Canada were kind enough to take the matter up collectively with the department; and we all appreciate the way in which it was dealt with by the minister and by the officials of his department. These concessions may seem small but they are appreciated by all the fishermen in the maritime provinces; and I believe the fishermen down there realize that the members from there are all working toward the same end.

Section agreed to.

Section 14 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: May I point out to the committee, as was pointed out last evening, that sections 15 to 27 of the second part are merely repetition of the sections which have just been approved by the committee. May I therefore have the agreement of the committee to call sections 15 to 27 inclusive at one time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: I have no objection to that procedure, Mr. Chairman, but section 26 has to be amended in the same way as section 12 was amended.

The Deputy Chairman: Then may I call sections 15 to 25 inclusive?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On sections 15 to 25 inclusive.

Mr. McLure: I should just like to ask one question on section 22. It deals with "producer or manufacturer". No consideration at all is given to an assembler. An assembler may not be included in this "producer or manufacturer". I brought that matter up for consideration once before, but it never was changed.

Mr. Lesage: Section 22 has the same wording as has section 8 which was passed last night and which was discussed last night.

Mr. McLure: But does it designate "assembler"?

Mr. Lesage: No.

Mr. McLure: Or are you dealing only with "producer or manufacturer"?

Mr. Lesage: It has always been considered, Mr. Chairman, that assembling is a manufacturing process.

Mr. McLure: He is not a manufacturer, just the same. You can grade him as you like, but an assembler never makes anything. He puts together and assembles, but he does not manufacture or produce anything. There is quite a big difference.

Mr. Lesage: I do not see that I can say anything more, Mr. Chairman, than that for the purpose of this act assembling has always been considered as manufacturing or producing.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clauses carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Sections 15 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

On section 26.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I move that section 26 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor. It is practically the same as we have under section 12.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Graydon: Should we not know what the amendment is? If the minister had said it was exactly the same as was to be found under section 12, that would be all right. But the minister said it was practically the same.

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by the Minister of National Revenue, as follows:

That section 26 of the bill be deleted, and the following substituted therefor:

26. Section 13 of schedule 1 to the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"13. Tires and tubes:

(a) Tires in whole or in part of rubber for self-propelled machines or automotive vehicles of all kinds, including trailers or other wheeled attachments used in connection with any of the said machines or vehicles . . . fifteen per cent;

(b) Inner tubes for use in any such tires . . . fifteen per cent;

The tax on the articles enumerated in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section does not apply to the goods mentioned therein

(i) when used exclusively for the original equipment of such self-propelled machines, automotive vehicles, trailers or other wheeled attachments,

(ii) when used exclusively for replacement purposes on machinery designed for and used only for farm purposes, or

(iii) when designed and catalogued for farm machinery and used on farm trailers used exclusively for farm purposes."

Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 27 and 28 agreed to.

On schedule III.

Mr. Knowles: How shall we deal with the schedule? Shall we proceed page by page, or according to the headings?

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we shall call the headings on the various pages?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Then, we shall proceed with the heading "Foodstuffs".

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to attend during the whole discussion, and I am not as familiar as perhaps I should be with the schedules in the budget speech. Do I understand that all the articles in this extensive schedule are now to be exempt from sales tax?

Mr. McCann: They have been.

Mr. Lesage: As a matter of fact, practically all of them have been. The only amendments now brought down are underlined. If the hon. member will look at the schedule he will see that under the heading "Foodstuffs" the only change is in the last paragraph, with the words:

Materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture or production of the aforementioned foodstuffs.

It might be flavouring, for instance, in the manufacture of ice cream.

Mr. Fraser: With reference to drinks prepared from milk or eggs, does that have reference to a liquid or a dry preparation?

Mr. Lesage: A liquid preparation.

Mr. Fraser: It would not cover a dry preparation?

Mr. Lesage: No. There was a discussion of that point last year.

Mr. Fraser: I brought it up at that time.

Mr. Lesage: Powdered milk is contained in the exempt list.

Mr. Fraser: That would be milk in dry form?

Mr. Lesage: Powdered milk is in dry form, yes.

Mr. Fraser: It would have reference to powdered milk and powdered eggs?

Mr. Lesage: My information is that it would.

Mr. Fraser: Then, Ovaltine would be exempt?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that Ovaltine is a composition, that it is not composed entirely of powdered eggs and powdered milk, but that there are other ingredients.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): There are four other ingredients.

Mr. Fraser: The words used are "drinks prepared from milk or eggs"; but the word "exclusively" does not appear.

Mr. Lesage: Exceptions, in law, have to be interpreted strictly. Ovaltine is not mentioned there.

Mr. Fraser: I know that. Then, farther down on the list, there is reference to "prepared whipping cream". I would understand that that is the product which shoots out when a button is pushed?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: Is that prepared from cream, or is it a vegetable oil preparation?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed it is prepared from cream.

Mr. Fraser: It is not exclusively cream, is it? I would understand that it would be in the same class as powdered drinks.

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that it is prepared whipping cream, and that possibly there is some sugar in it.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): There is.

Mr. Fraser: And vegetable oils?

Mr. Lesage: Officials of the Department of National Revenue inform me that they do not believe it contains vegetable oils.

Mr. Fraser: My understanding is that there is a considerable quantity of vegetable oil in it.

Mr. Follwell: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we should commend the parliamentary assistant for the manner in which he is supplying the information required today. I believe it is under this part of the bill that I might be permitted to make some observations concerning one of my constituents in Hastings South. I speak about the W. T. Hawkins Company Limited, who manufacture a product known as caramel corn snacks.

The department is familiar with this subject, because for the last two years the plight of this company has been brought to its attention, as well as to that of the minister. Although we have been received very sympathetically, unfortunately something more than sympathy is needed and desired. It is all right to sympathize with a man who is drowning, but it is much better to throw him a rope.

I am sure the parliamentary assistant is familiar with this particular case, so I shall not be long in placing the situation before the committee. Perhaps it would be sufficient to point out that caramel corn snacks is a product manufactured in Tweed. It is made from popcorn, with some sugar added, admittedly. However, I do feel that it should fall into that class described as "cereal breakfast foods not including beverages".

This is a corn product. At the present time it is required to pay a 15 per cent excise tax, while from 90 to 95 per cent of all competitive corn products, such as cheese-coated, powdered and salted popcorn sold in Canada is not covered by the excise tax.

Caramel corn snacks is sold in direct competition with these other types of popcorn. There are, of course, the cereal products known as sugar crisp, sugar puffs and corn pops, manufactured by Post, Quaker Oats and Kellogg, which are advertised, sold and consumed as sweet snacks, but without paying any sales tax or excise tax.

I suggest the department should take another look at this situation, because the company is now suffering from receding returns, inasmuch as it is meeting with sales resistance, due to the excise tax. Their sales have fallen so low that the government would be collecting practically no excise or sales tax. If they were permitted to operate as their competition operates—that is, without the restraint of this 15 per cent excise tax—their sales would increase, they would pay more sales tax, and would also be subject to income tax.

As I have pointed out, they say they have now reached the point where there is a diminishing return to the department. If these so-called cereal products are sold not only free of excise tax but also free of sales tax, it would seem that the department is not using all in the same way. I think all hon. members in the committee would agree that the government has never tried to place a business in a position where it could not operate. They have always endeavoured to be helpful and I think in this instance the government would do well to amend the regulations and exempt popcorn. I am appealing on behalf of this company which is situated in the village of Tweed. This is a small village without a great many industries and the W. T. Hawkins Company has been giving considerable employment.

As 95 per cent of popcorn products are now outside the act as far as excise taxes are concerned, I think the government might very well permit this company to market their products tax free. Could the parliamentary assistant inform the committee whether this could be done? I see no reason why it could not.

Mr. Lesage: The candied popcorn to which my hon. friend has referred competes with candy and not with cereal breakfast foods which have been mentioned.

Mr. Graydon: It competes with popcorn, which does not pay anything.

Mr. Lesage: This is candied popcorn which competes with candy. As a matter of fact, there is a decision of the tariff board that it is a substitute for candy and taxable as such 15 per cent excise tax and 10 per cent sales tax. As the members of the committee know, the government does not want to do anything that might ruin a business, and this matter will receive further consideration.

Mr. Graydon: I think it had better.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we go into the section of the schedule dealing with farm and forest. Then on page 10, engines, and on page 11, mines and quarries. The next section is marine and fisheries.

Mr. McCann: I move:

That schedule III be further amended under the heading "marine and fisheries" by deleting in the second line of the fourth paragraph the words, "not exceeding one and one-half inches in circumference", and substituting therefor the words "or nylon".

Mr. Robichaud: May I suggest to the parliamentary assistant and the officials that there should be no objection to enlarging the proposed amendment so as to exempt steel or wire rope used by fishermen from the sales tax. Has that matter been considered?

Mr. Lesage: The matter has been considered but it was not found advisable to do it at this time. The exemptions from sales tax are spread so that they will cover all kinds of ropes made of vegetable substances or nylon. This latter item was suggested by the fisheries council. It is an important step and also the officers of the Department of National Revenue want to acquire experience in connection with these exemptions. As my hon. friend knows, exemptions such as the present can be granted only under a system of conditional certificates of use. In the case of ropes for fishing purposes it is easier to verify that most of the rope sent to a fishing district will be used for fishing purposes and thus be exempt.

Wire rope is used mostly in the contracting business and in connection with power winches, the digging of wells and so on. Only a very small portion of wire rope would be used directly in fishing. It is felt that the control would be much more difficult. As I said, the officials of the department wish to acquire experience in connection with the extensions given this year by the amendment just proposed.

Mrs. Fairclough: Is it not true that wire rope was placed in a different class for tariff purposes when used for fishing? How do you explain that in the light of your statement now that it is difficult to say what proportion is used for that purpose?

Mr. Lesage: Control is much easier at customs. I think my hon. friend will agree that anything coming through customs can be controlled there, but this product might be sold by a manufacturer and could not be controlled by the officers of the department.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not follow that at all. Do you mean to tell me that no one but the ultimate user of the rope actually imports it?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that it is not very easy. All these conditional certificates create difficulties and that is why it is not thought advisable to extend these exemptions too widely and too suddenly. We have to go step by step and acquire experience.

Mrs. Fairclough: I can understand that, but I cannot understand why the rule that would apply to the tariff would not apply to the sales tax. The hon. member for Gloucester has asked for the elimination of the sales tax on this wire rope. Apparently it could be handled for tariff purposes and I cannot see why you cannot handle it for the purposes of the sales tax.

Mr. McCann: One tax has already been lowered.

Mrs. Fairclough: For fishing purposes. You had to separate it in that case.

Mr. McCann: You have to get some revenue.

Mr. Robichaud: The parliamentary assistant has referred to the recommendation of the fisheries council of Canada. Was that in the form of a brief or letter dated March 23, 1953, which asked for the exemption from sales tax of rope exceeding one inch and a half in circumference?

Mr. Lesage: That is right.

Mr. Robichaud: According to the statement made by the parliamentary assistant, as reported on page 3265 of Hansard of March 25, this was a brief or letter from the fisheries council of Canada which was received in the office of the Minister of Finance on March 23.

Mr. Lesage: I do not see what that has to do with this matter, but I believe that is what I said.

Mr. Robichaud: It has this to do with it. The parliamentary assistant seems to be directing all the credit for this amendment to the fisheries council of Canada.

Mr. Lesage: If my hon. friend wants me to name all the persons and organizations that have made representations on this matter I would start with the Minister of Fisheries who made his representations long before the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Ashbourne: I should like to express at this time the appreciation which I am sure the fishermen of Newfoundland feel at the introduction of this amendment. This is a further indication to them of the great interest which this government is taking on their behalf. I feel sure that it will be most welcome at this time because, as has already been said by the parliamentary assistant, there have been many requests for exemptions to permit the bringing in of additional sizes of cordage. As the committee will readily understand, so far as fishing is concerned cordage is one of the most important items that the fisherman has to provide. Many of the materials and fibres that go into the making of cordage have to be imported from other countries. We are dependent upon outside sources for them and, so to speak, we are bound to pay the prices which they ask for the materials. Today, when prices of the products of the fisherman are going down, when he is not getting so much for his catch as he did in past years, I think this amendment will be most welcome to the fishermen of Newfoundland.

Mr. McLure: You have added the word "nylon"?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. McLure: There is one other point. It refers to rope not exceeding one inch and a half.

An hon. Member: That has been struck out.

Mr. McLure: Is it rope of any size now?

Mr. Lesage: That is right. That is the purpose of the amendment just moved by the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. McLure: Any size?

Mr. Lesage: Any size of rope.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now take up the next paragraph, "Charitable, health, etc."

Mr. Knowles: I hope there may be an amendment to this section. Do I see one coming up?

Mr. Lesage: No, not at this time.

Mr. Knowles: I wish to express my deep regret, and I am sure the regret and disappointment of a great many Canadians, that the government has not seen fit to widen the list of drugs that are free from the provisions of the Excise Tax Act, including in some cases excise tax as well as sales tax. The government makes a great deal of the fact that it does exempt the few drugs that are listed here, ACTH, cortisone, insulin and radium, together with liver extract. But as the parliamentary assistant knows, and as the Minister of National Revenue knows from his own experience as a medical doctor, there are a great many drugs that are prescribed by doctors to Canadians today which are costing the Canadian people far more than they should. One of the reasons they are costing so much is the taxation on these drugs imposed and collected by the Canadian government.

[Mr. Ashbourne.]

I have in mind some of the new drugs that have come into use in recent years which are most helpful to people. I thing of the drugs that are referred to as antibiotics. I think of the drugs that are prescribed for people suffering with various heart disorders, not to mention the great many now ordinary drugs such as vitamin preparations and so on which are really helpful to the health of the Canadian people. I must say that I for one—and I am sure a great many people feel this way—cannot see any reason at all for the terrible slowness on the part of the government in extending this list. I hope that even yet consideration may be given to the matter. We have all had experiences with these items ourselves and we are running into people all the time who are helped by such drugs. But when one has to pay 50 or 75 cents or $1 or more for a single pill that is new and very helpful, it frequently detracts from the good that is done by these medicines because they cost so much. I think that the government, which is so slow to come along with a national health program, might at least make this contribution to the health of the people and reduce the cost of these expensive drugs by including many more drugs than are now included in the list of those exempt from the sales tax.

Mr. Murray (Oxford): Does the sales tax exemption apply only to liver extract for injection purposes or does it apply to liver extract taken orally for anaemia?

Mr. Lesage: The answer is that it applies to both.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed with the heading "Printing and educational".

Mr. Murphy: I should like to say a word here. I do not know whether I am in order. I spoke to the parliamentary assistant yesterday about the matter. It has to do with magazines, and I am only mentioning it because it is included on page 12 in an indirect sort of way. The situation is that United States magazines shipped into Canada carry an additional charge of $1 a year. I want to read a paragraph or two from a letter from Forbes Magazine of Business in reply to a complaint by a Canadian subscriber. The two paragraphs will place the situation before the committee, and then I should like to have an answer, if possible. The letter reads in part as follows:

As I explained in my previous letter, the charge was set up originally—

That is the $1 a year extra.

—to cover the additional cost of handling Canadian subscriptions due to extra postage and import duties which Canada has imposed from time to time on our magazines.

I think the next paragraph is important.

We are fully aware that at the present time there is no import duty on our publication but we have left this special handling charge intact awaiting future developments.

Mr. Lesage: There is no sales tax on magazines coming from the United States.

Mr. Murphy: I understand there is not. I wonder if this is the right place to argue this point. United States magazines come into Canada at a charge $1 a year higher than the charge in the United States. For instance, Detroit is across the river from Windsor. The same magazines are shipped to Windsor as are shipped to Detroit but they are sold at a higher price in Canada because the publishers say:

We are fully aware that at the present time there is no import duty on our publication but we have left this special handling charge intact awaiting future developments.

Why should Canadians have to pay that extra dollar which is now going into the hands of United States publishers? If they are going to get it and we are going to have to pay it, then let the department consider some tariff or sales tax on these United States publications. There is no reason why Canadians should pay the extra dollar when Americans do not have to. At the same time the United States publication is permitted to come into this country and to be sold at a higher price. The United States publisher charges $1 a year extra for the same magazine.

Mr. Lesage: If there were a sales tax or an increase in import duties then the $1 extra charged by the publishers, not by the Canadian government but by the publishers and over which the Canadian government has no control whatsoever, could be increased to $2 or $3.

Mr. Knowles: That is the way taxes pyramid, all right.

Mr. Lesage: Do I understand that the hon. member is suggesting that we impose other taxes? If we did so I would suppose that the spread, instead of being $1, would be greater. We have no control at all over subscription rates on United States magazines.

Mr. Murphy: I am afraid the parliamentary assistant does not get my point. I want the record clear and I am sure he does too. As I said before, I do not know whether this is the right moment to argue this point.

The Deputy Chairman: I am afraid this is not properly brought up under "Printing and educational". I wonder if the hon. member might not bring it up at some other time.

Mr. Murphy: Well, Mr. Chairman, on page 12 at the beginning of the second paragraph it says:

—newspapers; magazines and literary papers unbound—

They are included in the section. I certainly apologize to the committee if this is not the proper time to raise the question; however, I think it is the proper time for someone to bring this to the attention of the government. We as Canadians are being penalized this extra dollar because the United States publishers say that at some time we may make some change in respect of customs or excise duties. At the present time no change has been made and none is contemplated; but as a result of the uncertainty we are being charged a dollar a year for these United States magazines. If they are going to charge us this extra dollar I suggest that it might be a means of the government obtaining revenue. Canadians are paying it, and we should not be required to do so. If the Americans are going to get an extra dollar from the Canadian people then let them put that dollar into the Canadian treasury.

Mr. McCann: The only remedy is to refuse to buy their magazines.

Mr. Murphy: No, that is not it. I think this is a matter that deserves the attention of the government and I think the minister would agree with me that there is no reason why he, living in Windsor, should pay a dollar a year more for a magazine than if he were living in Detroit. They are supposed to be the same price on both sides of the border. The excuse which is given is silly. I think it is time the matter was brought to the attention of the government, and I have appreciated this opportunity. I will repeat what they say:

As I explained in my previous letter, the charge was set up originally to cover the additional cost of handling Canadian subscriptions due to extra postage and import duties which Canada has imposed from time to time on our magazines.

I will let that stay on the record so it will be there for your officials to consider.

We are fully aware that at the present time there is no import duty on our publication but we have left this special handling charge intact awaiting future developments.

I am finding no fault with the department but you now have it on the record so some action may be considered.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): Write a letter to Washington.

The Deputy Chairman: Have we finished the discussion on "Printing and educational"?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I would like to ask one question of the parliamentary assistant. Under the expression "cultural" I presume music is included. Are all kinds of books of music included under that word on page 12?

Mr. Lesage: Music books if bound, and with no advertising, are exempt from sales tax; but sheet music, that is to say loose pages folded, or merely inserted one within the other and not fastened, are subject to sales tax.

Mr. Graydon: Why?

Mr. Lesage: They are not bound books.

Mr. Graydon: You are penalizing the choirs of Canada by that.

Mrs. Fairclough: The other day when we were considering this I asked the parliamentary assistant about church service papers. I think there may be some confusion in the terminology and I know that a great many churches refer to what basically are service papers as calendars, because they are published weekly. Others call them service papers, which they rightly are. They are part of the service. In some cases, a great many cases of which I know, they record parts of the service on those papers—sometimes hymns and so on that are used in the service.

Will the parliamentary assistant say whether this has been taken into consideration? These have always been subject to sales tax, but it seems to me they are items that should be exempt from sales tax just like hymn books or lesson cards for Sunday schools. They are part of the service.

Mr. Fraser: They have the program for the day or week.

Mr. Lesage: As I said the other day when the same question was raised, there are general rules. If these—let me call them bulletins—qualify, if they are published more than four times a year, and if they qualify under the general rules, they will be exempt. Suppose you have one of these bulletins that is issued more than four times a year and it contains only news of what happens in the parish or in the congregation in a community, and if you have some hymns printed on it for the attention of and to induce members of the community to pray, that bulletin would be exempt. There is no doubt about that; but every pamphlet must be examined separately to see whether it comes within the regulations.

Mrs. Fairclough: These are in quite common use, Mr. Chairman, and they have always been taxed.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Lesage: I would like to see one and I could tell you—

Mrs. Fairclough: I will get you a whole collection of them. I think very definitely they should be exempt from sales tax because they are part of the service.

Mr. Lesage: If the hon. member will get one of these pamphlets or bulletins and take the matter up with me, I shall be delighted to discuss it. She has already brought certain matters to the attention of the department, and she has been quite successful.

The Deputy Chairman: Have we finished the discussion on "Printing and educational"? Shall we proceed to the next section, "Diplomatic"?

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if he will tell us how these exemptions are administered, particularly the first one which relates to articles for use of the Governor General. How does the Governor General go about getting the exemption that is accorded to him with respect to the payment of sales tax? Does he pay the tax on the articles and get a refund or, if he goes into a store to get an article, does he get it at a price minus the sales tax? How does it work? At the same time would the parliamentary assistant tell us whether this covers all articles purchased for the use of government house; and what about use elsewhere of articles which the Governor General might purchase.

Mr. Lesage: The answer to the question is that this covers what is bought for government house, for the furnishing of government house. The Governor General issues a certificate that the purchase is for his use or the use of government house, and that is the way it is exempt from tax. Now, sir, I draw your attention to the fact that there is no amendment to this part of the schedule and the question which has just been asked—and this is true of other questions—would be more relevant to the administration of the Department of National Revenue. I do not want to enter into a discussion at this point—

Mr. Knowles: I do not think the parliamentary assistant should raise that point. After all, this is a bill which is repealing a schedule and enacting a new one. I submit that since we are enacting a new schedule we have the right to ask questions about any of the items in it.

Mr. Lesage: I do not want to quarrel over this, and I agree that we are enacting a new schedule. I was just questioning this way of proceeding for the sake of speeding the business of the house.

Mr. Knowles: It did not work, did it?

Mr. Lesage: No, not this time. The question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is more related to the administration of the act and I felt it could be asked of the Minister of National Revenue when his estimates are up. I do not quarrel with it, though, and the Minister of National Revenue is here and will help me.

Mr. Knowles: Since we are enacting this schedule, we have a right to know how it works. How are these certificates used? Are they used for the purpose of obtaining a refund or are they used in order to make possible the purchase of goods at a lower price than other people pay for them?

Mr. Lesage: The certificates are given to the vendor, who claims a refund.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask one question about the second paragraph. There is one line dealing with the governor general, and then there is another paragraph which says:

Articles imported for the personal or official use of . . .

I just wondered if in the first line covering the governor general we should not put in the words, "articles for personal use."

Mr. Lesage: Articles for personal or official use?

Mr. Fraser: Yes, the same as the wording used for diplomats.

Mr. Lesage: Well, I do not know to what extent it would be correct for us to try to put restrictions upon the representative of Her Majesty the Queen. I do not see why we should say, "Your Excellency, this is only for your personal and official use; you had better be careful." I believe it is much more respectful to use the wording:

Articles for the use of the Governor General.

Mr. Fraser: The reason I make the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, is that the United Kingdom high commissioner to Canada is included in the second paragraph, and the high commissioner is a representative of Her Majesty.

Mr. Lesage: No, I am sorry, the United Kingdom high commissioner to Canada is a representative of the government, not of the Queen.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed to the next section, "Certain building materials"?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Before this section is passed I should like to get confirmation of this fact. As I understand it these building materials, such as brick, plaster, lumber, paint, glass and furnaces, which are important materials, have not been subject to sales tax in the past. There is no change in this schedule?

Mr. Lesage: None at all.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed to "Coverings"?

Mr. Pearkes: I understand that the term "coverings" includes all kinds of wrappings and packings in connection with every group of articles which may be imported into this country. The wrapping might be around chinaware, for instance. Am I correct in assuming that if the articles in question are admitted free of charge, then there is no sales tax on the actual wrappings which surround those articles?

Mr. Lesage: That is correct.

Mr. Pearkes: But I understand if those articles have to pay sales tax, then the actual wrapping itself is also subject to the tax. It seems to me that most of this wrapping is quite useless. It cannot be sold again. It consists of shavings, wood wool and so forth. Is it really the intention to charge the sales tax on goods which are not saleable and which there is no intention to sell in this country? Some of these wrappings are charged on the invoices at a fairly high rate, and sometimes these invoices show the wrapping separately. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant could explain exactly what the situation is, because it does seem to me to be quite unreasonable to charge sales tax on the wrapping for which there is not the slightest use in this country.

Mr. Lesage: The sales tax is charged on the duty paid value of the imported article including the wrapping. Suppose you import an article which is in a wooden case, and the total value of the article is, let us say, $5. In order to try to avoid paying the full sales tax you could make two invoices, one invoice for the goods at $1, and one invoice for the wooden case at $4. In this way you would only pay sales tax on $1, and that is the danger. I believe that is one of the main reasons why, for sales tax purposes, the imported article has to be taxed as wrapped.

Mr. Pearkes: Then provided there is a separate invoice made for the wrapping do I understand there is no sales tax on that wrapping?

Mr. Lesage: I just said the contrary. The example I gave was to illustrate one of the difficulties that would arise if the sales tax was not charged on the duty paid value of the imported article as wrapped.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall proceed now to "Fire brick, refractories, etc." and then to "Processing materials".

Mr. Low: Will the parliamentary assistant explain the difference between material that is consumed and material that is expended directly in the process?

Mr. Lesage: Acids, for instance, are expended in the manufacture of soap; soda ash used in filtration plants for the filtration and purification of water; bone char used as a filtering agent by sugar refineries of the production of sugar.

Mr. Low: And catalysts?

Mr. Lesage: Those materials are not completely consumed. There is always something that remains but which cannot be used any more.

Mr. Low: Would catalysts also come in that list?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

YUKON ACT

REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION—AMENDMENTS RESPECTING TERRITORIAL COUNCIL, ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. 230, to provide for the government of the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I think we should have from the minister some explanation as to the effect of this bill.

Mr. Winters: I shall be glad to give that, Mr. Speaker. The main purpose of this bill is to revise and consolidate the Yukon Act. The act is now contained in chapter 215 of the Revised Statutes of Canada and in four amending acts passed in the years 1940, 1941, 1948 and 1951.

Hon. members will recall that in the last amending act provision was made for increasing the number of the members of the council from three to five by establishing two new electoral districts in the Whitehorse area. This change is now effective. The election of the members of the new council took place last summer and the first meeting of the enlarged council was held in October. It will be recalled that the elected council has legislative authority but that it does not have executive authority.

The Yukon Act was first passed in 1898. The last revision was in 1927. With the continued and healthy growth of the territory, especially within the last decade, it is desirable that the act should now be revised. The legislative powers conferred upon the commissioner in council by the present act are in most respects similar to those conferred upon provincial legislatures. There are, however, several subjects over which the provinces have jurisdiction and with respect to which it is now proposed to confer jurisdiction upon the commissioner in council. These are roads, wills, the property of married women, coroners and inquests, controverted elections, the establishment and maintenance of hospitals, and agriculture. At the present time all these matters are within the jurisdiction of parliament, and cannot be legislated upon by the commissioner in council. It is proposed to drop from the act the sections relating to them, and appropriate ordinances will be enacted by the Yukon council.

There are in the present act a number of sections relating to criminal matters. Appropriate equivalent sections will be contained in the new Criminal Code. These are therefore no longer necessary in the Yukon Act and authority is being sought to drop them.

The bill would confer jurisdiction upon the commissioner in council to make ordinances for the borrowing of money by the commissioner for the purpose of meeting the annual expenditures pending the receipt of territorial revenues. For example, difficulty has been experienced in financing the yearly bulk purchases of liquor stocks. This will be overcome if power is given to the commissioner to borrow the necessary funds for such purpose. Again, the bill seeks to give the commissioner in council the right to pass ordinances authorizing the commissioner to borrow money for the purpose of making loans to municipalities for the construction of municipal works, and to authorize him to make such loans. It is proposed, however, that no money shall be borrowed or lent without the approval of the governor in council.

Authority is also being sought to give the commissioner the right to hold land for the beneficial use of the territory. As hon. members know, all crown lands in the territory are under the administration of the federal government and are in the name of the crown in the right of Canada. In carrying on the government of the territory it is necessary for the commissioner to hold or acquire land for territorial purposes, such as property required for public buildings, schools, hospitals and other works. At present no such authority exists.

Another section of the bill would confer upon the governor in council the power to make regulations concerning reindeer. They are the property of the federal government and therefore are not within the legislative powers of the commissioner in council. While all the herds of reindeer are now located in the Northwest Territories, it may be that in the future it will be expedient to move some of them into the Yukon. In such an event regulations will be required to provide for their control and management.

In recent years a number of interesting archaeological discoveries have been made in the Yukon and no doubt there will be many more in the years to come. It is desirable that the sites should be preserved, and the bill therefore seeks authority to give the governor in council the right to pass regulations for this purpose.

There are several other minor amendments which members will note as the various sections are reviewed by the committee of the whole. I might add, however, that in carrying out the revision of the act we have attempted to have it follow the pattern of the new Northwest Territories Act which was enacted at the last session of parliament. The bill before us contains 54 sections. Of these only 14 either are new or embody substantial changes from the present act. The remaining 40 sections are intended chiefly to effect the consolidation. They embody no substantial change from the provisions of the present act.

The present act with amendments to date contains 132 sections. Seventy-four sections are being dropped. As mentioned, the sections refer to criminal law, married women's property, wills, coroners and jurors and other miscellaneous subjects.

The Yukon Territory is an area rich in natural resources. Prospecting is active and interesting discoveries are being made. It also has one of the most fascinating histories of any part of Canada and it seems important to provide the type of legislation which will encourage its growth and development and at the same time protect the reminders of its colourful past.

Hon. members who have noted the number of times they have been invited in recent years to amend legislation affecting our north country will I am sure regard this bill as a further indication of the government's interest on behalf of the people of Canada in this vast and increasingly important area.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I do not know much about the Yukon. I have heard of the trail of '98, and I know that, as the minister has said, it is a country that has stirred the imagination of people who have read the poems of Service; but principally we associate it with gold mining and, as he says, with reindeer. It seems to me that an act of this kind which is so fundamental, being a new constitution for the territory, should more properly be considered by a committee than in the whole house. I am wondering whether there is any such committee to which this bill could be referred so it might be considered section by section.

I realize that the revision contains many sections which are in the existing bill and which would need little consideration; but it seems to me that the new sections are different and comprehensive and cannot easily be considered in committee of the whole house. I therefore wonder whether a measure which is so important as is this should not be referred to a committee. I believe the progress would be rapid, and I think the result would be more satisfactory to the people concerned if it were considered in that manner.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson in the chair.

On section 1.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct a question to the minister purely from the point of view of obtaining some information in connection with the bill itself. What is the present population of the Yukon Territory? The reason I ask the question is this. I suppose that to the population up there there are disadvantages to being created a province. I am not advocating that procedure because I am not in a position to do so; I do not know the situation well enough. But I am wondering what the disadvantages are, both with respect to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, from the standpoint of incorporation as a province and generally what the governing factors are in this question as to a territory becoming a province. What do the government or the people themselves regard as the governing factor in that decision?

Mr. Winters: The population of the Yukon territory, as revealed by the 1951 census, was 9,096. Of this total approximately 1,500 were natives. The governing factor as to whether or not these territories should be considered on a basis of provincial status is whether or not they can afford normal provincial services. Both the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories are vast in extent but contain a relatively small number of people, and a relatively smaller proportionate revenue is derived from normal sources.

They simply cannot finance the type of services the other provinces have come to expect. I believe the only way they can be financed adequately for the time being is by all the people of Canada through the federal government.

Mr. Graydon: I think that answers the inquiry. I had the idea that the population of the Yukon was greater than that; otherwise I would not have asked the question. What is the population of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Winters: It is of the order of 10,000, speaking from memory.

Mr. Pearkes: Having spent three very happy years in the Yukon as a young man I am delighted to see that the progress of that part of Canada has justified the bringing in of this new legislation. I am certain it will be of great benefit to the Yukon. Undoubtedly that area has progressed a long way since the trail of '98.

Perhaps the determining factor in the future development of the Yukon will be water power, rather than gold. Does this legislation give full control over water power within the Yukon to the council or to the minister? I am convinced that water power is the essence of the future development of the Yukon.

Mr. Winters: No change is contemplated in the control over water power. The authority rests in the parliament of Canada to make regulations respecting water power in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is the area of the Yukon Territory? I notice that the schedule sets out dimensions, description and location, but not the area.

Mr. Winters: The land area of the Yukon Territory is 207,076 square miles.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What are the names of the commissioners?

Mr. Winters: The commissioner of the Yukon Territory is Mr. Brown. There are five elected members of the council, as follows: Carmacks, Mr. A. R. Hayes; Mayo, Mr. A. Berry; Dawson, Mr. V. C. Mellor; Whitehorse East, Mr. J. L. Phelps; Whitehorse West, Mr. F. D. Locke.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What connection has Major General Young with the Yukon administration?

Mr. Winters: Major General Young is deputy minister of the Department of Resources and Development. Under the Yukon Act the administration of the Yukon is by instructions given the commissioner from time to time by the governor in council or the minister. Through that connection the deputy minister of the department is in constant touch with the administration of the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Who has the responsibility and authority in connection with areas in that territory containing gold and other minerals? Are those areas administered by the commissioner and members of the council, or by the department here in Ottawa?

Mr. Winters: Gold mining comes under the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, a federal statute. Placer mining of gold comes under another federal statute, the Yukon Placer Mining Act. Other mining operations come under the Territorial Lands Act, a federal statute having application in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What revenues are collected within the territories that are available to the commissioner and members of the council? What additional funds are required and authorized by parliament, and assigned to the commissioner and his associates, to carry out their responsibilities?

Mr. Winters: In 1951, the last year for which I have statistics, revenues amounted to $1,848,000, while total federal expenditures were $5,626,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I understand that the $1,848,000 was raised by the commissioner and his council within the territory, and that that amount was available for expenditure by them. Then there was a further appropriation by this parliament amounting to around $4 million. For what purpose was it used?

Mr. Winters: It is used for the normal provincial expenditures on highways and the like. Highway costs are very high, in relation to the number of people using them and the vast area covered. There has been an extensive program of highway construction, including the great highway from Whitehorse to Mayo. We are now trying to extend that from Stewart Crossing, near Mayo, to Dawson city. Then there are further expenditures for welfare, education, and all those other items found in the provinces.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Would the minister give the expenditures under the headings of highways, education, and any others there may be, through which the $5 million is used?

Mr. Winters: For the fiscal year 1952, for example, the expenditures on the Yukon council were $11,875; for territorial offices, $56,569; education, $177,224; public works, $39,447; health and public welfare, $238,476; municipal administration, $79,374; game and publicity, $18,270; general and unforeseen, $10,051; department of roads and bridges, $484,025.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Administration of the government.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister state where the line is drawn between instructions given to the commissioner by the governor in council and instructions given to the commissioner by the minister?

Mr. Winters: In practice the instructions given by the minister would be those having to do with administration, and not normally having to do with fundamental questions of policy. If there are policy decisions to be made, they are normally referred to the commissioner by the governor in council.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Appointment of administrator.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Does "absence" mean absence from the territory?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Salaries.

Mr. Low: What is the present salary of the commissioner?

Mr. Winters: The salary of the commissioner is approximately $6,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Reference is made to the salary of the commissioner and of the administrator. If the position of administrator is to be temporary, should he be paid compensation or remuneration rather than salary?

Mr. Winters: If there is an administrator he would be paid a salary. During the time I have been responsible for the administration of the Yukon it has not been necessary to appoint an administrator.

Mr. MacInnis: What was the purpose of making provision for an administrator? Is it contemplated that at some time the commissioner and council might be superseded by an administrator appointed by the governor in council?

Mr. Winters: The provision is made in the event of absence from the territory for any reason of the commissioner, in which event the government would be under the direction of the administrator.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Seat of government.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Where is the present seat of government for the territory?

Mr. Winters: The present seat is at Whitehorse.

Mr. Follwell: Is there any reason to expect that it may be changed from time to time?

Mr. Winters: There may be reason to change the seat of government, although I would not say it might be necessary from time to time. As hon. members know, for many years the seat of government was at Dawson, which was the centre of activities following the gold rush of 1898. At one time Dawson was one of the largest cities in Canada. Its population has receded until there are now only a few hundred people. On the other hand Whitehorse has grown markedly in population. Being on the Alaska highway it is the centre of communication and much more accessible. The administration of the Yukon can be carried out much more expeditiously, efficiently and economically from Whitehorse than from Dawson. Several years ago it was decided to move the administrative headquarters from Dawson to Whitehorse, and that move was made recently.

Mr. Graydon: Whitehorse is where George and Martha Black live.

Sections 9, 10 and 11 agreed to.

On section 12—Sittings separate from commissioner; sanction of bills.

Mr. Knowles: I note that a change is being made in the wording of this section and I wonder if that indicates a change in practice. Perhaps I can get my point over by asking a question. Does the commissioner in practice assent automatically to bills passed by the council in the way the governor general and lieutenant governors assent to federal and provincial legislation, or does he exercise the prerogative of veto on instructions from the minister?

Mr. Winters: Under the existing legislation the commissioner has the power of veto, but we think he should not have that power, that that should be reserved to the governor in council. The change is being made accordingly in this bill. In my experience there has been no occasion on which he has exercised the power of veto.

Mr. Knowles: That is the reason for the change?

Mr. Winters: That is the reason for the change.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has the minister studied the form of commission government under which Newfoundland operated from 1934 to 1949? I think he would get some ideas from such a study. That commission consisted of six men with the governor sitting in as chairman. I notice that here the commissioner does not sit in with the council. He is supposed to be a man especially selected by the governor in council and should be the ablest man of the lot because of his special qualifications. Probably he would come from outside the territory. The other men are going to be elected by popular ballot and they may benefit from some person of experience to help them and make suggestions.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you believe in democracy?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Certainly I believe in democracy, but I believe also in precedent. Here we have a council of five members, and then in the next section provision is being made for a Speaker. A majority of the council would be three members who, including the Speaker, would constitute a quorum. I think it is worth considering having the commissioner preside at council meetings.

Mr. Winters: We have considered that and decided that the best operations would result if the commissioner did not sit in with the council. Perhaps the main difference between this council and the one that acted in Newfoundland is that in this instance it has no executive authority, its authority being legislative only.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—Quorum.

Mr. Knowles: How does the Speaker get appointed? I have looked at the act and can find no reference to the Speaker in the definitions or anywhere else.

Mr. Winters: The Speaker is appointed by the council and is one of the members of the council.

Mr. Knowles: Should not there be some provision for that? It just seems as though he is picked out of thin air.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has the minister power under the act to issue general instructions as to procedure in connection with such things as the election of the Speaker? I think it would be wise to have something of that kind.

Mr. Winters: I suppose under the general authority given to the minister that could be done, but we have left it to the council to conduct its own business and to devise ways of doing so. That has been found to be satisfactory. Leaving to the council the right to select a chairman or, as we call it here, a Speaker, has worked satisfactorily. There has been no question about it so far and I am sure there will not be.

Mr. Graydon: Would the minister take another look at this section to see whether there should not be something added before the word "Speaker"? I am somewhat impressed by the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am simply trying to be helpful. It may be there should be something that has just been left out.

Mr. Winters: I shall be glad to do that. There is no change from the existing act in that respect, but I do not believe the hon. member for Peel would wish the legislation held up on that account. I will look into that.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister the other act there? I see that the explanatory note on the opposite page says there is no change in substance. Has the minister the actual wording of the previous section 16?

Mr. Winters: The previous section 16 read as follows:

A majority of the council, including the Speaker, shall form a quorum.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Might I suggest that there might be a subsection 3 added to clause 9 which would read something like this, that the person obtaining the largest majority should be the Speaker, or that the council shall have the power to elect a chairman or Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: The word "Speaker" in section 13 is not the most appropriate term that could be used for a council of this size. The word "Speaker" is used for the officer presiding over a parliament or other body having the functions of a parliament. In this case I think the term "chairman" would be much more appropriate both with respect to the functions which the council has to discharge and the number of members on the council. A chairman chosen from one of their number would be much more fitting, so far as the term is concerned, than "Speaker".

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Governor in council may prescribe the qualifications of electors, candidates, etc.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This clause seems to grant very exceptional powers. I should like the minister to explain why they are necessary. The clause reads in part as follows:

—the commissioner in council may prescribe the qualifications of those entitled to vote at an election of members of the council and of those eligible for nomination and election as members of the council and the reasons for or matters by which an elected member may be or become disqualified from being or sitting as a member of the council.

Under our system of government it would seem to me that very autocratic powers are being granted to the commissioner in council. I should like the minister to explain why they are necessary and why the bill could not set out the qualifications required. I should like to know why this power should be left to the commissioner and his associates.

Mr. Winters: Hon. members will recall that when the Northwest Territories bill went through the same question was raised. It was considered at that time that if we were going to have what is in effect a local legislature they should have responsibility for and authority over those things that normally fall within the jurisdiction of a local legislature to the greatest extent possible. The qualifications of voters is one of them. The existing legislation reads as follows:

The commissioner in council may prescribe the qualifications of those entitled to vote at an election of members to the council . . .

And so on. We are seeking no powers that were not there before, nor are we seeking any powers that do not normally fall within the jurisdiction of a provincial legislature, or in fact a legislature of this kind which is an elected legislature for these purposes.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—Sessional indemnity and expenses of members.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I see that fees up to $50 per day are being provided for the remuneration of the members of the council. Under these circumstances that would seem to me to be a rather excessive allowance. I think most members would agree that if the commissioners have to travel any distance they should be reimbursed for their out of pocket expenses, but it would appear to me that $50 a day is excessive.

Mr. Winters: As the hon. member knows, living expenses in the Yukon are perhaps higher than in other parts of Canada. This is simply bringing the allowance into line with that provided in the case of the Northwest Territories bill which hon. members passed last year and which established a rate of $50 per day for the Northwest Territories council.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—Legislative powers.

Mr. MacInnis: I notice that subsection (g) of clause 16 deals with the solemnization of marriage in the territory. Then subsection (n) deals with the conferring of jurisdiction in matters of alimony upon the court. How is the question of divorce dealt with in the Yukon Territory? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests that possibly the law of the old days, when the other fellow was shot, would cover the situation. That might do, but that question must arise because provision is made for jurisdiction in matters of alimony.

Mr. Winters: I must confess that I am not clear on the full answer to that. There is no change from the existing legislation, and I have not gone into it very thoroughly with that in mind.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister see what information he can get?

Mr. Winters: I will do that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Subsection (r) has an explanatory note saying there is no change in substance. Can the minister tell me what change has been made in subsection (r) from the former section 28?

Mr. Winters: The former section 28 reads as follows:

The commissioner in council shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education; but it shall therein always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territory or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Mr. MacInnis: Has the minister received any representations as to the ability or inability of the people in the territory to raise sufficient funds for educational purposes? How is secondary education handled, or is there any such thing as secondary education in the territory? Has the minister had any representations as to any difficulties experienced by the residents of the territories in providing adequate educational facilities?

Mr. Winters: No, I have had no representations as to the adequacy or otherwise of revenues for education. In Whitehorse, for example, where quite a large percentage of the population is composed of service personnel, the government contributes on a per capita basis to education both in the primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Low: Including the capital costs?

Mr. Winters: Including capital cost. Otherwise we have had no representations.

Mr. Pearkes: May I ask if there are combined Indian and white schools in the Yukon on the same basis as there are in British Columbia.

Mr. Winters: There are, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I might seek to answer the question asked a moment ago by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East, and to which the minister did not seem to know the answer. If one looks ahead to sections 31 and 35 of the act he will find that the court in the Yukon Territory is given authority in all civil cases, and so on, and apparently that must include divorces; because when you read section 35 you find that the court of appeal for the Yukon Territory is the court of appeal for the province of British Columbia. Section 35 (2) (g) refers to actions for divorce or judicial separation as being amongst the classes of cases that can be dealt with from the court of the Yukon in the appeal court of British Columbia. Apparently divorces from the Yukon Territory do not come here to parliament because they have their own court.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I would like an answer to that question if the minister can find one. I do not believe there is any divorce in the Yukon because there is no power for it.

Mr. Winters: I am told that the governing section is section 22 which reads:

> Subject to the provisions of this act, the laws relating to civil and criminal matters and the ordinances in force in the Northwest Territories on the 13th day of June, 1898, shall be and remain in force in the territory, in so far as the same are applicable thereto, and in so far as the same have not been or are not hereafter repealed, abolished or altered by the parliament of Canada, or by any ordinance.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Before section 19 carries, may I ask the minister whether any moneys have been borrowed up to the present time under the act?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On section 35, has the minister found out whether in the Northwest Territories there is power for divorce?

Mr. Winters: There is.

Mr. Pearkes: Do the lands covered in section 45 carry the mineral rights?

On section 47—Manufacture and importation of intoxicants.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister if he can tell us what the present situation is with respect to the manufacture, compounding or importing into the Yukon Territory of intoxicants. I note that according to this provision, which is more or less the same as it was previously, intoxicants are not allowed into the territory except by permission of the commissioner. I gather that this is not a question that is left to the decision of the territorial council but rather it is a decision made by the commissioner, which in effect means that decisions in this matter are made here in Ottawa. Can the minister say what the present situation is in that regard?

Mr. Winters: As hon. members may remember, two years ago, I think, there was a change made in the Yukon Act to enable intoxicating liquors to be manufactured in the Yukon Territory under the authority of the commissioner in council. That was intended to bring the authority into line with that prevailing in all other provinces in Canada and in the Northwest Territories. There have been no instances where liquor has been manufactured there, so the clause has not been applicable. It has been decided that for administrative purposes it would be very difficult to summon the council to deal with instances should they occur. It is quite different from the situation here, where it is easy to assemble the council. For this reason it was found administratively desirable to delegate the authority to the commissioner.

Mr. Low: Can the minister say what kind of control is exercised over the distribution of liquor in the territory?

Mr. Winters: It is distributed there in the same manner it is distributed in the provinces of Canada, through liquor stores under control of the government.

Mr. Low: And the commissioner is looked upon as the control officer?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Pearkes: Did I understand the minister to say there have been no instances of liquor being manufactured in the Yukon?

Mr. Winters: What I meant to say was that there have been no instances since the legislation was changed two years ago, instances that have come to our attention.

On section 53—Export of gold without payment of royalty.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I would like to ask the minister for more particulars respecting the authority for mining and the royalties that are payable upon gold that is exported out of the territory. How much are the royalties and what have they amounted to per year over the past five years?

Mr. Winters: I wonder if I might get that information and provide it to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): In the meantime could the minister state what royalty is charged on gold that is procured in this territory?

Mr. Winters: If I may I will provide that information later too.

On section 54—Coming into force.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The question I was going to ask is covered in the note on section 54:

> As many provisions relating to criminal law are in the present act, the new act must come into force on the day the Criminal Code is proclaimed.

That is quite definite. It will depend upon the passage of the Criminal Code.

WATER RESOURCES

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR CONSERVATION PURPOSES

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. 109, to authorize the grant of assistance to a province for the conservation of water resources.

Mr. Herridge: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I should say a few words about the purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker. While the bill itself is relatively short, I believe it is of great importance to Canada. Its effects can be both far-reaching and long-lasting.

The conservation of natural resources within the provinces is primarily a provincial responsibility, and there is no desire or intention on the part of the federal government to invade that jurisdiction. The bill is drafted accordingly. Its basic purpose is to enable the federal government to assist provincial governments in carrying out measures of a major character designed to conserve their water resources, and at the same time reduce the hazard of serious flooding.

The interest of the government of Canada in conservation has found expression in the past in a number of important measures which were designed to assist the provinces in respect to special projects of major importance, or to assist them in problems of such wide scope that the finding of a solution was in the national interest. Included among these measures have been the Canada Forestry Act, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, the Eastern Rocky Mountain Forest Conservation Act, and the National Parks Act. The results that have been achieved through these acts are well known. I believe all hon. members will agree that Canada has benefited substantially through their operation, and that these benefits will continue to increase as time passes.

We have heard many excellent addresses in this house in the past few years on various phases of the vast field of conservation. In almost every case it was the expressed wish that more might be done to ensure the conservation of Canada's resources for the continuing benefit of the present and future citizens of our country. It has been pointed out many times that the interests of conservation are quite often opposed to the immediate interests of financial gain, and that too often our resources have been sacrificed for profit.

We all know of many examples where human neglect or lack of knowledge or faulty practices have in the past resulted in forested land being laid waste and farm land turned to desert. We have seen torrents of water pouring down the river valleys from areas denuded of vegetation, to wreak destruction in the cities and towns below. We have seen, too, the dried-up stream beds in heat of summer and urban populations spending large sums in search for adequate water supplies.

Public consciousness of the need for conservation, and of the inherent dangers that lie in faulty practices in the conservation field, has grown with the years. I am sure it is safe to say that the people of Canada are now more conservation-minded than at at any time in our history. The realization of the problem on the part of every citizen is, I believe, the most important factor in achieving the ultimate goal where our renewable resources will be managed in such a manner that they will be, as nearly as possible, available in perpetuity. We have come a long way already from the early days when our resources were looked upon as inexhaustible. This progress has been made through the efforts of public-spirited and farsighted men in all walks of life, in private industry and at every level of government.

The bill which is before us today for consideration is intended as a further step toward conserving our resources, and toward alleviating the damages that have already been suffered. The bill seeks authority for the government of Canada to grant financial assistance to provincial governments for the construction of major water conservation projects. Assistance of the nature contemplated has already been given by Canada through special votes of parliament to various projects which were outside the scope of existing conservation acts. These projects, which included the Luther marsh and Shand dams in the Grand river watershed in Ontario, and the Fanshawe dam on the Thames river north of London, were considered to be of sufficient importance that federal participation was warranted.

[Mr. Winters.]

Subject to funds being voted by parliament, we have also informed the government of Ontario that the federal government would assist financially in the construction of a conservation dam on the Conestogo river. My contacts with the government of Ontario on these water conservation measures have been with the minister of planning and development. In each of these special cases a formula has been used whereby the local municipalities affected agreed to pay 25 per cent of the cost, and the provincial and federal governments undertook to pay 37½ per cent each; in other words, to share the remaining 75 per cent on a dollar for dollar basis.

The bill now before the house is intended to place this type of assistance on a statutory basis, and thus make it available to all provincial governments. The bill provides for federal contributions up to 37½ per cent of the cost of major water conservation projects, with the remaining portion of the cost being borne by the provincial government concerned or jointly by the provincial government and the local municipalities affected. The bill also provides, however, that the contribution of the federal government shall not be greater than that of the provincial government.

This approach to the problem is designed to leave the prime responsibility with the provinces, to whom it has been assigned by the British North America Act, and yet provide sufficient assistance to encourage the undertaking of necessary projects which might not otherwise be carried out. The limitation to projects which are, in the opinion of the governor in council, of a major character will ensure that the taxpayers of all of Canada will participate only in those projects which are of sufficient importance to be of national concern, and which the province could not reasonably be expected to carry out alone.

Hon. members will notice that the bill envisages an agreement in respect to each project, and it is proposed that this agreement shall be between the government of Canada and the government of the province. The bill recognizes, however, that local authorities may be set up within the provinces to deal with particular conservation areas or problems. In fact a number of local authorities have already been established under provincial jurisdiction. These local authorities may actually undertake the work on behalf of their provincial governments, and in many cases share in the cost. In these instances there will in all probability be subsidiary agreements between the provincial governments and the municipalities or local authorities covering the terms of their participation.

However, this is a matter for provincial governments and their municipalities to decide.

Sir Clifford Sifton, who is recognized as having been one of Canada's greatest authorities on conservation, pointed out that artificial works can only supplement the place of nature in the regulation of stream flow. While the immediate works envisaged under the terms of this bill will be dams to regulate flow and lessen the danger of disastrous flash floods, it is fully recognized that the construction of dams alone will neither prevent floods nor achieve adequate conservation of the water resources of an area. The restoration of forest cover and other conservation measures in the drainage areas of the rivers are normally required. We have stressed these broader features in all our dealings to date with provincial governments. A most important feature of the Canada water conservation assistance bill, therefore, is the provision for the undertaking by the provinces of ancillary conservation measures in conjunction with projects receiving federal assistance. These ancillary measures will be carried out in all cases except where it is determined by careful study, to the mutual satisfaction of both the federal and provincial governments, that they are not required.

The importance of this provision cannot be overemphasized. It will ensure that any project to which federal assistance may be given will be a component part of an integrated conservation plan for the area in which the project is located. This provision will serve also to encourage the development of broad plans to embrace many fields of conservation in a given area.

I would like to point out that this bill and the Canada Forestry Act will, in effect, be complementary to each other in many instances. When a province wishes to undertake the construction of a water conservation project, and submits a detailed plan of the proposed over-all conservation measures in the area concerned, this plan will be studied with a view to assistance being given under the Canada Forestry Act with respect to reforestation, as well as under the provisions of the bill now before us. Where the ancillary conservation measures include reforestation, that work may be eligible for assistance under the terms of the Canada Forestry Act. In this way, the Canada water conservation assistance bill would also give encouragement to the provinces in the use of the Canada Forestry Act. Hon. members will note that the two main points of programs envisaged by this legislation have to do with water and forest cover, and that both are within the scope of the Department of Resources and Development through its engineering and water resources branch and its forestry branch. No addition to present staff is envisaged because of this bill.

I wish to stress once again that this proposed legislation is purely enabling in character, and that it does not seek to establish any change in jurisdiction or responsibility. The government of Canada would grant financial assistance under this legislation only after a formal request had been received from the province concerned. The federal government will have no proprietary interest in any of the works to which it contributes.

We have before us legislation which would for the first time offer broad federal assistance to the provinces on a definite basis for the conservation of their water resources. If approved by parliament it will help to round out a really worth-while and comprehensive program aimed at the conservation of Canada's natural resources. As I mentioned earlier, Canadians in all walks of life are becoming daily more conscious of conservation. We already have examples of successful projects that have been undertaken in the water resources conservation field in a similar manner to that provided for by this bill. I feel that these practical examples give evidence that the time has now been reached when federal assistance on a statutory basis can be extended with the firm expectancy that great return to Canada as a whole will be received from the investment.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in connection with this bill, although when I see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) looking at me I feel that it is almost sinful to speak at this time.

I must congratulate the minister, first of all, on his statement and his clear C.C.F. analysis of what private enterprise has done in some cases to the natural resources of this country. This group certainly supports this bill as a further step forward in the development of what we hope will finally be an over-all conservation policy for Canada, and we are pleased indeed that the bill provides for ancillary conservation, the relation of the conservation of water resources with the conservation of forest resources and so on. But, Mr. Speaker, my main reason for rising at this time is to say that we are disappointed to know that the provisions of this bill do not include a clause to provide for river bank protection from damage as the result of erosion on navigable rivers.

I mention this matter because this question of erosion or damage from erosion is an extremely serious one to many parts of the constituency I represent, and is of increasing concern to an increasing number of people. It is of concern to the corporation of the city of Trail where, as will be remembered, in 1948 a serious disaster was just averted by prompt action on the part of citizens, the union and the company. It was a co-operative effort to prevent something that might have been extremely serious indeed to that city and to other communities along the Columbia river and the Arrow lakes. But while that disaster at that time was averted, that threat still exists because the federal, provincial and municipal authorities have failed to accept their responsibilities to do something about it.

There are also, in the Creston area of my constituency, a considerable number of farmers who suffer damage from erosion to the banks of the Kootenay river. As a matter of fact there are some 17.3 miles of the banks of the Kootenay river within my constituency. Year after year these farmers suffer considerable damage and are threatened with serious damage, again as a result of no action being taken on the part of the federal and provincial governments to devise a policy to meet that threat and that situation. It is a constant problem to these people; it is a constant expense; and to the people farming reclaimed land it represents a constant danger.

The farmers of whom I am speaking have reclaimed some 15,000 acres of bottom land that was producing no wealth whatever a few years ago. As a result of the initiative of these people in that community and in surrounding districts, those 15,000 acres of land have been brought into production and are producing a great deal of wealth in the form of grain, forage and other crops, and provide a considerable amount of fodder for a number of cattle. This production has brought prosperity to the district, and has provided a considerable sum in additional taxes to the federal and provincial coffers. Yet nothing is done about this problem which is such a serious one to many of my constituents on the Columbia and the Kootenay rivers.

I am constantly receiving letters about the matter. I just want to quote briefly from a letter I received from a gentleman who has been prominent in reclamation work in Creston throughout the years and who speaks for those who are greatly concerned about the constant waste and loss occasioned by the erosion caused by the floods on the Kootenay river.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I was looking up some of the government reports in this connection, and there is no question about it that on the banks of navigable rivers the federal government is recognized as the riparian owner and has some legal responsibility, as well as a moral responsibility. This gentleman, Mr. Guy Constable, whom a great many people throughout British Columbia know and whom I am sure the officials of the department will know quite well, wrote me a two-page letter quite recently about this situation, and I am going to quote two short paragraphs. He says:

> Certainly a national policy embracing water and soil must straighten out the ownership of water as between the dominion and the provinces and the responsibility for river erosion which is becoming every year more serious, and that brings me to the purpose of this letter primarily.

He goes on to deal with the problem of river erosion. Then he goes on to deal with a situation which they face at the present time and the present policy of local people as a result of that erosion. In this paragraph of his letter he says:

> The present policy is and has been up to now, to draw back the dikes and reconstruct them further away from the river. It is a losing policy in every way, almost one of despair, wasteful of land and effort, and of money since it is not a corrective. I think it parallels the situation I have described as to irrigation. Reclamation of wet lands is a national benefit, and the land cannot bear the whole cost when adjacent to navigable waterways.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that not only does that situation exist in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, but it is one that we find in many places in Canada. I have been reading what literature I could get in this connection in recent months, and I happened to have in my hands recently the report of the select committee on conservation, 1950, for Ontario. I note that this problem is dealt with at some length in this booklet and I am going to quote one short paragraph, because I think it states our argument in this group which is that the federal government should accept responsibility for initiating a policy that will overcome, as a result of federal, provincial and, in some cases, municipal co-operation, the damage caused by erosion. I now quote from page 114 of this report of the select committee on conservation:

> This problem, it should be noted, is not unique in this province. It is world-wide. European countries, particularly Denmark, the Netherlands and England, have been fighting erosion from the seas for centuries. It is a most pressing problem on the American shores of lakes Ontario, Erie and Michigan, and along the entire lengths of the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts.
> The problem reached such proportions that the government of the United States set up within the war department, in the office of the chief of engineers of the United States army, a beach erosion board which has been carrying on research and giving leadership in the combating of shore erosion in that country.

Losses through shore erosion have today reached a point where they can no longer be considered the responsibility of the individual person whose land is affected, but rather, because of the federal government's control of navigable waters, a problem to be considered jointly by the dominion and provincial governments and the municipality concerned. This committee therefore recommends that:

The dominion, provincial and municipal governments should recognize the public responsibility for assistance in lakeshore erosion prevention.

We in this group say amen to those conclusions. No effective action has been taken in any country until a governing body with sufficient influence and financial resources has taken the lead to do something about the erosion situation. This is a long-term problem in Canada, an increasing problem; and once again I say that we in this group regret very much that there is no provision in the bill for at least a start on the part of the government on this most important problem, a very serious one to Canadians in various parts of Canada.

It is a long-time problem, but no action has been taken to date. It is time something was done. If the minister does not see fit to introduce an amendment to the bill that would remedy the situation, we would urge his department to give consideration to the problem as it exists in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with a view to taking steps to improve the situation in the very near future.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss this bill at length this afternoon. Let me say briefly that, in principle, this party is in agreement.

Those of us who live along the Grand river appreciate the assistance given by this government and by the provincial government in the building of the Shand dam and the Luther dam; and we feel now that the Glen Allan dam on the Conestogo will improve the flood situation considerably in the Grand river valley.

In my view this bill has more to do with flood control than with water conservation. I had hoped it might include more in respect of water conservation, but it is to be noted that it does make reference to reforestation. However, there is much more to water conservation than simply the building of dams and a program of reforestation.

We already have on the statute books the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. I feel that the large number of officials and engineers in that department might have dealt effectively with this legislation, as there would seem to be a good deal of duplication. Many P.F.R.A. employees are connected with this kind of work in the west, and I am convinced that they could have made themselves responsible for it across the whole nation. I question therefore the wisdom of not placing this bill under that department. As I said earlier, we accept the principle of the bill, although we had hoped that it would have contained further provisions for water and soil conservation. I have no further comment to make at the moment. Any questions I may have may better be asked at a later time.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended speaking at length in this debate, but as one who has been interested for years in conservation I believe I should take this opportunity to say a word in commendation of what the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) has done in bringing this bill before the house.

Although he is one of the younger members of the government, I wish to congratulate him upon his vision and foresight, and upon his ability to gather from his observations and studies the importance of things people in Canada are thinking, and feeling should be done, and especially at this time I would commend him for bringing a bill of this kind before the house with a view to making statutory some of the arrangements that had been made hitherto only by agreement between the federal and provincial governments. Let me commend him and congratulate him warmly and sincerely for what he is doing.

We may not agree that the bill is everything we would want, but I am always happy to see a start made. I do not look upon this start as encompassing the whole scope of what will be encompassed eventually in legislation of this kind. Doubtless changes will be made, and in all likelihood as the years and sessions go by members will bring to the minister's attention changes that should be made in the act to enlarge its scope.

I am happy that, through the action he is taking today, the minister is giving leadership in the field of conservation. That is important. The last time I spoke on this subject I believe I said leadership ought to come from a senior government in Canada. That leadership is now coming from the point from which it should come, and this gives me considerable satisfaction.

I do not look upon this legislation as being exclusively Social Credit legislation in any respect; nor do I think the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has any logical basis for saying that it is C.C.F.

legislation. Yet I was interested in what the hon. member did say about the exploitation of our natural resources by private enterprise. We hear that so constantly from socialist members; that private enterprise has done this, that private enterprise has been responsible for that, or has been responsible for not doing the other thing.

In other words, at every opportunity that presents itself they try to undermine private enterprise. Let me point out that if any of the resources of this country have been exploited wrongfully by private enterprise, and if there has been wastage or destruction in that exploitation, it has not been the fault of private enterprise so much as that of the government that has allowed it to take place.

Governments in the various provinces are presumed to own and control the resources for and on behalf of the people. If adverse exploitation has taken place in any of the provinces it has been because of a lack of watchfulness and good management by government. That ought to be stressed. It is because of wrong policies on the part of governments that these things have happened. No one can say that it is private enterprise and because private enterprise is faulty in its concept of what should be done.

I want to say that I believe in private enterprise. I believe that we should take every action possible to preserve private enterprise as being the best possible means of getting the finest results in any of our activities, and to manage and build up our economy. I wanted to say that much because when we hear these repetitions about the failings and weaknesses of private enterprise it sort of gives me a sick feeling at my midriff.

As the minister gains experience in administering this bill and dealing with the provinces I hope he will find it possible to enlarge the scope of the legislation to include something along the line mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), that is the prevention of erosion. We suffer from erosion, not only of river banks but generally throughout large areas. I think sometimes we overlook the fact that erosion of land occurs over such a wide area that the province concerned, or at least some provinces, might not have the resources to cope with it. No doubt in some cases they would have to come to the senior government for help.

That principle has been recognized to a considerable extent in connection with irrigation schemes to prevent further damage by erosion. However, I am quite sure that soil erosion is caused by other things than wind and water. I am expressing the hope that in the years ahead the minister will find it possible to enter into agreements with certain provincial governments to provide assistance in putting a stop to widespread causes of erosion which the provinces cannot handle themselves. I shall end by saying that I think the minister has made an excellent start, and I commend him for it.

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): When this matter was first announced in the speech from the throne I made a study of water conservation. It seems to me that this bill is putting into general effect what has been the policy in connection with Ontario. Several projects costing millions of dollars have been carried out in this province. I do not know if similar projects have been carried out in other provinces.

I was wondering how far the minister had thought out this thing and whether this legislation will be available to all the provinces. On reading the report of the Department of Resources and Development I noticed that very little has been done in my province, and I suppose I can be excused for making special reference to that. There are no large municipalities in that province outside of St. John's and perhaps Corner Brook where measures of conservation such as are envisaged by this bill would be required. The province would have to bear almost two-thirds of the cost of any project of this kind.

Will this legislation provide assistance in power development? I notice that the section which enables the minister to make agreements with the provinces refers to the building of dams for the conservation of water and I should like to know if that could be extended to include power projects where a river might be diverted to flow into other rivers so that a profitable power project could be brought into being.

This bill is something new, and it seems to indicate that the federal government has a great deal more money than the provinces. While some of these projects may be of great benefit, nevertheless they are local in character and cannot be regarded as being national. The entry of the dominion government into this field will give them a certain control over matters which otherwise would be exclusively provincial. I think everyone will agree that it is desirable that we should get the best results from potential water power sites in all parts of Canada. The provinces naturally are most interested in doing something along these lines, but the fact is that this amounts to a subsidy to the provinces in order that they may use that power to the best advantage.

I notice that the same section which gives the minister the power to make agreements also stipulates certain conditions in regard to reforestation. That brings me to something which was mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West. The hon. member was blaming private enterprise for the conditions which exist today in many provinces where natural resources have been depleted.

I think in the past governments were not sufficiently aware of the speed with which natural resources could be depleted. The passage of time has brought to the attention of all persons and governments the desirability of adopting measures to protect our natural resources. I think it can be said that the private paper companies have shown special interest in introducing the most advanced practices in fire control. I think they have done more along these lines than the governments because their whole operation depends upon the availability of forest resources.

In Newfoundland they have worked things out in such a way that the forest resources will be available in cycles. They will cut an area today and it will grow again so that in 25, 30 or perhaps more years the company can come around and cut that area again. In the meantime they will be cutting in other places. They are doing that in the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company's operations around Grand Falls, where a paper mill was established in 1904.

There is great value in flood control from the point of view of the tourist industry. I have mentioned this before, and I know that hon. members who come from provinces where there are salmon rivers realize that rivers are becoming depleted of fish because of a lack of regularity in the water flow whereby the salmon are prevented from having ready access to the headwaters of the rivers. If there is not sufficient flood control a river will dry up in the summer and the salmon cannot enter. If there are no salmon there will be no tourists visiting that particular section.

I assume that if this bill is going to have its full effect a provision will be incorporated in the agreements so that sort of thing can be done. Provinces could erect dams to regulate the flow of water in salmon rivers to enable the salmon to ascend regularly and thus provide more sport. There is no doubt about it that the salmon rivers are more valuable to the province as a sporting attraction than merely for the spawning of salmon for commercial fishermen. They bring more revenue.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Mr. Speaker, when this matter was up previously I mentioned that we had no large rivers or bays in my province, but I wondered whether old mill properties, mill dams, could be renewed under this legislation. At one time the power was used for milling purposes, but today they are idle. Some of them have fallen into disrepair.

After I spoke about that matter I received a great many inquiries from interested people. Would that be too small a proposition for the government to undertake, the rebuilding of these dams and turning them into fishing ponds with the co-operation of the individuals concerned and the local government? Some of the people also wish to use these dams and ponds that have gone out of use so they may have small power plants. Perhaps the minister might advise me on this matter at the present time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the minister going to make any observations in reply to what has been said?

Mr. Winters: I do not think I need to make any general observations at this time. If there are specific questions I will be glad to answer them.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to ask the minister whether agreements can be made for the purpose of the development of water power.

Mr. Winters: It is not contemplated that agreements will be made with respect to the development of water power because such projects are normally revenue-producing and amortize themselves. There is a general provision under which water power might be contemplated as a subsidiary or perhaps ancillary development, but the primary object is not to develop water power projects.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is the purpose of preserving water if you are not going to use it for something? The idea is to preserve water so you can use it. If you build a dam and use the water to produce electricity and turn it into a revenue-producing venture it is more valuable than just having the water to look at.

Mr. Charlton: What are the qualifications for a province to apply for assistance under the act?

Mr. Winters: It is not a question of what qualifications are needed before a province can apply. The question is what are the qualifications before an application would be eligible for assistance under this bill. In the first place the project must be of such size and importance as to merit federal government participation on behalf of all the taxpayers of Canada. It must be the size of project that would not normally be undertaken by the provincial and municipal governments alone. It must be a project designed to conserve water and, in order to be of the nature of projects already carried out, have as one of its main purposes the prevention, or at any rate the minimizing, of serious flash floods. My hon. friend is thoroughly familiar with the Shand and Luther dams and the proposed Glen Allan dam on the Conestogo river. I can think of no better examples of the type of project that is contemplated than those.

Mr. Catherwood: Can the minister say to what extent such grants will be authorized? In other words, how much is the federal government prepared to grant toward the over-all picture? Is there any limit?

Mr. Winters: Each project will be considered on its merits. There is no limitation or specification as to the over-all amount involved.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Have any requests been received from provinces other than Ontario up to the present time?

Mr. Winters: No specific requests have been received. Requests of a general nature have been received.

Mr. McLure: I should like the minister to answer the question I asked him a while ago. Would the rebuilding of mill ponds and dams in the province of Prince Edward Island be too small a proposition to take into consideration? The local government has already taken on two or three such projects and they now have fish ponds. One man is anxious to get some assistance because he wants to build a small power plant. Would that be too small?

Mr. Winters: Each project would have to be reviewed on its merits. Whether or not it was too small or too large would depend upon the size of the project, the revenues of the province, and the willingness of the municipality and the provincial government to participate and bring it forward for consideration. Each project would have to be considered on its own merits.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Suppose a province refuses to call for tenders. What happens?

Mr. Winters: It is part of the practice in federal government operations of this kind to let contracts on the basis of tender, and it would be the intention under the bill to have that practice followed.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Suppose the authority in the province does not want to agree to the calling of tenders?

Mr. Winters: We would then have to decide whether or not there would be an agreement under the act. We are not committed to an agreement. If conditions are not such as to conform with the terms of the practice people would normally expect of us we would not enter into an agreement.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Then the same thing would happen as happened with the highway program.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Charlton: Do you want me to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There are only a few sections of the bill left. I cannot recall how many speeches were made, but we had quite a discussion at the resolution stage, and we have spent some time on second reading this afternoon. There are only four or five sections left, and perhaps the house would bear with us for a few minutes.

Mr. Gagnon: Six o'clock.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I think we might pay some heed to the melodious voice of the Minister of Public Works and carry on a little longer by common consent. Personally I do not like to see a tendency on the part of the house or the chairman of the committee to force any legislation through. The minister has told us that this special legislation was designed in order to enlist the interest and co-operation of the provinces. I would ask him if he or his department have received any direct communications from provinces other than Ontario. Have any been received from the province of Nova Scotia or the province of Saskatchewan? Since the legislation was before the house at the resolution stage there has been very heavy flooding in the province of Nova Scotia. Considerable damage was done in certain places, in Oxford in my county and in Truro in Colchester county, as well as in other parts of Nova Scotia.

I would ask the minister if any communications have been received from the province of Nova Scotia and whether he has made any direct representations to them. I would also ask whether there have been any similar contacts with the province of Saskatchewan. When this legislation was in the resolution stage discussions were held in connection with the South Saskatchewan dam, irrigation and control of flooding in the province of Saskatchewan. I would like to have a statement from the minister.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I think this is too important a measure to be shoved through the house under pressure. We may be desirous of getting away from here by a certain date, but the time to have begun to prepare for that was several weeks ago, not when we have a measure of this kind before us. We have an hour for adjourning, and I think we should adhere to it.

Section stands.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move that the house do now adjourn. Tomorrow we will continue with Bill No. 109. We will then take up Bill No. 293, to implement the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean; the resolution respecting the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act; the resolution respecting the measure to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937; and also the resolution to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act. There is also the resolution to amend the National Housing Act, 1944, and the resolution to amend the National Defence Act. I think that will take the day.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

NATIONAL HEALTH

PETITION WITH RESPECT TO COMPREHENSIVE NATIONAL HEALTH PLAN

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by Howard Wightman of Creston, British Columbia, and considerably more than 100,000 other Canadians, praying parliament to consider the enactment of a comprehensive national health plan which would provide for all our citizens, irrespective of their income, full medical, dental, optical and other health care.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIFLE RANGE AND OTHER PROJECTS AT BAIE-DU-FEBVRE, QUE.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): On March 25 the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) asked if I had received any protests against the installation of a rifle range and other defence projects at Baie-du-Febvre, Quebec; and, if so, what the Department of National Defence was going to do about them.

There is no rifle range under construction at this locality. What the hon. member intended to refer to would appear to be a proof range for artillery along the south shore of lake St. Peter in the counties of Nicolet and Yamaska. This has been under construction since May 1952. Provision is also being made for a range for aircraft. The ranges have been located so that they do not interfere with navigation.

Within the last three or four weeks five representations have been received against the Department of National Defence taking over additional land. The purpose of taking over this land is to add to the area intended for the protection of the people and animals of the adjacent farms.

The amount of additional land proposed to be taken over having any agricultural value whatever is not large and full compensation will be paid for it. The benefits resulting to the countries mentioned and the town of Nicolet, as well as the entire district, in providing continuing employment and expenditures in the locality, will, it is believed, far outweigh any of the disadvantages resulting from this development.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DELETION OF QUESTION FROM ORDER PAPER

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention to the fact that a question on yesterday's order paper to which I am to give an answer was not answered, but has been deleted from today's order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the minister has spoken to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who asked the question, and that he understands that it will be restored to the order paper.

MORNING AND WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS ON AND AFTER APRIL 13

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Wednesday, April 8, 1953, until the end of the session, the house shall meet at 11 o'clock in the morning of each sitting day and, in addition to the usual intermission at 6 o'clock p.m., there shall be an intermission every day from 1.00 to 2.30 o'clock p.m.; and on every Wednesday until the end of the session the house shall meet from 8 to 10 o'clock p.m.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members feel that we should lengthen our hours of sitting in an effort to complete the session before the weather becomes too hot. Today is an indication that the weather is getting better. I believe recently there has been some discussion among the whips of the several parties, and I am told that there will be no objection if the date of Wednesday, April 8, is changed to Monday, April 13. If it is the wish of hon. members I would be prepared to move that the motion be amended by deleting the words "Wednesday, April 8" and substituting therefor the words "Monday, April 13", and by adding after the word "Wednesday" in the second last line thereof the word "thereafter".

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KOREA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO ARMISTICE PROSPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because the house will rise today until after Easter, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house with regard to the prospects for negotiations of an armistice in Korea, and of any other recent developments in regard to international affairs about which he cares or is able to inform us?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question. At the present stage in dealing with this very important question I would not wish to go much beyond the statement I made in New York in respect of recent Korean developments when I said, with particular reference to the statement of Chou En-lai of March 30, that this would appear to be a very important statement and obviously one that must be followed up.

It is the view of the government that the statement of March 30 which I have just mentioned, coming only two days after the letter of March 28 from the communist commanders in Korea to General Clark regarding the repatriation of sick and injured prisoners, is an encouraging development. Meanwhile the Chinese statement of March 30 is of course being carefully examined here as it is in the foreign offices of other governments.

As hon. members know, it has been the policy of the government, and indeed of this house, I think, to seek settlement of the Korean conflict by peaceful negotiation, and we have constantly done what we could with others to prevent extension of the war beyond the borders of Korea. Therefore we, and other governments who think with us on this matter, are always prepared to examine closely, and with good will, any sincere proposals which have the end of peace in view.

By a cable dated March 31 the communist foreign minister in Peking, Chou En-lai, transmitted to me, as I think the house will know, as president of the United Nations general assembly, the full text of the statement which had been broadcast on the radio on March 30 to which I have referred. I distributed a text of this statement to the delegations of the member governments at the United Nations assembly, and I also transmitted it to the unified command, which is now officially seized of this proposal. At that time I told the United Nations assembly that I hoped, and I was sure they hoped, that this statement might provide a basis for peace in Korea; because it amounts to new proposals in regard to the one remaining obstacle in the way of an armistice there—the prisoners of war difficulty. These new proposals, and they are referred to in the Chinese cable as new proposals—and they have received the support of the government in Moscow—go, on the face of them, a long way to meet the position taken last autumn by the United Nations assembly.

Meanwhile General Clark has replied to the communist commanders' letter of March 28 stating his willingness to proceed immediately with the arrangements for the repatriation of sick and wounded prisoners. General Clark has also informed the communist commanders that, if agreement is reached on the repatriation of sick and wounded prisoners, the United Nations command will be prepared to take up, as the second order of business, the question of resuming the full armistice discussions, at which the new proposals will be considered.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that we consider these developments as being hopeful, although there are a good many points to be clarified in the new proposals before we can afford to come to any final conclusions concerning them. Much will therefore, I think, depend on what takes place during the next few days both at Panmunjom and at the United Nations assembly in New York.

Mr. Coldwell: Can the minister express an opinion with regard to the reported modification of the Russian view concerning disarmament and if there are prospects of an agreement on the basis laid down by the United Nations?

Mr. Pearson: All I can say about that is that yesterday afternoon at the United Nations assembly, when we were about to take up the report on disarmament from the political committee, amendments to that report were circulated by the Soviet delegation. Those amendments do also, on the face of them, seem to represent a possible change of attitude in this matter on the part of the Soviet delegation; but there again they ought to be pretty carefully examined before we come to any conclusion in regard to them. We have not had much time to look into them and no one as yet is very clear or very confident about the result of this possible change of attitude. Again, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the house will agree, we should give these proposals on disarmament the same kind of careful consideration that we should give to the new proposals from Korea.

Mr. Graydon: Might I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) a question supplementary to those which have been asked. In connection with sick and wounded prisoners of war on both sides, what do the Chinese and North Koreans propose to do about those sick and wounded prisoners of war who do not want to be repatriated back behind the iron curtain?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to go into that. For one reason, in the exchange of correspondence there is no reference to that matter at all. It is just a question of exchange of sick and wounded, and the question of whether that is to be voluntary or involuntary was not mentioned in the correspondence. I do not think it would be desirable for us to bring the matter up here.

The principle of voluntary repatriation has, however, been recognized to some extent in the communication of March 30, where the communist statement does use the word "insist". It says, "Those prisoners who insist upon being repatriated". Others would possibly go to a neutral state. The same language, however, was not used in regard to sick and wounded.

RADIO BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL DISPLACED BY ABOLITION OF LICENCE FEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), and I apologize for giving him notice only ten minutes ago. In view of press reports that about 115 civil service positions are being abolished because the Department of Transport is discontinuing the collection of radio licence fees, and in view of the fact, as I have been informed, that a number of these employees have received separation notices—which I understand is a civil service diplomatic term for "roll your blankets and hit the trail"—would the minister kindly inform the house what has been done to find positions for those displaced civil servants?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to answer. My recollection is that there were 138 employees of the department affected by the abolition of the $2.50 licence fee. My recollection is, and I speak of course from memory, that of that group a very small number resigned. Another group were separated because of married women's status. The very large majority of them were placed in positions either in the Department of Transport or, through the co-operation of other departments and the civil service commission, in other departments of government. My recollection is that thus far there are only 17 people without employment.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT TO ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) regarding a statement made by him when we were considering the supplementary estimates on March 27 and about which there appears to have been some misunderstanding. Is he in a position to state the exact amount of the grant which will go to the city of St. John's, Newfoundland?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Yes, I will be happy to answer. Apparently there was some misunderstanding in the reply to the question of the member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne). The position is that under the Municipal Grants Act the city of St. John's, Newfoundland, will in this current year, the year which ended on March 31, 1953, receive a total of $51,527. That amount is made up of $48,184, being taxes in respect of admiralty properties which are occupied by the crown, $2,543 in lieu of real property taxes, and $800 in lieu of local improvement taxes.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF MARKETING NEWFOUNDLAND SALTED COD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Yesterday the hon. member for St. John's East asked me if I could state what the situation will be this year with respect to the normal markets for Newfoundland salt codfish. At that time I said that I expected to be able to make a statement today.

Water Resources

It is somewhat early in the year to make any sound appraisal of the market prospects for a commodity like salted codfish, which, in Newfoundland, will not be ready for shipment to market until July or August at the earliest. In the meantime, the balance of the 1952 production is still going forward. Competitive production is just getting under way in the European producing countries. At the moment we have no reason to believe that there will be any significant increase in over-all world production of salted fish in 1953.

On the demand side, prediction is particularly difficult because of the complicating factor of currency restrictions in several of the important consuming markets. Officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce, as in former years, are presently in negotiation with the governments of some of these countries to make provision in their import plans for salted fish from Canada. The Newfoundland fisheries board and, through it, the fishermen of Newfoundland will be kept fully informed as new developments take place.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): May I just ask one question of the parliamentary assistant? Has he any word yet when the report of the fisheries development committee of Newfoundland will be published?

Mr. MacNaught: The only information I have is that the report will be available very shortly.

CIVIL SERVICE

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING THE FIVE-DAY WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). Would he be in a position to tell me whether negotiations between officers of the treasury board and the civil service commission with regard to the five-day week for civil servants in the Ottawa district have progressed sufficiently to allow him to render a decision in the near future?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, discussions have not progressed sufficiently to allow me to render a decision.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

POSTAL SERVICE

APPLICATIONS FOR REVISION OF RURAL MAIL CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): May I ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) if he is in a position yet to indicate to the house when applications for certain revisions in contracts will be received from the rural mail couriers under the new legislation?

Hon. Alcide Cote (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I doubt if I can say now when the contractors will know about this, although I presume that most of them should know by now. The bill is before the Senate, and although we could receive some of the applications now I doubt very much whether we could act upon them before the bill receives the royal assent. However I may tell my hon. friend that, presuming the bill is passed with the co-operation of both this house and the other place, we will be ready to start working on all the applications as soon as they are received.

WATER RESOURCES

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR CONSERVATION PURPOSES

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 109, to authorize the grant of assistance to a province for the conservation of water resources—Mr. Winters—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 4—Agreements between provinces and local authorities.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There are some inquiries outstanding, and I wish the minister would answer them. One inquiry had special reference to Nova Scotia and another to Saskatchewan. I think there are some others outstanding.

Mr. Winters: Just before we rose last night the hon. member for Cumberland asked if there had been communications with the provinces about the application of this bill, and whether there had been specific requests from Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan for participation in projects under this bill. We have communicated with all the provinces of Canada, and informed them in a general way what we proposed in this legislation. They have all answered expressing interest, and a desire to see the contents of the bill. We have had no specific requests for participation from either Nova Scotia or Saskatchewan.

NORTH PACIFIC FISHERY

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR HIGH SEAS FISHERIES

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 293, to implement the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean.

Mr. Pearkes: Are we going to get a statement from the appropriate minister?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps the house could be patient for a few minutes; I have sent for the parliamentary assistant. I think he has a statement ready.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Fisheries, perhaps I should say a few words on the second reading of this measure. The purpose and objects of the convention have already been outlined when the resolution came before the house last Friday, March 27. There are, therefore, only one or two points about the convention that I should like to go into to make its meaning clearer.

The first relates to the area of the convention. It embraces the whole of the north Pacific ocean and adjacent waters but it excludes expressly the territorial waters. The species Canada has been conserving, alone and with the United States—salmon, halibut and herring—spend much of their lives on the high seas. On the high seas they could be fished by other countries, the most likely of which was Japan. In this convention Japan has agreed, not to any change in the principle of the freedom of the seas, but to waive its right to fish these particular species coming to American and Canadian waters. Japan is willing to make this waiver because these species have been under conservation, under scientific management and regulation, and are already fully utilized by Canadian and American fishermen. In no other way except by a convention of this kind could such protection be found for these species. No conceivable extension of territorial waters could achieve this oceanic protection.

A second point might be made. The convention not only excludes the territorial waters of each of the parties, but it provides in explicit terms that nothing in the convention shall be deemed to prejudice the claims of any contracting party in regard to the limits of territorial waters or to the jurisdiction of a coastal state over fisheries.

The definition of territorial waters is a complex question on which it has been difficult so far to get full international agreement. The question of territorial waters, as hon. members will realize, could not have been even raised at a fisheries conference between the three nations. It involves many interests besides fisheries, both at home and abroad, including national defence, customs, transport, mineral resources of the sub-soil of the sea, not to mention our trade and other external relations with other countries.

Because of the complexity of the problems involved, the government has established an interdepartmental committee to deal with this matter. When the committee makes its report, the government will be in a position to act if it decides to make any adjustments in the delineation of territorial waters in so far as Canada is concerned. In this meantime, to protect the position of the three parties to the convention, the clause which I mentioned above was inserted in the body of the convention.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the minister if he can inform the house how the paper from which he has just read got into his hands?

Mr. Winters: I prefaced my remarks by reminding the house that I am Acting Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): I am sure we are very much indebted to the Acting Minister of Fisheries for his comprehensive statement. As hon. members will recall, the convention upon which this bill is based was considered in the standing committee on marine and fisheries. I do not know whether or not it is the intention of the acting minister to refer this bill to that committee. During the discussion in the committee stage, as well as in the discussion at the resolution stage, I pointed out a number of objections which were being taken to the ratification of this convention. These objections were based on the limited nature of the security provided. The acting minister referred to the fact that there was a measure of security, but it is only a measure of security, which is being provided for the fishing industry on the west coast. The limitations of that security fall under three main headings. First of all, the protection of our fish is limited to the three powers which have signed this convention, namely Canada, the United States and Japan. Other powers have not signed the convention, and therefore are not bound in any way by its provisions. Therefore, so far as the fish on the west coast are concerned, they are protected only to the extent that this convention applies to Japan, the United States and Canada.

Furthermore, the second limitation is that only three species of fish on the Pacific coast are protected at the present time, namely salmon, halibut and herring. Other species of fish are not now protected, and can be protected only until such time as the three powers signing the convention will accept the fact that any other species of fish which it is Canada's desire to preserve can be proved to have been scientifically conserved and fully utilized.

The third limitation to which objection is taken is the limited period of time this convention is in force, because after a period of eleven years and one day any of the contracting parties may discontinue the convention at will.

The reappearance of Japan as a great fishing power on the Pacific ocean is already causing many repercussions. I pointed out some of the activities Japan was entering into when we were discussing this measure at the resolution stage. I pointed out the number of expeditions Japan was planning for 1953. I showed the expansion that had taken place in Japanese fishing during 1952. Already objection is being taken to the extension of the Japanese fishing interests into the Bering sea by the fishermen of the United States. Also under the peace treaty—and I am not now referring to the convention—Japan is bound to accept any proposal from Australia for the opening of negotiations for another fishing pact, dealing with the activities of the Japanese fishing industry around Australian waters. It is inevitable that such a pact would be based upon this one, which we are now asked to ratify.

All these limitations and reasons would suggest that perhaps the government is in somewhat of a hurry to give ratification to this treaty. I feel that this convention will serve as a pattern for many other fishing treaties and conventions the world over. A thorough examination of it would seem fully justified.

However, we must recognize the fact that a limited degree of security is given to the fish of the Pacific ocean off the coast of British Columbia, and that without this convention there would not be even that measure of security. So I can only hope that the convention will not be considered by any means the last word in fisheries agreements, conventions or treaties, and that further consideration should be given. I hope the minister will refer the bill to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of bill with which the average layman like myself does not feel competent to deal at a time like this. I would hope that the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Fisheries would consent to sending the bill to the committee on marine and fisheries, so that experts on the fishing industry in Canada might appear before that committee and explain to it those sections of the convention which may not be quite clear to us.

I think people throughout the country will have to realize, as I do, that Japan, with its expanding population of now pretty close to 90 million people, must have access to the fisheries of the Pacific ocean, and that we cannot take the attitude that we must preserve special privileges for Canada. On the other hand we should be careful not to give away something without getting something in return. I am informed that if the treaty were passed in its present form it would limit the expansion of Canadian fisheries into Bristol bay and the Bering sea, and would in no way limit American operations off our Canadian shores. The only advantage that could be shown for this three-way deal is that it would provide a more lenient base for Canadians fishing in the waters of the gulf of Alaska. But here again the advantage is not very clear.

So I would hope that, even if it would require a little time, the minister would refer this treaty to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, where we could give it closer study.

Mr. E. T. Applewhaite (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I feel myself in considerable sympathy with the opening remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) when he referred to the difficulty of one who is more or less a layman, in the matter of foreign treaties, endeavouring to discuss this subject.

At the same time, as one who took a small part in the negotiation of this treaty, I consider it my duty to express my views to the house on the subject. Further, I flatter myself that perhaps to some slight degree I may be of some help in explaining those sections of the bill and those portions of the treaty which may be causing some worry.

Before going into the subject matter of the treaty I should like to trespass for a few moments upon the indulgence of the house to refer to those Canadians who were responsible for bringing these negotiations to their present stage. I am sure the present Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) would be in full agreement with me, if he were here to hear me say that the fact that the Hon. R. W. Mayhew was at the head of the Canadian delegation, and to a large extent set the tone of the negotiations in Japan, contributes in no small measure to the fact that we did come out of these negotiations with a treaty.

Of the others who were there, Mr. Stewart Bates, the deputy minister of fisheries—and this is no reflection on the then minister at all—was undoubtedly the leading member, irrespective of which nation you refer to, in these negotiations. Mr. Bates proved to me to be, first, a bonnie fighter when the interests of Canada were concerned, and second, an expert diplomat when, and there were such occasions, it looked as though negotiations might perhaps break down. The job that he has done for us, for the fishermen of the Pacific coast, is outstanding. Mr. Arthur R. Menzies, who was at the time chargé d'affaires for Canada in Tokyo, took an active part throughout the negotiations, and this was just one of many arduous jobs that he has performed and performed well for Canada. We had with us Mr. Samuel Ozere, legal adviser of the Department of Fisheries, who has been described to me, and not by a member of the Department of Fisheries, as the outstanding lawyer on territorial waters on the North American continent. We had as advisers, Dr. Hart, our scientific director of the Pacific biological station, and Mr. John M. Buchanan, president of B. C. Packers. Dr. John Hart, as biologist, and Mr. Buchanan as speaking for the industry both added considerably to the weight of the Canadian delegation. And so I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that with one exception you had out there a group of men who have done a very fine job for the fishing industry of the Pacific coast and whose work was a credit to themselves and to the country which they represented.

I should like to put myself on record now as saying with all the modesty of which I am capable—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Oh!

Mr. Applewhaite: —and I note the interruption of the hon. member for Greenwood—that if my parliamentary career were to be cut short at five o'clock tonight I would feel that I had some ground for pride and satisfaction in that I had been able to contribute in a small way to the production of this treaty.

The subject matter of the treaty itself and the whole treaty clause by clause were referred to the standing committee of this house on marine and fisheries at the last session, and that committee considered the treaty and reported entirely with unanimity and almost non-politically. I have not a very long parliamentary career, and I do not know whether it is usual or very unusual that when a report is being submitted on a bill some private member of a committee should move that the word "unanimously" be inserted. That was done in this case and the committee's report came in reading "unanimously". Of course, that could not have happened had any one member of the committee raised his voice against it.

The committee in its deliberations, I think, discussed this matter and looked at it entirely from a non-political point of view. The treaty's main—no, it would not be fair to say only—result is that we have protected for the lifetime of the treaty the halibut, the herring and the salmon of the Pacific coast of Canada. That is only three species out of all the species of fish that we fish for on that coast, but in the calendar year 1951, the last for which I have complete figures, the landed value of these three species on the Pacific coast was $37,821,945. The landed value of all the other species combined was $3,075,000. Therefore we have given protection during the lifetime of the treaty to these three species, which represent well over ninety per cent of the dollar value of our Pacific catch at the present time.

Why do I say, the "lifetime of the treaty"? I say that because in the treaty there is a fixed period of five years only. But the treaty does say that that protection for these three varieties of fish shall remain in force after the expiry of the five-year period until such time as all three governments, through their representatives on the commission, decide that halibut, herring or salmon no longer qualifies for or no longer requires that protection. In other words, the protection is there until Canada voluntarily relinquishes it, because protection is there until Canada's representatives on the commission state that it is no longer required.

I made reference, Mr. Speaker, to the unanimity and to the non-political aspect of the committee which considered this treaty. And at the time I was sitting on the committee I considered that that was a statement of fact. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), when speaking on the resolution stage of this bill, at page 3379 of Hansard spoke of—> —a certain amount of misunderstanding which existed on the west coast, and a good deal of controversy which took place, . . .

I would say, and I think not unkindly, that the hon. member for Nanaimo has contributed in no small way to that measure of misunderstanding which may have existed on the coast and to the measure of controversy which has been raised on the coast in connection with this treaty, because the hon. member for Nanaimo, in my opinion, did not introduce politics into the committee on marine and fisheries, but did take the committee on marine and fisheries into politics. And it is regrettable, because the hon. member for Nanaimo carries a lot of weight on the Pacific coast, and the things which he says are presumed to be based upon knowledge and upon facts. Things which perhaps I might say, or some lesser light unknown on the coast, would have very little effect. But when people reach that stage in the esteem of their province which the hon. member for Nanaimo has reached, they should exercise more than the usual care. I find in the Argus, published in Courtenay, B.C., of June 11, 1952 under the heading "Fishery treaty grave danger to Province. Leader of B.C. Conservatives so views it", the following:

> The potential danger to the B.C. fishery industry of the Japanese fishery treaty was not appreciated, said General George Pearkes, V.C., in his speech at Campbell River on Thursday night in support of the Conservative candidate, Dr. Bruce Gordon.

The article goes on quoting the hon. member as saying:

> For many years Canada had been spending millions of dollars to conserve their halibut and their salmon and after five years if the Japanese did not choose to sign the treaty again they could fish for these species of salmon, halibut and herring right up to the three-mile line.

That statement was made, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the hon. member was at the time a member of the committee on marine and fisheries. The same meeting is reported in the British Columbian, published at New Westminster, in the issue of Friday, June 6, 1952, under the heading "Pearkes Raps Fish Treaty" and I quote:

> Campbell River, June 6 (BUP): Concern about a serious threat to British Columbia's fishing industry posed by the recently-signed Canadian-American-Japanese fishing treaty was voiced in Campbell River last night by Major-Gen. George Pearkes, Progressive Conservative M.P. for Nanaimo.
> Pearkes explained that under terms of the treaty the Japanese could fish B.C. waters at the end of a five-year period.
>
> "We've spent millions of dollars on fisheries research to benefit our own fishing industry. And now it appears the Japanese are to reap the benefit of this expenditure," he said.
>
> He charged that the House of Commons committee investigating the treaty had been composed mostly of eastern Canadian Liberals who had no real grasp of the situation on the west coast.
> "They gave scant attention to my protests and to the representations of the united fishermen and allied workers' union", he declared.

I have the verbatim report of the standing committee on marine and fisheries for last year. I should mention at this stage that on or about May 30 the committee chairman received from the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) a very reasonably worded letter suggesting that the matter of territorial waters be referred to the Department of External Affairs. I have the minutes of the proceedings of the committee here and I will be glad to take time out of my forty minutes to read into the record any protests against this treaty to which the hon. member referred and to which the eastern Liberals who packed that committee paid no attention. I would quote from page 134 of the proceedings of June 5, where the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Catherwood) is reported as having asked the following question:

> Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this committee could recommend to the external affairs department the suggestion that Mr. Pearkes has made in regard to the definition of Canadian territorial waters. I think this matter is one of extreme importance and it would be in order to suggest to the Department of External Affairs that they re-examine and go into this matter very thoroughly so we will have a more precise definition of territorial waters, which I think will be of some help to us all.
> The Chairman: In that regard, I might point out that there is an interdepartmental committee studying that matter at the present time. Do you not think that would cover it sufficiently?
> Mr. Catherwood: Yes, perhaps it will.

The hon. member for Nanaimo charged that the House of Commons committee investigating the treaty had been composed mainly of eastern Canadian Liberals who had paid scant attention to his protests. So far as I know that was the only protest, if it can be regarded as a protest, which the hon. member made, and a reply was given at that time to the hon. member for Haldimand. I point out that the meeting in British Columbia to which I have referred was that of June 5. The committee continued to sit until June 10; its report had not been given consideration on June 5, and I query the desirability of discussing the sittings of a committee on the hustings when the same people could not discuss it on the floor of this house, which was also sitting. If one can learn anything from the Ottawa Journal of Monday, March 23, 1953, I assume that discussing committee proceedings outside the house while the house is in session is still a practice that is engaged in.

Let us look at the accusations which undoubtedly did cause, and should have caused, considerable misunderstanding on the Pacific coast, and I quote:

> We've spent millions of dollars on fisheries research to benefit our own fishing industry. And now it appears the Japanese are to reap the benefit of this expenditure.

We have been spending those millions of dollars for a good many years and up until the meeting in Tokyo in December, 1951, there was nothing on earth to stop the Japanese reaping the full benefit of that expenditure other than the armed might of Canada and the United States if they chose to go to war over it. By introducing this treaty we have worked out by agreement with the Japanese a situation whereby they cannot reap the benefit of it. Because those millions of dollars which we have spent protecting the fisheries of the Pacific coast have been spent solely on salmon, halibut and herring is why salmon, halibut and herring are the only species covered by the treaty.

With reference to that, I should like to quote briefly from page 36 of the minutes of the committee for May 8. The witness was Mr. Stewart Bates, deputy minister of fisheries, and the questioner was the hon. member for Nanaimo. Referring to territorial waters, Mr. Bates said:

> The question of Hecate strait that has been raised by the hon. member is one of the undetermined questions as between Canada and the United States. Canada claimed territoriality in these waters over fifty years ago, but took no steps then to enforce that claim against U.S. fishing vessels. Article No. 1 makes it plain that this document does nothing to affect territoriality and it makes it plain that the treaty does nothing to affect our future claims to territorial waters.
> Article No. 1—

That is, of the treaty.

> —paragraph 2, refers to that. Nothing in the convention can adversely affect our claim to territorial waters—any claim we wish to make. So, in effect the convention leaves the question untouched. You have asked specifically if it permits the Japanese to fish in Hecate strait. I think that, should a Japanese vessel appear in the Hecate strait, it would probably lead to appropriate action by the Canadian government. We have already claimed the straits as territorial waters. We have permitted the United States to fish there but members on this committee from the Atlantic coast know that Canada accords the United States by treaty and understandings many rights that are accorded to the fishing vessels of no other country.

I agree entirely with the plea which the hon. member for Nanaimo has made, and which I understand has been supported on more than one occasion by the hon. member for Vancouver East, that the sooner we define our territorial waters on the Pacific coast the better it will be for all concerned. My limited understanding of the international legal situation is that when you define territorial waters you define them against the world. The job of the negotiators who went to Tokyo was not to define territorial waters against the world; we had no power to do that. We were there to make a treaty, an agreement with the Japanese whereby they would keep out of certain of our fisheries. In so far as the major items of our fishing are concerned, that is what they have done.

The treaty contains a great many high-sounding clauses which are difficult to interpret. It was outlined, I think most comprehensibly, by the parliamentary assistant when he introduced it. It is based upon the one assumption that you can ask only for those things for which you have some legitimate reason for asking. We asked the Japanese to keep out of our fisheries upon which we had spent money conserving and building up. Our reasons for asking that were three: We are spending that money; we are controlling and regulating our own fisheries in those areas; and we are continuing to carry out scientific investigations with a view to building up a permanent yield in that area.

As long as we are doing those three things and can satisfy ourselves and others that there is not room to take more fish where we are fishing, we were entitled to go to Japan, as we would be entitled to go to any other country, and get them to agree to leave to us the business that we had built up. But we could not go to Japan and make an agreement which would be binding on Russia or on Peru. The question may be brought up—why all the hurry? Why do you not take a lot more time and get hold of many more nations? Japan was just returning to its sovereignty. It was just coming back into the position where it would be a factor in the fishing of the world. The negotiations were carried on, as everyone knows, in San Francisco and a peace treaty was signed. At that time the Japanese agreed to enter into negotiations immediately for a fishing treaty. Another reason why we did not make treaties with other nations at that time was that on the Pacific coast the only real fear was a fear of the Japanese. It was a fear which we regarded—and when I say "we" I mean the people of Canada—as so justified that we lost no time in making a treaty to protect our interests. If we had had to call a Pacific conference with Russia, China and the Philippines there would still have been no treaty.

I have not the slightest objection to anybody, friend or foe, poking holes in the treaty where they can find them, and it is not perfect; but I do protest most strongly against the creation of the impression on the Pacific coast or elsewhere that the treaty does things which it does not, or does not do things which it does. I say definitely that it does not enable the Japanese to come here and fish salmon, herring and halibut at the end of five years. It does not allow them to come here and fish those species at the end of ten years unless, first, the treaty is abrogated by some nation, or, alternatively, the Canadian representatives on the commission, which must always be unanimous, decide that these species require no more protection.

In general one of the greatest accomplishments of the treaty was not in connection with the Japanese. It was getting a legal and binding agreement with the United States of America, the third party, that, owing to the intermingling of fish on the Pacific coast of this continent and to the intermingling of fishing operations, no abstention from fishing on the high seas off the Pacific coast of North America would be asked by the Canadians or the Americans against each other. Let no one try to tell me that by making that agreement we gave the Americans more than we got. You know, on a rough measurement the Pacific coast of the United States of America and the Pacific coast of Alaska, which is included, are four and one-quarter times the length of the Pacific coast of British Columbia. In mentioning that figure I am ignoring entirely the coast of the Aleutian peninsula, and the Aleutian islands, on the east side of which we have the right to fish under this treaty.

The prime reason of course was that it is almost impossible to segregate on the fishing banks, whether they be north or south of the international boundary line, salmon which may have been born in the Fraser river or in the Columbia river or in an Alaskan river, or halibut which may have been spawned in Canadian or United States waters. But by obtaining that commitment on the part of the United States of America we have brought to the fishermen of the Pacific coast a security of asset which it is hard to overemphasize. In so far as territorial waters are concerned, the subject is not irrelevant because territoriality is specifically protected in the treaty. We put in a clause that nothing in the treaty shall affect any claim any of us may choose to make, but the question of territoriality was not one for negotiation at all. We do not have to go to Tokyo to keep the Japanese out of our territorial waters. We have always had the legal right to keep them out. Therefore I say, with due respect to contrary opinion, that I think it is unfortunate that the very important subject of the protection of the high seas fisheries should be mixed up and clouded with the equally important subject of the definition of our territorial waters.

In that connection I might mention that "territorial waters" as such is a term that usually has reference to matters of navigation and originally concerned navigation by foreign warships. I think we may yet reach the stage where we may be able to extend our legally recognized interests in fishing much farther from our coast than we are able to extend our territorial waters, our control over the use of the seas as a highway by the people of other countries.

There is a third point which has been entirely ignored and overlooked in all discussions of the treaty, both by its supporters and by its opponents. The treaty sets up an international commission representing the three countries. That international commission is a permanent body and its job will be not only to carry out the punitive clauses of the treaty but to investigate—the instructions are there—and report on the conservation and the building up of all stocks of fish which come within the convention area, which is the whole north Pacific ocean from Japan to Canada.

A great deal has been said, and rightly so, about the terrific economic pressure upon the Japanese for food, and that fish is one of their main foods. If the commission, as set up under the treaty, gets operating and gets to work, and is even fractionally as successful as have been the international commissions set up by Canada and the United States on the Pacific coast, it will have the effect of building up and increasing the perpetual yields which the Japanese can take from the fisheries which are normally tributary to Japan, and to that extent will have no small effect in relieving the economic pressure on Japan, and therefore relieving the incentive to her to go to other waters, including our own, for fish. That is a matter of no small importance.

I should like to refer to one or two specific points that have been brought up in the debate. With reference to Canadian fishing in Bristol bay, the protocol to the treaty makes provision for Canadians to fish salmon in Bristol bay if it is established that there are any fish of Canadian origin there. I quote one sentence from the protocol:

> The commission to be established under the convention shall, as expeditiously as practicable, investigate the waters of the convention area to determine if there are areas in which salmon originating in the rivers of Canada and of the United States of America intermingle with salmon originating in the rivers of Asia.

That was with reference to the northern part, the Bering sea and so forth. So we have a treaty which is undoubtedly of general benefit. The question is: Why hurry? We are not in a hurry. We are the laggards. We are the ones who are dragging our feet. The Japanese and the Americans ratified this convention months ago. We are faced now with two alternatives. As a matter of fact we are right back where we started from. There was a demand over a great many years for a treaty with Japan to keep them out of our preserved fisheries. That treaty we have got. Then what logical objection can there possibly be against ratifying it? As to the necessity of referring the matter to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, the treaty was referred to that committee last year. It was gone over there clause by clause. We had the advantage of the evidence of such people as Stewart Bates, the deputy minister, the legal adviser and legal advisers from the Department of External Affairs. We had representations from the fisheries council of Canada, from the united fishermen and allied workers' union, from—I speak subject to correction—certain branches of the industry, and others.

The committee first sat on the treaty on April 24. It brought in its report, having had its final sitting on June 10. The reason for the length of time was that after its original meetings public notice was given to everybody who, according to the files of the Department of Fisheries, had shown any interest. They had an opportunity to make their representations and they did make them. The whole field has been gone over.

There is nothing in the bill other than what is in the treaty—other than just the necessary provisions to give the treaty legal effect. The matter has been approved by the committee and there is not any necessity to have the same committee do the same job again.

The fisheries of the Pacific ocean require to have this protection against the fisheries of Japan. The fishermen of the Pacific coast require the clarification which this committee gives to the legal situation regarding fishing in high seas waters, and in the respective waters of Canada and the United States. If we do not ratify the treaty now we are either going to ratify it later or we are going to find ourselves in the position of having to start afresh and negotiate another treaty. In any event, every month's delay is an invitation to those whom this treaty would keep out to come in and take advantage of the time we are giving them.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the request which has been made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) that this bill be sent to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. That committee could sit next week so there would be no delay whatever. Bills will not be assented to for a matter of some weeks in any event, and the very fact that this bill is not only the convention but also contains various provisions for carrying out that convention warrants, I think, our request that the bill be sent to that committee.

Mr. MacDougall: Why?

Mr. Green: That is particularly important because just two or three weeks ago in this house we dealt with a new act known as the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and the provisions of this north Pacific fisheries convention act should be carefully fitted in with the terms of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. I believe that can best be done by sending the bill to the committee. After all, there is not a great deal of point in having such a committee if bills of this type are not to be considered by it.

Mr. Applewhaite: It has been considered.

Mr. Green: I am sure that the committee would go over the bill very carefully and that the general result would be to the benefit of all parties concerned.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) has spoken with some heat. No doubt that has been engendered by the fact that he has had a pretty hard time telling his story to the fishermen of British Columbia.

Mr. Applewhaite: Oh, no.

Mr. Green: I thought he weakened his submission a great deal by making an attack on the hon. member for Nanaimo.

Mr. Applewhaite: That was not an attack.

Mr. Green: After all, in my hearing, no one on the coast has claimed that this treaty is perfect, and quite a few people have spoken to me about it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Neither has the hon. member for Skeena claimed that.

Mr. Green: They all agree that the treaty is not as good as they would like it to be; and I do not believe it helped very much to have the hon. member for Skeena come in this house and proceed to endeavour to kick the hon. member for Nanaimo around because of some statements the latter member had made at the coast.

Mr. Pearkes: Or is purported to have made.

Mr. Green: Yes. You see, Mr. Speaker, there are many problems which are not settled by this treaty. For example, I would refer you to fisheries other than halibut, herring and salmon. The situation of Canadian fishermen with regard to those other fisheries is not helped at all by the treaty. It is very significant too that we read in the press within the last week that the Japanese crab fleet is now setting off for Alaskan waters. I have here the Vancouver Province of March 28 which carries a dispatch from Tokyo:

> A crab fishing fleet of thirteen ships will leave in the next few days on the first postwar Japanese fishing expedition in Bristol bay, Alaska.

There is nothing to prevent a Japanese crab fleet from coming to the British Columbia coast and fishing for crabs in Hecate strait or in any other of our coastal waters which are not now described as territorial waters.

North Pacific Fishery

This is one problem which still has to be settled, and is another reason for great concern on the coast. The government seems to be pussyfooting about this matter of territorial waters. This afternoon I listened very attentively to hear the hon. member for Skeena say whether or not he thought Hecate strait should be considered Canadian territorial waters; but he made no such suggestion. In fact, he intimated that territorial waters were not very important in so far as this bill is concerned. Yet I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the whole treaty is based on the fact that it covers what is described as a "convention area". From that convention area there are excluded by this bill the territorial waters of the different nations which are parties to the treaty. As far as territorial waters are concerned, if I understand the treaty correctly, a nation can prevent other countries fishing in its territorial waters.

If Hecate strait were considered to be territorial waters, then the Japanese crab fleet could not fish there, the Russians could not come in and fish there, nor could United States fishermen, without our consent. There is concern about the Americans fishing in Hecate strait. On March 20 I asked the parliamentary assistant to try to get me some information about the extent to which the Americans had been fishing for crabs in that strait. I said at page 3163 of Hansard:

> When the parliamentary assistant is doing that,—

He was getting some other information.

> —would he also try to find out what amount of crabfish has been caught by the Americans in Hecate strait. Surely that information can be obtained in one way or another; and it brings up this whole question of what are Canadian territorial waters. Could the parliamentary assistant get that further information?

The reply was:

> If it is possible to get that information I will get it.

Now, I cannot see any reason why Canada does not take a firm stand and declare that Hecate strait is Canadian territorial water. This question of territorial waters is of great interest in several countries. In the United States, for example, it is becoming a particularly important question because of the offshore oil. Those members who are interested will find a very enlightening report in the current issue of U.S. News and World Report for April 3. The article is entitled "Offshore Oil; What's It About". In our neighbouring country they are now deeply concerned about the question of offshore rights, not only the extent of territorial waters but also the distance to which the United States can control the resources in or under the water.

[Mr. Green.]

For example, in 1945 President Truman laid claim to the resources along the continental shelf off the United States, but apparently the United States government has been careful not to claim that United States boundaries extend that far. They are claiming some right to the resources. Some of the states are claiming rights as far out as 30 miles off the coast. The state of California claims that it has rights 30 miles out to the outermost islands of California; Louisiana claims 27 miles; and Florida and Texas claim 10·5 miles. Apparently in the United States they have now reached the point where they are considering taking the stand that they are entitled to rights as far out as 250 miles from the coast.

With these developments occurring in the United States, the Canadian government should at least be able to make up its mind about Hecate strait, which lies between the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland of British Columbia. I do not believe there is a single reason why that strait should not be declared Canadian territorial water. In so doing, we would at least eliminate one of the objections raised in connection with this bill.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do urge the parliamentary assistant and the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Winters) to have this bill referred to the standing committee. Such a move would mean that it would be carefully considered. The issue is of sufficient importance to warrant that action being taken. I find that when there is a great rush to get legislation through, and a lot of war whoops are given out about the great danger of delay, that we must act quickly in this case because if we do not the Japanese will get us, or some such plea for quick action, usually we end up in a position which is not nearly as beneficial as would be the case if we had taken a little time and done the thing properly. I hope the government will agree to having the bill referred to the committee.

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I intend to be very brief this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, because I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) has done an extremely good job of analysing this legislation and putting it into understandable form for those members of the house who are perhaps not familiar with our fisheries problems on the Pacific coast. I agree with what he said about the committee on marine and fisheries having already considered this treaty very carefully, and having brought in a unanimous report supporting the signing of this agreement by Canada.

Personally, I welcome this treaty because it seems to me that it brings into being what I hope is a new era in Pacific fisheries relations. This problem of the protection of our coastal fisheries is one with which I am very familiar. I well remember when I was a lad 25 years ago fishing for pilchards off the west coast of Vancouver island. We were always concerned about rumours and reports that the Japanese were going to move into our territorial waters and take our pilchards, salmon, herring and halibut. It appears to me that, for the first time in history, this treaty will afford these fisheries some protection. I must say that, after all those years, I am very glad that we have finally decided to afford some protection to this very valuable asset. We have our salmon, our halibut and our herring, which are the principal fisheries resources on the Pacific coast, and they are now to be given what is considered to be the most adequate measure of protection possible under existing conditions. I would say to the parliamentary assistant I would be very happy, when this international commission is set up, if this question of the conservation of pilchards could be considered.

I recall that at one time off the west coast of Vancouver island we took some 200,000 tons of pilchards a year. Owing to the lack of international co-operation of the United States fishermen and the lack of protection given by the United States government to the pilchard fisheries off the coast of California, we find that there are no pilchard fisheries operations off our British Columbia coast at all. As a result, several million dollars' worth of fisheries products have been lost. I am glad to learn that the United States government has seen fit to put a closure on the catching of pilchards off the coast of California for a five-year period. It seems to me that this international fisheries commission which will be set up under this bill would be an effective agent to see that this fishery is brought back. I would hope that this example of international co-operation might motivate that great nation, Russia, to join us in this fisheries treaty in due course.

Like other hon. members, I am extremely happy to see that a special committee has been set up by the Department of Fisheries and the Department of External Affairs to consider the problem of our territorial waters. I realize just how important the problem of the definition of our territorial waters is, and from my experience on the committee on marine and fisheries I understand just how complicated and involved a problem it is, both from the legal aspect and from the economic aspect.

I must say that I have always felt Canada was short-changed, perhaps by the unfortunate representation we had in the early days when treaties were made on our behalf before we achieved national sovereignty. Perhaps our interests were not as well protected as they might have been. I can also appreciate the fact that the United States feel they have a historical claim to the fishing in Hecate strait, and there are those who say we should deny them access to these waters. On the other hand, we must never forget that the United States provides the best market for our fisheries products, and the fisheries industry of Canada would be in a most unfortunate position if it were not for that market.

I feel that this treaty represents a historic advance in international relations. It provides additional protection to the great majority of our fisheries, and I believe it is worthy of the support of this house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the parliamentary assistant speaks now on behalf of the minister, he will close the debate.

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): I feel that I should make a few remarks, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the request of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), that this bill be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries for further consideration. If this had been the first time the convention had been before the house, I would be inclined to agree, and in fact I would agree with the request. But, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), as well as by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson), this convention was before the house at the last session of parliament. At that time it was debated fully at the resolution stage, and was then referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, where 146 pages of evidence were taken.

Opportunity was given by the committee for all interested parties to make representations. Very satisfactory evidence was given before the committee, particularly that of the deputy minister of fisheries wherein he explained the terms of the treaty. Then there was satisfactory evidence by Mr. Ozere, director of legal services in the Department of Fisheries, who explained the technical aspects, and further evidence of a legal nature by Mr. Erichsen-Brown, of the legal division of the Department of External Affairs. He gave very helpful evidence on the involved and complex problem of territorial waters. Then there was evidence from a representative from British Columbia, Mr. Homer Stevens, the secretary of the united fishermen and allied workers' union. His evidence took most of one day, and he was examined and cross-examined by members of the committee. So I do not believe any useful purpose could be served by referring the convention again to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

With respect to those observations concerning territorial waters, I can only repeat what I said before, that this matter is one of great complexity. The government has set up a committee composed of representatives from various departments who, at the present time, are considering this problem.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to a question of privilege. When I spoke earlier I asked that this bill be referred to the committee on marine and fisheries. I must explain that during the last session I was not able to follow the business of the house, and I did not know that the treaty itself had been referred to that committee last year, and had received consideration.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Fournier (Hull) moved that the house go into committee on the said bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that I do leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee on the bill?

Mr. Pearkes: On division.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. Green: Has the parliamentary assistant been able to get the information concerning crab fishing by Americans in Hecate strait?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to get any additional information. As soon as it is available I shall give it to the hon. member.

Mr. Gibson: Where would that information be available? Would it have to be obtained from the Americans, perhaps at Seattle?

Mr. MacNaught: So far as I know that would be the only source from which the information could be obtained. We have no information otherwise.

Mr. Gibson: The parliamentary assistant does not know whether or not it is available?

Mr. MacNaught: No, we do not know.

Mr. Pearkes: I asked whether there had been any incidents of Americans fishing for crabs within the territorial waters of Canada in Hecate strait.

Mr. MacNaught: My information is that there are no instances of that kind.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. Green: I find in this section a definition of the term "convention area", and that it means all waters, other than territorial waters, of the north Pacific ocean, including the adjacent seas. Does that definition mean that the question as to what are or are not territorial waters is left entirely to the different countries who are parties to the treaty?

Mr. MacNaught: The answer is yes; it is left entirely to the countries themselves to determine their own territorial waters.

Mr. Green: That is, the Americans can say that such and such waters are American territorial waters, and Canada can do the same thing?

Mr. MacNaught: That is correct.

Mr. Applewhaite: Perhaps it would be advisable if I were to put on record what the convention says in this particular. It says, in article I, paragraph 2:

> Nothing in this convention shall be deemed to affect adversely (prejudice) the claims of any contracting party in regard to the limits of territorial waters or to the jurisdiction of a coastal state over fisheries.

That was put in there to protect all of us in making any claims as to territorial waters we might have in mind, or which might have been made and not accepted.

Mr. Green: In the paragraph to which the hon. member has referred there is a differentiation between territorial waters and the jurisdiction of a coastal state over fisheries. What does that mean?

Mr. MacNaught: Up to the present time there has been no difference between the two. One is co-extensive with the other.

Mr. Green: Does it mean that while Canada can claim that territorial waters extend only three miles from low tide, she could claim that she had jurisdiction over fisheries ten or fifteen miles out?

Mr. MacNaught: Canada most certainly could make that declaration, but whether it would be accepted by other countries is another matter. There is nothing in the treaty or convention to prevent Canada saying that our territorial waters shall extend four miles or six miles or ten miles; but the matter as to whether it would be acceptable to other countries would at once arise.

Mr. Green: Do the words "coastal state" apply to a state of the union? Are they meant to cover a claim by, we will say, the state of California; or do those words mean only a claim by a nation?

Mr. MacNaught: I am informed that it covers all claims.

Mr. Green: By a state of the United States as well as by the nation?

Mr. MacNaught: That is right.

Mr. MacInnis: What is the definition of Canadian territorial waters at the present time? What distance from the shore out to sea is considered territorial waters?

Mr. MacNaught: The answer to that question is generally three miles.

Section agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Regulations.

Mr. Pearkes: May I ask a question on paragraph (a) of section 4, which has to do with the conservation and protection of fish in the convention area? Does that mean that Canada may pass regulations for the conservation and protection of other species of fish than salmon, halibut and herring, and provided the requirements for full utilization and scientific conservation are met on that, then the three contracting powers will agree to these other species being included?

Mr. MacNaught: If the commission makes the recommendations, this section gives the government of Canada power to make regulations relating thereto.

Mr. Pearkes: Has the government of Canada or the department under consideration including any other species of fish, because a good deal of exploratory work has already been carried out at the biological station at Departure Bay on several other species of fish and money has been expended on other species of fish beyond merely the salmon, halibut and herring.

Mr. MacNaught: No other species of fish has yet met the whole three regulations; some have met one and some have met two, but none except salmon, halibut and herring has met the three necessary conditions.

Mr. Pearkes: Of course no other power except the three contracting parties would be governed by these regulations.

Mr. MacNaught: That is right.

Mr. Green: Why is subparagraph (i) of paragraph (b) of section 4 limited to Canadian fishing vessels? I understand that it is not in general terms such as the other clauses and thereby applicable to any vessel that is exploiting the stocks of fish in any part of the convention area.

Mr. MacNaught: The government of Canada can only enforce the regulations against its own nationals. The United States similarly has power to enforce against its nationals under similar legislation.

Mr. Green: I suppose there is nothing to prevent countries having different regulations, or not having any regulations at all, with regard to some particular subject. If that is so the result might be that Canada would have regulations prohibiting Canadian vessels from exploiting an area; the United States might have different regulations, and then a United States vessel could come in and exploit the area while the Canadian vessel could not?

Mr. MacNaught: No; the commission will make the recommendations and regulations, and they will be identical for the three countries.

Section agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Seizure and arrest for violation of convention.

Mr. Pearkes: Again I presume that the seizure referred to applies to seizure on the high seas, and only on the high seas; is that correct?

Mr. MacNaught: That is correct.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Jurisdiction of courts.

Mr. Green: If a United States vessel commits a breach of the regulations all the Canadian authorities can do is to seize the vessel and then turn it over to the United States who will do the fining or the imprisoning or the forfeiting of the ship; is that so?

Mr. MacNaught: That is correct. A similar provision applies in the operations of the halibut and salmon commissions.

Mr. Gibson: This does not affect our jurisdiction over territorial waters at all in so far as United States ships are concerned?

Mr. MacNaught: Seizures and arrests within territorial waters are covered by the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act we passed about two weeks ago.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. Pearkes: I should like to say a word on section 3 of article VI of the schedule. It says that the contracting parties agree to meet during the sixth year after the ratification of this convention. I think that may explain the difficulties of the hon. member for Skeena and the misapprehensions that the hon. member was suffering under.

Schedule agreed to.

Annex agreed to.

Protocol agreed to.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

CHANGE IN DEFINITION OF RATE OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to provide greater assistance to the mining industry by changing the definition of the rate of assistance to one-half the excess of the cost of production per ounce over $18, with a maximum of $13.50, to provide further that the new rate of assistance shall be applicable to the number of ounces of gold produced by a mine in 1953 in excess of one-half of base year production or to one-half of 1953 production, whichever is larger.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reserve any statement I have to make on this for the second reading of the bill. Several hon. members wish to speak on this matter and they are not here today. I think we could very well save time by my reserving my statement until that time.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps it might be understood that the main debate could wait until other interested parties are here at a later stage, but it seems to me it would be desirable that there be put on the record now a statement as to the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Abbott: It is a continuation of the existing policy.

Mr. Knowles: The resolution seeks something more than that.

Mr. Prudham: The resolution states clearly what we propose to do. It is just an extension of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which has been debated many times in the house. There is no change in policy. It is just an extension of the assistance.

Mr. Knowles: Both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys say that it is just an extension; that it involves no change in policy. Will they explain the meaning of the words in the resolution which read:

. . . to provide greater assistance to the mining industry—

Mr. Prudham: I do not think that there can be any misunderstanding of the resolution. It states clearly how we propose to extend it and for how much.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. Knowles: But it is not just an extension of time. It is now clear that there will be an increase in the assistance to the gold mining industry.

Mr. Abbott: There are minor changes in the formula.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Prudham thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 329, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF DIRECTORS—ADJUSTMENT OF CAPITAL STRUCTURE, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937, to provide that the corporation shall be under the management of a board of directors composed of nine persons in lieu of seven; to increase the powers of the corporation, and to adjust its capital structure in such a way as to conform to normal commercial practice.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is the parliamentary assistant going to make a statement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It will be recalled that this motion is a formal one and no debate is to take place at this time, in compliance with the recent ruling of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Which we accept without prejudice.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, this bill has several purposes. It is dictated by the fact that under the new Financial Administration Act, Trans-Canada Air Lines is required to pay taxes. At the moment there are two corporations, Trans-Canada Air Lines Limited and Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic) Limited. The one corporation makes substantial profits and the other corporation loses considerable amounts of money. Under the present situation Trans-Canada Air Lines Limited, the domestic company, is required to pay a substantial income tax while the overseas company pays no income tax. Nevertheless, under the method of financing, the deficit of the overseas company is paid from the profits of the domestic company.

The logical step would seem to be to amalgamate the two companies and avoid excessive taxation against the domestic company.

There is another feature. The capital of T.C.A. is represented by common shares requiring a fixed payment to Canadian National Railways. The company has no funded debt although in my judgment, and I think in the judgment of most people, common stock that requires a fixed payment of 3 per cent is in reality more in the nature of a bond or debenture. It is proposed to retire $20 million of the $25 million and to substitute a $20 million bond which will represent that part of the capital. This is a further effort to bring the financing of the company more in conformity with commercial practice.

Mr. Green: Bearing interest at 3 per cent?

Mr. Howe: The bond will bear interest at 3 per cent. The shares will be like other common shares; they will pay such dividends as the directors may determine and as the financial condition of the company will permit.

There are other minor changes. The number of directors is being increased from seven to nine to provide representation to parts of the country not now represented on the board of directors. The other changes that will appear in the bill are more in the direction of tidying up the act rather than being of importance in themselves.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is the minister sure that the hard-boiled Department of National Revenue will not regard this as a tax-evasion scheme? It seems to me that the splitting up of the capital is a reasonable arrangement. Why should T.C.A. pay a lower rate of interest than the government now pays?

Mr. Howe: I was not correct when I said that the new rate would be fixed at 3 per cent. The rate will be the commercial rate at the time the bond issue is made.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will it be a public issue?

Mr. Howe: No. T.C.A. is a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways. The capital was provided by the government to Canadian National Railways and by them to Trans-Canada Air Lines. The $20 million share capital will be returned to Canadian National Railways and reloaned by them against a bond which will bear the current rate of interest for that type of bond and for the period for which the bond is made. It will be a commercial transaction in every way.

My hon. friend asked if there was evasion of taxation. This is simply an arrangement that bears out the facts. The original idea was that there would be two companies, each of which would stand on its own feet. If there was to be a deficit in either company the wealthy uncle, the government, would make good that deficit. We have never accepted that version of the arrangement; we have always said that T.C.A. is one entity as far as the government is concerned and if one branch makes money and the other branch loses money, the wealthy branch would have to support the poverty-stricken branch. We are simply making legislative provision for that arrangement.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister does not feel that a crown corporation should have a higher standard in its attitude toward taxation than just an ordinary corporation?

Mr. Howe: No; it brings the act in conformity with commercial practice.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): With respect to the question of the number of directors, so far as Canadian National Railways are concerned, which have a small number of directors, I have raised the question whether it would not be desirable to have a much larger and more representative board. Would the minister say a word as to his attitude toward the question of increasing the number of directors, which I see he proposes to do here?

Mr. Howe: I had something to do with the reorganization of Canadian National Railways in 1936. Previously the board had consisted of 23 members, I believe, who were all part-time directors receiving an honorarium. It was thought at that time that the railroad was not receiving the attention from the directors that its affairs would seem to warrant. The number had been first reduced to a receivership of three in 1932 or 1933 when the board of 23 was done away with. A receivership of three was installed at that time, and in the reorganization of 1936 it was decided that a board of seven would be large enough to give reasonable representation and small enough so the directors could be paid a salary and be expected to live where they could attend meetings of the board and give their continuous attention to the affairs of the railroad.

It has worked out rather well. Vancouver no doubt would be very honoured to have a director on the board; but could anyone guarantee that that director would attend the meetings which I believe take place every week? We have a member from Saskatchewan, but in every case the member from Saskatchewan has moved to Montreal and put himself in a position to attend to the business of the board.

It is not my affair any more but I would be sorry to see a return to the casual director who attended when it suited him, and who thought about the work of the railway only when he was attending meetings of the board. In the case of Trans-Canada Air Lines the position is somewhat analogous. We have directors who attend regularly and give a good deal of attention to the work of the board. Winnipeg has substantial T.C.A. installations. That city has felt that it should be represented. Perhaps another director not living in Montreal would also be helpful provided we select a man who really will attend to the business of the air line.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not propose to labour the matter. I want to make one further comment. I was informed the other day of something I had not been aware of, that the directors of Canadian National Railways are geographically representative. The argument I made was that any ordinary commercial institution has a board of directors, I take it, for two reasons; first of all to bring in outside judgment and, second, to assist the company in getting business. I quite agree that outside men cannot be asked to attend meetings every week, but surely the answer to that is that the meetings could be much less frequent and they could have an executive committee, or what you will.

Mr. Green: Is it the intention to have a director from the west coast?

Mr. Howe: There has not been much thought given to who will be appointed as directors. A director from the west and a director from the east might be appointed. I do not know what the decision will be. We are simply making arrangements for two more directors, one of whom must be a member of the board of directors of the railway. Under the terms of the bill the majority of the board must be directors of the railway. The provision for nine will mean that one additional railway director will be appointed and one additional appointee of the government.

Mr. Green: I realize the difficulty the minister has mentioned in having directors from more distant parts of the country, but I think in the case of Trans-Canada Air Lines it would be very beneficial to have someone from the west coast. He could get here overnight. After all, conditions are quite different there. We are very much concerned with the success of Trans-Canada Air Lines and we would appreciate having a director from the west coast.

Mr. Howe: Consideration will be given to that requirement as well as to the requirements of other parts of Canada.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. Green: Can the minister say how many of the directors are in the government service at the present time?

Mr. Howe: None directly. Four of the directors are members of the board of directors of Canadian National Railways. One was previously a member of the civil service but he is now retired, and as far as I know has no other occupation except that of director of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then would it be correct to say there are really no outside directors? Is that true at the moment? Are they all either directors of Canadian National or civil servants, present or retired?

Mr. Howe: No, that is not correct. It is a board of seven at the present time. Four are directors of Canadian National Railways. One is a retired civil servant and the two others have no association with the government.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if this would not be an appropriate time for the minister to tell us whether or not there has been any change in government policy with respect to the role assigned by the government to Trans-Canada Air Lines. I have in mind in particular the speech which the minister made on March 17, 1944, when he dealt rather fully with civil aviation policy, both domestic and international. On that occasion the minister referred to a statement which the former prime minister, Mr. King, made on April 2, 1943. At that time Mr. King said, as found at page 1778 of Hansard for that date:

> —Trans-Canada Air Lines will continue to operate all transcontinental systems, and such other services of a main-line character as may from time to time be designated by the government. Competition between air services over the same route will not be permitted whether between a publicly owned service and a privately owned service or between two privately owned services.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking on March 17, 1944, in his then capacity of minister of munitions and supply, said that the policy enunciated by Mr. King on April 2, 1943, still stood. During the course of his very interesting speech that day he referred to the difficulties this country had got into because of certain mistakes that had been made in the early days of the building of our railways, and insisted that in his view the best kind of air service for Canada would be to have it on a non-competitive and non-profit basis. As I say, he confirmed the position which the former prime minister had indicated, and made it clear that it was the intention of the government that all main-line services were to be operated by Trans-Canada Air Lines.

The minister pointed out on that occasion that back in 1936 or 1937 an offer had been made to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to Canadian Airways Limited to come in on the new set-up of Trans-Canada Air Lines that was being organized at that time, but that they had refused to do so. I need not go further into the details of that speech because I am sure the minister remembers it as well as I do. My reason for asking whether there has been any change in that policy arises from the application by Canadian Pacific Air Lines, recently heard by the air transport board, for the right to fly a main-line air freight service across the country.

I understand that even if the air transport board looked favourably on that application the matter would still be subject to review by the government. I would think that would be the case in the light of the clear statement of policy made in 1943 and 1944. There are other aspects of the policy I need not go into at this time, but I wonder if the minister could tell us what the government's position is now with respect to main-line flying in Canada.

The Chairman: Before the minister replies, I would not want the discussion to take in too much territory. I presume the hon. member took advantage of the words "to increase the powers of the corporation" in the resolution to give him the opportunity to ask his question about possible changes in policy. However, this resolution seems to limit itself to the management and an increase in the board of directors.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps we can agree, sir, that my right to do this is borderline; but if we agree on that, you might permit the minister to answer.

The Chairman: I do not mind agreeing to that provided we do not spend the rest of the afternoon discussing Trans-Canada Air Lines policy. If it is in order under the resolution it is for the minister to say, because I do not know exactly what the terms are.

Mr. Howe: I am in a difficult position as far as that question is concerned because I am no longer responsible for air line policies. As my hon. friend realizes, the air transport board is now in charge of administration of air policy and they report to my colleague the Minister of Transport.

I am still the minister to which the crown company, Trans-Canada Air Lines, reports; thus there is a separation of interests at the moment. As far as I know there is no change in government policy. Problems of air policy are promptly reviewed by the air transport board. For example, a service was required in the Okanagan valley and that service is, in a sense, competitive with Trans-Canada Air Lines. On the other hand, it is not a service of the type which Trans-Canada Air Lines is equipped to give. The question was whether Canadian Pacific Air Lines should be allowed to provide that service even if they could carry passengers between Vancouver and Calgary.

I think my hon. friend will agree that is a question worthy of study, and it was for the air transport board to decide whether it was consistent with government policy. The question was examined, and it was decided that there was no deviation as far as that route was concerned.

The application for transcontinental freight service is for freight only between Toronto, The Pas, and Edmonton. Whether that is a matter of deviation from government policy is something the government will decide after it receives a report from the air transport board. I understand that the board is now considering the situation, and that no report has been made as yet to the government.

However, the statement of policy given by Mr. King, which has been read by the hon. member, as far as I am aware is still the policy of the government.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a good idea to add these two directors to the board of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and I would make a very brief suggestion for their consideration and for the consideration of the other directors. When I was in the United States a little while ago I had occasion to make several air flights. I found that most United States air lines have instituted a coach flight which costs only about two-thirds the regular first-class rate.

I flew from Chicago to Los Angeles first class, and it cost me $114. While I was out there I found out about this coach flight, and I flew back coach class, and that cost me only $76, or two-thirds of the first-class fare. The airplanes used in the coach class flights are exactly the same as those used for first-class flights. Their time schedule is the same; the service on the airplane is almost identical; there is the same stewardess service, and the only difference is that meals are not served. That is not very difficult to overcome because it is easy to take a box lunch aboard, and those are just about as enjoyable as the meals usually served on aircraft.

The only other difference is that the seats were slightly narrower and, in fact, there were five rows of seats instead of four. I was on the aircraft for nearly nine hours, but I was just as comfortable in the coach-class seats as I have been in first-class seats. They have the same lean-back facilities, and I could see no difference at all.

While I was out there I inquired about the economics of these coach-class flights and I was informed by air line officials that the return on the coach-class flights is just as satisfactory as it is on the first-class flights. The reason is that the extra row of seats is substituted for the freight which, I understand, is usually carried by large United States aircraft; and that gives a better pay return. Also, the coach-class flights are usually filled to capacity because of the much cheaper rate.

Many people who would otherwise not be able to travel by aircraft are able to travel coach class, instead of having to go by bus or train. First-class flights are very often only partially filled, and that is a very important factor. As I say, the air line officials with whom I talked told me they received just as good a return per flight on the coach class as on the first-class flights.

I believe this is something which deserves a great deal of attention by the Trans-Canada Air Lines directors, and I sincerely suggest that we introduce this kind of service into Trans-Canada Air Lines, because I believe it would bring air travel much more within the reach of people who otherwise are not able to travel by aircraft.

At present the only people who can afford to travel by air are businessmen and government officials who are on expense accounts, or people in the middle or upper income brackets. People in the lower income brackets simply cannot afford to travel that way. I think we should remember that Trans-Canada Air Lines is owned by the people of this country, and we should do everything possible to bring that service more within the reach of the shareholders of the line.

Mr. Howe: Might I just say one word here, and I will not delay the committee. We know all about coach travel, of course. Its introduction into Canada is being studied. There are, however, substantial differences in that density of travel is much greater in the United States. I suppose that coach travel there carries about one-fifth of the passengers that travel by air.

If we had ten services across the country we might put two of them into coach travel. However, we are building up our traffic and there is no resistance at the moment to the fares which Trans-Canada Air Lines charge. My hon. friend says the ordinary man cannot afford to travel on Trans-Canada Air Lines. If he can afford to buy a berth on a train he can afford to travel by Trans-Canada Air Lines because, after he pays for his berth and his meals there is very little difference, and perhaps the difference is in favour of the air line.

We have coach travel across the Atlantic, and we have no first-class service on that route. While theoretically you can put in enough extra passengers to make up the difference in fare, that assumes that you have a pressure for travel that will allow you to fill planes. I doubt if there is any route where we have that kind of pressure for travel. We certainly have not got it on the north Atlantic, for our density of traffic was just as great at the higher rate as it is at the lower. We have turned an operation that was getting out of the red and into the black back into an operation that is deeply in the red. However, we think adopting the coach service is the only thing to do considering the competitive situation on the north Atlantic.

I can assure my hon. friend that we will go into coach service just as soon as we get the type of equipment that is suitable for that conversion and just as soon as we feel that we have a volume of traffic that will allow us to fill airplanes equipped for coach travel.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I would like to ask the minister a question having regard to the answer he gave to the member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is this. We do have competition between the railways, and I believe they feel it is good. The chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation spoke about the usefulness of competition. I wanted to ask the minister whether the policy enunciated by Mr. King might not be changed, and whether we might not reasonably look forward to a time when there would be enough airplane traffic for more than one company.

Actually there is competition now in bits and pieces, you might say. The minister gave an illustration of one area in which there is competition. I do not want the record left in such a way, unless the minister feels it must be left in that way, that there is no question but that the monopoly of the Trans-Canada service has to be permanent. I hope it does not have to be permanent, and that it will change with the circumstances.

Mr. Howe: The hon. member is quite right. This is a thinly settled country. We have air services that are essential to the economy. However, today air transport in Canada is not competitive, or is competitive in only a few cases, whether public or private. If an air line company is assigned to a territory, that is its territory and no one else has a right to operate an air service in it. I believe that is a sound policy at the moment. If sufficient travel develops to the point where competition is warranted, then certainly air routes may be entitled to competition.

For instance, we are spending I suppose $20 million or more at this moment on new aircraft to serve the business we know we have. Now, if we only had a chance of getting that business from somebody else, it would not be a very wise expenditure. In other words both competing air lines would be spending $20 million and perhaps competing for the same traffic.

Mr. Green: There is a reference in this resolution to increased powers of the corporation. Can the minister tell us in what way the powers are to be increased?

Mr. Howe: I really do not remember. There are two or three minor amendments that have no great significance. When the bill is before us we shall be able to discuss those changes more intelligently. I should perhaps know what the reference means, but I do not.

Mr. McLure: What will be the remuneration for these two new directors?

Mr. Howe: There is no remuneration. The T.C.A. directors are not paid.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 330, to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES RESEARCH BOARD ACT

INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD—APPOINTMENT OF PERMANENT CHAIRMAN, ETC.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act to increase the membership of the board from fifteen to nineteen including the chairman; to provide for the appointment by the governor in council of a permanent chairman at such salary as may be fixed by the governor in council, and for the appointment by the minister of an acting chairman who may, if he is not a member of the public service, be paid such remuneration as may be fixed by the governor in council; and also to abolish the position of executive director.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, the fisheries research board of Canada conducts and controls all investigations into practical problems connected with the marine and fresh water fisheries. The board operates seven main stations in Canada and one substation. Four of these stations are devoted to biological work, the study of fish populations, methods of fishing, and the remaining three stations deal with technical problems of canning, refrigeration, production of meal and oil, quality control of product and so on. Each of these stations is in charge of a director, and attached to them are scientific staffs as well as seasonal scientific staffs.

Because of the wide ramifications of the board's work, involving considerable expense, it is becoming increasingly evident that the existing structure of the board requires modification. The management of the board is at present in the hands of 15 members, two from the department, two from each of the fishing industries on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and nine scientists from Canadian universities. One of these is elected chairman and another vice-chairman. The board has a small staff at headquarters in Ottawa. The chairman and vice-chairman, both being university scientists, are normally resident elsewhere in Canada and able to give only part time to the management. At its last annual meeting the board recommended that this act be amended to provide for a full-time chairman and to allow a more balanced representation on the board itself. These amendments will be contained in the bill which will be introduced as a result of this resolution.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the parliamentary assistant in a position to say whether there will be any representation from the province of Newfoundland on the board, and who the new chairman is going to be?

Mr. MacNaught: At the moment I am not in a position to tell the house who the new chairman will be. Every effort will be made to see that adequate representation is given to Newfoundland.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if he has taken note of the comment made by the general manager of Trans-Canada Air Lines the other day when he was questioned in committee about serving that delicious food called fish, in which all Canadians delight and of which we should like to see the distribution even further advanced. According to the committee report the general manager said they did not serve fish on the air lines because it was so odoriferous. In connection with research I would think the parliamentary assistant would have the board deal with this subject. I must confess that I cannot agree with the statement, because I think there is no more delicious food served in Canada than that which comes out of the rivers, lakes and seas.

I should like to have some comment from the parliamentary assistant. I know that if a member on this side of the house were to make such a statement it would be a full-blown political issue from now until the next general election. I hope the parliamentary assistant is not going to allow another department to make such a statement and remain completely silent.

Mr. MacNaught: I am very pleased that the hon. member for Peel does not agree with the statement made by the general manager. I am sure that if the hon. member for Peel and the general manager were to pay a visit to our test kitchens they would find that fish can be cooked without any odour whatever.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): As I asked the question of the general manager as to why they did not serve fish on board on Friday, may I say I am grateful to the hon. member for Peel for bringing up this matter this afternoon. May I suggest that the parliamentary assistant invite members of the board of Trans-Canada Air Lines to his test kitchen and let them consume some of the delicious fish they can have there. It might change his opinion.

Mr. MacNaught: I can assure the hon. member for St. John's West that full consideration will be given to his suggestion to invite the members of the board of Trans-Canada Air Lines to the test kitchen.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Fournier (Hull) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 331, to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FORCES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, DEFENCE SERVICES PENSION ACT AND CANADIAN FORCES VOTING REGULATIONS

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Defence Act in respect of certain offences committed by members of the forces out of Canada, to provide for the custody of members of the forces found guilty by civil courts in Canada or by civil or military tribunals of countries other than Canada, and to provide for the disposition of certain classes of appeals; also to amend the Defence Services Pension Act respecting the service that may be counted for purposes of the act and to make pensions payable to the widows and children of persons to whom section 46E of the act applies; and also to amend the Canadian forces voting regulations respecting the completion of statements of ordinary residence.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, the bill which would be introduced in consequence of the adoption of this resolution would amend the National Defence Act, the Defence Services Pension Act and the Canadian forces voting regulations.

The first of these acts would be amended by making provision that Canadian military personnel serving out of Canada who commit offences punishable by foreign law might be tried and punished under Canadian service law. I believe the committee will agree it is desirable that we do everything possible to have Canadian servicemen who are accused of committing offences in foreign countries tried before Canadian tribunals wherever possible. The need for this has arisen in connection with the greatly extended operations of the Canadian armed forces, and was brought home by a definite case which arose where two Canadian sailors were accused and convicted of an offence in Hong Kong. We would like to be in a position to have tried them in respect of the offence, and also to have taken them into custody, through arrangements of course with the Hong Kong authorities.

The second amendment to the National Defence Act is somewhat similar in nature. It would make it lawful for a Canadian serviceman sentenced by a foreign court to undergo his punishment in a Canadian military or civil institution. In this case we are attempting, through diplomatic representations, to secure the delivery to us of these Canadian sailors so that they will finish their sentence in a Canadian service institution. It is greatly to be desired, particularly where the climate and practices of local jurisdictions differ very much from ours, that this be done.

The third amendment would enable the court martial appeal board to exercise the same discretion the court martial had in the first instance of finding an accused guilty of an alternative offence. In a number of cases the court martial appeal board has had cases before it where it would like to have found accused persons guilty of some alternative offence, as is done in respect of criminal appeals in the criminal courts. This, however, was not provided for in the original provision for the court martial appeal board, so the board found it necessary in these cases to order new trials. In the case of offences arising in Korea or Germany it is almost invariably impracticable to have new trials because, by the time the court martial appeal board has delivered judgment, witnesses have been posted to other countries.

Then we also would propose amendments which would provide for expeditious procedure for the disposition of appeals for which no substantial grounds have been shown, or which have been abandoned. This provision exists in connection with appeals of criminal cases in the civil courts, and we would like the court martial appeal board to have power to make regulations to dispose of cases where appeals have not been proceeded with, within a reasonable time, and where such appeals have been made obviously for the purpose of securing delay.

Then there are two amendments to the Defence Services Pension Act. One of these would remove the difficulty now found in fixing the time of service of service personnel who have qualified for pension under the Defence Services Pension Act, where part of their service has been with the forces of another commonwealth country. At the present time it is difficult to determine when this service ends, and this would permit that being done by regulation.

The other amendment to the Defence Services Pension Act would remove an injustice which now exists in respect of a class of contributor for whom special provision was made in an amendment passed in 1951. That class of contributor consists of persons who have had combined services with the active and reserve forces for a total of twenty years. And we should have provided, expressly at the time of passing the amendment, for that part of their pension which would have been payable to their wives being paid to those wives. It was subsequently found that this was omitted, and that it was necessary. Now we want to correct that gap in the law. I understand there are also two or three pending cases which would be affected.

Finally the bill contains certain minor amendments to the Canadian forces voting regulations. It will be recalled that when the Canada Elections Act was referred to the special committee of the House of Commons, that committee made recommendations regarding regulations controlling the voting of service electors. It was provided by those regulations that the service electors had to register by September 21, 1952, and it has been found that a number of service electors have not completed the registration forms. I am sure it is the wish of all hon. members that they should not be disfranchised, so that provision will be extended.

There are also two minor technical errors which the chief electoral officer has pointed out in the regulations, and which it is proposed to correct. None of these appears to be controversial. All are intended for the benefit of our service personnel, and I am sure will receive favourable consideration by hon. members.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have no doubt the minister can explain why this resolution covers two or three acts. Is it customary to do that?

Mr. Claxton: Yes, we have done that in connection with amendments. The National Defence Act was enacted in 1950, and at that time we incorporated in the one bill a great number of provisions from other legislation. We have decided, and the house so far has concurred, that it would meet the convenience of hon. members, as it does very much that of the armed forces, if all amendments to existing legislation relating to the armed forces were contained in a single bill each year. In consequence the Canadian Forces Act, 1950; the Canadian Forces Act, 1951; the Canadian Forces Act, 1952 have been enacted. All of these amended a number of different statutes, and this follows that precedent.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I have a question I should like to ask the minister. When speaking about the desirability of having Canadian military personnel come before Canadian tribunals he said "wherever possible". My understanding is that here in Canada, and vice versa in the United States when there are visiting forces, the army personnel are subject to the laws of the country in which they are visiting. In other words, if a United States soldier in Canada commits an offence against the civil laws he is not tried in an army court but in a civilian court. Am I right in that?

Mr. Claxton: The law which applies to this situation was passed by parliament in 1947 and is called the Visiting Forces (United States of America) Act. Under it United States military tribunals have been given jurisdiction to try United States service personnel in respect of service offences and also in respect of civil offences where the attorney general of the province concerned does not choose to exercise civil jurisdiction. This is a right which we already had under their common law.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): So in practice it has happened here. Does the attorney general turn them over, and is the actual practice that they are tried in their courts?

Mr. Claxton: Yes, in everything except serious offences.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister says "wherever possible". Does that mean we just try to negotiate that where we can?

Mr. Claxton: Yes. In the case of the North Atlantic treaty nations we have signed an agreement with them called "the status of forces agreement", and we have implemented that agreement by passing legislation in December, 1951. Most of the other countries have not yet implemented this agreement by legislation and we have not yet proclaimed our legislation, but we are doing so now that we can benefit from it.

In the case of the United States our relations are governed by the common law of the United States, which gives us the same rights that we have given them by the statute to which I referred a moment or two ago. In the case of other commonwealth countries, we have reciprocal legislation called "the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act." In the case of Japan, however, we have no agreement, and we are still trying to negotiate one. Consequently it is particularly with regard to Japan to which my qualification "wherever possible" applies.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the minister familiar with the arrangement the United States forces had with England during the last war, which was that the judges of courts had the power to say whether a man should be turned over to the army courts or whether he should be tried in the civil court?

Mr. Claxton: That is very frequently done by magistrates here, too.

Mr. Hees: I understand that by recent regulation a young man entering a service college or other educational institution to qualify for a commission is now allowed to count the time he spends in that educational institution as service time for pension rights. Has anything been done to permit a man who had graduated from one of the service colleges or educational institutions before this regulation was passed to count the time spent getting his education as service time for pension rights?

Mr. Claxton: No, they are not covered. The difference in the two cases lies in this, that those who were in the service colleges before were not members of the armed forces. They were cadets, and if they qualified and were selected to have commissions and chose to join the armed forces they did that subsequent to receiving their education. However, since last year we have instituted a new system under which cadets in service colleges and undergraduates in universities may join the armed forces and agree to serve for three years if they qualify for commissions; so that they are in exactly the same position as men in the ranks who were receiving commissions and they should of course count their service for pension and seniority.

Mr. Hees: Will the government give consideration to allowing men who had graduated before this regulation went into effect to count their time?

Mr. Claxton: No, because they were not bound to serve.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Claxton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 332, respecting the Canadian forces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

PROVISION MAKING ELIGIBLE CERTAIN CROWN LANDS IN MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to provide that certain crown lands in Manitoba and Saskatchewan granted after December 31, 1940, be made eligible with respect to the assistance provided under the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, before making this statement, may I say that I did consult experts in agriculture, in particular the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I understand that under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act crown lands in Manitoba and Saskatchewan granted or sold after December 31, 1940, are not eligible for award. The purpose of this amendment is to make eligible the lands in the northern parts of these provinces as defined in the bill.

The second amendment would provide that a lease containing an option to sell is to be regarded as an agreement for sale. The result is that lands disposed of prior to December 31, 1940, under a lease-option agreement will be eligible for award even though the option is not taken up until after that date.

Mr. Low: Can the minister indicate the part of the provinces concerned? I am referring to the second amendment.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not know without seeing the bill. I have not seen the bill, but I think the bill would contain that.

Mr. Graydon: Is the minister suggesting that he is asking us to pass a resolution upon which a bill is to be based, and that he has not seen the bill?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have to admit that I did not express myself properly. I did make a serious study of that bill; I have it in my hands, but I do not think it is proper for the bill to be given to the house before the resolution carries.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not believe this resolution will take very long. I think all the representatives from the prairie provinces in this house, regardless of party, are in favour of it. It removes the discrimination which exists at the present time, and the extension outlined in the resolution will be welcome as far as western farmers are concerned.

When the bill is before us there will be some details that hon. members may want to discuss. Since the Minister of Public Works is the only one who has studied the bill I think we may as well say that we welcome it and shall look forward to joining him in a further study of it.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if these are the only changes in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act that we can expect this session. This act has been under review for a considerable time by agriculture committees, and certain recommendations have been made from time to time. It would appear from the order paper that these are the only changes that will be made.

Some of us have been making certain recommendations for a long time, and we rather expected that further changes would be made this session. I refer particularly to the provision that so many sections are required before one can qualify for P.F.A.A. assistance. At the present time it is a little unfair because a farmer living outside a certain block of sections may have a poor crop and not be qualified to receive assistance, while another farmer living within the prescribed block and having a larger yield may get assistance. There would seem to be unfairness there. Some of us have urged that it should be calculated on the basis of individual farms. That is one change we would have liked to see made.

Although a farmer is compelled to pay into the prairie farm assistance fund at the rate of 1 per cent, if he also operates a little business it affects his eligibility for payment. Even though his yield is below the average and he is in a block of sections where assistance is paid, he will not receive anything.

There are other changes which I think should be made in respect to farmers who are hailed out. It has been suggested that this act should cover hail damage. I see nothing of that on the order paper, and I am asking the minister if these are the only changes that are to be made this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am glad the hon. gentleman has made his representations, and I shall draw them to the attention of my colleagues, especially the Minister of Agriculture. Even if it were the intention of the government to make further changes, even as the Acting Minister of Agriculture I would not dare announce them beforehand. They would be matters of policy. When the minister is dealing with the bill these questions can be answered. I must admit that even after the study I have made my knowledge of the matter is quite limited.

Mr. Low: I think when we are dealing with the motion for second reading of the bill there will be unrestricted debate and the points raised by my hon. friend can be considered.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Fournier, Hull (for Mr. Gardiner) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 333, to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): May I thank every hon. member in the house for his co-operation in the proceedings today. I think we have made wonderful progress. Although we were to sit until six o'clock and then from eight to ten o'clock, I shall now move the adjournment of the house until Tuesday next at 2.30 p.m.

On Tuesday we will resume the debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance to go into committee of supply and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Lake Centre. I hope I can call the four departments that I announced when the motion was first made, defence production, privy council, public works and resources and development. If we get into committee, as I hope we will, we will take up the estimates of public works, citizenship and immigration.

The next day, on Wednesday, we are going to move again to go into supply, always hoping that we will reach that stage. I would call the Departments of National Defence and National Health and Welfare. I may say that requests were made that we try to get these departments in as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish every hon. member happy Easter holidays.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 5.40 p.m. until 2.30 p.m., Tuesday, April 7.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 7, 1953

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE MATTHEW MacLEAN

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister, who is unavoidably absent, I wish to pay tribute to one of our late members. I know hon. members will have been saddened to learn today of the passing of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria. Matthew MacLean first came to Ottawa as the result of a by-election in 1937 in which he was paid the unusual tribute of being returned unopposed. The faith that his constituents placed in him at that time by electing him by acclamation was reaffirmed by his re-election at each successive general election. We have had the privilege of being associated with him over that rather long period of time.

Matthew MacLean served the interests of his constituents vigorously and energetically. He diligently and effectively applied the legal training he had obtained at the law school of Dalhousie university to the various committees on which he served. His many friends on both sides of the house will miss him greatly. I am confident that all members of the house will wish to join me in asking you, Mr. Speaker, to extend our sincerest sympathy to Mrs. MacLean and the other members of the family.

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Leader of the Opposition would have reached Ottawa today in time to join in the tribute just paid to the deceased member for Cape Breton North and Victoria by the Acting Prime Minister. On his behalf I should like to associate the members of the official opposition with the words that have been so well spoken by the Minister of Agriculture. I suppose that one of the great joys and rewards of public life in our daily associations in the House of Commons comes from the fact that over the years there is a great camaraderie among the men and women on both sides of the house.

Matthew MacLean was one of those with whom it was easy to be associated throughout the years. He was always a very hearty and kindly gentleman. I often think that perhaps the best test of the character of a man in public life is to be found in how he is regarded by those who are closely associated with him. This morning one of the older messengers on the staff came into my room and said, "I suppose you have heard that Matthew MacLean has passed away." I said that I had and that I was sorry to hear the news. He said, "Well, I am sorry too because no more kindly gentleman ever came within the precincts of the House of Commons". I thought that was one of the most sterling tributes a member could have paid to him after a long period of association with others in the House of Commons. I am sure that it saddens all of us to hear the news that he has now been taken away from the House of Commons and its membership.

I would like, on behalf of the official opposition, to join with the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Gardiner) in conveying our genuine and deep sympathy to Mrs. MacLean and to her daughter, Janet, who was so often spoken of by Mr. MacLean, and who was the great joy and pride of his life.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, these sad occasions come from time to time and those of us who have been in the house for a long time, since before 1940, realize that our ranks are thinning in one way and another. Consequently such occasions are reminders that life is all too short and that time passes.

I wish to express our sympathy to the family of Mr. Matt MacLean. He was a kindly, unassuming member of this house. Those of us who knew him as a friendly man with a dignified bearing in the house regret the passing of one who has contributed to the general well-being of the house. Although we are divided politically and, very often, by ideas, nonetheless there are, across the floor of this chamber, genuine friendships. In the passing of Matt MacLean many of us feel, after this long association, that we have lost one whom we regarded as a friend.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we very much regret hearing of the untimely passing of any member of this house. We accept them always at face value and pay honour to them for doing the very best they can to represent the wishes of their people. I am satisfied that we are speaking now of a member who did just that.

The late Matthew MacLean

I was not too well acquainted with Mr. MacLean but I did observe him during the years I have been here. I have noted that he was always a gentleman and that he tried to treat others as I am sure he would have wanted to be treated. He was quiet and unassuming certainly, but I imagine that in his own way he was an effective representative of the people.

We want to join with all those who have paid tribute to him today; and we extend our sympathy to his widow and the members of his family who have been bereaved.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, it will surely be gratifying to Matt MacLean's many friends in Nova Scotia to know of the genuine and sincere expressions of high regard from all parties in the house.

Matt MacLean was born and raised, and he spent his life, in Nova Scotia. His latter years were given over in a kindly, helpful way to the people of Sydney Mines and his constituency of Cape Breton North and Victoria.

It was a great shock to those of us from Nova Scotia, who of course know Matt MacLean so well, to learn of his sudden passing. We shall indeed be pleased to convey to his wife and daughter Janet these sincere expressions of regret which we have heard today.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, ever since I came into this house in December, 1947, up until just a year ago, I had the privilege of sharing an office in this building with the late member for Cape Breton North and Victoria. I do not want to add anything to what has already been said except to say that I have, for that reason, a special cause to mourn his passing; and I wish to join with the expressions of condolence which have been expressed to his wife and immediate family.

Matt MacLean was not only a kindly man. He was jovial, considerate, generous, and an excellent roommate.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, you know that when we look back at this seat one of the first men of this house was our friend. He would remind us if we were late. He would tell us too that he was a Presbyterian but a Christian first. I was often in his room and he would ask for certain explanations. He was one of the first to help us organize our bowling league.

We will miss him much but his folks will miss him more. We express to them our heartfelt sympathies.

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. Speaker: At the suggestion of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Gardiner) and on behalf of all members of the house I shall send a message of sympathy to Mrs. MacLean and her daughter.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

STATEMENT REGARDING PROSECUTION OF FINE PAPER COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in releasing in November last the report of the combines commissioner relating to the fine paper industry, I stated that the matter would be referred to counsel for opinion and I would make a statement later as to prosecution. The matter was referred to Mr. Norman L. Mathews, Q. C., of Toronto who has advised that in his opinion the evidence justifies prosecution of some or all of the manufacturers and some or all of the merchants mentioned in the report. The exact parties will be determined as the evidence is further examined in detail in the course of preparation for trial. Mr. Mathews has been instructed to proceed with prosecutions.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

TENDERS FOR SUPPLIES—APPROVED LISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State if he will please have inquiries made to find whether he can expedite the tabling of a return to an order of the house passed on February 11, as noted on page 237 of Votes and Proceedings for that day, which had previously been requested and asked for by myself, with regard to the maintenance of private lists. The order has been outstanding since February 11 and I would appreciate it if it could be expedited.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): I shall be glad to do all I can to get the order for the hon. member as quickly as possible.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

GOOSE BAY STATION—LEASE OF LAND TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): May I direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Claxton). Will the same general conditions apply to the agreement between Canada and the United States of America with respect to the use of Torbay airport as outlined in the minister's statement of December 5, 1952, relative to Goose Bay airport?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Since the hon. member sent me notice of this question this morning, I have looked at Hansard for December 5, 1952 but so far have not found any reference to Goose Bay or Torbay in its pages. However, a statement was made by me in the house on November 28, 1952, and perhaps that is the one to which he refers. It appears on page 174 of Hansard. I believe the answer to the hon. member's question is to be found in a statement made by my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, then acting as Secretary of State for External Affairs, which appears in Hansard for December 16 at page 741. In the course of that statement he tabled an agreement between Canada and the United States regarding the lease of land at Goose Bay to the United States. This agreement, and the conditions contained in the agreement, apply only to Goose Bay and not to Torbay. As I understand the question, and in the light of my explanation, the answer would be no, because the lease to which I have referred, which governs conditions existing between Canada and the United States regarding Goose Bay, does not apply to Torbay.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask one supplementary question? Are there to be any similar conditions to apply with respect to Torbay?

Mr. Claxton: No, the conditions are quite different. The lease at Goose Bay is for a period of 20 years and covers a fixed portion of land on which the United States is authorized to erect buildings, subject to certain conditions. In the case of Torbay no lease has been entered into, but there has been an arrangement under which the United States air force occupies certain buildings belonging to the government of Canada, on the conditions agreed to from year to year.

THE CORONATION

OBSERVANCE OF JUNE 2 AS A STATUTORY HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. June 2 having been proclaimed a statutory holiday, will the government intimate to the management of industries that June 2 is intended to be observed as a statutory holiday in Canada and that wage earners should not suffer the loss of a day's pay?

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the law with reference to the proclamation of statutory holidays is to be found, as the hon. member knows, upon the statute books. That is the law of the land and presumably various organizations, business and otherwise, will govern themselves accordingly. I do not know of any penalty for the infraction of this statute.

FERRY SERVICE

WOOD ISLAND-CARIBOU—AUTHORIZATION FOR THIRD BOAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but since he is not in the house I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government or the Minister of Transport refused permission to the Northumberland Ferries Limited to operate a third boat on the Wood Island-Caribou route in order to provide an interim service pending replacement by a new boat which is to be constructed by the federal government? If this statement is correct, as reported in the press, we should know why permission was not granted.

Position of Agricultural Industry

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Acting Prime Minister): In the absence of the Minister of Transport, I would suggest that this be taken as notice of a question which will be answered later.

WHEAT

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or possibly the Minister of Agriculture as Acting Prime Minister. Would he say whether the government is in a position to make any report as to whether or not the international wheat conference in Washington has arrived at an agreement?

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would like to take the question as notice.

SUPPLY

AGRICULTURE—UNCERTAIN POSITION OF FARMING POPULATION

The house resumed, from Monday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fournier (Hull) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I rise to support the amendment. I believe that it will be essential, I think it has been essential as a matter of fact for a long time, that every attempt should be made to achieve some relationship between the costs of production and the prices received for farm commodities in this country. I have always believed that that cost price relationship, which we sometimes call parity prices, is one that will be of tremendous interest to producers in this country, not only in the immediate future but in the days to come.

Over the past year we have seen the costs of production on all our farms of every type rising, and at the same time we have seen the prices of many farm commodities decreasing more rapidly than even farm costs have increased. As a matter of fact the study of the farm prices index for the past year issued by the dominion bureau of statistics indicated an almost startling decline in farm prices generally. From the beginning of 1952 to the end of the year the decline in farm prices was no less than 14 per cent, taking all farm commodities produced in Canada, and at the same time the cost of production of our farms as well as the cost of living on the farms was increasing. The composite index, for example, of farm costs, exclusive of August, 1951, was 237·8, and the living cost as of August, 1952 was 243·4. The index of farm prices at December, 1951, stood at 286·2, and at December, 1951, it stood at 244·0. Of course, the index is in some ways deceptive because it is based on a period when farm prices were unusually low prior to 1939.

We can see these costs of production I think rather clearly if we stop for a moment to examine the 1939 taxes on land and buildings owned in Canada, that is land and buildings largely on the farm. They totalled $19,200,000 in 1939, and by 1949 they had increased to $39,100,000. In 1950 they had risen to the tremendous total of $58,500,000, an increase in taxes on farm land and buildings of over 200 per cent. I think that in a general way that is indicative of the difficult taxation problem on the farms.

Then, if we look at the cost of farm machinery we find tremendous increases as well. The high cost of farm implements in this country has been a matter for discussion in this house over a long period of years. We had an investigation into the high cost of farm machinery in 1936 and 1937. Recommendations were made to the government of that time, but nothing worth while has been done to control the tremendous costs of these machines. In 1945, jumping to the last year of the war, a ten or twelve-foot self-controlled combine could be purchased for $2,800. Today the same combine costs approximately $6,000. Now, one can see from this example, taking the cost of one farm machine, the extent to which farm costs of production have increased over the last several years.

A week ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), speaking in this house, indicated rather clearly that agriculture was fairly prosperous; yet in the same speech he told us that not more than 10 per cent of the farmers of eastern Canada made enough money to pay income tax and not more than 15 per cent of the western farmers made enough money to pay income tax either. As a matter of fact, his figures were rather high. A check of the figures indicates that the number of farmers paying income tax, east and west, will be considerably below the 10 per cent and 15 per cent mentioned by the minister.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may be permitted just to correct one word, I should like to do so.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not think I contended that the farmers were prosperous. I said that they are better off than they had been before; that is all.

Mr. Coldwell: I will take that phraseology from the minister, that they are better off than they had been before. But from what the minister said I think the inference was that they were in a pretty fair shape just now. However, I will take what the minister says, namely that they are better off than they have been. As a matter of fact, is that not an admission that over the years we have regarded agriculture in this country as a depressed industry, when we talk about the returns of the farmers today and when all we can say is that they are better off than they have been in bygone years?

That brings us to the purpose of an amendment of this description. As I understand it, the purpose of the amendment is to urge the government and this House of Commons—because I am not placing the responsibility wholly on the government—to endeavour to promote in this country policies that will give more stability of income to our farmers. Over a number of years I have watched the policies that have been put into effect in some other countries and I have come to the conclusion—and it is a conclusion that I came to some time ago—that we shall never have a prosperous agriculture in this country until we had something more than floor prices, some system of guaranteeing to the farmers that over a period of time they will receive certain minimum prices for the products they were producing or, in other words, some form of forward pricing for farm commodities. As a matter of fact, we have had a floor price on butter now for two years. That is good. That is a step on the way to a wider policy, I should hope, as time goes by.

Over the last year we have seen the fluctuations in the prices of beef cattle. Of course in the marketing of cattle there is not the same type of orderly marketing as there is in the marketing of grain. I readily admit that the difficulties are greater. Grain can be stored but when a beef animal is ready to go to the market, that is approximately when that animal must go to the market. I readily admit that there are perhaps greater difficulties in connection with cattle marketing, but I believe that a policy could be produced—at least a board of livestock commissioners could be set up—which would give to our livestock producers a better guarantee of stability of returns for a stated period of time than they have had over the past number of years.

If we are going to give this stability to farm prices, and if we are going to find a relationship—as ultimately we shall have to—between what it costs to produce farm commodities and what the farmer gets for them, then of course we have got to think also in terms of marketing those products. This afternoon I am not going into the marketing problem except to say this. An examination over a period of years indicates that the policy we have been pursuing over the past few years—that of relying to a greater extent than in the past on the American markets—is one that is going to cause our farmers and this country a great deal of difficulty in the near future.

Before I came down to the house this afternoon I looked over some extremely interesting figures, showing the percentages of trade during the period from 1920 to 1952, and I found this fact to be exceedingly interesting. Immediately after the first world war in 1920 we find the United States taking from us a fairly high percentage of our farm products. We find exactly the same thing after this second world war. But when we get between the two wars, and particularly in the depression period, we find that the relative positions of the United Kingdom and of the United States were most marked in this way: the United Kingdom took a fairly high percentage of our farm and other products and the percentage of our farm products taken by the United States dropped drastically during those years.

If we examine the whole story of the attempt to market Canadian products abroad, we find that the only stable market we have ever had is the one we had for a large number of years in the United Kingdom and in western Europe. Consequently the resolution moved the other day by my hon. friend is a resolution calling for more stability in farm prices; and if we are going to achieve that stability in farm prices, we have to have some stability in the markets in which we shall dispose of our farm products. It seems to me that this house has got to reconsider this whole problem of international marketing, and that we have got to consider ways and means of enabling our customers in those markets that we have had throughout the years to earn a sufficient number of dollars in our country to buy those basic supplies upon which they must depend both now and in the years to come.

This afternoon I am not going into tariffs and all that kind of thing, but it seems to me that one of the problems we have to consider is how we are going so to lower our tariffs that those countries that will buy our farm commodities will be able to get sufficient dollars in our country in order to buy those commodities. After all, I know that in the last few years a great deal of stress has been placed on the development of our minerals, on the high returns we receive by the export of our forest products and so on. Yet I venture to say that minerals gradually become depleted and oil wells gradually peter out and forests are denuded; but if we take care of the top six inches of soil and farm that soil properly, we shall have a permanent resource that will bring to this country, both from our own domestic market and those abroad, returns for generations yet to come.

It seems to me that there is no more important problem facing this country than that of achieving stability of the agricultural industry. These fluctuations over the years have been a bugbear to our farmers. A week ago we were discussing an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It was an amendment designed to continue that board until 1957. That is good. The farmers of the prairie provinces for many years fought for a wheat board and for some stability in the marketing of their own grain, and finally they achieved success. Today there is not anyone, I think, who is informed who will dare to suggest that the prairie farmers want to go back to the old hit-and-miss system of the open market and the grain exchange. They want to continue the stability thus obtained, but of course they want a fair return for their labour.

When we talk of stable prices we want something like uniform prices both in the domestic market and in the overseas markets. One of the most unfair features of our wheat marketing problem over the last number of years is the fact that our farmers have got less on the domestic market for wheat to be consumed in Canada than they might have got had that wheat been sold beyond our borders. But in spite of the criticism that can be levelled against the manner in which the marketing of grain in Canada has been carried on, there is no doubt whatsoever that our farmers expect that every attempt will be made to continue long-term international agreements for the wheat growers, and I believe that similar long-term agreements should be attempted as soon as possible and whenever possible for other basic farm commodities.

You only have to look at the situation regarding pork, bacon, and particularly cheese and dried and condensed milk at the present time to realize how essential those markets are, and what difficulties the loss of overseas markets creates not only for the agricultural producers, but indeed for the whole of our country and the whole of its economy. I want to emphasize again that the agricultural industry is and must remain a basic industry in this country. That has been the story of Canadian development over the years. With the high costs today there is a danger that many young men and women who would like to take up farming, not only as a means of life but as a way of life provided that they could see sufficient returns, are unable to do so. One of the evidences of this instability in agriculture is the number of deserted farms we see here and there, and in the prairie provinces the loss of our rural population, particularly in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and to an extent even in the province of Alberta where tremendous development is going on at the present time. That also accounts for the consolidation of the farms into large units which are being established. Because of the high price of farm machinery, farmers must have enough land to provide a profitable unit to maintain the machinery that is necessary today to replace the labour of other days. Therefore I join with other hon. members in this house in support of the amendment. It is an amendment along the lines of many that we in this party have moved in the house over the years. We believe of course in planned trade. We believe even that when we cannot get dollars for the farm commodities that we could ship abroad and other people could use, we might take the sterling that they have and re-invest it in the backward areas of the sterling region and wait until we can get dollars or goods, in the meantime using our own financial machinery to pay decent and proper prices to the producers of this country. That is being done in some other parts of the world, and I believe that it could be done here provided that we had the will to do it.

I thus want to say both on my own behalf and on behalf of those associated with me that we give very warm support to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, we have had much talk of objectives in respect of stable agricultural prices, but very little talk as regards techniques. There must be some way of doing things, but nothing has been said about how these things can be done.

Broadly speaking, we have to decide whether we shall expand production in accordance with our resources and then devise an effective method of getting our surpluses into the hands of the needy of the world, or whether we shall restrict production in conformity with our own people's financial consuming power, giving only incidental consideration to the wants of less fortunate peoples of the world. In either case, we must aim at stable prices and markets.

Various techniques are being experimented with today. As an example, may we contemplate the United States methods in respect of her sugar industry?

What are some facts about the sugar industry of the United States? How much sugar does the United States require annually? About 100 pounds per capita, about 8 million tons. Where does the United States obtain her sugar? From mainland production through beets, 1,700,000 tons; through cane, 500,000 tons; from offshore United States' areas, namely, Hawaiian islands, Puerto Rico, Virgin islands, altogether about 2 million tons; from Cuba and the Philippines, 3,700,000 tons; from other foreign countries, small lots.

How has this apportionment of supply to the different sources been arrived at? It is by reference to special circumstances that surround the United States. Cuba is peculiarly an American problem. Some details to make this matter clear I will set forth later in this talk. The Philippines, too, are a special American problem. In the Philippine Independence Act of 1936 it was provided that the Philippines would be guaranteed a quota of not less than 982,000 tons of raw sugar a year. The Hawaiian islands, the Virgin islands, and Puerto Rico are looked upon by the United States as domestic cane areas, though not part of the United States mainland.

When, and by reason of what events, did the United States begin to deal with her sugar supply problem in an orderly manner? We are dealing with ours in an unorderly manner! The question can perhaps best be answered by reviewing certain facts about Cuban history in respect of sugar. What are such facts? Here they are: Cuba from before 1776 was an important supplier of sugar to the United States. Cuba, historically, has been a one-crop, a sugar economy, 90 per cent of her exports being sugar. Up until 1930 Cuba had always exported more than 70 per cent of her sugar to the United States. Even before her gaining independence from Spain, Cuba had geared her economy to the markets of the United States of America.

There were, resulting from the Spanish-American war, unique political ties between Cuba and the United States.

The Platt amendment to the army appropriation bill dictated by the United States in 1901 as a condition of United States military evacuation of Cuba after the Spanish-American war, permitted the United States to:

> Exercise the right to intervene in the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty.

In addition to these there were special economic ties between the United States and Cuba. The United States and Cuba in 1903 ratified a reciprocal treaty which decreed:

> That the duty on sugar from Cuba should be 20 per cent less than the full duty rate.

This measure has been in effect continuously ever since. Finally, American investment in the Cuban processing industry, as well as in the Cuban plantations, is very large.

Cuba suffered a most unhappy experience after world war II. There was agricultural depression in the twenties, as in the thirties, which caused the United States to raise her tariffs on sugar three times, presumably to protect her own continental cane and beet sugar industry. This caused the development of an expanded sugar industry in United States offshore possessions—the Hawaiian islands, Puerto Rico and the Virgin islands. This development was greatly at Cuba's expense. From 1902 to 1929 Cuba had supplied almost one-half of the sugar requirements of the United States, averaging 3,832,000 tons, from 1926 to 1929. During the years 1930 to 1933 Cuba's proportion fell to less than 30 per cent, averaging 2,287,000 tons during the period 1930 to 1932.

There developed an overproduction of sugar. World production averaged in the period 1923-25 the amount of 26·1 million tons. In 1928-30 it was 31·3 million tons. The world price of raw fell from 4 cents per pound, New York price minus duty, to less than 2 cents per pound. In 1932 it fell to less than 1 cent a pound. The Cuban price in 1932 averaged ·7 cent per pound.

The development of overproduction of sugar in the years 1925 to 1937 is indicated by the annual carryover each year. From the 1939 brief of the eastern Canadian cane refineries I quote the following tabulation, as it is set out in section 47 of that brief:

> 1925, 5,320,398; 1926, 5,766,898; 1927, 5,689,749; 1928, 6,124,050; 1929, 7,500,794; 1930, 8,881,086; 1931, 10,740,024; 1932, 10,896,824; 1933, 9,888,462; 1934, 9,468,861; 1935, 8,128,421; 1936, 7,352,179; 1937, 7,172,779.

Cuba, as I said in my speech on March 16, had a settled policy of reducing her production "costs" far enough to permit her always to enter the United States market. Cuban prices lower than 1 cent per pound, and sales disastrously reduced, brought her economic ruin and revolution in 1933, with the expulsion of President Machado, followed by extremely unsettled political conditions.

These occurrences were cause for much concern in the United States.

Then there developed a Cuban refining industry, and the many troubles resulting therefrom. Concerning the development of the Cuban refining industry from 1926 on, may I read again from the 1939 cane refiners' brief, section 85, where it says:

> For years prior to 1926 there was a refined sugar industry in Cuba which supplied a portion of the home market but was a negligible factor in export trade. In 1926, however, a series of causes operating together brought about a rapid expansion. Production rose from 50,000 tons in 1925 to 427,000 tons in 1931 and exports grew in the same period from 4,000 tons in 1925 to over 380,000 tons in 1931. During that period there was little change in the figures of home consumption in Cuba.

Then the United States Department of Agriculture stated "By 1933 it had become evident that the tariff was no longer adequate to ensure either a healthy domestic industry or a dependable source of foreign supplies".

May I now deal with what the United States did about the Cuban sugar situation, to remedy it? First, in respect of Cuban raw sugar: From 1930, on, various agencies of the United States government studied the sugar problem with great earnestness. The federal farm board called a conference of continental sugar producers. Resulting from this conference the federal farm board established a sugar beet and sugar cane advisory committee. This group met with the board on several occasions during 1930 and 1931. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed on May 12, 1933. Under the A.A.A. auspices an industry conference was convened in Washington in June of 1933. Within three weeks this group presented a draft marketing agreement which became known as the sugar stabilization plan.

This sugar stabilization plan (1) allocated a quota to each of the areas supplying sugar to the United States; (2) provided for establishing a minimum price for raw sugar, such price to be determined by formula; (3) called for an increase of production in home-grown sugar, both beet and cane. Disagreement among interested parties caused action to be deferred, but everyone learned that there was, in respect of sugar, a real problem, difficult of solution.

On February 8, 1934, the president sent a message to congress asking for legislation to achieve certain objectives. From the statement of two of these objectives, I quote the following:

> 1. To maintain the existing acreage of sugar beets in the continental United States;
> 2. To increase returns to domestic growers.

This message became the basis of orderly management of sugar in the United States. There followed the first of three sugar acts, the third of which is now in force and will be until 1956.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

The first of these was the Jones-Costigan act, approved on May 9, 1934, and often called the sugar act of 1934.

This sugar act did the following:

1. Defined both sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities—and it is high time this was done in Canada!

2. Required the appropriate governmental official to determine upon a national consumption estimate as a basis for arriving at quotas.

3. Provided for a quota to be allowed United States domestic producers of both beet and cane sugar, greater than the production of any previous year, except 1933, the record year of United States sugar production.

4. Provided for a quota to be allowed to Cuba, the Philippines, the Virgin islands, the Hawaiian islands and Puerto Rico.

5. Provided for giving payments to participating growers.

6. Imposed a half cent per pound processing tax on all sugar consumed in the United States and its territories.

Then came the sugar act of 1937. It embodied the main provisions of the sugar act of 1934, with some elaborations and modifications. Instead of the half cent per pound processing tax, this act had an excise tax of one-half cent per pound.

And then came the sugar act of 1948, which has since been extended to December 31, 1956. It set out the following quotas:

Continental beets increased from 1,550,000 tons in 1934-1937 to 1,800,000 tons in the 1948 act. It will be noted that provision was thus made for an expansion in the beet sugar industry.

Then, secondly, continental cane increased from 260,000 tons in 1934-37 to 500,000 tons in 1948. And it will be noted again that there was a provision for expansion! And it is time something like that was done in Canada! Then came Hawaii with 1,052,000 tons; Puerto Rico, 910,000, increased to 1,080,000 for 1953; and the Virgin islands at 6,000, increased to 12,000 for 1953. The total for 1953 equals 4,400,000 tons. The figure for the Philippines is 982,000 short tons raw value. Including the Philippine quota the total for 1953 therefore equals 4,400,000 tons plus 982,000 short tons raw value.

Cuba's quota equals 98·64 per cent of the total United States consumption requirement after the 4,400,000 United States domestic quota and the 982,000 short tons raw value Philippine quota are subtracted from the total United States consumption requirement determination.

It is provided, however, that Cuba's share of the total consumption requirement of the United States must not fall below 28·6 per cent as was stipulated in the sugar act of 1937. Foreign countries other than Cuba and the Philippines were to get 1·36 per cent of that total. The sugar act of 1948 provided for payments of about $2.50 per ton in the case of beets, and a little over $1 per ton in the case of cane but there were several considerations upon which payments were based. The following is to be found in Lamborn's "Highlights of the Sugar Act of 1948, and 1951 Amendments" at page 14:

> The base rate of payment shall be 80 cents per 100 pounds of sugar or liquid sugar, raw value.

We now come to what the United States did about the Cuban sugar situation to remedy it in respect of direct consumption sugar or refined sugar. All of the acts have severely restricted imports of direct consumption or refined sugar. In the 1934 act Cuba was limited to some 418,000 tons of refined, about 22 per cent of her total quota. Hawaii was limited to 26,000 tons, Puerto Rico to 133,000 and the Philippine islands to 80,000, all of which tends to show how careful the United States is about letting refined into her gardens to destroy them.

In the 1937 and 1948 acts Cuba received 375,000 tons as a quota and the Hawaiian islands and Puerto Rico about the same as in 1934. The quota for the Philippine islands in the 1948 act was set at 59,920 tons.

In the 1937 act it was provided that the refined quota provisions would expire one year before the act itself. The refined provisions did expire in February, 1940, and for some months there was a free flow of refined sugar into the United States, limited only by the total quota. However, when later in 1940 the act was extended, the limitations of refined sugar imports were again imposed. That should be a warning to us!

What might be safely recognized as being the achievements of the quota system as embodied in and applied through the United States sugar acts of 1934, 1937 and 1948? The following accomplishments must, it seems, be conceded:

1. The sugar acts have defined both sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities.

2. They have lent stability to sugar prices to the advantage of both producers and consumers.

3. They have tended to increase domestic production of sugar from both cane and beet.

4. They have improved the general economic position of Cuba.

5. They have provided some stability to the economies of the Philippines, the Virgin islands, the Hawaiian islands, Puerto Rico and other lands.

6. They have enabled the United States to reduce the tariff on sugar 1½ cents per pound without prejudice to her own economy.

7. They have enabled the United States to prevent Cuba from sending into the United States economy enough sugar, raw and refined, to deprive all other countries of the privilege of sending in any of their sugar and so sharing in the United States market.

8. They have made government sugar policy more acceptable to all concerned than has been the case under any other system of management.

Now what of the matter of price? Listen to this quotation:

> While prices to farmers producing beets and cane are more than double those of the pre-war years, they have lagged behind the rise in the prices of almost all other farm products.

Then, another quotation:

> . . . sugar prices have lagged far behind the rapid upward movement of the index of all food prices.

As a result of the deep and concerted study of the whole situation affecting sugar, United States representatives formed some settled convictions of importance to Canada. Certain of these are:

1. No nation can afford to permit its domestic sugar industry to be destroyed, impaired or even threatened.

2. No nation can afford to permit unregulated importation of refined sugar into its economy.

3. The means most useful and fair in regulating the sugar situation of the United States, and presumably in Canada, is the quota system as illustrated in the United States sugar acts of 1934, 1937 and 1948.

I think the general conclusion that all careful thinkers will come to might be expressed thus, that Canada would probably be best able to encourage her producers and protect her consumers of both beet and cane sugar by the use of the quota system determined and administered under a sugar act, like the United States sugar act of 1948, regulating by statute the amount of sugar, both raw and refined, permitted to enter her economy from each indicated source of supply.

There is one matter that does need attention before we leave the general aspect of the whole question. During 1952 a number of marketing irregularities developed into which I do not propose to go. For those who may wish to examine this matter scientifically, these irregularities are discussed well in an article entitled "Competitive Practices Sharpen in Sugar Industry Marketing" in the February 13, 1953, issue of the Journal of Commerce. These marketing practices have rendered it impossible for the United States to keep out certain sugar shipments which have been sent to her shores, in a satisfactory way. Thus there has been an amount of interference with stability of prices in the United States during 1952.

It looks as though, if one were to have an ideal act, one would have to have a sugar act similar to the one of 1948, and also have associated with it the essential features at least of the Canadian order in council P.C. 181 under which it was possible for the government to fix for tariff purposes the minimum price of sugar in the land of origin at a certain set price. Under it the set price was $2.30. The order in council, as hon. members will recall, was passed in January, 1932.

I think perhaps hon. members would be interested in certain quotations concerning the working out of the sugar acts of the United States. I have a quotation from the article by Mr. C. F. McCarthy to which I have already referred and in which he reports a speech made by Philip E. Jones, sugar branch official of the department of agriculture of the United States at a recent meeting of the national federation of beet sugar growers in Billings, Montana. I quote from Mr. Jones' remarks as quoted in Mr. McCarthy's article:

> The sugar act of 1948 and the predecessor acts have operated to the benefit of many groups which participate in the production, processing and consumption of sugar. Incomes of sugar beet and sugar cane growers have been substantially increased, as have wages of field workers in all United States areas. Sugar prices paid by the consumer have remained moderate. Increases in domestic production have been restricted but domestic production has not been permanently reduced. Foreign supplying areas have benefited from increased prices obtained for those quantities of sugar marketed under United States quotas and they have shared in our expanding total sugar requirements.
> Growers now obtain a much larger proportion of the consumer's sugar dollar, largely because of the more stabilized conditions under which the industry operates, and because of the continued efforts on the part of sugar mills and refineries to improve their processing efficiency. As a result of these conditions, mill and refinery costs have not reflected the full impact of the general price inflation which has occurred in the last fifteen years. Processors generally have operated profitably and at the same time have been able to increase substantially the proportion of total sales income paid to growers for sugar cane and beets.

I give a number of quotations now from a work which I hardly feel free to name. It is an unpublished study by an eminent Canadian authority of the conditions in the United States under these acts. It is a study made in 1952, not yet available generally but I have access to it. Here are some of the quotations:

> During the operation of the Jones-Costigan act the duty on Cuban sugar was reduced from 2 cents to ·9 cents.

I quote again:

> While one could expand at length the history of the 1948 sugar act operations, it may suffice to note finally that the tariff was again reduced in this period. Under the general agreements on tariffs and trade the duty on Cuban sugar was reduced, effective January 1, 1948, from ·75 to ·50 cents per lb. The full duty rate was reduced from ·9375 to ·6785 and later to ·6250 cents per pound.

And:

> . . . it seems most improbable that any substantial reduction in tariff could have been achieved in the absence of specific alternatives such as the sugar quota system.

Again I quote:

> After three years of the Jones-Costigan act the consumer paid only from one-tenth to two-tenths of a cent more per pound for sugar than at the beginning of the operation.

And:

> Further, the quota system continued to raise the American price from one-half to one cent per pound over the price which would have prevailed in the absence of quotas.

I continue:

> Until mid-1950 the quota system yielded the U.S. price of sugar up to 1·6 cents (generally less than one cent, however), higher than the world price due to quota effect alone. With the world price of sugar rising rapidly from about $4.50 per hundred early in 1950 to nearly $8.00 in mid-1951, the quota premium situation was reversed and rendered into a quota discount. This protection for American sugar users extended almost continuously from July 1950 through 1951. While it was generally in the neighbourhood of one-half cent a lb. it did reach more than two cents per lb. in the mid-summer of 1951.

And again:

> Sugar prices during this period gave unmistakable evidence that the quota system could be employed to the advantage of the American consumer.

And:

> . . . in terms of price, certainly not in other ways, however, the American consumers and industrial users have generally been brought closer to world sugar price levels than they were before the introduction of the quota system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a comment or two in a general way on this quota system. Not very long ago one of the members of the house, and I will not name him, made a statement to the effect that the quota system was a restrictive system. He said that quotas were the most restrictive of all trade measures that could be practised. Well, it is evident from the account I have given of the quota system in the United States under the 1934, 1937, and 1948 acts that the quota system has not been restrictive to trade in that nation in relation to sugar.

One can obtain an illustration from the green and red lights on the street. When you come to a red light it means stop—and it does mean stop. That, however, does not restrict traffic. That actually makes it possible for traffic to be more free and more rapid than it could possibly be without red lights. I suggest that a quota system, which might look like an absolute prevention or an absolute measure forbidding trade, actually, under the circumstances which have obtained in the United States, has been a measure making for freer trade.

We might also talk about lower tariffs. We have a number of men in our government offices who have a sort of craze over trade and low tariffs. They will be greatly comforted to discover that, under the quota system and these three acts in the United States, they have lowered the tariffs in a way that might have been impossible if it had not been for the quota system.

There are a great many people who talk about non-discrimination in trade. Some statements have been made by certain members in this house to the effect that they want trade to be just as free as the wind. They did not use just those words, but if there were other words to describe anything freer to express the thought they would have been using those other words.

I ask hon. members how long trade in respect of sugar in Canada will be free if we have Cuban sugar entering unrestricted into our market. I have already referred to that in my speech.

If we let Cuban sugar come in here, refined sugar, there will not be another nation on the face of the earth which will send one pound of sugar into Canada. Anyone who sees non-discrimination in trade in that prospect must have coloured glasses of a kind that I have not yet seen.

I do not hesitate to recommend to those who have authority in respect of sugar in Canada that they should give most careful thought to this matter of the quota system as it has been used and applied in the United States sugar acts of 1934, 1937 and 1948.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in support of the amendment which was moved by my hon. colleague, the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) on March 23, and I think it would be well if the amendment were read to the house now, because it was moved over two weeks ago. The amendment reads:

> That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "in the opinion of this house consideration should be given by the government to the advisability of introducing during the present session legislation to provide floor prices for agricultural products at such levels as to ensure producers a fair price-cost relationship."

Now, to use an oft-quoted, slang term, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has been viewing the whole situation from a little pink cloud through rose-coloured glasses. I realize, however, that there is probably a good reason for this ultraoptimism and arrogant attitude. We are told that there is going to be an election before the snow flies; and probably the minister is just getting wound up for the campaign. At page 3225 of Hansard for March 23 the minister, in referring to farm prices, had this to say:

> I am not going to try to guess what they will be ten years from now, but I am going to make the statement that so long as this government is in power, and so long as the policy we have been following throughout the last ten years is continued, prices will go down less than they would under any other kind of policy that could be established in this country by any other government.

I have always been taught that no one is so good that he can never be replaced. History is very interesting but it is only interesting when told truthfully and when facts are stated. It is rather tiresome for those of us on this side of the house to hear members from the government side keep repeating and repeating what happened in the 1930's and how this government has improved the situation since that time. I want to remind members on the government side of the house that the depression or crash, as they called it, occurred in 1929 and the election at which the Liberal government was defeated did not take place until July 1930. Anyone who suspects that the Conservative government in power between 1930 and 1935 was the cause of the depression is certainly not conversant with the facts.

On page 3218 the Minister of Agriculture in referring to parity and I will quote his words:

> The only objection I have to the word "parity" is that I seldom know what people mean when they use it.

There is an interjection:

> An hon. Member: They don't, either.

And then:

> Mr. Gardiner: I do not understand what they are really talking about when they use the word.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is rather odd to find that the minister himself, when speaking to the federation of agriculture in Victoria on January 27, makes use of the word "parity". If he cannot understand what other people mean, why would he want to use the word himself?

Mr. Gardiner: I explained what I meant before I used it.

Mr. Charlton: The explanation was rather dim. I was there and I heard the minister. Even if that is the case, the minister uses the word "parity" in his own speech, even though he claims he does not understand what other people are talking about when they use it.

Referring to this speech I want to say something which is rather beside the point for the moment. There is a mistake in the figures the minister used in this speech and that mistake was transferred to Hansard of March 5, 1953, page 2663. The minister used the average annual volume of production for cheese as 20,023,000 cwt. I believe he has added a zero which should not be there.

Following up the use of this word "parity" we find that when the Liberal government took over in 1935 farm prices were said to be then about 20 per cent below parity. Now, after all this bragging we have heard about what the Liberal government has done in this country we find that in 1940, after five years of Liberal government, the parity was reduced to 23 per cent for farm products. Then, in 1941, when this government froze the prices of farm products, parity had dropped to a low of 30. Now, Mr. Speaker, that condition does not agree with so many of the statements we have heard in this House of Commons during the past several years.

It is often the case that pre-election statements are quite different from post-election statements. In 1935, I believe it was, the Minister of Agriculture had a famous dodger that he used before the campaign. I should like to quote what was on that dodger. It reads:

> Dollar wheat will give you a job and enable you to own your own home. Dollar wheat will pay for your light and water and give you a telephone. Dollar wheat will pay your grocery bill and buy boots, shoes and clothing for the whole family. Dollar wheat will provide a surplus for a rainy day. Vote Liberal.

Now, what happened? In 1935, before the Conservative government was defeated, the price of wheat was 87·5 cents. In 1938 the Liberal government announced a price for wheat of 60 cents a bushel. There was so much concern out west about the price going so low that the government was forced finally to pay 70 cents. The fact still remains that the announced price in 1938 was 60 cents. The price in 1935, Mr. Speaker, was 87·5 cents.

In addition to that, before the 1935 election the Liberals boasted that they would increase the export market tremendously. What are the facts? During the period 1932 to 1935, the export of wheat was 832 million bushels, and from 1936 to 1939 it was 707 million bushels, showing quite a reduction in those years. I have taken the trouble to look up the figures for exports to Great Britain. I have a list here of all the exports from 1920 to 1950, showing the exports of each product for each year. I am going to use the years 1929, 1934 and 1936. I think they are very fair. The 1929 figure would be while the Liberals were in power; the 1934 figure would be after three years of Conservative power; and the 1936 figure would be after the Liberals were back in office. This list is as follows:

Product	Year	Quantity
		Bbls.
Apples—Fresh	1929	866,003
	1934	3,057,897
	1936	2,202,053
		Lbs.

	1934	988,125
	1936	399,100
		Cwt.

	1934	76,763
	1936	24,420
Bacon and Ham, Shoulders and Sides	1929	329,754
	1934	945,597
	1936	24,420
Cheese	1929	1,025,387
	1934	714,133
	1936	528,781
Milk Powder, Whole	1929	36,631
	1934	40,074
	1936	33,083
Milk, Condensed	1929	16,295
	1934	11,218
	1936	3,633
		Lbs.

	1934	8,421
	1936	2,128
Pork, Pickled in Barrels	1929	141
	1934	1,027
	1936	275

That last figure was the result of two years of Liberal regime, so I hope we have heard the last of the boast that the Liberals have done so much to keep British trade.

Mr. Gardiner: Just because my hon. friend goes a long piece back he must not suppose that people have forgotten that we were not in power for two years in 1936. We only came into office about November 1, 1935.

Mr. Charlton: Of course, the Conservatives had only been in power for about that length of time but you blamed them for having a depression on their hands. Are you not taking credit for anything within the first two years?

Mr. Gardiner: You just got through saying that we had been in power for two years in 1936, but we had not.

Mr. Charlton: I am sorry; it was the second year.

Mr. Gardiner: As a matter of fact, we were still suffering from what the Conservatives did for five years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, before the last election in 1949 a great many statements were made by the minister and some were made by his parliamentary assistant. But as I said before, pre-election statements are generally quite different from post-election statements. I have here in my hand copies of Canadian Press releases of statements made by the minister. For instance, here is one of December 8, 1948:

In Ottawa today Agriculture Minister Gardiner announced that the United Kingdom has agreed to purchase next year (1949) 160 million pounds of Canadian bacon, 50 million pounds of cheese and 1,530,000 cases of shell eggs.

On April 11, 1949, another statement from a Canadian Press release:

Agriculture Minister Gardiner said Saturday that because Canadians were eating 100 per cent more pork products than in the prewar days Canada would be unable to fulfil her 160 million-pound bacon contract with Britain.

Again on May 19,—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of what year?

Mr. Charlton: —1949, is another Canadian Press release which reads:

"The cheese contract with Britain was reduced to 50 million pounds after production in Canada had dropped following the war when dairy farmers found it more profitable to sell their milk for canning." Mr. Gardiner said Britain was prepared to take more "but we realized we might not be able to meet even this amount", Mr. Gardiner declared.

On May 30, 1949, again just previous to the election:

"Every country in the world, and particularly Britain, could take more of our food products if we had them to sell and particularly if these countries could pay," Mr. Gardiner said over the C.B.C. network.

Position of Agricultural Industry

On June 23, 1949, just previous to the election:

Agriculture minister Gardiner said tonight, "There is no evidence" to support the contention of C.C.F. leader Coldwell that Canada is losing the British food market. Mr. Gardiner said "the evidence is quite the opposite."

Then again on June 6—and this is another Canadian Press release of June 7 of a statement by the minister—we find this:

When critics of the government claim Canada is losing its overseas markets they don't know what they are talking about.

On May 20 of the same year, 1949, the parliamentary assistant had this to say, and I am quoting another Canadian Press report:

Our opponents would indicate that United Kingdom food contracts are going by the board. This is far from the truth. The United Kingdom would ask Canada to provide more bacon in 1950.

What was the statement after the election? This is interesting, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on December 10, 1949, as reported at page 3087 of Hansard, we have the minister making this statement:

When we met with them—British government officials—in the fall of 1947—

And mind you, before all those other statements that I just read.

—they said they did not want our food products except wheat. The second time they visited us, in 1948, they included cheese,—

That they did not want.

—but they did not include cheese in 1947.

Mr. Gardiner: They included cheese that they did want, not that they did not want.

Mr. Charlton: Would the minister allow me to quote his own figures?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; he does not want to hear them.

Mr. Gardiner: Those are not figures.

Mr. Charlton: The quotation continues:

They said: We prefer not to have these products. As a matter of fact, at certain stages they said they would not take these products, and at certain stages we said other things which induced them to take the products.

Then as reported at page 3221 of Hansard of March 23, 1953, in his speech the minister had this to say:

Since that time we have not been marketing food products in Britain because Britain told us in so many words that she was not going to buy from us.

A little farther down in the same page, in the same column we find this:

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did they say?

Mr. Gardiner: They said they did not want any of our food products except wheat.

Position of Agricultural Industry

And over in the next column on the same page we find:

> We were told quite frankly that they preferred not to have them.

Mr. Gardiner: That is exactly what the other statements were, if the hon. member will read the speech.

Mr. Charlton: Am I asked by the minister to repeat what he said on December 10 after the election back in 1949 and the statements the minister made about our being wrong when we said we were losing the British market? Does he want me to read that all again? Did he not catch it?

Mr. Gardiner: It is not necessary for the hon. member to read them. I could give them to him in less time than he could read them.

Mr. Charlton: It is not much wonder that the minister has not been able to sell our food products to Britain after making those statements. Apparently the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair), who has not those statements to his credit, can sell his products. Four and a quarter million pounds of salmon have been sold by the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, I say that this government has no floor price policy. It is only a hit-or-miss program of expediency. For instance, the floor price on hogs last fall was $26. About October 1, the minister announced that the price as of January 1 would be dropped to $23. Now, we mean either one thing or the other. Do we believe in the fact that we can produce food here for the hungry nations of the world and thus aid in the defeat of communism or do we believe that we want to restrict production here and supply just our own needs? It would appear that during the last couple of years the Minister of Agriculture has had that particular policy. What other reason would there possibly have been for announcing, three months ahead, a drop of $3 in the floor price of hogs? Then we come to the floor price of beef. The promise was made that the floor price for beef would be maintained until the export market was opened to the United States. Was it, Mr. Speaker? No, it was dropped a week previous to that date.

The minister attended the federation of agriculture meeting at Victoria and should have ascertained the feeling of that meeting. With reference to it, here is a press article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 6 and which reads in part:

> Meat Price Probe Urged by Farmers
> The government was asked today by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to institute an investigation into the spread in meat prices between farm and market basket.
> The federation said: "It has been apparent that the lower prices being received by our farmers for livestock have not been reflected in the price of meat to the consumer".

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand sessional paper No. 165B which contains an answer to a question put on the order paper of Friday, March 20, 1953, wherein I asked several questions. I shall have to read them in order to convey the meaning that I want to bring out. I asked:

> 1. How many pounds of canned pork were bought by the government during each of the months since January, 1952?
> 2. From whom were these purchases made, and what was the price and quantity in each case?
>
> 3. What were the total sales of canned pork, giving quantity and value, by the government, during each of the months since January, 1952?
> 4. —

And by the way, this question was not answered, Mr. Speaker.

> —Through what agencies were these sales made, indicating volume and commission paid in each case?
> 5. What quantity of canned pork is presently held by the government?

In a discussion with the minister last year in the house he said that 50 per cent of the hog put into the can by the packers consisted of bone and fat. I disagreed with him on that occasion and I have since found out from sources that I believe to be accurate that anywhere from 35 per cent to 38 per cent of a grade A or a grade B hog would be bone and fat. Let us take the 38 per cent figure and apply it to 100 pounds of warm dressed pork which cost the packers $26. When you take the 38 per cent of bone and fat from that 100 pounds of dressed pork you have left 62 pounds of pork meat for which they were paid 62¼ cents a pound. That came to $38.57. The canning, as stated by the minister on that occasion, cost 12 cents a pound. I take it that that would include all the costs. When you multiply 12 cents by 62 you arrive at a figure of $7.44, making a total of $31.13. The difference between their cost of $26 and $31.13 would be $5.13 per hundredweight.

The packer or the canner was paid a commission on the sale of some of the pork. On lots of 450 cases or more they were paid $2.98 a hundred. On less than 450 case lots they were paid an additional $2. That would make $4.98. So we will suppose that on less than 450 case lots they had a total profit of $10.11 a hundred, which comes out to 32·8 per cent on their original investment of $26 plus cost of canning.

Strange as it may seem, an answer to a question I asked in respect to commission contained the following:

> On these sales a brokerage fee of 2½ per cent is allowed any Canadian firm acting as an agent of the board. This covers all selling expenses incurred by the board.

Now, the $2.98 allowed was on lots of 450 cases or over, and it gives a percentage of 4·8. If less than 450 case lots were sold the percentage came to 8. And yet this is a statement which says that the total costs to the board would be 2½ per cent.

The minister has stated recently that there were no troublesome surpluses besides canned pork and beef held in the United States. There are other surpluses. I have figures here from the weekly dairy produce market report for the week ended March 14. This is a report put out by the Department of Agriculture marketing service. It shows that in the week ended March 14, 1953, the total production of cheese was 3,157 boxes. That was just 144 per cent more than the amount produced in the same period the year previously. Yet the minister continues to say that there is no surplus. I wonder where this cheese that is produced is going. The minister claims, as he has claimed in the house before, that we could eat it all here, and that even Ontario, producing that much cheese, could eat it all here, or maybe a few pounds would be eaten in the west, but most of it could be eaten in Ontario. At page 3220 of Hansard the minister said:

> Food production is the highest in our experience. The reason for the increase is to be found in the fact that the only part of the Dominion of Canada that produces more food than it can eat is the prairie provinces.

Then a little further down he said:

> One product that in the past was not consumed in the province was cheese but in the last year Ontario ate practically all the cheese it produced too. They do not eat quite all of it; they ship some of it west and we help them to eat it; but certainly it can all be consumed in Canada and consumed easily.

I happen to know that there is quite a surplus of cheese at the moment. With these figures of 144 per cent more production than there was a year ago it is presumed that there will be a considerable amount of surplus cheese in a very short time.

During 1952 this country imported a considerable amount of cheese, as set forth in an answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin) on March 4, 1953. According to that answer the total amount of cheese imported into this country in 1952 was 12,086,764 pounds. In the face of a surplus of cheese this government permitted the importation of 12 million pounds.

In the case of powdered milk, the minister knows that there is a surplus of powdered milk, both skim and whole powdered milk. He knows that. If he does not know it then I advise him to get in touch with his officials who do know.

Mr. Gardiner: We have a surplus now, but we had no considerable surplus when the speech was made.

Mr. Charlton: I am not speaking about last year, I am speaking about now, and there is a surplus of powdered milk as the minister must know.

Mr. Gardiner: We have it. Of course we know.

Mr. Charlton: The situation is most embarrassing to this government. When the minister was speaking to the dominion-provincial agricultural conference last fall, he said, as reported in the Ottawa Journal:

> Price problems of farmers up to provinces says Gardiner.

He does not want to face the responsibility now that prices are getting bad. He wants to hand it back to the provinces as their responsibility.

The responsibility with respect to vegetable oils was handed back to the provinces on top of a reduction of 13 per cent in the tariff on oils coming into this country. Another very peculiar thing the minister said the other day was that, on top of the rosy picture he was painting, the farmers were better off now than they ever were and they knew it. I think he would be advised to speak to some of the people he is talking about before he makes that statement again. He said, as reported at page 3220 of Hansard:

> If one really wanted to make out a table which would indicate what the relationships are as between the farmers of the east and the farmers of the west, I think one would be able to show that about 90 per cent of the farmers in the eastern part of Canada do not make enough to pay income tax at all.

For the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion of Canada, which is an agricultural country, to make a statement of that kind is almost unbelievable.

Mr. Gardiner: Is it not correct? I am accustomed to making correct statements, and that statement is correct, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Charlton: Either one or the other of the statements is not correct. Either "90 per cent of the farmers are not making enough to pay income tax" or "they are better off now than they were before, and they know it." Both statements cannot be right.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, yes, they can.

Mr. Charlton: We will let the minister have his fun.

Mr. Gardiner: When your party was in power they did not have any income tax to pay, in most cases.

Mr. Charlton: Oh, the minister can have his fun. It is just previous to an election. If he wants to make those statements we will see how many people believe them.

I presume it is the western wheat crop that is bolstering the average farm income across Canada, and in that connection the minister makes this statement as reported at page 3223 of Hansard:

> You can still see practically every bin the farmers have on their farms filled with wheat. In other words the farmer has practically a whole crop still to market.

And farther on he says:

> —but five million tons—more food to send out to the world, because of growing surpluses—

Now, 5 million tons sounds like a great amount of food; but if the minister would take the difference between an ordinary wheat crop I think he will find it is nearer twice 5 million tons of extra food produced in the west in the year 1952.

It takes 166,666,666 bushels to make 5 million tons; and the wheat crop in the west last year was far more than that above the average. So in that instance the minister is low. But he is taking that figure of the added wheat crop as bolstering the average farm income across Canada.

At this point I should like to quote from the Current Review setting out agricultural conditions in Canada. This is the issue of March, 1953, volume 13, number 4. At page 2 it says:

> The higher income from field crops because of the harvest of a large part of the 1951 grain crop in the spring of 1952 and the unprecedented 1952 crops, did much to balance the lowered income from livestock and their products.

That is the answer to the reasonably high income across Canada which, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said this afternoon, is 14 per cent below the 1952 figure. The income of livestock producers is down 30 per cent from 1951.

Twenty per cent of the population in Canada received around 11 per cent of the national income. The farmers must have a realistic floor price policy. It is as important to the consumers as it is to the producers, as a means of stabilizing production and assuring a reasonable supply of food. The floor price policy is actually a Conservative policy brought out in 1942 by the then leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Bracken. Owing to the pressure exerted by agriculture all across this country, the Liberal government put it into legislative form in 1944.

In closing I wish to say this: Let the government step down from the throne of self-satisfaction and arrogance on which they have placed themselves, and accept the responsibility which is rightly theirs.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my voice to those who have already spoken in support of this amendment, and I do so partly because I live in an agricultural area and partly because I know, as I believe all hon. members know, that there is no industry in Canada as unstable today as agriculture.

Recently I have received a number of letters from farmers in my own constituency complaining about the deal they are now getting, and have had over the last year, and prior to that. I would remind hon. members including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that prior to the last crop year, in certain sections of this country, the wheat farmers were either rained out or snowed out. The crop two years ago, in many parts of the country, including many sections of my own constituency, remained unharvested. Last year the farmers had difficulty due to the glut of lower grade wheat in the elevators, which resulted in difficulty in moving the grain.

While we realize that there was an outlet at the Pacific coast, we are now faced with a strike problem there, and this again affects the movement of grain. All these things enter into the problems the farmers in western Canada have faced recently. To my mind the farmer, of all men, attempts to run his farm in the midst of constant uncertainty. If he is a wheat farmer he is uncertain in the matter of harvesting his crop; he is uncertain of the yield; he is completely reliant upon favourable elements in order that he may reap a fair crop with a fair yield. He must face the possibilities of frost; and there is the further problem of hail, which some may suggest can be covered by insurance. Nevertheless it remains an uncertain factor. Then there is the danger of drought and the danger of grasshoppers. There is the danger of rust.

All these things make the farmer's problems great, because he is constantly faced with uncertainty. Even though the elements may be favourable, he must depend upon prices, over which he has no control. If he is carrying on mixed farming, in a small way, and raises chickens so that he may sell eggs, again he will find a fluctuation in the prices of his products. If he is a dairy farmer he must face substitutes for butterfat. If he raises hogs or cattle he will find the market most unstable.

So I say once again that, of all men, the farmer must attempt to run his farm in the midst of continual uncertainty. He is in a different position from those in the secondary industries, who can determine the prices they shall receive for their products; and they usually get those prices. They can figure all their cost factors, something the farmer is not always able to do. We might say that most of the farmer's problems are concerned with the uncertainty of the elements and the uncertainty of having a crop. Of course the government might say that it cannot control the elements and cannot say how much rain should fall or how much frost should be kept away. But there is one thing the government can do. It can so legislate as to give and guarantee to the farmer a fair price for his production. That is not dependent upon the elements at all. It is an economic factor which a proper and adequate government policy can provide for the farmer.

Over the years the farmer has perhaps had a greater struggle than any other industrial producer in the country. We all recall the days when the grain exchange had things pretty well its own way. Those who were responsible for the selling of wheat on the grain exchange had certain protection. Whether it was elevator organizations, flour mills or banks, whoever was in the grain selling business, they were always able to protect themselves against great losses. But there once again the farmer was at the mercy of markets and prices and those who sold his grain. The farmers began to take action, and as we all know they began to organize, as was only right, and the wheat pool movement was brought into existence.

Over the years the wheat pools have done a good deal for the farmers, but once again the wheat pools are largely dependent upon prices. We all realize what happened as a result of the 1929 stock market crash which brought about the world-wide depression. The wheat pools found themselves in tremendous difficulty. They faced the difficulty of a falling market, and having already arranged to pay the farmer a certain initial price they had to borrow in order to do so. They found themselves in debt to the tune of about $22 million. The provincial governments of the west came to their assistance, and eventually the wheat pools were able to wipe out the deficit. I relate these facts, Mr. Speaker, to indicate the struggle of the farmer and the fact that in all his struggles he has had in the end to rely upon prices over which he had no control.

The crash, the depression that followed and the crises which the wheat pools went through in those days taught another lesson, and after further struggle another advance was made in the bringing into existence of the Canadian wheat board. I think the majority of the farmers of the west are glad the wheat board was brought into existence. It was an attempt to protect the farmer so far as the selling of his grain was concerned, and to give him a more stabilized price system. But even so the farmer has little or nothing to say with respect to the price that he should get for his wheat.

I was interested to receive the other day a number of resolutions passed at the annual convention of the farmers' union of Alberta last December. I was rather amazed to find that a number of them dealt with prices. For the purposes of the record I should like to read one or two of them. I shall only read those that have to do with prices, because that is what we are concerned with particularly in this debate. The first resolution reads as follows:

> Whereas for some years past the domestic price of wheat for Canadian consumption has been fixed at the same level as wheat sold under the international wheat agreement, and
> Whereas during this whole period farm costs and the Canadian price level have risen continuously and the Canadian wheat producers of the prairie region have thus been forced to subsidize the consumers of the whole of Canada, and
>
> Whereas there is no just reason why this should continue;
> Therefore be it resolved that the domestic price of wheat consumed in Canada should be raised immediately to $2.25 per bushel, basis No. 1 Northern at Fort William, and revised annually in relation to the costs of production.

It has already been mentioned by previous speakers that while there has been a decline in farm prices there has been an incline in the cost of production. Here is another resolution concerning the establishment of floor prices which reads as follows:

> Whereas the present wide spread in floor prices between eastern and western cattle markets is a serious injustice to western stock raisers, and
> Whereas the present temporary floor price does not allow eastern stock men to plan for the future or stabilize their industry, and
>
> Whereas prevailing prices on lower grades of butcher cattle bear no relation to their true value, and spreads between eastern and western markets are excessive on these grades also, and
>
> Whereas retail prices on meat have not dropped in proportion to the price of cattle, and consequently the increased consumption of meat which should have developed has not materialized;
> Therefore be it resolved that the farmers' union of Alberta requests that the dominion government establish floor prices on all western markets at the same level as floor prices in Toronto and Montreal, and that an investigation be held as to why the retail meat prices have not fallen in proportion to the prices of live cattle.

So much for wheat and so much for cattle. We come now to another product produced by the farmer, and here is a short resolution on the floor price on eggs to the producer which speaks for itself. It reads as follows:

Whereas the present floor price on eggs is to the packer;

Therefore be it resolved that we recommend that the floor price be set to the producer and not to the packer.

While I am dealing with eggs may I read another resolution that deals with the subject from a little different angle. It is as follows:

Whereas dominion and provincial governments are continually urging the farmer to engage in balanced mixed farming, and

Whereas with farm overhead steadily rising, with price floors on butter and grade A eggs low, and a serious decline in the price of butterfat and lower grades of eggs defeating the purpose of the price floor, which is the giving of reasonable protection to the producer;

Therefore be it resolved that the dominion government be requested immediately to implement an effective floor price on eggs, guaranteeing a fair return to the primary producer.

Well, we go a little further in these resolutions and we find another in respect of parity prices. We have prices again, the thing that concerns the farmer these days.

The resolution reads:

Whereas the farmers' production costs are continually rising, and

Whereas all farm produce is on a sharp decline;

Therefore be it resolved that steps be taken to ensure the farming industries an adequate margin of profit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we will have to realize that when it comes to the matter of the prices the farmer gets for his production in relation to the prices he has to pay for the things he buys—and most of those things have to be written into his cost of production—we are in sad need of parity. In respect of that I wonder if I might read just a small paragraph from Mr. Hannam's address, as president, to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. This was given at the seventh annual convention of that body held in Victoria in January last. In dealing with farm purchasing power Mr. Hannam points out that the purchasing power of the farmer has declined, and here is the paragraph I would like to read:

For those who have the erroneous impression that farmers have been enjoying unprecedented prosperity, it would be well to restate the fact that the farmer's income depends not upon prices alone but upon farm prices in relation to farm costs. In recent years farm costs have risen more than farm prices. Based on price relationship, the farmer's purchasing power if represented by the index of 100 in 1948 has been less every year since. For 1952 it stands at 82. Since it is generally agreed that farm prices may be down somewhat and farm costs are expected to hold or go a little higher, this farm purchasing power relationship may well drop to 80 or less during 1953, down by 20 per cent or more since 1948.

I do not wish to detain the house, Mr. Speaker, and it may be that you desire to get a vote on this as soon as possible. May I conclude by saying that the problem is an economic one, or shall I use the expression "a financial one", because that is what prices are, and there is not much difference in my mind between prices and dollars. Dollars are the medium which causes prices to move and goods to move. You find a number on a price tag and the number means dollars in relation to the value of the goods.

Where a problem is a financial one, then it should not be beyond solution. If our present government is not able to devise a financial policy that is able to solve these problems then the sooner the people of Canada know the better it will be. The government is not going to resign and let someone else jump into the saddle. We know that; so the sooner the people know that they will not get a solution the better it will be, for the people will have to move in order to put someone in the saddle who knows how to handle the problem. Perhaps that day is not far distant.

Now I say two things are necessary and these things can be done by a government if they wish to have a proper financial policy. The first is to bring down proper and adequate legislation concerning the matter of price support. The second thing is to devise a proper and effective financial policy. If that is done, then the problem which the farmer faces today will be solved. If it is not done, then agriculture in this country will have to struggle along in the midst of the uncertainties it has had in the past and still more uncertainties in the future, for we are living in an extremely uncertain world at a time of great uncertainty.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN DISASTER RELIEF FUND, INCORPORATED

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved the second reading of Bill No. 229, to incorporate Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, Incorporated.

Disaster Relief Fund

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "An act to incorporate Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, Incorporated" and it has to do with the disposition of the moneys which were voluntarily subscribed for relief purposes as a result of the Red river flood in Manitoba in 1950 but which were not all expended. For the information of the house I might say that the total amount of money subscribed, plus the interest earned on any balance, amounted to $9,216,000, and that there was expended for purposes of relief $7,545,000 plus an amount equal to about $211,000 as the cost of receiving and distributing the relief, or a total of $7,757,000, leaving an unexpended balance of $1,459,000 as the amount of money we are concerned with in this measure, which this parliament is being asked to provide a means of utilizing.

Under other circumstances this money might have been returned to those who had contributed, but in an undertaking of this great magnitude that would have been quite an impossible task. Inasmuch as the money was contributed from all over Canada, from the United States, from Great Britain and from many other countries including, I am told, Greece, those having to do with the collection and disposition of the money feel that this balance should be made available to all the people of Canada and not be retained in Manitoba where the disaster occurred. This sentiment led to the proposal to establish Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, Incorporated.

I might add here, Mr. Speaker, that a measure complementary to this bill which is now being considered was passed by the Manitoba legislature. This bill has been passed by the Senate, where it was considered by the committee on banking and commerce, and it now comes before this house.

As hon. members know, the Red river area centring on the city of Winnipeg where the Assiniboine river joins the Red river, has been visited by critical floods of greater or lesser severity over the known history of that area. These two rivers—the Red rising in the United States and the Assiniboine in northeastern Saskatchewan—drain a very large area of relatively flat, level country. The records show that floods have occurred in this area in the years 1852, 1861, 1882, 1892, 1904, 1916, 1948 and 1950. In each instance they have followed a fairly general pattern, namely high fall precipitation, heavy frosts, heavy snow, followed by a late spring break-up frequently accompanied by heavy spring rains. With these natural conditions prevailing, additional contributing factors towards flooding are, I fear, increasing owing to the clearing of more land and the extension of increased drainage resulting in a more rapid run-off.

Another factor which I think most hon. members here realize but which I believe should also be mentioned is that the Red river has its source to the south where the break-up is earlier and its outlet to the north into lake Winnipeg, where the break-up is slower and usually later. If this condition were reversed the hazards from flooding would not be nearly as great as they are under the existing circumstances which nature has established.

I think I should also point out that the flooded area was not confined to the cities of Winnipeg and St. Boniface, although admittedly that is where the greatest damage was done, but included farm lands, towns and villages along the Red river to the United States boundary, and large areas in the United States, even to the city of Grand Forks.

When the flood of 1950 struck the city of Winnipeg early in May, may I say that the people of Winnipeg were not caught wholly by surprise or unprepared. I think it is only fair to say that accurate engineering data was available with regard to the possibility of flooding, and preparations towards meeting such a condition were actively undertaken.

As one of the early steps in connection with that disaster—and this is one of some importance in connection with the matter with which we are dealing here this afternoon—in the early stages when it was recognized that the flood was going to be severe, a committee of Winnipeg citizens known as the "mayor's committee" was set up on May 9 in that city. Two days later this committee was enlarged and became known as the Manitoba flood relief fund committee. Mr. H. W. Manning, vice-president and managing director of the Great-West Life Assurance Company, accepted the chairmanship. This committee was later enlarged to include representatives of the whole area. This is the committee that accepted contributions and took care of their disbursement. Everyone associated with the committee, except perhaps the clerical staff, contributed his time and efforts voluntarily.

The disbursements from the fund were, generally speaking, for the loss of personal property and personal items as against what might be called the rehabilitation of real property. It was limited for the most part to include repairs and the replacement of essential clothing, household furnishings, living expenses for those who were evacuated, livestock, feed, seed, repairs to machinery, and generally those items not likely to be covered by insurance. I am told that the cost of this type of relief alone amounted to something over $4 million.

Assistance was also given to small businesses for the loss of stock and fixtures to the extent of $863,000. Payments were made to farmers for damage to machinery, replacement of livestock and for acreage that could not be seeded, to the amount of $948,000. An amount of about $663,000 was paid to voluntary organizations that assisted in providing relief.

These moneys, I might say here, should not be confused with payments that were made by the respective municipalities and governments and which were utilized to rebuild houses, roads, bridges and real property, and in the building of dikes to guard against a future recurrence. This assistance was provided on somewhat the same basis as that which was provided in connection with the Fraser valley flood and the two serious fires that occurred in Quebec. To this type of assistance the federal government contributed 75 per cent and the provincial government of Manitoba, in the case of rural municipalities, 25 per cent. In the case of the cities of Winnipeg and St. Boniface, the provincial government contributed 12½ per cent. As I have already said, this assistance was entirely separate and apart from what was done through the voluntary flood relief fund.

Now, sir, this bill, as I said earlier, proposes to establish Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, Incorporated. As indicated in section 3 of the bill it is proposed to divide Canada, for the purposes of administration, into five separate divisions: The maritime division which includes the four eastern provinces; the Quebec division; the Ontario division; the prairie division, including the three western provinces; and British Columbia. The bill also provides for the naming of one member from each division as a member of the board. As indicated in the bill, for the maritime division the name recommended is that of the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Chief Justice of Nova Scotia; for the Quebec division, it is the Hon. Philippe Brais, C.B.E., Q.C.; for the Ontario division, James S. Duncan, C.M.G., president of the Massey-Harris Company; for the prairie division, H. W. Manning, vice-president and managing director of the Great-West Life Assurance Company, and for the British Columbia division Mr. A. E. Grauer, Ph.D., chairman of the board of the British Columbia Power Corporation.

The members shall in turn elect from themselves one member to be president and one member to be vice-president of the corporation. All its members shall serve without salary, but may be paid reasonable expenses.

The members shall also have the right to appoint a secretary, who may be paid, as well as other secretarial staff. The corporation shall have its accounts audited by a qualified chartered accountant, and the corporation may co-operate with any association or organization established in any place in Canada for purposes similar to those of the corporation. It is required to submit to the Secretary of State for Canada a report of its transactions and administration of the fund for the year ending December 31 immediately preceding, and the report shall contain a copy of such audited statement of the accounts of the fund.

The corporation may make bylaws necessary for the carrying out of its intentions, and prescribe the duties and salaries and other things essential for any staff that it may be necessary to engage.

In section 7 of the bill it is indicated that the corporation may, for the purpose of carrying out its objects, acquire by purchase, lease, gift, legacy or otherwise any real or personal property. It has been suggested to me that that provision is in there for the purpose of making it possible for the corporation to accept anything by way of gift that may be real property.

In section 9 it is indicated how the corporation may invest its moneys. It can only invest moneys of the fund in bonds or other securities of or guaranteed by the government of Canada or of any province thereof or of any municipality in Canada. Therefore the investments of the fund are pretty well protected by the type of investments that the fund can make.

I think I should mention a word with respect to what this bill provides and with what the directors of this fund may do with the money that is being given to their care. Section 6, subsection 2 of the bill states:

> No payment shall be made out of the fund except as authorized by this act.

Subsection 3 reads:

> The corporation may make payments out of the fund for the purpose of meeting emergencies and needs arising in Canada from flood, fire, tempest, earthquake, pestilence or other disaster, mitigating loss and suffering caused thereby assisting in the repairing damage resulting therefrom, and rehabilitating persons who have suffered injury or loss by reason thereof, when in the opinion of the corporation the implementing of such purpose is beyond the reasonable capacity of the area affected.

I think an essential part of this bill is how this money can be utilized. I said earlier that the original committee in Winnipeg that had to do with collecting and disbursing this money obtained an act of the Manitoba legislature authorizing them to proceed with the incorporation of this company by federal statute. They have set up all the figures in a carefully audited statement by the chartered accountant company of Millar, Macdonald and Company of Winnipeg; and with the enactment of this legislation in Manitoba, from everything I can learn, it is perfectly clear that it is logical and reasonable to proceed with the incorporation of this company here.

So far as the jurisdiction of the federal government is concerned, its reports and other references with respect to the corporation are being submitted to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): I should like to say a word on this bill, representing as I do most of the area which was flooded in 1950. The area of the flooding at the time was in the neighbourhood of some 700 square miles, and the only part of the flooded area outside of my constituency was the city of Winnipeg, St. Boniface and suburbs.

I want to commend the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Weir) on the way he fully explained Bill No. 229. It is quite obvious that there is nothing much to be added about the bill itself. However, I want to take this opportunity to express in this house our very deep gratitude to the people of Canada for the way we were assisted at the time of the flood in 1950. Indeed, the very fact that this bill is before the house is clear proof, if further proof is needed, of the very generous response that we got throughout Canada.

As has just been mentioned, over $9 million was collected in voluntary donations at that time, and now there is a balance of something in the neighbourhood of $1,500,000 which is still to be expended. This money represents gifts from small and big people. We remember how many very young children even emptied their penny banks to give to this fund. We remember also how some very substantial contributions were made to the fund. We in the Red river valley well remember that the gifts ranged from cattle and pigs to very valuable antiques.

Many of the things donated to the fund were of such a nature that they naturally could not be given out equitably, so they were sold and the money was put in the fund. Many other things like animals and so on were distributed directly as equitably as possible. Those donations came from all over Canada, from coast to coast. It is no exaggeration to say that they came from all over the world. As a matter of fact they extended from our neighbours to the south to Ethiopia and Greece. We remember in this house how the messages of sympathy came from all over the world at that time.

I also want to pay tribute to this parliament, and to the federal government particularly. All hon. members recall how quickly this parliament acted at the time and dealt with the matter in a very generous way.

These voluntary contributions, as has just been explained, were used to pay for the personal belongings of the people. All real property, including buildings, was taken care of by the fund voted by parliament. I think all will agree that this committee set up by the federal government, in conjunction with the province and, in some cases, with cities and municipalities, did an excellent job. I was pleased to note that the leader of the opposition in the other place referred to the job done by the federal government particularly, and stated that, so far as the supervision and contributions were concerned, it was done with 100 per cent of satisfaction. The impression throughout the area has been good.

When the real property factor was removed, contributions from the voluntary fund had to take care of personal belongings of the people generally. So I take this opportunity on behalf of the people in the Red river valley to express again their sincere gratitude to parliament and to all those who contributed, as well as those who wanted to contribute and may not have had the opportunity to do so.

I know the material assistance was beneficial to all, but I know, too, that the expressions of sympathy did much to comfort the people in the flooded area. They certainly appreciated the generous response not only of material things but of sympathy, which gave them courage at a time when the situation looked very dark indeed. Today they look back upon it with deep gratitude.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to say that there will be general support of the principle of giving some continuing statutory authority under which situations of this kind can be dealt with, through a general plan. This bill is to be referred to a committee. We support the principle and express the hope that the provision of a continuing mechanism to deal with cases of this kind may prove entirely satisfactory.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that I agree with the setting up of a corporation to handle charitable funds, because there already exists in Canada an excellent organization the responsibilities and duties of which are the same as those set out in the bill. I suggest therefore that there would be a duplication of service.

The Red Cross looks after those who suffer from disaster and earthquakes and all those other misfortunes set out in the bill. It maintains both international and national organizations for this purpose. While I listened with keen interest to the remarks of the hon. member sponsoring the bill in the house, and while he has done a good job of showing what was done with the fund, the fact is that the moneys were raised in an emergency to meet a condition that had arisen in and around the city of Winnipeg. The fund was oversubscribed to the extent of $1,500,000. I am not clear as to whether it was actually oversubscribed or whether the claims made against it were underpaid. This is only a matter of conjecture.

The principle of the bill is that we should set up a corporation which would take charge of the $1,500,000 remaining in the Winnipeg disaster fund. As I read the bill, the corporation it would set up would duplicate the services that are being and can be rendered by the Canadian Red Cross. The setting up of a new organization for the purpose of perpetuating the fund means that offices would have to be established and personnel hired for purposes of administration. This would be a continuing charge on the fund.

We certainly hope that disasters, earthquakes and the like may not happen; but to have a permanent organization paid out of the fund in the anticipation that something like this will happen is in my opinion a duplication of service already provided by the Red Cross. If there is no use for the money in the area concerned, and if it cannot be used properly for the purposes for which it was subscribed, then I suggest it should have been handed over to the organization that has shouldered responsibility in that field, rather than set up another corporation.

Those are my views on the subject.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in common with the hon. member who has just taken his seat I cannot see the need for setting up an organization of this kind. I agree with him when he says that in the Red Cross we have a first-class organization, one with wide experience and with offices in various parts of Canada. It could very easily handle this money in the event of any disaster which might occur. Any corporation which would have to administer the expenditure of this money would have to incur certain expenses, and there is always the feeling that some of the moneys used for administration might be saved if the fund were handled by an organization such as the Red Cross, which already has in existence suitable machinery for this purpose.

We do not feel any useful purpose would be served in setting up a corporation of this kind. Do I understand the bill is to go to the committee on miscellaneous private bills?

Mr. Weir: No thought has been given as to whether or not it should go to an outside committee, because it has already been before the special committee in the other place. I would have no objection one way or another. However, the fact remains that, in addition to having been discussed by that committee, it has been before a committee of the Manitoba legislature.

Mr. Speaker: Under our procedure, if the bill receives second reading it will be referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

MERIT INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal) moved the second reading of Bill No. 280, to incorporate Merit Insurance Company.

Mr. Drew: Do I understand that this bill, too, will go to one of the committees?

Mr. Speaker: If it receives second reading this bill will go to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

MID-CONTINENT PIPELINES LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 189, to incorporate Mid-Continent Pipelines Limited—Mr. Larson—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I had spoken for a few minutes before the committee adjourned on the last occasion this bill was before members of the house. I had indicated that, while it is a private bill, the subject matter is of major public importance and that there is a fundamental issue of very great importance involved in the amendment which the committee will be called upon to consider. As that amendment has already been read into the record I need not repeat it now, and will only say that the amendment to the bill now before the committee calls for the construction of a gas pipe line throughout Canadian territory all the way.

In view of certain things that have been said with regard to the discussions that have taken place, I believe it is appropriate to explain our position because there is a matter of very great importance to all Canadians involved in the bill. It is true that if the bill passes it goes no further than to provide for the incorporation of a gas pipe-line company. After that it will be necessary for this company, as well as other companies, to place its application before the appropriate authorities who will consider the whole problem and ultimately make a decision as to which company will have the right to carry natural gas in this way.

In the remarks I made I pointed out that I did not believe that economic factors can be disregarded. I indicated that I thought it would be folly to deny all considerations of cost and economy when considering the course that should be followed. I pointed out that we have many dealings with the United States, and have had for long years, under which resources of one kind and another are sent in certain cases from Canada to the United States and in other cases from the United States to Canada. I am sure that will continue. For example, we have enormous quantities of coal in Canada, but it has been recognized that it is economically sound for the large industries of western Quebec and southern Ontario to import industrial coal from the United States.

This exchange of resources is by no manner of means a one-way traffic. For generations the United States have been receiving from us raw materials which they require for their industrial development. I have no doubt that they will continue to receive raw materials of different kinds. This exchange between the two friendly nations is bound to go on. Nevertheless the point I should like to make is that economic factors alone cannot decide a question of this kind. We must at the same time consider the general welfare of the nation. In making a decision of this kind, it is possible that there might be certain economic advantages in exporting raw materials of a certain kind in a certain way. On the other hand, we must weigh the advantages of retaining certain priorities with respect to these raw materials, and decide what is going to contribute most to the general welfare of Canada.

This is not simply a problem that relates to the advantage of one particular part of Canada. Every part of Canada gains from the development, expansion and greater population of other parts. We must look at it in that way. Southwestern Ontario has been a large consumer of natural gas from the United States for a great many years. That area has also been a substantial producer. Until recently the possibility of the export of natural gas from Canada to the United States had not called for serious consideration. Now, however, we find ourselves for the first time in our history with large quantities of natural gas available in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, the main source at present being found in Alberta.

As a party we have gone on record as expressing the belief that, subject to our own reasonable requirements, we should not hesitate to enter into arrangements with the government of the United States for an exchange whereby gas would be exported south from the western Canadian fields while gas would be exported north to eastern Canada from fields in the United States. That does not in any way preclude development along the lines contemplated by this bill or another bill that was before the house on an earlier occasion, but obviously there were certain economic advantages in bringing gas directly north in the east and in shipping gas directly south in the west, subject always to Canadian priority in the use of its own raw materials.

The situation before us now is not such as we were discussing on earlier occasions. Under the measure before us we are discussing the advantage of exporting gas from Alberta to eastern Canada mainly for use in Ontario and Quebec. A question has been raised as to whether it is to the advantage of Canadians generally, and particularly the people of Alberta, to export that gas through the United States or by a Canadian route north of the great lakes.

Let me make one comment in that regard. We can be quite sure that if the gas is carried through the United States by a pipe line south of the great lakes we are only deluding ourselves if we suggest that this can be done in bond. We know perfectly well that if gas is carried by a pipe line south of the great lakes it is going to be used in the United States.

One of the reasons that it would be cheaper to handle gas carried south of the great lakes is that it could flow into the Panhandle grid and be distributed to consumers in the United States. I have not spoken to anyone really well informed on this subject who did not admit immediately that if a pipe line goes south of the great lakes, for many practical reasons that gas will be used in the United States.

Now I hope there will be no misinterpretation of my remarks to the extent of suggesting that I am implying there is anything inherently wrong with supplying resources to our friends in the United States. I am dealing with the question that has been raised, of the advantage of carrying gas to Ontario and Quebec by a pipe line south of the lakes or north of the lakes.

If that is the question, then let us recognize that if the gas is going to be used in Ontario and Quebec, the only way to make sure that it will be used there is for the pipe line to go north of the lakes. I can understand the argument as to the immediate economic advantage of piping gas into the Panhandle grid and getting a large market; but I submit that if a pipe line that would carry a substantial part of the available supply of natural gas which is going to be allowed to go outside of Alberta—beyond that needed for their own use and for the western provinces including British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba as well as Alberta— is constructed south of the lakes, we may just as well abandon any hope of having a pipe line carry natural gas through northern Ontario, and for that matter into the province of Quebec. It seems to me that the amendment before us is consistent with the best interests of Canada and is, at the same time, consistent with the best interests of the people of Alberta as well.

In discussing this it should also be remembered that when we speak of arrangements between the national governments of Canada and the United States, there are certain factors which we must not ignore. The rights of the individual states to control any property within their boundaries, including pipe lines, are not to be disregarded by anyone who discusses this subject in the house and who assumes that it is possible for the government of the United States to enter into any kind of arrangement we may propose. With the warnings that have been received by the people of the United States of shortages of natural resources, the states are going to become more jealous of their own rights in regard to the use of those natural resources which are of immense importance in certain specialized types of industry. There does not seem to be much doubt that financial returns could be realized by carrying gas into the United States and postponing indefinitely any thought of carrying this gas to eastern Canada.

I suggest, therefore, that the surest way of realizing on any of the surplus gas that may be available over and above the amount properly required by Canadian consumers, either in British Columbia or in the provinces to the east of Alberta, is to dispose of that surplus by the shortest possible pipe lines south to the northwestern and midwestern states of the United States to the extent that sound economy suggests. By following that route gas can be carried into the Panhandle grid which extends that far. But if the movement of natural gas to the east is to come through the Panhandle grid, which supplies such a great area in the United States, then not only Sarnia and southwestern Ontario, but also northern Ontario, central Ontario, eastern Ontario, as well as the whole of Quebec, will be at the end of the pipe line and entirely dependent upon decisions made by the government of the United States on the one hand and, on the other, by the governments of the individual states through which that pipe line will pass.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the hon. gentleman will permit a question at this point. I take it from his argument that in this particular bill he favours an all-Canadian route.

Mr. Drew: If the hon. member will be patient he will find that the points I am putting forward are being made in support of the consideration of the amendment, as I indicated on an earlier occasion. The amendment that is before the house would provide for an all-Canadian route. That was what I read into the record on an earlier occasion, and indicated that this was what we should consider.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not mean to—

Mr. Drew: The time is short, and I wish to have that time to enunciate the views that I seek to place before the committee. It is only human nature that the first demand for consumption would be met in the United States. Being at the tail-end of a pipe line has not been a reassuring experience for those who have had that experience, and we have had it. The province of Ontario offers evidence of what occurs under those circumstances. Ontario was at the end of a pipe line from the United States during the war. The demands of extended war industry in the United States at that time resulted in the government of the United States banning the export of gas to Canada in a very substantial measure. Fifteen thousand consumers in southwestern Ontario, with installed equipment, were compelled to discontinue the use of gas because of that ban. Only 5,000 of those customers have been able to renew their use of gas, although in most cases they still have the equipment available for that purpose. The remaining 10,000, owing to restricted supplies, have been unable to avail themselves of the equipment they possess.

With that experience so fresh in their minds, with that experience still a very unfortunate reality in southwestern Ontario, it is not likely that the people of that area, or the people of Ontario or Quebec who know what happened there, would be too greatly assured if a pipe line went south of the lakes and carried gas from Alberta into the Panhandle grid.

Arguments have been made that it is not economically sound to construct a pipe line through northern Ontario to Quebec and southern Ontario. I disagree with that most vigorously. Granted that there may be valid arguments about the lower cost of delivery by the southern route, it is important to remember that it is not a lower cost on a temporary basis which the people want. They want an assured and continued supply at prices they are prepared to pay, and prices which are attractive to them.

Even assuming, for the sake of argument, that the price might be less by carrying the gas by the southern route, the fact remains that gas can be sold in Ontario and Quebec at prices that are lower, having regard to the B.T.U.'s of the gas, than the commercial gas now being used in those areas. In fact it is estimated that with the cost of carrying it over the northern route the actual cost of heating units would be about 50 per cent of the price they are paying in Ontario and Quebec for manufactured gas. Let us not be carried away with any thought that there is no large demand for natural gas in Ontario and Quebec. In northern Ontario, in that area between the Manitoba boundary and North Bay, there is a potential demand for 15 billion cubic feet per annum for existing industries which could be served by such a pipe line. This estimate does not contemplate the expansion of heavy industry that would result from the use of this very important fuel, nor the ancillary industries that would be increasing the demand in that great area.

Then may I put forward the estimated potential demand in other areas. It is as follows: central Ontario, 30 billion cubic feet per annum; southwestern Ontario, 15 billion cubic feet; eastern Ontario, 10 billion cubic feet; the province of Quebec, including the mining areas, Montreal, Three Rivers, 30 billion cubic feet. Those are the potential demands, and on top of that is the demand that would come with the new markets created by expanding industry, and also the advantages that would come from the unique storage facilities available in southwestern Ontario.

This last point is of very considerable importance. The storage capacity amounting to 60 billion cubic feet consists of wells which have been used and exhausted over the last hundred years. The gas now stored in those wells could be sold, and gas pumped into them from the pipe line carrying the natural gas from Alberta. This would make it possible to absorb a constant flow of natural gas from Alberta throughout the whole year.

The suggestion is made that it would be necessary to subsidize the delivery of natural gas in eastern Canada. I do not question the earnest attention which has been devoted to the facts by anyone who is putting forward any of those arguments, but I do not agree with them. Assurance has been given in this case, and in the case of a bill which has become law incorporating another pipeline company, that these companies could finance these pipe lines and deliver the gas without any special financial assistance of that kind. Such evidence as I have been able to examine convinces me that the price at which natural gas would be delivered in Ontario and Quebec would be economically attractive in view of the present costs of manufactured gas and the uncertainty of the natural gas supply in that part of Ontario now equipped to use it. As I have mentioned, there are 10,000 people who were consuming it and who now cannot use the equipment they possess.

I believe that this plan for an all-Canadian route is of great advantage to Alberta, as it is to the rest of Canada. I believe this storage capacity is of advantage to Alberta because of the even flow that would result. May I point out also that the very existence of that storage capacity is a warning as well. There were people who thought these wells were inexhaustible. We have that storage capacity, 60 billion cubic feet, because those wells were not inexhaustible; because those wells have been used, and because the best purpose to which they can now be put is to hold gas coming from some place else.

Mr. McCann: Has that ever been tried in any other country?

Mr. Drew: It is being done day by day right now. Gas is being stored in these wells at this very moment. They actually are using that 60 billion cubic feet capacity. Today we are buying many things from the United States which are manufactured there and which we could manufacture in this country if our industry had natural gas. It is not just because of the B.T.U. content; it is not just because of the cost of natural gas, but because there are certain advantages in the use of natural gas, because of its quality and its heating value. There are a number of parts of refrigerators, automobiles and equipment of that kind which could be made by industries in this country if they had that natural gas today. These parts are being made in the United States and imported into Canada.

Those of us who believe in the tremendous development of Canada, those of us who believe in its tremendous expansion in the years ahead, find it difficult to deal with a subject of this kind merely in terms of cold economics or in terms of the quick dollars that can be realized. Those of us who look to the use of these resources for our own future, the future of a country of 50 million or 100 million people, like to think of the long-term use of this gas and its employment in the expansion of industry in every part of Canada. I am sure the people of Alberta are just as much interested in the development of the other parts of Canada as are the people who live in this part of Canada. I am sure every part of this country recognizes that the problem is that of building a single nation as strong as possible.

If there is more gas than could be employed by this eastern pipe line, if there is more gas than could be used in Alberta itself and more gas than could be used in British Columbia, then by all means, subject to the consideration of economic factors, let us export gas, to the extent that will avoid any waste of the gas that is actually coming from the ground. Mr. Chairman, I do suggest that to deny Ontario and Quebec the natural gas they are anxious to buy, at the price that it will cost, is hardly consistent with the desire expressed by all of us to build one strong united nation of which every part will benefit from the expansion and increase in population and prosperity of every other part.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there were unanimous consent I could finish my remarks in about three minutes.

Mr. McIlraith: I should point out that there are others who will be speaking on this bill.

Mr. Drew: I understand that. The only reason I suggested it was that I had spoken for a few minutes before and if it is convenient to the members—and only in that event—I would prefer to finish these remarks at this time instead of breaking them up and making another speech on another occasion.

Mr. McIlraith: That is quite all right.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drew: In the past Canada never had enough gas, oil, iron or some of these resources that we now find we have in such hugh quantities. With these resources, and with the fabulous mineral discoveries that have been made in recent years and months, it seems that we should contemplate anything of this kind with the picture before us of the kind of Canada that can develop from a policy of sound, legitimate self-interest, without at any time adopting a dog in the manger attitude in relation to those resources which can properly be exported over and above our own requirements.

I suggest that it is Canada's manifest destiny to become a great industrial nation. We are now an industrial nation, but we can become one of the really great industrial nations of the world by the employment of the raw materials which can be fabricated with the cheap electricity, the coal, the petroleum and the natural gas that we now have.

As we discuss this subject I think we should have in mind one of the most important documents that has been prepared on this continent for many years. I refer to the Paley report, which was presented to the government of the United States last June. In that comprehensive survey of the resources of that country it is pointed out that 50 years ago the United States had such an abundance of raw materials that they were not only meeting their own expanding requirements but were shipping raw materials elsewhere as well. Now they are actually in a deficit position. The Paley report emphasized the fact that within 25 years that deficit in many raw materials is going to assume serious proportions. With this evidence before us I suggest that we should profit by their experience and decide that in developing our own expanding economy we shall also conserve our resources, always subject to reasonable employment of our surpluses for export, and that our own development should at all times be the first consideration.

When we come to the attitude of Alberta, may I say that this subject was first discussed in Alberta in a comprehensive manner by the Dinning commission which made its report in March of 1949. After pointing out that all representations made to that commission had emphasized the desire that Canadian development should receive first consideration, the report then made this positive declaration on that subject:

> The commission therefore supports the application of the principle of priority to Canadian users.

That was the declaration by a commission set up in Alberta, in a comprehensive report which covers this whole subject. If this amendment is accepted and the policy of an all-Canadian pipe line is accepted, I believe this may well mean tremendous industrial development in northern Ontario and northern Quebec, and a new type of industrial development, as well as increased expansion in the industrial areas of southern Ontario and southern Quebec.

We are assured that those who make the application in this case and in the other case are able to finance the enterprise. As has been pointed out before, it is not for us to decide which corporation will receive permission to carry out this operation. Whichever corporation is allowed to do it, I strongly support the amendment and believe that it is in the best interests of Canada that we should assure an all-Canadian route for the transmission—to the east in this case—of the natural gas which will mean expanded development and new types of development over great parts of Canada. I approach this subject in a spirit of unrestrained optimism as long as we only see the breadth and brightness of the horizons that now stretch out before us.

SUPPLY

LABOUR CONDITIONS—STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS AT VANCOUVER AND NEW WESTMINSTER

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fournier (Hull) for committee of supply.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have one matter I should like to place before Your Honour and hon. members before we go into supply, and that is the strike in the elevators in the cities of Vancouver and New Westminster. I do this because ships are lying at anchor in the harbour there. The last dispatch I have reports that eleven ships are lying in the stream. The report also intimates that because of this strike about 15 million bushels of grain have not been shipped from the west coast, which otherwise would have gone overseas. Therefore the strike is a very serious matter for our port. We do not wish to have it spread all over the seven seas that it is impossible to have business carried on from the port of Vancouver. The strike involves a great deal of expense to the ships, to the men who are out of work, to the companies, and of course to the farmers of the west, particularly those of Alberta who are suffering most because most of the grain which is not being moved to market is from that province.

I believe the government could give a stronger lead in bringing about a settlement of this strike than has been given thus far. It began, I believe, on February 16, which was just seven weeks ago yesterday. The following day a question was asked of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). The question and answer may be found at page 2000 of Hansard. The minister replied that his department was quite satisfied to leave the settlement of the strike in the hands of the Department of Labour.

That was on February 17. Three days later, on February 20, Mr. J. L. Phelps, who is the chairman of the interprovincial farmers' council in western Canada, and also I believe the president of the farmers' union of Saskatchewan, offered to mediate between the parties concerned. They did not accept, and on February 26 another question was asked in the house, again of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. That question and answer will be found at page 2416 of Hansard. The minister had nothing to offer in the way of a suggestion for bringing this strike to an end. He was questioned again on March 2, the question and answer being found at page 2513. In his answer that day the minister concluded with these words:

> I have no doubt that negotiations are being expedited for an early settlement.

On March 4 I had word from Vancouver that nothing had been heard as yet from the Department of Labour. Your Honour will notice that these questions thus far had been placed before the Minister of Trade and Commerce and not the Minister of Labour. On March 4 Mr. Henry G. Young, who is president of the farmers' union of Alberta, entered the picture because of course the farmers in Alberta are just as much concerned as we are about this strike. Mr. Young had this to say in an interview with the press and I am quoting from the Vancouver Province of March 4:

> President of farmers' union of Alberta today declared "it is time to quit stalling", and take immediate action to end the Vancouver strike at five huge grain terminals.
> In Edmonton, President Henry G. Young said shipments of grain from Alberta—90 per cent of it comes through Vancouver and New Westminster ports—are at a standstill "and the situation is becoming increasingly serious to Alberta farmers."
>
> "No real effort is being made to settle the strike", he said.
> Mr. Young said an offer by three prairie farm unions to mediate had been accepted by the striking union but ignored by elevator companies, which, he said, had made no open negotiations with the union.

Also, he said, an appeal to the federal government to end the strike resulted in no action.

I point out that Mr. Young said in that interview that it was time to quit stalling about this strike. On March 5 we had the first statement in this house from the Minister of Labour. There was not very much in that statement, which will be found at page 2635 of Hansard, and which was in effect a short summary of what had taken place up to that time. The next day, on March 6, Mr. Phelps, to whom I referred a few moments ago, went to Vancouver and from there appealed to the Department of Labour to make some endeavour to get this strike settled.

On March 8, two days later, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) sent Mr. Bernard Wilson of the Department of Labour out to Vancouver. That was the first action of which we are aware taken by that department. I hold in my hand a dispatch appearing in the Vancouver Province of March 9. In this we find the following:

This is the first direct action taken by the federal labour department. The companies and the union have not met since the strike broke 22 days ago.

Mr. Wilson went to Vancouver three weeks, mind you, after the strike had begun. Then on March 9 we had another statement by the minister in the house which merely reported that he had sent Mr. Wilson to the coast. Three days later, on March 12, Mr. Wilson suggested proposals for a settlement but was unable to bring about an agreement between the parties concerned.

Press dispatches reported these moves by Mr. Wilson, and of course reported a continued failure to bring about a settlement. Then on March 16 we find press dispatches from the west coast intimating that the whole question was being held back until the threatened strike at the lakehead, in Ontario, had been forestalled.

A dispatch in the Vancouver Province of March 16 contains this paragraph:

Meanwhile, observers in Ottawa say the government's efforts to assist the parties in reaching a settlement are complicated by the fact that grain handlers at the great lakes head, members of different union than the Vancouver workers, have not yet signed their agreement.

They say the lakehead unions may be marking time, and may make no effort to sign an agreement until the situation here is clarified.

Whether or not that press dispatch is correct I do not know. The Department of Labour may have been waiting to see what happened at Fort William and Port Arthur. In any event there is a considerable body of opinion which believes that is one reason for the delay.

Two days later, on March 18, the proposal which had been put forward by Mr. Wilson in Vancouver was rejected by both the employers and the union. Mr. Wilson had this to say to the press:

It is evident the parties have not yet reached common ground and are not likely to do so in the near future if left to their own devices.

On the same day the minister made a report to the house in which he commented on the failure to bring about a settlement. Two days later, on March 20, Mr. Wilson left Vancouver; but before doing so he submitted in writing a proposal to the employers and to the union. The main feature of the proposal was that the conflict over wages should be left to an arbitrator, whose decision would be binding on both parties. Mr. Wilson came back to Ottawa and, so far as I know, that was the end of the attempts to bring about a settlement.

As is indicated at page 3230 of Hansard for March 24, the Minister of Labour reported on Mr. Wilson's trip. Then on April 1, only last week, I asked him in the house whether he had anything further to report, and his reply is to be found at page 3497 of Hansard. Incidentally, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) will recall that he rose in his place and made a short statement in which he praised the minister for preventing the strike at the lakehead. I followed the hon. member with a question as to what had happened on the west coast, to which the minister replied:

As hon. members will remember, a proposal was addressed to both parties by our representative, Mr. Wilson, before he left Vancouver, that recommended that agreement on several points be reached, that work be renewed and that the dispute over the wage increase be referred to an arbitrator who would be chosen by both parties and whose decision would be final. I have not had a final report as to the views of the two parties regarding that proposal.

Then I asked this question:

Has the minister given any thought to having the parties come to Ottawa in the hope that this strike can also be settled?

To that question the minister replied:

Before coming to a decision on that matter, I should like to have a reply from the two parties with respect to what is, in my opinion, a very sound proposal for settlement that is now in their hands.

That answer was given on April 1. There may have been some developments in the meantime, but no indication is contained in press dispatches that the strike is any nearer settlement than it has been throughout. Meantime the strike at the lakehead has been prevented. That was done by calling the parties here to Ottawa; as a result of their coming here the threatened strike was called off.

Strike of Grain Handlers

I do urge upon the government, as strongly as I possibly can, that similar action be taken with regard to the strike on the west coast. I believe if the representatives of the two parties were brought here to Ottawa and interviewed by the minister and his deputy there would be a reasonable chance of settling this unfortunate strike. It is now two and a half weeks since Mr. Wilson left for Ottawa and, as I mentioned a moment ago, he said at that time there was no chance of the parties getting together if they were left to themselves. I believe the practical step to take now is to bring the representatives here to Ottawa in order to see if these troubles cannot be ironed out.

Out on the west coast we feel we are a long way from the centre of Canada, a long way from headquarters. We are inclined to believe that difficulties of this kind in our province do not count as much down here at Ottawa as if the troubles were in the port of Montreal, or at the lakehead. We have the actual fact that the threatened strike at the lakehead has been settled. Whether it is because Vancouver and New Westminster are so far away, on the other side of the mountains, and they do not stir up the activities in the Department of Labour as much as do troubles at Fort William or Port Arthur, or at Montreal, I cannot say.

This is a very unfortunate strike. Grave damage is being done to the ports of Vancouver and New Westminster and, as I have said, to the farmers on the prairies. I believe if the government took the lead and invited the representatives of these groups down here to Ottawa, there is a reasonable chance that the strike could be settled without any further delay. I rose tonight in this debate simply to place that suggestion before the government in the hope that they will take action either along that or some other line. I realize that it is a difficult problem, but it is never going to be settled by sitting back waiting for something to happen.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has done a service for the people on the Pacific coast, both labour and management, in bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I doubt if there will be anything in what I shall have to say that has not been touched upon by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, but I also wish to add my support to the request he has made of the Department of Labour that it should endeavour to get both parties together in Ottawa or somewhere else and indicate to them that the time has arrived when a settlement of this dispute is imperative.

I regret very much that neither the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) nor his parliamentary assistant is in the house this evening. I do not say that in a fault-finding way because I know they had no forewarning that this matter would be raised. Furthermore, I am not saying it in a fault-finding way because I have been almost constantly in touch with the Department of Labour with respect to this matter and I know they are concerned. My last word was with Mr. Maclean, the deputy minister, just before the house adjourned on Thursday for the short Easter recess. I was to call him again this morning but unfortunately I did not have time to do so because of pressure of other business.

I want to give the house a brief summary of the events leading up to the strike and of what has taken place since the strike, as given to me by the elevator employees. The contract between the local union and the terminal elevator companies terminated on November 30, 1952. The union tried to enter into negotiations with them shortly after the expiration of the agreement, but the companies would not discuss any proposals for a new agreement if the union would not agree to a wage cut of 5 cents an hour, I believe. On the suggestion of the representative of the companies, Mr. R. H. Tupper, Q.C., the entire matter was submitted to a board of conciliation under the chairmanship of Professor J. A. Crumb of the University of British Columbia. Both majority and minority reports were made by the members of the conciliation board. The majority report recommended certain fringe benefits, as they are called, involving an increase in wages for employees working in dusty jobs and a differential of 5 cents an hour for night work. It also recommended two additional holidays with pay. There was no mention at all in the majority report of either a wage increase or a wage decrease.

As I understand it, the minority report coincided with the majority report on the points I have mentioned but also recommended an increase in wages of 12½ cents an hour. The employees accepted the recommendations of the majority report with the exception of the one on wages, and asked that this matter be discussed directly between themselves and the companies. On the other hand, I am told that the companies rejected all the recommendations of both the majority and minority reports. They rejected the benefits to which their own member on the board and the chairman had agreed.

This left the employees in the very difficult position of either going on strike or agreeing to sign an agreement involving a 5 cents per hour cut in wages. Anyone who knows anything about these matters will realize that at a time like that no officers of a union would recommend to their members that they go to work under that kind of an agreement. However, the union made another effort to resume negotiations with the companies on January 28. The company representative, the union representative and the representative of the Department of Labour, which had already concerned itself with the situation, held an informal meeting at which the representative of the companies stated that there was no point in further discussions as the companies would not go beyond the 1952 contract. The union then gave the companies two more weeks to reconsider their attitude, and on the 16th of February the strike was called.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has pointed out, the strike is a very costly one. I have been given estimates of the cost per week to the companies and to the employees. I am not going to mention the figures here because I do not know how reliable they are, but in my opinion they are not out of line with what is reasonable. When one adds to the cost to the participants the large number of other employees who are now out of employment and have been for some time, and the loss to the railway and other companies involved in the shipping business, the cost to the city of Vancouver and ultimately to Canada as a whole is quite a large figure.

I urge the Department of Labour to try to get the representatives of the employees and the companies together in an effort to reach a settlement in this matter. Labour disputes are no longer questions that merely involve employers and workers. The labour laws—the federal labour code and the codes in the provinces—are clear proof that today everyone agrees that the community has an interest in these labour disputes. Also, of course, we have our Department of Labour here, well staffed with men capable of doing what can or should be done in the way of bringing the two parties together.

Some little time ago I had a communication from the union asking me to urge the government to take steps to settle the strike. I told them that in my opinion that would be a rather dangerous policy to adopt, that it could prove dangerous even to the union, but that if they would tell me the terms on which they would be willing to agree to resume work I would be very glad to pass them on to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) to see what he could do about it. I do not think any member of parliament could be justified in going farther than that.

Again, as I said, the time is running on, with the strike now going into its eighth week. While the number of men involved directly is not large, I am daily receiving letters from other workers who are being thrown out of employment; and the loss to Canada and particularly to the west coast is on a very big scale indeed. I would urge the leader of the house to see that what has been said here tonight is brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour at as early a date as possible. I am sure, from the conversations I have had with him, that he appreciates the importance of this stoppage of work. Possibly the same methods for settlement might be used as were used in the settlement of the strike at the head of the lakes. Nothing will be lost from trying, and a great deal may be gained.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

320. Departmental administration, $671,905.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if his statement in connection with the first item under public works will be lengthy?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, if this is an invitation to make a statement on public works hon. members will be disappointed, and it would be the first time in eleven years that I had made a statement. My general statement is that nearly everything that goes on in public works is contained in the blue book. Members who have taken the time to read it will have found nearly all the details. I do not think it is a perfect book, but up to date we have had little criticism.

I could add that to my surprise an outstanding newspaper of the capital city wrote in an editorial one day the following words:

> In these days of budget fever when everyone is an economist and talks knowingly about the gross national product and the impact of taxes, it is heartening to find one department of government with its feet on the ground. This is the Department of Public Works, which has no public relations branch, makes few statements, and gets on with its job of building. The works department puts up office buildings, fine new laboratories, dredges harbours, builds breakwaters, wharves and jetties, and in general keeps the physical side of government in sound running condition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mutch: You asked for that.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister does not really believe that he and his department are that good.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, the paper says so.

Mr. Green: I am sure he does not believe everything that he reads in the paper. The minister has mentioned some little blue report in which we can find out everything that has been happening in his department. I have been trying to get that blue report ever since the house opened in January, but I have not been able to get it yet. I sent down today for the annual report of his department and the one that came up was for the period ending March 31, 1951.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): 1952.

Mr. Green: No, 1951.

Mr. Graydon: You had better look that one up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It will turn out yet that he wrote the editorial.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My office tells me that there is some misunderstanding. We did file the 1952 report, and it is the one for 1953 that has not come to us to date.

Mr. Green: This may be proof that the minister needs a public relations office.

Mr. Mutch: You should be the last to suggest that.

Mr. Green: In any event I was unable to get the report of the department for the fiscal year 1951-52 and, that being so has made it a little awkward to prepare any sort of a statement for the first item of the minister's estimates. I would hope that he could furnish us with a copy of that report before very long. Even if we do get it, it will only cover a period which expired over a year ago. So, whatever other good points there may be about the department, I am afraid that the little blue book is not one of them.

The minister will remember that when his estimates were under discussion about a year ago we raised the point of other departments undertaking public works which we thought should have been done by the Department of Public Works. Our criticisms were based, of course, on the report by the standing committee on finance of the Senate which was dated June 23, 1952. In that report there was one very important paragraph dealing with the Department of Public Works, reading as follows:

> The growing practice for other departments of government to by-pass public works department and build up little public works branches of their own, should cease, and all such work placed in charge of the public works department, where the law intended it should be.

That was one of the recommendations of this committee of the Senate; and it was based on the fact that various other departments of government have their engineering staffs and have been doing a good deal of building. As I read the findings of the Senate committee they argue or contend that in the fiscal year 1951-52 there was as much money spent by other departments of government, as was spent by the Department of Public Works itself.

In looking at the summary of standard objects of expenditure and special categories, which was tabled with our estimates for the fiscal year 1953-54, I find that this same condition still exists. In other words, about half the money spent for buildings and works, including land, by departments other than those concerned with war preparations, was spent by departments other than the Department of Public Works. We find very heavy expenditures for the construction or acquisition of buildings and works.

For example, the Department of Agriculture will spend over $11 million; the Department of Citizenship and Immigration over $4·5 million. This is for the construction or acquisition of buildings and works. In addition to these expenditures, of course, there are the expenditures for repairs and upkeep of buildings and for building rentals. At the moment I am only referring to the expenditures for construction and acquisition of buildings and works. The Department of External Affairs will spend over $1,300,000; the Department of Fisheries nearly $360,000; the Department of Justice, through the commissioner of penitentiaries, nearly $1 million; the Department of National Health and Welfare, over $1,300,000; the national research council and atomic energy control board, nearly $6 million; the Department of National Revenue, over $1 million; the Department of Resources and Development, over $4,200,000; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, over $3,700,000; the Department of Transport, nearly $30 million; the national harbours board, $6,400,000; the Department of Veterans Affairs, nearly $5 million.

Whether or not that is a fair test of the extent to which the Department of Public Works is being by-passed in the construction of buildings and works, I am not prepared to say. I merely say it was one of the tests made by the finance committee of the Senate. They used that test to support their argument that whereas from the time of confederation the Department of Public Works was supposed to be the great building department of the government, in recent years other departments have been stepping in more and more and undertaking construction under one pretext or another. By so doing they have been cutting down the importance of the Department of Public Works.

When we come to the Departments of Defence Production and National Defence, the figures are much higher. The Department of Defence Production is spending $60 million this year for buildings and works, while the Department of National Defence is spending practically $225 million for this purpose. It might seem that most of the defence building should be done by the defence department or the Department of Defence Production but I may point out that before the war certain defence works were constructed by the Department of Public Works. We had forts built around Vancouver, and I believe they were constructed by the Department of Public Works. Furthermore the Department of Defence Production, which is spending $60 million during this fiscal year on buildings and works, is a department which is to be wiped out eventually. It is only a temporary department, the plan being that it will be eliminated as soon as possible and its work put back into one or the other of the regular peacetime departments. I believe that work should go back largely to the Department of Public Works.

The Senate committee made this recommendation that more of the buildings and works should be handled by the Department of Public Works because they thought that would bring about a saving, that it would cut out a certain amount of duplication, and would put the responsibility for economical construction where it belonged. We pointed out this fact during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works at the last session, but I can see no sign in these current estimates that there has been any attempt whatever to give the Department of Public Works a larger field than has been the case in recent years. It would appear that there has been no change in policy in spite of the recommendation from the Senate. I would ask the minister to explain to us this evening whether or not there has been any change as a result of these facts being brought to his attention, and the attention of other ministers, during the last session.

Then I should like to know from him also what the policy is to be in the future. Are we going on in the present way with these other departments doing a great deal of their own building and handling their own construction, or is this work to be drawn back into the Department of Public Works where we believe it really belongs? I hope the minister will explain to us when I am through just what the policy is in that regard.

There is quite a substantial increase in the departmental estimates for this year. They have gone up, I think, by something over $5·5 million. I would ask the minister to explain to the committee, in general terms, where that increase is reflected in his estimates.

Another point is that in the second session of 1951 the house passed an amendment to the Public Works Act. No doubt the minister will recall that at that time we had quite a debate, and we finally persuaded him to cut down his request for additional power to do away with calling for tenders. I would ask him to let us have a list of the cases in which contracts were let by his department without the calling of tenders. At the present time the law gives him power to do away with the calling of tenders under three conditions: In the first place, where the work is of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; in the second place, where the work can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the employees of the department concerned; and in the third place—and this is where the dispute took place in 1951—where the estimated cost of the work is less than $15,000 and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

The minister will recall that, before the amendment, that figure was $5,000. In other words he could not do away with tenders unless the contract was for an amount under $5,000. The amendment raised the amount to $15,000 whereas the minister, I think, was asking the house to take the ceiling off entirely and to give him extremely wide powers to let contracts without tender. However, we saved him from that great error. I am particularly anxious to know the extent to which this new power of letting contracts for between $5,000 and $15,000 without the calling of tenders has been used during the last fiscal year, the year ended March 31, 1953.

The minister will know whether or not some of these requests will involve a great deal of work. If such is the case I may say that I want to keep the work to a minimum. I have no desire to call on his department for reports which are unreasonably long; but I would ask that the list he gives us be divided into those three categories set out by the section.

Finally there is one local matter that I should like to place before the minister. As he knows, last year we urged upon him that dredging work should be undertaken in the first narrows of Vancouver harbour just as quickly as possible. In February of this year it was announced in the house that that work would be done, and I understood that it would be commenced at once; but in the estimates as tabled I find nothing for the present fiscal year to cover that work. I do not believe that any work has actually been undertaken in the first narrows.

I would point out to the minister that there is great urgency about this matter. We are being told by some of the oil companies—I heard the president of one of them intimate as much in addressing the Canadian Club here last week—that because Vancouver harbour needs improvement they are therefore going to pipe some of the oil from Alberta down across the boundary. I think that is just used as an argument. I do not think there are any tankers off the coast at the moment that are so big that they cannot use the harbour. But this argument is being advanced by some of the oil companies in support of their plan to send Alberta oil down into the state of Washington.

Then there is the great importance of not giving Vancouver harbour a bad reputation. It is one of the great harbours of the world. I do not believe there is in Canada a finer harbour than that of Vancouver. Simply because there is a need for further dredging to a depth of four feet or five feet, we do not want to have our harbour's reputation ruined by delay in getting this work undertaken. Both the ministers from British Columbia have given their word in Vancouver that that work would go ahead at once. I hope it is started, but so far as I know it is not. I would ask the minister to make that position clear when he speaks tonight.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Briefly may I go over the points mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The first problem was construction works by other departments. As to that, the system is as follows. In every department they need certain specialized kinds of buildings. For instance, in the Department of National Health and Welfare they are in the hospital business. They have a few architects to design plans and give their ideas as to the hospitals they want to put up. This would be in the Indian branch of that department. Those architects co-operate and give some information to the architects of the Department of Public Works. They get the vote for the building and we do the work.

There are only a few departments where we do not do the work. For instance, we do not do their work for the Department of National Defence on the operation side; they have all that work done themselves or by Defence Construction Limited which is, we hope, a temporary arrangement. The Department of Transport generally do their own work on their airports and their facilities. But in nearly every other department—take, for instance, the mounted police—they have their vote of money but we generally do the work. That applies to nearly every department. So there is no taking away from the Department of Public Works of something that we have. We are extremely jealous of the work that is under our jurisdiction, but we are only the servants of these people in the other departments and we try to cater to their needs and supply their wants.

I do not say that in the other place they made a mistake, but I myself do not like to see any other department infringing on or duplicating the services that we are prepared to render to all departments and to the people. That would be the explanation I would give for these amounts which my hon. friend sees in the votes and in that white paper which is annexed to the estimates.

As to the increase in the estimates, may I say this. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) is quite an experienced parliamentarian. If he looks in this blue book that I have—I have not got the other one—

Mr. Green: That is the blue book I have not got.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, but you have this blue book. They have prepared this big blue book of estimates so that I may have less trouble in explaining what I want to say. If my hon. friend will look in that blue book he will see where the increases take place as between the two years. That is to be found at pages 50, 51 and 52. They are detailed there. My hon. friend will see that the difference between the estimates is about $5,765,000; and if he will read down those columns headed "Increase" and "Decrease", he will have the whole explanation. I could go over the items with him, but I think it would save time if he would just read those two columns. Then he will probably know as much as I do about those increases.

Mr. Green: I wanted an explanation as to the main increases.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The main increases are all written down there. If my hon. friend looks at the architectural branch he will see that for maintenance and operation of public buildings in Ottawa there is an increase of $830,000, and outside of Ottawa $725,000. Then if he goes to building projects in the various provinces he will see that there is an increase of about $4,686,000. In the other column you have the decreases. We would have to subtract them. I do not think I should take the time for that. It is easily calculated. That would be the net amount. There would be now a $5,765,853 increase over last year. As we go along, when we meet these increases in the estimate book I will give a detailed explanation.

The third question you are asking is a real job for the department. You ask us to list all the contracts that were given by the department without calling for tenders. Well, we have hundreds and hundreds of contracts all over the country. I will give the hon. gentleman the place where he himself will get the information. It appears there.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Do you split them up?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You just look in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Do you split them up?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): By categories, from $1 to $500, and then from $500 to $1,000, and so on? Is that what the hon. member means by splitting them up?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is it possible to split them up so you will get them within the limit?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That would be quite difficult. The change was made because you gentlemen said you would help me by bringing the figure up to $15,000 where I could give out contracts without calling for public tenders. This question was put to me by the hon. member for Kamloops and we found out that it would take so much time, because we find that it takes the year round to complete them and hand them to the Auditor General. If I remember correctly the hon. member for Kamloops dropped his question, redrafted it and asked for special contracts.

I know my officials are full of good will, but if I want to have the list revised in my estimates I think I should tell them to go ahead with the works instead of working on this. For my information generally, when I want to know something about my own department I look up the Auditor General's report. It is prepared by the comptroller of the treasury, and it goes in the Auditor General's report. It is an interesting study, but a little arid at times. You would find all the information there.

Mr. Green: That information would not be in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No?

Mr. Green: It would not be in the Auditor General's report we have because it covers only the period to March 31, 1952 and I was asking for the year March 31, 1952 to March 31, 1953.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Up to eight days ago? That would be from 1952 to 1953, because I do not think the statute came into force until last year. We would have to compile the whole thing. We will be preparing this, of course, for the Auditor General and the comptroller of the treasury. What the hon. member has been asking for is a complete report on contracts without tenders, which we generally give to the Auditor General after the end of the fiscal year.

Furthermore, I am informed that even in contracts under $15,000 we call for tenders as usual if no loss of time is involved and if the work is not urgent. We generally do ask for tenders. May I tell the hon. gentleman that I have been sold on the system of asking for tenders on public works and I am not going to change; I am too old now to change. I have stuck to it, but hon. gentlemen did not believe me the last time. Somebody brought me down to my knees and I had to amend my bill. I knew what I was thinking of at the time. I believed in the system of calling for tenders, and I still believe in it. I do not limit myself when the amount is less than $15,000 to not asking for tenders. We do ask for tenders. It is for the protection of hon. members as well as of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Green: Can the minister not give us the number of these contracts in each category?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that they could put a staff on that and try to figure out the number of contracts that went through the department in the last fiscal year, and they are ready to do that as soon as I give them some free time.

The last question that was asked by the hon. gentleman had to do with the dredging of the first narrows. I cannot recall clearly, but I think in answer to a question I did make a statement to the house that the government had decided to undertake this dredging. Perhaps the hon. gentleman thinks it is a small job and that the moment I said go ahead and dredge the first narrows, the work would start the next day. It is not that easy.

Mr. Green: I would not think that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; I am glad you agree with me, because it is quite a project, running into millions. As one listened to the discussion he would think it was some creek which we wanted to just clean out. If we meet the request of the people out there we shall have to dredge down to 40 feet, and we shall have to widen the channel to a certain extent. I have not the last estimate, but I am going to bring down an item in the supplementary estimates, which will come down in a few weeks, which will be part of the whole amount. The moment the money is authorized we shall ask for tenders and try to get some company to do the dredging. The hon. gentleman would not want me to undertake that work without having an appropriation passed by the house. That is the story. The quicker we pass these estimates and I get on to my supplementaries the quicker we will get on with this work in Vancouver.

Mr. Green: There are two different pieces of work to be done by the department. One is the dredging of the channel, and that is not to be confused with the widening of the channel.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I know the two. The bigger project we cannot undertake now because it is under study by the national research council, by the national harbours board, assisted by the engineers of public works. It is a special committee that we are now dealing with. What I announced was that we would do some dredging in the first narrows. To my surprise I saw that it would run into millions of dollars. I never thought it was that kind of job. You will see that we are asking for quite a substantial amount in the supplementary estimates. When my supplementary estimates come down I hope the hon. gentleman will not make the statement that they have been increased, because that increase will go to Vancouver.

Mr. Green: When is it expected that that deepening will commence?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The moment that we are authorized by parliament to spend money we will ask for tenders, probably from the companies out there; and the moment we get those tenders we shall give out the contract.

Mr. Green: Is it expected that the work will be started this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I hope so, because otherwise I would not put it in my estimates. Why should I put it in the estimates if I am not going to try to spend it, at least? Oh, yes, that is my sincere hope. Although I am in favour of the system of tenders, do not criticize me because it takes time. You have to get your contracts.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Proudfoot: I rise at this time to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the need of protectional work in the county of Pontiac-Temiscamingue. I first want to draw his attention to the need of protectional work in the vicinity of south Temiscamingue; then, in the vicinity of Fabre. I specially want to draw his attention to certain lots up there, one of them being lot 30, range 2, in the municipality of Fabre, on which nothing has been paid for the erosion done to this property, while the other lots in this vicinity have received some attention.

I would also like to draw the attention of the minister to the need of protectional work at the village of Ville-Marie. There has been some work done there in the past, and we should do more there this year. The same thing applies to College island and in Duhamel municipality. At Duhamel there are lots 53 and 54 on which there has been great erosion. I do not think anything has been done in regard to these lots at any time. Then at the town of Notre Dame du Nord there is great danger of property damage, as it is at that point that the Quinze river enters into lake Timiskaming. There is great erosion just at the mouth of the river above the bridge at Notre Dame du Nord, and I think we should certainly look into it immediately.

I should also like at this time to thank the Minister of Public Works for the co-operation and initiative he has shown in regard to the Allumette island-Pembroke bridge. I feel sure that after the item in the estimates of the federal department and the item in the estimates of the Ontario provincial legislature, it will be only a very short time until we have the full co-operation needed so this project may begin.

I should also like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the need for repairs of the bridge at Rapides des Joachims. At Bryson, Quebec, we have a bridge we have been using many years. It has served its purpose well, but it should be replaced because the traffic passing over it is much greater than it should be over a bridge of that construction.

Then we also need repairs to the bridge at Portage du Fort. We also have causeways or roadways over the dams at Temiscamingue. There is not room for two cars to pass on the causeway at Temiscamingue, or for pedestrians. So I think the only solution would be for the Department of Public Works to widen the roadway on the dam to Temiscamingue, and also to widen the roadway and causeway on the dam at Angliers. Also they should put up a walk, as they have at Notre Dame du Nord and Chapeau. This would look after pedestrians crossing there, so they would not be injured, or in danger of being run down by automobiles.

I should also like to say at this time that we need quite a few wharves up in that constituency, especially in the northern end. There is great need of a wharf at Laforce, and also great need of a wharf at Belleterre, as well as at Notre Dame du Nord.

I would ask the minister to give consideration to these projects at the present time. We would hope to have them all included in these estimates, or in the supplementary estimates. I would also ask him to give consideration to two new projects we will need in the near future in the counties of Pontiac and Temiscamingue. I refer to the interprovincial bridges between Fort Coulonge and the Ontario shore, and between Quyon and the county of Carleton.

Mr. Higgins: Following the requests from the new "province" of Pontiac-Temiscamingue I do not feel at all worried about bringing forward the small matter I have to discuss—that is, if the minister has any money left, following the requests of the hon. member.

What I have to say involves a grave matter of principle, and it is to that particular phase I would direct the attention of the minister this evening. It is a matter that involves the Secretary of State, myself and the premier of Newfoundland, as well as the minister's department. I bring it to his attention at this time because I think the matter must be disposed of before we go further.

Perhaps I should lay a foundation for what I am about to say. As will be recalled, back in 1949 I brought forward a request for a wharf at Portugal Cove, and kept on bringing it forward each year. Finally this year we find in the estimates an item of $250,000 for the building of that wharf. The premier of Newfoundland disclosed on February 4 of this year that a wharf would be built, and made this statement:

> The agreement reached between the Department of Public Works in Ottawa and myself is that the government of Canada will build a new public wharf in Portugal Cove. This, needless to say, will be a very great improvement over the wharf presently there. At the head of this same wharf, the government of Newfoundland, under this agreement, would build a section to receive this ferry. The bow of the ferry is rounded, and she would fit snugly into the ferry section of the wharf.

In the Newfoundland provincial house a question was asked by the leader of the opposition, who is a member of the party to which I have the honour to belong. His question was this:

> What, if any, decisions have been arrived at by the government relative to:
>
> (a) the repair of said wharf, or
>
> (b) the construction of a new wharf.

The answer was this:

> While discussions have been held between the government of Newfoundland and the government of Canada, no final decision has been reached.

There is a question of principle involved in this matter, with which the names of the Secretary of State and myself are concerned. On January 16, referring to the same wharf, the premier of Newfoundland said:

> If there are new wharves in Bell island and Portugal Cove not Gordon Higgins will do it. Gordon Bradley, yes, but not Gordon Higgins. Any federal matter affecting Newfoundland, Gordon Higgins can talk till he is black, blue and red in the face and the man who will do it is the Secretary of State, the Liberal leader of Newfoundland, in the House of Commons, the Hon. Gordon Bradley.

And farther on he said:

> These things, my friends, will be done by Liberalism, federal Liberalism, provincial Liberalism.

I am quite certain in my own mind that the Secretary of State is not involved in this matter in any way. I feel certain he would not be a party to it. I just wish to have the assurance from the minister that the statement I have just read is incorrect. Moreover, I should like to have the details in the matter.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I hope the hon. member does not expect me to contradict what a colleague of mine has said. I did not hear clearly what he did say as to what was reported.

Mr. Higgins: I was referring to a colleague of yours, to whom reference was made by the premier of Newfoundland.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I was referring to the Secretary of State. The premier of Newfoundland is a friend of mine but, as yet, he is not a colleague. At page 416 of the estimates there is an item for wharf improvement and roadway approach at Portugal Cove. Now, let us start from the beginning of this story about Portugal Cove. Some years ago the hon. member asked me to build a wharf there to accommodate the ferry. My answer at the time was that ferries within the provinces were not under federal jurisdiction. I said that we were ready to repair and maintain wharves for the general public but, so far as ferries were concerned, within their autonomous powers the provinces should put up the wharves, or make a contribution to that work.

That was some years ago. I see now that we are getting close to an agreement whereby the provinces will be pleased to co-operate in the establishment of a good wharf for this ferry service. That does not mean that we will not make some contribution. I suppose when the province is ready to do the work we shall make a contribution.

My information is that to date we are negotiating, and we are asking for this amount to pay our share of this work. As we look forward to the development of that new province I shall do my utmost to see that these negotiations reach a happy conclusion for the benefit of all. I am sure the hon. member would not want to draw me into some discussions which have taken place about Portugal Cove, or other places. He will realize that I have enough troubles.

I cannot add much to what has been said. The Department of Public Works does not keep in mind what Mr. So and So says politically in his province. We try to handle these matters for the good of the public, and in the public interest. That is our motto in the department—and without any public relations officers to do it, either.

Mr. Higgins: Perhaps we have not been here long enough to become familiar with the routine. I am only asking if it is a fact that if I, as an opposition member, make a request of the minister, it will be acceded to only if it is approved by the cabinet representative from Newfoundland.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, that is not the way I proceed. When I receive a request from the hon. member, or from any other hon. member opposite, I ask for reports from my officials. They are my close advisers, and they have quite a bit of knowledge in these matters. I get reports from them, and if I come to a decision I have to submit the matter to my colleagues if it is to be put in the estimates.

Mr. Brooks: There is where the catch is.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When I am convinced that it is really something that should be done I put up a good fight with my colleagues to try to carry the day. That helps the person who made the request, the mayor of a town or any member who has a request to make. They know they are always welcome in my department. I do not know of any member who would stand up in the house and say that he had not received a cordial reception and had not obtained results in my department. That happens to be the case for all hon. members.

If you will give me a moment there is one project in which I am very much interested, the Pembroke bridge between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I happen to live in the district, and we have been working on it for years. We have almost come to an agreement with the province of Ontario. Not long ago I received a letter from the premier of Ontario stating that if we would draft an agreement they would be ready to put up the approaches on the Ontario side and the first span of the bridge from the mainland to the island. We would undertake the bridge between the two islands. I am expecting an answer to letters I have written to the other government involved. If I get a favourable answer from that other government we will sign the agreement and proceed with the work. That is probably what the hon. gentleman wanted to know. Never be bashful or shy with the Minister of Public Works if you think you are justified in making a request. You will always be well received, but do not ask me to do everything in the same year. I cannot.

Mr. Higgins: I do not think I can be accused of being bashful or shy. I have been asking for this project for nearly four years, and it is somewhat of a coincidence that it should be done this year and that this statement should be made. I certainly want to be sure that the wharf will be built.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are not sure that it is to be done right away. You do not mean you think it is going to be done right now.

Mr. Higgins: If the minister says he will do it, he will do it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will do it if I come to an agreement. I have a certain amount of money at my disposal, but we do not rush into these things with closed eyes. When we make a deal with somebody we know what we are doing.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask the question once again. I do not want to upset the minister because he is the essence of good humour tonight, but following the explanation he has given me I am not quite certain yet whether Premier Smallwood is or is not correct. Would you say he is or is not? That is all I am asking.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Higgins: Oh, yes. I think it is a fair question.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do not ask me to explain the actions of everybody who has business with the Department of Public Works. I can explain my own actions to my satisfaction and probably to yours, but I cannot undertake to explain other people's. Do you know that there are people in this country interested in public works who know more about the job than I or my whole staff do? I can show you files of letters from members in all parts of the house and people throughout the country. They know about construction work. Everybody has put up something at some time and they can tell me how it should be done. I have been at it for ten years; I do not know if I am a little dense or did not learn enough, but I get advice from all over the place and I become bewildered with some of the advice I receive, sometimes even from members of parliament.

Mr. Higgins: That is the grandest piece of shadow-boxing I ever saw. All the minister has to tell me is that he will not answer and I shall sit down.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will answer you anything you wish but do not make me answer something I do not know about. If you ask me why Mr. So and So said such a thing then I would not be prepared to answer because you would be putting me in the position of interpreting what he had said and giving my judgment on it.

Mr. Higgins: Let me put it to the minister once again so I will not be misunderstood. Premier Smallwood made the statement that any request that came from me for works to be done in my district would not be granted unless the Secretary of State agreed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have put it clearly once. When you make a request to public works my engineer or my architect down there is the first man consulted. He investigates and looks over the situation and makes a report to my deputy and myself. We study it with the staff at headquarters. We make our decision one way or the other. If I need money to do the job I have to submit the matter to my colleagues. I cannot get a vote put in the estimates without the matter going before treasury board and the cabinet. If that is what is meant by saying that I am under the thumb of Mr. So and So in these things, well, I suppose I need cabinet authority to proceed. I do not think I can run the whole show myself, but beyond that I do not follow any other procedure. I can give the hon. member my word about that.

Mr. Higgins: Then it is the whole cabinet that decides the matter.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly.

Mr. Higgins: I can tell Premier Smallwood he is wrong.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You can tell him what you please, but do not make me tell him.

Mr. Herridge: I have a suggestion or two to make to the minister, and I trust he will be patient with me for two or three minutes. Before doing so, I want to say that I know during my long experience of over forty years that the senior officials of the Department of Public Works have been held in very high respect in my district. I have personal knowledge throughout the years. I had some experience with the construction of wharves and docks before I was a member of parliament. I know the very unusual problems they have to deal with, legal questions and matters involving property, matters between individuals and communities and problems involving materials and labour. I have always found that they have dealt very fairly, and as a result they are held in high respect throughout the district. The people I represent appreciate very much the work being done by the Department of Public Works.

I might also say that the local staff, the foremen and those who do the repairing, are very good men indeed. The captains on the lakes appreciate very much indeed the close co-operation they get from the captain of the dredge with respect to the dredging of narrows, spots which become shallow after every high water and things of that sort.

I want to make one suggestion. In the postwar period a few small tenders have been let for the building of wharves and other structures running from $15,000 to $35,000 or $40,000. I think the department would have been well advised to have the work done by day labour under the supervision of their local staff. I brought this matter to the attention of the department on one or two previous occasions and I was informed that it was not the policy of the department. But I can give the minister one or two illustrations of cases—and it was not the fault of his officials or anyone in his department—where tenders were granted to people without experience and without the necessary capital. In addition they did not have a knowledge of the district and met unusual difficulties and circumstances. As a result one community waited two years to use a wharf after the contract was let because of delays occasioned by a contractor who did not have sufficient capital and experience to proceed with the work properly.

The local foremen and the small skeleton crew you have would also be provided with permanent employment. It is becoming increasingly difficult to get skilled men for this type of work. Twenty or thirty years ago you could get axe men, men used to building wharves, driving piles and things of that sort, but today you cannot. Men accustomed to that type of work are getting scarcer and scarcer. I suggest it would be good policy on the part of the department to build some of these smaller structures, say from $60,000 down, by day labour and keep their permanent men employed. I am quite sure they would save money by doing so. These men not only have a knowledge of local conditions and water levels and a knowledge of local people enabling them to secure the best labour available, but they also know how to assemble materials. I have known of cases where the building of wharves was delayed by from a year to eighteen months because lumber could not be obtained, or a contract had been let to someone to supply material and they had failed to deliver, or cedar logs could not be obtained under contract from certain logging companies or individuals, or piles could not be purchased.

The local men employed by the department have full knowledge of all these things. They know where all the stands of timber are. They know the people who can supply timber quickly. They know where it is required and they know the best place to order from to get delivery at the lowest possible cost. I do suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the department and the minister would be well advised to give consideration under certain circumstances, such as I have mentioned, to the building of some of these projects in that way. I am thinking, for instance, of the Arrowhead wharf for which, I understand, the figure is some $57,000.

They have had considerable experience in driving piles, building wharves and so on, and I think that wharf could be most economically built by day labour under the supervision of your senior and local officials. You would be sure of getting materials on the job, and that the wharf would be completed in a certain definite period.

I make those suggestions as a result of my personal experience, and I would ask the minister to give them his consideration.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is a lot of truth in what the hon. gentleman says; but we could not take many of these works by day labour because we have not the staff. We would have to increase our staff to a figure far beyond that which we actually have; and there is always the danger, if we delegate our authority, of going beyond what the statute authorizes, and then I would be blamed. For instance, Mr. So and So could make this lumber during the season and we might make a contract with him to have the lumber delivered on the spot for such and such a date, but I would feel that under section 36 of the act I would not be authorized to do that.

True, there is delay in our department because of the act, but by following the act everyone is protected. We have many revotes. If you will look at the figures for the province of British Columbia in the present estimates you will see a great many revotes. You will find about 30 of them, but there are actually some 19 projects that are proceeding at the present time. I think the statute is about the best control and protection that the finance department, the treasury board and the comptroller of the treasury have over a spending department.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): You owe it all to us.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is a spending department. We are asking for $120 million this year to be spent in different parts of the country, and I am in favour of these controls. If I were in the opposition and somebody tried to get out of these controls probably I would be quite outspoken about it. We have a certain reputation in the department and we do not want to lose it, at least I do not want to lose it while I am there. However, I shall take into consideration the remarks that have been made.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) would be surprised and might blame me if I did not, tonight, reiterate the plea I have been making ever since my election to the House of Commons in favour of Gloucester county.

First, I must say to the minister that I have greatly appreciated the courtesy he has always shown me and my requests have been numerous; in some instances I even went to knock at his door and I was always well received. Unfortunately, last week Le Droit announced that he may abandon his present portfolio—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do not believe everything you read in the papers.

Mr. Robichaud: —to accept a higher appointment. I deeply regret this mention that has been made of the possibility that he may leave the Department of Public Works to sit on the bench of the exchequer court.

I would not like to repeat, tonight, the long list of works that are needed in my constituency and to which I have already drawn the minister's attention, by letter or otherwise. That would entail a great deal of repetition and I will try to be as brief as possible. However, there are some which I cannot help mentioning tonight.

In view of the new mining developments which have proved very important in the county of Gloucester, certain public works are urgently needed in the Bathurst district for the development of the Bathurst harbour, that is, dredging and construction works. The minister should not be surprised to learn that Bathurst, our county town, has no public wharf. Some years ago, there was a bit of a wharf that we used to call the public wharf, but it was first damaged and afterwards carried away by the currents on the Nipisiguit river; consequently, our county town has no public wharf at the present time. That is why I am of the opinion that the time has come to stress the need and the necessity of building a public wharf at Bathurst, as well as of carrying out important dredging operations at the entrance to our harbour, as well as inside it.

Still on the subject of these mining developments, I might say that I know that the companies involved are looking for deep water harbours suited to the shipping of iron ore. I have already pointed out to the minister the need of looking into the possibilities of the Point Marcel and Shippigan harbours.

Last February I asked a question with regard to the harbour at Tracadie. In his answer the Minister of Public Works informed me that the breakwater on the gully and the dredging of the harbour at Tracadie had cost, up to now, $325,092.69. The minister's department has spent a considerable amount of money on the development of this harbour since 1930 but, as he already knows, the breakwaters are just about destroyed and the gully, as it is called, is almost entirely choked by quicksand and is therefore of no practical use whatever. So that, in spite of this outlay of more than $325,000 which has been made over the last twenty years, the harbour should be dredged and the breakwaters reconstructed. I know that the hon. minister instructed his officers, this winter, to study the situation of the gully and of the harbour at Tracadie.

In closing my remarks, I venture to ask him whether he has received a report on this subject and whether we may expect his department to provide the money necessary for the reconstruction of these breakwaters and the dredging of Tracadie harbour.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member's first question, I must say that I have not yet seen the report in question, but that I shall study it closely as soon as it comes before me for consideration.

Secondly, I cannot reveal the government's intentions beforehand, because the estimates are never disclosed in advance. Besides, I have already explained that the cabinet must first approve the recommendations of each department with regard to their respective estimates. Thus, it remains for the hon. member, as well as for myself, to hope that the government will consider these recommendations favourably, but there is nothing to be done before we have received and studied the report here in Ottawa.

(Text):

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would give me a little information on a point about which I am quite interested, since he is so good-natured tonight.

In looking through his estimates I notice that his employees are classified as permanent, temporary and casual. I notice that there are approximately 6,000 temporary and about 1,800 permanent employees. I have totalled the numbers listed as temporary and permanent in order to arrive at those figures. What I would like to know is just why you have that difference between approximately 6,000 temporary and 1,800 permanent employees.

First of all, why is there such a difference? Second, I would like to know the conditions which determine when an employee becomes permanent. I have cases of people who have been working a considerable number of years in the department, and they are still temporary. As a matter of fact, I should like to know who has the final say as to when one becomes permanent. I have one case of a veteran with a number of years of service, who was recommended for permanency by his department. He was recommended by the civil service commission; nevertheless he was retired and did not get his permanency. All I could find out was that someone somewhere had held it up. What is the story about these temporary and permanent employees?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is quite a story. You generally come into the service through the civil service commission. You are on the eligible list, and when a request is made by a department the first person on the list is probably sent over by the civil service commission. The commission issue their certificate and the person goes to the department. For the first six months he is on a trial basis. As time goes on he gets experience and one day, if we find we are not over our quota of permanent positions, we recommend that this gentleman become permanent.

This recommendation goes to the civil service commission and they inquire into the functions and work of this gentleman. They compare our permanent and temporary establishments, and if the commission recommends him that recommendation goes to the treasury board. The treasury board has a set of principles and regulations dealing with those cases. When the treasury board decides that a man meets all the conditions requisite to becoming permanent, and the department is within the establishment of permanent positions, he may or may not become a permanent employee.

There is not so much difference now between permanent and temporary employees. Even temporary employees, in certain instances, come under the superannuation act, and they are entitled to nearly all the same privileges. As Minister of Public Works I am ready to give any explanation for nearly any department of which I have knowledge, but this matter would probably come under the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State. The minister who represents the civil service commission in this house would probably give a full explanation. I have given it to you as I understand it in my own department; I think that is the way it operates.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister mentioned the number of permanent employees to which his department is entitled. Can he give me any information as to how, for instance, you arrive at the number of permanent employees to which that department is entitled?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am speaking only from memory, but I do not think there is any branch of the department in which more than 75, 80 or 85 per cent of the employees are permanent. The others would be temporary. As vacancies come along probably these temporaries become permanent, and they are replaced by other temporaries.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, as I listened with fascination to the minister brushing aside our questions and mesmerizing us in his inimitable way, I was reminded of an experience I had many years ago. I met an old Tory friend of mine coming home from a meeting at which Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke in Toronto. I thought something had happened to him, and I asked him about the speech. He said it was a great speech, so I asked him what it was all about. He said, "I do not know what it was about, but it was like a poem, and I have been seeing visions". After listening to the minister for a while I am in something like that state.

I do want to come back to earth and ask the minister one or two questions. The point I am going to raise was raised before, but I am going to suggest to the minister that he did not deal with it as fully as he might have. There is a sentence in the report from the other place, to which the member for Vancouver-Quadra referred, concerning the practice of other departments by-passing the Department of Public Works and building up little public works branches of their own. I am very interested in that because the minister replied to that, as I understand him, by saying that the Department of Public Works was the servant of the other departments and did work for them. I also understood him to say they were not going to be too small-minded if they found other departments setting up in business for themselves.

I am small-minded about that. I want to know why they are doing it. I am going to read to the minister some of the figures for the competing departments, which appear to be waxing in size.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): May I interrupt for just a moment? I am ready to listen and answer all questions if they relate to my department. However, if this matter relates to some other departments I think the hon. gentleman would be well advised to ask the ministers concerned. I have had questions asked about the civil service, and if there are questions concerning my colleagues I would rather have you ask these other gentlemen.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is nothing I like better than to oblige the minister, but I believe this matter is closely related to public works. We really have to have a beginning, otherwise when we get to the other departments they will say we should have asked the Department of Public Works. We have had that experience before. The reason I think this is related to public works is that after all we start—I am almost quoting the minister—from the proposition that public works is public works and it has a quota of engineers, draftsmen and technicians. It is not so many years ago that this department looked after public works almost exclusively.

We realize that when the war came there was a sudden growth in all kinds of undertakings. I would think it would be quite reasonable then that other departments would inevitably embark on enterprises of their own. We are now eight years after the war, however, although we have a kind of lukewarm war in the offing; nevertheless I want to seriously ask the minister—I think he can tell us—just what has come to pass. Where does the Department of Public Works come in? What has come to be the limitation of the functions of public works? I want to remind the minister—I shall make it quite brief because I know he would like to get through by ten o'clock if he could— of the staffs that are being built up elsewhere. I have some of the figures here, and I will give him a little summation of the architects in the various departments. The army, navy and air force have 15; the Department of Agriculture has 5; citizenship and immigration has 3—they are not up with the procession yet— the Department of External Affairs has only 1; justice has 5. Now, that interests me a great deal. Why does the Department of Justice need five architects? The minister will tell me later.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Is that in your budget speech?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am just taking these figures from an authoritative source; they are quite accurate. The Department of Labour has 1 architect; the Department of National Health and Welfare has 1; the Department of Public Works has 32. That seems reasonable, at any rate, for the Department of Public Works should have far more than any other department. I should like the minister to feel that I am very interested in this, and I think it is important. I believe we are entitled to have his serious consideration of this problem. We all know how easily it can happen that as soon as you have a new little kingdom set up, the king wants to have as many subjects as possible; that is just human nature.

I do not want to be tiresome, but I am very anxious to find out about this. I want the minister to give us his view as to what are the limitations, where we come to the end of public works and their duties and where the other people step in. For example, let us take the Department of Justice. It is hard for me to understand why the Department of Justice wants 5 architects. Perhaps we could take that as a sample and go on from there. Again I say to the minister that I feel this is a reasonable question to ask because I believe that there is developing a situation where, as the serious committee in the other place says, the growing practice of building up little public works branches of their own should cease. These are responsible men. Some of them have had long experience in this house, certainly much more than I have had. These responsible men say that this practice should cease and that all such work should be placed in charge of the public works department where the law intended it should be.

That is a strong statement. That statement was not made twenty years ago; it was made in 1952, last year. There you have the considered statement of responsible people, presided over by Senator Crerar, a former minister of the crown. He makes that statement. It must be answered. In the face of that I have read this list as long as your arm of architects setting up in business in all kinds of departments. As I say, every one who knows anything about organization of any kind knows that just as soon as you set up a new little bailiwick, you have a man who wants to add to it. He does not want to keep down staff, he wants to add to it; and his importance will be regulated to some extent not by the smallness of his staff but by the largeness of it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great attention to what has been said, and I read some time ago those figures given by the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): They are the same figures.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —in his speech. I cannot remember them all as he has just read them, but let us just take the 5 in the Department of Justice. Those are the architects that look after the penitentiaries under the Minister of Justice. I am not too sure of this, but I think under the Penitentiary Act they have the control of their buildings. They have to maintain them, repair them and rebuild them. I did not invent this procedure. This is probably an exception to the Public Works Act. If hon. gentlemen opposite are against that system, when there is any question as to penitentiaries they can get their information from the proper minister.

If the hon. gentleman speaks of the Department of Transport, where they have 15 architects, may I say that, for all the airports and all the works they have under their department, they have exclusive jurisdiction. Under my act I cannot go in and say, "Stop that building at Goose Bay" or at Gander, that I am going to put up those buildings. When my estimates are being considered and when I am ready to justify what we are doing under our act, I do not think that is the time I should be charged with all the sins of Israel, if hon. gentlemen think any sins are being committed.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not charging sins. I am just asking questions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When the estimates of these departments come before the committee these matters can be discussed. If the hon. gentleman does not like the 16 architects in the Department of National Defence, the time to discuss that matter is when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are being considered. We have never had in public works responsibility for buildings for operation under national defence. They have always had authority under their own act.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister inviting the hon. member for Greenwood to make the same speech in connection with every department?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Not while I am leader of the house. But I am trying to give an explanation which is the real explanation. In that other place there was a committee which said that public works should have all these works done. That is a noble sentiment. I am flattered that they have such great confidence in the public works department, but do not ask me to be responsible for all these amendments to all these acts giving jurisdiction and power to other departments. This is one place where you cannot say that the Minister of Public Works is of a grasping nature. Let somebody else do some work.

In many instances they are justified. I can mention one department in which they have only a few architects, namely in connection with the construction of hospitals. If they did not have two or three experts in those matters we would have to increase our own staff and have those experts. There is therefore some justification for the system. You cannot say that the system is absolutely wrong. Although I would appreciate having all the works under my department, and would perhaps feel more important than I do right now, I am just trying to discuss the department and the act under which we operate. I think that up until now we have done our best. I do not know whether or not it is good enough for the opposition, but it is the best we can do.

(Translation):

Mr. Brisson: Mr. Chairman, never in all its history has the county of Saguenay received such readily understood or such well deserved attention. Since 1949—and I include here the moneys provided in the current estimates—the Department of Public Works will have built or rebuilt in the county of Saguenay, 16 wharves, that is those at Tadoussac, les Bergeronnes, Les Escoumains, Sault au Mouton, Forestville, Colombier, Ragueneau, Baie Comeau, Seven Islands, Havre St. Pierre, Natashquan, Tabatière, St. Augustin and Blanc Sablon.

If I add to that the sums that have been spent since 1949 and which will be spent during the next fiscal year, on dredging operations and construction of retaining walls, plus those that the architect's division has earmarked for the construction of new post office and unemployment insurance buildings, and which it will spend for these purposes, you will realize that I am right in saying that the constituency of Saguenay has received from the Department of Public Works well deserved attention.

Such being the facts, I feel it to be my duty, on behalf of my constituents, to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) for his loyal co-operation.

I wish to thank the minister, but he will understand that in doing so I cherish the hope of getting again millions of dollars worth of public works for Saguenay county. The sea is the principal means of transportation by which the people of the county get their supplies and ship their raw materials.

May I draw your attention to the case of Shelter Bay? It seems to me that with the co-operation of the Quebec North Shore Company, the provincial government and the federal public works department, it should be possible to build a wharf suited to the needs of these people.

I do not need to mention here all the other projects that will have to be carried out in the future in Saguenay county, since I have already had the opportunity of making them known to the minister. I am confident that he will give them his kindest consideration.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. McLure: No. I want to say something, but it is ten o'clock. I would ask that you report progress.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall move to go into supply, call two departments —national defence and national health and welfare—then proceed with public works and then with citizenship and immigration.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 8, 1953

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

CANADIAN FORCES, EUROPE—PURCHASES OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

What is (a) the value; (b) the quantity of (i) bacon; (ii) cheese; (iii) eggs; (iv) other farm products, which have been respectively purchased from, or secured from the British European supply lines and the American supply lines for the 27th Canadian infantry brigade and the Royal Canadian Air Force air division, during the last six months?

Mr. Blanchette:

Cost of rations obtained from British and American European supply lines are based on an agreed rate for each man per day. Consequently, Department of National Defence records do not show the value of total quantities of foodstuffs received. The following information has been supplied by the appropriate British and American authorities.

(a) Issued to 27 CIB in Europe from British supply installations during the period July 1952-January 1953 inclusive:

	Value	Qty.
Bacon, mild cured	$46,162.09	119,300 lbs.
Bacon, tinned	1,506.28	2,892 lbs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE, RECRUITING—ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Mr. Argue:

How much did the Department of National Defence in 1952 pay for advertising in connection with recruiting campaigns to each of the following: Ronalds Advertising Agency, Ltd., Montreal, MacLaren Advertising Company, Ltd., Toronto, Walsh Advertising Company, Ltd., Windsor, Ontario, J. J. Gibbons Ltd., Regina, Stewart Lovick, Calgary, MacLaren Advertising Company, Ltd., Vancouver, MacLaren Advertising Company, Ltd., Winnipeg?

Mr. Blanchette: No payments are made by the Department of National Defence to advertising agencies for placing advertising.

The agencies derive their revenue from commissions paid to them by newspapers, magazines, other periodicals, and radio and television stations which publish or broadcast the advertising material. For bookkeeping purposes, payment of funds owing to periodicals and to radio stations is in most cases made through the advertising agency concerned, which then remits the amount concerned to the publication or the broadcasting company.

Following is a summary of payments made through advertising agencies for recruiting advertising during the calendar year 1952:

Advertising Agency	Amount	Total
Ronalds Advertising Agency Ltd.	$752,917.38

this year will each appear before one of six interview boards to be held at Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver. Members of these boards are appointed each year and consist of an officer from each service and a faculty member from one of the service colleges. Arrangements are made to interview candidates in either French or English.

The recommendations are forwarded to the joint services university Canadian services colleges committee at national defence headquarters for review.

2 and 3. The members are: A/V/M F. G. Wait (the air member for personnel), Maj.-Gen. W. H. S. Macklin (the adjutant general), Maj.-Gen. P. E. Bernatchez (G.O.C. What are the names and addresses of barristers, solicitors, and advocates to whom each department of the federal government has paid fees in excess of $1,000, showing the amount paid to each of them by the respective departments?

Inquiries of the Ministry

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TELEVISION LICENCE, HAMILTON

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of a letter or letters sent by the Department of Transport on or about February 16, 1953, to the broadcasting consultants on its approved list, outlining the conditions or limitations to be met in connection with any application for a licence for a television station in the Hamilton area.

Mr. Chevrier: Tabled herewith.

REPORTS BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Fulton:

For a return showing all observations or references to actions considered irregular in the administration of public funds noted by the Auditor General and/or those acting on his behalf in the execution of the responsibility of the Auditor General to this house since March 1, 1950, and not included in the Auditor General's reports to parliament in that period, covering all branches of: (a) the Department of National Defence; (b) Defence Production Limited; (c) Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

He said: The Minister of Finance was kind enough to show me a memorandum in connection with this motion which he had received from the Auditor General. I have since spoken to the Auditor General, and to get the information I have in mind it would be necessary to reword the motion, so I am asking that it be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

WHEAT

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce in a position to make some report on the progress of the international wheat conference and the likelihood of an agreement being arrived at?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the situation is unchanged in that negotiations are proceeding, but I will now answer one question asked earlier by the hon. member and report that I am optimistic about the prospect for a contract being arrived at eventually.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—INTERFERENCE BY FOREIGN TRAWLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Is the parliamentary assistant prepared to comment on the statement in the St. John's Daily News, relative to interference with Newfoundland fishermen by foreign trawlers?

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East was good enough to give me advance notice of his intention to ask this question. The department has been keeping close watch on the operations of foreign trawlers and draggers on the southwest coast of Newfoundland. Several French, Portuguese, Spanish and one German fishing vessel have been reported in the area, but from on-the-spot observations there is no evidence that they have operated inside Canadian territorial waters. Over a month ago the department arranged with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to patrol the area with the motor vessel MacBrien. At that time no foreign trawlers or draggers were sighted. Since then the department has kept the area under observation and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police patrol vessel has been instructed to again cruise the area. The department's own vessel, the motor vessel Arctica, has been dispatched to the southwest coast and within the next week or ten days, following her annual overhaul and refit, the department's large protection vessel, the motor vessel Cygnus, will be assigned to patrol the southwest section of the Newfoundland coast.

FERRY SERVICE

WOOD ISLAND-CARIBOU—AUTHORIZATION FOR THIRD BOAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for Queens asked the following question:

Has the government or the Minister of Transport refused permission to the Northumberland Ferries Limited to operate a third boat on the Wood island-Caribou route in order to provide an interim service pending replacement by a new boat which is to be constructed by the federal government? If this statement is correct, as reported in the press, we should know why permission was not granted.

The answer to the question is, no, neither the minister nor the government refused permission for the operation of a third boat. As the hon. member knows, these matters are under the jurisdiction of the Canadian maritime commission, and the Canadian maritime commission has suggested to Northumberland Ferries Limited that, pending the construction of the boat, they operate a third ship on a two-year contract basis. Thus far the company has not indicated its intention of accepting that suggestion.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I should like to ask a question arising out of the answer just given. It would still be open to Northumberland Ferries to negotiate with the government, because in the matter of transportation problems they cannot be passed over to a commission. The government must deal with the Prince Edward Island government.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know if that is intended as a question, but if it is the answer again is no. The body that is responsible for negotiations in this case is the Canadian maritime commission, and it is with that body that Northumberland Ferries should negotiate.

SUPPLY

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

EXCISE AND SALES TAXES—EFFECT UPON MUNICIPAL COUNCILS AND SCHOOL BOARDS

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I propose to avail myself of this opportunity to place before the house a motion which would give hon. members on both sides an opportunity to express their opinion in regard to a subject that has already been before the hon. members of this house at another time, but in regard to which they were denied an opportunity to record their opinion. It will not be necessary to discuss this matter at any length because the views of the members have been put forward on earlier occasions in regard to the particularly onerous effect of excise taxes and sales taxes upon municipal councils and school boards.

On an earlier occasion it was said that this subject has been discussed a number of times. It has. However, the members of this house during the present session have seen, on different occasions, the beneficial results of repeated requests for consideration of subjects which were able to commend themselves to the good judgment of the members of this house. When this subject was before us on an earlier occasion it was indicated that there would be difficulties in the way of working out plans for the exemption of municipal councils and school boards from the impact of these taxes. It does not seem that this objection has any valid foundation. It would be a very simple matter to make the necessary arrangements once a decision was made. As every cent of money spent on the purchase of machinery and other equipment by municipal councils and school boards represents money raised by taxation, this is a form of tax on tax which creates a very severe burden. I would point out that at this very time, in different parts of Canada, educational authorities are emphasizing their difficulty in meeting the increasing cost of education. We are told that it is difficult for school boards to provide the money for teachers because of the amount they are required to spend for the building and equipment of their schools. A considerable part of that expense is made up of excise tax and sales tax imposed by this government on purchases representing taxes already collected from the municipal taxpayers.

The fact that this is an unjust form of taxation has been recognized in the case of the provincial governments. Exemption is provided to the provincial governments with respect to all purchases of this kind. The same principle should apply with equal force to the municipal councils and school boards which are buying equipment, machinery and other things of that kind needed in the daily requirements of the people, either for education or for the ordinary services to the community.

In view of the fact that our position has been clearly stated on another occasion, I leave my remarks there and present the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell):

> That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "whereas the present policies of the government impose a heavy and unjust burden of taxation on municipal taxpayers;
> This house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which will provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax on all purchases of machinery and other equipment, and which will further provide for taxation of all federal government properties in municipalities on the same basis as that of ordinary municipal taxpayers."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support the amendment this afternoon because we have taken much the same view as that which has been expressed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and others during the course of the budget debate. In discussing agricultural problems yesterday I mentioned some figures which indicated that between 1939 and 1952 the taxes on farm buildings and farm lands had increased by approximately 200 per cent. What is true of the increase in taxation in rural municipalities is equally true in the villages, the towns and the cities across Canada. It seems to me that this government or this parliament—for it is, of course, parliament which imposes the taxes, although the government suggests them—should not inflict taxes upon the junior governments knowing, as we all do in this house, the difficulties which the junior governments have in meeting the increased costs of municipal services, and particularly the increased costs of education.

We hear a great deal about the increased costs of education, Mr. Speaker, but may I say that educational costs in the past have been relatively low and our schools and our teaching staffs have been more or less starved financially, with the result that we have in the country many obsolete schools and many overburdened teachers. Indeed, there are shortages of teachers in many parts of Canada. After all, the future of our country depends, to a large extent—particularly in the times in which we live—on the ability of the individual to understand what is going on and to make his own appraisals of situations which may arise. That fact means that we must have a thoroughly competent educational system.

May I also say that in many of our municipalities health conditions are far from satisfactory. In the past, with their limited taxation powers, many municipalities, villages and even urban centres in this country have had a deplorable level of sanitation, a situation which reacts against the health of the people who reside in the towns and the villages of Canada. I think that one gesture we can make is the one outlined in the amendment this afternoon, namely the remission of the right to tax local property in the municipalities and in the provinces. I think also that the amendment might have been accompanied by the suggestion that equipment brought into the country from abroad, for use in the municipalities and so on, should be exempt from any import duties.

But this is only a gesture. We know perfectly well that the taxes on land and real property are today not only oppressive but are preventing the building of suitable homes. I know of young people who have looked around this city, for example, and have chosen what they consider to be a location that would be fairly acceptable to them but who, when they asked what the taxes would be, have decided that they could not afford to carry the costs of building and to look forward to paying not only the taxes that now exist but also the local improvement taxes that would be placed on that property when paving and sewerage are given to the property.

An hon. Member: And water.

Mr. Coldwell: Usually they have water facilities.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

I therefore want to support this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I not only support it on my own behalf but I know I am supporting it on behalf of the C.C.F. party in this house. We have made this suggestion with others. I am not taking credit for suggesting this action. We have suggested it with others in this house from time to time, and I am confident that in all parts of the house hon. members have a great deal of sympathy for the suggestion that has been made. I hope that hon. members who have that sympathy, wherever they may sit, will rise in their places and by their vote this afternoon will show that they support the proposal.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, members of the Social Credit group will support this motion. I think it is fitting to draw attention to the fact that the whole nation is suffering at the present time because of an extensive increase in costs which has been brought on by the very policies of the government at present in power.

The rise in prices began in 1946 with the $5 increase in the price of steel, and the consequent strike of the steel workers for an increase in their wages. The federal government permitted that increase in steel prices and consequently had to assume responsibility for all the increases which have resulted from the increase in the price of steel. While the nation now is suffering from the high costs which are resulting from those very policies, to levy a tax on machinery and other materials required by the individual municipalities—which will make them pay not only the increase in price but a tax on it—is something which I think constitutes an extreme of injustice. It must be borne in mind also that not only have we had an excessive increase in prices, in the cost of living, in the cost of housing, in the cost of rent, as well as taxation on the individual members, but we have also excessive taxation by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Probably I should draw to the attention of the house the fact this motion deals with taxation on municipal taxpayers and suggests:

> That immediate consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which will provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes . . .

I think hon. members should direct their remarks to that feature of the amendment.

Mr. Blackmore: I agree with that entirely, Mr. Speaker, and if you had waited another minute you would have found me right on that particular subject.

Mr. Coldwell: An admission that you were off the subject.

Mr. Blackmore: Right on the subject, only the Speaker could not recognize it because he did not give me time to say what I was going to say. Now, because of the fact that the individual members of the community are already suffering a tremendous burden of taxation levied by the federal government they are in a much less competent position to stand additional taxation in the municipality which results from a 10 per cent levy on all the goods which are required. Let hon. members bear in mind, merely as an instance, the cost of removing snow in the ordinary municipality of Canada, and remember that all the machinery which is required for the removal of the snow is subject to tax. I think that is sufficient.

I do not wish to multiply words, to go into details; I only wish to point out that I believe the point taken by the Leader of the Opposition is very sound. We propose to support it.

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Before the parliamentary assistant to the minister speaks I am sure he will not mind if I make a comment in this regard. The very fact that the federal government has seen fit to give this advantage to the provincial governments would seem to indicate to me that the time has now arrived when they should consider extending this same privilege to the municipalities.

In the amendment which has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition he is asking that the government give consideration to extending this to the municipalities. I feel that I can support that amendment for the reason that I believe that consideration should be given by this government to extending this exemption to the municipalities, and also to reviewing the present exemption which they have been giving to the provinces. I can well appreciate what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has said, namely, that there will be great difficulties of administration in seeing that such concessions are not abused. Perhaps there is some measure of justice in what he says, because I am not entirely convinced that it has not been abused to some extent by certain provinces in this country.

Because I believe that if the government would take this matter under consideration they might offer this extension in some form to the municipalities, I say that the matter is worthy of support, if only for the reason that it might clear up the present situation which I am not altogether satisfied is being properly dealt with.

Mr. Jean Lesage (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition at least on one point, namely, that this question has been discussed at length, especially on March 31, last. On that occasion the Minister of Finance made very clear what the position of the government is on this question. He added that this question had been and still was under consideration by the government.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said that hon. members should feel free to vote in accordance with their personal opinion on this matter. May I point out to you, sir, that as the Minister of Finance said, and I repeat, this question has been constantly under review and consideration by the government, and he did not feel that the exemption suggested could be granted at this time.

The amendment which was moved by the Leader of the Opposition is to a motion to go into supply, and that amounts to a motion of non-confidence in the government. May I end by saying that the two statements of the Minister of Finance on the matter can be found at pages 3460 and following and 3486 and following of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

320. Departmental administration, $671,905.

Mr. McLure: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be quite brief, but I had in mind a few things with which I should like to deal at the present time. I was surprised when I looked at the amounts we are being asked to vote for the Department of Public Works as I was under the impression that the total this year would be much less than last year owing to the fact that less building was being done. On several occasions I tried to find out if we were going to have a post office built and I was always told that there were three things that were required before that could be done, namely, steel, cement and lumber. I took it for granted that with all those materials being in short supply the vote for public works would be less than in other years. However, I find that there is an increase of nearly $6 million and I probably should have pushed to have a post office built at Charlottetown out of that extra $6 million.

Sometimes we on this side of the house are accused of asking for too much, but if sometimes we try to have needs of our constituencies fulfilled we always know that unless they feel kindly toward the constituencies, unless the government feels there is a possibility of winning in the constituencies, they do not treat us as well financially as they treat other places where they have better prospects. However, we are still going to continue to make our appeal for something that is essential and necessary in our constituency.

On many occasions the Minister of Public Works has promised definitely that a post office would be built. I think he has been making these promises for about ten years. In 1949 it was hung out before the electors in grand style. Plans were prepared for a great building that was to be built down there to handle all the different federal departments. Cuts of this great building appeared in the local newspapers and I am sure had an influence upon the public before the election.

They showed a wonderful building occupying a whole square and we were told we would have back again the Bank of Canada and some of the other things that had been taken away from us because there was not room. We were also to have recognition from the Post Office Department once this building was built and were to be given a zone of our own instead of being tacked on to New Brunswick because of there not being enough space in Charlottetown. I assume that that is one reason why we did not have a post office zone of our own.

After having bought a site for this immense building which they have promised over and over again, the government has gone into the retail renting business. Perhaps we can leave out the word "retail" and say that they have gone into the rental business. We find now that they have fifteen or twenty properties that they are renting. According to the terms of doing business with the federal government those cheques should be made payable to the department direct at Ottawa. I should like to know from the minister who is the collector of rentals and who is in charge of the properties at Charlottetown. I should like to know also the terms of the rentals of those properties.

Perhaps if we had this information we would have some idea when they expect to build this glorious building that they have been promising so long. I know that there may be an election within a year's time and they will want to hang this up again. They will want to act as Santa Claus for the election. However, I think this has been promised for so long that it has lost some of the glamour that it might otherwise have held for the electors of Queens.

There are other questions I want to ask but I shall wait until the proper items are before us. I should like to know from the minister how they are running this rental business down there and I should like to know just what moneys they receive from the rentals. If they are renting the properties according to what they paid for them they must be receiving a good deal in the way of rentals. I should like to know also how much they expended last year on repairs on this vast property that they bought. I will leave it at that for the time being until I get answers to my questions.

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, I am always pleased to listen to the hon. member for Queens. He said that I had promised a public building for Charlottetown ten years ago, but I will refresh his memory by telling him that it was only about eight years ago. When the hon. member came here in 1945 we both joined in making a dual promise to the people of the island. I made that in good faith and I am still acting in good faith. Then in 1949 we did promise that building again, but we were not able to put it up. The results were not very good.

I ask my hon. friend not to press it at this time if this is an election year. We do not want to make the people believe that they should vote for us because we are going to put up a building. I can give the hon. member some good news right now. Pending the construction of the building we do rent these properties, some to the provincial government. The architectural plans for this building are 80 per cent completed. The other plans are not quite so advanced, but we are starting to see the light. Along with my hon. friend, I hope that we will be able to get this building for these people. I feel that I have a certain responsibility seeing that I joined with the hon. member in making that promise to the people of Charlottetown. I would not want to let them down. When the plans are completed I shall recommend that there be the necessary item to cover the building. I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied. He can go back to Charlottetown, as I would myself, and say the same thing to the people there. I would hesitate to put in an amount of money right now when I know that I would not be able to expend it during this fiscal year.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member for Charlottetown has been given an answer in connection with a building promised some ten years ago.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Eight years.

Mr. Coldwell: I am thinking of a case in my constituency where the site was bought in 1938, which I believe is fifteen years ago.

Mr. Rowe: It is outlawed now.

Mr. Coldwell: The amount has been in the estimates every year since 1938 but I am happy about it this year because in former years, I will not say in recent years but in former years, there was only $50,000 provided. This year there is $75,000 in the estimates and that gives me great hope. I do not know how far plans are advanced in connection with that project but, putting all humour aside, Mr. Chairman, I can assure the minister that the premises are badly needed in that town. In places in Saskatchewan with less business than there is in the town of Biggar, which is a divisional point, premises have been erected by the government in recent years. I hope that my hon. friend from Queens will get his building and I am living in hopes, since the estimate has been increased by 50 per cent, that the minister is really determined to get in at least the foundations of this building—shall I put it this way—"before the snow flies".

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are making progress as you can see—50 per cent within a year. I still hope that we will have those plans completed and they are working on those plans in the department. The need is there, there is no doubt—and it was established in 1938, four years before I became a minister. I have more attachments to projects I undertake myself than to old projects made by other ministers but I am not forgetting that building. Even if I have put up other buildings in that province I do want to put one up in Biggar.

I do not neglect anybody and when we look at the house we see that there are 262 ridings, and I think I have done something for every riding.

Mr. Fleming: Not for mine.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I did something not in Eglinton but in Toronto.

An hon. Member: That is downtown.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am perhaps more attentive to the people downtown than to those in uppertown but I am thinking of Toronto in my estimates. There is only one other word I would like to say. I would like to put up all of these buildings which are requested and needed at the same time all over the country, but I have found out that it is an impossibility. Even if my staff worked three shifts a day we could not begin to make up all of the works that are asked for in the country; but members will understand that we are making progress. You should travel around the country as I have every year or every second year; if you do you will see that we have done quite a bit of work since 1945 with the people we have to do the work and with the estimates which the house has so graciously granted to the Department of Public Works.

(Translation):

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) for having allowed the rebuilding of the wharves at Bagotville and L'Anse St. Jean, as well as certain repairs to the wharves at Petit Saguenay and Grande Baie.

Unfortunately, these repairs are insufficient. So I wish to call these matters once more to the minister's attention and insist upon the urgency of having other repairs made to the wharves at Petit Saguenay, Ste. Rose du Nord and Grande Baie.

I also wish to remind him—as I have done many times already—of the need for a public building at Chicoutimi so that the post office as well as the offices of the different other departments of the government may have adequate accommodation. We find in this year's estimates an amount of $250,000 for this purpose. I hope that construction will start soon and that the people of Chicoutimi will, in the near future, be in a position to benefit from the use of an appropriate public building designed to give the services to which they are entitled.

I have also called the minister's attention to the need for a public building at Ha! Ha! Bay. The minister has received many requests from various chambers of commerce and municipal councils with regard to these projects. I simply wished to remind him of our needs and beg him not to forget us in 1953.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I take the hon. member's remarks in good part and, as I just said in English, if I could erect in the course of the same year all the buildings required in Canada, I would gladly do so and thus make my task much lighter for the years to come. Unfortunately it is impossible for me to do so. Every project has its importance and I trust that with time and patience we will be able to secure what we want for every part of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, may I suggest, now that we have reached the details where members are putting questions on specific items, we might carry the general item unless somebody has general remarks to make. We can pass on then and I will answer those questions when I have the proper book before me.

The Chairman: Shall the first item carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the minister a question and his answer will determine whether or not I make a long speech.

An hon. Member: You had better be careful.

Mr. Gillis: I know the minister is always very co-operative and I know too that I like to accommodate him.

I would like to ask him if any recent representations have been made to his engineering branch in the matter of extending a wharf that exists in the city of Sydney and harbour, adjacent to the Dominion Atlantic Springs Company plant. I know that a request was made to me which I passed on to the minister's office; and I think the engineering branch had a visit from the owner and operator of the Dominion Atlantic Springs Company. I do not see anything in the estimates although I have looked for something on this, but if the minister can tell me he is giving consideration to the matter and that he might bring in a supplementary estimate later I will be quite satisfied to remain in my seat.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am informed that we did receive representations. The gentlemen interested in that company paid a visit to the office of the chief engineer and the deputy minister. The answer we gave was that we would instruct our engineers to look into the matter and consider it. With respect to committing the department to recommend an estimate this year, I must say that I have not enough information before me. My hon. friend knows that I take all of these requests very seriously—meaning that if he has a good case then he can expect a good decision. If the case is not strong enough then I will have to see him and explain to him personally what we think of it.

Mr. Gillis: I am quite satisfied. No speech.

Mr. Cardiff: Was any report received by the department with regard to a wharf at Port Albert in the county of Huron?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told by my deputy minister that he cannot recall that we have had any request for a wharf at Port Albert. What is the population?

Mr. Cardiff: The population is not significant but has there been any consideration—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I can hardly discuss it at the moment.

Mr. Cardiff: It would be an exceptionally—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now, listen; if you want some results give me the information you have and I will ask about the matter.

Mr. Cardiff: One of your engineers was up there and investigated the thing and I wondered whether he had put in a report to the department.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will ask my engineers, but my deputy, who is a very learned man, does not know of it.

Mr. Noseworthy: I should like to ask a general question which applies to every branch of the minister's department. I should like to have an explanation of the reason for so many revotes, particularly in connection with the purchase and construction of public buildings. I have not had an opportunity of checking each province, but I have noticed that eight out of nine items listed under Newfoundland are revotes and amount to over $500,000; nine out of fourteen items for Nova Scotia are revotes and amount to $780,000; ten out of fifteen items for New Brunswick are revotes and amount to well over $1 million. I noticed that for Quebec there is a total of thirty-one revotes amounting to close to $5 million. What is the explanation for so many revotes? Was this money voted before the department was prepared to use the money or was more money voted than the department could make use of during the year? Is the minister asking for another $5 million for Quebec this year more than he is going to be able to spend or is the minister going to spend all these revotes this year? It is an appropriate year for spending on public works.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Everything the hon. gentleman has said has some weight except the last remark. I am not impressed by that. To my knowledge revotes have existed in the Department of Public Works since that department was created. If you know about the construction business, even building your own home or putting buildings on your farm, you fix a date to complete your project. About 90 per cent of the time you do not complete the job on that date which you have fixed, and that is my experience in public works. When we start off, we get requests for wharves, buildings and so forth. These requests originate with the member, the mayor, boards of trade and so forth. These requests are studied by our officials and we make a decision. Then, we try to make an estimate of the cost and the time it will take to construct this work. We prepare our estimates in November and they are tabled in January. Generally they are voted in June. This year is an exception because we did start the session in November.

Now, in general, the vote is passed in the last days of the session and receives royal assent. Then, the staff in the office starts the plans for these buildings or wharves, and plans take time. Perhaps we have an amount of $100,000 for that fiscal year and we spend perhaps $60,000 or perhaps $70,000. The whole construction will call for an expenditure of say $200,000, and we plan to expend the balance of $140,000 in the next fiscal year. We come before parliament and say, now this year we want $140,000. There is a revote in that of $40,000, and that means the work is under way. We have started to expend money, and we except to complete that construction in the following year.

We have construction projects under way for two, three and four years. Do not be surprised if you see these revotes continuing in these items because that is generally the case during the construction of these projects. No one in my department, or even in the house, has devised a way by which you would not have any revotes. I am not affected because even on my side of the house they say, "You bring up an estimate and you do not do the work." If you look up the estimates for Victoria-Carleton you will see an item for a customs building in Andover, and that has been in the estimates for quite a while. We have purchased the site and prepared the plans, but I would have to look it up to see if the contract has been let. There will be a vote and a revote on that item until the construction is completed. What is wrong with that procedure? We do not spend the whole of the amount requested, but we need more for the next year. There is nothing irregular about that procedure for construction work.

Mr. McCann: The votes lapse at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, that is why I am coming back here. At the end of the fiscal year any money not expended lapses, and I come back and say, I did not spend this $40,000, will you revote it. That is why I am interested in Charlottetown. We have been revoting the amount so often that I am sure now everybody agrees with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister's explanation does not quite satisfy me. If you turn to page 396 of these estimates you will see that listed under New Brunswick there are eight items on the page which are revotes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not like to interrupt, but would the hon. member mind asking his question when we get to the vote for that province. I shall have the book then and I can give him an answer on each item.

Mr. Noseworthy: I shall ask the minister about each province.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I want to say one word about my part of the city of Ottawa. As everyone knows, at one time there were a great many public buildings in that part of the city but now I am left with the doubtful honour of having the Department of National Revenue, the mint and the archives, none of which are new buildings. The remainder of the Sussex street area has been expropriated for parks. I think there has been too much concentration of building in one area, Mr. Chairman. This side of Wellington street is being loaded with buildings. At one time I thought there was some suggestion that we should spread buildings around the city.

I hope the minister will see my point. In addition to parks in the lower town area, we should dress it up with one or two public buildings just as we are dressing up the other parts of the city. The area is close to the centre of the city and close to the House of Commons, as well as other public buildings. It is not because there is any problem of distance involved, and I suggest to the minister that he might look into the possibility of locating future public buildings in that area.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I should like to say a word in answer to the hon. member. If my memory serves me right, about 1947 parliament amended the Federal District Commission Act. I cannot recall if it is section 7 or section 8 which empowers the federal district commission, advised by the national planning board, to choose sites upon which public buildings will be erected. It is true that, after they make their report to council, council can turn down the recommendation. However, there are experts in these matters on these boards and commissions, so we generally follow their advice. The new buildings being erected in the capital are erected on sites recommended by these bodies which are advising the government. Perhaps as time goes on we can impress upon them that these buildings may be spread out in Ottawa East. I would favour having some buildings over on the other side—

Mr. Fleming: The printing bureau.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is one, but it is not completed yet. I am in the same situation as the hon. member for Queens. I do not know who is delaying my building, but it is far from being completed.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): How far is it from being completed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is a way of expressing myself. Unless I give you the number of storeys that have been started—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Give me the number of millions that you have spent on it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am going to give you all that and a lot more. I have all the information in the books here, and I will give it to you. You will see that it is not so many millions for the building we are putting up there. But on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, may I ask if we should go into these details. They are most interesting, and this general discussion has lasted quite a long time.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I will not prolong the discussion for more than a minute. I just want to ask one question. But before I do so I want to make a comment because I was greatly interested in hearing the minister this afternoon refer to his good intentions. So far as I can make out, when we see these things in the estimates, they really express good intentions and not much more. May I remind the minister of the remark once made by a gifted colleague of mine, the late Arthur Smith, who said that the road to Hull was paved with good intentions.

I come back to what I asked the minister last night about the duplication of technical services, particularly architects. The minister last night gave me some instruction which I have since been following up. I realize, for example, why there are architects now in the Department of Justice because I have looked up the Penitentiary Act and I see that the Department of Justice have control of penitentiaries and so on. What I want to ask the minister is this. Let us take, for example, Kingston, where there is a penitentiary; I have often walked past it but so far have always escaped. I presume that the minister will have representatives in Kingston either continuously or from time to time; and no doubt the Minister of Justice will also have representatives there from time to time. What I want to know is this. Is there any liaison between them? Do they know each other? Have they offices there that they would use or are they in splendid isolation? Does the man from the Department of Justice go down and carry on his business and does the man from the Department of Public Works go down and carry on his business? Do we have the pleasure of having these men going to and coming from Kingston and each working separately?

Although this is a difficult question to ask the minister to answer because we cannot alter the legislation even if we spend until six o'clock tonight on the matter, I should like to ask the minister whether he feels like expressing an opinion as to whether he thinks it is good common sense. He cannot answer that last question directly, but the minister has ways of answering questions by what I will call indirection which I always find interesting and which often are extremely illuminating.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Speaking of common sense, Mr. Chairman, may I say that at times I think I have plenty of it and at other times I think I lack it. I should not like to discuss this afternoon the whole field of legislation concerning buildings, construction and acquisition of property; because in each case the bill comes before the house, if it contains any clause relating to the acquisition of property. You can look over many statutes, as hon. members know, in which the department, the crown company or the commission set up have powers and functions determined in that statute.

If you speak of the Department of Justice, and penitentiaries, I may say I think it is a good thing that they should have some architects and somebody trained in the building field because they have special buildings for special needs, and probably as the years go on these architects become experts in this construction. The same would apply to hospitals for the Department of National Health and Welfare. The same thing would apply to airfields in the Department of Transport. I think the same thing should apply to the Department of National Defence where they have operational buildings which are not the ordinary buildings. I do not see so much of that duplication that was reported some years ago.

As to their knowing each other, may I say that I know that architects generally know each other even though they do not work in the same department. That statement applies to lawyers generally; they know each other. They co-operate together and are helpful to each other.

As to giving instructions to officials of my department to intervene in the business of another department, may I say that I would hesitate to do that. I am not saying that the system is perfect. But neither would I say that it lacks common sense or wisdom. When these statutes are brought before parliament, everybody has a go at them and gives his opinion. When parliament has decided, year after year, that this clause concerning construction and buildings should be in the statutes, a great many people have given study to it; and nobody as yet has made or asked for an amendment to these different statutes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two questions I should like to ask with regard to the general policy as to construction of buildings and the like. They arise out of the record made in the province of Saskatchewan by the Lunam Construction Company. This company was more or less a fly-by-night proposition which established itself and received many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of contracts.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to intervene, but may I say that I have a file on this matter. Would the hon. member wait until we reach that item?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to ask some questions about it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly; when we get to the item.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a general subject for discussion now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will answer when we get to the item for the construction of the building in question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister tell me when we get to Lunam Construction Company?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly I will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister tell me which item it is?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. It is Qu'Appelle. Look under Saskatchewan, Qu'Appelle, and you will find an item. When we get to that item I will answer questions. I have a whole file here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course Qu'Appelle is just one of many. This company had a number of contracts. Some of them have been completed. I want to find out one thing about this company. Who are the officials of the company and is there any system in effect in the Department of Public Works whereby contractors are bonded? Certainly the situation in regard to this company is one that is inexcusable. Merchants in various parts of Saskatchewan, suppliers of materials, on the assumption that they would be paid, advanced tens of thousands of dollars of credit to the Lunam Construction Company for materials. It is not only the Qu'Appelle business that is in question; there is the building in Regina and there are various other buildings that were built by this company as well.

In one or two cases—I have not the figures before me and I am speaking from memory, but my memory will not belie me on this matter—$40,000 or $50,000 worth of materials are not paid for, and these amounts are owing to suppliers in three or four cases. Yet when these merchants get in touch with the department the answer is, "The account has been paid". I want to know whether, in order to protect suppliers and the like, there is in effect in the Department of Public Works a bond; and if so, what bonds there are in connection with Lunam Construction Company. In the second place, I want to know what justification there is for departmental engineers or architects or the like to permit payments far in advance of the work actually done. In the case of the Lunam Construction Company, if the various contracts which this company had are completed, the Canadian people will have to expend at least $175,000 more than the contract price that was to be paid for the completion of these buildings by the company. That is aside altogether from labour costs.

Certainly what took place in connection with the buildings constructed by the Lunam Construction Company does not indicate that careful husbandry of public funds that one would expect. Why should a company be in a position to receive payment in advance of work sheets showing the work to have been done? To individuals who supply materials that go into the construction of these buildings why should protection not be afforded before payment is made to the contractor? This company, after receiving contracts for about a year and a half, went into insolvency. It objects to anyone's saying it went into bankruptcy for it did not commit any act of bankruptcy. It just failed to pay its creditors. Today there are in Saskatchewan merchants who, having contributed on the basis of credit which should be extended under government contracts, are in a position where they are going to lose unless something is done.

The minister says he will deal with Qu'Appelle in particular when we come to it, but I want to know now the total amount of the various contracts the Lunam Construction Company received from the Department of Public Works. What was the amount that the company undertook to do the work for? Was the work done as the result of tenders, and who are the responsible officials who in their carelessness advanced moneys to that company, defunct in fact, whether bankrupt in law, at a time when suppliers had a large amount of money coming to them? I should like to know the general principle upon which that was done.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. gentleman speaks of general principles. During this session he put two series of questions to the department. He received the answers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): He has them right in front of him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I have not got them; I said that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, I shall have to tell my officials to send you copies. They are all in Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I was ready to discuss the item. This is the general item. All I am asking is to have the general item passed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will come right over and get the copies, because I have not got them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Take a look at Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When you have them, send them over. I thought you had them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am ready to spend all the time you wish on that question when we pass this general item, which is the administration item. Right after that, if you wish, we will call the architectural branch, and I have all the explanations. It is not as sorry a story as the hon. gentleman paints. Could I have the general agreement of the committee to pass this item?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want an answer to this simple question, Mr. Chairman. Did you have bonds?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Were there bonds?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will give you all the information—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want an answer to that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In all these projects the hon. gentleman has mentioned public tenders were called for. In the eight cases that came to my attention public tenders were called for. They were competent tenderers. This company was not the only one. They were the lowest tenderers in every one of these cases, Prince Albert, Regina, Tisdale, Fort Qu'Appelle and so on. At Fort Qu'Appelle there was a new Indian hospital; at Regina a building for the unemployment insurance commission and at Fort Qu'Appelle a new public building. They were all tendered for. They had the lowest tender. Attached to the tenders was a ten per cent cash deposit by the tenderer, which is the guarantee from all these tenderers. We keep that 10 per cent as security. We sign a contract with the lowest tenderer. He proceeds with the work. Our officials in the field make progress reports. We make payments on those progress reports but keep a drawback of 10 per cent. Our guarantee as the work goes on is 20 per cent, and that is what the law and the regulations call for. What else does the hon. gentleman want to ask me on the general principle of contracts?

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that 10 per cent of these contracts amounted to how much?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If you wait until we get to the item I shall be able to tell you. You want general principles now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That information was not given.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Because it is not under this item. I cannot understand why hon. gentlemen do not want this item to go through so I may discuss the details of the other items. We are now on the general item, and I am going to give you general information. If you want the details let us get to the items.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister need not worry about our not wanting it to come up. I want it to come up, and the people of Saskatchewan want it to come up.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am anxious to have it explained.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall deal with it when we come to the item, but at the moment I am trying to find the general principles. Where is the efficiency in a department that permits the payment to the Lunam Construction Company of an amount so large and so much in advance of the progress of the work that before these works can be completed it will cost over $170,000 extra. I have sent for the documents. The minister said he had them, and I shall be very glad to go over them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. gentleman put the questions to us and we answered them. They are in Hansard. I have my own copies here which were prepared by the department. When the hon. gentleman comes here to discuss a case he should have the questions and answers that he received in the house. I do not think I should be called upon to do that for the hon. gentleman. I have my own file here, but I am not going to do his work at the same time. That is up to him. The general principle is to obtain tenders and to obtain the security I have given. Progress payments are made on the affidavit of the contractor and on the reports from our officials in the field, and we keep 10 per cent of the amount certified.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do you also have bonds in order to protect you?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Ten per cent cash deposit. That is done under every contract.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right; the 10 per cent cash deposit does not begin to cover the amount owing to material suppliers. My contention is that if the government in the building—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understood the hon. member for Lake Centre was directing his remarks to the general item. He asked a question of the minister as to the principle followed by the department with regard to bonds. That question appears to have been answered. If there are other general remarks which the hon. member wishes to make they are perfectly in order but, as the minister has pointed out, there are items under which particular questions might more properly be asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The technical question, as far as I am concerned, arises out of the editorial the minister read yesterday with such glee and happiness, and I can understand that. It was not synthetic happiness; it was real joy on being commended. I am just trying to find out the basis upon which the editorial was written, and whether or not if the one example that I mentioned, the Lunam Construction Company of Saskatchewan, had been brought to the attention of the editorial writer he would have been quite as fulsome as he was. What I am trying to ascertain in general is the extent to which the Department of Public Works protects the suppliers of materials that go into the construction of buildings and projects. In other words, if a supplier of cement, bricks or fixtures were to supply them to a private contractor, provision would be made for a certain amount to be held back, as you know, Mr. Speaker. It is not paid immediately in order to protect honest, decent suppliers who have supplied materials.

In the case of the Lunam Construction Company various companies furnished supplies, and the amount still owing for those supplies runs to about $170,000. The Department of Public Works received the advantage of those materials that went into those buildings and projects, being part of the Department of Public Works. The minister has said that contracts were let by tender. I can understand the Lunam Construction Company getting the contracts, because if you tender so low that you are the lowest and then do not finish the work, no great harm has been done to your company.

The minister says that on the contracts which are let by tender 10 per cent is held back. My next question is: Are contractors required to produce receipts showing that the materials supplied have actually been paid for before, as the result of progress reports, progress payments are made? If not, the government of Canada and the Department of Public Works are in an advantageous position not enjoyed by the ordinary house builder or factory builder who, before he can make payments to the contractor, must hold back a reasonable amount.

My question is simply this. Is there no regular and accepted practice whereby no contractor is required to produce receipted bills from his suppliers of materials such as lumber, cement, bricks and all the other things that go into a building? That, I should think, would be an ordinary precaution, and one that should be adhered to. Otherwise people dealing with contractors would do so at their own risk; and that should not be the case in connection with contracts of the government of Canada. It is not the case when one deals with a private person, and surely the government should not be in a better or higher position than the individual in that regard. I would ask the minister to explain the situation with regard to requiring receipted bills before payments are made in advance.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I suppose, if I am to be quite polite, even in the discussion of the general item, I should follow up all these different points, although I think they refer to a specific project.

Every month, on special dates, a contractor makes progress reports as to the work done and the materials employed, and gives us a list of those who have sold him materials. That list is part of the progress report, and it is accompanied by an affidavit of the contractor. On that we send out our cheque, less a 10 per cent drawback. We have a 10 per cent security.

In this special instance I will tell the hon. member right now that we had eight contracts with this firm as the lowest bidder, on which it made its regular deposit, and progress was made with the works. He completed five jobs out of the eight. He stopped work in 1952. I understand that as the result of an automobile accident both his legs were broken. We never had received from anyone a claim against the contractor, up to that date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; you had paid the money out.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): People sent in their bills to the contractor who, in his affidavit, swore that they were paid. Up to that time there was no difficulty at all, and no claim from anyone. We had five out of eight buildings completed. The man suffered this accident and was laid up in hospital for months. At that time we had information that he could not continue, because he was the principal owner of the firm. He acted as contractor, superintendent of works, and everything else. We were left with three uncompleted buildings; and from then on we told him we would keep the deposit, keep the drawback and continue the work on those three jobs.

On the Fort Qu'Appelle Indian hospital the contract amount was $336,264.79. The security deposit held was $31,831.80. The balance unpaid to the contractor was—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the security deposit?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It was $31,831.80. The payments to the contractor that had not been made amounted to $40,202.01. On that contract we have on hand, with the exception of the amounts we may have paid since, the sum of $72,033.81.

On the Regina, Saskatchewan, unemployment building the contract was $215,597. The security deposit was $21,222. The amount still held by the department on that contract, and unpaid, is $42,420.61, making a total of security deposit and amounts still held of $63,642.61.

On the Fort Qu'Appelle public building the contract was for $132,787.25. The security deposit was $12,900. The amount held by the department on the balance of the contract was $29,033.25, making a total amount of $41,933.25.

On those three contracts that were not completed by the Lunam company we held a total of $177,609.65. To complete those three jobs will cost $174,051.43—

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much is owing to—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —leaving a balance of about $3,560. That is the situation in our department. The hon. gentleman says—

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much is owing to the contractor?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Have you had your say? If so, would you just allow me to continue? Up to the date of this accident to Lunam we had never received a claim from anyone. After it was known that the man was in hospital and that he was not continuing on the job, we did receive some claims. I do not know their exact total, nor do I know whether they are justifiable claims. I do not know if they are claims that could be brought against Lunam himself, or could be proved in court. But what we undertook to do, with security which the hon. member says is not sufficient, was to complete those three buildings at the amount contracted for.

Now, I suppose in Saskatchewan, as in Quebec, you must have some statutory liens.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot put mechanics' liens against government property.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Why?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Because you cannot.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Can you not notify the department, as you would in connection with an ordinary man making a contract, that this contractor owes you money? Is that not the ordinary way you would do it? As I say, up to the time of that accident there were no claims at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the total amount claimed since?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not dare give the amount because they are not substantiated. We have no evidence as to what the claims are. Why did not some of those creditors put this man into bankruptcy? I am surprised that they did not even try to put the company into bankruptcy. I cannot put the man into bankruptcy. I have the amount necessary to complete the jobs.

I am protecting the government. The hon. member says, "You should be protecting everybody who is selling material to contractors". I wonder if under the statute I am administering that is one of the duties of the Department of Public Works. My duty is to see that we get value for the money we spend. We follow a system of calling for tenders. If you wish to find fault with the amounts I have given you, I suppose you can try, but I do not know how you can prove it.

Suppose there are claims against the man. Does the hon. gentleman know that he is insolvent? Does he know whether he has made a petition to go into bankruptcy? Does he know what his assets are? I do not need to do that; I have the money. How are you going to blame my officials or me? Once I have given a contract, once it is signed and I have the security deposit and the drawback, the buildings are completed and delivered to us. Where is the fault to be found with that? What fault can you place on my architects and officials because some claimant in that district did not put in a claim in proper time? That would not stand up in any court under the statute under which we operate. I do not know of all these projects myself and must rely on my officials, but I do defend what we have been doing.

Mr. Green: I think in his argument the minister has overlooked two important points. In the first place, he says in effect that if these people who supplied the materials and I suppose also those who worked for wages had wanted to protect themselves they should have notified the Department of Public Works. Let us follow that a little further. Suppose they had done so, and suppose the amount of the claims which had not been paid totalled $100,000 and the minister had only $5,000 left of these drawbacks on the projects which were not completed. He knows just as well as the rest of us that he would not pay anything to those creditors except perhaps the $5,000. They would not have been any further ahead by having notified the department that they had not been paid.

The second basis on which his argument is quite wrong is that he intimated that all the department gets from the general contractor is a record of the work, and I think he went so far as to say a statement of the people who had supplied the materials. He did not say that they looked at the receipts in the hands of that general contractor. I say that is the great weakness. I do not know why the department should be willing to make these payments without checking the receipts.

There is an inspector on the job. In connection with each contract there is a representative of the Department of Public Works checking the job from day to day. It should be part of the duties of that representative to see the receipts in the hands of the general contractor. When a person is building a house or a plant and has an architect in charge it is the duty of that architect, at least in British Columbia, to see that the bills are paid before he gives a certificate on which the general contractor receives his pay.

Apparently the Department of Public Works does not do that, and I think that is a serious defect in its procedure. If in the case of these contracts the Department of Public Works had insisted on checking the receipts for the materials supplied and for the work done on a wages basis this difficulty would not have arisen. The whole situation seems to boil down to the fact that the government of Canada is benefiting at the expense of the people who supplied materials and who actually did the work.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You do not want my departmental officials to follow the contractor when he goes in to buy a keg of nails. We cannot do that. If we had to follow this contractor in connection with every transaction he made with people who were selling materials it would be completely out of the ordinary and beyond any practice followed in the construction business.

Mr. Green: That is what the architect does.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Are we to follow him when he goes to a corner store to buy a handful of screws or nails? Oh, no. That is not what is done. Let me tell my hon. friend that I have had a little more experience than that. I cannot tell a contractor that he must buy here or there and pay so much. What we get from the contractor in order to protect the public is a sworn affidavit when he asks for a progress payment. He signs an affidavit that the amount asked for is necessary in order to pay the bills. His affidavit is appended to the progress report. This developed rather oddly. There was an article in the Regina Leader-Post which indicates that this man seems to be angry at somebody. The article states that the bankruptcy report was denied by D. Harvey Lunam, proprietor of Lunam Construction Company. He denied that his company is bankrupt and that it owes $167,481 to the public as alleged in a government return which had been tabled the previous Monday in the House of Commons. Does the hon. gentleman want me to get into the fight between the contractor and these people? This man says he is not bankrupt and does not owe these amounts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the Regina Leader-Post?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, some time in January, 1953. Why bring poor me into this controversy? The man says he is not bankrupt and the other fellow says "Pay me what you owe me for materials". What I am here for is to get money from parliament to be used on different contracts according to the law. I am here to see that the contracts are executed and the work completed with the money voted by parliament. I am dealing with hundreds of contracts all over the country.

If I were living out there and some of these chaps who have claims against Lunam came to my law office after I had seen this report where he claimed he was not bankrupt, I would tell them to get after him and try to put him into bankruptcy. But that should not be done on the floor of the house.

Mr. Green: The minister is taking the position that all his department needs to do in the case of a contract such as this is get an affidavit from the contractor; and if that affidavit stating that he has paid his bills is not correct, it is just too bad for the man who has supplied materials. Is that the position the minister is taking?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When we make a progress payment it is to enable him to pay these bills, and he swears he has paid them.

Mr. Green: In effect you pay the contractor before he pays.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Who am I going to pay? I cannot go out and pay these chaps, because I do not even know them.

Mr. Green: You pay the contractor before he pays his bills. That is what the minister has just said.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): He says on the affidavit, "Here are the bills I have now paid, and I want to be paid by the government".

Mr. Green: Does that mean that the Department of Public Works pays the contractor before he pays his debts? I think that is a most improper procedure.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We do not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister ended his remarks by saying that if the buildings are completed the department would still have $3,500, but after all the government has received in the way of materials that went into these buildings well over $150,000. I am going to give the exact figures. The government has accepted the materials and the minister now says, "We accepted the affidavit of Mr. Lunam who was injured in some accident". In order to establish his case, instead of producing correspondence from the Lunam Construction Company that it was not bankrupt, he reads from the Regina Leader-Post to the effect that Mr. Lunam objected to an article in that newspaper written by Mr. MacKay to the effect that the Lunam Construction Company was bankrupt. Mr. Lunam said: "We are not bankrupt. We still have money coming from the dominion government".

I am going to place figures on the record and ask this committee whether or not it can absolve the Department of Public Works of failure to protect honest suppliers of material. The minister says, "Why don't you use the mechanics' lien act?" Well, if I know anything about the law of Saskatchewan, mechanics' liens are inoperative against the crown in any particular. That has been held to be so on more than one occasion.

The minister says, "We had no complaints from those suppliers up to February, 1951" —or 1952; I am not sure which year. Certainly they had no claims at that time; there was much work to be completed on those buildings, and the suppliers of materials naturally expected that before payment would be made to any contracting company they would be protected. The minister says: "We took the affidavit of Mr. Lunam. Do you think we should have gone beyond that?"

All I can say is that Mr. Lunam, having defrauded Saskatchewan suppliers to the extent of over $150,000, cannot be proceeded against by the suppliers. No offence was committed in any declaration he made in so far as they are concerned. The declaration he made that was false, if it was false, was made to the Department of Public Works in order to secure payments. There was where the false pretence was perpetrated on the Department of Public Works. On the other hand, where were those architects and engineers? They saw this material being supplied. They were present. They signed reports from time to time. They were either watching what was going on, in which case they should not have signed those reports and approved them; or they were not watching and did not discharge their responsibilities.

Here is the record. The company contracted to build the new Indian hospital at Qu'Appelle for $336,000. It received $296,000 on account and there is still some $61,000 owing to lumber yards, merchants, supplier firms and the like.

Mr. Croll: Have you got judgments?

Mr. Diefenbaker: And in order to complete that building, if the government were to pay for the materials it secured it would still cost $80,000.

The public building at Fort Qu'Appelle was to cost $132,000, the minister says, and that is correct. The company was paid $103,000 and there is still some $40,000 owing to suppliers of materials that went into that building. In order to complete the building an amount of $37,700 would be required. The minister says, "Well, we gave the contract to Lunam Construction Company because it had the lowest tender." Why would it not have? It did not pay the suppliers. It pocketed the value of the supplies that went into the building. Why would the company not be able to tender low?

I move to the next one. It is the unemployment insurance commission office in Regina. The contract was let for $245,000. The sum of $180,000 was paid on account and there is still $58,000 owing to the suppliers. That does not cover wages paid by the government, wages paid to men who worked and were properly protected. But hear what the attitude of the minister is: "Do you expect us to pay for something we did not get?" The point is that the government did get those materials, and the point is that it allowed Lunam Construction Company to receive payments that were not justified, thereby excluding the possibility of recovery by those suppliers who furnished materials because it was the Department of Public Works or some other government department for whom construction was being proceeded with.

As far as the unemployment insurance commission office in Regina is concerned, payments on the contract were made to within $35,000 of the full amount, and it would take $90,000 more to complete that building if the suppliers were paid. The minister says, "Well, you would not expect me to waste the people's money." No, I do not; and I do not know one of these suppliers personally.

An hon. Member: No?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration may laugh, but I do not know any of them. No; and I do not mix my parliamentary duties with my responsibilities as a lawyer in any way; let that be clear to him. However, I do make a plea on behalf of those merchants who believed that the government would be as efficient as one would expect a private contractor or builder to be, and that they would be protected.

The minister has taken the stand that for them to be protected would be wasting the taxpayers' money; but they having been defrauded and lost what was rightfully theirs, there is a moral obligation upon the government of Canada to pay them. They are defrauded because of the fact that some people in the Department of Public Works did not do their job—some officials, architects and engineers—and goodness knows we have enough architects. I think there are 80 in the various departments of government, and in addition hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent for architects outside the government service. There are enough architects and there are enough engineers. The expenditure last year for special services was approximately $7 million in addition to the cost of those architects and engineers in the government service. There are enough of them to assure that ordinary business practices are applied.

The Lunam Construction Company, without assets, has been a great favourite of the government for the last several years. The story of the company in the province of Saskatchewan is no tribute to the Department of Public Works in so far as its officials in Regina or the western provinces are concerned, nor in so far as those in authority in Ottawa are concerned. One would think that they would not pay a contractor so far in advance of the work performed. It should have been apparent that the work had not been completed to the extent that the progress reports showed. Nevertheless the payments were made, and I will say no more at this time. I repeat, however, that one expects a higher degree of responsibility on the part of officials in the minister's department. One could be an amateur and see that the work had not been completed to the extent of the progress payments.

This work for the Department of Public Works was just a segment of the building activities of this company, because it was a favourite of some other departments as well. To complete these projects the following amounts would have to be spent: For one job, $99,000; for the second, $37,000; and for the third, $80,000. Those are the figures if the materials that went into the buildings were in fact paid for. I am not going outside the minister's department but this company also built for the Indian affairs branch.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Would you wait until that department is called?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: This has nothing to do with the minister, but in the Indian affairs branch this company had the same magnificent record of waste in so far as the rights of the individuals to be paid are concerned.

The excuse given by one member of the company, that Mr. Lunam was injured, has little reference to the responsibilities of a limited company that had available to it, and always had available, a group of servants and officials to carry out the work that Mr. Lunam was not carrying out even before he suffered the accident referred to. I think the minister should give consideration to the issuing of orders to his department that payment should not be made to contractors until every assurance has been provided by the contractor that the suppliers who honestly supplied the materials have been paid. Only then should the contractor be permitted to get his hands on the money. In reality the money should be held in trust by the department for the benefit of the suppliers. With that, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Even if I am anxious to see this item go through, there was one sentence I would not allow to go by without challenge. It was that we are wasting the people's money.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never said that at any time. I said the result is waste to the individual who supplied the material.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now, the way you would act as Minister of Public Works would be that on every project you would have men follow this contractor when he purchased materials for the building, then follow up and ask the merchants or suppliers if they had received their money. You would do that, but we do not do that. I will admit it. I have not the staff to do that with all our contractors. I ask parliament for an amount of money, and I follow the statute to the letter; that is my responsibility. If it is not followed, then it is done without my knowledge and as yet I have not found instances of that.

In this case I was advised some months ago that three jobs were uncompleted. I said, "Have you got the security deposits? Have you got the 10 per cent drawback? Have you got enough money to complete the job?" The report I made this afternoon was the one that came to me. Now, am I going to go around changing the system, and saying that it should be the way the hon. gentleman suggests? What I find peculiar is this. If there are so many claims against this contractor, and he says he is solvent, then why come to me? He has the money. He says he has. He is not broke. He is not bankrupt. You have a claim against him, so why come to me? I am using the money parliament voted to build this building, and I am going to build it.

Mr. Green: May I ask one other question on this point?

Mr. Hosking: I should like to take part in this debate. I do not think it is right for a lawyer to stand up in this house and criticize the architects and engineers for the part they played in the building of this structure. There has been no word of criticism in regard to the design. There has been no word of criticism in regard to the safety of the construction. Those are the responsibilities of the engineers and architects. For a lawyer to stand up in this house and suggest it is an evil thing, is not proper.

I hope the hon. member takes the position that the government should let the contract to the lowest tender. The minister says that was done.

Then the hon. member made one very startling statement which did not balance up with the rest of his statements. He said the suppliers were placed in the position of dealing with a company without assets. Certainly it is the suppliers' responsibility to see they get paid. I have every sympathy with the local people who supplied the materials, but they are the only persons who are able to keep a check on the person with whom they are dealing. At the first sign of anything wrong they should inform the department that they have not been paid. If this had been done right away the necessary precautions could have been taken to prevent them losing any money.

It is all very well for any member who has not the responsibility of government to stand up and say the government should do all these things because of someone else's mistake, but this government is trying to keep costs down. They cannot do that if people do not accept their own responsibilities. It is not economically sound for any member of the opposition to stand up and say the government should pay this money because the local suppliers, who could check on the contractor with whom they are dealing, were not paid. These local people should know better than anyone else whether or not the contractor is going to pay his bills.

Mr. Green: There is one other question I should like to ask the minister in connection with the practice followed by his department. He has said that the department does not require the general contractor to show receipts before payments are made. Apparently all that is required is an affidavit from the contractor, and on that affidavit payment is made. I pointed out a few moments ago that I thought that was a poor procedure to follow. It is not the procedure followed in ordinary civilian life by a person having a building constructed. In that case the architect makes the general contractor produce his receipts before it is possible for the contractor to get payment. At any rate that is the practice followed in British Columbia. The architect does not have to rush around to the hardware store to follow up each item. The contractor produces his receipts, and the architect can tell pretty well whether or not the goods that have gone into that building have been duly paid for.

Now, I think the department is wrong in not making the general contractor produce receipts. Let us go on from that point, however, and for the purpose of argument let us say the practice the department is following is correct. I do not think it is, but let us go one step further and say that the practice is correct. When the department does get this affidavit payment is made to the general contractor, who is supposed to pay off the subcontractors. Does the Department of Public Works make any attempt to follow that money in order to see that these subcontractors are paid out of the money which has been put up by the department, or does the Department of Public Works wash its hands of any further responsibility?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Let me put this question to my hon. friend. I buy an overcoat or anything else, and I pay for it. I get the overcoat. Do I follow up the payment to see if the storekeeper has paid the wholesaler for that overcoat? I put it on and pay for it. In public works when contracts are given, am I going to follow up the contractor in his private business? You cannot ask that of the department, nor of the officials. Bankruptcies occur in normal business, and this is in the normal course of business. If someone has any claim against the contractor, why bring in the government? We got the building and the contractor received the goods and supplies. If I were to follow these suggestions I would turn the department into a collection agency, an accountant's agency and an inspection agency.

This man may have contracts outside of the government, with private enterprise. Are we to follow him in the purchase of all his materials? Really, I want to be fair to the argument of the hon. gentleman, but if you try to put that into practice you will not be asking me to run the Department of Public Works, you will be asking me to run all these branches of a collection agency for every man who sells material. Then I would have to follow it up and see if this material was really supplied for this job or a different job. I know the suggestion was made by my hon. friends with the best of intentions, but the job would be overwhelming for my department with the staff I have.

Mr. Green: It is quite clear from the minister's answer that his department accepts no responsibility for seeing that these payments which are made to the general contractor are used to pay off the subcontractors.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I did not say that. Suppose we had received claims from people before the man went out of business or stopped work. The officials of the department would have taken notice of that, but not of a claim made two months or three months after the man is out of business. People come along and say, "He owes me money". This poor man says he does not owe him. Am I going to be the judge? No, not now.

Mr. Green: I will tell the minister what his department could do and what they should do in all fairness to everyone concerned. Let him have his inspectors require the general contractor to produce a receipt for payment in connection with the materials. Then when that receipt has been obtained, let the department pay the general contractor. If that is done no one will have any further complaints. This is particularly necessary in the case of a government contract, because the people who supply the materials and earn the wages are not entitled to a mechanic's lien which is their great protection in the case of a contract by a private firm. In the second place, it is particularly important with a government contract because a person, in supplying materials to a man who has a contract with the government, would naturally believe that everything would be done in a businesslike way. I suggest to the minister that he instruct his departmental officials that from now on they make payment only after receipts have been produced for the materials supplied.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I am ready to take the suggestion made by the hon. member and study it. If I had a copy of the contracts we sign with these contractors—I have not a copy here—or of the form of our contract covering nearly 60 different sections—I would show it to the hon. gentleman and say, "Here is what the law provides for, not only the general law but the law between the parties, and we follow that law to the letter." I think I am fulfilling my responsibility and duty when I follow up the contract we have signed, that has been approved and that has been maintained by all the courts of the land for years.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

I sympathize with the poor man who sold some material and was not paid for it. But I cannot sympathize with him much more than I would with the storekeeper who sells to another contractor on a private contract and loses. I would not have time to do my work if I were sympathizing with everybody who loses money in the contracting business. When you look up the list of bankruptcies in the country you see that a good many of them are contractors. Although they think they are going to make money when they sign a contract, they lose money. I am ready to continue this discussion on my estimates, on the first item and in the general discussion; but I do not think at this stage I would change my mind as to our contracts. I may suggest to my officials if they have the staff to run around—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have staff enough.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What does the hon. member know about it? How many have we of staff? Has he any idea?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In Regina there is staff enough so that if they had been efficient, they could have protected people.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): How many architects, draftsmen and superintendents are there? How many have we? The hon. gentleman is a good lawyer. Why should he assert things like that? I told him to read the blue book before.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are the minister.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly; and I know far more about it than does the hon. member.

Mr. Green: We would hope so.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. member wants to go into these details, let him prepare his case better, because I think I would need more staff to do the work hon. gentlemen opposite are asking to have done. I may ask treasury board for more staff, and then I will ask for an increase in my estimates to pay that staff and the estimates of the country will be increased; and if I pay these amounts to the people who sold these materials, I am going to ask for more money in our supplementary estimates and we will bring up our estimates to a higher figure.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister explain why it would require an increase in his staff if he required the contractor to produce a receipt? It seems to me that the suggestion which has been made does not impose any greater duty or burden on the minister's staff. It merely imposes perhaps a greater burden on the contractor, namely that of producing a receipt before he gets paid. Will the minister tell us how that would impose an extra burden on his staff?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The answer to that question is an easy one. If I am doing business with an honest man—and I am not speaking of this case, I am speaking of anybody; it is a general comment—and he signs his affidavit that he has paid these bills, even if he gives his word we do not take that in public works; we need the signature. Don't be afraid; if you are dealing with somebody who is not honest, then you can ask for receipts and you can ask for this, that and the other thing, and if he does not find a way of fooling you, I lack experience in human nature.

Mr. Fulton: That does not answer the question.

Mr. Green: But the loan companies—

Mr. Fulton: The minister has not answered my question.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, I told the hon. member that I would take that suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but the minister has answered the suggestion by making another suggestion, namely that it would impose an increased burden on his staff. I asked him to explain in what way it would impose that burden because he has just now said that they ask for an affidavit before they make payment. How would it increase the burden on the minister's staff if he asked for receipts to be attached to that affidavit? There would be no extra burden on his staff.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will just give the hon. member one instance. This receipt is only a receipt. I would have to have officials to go around to verify the receipt. You can push this argument to the point of absurdity. Do you think it is the time right now to argue the matter? I should like to take a case on these matters in court, but I do not think I can in parliament; I have no judge here.

Mr. Fulton: When I ask the minister if he really thinks it would impose an extra burden on his staff—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do.

Mr. Fulton: He has not given us any evidence or any reason to show that it would impose that burden. He answered my question by making another supposition. I asked a simple question. Would the requirement that, in addition to an affidavit, there should be the production of a receipt impose any extra burden on the minister's staff?

Mr. Casselman: The answer is no.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am going to tell my officials to consider that matter, but there is a remark made by an experienced man. He says that every two weeks, when you had progress payments, you would have these fellows' receipts and you would have to check up on those receipts and with the one who signed the receipt, to see whether everything really is aboveboard. As I say, we take human nature as we find it, and assume that these are honest people. That is the way I deal with the matter. We take their oath, their signature. I take their lists. I get no complaints. I pay. If the man breaks his leg and two months later I get a complaint, I say, "Do not pay any more money; keep that security deposited; keep the drawback, and we will complete the job and show the country that we have a building for the money they have voted."

Mr. Green: I would point out that the loan companies always require the production of receipts in addition to an affidavit.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do they ever lose money?

Mr. Green: Occasionally, yes. But I think the Department of Public Works should at least follow that same practice of calling for receipts. Another suggestion I make to the minister is that he have a look at his contract form and have inserted in it a provision that the payments will be made only upon production of receipts. It may be that he already has that provision in his contract form. I should be greatly surprised if it is not there now. But from what the minister has said, it is obvious that if that provision is in the form the practice of the department is such that the provision is not being followed. I would suggest that the minister have his contract form checked.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister if there is in his contract any provision that it shall be the obligation of the contractor to see that the subcontractors are paid, and also the wage earners and suppliers of materials? Is there any provision of that kind in the contract?

Mr. Hosking: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. Fleming: Just a minute. I am waiting for an answer.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand from the officers that there is a clause in which he undertakes to pay those who sell him materials. That is his obligation.

Mr. Fleming: Quite so. He has an obligation to them, of course. But by making that provision in the contract it becomes an obligation on his part to the Minister of Public Works. That is the point I was getting at. Apparently the contract so provides.

There has been no reference to this, but I think it is implicit in what the minister said earlier this afternoon, that it is not the practice of the department to require on the part of the contractor a performance bond.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is a cash deposit.

Mr. Fleming: Yes. The minister spoke of the 10 per cent cash deposit and also the 10 per cent holdback against current payments. I think what would help to meet the situation here, and would be very useful for the department, as well as of great assistance in cases of this kind in protecting materialmen who are denied the ordinary protection of the mechanics' lien acts of the provinces, would be the requirement that the contractor file a performance bond. If you have a bonding company standing behind a contractor and you have that provision in the contract which would require that the contractor bind himself to the Minister of Public Works to pay the materialmen and the wage earners and his subcontractors, then you have assurance on behalf of your materialmen and your wage earners that they are going to be able to collect. In that way your subcontractors are going to be paid.

It seems to me there is a great gap in the present practice when the department does not require the filing by the contractor of a performance bond by some surety company. That is very general practice in private life with large construction contracts. I think it would be of very great value to the department itself as well as to those who are subcontractors of those who are contractors of the department.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is something in that argument of the performance bond. I understand that it was studied by those in this line of business, but in the past those bonds have always been refused. We do not accept them; we ask for a cash deposit of 10 per cent of the amount of the contract or tender from the companies that tender.

I understand that this question of a bond is being studied. I would not see any serious objection, but I do not think the protection would be greater for the government than the cash security deposit. Take this instance where unfortunately the man did not complete the contract. We had the money to go ahead, and we did it. In the contract in question, if we did lack some money to complete it we would have our recourse against the contractor for the balance. That would be all right if he were solvent. If he were bankrupt we would lose, probably, but we do not lose very much money in our contracts. I may tell the hon. member that there are not many cases where we lose money.

Mr. Croll: Will the hon. member for Eglinton tell us how a performance bond would be helpful to the Lunam contractors under these circumstances?

Mr. Fleming: In view of the term in the contract about which I asked the minister a question when I rose to my feet. If it were not a provision in the contract the department has with the contractor that the contractor engages to pay his subcontractors and thereby incurs an obligation to the minister to pay them, then the performance bond would be of doubtful value as far as subcontractors are concerned. Even then it would be of value to the department, but in view of the fact that there is a provision in the contract that the contractor undertakes as an obligation to the minister to pay his subcontractors, then the performance bond would be of very definite value. That prompts me to ask another question of the minister.

Mr. Croll: Would you get a performance bond under these conditions?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, I think you would; and I think this, and I speak from some experience in such matters. I think it would be of very definite value also in eliminating people who are tendering who are not potentially solvent. You would not find surety companies agreeing to give performance bonds to people who are not solvent, and I think it would represent another measure of guarantee against a situation of this kind arising in the future.

There is one other aspect to this subject that I should like to raise. I think the minister can see that the materialman who is supplying material to a contractor with his department is not in the same position as a materialman who is supplying material to a contractor on private property. He is denied the normal benefits that flow to the subcontractor, the materialman and the wage earner under the mechanics' lien act. In these circumstances it seems to me that in all fairness something more is required on the part of the department than just to say, "We will take no responsibility. We will just treat this as we would if the structure were being built on private property".

It may be all very well for the owner in a case of that kind, where the land is privately owned, to say, "Well, you materialmen, you must protect yourselves. You have the mechanics' lien act." This is a different situation and, Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that whatever may be said for the 10 per cent deposit or the 10 per cent holdback as a measure of guarantee to the department, we have abundant evidence in this case that it has left a great gap in the security extended to those who ought to have some consideration from the department by reason of the fact that they are denied the normal protection of the mechanics' lien act of the province.

There is one further matter about which I should like to question the minister. In view of the terms of the contract which he mentioned in reply to my first question, it is evident that, even though there was sufficient in the deposit and the holdback to enable the department to complete the building in this case, there still has been a breach of contract on the part of the contractor if he has broken that provision of his contract under which he obligated himself to pay to the materialmen and the wage earners the money due them. What action, if any, has the Department of Public Works taken with reference to that breach of contract?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are trying to complete these three buildings. That is the first thing I had in mind, to see if we had enough money. We probably will not be through with this gentleman when we have completed the job. We will know exactly where we stand then. We shall assure ourselves whether or not he is really solvent.

Mr. Fleming: Did I understand the minister to say that the buildings were not completed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Two out of the three are completed and the other is being completed, and I have given the hon. member for Lake Centre the amount necessary to complete it. This is the way this case strikes me as a lawyer. Here is a man who stopped doing the work some time ago, sometime in January, as I explained.

Mr. Croll: In what year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In 1952. We received no claim from anybody before that. He had stopped doing the work for I do not know how long, two or three or four months, and then we started getting claims. Now, even if these people were entitled to collect under the mechanics' lien statute the time for registering their liens would have expired by that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They cannot file a mechanic's lien against the crown.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I know, but even if they had the right against the government the time had expired. The man stops work, and they wait for two or three months before we hear of a claim. Even if they were entitled to all the benefits under that statute, their delay in putting in their claims would have barred them.

Mr. Green: Not if the building was not completed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the delivery had been made before.

Mr. Green: No, not in British Columbia, at any rate. It may be that way in Ontario.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am not going to go into that, although it is interesting as a legal point. All this discussion should prove one thing. Even if you can blame my officials in certain instances, they try to get the work done according to the contract and the amount of money we have asked from parliament. I think I have to give them credit for that. They are not perfect; they may have defects, but they are quite loyal and frank with me, and I think I know almost everything—well, I would not say everything—that goes on in my department. When they have difficulties they bring them to my attention. Here is one of the difficulties they had. I was acquainted with it, and that was the procedure we followed.

Mr. Graydon: It occurs to me that something depends upon what was said in that affidavit. Has the minister gone carefully into the affidavit that was taken? If so, is there anything wrong with it, or is it exactly in accordance with the facts?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My deputy tells me it is the ordinary form of affidavit that is mentioned in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. Personally I do not see them, but that is the information I have.

Mr. Graydon: I seems to me there is a real problem involved here, if the affidavit is contrary to the facts which obtained at the time it was taken. Some responsibility rests with the government as to what steps it will take.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): One further question—

Mr. Graydon: No, I should like to have the minister give me that information, because it is important.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not looked into that aspect of the matter. What I had in mind when this matter was brought to my attention was to have completion of the buildings with the money we had on hand. At the time I did not even know there were claims coming in. I said, "Now, get the estimate, and see what we can do with that money." The report came back that we could complete the three buildings with the money we had from the security deposit and the holdback from payments. That was the practical thing I had in mind. This afternoon I have given the result. As to the other point, well, I must confess ignorance. I have not given much thought to it.

Mr. Graydon: At some other stage will the minister give the information I have asked for? I think it is of much more importance than appears on the surface.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will; but at this stage I would not know the decision of the department as to what proceedings we would take against the man. I would not go that far. I would have to consult the Department of Justice. We would bring it to their attention and they would advise us as to the procedure to be followed, if any.

Mr. Graydon: The minister does not have any objection to giving us a copy of the affidavit sworn by the contractor, has he?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I shall look into it.

Mr. Croll: I have been listening to the discussion, and I wonder if I am right in my belief that during that discussion someone said there were no judgments against this man as a result of the debts owing. Am I correct in that understanding? When he was discussing the matter the hon. member for Lake Centre did not indicate that there were any judgments, and from what the minister said I gathered there were no judgments. Am I correct?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot answer for the minister, but my information is that the only asset this company had was a house owned by Lunam at the time he ceased work, and that he transferred that house to his wife. So I think the assets were pretty well cleared away. But that does raise a question I should like to ask the minister. He was able to advise the house, on the basis of an article in a Regina newspaper, that Mr. Lunam was not bankrupt. In that article Mr. Lunam said he was not bankrupt.

In view of the fact that claims from suppliers approximating $170,000 have been sent to the department—and the information I have as to the amount still owing suppliers came in an answer furnished by the minister in the house—has the minister been in touch with the Lunam Construction Company to find out what assets they have, and whether they will make payments? That would appear to be a most salutary course to follow, rather than to ascertain through the medium of a press interview that Mr. Lunam was not bankrupt. And if the minister has been in communication with the Lunam Construction Company, will he place before the committee balance sheets showing, among other things, the indebtedness of the Lunam Construction Company, and to whom. If the minister has that statement we would like to have it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Replying to the first question, the hon. member has said that the only asset Lunam had was a house. He will understand that Lunam tendered on contracts amounting to $1,200,000. One sure thing is that we held back 10 per cent, which would have amounted to $100,000. We must have had that much from him. I do not know where he got it, but he must have had some assets or he would not have got those contracts just by attaching his cheque to the tender. We never ask more than a 10 per cent deposit from any people tendering on these contracts. He met that requirement. Since he has been out of the hospital I am told he cannot be found. If the hon. member could help me find him I would be very glad indeed. I do not know where he is, but we have inquired.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think he could have been looked for very thoroughly, because he was in Regina six weeks ago.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, I did not go personally to Regina to look for him, but I did ask some in the department, and they tried to locate him. We went to a hotel where he had been living at one time, but he had moved out of that hotel and gone to another one. We tried to locate him there. The first news I got was this clipping from the newspaper. I do not know where he is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, he gave that interview in Regina.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, but it may have been given on the street corner, and when I would get out there he would be on the next corner. We are still trying to find him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So is it a fact that since February, 1952, the Department of Public Works has not been in communication with Mr. Lunam, or secured from him a balance sheet showing his assets and liabilities? Has he just disappeared, faded away, only to be found by a reporter of the Regina Leader-Post for an interview?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Here is the information my officials give me on this case, that since February 1952 we have tried to locate the man and have not succeeded. So we have had no contact with him, no balance sheet or anything else. And as we wanted to complete the buildings, we got to work on them.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Are all these contracts by the Department of Public Works on an outright basis? Are they all outright contracts, or does the department on some occasions pay a fixed fee, or cost plus? Does the department make contracts on a cost-plus basis? I remember that the Auditor General told the public accounts committee that on some occasions a person will have a contract with the government on which further work to be done is carried out on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If my hon. friend wishes to have that information I would advise him to read section 36 of the Public Works Act. If he will read it carefully he will see how these contracts are given. It is all written down in black and white.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): If the minister knows what is in section 36, would he be good enough to tell me now?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is one section which authorizes me, when it is in the public interest, to give contracts in amounts up to $15,000 without asking for tenders. Over and above the amount, in urgent cases, where damage would occur to the public interest if I were to fail to take action, I can make contracts without tenders. Outside of that we must ask for tenders.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): When you come to make payments on those contracts, do you not have affidavits covering materials used? Those would have been paid for before you pay for the contract.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have been arguing that for two hours.

Mr. Hosking: I am anxious to see this item pass, but I think it would be wrong to allow the impression to continue which has been created on the minister this afternoon without endeavouring to set out both sides of the picture. I think we should analyse just how this situation arose. Anyone familiar with the conditions surrounding a contract of this kind knows that the local firms who are supplying goods to the general contractor are not anxious to have payments made at the end of the month for fear they might lose some future business. In other words they deliberately get themselves into the position where the general contractor owes them large sums of money. They partly finance his contract so they will continue to get his business. That is a position into which they get of their own volition.

Having explained how the situation arose and why they are in that position, I would not want the minister to gum up the procedure with red tape by putting into effect any of the suggestions that have been made by the opposition lawyers. If you are going to require the inspector to have receipts for all bills that are paid, you will also need to have an engineer, an auditor and a chartered accountant. Then if the department happened to pay one of these bills and through fraud were asked to pay it a second time you would immediately be held responsible for having made that mistake.

I hope that you will not start to further gum up with red tape these contracts that have been discussed today by following the procedure that has been suggested by the opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the minister at any time secure from the Lunam Construction Company a statement of assets and liabilities? Did he ever ask for such a statement before or after February, 1952.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): To which contracts would that question apply?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just the ones under public works.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Those that were completed and paid for. We have those buildings. Should I get a statement on those? In the case of those that are not completed, I have the money to complete them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That does not answer anything. I do not know why the minister has not done something regarding this matter. He has the mounted police available.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I object to that, and I want my hon. friend to withdraw his statement. I have been talking here this afternoon for nearly two hours telling what I have been doing. I do not think it is fair that the hon. member should say I have not been doing anything. I would not say that to the hon. gentleman, although I do not believe he is doing very much.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To say that the minister has not been doing anything is possibly an understatement, because what I had in mind was this. This man disappeared in Regina.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): How do you know he is in Regina?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Everybody knew, including the staff reporter of the Regina Leader-Post who interviewed this man on several occasions.

Mr. Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): How did he know him?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to answer that. Presumably his identity was made known to him. On the statement that was secured I cannot understand why the Department of Public Works, having actually benefited to the extent of approximately $170,000 worth of materials that went into the buildings so they could be completed within the contract price, did not do anything. In other words, if the suppliers had not been taken in to the extent of $170,000 in materials that were supplied, as far as the government is concerned the projects would have cost much more to complete over and above the contract price.

Has the minister's department written to the Lunam company? If they have, I should like to have the correspondence produced when we come to the proper item. This man's elusiveness was such that it aroused great interest. Lunam and his company took these people in to the extent they did as the result of a false affidavit, and only the Department of Public Works can prosecute because the false pretence was perpetrated against that department. This man swore a false affidavit which caused the Department of Public Works to advance moneys to which he was not entitled, and I cannot understand why he should not have been prosecuted or why the mounted police were not used to ascertain whether a fraud such as this should be committed against the Department of Public Works.

That is the reason I said the minister had not done anything. I meant that he had not used the agencies that were available in order to punish a man who according to the statement of the minister is a wrongdoer in that he defrauded the government of Canada by falsely swearing to an affidavit in order to secure payment. I am wondering whether the matter was ever placed in the hands of the mounted police, or whether there were communications with Lunam or the company?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): After this accident had happened and he was in the hospital, and we found out he could not proceed with the construction, we had served on him a notice according to the contract that we would hold as security the balance of the contract and would proceed with the work. I understand that we have a copy of that contract.

Item agreed to.

Architectural branch—

322. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $13,588,361.

Mr. Green: Will the minister tell the committee to what extent commitments are authorized against future years? Apparently each year there is a provision of this type in this vote.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This $500,000 for future commitments covers orders which are given during the fiscal year but which are not expected to be delivered. Suppose we ordered a diesel engine which takes many months to deliver, we would be committed to the company but would not receive delivery during the fiscal year. We have to have this amount for future commitments.

Mr. Green: To what extent?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that this year we are committed to the extent of about $300,000. These goods will be delivered in the future, but not under this vote. If we did not have this item we would have no legal power to give an order.

Mr. Green: These commitments were made in the last fiscal year and are for the present fiscal year; is that the idea?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is right.

Mr. Green: Why is there a provision of this kind in this and the following item, and not in any other item?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that in the last months of the fiscal year we continue placing orders although we know they will not be delivered. We are authorized to commit up to $500,000 under this item for the next year, but these amounts will be revoted as deliveries are made in the next year. It is only authority to commit; it is not an expenditure of money. We cannot go over and above our commitments for $500,000. I understand that in the administration, when the last months of the year come we have to continue to give notice of what we need. We say well, let us place the order and in the next estimates we will ask for the amount. If we did not have that authority we would have to stop ordering for delivery in the new fiscal year.

Mr. Green: Why is it necessary for these items and not for any other items?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): These are the two maintenance items in my department. The other items are specific items for contractual purposes; but these are the two items which cover maintenance of all buildings in the country.

Mr. Green: There is quite a large increase in some of the amounts under this item. I am looking at page 393. There, for example, we find a big increase in furniture and furnishings for government departments. The increase there is about $60,000, and it was also increased last year over the year 1951-52. Rents also are increased by $550,000. Light, power, water, etc. are increased by about $70,000. These are all expenditures to be made in Ottawa. Why is there that large increase for the present fiscal year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is an increase this year of $725,622.

Mr. Green: I am asking about item 322 and the minister has given the wrong figure. He has given the figure for outside Ottawa.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is an increase in salaries from $4,250,715 to $4,566,083. That would comprise increases in salaries that have been granted during the year plus the addition probably of a few salaries and wages, due principally to increases in prevailing rates of pay, statutory increases, and an increase of 90 in the char staff to take care of the new buildings. There is $315,000 in that.

There is an increase of $62,500 in the allotment for furniture and furnishings for government departments, due mainly to special provision being made in the vote for the first time for upholstering and repairs to furniture, and acquisition of venetian blinds. There is an increase in rents because we have taken over four more buildings in Ottawa, the Ogilvy building, the Metcalfe building, 245 Sparks street, and the seminary building. There is an increase of $75,640 for light, power and water covering new buildings and rented premises, provision for unemployment insurance contributions and so forth. There is a decrease in the allotments for travelling expenses, materials and supplies, moving government departments, and taxes on diplomatic properties, in the amount of $208,000. That leaves a net increase of $830,943.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister whether it is under this item that provision is made for maintenance and upkeep of the Prime Minister's residence?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): A total of $10,950 was provided in the summary for the Prime Minister's residence. The vote for 1953-54 for the Prime Minister's residence is as follows: Payment to steward as representative of this department in the household, $1,000; furnishing, $4,000; fuel for residence and coach house, $1,750; repairs, painting, etc., $3,400; electric power, $800.

Mr. Fleming: Does that include all the expenses, operating expenses as well as upkeep of the building? I understand that the operating expenses also fall within this department.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is certainly what it costs my department.

Mr. Fleming: Where are the operating expenses charged?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do hon. gentlemen not think I have enough? I am giving what it costs me.

Mr. Fleming: What department is responsible?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What department spends more money? I do not know if there are any other departments, and I do not know which one if any. I know what I spend, and this is the amount.

Mr. Fleming: According to the statute that was passed several years ago, the maintenance of this property as well as the operating expenses of the residence all come under this department.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Read the section again. You will see that is not correct. Maintenance is what I am paying here.

Mr. Fleming: Are we to understand that operating expenses of the residence do not fall within the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If that is so I have not been operating it.

Mr. Fleming: In the five items given by the minister, totalling some $10,000, there is an amount of $3,400 indicated for repairs this year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Right.

Mr. Fleming: What justifies such a high figure for repairs on a building that was completed only two years ago?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is only an estimate and it has not been spent. You have not given it to me yet.

Mr. Fleming: I quite realize that, but what repairs are contemplated which would justify the minister asking for $3,400 for repairs to a building that was completed only about two years ago?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told there will be some repainting outside the building and some work inside the building. With respect to the details of how many windows and how many doors need repair I have not the information. You want us to maintain the residence in a good state so a man was sent down to look over the building, and he reported we would need about $3,400 in the year to do that work.

Mr. Fleming: How much was expended on repairs in the fiscal year just ended?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not that information.

Mr. Fleming: Well, I think that information should be available. I quite understand that the minister might not have it for the full twelve months—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will get it.

Mr. Fleming: —but he should have it complete for eleven months and might perhaps estimate for the twelfth month.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not the figures here, but I will get them.

Mr. Fleming: When can we have them?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As soon as I have a moment.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Green: No. The minister explained that there had been several new buildings rented in Ottawa during the year. I did not hear what they were, and I wonder if he would give them again and tell us in each case what the rent is and what the building is used for.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The main new buildings rented are the Ogilvy building, the Metcalfe building, 245 Sparks street, and the seminary building. Those are the four that were rented in this last fiscal year and account for increasing the amount.

Mr. Green: What are the rents in each case, and for what purposes are those buildings used?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do you want me to read the list of all the rents for the buildings in Ottawa?

Mr. Green: No, just those four.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The total is $550,000 per year. I have a list of all the buildings we occupy.

Mr. Green: I only want the rentals for those four buildings, and the purposes for which the buildings are used.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The Metcalfe building is used for national defence and the rental is $76,610; the Ogilvy building, national defence, and the rental is $61,922; the seminary rental is $370,000; 245 Sparks street is for defence production and labour, rented from the Bank of Canada, $48,000.

Mr. Green: For what purpose is the seminary used?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The whole of the mounted police organization has been transferred to that building from the justice building and the six or seven other buildings in which they occupied space.

Item agreed to.

323. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $800,000, $18,998,865.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Higgins: Does this item include the maintenance of Canada House in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, we do not maintain it. I understand we receive a rental from the province of $1,500 per year.

Mr. Higgins: You say you do not maintain it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Higgins: May I read an answer to a question which appears in Hansard for March 16, page 2958. The question was:

What is the annual cost of maintenance of this property?

The answer was:

Fiscal year 1949-50; $281.76; fiscal year 1950-51, $34.80; fiscal year 1951-52, $118.17.

I do not know who is paying it. Is that your department?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When I said no, I asked my officials whether we maintained the place. We cannot do much maintenance for $34.80 in a year. The answer must have been prepared by somebody in the department who had more knowledge than I have or the gentlemen I have here with me. My impression is that we have no maintenance costs, but we do get a rental from the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Higgins: Well, those figures were just in error, I take it. May I ask another question to which the minister may be able to give a reply now that he has his senior officials with him. On that same page of Hansard I asked whether the property was owned by Canada, and the answer was yes. Then I asked:

If so, when was it purchased?

The answer was:

It was taken over when Newfoundland entered confederation.

That does not mean anything to me. Will the minister explain what that means?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. member reads the terms of union he will find that part of the buildings that were serving government purposes in Newfoundland were transferred to the central government. Probably this would be one of the buildings that fell to our lot. I may say that public works has taken over more than one building. That is to the best of my recollection. The hon. member has on the order paper another question concerning that matter. I was told today that external affairs were handling that answer, so I just forgot about it.

Mr. Higgins: Is this not the position? The property known as Canada House had been bought by Canada before Newfoundland came into confederation and was owned by Canada at that time?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My officials say you are probably right.

Mr. Higgins: I am probably right? The minister knows I am right. What is the meaning of this phrase, then, that it was taken over?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): To make it clear, I am told that before union, external affairs had purchased that building from the commission of government, and since—

Mr. Higgins: No, no.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, you know the story.

Mr. Higgins: Let me give you the facts. The property was purchased from a private individual. I do not know what department purchased it but I am assuming it was your department. The building was used to house the high commissioner, and at the time of the consummation of union it was rented to the government of Newfoundland. I want to find out the purchase price of the building when it was originally bought.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not have that information. It was purchased by external affairs to house the high commissioner for Canada in Newfoundland.

Mr. Higgins: You mean there is no chance of finding out at all?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, when the external affairs officials are before the committee. You have that committee on external affairs, and you can find out there.

Mr. Higgins: Is this not the proper place to ask about it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, it was transferred to public works. I did not make an inspection to find out if it was paid for by cash or with a note. We took it over, and we rented it to the province later on.

Mr. Higgins: I shall not plague the minister, then, because he has been plagued enough today. Would he be prepared to give a full answer on this tomorrow?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that you could see in the public accounts for 1946-47, when it was purchased.

Mr. Higgins: The other matter the minister is going to look up is how I got these figures for maintenance.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will get that information.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

324. Newfoundland, $550,000.

Mr. Noseworthy: This is the place where the minister asked me to raise the question about revotes. For instance, on page 396 I find that out of nine items listed for item 324 amounting to $550,000, actually there are revotes totalling more than $550,000. There is an allowance of some $67,000 made for overestimates or amounts that will not be spent. I just cannot understand how a government of experts last year asked for $575,000 of which they did not spend one cent. There are seven items for which money was voted a year ago, of which not a dollar was spent. It would appear that seven of those items are entire revotes. The minister explained that you get a certain amount of money and you are not able to finish a building so you have a revote, but here is a case where the whole amount is revoted. I would like some explanation of that, because I am going to bring up the matter in connection with the other provinces.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Let us take the first item, Bishop's Falls public building. To complete this there will be a revote of $45,000. You understand that in this case the work is under contract and it is proceeding. We expect to complete the work and we need a further amount of $62,000 for this fiscal year, which comprises an amount of $45,000 which was voted to us last year and which I am asking the house to revote this year.

Now take the second case, in which there is a revote for the Clarenville public building. This amount is to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building to accommodate the post office and customs at Clarenville. The proposed building is strongly requested by the customs division, who state they are now located in a very dilapidated building which is entirely unsuitable. The Post Office Department has also requested space in the proposed building. Pending preparation of preliminary plans the total cost is tentatively estimated at $75,000. This was voted last year. I do not think we have succeeded as yet in purchasing the site. We hope to purchase a site. When we get the site we will have the officials in the department prepare plans. We expect that during this fiscal year we may be able to spend part of that $75,000.

Mr. Noseworthy: What about the other items? They are all the same.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I could read the whole book and you would get about the same explanation as this. Here is one. It is at Corner Brook. A site satisfactory to the Post Office Department as to location and to the chief architect as to size has been selected. This site located on Main street is owned by Bowater's (Newfoundland) Pulp and Paper Mills and has been offered for sale at a price of $18,000. This area involves approximately 36,000 square feet. As the asking price is considered fair and reasonable, negotiations are being undertaken to acquire the site. If we purchase that site during this year, we will have plans prepared; and if they are ready during the fiscal year we will ask for tenders and give out the contract. What we will be able to spend on this I cannot tell.

Mr. Noseworthy: What is the explanation of the fact that each year your experts estimate how much of that estimated expenditure will remain unspent In the case of Newfoundland last year they estimated that they would probably ask for $137,000 more than would be spent. Actually they asked for $575,000 more than was spent. That situation applies all the way through the architectural branch of this department. In Nova Scotia you find four items which were not touched at all. Nova Scotia had a fairly good record there.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Shall we pass this first item? Then when we reach Nova Scotia I will give more information.

Mr. Noseworthy: All right; take them one at a time.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask the minister whether anything has been done about the two buildings there for which provision is made, namely the public building and the customs building?

Mr. Higgins: In St. John's.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, in St. John's.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required to purchase a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a proposed building at St. John's, Newfoundland, to provide improved accommodation for the customs services. It is now proposed to erect the new building on the site of the existing building which will be enlarged by the acquisition of property between the site and the war memorial square. The additional property to be acquired consists of four parcels of land, and there are three owners involved. Valuations of the property were prepared for the department by H. J. Thomas and Son, St. John's, and by Willett Engineering and Surveying Company, St. John's. I do not know whether I should give these figures. I would rather keep these valuations undisclosed until we negotiate. But I have valuations for the whole of the property and we are negotiating with these people for the purchase of the properties. I think hon. members should not insist that I give those amounts.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not insist on the disclosure of that information.

Mr. Higgins: What is the building supposed to be for? What is the general idea?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is for the customs.

Mr. Higgins: To what size do you propose to enlarge it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I know that the estimated cost will be in the neighbourhood of $550,000.

Mr. Higgins: That is not very big. Is that the cost of the building alone?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is the estimated cost.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The total cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will know more about it when the plans are prepared and when we are owners of the site.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I suppose the plans are prepared now before you have bought that land?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is rather difficult, before we become owners of the site, to prepare final plans. We have to make those plans conform to the site on which the building will be erected.

Mr. Higgins: Is it proposed to begin construction shortly?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As soon as I can purchase the site we will start working on it. The other case I would say we will let stand. I have not purchased the site and, judging by the clippings that were read in the house, it seems that I am having difficulty in getting the proper site for that building.

Mr. Higgins: Is it fair to assume that you are not going to put it on government house ground?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do not ask me that.

Mr. Higgins: Why not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Because I could not give you an answer.

Mr. Higgins: The last time you were talking to me here in the chamber you told me that all that remained was the purchase price to be negotiated between you and the premier of Newfoundland?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have not reached that stage.

Mr. Higgins: Have you changed your mind since?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not reached that stage yet.

Mr. Higgins: Of changing your mind?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not answer that question.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask the minister whether any progress has been made in respect of the other two, St. Lawrence and Stephenville. They are revotes here of the full amounts.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have not got the sites. Here is the estimated cost of $55,000. For the site we expect to pay about $5,000, for the building, $45,000; for supervision and contingencies, $5,000. The other one is for Stephenville. The site selected for this building adjoins the existing post office building and measures 100 feet along the highway to Kippens and 100 feet along the highway to Stephenville Crossing. The owner has offered to sell the property for the sum of $2,500.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The only question I really want to ask is this. Is there a good chance of the work going ahead this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is why we have the estimate. We live in hope that during the fiscal year it will be possible.

Mr. Higgins: May I revert to the public building in St. John's for one moment. Is it correct that nothing will be done on the public building without recourse to the town planning commission? Would that be definite?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know what progress has been made. Oh, yes; every representation that was made will be taken into account. But it is far more complicated than the hon. gentleman thinks to get this site in St. John's. Most of my troubles in public works have been in deciding on a site and in getting the local people to agree that it is the proper site. You two hon. members from St. John's do not, I think, agree.

Mr. Higgins: We agree on the site; we agree where it should not be.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

325. Nova Scotia, $1,200,000.

Mr. Noseworthy: It is six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with the estimates of the Department of Public Works, and then take up the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. That resolution is the basis of a bill to amend the superannuation act. The bill will be referred to a committee, and we should like to see it sent to the committee as soon as possible.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS—REQUEST FOR FURTHER REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he can give the house any information on the grain elevator dispute in Vancouver and New Westminster.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, though my hon. friend notified me that he intended to ask this question, I can only tell him that there have been no important new developments to justify me in making anything like an optimistic statement in the house today.

I regret that I was not able to be in the house last Tuesday when my hon. friend and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) spoke on this matter, but I read carefully what they had to say. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be in order for me to attempt to deal fully with their remarks at this particular time. However, the impression was left that my department had not been doing all that it could do to help settle this dispute. That I wish to deny at once. This dispute has characteristics that do not lend themselves to some of the simple solutions that were suggested the other night, but patient and constant efforts which we believe best fit the situation have been conducted by my department before the strike started and ever since then, and we shall continue to carry on in that fashion.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister this question: Is he unwilling to invite representatives of the parties to come to Ottawa to discuss the situation?

Mr. Gregg: If such a course would appear to us, after careful study, to be the course that should be pursued to bring about a settlement, we would not hesitate a moment to invite them.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I make a supplementary remark. I was going to ask the same question as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has asked. May I say that if, by what I said last Tuesday, I gave the impression that the department was not doing everything it could do in the matter, it was purely unintentional on my part. I thought I made it quite clear that the department was keeping in touch with the situation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO "SATURDAY NIGHT"—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MACNAB REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister's attention been directed to the publication, in the current issue of Saturday Night, of an exchange of correspondence between the deputy minister of national defence and Mr. John Stevenson, Ottawa correspondent for Saturday Night? If so, in the light of this correspondence and of the proven inaccuracy of the deputy minister's statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot allow the hon. member to make statements. He is allowed to ask questions. I will allow him to ask a question but he must not make a statement with respect to the question he is about to ask.

Mr. Fulton: What I want to know is whether the government will now table the complete text of the MacNab report.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I should answer the hon. gentleman by saying that the letter of the deputy minister which was shown to me is completely accurate in every respect. What is inaccurate—and, I may say, characteristically inaccurate—is the report appearing under the name of J. A. Stevenson in Saturday Night. I have seldom seen anything less competent in the way of reporting or more inaccurate than those stories.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has already stated to the house the position with regard to the MacNab report; but it might be added that Mr. MacNab himself, in a statement to the press, said that it was not a report but was a memorandum intended for the information of his former superior officer in the civil service commission and that the allegations made were based largely on hearsay and would have to be verified before they were to be taken as facts.

The position with regard to this and other similar documents was stated to the house a couple of weeks ago but it is already thoroughly well known to the house and is thoroughly in accord with the practice at Westminster and here. The position is that documents of this character made for the confidential information of officers of the government or members of the government are privileged; and every hon. member knows that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, may I ask the minister this. I am quite sure that the minister would not wish to leave an inaccurate impression—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Casselman: Put the steam roller on.

Mr. Fulton: I am quite sure the minister would not wish to leave an inaccurate impression on the record. I would therefore ask him if he would not wish to amend his statement, with which I take issue, to the effect that Mr. MacNab said that his report was based upon hearsay. My recollection of the statement made by Mr. MacNab is certainly to the contrary and that his report was based on personal observations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this raises another question. The minister referred to the practice at Westminster and here.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot allow discussion on that matter at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was just referring to the gratuitous statement made by the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister answered a question. If the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) would like to ask a question, I will allow him to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will ask it in this way, Mr. Speaker, if I may. Has it not always been considered to be constitutionally inexcusable for a civil servant to enter into political controversy with regard to a departmental matter?

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question by saying that I do not think it is improper for a civil servant, with the authority of his minister, to correct a gross inaccuracy.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question. Did he have authority from the minister in this case?

Mr. Claxton: Certainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That renders it all the more inexcusable.

Mr. Rowe: I should like to ask the minister whether he believes it is proper for a deputy minister politically to defend the government.

Mr. Claxton: I know of no deputy minister less likely to enter into any political controversy than the deputy minister of national defence; and that is well known to all members of this house. He needs no defence from me on that score. I should like to say this. If a deputy wishes to make a correction of fact and does so with the authority of the minister, I can see nothing in the constitutional practice to prevent that course from being followed, as was done in this case.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this question. If he gave approval to this statement, why did he not make the statement himself?

[Mr. Casselman.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did he think it would be more creditable?

Mr. Claxton: I would have been very glad to do so but the deputy minister came to me and said, "Should I write this?" I said, "If you feel that way, certainly do so. It is in accordance with the facts."

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Architectural branch—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

325. Nova Scotia, $1,200,000.

Mr. Noseworthy: At six o'clock last night we were discussing the question of revotes. I wonder whether the minister will explain why his department's record regarding the expenditure of money voted last year is so much better for Nova Scotia than for the other provinces. We pointed out, for instance, yesterday that eight of the nine items listed for Newfoundland were revotes, that seven of these were entirely revotes for projects on which nothing had been done during the year. In the case of Nova Scotia there are only nine out of fourteen revotes and only four of these are entire revotes. In other words, out of fourteen projects ten were started. A year ago the department estimated they had asked for $360,000 more than they were able to spend, yet they actually asked for $780,000 more than they did expend, which is only about twice as much as they estimated. In the case of Newfoundland they left unspent about four times as much as they estimated would be unspent. There may be some circumstances which explain why the department is so much more efficient in spending the moneys voted for Nova Scotia than for Newfoundland.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is just one explanation I can give the hon. member. Newfoundland joined Canada only four years ago, and we had to set up in that province a district. We had to have people from headquarters go out to Newfoundland and make a study of the situation. Probably the progress is not as rapid there as it would be in a province which joined confederation in 1867, where we have an old staff and know the situation. That would be one reason.

The second reason probably is that our staff in Newfoundland is not extensive enough, and we were most ambitious in our estimates of the work we could do. The hon. gentleman who hails from that province would know that every Canadian wants to keep the friendship of that new province, and my department especially is doing its utmost to meet their requests and try to do the work they need done, but I think it will take me some time to succeed.

Mr. Fleming: Before we go too far into these other items, I recall that last night when we were on item 322 I asked certain questions concerning maintenance and upkeep of the prime minister's residence and the minister said he would obtain further information to give to the committee which he did not have available at that time. I wonder whether he could give it now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am always ready to revert back, but I would not want this to become a habit. We spent two days on that item, and I did my best to explain. I shall send over to the hon. member the information that he asked for under that item, which concerns the expenditures on the prime minister's residence in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read it out.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We carried that item. Do you want to start the resolution all over again? I am giving the information, and I want to be agreeable. I was held up on that first item for two days, and we covered every item in the book. I do not think that is regular. I am giving the information. If you do not like it—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Put it on the record; we want it on the record.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): All right.

Mr. Fleming: I am hoping that we shall try to proceed in a co-operative spirit. Yesterday afternoon when I asked this question the minister said he would obtain the information.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Then I will read it because I want to co-operate, too. The expenditures are as follows: Servicing oil burner, $52.50; heating improvements, $30; freight, etc., $2.44; furniture and furnishings, $2,416.03; window cleaning, $132.50; fuel oil, $437.82; char service supplies, $53.15; other supplies, $169.15; repairs and upkeep of equipment, $36.91; light and power, $421.69; water, $119.96; unforeseen improvements, alterations for maid's quarters, etc., $4,948.33, making a total of $8,820.48.

Mr. Fleming: What were these unforeseen improvements and alterations?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I hope, Mr. Chairman, we are not reopening that item. That resolution was carried. Before it was carried I undertook to give this information. If I am going to start over again on estimates that have been passed I do not think it will be in order.

Mr. Fleming: I am sure it is not the wish of the minister to be un-co-operative in any way. This is a special matter, and when it was before the committee yesterday I raised this question on this particular item following a lengthy discussion which took place on an entirely different aspect of administration in general. When the minister indicated he did not have the information and would produce it, then no obstacle was put in his way in proceeding to the next item. The information that he has brought to the committee, for which I thank him, naturally gives rise to one or two further questions. There is the item of $4,000 odd for unforeseen improvements and alterations that were required on which I should like to ask one or two further questions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do you want me to give the explanation that my officials give to me on that last item?

Mr. Fleming: Yes; I would say this to the minister, in order to save time, and that he may know what I have in mind. Naturally with respect to a building that was completed only a short time ago at very great cost, including the land and furnishings, of something over $600,000, it is disturbing to find within the first two years that substantial expenditures are being incurred on repairs and alterations. We remember that the architect and the builder were given a very free hand when they went in there, and the minister will naturally understand the concern of hon. members that within so short a time we should be incurring further expenditures by way of repairs and alterations.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): To complete the answer I gave a moment ago, this is the footnote to the figures which were handed to me before coming into the house. This note has to do with the last item I mentioned and reads as follows:

Finishing an attic room for accommodation of maid and an adjoining space for an ironing room; cutting door into washroom, lighting, linoleum, cutting dormer window, building cupboard; making storm sash for northerly exposure; alterations to humidifying system; wire mesh frames on four stove chimneys.

Mr. Rowe: How much?

Mr. Fleming: There is an item of $4,000 odd for furnishings. What is that for?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have given the list. Do you want me to read it again?

Mr. Rowe: You did not say how much?

Mr. Fleming: There was an item of $4,000 odd for furnishings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): These are estimates we have for this fiscal year. What I have given you now is what was expended last year.

Mr. Fleming: While we are on that, will the minister give an explanation of the item of $4,000 he mentioned yesterday afternoon?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would have to ask my department to try to give me a detailed list. Yesterday I explained the total of $10,950, by saying that there was the payment to the steward as representative of this department in the household, amounting to $1,000. That would need no explanation. Then there was an item of $4,000 for furnishings. I shall have to ask my architect to make a list of all the details of this $4,000. I do not have those details in this book, but I shall give them to my hon. friend as soon as I have them.

Mr. Balcom: I should like to ask the minister a question and, for the comfort of the hon. member for York South, let me say that this one is a revote. Also for his comfort I would add that the public works staff in Halifax, while overworked, is very efficient.

I should like to ask regarding the condition respecting alterations in the customs annex building at Halifax. Has it been decided to make the alterations to the old customs building, or build a new one? And, as the building is so badly needed, can he say when the work will be started?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Is the hon. member speaking of the customs building, or the new building it is proposed to build there? There are two items.

Mr. Balcom: The new building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is to provide a sum for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a new public building to accommodate the post office. It was originally proposed to erect a new customs building to replace the existing old customs building, which is beyond economic repair. Funds were provided for the project in the supplementary estimates of 1942-43. However, as a result of a complete study of space requirements in Halifax by officials of the architects branch, it is now proposed to erect a new public building near the station of the Canadian National Railways.

The post office will occupy the major portion of it. The space vacated by the post office in the existing public building will be assigned to the customs department, which will vacate the condemned old customs building.

Mr. Balcom: Is that the item of $200,000, for the public building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Balcom: Then, may I ask a third question. The department acquired property on Hollis street, the old Halifax hotel property, some years ago, for the erection of a public building. I wonder if plans have been completed for that, or are there any definite plans to begin the construction of that building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That site was acquired some years ago. We prepared plans, but as yet we have not proceeded to put up the building.

Mr. Balcom: Has the minister any idea when it will be done?

Mr. Higgins: May I revert to a previous item? Last night the minister gave some information which I do not think is quite correct. I do not suggest that he did it deliberately. I asked him the cost of Canada House in Newfoundland, and he referred me to the public accounts for 1946. The item does not appear there. Where would it be?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Did the hon. member look at the 1947 accounts?

Mr. Higgins: I looked under both the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Public Works. Where else should I look?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told it was purchased in 1947 by the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Higgins: The minister told me last night it was 1946.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do make mistakes.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask a question respecting Nova Scotia public buildings. What progress is being made in regard to the public building at Sydney, Nova Scotia? I notice that there is a revote.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. Property for the site has been acquired and plans submitted to the department for approval. Before we begin drawing our own plans we have to have requests from the different departments which will occupy the building, so that we may know how to draw up those plans and give them the necessary space. All the departments which we believe will occupy the building have been canvassed, and we will begin receiving their answers which will be used as a base for the preparation of our own plans.

Mr. Gillis: Has the department purchased the site?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The site for the proposed building was expropriated in the fiscal year 1951-52. The expropriation was filed in October, 1951, on a site located at the corner of Falmouth and George streets. It consists of a frontage of 224 feet on Falmouth street and 150 feet on George street. The present owner, R. J. Logue, asked $28,406 as compensation. An order in council dated March 25, 1952, granted authority to accept this offer.

Mr. Gillis: Do you anticipate beginning to build in 1953?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am going to see that they do their utmost to complete the plans and ask for tenders. I cannot commit the department to a definite date, but we are working that out.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

326. Prince Edward Island, $235,000.

Mr. McLure: I am sure the minister will be pleased with this item, because it consists of revotes. The first part of it refers to a public building in Charlottetown, involving a revote of $50,000. That has been carried over for the last eight or nine years. Then, why is a revote used in connection with the Kensington public building? I have no objection to the Kensington building, because they have need of it there. However, I notice that in connection with the Charlottetown building too small an amount was voted, and there has to be a revote. I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yesterday I gave an answer which I think was encouraging to the hon. member. I would prefer to read what I said as it appears in Hansard, so that I would not change anything in that statement. I do not want to contradict myself at the same session when my estimates are being discussed.

However, if the hon. member would look at yesterday's Hansard he would see that 80 per cent of the architect's plans have been prepared. We are the owners of the site, and we are working on the other plans. I join with the hon. member in the hope that there will be speedy action in connection with the Charlottetown public building.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

327. New Brunswick, $1,215,000.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to make the same complaint as others have made, namely that most of these are revotes. My experience has been that a vote in one year becomes a revote in the next year. My question has reference to the vote for the public building at Rothesay. This has been a revote for years. Has the site been acquired for this building, and when will construction be proceeded with?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Rothesay is another project with which I am having trouble. My advisers are not all of the same mind as to this public building, although I am with the hon. member on this. They have other ideas. I am going to try to convince them that this item was put in the estimates for a new public building and I am going to instruct them here and now to go ahead with that project.

Mr. Brooks: Thank you, Mr. Minister. An argument which the minister could very well use is that the population of this community is increasing very rapidly. There has been an increase of about 2,000 in the last four or five years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This department erects these public buildings to serve other departments and we generally try to get their co-operation and agreement. It is not always easy and that explains the delay in this case.

Mr. Brooks: When is the work on the Chipman public building to be done? I hope that this amount will not be revoted next year because I know it is badly needed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that the contract has been let.

Mr. Brooks: The third item is in connection with St. Stephen. This amount has been revoted for a number of years. As everyone in New Brunswick knows, a customs building is badly needed at St. Stephen, as there is no comparison at all between our building and the United States building. I hope the minister will be able to go on with this work very soon.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Notice of expropriation of the site was filed on January 21, 1952. We had valuations of the property made by two independent parties. We are waiting approval of the preliminary plans by the various departments which will occupy space in this building. The moment we get that approval we will complete the plans and then proceed.

Mr. Brooks: That will be customs and immigration.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Correct.

Mr. Montgomery: I should like to inquire about the public building at Plaster Rock. Is that to be a new post office? Are the plans completed so that you can get on with this work this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is not a revote. This amount is to provide for the purchase of the site and the erection of a public building for postal purposes at Plaster Rock. This is the first time this item has appeared in the estimates and I hope it will not be revoted too often.

Mr. Montgomery: Have you been able to get along with the plans at all?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This item was tabled only in January and I do not think much progress has been made.

Mr. Montgomery: You already own the site, do you not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps the hon. gentleman is right about that, but I have not that information in my notes.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister gave a logical answer to my question regarding the contrast in efficiency in spending money as between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, but his answer does not explain the difference as between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. New Brunswick is not a new province by any means. I take it that the minister has certain administrative machinery in the province of New Brunswick. The difference as between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is just about as great as between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

For instance, I find that of fifteen items for New Brunswick, ten are revotes amounting to $1,180,000. A year ago the department estimated that they had asked for only $450,000 more than they would spend, but actually they asked for $1,180,000 more than they spent. I notice that there are seven projects on which nothing whatever was done and no part of the votes spent. There must be some explanation other than what the minister gave in connection with Newfoundland.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. member will look at the details on page 398 he will find this:

Less: Estimated amount by which actual expenditure on all listed projects will fall short of the total of amounts that may be required for each, $450,000.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

That leaves a total of $1,215,000. We know that in every instance we will not expend the whole amount, but I remember one year we spent $2 million more on a project than what we had asked for. I had a lot of trouble getting treasury board to approve a transfer from another item in the same vote to this project and I had to come back to parliament and ask for it. The real estimate here is not $1,665,000; it is less $450,000. That is by way of explanation.

I have explained to the hon. gentleman representing New Brunswick the situation that exists in connection with the four or five cases he put to me. I thought I was able to give logical answers, but perhaps I was mistaken. We did more work in one year in one province than in another, but that is only normal. Next year the probability is that more work will be done in the other province. The staff here in Ottawa cannot give the same attention to all parts of the country. When they start on certain projects they try to complete them.

I am not bragging when I say that I have had some experience in these matters as I have been handling this department for some time. Perhaps I should have a smile on my face, but I know the matter is more serious. I am anxious to see buildings completed so that the country may have all the facilities required. I do not lose sleep over it, but it does keep my mind occupied. I appreciate that the hon. member is a hard worker and is endeavouring to cover the whole country. I will tell my officials to try to meet his wishes and spend the same amount in every province, as he would like them to do.

Mr. Brooks: We appreciate very much the hon. member for York South fighting our battles, but if he will wait until we reach the item having to do with Ontario I think he will find a worse situation than that existing in New Brunswick. There are more revotes there than there are in our province.

Mr. Knowles: Is it a coincidence that they both have Tory provincial governments?

Mr. Montgomery: Can we look forward to something being in the supplementary estimates in connection with the public building at Woodstock? I understand that the minister has some good intentions in connection with that building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This building was proposed some years ago and we had had from the departments particulars of their needs in the locality. The building will be two storeys and basement structure, 85 by 90 feet, brick and concrete blocks, stone trim and tar and gravel roof. We are building on the site of the old building and the estimated cost is $195,000. All we need is the approval of the different departments of our plans because we cannot start construction before that. We have reached that stage.

Mr. Robichaud: I would ask the minister to give some details with respect to the new vote of $70,000 for the Chatham public building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is provided for the construction of an addition and for alterations to the public building at Chatham. The proposed work is strongly requested by the Post Office Department which has placed the item in category A priority. The Department of Fisheries and the unemployment insurance commission have also requested accommodation at Chatham. Pending preparation of preliminary plans, we estimate the cost of this work will be $70,000.

Mr. Robichaud: Has the minister had representations from the Post Office Department and the Department of National Revenue for much needed alterations and repairs to the Bathurst public building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would have to look over the file to furnish that information. I would have to look over the file concerning Bathurst to see if the departments have requested space or alterations there.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Is the new proposed building at Plaster Rock for the post office only? If so, what is the population of Plaster Rock?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): According to the notes I have here—and I read them a moment ago—this amount is to be provided toward the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for postal purposes at Plaster Rock. The proposed work is strongly recommended by the Post Office Department which has placed this project in category A on their list of requirements. They state that their present quarters are entirely inadequate and that no other suitable premises are available for rental.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

328. Quebec, $9,440,000.

Mr. Fraser: With respect to Montreal, there is a vote and a revote for the national film board building. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with that building this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am not too sure that we have completed purchase of the site. I think somebody raised that question earlier in the session and I answered that we were negotiating with two or three parties who are the owners of the site. Here is the information I have. Notice of expropriation was filed in January, 1951, on the property located on the north side of Cote de Liesse or Metropolitan boulevard, a short distance east from the Decarie and Cote de Liesse circle near the town of St. Laurent. In that instance we have engaged the services of architects for the preparation of the plans. If the hon. gentleman wants to know whether we are going to go ahead with the project, that is the intention of the government. I am under the impression that the architects are now working on the plans.

Mr. Fraser: Has the minister any estimate as to the total cost of the building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is pretty difficult for me to give an estimate because the plans are only being prepared, but I am told that the whole project will cost approximately $5 million.

Mr. Fraser: Is there going to be one theatre or more than one theatre in that building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Will it have more than one?

Mr. Fraser: Will there be more than one theatre in the building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I really do not know. I have not seen the plans.

Mr. Fraser: The plans are not completed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The firm of Ross, Patterson, Townsend and Fish of Montreal is preparing the plans. I have not seen the plans.

Mr. Knowles: Will it be a three-dimensional building?

Mr. Fraser: Has the minister any idea of the total cost of the building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that right now they think that the building will cost $5 million, but we have not got the plans and it is quite difficult for me to make an estimate.

Mr. Fraser: What will the site cost on top of that?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot give an estimate for the building before the plans and specifications are prepared and I cannot say whether the site will be comprised in that amount. We have not completed the purchase of the land and I would not like to give the figures I have here at this time. We have got independent valuators for these sites. The valuations are prepared by Therien, by Leblanc and by Hebert of Montreal. There are three different valuators. I can give these figures to my hon. friend but I would rather not have them published before we complete negotiations and the purchase.

Mr. Fraser: You have not completed negotiations?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In one case we took possession of the property and under authority of treasury board and council made an advance payment to Robert M. Cummings and Jack L. Cummings on account of the compensation to be paid as a result of the expropriation of their property. That is just a percentage of the amount of our valuation on the property. If we do not agree as to the balance of the amount we will go before the Exchequer Court because we have given notice of expropriation.

Mr. Fraser: Have you your valuation on the property there?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Fraser: And how many acres?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would hesitate to give the amount. Our valuations would justify us in paying a percentage to the owners of the property in order to take immediate possession, and we would complete the deed as to the balance before the Exchequer Court. Perhaps I am not explaining myself clearly. Suppose the valuation we have is $250,000 or $230,000 or $200,000. We are justified in paying part of the price because we have decided on the project of expropriation. We have given notice. We take possession of the site for this payment so that we can proceed with the erection of the building, and so far as the balance of their claim is concerned that matter will be decided by judgment of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the minister please give us information about the purposes of the proposed public building at Cap aux Meules for which a revote of $25,000 is included in the estimates? Likewise I should like to have information as to the purposes of the proposed public building at Causapscal for which a new vote of $100,000 is provided.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The amount of $25,000 is required for the purchase of a site and towards the construction thereon of a public building to provide accommodation for the postal and customs services, Department of Transport and other government departments at Cap aux Meules, Magdalen islands. In the case of Causapscal the amount is required for the purchase of a site and erection thereon of a public building to provide improved accommodation for the postal service and the unemployment insurance commission. The deputy postmaster general reports that it has been decided to amalgamate the offices at Causapscal village and at the station in a suitable public building to serve both these communities. At the present time these offices are located in separate premises in these two different places.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister make a statement with regard to the progress being made in connection with the building for the national printing bureau? Will he tell us when it is expected that the building will be completed and ready for the bureau to move in, and also how much money has been spent to date and whether or not the original estimate is being adhered to?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Last year I gave an estimate of about $13 million, but I can give a closer estimate this year. It has gone down to $12,800,000. This is a list of the contracts given on that to date. There was a contract in 1950 for $228,695; another contract in October, 1950, for $241,989; a contract for the power house and diesel generating unit, $71,000; a contract for the construction of the concrete structure of the power house, $822,185—these are all after tenders. It is understood, and I shall not repeat it every time, that we called for public tenders and it is the lowest tenderer who gets the job.

Mr. Knowles: The lowest tender in all cases?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The lowest tender in each case. There was a contract for the construction of the concrete structure of the main building including extra work authorized, $278,179, and the last contract that was just signed some time in December of last year or January of this year, for the completion of the building $7,999,982. If you add that to the cost of plans, provision for contingencies and so on, that makes up this amount of $12,800,000 which I have given.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister answer my other question as to what progress is being made and when the building will be ready?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is a question I should like to answer myself, if I were sure I could give the right answer. This project started—

Mr. Knowles: You are speaking as the member for Hull?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, I am not speaking as the minister. This project started years ago, and if the hon. gentleman knew all the trouble I have had to get the project going, and even the trouble I have now trying to keep it going, he would not ask me for a definite date. I pray every day that some day I will see the building completed before I disappear.

(Translation):

Mr. Gagnon: Could the minister give me the details pertaining to the amount of $75,000 for repairs and additions to a public building at Bagotville?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The amount is required for the construction of an addition and for alterations to the public building at Bagotville to give better accommodation to the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department has complained that the present post office was congested, that there was not enough space. The officers of my department have received a request from the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) in that connection and they have placed that building in class A.

Mr. Gagnon: Does the minister believe that work will be started shortly?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I could make any promise to my hon. friend I would do so, but I must tell him that even in my own county I have trouble in getting work done. However I am told that my officers are working on plans and specifications for that building, but I cannot say exactly when work will begin.

Mr. Gagnon: Will the minister oblige me with detailed information as to the item of $250,000 for the construction of a public building at Chicoutimi?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What I have just said with regard to Bagotville applies also to Chicoutimi. We are going to carry out this project but whether the building will be erected immediately is another question. I understand that the architect has been chosen and that he is going to get in touch with the various services for which offices are to be provided in that building. As soon as the plans and specifications are ready, we will call for tenders.

Mr. Gagnon: Could the minister tell me which government services will be housed in that building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The post office, the customs office, the unemployment insurance commission office and, I am told, other government services. I suppose that it is intended to centralize in this new building the various federal services which now exist at Chicoutimi.

Mr. Gagnon: Does that mean that postal delivery in the district will originate from that place?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I suggest to my hon. friend to inquire from the Postmaster General, when his estimates are before the house, what his intentions are; that is something of which I am not aware.

(Text):

Mr. Fraser: I want to ask one more question about this $900,000 vote. Is this $900,000 for the land and the plans? Is that what it is to cover?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What we have in mind is the purchase of the land out of this vote and the preparation of the plans and specifications, as well as the commencement of the work. This is the amount the department thinks we would spend during this fiscal year. If we do not spend it I shall come back and say that I want an amount plus a revote of part of this $900,000. Those are the three things we have in mind.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

329. Ottawa, $7,000,000.

Mr. Green: This vote covers buildings in Ottawa, and I should like to ask the minister about several of the projects. The first one is a vote of $50,000 for the construction of a parking area north of Wellington street. Can the minister tell us where that is to be, and why it is costing that much for a parking lot?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is to provide for the construction of a parking area on the flat land north of the temporary buildings on Wellington street. Additional parking space is urgently required. The new area will serve buildings already erected and to be erected in this area. This is a new vote which was just introduced in January. I have not any more details in my notes. If the hon. gentleman knows where temporary buildings Nos. 1 and 4 are on Wellington street, the idea is to level out a space behind these buildings to construct this parking area. No work has been done to date.

If the hon. gentleman knows the city of Ottawa well, he knows that the parking situation in Ottawa is extremely difficult. We are trying to help out by having a parking space down behind the Supreme Court and behind these public buildings. I think we will do this work this year.

Mr. Fraser: I am glad to hear that the minister is making a parking space at the rear of the Supreme Court building, because I brought that matter to his attention the year before last. I just wondered why the dirt from the excavations for other projects was not put in there.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My information is that the dirt from the excavations for these buildings is put on other government properties in the district. I do not know exactly where they carried the dirt from the excavation of the Wellington street site, but we used it on other government property for levelling off and filling in.

Mr. Green: Then, there is a further item of $50,000 for the national library. Is it planned to commence construction of the national library during the present fiscal year or just what will that vote cover?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that this amount is for the preparation of the plans. The site chosen is still occupied by No. 1 temporary building, and whenever we can remove that building we want to have the plans ready to put up the national library.

Mr. Green: Then, there is a vote of $150,000 for a service building for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police near the seminary building. Apparently this is the first year there has been a vote for that building. Will the minister tell us what the total cost of the building is to be?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The Royal Canadian Mounted Police report that additional space is absolutely essential for the efficient operation of their headquarters and to take care of their normal expansion requirements for the next five years. It is proposed to provide the required accommodation by erecting a building at the rear of the Ottawa seminary building which is presently occupied by the mounted police under a five-year lease. It is proposed to erect a building in close proximity to the seminary to provide 12,500 feet of space. The preparation of plans and specifications has not yet been undertaken and a description and an accurate estimate of the cost of the proposed structure are not yet available. However, it is anticipated that the amount of $150,000 now requested will be sufficient to meet the requirements for 1953-54.

Mr. Green: But surely the department must have some idea of the total cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My officials tell me that this is about the amount for the whole of the building. The plans not being completed, it may be up or down some. It is a building of 12,500 square feet. I am told that $150,000 would be about right for such a building.

Mr. Green: Is this building to be in addition to the seminary itself which the minister told us last night was being rented for the mounted police at an annual rental of $370,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Even at that, when they moved out of the justice building and went over there, they still found that they did not have sufficient space. They made this request to the Department of Public Works to furnish them with another 12,500 feet. So this building, I am told, will not be of a permanent character as are the buildings you have on Wellington street, like the veterans' building or the justice building. It will be to complete the space that they need for their operations.

Mr. Green: Then there will be this new building that will cost $150,000 and in addition to that the department will be paying $370,000 a year as rental for the seminary?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is right.

Mr. Green: Is there any intention to expropriate the seminary?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not give any inkling as to that. Actually, for the space we get in that building, I think we are paying a little bit less than we do in the normal unit price over the city. I would not say yes or no. The government has not considered that. We needed space badly for the staff of the mounted police who had been asking for it since the war, and this was the only place that we could get rapidly. We have taken a lease on it for five years. As to the future intention of the government, the matter has not been considered, to my knowledge.

Mr. Green: Is the rental the same for each year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes; for each year.

Mr. Green: Then there is another vote for the parliamentary library, fireproofing and renovation, $500,000. Will that complete the renovation of the parliamentary library?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. Our estimate is about $1 million. Plans are actually being prepared by Mr. Mathers, architect from Toronto, who is actually working on them. The moment we close the house here—on May 2, I hope—they will have workmen taking down the whole tower. This will be—and I am telling the committee this right now—one of those undertakings as to which I do not think that anybody, even with plans, would undertake to give a firm price. I have looked into the matter since we had that fire. I have consulted various people. I am told by the best architects and contractors in these matters that, with respect to an old building constructed just after confederation, nobody would want to give a firm price for the rebuilding and fireproofing of it, even if we had plans, because we cannot make definite specifications for that. They have to tear it down to see what is in it. I recall an instance, with regard to one of our buildings that we were repairing, where we even found secret rooms.

Mr. Green: You might find some of the party skeletons in there.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps of both parties. I am told that we estimate the cost at $1 million but that we do not expect in this fiscal year to spend more than half a million.

Mr. Green: Will that work be done on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not like cost-plus contracts. What I have in mind is this, although I do not know whether I shall proceed. I intend to get in touch with the biggest contracting firms, or some of the biggest contracting firms—four or five of them in the country—and have them look over the building; then I shall ask them what fixed fee they will charge us with regard to this building, keeping the exterior appearance as it is, to make it fireproof and probably to extend the basement which would serve as stackrooms. If they give me a fixed fee price, through our audit branch and our budget people we would keep the amount of the expenditure down on the building. But I would not want to give out a cost-plus contract. It would be a fixed fee. Suppose they said they wanted so many thousand dollars to do the job. I would have them sign a contract. If I can succeed in that way, I think that is about the best procedure that I could take in this instance. I am telling the committee this beforehand.

Mr. Green: What will be the difference between that system and the cost-plus system?

Mr. Lesage: All the difference in the world.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I give a cost-plus percentage on the construction, what will happen I do not know and I do not think the hon. gentleman knows. The higher the cost, the higher the fee.

Mr. Green: That is true.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not like to give contracts of that kind. I like to know exactly where I am going.

Mr. Green: By working on the plan on the basis the minister has in mind, the contractor would get whatever the cost of the building would be, whatever it actually cost the contractor, and then in addition he would get a fixed fee?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is right: His profit would be that fixed fee which I would know in advance.

Mr. Green: Of course that procedure would not have any tendency to bring down the actual cost of doing the work, would it?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: The other method would tend to increase it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It may not bring down the cost much but it would probably have this result. When they have a fixed fee, they want to earn that fixed fee as soon as possible. That would be the incentive. They would not care about the cost so much but they would say, "If in a year we can make so much money out of this, let us do it;" and they would not let it spread over a lengthy period.

Mr. Green: Did I understand the minister to say that the exterior of the library would be kept the same; that is, that it would look the same from the outside?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What we have in mind is to keep the exterior appearance of the library the same as it was. We will have no wooden rafters or things like that. We will have them all fireproof. I do not know how they will proceed with it but, from the exterior, it will be the same building as we had before this fire.

Mr. Fraser: What about the interior?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The interior will be fireproof. How we will fix up those book shelves, in order to keep the wooden ornaments on the shelving, is this. I am told that they have a way of fireproofing that wood, of treating the wood with something that is fire-resistant. I am no expert in these matters, but that matter was discussed. I thought that if they could find a way to do that, it would be the best thing to do because we are trying to keep the same old library in appearance, but fireproof inside and outside.

Mr. Fraser: It is not only a useful building but it is a great attraction to tourists and I hope that it is kept "as is".

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are not unmindful of that fact.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to ask the minister a question about the practice with regard to the payment for materials where a fixed fee is given the contractor. Are the bills for the materials examined by some official from the department before payment is made to the contractor or is he entitled to put in any price he likes?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In a case like this, when we pay the cost of everything, the finance department have what they call their audit branch. They are on the job and they handle this part of the work because that is the financial part of it. They are on the job and they handle this part of the work, because it is the financial part of it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Whether the contractor supplies the materials or whether the government supplies it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When the contractor gets a contract on a firm basis, well, he handles all the material part of it. That is his problem. In this case we would have it because these materials would be bought by finance or by public works on a certificate of finance, who would be right there. They have their men on the job, that is, the audit branch of finance, and as soon as we get the bills certified by the finance department we would pay them.

Mr. Noseworthy: I notice that Ottawa is one place in Canada where the minister's department succeeds in at least getting started on most of the projects for which money is voted from year to year. Of twenty items listed for Ottawa, only three are complete revotes, three small items, two for the mines branch and one for the Department of Agriculture. Apparently on the other seventeen the minister's department has some work in progress. Will the minister tell us why?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have a good answer to that. Ottawa is the capital city. Two hundred and sixty-two members spend six months of the year here watching what is going on, and pressing for this to be done in the house. So my officials, who are listening, just get to work quicker probably than if it were out in some little place where it is never mentioned except by our officials out there. Do not compare Ottawa with Hull. Ottawa is the capital city.

Mr. Noseworthy: Move the capital.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Every day in this house somebody will speak of some building or some facility, some elevator that is not working, or some clocks that are not running well, so we have the staff here that tries to meet the wishes of the members of parliament and the population. Is that a good answer?

Mr. Noseworthy: I was really congratulating the minister and not criticizing him in any way. Am I to understand from the remarks of the minister that the extent to which the government proceeds with works for which money is voted depends largely upon the members of parliament in the constituencies or within these premises.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would it not be human nature, when you have 262 people around you who are trying to find fault all over the place, that my officials do not want me to be blamed day in and day out so they get to work and I help them sometimes myself.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Noseworthy: Will the minister tell us why he was not able to proceed with the two buildings for the mines branch for which estimates were voted last year to the extent of $50,000 each?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told by my officials that this was not considered as urgent as the other buildings that were on the list. The sum of $50,000 is just a start. I understand that the project will run into a good many hundreds of thousands. I cannot think of any better answer than that.

Mr. Noseworthy: There is a $50,000 revote for a chemical laboratory, and a $50,000 revote for another building for accommodation of the mines branch. There must be some reason why the minister could not get started on these.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that we did quite a bit of work for that department in the city of Ottawa, and the other departments had more pressing things, and we gave priority to the other departments. That would be the only reason, I would think.

Mr. Fraser: About three years ago I asked the minister a question and he promised to look into it. It had to do with the main heating plant and the smoke from that plant which just covers this building at times; so much so that in the parliamentary restaurant you cannot have the windows open because the soot comes in the windows and covers the tables and it also happens in the members' rooms.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am glad the hon. gentleman brought that question up. This is another one of those questions where the officials do not agree among themselves as to whether we should experiment with smoke abatement in the city of Ottawa. I think we are trying some experiment some place with some company from Toronto to see what the effect is. In this city you see reports from the authorities showing that some of them believe in it while others say there is not very much to it. We have nothing that is guaranteed that will cure this. We are experimenting at the Elgin building right now.

Mr. Fraser: Is there not a bylaw in Ottawa which says that the smoke has to be kept down as much as possible?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is a law over in my town, too, but the Woods Manufacturing just dirty my paint every year and I have to paint over. They have bylaws and everything, but I have not found them of very much help though I am personally interested. The same thing applies here.

Mr. Green: Has the minister given up all thought of trying to get tenders for the library?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, since the fire took place I have done quite a bit of work on this. I cannot find anybody who will advise me that they can prepare detailed plans with these specifications down to the point where any contractor would like to bid a firm price. It does not mean that we will spend more, but the risk of undertaking this on a firm price is great. Yesterday, we were speaking of people who have contracts with the government and who go bankrupt. Some other people who are contractors do not want to take those chances. If I were a contractor, after listening to everything that was explained to me, I would hesitate to undertake that job on a firm price. We have been experimenting on the quality of the material. There is steel and iron in that building that came over from Britain in 1776. We do not know what remains of the building will be used or what new materials will be needed to make it a really permanent fireproof building. This is really one instance where I think I shall get the unanimous consent of members that we are not getting into a venture that we know we cannot have executed, and a fixed fee will be the guarantee, at all events, on what it will cost, and we shall have a finance audit for the materials and work done on it.

Mr. Brooks: My understanding is that the building is far too small. Are we to understand now that we shall have a library constructed of the same size as the one that is there?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have a report from the parliamentary librarians and the archivist and a committee that was set up for that purpose, that if we can excavate two tiers below the surface we shall have two floors or stackrooms for these books. The report of these men is that the space we shall have when the building is renovated will be sufficient for the parliamentary library.

Mr. Brooks: You are going underground.

Mr. Knowles: That takes into account the building of a national library as well.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. Probably they are taking into account the fact that we shall have a national library in the future.

Mr. Green: The minister can rely on the advice he gets from the librarians and the archivist. In my opinion they are very reliable people.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have named these two and the archivist.

Mr. Green: There are two other items here that I wanted to ask a question about; one is an item for $700,000 for a site for departmental buildings. Where is that? Does it cover anything more than the actual land? My other question has to do with a vote of $650,000 for testing laboratory for the minister's own department. Where is it to be? What will be the total cost? What is to be tested?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This item of $700,000 is to extend the site we have at Tunney's Pasture, where we now have the statistics building and three other buildings. This falls in line with the plan of the capital planning committee. This is a site, adjacent to the centre of the city, where we will centralize a good many of our activities.

I have here a list of estimated costs of that site, and the improvements to be made on it so as to bring in the ordinary services required. I have not all the details. This is an extension of the site I have mentioned. In addition to the statistics building we have two storage buildings, and are planning a further one.

Mr. Green: How much will be paid for the land?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told we own the site. These are the services for the buildings to be put up, and would include sewage, water distribution, excavation for heating and underground electrical work, and amounts for earth and rock grading, and filling. There is a contract for the sewage and water distribution system, for excavation, for construction of the electrical underground service. All this is under contract and is being done now. This is the amount we would spend during this fiscal year.

Mr. Green: The $700,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Green: What about the testing laboratory?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This will be a two-storey building, with basement, the main section to be 202 feet by 50 feet. It will have two wings, each of 50 feet by 96 feet. It will have a reinforced concrete frame, brick and tile walls, with brick facings and concrete trim. This is for our testing laboratory connected with the Department of Public Works. Because of the increased amount of construction, the amount of work we have to do has developed tremendously. At the moment we are operating in the basement of the west block; but we are told we must leave there because that space could be used for some other purpose.

Mr. Green: Will this amount cover the total cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. The estimated cost is $1 million. This would be the amount we expect to spend this year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Where is the building to be erected?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At the same location, Tunney's Pasture.

Mr. Noseworthy: Has the government any vacant land adjoining the mines branch buildings, on which to erect the buildings for which money was voted last year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes; we have expropriated the property on Booth street, to continue the properties occupied by this department.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

330. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $10,500,000.

Mr. Fraser: I have thanked the minister personally for fulfilling eventually his promise that the Peterborough federal building would be erected. When does he contemplate that it will be finished?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The minute I finish my estimates I will make inquiries. It is quite consoling to the poor minister who is trying to make headway with his estimates to hear what the hon. member for Peterborough West has to say.

Mr. Fraser: I am glad the minister has fulfilled his promise, because I have been asking for the building for thirteen years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, you were patient.

Mr. Brooks: I have been asking for only three years; I have ten to go.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask two or three questions. The first will have to do with the city of London, and the other two with St. Thomas and Port Stanley. I notice that in 1952 there was a vote of $25,000 to purchase a London postal terminal, now described as the former International Harvester Company building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In London the amount is required for the alteration of the International Harvester building in that city to provide accommodation near the Canadian National Railways station for the postal service. Is that what the hon. member has in mind?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Yes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): With the exception of the amount for supervision, this sum seems to cover the amount required for alterations to be made to the building. My notes show that, under an Exchequer Court award, the amount paid is $155,000. There will be about $60,000 more. We have not begun those alterations. I am asking for this amount so that we may begin.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): To date, what has been the cost of the International Harvester building? In the estimates for 1952-53 there was an amount of $300,000. Then there was a revote of $200,000, and I find that in this year's estimates there is a revote of $50,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The whole thing, when completed, will be $215,000. The cost of the building is $155,000; there is the sum of $50,000 for alterations and supervision, and a contingencies fund of $10,000.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): At the time the deal was being consummated there appeared to be some procrastination. The final purchase was not made from the International Harvester Company, but through some other firm that had come in and made the purchase. It cost $50,000 more than it would have otherwise.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My information is that we went to the Exchequer Court and got an award from that court.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): My next question deals more particularly with St. Thomas. A year ago there was an estimate for $100,000 for a new post office at that point. What progress has been made?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This future building, which is not yet constructed, would be used by the Post Office Department and the customs branch, as well as the unemployment insurance commission, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Transport. We did purchase from the city, if I remember correctly, a site at a cost of $55,000. We have not made much progress, to date. The site is described as lots 7, 8 and 9, east on Mondamin street. The lots are set out on plan 179. I would rather not give a definite answer concerning the project right now.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Then, I am interested in Port Stanley, partly because of the fact that a railway runs from London to that point. I mention it, too, because my colleague is not in his seat.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is no item for Port Stanley.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): No, but there should be

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You had better sit over here, and put it in.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Just a moment, now. I hold in my hand return number 39 which shows that the department spent $44,200 at Port Stanley in an attempt to raise a dredge that sank there a year ago.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This would not be under the architects' branch. Would the hon. member wait until my engineers are here?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): There is something else I want to take up.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is not the same branch of the department.

Mr. McIvor: As Fort William is in Ontario I should like to have assurance from the minister in connection with the buildings for customs and immigration at Pigeon River. I understand that difficulties have been encountered for which the Department of Public Works are not responsible. I was much concerned last fall when a report came out that these buildings would never be completed. People came to me about this and I told them that when the Minister of Public Works says that he will do a thing, he does it, or he gives a good reason. I have not heard any reason why he is not going to do it.

The report came out that the trans-Canada highway was going to be rerouted. I do not think that will happen but that report has been coming out for twenty years. I should like to have the assurance that the immigration officials at Pigeon River will not have to put in another winter in the building they have been living in for the last forty years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required toward the construction of a customs-immigration terminal, including a warehouse and bus terminal at Pigeon River, Ontario, to provide improved accommodation for the immigration service. Plans and specifications for the proposed buildings have not yet been prepared and it is anticipated that the required accommodation will cost around $250,000. I must admit that not much has been done about it. Additional property will be needed at the international bridge adjacent to the existing building as a site for the proposed new facilities. We will give this our attention and do the best we can.

Mr. McIvor: That means that we will have these buildings before next fall. That is good enough for us.

Mr. Noseworthy: Apparently the minister objected to my contrasting the work done by his department in Ottawa with that done in other parts of the country. Perhaps a comparison of the work done in the two central provinces would be more appropriate. I find that of the items listed for Ontario there are 38 revotes, while in the case of Quebec there are 21. Of the 38 revotes in Ontario, 27 are complete revotes and amount to $2,650,000. That means that last year we voted $2,650,000 for public works of one kind and another in Ontario which were not even started. In contrast with that there were only 7 or 8 of the revotes in Quebec that were not started.

I am not objecting to where the minister spends his money or where he puts up public buildings, but I do object to his department coming to parliament, as it did last year, and getting votes of over $12 million for public works in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces which were not used. In the case of projects amounting to approximately one-half of that $12 million, nothing was done. I do not know what the total would be for all Canada, but if in the case of five provinces it amounts to $12 million I think some criticism is warranted. In the case of half that amount the department did not even begin to do any work.

That is my criticism of the department. In some provinces the minister is able to make a beginning on practically every project for which money is voted, but in the case of Ontario there were 27 communities which were promised public buildings last spring and for which the money was voted but still nothing has been done. I think that feature of the minister's department requires more explanation than has been given.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will try again to convince my hon. friend that when I submit my estimates to treasury board everyone knows that I will not spend more than 80 per cent of what I am requesting. I am told by them that in the case of construction work I cannot commit the department without the assurance of these extra amounts being voted. Perhaps they are all wrong, but I think the hon. member knows that the treasury board with its financial experts are far more critical at times than members of parliament. The members of the treasury board do not make requests for public buildings while members of parliament do.

Suppose the Post Office Department makes a request for a building in a certain town which is given top priority. The member approves and the public bodies in the town request the building. We know the work we have to do during that year. I cannot convince those organizations that I should not have an amount in the estimates. I will tell my hon. friend why.

Once an amount is in the estimates it is quite difficult to go back on your word. It may take time to put up the building, but the amount has been passed by the government, the treasury board and parliament. Take this item of $15,000 for Rothesay. As a responsible minister I think I am bound to erect that building despite what the other departments, or even my officials, may say. The building has not been put up because they have found reasons for not putting it up. They say that perhaps it could be done another way; perhaps there is enough space; perhaps it would be better to rent space.

If a minister of public works came into the committee and said: "I am asking for these amounts and I give my word that during the fiscal year I will spend every cent", I do not think he would be kept as minister of public works.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister still has not explained to me why his department could make a start on all but seven projects for which money was voted last year in the case of one province and yet was not able to make a start in the case of 27 projects for which money was voted in another province.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Probably in the preceding year or two years ago the reverse was true. Has the hon. member looked over all the estimates since confederation?

Mr. Noseworthy: I am considering last year only.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is the only way the hon. member can back up his argument. He would have to make a real study of the matter and take all the estimates since confederation.

Mr. Aylesworth: Would the minister give the total cost of remodelling the customs house at Kingston, the total cost of the furnishings for the same building, and whether the work was done by tender?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I can give my hon. friend all that information, but it is not in these estimates. If the hon. member wishes, I will get every detail for him and have the information sent to him. We have no item here for that project at all, so I will have to ask my officials to look over the file. We will answer it for him.

Mr. Aylesworth: I understand the building is nearly completed so you will have the figures some place.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is why we have not got an estimate for it. That is one of the projects where we have no revote. I will give the hon. gentleman every detail.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Aylesworth: Has it all been done without any authority?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. You can be sure if I tried to do work and did not have the money it would not only be members of parliament who would check me. There is the auditor, the comptroller of the treasury, the Department of Finance and the treasury board. Do not think I am alone in this. I have company. I will undertake to give the hon. member every detail on short notice the moment I am through.

Mr. Ross (Hamilton East): I want to know something about this vote of $500,000 for an office building at Hamilton. We have had that property for quite a while. What progress has been made? When are you going to call for tenders?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is the new public building for veterans affairs, the unemployment insurance commission, trade and commerce, national defence, the air force, labour, transport, agriculture, national revenue, health and welfare, customs and immigration, and citizenship and immigration. This is a new item. I cannot be blamed for having a revote. It is not a revote. It was only brought in in January. I may say we have appointed an architect, Hugh D. Robertson, to prepare plans. The site acquired for the building is the block bounded by George, Caroline and Main streets. The property has a frontage of 194½ feet on Caroline street and a depth of 241 feet. We brought the property for the site from the Hamilton board of education. We are having plans prepared, and the moment we have the plans and specifications we will ask for tenders.

Mr. Ross (Hamilton East): Wait a minute. The plans have been prepared for a couple of years. When are you going to call for tenders on the job?

Mr. Knowles: Before the snow flies.

Mr. Cardiff: Just before the election.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told this item was included in the estimates for a few years and then dropped. We have now come back to it, and we did not want to put it in as a revote in order to please certain members. We expect to start work this year. I am serious.

Mr. Ross (Hamilton East): No fooling? I see there is $500,000, but what is the estimated cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Three and a half million dollars.

Mr. Tustin: Inasmuch as we have been talking about revotes, there is one small project under item 330 that I would not like to see dropped as in the case raised by the hon. member for Hamilton East. About three years ago the department purchased a building in the village of Bloomfield for a post office. Last year there was a vote of $15,000 for renovating the building, but no work was commenced. I notice that it is being revoted this year. Yesterday the minister said that there was a shortage of contractors and materials, but I can assure him that there is no shortage of contractors in that district to undertake this small job. All he will have to do will be to hand a blueprint and the specifications to any one of the contractors and they will be delighted to carry out the work for him. I can assure him they will do an excellent job. It is most essential that the work be done as soon as possible because the situation is very inconvenient as it is at the present time.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have good news for the hon. member. I am told that the plans are nearly completed and my chief architect says that he is going to start. It is not a very big project and we can complete it in a short time.

Mr. Tustin: From the smile that came over the minister's face while I was speaking, I thought that was likely the case.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): In looking further through the estimates I find that Port Stanley is mentioned.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly, but not in the architectural branch. When I have my engineers in front of me I will be ready to answer the hon. member.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I refrained from taking part in the administration debate for the very reason that the minister wanted to get on so that he could give us the details, but I find now that the proper thing to do is to take part in the administration debate and also get the answers when we come to the items.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): So they are repeating themselves.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Never mind. I find it difficult to get what I want. I notice that there is an amount of $160,000, including a revote of $75,000, set aside for work at Kagawong. As I said, I am interested in Port Stanley because of the fact—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is dealing with the engineering branch. What he is mentioning now is in the engineering branch. I have my architects here and not my engineers. I do not want to stop the hon. member, but if we can finish the architectural branch then I will have the engineering staff and will be ready to answer.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

331. Manitoba, $1,450,000.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions about the new post office building that is being erected in Winnipeg. First of all may I say that we were glad to get his answers to certain questions of mine which appear in Hansard for March 9, at pages 2731 and 2732, and which indicated that provision was being made in the construction of the building for a certain amount of off-street loading and off-street parking. As the minister knows, the problem of parking is an acute one in most of our cities, and while it might be argued that it is not the responsibility of the federal government to solve the Winnipeg parking problem still I am sure he will agree with me that no federal building should be allowed to aggravate the problem.

It is on that basis that some of us from Winnipeg have urged that the fullest possible provision for off-street parking be included in the plans for the building. After receiving a favourable answer to questions which I placed on the order paper last March, we learned that the plans for the new post office building did not include provision for a full basement. I was rather surprised when that information came to my attention. As a matter of fact I learned it in a letter from an organization known as the downtown business association of Winnipeg which, over the signature of Mr. C. A. Campbell, the president of that association, wrote to the minister on March 25. The association learned that provision was not being made for a full basement and expressed the hope that consideration would be given to revising the plans to include such provision. After hearing from the association on the matter, I wrote to the minister in support of Mr. Campbell's representations. As the minister appears not to have had the opportunity to reply to my letter yet, perhaps he might give the answer now.

Is it true that there is no provision for a full basement? If that is true, and thus far it has not been possible to change those plans to include such a provision, these Winnipeg businessmen suggest that additional parking facilities could be provided in such a basement if the post office has no use for it. As a matter of fact, any additional expenditure required could easily be recovered through the provision of parking space in that area where parking is a very serious problem. There are one or two other matters suggested in this correspondence to which I have referred, and perhaps the minister could give a reply to those matters now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know what definition is given to the words "full basement" in the mind of the hon. gentleman. We did receive that correspondence, and we referred it to the architect for further study to ascertain whether or not such a thing would be feasible and economic. I am told that we will use part of that basement for the storing of post office vehicles.

I am glad the hon. member brought up this Winnipeg question. We expect to call for tenders for the excavation in the very near future. The plans are to be completed some time late in the summer or early fall. This is one of those buildings that does compare with other large buildings, even those in the capital city. The estimate I have here for that Winnipeg public building is $14,900,000, and that beats the printing bureau in Hull. You see, we are not limiting our activities to the capital city. This is a big building.

Mr. Knowles: Winnipeg is a big city.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, but we have other large cities in the dominion. This project has been under consideration for some time, and the plans have been changed because we could not get the post office to give us the space they needed. This year we expect to call for tenders for the excavation and complete the plans, and next year complete the building.

Mr. Knowles: The minister will forgive me if I did not follow him closely enough to understand completely what he said about the full basement. I should like to read one sentence from the letter from Mr. C. A. Campbell to the minister, dated March 25 of this year. He said:

> At the same time, we were disappointed to learn that the plans provided for only a partial excavation of the basement.

Then Mr. Campbell went on to suggest not only the desirability of having a full excavation to provide for parking facilities, but the suggestion was also made that it may be worth while to think of plans for a bomb-proof shelter in the event that such should be necessary. Do I understand from the minister that it is still the case that there is to be only a partial excavation, or has that question been reviewed in the light of these representations?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): According to the plans this building will have a full basement, which is needed for the building. Now, we never thought of building under that basement a bomb shelter or garage for the public; that is another project. When we put up a building for the government service, I do not know if parliament would authorize me to start building a garage for the public. I do not feel like going into the garage business in the future. If we are going to have a bomb shelter under there two or three storeys deep, that is another problem. I would have to be advised by the military authorities, or those who know something about civil defence. What I am interested in at the moment is giving Winnipeg the best building we can for the government services that are provided there.

Mr. Knowles: In the light of what the minister has said may I just read another excerpt or two from this same letter, to make it clear that we are not suggesting the federal government is obligated to deal with Winnipeg's parking problem. We do suggest that the federal government should take into consideration the extent to which that building may aggravate the problem. Let me read this part of Mr. Campbell's letter:

> The tenants of the building and the employees of the post office will require parking space which, if not provided in the building, will have to be found elsewhere. For this purpose alone, parking space in the building merits serious consideration.

In the same letter Mr. Campbell says:

> As businessmen we are not ones to advocate unnecessary government expenditures, but this is one project where we feel the additional expenditure is not only justified but absolutely essential.

In another place in the same letter he suggests that we now have parking meters in Winnipeg and we are used to paying for our parking, so any additional expenditure would be recovered in a short period of time.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I thought the minister was going to have something to say in reply to that last statement by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I want to support what has already been said with regard to this matter. I think it is a subject which deserves serious consideration. I am not sure the minister wished to convey the impression that the department is under no obligation to provide garage facilities—I think he used those words. I do not think that enters into it at all. The problem is one of off-street parking which, in part, has been dealt with by the minister and his department in his plans.

This committee in Winnipeg which has been working on the matter has put forward a reasonable proposal. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out, revenue would be derived from the off-street parking in a full basement, which would offset any extra costs involved. I noticed also in the minister's remarks that he said a full basement would be provided for the requirements of the building. I think the word "full" requires a definition. What is being requested is a complete basement under the structure that will provide for the two purposes that have been outlined.

The second purpose, I think, is deserving of very serious consideration, and that is the shelter in case of air raids. We are living in an age when this problem should be taken into consideration. It does not necessarily imply, as the minister suggested, a deeper excavation for air raid shelter purposes. An underground basement, with a properly reinforced structure overhead, will provide a certain amount of protection.

I should like further comment from the minister on this point and he might, perhaps, add an answer to this question. In the construction of public buildings across our country now, is consideration being given to the provision of bomb-proof shelters? I think that might well be considered for all our public buildings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that we have not reached that stage of development in my department where we will ask parliament for money for the building of bomb-proof shelters. Perhaps as time goes on, we will. This is a new idea, that when I have a $14,900,000 building to put up for the service of the people of the country, you add to that a substructure the size of the building which would serve as a bomb shelter and as a garage for the public. Then you are getting into something that I have never considered. I am having enough trouble in getting the ordinary buildings erected without starting on this. My officials tell me that is the most expensive thing we can do, to build garages below the surface and man and maintain those garages. Whether they are right or wrong, I do not know. They tell me they have discussed this with the people concerned. I am told that such a project would cost over a million dollars. I do not know whether parliament would wish to give me that authority.

This is a new question. I do not say there is no merit in it when money is no object, but I have to limit myself to what parliament gives me, and I think I am asking for substantial sums right now. Oh, I would not want to discourage all good improvements for public buildings, but this is one as to which I think I should wait perhaps another session before I would undertake anything.

Mr. Churchill: I do not think the minister can have it both ways. He cannot say that no consideration has been given to this—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It has been considered.

Mr. Churchill: —and then say he would be asking for $1 million. What we are asking is this. Will consideration be given to matters of this nature in the construction of public buildings? Simply to brush it aside with the suggestion that this will cost another million is not, I think, exactly what was in the minds of those who were asking those questions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not want to leave a bad impression, but my officials tell me they have been considering this with a committee here in Ottawa and to date have not come to a decision. The same request might be made with respect to almost all public buildings in cities. This would be a matter of government policy on which I would not want to undertake to make a decision myself. It is quite a huge proposition.

Mr. Knowles: Without pursuing the argument any further, Mr. Chairman, there is one point I should like to make clear and one question to which I should like to get a clear answer. The point I wish to make clear—and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre agrees with me in this—is that we are not asking the government to deal with a problem that is Winnipeg's responsibility, but rather that it should be prepared to deal with a problem created by the fact that the federal post office is being placed in that area. We feel that undoubtedly it will aggravate the parking problem in that area, and that it is not inconsistent with federal responsibility to ask that consideration be given to dealing with the aggravated part of the problem.

The question to which I should like to get a clear answer is one which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre suggested. I should like to get a precise definition as to what the minister means when he says there will be a full excavation for the purposes of the building. Let us suppose for the moment that the request made by this association is not being met. I think the minister would agree that even so, it would be less expensive to have the entire area of that city block excavated now before the building is put up rather than to leave it until later.

Therefore my question is this. When the minister says there will be a full excavation of the basement for the purposes of the building, does he mean just that portion of the city block which is necessary for what they have in mind or does he mean the basement will be excavated for the entire city block bounded by Graham, St. Mary's, Smith and Garry?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This building will not cover the whole block, I understand, because you have to have circulation for those trucks and vehicles that service the post office. But the whole basement ground, according to the plans, is needed for the operation of the building. What you people suggest is that I go further underground to build this special bomb-proof shelter and garage; and that is what my officials tell me is terribly expensive and is not needed for the public building.

As to the hon. member's other thought, namely that this building will aggravate the parking situation, may I say that I suppose they have these parking problems in every city where buildings are going up, and we try to meet them as they come. What the remedy would be I do not know. I do not know what the city or the province has in mind to do. It is their capital city, as Ottawa is here. As to the building itself, I would ask hon. members to let me have a go at it and try to put it up.

Mr. Knowles: We have been trying to get the minister to do that for several years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I know. I am just on the brink of starting. Do not stop me.

Mr. Ross (Souris): There is one small item here which is rather insignificant when compared with the Winnipeg post office. I should like to support the arguments just made by the other two members from Manitoba, but there is an item here for Boissevain, customs and immigration buildings. It is a revote. Some years ago there was an item in there for this purpose. It was dropped and was put back a year ago; and now it is a revote. There is a great deal of traffic on No. 10 highway through the international peace garden. I am wondering whether the minister can tell us just what the position is, or whether he has anything definite on the matter of construction there?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now we have a site. Preliminary plans have been approved for that building. It will be a customs office 32 feet by 65 feet, basement and one storey; public immigration office, 32 feet by 35 feet, basement and one storey; bus terminal building, 21 feet by 74 feet, basement and one storey and rear wing 11 feet by 32 feet with concrete foundation, masonry walls, felt and gravel roof, etc. Estimated cost of the whole project would be $160,000.

After the preliminary plans have been approved I think it will take a few months to complete the plans, and then we will ask for tenders.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

333. Alberta, $2,300,000.

Mr. Quelch: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the revote for Banff. Has a final decision been reached with regard to the location of the site for the post office at Banff? If so, where will the location be?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The site selected for the proposed public building consists of lots 35, 36 and 37 at the corner of Bear and Buffalo streets, and has been made available by the Department of Resources and Development. We have engaged the services of Dewar, Stevenson and Stanley, architects of Edmonton, to prepare the plans. We are waiting on the approval of the preliminary plans by the Post Office Department. The moment we get that approval we will complete the plans and ask for tenders.

Mr. Quelch: It is expected to proceed with the project this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I hope so.

Mr. Quelch: What will the building provide for? Will it provide only for a post office, or will there be other features to it as well?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They tell me that it will house the postal activities and some activities of the national film board.

Mr. Quelch: I have just one other question. Can the minister say whether it is expected to proceed with the new post office at Stettler?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I see that we have not yet acquired the site. The site selected for the proposed building consists of the westerly 75 feet of lots 25 and 26 and the westerly 100 feet of lot 27. This gives a frontage of 75 feet on 50th avenue and a depth of 100 feet to the south line of lot 27 and a frontage on Taylor street of 150 feet. A survey and valuation of this property are being obtained by the department. We are just at that stage of purchasing it.

Mr. Thomas: For the public building for Wetaskiwin there is a revote of $50,000 plus an additional $25,000. Can the minister tell me whether it is intended to erect a new building or to continue with the plans for renovating the old one?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is a new building that we are going to put up. I am told this amount is to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a new public building. The post office has put this item in category A of their list of projects. At the moment we have to purchase the site and prepare the plans, and then we shall proceed with construction.

Mr. Thomas: Has the site been chosen as yet?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not think we have acquired the land yet. We have only received the report on the lots that we propose to purchase, but I have no notes on that report yet.

Mr. Thomas: Is this building going to be used just as a post office, or is it intended to use it for other purposes?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The firm request comes from the post office, but when it is decided to have a building we ask the other departments, if they have any branches or offices there, what space they would need in the building, and I have not reached that stage yet.

Mr. Thomas: The reason I ask is that there is an R.C.M.P. detachment there, and I was wondering whether it was going to be used to house them as well.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, unless they request it.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—
334. British Columbia, $3,850,000.

Mr. Pearkes: I wish to ask questions regarding the Nanaimo public building and the Victoria public building. With regard to Nanaimo, I do want to stress the importance of making a start on that new building. The item has been revoted for a number of years, and it is imperative that a start be made on that building in the immediate future because money is being lost every year by reason of the fact that the post office has to go out and hire temporary accommodation during rush seasons. Other offices of the government are distributed through the city, and it is really of the utmost importance that a start be made on that new building. Can the minister say whether a start will be made this year? It has been revoted too many times already.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, the trouble in this instance, as I understand it, is that when we started out on this the mounted police wanted to occupy space and we prepared our projects to cover post office, different departments and the mounted police. But now they do not wish to occupy space in that building and we have had to revise our plans. The plans are 50 per cent ready architecturally, and we are proceeding with them. We will lose no more time now that we know who will be in that building and what space we will need.

Mr. Pearkes: I do hope that no further time will be lost, because it is very questionable whether a post office building is a suitable building for the mounted police. I am glad to hear that the mounted police are now going elsewhere.

I want to ask a question with regard to the Victoria public building mail-handling equipment. The new post office in Victoria was opened last year. The Prime Minister came out and informed everybody that it was a splendid building, as it is, and that it had modern equipment. Why is it necessary to expend another $60,000 on mail-handling equipment? I understand—I am not certain whether it is correct—that there is no elevator system for conveying the mail from the basement where it is delivered up to the sorting rooms which are on higher storeys. Is this $60,000 to be used to provide an elevator service?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that in these post offices where they have conveyors for taking the mail, as the hon. member says, from the basement up to the fifth floor, the conveyors are not included in the main contract. The design for these is made after the building is put up, and space is allocated, but it comes under another heading. They have their experts in these matters. What we do after we get their designs and their specifications is to call for these tenders. Am I correct, or are my officials correct, when I say that in these post offices where there are conveyors they are a separate installation? This amount would be for that special equipment which the post office needs. It is not a part of the main contract for the building according to the plans and specifications.

Mr. Pearkes: The point I want to make is this. This $60,000 is going to provide that carrier service? That is what this amount is for?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is what I am told, and it is not comprised in the plans and specifications of the building. It is separate equipment. Once the building has been erected the post office tell us what they want there; and once they decide on this, we do it.

Mr. Pearkes: Are any structural alterations necessary to put this equipment in?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told not. I am told that the openings for these conveyors are put in the plans, but the conveyors themselves do not form part of the building.

Mr. Pearkes: That is satisfactory. I hope this work will be done immediately, because the men are given a lot of additional work in handling the mail from the basement up to the fifth floor of this new post office.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I think you are right.

Mr. Pearkes: It is a matter of urgency. Will it be spent this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Pearkes: Has the equipment been purchased?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not think I will need a revote on this next year. I will try to spend it this year.

Mr. Pearkes: I hope it will not be necessary to ask for a revote; perhaps you will not be here to revote it.

Mr. Green: There are two or three questions I should like to bring up on this vote. The first has to do with the policy of the department in regard to putting up buildings and purchasing property in centres where there is a town plan. For example, in Vancouver we have a town plan and a town planning commission. The type of building that can be put in certain areas is governed by that plan.

There has been considerable trouble with the minister's department because of the fact that on some occasions the department has erected buildings in an area where office buildings are not supposed to go. We believe the department should do its utmost to co-operate in that regard. I hope the minister will adopt the policy of not breaking down the town plan in these centres and will put his buildings in a part of the city where private individuals can construct buildings of the same type. It is very unfair for the department to go into a one-family dwelling district and put up an office building. I see no reason for the department following a practice of that kind. I hope we can have an assurance from the minister that he will not allow that in future.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not hesitate to give that assurance, because I want to keep our public relations at a high level, and would not want to lose the confidence of the people. I am told by the officials of the department that they try to conform to the planning in different towns and cities. In Vancouver we have three architects, and I would hope they would not advise us to erect buildings that would be contrary to any of the planning regulations of the city. However, I will give the assurance that the officials will co-operate with local authorities before putting up buildings.

Mr. Green: A further question of policy has to do with the refusal of the department to instal washroom facilities for the general public in public buildings. I realize that is a wise policy in respect of most buildings. However, in Vancouver we have what is known as the Alvin building, of which the minister has heard a good deal in the last few years. It should have everything that could be imagined, in view of the price the government paid for it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now surely we are not going to start that again.

Mr. Green: This building is the headquarters of the unemployment insurance commission and the national employment service. Many people go in there each day, and frequently they must wait for hours before they receive attention from the officials. On February 9 these questions of mine appeared in Hansard:

1. Are washroom facilities available in the Alvin building, Vancouver, British Columbia, for the use of persons waiting to interview employees of the national employment service or the unemployment insurance commission?
2. If not, will provision be made for such facilities?

The answer to the first question was No, and to the second—

No. The Department of Public Works does not provide public washrooms in government buildings under its jurisdiction.

I can understand that in respect of most buildings that is a proper policy, but I do suggest that in a building of this type there should be washroom facilities. We had the same difficulty in connection with the immigration building at the boundary point of Douglas. The first plans did not call for any washroom facilities, but after protests had been made in the house the plans were changed and provision was made.

Different organizations in Vancouver have requested that a similar change be made in connection with the Alvin building. Can the minister tell the committee whether something can be done along this line?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are certainly considering the question of having washrooms in our public buildings. However, the difficulty is to know where to stop. Once we have put washrooms in one public building, are we expected to put them in the three thousand buildings we occupy across the country? The problem is greater than it would appear at first glance. I can understand that it may have been justified in connection with the immigration building. However, I am told there are not many such buildings, indeed, that the one at Douglas may be the only one. If we do it in a building dealing with unemployment insurance, why should we not do it in a post office building?

Mr. Green: People do not have to wait in a post office.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In the small towns people will congregate at the post office until the mail is received from the train. It is a place in which they can meet, and if washroom facilities were provided it would become a public place. It is really a complicated problem. All I can say is that the department will continue to consider it with a view to finding some solution. However, I would not be prepared to commit myself.

Mr. Green: I am asking only that the department consider the Alvin building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will do that; we will look into it.

Mr. Green: I see in the item an amount of $200,000 for a customs building at Vancouver, and $800,000 for a post office building in that city. How far has the department gone in connection with those two buildings?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that in respect of the customs building we are almost ready to advertise for public tenders. In respect of the post office, the site belongs to us and has belonged to us for some time. We are carrying out demolition in preparation for the new building. The architects, McCarter and Nairne, are preparing the plans. We are past the preliminary planning stage, and have reached the stage of preparing working drawings. We will be asking for tenders in the near future for the customs building.

Mr. Green: When will tenders be called for the post office building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I could not give a definite date. This is another one of those Winnipeg buildings—and it will be quite a building, too. I cannot say how long the architects will require to prepare final plans and specifications. We have to have the plans completed during the year, but that is about all I can say.

Mr. Green: Does that mean during the present fiscal year, or the calendar year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The fiscal year.

Mr. Green: Then it is unlikely that tenders will be called in the present fiscal year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We hope tenders will be called during this fiscal year, and the contract awarded. But I cannot make any statement as to the date.

Mr. Herridge: On February 13 I wrote the deputy minister concerning this and two or three other items. Am I likely to receive a reply before parliament dissolves?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When I meet my deputy minister outside the house I shall make inquiries and let the hon. member know.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

336. Unforeseen improvements, $1,200,000.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if the minister could give us an example of the kind of expenditures made under this item? I notice from the details at the back of the book that these amounts are usually pretty well spent. In the fiscal year 1951-52 the amount expended was $1,180,703. For the fiscal year 1952-53 the amount actually spent, up to December 31, plus the estimated balance for the remainder of the year, adds up to an estimated total of $1,200,000. What are the types of expenditures made under the item?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have a list of the items here. Last year we were authorized to the extent of $785,129.17, and out of that we paid $566,396.27. I have a list of about 15 pages of all these items. As an example, there was the installation of dust collectors at the central heating plant, $22,989.89; quonset huts, additional ventilation, $2,827. The list is not even typed; it is just in handwriting.

Mr. Knowles: Does it cover items right across the country?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): All over. These are unforeseen items. Here is another one, steel grills, mint building, $1,845; new ash hoist, $6,517. These requests come in from all departments, and these small items are paid for out of this vote. I am told that except in a few cases they do not go over $10,000. The items are too small to be detailed as separate votes. I could probably have the list typed and send a copy to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Knowles: What is the procedure for approving these items?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If they are within the range provided by the statute they are approved by the officials. If the amount is small, it may be approved by the resident architect, that is if it is $200, $300, $400 or $500. If the amount is greater it would have to come to headquarters to be approved by the chief architect. If it is still greater it would be approved by the deputy minister. When it reaches a certain level the attention of the minister would be called to it. Here is an item: Chilliwack public building, $1,683.

Mr. Knowles: How many items were in excess of $10,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I think the largest item was for the installation of the dust collectors at the central heating plant, Ottawa, $22,989. There are other items of $1,000, $458, $911, $275.

Mr. Higgins: May I go back to item 234 and give the minister some information in connection with Canada House? This was purchased in 1947 for $32,500. The only question I want to ask is how you are able to rent it for $125 a month.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When we expropriate a property and then rent it we follow the principle of charging 5 per cent of the cost. Five per cent of $32,500 would be about $1,600. We are renting for $125 a month and I think we are within that principle.

Mr. Higgins: But you maintain it as well. One year the cost of maintenance was $300.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That was spent on the building before it was leased to the provincial government. I suppose they put some hinges on the doors.

Mr. Higgins: You spent $200 last year, and it has been leased now for four years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Before the lease was signed with the province we heated the building. In 1949 we paid Imperial Oil Limited for fuel oil, $181.50; Newfoundland Light and Power Company, electric lighting, April 1 to July 16, 1949, $31.90; Ottawa Typewriter Company, one filing cabinet for high commissioner, $68.36.

Mr. Higgins: There is an item for 1951-52, and it has been leased for four years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We expended $34 for mothproofing of furniture, but that was before we signed the lease. We did not want our furniture to deteriorate. That was for battling the moths.

Mr. Higgins: What about the $200 expenditure in 1951-52?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I made a mistake when I gave you that answer; all I have is $118.17.

Mr. Higgins: Was that for moths?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that that was a mistake, that it should have been part of the cost. We do not spend anything on the building and we get a good revenue.

Mr. Higgins: Why do you not sell it?

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—
Engineering services—

338. Salaries, surveys, inspections, etc., $1,917,701.

Mr. McLure: Would the surveying of Rustico harbour be included in this item? There was an extensive survey carried out last summer by five or six men.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This would not be the item under which the hon. member would get the information he requires. The details of this item will be found on page 407, where will be found the details of the salaries paid to technicians and engineers. The list continues over to page 408 and totals $1,326,776. At the end you will find that there is an amount for overtime, subsistence allowance, travel and removal expenses, materials and supplies, rentals and so forth. This is the general administration vote of the engineering branch. If you want surveys and works I think you have to go down to item 348.

Mr. McLure: All right.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will give all explanations on item 348.

Item agreed to.

Dredging, including snagboats—

340. Maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works, $3,332,175.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister tell me how much money was spent for dredging in the different districts of Newfoundland in 1952-53?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In Newfoundland?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, in the various ridings. The minister gave me the information for 1951-52 in an answer that is in Hansard. I notice that the riding of Bonavista-Twillingate got nearly half a million dollars, Burin-Burgeo, $126,000, and the rest of the districts among them got $50,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Under this vote we are spending in Newfoundland—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): You spent $676,000 in 1951-52. Is this the amount voted for dredging?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Just one moment. Contract and day labour work come under this vote, and there is $2,000 for Branch in St. John's West, $2,000 at Gaskier's, $2,000 at Daniel's Harbour in the riding of Humber-St. George's—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is that the vote for the coming year, 1953-54?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is $2,000 for Gaskier's and $2,000 for Daniel's Harbour in Humber-St. George's for hand dredging, $2,000 in Bonavista-Twillingate, $5,000 at Long Pond in St. John's West, $1,500 at Petty Harbour in St. John's West.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is the last one?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Petty Harbour. Then there is $1,500 at St. Anthony Bight.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Does that come under the vote of $130,000, the details of which are given on page 414?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will have to explain this vote. Under this vote you get maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works all over Canada. If you will refer to page 409 of the estimates that is where you will get the details of the expenditure of this money. On page 409 you will see that it starts out with one engineer, grade 7, and then continues with all the staff working in the dredging plant, numbering 484 people. We pay to these people—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I see all that. I do not want the minister to go into that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are satisfied with those details?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am not dissatisfied with anything. I merely want to get an answer as to how much money was spent in the different ridings of Newfoundland in 1952-53. In 1951-52 there was apparently $676,000 spent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Here is one answer that I am sure the hon. member wants anyway. Here is the dredging in the different ridings of Newfoundland by day labour. That would be one part of it. There is only $4,718.76. Of that amount there is $1,740 in St. John's West, $1,534.97 in Grand Falls-White Bay, $1,314.09 in Trinity-Conception and $129.70 in Grand Falls-White Bay. That is under day labour.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There must be some mistake there. In any case, Mr. Chairman, here is what I want to draw attention to. I look upon the minister as a just man. In 1951-52 the Secretary of State had $494,000 spent in his district for dredging, and other works brought the total to $1,098,000. I honestly believe almost that amount was spent each year in that riding. Last year $8,000 was spent in St. John's West for dredging, compared with that half a million dollars. So far as dredging is concerned, we are looking for the following items this year. I wish the minister would look them up afterward because they are not very big, and I think in justice we should have these amounts spent. First of all there is Branch, which is a fishing village almost entirely.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What place is that?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Branch. Then there is Gaskier's, $2,000; Petty Harbour, which is a fishing village near St. John's, $1,500. Then there is Trepassey, where there is a wharf, but the wharf is no good unless some dredging is done. The wharf has been built and extended by the government but unless dredging is done it is useless. Vessels cannot be brought alongside it. Therefore I plead with the minister to make a note that the dredge should operate there. I do not think the dredge operated anywhere in St. John's West last year. It cost $476,000 just to hire one dredge for six months, and I believe it was used entirely in Bonavista-Twillingate or Burin-Burgeo. Renews has had money voted but no money has been spent. Two years ago a survey was made of the harbour but there has been no dredging done yet. There is no use building a wharf there, for which money is provided, unless dredging is done.

I have seen men with poles trying to pole their way up the harbour. I do not think it is fair. I have been asking for this for four years. There is one other little place where nothing has been done. It is entirely a fishing village. It has about 75 families who are all dependent on the fishery. I refer to Little Harbour East. All they want is a small amount of dredging, which I think could be done by day labour. I have made the recommendation and I hope the minister will keep it in mind.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I can tell the hon. member that in the case of Renews our dredge will be working there for two to three weeks this summer, and also at Ferryland. Two weeks dredging will be done there with our plant.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Do you know which dredge that is?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Dredge 400.

Mr. Higgins: Now that my colleague has been so successful may I also make two requests of the minister. I last raised the matter in 1951. I refer to the necessity for dredging at Avondale and Holyrood. A report has been made by your engineer, Mr. Millar, and I should like to say for him that he has been very generous in his treatment, so far as I am concerned. He is also very competent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We shall certainly take these remarks into consideration, and if I can send the dredge there I will.

Mr. Balcer: Will the minister tell us what he intends to do around Three Rivers harbour so far as dredging is concerned?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That does not come under public works. That is the national harbours board.

Mr. Balcer: I mean near the Yamachiche river. I think something was voted for this dredging on the Yamachiche river, but I do not think the money was spent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot recall if we did some dredging there.

(Translation):

The Yamachiche river; where is it?

Mr. Balcer: The minister told me in his letter that his department intended to dredge the river. An amount of $500 was to be appropriated for this work, but I do not think it was ever spent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will check to see whether the work can be done and we will do it.

Mr. Balcer: For my information only, could the minister tell me whether maintenance dredging at the mouth of the St. Maurice river is the responsibility of the national harbours board or of the Department of Public Works? It seems that in this case they are passing the buck.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that it is the responsibility of the national harbours board and not of the Department of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

341. New plant and equipment, $1,726,300.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this is a vote which provides for the acquisition of new plant and equipment. Is the department procuring any new dredges for the west coast?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand there is an amount of $300,000 in that vote which would go toward the replacement of dredge No. 305, the King Edward. This dredge was built in about 1901, and it is being replaced. I am told that the plans for this new dredge are practically completed, and we will let the contract this summer.

Mr. Green: Will the dredging in the first narrows of Vancouver harbour be done by a government dredge or by contract?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Contract. The government has no dredges available to do work of that type. We have not the equipment. There are a good many of these companies that take dredging contracts out on the west coast. We will ask for tenders. I am told that we have no equipment for deep dredging.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask the minister how many departmental dredges there are now in New Brunswick?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that this is the first time in fifteen years that question has been put to the department. We usually have a list of the names and numbers of the dredges. Would the hon. member accept this information if I have it sent to him? I do not think I have it in the books.

Item agreed to.

Roads and bridges—

345. Maintenance and operation, $386,936.

Mr. Green: Can the minister say whether any progress has been made with regard to an agreement for the replacement of the Marpole bridge in Vancouver?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have no Marpole bridge on the list of bridges.

Mr. Green: No, but negotiations have been under way for some years for the replacement of the bridge on the basis of the federal government, the provincial government and the city of Vancouver contributing different amounts to the cost.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. gentleman waits for the Department of Transport estimates I think he will get a more satisfactory answer, because this bridge would lead to the island airport. It is that department which would be interested.

Mr. Green: It would have nothing to do with the Department of Public Works?

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects—

348. Newfoundland, $1,600,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This item has to do with major works in Newfoundland, improvements in harbours and river works. I notice that there is a vote of about $1,600,000, in which would be included some revotes. The total amount voted for St. John's West this year, not including the revotes, would be $19,000. There were two places where I recommended work should be started which are not included. I do not know why they are not included. They have been recommended by the district engineer, who has been very appreciative of the local difficulties.

The first project is at Calvert, and the amount is small. It is only $10,500. This is a fishing village and there is no public wharf. There used to be one, but it has disappeared. A private party has a wharf there which he is allowing the fishermen to use, and which I believe he may be willing to let the department use as the basis for a new wharf.

The other project is at a place called Reginaville, about which I have had some correspondence with the minister, and with which I think he is familiar. This is also a fishing centre, but it is an exposed place. The fishermen have to let their boats ride out in the open sea, and for an expenditure, recommended by the district engineer, of $30,000 a harbour could be made by digging a channel through the beach. I trust these two matters will receive due consideration, and perhaps the minister could put them in his supplementary estimates.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They may come under the general vote. I am told that one of them would be a very small project which would be taken out of the general vote. We shall certainly give that consideration.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There is only one other matter about which I should like to ask the minister, and that is in regard to Long Harbour, where the Department of Fisheries is going to repair a wharf in front of the cold storage plant. I asked for an extension so the fishermen could back up their trucks and take on bait supplies.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We can look into that, too.

Mr. Higgins: I should like to direct the minister's attention to one major problem which I have had for some time, and that is the terminal facilities at Bell island. The minister will recall that I presented a formal petition shortly before Christmas asking for proper terminal facilities for Bell island. In case the minister has forgotten the situation, Bell island is the place where the iron ore mine has been in operation for about 50 years. It supplies the blast furnaces at Sydney, as well as a lot of other blast furnaces. It is a community of over 11,000, and the only way they have of bringing in supplies of all kinds is by water and over these wharves that are there now. They are not in very good condition. The citizens have met, and as a result of their meeting I presented this petition to the house in December.

In the present estimate—the first time that St. John's East has really obtained a fair deal, I may say—you have set up a fund of $250,000 for the construction of one work. As I understand the position, your engineer in Newfoundland, Mr. Millar, made a survey of Portugal Cove and reported that it would cost $500,000 to put a proper wharf there and build a roadway approaching the wharf; and that through some deal that was made—I assume through the department—Mr. Millar wrote the deputy minister of public works in the provincial government in March of 1952 and submitted this offer of 50 per cent of the cost. I understand, and the minister can correct me if that is not the correct position, that the cost was to be $500,000 and that the federal government was prepared to put up half the cost. I think that is correct, is it not? Does the minister say that is not correct?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is Portugal Cove. That is not Bell island.

Mr. Higgins: Yes. I am correct in that point?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Higgins: May I make a plea for a proper terminal for Bell island?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Our engineer has been instructed to make a report on Bell island. We have not made our decision yet, and will not do so until we get that report.

Mr. Higgins: A new ferry is being purchased by a private operating company, and that new ferry will require proper terminal facilities. It is not for the ferry, by the way. This wharf will be used by all kinds of ships, and it will also be used by fishermen. It will not come within that particular category known as a ferry wharf. I can assure the minister of that. But the need is great. If the minister would do a great right and a little wrong, I think it would be fine for the people of Bell island. I will not bother the minister any more about small things if he will do that.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

350. Prince Edward Island, $1,800,000.

Mr. McLure: I want to get a little bit of information on this item. According to the details I notice that a certain amount is provided for Pinette wharf, or for the landing there. Last year a certain amount was spent there. I should like to know whether the work was done by contract or by the regular patronage system.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This work will be done by day labour and will cost $10,500.

Mr. McLure: Just by day labour?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Day labour, under the supervision of our engineer.

Mr. McLure: There is another item there about which I should like to get some information. I refer to Point Prim. I notice there is a revote there. What amount of repairs was done there last year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): $1,400.

Mr. McLure: But there was a much larger vote.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have given out a contract for $19,282.50 to the lowest bidder, Morrison and MacRae Limited.

Mr. McLure: Will this be done by day labour too?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. This is a contract publicly advertised, and the lowest tenderer was Morrison and MacRae for $19,582.50.

Mr. McLure: As to both those jobs last year some people were hard up for work, but unless they were dyed in the wool Grits they could not get a job at all.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They generally vote for the hon. member anyway.

Mr. McLure: I tried to get a couple of returned men on there—they were good citizens, I may say—but they could not get a look-in on either of those jobs. I do not like to see any of these departments going back to the old patronage system and doing away with the tender system.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is a contract on a firm price.

Mr. McLure: I know it is a contract.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have the same thing in my riding, and they do not want my friends to work on the job.

Mr. McLure: But you could control who might get to work on them, whereas I cannot. There is another item in which I am interested, namely Rustico harbour. A while ago I was asking about the survey that was made there last summer. I do not know whether or not it comes under the Department of Public Works, but in any event an extensive survey was made of the harbour. First of all the breakwater was rebuilt. That was done on a contract that is completed. Then there was the survey. I notice that this year there is a vote of $100,000. Last year the survey was made, and it has been extremely difficult to get any report on why they are making the survey. Is it to build a bridge across the harbour to connect the national park of Cavendish and Rustico with Brackley Beach? However, the survey ought to give us some idea as to why it has been done. I also notice that a survey was being made of tidal water. That took over a month. I have not been able to get details from any other department, and I thought perhaps I could get them from the Department of Public Works.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Is this a revote? No, this is a new item. I see that there is a survey and investigation being conducted, and here is a part of the report of our engineer.

The development of a definite proposal for the closure of Little harbour, Rustico, should be deferred until the report of the Nova Scotia technical college science service is received. A report from the department's engineer, H. E. Miller, has just come in, in which he recommends that provision for 1953-54, to include continuation of the investigation in actual harbour developments, be made in the amount of $170,000. As it appears unlikely that any large project would be completed during 1953-54 it is recommended that an item of $100,000 toward harbour improvements at Rustico be included in the estimates of 1953-54. That is following this survey and investigation, and it is recommended that we do this work. I think this is one of the dreams of the hon. gentleman. He has spoken many times in the house about this matter. Now he is near to his dream becoming a reality. He will see this work done.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

351. New Brunswick, $2,500,000.

Mr. Brooks: With regard to the accommodation for the ferry at Campbellton, the minister will remember that I have raised this matter several times in the past. At one time people thought a bridge might be constructed there. I believe they are still anxious to have a bridge constructed between Campbellton and Cross Point. I notice that this item provides for the accommodation for a ferry. Have they abandoned the idea of construction of a bridge from Campbellton to Cross Point in Quebec, or what is the situation?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As the hon. gentleman knows, many representations have been made to the department and the government to have this bridge at Cross Point-Campbellton. After the provincial elections last summer I had the pleasure of receiving in my office the present premier of New Brunswick, with his minister of finance and the local member at Campbellton. We had quite a conversation about this project, and I gave him all the information I could. I mentioned to them that if the province agreed to put up one-third on a project of $1,500,000, and the other province the same amount, and we would put in that amount, the project would be considered. We had a most agreeable conference, but no practical result has come out of it.

These interprovincial bridges are three-way operations. Sometimes it is difficult to get the three minds together to agree on what should be done, but I am still open for any representations, and I would be pleased to speak to my colleagues on any proposal the provinces might make to me. Pending that, we will have to have a ferry.

Mr. Brooks: I might say that when this was brought up in 1951 the ex-premier of New Brunswick, Mr. McNair, thought it was the federal government's responsibility. He quoted the British North America Act and some other authorities which were very convincing. At that time the Minister of Public Works said that he would get an opinion from the Department of Justice, which I do not think we have ever had brought down. At page 4473 of Hansard of 1951 the minister told me:

> But in any event I will make a thorough study of that legal opinion and will follow it when the occasion arises.

Has he a definite opinion of the authorities as to the construction of these bridges between different provinces? Subsection 10 of section 92 of the British North America Act reads as follows:

> (a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

Ex-premier McNair of New Brunswick contended that under that section these bridges were the responsibility of the federal government. Has the minister an opinion from the legal department of the federal government in this connection?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If you want to know my personal opinion, I recall all that correspondence with Premier McNair in which he said the federal government was responsible for every interprovincial bridge, and he quoted that section of the British North America Act. I looked at that myself, and I would perhaps think there was some weight in his opinion, but I would not want to express my own. I know that with respect to all these bridges in the past the provinces have agreed with the federal government to make their contribution to the cost of erection. Why New Brunswick would not do as Ontario and Quebec have done, I do not know. It takes time. You never agree at the first meeting, but we do get results after a certain time.

My problem in that district is that if you look over it you will find that the population is not too large, and when you think of the expenditure involved I do not know what the decision of the hon. gentleman would be. I have discussed this with the premiers, and when we get down to real cold facts they are not too hasty about their decisions any more than I am. Personally I should like to see a bridge there. I visited the place and have had the chance of making political speeches in that district, but I have not yet made up my mind to tell my colleagues we will spend the whole amount. A little co-operation from the provinces sometimes is appreciated, you know.

Mr. Robichaud: In connection with this bridge which is in the neighbouring county to mine, I may say I gladly extend an invitation to the Minister of Public Works to come and make as many political speeches as he wishes in the county of Restigouche, as long as he keeps clear of Gloucester.

I wish to add this to the remarks already made by the hon. member for Royal. Campbellton is quite a substantial town. It has quite a population. I will admit that on the Quebec side Cross Point is only a small village. But I think the minister should bear in mind that a considerable number of tourists cross from Campbellton to the Quebec side, not only in Canadian cars but United States tourists as well. This is the main thoroughfare, and I submit these factors should be considered by the minister—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): And by the provinces as well.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes; I quite admit they should be considered by the provinces. I know the province of New Brunswick is quite willing to co-operate. I cannot say anything for Quebec. This factor should be considered. While the village on the Quebec side is small, yet a considerable number of people use this highway, and they would use this bridge to go to Quebec and to come back from Quebec to New Brunswick.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Robichaud: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was about to draw three matters to the attention of the minister, because they affect the interests of my constituency of Gloucester. Before doing so, however, I should like to correct a faux pas I made this afternoon in limiting my invitation to the minister to visit the neighbouring county of Restigouche. Let me assure him that the doors of Gloucester county are always open to him. As a matter of fact my submission is that counties such as ours, with such great needs for federal public works, should be visited occasionally by the Minister of Public Works.

The first matter I would submit to the attention of the minister is one dealing with new undertakings. I know I am treading on dangerous ground when I refer to new undertakings. However, these are new works which I submit are of vital importance to three very important fishing communities in the northwestern section of my county of Gloucester.

I would ask the minister to consider seriously the possibility of constructing landing accommodation and providing shelters for our fishermen at Miscou Lighthouse or Miscou Point where there is an almost natural harbour provided at Lake Fry. I wish also to underline the necessity of providing similar accommodation for fishermen at Island River and Little Pokemouche.

Second, I would stress the importance of major repairs to three very important public wharves, those at Shippigan, Lameque and Lower Caraquet. I hope the minister will see fit to place something in the supplementary estimates to provide these wharves with their much-needed repairs.

Finally I would stress again the importance of dredging Shippigan gully. I would state that Shippigan gully is the most important entrance for the whole fishing fleet of Gloucester county, as it is the gateway between the gulf of St. Lawrence with its great fishing banks and Shippigan harbour, and thence to the Baie de Chaleur. I am informed there has been absolutely no dredging at Shippigan gully for the last five years. With the moving sands and strong currents at that point, it is high time something was done.

These were the three matters I wished to submit to the minister. Before taking my seat I would ask him to explain why the estimates for 1953-54 show a decrease of $445,000 for New Brunswick, but an increase of $785,000 for Nova Scotia. I know the minister has already intimated that he does not like comparisons. I do not wish to elaborate upon any such comparisons, and I am not at all jealous of what Nova Scotia has received. However, I would ask for an explanation as to why New Brunswick, with such great needs, should this year be faced with a decrease in the estimates, when at the same time there is an increase for Nova Scotia.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): One explanation is that we do not expect to spend there this year more than the amount we have placed in the estimates. The hon. member has said that I do not like comparisons. That is true. One looks at expenditures for his own province or his own constituency and compares the amount spent there with what is spent elsewhere. But it must be kept in mind that all these items in the estimates are for works that are needed; and we are trying to do the best we can to have them completed.

Last year the amount of $2,945,000 was set aside for New Brunswick. I recall that an hon. member from another province said to me, "Why is there so much for New Brunswick, and so little for us?" I feel these comparisons are not fair. We try to use our best judgment, in an effort to be fair to all.

The hon. member has extended an invitation to me to visit his province. He will realize, however, that I am a little shy about it, because when he spoke the other evening he almost appointed me to a court.

Mr. Robichaud: And I think the minister will land there before long.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

353. Ontario, $7,346,000.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I should like to repeat the questions I asked the minister earlier today. Anyone who tries to follow my remarks as they are set out in Hansard may reach the conclusion that they go from Genesis to The Revelation, because we begin one place and end somewhere else. I have been looking over the answers the minister gave regarding the International Harvester building at London, and I would renew my question by asking how much was actually paid for the property.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The sum of $155,000, by an award of the exchequer court.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Part of the city of London is in the constituency of Middlesex East. That city is interested in the port at Port Stanley, and the city of St. Thomas also has an interest there. I bring this matter to the attention of the committee partly because my roommate and colleague is unavoidably absent, attending a funeral.

I notice in the estimates that there is an item of $126,000 for the harbour at Port Stanley. Last May one of the government dredges sank in that harbour, and I have noticed in a return to the hon. member for Elgin that $44,200 was spent in an effort either to raise or move the dredge. Nothing has been accomplished.

I would point out also that there is an item of $160,000 for wharf construction at Kagawong. I suppose the minister and hon. members will wonder why I am jumping from Port Stanley to Kagawong, but I would like the minister to tell me a little more about this particular harbour. Is there a fishing fleet located there, and what commercial boats use the harbour?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The vote this year for Port Stanley is $126,400, of which $68,400 is to provide for yearly maintenance dredging formerly performed by dredge No. 117 which sank in 1952. There is no departmental dredge available to do this work. The balance is to provide construction of a steel pile wall.

The amount of $160,000 for Kagawong includes a revote of $75,000. This is required for the reconstruction of the wharf which is in a badly deteriorated condition due to storm, ice and wave action. The structure was built in 1920. It has been held together by means of temporary repairs carried out annually and has now reached a stage of disintegration where temporary repairs are no longer effective. The approach for a distance of 40 feet has become separated from the pile caps. This work has been strongly recommended by my officials. As I say, the wharf was built in 1920 and we do not think it should be allowed to disappear. The need is there and the officials recommend that there be an estimate in order that we proceed with the reconstruction.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Is there a fishing fleet anywhere along that coast?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The ships of the Dominion Transportation Company make regular calls at this port during the navigation season, which opens about the middle of April and closes about the 1st of December. Probably the hon. gentleman knows more about the place than I do. The wharf was constructed some time ago and there seems to be some traffic there by the Dominion Transportation Company. I rely upon the recommendation of the district engineer, who strongly recommended this work.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): The reason I am curious about this is that I made a visit there last summer and made some inquiries about this work. Back in the days when the wharf was built there used to be a fishing fleet in those waters, but apparently with our scientific developments they have fished out the waters and the industry has disappeared. I was told also that there was not a great deal of commercial shipping coming into the harbour.

It seems curious with all the ports we have along the great lakes and with the development of the St. Lawrence seaway in the offing, we should not be spending more on some of these great lakes ports which will probably be ports of call for transatlantic freighters.

There is another curious coincidence. This port happens to be located in the riding of the minister of external affairs, and there were some suggestions made to me that considerable pressure may have been brought on the department to improve that harbour. The minister did not say whether they are planning to raise the sunken dredge at Port Stanley.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The department engaged the best contractor in this line but he has not succeeded in refloating the dredge. The hon. member says these works are being done in certain ridings. He would be surprised to know how many times people say to me, "How come you are doing this work in that riding when it is not represented by someone who sits over here?" I get quite indifferent when I receive a report that seems to justify certain work being done. I am not always hasty in doing it, and in this case the hon. member will notice that there was an item last year and the work has not been started as yet. We take great pains to see if the need exists before we spend the money.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): A considerable number of the men who were employed on the sunken dredge are out of work. There was a possibility that another dredge would be sent up to take care of Port Burwell, Port Bruce and Port Stanley this summer. With this dredge being sunk in the harbour there is a chance the channel may silt up and create a menace to navigation. The men who were employed on the boat lost their personal belongings, and I believe a request was made to the department for compensation.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That would not be under my department; that would be a matter for treasury board, which operates under certain principles in connection with losses of personal property. I am told there were 15 people working on that dredge, and I am sorry if they have not found work. I hope that as time goes on they will not suffer too much from that.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Is there some way in which these labourers could recover their losses?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They present a sworn statement giving the details of their losses. In my department we generally make a recommendation to treasury board and abide by their decision. My officials tell me that this claim was passed on to treasury board and the answer was that in cases like this they should insure their effects. It was stated that if we started to pay in all cases of this kind we would not know where to stop. I cannot recall this particular case, but I am always sympathetic to people who lose things and I try to help them along.

Mr. Fleming: Does that include losing elections?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, that is general; I do not think about elections.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Is the minister a member of treasury board?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not believe I am called upon to—I could not answer that question.

Mr. Fleming: Don't you know?

Mr. Noseworthy: I notice that there is an item of $160,000 for repairs to the Burlington breakwaters and piers. Has the minister any information as to when those were built and how much money has been spent on Burlington harbour in the last few years? It seems to me that these piers are of quite recent construction.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In 1952-53 a section 60 feet in length was repaired under a contract with McNamara Construction Company Limited. The probable expenditure is $16,000, chargeable to harbours and rivers generally. The seawall was originally constructed in 1913-16, and was extended in 1926. It is 14 feet wide and 1,827 feet long. We have an amount here of $100,000—I hope this is not a revote—to provide for urgent repairs to the centre section of the breakwater to prevent further damage to the structure and town property.

Mr. Noseworthy: Has the minister any idea what use is made of these piers and breakwaters? I drive by them quite often and I have never seen anything tied up to them except seagulls.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The purpose is to provide protection for the lake embankment comprising the central portion of the town. In recent years this structure has also provided a harbour for the use of small craft.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works —

355. Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $178,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask one or two questions with respect to this item. To begin with, I should like to ask the minister what is the nature of the work to be done at Lac La Ronge. What is the purpose of it? What has been the expenditure to date on the project in question, and what is the anticipated expenditure?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required for improvements consisting mainly of the construction of a wharf with a landing head or "L" to provide urgently needed facilities for ever-increasing water-borne traffic. La Ronge is the centre of a rapidly expanding area of various activities consisting of mining, fishing and the tourist trade. It is the northern terminus of a road from Prince Albert. It is also a base for aircraft on both wheels and pontoons. All freight for more northerly points passes through La Ronge and is transshipped by boat, cat-train or plane, all of which would use the proposed landing facilities.

The proposed work consists of the construction of a rock-filled timber cribwork wharf 66 feet by 16 feet with a landing head or "L" 59 feet by 16 feet and a rock and gravel approach 55 feet long. The estimated cost is $10,000, and the work is to be done by day labour.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not one of those who make application for expenditures from time to time unless I believe those expenditures will be self-liquidating in their result. I think this is a very worthy piece of work on the part of the minister, and one that deserves further expansion. I believe the development that is taking place in northern Saskatchewan is unknown to the people of Canada generally, particularly in connection with uranium prospecting and development. Lac La Ronge serves that northern area and I should like to see extensive improvements made there, because the situation today is such that the available facilities are not capable of meeting the demands of uranium and other mining developments.

During recent years most of the developments in northern Saskatchewan have been advantageous not particularly to northern Saskatchewan but generally speaking to the city of Edmonton. We in northern Saskatchewan believe that, with the potential uranium area in that part of Canada, the area immediately adjacent to and north and west of Lac La Ronge, if anticipated prospects are eventually achieved that area will produce uranium to such an extent within a very few years that it will be the greatest uranium area in all the world. That is not exaggeration.

Recently when I was in New York, as were two or three of the ministers of the crown, in connection with the Town Hall meetings, I had the opportunity of meeting various New York industrialists. They realize something of the potentialities of northern Saskatchewan. When I ask for improvements which will assure a greater measure of air transportation there, I do not lose sight of the fact that in addition to facilities for air transportation, facilities should also be made available, in the interests of the country as a whole and the common aims of the NATO countries, to achieve the largest potential possible in mineral development, particularly uranium development. I think the federal government should give consideration not only to assistance such as this, which is infinitesimal compared with the possibilities of the area, but that there should be co-operation between the Department of Public Works and the defence department in providing landing facilities in the area, and also co-operation with the province of Saskatchewan in the building of roads so that ground transportation will be available.

As it is now, the tremendous impetus that would be given to the country as a whole through uranium, gold and other mineral production will be held back unless something in the nature of a national development policy is achieved through co-operation between the dominion and provincial governments, in which policy the Department of Public Works will play its part. This item of $10,000 is more or less a token item. It will achieve all that $10,000 can achieve in providing the necessary water facilities to permit the landing of aircraft, in particular. But I do impress upon the minister, and through him the government, the need of something being done. Now that uranium is required as it has never been required before, and with a uranium potential available unequalled anywhere in the world, co-operation should be achieved between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys so that the available resources may be exploited for the benefit of our country and the achievement of our defence purposes.

I do not want to speak at length, but I wish to place this matter before the minister. I know his personal interest in achieving a national policy for Canada under which each of us recognizes the need of full development in every other part of Canada. In recent months mineral resources have been discovered and development has been taking place in all provinces of Canada except one. This area of northern Saskatchewan, with its tremendous possibilities in the world of today, with the challenge of communism having been held back in large measure by the fact that we are becoming powerful in atomic weapons, is an area that deserves full support from the government.

An item like this, welcome as it is, is but a drop in the bucket compared with the expenditure that should be made there in order to assure that available resources will be developed. After all resources, however great, of minerals or uranium or other metals that go into the forging of the shield of freedom will be worthless should communism march, unless they have in fact been developed.

One thing that is holding back development in northern Saskatchewan is the lack of available transportation facilities on land. We have them in the air, although we have no airport facilities worthy of the name in the city of Prince Albert which is the northern outpost in our province. This vote is but the beginning, I hope, of further votes that will have to be made if the available resources, now estimated at $200 million a year in uranium production, are to be made available for our common defence.

Mr. Thomas: I wonder if the minister could give us some of the details in connection with this item under "wharves" for Ma-Me-O Beach? It should be easy to find because it is the only expenditure under this item in Alberta.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required for improvements to the wharf consisting of the construction of a cribwork pierhead and a rock causeway condition. The submerged ballast from the outer 330 feet is a serious hazard to navigation and must be removed. The ballast of the inner 220 feet remains above the water and will form the base for the causeway. The cribwork pierhead will provide landing facilities for the shallow draught boats now used on the lake. During last year approximately 250,000 pounds of fish with a value of $30,000 were taken commercially, being processed and shipped through Ma-Me-O Beach.

Mr. Thomas: That is not going to be quite as long as the original wharf. You intend taking off about 100 feet of ballast on the end and just running the wharf out about 240 feet?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I think it is 330 feet. I do not know enough about the details of the construction. What we are going to do is remove submerged rock ballast for a distance of 330 feet, placing same in a causeway 220 feet long from shore, and gravel-surfacing it. We shall also undertake construction of an open-faced cribwork pierhead 17 feet by 33 feet.

Mr. Thomas: I want to thank the minister for this because, as I pointed out last year and as the minister indicated in his report tonight, there has been a great deal of damage done to the boats on that lake as a result of these rocks. The condition has been dangerous for quite a number of years. I know the people of Ma-Me-O Beach, and those who have summer cottages there, will appreciate this expenditure.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

356. British Columbia and Yukon, $6,000,000.

Mr. MacInnis: There is a small item under this vote to provide a harbour at False creek. I notice that this is a revote, and I wonder if the minister would let me know if a site has been chosen for that fishing wharf?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Would the hon. member tell me the name of the place?

Mr. MacInnis: It is False creek. The minister may recall that it is in the constituency of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. I know he has had considerable correspondence with the minister about it. I suppose the hon. member is fence-mending in British Columbia at the moment, and is not here.

Mr. Knowles: Have those fellows any fences left?

Mr. Fulton: You are doing a certain amount of it yourself out there.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This revote of $100,000 is required toward the cost of establishing a harbour and storage space for fishing gear at False creek, Vancouver, for the large fleet of fishing boats operating from this place. The total estimated cost of the project is $725,000. There is a definite lack of mooring space and harbour facilities for the larger type of fishing vessel, and accommodation is required for a minimum of 200 such boats. Total value of boats and gear is approximately $3 million. The proposed work has been urged by the fishing vessel owners' association of B.C., Vancouver city council, Hon. Mr. Mayhew, the hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. Those are the people who have been pressing for this work.

The proposed work consists of dredging a mooring basin, constructing creosoted timber bulkhead, backfilling and bank excavation, constructing wharf, floats, gangways, three sheds for storage of fishing gear, toilet and washroom facilities, water and light fixtures and roadways. The estimated cost is as follows: Purchase of land, $48,000; dredging, $287,500; bulkhead, floats, sheds, backfilling roads, etc., $382,700; surveys and inspections, $6,800.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to know how much of that $750,000 has been expended to date?

[Mr. Thomas.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): According to my report this project has been delayed due to the difficulty in acquiring the necessary site and opposition from interests presently operating there. Steps are being taken to acquire the necessary land in the Kitsilano Indian reserve through the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. However, no agreement has yet been reached.

Mr. MacInnis: One more question. Can the minister say whether the work will be carried on there now? We have been asking for it for a long time and it has been agreed to. Can the minister say it will be carried on with as much dispatch as possible?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is the intention of the department to proceed with this work. We are trying to negotiate the purchase of this site. We are seriously interested in this project.

Mr. Green: On that point, are the plans ready yet?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The expenditure of money for dredging would not entail very much planning, and that amounts to $278,000. The site will cost $48,000, and that would not need very much planning. The bulkhead, floats, sheds, backfilling of roads and so on will cost $382,000, and I do not think the planning for that would take very long. I am told that if we had the site we could have the plans ready by summer.

Mr. Green: When is it expected that agreement will be reached with the Indian affairs branch?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My officials tell me we are negotiating and writing to that department, pressing for an agreement.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give us any assurance that work will be commenced this year, because there have been delays already for two or three years. There is a great need for this dock.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am fearful about giving assurances right and left, because tomorrow morning I will wake up and read in Hansard that I am committed to a lot of things. I did that once with the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island, and I have regretted it ever since. I think the hon. member should take my assurance that we are serious about this thing, and let it go at that.

Mr. Green: This business of being serious does not seem to get us very far in a great many cases. I should like to ask the minister about the vote for the Marpole wharf; that is a revote of $32,000. Why was the work not done during the last fiscal year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This revote is required to provide for the construction of the wharf, which is in a state of complete disrepair; and it is imperative—that is what we say—that steps be taken to renew it as soon as possible. Having said that, we are going to go ahead with this. Contract plans were prepared, but as they embraced a larger area than the original wharf and overran the boundaries of foreshore property allocated to the department, it has been necessary to negotiate with persons having rights on the adjoining foreshore areas before reconstruction of the wharf could proceed. It is anticipated that these legal matters will be settled in the near future, with public tenders being called so work can be undertaken early in 1953-54.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us under what department there will be a vote to pay for the committee which has been set up to study the problem of widening the harbour entrance at Vancouver and removing Ripple rock? The Minister of Public Works apparently has been able to wash his hands of Ripple rock.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): After spending a million on the project.

Mr. Adamson: You surely cannot wash your hands on Ripple rock. It would be safer if you could.

Mr. Green: On February 25 an announcement was made in the house by the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that a committee had been set up to study these two problems. In the estimates of the Minister of Public Works I see no vote for the work of that committee. In what way will that study be financed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The main estimates had been tabled before the decision had been taken. That explains why the hon. member does not see the item in the main estimates. There will probably be an item in the supplementary estimates. The only thing I can tell the hon. gentleman is that it will not come under my department.

Mr. Green: Neither the widening of the harbour entrance nor the removal of Ripple rock?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot have an estimate for the widening of the harbour before I get the report. Parliament would refuse to give me that money. I will base that estimate on the report of this committee. I have an item in the supplementary estimates for the dredging of the first narrows; but for the widening I have to wait until I get a report from this committee. I understand that national research is heading this committee composed of personnel from the national harbours board, Department of Transport, Department of Public Works and national research council.

Mr. Green: Any work actually done in widening the harbour entrance or on Ripple rock will be financed through the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, no. I did finance Ripple rock for quite a while, and I am not going to finance it any more.

Mr. Green: The minister did not get very far with it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. I got so far that I spent a million; and if I had listened to members of the opposition I would have spent many more millions, but I stopped. I had to spend a day on that Ripple rock matter to convince the members that I could not continue spending the public's money on a rock that was immovable. A study is being made. They are taking the best men they have, even out of the universities, to study this problem. Who will undertake the work, the government has not decided yet. We are waiting for this report to see what should be done. Then as time goes on you will see an item in the estimates. Next year I will probably have something to do with that.

Mr. Green: Then the minister may have Ripple rock back on his doorstep after all?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I can help it, I am not going to touch it. I can tell the hon. member that. Let someone else handle that rock for once.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have been trying to ask a question for half an hour. What amounts are included in this vote for the dredging of the Arrow lakes and clearing the Duncan river? I have one more question to ask while I am on my feet.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sorry but I must tell the hon. gentleman that I have not the book here. Any dredging on the Arrow lakes in British Columbia would be under the dredging vote. This is not the dredging vote which is under discussion here. The hon. member can look at page 425 and he will see exactly where we are intending to spend all this money in British Columbia. Quite a large list is given.

Mr. Herridge: I heard the minister mention certain expenditures for dredging in several projects when he was answering other members.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, yes. That was for False creek. That was part of the project of $725,000 I just mentioned. But if the hon. member is speaking of dredging, it would come under the dredging vote. I could give all the information tomorrow, but we passed that item long ago. I am ready to give the information tomorrow, if the hon. member does not want to delay my estimates.

Mr. Herridge: That would be satisfactory to me. Just while I am on my feet, although I missed the item, I should like to say that some two or three years ago a vote was passed for a portable suction dredge for British Columbia. They have been using a clamshell dredge for fifty years and they have got by during those years, but it is quite insufficient under present conditions. Can the minister tell us what progress is being made in the building of the suction dredge?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This year we have in the dredging estimates a vote of $300,000 for a suction dredge which could be used there, I suppose. We have an estimate that was passed this afternoon, telling us to go ahead with that dredge.

Mr. Herridge: Does the minister expect to be building that dredge soon?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am going to press them as much as I can to go ahead with it, but that is about where my power stops. When I have given instructions and I can find companies that will take the contract, we will go ahead. I would not be discouraged if I were the hon. member.

Mr. Herridge: I might just mention the fact that this suction dredge is badly needed. The present clamshell dredge is quite insufficient for opening the channel, in view of the large industrial development coming on the Arrow lakes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I agree with the hon. member. I will impress that fact on my officials.

Mr. Graydon: The minister had better put it in the "imperative" class.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I shall not go back to dredging, although there is a certain amount of dredging that I and my constituents would like to see done on Shuswap lake and the Thompson river. In connection with this present vote, No. 356, I want to speak on another matter which is also of concern to the hon. member for Kootenay West, although the project itself lies in my constituency at the moment. It has to do with the wharf at Arrowhead for which there is to be appropriated the sum of $57,000 this year.

The history of that wharf, as the minister will appreciate, has been one of disappointment and delay to the people of the district. The wharf needs to be relocated at a new site because the present site is constantly silted up by the mud brought down by the Columbia river. A new site, I understand, has been surveyed and approved; but there has been difficulty and delay because of the problem of getting a right of way for a road out to the new site. When I ask the authorities—the local board of trade—they tell me the minister says the difficulty is that they have not been able to get a right of way over the C.P.R. tracks. When I take the matter up with the Canadian Pacific Railway they tell me it is because the provincial department of public works is not doing something. When I go to the provincial department of public works, they tell me that the federal Department of Public Works has not given them the green light. When I go to the federal Department of Public Works they refer me back to the C.P.R.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the place to go.

An hon. Member: The run-around.

Mr. Fulton: My most recent information is that the problem of acquiring the right of way over the C.P.R. tracks has now been satisfactorily dealt with by the provincial department of public works, who are prepared to pay for the road leading to the new wharf site. That is my most recent information. It is cleared, so far as I know, with the provincial department and the C.P.R. Will the minister now tell me, please, where his department stands in the matter?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I can read what I have here.

Mr. Graydon: Do not drag in the treasury board on this one.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, no.

Mr. Adamson: It is like a game of Russian roulette.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): A suitable location has been found about half a mile east of the C.P.R. wharf. It will be necessary to acquire an easement and a foreshore for this site from the Arton Lumber Company Limited, who own the upland property and have the foreshore lease.

Later on in this report which they show me I see the action taken in 1952-53 was: Preparation of plans and specifications was delayed pending acquisition of a suitable site; however, it is anticipated that work will be advertised and contract let so that work may be undertaken in the fall of 1954 when water levels are low.

Now, to one who knows how to read between the lines this is not very definite, even in my own mind. I will have to see if we have reached agreement with this Arton Lumber Company Limited, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the provincial government. This is a pretty good report but I could give it a different interpretation. I could take it that plans are being prepared and they are telling me that they are going ahead with tenders and will start work in the late fall. I could say that, yes; but when I am back here next spring, if the work has not been done the hon. gentleman will say: "Why did you say you would go ahead?" I do not see in this report that we have cleared the matter with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the company. Moreover, I am told that it takes a long time when we deal with these companies and governments.

Mr. Adamson: A five-year plan.

Mr. Fulton: They tell me the same thing applies when people deal with the minister's department; but let us not try to assess the blame within too narrow limits. Do I understand the minister to say that the plan is not to start construction until 1954? I had hoped that it would read 1953.

Mr. Fleming: After the snow flies.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am not going to change what is written here, and I see right before me: "It is anticipated that work will be advertised and contract let so that work may be undertaken in the fall of 1954 when water levels are low." That may mean 1953, and then we would be satisfied.

Mr. Fulton: One other thing. Have the minister's officials any up to the minute information on the status of the negotiations with regard to the right of way?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Their difficulty is that they are negotiating for this site but they have not as yet reached agreement. I cannot ask for any more than that. If they are trying to get this site, and trying to do the best they can, then I cannot ask for more.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate that, and I am not so concerned with the site because I believe that difficulty will be fairly easily resolved. I am concerned with the right of way leading to the site.

I hope that the minister will take what I say at face value. Members of the opposition sometimes are able to help even government departments clear up problems. What I want to do is help the minister and his department clear up this problem. I happen to know the C.P.R. officials, and I know the officials of the department of public works in the province. I could go to them and perhaps help the minister's department if he will let me know what the situation is.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, do not go to the province. I think they have built the road leading to the site, so that part has been settled. As to the site itself, I am told that the difficulty will be to obtain from the Canadian Pacific Railway a right of way. That matter has not been agreed. The province, as I say, has constructed or is constructing the roadway leading to that site.

Mr. Fulton: May I make one further suggestion, and it is that the minister ask his officials, and he should consider this himself, to relax the requirements for a right of way. I believe one of the difficulties is that the Canadian Pacific Railway is reluctant to part with the fee of the soil, if I may use a technical expression, but they are willing to give an easement for a specified number of years. I understand that the department normally requires the absolute right or absolute guarantee of a perpetual right of way. The C.P.R. is unwilling to give such a perpetual right. However, we are after all dealing in good faith; and if the minister received word from the Canadian Pacific Railway that they are willing to give an easement for 99 years, or a lease, with the option of renewal, although it might not meet the technical requirements it might meet the requirements of common sense and we could proceed on that basis.

Would the minister then have his officials review the situation with respect to relaxing one or two of the technical aspects in order to get on with this project? To my knowledge it has now been delayed four years because of this run-around.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I will do my best; but if there is a legal question and if I am barred by my own statute from dealing with it in the way suggested—well, I could not do very much. However, if there is no bar against an easement for a time period then I will see if we can get the agreement.

Mr. Herridge: I want to support what the hon. member for Kamloops has said. This wharf is at the head of the Arrow lakes, and for five or six years now a steamer of about 900 tons has had to land on the beach for a large part of the year because of the ice and the condition of the old wharf. I do hope every effort will be made to start on the wharf early in 1954.

I can understand why the year is given as 1954. It is because the high water has to come down; they cannot start until the water is at low level. The present situation is a great inconvenience to the boats that now use those lakes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am convinced.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Applewhaite: No. If we may get out of the interior and to the coast for a few minutes I would like to say that the particular section of the coast of British Columbia which runs from the north end of Vancouver island to the Alaskan boundary is the part of British Columbia for which I am the mouthpiece down here. As the minister knows, it is a section of the country where a large number of small communities are entirely dependent on water transportation for their economic livelihood. I wish to bring one or two of them to his attention, and I propose to deal with them together to save the minister's valuable time.

Even though I know how anxious he is to see this item passed, I am going to take a minute to say on the floor of this house how much I and the other residents of the coast of British Columbia feel indebted to his officers in the New Westminster office for the thorough, complete, and very sympathetic interest and knowledge they have of the problems we have in those small communities.

In the particulars under this item on page 425 there is a reference to harbour improvements at Bella Coola. I would like to urge upon the minister the fact that Bella Coola is one of those communities entirely isolated by every other form of transportation except steamship. There is no road, there is no railway, and there is no commercial air line. This item, which to a very large extent is a revote, has been in the estimates for more than one year, and I would urge upon the minister that he show to the people of Bella Coola that kindness of heart for which he is so famed and proceed to have this small harbour job done this year. The cost is only $49,000.

An hon. Member: That is a lot of money.

Mr. Applewhaite: I also wish to express to the minister the appreciation of the people concerned for the dredging votes for Delkatla slough at Masset on the north end of the Queen Charlotte islands and for Inverness passage near Prince Rupert, for which tenders have been called and I understand it is the department's intention to let those contracts this year.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that in both these cases dredging is required because there is now not sufficient water there to enable the large halibut packers and vessels of that type to come in, unload or lie during low tide. Therefore I hope the minister will take one further step, after providing funds, and make certain that the work is done.

That leads me to one other point I wish to make in connection with dredging. The department has decided this year to undertake two major dredging projects on the north coast. That means it will have dredging equipment in that area, either of its own or under contract. It has taken a long time to get dredging equipment in there, and if it gets away it will take a long time to bring it back, because they will not bring in dredging equipment to do a little $5,000 or $10,000 job. Therefore I urge that certain small dredging requirements be undertaken at the present time. Two I have in mind are not included in the present estimates. The amount involved would be small, and I think there would be time to include them in the supplementary estimates.

At this time I am not asking for a major expenditure. I would urge, however, the dredging of Skidegate channel, between the north and south islands of the Queen Charlotte islands group. That is the only way one can get to the mainland of British Columbia from the west coast of the Queen Charlotte islands, without going around the north or south end or, in other words, without a voyage of about 180 additional miles.

It is a big undertaking to make a real, deep channel through there; but that is not what we are asking. We are asking only for a channel which would enable ships of the size of small packers and fishing vessels to go through the channel. I am not asking even that it be dredged so they could go through at low tide, only that they may be able to go through at half tide to high tide, with reasonable safety.

This is not a little, local proposition asked for only by the residents of a small community. It has attracted the attention of the Prince Rupert fishermen's co-operative association, which represents all the fishermen on the north coast, and the suggestion has been heartily endorsed by them. It has also attracted the attention of the fisheries association of British Columbia.

I should like to read to the minister part of a letter written to me by that association. It is dated February 14 of this year, and says:

> I have been directed by the fisheries association of British Columbia to write you in connection with Skidegate narrows and the possibility of dredging this channel. For many years this matter has been discussed in the fishing industry generally, and we believe, in the department of defence, but to date nothing conclusive has developed.

When Mr. Sinclair, Minister of Fisheries, was in Vancouver we brought this request to his attention and he suggested that we communicate with you as you were very familiar with the district and would be appreciative of our problem.

The fisheries association suggests that immediate consideration be given to the dredging of Skidegate narrows. During last year's heavy run of pinks on the west coast of the Queen Charlotte islands, there were many delays in the dispatching of the fish to the canneries on the mainland. There were delays in the movement of boats north and south on account of weather, and their inability to navigate through the channel. We believe that such a program would add materially to the protection of fishermen, the efficiency of fishing in this area, and assure the processors of receiving fish in a better condition, which is foremost in our minds.

Then there is the matter of the use of such a channel for defence purposes, crash boats, and other services required in the country's defence.

We recommend, therefore, that a survey be carried out as soon as possible as we feel that the dredging of the channel does not present too great an engineering problem, and believe that the cost of such a project would not be prohibitive.

We would like you to consider this letter as a formal request to initiate the interest of all those concerned. All fishing organizations will support us in this project.

I believe it is the opinion of some officials in the Department of Public Works that this project involves greater expense and a bigger undertaking than they would feel justified in promising at this time. I suggest to them, with all deference, that the people who are actually making their living in the fishing industry on that coast know that channel very well. They know what they want. They know they are not asking for a St. Lawrence seaway; they are asking for the removal of certain obstructions. They are asking for the clearing of brush from points on shore so that one can see from point to point. They are asking for an expenditure which I suggest with respect would be well under $50,000; and $50,000 is a pretty small sum to ask when compared with the value of the fisheries production on the Pacific coast.

Then, on the subject of dredging equipment, I would refer to Digby island, and the little community of Dodge Cove. This is a community of some 60 or less fishing families who make their homes there the year round. It is the site of a small saw mill and a reasonably good-sized privately-owned boat-building establishment. They have a harbour which has a sand bottom, and which should be dredged to a depth of approximately six to eight feet. This would not be necessary over a large area, but only sufficient to afford berthing space for ships to lie in there. These would be fishing boats, and not large ones at that. They could lie in there over low tide without their keels touching bottom and, with the water going out, the ships falling over on their sides.

The approach to the harbour is only a small item. May I emphasize to the minister that if we had no dredging equipment in the district perhaps I would not be justified in asking him to dredge Dodge cove, or to go to the expense of bringing in dredging equipment from the south to do that work. However, with dredging equipment in the area, as there will be this year, it is in the interests of economy and of the residents of the area, as well as the interests of the fishing industry as a whole, that these small dredging jobs be done now, while they can be done cheaply and quickly.

Mr. Adamson: How much will that cost?

Mr. Applewhaite: About $15,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Every remark made by the hon. member will be taken into consideration. It is worthy of note that these requests come from every part of the house, not only from one side.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—

357. Repairs and unkeep for the maintenance of services, including reconstruction and replacements, and to authorize commitments against future years in the total amount of $420,000, no new works to be undertaken, $3,535,000.

Mr. McLure: I notice in this item there is the sum of $200,000 for Prince Edward Island, and a commitment authority for $35,000. Where is that work being done, or going to be done? When will the work commence? Will it be done by tender or otherwise? What other places are being considered in the matter of repairs and improvements, payment for which would be out of the balance amounting to $165,000? A petition was sent to the department some time ago by the fishermen of North Rustico harbour. It was signed by all the boat owners at that point, asking for the building of a protective harbour such as was built at Harris bay or Rustico bay last summer.

Those are questions to which I hope the minister will give answers, because it is important to the fishermen of Prince Edward Island and those interested in harbour improvements that action be taken.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This item, as it has been repeated year after year, is a general vote for maintenance and repairs of our piers, wharves, breakwaters and harbour facilities. Details are not known in advance. If something happens to a pier or a wharf in Prince Edward Island, and repairs are urgently needed, it is taken out of this vote. If the hon. member will look at page 427 he will find set out the amounts we are allowed to spend in each province for the upkeep of our harbour works. In the case of Prince Edward Island it is $200,000, plus commitment authority of $35,000. I cannot state in advance exactly where these amounts will be spent. The engineers report on the state of these different works. That is about the best explanation I can give. When the engineers tour the provinces inspecting these works they make out their reports as to needed repairs and the amount required.

Mr. McLure: Your engineer, Mr. Miller, made a recommendation in connection with this boat harbour protection, and I want to know if anything is to be done this year to protect these boats in time of storm.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If he made a recommendation and there is a sufficient amount available we will certainly follow his recommendation. What is the name of the place?

Mr. McLure: North Rustico, the greatest fishing village in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I know that, because every year the hon. member tells me about it. If it is recommended by the engineer we will repair it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am glad to know that the minister follows the recommendations of his engineers, because I understand that in the case of Newfoundland there have been a great many recommendations by the district engineer, particularly in the riding of St. John's West. I wonder if the minister has those recommendations, because I have a copy here.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I gave the hon. member a copy.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): You did not.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member asked me for a copy of the recommendations and I gave it to him. There is no secret about these things.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have an accompanying letter from one of your engineers.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do you think he would write the letter without my authority?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister may have been absent at the time.

An hon. Member: Let us have the letter.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not intend to read the letter. I am asking the minister if he has the list there.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. member got it from someone other than myself, how could I have it?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I want to know if the items mentioned in this letter will be carried out this year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not even know what the items are. Is that my letter or the letter of somebody else?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It is from Mr. Anderson, your assistant chief engineer.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not blame any hon. member asking the engineer to give him a list of the works he has recommended to the department, but I do not know whether this particular list has been approved.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): That is what I want to know, whether this list has been approved.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If you got the list before I did, it would not be approved.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not know. I may have spoken to the minister about this matter and he may have directed me to write to the engineer. I did not think I was getting anything exceptional, because I have done this in previous years. I am not sure that it does much good, because the other members from Newfoundland seem to have much more influence with the minister than I.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Don't start on that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have all the figures, and I can quote them to the minister.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That won't advance things.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Am I going to be penalized—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I think the hon. member is wrong to argue by comparisons. If he has a good case he should advance it, and not rely on the other fellow's case.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I understand that the minister is tired as he has had a pretty stiff time.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, no.

Mr. Dickey: The hon. member is tired.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member should keep to his cost-plus contracts?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It is no pleasure to get up here in this House of Commons and have to plead—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member seems to enjoy it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not enjoy it any more than the minister enjoys making promises which are not carried out.

Mr. Dickey: Shame.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have here—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. member to tell me when I made him a promise that I did not keep. Will he give me the place and the amount?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Just good intentions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is more than some people have.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Here is the list, and I would like to know whether these items are included in the vote we are dealing with now. That was all I wanted to know when I first rose but I have been subjected to so many interruptions—

Mr. McIlraith: Why not ask?

Mr. Dickey: Oh, oh.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member for Halifax is used to dealing in millions and billions, while I am dealing with only a few thousand dollars. I wish he would keep from interrupting. The first item is Bay Bulls and the next is Branch. I have been to both these places and I know the conditions that exist, especially at Branch. This is a fishing village, and a harbour has been made by means of a breakwater on both sides of the river where it runs into the sea. But the harbour fills up with silt. If the minister is listening I would like to tell him about this little fishing village where the fishermen have to work very hard to get their boats over the gravel. I trust it will be possible for him to help out in maintaining that breakwater so that it does not fill up so easily. Some dredging is required, and the wooden bridge is in a dilapidated condition and should be repaired.

A vote was recommended for Calvert, and one for Long Harbour and one for Mobile. Then there was a small recommendation for Petty Harbour, another place which I know quite well. Work has been going on there and the men are carrying out their tasks very conscientiously. Then there is Point La Haye and Trepassey, the latter the one I mentioned this afternoon. Is the minister in position to say whether those will be recommended?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): While the hon. member was giving me that list I was just thinking that there are 262 ridings and people come to me every day and ask me to do this and that. I ask for reports from the engineers or the architects in connection with these different works. I have a certain amount of money voted by parliament, and we try to use our judgment in expending that money. It might be interesting to stand up and make a ten or fifteen-minute speech on each vote, but I cannot give a final answer when I am trying to get my estimates through. If the hon. member would come to my office and confer with my deputy and the officials who know the details he would get a much better answer than I can give, even with all the good intentions and good will that I have.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There is just one observation I would like to make. The hon. members for Bonavista-Twillingate and Trinity-Conception do not have to get up here. There were millions spent in 1951-52 in their ridings, and I do not think I am exceeding my rights when I ask—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If the hon. member's case is not a good one he will not get anything.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not think I should be called down by the minister for having done that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am not calling you down. Do not get mad over anything like that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am not mad.

The Chairman: Order. Hon. members should address themselves to the chair. I have noted several occasions during this evening when hon. members have not referred to other hon. members in the proper manner. I have heard a great many remarks made in the second person, such as "you know this" and "you assured me". It should be "the hon. member assured me". I should like hon. members taking part in the debate between now and the adjournment, and of course at all times, to keep these remarks in mind.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, I hope that in the heat of the debate I did not fall very far away from the strict letter of the law in committee.

Mr. Fleming: It was the minister.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am trying to hew to the line as closely as possible. I should like to ask the minister if he is in a position now to say that these matters have been recommended. He has read me a lecture about what I should not do. He has said that if he had representations from all 262 members across the country he would never get through his work, but he does not have them. Hon. members of the Liberal party do not come here and make any claims. They do not have to. Looking around the house in the last three days we have been discussing the estimates of his department, he should be flattered by the attention which members of the opposition are giving to his estimates. His own members are not interested in them at all. Of course there is a reason for that. They do not have to come here.

The last speech we heard by an hon. member from British Columbia was held up to us as an example of demands from all parts of the house and the country; but that speech stands out alone and solitary. We have to come here. We have to plead with the minister. I did it this afternoon and I am doing it now. I have asked him whether or not these votes have been recommended. He should be in a position to tell me whether or not they are.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not even seen that list. It has not been submitted to me. My deputy says he has not seen it. You must know a lot about my department to have a list of recommendations which should be made to the minister first. Don't you think so? How can I give you an answer?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am supposed to be the representative from this district, and I am making—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Don't you think I represent something, too?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Pardon?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Don't you think I represent the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Fleming: Address the chair.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I apologize, Mr. Chairman. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I am not trying to lecture him. There are many members on the other side of the house who have not made a single speech, but if you look at the estimates you will see that their cases have been discussed. When they had a good case they got something in the estimates. What I do not like is when the hon. member tries to make comparisons with other ridings. If you have a good case—and I am sincere in saying this—you are bound to succeed if I can get the money voted. I have tried to do that for the last eleven years. Just because you happened to come into the house only a few years ago, don't tell me that I am not being fair. I think you are unfair in saying that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have told you that for four years.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps the hon. gentleman has been unfair for four years and that is why he is not having any success.

Mr. Higgins: Is there anything for the poor orphans in St. John's East? I am not asking about any particular amount. Is there anything?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will explain how we proceed under this vote. The resident engineer in Newfoundland is Mr. Millar. He is an experienced engineer. He was sent to that province to establish the district. After his tours around the province he sends in reports on the state of our works there and makes recommendations for repairs or alterations to those works. He may recommend them to his chief engineer, who will make a recommendation to the minister. When I receive these recommendations they are compared with the requests from all other provinces and we take into account the amount that is allotted to the province and the amount that is appropriated.

Suppose the engineer recommends far more than the amount that has been voted by parliament? What happens? We have to use our judgment as to the works which are to be done. Here is where I differ with the hon. member for St. John's West. If on the report of the district engineer and the chief engineer we think that work on one project is more needed or more urgent than on another project, then the first project will receive priority. I have tried to follow that practice all through the years.

Mr. Higgins: You really have a revolving fund.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is voted every year. We have an amount every year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the minister in a position to say whether or not the names I have read out have been recommended? They have been recommended by the district engineer.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What good will it do you if it is recommended and I do not approve it?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has it been recommended by you?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will make the decision when it comes to the spending of the money. Somebody will make a recommendation to the minister. They may recommend anything. You have been recommending things to me, and sometimes you do not succeed. There has to be a decision. I look over the list in my office with my officials. That is where we will apportion the amount of money to the works that are most needed or urgent. The hon. gentleman may have a list which will have top priority. I do not know. It has not come before me yet.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But I have talked like this for four or five years now—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are still a young man.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): —and I have heard the minister give the same reply. I am familiar with the system under which he operates. I am familiar with what he has said about how these things come to be recommended and how he has to make a final decision. I know that. But has he made a final decision with regard to this case yet?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not seen the list. How can I tell the hon. member I have made a final decision?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister seems to blame me for having obtained the list. I hope nothing will be done to the officials. I have the highest regard for them, especially for Mr. Millar. I think Mr. Millar is doing a great job in Newfoundland, and I have always got along well with him. I must say that the minister's officials are very interested in the work they have to do down there. However, I do not think I can be blamed for obtaining this list. I did it quite innocently, and I hope no one will suffer as a result of my receiving it.

Item agreed to.

Generally—

358. Fraser river—50 per cent of the cost of investigations to be carried out by the "dominion provincial board, Fraser river basin", $137,500.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, we all appreciate—and I say this with the best of intentions—that this may be the minister's valedictory, and we are all anxious to give him the chance to make it a good one. I am sure the minister will join with us in the effort we are making to give him the opportunity of reviewing his estimates to the fullest possible extent on this occasion.

The minister will appreciate that this is an item in which I and other members from British Columbia on all sides have taken a very active interest. It is an item for the expenses of the board which is carrying out a survey of the whole Fraser river system with a view to bringing in a program of flood control, irrigation and power development. The board, which goes under the difficult name of the dominion-provincial board, Fraser river basin, is a joint dominion-provincial board which was set up following the disastrous floods of the Fraser river in 1948.

We are sometimes conscious, Mr. Chairman, of a feeling that this is where we came in before, and perhaps never more so than in the department of the Minister of Public Works, who always gives us disarming replies which we accept with great hope. But then we find we have to come back next year and ask the same question all over again.

Mr. Knowles: And get the same reply.

Mr. Fulton: And get the same reply. I know the minister's intentions are good. I know the minister appreciates that this is a most important project. I know he will understand that I appreciate that the very importance and magnitude of the task mean that progress may not always be what we would hope for, but I do hope that this year the minister can say more than that the studies are continuing. I would ask him whether he is in a position to let us know what concrete recommendations the board has made and what program is being developed for carrying out their recommendations. I believe there is no more potentially important project in British Columbia than the development of the advantages which could follow from the co-ordination of a program of flood control, irrigation and power development in the whole Fraser river system. I would appreciate it if the minister, in what may be his last opportunity, would give us a comprehensive report of the work of this board.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that this is really an important question. The hon. member knows how this board was set up by agreement with British Columbia. I have quite a long exposé of the whole situation, and I have a list of the members representing the federal government and the provincial government. I received, I think about a year ago, an interim report from this board, and I am told that I have received no other report. I think I did show that report or give a résumé of it to the members, but it was in such general terms that we could not base any immediate works upon it. This is a survey and study of the whole Fraser river basin. The people on that board seem to have quite a reputation. They are outstanding citizens and engineers.

This is the information I have been given. This amount of $137,500 is required to pay the federal government's share of the cost of investigations proposed to be carried out during 1953-54 by the dominion-provincial board, Fraser river basin. The board was established by authority of order in council P.C. 247/288 dated January 22, 1949, for the purpose of conducting an investigation to determine the improvements which might be undertaken to develop the water resources of the Fraser valley, British Columbia, in the interest of fish and wildlife, water power, flood control, irrigation, reclamation of wet lands and other beneficial purposes. It is for that reason that there are representatives of these different departments on that board. The board consists of officials of the provincial government of British Columbia and the government of Canada. The province of British Columbia and the government of Canada will share the cost of the said survey and report equally.

The amount asked for during 1953-54 is $137,500. This amount is to cover the federal government's share, 50 per cent, of the cost of the following work proposed to be carried on in 1953-54: Aerial photography and bathymetric survey, $75,000; Department of Resources and Development, gauging stations and metering, $13,200; Department of Fisheries, Canada, gauging stations, $4,250; department of lands and forests, water rights branch, flood control, power and sedimentation investigation, $74,500. The board will spend $34,000 for damsite exploration; $22,500 for pollution investigation; $3,500 for land use mapping; $31,500 for administration, salaries and operation. The total amount is $258,450. The federal government's share is $129,225. The amount necessary for the department to meet monthly payments pending receipt of the province's share of the cost is $8,275. To the best of my ability I have given an outline of the way this money is to be spent, giving the details of the work that is to be done and the amount stated.

As to the progress they are making, as the hon. member says it is a long-winded investigation and I suppose when they have all their data gathered together they will make a final and comprehensive report which will be the basis of the works that may be undertaken by the federal government in conjunction with the provincial government. I realize that it is most important to that province that we continue these surveys and research.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the full extent of the analysis which the minister has given of the money that is being spent under this item. I am going to resist the temptation, Mr. Chairman, I assure you and the minister, to make any sort of a speech on this project, although I can assure the minister it is probably one the importance of which is not readily apparent to him or to the members of the house. This Fraser river system takes in the larger part of the dry belt area of the province. It may be news to the minister, but I want to impress upon him that the Fraser river system takes in far more than what is known as the constituency of Fraser Valley. Its tributaries flow through my own riding, and the problems of irrigation, power development and flood control are of immense importance to us there.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

I am sure the minister remembers the number of times I have seen him in his office or have come over to sit beside him in the house to discuss this matter and express the view that, although we appreciate the painstaking and methodical care that must be shown in developing a program to deal with this problem, it does concern us that there is not more positive progress evident. With the greatest respect, I think it is fair to suggest to the minister that the outline he has given us tonight is really nothing more than an outline of expenditures to cover further studies. It does not do very much to reassure us that there is that sense of urgency in developing this work which we sought to impress upon him and have him in turn, as the responsible minister in this government, impart to and impress upon his officials on that board who are undertaking this work.

I do not want to labour any particular point. We understand that this may be the last opportunity we will have to discuss this matter with the minister because other activities may absorb his attention. May I suggest to him that if he does nothing else but get this work going, and get some positive results, he will have erected for himself a lasting monument to his career as Minister of Public Works. Not in jest but with the greatest good will in the world and appreciation of the minister's interest in the whole of Canada, which embraces of course the interests of the province of British Columbia, I do ask him to give this more than just a passing interest. I ask him to devote some time and some effort, if I may use that word, toward impressing upon all the officials in charge of this work the importance of producing a concrete plan and program of development upon which some initial steps may be taken before the close of this fiscal year which we are discussing now. If he does that, and if he takes even one positive step toward construction, the minister may be satisfied that his name will go down in the annals of British Columbia as one of its greatest benefactors.

Item agreed to.

Generally—

359. Protection works generally, $1,000,000.

Mr. Knowles: I note in the details, over on page 428, that this item includes $25,000 labelled as "contributions." To whom are those contributions made?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sorry, but I was looking up my book and did not catch the question.

Mr. Knowles: I said that this item 359, "Protection works generally, $1 million", according to the details on page 428, includes an amount of $25,000 listed as "contributions". To whom are these contributions made?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I can give instances, I think, in certain provinces where the province has some interest in erosion and the protection of banks, where we did pay up to 50 per cent. I think I have one case on the Fraser river. We have certain cases. I am thinking of a case now in British Columbia, at Chilliwack, where we put up $6,000, the municipality put up $6,000 and the province put up $6,000. This would be under those contributions. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman followed me. Where there is bank erosion, partly occasioned by navigation but in which the province and the municipality were interested, we each put up one-third of the cost. That is what we call here a contribution.

Mr. Knowles: Arising out of this item, there is one other comment I should like to make. It seems to me that in the minister's estimates there are a number of items, including this one, which provide a leeway; in fact, I would call it a rather comfortable leeway. Earlier today we passed item 336 which was for unforeseen improvements, amounting to $1,200,000. That was after we had passed items for specific amounts under the architectural branch. Now, after having passed specific votes under the engineering branch, we come to this item of "Protection works generally", and it is for $1 million. We have already had a number of items covering protection works under the engineering branch. Then when we move on to item 360, we find it is for—

> Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $10,000 to be expended upon any one work.

The total amount there is $590,000. Later we come to item 362 which is—

> To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $1,000 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works.

That item is for $400,000. Then the last one, No. 363, seems to me to be in the same category. It is for another $400,000, and it reads:

> To provide for balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1953-54.

It seems to me that these items are not quite in keeping with the precise and specific nature of the department's items generally. For the most part they specify what they are for. They are broken down as to types of work and as to provinces. But here we have five different items that seem to be for the purpose of making up for underestimates or what have you. When you add those five amounts together they come to $3,590,000. Am I not right in suggesting that that is a fairly comfortable leeway?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I think we should discuss these items together, if the committee is agreeable, because they are of the same nature. I just want to explain how we proceed. These are not new items. They have existed for years and years. If you read them carefully—

Mr. Knowles: This one is for $400,000 more than it was last year; I refer to the one we are on now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. These come in from the different districts, from the engineers, when they tour their districts. I do not know most of these things in advance and if the recommendation does not come in, the money is not expended. But I want to point out the way it is proceeded with here. Let us take this vote 360, for example. The amount we ask for is $590,000. Under that vote we have spent in the province of Newfoundland, in the architectural branch, $1,101.95. This was recommended after an inspection of this building by the resident architect or one of his officials. We have the obligation of maintaining these buildings in a good state of repair.

Mr. Knowles: Pardon the interruption but may I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether these items or amounts that are spent on the recommendation of the district architects are covered in this item? Is this item not under the engineering branch?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is item 360.

Mr. Knowles: No; we are on item 359.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Those are protection works generally. They are under the engineers. There is no architect. I was discussing the other one, item 360. When we get a report from the engineers of our districts, where erosion has been caused by navigation, or by federal works that have been constructed and have influenced the current of the water, or if the damage is done to public works, the report comes in after the inspection and then we will allow an amount, ask for tenders and give out a contract. At this time of the year, before they have made their inspections in all the districts, I can hardly give even the places where this money will be expended during the balance of the year. That system has been in existence for a long time.

The Department of Public Works is the only department that I know of which gives specifically the list of its expenditures in every instance. There are four or five general votes to supplement the specific items that we have in our estimates and which we expend. I am told by those who administer the department and who are doing the work that unless they had these votes it would be impossible to operate; that at times it would be against the public interest if we did not have the amount required to complete the work if it was $1,000, $2,000 or $5,000. You have items limited by $10,000, and other items not comprising new works, just to supplement or complete. I am told that it is the only way the department can operate.

As to those votes, I tell you really that I have to rely on my officials for their reports because they say they would not know how to administer the whole department, after giving all these specific details and exact amounts, if they did not have some leeway in these votes.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to say a word or two on this item, Mr. Chairman. I heard the minister mention contributions toward the prevention of erosion. We have severe erosion on the Columbia river at Revelstoke and at Trail at times, and we have it on the Kootenay river.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At Revelstoke?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I did work there, did I not?

Mr. Fulton: Some years ago. We want more.

Mr. Herridge: What I want to ask the minister is this. I heard him mention the fact that the federal government assumes responsibility if the erosion was occasioned by navigation or by some work of the Department of Public Works, or if some work of the Department of Public Works requires protection. My question is this. If, in order to meet this problem, the province concerned makes application to the federal government for assistance in meeting the cost of preventing erosion, and where the municipalities pay part of the cost, will his department give that matter consideration?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not think the federal authority would go farther than the definition I have just given now, namely erosion caused by navigation, by federal works being done affecting the current of the water or damages done to federal works. Those would be the three divisions on which they would base their reports.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Herridge: As I understand it the contributions were apparently made for some works by municipalities which were undertaken on the river.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In certain parts of the Fraser where there is navigation and where we did works and dredging, those works did influence the current of the water and erosion took place. We did pay certain amounts for those works. I do not know whether that is clear enough, or whether I am putting it the right way.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the construction of breastworks for the protection of our shores in the bay of Chaleur, for instance, against the encroachment of tides and currents be covered by this item?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That would be in the specific amounts. If a wharf, pier or breakwater was affected by the stream or tide in certain places we would have a special item to cover that damage. Erosion, however, is not the same thing.

Mr. Robichaud: I mentioned the shoreline.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; just damage occasioned by navigation or by public works, or to public works.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

General—

360. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $10,000 to be expended upon any one work, $590,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On item 360 I have one more question to ask the minister. Are there any specific votes under this item for Newfoundland?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am afraid I have not been clear in the way I have explained it. This vote is not allotted to any province in particular. If an amount is required to complete a job—and they are generally small amounts of $1,000, $2,000, $3,000—and if we have expended the total amount of the specific vote, then we will complete it out of this vote.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There were a number of things to be done, and I will just mention the places because the engineers may be familiar with them. They are: Arnold's Cove, Admirals Cove, Long Beach, Mosquito, Portugal Cove South, St. Shott's, St. Stephens. Those are all fishing settlements where the work is very necessary. Nothing has ever been done before, and I hope that the minister will keep them in mind when they come before him.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, even though we have had most agreeable discussions this evening, may I say that I do take these things into consideration. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I am not so tired that I will forget about them.

Item agreed to.

General—

363. To provide for balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1953-54, $400,000.

Mr. Fleming: Before the items are completed I recall that a few minutes ago the minister spoke of his attachment to the principle that engagements should be carried out. I know he would readily agree that promptness is of the essence of performance. This afternoon the minister was good enough to promise that he would give me the detail of the item of $4,000 in his estimates for this year for furnishing the prime minister's residence. Has the minister that information to give the committee now?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I left the house about half past six, went out to have my dinner, came back at five minutes to eight, and I have been here ever since. A promise is a promise, however, and I will give you those details the moment I have a chance to go back to my office and get them. There will be nothing hidden, and if we do not need the money we will not spend it. If we are going to spend it we will tell you how, where and when; and we will go into the detail for every last cent.

Before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. gentlemen for the co-operation and good will and help they have given me. I was thinking during these three days that if hon. gentlemen had had, as I had, requests from all of these gentlemen in the House of Commons they would be astounded at the amount I am asking parliament to vote—as compared to the total of the requests of all of the gentlemen.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Eglinton wish to say something more on this item?

Mr. Fleming: I have indicated my desire to be co-operative with the minister, and I do not wish to delay the conclusion of the estimates of his department. At the same time I hope the minister will give the information to the house. It is not just for myself, it is a matter of interest to others.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I may have the information tomorrow at the opening, and I will just table it or give it to the hon. gentleman. I think I will have time to get the information tomorrow morning, and I give the assurance that tomorrow, or Monday at the latest, I will give the information to the house.

Mr. Fleming: I thank the minister; but has he looked into this matter carefully himself? After all, it is a very substantial amount to be spent on the furnishing of the prime minister's residence, which was furnished just two years ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: Here we are this year with another expenditure of $4,000. We have not the information here, so I am left with the alternative of asking the minister if he has looked into the matter personally and is satisfied that this is something that is required. It is a very substantial amount after the fabulous sums spent on this residence and its furnishings two years ago.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I was not satisfied that it was required I would have refused to bring it before the treasury board and before the cabinet; but there is no home in this country that I know of that does not require something to be done in it every year. I happen to own a home and I would like to skip a year in which I would not have to make certain expenditures.

Whilst I am Minister of Public Works I will not allow this residence to get into a state of disrepair. I am going to try to keep it in good repair, but the hon. gentleman will get any information he wants. He has that assurance from me.

Mr. Fleming: We are not discussing repairs at the moment. This item covers furnishings; and there are not very many homes that spend $4,000 a year on furnishings, especially after being set up handsomely just two years ago.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is included in an estimated expenditure of $10,500 which was passed yesterday. I promised that I would give the details of that vote, and I will.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: The next item is 57, Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall first take up the Income Tax Act, then the resolution which is the basis for the superannuation bill. That bill will be sent for study to a committee, and we are anxious to have it go through as soon as possible. Then we shall take up the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The following items were passed in committee of supply:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

325. Nova Scotia, $1,200,000.

326. Prince Edward Island, $235,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 10, 1953

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CLAXTON—REFERENCE TO CORRESPONDENCE PUBLISHED IN "SATURDAY NIGHT"

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) asked me a question about the conduct of the deputy minister of national defence, Mr. Drury. In view of the fact that other references have been made to that matter and that these all seem to be based upon a misapprehension, in fairness to the deputy minister, who cannot speak for himself here, I think I should make the matter more plain.

Mr. Fulton: His letter appeared in Saturday Night.

Mr. Claxton: The letter to which reference was made was a letter from Mr. Drury addressed to Mr. Stevenson, not to Saturday Night; and it was Mr. Stevenson who chose to publish it. I might also draw attention to the fact that in the final paragraph of his letter of reply Mr. Stevenson said this:

> I propose to ask the editor of Toronto Saturday Night to publish this correspondence between us.

That is the end of the paragraph and of the letter. That paragraph was not included in the edition of the reply published by Saturday Night or Mr. Stevenson, in the correspondence to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister having read an excerpt from the letter, possibly he would now table and put on the record the whole letter.

Mr. Claxton: I should be glad to do so. I was waiting for the opportunity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am waiting. Put both letters on the record.

Mr. Claxton: I think I should also read, from the article by Mr. Stevenson in Saturday Night of March 14, 1953, the passage to which Mr. Drury took exception quite properly because of the gross inaccuracy of the article.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Quite improperly.

Mr. Claxton: In this passage Mr. Stevenson says:

> In the sessions of the select committee on defence expenditures, the persistent efforts of its chairman, Mr. Croll, and his henchmen to smother damaging evidence of governmental waste and mismanagement has not availed to prevent the opposition members from unearthing some very damning material to sustain their case. They are now licking their chops over some candid reports by important officials—

And I stress those words "important officials".

> —and their severity can be gauged by the following two quotations:
> "However, I could not fail to be impressed by the fact that for such a tremendous administrative machine there appears to be very little fighting strength", and "a high percentage of the construction and other contracts were awarded on a cost-plus basis, which the department itself has declared to be wasteful, inefficient, and an incentive to extravagance."

That is the end of the quotation and of the paragraph. The last quotation is from an article by Mr. Arthur Blakely, and the deputy minister of national defence, having charge of the personnel of national defence, thought it was only proper to call to Mr. Stevenson's attention the fact Mr. Blakely was not yet in the employ of the Department of National Defence; he is not an important official. After references like these, the opposition talks about having horses on the payroll.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise now not to debate this matter, because I know that under the rules the time for that will be when we get to the estimates of the minister. I can assure you it will be debated at that time.

I understood the minister was going to read certain letters so that the whole of them might appear on the record. I point out to you that he read a part of one of the letters and then made certain personal and inaccurate comments and did not complete the reading of the letters. I suggest to you, sir, that the full letters should now appear completely on the record side by side.

Mr. Claxton: What I was asked to do was to produce the letters. I have done so. I will be very glad to take up the time of the house to read them. I suggest they are available to any hon. member who wishes to read them.

Mr. Casselman: Table them.

Privilege—Mr. Claxton

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not Mr. Drury he is dealing with, and I am not taking any directions. These letters must be tabled, since excerpts have been read from them, and they should become part of the record.

Mr. Claxton: They have been tabled, and I said that twice already.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Claxton: If the house will permit, I will read the letters.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no provision for tabling these letters. The only documents that can be tabled are public documents. If the minister wants to have the letters read, or if the house wants them to appear in Hansard, I have no objection.

Mr. Claxton: Let them appear in Hansard as an appendix.

Mr. Fulton: May I suggest that they should appear in Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what we want.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(For text of letters, see appendix, page 3738.)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR SHORTWAVE BROADCASTS TO POLAND

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short statement with reference to shortwave broadcasts to Poland. I wish to announce that the government has decided in principle to place an item in the supplementary estimates which will be submitted later this session and to ask the house to vote the necessary funds to provide for shortwave broadcasts to Poland by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation international shortwave service similar to broadcasts now being made to other countries in eastern Europe.

WHEAT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): On behalf of the minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) I should like to make a short statement.

Hon. members will have read or heard that the international wheat council, which has been meeting in Washington, has made recommendations to governments for a renewal of the wheat agreement. The following is the text of the press statement made yesterday by the chairman of the council:

The international wheat council decided by a substantial majority today to recommend to member governments that the international wheat agreement, which was due to expire on July 31 of this year, be extended for a further three-year period at a new price range of $2.05 maximum and $1.55 minimum to replace the present range of $1.80 maximum and $1.20 minimum.

The United Kingdom delegate informed the council, however, that while his government desired a renewal of the agreement it was not prepared to accept a maximum price above $2 per bushel.

Details with regard to the guaranteed imports and exports that would apply under the new agreement have not yet been decided. These will be announced as soon as this question has been settled.

In the course of the negotiations which began at the end of January, the council has also agreed to recommend to governments a number of textual amendments to be incorporated in the new agreement. These are being introduced largely on the basis of the experience gained in the operation of the wheat agreement since 1949 and are intended to clarify certain parts of the agreement and to improve its operation. None of these recommended changes, however, alter the basic principles on which the agreement was originally established.

A provision of the new agreement will permit the council, under certain conditions, to select an expert advisory panel to give the council an advisory opinion before taking a decision on any dispute arising on the application or interpretation of the agreement. The present position under which the council is the final arbiter on all disputes is unaffected.

Arrangements are being made for a formal signing ceremony which will be held within the next few days, after which the agreement will remain open for signature for a period of 14 days. Copies of the new agreement will be made available to the press at that time.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of the city today. He will give a further explanation of the situation on Monday next.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that the parliamentary assistant pointed out that the British representatives were not agreeable to that maximum, can he tell us what maximum price the British representatives were prepared to accept?

Mr. McIlraith: The statement I have quoted—and this is the statement of the chairman of the council—contains this paragraph:

> The United Kingdom delegate informed the council, however, that while his government desired a renewal of the agreement it was not prepared to accept a maximum price above $2 per bushel.

I might say that there will be a full statement on this subject by the minister on Monday.

ARMED FORCES

ENLISTMENT OF DUTCH MUSICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence? Is the department enlisting Dutch musicians as bandsmen for the 27th brigade?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Yes, and also for service with the Canadian forces in Canada. Arrangements have been made whereby a limited number are being taken on strength.

Mr. Pearkes: Are they being placed on the payroll as sergeants?

Mr. Claxton: I will have to look into that.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 228, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson in the chair.

On section 1—Premium on redemption of shares.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make more than a word of comment on the budget as such. I do however wish to make a few comments on the question of dominion-provincial-municipal tax problems.

As regards the budget itself, all I wish to say is that I think the public has been able to realize the truth of what I said in reply to the minister, that the minister has thought of everyone except the people; that 75 per cent of the people get little or no benefit from it; and that instead of his bringing in a social dividend, he brought in an anti-social dividend.

I wish now to turn to the question of dominion-provincial-municipal taxation problems. It is interesting to note that the great nation to the south of us is grappling with this problem in no uncertain way. Their position, of course, in principle is very much the same as ours. The President has announced a project of inquiring into taxing and spending functions of the various taxing authorities. A commission is to be set up to stake out the proper areas for each authority. I should like to say in passing that that is what the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members in the house have been asking repeatedly. It is also what the premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Angus Macdonald, has been asking. And in this connection I would put on the record only a sentence from the Ottawa Journal of April 6 which, in commenting on this American proposal, says:

> Why such a step has not been taken in Canada when its need is starkly imperative, all but passes understanding.

I would have liked it better if the words "all but" had been left out; because certainly I am unable to understand it. I can only imagine it is just another instance of that overholding power of people who have been in office for a long time, who lose touch, and who do not act in the way which ordinarily one would expect reasonable persons to act.

Mr. Abbott: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, because I am keenly interested in what he has to say. I think, however, that technically he is completely out of order in discussing on section 1, which amends certain sections of the Income Tax Act, such problems as federal-provincial-municipal taxing relations. If we were to proceed to discuss matters of that kind at this time, then frankly I do not know how any hon. member could be prevented from discussing any other matter which he might consider he wished to bring before the house.

I am sorry my hon. friend did not see fit to make his comments in the course of the budget debate, or at some other time when, in doing so, he would have been within the rules of the house. I am in your hands, Mr. Chairman, of course; but I submit the hon. member is completely out of order in discussing this matter at the present time.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): My understanding is that in the debate on section 1 of a bill we have been allowed considerable latitude. It seems to me this question is one of great practical importance, because it goes to the very root of taxation. As I have said, and now repeat, the range of discussion allowed on section 1 of a bill has been wide. If it will relieve the minds of hon. members at all, I might mention that I shall not be long in what I have to say.

I realize however that that does not go to the question of principle.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I quite agree with the hon. member for Greenwood when he says that we have allowed a wide range of discussion on clause 1 of a bill. But I would point out that that range is limited to the principle of the bill itself. I would ask the hon. member to confine himself to general remarks on the principle of the bill which, in this instance, is an act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): With deference, Mr. Chairman, I submit that, among other things, this is a bill to raise money. I do submit that questions affecting the dominion's need for revenue, which I am trying to discuss when I open up this whole question of the distribution of responsibilities between the dominion and the provinces, is within the scope of the bill.

Mr. Abbott: I must differ with my hon. friend. I have a keen interest in his views, and I am sure they would be well worth listening to. But if we do not adhere to the rules of the house, then I just do not see how we can have any sort of orderly debate.

The question my hon. friend is raising is a very important one. I dealt with it at length in my budget speech. In his reply my hon. friend did not deal with it at any great length. But I suggest that was the time to deal with this general question of the financial relationships between different levels of government in Canada, and that it is not properly debatable when section 1 of a bill to amend the Income Tax Act is called.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, while the minister may have no intention of curtailing debate in the matter, it seems to me the income tax is so closely related to and interwoven with the question of dominion-provincial relations that it might properly be discussed at this time. The income tax is one of the major tax fields, and it has been under discussion many times in dominion-provincial discussions.

It seems to me that, on that basis, the hon. member is not asking too much when he asks for the opportunity to finish his remarks on this point. I suggest that he be given that opportunity. It may be that Mr. Chairman may wish to give a ruling on the point. I am sure however that the hon. member for Greenwood is not one who makes it a habit to encroach upon the rules of the house, for any purposes whatsoever. I suggest that he be given the opportunity to finish his remarks.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

The Deputy Chairman: I am sure hon. members will realize that I have no wish to curtail debate in any way. But as has been pointed out by the Minister of Finance, under our rules there are proper occasions upon which the debate on certain subjects should take place.

I must agree with the point of order taken by the Minister of Finance when he says that the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood are too broad in scope. I would therefore ask the hon. member to co-operate by adhering in his remarks to the principle of the bill before us.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Well, Mr. Chairman, that was the one subject I wished to talk about. If that is ruled out of order, the committee will not have the pleasure of hearing me at all.

I suggest, with deference, that my whole understanding has been that when section 1 of a bill has been called there has been a wide-open opportunity for discussion. It seems to me that when the minister suggests this matter was discussed by him in his budget speech, and that then, and then only, was the time to discuss the matter further—

Mr. Abbott: Not necessarily the only time.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I say that when the minister suggests that this is not the proper time, his interpretation is too narrow. However, if that is your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to defer to it.

Mr. Abbott: As I say, I am always anxious to hear what my hon. friend has to say. I think however that there may be another opportunity for him to speak on this subject when my estimates are under consideration. I think there are some items in the estimates of the Department of Finance which should afford him the opportunity to make the observations he wishes to make—but not today.

Mr. Graydon: As an experienced legislator in this chamber, the minister knows that the practical result, when debate is curtailed as it is now suggested it should be, is that it breaks out on a motion to go into supply. If we are going to get this house closed in reasonable time early in May I should think the minister will have to take a different course than to suggest to the chairman that this be not proceeded with. I think that will only add to confusion in the end. I can only hope that the hon. member will be allowed to finish.

Mr. Abbott: As a good lawyer I believe in following the rules.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I might offer a suggestion. This problem comes up often, and I recognize the validity of the point which the Minister of Finance seeks to make. This is a bill amending an existing statute. I think the confusion arises by reason of the fact that sometimes bills that come before us are brand new. When that happens it is the usual practice that a general discussion is allowed on section 1, which is usually the short title. But when we get a bill amending an existing statute, such as this bill, section 1 usually amends some section down the line in the statute and that right of general discussion is not usually extended. I think that that is the reason for the confusion.

However, it does seem to me that the remarks which the hon. member for Greenwood was trying to make would have been in order on the second reading of this bill while Mr. Speaker was in the chair. If that is correct, it might therefore be argued that the same remarks would be in order on third reading. I offer that as a suggestion. If it is not acceptable to have this speech made now the hon. member might be allowed to make it on third reading.

Mr. Abbott: If it is within the rules I would not have the slightest objection.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The trouble with me is that I am too co-operative and I did not stand up while Mr. Speaker was in the chair because I thought that that might slow up matters. I am not going to press the matter further. I was going to make the suggestion which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been good enough to make, and perhaps I shall deliver my remarks on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Green: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions on the first section. The other day we had a discussion with regard to allowing the cost of reforestation as an operating expense. It will be found in Hansard of March 20. The Minister of Resources and Development entered into the discussion and said in effect that there had been some arrangement made within the last few weeks whereby these expenses would be allowed. On further questioning he admitted, as will be found on page 3149 of Hansard, that this allowance would be made only where the taxpayer had what is known, in British Columbia at least, as a forest management licence. I would ask the minister to explain just what this new provision covers. There are comparatively few firms which hold forest management licences. Practically all of them are quite large concerns and I am worried whether this provision will be applicable to the small operator who does not hold a forest management licence.

My other question has to do with the possibility of obtaining an exemption to cover the costs of nursery and child care incurred by a mother who is working. The minister will remember I dealt with that in my budget speech. I would ask him to let us know whether any consideration has been given to my request and if there is any possibility of obtaining that exemption.

My third question has to do with out-of-town travelling and living expenses of persons engaged in the building and construction trades. This matter also was raised during the budget debate and I should like to know what stand the government is taking.

Finally I should like to know what changes are being made with regard to pension funds. The minister stated during the budget debate, and I quote from page 2129 of Hansard as follows:

> Special provision will be made to alleviate the tax on refunds paid out as a result of reorganizations of pension plans. This will apply, of course, in the case of the Canadian National Railways pension plan reorganization which has been of interest to many hon. members.

Complaints have been made that because this reorganization plan will mean the payment of lump sums to the recipients the Department of National Revenue is taking the position that the whole payment will be taxable in the year in which it is received. That seems to be a most unfair arrangement and I would ask the minister to explain in what manner the problem is being dealt with by this bill.

Mr. Abbott: I shall answer the last question first. It is dealt with in a section a little later in the bill, but in essence the payment which is being made as a result of the reorganization of the Canadian National pension fund will result, as I understand it, in quite substantial lump sum payments being made to pensioners.

Mr. Knowles: Are we on section 12?

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend is taking exception.

Mr. Knowles: The minister suggested that we should follow the rules.

Mr. Abbott: As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was completely out of order with the questions he asked on section 1, but I thought that as the questions related directly to the Income Tax Act perhaps it would not be stretching the rules too far to answer them at this time. Every one of the questions he asked was out of order under section 1. I am quite willing to give information on this section as I think perhaps that would be within the spirit of a discussion on section 1. What I objected to strongly was discussing general philosophic principles on section 1 of the bill. If the committee wants to adhere strictly to the rules, needless to say I will be delighted to do so.

Mr. Green: It is a pretty well established practice that there is wide discussion permitted on section 1 of a bill.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I could answer that question when we deal with section 12 which relates directly to the Canadian National pension plan. I will give this information when we reach that section because some other hon. members may have questions to ask.

As to this matter of the cost of reforestation, I am not exactly clear as to what my colleague may have been referring to as I was not in the house at the time. I am informed that it is a question of fact in each case. If the expense incurred by the taxpayer is an operating expense, if it can be considered as an operating expense, it is deductible. On the other hand, if it is of a capital nature then it is a capital charge and would be subject to capital cost allowances and written off over a period of years.

Then the hon. member asked about the cost of nursing. I understand he is referring to the practical nurse who might be brought in to look after children while the mother is out working. There again we have never felt that under the Income Tax Act we can allow deductions from salaries and wages as expenses. Salaries and wages, with certain exceptions with which my hon. friends are familiar, are considered as income. It is difficult, if not impossible, to draw a line between what expenses might be allowed and what expenses cannot be allowed. While this arouses a good deal of sympathy it is not a matter on which we feel we could breach the important principle which is involved.

Then the third point was the expenses of construction workers on out of town jobs. I must say that we gave that matter a tremendous amount of anxious consideration because I realize that these days, with active construction programs going on in a great many parts of the country, it is necessary for construction workers to move from one part of the country to another and in doing so maintain their permanent homes wherever they may happen to be resident. But here again, on this basic principle to which we have adhered, salaries and wages are taxable income by definition and the taxpayer is not entitled to deduct living expenses. He can, in the circumstances set out in the act, deduct expenses when he is in travel status as defined in the act, but unfortunately in a good many instances that does not meet the cases to which my hon. friend refers.

All I can say is that, after a great deal of careful consideration and discussion with my officials and the officials of the Department of National Revenue, we felt we could not make this further exception in the law. I had discussions on the matter with representatives of the trade unions who put their case before me very fully and fairly. I should have liked to be able to grant it but it just was not possible.

Mr. Green: Are there not other groups who are already getting that exemption? Their travelling and living expenses are being allowed, and I think that the men in the construction trades could be brought in under the same category, or perhaps it would require an amendment to the act. Then there is the further fact that the construction industry is of vital importance to Canada today, and I know that it is becoming difficult in British Columbia to get men to go to projects in the more remote parts of the province. I believe there is some danger that developments which would otherwise take place may be held back because this exemption is not allowed. The question came up there in this form. The unions actually entered into an agreement with management under which these costs would be paid by the employers, but then they were taxed so that the agreement did not help at all. I think this merits a further check by the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Abbott: The union agreements to which my hon. friend referred were not exactly on the basis he outlined. What happened under the union agreements was that it was provided that the worker would be paid a certain sum of money in lieu of travelling and living expenses. It is perfectly open to the employer to reimburse his workers for their actual out of pocket travelling and living expenses, but apparently that involves some added expense and difficulty, and as you know we have a very strict rule against lump sum expense allowances. Consequently we did not feel that an addition to the per diem or per hourly rate to compensate for out of pocket expenses could be allowed. I realize that is a simple and perhaps efficient way of handling it, but nevertheless it does breach the principle to which I have alluded.

Mr. Green: With respect to the second point, deduction of the cost of nursery and child care in the case of a mother who is working, would the mother not be in a similar position to a professional man who hires a stenographer to help him earn his income?

Mr. Abbott: No, because he is on a gross basis. He gets fees and he charges his expenses before he arrives at his net. He is not being paid a salary. She is being paid a salary.

Mr. Green: The reason she cannot get the exemption is that she is getting a salary?

Mr. Abbott: That is a fundamental distinction in our law. As my hon. friend knows, I have explained before that salary and wages, by definition, are income. If a man is an independent contractor or a professional man he grosses up his fees, deducts his office rent, salaries, stationery and other expenses and arrives at his net. That is his taxable income. But if he is hired by a corporation for a salary, then presumably the corporation pays those expenses and charges them up as an expense of doing business. For instance, as I pointed out, a man who is a salaried employee cannot get a deduction for the expenses of a maid to look after his children. It is a fundamental principle.

Mr. Green: That is a different situation.

Mr. Abbott: Nor could a professional man.

Mr. Green: Suppose the mother is carrying on a business of her own such as running a public stenographer's office. Could she then deduct these costs?

Mr. Abbott: No. She could deduct the expenses of running her office but she could not deduct any of her home expenses.

Mr. Green: If the minister will investigate the situation further, I think he will find that the working mother is at an unfair disadvantage in so far as these exemptions are concerned. I hope that further consideration will be given to the matter. With respect to the allowance for reforestation, the minister has not yet made it clear to me at least in what manner that applies. Will these tax deductions be applicable to any legitimate forest operation in which the taxpayer is working on a sustained yield unit program?

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend knows, the dividing line between what is a capital expenditure and an operating expense is sometimes very hard to draw. Take this case as an example. Suppose by virtue of one of these management licences, or whatever the correct description is, there is taken over a tract of land that has already been cut over and puts into effect a large-scale reforestation program. What is then being done in effect is to create a new capital asset. That would be a capital expenditure and as the timber was cut depletion depreciation could be taken.

Mr. Green: But the timber would not be cut for many years.

Mr. Abbott: That is quite true. It is the same way when you build a plant. The plant is amortized over a long period of time. On the other hand, in the case of a current operation, where as the operator cuts down some trees he plants new ones as a part of his general operation, my information is that the wages and salaries in that operation can be considered as operating expenses. But as I say, it is very difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what in a given case is capital and what is an operating expense. Almost every case has to be looked at on the facts of the particular case.

Mr. Green: Perhaps the minister can deal with it in this way. Will this new arrangement, which apparently was made in February of this year, be applicable to only a handful of the very large operators who have forest management licences from the provincial government of British Columbia or will it be applicable to the forest industry as a whole?

Mr. Abbott: I am told that it applies from coast to coast.

Mr. Green: How will it work out in British Columbia? Will it only apply to the dozen or so who have forest management licences or will it apply to the hundreds of smaller men who are carrying on forest operations and in many cases are doing reforestation?

Mr. Abbott: I am told it applies to them all.

Mr. Green: If that is right that is satisfactory.

Mr. Abbott: That is my information. The same rule applies to all.

Mr. Green: My understanding is that so far the smaller men do not know anything about it. They were quite surprised to hear that an arrangement had been made, and presumably it was made with the big operators.

Mr. Abbott: I am informed by the deputy minister of national revenue that it applies to all of them. There is no distinction between the two groups.

Mr. Graydon: I should like to ask a question or two. The first matter is one on which I have a great deal of difficulty in defending the government when I am in my own constituency, and you can readily realize that is a problem I should like to have solved here. Also people keep asking me why it is that when the wife dies the husband then must go into another status from the point of view of income tax. He cannot any longer claim marital status as a householder operating a self-contained establishment. In most of these instances where they come to me, and where I have to put up as good a case for the government as I can, I find it very difficult to defend that position. That is, of course, not the only instance where I have trouble defending the government but it is true in this case particularly.

In most instances the man of the house has greater expenses by virtue of the change in status than he did before. It may be that something has been done in connection with this legislation and if so I would personally welcome it and ask the minister if he has given consideration to it.

Mr. Abbott: As the hon. member knows, a widower, or even an unmarried man, who is maintaining a self-contained domestic establishment and supporting someone in it who is dependent on him for support, is entitled to the marital exemption.

Mr. Graydon: Yes, but that is not the question.

Mr. Abbott: A widower who has no children and is not supporting anyone and who prefers to live in his house instead of living at a club does not get the $2,000 exemption. He is treated as a single person. A widower who supports children and who lives in a home continues to get the $2,000 exemption.

Mr. Graydon: The problem arises where the widower has children in the home who are perhaps over the age limit. Those are the cases with which I am having difficulty because people cannot see the reasoning. I must confess too that I cannot see why that exemption cannot be allowed to a widow or a widower as the case may be.

I know that you cannot extend this all over the place and allow it to run wild as far as these self-contained establishments are concerned, but surely there must be some definition that can be drawn without getting into administrative difficulty or meeting administrative obstacles which are too great to hurdle. I would like the minister to give some further consideration to the matter because it does seem to me that there are instances where the government might go some distance without infringing too far upon their administrative regulations.

The other point I want to mention is one I raised last year. I know that the minister must have given some consideration to this and it arises out of little people being in business—people who employ perhaps one or two others and who are just managing to get by. These people are finding that they must work for nothing in the collection of these income tax payments, and I do not think that the little fellow particularly ought to carry the government's load without in some way receiving remuneration for it.

I can understand that perhaps this does not mean so much to those who have a big set-up where they can deduct the cost of doing these things; but I could never understand why the government needs to be hitchhiking on top of the little fellow as far as the expense of these collections is concerned. The government has money for other things and it seems to me that the situation is pretty intolerable from the little man's point of view.

I raised this matter last year and I coupled with it the statement that if all of the members of the house were to go into some little business and see just what they would have to do for this government, without getting a five-cent piece in return, they would be astounded. They would have to collect unemployment insurance; they would have to collect these income tax payments; and by the time they got around to answering all the questions asked by the dominion bureau of statistics they would find that they did not have time to look after their own business. I do not think that situation should be tolerated or continued. The minister I think said that it was an instance of good citizenship. Well, you can extend good citizenship pretty far—to the point where citizens are out of business. It is pretty difficult for me to see why some leniency might not be shown at least to some people in the way of relieving them of carrying further burden. I know the minister will have an answer, and it will be one of those answers which have been carefully gone over by the administrative staff. Nevertheless, I think there is a case where at least somebody ought to champion the little fellow who is making so many of these deductions and who is carrying so much of this load. It is pretty difficult to make ends meet in little business today; and I think that what you are doing in many instances is driving little business into the hands of big business.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Graydon: I confess that the difficulty I mention does not apply so much to big business and I am, of course, only talking about the little fellow. He is entitled to be given a little break on this, whether you give him the break in some compensatory way here or on something else.

Mr. Abbott: As I told my hon. friend last year, when he raised this question, I share his solicitude for the little fellow; but it does not require any high-priced help to give one answer to this problem. This income tax deducted at the source, and unemployment insurance deductions, must be collected by somebody. If the employer does not do it we will have to hire a few thousand more civil servants, pay them to do it, and then tax the little fellow among others to pay for that service.

My own belief is that the present system whereby the taxpayer makes the deductions and remits them is about as efficient and cheap a way of doing the job as there is. Under those circumstances I think he makes his contributions through the services of himself or staff rather than as a taxpayer. If he has a bookkeeper he can charge up the expense of the bookkeeper as an expense of doing business. I think that successive governments, this one and those preceding it, have found that this system is about as fair a way of collecting these payments as can be found.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I might ask the minister a question on clause 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Graydon: Ask it on third reading.

Mr. Knowles: I realize that I am being extraordinary in dealing with the matter before the house.

I have two questions that I would ask. First, will the minister explain why he is bringing in this clause at all? What was wrong with the taxing of premiums received on the acquisition of shares?

My second question is this: Why is a section like this being made retroactive when some other sections such as those dealing with the allowances for children attending university or the change in the level at which medical expenses are allowed, are not being made retroactive?

Mr. Abbott: I will deal with the last question first.

In the amendment to the act in 1949, provision was inserted providing for tax on acquisition of shares at a premium. I do not believe that there was very widespread general knowledge of that amendment which introduced the word "acquisition". What happened was that in the case of a number of companies which proposed to redeem their shares at a premium—and in some cases at a substantial premium—they did it by purchasing shares on the market. A man would buy shares of this company, hold them perhaps a month or two and sell them, not realizing that he was selling to a person who was in fact buying them for redemption by the company. I had some instances brought to my attention where a tax liability of say $10,000 or $12,000 was created where in fact the purchaser and seller of the shares had suffered a small loss on the transaction.

It was quite easy, for anyone who knew the ropes, and who knew those shares were being redeemed, to legally avoid the payment of any such tax. The shares are being either acquired by or held by a Canadian tax-exempt organization and as such the tax would not apply. So it seems to me that there was a trap in the law which should not be continued; and it led to an examination of the whole question of the taxation of the premiums on the redemption of shares. It seemed desirable to make a fundamental change and to provide as the law now does, or as the law will provide if this bill is passed, that in the case of redemption of shares at a premium, the premium may be paid out of tax-paid undistributed income if the company is one which has created such a form of tax-paid income. If not, there will be a special tax of 20 per cent of the premium imposed upon the redemption of those shares.

This is fairly technical, I know, but I think it is a satisfactory solution to a problem which, I may say quite frankly, has bothered me for a long time. As I say, anybody who knew the ropes could always avoid the payment of taxes on shares being redeemed at a premium and it was only the people who either did not know how to go about it or who did not know that the redemption was going to take place, who got caught. In this way we will be sure of getting a reasonable tax on the premium on the redemption of shares.

The 20 per cent rate is 5 per cent in excess of the rate at which, it will be recalled, pre-1949 surpluses can be capitalized as tax-paid undistributed income. The committee will also recall that as to profits since that time, if half are paid out as dividends, the other half may be created into a tax-paid surplus. That is the general basis on which this amendment to the law is made. There are two or three other sections relating to it.

Mr. Fleming: In the light of the explanation which he has just given, may I ask the minister whether it is likely to mean the opening up of a good many returns in the case of taxpayers who have already been taxed on the premiums they received on the redemption of shares?

Mr. Abbott: I think there will unquestionably be reopening of some returns because there were really some hard cases brought to my attention. I was shocked at the inequity of some of them and that is what really prompted the introduction of this measure. I think it will involve the reopening of some of the returns. A number of appeals were taken which I think are still pending. The assessments will be revised. It is pointed out that there will be a reassessment of these returns by the department and a revised notice of assessment will be issued.

Mr. Fleming: In all these cases will the department take the responsibility in connection with the reassessment? No doubt the period has passed for entering an appeal against those assessments going back to 1949 income.

Mr. Abbott: I am told it all arose as a result of the reassessment by the department. They picked this up in the returns. I think there are perhaps not a large number of securities involved because there have been a limited number of companies who, during the last two or three years, have acquired shares for redemption.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to be clear on this. In the case of a taxpayer whose assessment was made, let us say, on 1949 or 1950 income, where the file is closed and the usual period for entering any appeal against the assessment is past, do I understand that the department will in that case take the responsibility for reopening the assessment and making the refund for any excess paid, in the light of this retroactive legislation. There is not much use of our passing legislation intended to be retroactive for the relief of a taxpayer if the period for reopening his assessment has passed and the time for appeal is past, unless the department is prepared to take responsibility for reopening the assessment.

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend will recall, it applies only to the case of the acquisition of shares, not to redemptions. I think the onus must be on the taxpayer. If the assessment has been made and the time for appeal has expired and no appeal was lodged and the tax was paid, it is up to him to make application for reopening and refund; and that would be given to him.

Mr. Fleming: Even though his period for appeal has passed?

Mr. Abbott: Oh, quite.

Mr. Fleming: The department will allow that?

Mr. Abbott: Oh, yes. Everybody will be treated equally.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I presume that everyone is presumed to know what the law is but in fact not everybody does. Is it sufficient for the department merely to say that it will not invoke the passage of time for appeal? Is it asking too much that the department will, as I understand the hon. member for Eglinton to say, assume responsibility for reassessment?

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Abbott: The department will, I think, reassess; but I think the onus must remain on the taxpayer of asking to have the assessment reopened and of claiming a refund of the tax which he has paid.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): He may not know about it.

Mr. Abbott: I think most of them know it. My impression is that a great many of them know about it.

Mr. Adamson: I gather that this measure refers only to preferred stocks which were redeemed by operations in the open market. It does not apply to preferred stocks which were redeemed at a premium, shall we say, of five points over par?

Mr. Abbott: It does not apply to those retroactively; but it does apply retroactively to preferred shares which were acquired in the open market by the company. But as my hon. friend knows and as the committee know, these shares would be bought in the market in the ordinary way. The vendor would not have any idea to whom he was selling. He might think he was selling to another investor when in fact the purchase was being made by the company. It is that type of case that we are providing the relief for. For the future we have a new system for handling the redemption of preferred shares with this special tax of 20 per cent unless it is paid out of tax-paid undistributed income. But the retroactive relieving part applies only to what I might describe as the cases of the innocent bystanders who did not realize that they were involving themselves in any tax liability.

Mr. Adamson: It refers clearly to the monetary premium?

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Adamson: It does not refer, for instance —although I do not know that there were any of these cases—to a preferred stock which was redeemable in terms of common stock or transferable in terms of common stock and the aggregate of the common stock conversion was higher than the selling price of the preferred stock?

Mr. Abbott: It does not apply to redemption at all in the past; purely to acquisition.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, I have one question to ask. I am afraid that it is a little bit out of order but I can see no other section under which I can ask it. The minister has been wandering a little bit in answering some of the other questions and I wonder if he will answer this one. Can the principle of employee deductions be extended to employees of the American bases? I have been requested to ask whether arrangements could be made.

Mr. Abbott: I shall have to look into this matter. We would be happy to do it.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Municipal officers expense allowance.

Mr. Green: This is the clause which refers to the expense allowance of municipal officers. We had quite a lengthy debate on the resolution dealing with this matter. At that time there was some question as to whether an elected officer would include a member of a school board and of a parks board. Can the minister tell us whether this amendment is meant to cover those officers or only persons elected to council?

Mr. Abbott: It is not intended to cover school boards. It is intended to cover only elected municipal officers and to extend to them the same principle that applies to us as members of parliament or to members of provincial legislatures. There is nothing, of course, to prevent members of school boards from being paid their out of pocket expenses, on an actual basis; that is, being reimbursed the actual out of pocket expenses which they incur as members of the school board. There is not, and there never has been, anything to prevent a municipal officer from being reimbursed his actual out of pocket expenses incurred in the performance of his municipal duties. But, as we know, that involves a considerable amount of keeping track of expenses and so on. Since we ourselves here as elected representatives provided a lump-sum allowance for expenses which it is well recognized we have to incur, it seemed desirable and appropriate to extend that same privilege to the principal elected officials of other bodies. This is for the municipalities. My information is—and it is certainly true in my own province—that very few members of school boards receive anything in the way of remuneration. It should be borne in mind that one can only get this expense allowance if one is voted specifically and it must not exceed one-third of the combined total. But there is nothing to prevent any of these other officials being reimbursed for their actual out of pocket expenses.

Mr. Green: The wording of the new clause is:

> Where an elected officer of an incorporated municipality has been paid . . .

It does seem to me that a member of a school board is an elected officer, as is a member of a parks board. I do not see why they should not get the same treatment. As a matter of fact, when the resolution was before the committee I argued that they should be treated in the same way as the members of the council. I believe that the way the section is worded it is wide enough to cover them. The minister now says they are not going to be covered.

Mr. Abbott: They were not intended to be covered. It may be that the section is wide enough to cover them. I do not think it is, personally, but we certainly did not intend to cover them. This is a new departure and I would certainly not recommend extending it beyond the elected municipal officials. None of the school board officers need be out of pocket. They can get their actual expenses. I do not think many of them are paid remuneration. I served on a school board once; I did not get remuneration for doing it; I do not think most people do. This is a new departure. It is the sort of thing we will look at another year, but it does represent a very substantial concession to municipal officials. Mark you, they have to be voted remuneration plus expenses. They cannot be voted just a lump sum for expenses; it must be a combined sum, and the expense portion of the sum must be not in excess of one-third of the total.

Mr. Knowles: In some provinces of the country, and particularly in the west, school board members are elected officials. In my own city, for example, they are just as much elected officials as are the members of council.

Mr. Abbott: They are in a lot of other places.

Mr. Knowles: And they are paid remuneration for their services. I will not argue the merits or demerits of the general principle of the exemption, but it does seem to me that the two groups should be treated on the same basis.

Mr. Adamson: I should like to ask the minister a question on this because I took the trouble to send copies of Hansard to a large number of municipal officers in my own constituency, and I know there was a great deal of confusion in their minds as to the real meaning of this. The intent is clear, that it is desirable that elected municipal officers who receive an expense allowance for which—

Mr. Abbott: I would not go that far. This is purely enabling legislation. I do not think it is desirable.

Mr. Adamson: It is enabling legislation. In order to benefit from this legislation, does the municipality have to pass a minute of council or a specific bylaw stating that the salary shall be so much and the expense shall be half of the salary?

Mr. Abbott: That is right, not more than half the salary.

Mr. Adamson: Not more than half.

Mr. Abbott: Appropriate municipal action must be taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The point in connection with this very attractive looking section is that it is not going to operate fairly among all municipalities, and I am going to point out the significant words. A moment ago the minister admitted with frankness that before anyone could qualify in respect of the retroactive effect of this section it would be necessary for that person to be voted a sum to include remuneration plus expenses.

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And that is the significance of this section. That is the point I intend to raise in connection with it because it is not going to be fairly applied everywhere across this country. The section reads as follows:

> Where an elected officer of an incorporated municipality has been paid by the municipal corporation an amount as an allowance in a taxation year for expenses incident to the discharge of his duties as an elected officer of the corporation, the allowance shall not be included in computing his income for the year unless it exceeds one-half of the amount that was paid to him in the year . . .

The significant words there are: "has been paid", and a little later on, "was paid". Take the situation in some provinces of this country. There is no provision in the legislation of those provinces for an honorarium to include expenses. Take my own province; take the province of Ontario. These provinces have legislation that permits the payment of honoraria, and have had that legislation over the years, but that legislation does not include any provision for expenses as part of it.

Mr. Abbott: Ontario has now amended its statute.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am going to come to that. The interpretation placed on that legislation of Ontario already by some of the officials is that it is not effective. At the current session of the Ontario legislature legislation was passed, and I will come back to that in a moment.

As I understand it, with very few exceptions, there are at the present time but one or two municipalities to which the retroactive feature of this legislation will apply. One is the city of Montreal—

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The city of Montreal has its own legislation to the effect that an amount is paid as an honorarium which is to include in addition an allowance for expenses. Other municipalities have not that legislation, and the result is going to be that in so far as the retroactive effect of this legislation is concerned the only ones who would benefit from it are the members of the municipality of Montreal.

Mr. Abbott: I think there is one other, or there may be one or two others. There may be quite a few; I do not know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister tell us who the others are?

Mr. Lesage: Quebec.

Mr. Abbott: I cannot remember them—the city of Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not know that.

Mr. Abbott: I do not know about the other provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right; the city of Quebec.

Mr. Abbott: I am not familiar with the others.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a very good principle. The city of Montreal and the city of Quebec, which was mentioned by the parliamentary assistant, have this legislation. I did not know that, but they have adopted a very farseeing piece of legislation in making that provision. Others have not done that.

Mr. Abbott: They will now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes. I am speaking about the retroactive effect. That is the important thing here. Others, not having adopted it, are placed in a position where no municipality other than the one or two that have been mentioned particularly will benefit from this retroactively. I think no one wants to bring in legislation that is going to deny municipal officials all the way across Canada the same equality in its retroactive effect.

A while ago the minister said that Ontario has this legislation. At the current session provision was made for a division of the amount to be paid to elected municipal officials. In addition, within that legislation provision was made that the division should be considered to have been retroactive in effect. The amendment states that one-third of the salary back to 1946 shall have been deemed to have been paid for expenses. When the minister says that that legislation has been passed, that is true. It was passed at the recent session. But according to the officials administering this legislation, the provision is unacceptable to the authorities administering the income tax. While I do not have them on my desk at the moment, I have seen documents from the treasury branch stating that it is unacceptable.

The amendment will not be fair and reasonable unless the departmental officials administering it will agree that it shall apply wherever a province passes an amendment to its municipal act, and makes in that act a provision whereby whatever honoraria have been paid shall be considered to have been two-thirds honoraria and one-third expenses. Otherwise an injustice will be done to elected municipal officials, everywhere in Canada, with the exception of two or three urban municipalities.

Municipal officials are a group of public servants who, too often, must shoulder the responsibilities of public office, and have but little of the appealing side enjoyed by members of parliament and of legislatures. There are many people who think there are no compensations in public life. The minister would not be here if there were not. There is the satisfaction in the service performed, and in all parts of the house men are giving their services unselfishly and in a spirit of personal sacrifice, knowing that the monetary returns are not great.

From now on, however, municipal officials are to be extended equality with members of the dominion parliament and of provincial legislatures. However, if the retroactive effect of the legislation is to apply only in the case of two municipalities which, in their foresight, made provision some years ago for an actual division as between honoraria and expenses, then I say the section should be amended so as to allow all municipal officials who have received honoraria since 1946 to be placed in the same position as the officials in those two municipalities. There may be more, but the minister mentioned two of them. While I have no knowledge of them, there may be others.

Certainly an appeal to the minister to make a provision to give equality everywhere is not an appeal to special interests. It is not an appeal for any particular individuals. Rather, it is an appeal that municipal officials everywhere in our country shall be treated with equality under this legislation.

The Ontario legislature decided to meet the situation and, as I said, passed legislation at the present session. However, up until the eighth day of April the authorities had not notified the government of Ontario, or the treasury officials of that province, that the amendment would be acceptable in so far as those municipal officials are concerned.

I should like to ask the minister to elucidate the situation. I noticed that he was at great pains to accentuate the situation where the vote that had been made heretofore, and prior to the coming into effect of this legislation, covered remuneration plus expenses.

Mr. Abbott: In answer to my hon. friend I would say only this, that this matter was carefully considered and it was decided to make the section retroactive so as to apply to cases where, in fact, the appropriation or allocation of remuneration and expenses had been segregated, and that we were not going to make it retroactive to other cases.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly the point I have made, and the minister supports it. My interpretation of the effect of this section is correct. Now I ask him this question: Legislation was passed by the legislature of Ontario, in its recent session, and in which I believe provision has been made that it shall be considered that since 1946 the amount paid for honoraria to municipal elected officials shall be deemed to be divisible by two-thirds as honoraria and one-third as expenses. Is the minister prepared to say that that legislation will be recognized by his department, and that all municipal officials will be retroactively considered for income tax purposes to have received the amount provided for expenses in the legislation passed by the Ontario legislature? If so, I have no doubt similar legislation will be passed by the legislatures of other provinces.

Mr. Abbott: I have before me a copy of the bill passed in the Ontario legislature, adding a section to the municipal act. It is an enabling section. I do not think I shall take the time to read it. However, it does permit municipal corporations, by an appropriate bylaw or resolution, to provide that one-third of the total remuneration, not to exceed $2,000, may be deemed to be expenses incidental to the discharge of the office. I find nothing about retroactivity to 1946 in the bill before me. In any case it would not be competent for the Ontario legislature to make a provision of that kind retroactive for federal income tax purposes.

Mr. Fleming: It is regrettable that when a sound principle is given recognition, such recognition should be open to the complaint that it fails by reason of omission, especially when those omissions are discriminatory in their nature. My colleagues, the hon. members for Vancouver-Quadra and Lake Centre, have drawn attention to two flaws in the section, both of which it seems to me are in their nature omissions, and both of which are discriminatory in their effect.

I wish first of all to say a word about the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, because I do not think the minister has answered it adequately. He referred to the question of the position of elected members of school boards—or, for that matter, elected members of other boards forming part of any municipal government. The minister made the statement, as I understood him, that members of school boards, or school trustees, could always recover their expenses. Speaking of the board of education in the city of Toronto, which has under its charge the biggest municipal school system in this country, I wish as a former member of it to say now that his statement is not correct.

Mr. Abbott: Why can they not? Will not the school board pay them?

Mr. Fleming: Expenses the trustees incur?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: No; there is no provision made for the payment of expenses of trustees.

Mr. Abbott: There is nothing to prevent the school board paying the actual out of pocket expenses of trustees, and the member of the school board does not have to include that in his income.

Mr. Fleming: I can tell the minister that no provision is made for the payment of their expenses.

Mr. Abbott: That is up to the school board.

Mr. Fleming: It will be interesting to note what will happen in the light of the discussion here today. I can tell the minister that no provision is made for the payment of expenses to school trustees.

Why should a distinction be drawn between elected members of school boards and elected members of city councils? There is no distinction in principle. It is quite true, as the minister has said, that in many municipalities no provision whatever is made for the payment of any form of remuneration to members of school boards or boards of education. That is a matter for the provincial legislatures. But where provincial legislation does permit the payment of remuneration to school trustees or members of boards of education, whatever form the organization may take, I submit that there is no ground whatever that will warrant this discrimination, that will acknowledge the principle of permitting an exemption in a case of this kind for expenses incurred by an elected member of a municipal council and will deny similar exemption to an elected member of a board of education or, for that matter, any other elective office on a municipal board.

Then on the other point raised by the hon. member for Lake Centre, I wish to say that there is a straight case of discrimination. I submit that where it is clearly the intention of the provincial legislature to permit municipal councils to pass bylaws or resolutions making retroactive the effect of provisions of the kind contemplated in this section, that determination should be acknowledged by the federal authorities and effect given to it. There is not much use passing legislation here which is pictured as being remedial in nature and retroactive if in fact it is going to be given such a meagre and narrow interpretation that even the intent of provincial legislatures with respect to it is to be ignored or even defeated.

Coming back to the point I made at the beginning, here is a sound principle which is recognized in the section. Why cannot we have an unimpaired recognition of the principle? Why must there be these gaps left in that recognition, especially when the result is discrimination?

Mr. Knowles: The minister said earlier in this discussion that this legislation is based on the fact that there is legislation providing exemption from income tax for the expense allowances paid to members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Abbott: To private members.

Mr. Knowles: The minister is reminding us that it does not apply to him. Of course he gets in addition a motorcar allowance of $2,000 which is free from income tax.

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Fleming: More discrimination.

Mr. Knowles: As hon. members know, this was granted first to members of the House of Commons. Then it was extended to members of provincial legislatures. Now it is being extended to members of municipal councils. As all hon. members know, when some of our friends in the press gallery have nothing better to write about they write about the remuneration received by members of parliament. This is a subject that is frequently written about. In view of recent press rumours to the effect that some day there might be a change in the basis of remuneration for members of parliament, perhaps involving the elimination of any exemption from income tax; if that were done, what would be the minister's attitude toward these exemptions to elected officers in other jurisdictions?

Mr. Abbott: I must confess that I have not given it any thought up to the present time and would not want to give a snap answer. I think the whole situation would have to be looked at. Members of the committee will recall that the tax-free expense allowance provided to members of parliament was the subject of some criticism. I felt that that was unwarranted. I happen to know why it was introduced by my predecessor, Mr. Ilsley.

It was introduced at a time when the income tax rates were just about double what they are now. In order to give members of parliament even a reasonable amount for the added expenses which they were incurring, if it were to be made fully taxable it would have meant raising the indemnity to more than double the $4,000 as it then was. So it was decided to use the method of granting a tax-free expense allowance.

If one were able to get the tax scale down to even more modest proportions than it has been possible to do at the present time I may say—I can only express my personal view—that I would not be unduly enamoured of tax-free expense allowances. When it is possible to do it, I think it is preferable to have the income all taxable and such expenses as are involved paid on an actual basis. That is only my personal opinion and I would not want to feel committed to it. It must depend on the circumstances existing at the time. As members of parliament we must recognize that our remuneration is tied in with the expense allowance.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Do I understand that the minister is not prepared to make a change?

Mr. Abbott: Not this year.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There are one or two comments I should like to make. It seems to me that the minister has not answered the criticism of discrimination. He has been less than convincing when he says that the phrase "paid by the municipal corporation" applied only to municipal officials and not to members of school boards. I wonder, with the discrimination and inequality that have been pointed out, if it would not be reasonable, in view of the fact that this has an impact on every municipality in the dominion, to ask the minister to reconsider it. It is not an overwhelmingly important point, but nevertheless it is of great importance. I really feel that the minister has not answered the criticism which has been made.

Mr. Abbott: I have tried to answer it but probably have not done so satisfactorily. I am not prepared to state that there is discrimination. My personal experience is that most municipalities do not pay their municipal officials. This work is done voluntarily as a public service. It is only in the larger municipalities where the practice has existed of paying the municipal officials. As I said before, it has always been open to any municipal official to receive from the municipality any out of pocket expenses which he has incurred.

This special privilege of a tax-exempt lump sum allowance is being extended for the first time to elected municipal officials. I would want to know a good deal more about the organization of school boards of one kind and another across the country before I would want to extend this principle still further. I do not think I can add anything to what I have said already.

Mr. Green: If a member of a school board is elected in exactly the same way as a member of a council, will he not then be eligible for the benefits of this section? I do not see how in fairness the department can get away from the wording "elected officer of an incorporated municipality." How is the department going to be able to step in and say that an alderman is an elected officer and that a member of a school board is not?

Mr. Abbott: If the member of the school board is in law an elected officer of an incorporated municipality he would benefit from the section. In my province he would not because he would be a member of a completely separate corporation. Perhaps this would apply in British Columbia, but it would not in Quebec.

Mr. Green: I think in British Columbia the member of the school board is elected in the same way as the member of the council.

Mr. Abbott: It is a matter of the legal interpretation of the section.

Mr. Adamson: Mayors, reeves and members of municipal councils particularly in the province of Ontario, are probably the most overworked and underpaid people in public life in the whole country. I think this is an extremely good principle and absolutely justified. We must also remember that mayors and reeves of most municipalities have to fight an election every year, which I think is archaic in principle.

Mr. Abbott: As I have indicated, I do not like the principle very much, any more than I like it for ourselves, but if we are going to do it for ourselves we may as well extend it to others.

Mr. Adamson: Apparently this section is repeated in section 47.

Mr. Abbott: That is simply for the revised statutes. In effect half of the bill is a re-enactment of the amending provisions for the revised statutes. In all these taxing statutes we have to have a double enactment of the sections because, as my hon. friend knows, we are amending the new revised statutes this year. Therefore the section to which he refers is really an enactment of this provision for the purpose of the revised statutes.

Mr. Adamson: I read it rather rapidly. Is it in identically the same language?

Mr. Abbott: It should be, with appropriate references, if necessary, to the revised statutes, but it is the same provision.

Mr. Montgomery: In subsection 2 it says that this section is applicable to the 1949 and subsequent taxation years. That is the part which is objectionable in my part of the country. The objection is along the lines that the hon. member mentioned a few minutes ago. In New Brunswick, and I think also in the other maritime provinces, there are a few elected school board members and to my knowledge they do not get any remuneration. Most of them are now appointed and are therefore out of the picture. But if you are going to permit officials of certain cities and towns in the dominion to go back and claim for 1946 I think it is discriminatory and unfair to us in those provinces that do not have that legislation. I feel that part should come out of the act, and I voice my objection to it because it is discriminatory so far as we are concerned. With respect to the future, that is a different matter. I agree with the principle.

Mr. Abbott: I cannot add anything to what I said to the hon. member for Lake Centre on that point.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Employer's contribution to pension funds.

Mr. Fleming: There is a point I should like to raise with respect to pension funds. I should like to urge on the minister that the time has come for some review of the whole position of pension funds in relation to section 11 of the Income Tax Act. The minister has received extensive representations this year with a view to broadening the provisions of section 11 of the act. I am sure there is nothing I can tell him on that subject that he does not already know. I have seen something of the briefs that have been submitted to him. The representations are along this line, that section 11 is much too limited in its scope at present and that the time has come when it should be extended to groups other than simply employees. There is a broad range of people in this country who are members of various kinds of groups who do not fall under the classification of employees, and no provision whatever is made for them at the present time in this law in relation to any pension plan that they as members of professional, labour or business associations may choose to set up.

Representations have come to the minister along this line proposing quite detailed provisions to deal with such cases. These representations come from responsible organizations and quite broadly representative associations. I know of one representation that was made to the minister on behalf of a group of such associations which included the following: The Associated Dentists Co-Operative, the Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of Ontario, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Medical Association, the Certified Public Accountants Association of Ontario, the Commercial Travellers Association of Canada, the Law Society of Upper Canada, the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada and the Toronto stock exchange.

There are ample safeguards that are possible. I know the minister has been somewhat concerned about trying to hedge any such extension of the scope of the legislation with ample safeguards. Many safeguards have been proposed, many of them of a quite practical nature which will in my view, after some study of the plans, adequately prevent any abuse of plans of this kind. There is comparable legislation in the United States congress. It seems to me without labouring the point—and, as I say, I am not speaking on it at length because the minister is already fully familiar with it—that effect should be given to representations of this nature and that the law should be amended to enlarge the present scope of section 11 so that organizations of the kind I have mentioned, including business associations as well as bona fide professional associations, would have the benefit of it.

Indeed, the scope of the proposed amendment would extend its benefits, according to the submission that has been made to the minister, in these words, to "bona fide agricultural, labour, business, industrial or professional associations, or similar organizations." I am aware that the minister has not said a final no to these representations and I am glad that he has given some indication that he is prepared to give the matter further consideration. For my part I should like to say that I hope as a result of further study a way may be opened up for amendment of section 11 at an early date that will enlarge the scope of its beneficial effects.

Mr. Abbott: I thank my hon. friend most sincerely for raising this most important question because, as he has said, it is one that has been engaging the attention of myself and my officials for a number of years. I decided that this year I should like, if the occasion offered, to make a considered and somewhat detailed statement as to the progress that we have made up to this time in considering this important question.

During the past year I have received, as my hon. friend has said, quite a number of requests from professional groups urging amendments to the Income Tax Act which would allow a deduction for income tax purposes similar to that now provided for employee contributions to approved pension plans. In effect, the substance of these requests is for tax postponement on savings devoted to the purchase of retirement annuities. This request, although supported by a wider group this year than ever before, is of course by no means new. It has been put forward each year, I think, over a considerable number of years and, as I say, a great deal of attention has been given to it both by myself and by officials of my department. But I have not yet been satisfied that I should recommend to the house this new departure in principle under the Income Tax Act. As I said at the outset, I welcome this opportunity to give the house some of the reasons for the position I have taken on the matter.

First of all I should like to explain how it comes about that employees are given a deduction for their contributions to approved pension plans. Some solution had to be found to the purely technical problem of preventing double tax on pension income. All would agree, I think, with the general rule that income should not be taxed both when it goes into the fund and again when it is paid out. A decision had to be made as to when such income should be taxed. As the committee will recall, following the Ives commission report some years ago we adopted the uniform system of taxing pension income when it is received as a pension out of the fund and freeing from tax, up to certain defined limits, income paid into the fund.

Personally I think that was a wise decision, for the alternative would have meant taxing income when paid into the fund, that is, taxing the employee in a year on income which in fact he never received in that year, the employer having deducted the proper amount from his wage or salary and paid it directly into the pension fund. Likewise, the employee does not receive currently that which the employer contributes on his behalf into the fund. It would have been a still greater anomaly to have required the employee to include in his income for tax purposes this additional amount placed to his credit by the employer in the year in which he actually earned this benefit. These are problems which were avoided by the principle of taxing only at the time the employee received his pension.

It is seen, therefore, that tax postponement for employees was introduced to solve the technical problem of removing double taxation and to avoid taxing employees on benefits earned in a year but in respect of which no cash equivalent was received in the year. I might now point out that neither of these problems exists in the case of the professional groups which have asked for tax postponement on savings; that is, their income is not now taxed twice and they are not taxed on income not actually received or receivable in the year. Accordingly, tax postponement granted to them would be a purely gratuitous measure of tax abatement not justified by the necessity of meeting technical problems in the taxing statute.

I think it is fair to say that, although the government is interested in seeing pension plans adopted in industry, the tax postponement feature did not arise out of a policy designed specifically to give positive benefits to taxpayers. Rather it was adopted to remove existing tax obstacles to the reasonable operation of pension plans. In view of these facts it is not very effective, it seems to me, to attempt to argue by analogy that, because employees have tax postponement as a solution to their particular problem, therefore self-employed persons should likewise have it in respect of their voluntary savings.

Much of the discussion of this subject alleges that the existing provisions discriminate unfairly against the self-employed who cannot participate in a pension plan. It might be suggested, I think, that this difference in the relative positions of the two groups can very easily be exaggerated. Some aspects are frequently overlooked. For example, those who devote their savings towards the purchase of endowment policies or annuities receive very reasonable tax treatment in that they are never taxed at all on the interest earned by the funds paid in right up to the date of maturity of the endowment or annuity contract. The employee in a pension plan, however, pays tax on all the interest earned on his payments into the fund right from the day of his first instalment payment. This, I suggest, is an extremely important difference in the two situations, and is one that is rarely recognized by those arguing for the benefits of pension plan legislation. Furthermore, in the case of the employee who put his savings into a pension plan, those savings are completely locked up and are not available to him in the ordinary course of events. The self-saver, on the other hand, always has his assets in a form available to him for emergency or for convenience. There is, of course, no double taxation of funds used by the self-saver to purchase an endowment or annuity because the proceeds of their savings at maturity are tax free whether taken in a lump sum or in the form of an annuity. I suggest that an objective comparison of the relative positions of the two groups raises some question about accepting too readily the view that the self-employed are discriminated against.

Most of the requests which I have received for amendments to allow tax postponement on savings have come from well organized professional groups with national organizations. It seems clear, however, that once the law departed from its present principle of confining tax postponement to employees there would be no logical stopping point short of allowing this privilege to everybody, not merely to the self-employed but also to all employees who are not now covered by pension plans. The fact that certain groups have professional status with well recognized national organizations could not, I think, be regarded as a proper criterion for securing particular benefits under tax legislation. It is, therefore, on this basis of general applicability that I have had to consider this question of allowing tax postponement for savings.

The implications of such a move are extremely far-reaching. It is difficult to know what volume of savings would be attracted by this immediate monetary incentive, but I am inclined to think it would be extremely substantial. Most people, I think, would feel that they could not readily forgo immediate dollar savings of quite substantial proportions in their annual income tax bill if the proposal were adopted. It should be remembered that the funds devoted towards the purchase of retirement annuities would not necessarily have to come out of additional savings, as is the case where employees have contributions deducted from current wages and salaries. In the case of the self-employed person, who generally will have some other capital assets, he could secure the tax saving by merely changing the form of his assets. He could, for example, sell stocks and use the proceeds as an instalment payment on a retirement annuity. Again, it is not easy to estimate to what extent there would be a transformation in the form of capital assets now held by the ordinary citizen. However, whatever the volume of this switching of assets, it would be significant, I think, that under our tax structure monetary incentives would be offered for Canadians to invest their savings in a direction where the persons utilizing them would invest them almost entirely in debt or fixed interest bearing securities. I am not sure that at this stage of Canada's development I would like to take the responsibility for directing the savings of the Canadian people away from equities into debt securities. To me this would be an ill-advised policy in a country where there is such an enormous demand for risk capital for the development of our country and where the opportunities for participating in the growth and development of our country are so important.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are some of the reasons which have caused me to hesitate about accepting the representations which have been made to me on this question. As my hon. friend from Eglinton has pointed out, I do not regard myself as in a position to be dogmatic about the matter, but I do feel that the implications of allowing tax postponement which encourages savings in special directions are such as to warrant the most careful study. As I said at the outset of this statement, I have not felt that I wanted to take the responsibility for such a far-reaching move at this time.

Mr. Fleming: I am sure the house appreciates that the minister in his statement has been as comprehensive as he has in the review of the problem. However, I may say that I am disappointed in the attitude it indicates, because I had hoped the minister was more open-minded on the subject.

Mr. Abbott: I have not taken a final position but the difficulties, the inequities, still appal me.

Mr. Fleming: I did not say there were no problems attached to it, but the emphasis is laid on the problems and the minister minimizes the desirable objectives attached to it. The statement does leave me with some sense of disappointment and I wish to mention very briefly several of the points which the minister has made. I am not going to attempt a detailed refutation of all the points he has made—

Mr. Abbott: I put them forward for consideration, as my hon. friend will appreciate.

Mr. Fleming: Quite. In the first place, the minister has sought to distinguish the position of the employee because whatever is paid into the pension fund as his contribution does not come into his own hands in the form of income. I think that is not an accurate statement. It may well be that the money does not come into the hands of the employee and flow through those hands into the fund, but by arrangement with the employer the employee's pension contributions go directly from the employer into the pension fund. Surely that distinction is a matter of form only and not a matter of substance. There is no essential distinction in that regard between the case of an employee's contribution to a pension fund and that of a self-employed person.

Then there is the point made by the minister with regard to discrimination. I think, in the light of the discussion this afternoon, that I am just as allergic to any form of discrimination as the minister is, but, Mr. Chairman, if the principle is sound that the type of remedial legislation which I have been advocating should not be confined to members of bona fide associations or organizations, all right. Then let us have that wider recognition of the principle—but I do say that the principle is sound.

The reason this matter comes before the minister in the present form, namely a request on behalf of certain bona fide types of organizations, is that it was possible through such organizations to guarantee that there would not be abuses and to assure that the pension funds that would be established would be bona fide pension funds, that the contributions would be made into those funds and that the benefits would be such as were indicated by those responsible for the administration of the funds.

There is nothing unusual about that. That is part of the web and woof of the whole recognition in section 11 of the Income Tax Act of the pension fund; because it is not every pension fund existing today, even as between employer and employee, that is recognized for the purposes of section 11 by the minister. It is only those that are approved. This is not a question of discrimination at all. It was a question of guaranteeing the existence of such factors as will win the approval of the minister, just as you have provision made for approval by the minister under section 11(g) in the present act.

Let us consider further for just a moment the scope of the type of recognition that is being asked. It was proposed that it should be extended to bona fide agricultural, labour, business, industrial or professional associations or similar organizations. Let us take the case of a labour union today. If a labour union, within its own organization, decides to set up some form of pension or annuity scheme for its own members, their contributions thereto are not treated as exempt under section 11. Then let us take an agricultural organization. If a group of farmers in a bona fide organization decide to set up a pension plan, their personal contributions to that pension plan do not win any form of exemption under section 11 today. But the employee of an employer finds himself in a favoured position, notwithstanding what the minister had to say—which I think is a matter of form and by no means a matter of substance—because the contribution does not go into the hands of employees but goes direct from the employer into the pension fund. That is no basis of distinction in principle at all.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend wants to be fair. My real basis of distinction is why should one form of saving be singled out for tax postponement. That is the fundamental consideration.

Mr. Fleming: That is the basis upon which the minister started his statement. I took the key struck by the minister in the opening part of his statement. I think there is no basis of distinction between the pension fund created by employer and employee on the one hand and the pension fund created by bona fide organizations on the other.

The recognition given by the act today, which the minister has defended in its limited terms, is confined to this particular situation, employer-employee pension funds—and not even all of those because they still must meet certain yardsticks laid down by the department before it will give its approval.

I do not wish to use the word "discriminatory" as applied to the present legislation. It is a very limited form of recognition of a principle that I think the government ought to encourage, namely the provision by people for their needs in the case of retirement. It is a very sound form of security that uses fiscal methods that are open to the minister in the form of the income tax to encourage people to provide for their old age, the days when after retirement they cease to be earning an income for their own support.

Here is a method at hand, it seems to me, not on the basis of discrimination but on the basis of the extension of a provision that has been recognized today and is fully established within the scope of the Income Tax Act. So far as I know, nobody has questioned the principle involved in section 11(f) and (g). It has never been questioned. It is accepted by everybody. It is fully established. If that principle is sound—and I think every member of this committee would say it is sound—I think there is no adequate answer to the plea that that sound principle now ought to be more widely extended.

I wish therefore to urge it again. I hope that the minister will see more merit in the proposal and fewer difficulties than he indicated in his comprehensive statement today, and that very soon we shall see an effort made, which will take the form of an amendment to this section, to give the kind of encouragement I have spoken of to pension funds established by bona fide agricultural, labour, business, industrial or professional associations or similar organizations.

I read earlier an enumeration of certain organizations who were parties to the submission of the brief to the minister. I want to make it quite clear to the committee that they did not ask it for themselves alone. They were not seeking any discriminatory advantage for themselves. They were simply putting before the minister a case for the recognition, within this principle to which I have referred, of all organizations within the type of bona fide organizations to which I have referred. Let there be no thought in the mind of any hon. member that these organizations were seeking some selfish or discriminatory advantage.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the principle is sound and that it is worthy of extension. Many of these problems which the minister raised in his statement this afternoon it seems to me are capable of being dealt with by the application of the ingenuity that exists within the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue on the administrative side. They have overcome many other problems. This one is not free from difficulty, but I am convinced that, if there is a will here, a way will be found to overcome any administrative difficulties that the minister's statement may have conjured up.

Mr. Abbott: May I just add a word here. I made my statement today in the hope that it would be subjected to close critical analysis not only by members of the House of Commons but by members of the legal and accounting professions and those who are as interested in this question as I am. I hope that it will be given that kind of analysis.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I just want to add a word. I am impressed by the difficulties outlined by the minister, but I share the feeling of the hon. member for Eglinton in the picture as he just presented it of this being purely a technical question by reason of the fact that the money did not go into the hands of the pensioners. That seems to me to be technical. The more substantial difficulty does seem to be that of distinguishing between the various kinds of funds.

The one point I wish to make is as to the reality of the problem. With the steeply graduated income tax we all know how difficult it is, even for people with substantial incomes, to save. When the minister spoke about the position of the class that we are talking about now, and mentioned their shares, their bonds and the difficulty of administration because of the changing about of those, may I say that after all that applies to only a small fraction of those we are talking about. We are really talking about people who, as things stand now, find it extremely difficult, as the hon. member for Eglinton has said, to provide for their security, but who would like to do it notwithstanding the fact that the difficulties are great. I take it from the minister that he is pursuing the inquiry and that it is going to be earnestly pursued.

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend knows they have a similar problem in the United States, because their system is somewhat similar, and they have not been able to solve it either. I have asked myself, if we are going to do that, why we should not allow the deduction of premiums on endowment policies and some of these other things. The thing is filled with complexity. I can assure the committee that it is far from one of those simple open and shut cases.

Mr. Fulton: I think we should all approach this matter in the spirit in which the minister has left it; that is, he has given us a statement on which he is going to welcome suggestions and analysis. Perhaps it is a little premature to be suggesting that we are offering a detailed consideration of the matter, because we have not had the opportunity of studying it. I should like to ask the minister whether he himself will not give more consideration to, and perhaps indeed a further elaboration of, the statement he made at the beginning or near the beginning of his presentation, that to extend the principle of tax postponement on payments into pension funds to those who are self-employed would be a new departure in principle.

I would ask him to consider that very carefully because it seems to me it is important to be clear as to whether it is in fact a departure in principle or merely an extension of an already established principle. The mere fact that money paid into a pension fund in the case of approved pension plans under an employer-employee arrangement is paid directly by the employer into the fund instead of going through the hands of the employee to me is not really a differentiation in principle from the case where a self-employed person receives the income and then pays into a pension or retirement fund which he is trying to set up for himself. The fact is, and I am sure the minister will not question this, nor anyone else, the portion of his wages which is paid on behalf of the employee into the pension fund is nevertheless wages.

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: Surely no one would deny that it is wages; and if it were not for the provisions of section 11 it would be taxable income as wages or salary or earnings.

Well, now, in the case of a professional or a self-employed person—let us not confine it exclusively to the professions—a person who is carrying on a small contracting business is certainly not a professional man, but he is not very far removed from the status of an actual wage earner. He is in fact contributing to the development of the country, and he is providing employment for others. Yet just because he is self-employed, his payments into the pension plan or retirement plan which he is trying to build up for himself are not tax-postponed. I cannot see that there is any distinction in principle, because the moneys he pays into the fund form part of his general earnings at the beginning, and then are paid out by him. I cannot see any distinction in principle there from the fact that the moneys paid into an approved pension plan on behalf of the employee are in fact part of his wages, but instead of being paid by him are paid into the pension plan.

I think that is an important hurdle to overcome. That is why I think it is worth while doing some fairly close reasoning on it. I would ask the minister to do some more, because it seems to me if it could be agreed that this is not a departure in principle, as he suggests, but merely an extension of an already established principle, perhaps the first and most important hurdle would have been overcome.

As to one of the other difficulties raised by the minister himself, namely that to make this extension would perhaps open up very wide fields of conversion of savings into interest-bearing securities rather than into equity capital, I would ask the minister whether he does not think a practical solution and one not causing very great difficulty would be found by placing the same limitation on the amount that might be paid into self-employed persons' pension funds as I understand is now placed on the amount of employees' earnings; that is, a ceiling on the amount that may be paid into the pension fund and thus on which the tax is postponed. Surely the difficulty seen by the minister and stated there would be very real if there were no limitation on the ceiling, so that all savings might eventually be channelled into a new form of investment. But if you placed a ceiling on it—and I believe all the plans that have been suggested do envisage a ceiling—it seems to me it cuts down that difficulty very considerably.

May I just add a word on that one point. It does seem to me hardly a valid objection for the minister to raise that difficulty in the way of making a tax exemption for payments into pension funds by self-employed persons, when in fact he does not appear to view with alarm the present situation with respect to the investment of pension plan funds which are established for employees. In other words, the point I am trying to make is that the pension funds established under an employer-employee relation on which there is a tax exemption are invested now, as I understand it—certainly a great majority of them are—in interest-bearing securities. I should doubt very much whether any one of these approved plans would be open to investment in equity capital or common stocks. If the minister is prepared to contemplate that form of investment in interest-bearing securities, then why is he so horrified at the idea that this type of pension plan might also have its funds invested in non-equity capital? It seems that what is fair for one is fair for the other, and the difficulty is greatly diminished when you realize and place on the new proposal the same relative ceiling that now applies to the old one.

I want to express realization of the fact that there are difficulties, and that no one can ask the minister to make any sudden or snap decision. It is obvious that the matter has been considered by him most carefully for some time. Perhaps, however, one might be permitted to express here the hope that, as the minister himself has indicated, he may not be occupying the position he now holds for very much longer—

Mr. Abbott: A little new blood would do no harm.

Mr. Fulton: —he too will be concerned about leaving for himself a lasting monument in the affections of the Canadian people by taking at least one forward step along the lines that we are now urging.

Mr. Abbott: I thank my hon. friend for his generous reference. I do not think I shall attempt to discuss this admittedly very difficult problem any further today. He has raised one or two very relevant points. If such a plan as he was discussing were to be introduced it would be necessary to impose a ceiling. I think what has been asked is double the present ceiling, because the self-employed would be providing not only his own contribution but the employer's contribution as well.

With respect to the question of trustee funds, I am told that in the United States some of them are now deciding to invest the pension funds in equities. There are all these factors; but the problem which has caused me the great difficulty is what particular type of savings we would single out for this tax postponement. I tried to make clear in my statement that the discrimination against the self-saver is not as great as it might appear to be on the surface. I hope we shall have a further discussion about this at some other time. The purpose of my statement was to put forward certain considerations which I believe are very relevant to this matter, and that they should be subject to careful and serious critical analysis.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As a matter of interest, are approved pension funds now required to be invested in trustees' security?

Mr. Abbott: If they are trustee plans I am told that is the case, yes.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I do not know whether this is the exact time and place that I should ask this question, but on the budget debate I pointed out that there were a number of concerns and firms that were adopting profit-sharing plans, and the problem arises of deferring the payments to employees for some considerable time. To encourage some firms to introduce this type of plan some suggestions were made to the minister. Will he comment at this time?

Mr. Abbott: Those plans, as I recall it, are not plans where there is any pension element at all. It is merely, as my hon. friend said, profit sharing. But the shareholder does not get profits in cash. They are accumulated to his credit on the books of the company. Under those circumstances we have never given tax postponement for deferred profit sharing. I think that would be a real departure in principle which it would be difficult to justify in respect of other taxpayers. The plans are probably very desirable plans. But, whatever they may be, we do not feel we could justify recommending taxation postponement in connection with them. The immediate sharing of profits is not paid out in cash, but it is paid out at a later date.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Amount received by broker to be included.

Mr. Abbott: I have some amendments. Perhaps before moving them I might give a brief explanation, unless some other hon. members would wish to speak first.

The actual form of the amendment is somewhat technical because two or three sections are involved, but what the section in the bill intended to accomplish was this: As the committee knows, brokers carry stocks in street names, and receive dividends on those stocks. They do not know at the time to whom the dividends belong. They set them up in their books as liabilities. The section as contained in the act provided that they would have to pay tax on the dividends in the future, and the right to claim deduction—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What has happened in the past in this connection?

Mr. Abbott: I am told that in the past they have just been carried on the books, and in some cases have been taken into the incomes of the firms. The original proposal was that in future these dividends would have to be taken into the firms' incomes and be subject to tax, but that when paid out to the real or actual owners, deductions could be claimed.

We have now received representations from some of the leading members of the profession, and from officers of the stock exchange, in which they tell us that, in fact and in law, they do not consider these funds to be their funds. They carry them on their books as a type of trust fund, but they do not consider that they can ever go into their accounts as income to the firms or to the brokers.

They have been informed by their legal advisers that there is no statute of limitations applying with respect to these receipts, and that there is always a claim there. Under those circumstances the proposed amendments will provide that they will take the full amounts standing on their books as being income held for undisclosed principals. They will deduct 25 per cent as a withholding tax at the source. Then they will continue to hold the moneys to their credit in the books. When an undisclosed principal comes forward, if he ever does, and claims a payment of dividends accruing to his credit, he gets them and he takes credit for the 25 per cent which has been withheld at the source. And if by any chance his effective rate of tax were less than 25 per cent he would get a refund.

That is the plan being substituted for what is contained in the bill now before the committee. It seems to me that it meets the position taken by the recipients of these dividends, that they have never belonged to them. On the other hand it is clear that they are income belonging to someone. So it has seemed reasonable to provide for a withholding tax of 25 per cent, which the real owner can claim as a credit if and when he gets the dividends.

That is the way in which it will operate. As I say, that withholding tax will not be exigible until the 1954 period. And, if one may use a slang expression, if it should develop that there are some bugs in this thing which we do not now see, there will be ample opportunity to correct the inequality. But the essential thing we are trying to do is to be fair in these matters, but at the same time to get a tax on what admittedly is income subject to tax.

That is the purpose. I have a number of amendments to move but, before doing so, I would be prepared to listen to any questions hon. members may have to ask.

Mr. Fleming: May I suggest it might be better if we could see the amendments before we attempt to ask questions. The changes involved in the amendments, as outlined by the minister, will have to be considered carefully. It is now two minutes to five and, as no doubt we will proceed with the discussion of public and private bills at five o'clock, perhaps the minister would be prepared to let this section stand until this evening, so we could examine the amendments in the meantime.

Mr. Abbott: I think that is an excellent suggestion. I shall ask one of my colleagues to move the three amendments. The first of these is that section 5 of Bill 228, to amend the Income Tax Act, be deleted. That is the section we now have under consideration.

Then the second amendment is that sections 6 to 19 inclusive be renumbered as sections 5 to 18, respectively. That is purely a clerical change.

Then the substantive amendment is as follows:

That the following clause be inserted as clause 19 thereof.

"19. (1) Section 44 of the said act is amended by adding the following subsections thereto:

'(4) Where an amount has been received by a broker or dealer in securities in the period of twelve months immediately preceding a taxation year as or in respect of dividends or shares the beneficial ownership of which is unknown to him at the end of the taxation year, the broker or dealer shall remit an amount equal to 25 per cent thereof to the Receiver General of Canada at such time as may be prescribed on account of the beneficial owner's tax under this part or part II for the taxation year in which the dividend was received by the broker or dealer.

(5) Where an amount has been remitted to the Receiver General under subsection (4), it shall for all the purposes of this act be deemed,

(a) to have been received by the beneficial owner of the dividends, and

(b) to have been deducted or withheld from such amount as would otherwise be payable by the broker or dealer to the beneficial owner in respect of the dividends.'

(2) This section is applicable to the 1954 and subsequent taxation years.

(3) Where an amount has been received by a broker or dealer in securities in the 1952 or a previous taxation year as or in respect of dividends on shares the beneficial ownership of which is unknown to him at the end of the 1954 taxation year, that amount shall, for the purposes of section 44 of the Income Tax Act as amended by this section, be deemed to have been received by him in the period of twelve months immediately preceding the 1954 taxation year."

I shall ask one of my colleagues to move these amendments. At the same time I would ask him to move the corresponding amendments to comply with part II of the bill, the sections covering the revised statutes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move accordingly. I also move:

That the following clause be added to the bill as clause 64 thereof:

"64. (1) Section 47 of the said act is amended by adding the following subsections thereto:

'(4) Where an amount has been received by a broker or dealer in securities in the period of twelve months immediately preceding a taxation year as or in respect of dividends or shares the beneficial ownership of which is unknown to him at the end of the taxation year, the broker or dealer shall remit an amount equal to 25 per cent thereof to the Receiver General of Canada at such time as may be prescribed on account of the beneficial owner's tax under this part or part III for the taxation year in which the dividend was received by the broker or dealer.

(5) Where an amount has been remitted to the receiver general under subsection (4), it shall for all purposes of this act be deemed,

(a) to have been received by the beneficial owner of the dividends, and

(b) to have been deducted or withheld from such amount as would otherwise be payable by the broker or dealer to the beneficial owner in respect of the dividends.'

(2) This section is applicable to the 1954 and subsequent taxation years.

(3) Where an amount has been received by a broker or dealer in securities in the 1952 or a previous taxation year as or in respect of dividends on shares the beneficial ownership of which is unknown to him at the end of the 1954 taxation year, that amount shall, for the purposes of section 47 of the Income Tax Act as amended by this section, be deemed to have been received by him in the period of twelve months immediately preceding the 1954 taxation year".

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, we shall proceed to the consideration of public and private bills.

MID-CONTINENT PIPELINES LIMITED

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 189, to incorporate Mid-Continent Pipelines Limited—Mr. Larson—Mr. Robinson in the chair.

Sections 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 6—Power to construct and operate pipe lines.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, would you read the amendments which were made to this section in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines?

The Deputy Chairman: In line 14 the words "or outside" have been deleted; in line 19 the words "and/or international" have been deleted; in line 26 the word "all" has been added after "that" and the words "the main" and "line or" have been deleted.

Mr. Fulton: Is the effect of the amendments to the section such as to require the construction of the whole line within Canada?

The Deputy Chairman: I am afraid I cannot give an opinion on that. The most I can do for the hon. member would be to read the section as amended.

Mr. Green: I do not think there is any need to do that. I moved these amendments in the committee and they were accepted. The purpose was to provide that all the pipe lines installed by this company would be entirely within Canada.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

[The Chairman.]

Sections 7 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Bater (for Mr. Larson) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Fulton: By leave.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT REGARDING POLL CLERKS AND ADVANCE POLLS

The house resumed, from Friday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Adamson, for the second reading of Bill No. 224, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Adamson: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) moved the adjournment of the debate. I do not know whether he wishes to proceed, and I am entirely in his hands. Otherwise I am perfectly willing to have this stand.

Mr. Harris: On a point of order, I would prefer to let the matter stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stands.

The business under private and public bills having been exhausted, the house will continue with the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 228, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Robinson in the chair.

On section 5—Amount received by broker to be included.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May I remind the minister of the arrangement whereby section 5 was to stand until eight o'clock.

Mr. Abbott: That was our arrangement to enable the committee to study the amendment.

Section stands.

On section 6—Interest on bonds.

Mr. Fleming: I am aware of the difficulty which necessitated this section, and I am not going to quarrel with the method of solving the problem presented by the purchase of securities in the middle of the interest period, as proposed by the new section 19A. However, a question does arise with respect to subsection 2, which provides that the new section is applicable to the 1952 and subsequent taxation years. It is to be made retroactive, in other words, for only one year, and that creates the problem.

It seems to me that the retroactive provision should not be limited to the year 1952, because there are others in years prior to 1952 who have undoubtedly consistently filed and reported their income by including accruals on sales and deducting accruals on purchases of interest-bearing securities. I would submit to the minister for that reason that the retroactive effect of this remedial legislation should not be confined to the year 1952 but should be extended further back. In other cases in the bill we have retroactive provisions extending back even to the year 1946, so I do not think there is any problem at all in the way of extending the retroactive operation of the new remedial section 19A to an earlier year.

Mr. Abbott: In point of fact it was not possible to introduce this provision prior to 1952, and it did not affect anybody on an accrual basis. I am informed that by making it applicable to the 1952 period, which is last year, it will cover all proper cases.

Mr. Fleming: What the minister has said may offer a practical solution to the problem. Can we have the assurance that no attempt will be made to go back of the year 1952 in order to assess income in the form of accruals of interest on the basis on which they have been in process of being assessed within the past few months in the light of a certain decision, against the effect of which the new section 19A is devised?

Mr. Abbott: I am informed that the problem will not arise in practice, that up to 1951 that was the way it was handled.

Mr. Fleming: In other words we have the assurance that if we pass the legislation in the present form there will be no attempt to apply to 1951 and earlier years the effect of the decision against which this new section is intended to relieve the taxpayer.

Mr. Abbott: That is my understanding. It is to ensure continuity.

Section agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Dependent children.

Mr. Knowles: Clause 8 is one that we all welcome. It provides that the exemption for a child attending a school or university shall continue even when the child is over the age of 21 years. When we were on clause 1 of the bill the minister indicated that he was making the provisions of that clause retroactive because in his view an inequity had been suffered. May I ask why that same principle is not applied to this clause? Some of us feel that parents have suffered an inequity for a number of years because they have not been allowed this exemption where the children concerned were over the age of 21 years. Why is it that an inequity in one place is taken care of by retroactive legislation but not in another?

Mr. Abbott: This is a new provision. It is being put in the act as a new provision. We are making progress in this case. In the other case to which my hon. friend refers, that provision was made because the people who incurred the liability were really misled. Nobody was misled about this provision. I am personally affected. If it were made retroactive I would get an extra $400 exemption last year, but I am not going to make it retroactive. It starts with the current year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): During the discussion at the resolution stage a question was raised with the parliamentary assistant with respect to whether there are any regulations defining what attendance at a school or university is going to mean. There are some cases where the person is attending a conservatory of music and he is not there all day long because he has to spend most of his time practising.

Mr. Abbott: It will be a matter for the courts to determine if there is a difference of opinion between the taxpayer and the taxing authorities. I would not attempt to interpret it. It is intended to have a very broad application, but the person must be in full-time attendance at a school or university.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Medical expenses.

Mr. Knowles: Assuming that it is not possible to persuade the minister to make a further change in this matter at the present time, I rise to serve notice on him, or whoever may be minister of finance when he lays down that portfolio, that I for one intend to keep up the effort to get the floor under medical expenses allowed as deductions for income tax purposes wiped out altogether. Naturally we welcome the change that is being made in that the floor is being reduced from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. We welcome that change even as we welcomed the change back in 1944 when Mr. Ilsley saw fit to reduce the floor from the original 5 per cent to 4 per cent after considerable agitation on the floor of the House of Commons.

I still find it impossible to follow the argument of the Minister of Finance that there is anything sacred about what he calls the average of medical expenses, as though that average should provide a floor of this kind. When a Canadian taxpayer is hit with medical expenses—and when these expenses hit they are usually quite substantial—it is no consolation to him to be told that the extra bills with which he is confronted are just the average, up to 3 per cent of his income. The plain fact of the matter is that when such expenses hit, particularly when they come unexpectedly, the average Canadian is not in a position to meet them. I think it is pretty generally held that it would be only fair to wipe out the floor altogether and grant medical expenses right from the first dollar as deductible for income tax purposes.

I should throw in the qualifying sentence that I do not disagree with the ceiling the minister has placed on this exemption, even as he has a ceiling on charitable donations, but to me there is no justification whatsoever for the present floor. I did not happen to be here at the time the budget debate was in process. It was unfortunate; but it so happened that because I was not able to be here, because I was back home, I was able to get right away the reaction of the man in the street to the budget as a whole and to its various items. I can tell the minister that there was a great deal of disappointment on the part of ordinary Canadians that he only reduced the floor from 4 per cent to 3 per cent instead of wiping it out altogether.

Canadians have not forgotten the fact that a year ago the House of Commons supported a motion which went as far as a private member's motion could go in asking that consideration be given to the complete removal of the floor, and that the minister did not see fit to remove it.

Mr. Abbott: Because the minister allowed that motion to be put to the house.

Mr. Knowles: We have been over that.

Mr. Abbott: He will not make that mistake again, I can assure you. It has been misrepresented ever since.

Mr. Knowles: The minister must have known what he was doing when he allowed his parliamentary assistant to speak in favour of that motion.

Mr. Abbott: Of course he knew what he was doing.

Mr. Knowles: I submit the newspapers of the country were not all wrong in the view they took as a result of the decision on that occasion. At any rate, even if the minister thinks he made a mistake, he helped to bring about the realization on the part of the Canadian people that here was a reform that was needed; here was an injustice that should be removed; and I am quite satisfied that it is held far and wide throughout Canada that there should be no floor of this kind at all. Our efforts across the years have paid dividends to some extent in that we have had this floor reduced, first from 5 per cent to 4 per cent, and now from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. I can tell the minister that we shall keep up our efforts. I hope that in another year it will be wiped out altogether, and that it will be recognized that medical expenses right from the first dollar up to the ceiling set under the act should be allowed as deductible for income tax purposes.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I would like to ask the minister how this works out. Does it apply at all to 1952, where medical expenses were incurred in 1952 but not paid until 1953?

Mr. Abbott: It is on a paid basis. Subsection 3 points out that fact. The 3 per cent floor applies to the 1953 tax year; and if the expense is paid in 1953, whenever it was incurred, if it is in excess of 3 per cent it is allowable. The taxpayer can select a 12-month period which ends in 1953 in which to apply the 3 per cent floor.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Dividends received by a corporation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister give a little addition to the rather brief explanation here?

Mr. Abbott: This is a very technical amendment. The committee may recall that two or three years ago when we introduced the system of permitting 15 per cent tax to be paid on undistributed surpluses, we put in what might be colloquially described as a block. We did not allow surpluses in controlled companies to be gotten out through reorganization in a way that would in fact provide an evasion of the intention of the act. The block was a pretty rigid one, and it was found that in a certain number of cases a perfectly legitimate reorganization of the corporate structure between parent and subsidiary was prevented by this rigid block.

This section has been worked out by the officials of my department after a study of circumstances in particular cases in order to remove those inequities. I have been assured, and I am satisfied myself, that it does remove the discrimination which existed with respect to those particular concerns of which there are a fairly limited number.

The section is self-explanatory, and it provides that under the circumstances set out a corporation may deduct from income all dividends received from a controlled subsidiary corporation.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12—Payments out of pension fund.

Mr. Knowles: This is the clause on which the minister was going to give the explanation of the provision he has made for Canadian National Railways pension refunds.

Mr. Abbott: The provision would apply, of course, to any similar circumstances. As will be seen from the section, the words which have been added provide for cases where a payment is received by a pensioner by virtue of an amendment to the plan, although he continues to be an employee to which the plan is applicable; and that was the case with respect to the Canadian National Railways refunds. As a result of an amendment to the plan an employee may have received a fairly substantial lump sum payment. In the absence of this provision that lump sum payment would be taxable in its entirety in the year received and it would be taxed at the taxpayer's very highest bracket.

Mr. Knowles: The minister might have explained that these lump sum payments are simply refunds in view of a change in the plan.

Mr. Abbott: I should have explained that they come as a result of a change in the plan. The provision which is made here is that they will be treated as lump sum payments and will be taxed only at the average tax rate for the three preceding years. They will have the option of being taxed as a lump sum payment at the average rate applicable during the three years preceding receipt of the payment. In effect it is the same as any other lump sum payment. My information is that this is considered to be satisfactory by the employees who are affected. I think it provides a happy solution to what admittedly would have been an inequity if it had been allowed to stand.

Mr. Gillis: Has any consideration been given to the position of the widow of a serviceman who may happen to pass away while in the permanent service owing to a condition that was not pensionable? The minister may remember that I took the matter up on several occasions, and I cited a case in point where a young man had served for ten years, contributed to the superannuation fund and then passed away due to a heart condition. The widow was not pensionable, and she was too young for the veterans' allowance. When the refund of the man's superannuation contributions was made to the widow the income tax department took $600 away from her out of that money.

Has any consideration been given to amending the act to meet such a case? I think that superannuation payment to the widow should have been made without any tax. I was just wondering whether the minister's department has ever given any consideration to removing what I consider to be a pretty rank piece of injustice.

Mr. Abbott: I would have to have a look at the facts. Was this a service pension or was it a payment out of the civil service superannuation fund?

Mr. Gillis: It was a service pension.

Mr. Abbott: Not a disability pension but a service pension?

Mr. Gillis: That is right.

Mr. Abbott: I am told that would be covered by the armed services regulations, and I am afraid that at the moment I am not familiar with what they are.

Mr. Gillis: It certainly is not covered by the armed services regulations because when we went over K. R. (Can.) a couple of years ago and amended it I raised the matter in the committee. The military people said they knew nothing about it, and that it had been turned back as a problem for the income tax department. They informed us that the Income Tax Act provided that the amount was deductible, and that any amendment to remove the injustice would have to be made by the income tax department.

Mr. Abbott: I will have to look into the case and I am afraid that I could not give an answer offhand. It sounds as though it should be looked into.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister whether this provision for refunds under pension plans applies to refunds made last year, or does it apply only to those made in 1953?

Mr. Abbott: This would apply to 1952 and subsequent years. I do not think the particular case which arose with the C.N.R. pension fund has arisen before. I do not recall that it did, anyway.

Mr. Knowles: That plan was amended as of January 1, 1952.

Mr. Green: As I understand it, at least in some cases the refunds were payable in the calendar year 1952.

Mr. Abbott: Then the section applies.

Mr. Green: They will get the advantage of this amendment?

Mr. Abbott: Subsection 3 makes that provision.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—Credit for dividends.

Mr. Abbott: I have an amendment here.

Mr. Knowles: It had better be good.

Mr. Abbott: This is to remove any possible doubt that in the unusual case of the dividend credit being sufficient to offset the complete tax liability, in other words if all the income of the taxpayer is from dividends received from a taxable Canadian corporation, nevertheless the tax payable under the Old Age Security Act, not under the Income Tax Act, will not be affected. I must say that I do not think it would be and it would be payable anyway; however, this is a legal opinion. I would therefore ask one of my colleagues to move:

That Bill No. 228, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended

(a) by deleting lines 35 and 36 on page 8 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The said section 35 is further amended by adding the following subsections thereto:"; and

(b) by inserting immediately after line 42 on page 8 thereof the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection (4) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act, the amount deductible under this section shall be computed as though that subsection had not been enacted.

This doubt could be covered either here in the Income Tax Act or by inserting a provision in the Old Age Security Act; but since we were dealing with the Income Tax Act, it seemed appropriate to put it here.

Mr. Adamson: Do you want to move that amendment now?

Mr. Abbott: Will my colleague the Minister of Public Works make the motion?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I so move.

Mr. Abbott: If I might be permitted to do so, at the same time I should like to include the corresponding amendment in part II, the revised statutes section.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier):

That the said bill be further amended

(a) by deleting lines 1 and 2 on page 41 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The said section 38 is further amended by adding the following subsections thereto;" and

(b) by inserting immediately after line 8 on page 41 thereof the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection (4) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act, the amount deductible under this section shall be computed as though that subsection had not been enacted.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Adamson: Mr. Chairman, I gather the purport of this amendment is that, irrespective of what may happen, no taxpayer can escape the payment of the old age security tax.

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Adamson: This provision, Mr. Chairman, is having some peculiar effects. One of the effects is with regard to municipal financing. It is now adding—and in my opinion will add more in the future—considerably to the difficulties of municipal financing. The system of municipal financing through self-liquidating debentures, particularly in the central provinces and certainly in Ontario, is the usual method of financing what is known as serviced land, schools and the other services in a municipality.

These bonds or debentures have been and are considered by individuals and corporations as a fairly prime security. I do not know the recent history of defaults but, so far as I know, there have been no serious defaults on this type of debenture since the days of the depression; and as to all the municipalities which defaulted or went into receivership I think the bondholders were paid 100 cents on the dollar and at least the major part of the interest. This type of debenture therefore has a high rating. It is sought after not only by large corporations but by a great number of moderate investors; I refer to the $5,000 to $10,000 income class, the investor who has an income tax liability in the nature of 15 to 30 per cent.

Since this tax allowance or tax credit on dividends derived from equities, the bond yield or the debenture yield must be a great deal higher in order to bring it into line with the net yield received by the taxpayer after this credit is granted. I should like to give two examples. In order to get an equal return, shall we say, from a common stock yielding 5 per cent, a taxpayer in the 40 per cent tax bracket would have to buy a bond yielding 6⅔ per cent; and a taxpayer in the 15 per cent tax liability bracket, in order to obtain an equal yield, would have to buy a bond yielding him 5.88 per cent. In other words, in order to float municipal securities to do the important job of providing serviced land, the yield of these municipal debentures will have to be appreciably increased in order to bring them into line with the yields on common or preferred stocks.

In my opinion this is going to mean a great hardship on many municipalities. For instance, the city of Toronto put out a $12 million issue at 4 per cent. The bonds were a bit sticky at one time but I understand they are going a little bit better now. With this provision it is going to be extremely difficult to issue a municipal debenture and make it attractive to the private investor at anything like 4 per cent; because at a rate of 4 per cent on a municipal debenture, the private investor is going to receive only about 55 per cent of the yield he would receive on a common stock yielding 5 per cent.

That means that in order to provide the schools, the serviced land and the other essentials for building, the municipalities are faced with one of two alternatives. They can force the home owner—the man who has difficulty enough now—to make a capital payment which will cover the cost of serviced land and schools before they allow him to build his house, a procedure which will considerably add to the capital cost of building his house; or the municipalities will have to increase the rate of taxation because of the increased costs of financing. This will affect the home owner because the debenture debt and the tax rate of the municipality will go up.

These are results of this clause in the bill. Instead of making municipal financing easier, we are going to find that the municipal type of security is going to become less and less attractive to the ordinary investor. You are also going to find that municipalities will have to raise money—and believe me, Mr. Chairman, the demand for money by the municipalities is tremendous—in order to create the services that are so desperately needed because of the growth of the country. If the municipalities are going to be able to raise money, there should be in this income tax bill somewhere some clause by which municipal securities are granted some form of tax relief. The new metropolitan district of Toronto needs $30 million at once for new schools. This is an example of the size of the financing involved.

I realize all the arguments against the tax-free bond. I realize that it is an anathema to what is known as sound finance; but, Mr. Chairman, I must point out that the tax-free bond for municipal purposes is the usual method by which municipalities finance themselves in the United States, and as far as I have been able to discover it has brought about no serious problem in that country.

I am not at this moment suggesting that we should adopt the method of financing through the issuance of low interest tax-free bonds, because in my opinion it will require more study; but I do say that this clause in the Income Tax Act is going to make municipal securities extremely unattractive to the average investor; and it is going to put the municipalities into the hands of the large corporations who are by law, by prudence or by policy forced to buy this type of government bond or municipal security. I feel that before very long the acute problem of providing serviced land, schools and so on, is going to be even more acute and even more difficult as a result of this policy and this clause giving tax credits for dividends from equities.

Mr. Abbott: My only comment would be this. I take it my hon. friend is not against this provision. It is encouraging equity investment, and that perhaps will have some effect on the interest rates on fixed interest-bearing securities.

Mr. Adamson: I would not say I am against it. My objection to it in this case is that it is going to make municipal financing extremely difficult, and in my opinion it is going to add very greatly to the burden the small home owner will have to carry. The owner of a residence will have to pay first of all either through the down payment on his home or, if the municipality itself raises the money, through the tax rate, because the cost of money to the municipality can do nothing but go up owing to this clause.

Mr. Abbott: I suppose the same provision must exist in the United Kingdom, because they have a tax credit; they have always eliminated double taxation on business profits in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Adamson: They have an entirely different system of financing housing.

Mr. Abbott: It is more generous than this is.

Mr. Adamson: It is quite different.

Mr. Knowles: Naturally we welcome this change. Perhaps that is too strong a word to use for this small amendment which the minister has moved to clause 13. However, we shall support the amendment; but even after it has been accepted by the committee I want to make clear that we are still strongly opposed to section 13 of this bill and to what it does.

May I make clear, as I see it, what this amendment does in terms of the example which my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, gave to the house on February 24. He indicated at that time, and the Minister of Finance was present and seemed to accept the figures as having been worked out properly, that a married taxpayer receiving $9,760 in income derived from dividends of Canadian corporations—

Mr. Abbott: Taxpaying corporations.

Mr. Knowles:—of taxable Canadian corporations, would by virtue of this 20 per cent credit against tax—not deductibility for income tax purposes, but by virtue of this credit of 20 per cent against actual tax—be relieved of paying his entire income tax which he otherwise would have to pay. My leader pointed out that the total tax which he would have had to pay on $9,760 income but for this relief would have been $1,952. As my leader pointed out, that is what this budget was doing, giving to this particular class of taxpayer a tremendous exemption, namely tax relief to the extent of $1,952.

All that this amendment which is now before us does is to make sure that that particular taxpayer will pay $60. He will still save $1,892, which he would pay otherwise but for this provision. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, though we accept the amendment for the slight change it makes, in that this taxpayer will pay $60, because in such a case he is still relieved of $1,892 we are opposed to the clause even though it is amended.

Mr. Quelch: We welcome the amendment which assures that all taxpayers will at least pay the $60 of old age security. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for York West. He took the stand that this would have the effect of making municipal financing more difficult. He may have a point there. The logical solution therefore would be to do away with section 13. That would be the best way to make sure that it would not have that effect upon municipal financing. Personally I do not like section 13. I am a strong believer in taxation based firmly upon ability to pay. I think that is the basis—

Mr. Abbott: Not double taxation.

Mr. Quelch: So far as the individual is concerned he is paying the one tax. It is a debatable point whether or not it is double taxation.

Mr. Abbott: Tell your Labour friends that in Great Britain.

Mr. Quelch: In the final analysis the consumer pays the tax of the corporation, not the investor. I cannot see any justification for allowing anybody in this country to get away from paying income tax. In this case where a man has invested in a corporation's stocks the income from which is taxable in the hands of the corporation, he is now allowed an exemption of 20 per cent of the dividends he receives on his investment. I cannot see any justification for such legislation being on the statute books.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend did not voice similar views when I started this program.

Mr. Quelch: There may be a point in that, but this is twice as bad.

Mr. Abbott: The principal is the same. We have not gone as far yet as the British have gone.

Mr. Quelch: We all realize that perhaps there is some desirability of encouraging risk capital, but to go up to 20 per cent does not seem right to me. Maybe the minister will suggest 30 per cent next year. Some members have said that this is an election budget. It can only be an election budget so far as these people are concerned, and the result may be that they will be willing to donate handsomely to election funds. That is the only effect it could have so far as I am concerned. It is certainly not an election budget so far as the ordinary individual is concerned.

Mr. Abbott: I did not call it an election budget; I said it was an honest budget.

Mr. Quelch: An honest budget?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Do those terms mean something different?

Mr. Quelch: Does the minister not consider that this is a change in the principle of taxation on the basis of ability to pay?

Mr. Abbott: No, not at all. I made perfectly clear when I introduced this measure in the first place that I was following the same principle that was followed under the British income tax act, on which our act is based, in an endeavour to eliminate double taxation of the same profits. That is all I am doing. I said at that time that I hoped when circumstances permitted it would be possible to extend that principle, and I have done it. I have done what I said I would do.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Is the section as amended agreed to?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Deduction from corporation tax.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister say a word concerning the explanatory note which says:

That the deduction from tax equal to 5 per cent of the taxable income of corporations earned in a prescribed province be increased to 7 per cent of taxable income earned in the province on or after January 1, 1953, by corporations that are not subject to certain special provincial taxes.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be glad to do that. This section will apply to the extent of the full 7 per cent only to ordinary corporations which are taxed in the province to the extent of 7 per cent of their profits earned in that province.

The committee may recall that last year when we incorporated into our own Income Tax Act the 5 per cent tax we had required the provinces to impose, and to be credited against the provinces—that is, those provinces that had tax rental agreements—I said the effect of doing that would not be to increase the tax on corporations in the non-agreeing provinces. In fact, in some provinces certain types of corporations are taxed on some other basis. In the case of railway companies, they are taxed so much per mile, and in the case of certain other companies the bases are different. That is in lieu of the profits tax.

In the light of the statement I made in my budget speech I recommended that we maintain the status quo for certain companies by continuing to allow the 5 per cent tax credit.

In extending the provision to 7 per cent I shall have limited that added benefit to corporations which are in fact being taxed to the extent of 7 per cent in those provinces on profits earned in the provinces. In other words I will not give an added benefit of 2 per cent to corporations which are not in fact paying that tax.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In connection with the expression "by corporations that are not subject to certain special provincial taxes," to what does that refer?

Mr. Abbott: The ones to which I have alluded, the railway companies, telegraph companies and so on.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister made the educational tax in Quebec deductible.

Mr. Abbott: That has nothing to do with this at all. They are taxes which are deductible as expenses.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I understand that it has nothing to do with this. The educational taxes are not deducted from their tax, but they are deductible from the taxable income.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, they are deductible from the taxable income. In practice about 49 per cent would be at the expense of federal revenue, and the other 51 per cent would be an added tax by the province.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—Foreign tax.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is meant in the explanatory note where it says:

The new subsection (5) will permit a taxpayer under conditions to be prescribed by regulations to claim a deduction from tax in respect of certain taxes, other than taxes on income, that are paid to a foreign country.

Would the minister give an illustration?

Mr. Abbott: As a matter of fact this applies to only one or two Canadian corporations operating in foreign countries. In those countries, instead of imposing a tax on income they have imposed a tax on the gross capital employed in that country. This is to adjust an anomaly which appeared to exist.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Does it also apply to the individual taxpayer who has that kind of income?

Mr. Abbott: No. It applies only to corporations doing business in those countries.

Mr. Adamson: Does it apply to a company such as the Brazilian Traction Company?

Mr. Abbott: I believe it does not. At least it has no significance so far as that company is concerned.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—Averaging for farmers and fishermen.

Mr. Quelch: As there may be some discussion on this item, would you call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: We were considering section 17, but section 5 had been allowed to stand until eight o'clock. Shall we revert to section 5 now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On section 5—Amount received by broker to be included.

Mr. Abbott: I did not think there was any controversy about this section. An amendment had been moved, and some interested members wanted to consider it.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This is drastically different from the clause as it was before, and which was objectionable because it created a problem for brokers in forcing them to pay the tax with the chance that perhaps afterwards they would find that they would be recouped at a lower rate. As I understand it, this amendment operates quite simply. It just says that out of the amount held for an anonymous client, 25 per cent shall be deducted. It is just like a deduction at the source. Then the section provides further that the payment is deemed to have been received by the beneficial owner and to have been deducted or withheld from such amount as would otherwise be payable by the broker. In other words it is the broker's justification for doing what he does.

But nothing is said here about what happens afterward. I assume from the silence that what is really intended is that when an anonymous person turns up he will be in the position of having had 25 per cent deducted at the source. What happens then is a matter of calculating what his income has been and he will either be entitled to reimbursement or be called upon to pay more, according to the state of his other income.

Mr. Abbott: I think that is very accurately stated.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is a great step forward. Moreover, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, this section does not really become applicable until next year, so that in the minister's phrase if there are any bugs in it they can be discovered.

Mr. Abbott: It was done purposely in order to make sure.

The Chairman: The first amendment was to delete clause 5.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: The second amendment was to renumber clauses 6 to 19 inclusive as clauses 5 to 18 respectively.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Then the next amendment was to insert a new clause 19.
