Farm Topics

"Why do you abandon dairying?" has been asked a number of farmers who this spring held sales and disposed of all their milk producers. The same reply is invariably made, that dairying requires a great deal of labor and hired help is almost unobtainable. Scarcity does not mean the argument advanced that dairying for either factory or creamery purposes is unprofitable without the explanation that the price of hired help is so high that the profits are materially reduced. And few will doubt the wisdom of getting out of the business under these circumstances, for there can scarcely be any greater handicap to a farmer than inability to get help even at a high wage. Some of those who have been forced out of Holsteins or Ayrshires have turned to the raising of Shorthorn cattle, believing the chances for profit just as great with the advantage of little labor. In parts of Ontario, notably the Bruce Peninsula, farmers have gone into beef production for no other reason than that, requiring little hired labor, it is a profitable enterprise and an easy way out of a vexatious problem.

The farm locomotive or tractor, propelled by gasoline, is now in use on many farms in the western Province. This machine is adaptable to a surprisingly large variety of uses. It does the field work, such as pulling the gangplows and the harrows. It does the hauling of farm products and supplies on the road, and furnishes belt power for the turning of the ensilage cutter, the wood saw, separator and other farm machinery. In an orchard on a New York farm this spring the farm tractor was employed to pull up and haul away several hundred trees that had died as a result of the severe winter. A number of orchardists in British Columbia have used the gasoline locomotive to cultivate the ground between the trees. And on the prairie, where farm operations are often extensive and seasons short, it has been put into constant use day and night, being just as easily operated at night when equipped with an acetylene lamp, and, unlike the horse, it never tires. One authority enumerates, among other advantages of the tractor, that "it never gets sunstruck nor moon blind. It saves hired men's wages and board. It raises bigger crops and doesn't eat any of them, but leaves them to be fed to the live stock. It increases the stock capacity of the farm and gives more time for the care of the cows and other stock. It never dies so dead but it can be brought to life again." Tor, Globe.

How The Body Kills Germs.

Germs that get into the body are killed in two ways—by the white corpuscles of the blood, and by a germ-killing substance that is in the blood. Just what this substance is, we do not know. The blood of a healthy person always has some germ-killing substance in it to ward off the attack of disease. The fountain head of life is the stomach. A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished. To put the body in healthy condition, to feed the system on rich, red blood and throw out the poisons from the body, nothing in the past forty years has excelled Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a pure glyceric extract (without alcohol), of bloodroot, golden seal and Oregon grape root, stone root, mandrake and queen's root with black cherrybark.

"My husband was a sufferer from stomach trouble and impure blood," writes Mrs. JAMES H. MARTIN, of Frankfort, Ky. "He had a sore on his face that would form a scab which would dry and drop off in about a month, then another would immediately form. It continued this way for a long time. He tried every remedy that any one would suggest but found no relief. He then tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which completely cured him. He has stayed cured now for two years, and I recommend this valuable medicine for impurities of the blood."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules.

J. H. MARTIN, ESQ.

The Care of Dairy Utensils.

The proper construction of and the proper handling of milk and cream vessels have a great deal to do with the successful production of dairy products. The word "clean," for instance, has come within recent years to mean a great deal more than it meant to our grandfathers. The modern dairymen uses that word to include the absence of harmful bacteria or the overabundance of beneficial bacteria of their products.

The ideal dairy utensil presents a smooth, shiny surface, in which there are no crevices or cracks. Tin is probably the best material for holding milk or cream. Careful investigation and wide experimentation have abundantly proved that grave possibilities of danger lurk in the old fashioned cream crock. The glazing, even in a new ware, is rarely even relatively perfect, and with use the glazing is almost sure to be broken and where it is removed the bacteria quite quickly set up breeding places that scarcely can be cleared up. In tin pails the same is true only to a less extent.

Dairy utensils after being used should be rinsed in lukewarm water and then thoroughly washed by brushing. The brush is greatly to be preferred to the use of a wash cloth. For one thing scalding water may be used with the brush, and the cloth has a tendency to wear away the tin and thus leave the vessel less sanitary. After rinsing and washing the vessels should be thoroughly scalded in genuinely boiling water. The utensils should then be placed in the sunlight by being turned upside down on a sack made for the purpose. It should be remembered that bacteria fall into vessels; they do not crawl up into them. Hence the importance of turning the vessels upside down.

In regard to the care of the churn, the very utmost vigilance is the price of good flavored butter. Before the churn is used it should be given a genuine scald. This cannot be done too thoroughly. After the butter has been removed the churn should be rinsed, and washed with a stiff brush and scalded again and a little salt rubbed into the sides. The butter bowl and butter workers should be given the same treatment as the churn.

Boiling water, pure air, the brush, sunlight and eternal vigilance, these are some things that must be given as the price of well flavored milk or cream or butter.

A train which runs every day in the year between Toulon and Paris is known as the "rapide des fleuves," the cut-flower express. This train carries nothing but cut flowers, in baskets and pasteboard boxes, for the Paris market. The violets of Hyeres, the roses and carnations of Antibes and the Roman hyacinths of Alhobles and Carqueiranes are on the flower stands of Paris in 18 hours from the time they are growing on the shores of the Mediterranean. A good many are shipped also to the cities of Germany and Belgium and even as far as Vienna and St. Petersburg. The packages are handled by a special train crew that sorts them out like mail matter. This speed at which this "cut flower express" runs is greater than that of any other train in Europe and it is almost invariably on time.

The World's Busiest Street.

"Yes, we are proud of this, our street," remarked a stockbroker who was strolling through Throgmorton street. "We call it 'The Street'—just as if it were London's only thoroughfare. One of the shortest, it is certainly the richest in the world. What other street has transacted business aggregating 675 million dollars in one day?"

"Amusing comedies, and even farces are here played daily. The inexhaustible spectacle of Finance with its romance, plucky exploits, brigandisms, daring adventures, and tragic collapses, is far more attractive than most artificial dramatic inventions. Nowhere is the play of human emotions so varied; here are experienced a rapid succession of hopes and fears, sickening failures and intoxicating successes."

"Here, when markets are 'booming,' is a scene of palpitating, nervous excitement unknown elsewhere, except when a wild panic is engineered by frenzied financiers in America. But, compared with London, New York is a mere local market; we deal in the securities of the universe. Money rules the world; we control the total gold supply. In the street values are constantly being manipulated; fortunes are promptly made and lost. Between the 'bulls,' who want to force prices up, and the 'bears,' who strive to bang them down, a fierce battle rages incessantly."—A. W. W.

What Kipling Has Done.

Twenty years of Kipling's books; and what do we find? What has he helped forward? asks Mr. T. R. Glover in an article in The British Friend on the influence of Rudyard Kipling. We find, he continues, race prejudice in India and in England; race hatred between England and her neighbors; hectic Navy Leagues, Military service Leagues, even Aerial Leagues; the glorification of "efficiency" in the region of "things as they are"; a new spirit of Empire inconsistent with the deepest colonial ideas; a vulgarization of verse and prose in a new journalism; a contemptuous abandonment of ideals of justice, freedom, and progress; the sense of equality swept aside by the sense of color; and a habit of ignoring the rights of "lower races" as readily as their feelings, as the abandonment of Persia shows. And Mr. Kipling is a man of genius, a born story teller, and a force among men. All this is thrown on the wrong side, and his work suffers proportionately, for it is the great artist who is most hurt by the wrong ideals.

HAD A HARD TIME GETTING HIS HAT

Ballingame Just Slipped Out to Buy a New Hat But Forgot to Return

The clock proved him a whole hour late when "Jet-Away-Quick" Ballingame arrived at Carr, Lede, Lott & Co.'s office. The day before Ballingame had been warned by Mr. Carr that he shouldn't be late again without a good excuse. Dudley Jones, the bookkeeper, gave "Be You Two Bits," Said Dudley.

Ballingame a sour smile and asked him what he was going to tell the Boss.

"Tell him," said Ballingame, "how do I know. I just got out of bed." "Well, I bet you two bits you don't slip away to the ball game this afternoon," said Dudley.

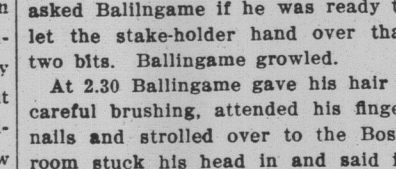

"I'll take you," said Ballingame, fishing for a quarter. And when the money was up he continued, "Maybe you didn't know the Maple Leafs are here-to-day and I never miss seeing the Maple Leafs."

"Ballingame!" bawled Mr. Carr three minutes after his arrival. "You were an hour late this morning. Now why was that?"

"Well, you see it was this way, Mr. Carr. I got up early as usual and had my breakfast and when I started for the car I couldn't find my hat. I looked high and low for it for an hour. Somebody must have it. I had to wear this old one down town."

And Ballingame produced a decrepit old hat that had been kicking around the place for a month.

Mr. Carr was pretty well puzzled but he managed to apologize for having intruded upon Ballingame's shame. When 2 o'clock came and Ballingame had made no move, Dudley smiled one of his vinegar smiles and asked Ballingame if he was ready to let the stakeholder hand over that two bits. Ballingame growled.

At 2:30 Ballingame gave his hair a careful brushing, attended his finger nails and strolled over to the Boss' room stuck his head in and said in an offhand way:

"I'm just slipping out to buy me a new hat Mr. Carr."

The next morning Ballingame was on the job bright and early. "I certainly had an awful time getting a hat to fit" he said. "That's the trouble with having a '12 head."

"My," he said to the stakeholder, "that boy Baker's some ball player." And he slipped four bits into his vest pocket.

An Unquenchable Fire

A Yonkers, N. Y., physician, had a negro cook who was a chronic complainer. One day she came in groaning with a misery in her side and the doctor offered to prescribe for her.

He went to the dining room, poured out a spoonful of game sauce, stirred in some English mustard and sprinkled a little salt and pepper in, handed the dose to the sufferer, telling her to take it down at one swallow.

It was two weeks or more before Mary turned up with a new pain. This time it was in her other side. Her employer offered to mix her up another dose of his medicine.

"No, sub," said Mary firmly. "I'm much obliged to you, doctor, but I've done got my mind made up never again to drink nothing what water won't squench."

Our Hidden Wealth.

The London Chronicle says: "A project that will certainly have far-reaching influence upon the market and the food supply of the United Kingdom will be launched in Canada. With it may arise a new era in the development of that vast Dominion. The great wheat-bearing provinces of Athabasca, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Assiniboia are to be bought 2000 miles nearer to England by waterway, and a saving of approximately $5 per ton is promised upon the freightage between these Provinces and the United Kingdom. Mackenzie and Keewatin, vast territories possessing untold mineral wealth, will reveal to prospectors the secrets hitherto confined to Indians, and will become the paradise of fortune hunters. This project is as far-reaching as it is extensive, has its foundation in the establishment of a gigantic harbor at Fort Churchill on the western side of Hudson Bay. This port is to be the terminal point of a new railway intended to penetrate the Western Canadian Provinces. By the use of the port about 2000 miles of rail transit will be saved in respect of produce travelling eastwards towards Europe. The only publicity given so far to this momentous scheme is the announcement recently of the award to Messrs Pethick Brothers of Plymouth and London, of a contract amounting to one and a half millions sterling for the construction of docks, granaries and station buildings. The award is made by the Hudson Bay and Pacific Railway Development Company, which holds a concession from the Dominion Government. A partner in the above-mentioned firm when interviewed, stated that the announcement of the award had been followed by innumerable applications for posts upon the constructional work. "We have been inundated by appeals from all classes of people, including insurance officials, office boys, and divers. The telephone bell has been ringing continuously, and there has been a procession to our doorstep. Our contract is for specific docks, granaries, and warehouses. The complete scheme includes, we understand, a large harbor approximately 3000 ft. by 200 ft., but this is not of immediate importance. The Hudson Bay and Pacific Railway Development Company are about to build a line between Fort Churchill and Prince Albert, thereby penetrating the heart of Saskatchewan. It is understood that other developments will follow."

Storage Basins and Water Powers

Storage basins are an exceedingly important consideration in waterpower development. Any large natural reservoir where the run off from precipitation may be impounded and subsequently discharged gradually throughout the year, add greatly to the potential value of a water power. In the matter of easily developed water storage systems, Canada is exceptionally well favored. In New Ontario, however, the large river systems are, in so far as available information goes, rather deficient in this regard. The lake expansions of the rivers are comparatively few in number, and some of the largest of the lakes are shallow and of small value as storage basins. Forests as Reservoirs. But Nature has, here, in a measure, provided storage reservoirs of another sort. The forest floors and extensive areas covered with plant growth, as well as great swamps, each and all constitute valuable water reservoirs. In these there is a wide spread and satisfactory distribution of waters which tends to create a much more uniform run off. A discreet conservation and utilization of such reservoirs will, in general, be found to be much more desirable than are some of the large artificially constructed storage basins.

New Ontario Waters
It will thus be seen that the forest cover of New Ontario is of great importance in preserving a uniform flow of the rivers, and in making the water powers of that region valuable. In spite of the protection of the forests many of the larger rivers are little more than wild torrents in the spring time.

During the next few years some $5,000,000 will be spent in opening up and developing the resources of New Ontario. It would seem the part of wisdom to go cautiously in the matter of removing the forests, lest in the years to come the rivers of Northern Ontario should strive to emulate the efforts of the Mississippi in the year of grace, 1912.

Mr. Lloyd George had an astounding statement to make during the delivery of his supplementary budget speech on Monday afternoon in the British House of Commons. He had an extra $3,000,000 in round figures to dispose of, and no wonder the Liberals cheered and the Conservatives sat glum as he announced that since the Liberals came into office they had reduced the national debt, including the reduction of $25,000,000 he was then making, by $30,920,000, and he was loaning $3,000,000 to the African possessions of Uganda will do as much work as $15,000,000 would do in Britain. The balance of the surplus, $5,000,000 said the Chancellor, will be handed to the Admiralty as the first instalment of a greatly increased expenditure on the navy, so that Britain may continue to have the most powerful navy in the world. Mr. Lloyd George made no secret of the fact Germany's naval expansion would be amply met by Britain.—Ex.

Transcontinental Construction.

(From the Winnipeg Free Press)
The Quebec Board of Trade has been giving itself over to "viewing with alarm" in an extraordinary manner, in regard to the manner of the completion of the National Transcontinental line from Winnipeg to Cochrane. When the mileage is ready for operation, there will be an all rail connection, via the Perry Sound Railway, with the Grand Trunk system in the East. Work is being hurried on the mileage referred to, and the extraordinary demand made in a resolution passed by the Quebec Board of Trade is that the Winnipeg to Cochrane line should not be completed until the National Transcontinental shall be completed, so that no western grain shall be diverted to "Providence, Boston, Portland, and other United States ports."

It is highly important, of course, that the National Transcontinental shall be completed to the Atlantic, to carry Western grain to Canadian ports. This is purpose with which the construction of that national highway was entered upon. But that the construction of any portion of that line should deliberately be held back is a suggestion which can only be characterized as absurdly unjustifiable. Let all possible expedition be used in pushing forward every section of it to completion and in providing the terminals. The West needs every possible outlet for its grain.

Quebec Forest Revenue

The total income of the province of Quebec during the fiscal year 1911 from woods and forests was $1,260,077.70, or nearly $85,000 more than the preceding year. The Minister of Lands and Forests, in his annual report, recently issued, estimates that the revenue from this source during the current fiscal year will approximate $1,500,000. The system of patrol for the prevention of forest fires has proved very efficient, and the cost has been much more than justified as a form of insurance of existing property interests as well as a guarantee of the perpetuation of the forest upon non-agricultural lands, thus insuring the permanence of the wood-using industries upon which the province so largely depends. The prevention of forest fires is the first essential to the permanence of lumbering and other woods industries, and money spent for this purpose is one of the best investments that any owner of timber lands can make.

Reason for Haste.

There's an old story about an Irishman who was painting a fence and who worked hard so that he might get the job finished before the paint gave out. Our grandfathers bought razors. The new version came in yesterday; the setting is up to date, but the old point still sticks out. Our correspondent says: "I have a touring car and I have a chauffeur. The latter is a bright Italian boy and an invaluable servant. The other night, ten miles from home, but inside the city limits, I observed that he was putting on a burst of speed. "Slow down a bit, Giuseppe." I warned him, "we'll be arrested if we keep up this speed." "Scusa me, mister boss," he answered, "we're ten miles from home and only got enough gas for 'free miles. Ref we no hurry we never mak' eet!"

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, former President of the Farmers Bank, one time Toronto's Conservative boss, and a member of the Legislature for North Toronto, has been committed for trial on charges arising out of the failure of the bank. A curious feature of the preliminary inquiry before the Magistrate was the fact that the chief witness against the accused was W. R. Travers former manager of the bank, and under a sentence of imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary for his share in the wrecking. Travers has spent months of comfort in Toronto since his sentence, and Nesbitt is out on bail, but the man or woman convicted of or charged with stealing a five cent cigar gets no such considerate treatment.—Ex.

ONE BY ONE THE MEN WHO fought and maintained British supremacy in the dark days of the Indian Mutiny are passing to "the great beyond." So, too, are those who took part in the Afghan campaign of 1879, when the famous march to Kabul Kandahar took place, and even the ranks of those who went through the Boer war of eleven years ago are being thinned. Sir George White died in London on Monday. Although he had won undying fame in the Indian mutiny, earned the Victoria Cross and the thanks of the nation for his bravery on the road to Kandahar, he will live in history as "the defender of the Lady Smith," the man who refused to surrender the post, although advised to by his superior officer, General Buller, and who after 119 days' siege had the British flag still flying when Lord Dundonald drove a wedge through the beleaguering Boer lines, and the British Empire went delirious with joy over the relief.—Ex.

IRRESISTIBLE.

"What on earth possessed Miss Hightstone to marry the ribbon clerk?" "She couldn't resist him, you know. When she first met him he was at the bargain counter."

Blunderly—Really, madam, you look remarkably well. You appear as young as your daughter.

Lady—Yes, I am the daughter.

DONE CHEERING UP

"The visitor was being shown round the big hospital. As he passed through the accident ward he exchanged words of sympathy with some of the patients. "My word!" he said to one man, whose head was swathed in bandages and whose face was badly scarred. "You are knocked about. But you must cheer up if you want to get better."

"I've done cheering up," said the patient.

"Nonsense," replied the visitor. "There ain't any nonsense 'bout it," answered the patient. "It was through cheering up that I'm here. I 'appened to cheer the wrong football team!"

British Suffragette leaders who were sent to prison for smashing shop windows in London have been liberated. They played the usual trick, after they got solitary confinement, of refusing food, and the Home Secretary, who is responsible for their safe custody, was advised by the prison doctor that it might endanger their lives to feed the ladies by the stomach pump methods. This is the second or third time the leaders of the militant brigade of suffragettes have played the hunger trick so as to secure their release.—Ex.

Record Revenue During Month of June.

Ottawa, June 30.—The customs returns for the month of June show another record increase. When all the figures are in they will show a gain of over two millions as compared with June of last year. This indicates an increase of over 25 per cent. in imports during the month. For the first quarter of the fiscal year the Dominion's revenue has increased by over seven millions, as compared with the corresponding period of last year. During June no less than 67 new post offices were opened in Canada, the majority being in the Western Provinces to meet the needs of the rapid influx of settlers.—Ex.

History was made at Chicago last week. Out of the welter of disorder and schism there comes one outstanding fact, the Republican party is split in two, and the secessionists are the Progressives, whose protest is against the methods and policies of the Old Guard. This is the logical outcome of Col. Roosevelt's propaganda. So much momentum had been gained by the Progressive movement that, failing encouragement from President Taft, it had to set out under a new leader, and this naturally was Roosevelt. "If the people want a Progressive party I'll be in it," he said on Thursday. Two days later he was Presidential nominee of the succeeding convention. It is not an ill-considered or precipitate action. He does not ask them to bind themselves. "Go home and talk to the folks about it" is his parting request.—Ex.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE

—BY—
Mark Darran

John Smith, having just finished breakfast, was marking with blue pencil the paper that lay before him, but he looked up as a knock came at the door. His housekeeper entered, with a doubtful expression on her face.

"Prince Rani Singra, sir," she announced.

John Smith ticked off another item in the paper and nodded.

"I will see him," he said.

A few seconds later the Indian stepped into the room. He was dressed in European clothes, save for his turban, and his face was still a muddy color.

"Behind him followed his two attendants.

"I am glad you have come so early," John Smith said coolly. "I feared that I might have to wait for you."

A startled expression came into the Indian's eyes.

"You expected me?"

"After our conversation last night—yes," John Smith assured him.

The two attendants would have followed their master into the room; but John Smith motioned them back and closed the door upon them.

Prince Rani Singra evidently wished to appear at his ease, but his efforts were not crowned with any great success.

"It is about that affair last night," he said quickly. "I do not wish the matter to be carried farther, for the sake of Sir John Hamaker, and there was no foul play, but I forgive the man who did it."

"I wonder if he forgives you for causing Willoughby to shoot himself?" John Smith said, musingly.

The Indian gave vent to a choking cry, and his eyes were ugly with fright.

"I don't know a Willoughby," he managed to stammer.

But John Smith shook his head reproachfully, much as one does at a child.

"Why lie about it?" he asked, and a sudden gleam of anger came into his eyes.

He thrust the newspaper towards the Indian, and pointed at a certain part that he had marked.

"Read it!" he ordered. "It is your work again."

This was the paragraph:

"It is rumored that a certain young man well known in society is shortly to go abroad to start ranching, owing to recent heavy financial losses. It is not revealing too much to say that only a few weeks ago he entertained a distinguished Indian prince who is now on a visit to this country."

Mechanically Prince Rani Singra passed his eyes over the type and slowly his expression changed. An evil grin curled his lips, and a defiant look was in his eyes.

"And if it is?" he sneered. "Suppose he is going abroad because of something I know?"

John Smith answered nothing, but on his face was the expression that was always there when his mind was fully made up. Possibly the Indian saw this, for his manner changed.

"I admit it—everything," he said, coolly. "I tell you that because of my powers I am winning a great fortune from these fools who are frightened I will tell their secrets. But—he bent towards John Smith—there is money enough for two in it—for two!"

John Smith did not move, though he could guess what the other meant.

"Very soon," the Indian went on eagerly. "I shall bring off three great coups. Nothing can stop them, but your interference may make my work more difficult."

"I will pay well for you to leave me alone, though I need pay nothing. For who of them all dare set against me?"

John Smith rose slowly from his chair, and his eyes were like points of steel.

"Out of here—before I kick you out!" he thundered.

So threatening was his attitude that the prince started back and snatched a revolver from the bosom of his coat.

He might as well have saved himself the trouble, for John Smith was too quick for him. His right fist swung upwards, caught the Indian's wrist clean on the bone and the weapon fell to the floor.

John Smith flung the door open, then his arms went round the Indian, and he fairly flung him out into the passage.

The man scrambled to his feet and made a bolt for the door, where his attendants were waiting. With his hand on the handle he paused and looked back, and his dark face was terribly evil in expression.

"You will be sorry for that!" he snarled.

"I am sorry now," John Smith answered coolly—"for soiling my hands with you."

Lady Minter's pretty drawing-room was more crowded than usual, and for the excellent reason that it was known that Prince Rani Singra had honored the Berkeley Square incident had already travelled widely, and it is more than a little probable that more than one man or woman, good-hearted enough in the ordinary way, wished that there had been no rescue. Naturally, the story had taken many forms, the versions ranging from an attack by one of his own attendants, who had suddenly gone mad, to an attempted theft of his valuable jewels by an armed swill crackman who had contrived to get in to the hall.

One curious thing might have been noticed at Lady Minter's, and that was that there was not one woman present who had ever had her fortune told by the Indian prince. As a matter of fact, it almost seemed that once was enough for most men or women, for they never went to him again unless actually picked out by him. Then, with something of the air of doves going into the cage of a snake, they obeyed without demur.

Lady Minter's face was white, despite the bright way in which she gossiped with the women who were present, and her eyes never left the corner where, seated on a pile of cushions, was Prince Rani Singra.

His dark face still looked a trifle pale—if that is possible—and there was a certain restlessness in his eyes which was not usually to be noticed there.

Lady Minter crossed the room, and it was curious to notice that her manner was almost humble as she addressed the man she was berating.

"I have told my friends that you are not nearly well enough to tell their fortunes to-day," she said rather quickly, with a forced laugh. "What would Dr. Mellor say for allowing me to let you work your brain so soon?"

The smile that curled the prince's lips was not pleasant to look upon, and his eyes held Lady Minter's with a curious intensity.

"They shall not be disappointed," he answered quickly. "Already my servants have arranged the little room across the passage."

"But the fatigue," Lady Minter protested, though feebly.

Prince Rani Singra rose from his pile of cushions, and with his hand lightly on her arm led Lady Minter from the room. There was a smile on his face; but as the door closed behind them it vanished, and his mouth snarled like that of a wild beast.

"You fool!" he whispered. "What would you do?"

"Oh, this cannot go on!" the woman answered, weakly. "I cannot see you in this position forcing my friends' secrets from them."

"They should have no secrets," the Indian sneered.

"Surely you have had enough money?" Lady Minter ventured. "This blackmailing!"

The man thrust a hand brutally over her mouth, and his eyes blazed.

"Say that again, and, by Krishna, your husband will know that the jewels you wear are false, and that the real ones have been pawned to pay your debts at bridge." The man laughed mirthlessly, almost noiselessly.

"It would please him, wouldn't it, to think that the historical game?"

A servant came along the passage, and Prince Rani Singra drew hastily back and moved towards a room opposite.

"May I suggest that you send Mrs. Beemish in first?"

"Yes," Lady Minter answered, but her lips formed the word rather than gave utterance to it.

Prince Rani Singra pushed open the door of the room and entered. The blinds had been drawn over the windows, the heavy curtains had been pulled close, so that there was little light. On a small Oriental table in the centre of the room burned a little fire in a brass bowl, a curiously pungent smell arising from it. Beside this stood a saucer containing some dark liquid, and pens, ink, and paper.

"Vashti!" the prince said in Hindustani.

The taller of the two native servants, a man with wild eyes and a thin, cadaverous face, bowed low.

"My lord?" he asked humbly.

"Today there must be no failure!" the Indian went on sharply. "Many rupees have I paid you, so that when you return to India you will be a great man among your people. Yet the other day you failed to learn that which I desired."

"The brain is not a horse, my lord," Vashti answered, with a touch of spirit. "Flogging will not make it work the faster."

There was a footstep outside the door, and Prince Rani Singra dropped hastily upon a pile of cushions, just before the door opened to admit a tall, handsome woman of about fifty years of age. She stood hesitating on the threshold, evidently more than half inclined to retreat.

"Oh, don't be silly!" a girl's voice said. "I'm told it's just lovely! Do go in!"

It is well that you have come early, Mrs. Beemish," the Indian said in a soft voice. "Yesterday I was much shaken, so that to-day my power is not great. What would you have?"

"Then perhaps I had better not trouble you?" Mrs. Beemish said hastily.

Yashti, the shorter of the two attendants, stepped noiselessly forward, picked up the saucer of dark liquid from the table, and held it out to the woman.

She took it mechanically, looking into it wonderingly, something of the fascination of the unknown taking possession of her.

In the gloom Prince Rani Singra watched her with eager eyes, while Vashti's eyes fairly glowed as they never left her face.

"What would you have?" the prince asked again, and softly drew towards him one of the sheets of paper that lay on the table.

"Tell me if there is happiness in the future?" the woman asked, with a touch of eagerness.

"Then look into the bowl."

The woman's eyes were fixed intently on the dark liquid, but she saw nothing there.

vashti moved slightly, but his eyes never left her face, which began to change curiously in expression. All the time seemed to go out of it, and it became fixed and rigid.

"What is it that is troubling you?" it was the prince who asked the question.

"There is nothing—" Mrs. Beemish began, but stopped abruptly.

For a few seconds she was silent; and when she continued she spoke slowly and haltingly, so that the Indian had no difficulty in taking her words down on paper.

"Why has Dick done it?" she said. "He knows that I would have got the money for him somehow. But to have out his father's name to that bill. I the inspector asked politely; for more than once in the past the representative of Dring & Co. had been of considerable service to him."

"It was something that I thought of doing for you," John Smith answered coolly, "provided that you consent to act in the way I tell you."

Inspector Blackland looked indignant, and pulled at his short beard.

"I can't promise that," he said, "but I will do my best."

John Smith rose from the chair in which he had seated himself, and took up his hat.

"Then we will waste no more time," he remarked. "It would have saved a lot of time over that Minter jewel case."

Our Trade with U. S.

Despite the defect of reciprocity and the keeping up of the tariff restrictions against trade between Canada and the United States, the significant fact shown by the trade returns for the twelve months ending with February last that Canada's total trade with her neighbor to the south increased during the year by $63,582 or about fifteen per cent., while trade with Great Britain increased by only $18,342,157, or not quite 8 per cent. Canada's total trade with the United States for the twelve months was $453,225,632 and with Great Britain $260,672,657.

The Dominion's aggregate trade with the world was $847,312,733, an increase of $93,432,178, of which $81,820,639 was in imports. Exports of domestic products which totalled $285,607,352, increased by only $9,455,768. The Dominion's total trade with the United States, is, therefore, considerably more than half of the total trade with all the world and is increasing at a more rapid rate than with any other country.

Vancouver's Waterfront

Vancouver's waterfront is like a great mural painting, bright with color, and for background the mountains, with their shining snows, stand up on the barbor in a long panorama of beauty. The great sawmills, lying like couchant beasts in the midst of their yellow acres of lumber piles, give the picture much of its life and movement, writes "Bruce," in the Vancouver Sunnet.

But it is the fragrant comm-odities from China far across the sea and the merchandise from world ports which I have seen only on the maps that give the waterfront its color, and the miles of sea that lie between Vancouver and the ports the trades with seem to wash the picture in to proper tone. You have only to watch the busy long shroumen stowing the bales and cases in the dockshed and you think of far countries and the romance of commerce since the days of Hiram the Safferman and King Solomon's merchantmen that came once in three years bringing gold and silver and ivory and peacocks. You may think you can read character, but the dark toned face of Gow Yip, the Chinese deck hand, would puzzle you. The Chinese sailors shive from the color of butter to that of molasses, and Gow Yip is dark as a charcoal sketch.

The Vancouver waterfront has the picturesque character and romantic interest of older ports where traveler's tales begin. You can see ships and sailors, nameless Jack-before-the-mast, fatsooted, ear-ringed, brown with the smoke of the sun and the pickle of the weather, and the longshoremen who sing a rugged verse in the song of commerce.

The rusty ships from the other side of the world and the trains that have crossed continents with the dust of their journey upon them here and exchange tales that are hard to clothe with words that you would understand. Until some northern Homer puts them into the proper words you will have to be content with the knowledge that the color and material for several odysseys wait here for a strong man to shape. You see the thing many times and you feel its fascination, but you cannot tell it as it should be told.

To walk along the waterfront is like turning over the pages of illustrated books of travel and romance, but here the illustrations are living figures moving against a background more picturesque than any artist's imagination could invent. Like wreckage washed up on the shore and left by the tide, human wreckage, roving men from all over the world, driftage of every shadow of race and color, are cast upon the beach of Vancouver. Seafaring men and landsmen, men of every country come and go like the tides. The atmosphere is as full of stories, many inventions and many true tales, as the stage is full of players. The life of a seaport is commerce dramatized; trade follows less romantic roads inland. The cargoes of spices and silks seem to lose some of their fragrance when they leave the wharves.—EX.

On a recent trip to California Bert Walker says the Pullman porter acted as though he wanted something from the passengers. "What do you want?" Bert asked him.

"Oh, anything you see fit to give, boss," replied the porter.

"All right," said Bert. "Boys, let's give the porter three cheers." And they did.—The Argonaut.

The Philosophy of the Fight

The fight is on in deadly earnest in the United States. It will be a fight to a finish. It cuts deeper than any personal or political differences between Taft and Roosevelt, or between Republicans and Democrats. It is the most serious, and quite the most fundamental; since Lincoln's fight with the slave holders. At bottom it is Lincoln's old fight over again. It is democracy against oligarchy, the common people against the favored classes, Rights against Privileges. It is the fight of the British democracy under American conditions, the Reform Bill of the early thirties, the Budget of three years ago; it is the fight which will come in selfishness of class privilege becomg as arrogant and as insufferable as long ago it became in Britain, and as in recent years it became in the United States. It is the age long struggle for common justice, in which the Anglo Saxons leads the world.

Significantly enough, the man who smote to the death the old slave owning privilege in the mouth fed and fostered in the North the new privileged interests which within two generations have combined for a new mastership of the Republic as tyrannous as the old. Lincoln saw clearly enough the utter injustice of negro slavery, but Lincoln did not foresee that the tariff privileges which he helped to create would harden into a bondage as selfish and as menacing to the nation as slavery itself. No words of Lincoln or of the Abolitionists were fiercer or more damning against the slave traffic than are the words of Roosevelt and the Progressive Republicans against the Big Interests created under the tariff.

Both struggles involve the problem of human rights. Fifty years ago it was the right of the negro to the freedom of his labor, the protest against the wrong which enabled one man to eat bread earned by the sweat of another man's face. Today it is the right of white man or negro to the freedom of his labor, the protest against the wrong which enables a small group of men to control the Government, to obstruct trade, and to take toll of the consuming public. The one produced in the South a social aristocracy not without its redeeming qualities. The other has produced in the North a commercial plutocracy that on occasion contributes to the founding of churches, for the endowing of universities, and for the maintenance of public libraries. The stand-patters of Lincoln's day were willing to do anything except break the power of slavery. The stand-patters of to day will do anything except destroy the trusts, State rights were then held up in defence of the slave privilege. The flag is still waved in defence of the tariff privilege. The doom of the one was sealed by its own arrogance. Arrogance no less defiant has made the doom of the other not only inevitable, but imminent. The Big Interests will be beaten.

Had the Democratic party been true to its own principles twelve years ago, and had Bryan been then a statesman of vision and a leader of power, the fight over the tariff would have been fought and won. By right it was Bryan's opportunity, not La Follette's or Cummings' or Beveridge's or Dolliver's or even Roosevelt's. But the democrats were feeble economists, and the bi-partisan Big Interests had spiked too many Democratic guns. Even today the chance of the Democrats depends not only on their own statesmanship, or on the people's confidence in them and their leaders, but solely on the disruption of the Republican party and the people's distrust of Roosevelt's personal sincerity and political leadership.

The lesson for Canada and for Canadian politicians are clear and plain. The protection tariff policy was imported from the United States, and with it came the class privileges it creates and the bi-partisan political bossism it allows. Last September revealed the leasing of private interests to thwart a trade policy approved by both political parties for fifty years. Tariff-fed trusts and their allies in finance and transportation mocked at political principle and played then the very game the American trusts played to their own present undoing. Recent experiences in the West with markets and in the East with mergers have opened the eyes of Canadians.

Sooner or later the fight on row in the United States will be on in earnest in Canada. Here as there it will be a fight for the people's freedom from political bossism controlled by tariff made trusts. In that fight Liberals must be uncompromised and free. It is their fight. Their guns must be unspiked. Greater freedom and larger markets are rights, not merely special privileges, in any true British citizenship. To fight worthily in such a cause is never defeat. In the end the people will understand the game of the trusts. When they understand they will fight and win. That is the philosophy of the fight in the United States to day. History will repeat itself in Canada to-morrow.—Tor. Globe.

day will do anything except destroy the trusts, State rights were then held up in defence of the slave privilege. The flag is still waved in defence of the tariff privilege. The doom of the one was sealed by its own arrogance. Arrogance no less defiant has made the doom of the other not only inevitable, but imminent. The Big Interests will be beaten.

Had the Democratic party been true to its own principles twelve years ago, and had Bryan been then a statesman of vision and a leader of power, the fight over the tariff would have been fought and won. By right it was Bryan's opportunity, not La Follette's or Cummings' or Beveridge's or Dolliver's or even Roosevelt's. But the democrats were feeble economists, and the bi-partisan Big Interests had spiked too many Democratic guns. Even today the chance of the Democrats depends not only on their own statesmanship, or on the people's confidence in them and their leaders, but solely on the disruption of the Republican party and the people's distrust of Roosevelt's personal sincerity and political leadership.

The lesson for Canada and for Canadian politicians are clear and plain. The protection tariff policy was imported from the United States, and with it came the class privileges it creates and the bi-partisan political bossism it allows. Last September revealed the leasing of private interests to thwart a trade policy approved by both political parties for fifty years. Tariff-fed trusts and their allies in finance and transportation mocked at political principle and played then the very game the American trusts played to their own present undoing. Recent experiences in the West with markets and in the East with mergers have opened the eyes of Canadians.

Sooner or later the fight on row in the United States will be on in earnest in Canada. Here as there it will be a fight for the people's freedom from political bossism controlled by tariff made trusts. In that fight Liberals must be uncompromised and free. It is their fight. Their guns must be unspiked. Greater freedom and larger markets are rights, not merely special privileges, in any true British citizenship. To fight worthily in such a cause is never defeat. In the end the people will understand the game of the trusts. When they understand they will fight and win. That is the philosophy of the fight in the United States to day. History will repeat itself in Canada to-morrow.—Tor. Globe.

LIFE-SAVING RAFT INVENTED BY WOMAN

Life-saving crafts seem entirely out of line with woman's inventive genius, but the wild life of the Yukon country and the appalling loss of life through lack of life-saving apparatus, directed the mind of Mrs. Laura Hill of Seattle, Wash., in that direction. She tried many different models without obtaining the desired result. Mrs. Hill was camped on the shore of a big lake in the Yukon territory. A storm helped her to perfect her idea. A 35-foot fishing boat capsized, but the two fishermen caught a log raft. They knew they were safe as long as the logs held together. The gale blew the raft ashore and the men stumbled into camp with a story of thrilling escape from almost certain death.

Immediately the invention shaped itself in her mind—a raft made in three sections representing three logs flat on two sides and lashed together with wire ropes; the centerpiece with a small airtight compartment for food and water; the two outer sections equipped with seats on the outer edge. The raft folds up when not in use, but when in the water the side sections are watertight.

Scissors, corkeraws and tooth picks have, before now, been combined in pocketknives, but Poplar Mechanics shows this picture of a pocketknife, the handles of which form a carpenter's six-inch rule.

GAVE HIS BLOOD TO SAVE CHILD

Dr. Sanders saved a baby's life by giving over a quart of The Life Fluid.

Would you give a quart of your own life's blood for a baby's life?

Dr. Audley Sanders of Chicago did, and thought the life cheap at the price. It wasn't his baby, either. And it was such a little baby, so puny and aemic that every minute of the five days it had been in the world had looked to be its last.

This was a kidnapped baby, strictly speaking, for Dr. Sanders ran away with it before it had time to tell its mother what it was about. He just ganced at the wee bundle of humanity, wrapped it in a blanket, ran from the house, hired a taxicab and went speeding to Wesley hospital at a rate that did violence to all the speed laws of Chicago and the commonwealth of Illinois and that left a trail of flying policemen in his wake.

When he reached the hospital he leaped from the taxi and hurried to the operating room with the baby in his arms.

"The baby is dying," he said to

Dr. Victor Lespinaise, the operating surgeon.

The surgeon said that transfusion of blood was the only hope and that it was only a matter of minutes till even that would not avail.

Then Dr. Sanders promptly bled his arm and the surgeon went to work. An artery in the doctor's arm was cut.

It was a shy young curate who was once asked to take a class of girls about 15 or 16, which had formerly been taken by a woman. The young clergyman consented, but insisted on being properly introduced to the class. The superintendent accordingly took him to the class for this purpose and said:

"Young ladies, I will introduce to you Mr. Chira, who will in future be your teacher. I would like you to tell him what your former teacher did so that he can go on in the same way."

A miss of 16 rose and said:

"The first thing that teacher did was to kiss us all around."

As at Chicago, so at Baltimore. As we go to press the Democratic National Convention is opening, with every prospect of a cleavage on the lines of progress and reaction. Judge Parker of New York, a reactionary, the nominee of the Nation 1 Committee for Chairman, is opposed by W. J. Bryan, who holds that Parker does not represent the side of democracy that should dominate at this convention. It looks like a new alignment of parties in the United States, in which the Radicals, drawn from both the old parties, will be opposed by a similar consolidation of the conservatives.--Tor. Globe.

Not since the civil war has the Republican party been so torn. Out of that struggle the party evolved, and on their patriotic record for saving the Union they have prospered ever since. That bank balance is now exhausted, and new conditions have brought new duties. The "machine" which the party has developed to such perfection that the country has rebelled against it was invoked with its greatest force at last week's convention. The contesting delegations were ruled out and flattened in favor of Taft Senator Root was made Chairman, and amid scenes of delirium and disorder the convention proceeded on its five-day blow-out, until, nearly all the delegates withdrawing, Taft received the nomination of the regulars, with Vice-President Sherman again his running mate.--Ex.

Ottawa, July 3.- The big contractors of the world do not seem to be anxious to undertake the Dry Dock construction. The time allowed to put in bids for the construction of the Lewis Dry Dock expired today and only one tender was made to the government. The dock is to be the largest thing of the kind in the world, 1,150 feet long, 137 feet wide and 37 feet deep. The government will give a bonus of 3 1-2 per cent. for thirty five millions. It is believed that the firm of Sir John Jackson is the only one which has tendered.--Ex.

Paying Cash Pays!

Running an Account is very convenient at times, we readily admit; but you must have observed that when you run an account, you are very apt to buy many a thing you would go without if you were paying cash - things no doubt you could easily dispense with, without injury to yourself or family. And when those extra things come to be paid for - maybe you must then deprive yourself of other things that you actually need or at least go without them for a time, now "Paying Cash" enables you if you want to, to save money. Its very easy to "Charge the Goods" Its not so easy to "Discharge the Debt." So for economy's sake "Pay Cash" And since we have adopted this Cash System we find it moving very satisfactory both to our customers and ourselves, your money will buy you "Better Goods and More of Them" than if we were making bad bills by reckless credit giving.

The Liberal leader, Mr. A. B. Copp, an able and conscientious advocate of popular rights, went down to defeat, as did his eleven followers in the previous House. In view of all that has been happening in the Province lately the defeat of the Liberals was looked for although such a clean sweep for the Conservatives was not expected. The Governments at Ottawa and Fredericton were ill-advised in the course they pursued of wiping out the Opposition. It reveals "the machine" hand too openly, and the retribution which it does come, as it assuredly will, is likely to be as sweeping and severe as that which the machine has meted out to Mr. Copp and his followers. -Ex.

Now the fare has been changed, the most popular and general menu consisting of beer and bacon.

CLERK'S EXCUSE ON A BALL DAY

Ballingame Told His Employer He Knew Where There Was a Big Order

When "Get-Away-Quick" Ballingame, clerk for Carr, Lode, Lott & Co., strode into the office this bright spring morning he was in the happiest of humors. To be sure, he was half an hour late but that was his usual custom and Dudley Jones, bookkeeper and his superior, could detect no trace of blame. Ballingame had other things on his mind then were business. For weeks the sun shined, and wasn't the boys' team scheduled to play, and didn't Jackie Straw have two pavilion seats which he had from a friend who was on a vacation in 17 years and the night before he had just about made up courage to ask the Boss for the afternoon off.

"Mr. Carr," he stuttered when that dignitary breezed in about 10 o'clock, "can you spare me two hours this afternoon?"

"Who's dead?" said Carr.

"My grandmother," Dudley started to say but he was afraid Ballingame would laugh, so he brazenly decided to tell the truth. "I'd like to see the ball game."

"All right," granted Carr, "if Ballingame can do your work."

Ballingame said nothing but his head was full of schemes and a ceased grandmother had no part in them. At 2 o'clock the telephone rang. It was Jackie Straw, and he told Ballingame he was at the Dutchman's waiting for him.

Ballingame adjusted his necktie and floated into the Boss' office. "Mr. Carr," he said, "I know where there's a big order laying around loose. I think I'll drop over to Rehnabie's and land it."

"Good boy," said Carr, "just tell Jones to stick around till you get back."

Ballingame slipped through the office like a summer breeze through a grape arbor. Dudley sighed. "No wonder they call him 'Get-Away-Quick' Ballingame," he said.

The next morning Ballingame was on the job thirty minutes late as usual. "Couldn't land that order, Mr. Carr," he said. "I chased all over town and couldn't find him. I guess he was at the ball game."

"Who won yesterday?" Ballingame asked Dudley, winking a prodigious wink.

Billy very carelessly brushed his sponge over his slate after he had worked out a problem. He couldn't remember the missing figures, but from what was left he finally filled in the vacant spaces, which are here represented by crosses. Can you do it?

Sixty Leading British Manufacturers are just now on a tour of Canada. One of the drawbacks of such a tour is that the tourists are generally under the guidance of a Government official. If they received general directions as to the places they should visit they would be far more at liberty to find out actual conditions in Canada for themselves. They are likely on their return to Britain to give such accurate account of the outlook in Canada for safe investments, for the establishment of works and for the worker who desires to come here that there need be no fear of charges of misrepresentation of actual conditions. -Es.

Tilting Rock of Argentina.

In Argentina they have had a tilting rock so famous that its distraction seems to have been regarded as a national calamity, and has led to suggestion of its restoration, as if it were a sacred relic or a Venetian Campanile.

It was so balanced upon the edge of a cliff that the wind alone was said to have set it oscillating, and excursions were made to it from Buenos Ayres, distant about 200 miles.-Springfield Republican.

Waste of Opportunities in Maritime Provinces

British Manufacturer's Impressions.

Ottawa, June 17. - The British manufacturers arrived here yesterday, and are being entertained by members of the government. "One thing that impresses me with the general run of Canadians I have met," said Mr. James Deuchar, president of James Deuchar, Ltd., a Scottish corporation capitalized at $4,000,000. "Is that Canada does not require brains. What is needed is capital. Canadians have impressed me as being an exceptionally brainy people." Speaking of farming in the Maritime Provinces, he said: "I never saw such a waste of opportunity. The farmers do not get all they should out of the land. I fancy one reason is that the farms are so small, most of them being between 100 and 200 acres with the farmer necessarily having a limited capital. There are only one or two small holdings of this kind on my land and I have more trouble with them than all the rest put together. In the east of Canada I have gained the impression that the farmers do not make the most of their opportunities at all events. There is very little scientific farming, excepting at the experimental stations and agricultural colleges.

New York's Great Depot.

Visitors to New York for several years, if then entered by the New York Central Railroad, have wondered when some order will have evolved from the chaotic condition of the terminal. The old station has long since lost its identity, and seemed to be replaced by merely a hole in the ground, filled with drilling apparatus, through which the trains threaded their way and landed at some point that seemed several stories below street level. However, all this has been but the disadvantages of a temporary condition that will lead to something really worth while.

The accompanying illustration gives an idea of the New York Central terminal when it is completed. It shows a civic centre that will be one of the best of its kind in existence. This fact is realized by few of the hundreds of thousands who pass the site or by the 80,000 or 90,000 people who pass through the portals of the temporary structure daily.

One of the advantages of the building is the economical use of the space. This is made possible by the substitution of electricity for steam as motive powers for all trains entering and leaving. There will be no noisy puffing and no smoke to coat the place with filth and make the air unbearable. Another unique feature is the absence of stairways. Where a descent is necessary it will be gently sloping ways, the slope being so slight that it may be ascended without fatigue even when carrying hand luggage, if the porters will allow a person to do such a thing.

Whether the crowds are coming into the station to take their trains or are going out after having descended from them, another of the unique features about this great terminal is that the streams of traffic will always flow continuously in one direction. They will not have to turn corners or jostle with one another. How important this is may be realized by considering a few figures. The inbound concourses will hold comfortably 8,000 people, and the outbound 15,000. The waiting-rooms will accommodate 5,000 more, 30,000 in all. And more than three times that number will pass through the big station every day, a third of the entire population of the United States in the course of a year. The capacity of the station is 70,000 an hour.

Railway Across the Sahara.

The dormant project of a railway across the Sahara has been actively revived. A French commission charged with the task of ascertaining the most favorable route landed at Algiers, and proceeded to the southern terminus of the present South Oran Railway, Colomb Behar, whence a march across the desert was undertaken. The party was led by Capt. Niegar of the Colonial infantry.

The tentative plan for the railway contemplates a line south from the Algeria, branching at some point not yet selected one branch to proceed via Timbuctou to Senegal, the other to Lake Chad. Sen. Amen.

Australian Churches

In Australia the Census, which, as in Canada, is taken every ten years, requires the religions of the inhabitants to be stated. Of course, the figures are faulty, but they have interest as showing the relative strength of the churches in the Commonwealth. The following are the tabulated statistics for Christian religions:

Church of England	1,710,443
Roman Catholic	921,425
Presbyterian	558,336
Methodists	547,806
Protestant, undefined	109,891
Baptist	97,047
Catholic, undefined	75,370
Congregational	74,046
Lutheran	72,395
Church of Christ	38,748
Others	31,320
Salvation Army	26,665
Seventh Day Adventists	6,095
Greek Catholic	6,095
Unitarian	2,175

The non-Christian population reaches a total of 9,151, and consists of 8,122 Hebrews, 203 Mohammedans, 159 Buddhists, 168 Confucians, 25 Pagans and 485 others.-Ex.
