The Premier on Prohibition.

[From Speech delivered at Colborne.] I have observed that some measures ar still asked for by the public. One of these has reference to a question which relates very much to our social system, to the adrancement of the morals of our people, and to the restriction and prevention of a system of degradation which has spread to per oz, retail. a vast extent an innumerable train of evils through the country. In a land of peace and plenty like ours there must be some governing cause for the destitution which to its exchanges for matter taken from is so prevalent in some places, the deoralization in others, and for the insanity which appears to be increasing to such an extent in others. All our asylums are full, our prisons and penitentiaries are overflowing, and there has been for many or Lord Falmouth, who also coverflowing, and there has been for many Craft, another Derby winner. years a growing sentiment in the country that the cure for all these evils to a great extent must rest in limiting, if not in desroying, the sale of alcoholic liquors. (Hear, hear, and loud cheers.) So far as I am ncerned, I recollect very well, exactly thirty years ago, that I published my first address to the people in my own locality in the shape of a report from a temperance society in favor of the principle of prohibe made to pay the creditors in full, and by their rulers; and from that day to this that effect. (Lond cheers.) At the same time I have always taken the ground that appoints his wife and Lewis J. Almon, until public sentiment had reached such | Esq., executors of his estate. The value an advanced stage of maturity that we of the real estate belonging to the deceaswould be quite certain of a very large ma- ed is placed at $1,000, and his personal jority, in favor of such a measure, it would estate at $15,000. -Globe be unwise and impolitic to attempt to enforce a total prohibition of the traffic. My impression at present is that in whichever of the two Legislatures the jurisdiction may ultimately be found to lie, legislation in the first place should be in the direction of making your Permissive Bill better adapted for this purpose than it seems to be at present (hear, hear, and loud cheers), and whenever the country seems to be ready for further advances in that matter, no doubt the Legislature of the time, and the Ministry of the time, will prove themselves equal to the occasion. (Cheers.) It is a serious thing for a Minister to pronounce dogmatically at this stage of the temperand question what shape legislation may take in a few years; but I can say this much, that my colleagues and I take the deepest interest in the matter, and shall endeavor to do in this, as in other matters that

THE TALL MAN.

In the meantime the bridal pair had left the carriage and had gone into the vestry, whence they soon after proceeded to the altar, where the clergyman was awaiting them.
There was an appearance of considerable uneasiness in the circle of spectators. Half-whispered questions respecting some one who was absent; a noisy search for him; voices calling to each other, and mutual exhortations to speedy action, were audible.

It was indeed time that something should be done, for the clergyman had already got as far as the question whether any one could state any impedi-
