THE LATE ROBERT WEBSTER

On Monday, May 5th, there passed to his reward after a long and trying illness an old and highly esteemed resident of Ekfrid township, Robert Webster. The late Mr. Webster was born in the year 1843, Dec. 28, on the old Union road near Port Stanley. He was the son of David Webster and Agnes Muir, both natives of Scotland.

Robert was the middle child in a family of eleven, of whom four survive him. These are James of Clearville, Ont.; John of Forest, Manitoba; Mrs. John Allan of South Ekfrid; and Mrs. Henry Wellman of Crosswell, Mich. In 1876 he married Ellen, eldest daughter of the late Jacob Young, who with two sons, David and Earl of Ekfrid, and one daughter, Mrs. W. F. Stewart of Herrington, Alberta, survive.

When Mr. Webster came to Ekfrid fifty years ago he made a start by working out among the farmers until he was able to buy the farm where he resided until his death. He was a fond of relating that when he bought this farm—a wet one, and with only about thirty acres of thistle clearing and covered with big oak stumps—people said he would not be there long, yet there he remained for forty-five years.

He was a life-long Presbyterian and an elder in the church, having for thirty-five years served the Appin congregation in the office to which he was elected and ordained during the pastorate of the late Rev. W. R. Sutherland. As elder he was twice commissioner to the General Assembly. For many years he was also superintendent of the Sunday school. To him was largely due the erection of the present church building, and he himself hauled the greater part of its material. Throughout his busy life of toiling he always found time for his church duties and the visitation of the sick. The regularity of his attendance at church was so perfect that aside from sickness and absence when travelling, very few indeed were the Sabbaths on which he was not to be found in his accustomed seat at church. Neither ordinary illness nor light excuses ever kept him from the house of God. His public spirit was manifest among many other ways by his interest in the school, of which for many years he was a trustee. His death means the removal of another of those sturdy toilers whose energy and enterprise made our farms what they are and whose interest in higher things passes on to us the torch and task.

The funeral took place from the family residence on the sunny spring afternoon of May 7th, the service being conducted by Rev. H. D. McCulloch. The text of the brief funeral address was Phil. 1:21: "For to me to live is Christ and to die is gain," this being the verse that Mr. Webster had mentioned as his choice for his funeral address. The choir of the Presbyterian church sang "The Lord is My Shepherd." "Forever With the Lord," and that beautiful anthem "Going Down the Valley." The funeral was attended by a very large company of friends and neighbors who had assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to the departed and to express their sympathy with the sorrowing relatives. Interment took place at the beautiful Oakland cemetery on the Longwoods Road.

"When with bowed head
And silent, streaming tears,
With mingled hopes and fears,
To earth we yield our dead,
The saints, with clearer sight,
Do cry in glad accord:
Down the valley, he is risen,
Risen, is risen, is risen,
To the glory of the Lord."

Rub it in for Lame Back—A brisk rub with Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will cure lame back. The skin will immediately absorb the oil and it will penetrate the tissues and bring speedy relief. ### GOING AFTER HYDRO-ELECTRIC Deputation Will Take the Matter Up With Sir Adam Beck.

A special meeting of the municipal council of the village of Glencoe was held in the council chamber on Monday, May 12th. Members present: Reeve A. J. Wright; Councillors P. D. Keith, W. A. Hagerty and P. E. Lumley. The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted.

A communication from the superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway re outlet main was received and filed. The object of the meeting was to arrange to meet Sir Adam Beck with a view to securing hydro. On motion of P. E. Lumley and W. A. Hagerty, the clerk was instructed to write Philip Pocock, chairman of the Utility Commission of London, to make definite arrangements that the council have a meeting with Sir Adam Beck in London on Friday, May 16, at two o'clock.

On motion of Messrs. Hagerty and Keith it was decided to hold May 26th a holiday instead of May 24th, which falls on Saturday.

P. E. Lumley then moved notice of motion that at the next council meeting the council submit a by-law to the people re hydro.

DEATH OF SAMUEL SQUIRE

The death occurred at his home in Ekfrid township on Sunday morning of Samuel C. Squire, in his 82nd year. Mr. Squire was one of the well-known and esteemed old residents of the community, having lived in Ekfrid nearly all his life. He leaves a large family of married sons and daughters. His wife died a few years ago.

The funeral service was held at his late residence on Tuesday afternoon and interment was made at Appin cemetery.

Mr. Squire was one of a family of seven brothers and one sister. He came on his mother's side of United Empire Loyalist stock, and on his father's side from the Puritan pilgrims of New England. He was a farmer and a successful farmer; in religion a Methodist and a Liberal in politics.

SOLDIERS WELCOMED

During the week the following returned soldiers were given hearty welcome home at Glencoe:—Arnold Aldred (from Siberia), Clifford Currie, George Grant, E. M. Thomson, Harold Payne, Horace Liddington.

NEWBURY WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

Newbury, May 13.—The following officers were elected for the W. I. on Wednesday, May 7th:—Mrs. Matthew Armstrong, president; Mrs. Stephen Fennell, vice-president; Mrs. J. W. Hammett, sec.-treasurer; Mrs. Edward Haggitt, district director.

Mrs. S. Fennell and Mrs. R. B. Smith were appointed school fair directors, and instead of the former allowance of $4 for prizes the amount was increased to $10.

Mrs. Hammett, the retiring president, thanked the ladies for their splendid support during the five years of her presidency and requested the loyal help of all for Mrs. Armstrong.

The motto of the W. I. is "For home and country," and now that the war is over the W. I. will work for the benefit of the village and township—particularly for the benefit of the schools—and expects shortly that schools in the immediate neighborhood will have medical inspection. They ask the women of the village and township for their help and support. Watch for financial report for year just closed.

At a meeting held at West Lorne on the evening of May 12, at which representatives from the Appin, Dutton, West Lorne and Glencoe teams were present, it was decided to create an Elgin-Middlesex Baseball League, to be composed of clubs from the above mentioned towns. The officers elected were:—J. C. Elliott, M. P. P. and F. Macdonald, M. P. P., honorary presidents; J. H. McLeod, president and secretary-treasurer. The executive will be composed of the president and manager of each club.

The schedule in full will be drawn up in the near future, but it was decided that two games be played at West Lorne on May 26th and two at Glencoe on June 3rd.

A colored philosopher says it is foolish to count your chickens before they break.

OIL FIELD NOTES

The Castle Oil & Gas Company have moved the McCutcheon drilling rig onto the Gillies lease, where they now have several productive wells, and intend drilling in a number of new ones, which will undoubtedly increase their production in this part of the field.

The Ontario Petroleum Co. during the past week have shut wells on the J. A. Walker and E. Quick farms which, though small, will be lasting. The Imperial Oil Co. have completed the pipe line which connects the Erie Investment Co. with Shields shipping station. This company have installed a boiler and steam pump on the Mitchell lease and are prepared to put their production through the pipe line which formerly was teamed to North Glencoe.

The National Supply Co. now have their pipe line gang at work for the Toronto-Glencoe Syndicate, who will lead their oil at Gillies' siding. This company also have a large crew at work rebuilding their pumping plant and putting it in condition to force oil to the receiving station.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

The special meetings being held in the Presbyterian church this week in the cause of the forward movement are proving a splendid success and no doubt will result in much spiritual uplift and moral inspiration to the community. The speakers are the strong men in the Presbyterian Church in Canada and their addresses are forceful and to the point. Special music is adding to the attractiveness of the meetings, which so far have been largely attended.

On Sunday Rev. D. C. MacGregor of London spoke in the morning on Missions and in the evening on Stewardship. On Monday the call to the ministry was presented by Rev. J. W. Gordon of Brantford. Tuesday evening Rev. Mr. McIntosh of London gave an address on "The future of the Church," illustrated with lantern views. Rev. A. C. Stewart of Brantford is expected to speak on Wednesday evening. Rev. A. H. McGillivray on Thursday evening, and Rev. J. W. Gordon on Friday evening. The special services will close on Sunday, when Rev. James McKay of London will occupy the pulpit for both the morning and evening services.

YOUNG LADY DIES SUDDENLY

The sudden death of Miss Ellis McKinnon, under distressing circumstances, a result, it is believed, of a surgical operation for working which she underwent some time ago, occurred during Sunday night last at the home of her cousin, Mrs. Christina McLellan, where she had arrived a few hours before from Pittsburgh on a visit.

Miss McKinnon was the third daughter of the late Rev. Neil McKinnon of Mosa and of Mrs. Annie C. McKinnon now of Pittsburgh, Pa. For some time up to February last she had been teaching school at Fort William. Afterwards she went on a visit to Toronto and then to Pittsburgh. For many years the family resided in Glencoe and the deceased was well-known and esteemed in the community from her girlhood up.

The funeral was held yesterday from the residence of Mrs. McLellan to Kilmartin cemetery. The bereaved mother and members of the family have the sincere sympathy of the community in their sorrow.

OVERLOOKING ONTARIO

The traveller from Europe enters Canada at Halifax or Montreal and leaves it at Vancouver. He skirts the Great Lakes on the north, crosses the plains and goes through the Rockies, and thinks that he has seen Canada! Or he lands at New York, takes the New York Central or the Lehigh Valley railroads, crosses the Niagara River at Suspension Bridge or Black Rock, passes through the tunnel at Sarnia or is ferried over the Detroit River at Windsor, and eventually reaches San Francisco unconscious of the fact that he was ever in Canada.

The simple truth is that this peninsula of Western Ontario is sidetracked. It is the finest portion of the Dominion. Here is the seat of Canadian manufacturing, the home of cheap power, the garden where grows the richest fruit, the farm lands where agriculture and dairying are unexcelled—the most populous and prosperous part of Canada, in short. And yet when the European thinks of Canada his mind travels to the north country and to the plains, and seldom to Ontario.

We cannot help our geographical situation, but we can do something to bring before the desirable immigrant of Great Britain the importance that attaches to Ontario and the opportunities that are afforded here. We have room for millions of people. Our farming districts are only sparsely cultivated. We know little or nothing of intensive cultivation. Ontario has room for many millions of people, and it is for our governments to see that we have at least a larger share of the immigration that is coming to this country.—Free Press.

PAYS TO ADVERTISE

An advertiser who offered a machine for sale in the "Special Notice" column last week called up to congratulate The Transcript on an effective advertising medium, stating that the machine was sold within two hours after the paper was issued.

Blank oil leases for sale at The Transcript office.

GENERAL McRAE COMING

Will Address Meeting in Glencoe Town Hall on Friday Evening.

Major-General A. D. McRae has accepted the invitation of the Glencoe Soldiers' Aid Commission to address a public meeting in Glencoe, and the date set for his visit here by the International Press Council, who have his itinerary in hand, is Friday evening, May 16th. The subject of his address will be "Canadian Citizenship of the Future."

General McRae is a native of this community and an old Glencoe boy who has been signally honored for his ability. It is likely that the meeting will be in the form of a reception, and everybody will be expected to attend and in the way show their appreciation of one of their own who has brought distinction not only to himself but to his home town.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Alfred Crow appointed constable for Glencoe; salary $45 per annum. At John Henry's sale cows touched a record price, selling as high as $43.50.

Annual statement of Glencoe Mechanics' Institute shows receipts of $448.44. Grand Trunk express wrecked near Hamilton. Twenty persons killed or burned to death.

Scott Act repealed in Middlesex by majority of about 2,000. Was adopted four years prior by 3,377 majority. J. Huston, Glencoe assessor, makes his return. Population 905; increased assessment over preceding year—$18,650.

Ascending Glencoe express agent and postmaster caught in Nebraska, tried in London and given two-year sentence.

Contract let to Andrew Clannahan for Glencoe Presbyterian church, at $9,300, without spire; also public school addition, at $2,175.

APPIN

Tom King visited here on Tuesday. A large crowd attended the play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which was put on in the town hall last Monday night. Mrs. Peter McTaggart is under the doctor's care.

One of the largest funerals ever seen in this locality was that of the late Robert Webster held from his late residence near Appin last Wednesday.

Mrs. David McArthur's father, Mr. Lightfoot, died at his home in Strathroy last Tuesday.

Alf. Bardwell was being helped Earl Webster with the seedling this morning. We were pleased to welcome Bob Woods and George Thomas back from the firing-line.

Miss C. Hardwell of Ridgeway is spending a few days with her brothers here.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Fuchs took place from Rev. Mr. Whaley's residence on Tuesday at 10 a. m. to Blenheim.

The forward movement meetings in the Presbyterian church here are proving a great success.

Local Orangemen report a very pleasant event which took place at Brother Wm. May's residence after the regular meeting in the Orange Hall on Monday night. Visiting brethren from Glencoe and other points together with the local lodge motored out to Mr. May's home and there enjoyed a social evening, at the close of which George Ramsey was called to the front and presented with a strong address which was read by Brother Alf. Bardwell. The address was one of welcome, as Brother Ramsey enlisted some three years ago in the 135th Battalion and has seen some severe fighting, and all were glad to welcome him home safely. The ladies served a dainty lunch, and after all joining in singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "God Save the King," the gathering dispersed.

NEWBURY

The Guild of the Church of England are holding a sale of homemade cooking in Arthur McDonald's late residence.

D. J. Bataner and wife have returned from Detroit. Herb. Heatherington and mother spent Sunday at A. Fennell's. Mr. Heatherington sang a solo in Knox church Sunday afternoon.

The forward movement in the Presbyterian church here was opened on Sunday afternoon. Rev. A. C. Stewart of Mornington had charge of the meeting and delivered a strong address. On Monday evening Rev. A. H. McGillivray of Hamilton was unable to take the services and Rev. Mr. Lloyd of Glencoe took his place, using lantern views to show the need of men and money in the home and foreign missions. Rev. Mr. Gordon will preach at 8 p. m. on Wednesday and Rev. Mr. MacGillivray on Friday night. Judging by the standard of the addresses on Sunday and Monday evening, anyone missing these meetings misses a treat.

Rev. Mr. Malcolm was at Mornington on Sunday preaching for Rev. A. C. Stewart.

It's time the municipal authorities stopped the boys riding bicycles on the sidewalk. Some of the new riders will injure somebody and then there will be trouble.

CHAPTER VII.—(Cont'd.)
As the hour drew near for the expected guest's arrival, Burke Denby, greatly to his vexation, found himself growing more and more nervous. He asked himself indignantly if he were going to let a purple cushion entirely spoil the pleasure of the evening. Not until he had seen Gleason that afternoon had he realized how sorely he had missed his father's companionship all these past weeks. Not until he had found himself bubbling over with the things he wanted to talk about that evening had he realized how keenly he had missed the mental stimulus of that father's comradeship. And now, for the sake of a purple cushion, was he to lose the only chance he had had for weeks of conversing with an intelligent friend?

With an almost audible gasp the shocked and shamed husband pulled himself up again.
Well, of course Helen was intelligent. It was only that she was not interested in, and did not know about, these things he was thinking of; and—

The doorbell rang sharply, and Burke leaped to his feet and hastened to press the button that would release the catch of the lock at the entrance below.
"Why, Burke, you never called down through the tube at all, and asked who it was," remonstrated Helen, hurrying in, her fingers busy with the final fastenings of her dress.

"You bet your life I didn't," laughed Burke, a bit grimly. "You've got another guess coming if you think I'm going to hold Doc Gleason off at the end of a 'Who is it' bellows into his ear from that impertinent copper trumpet down there."

"Why Burke, that's all right. Everybody does it," maintained Helen. "We have to, else we'd be letting all sorts of folks in, and—"
At a warning gesture from her husband she stopped just as a tall, smooth-shaven man with kind eyes and a grave smile appeared at the open hallway door.

"Glad to see you, doctor," cried Burke, extending a cordial hand, that yet trembled a little. "Let me present you to my wife." "Let me present you to my wife," he said. "Pleased to meet you, I'm sure," bobbed Helen. And because she was nervous she said the next thing that came into her head. "And I hope you're pleased to meet me, too. All Burke's friends are so swell, you know, that—"

"Er—ah—" broke in the dismayed husband.
But the visitor advanced quietly, still with that same grave smile, and clasped Mrs. Denby's extended hand. "I am very sure Burke's friends are, indeed, very glad to meet you," he said. "Certainly I am," he finished, with a cordial heartiness so nicely balanced that even Burke Denby's sensitive alertness could find in it neither the overzealousness or insincerity nor the indifference of disdain.

Even when, a minute later, they turned and went into the living room Burke's still apprehensive watchfulness could detect in his friend's face not one trace of the dismayed horror he had been dreading to see there. "Gleason's a brick," he sighed to himself, trying to relax his tense muscles. "As if I didn't know that every last gimcrack in this miserable room would fairly scream at him the moment he entered that door!"

In spite of everybody's very evident efforts to have everything pass off pleasantly, the evening was anything but a success. Helen, at first shy and ill at ease, said little. Then, as if suddenly realizing her deficiency as a hostess, she tried to remedy it by talking very loud and very fast about anything that came into her mind, revealing especially in minute details concerning their own daily lives, ranging all the way from storied guests' arrival, Burke Denby, greatly to his vexation, found himself growing more and more nervous. Well, of course Helen was intelligent. It was only that she was not interested in, and did not know about, these things he was thinking of; and—

The doorbell rang sharply, and Burke leaped to his feet and hastened to press the button that would release the catch of the lock at the entrance below.
"Why, Burke, you never called down through the tube at all, and asked who it was," remonstrated Helen, hurrying in, her fingers busy with the final fastenings of her dress.

"You bet your life I didn't," laughed Burke, a bit grimly. "You've got another guess coming if you think I'm going to hold Doc Gleason off at the end of a 'Who is it' bellows into his ear from that impertinent copper trumpet down there."

"Why Burke, that's all right. Everybody does it," maintained Helen. "We have to, else we'd be letting all sorts of folks in, and—"
At a warning gesture from her husband she stopped just as a tall, smooth-shaven man with kind eyes and a grave smile appeared at the open hallway door.

"Glad to see you, doctor," cried Burke, extending a cordial hand, that yet trembled a little. "Let me present you to my wife." "Let me present you to my wife," he said. "Pleased to meet you, I'm sure," bobbed Helen. And because she was nervous she said the next thing that came into her head. "And I hope you're pleased to meet me, too. All Burke's friends are so swell, you know, that—"

"Er—ah—" broke in the dismayed husband.
But the visitor advanced quietly, still with that same grave smile, and clasped Mrs. Denby's extended hand. "I am very sure Burke's friends are, indeed, very glad to meet you," he said. "Certainly I am," he finished, with a cordial heartiness so nicely balanced that even Burke Denby's sensitive alertness could find in it neither the overzealousness or insincerity nor the indifference of disdain.

Even when, a minute later, they turned and went into the living room Burke's still apprehensive watchfulness could detect in his friend's face not one trace of the dismayed horror he had been dreading to see there. "Gleason's a brick," he sighed to himself, trying to relax his tense muscles. "As if I didn't know that every last gimcrack in this miserable room would fairly scream at him the moment he entered that door!"

In spite of everybody's very evident efforts to have everything pass off pleasantly, the evening was anything but a success. Helen, at first shy and ill at ease, said little. Then, as if suddenly realizing her deficiency as a hostess, she tried to remedy it by talking very loud and very fast about anything that came into her mind, revealing especially in minute

Know Your Oil Stove.

The first oil-stoves were made with flat wicks and were accompanied by a water pan which was considered necessary to counteract the naphtha and gasoline vapors that might form on the surface of the kerosene. As petroleum products became more refined, and the different elements were separated and standardized, it became possible to make stoves of different types, the improvements continuing, so that the oil-stove is now considered a necessity.

The process of burning (combustion), whether it is wood, coal, or kerosene, is first to reduce the element to a gas, the common means being heat, and then to burn this gas, mixing it with oxygen, one of the gases which supports life. Kerosene vaporizes or turns into a gas more easily than wood or coal, but not so quickly and easily as does gasoline or naphtha. When kerosene is properly refined it is comparatively safe. Kerosene can also be deodorized, so that in its liquid form most of its strong, natural odor is removed; when, however, it is heated and the particles turn into gas, the gas gives off an odor. Therefore, in using an oil-stove, it is necessary that all the gas that is formed by heat shall be burned, that is, mixed with its proper amount of oxygen and consumed, so that no unburned gas escapes into the room.

When an oil-stove is dirty, or when oil is spread over the outer surface or outside of the burner itself, the heat turns this oil into a vapor; and if it can not be burned inside the burner, it is given off in the room in the form of an odor which is unpleasant. This is the reason why all of the parts around the oil-stove should be kept clean. If after being cleaned your stove does give forth an odor, the chances are that some part around the burner has been overlooked.

To get the best results from an oil-stove it needs to be approximately level. The vaporizing chamber of the stove is so arranged that with the surface of the oil a certain distance away, the supply of oil or gas to the vaporizing chamber is uniform at all times. If the oil should be farther away from the vaporizing point, the wick, or whatever is used to bring the oil or gas to the point of combustion, does not give the best results; on the other hand, if the oil is too near to the vaporizing chamber too, much gas is likely to flow through the wick or form in the vaporizing chamber, and this excess of gas makes too great a volume of flame.

It is generally supposed that an oil-stove always gives off an odor. This is not so. The modern oil-stove burner is a cleaner and more perfect burning apparatus than a gas burner. The products of combustion coming from the completed burning of kerosene are a clean, dry heat that is purer than that coming from city gas. Food baked or cooked over the oil-stove is as clean and appetizing as that which has been done by electricity.

It is necessary, also, that the burner in which the kerosene vapor is burned should be properly balanced and be a burner in which all the gases which are formed in the vaporizing chamber are burned. If you have a wick stove, the vaporizing chamber is practically at the top of the wick. Above this must be some form of a chimney or combustion chamber in which all the gases that are formed in the vaporizing chamber are mixed with the proper amount of air or oxygen and turned out to heat. In a wickless type of stove, the vaporizing chamber is the oil bowl, and the burning chamber is represented by two cylinders which are perforated, and in which the draft has been arranged so that oxygen is taken in and mixed with the gas that forms in the vaporizing bowl and burns with an intense heat.

If your oil-stove is apparently clean and you are getting an odor from the stove, you should make sure that your chimney is properly placed on the vaporizing chamber and that all the parts connected with it are in their proper position, so that the entire amount of gas that is forming in the vaporizing chamber is burned in the chimney.

Sometimes drafts of air strike the burner and a little gas is blown away from the chimney itself and is not burned. An unpleasant odor may result; but if the cause of the odor is known and it can be avoided, it ceases to be a cause of annoyance. "Keep your oil-stove clean" appears on all direction cards, and a stove will not give good service unless the rules are observed.

Heat enters the oven of an oil-stove from below, and a deflector, placed near the bottom of the oven, distributes this heat, which must come along the sides of the oven in order to reach the top. Consequently, to allow this heat to pass the dishes or pans used in the oven they must not be too large.

In order to do any baking, it is necessary, first, that the oven shall become thoroughly heated. Usually ten minutes or more are required. Beginning with an even which is thoroughly heated, most of the baking can be accomplished with a moderate, constant heat. As a rule, articles that require to be brown on top will brown more quickly if the top of the bread, pudding or cake is near the top of the oven where it receives some of the deflected heat. Pans should be sufficiently shallow so that the food will rise to the top of the pan and perhaps above it, in order that it may have an opportunity to brown. Hot air does not readily force itself down into a pocket.

Those who are not accustomed to the use of oil-stoves are surprised at the variety of work that can be done with them and the ease and economy with which they can be used. Kerosene is concentrated fuel; and if it were twice its present price, it would still be an economical household agent.

When Your Child Must Face Pain.
When the doctor advised me to have Nancy's adenoids and tonsils removed, I realized that a serious problem confronted me. She is a nervous, high-strung child, abnormally sensitive to pain. I dared not send her to the operating table without some preparation for the ordeal through which she must pass.

My first impulse was to promise a reward if Nancy would submit quietly to the operation. But I wanted to make this experience count for character-building, to strengthen her in some small measure for the dangers and difficulties of a woman's lot that she must face later on.

So I talked to her cheerfully about the operation, frankly acknowledged that it would hurt for a while, but explained that the pain now would save her from a great deal of trouble and suffering later on. I dwelt upon the kindness of the doctor, who had a little girl of his own at home, and who loved all little girls and wanted to help them become strong and well.

I described the good nurses, and the kind and beautiful white walls and comfortable beds; and I promised to stay with her as much as possible while she was there, and told her how proud and happy I would be if she were brave.

As a result she walked into the operating room rather timidly, but voluntarily. And during the suffering afterward she did not reproach me.

In the next room to ours was a little boy, an only son, whose parents had lured him into the hospital by telling him he was going to the seashore. When they arrived, the child was carried screaming to the operating room and instantly etherized. When the operation was over, he screamed and thrashed around in bed, raging and scolding like a little caged animal, working himself into a fever.

Did this child come out of the ordeal strengthened by his pain? Or did he come out having less confidence in his parents' word, and with a feeling of resentment against them springing from the fact that they had deceived him?

Surely it is the duty of every mother to help her children bear pain by fortifying them against it. Pain is an instrument of higher discipline for humanity; to try to avoid it for one's children is to produce moral flabbiness where they most need strength.

Why Not Be a Washerwoman?
Not long ago I was left alone with three children to bring up and nothing to do with. When I sat down and made an inventory of my accomplishments, preparatory to earning a living for myself and them, I found that the profession for which I seemed best suited was that of a washerwoman.

My friends were shocked and disgusted. It seemed dreadful to them. The fact that I actually liked to wash and iron pretty things, and would almost rather have died than have gone into a man's office or behind a counter, meant nothing to them. "Never you mind," I told them. "I'll be a washerwoman. I'll have, and the woman who doesn't send her fine things to Miss Madam Sans Gene will be so behind the times that she will be as uncomfortable as she would in a last year's hat."

I went to a society editor of one of the daily papers in town, and got a list of the ultra-fashionables. I sent a letter to each of them, explaining my new venture, although, of course, I didn't tell them that it was a new one, and stated my prices, which were so high that they created interest in themselves.

"I am not soliciting ordinary stuff," I said, "that an ordinary laundress can do; I can't bother with that. But when your white satin skirt is ready for a bath, or your pet silk sweater, or your silk underwear and stockings, send them to me. I can do them so you will never have to worry about them again."

The responses I received from the letters surprised me. I do every piece myself, and to-day my income is that much more than when my husband was alive. A girl in the kitchen does my housework. We live very comfortably, and I am already accumulating a bank account toward a college education for my children.

The War Memorial.
Lay its foundation deep
Here, where the heroes sleep;
Then build it high
To meet the sky—
Their name must never die!
Lay us defy
Old Time's erasing hand
Here, where they made their stand,
And died that we might live
In righteous peace. We give
Of all our best to raise
This monument of praise,
The cross of sacrifice,
That tells the bitter price
Of duty bravely done,
Of splendid triumph won.
For evermore their name
Shall live: undying fame
Attend our heroes: be our life
More worthy of their mighty strife.

Second V.C. For a Mother.
At a recent investiture at Buckingham Palace the King handed to Mrs. Bradford the V.C. won by her son, Lieutenant-Commander Bradford, at Zeebrugge. This was the second occasion on which Mrs. Bradford has received the decoration from his Majesty, who at a former investiture presented her with the V.C. awarded to her son, the late Brigadier-General Bradford, who was 24 years old and probably the youngest brigadier in the army. The King recalled the fact that Mrs. Bradford had been at the Palace before and had a long and sympathetic talk with her.

SACREDNESS OF HUMAN LIFE.
We no longer travel armed ready to kill before we are killed, but there are more ways than one of killing people. A man who would not so much as strike another, may head a corporation that works men to the breaking point and then discards them hopeless and useless. The employer who pays his shop-girl so scanty wages that, to secure food and clothing, she is tempted into immorality and finally is shamed into suicide, is not he implicated in the crime? The man who is a willing partner to a system which, to make him rich, throttles the ambition and starves the development of others so that they can be said at best to be only half alive, is not their blood upon his hands?

MOTHER'S DAY.
Because I love you, Mother dear, I wore them—
Altho' they're faded now their beauty gone—
But still the memory of your goodness lingers.
The dearest little Mother 'neath the sun.
Because I love you, Mother dear, I pressed them—
The flowers I wore so proudly and
for you,
And I would press your lips—were they but near me—
The sweetest, gentlest lips I ever knew.
Because I love you, Mother dear, I sent them—
Lifeless and wither'd tho' they now may be—
Because I love you, Mother dear, I kissed them—
And the flowers bear that kiss to you—from me.

The mauve is for the sacred years
you've toiled,
The white is for your purity divine.
The red is for your warm and living nature—
May Heaven bless and keep you,
Mother mine—
SWEET MAY MORNS.
Oh! the gay-colored birds are coming
To warble so sweet in the wildwood—
Janglers, thrushes, robins and orioles,
That sing as they did in our childhood.
Dear to remembrance comes the volume of mirth
They poured from the tree-tops at morn,
And melody swept like a clarion peal
As they sang 'midst the bloom of the thorn.
Oh, sweet were those days when we sat by the stream,
'Neath the shade of the wide-spreading tree—
Each ripple was laughter, each murmur a song,
As our hearts beat in rapture and glee.
Then, oh, for the days of sweet, sunny childhood,
When happy and gay we drifted
along,
In sunshine or rain, in love with the woodland—
Life all a dream, our existence a song.
'Twas little we recked of the sorrows
to come,
Which now sweep o'er our lives like a billion—
The tears of the evening were smiles
at the morn,
As we rose from sweet dreams on our pillow.
In Flanders Ground.
The guns are sleeping on Flanders
field
Over the silent dead,
And the song of Woe is hushed and still.
As the sun shines overhead,
'Til night gives stars to spray the scene
With gems that can never fade,
Though raindrops fall on the sacred soil
Where Freedom's men are laid.
The guns are hushed by the voice of peace
It called from the vale of Death.
As men looked agast at the work of man
With fevered and bated breath.
When the Shepherd unseen on Flanders'
field
Came at last, with unerring will,
And guns grew dumb at the hand of
man,
Inert at last, was still.
On the broad expanse of Flanders'
field
A silent Awe now reigns,
As men apart in the halls of space
Sing or weep for their loss or gains.
'Til out from the heart of Flanders'
field
When the trumpet of time shall sound,
There shall come all those who in silent worth
Are wrapped in Flanders ground.

Where Pat Was.
In a small village in Ireland the mother of a soldier met the village priest, who asked her if she had had bad news. "Sure, I have," she said.
"Pat has been killed."
"Oh, I am very sorry," said the priest. "Did you receive word from the War Office?"
"No," she said, "I received word from himself."
The priest looked perplexed, and said, "But how is that?"
"Sure," she said, "here is the letter;
read it for yourself."
The letter said: "Dear Mother—I am now in the Holy Land."

Silage for Young Stock.

Several years ago a breeder called my attention to the value of corn silage for the rearing and developing of young stock. Having two farms, one equipped with silos and the other not, he had an opportunity to see the advantage of silage for this purpose. I was greatly surprised to note the difference in size and quality of the young stock that were liberally fed corn silage with alfalfa hay. They were not only larger but were in better condition. This convinced me that the silo should be used more for this purpose, and I have since that time often found examples to prove the value of silage for young growing animals. The breeder of pure-bred stock, whether dairy or beef cattle, has much need for silage in the economic development of his herd. The cost of the product, whether beef or milk, is the principal item of expense for the breeder to consider and in this age of high-priced hay and grain, the cost of the ration becomes the most important item and the one on which depends the profit for the breeder.

Any man who keeps ten head or more of cattle will find a silo an economic equipment on his farm. It is necessary for nine-tenths of our milk and cream producers to grow and develop their young stock and the silage which furnishes the succulent ration to the milk cows will also form the best kind of ration for the young stock.

Liberal feeding is the only profitable kind, for there is no money in half feeding stock. An animal must be boarded and if only a boarding ration be given there is no profit but really a loss. It is that part of the ration which is over and above the food of maintenance, or board, from which we derive our profit. On this basis, an animal will earn money in proportion to the amount of food she consumes, and this is largely true. Good feeding is supplying animals with their required nutriment at the lowest possible cost. Anyone with plenty of money can feed an animal well, but to feed an animal well and economically requires knowledge of the subject. The two great food elements which are necessary are known as carbohydrates, and protein. Corn silage is our cheapest form of carbohydrate, and clover, or the legumes, furnish our protein in the cheapest forms. Young stock, from the time they are weaned, will make a splendid growth and development on corn silage and clover or alfalfa hay without any grain, and this ration is a cheap one and within the reach of practically every breeder.

The silo will prove of great economy not only in the growing and developing of young stock, but also the growing of colts or maintenance of idle horses. Silage has been likened to pasture and it is very properly considered from this viewpoint when used for the growing and developing of all our live stock.

TRANSFORMING A LIVING ROOM

"Well, well!" exclaimed the visitor, as she stepped into the big living room. "You've been getting new furniture, I see. And new rugs, too," she added as her bright eyes glanced from one object to another. In answer to the swift denial of her hostess she expostulated, "but I never saw that chair before, nor the table and rugs. How I wished I could get some new things for the house this year. But every cent about living expenses has gone into bonds and war relief. So I'll just have to wait a while," she said resignedly.

"You need wait no longer, if you care to re-furnish your house the way we have done," said her hostess.

"Then tell me how you did it," was the quick reply. Her hostess laughed in sympathy with the eagerness. "There is nothing new in this room except some of the pillow covers and the tapestry on the big chair. We are just going through a period of reconstruction, you know. And it extends all the way from the big interests to our homes. Really, the thrift habit we have acquired is doing wonders for us. We are just beginning to realize what an abundance of everything we have, and how to use it to the best advantage."

"That is true—in a general way. But how?"

"How did we apply it to this room? Well, to begin with, all our furniture looked shabby and worn, and we did so long for new. There were many things we really needed, but as you say, there were no available funds. It all began with that chair."

The speaker indicated a large easy rocker. "I went to a furniture store which was selling out, determined to buy a new one. Either the reports of bargains were exaggerated or the best things were gone. At any rate, I came home without a chair. As father had always declared that chairs to be the most comfortable in the house, we decided to reupholster it. Don't you remember how it looked? It was covered with black leather, very much scarred and worn. The springs of the seat and back were all saggy and loose."

"I never would have thought it the same chair," declared the visitor. "How did you do such splendid work?"

"In the first place we took off the old cover and used it as a pattern to cut the new. In this way we could figure on the exact amount to buy and had nothing left over. In taking off the cover, we then very carefully, taking particular notice of how it had been put on. Then we tightened the springs, not an easy job, I'll admit. We tacked strips of stout canvas from one side of the frame to the other, one of us holding the springs in place while the other stretched the canvas. Under the seat we used strips of thin wood slipped under the frame to hold the springs until the canvas was securely tacked. We tacked a square of canvas over the entire under side of the seat to catch the bits of excelsior which these old chairs seem to shed. One reason you did not recognize the chair was because we have covered and padded the wooden fronts to the arms and the "open-work" panel below the seat."

"The other chairs look new. What did you do to them?" asked her friend, who had been paying close attention.

"They were badly scratched, so we took off the varnish with ammonia, and sandpapered them smooth. They are walnut, you see, so all the finish they needed was a coat of paraffine oil, well rubbed in with a rag. All these tasks were finished before we put on the tapestry. We took particular pains in selecting the pattern, and I think the combination of crowns and greens harmonizes very nicely with the other furnishings. You see how we cut the material so that the back and seat would come lengthwise of the material. By stretching each piece and pinning it to the stuffing before tacking the edges, it was not difficult to do neat work."

"It looks as if an expert had done it," said her visitor admiringly. "Now tell me about that table. I know you did not make that over."

"Yes, but we did. It was light oak, and never matched anything in the room. You see the piano, music cabinet and two chairs are mahogany, the book cases, couch and library table are cherry, and the woodwork is as near like both woods as we could get it. We had this furniture when the house was built and have tried to keep to harmonious colors. As you know, we use the one end of the room for a dining room, and the light oak table never looked well. Besides we had to keep a cloth on it because the top had long since lost its polish. Our success with the chair inspired us to refinish the table. We found it possible to apply an oil stain (matching the woodwork in color) to the legs of the table without removing the varnish. What little varnish there was left on the top, was removed with ammonia."

"Just how did you do that?" interrupted the visitor. "I may want to make over my table."

"Apply ordinary household ammonia with a paint brush. This softens the varnish, which may then be scraped off with a piece of glass. It is a sticky job, but well worth while. You may have to apply the ammonia more than once if the old varnish is very thick. When you have removed all you can in this way, use fine sandpaper to finish off. Always rub with the grain of the wood, unless there are very rough places to be smoothed off. Now apply the stain as evenly as possible with a wide flat brush, following the grain again, then wipe it off lightly with a rag. Wipe with the grain. This prevents too heavy a coat, which would look like paint. The next day the table will be dry and you can rub it down with paraffine or linseed oil and pumice stone. Dip your rag first in the oil and then in the powdered pumice. Go over the entire surface with this and then with oil alone, and the table is ready for use. If you rub it well with an oiled rag every week for a while you will soon have a fine finish."

"Isn't the table smaller?" queried the visitor.

Her hostess laughed. "The fact of the matter is that the white cloth always made the table look larger. And it seemed to take up so much room that we pushed it as far back as possible to make it less conspicuous. Now that we use a runner or dolly, it looks less like a dining table, so we pulled it out farther into the room and left space by the window for a rocking chair."

The visitor's interest encouraged the hostess to proceed. "You remember that one book case has always stood beside the dining table and the other one at the far end of the room opposite the piano. For some time I have had a vague notion that I would like book cases at one end of the room. Moving the dining table farther into the room made this possible, and I am more than pleased with the change."

The hostess paused, then began again as she saw her visitor looking at the rugs. "They do look like new, but they, too, are made over. We learned of a firm who make them out of old carpet, even using old 'fluff' rugs and woolen pieces of all kinds of material. They dye them any shade you wish. We like that moss-green. It is warm and rich-looking. However, it seemed so very 'green' that it was necessary to add more of the same color in the other furnishings in order to keep the rug from coming up and hitting you in the face," as someone expressed it. Consequently, we made a green cushion for the little black chair, and covered the two stools with the same. With the green tints in the couch cover repeated in the cushions of the willow chair and tapestry of the easy chair, there is now enough to bind the room together."

"So much brown and green made the furnishings a little dark. Notice what we have done to lighten the effect. Over one book case is a water-color drawing in a wide gold mat and frame. On top of the case is a gold-framed photograph and a low flower bowl of yellow pottery. On the other book case are two brass candlesticks in front of an oil painting in dull colors which is framed in gilt. And I must tell you about those gold frames," the hostess interrupted herself.

"The one on the water-color was especially black and dingy. So we washed it and then applied a coat of gold enamel. There is another in the hall which has been rejuvenated."

"I thought it was a new frame," said the visitor in astonishment.

"Then you see how well the tall green jar looks on the dining table with the copper nut bowl beside it," continued her hostess. "There are the brass andirons, and on the lintel against the reddish brown bricks of the chimney is a copper tray with brass handles, and two small brass bowls. You see how each of these catch the light and reflect it. They help to make the room lighter on dark days and at night."

The visitor drew a long breath and nodded her head approvingly. "I see what you mean. And I know I can rearrange my possessions to better advantage after having seen this. Even if I don't happen to have so much brass as you have, I can use the lighter colored articles to better advantage. You have done wonders by using just what you had."

"It was not all accomplished in a day. You must live with things and make many changes before seeing their possibilities and arrange them to the best advantage. However, it is wonderful how much more livable some rooms can be made by a little arrangement of furniture, and a little stain and polish, backed up by a happy thought."

"I never had thought this room needed any improvement. It is so nice to have plenty of windows. I am going to buy new curtains," asked the visitor, noticing their absence.

"That is another of my convictions

A NEW LANDED GENTRY

By S. O. S.

And always he wears a complacent smile.

There has been a lot of disapproval voiced lately against the importation of titles. Personally we can't see what all the row is about. It surely cannot hamper a man's usefulness in life just to have a few initials hitched on to the rear of his name or for that matter to have a "Sir" drum-majoring in front.

On the other hand we do view with concern the growth of the Landed Gentry whom the farmers of Ontario are unconsciously creating. In every town and village you see the creature under way. In every town and village you will find at least one gentleman of Hebrew extraction who delights in the name of Scarpinsky, Jankovitch or something just as suggestive. They come to this country from Russia, Austria, Hungary, Poland and other European countries; sometimes with sufficient funds to purchase an ancient horse and wagon and rent a storage yard, but more often these accessories come later. In either event they soon acquire sufficient English to transact their business of buying and selling old iron and other materials. And their best customers are the farmers. For proof of this statement just glance at the used car lots you pass and you will see that it is made up largely of binder, mower and other implement parts, which through exposure and want of care on the farmers' part, have been scrapped. These implements were cut off in the prime of their useful life.

Now this metal collecting business is a remunerative one, for after a few years of buying for a song and selling at a good profit our Hebrew friend is in a position to return to the land from whence he came, where by virtue of the wealth he has made from the Canadian farmer he is able to purchase a baronial hall, the original baron having left his estate for financial reasons, and being perhaps now engaged as a waiter in a Toronto hotel or possibly employing his artistic talents in creating studies in black and tan in a shoe shine parlor.

Our retired scampman is now in a position to live at ease for the rest of his life. With our mind's eye we can see him watching his goats grazing on the verdant hills of his estate, we can see his look of pleasure as his eye follows the gambols of his kids both Jewish and goish. Or again, we see him testing the luscious fruit of his vineyard. And always he wears a complacent smile, a smile so broad that even his patriarchal beard cannot obscure it. For all these good things are his, received at the hands of the careless Canadian farmer.

The farmer will continue to plow, sow and reap; incidentally he will neglect to build an implement shed, and thus continue the business of providing scrap for the junk man's succor.

that I mean to live up to here after," declared her hostess. "I am tired of washing curtains and I want to see out. I don't care what the neighbors say about the bare windows. See that nut-hatch helping himself to suet on the maple tree? From the middle of this room we saw the first blue birds last Sunday. We could not have seen them if lace curtains had hung there."

The visitor looked at her a bit curiously, and then at the tree again, where a downy woodpecker had joined the nut-hatch. There was a clear whistle from the sumach bush and a flash of red as a cardinal flew past the window. "I never see the birds around our house," she said thoughtfully. "Perhaps—" She turned back to the room. "At any rate I'm going to recover Pa's arm chair and make over my dining table. I don't know about the curtains."

FISHERMAN'S LUCK.

Mary Emerson was thoroughly discouraged. She had put in a hard winter of work at the little mission, and her efforts seemed futile. She felt that she had better give it up, and came to tell Dr. Edgeworth, her pastor, so.

"But there is no dissension among your people, is there, Mary?" he asked.

"No," she replied. "I sometimes wish there were. It would at least indicate some sign of life. I feel about like the disciples when they came ashore and said to Christ, 'Master, we have toiled all the night and have taken nothing.'"

"Yes, but do you remember the last half of that text, Mary?" asked the minister.

"Why, no; I don't recollect it just now. What is it?" she asked.

"It's a text for all discouraged workers like you, Mary. The whole text is this: 'Master, we have toiled all the night and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word we will let down the net.' And you remember the result. It was the miraculous draft of fishes that nearly swamped the boat. And yet all the facts seemed to be against them when they made the cast. They pitched their faith in the Master against appearances, and they won."

"I think that is what we all have to do, when we face a situation like yours, Mary," he continued. "Hopelessness, indifference, weak despondency, foolish desperation, cynical unbelief—these are the things that make real failure. It is not our ignorance and clumsiness that baffle the Almighty; it is our despair. Too often we fling in God's face the bitter cry of life's unfruitful hours in reply to His command for a new venture of faith. Some of us are too wise to succeed—too worldly-wise. That is the failure that comes of putting experience before faith. If we can only tread the path of routine with the voice of Christ in our ears, we may be sure that we are skirting the kingdom of the miraculous. That is the only thing which will save us from discounting the worth of our work and criticizing the conditions of it."

"That is good spiritual tonic, doctor," she replied, "but don't you think some other worker would do better than I?"

"Did Christ choose a new crew when He gave the command to let down the nets? No; it was the same crew that had just come ashore with empty nets. That is my answer to your question."

To Keep the Eggs Coming.

A certain very successful poultryman states that the secret of success is in keeping the appetite of his flock keen and constant throughout the summer season. By this plan his hens are kept consuming a full ration, and productive laying is kept up long after they would otherwise have ceased to produce.

"Variety of feed" is his watchword. In spring and early summer his hens have free range, with constant access to a well-balanced dry mash. Then as production begins to slacken they are confined for a month or two, and furnished a stimulating moist mash in the morning and one at night in addition to the dry mash and scratch grain, also a variety of greens. During the spring no moist mash is supplied, and after being confined the hens are greedy for it. About August his hens are again given range and a moist mash, wet with sour milk. He then gets another late speeding-up of egg production, and by this plan secures two or three dozen more eggs per hen.

This same poultryman, in order to cut the cost of animal food for layers and growing chicks, now buys soup bones. These bones are stewed for the family table, and after serving this purpose, together with the inferior meat, gristle, etc., they are given a second long-continued boiling, which extracts most of the food elements except the mineral portions, and also softens the bones.

Not less important, when his layers are confined, is an abundant daily supply of tender green succulent feed, such as lawn clippings, and kale and rape grown especially for the purpose. Dried-up wire-like grass and weeds do not fill the bill.

His mash mixture is two parts each, by weight, of bran, middlings, ground oats, cornmeal; one part each of gluten, alfalfa meal, and fish scrap; three-fourths part beef scrap; one-half part each of oil meal and pulverized charcoal; and one pound of salt to every hundred pounds of mash. When fed moist, the hens are given only what they will clean up in about twenty minutes.

About Adenoids.

If you find the child often breathing with difficulty he probably suffers from the growth at the back of the nostrils called adenoids. Take him to a physician and have them removed, so preventing a long train of disorders, mental and physical, whose signs are that strained, drooping countenance we know as an adenoid face. Adenoids should be removed by a surgical operation.

Farmers everywhere are finding out the value of newspaper publicity. A few years ago it was the custom to get a big bunch of sale bills printed. Today conditions have changed. The farmer has rural mail and telephone. He need not open so much time at hotels and blacksmith shops. The way to reach him is through the local newspapers. And farmers have found that publishing their sale bills in their local paper costs only a few dollars but puts them in touch with a score of interested buyers for every one reached by the bills. But the two together make a combination that spells success with a big capital "S."

the Capital of Overseas Forces and His Majesty Takes Salute.

The march through London on May 3rd of the Overseas troops provided a unique Empire pageant for the dense crowds of cheering people with which the route was lined. The gaily decorated streets, ablaze with allied flags, presented a brilliant picture in the bright sunshine, while squadrons of airplanes, piloted by Dominion aces, circled and swooped above the ranks of marching troops.

H. R. H. Prince Arthur of Connaught accompanied Lt. Gen. Sir Arthur Currie at the head of the Canadians, who led the procession. In succession followed Gen. Chauvel with the Australians, Gen. Young with the New Zealanders, Col. Thackeray with the South Africans, and Col. Bernard with the Newfoundlanders.

The King, who in the morning held an investiture of overseas troops, took the salute at the palace.

The King's Address.
The following message from the King was handed each man on the dispersal of the parade: "Officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the overseas forces:

"It is with a heart full of pride and gratitude I take your salute to-day as you march in triumph through London. The people of the British Dominions beyond the seas by their instant readiness to share in the trials and responsibilities of the great war have shown to the world the unity of the British Empire. You, with your comrades from the Mother Country, vied with one another in noble deeds, which will ever be held in proud remembrance. Readily you adapted yourselves to changing conditions of a new and formidable kind of warfare, and endured physical hardships and exacting mental strain.

"Whether on the plains of Flanders, the heights of Gallipoli, in France, in Palestine or other theatres of war you displayed gallant endurance in defence and vigorous initiative in attack. We and future generations will never forget the part played by the Canadians in the second battle of Ypres and Vimy Ridge, by the Australians and New Zealanders at Gallipoli, and in the advance in France in the spring of 1917 by troops of all the three Dominions in breaking the Hindenburg Line last year, by the South African Brigade in Delville Wood, and by the Royal Newfoundland Regiment at Monchy Le Preux.

"Now in the day of victory I wish to express to you who represent the overseas forces my unbounded admiration for your splendid feats of arms and sacrifices you have made. I wish you all God-speed on your homeward journey, with the hope that the outcome of this world struggle will assure peace to your children and your children's children."

High Standard of Courage.
As one writer says, "The Dominion contingent in its first battle set itself to reach and reached the highest standard of desperate and disciplined courage."

It is pointed out that the Victoria Cross was never so hard to win as in the recent war, yet the number conferred on overseas soldiers is greater than the crosses gained by all arms in any previous campaign, with the exception of the Indian Mutiny.

The Times prints a detailed account of the deeds of Canadians and Newfoundlanders and says the final effort of Canada during the last hundred days is worthy of her sons, who, under Gen. Currie, proved second to none in battle.

FEAST ON ELEPHANTS' FEET.

Diet of Tommies in Africa Included
Eland and Zebra Steaks.

Men returning from what was German East Africa have been telling people in England some of their impressions about strange meats with which the British Tommies have varied their diet of bully beef. It is stated that the best of the strange meats was eland steak, which is as appetizing and as satisfying as the juiciest steak from an English ox.

Elephant meat has a good flavor, according to the returned soldiers, but it is sometimes stringy and coarse. The trunk of the elephant is a delicacy resembling, according to the men, the succulent meat from the hump of the angeli. Elephants' feet baked in wood ashes in a hole in the ground make fairly good meat jelly, but it is inclined to be gluey unless properly cooked. Giraffe flesh is coarse and its flavor recalls the odor of cat's meat. Zebra steaks are very sweet, and the meat is white, rather like veal.

While the British Tommies could vary his diet with zebra and eland steaks, and such like, he looked with horror upon the natives who relished flying ants, and if they had an opportunity of preparing caterpillars, rats, monkeys and crocodile meat, they enjoyed such food. Also tortises roasted in their shells were favored by the natives.

BRITAIN PREPARES FOR PEACE REVELS

GREATEST OF ALL CELEBRATIONS TO BE HELD IN JUNE.

General Illumination of the Whole
Kingdom at 11 p.m. on Night Fixed —Pageants and Plays.

The date of the celebration of peace in Britain is yet uncertain, though June is still spoken of, says a London despatch. He is wise who refuses to prophesy, but it is safe to prophesy one thing, and that is when the peace night revels do come off they will be fast and furious, with bonfires and beacons and squibs and crackers, and, with the sanction of the War Office, a barrage of star shells and Vercy lights, with the long white beams from scores of searchlights illuminating the whole. There will be no end of light and laughter, pageants and plays and shows, and the whole Empire, circled by a chain of fire, will rejoice.

Under the direction of a committee of members of Parliament, presided over by Mr. J. G. Butler, M.P., Peace Celebrations, Beacons, and Bonfires Committees have been formed all over the kingdom, which have arranged that the general illumination of the whole kingdom will commence at eleven p.m. on the night fixed.

As the use of valuable fuel is to be deprecated at this time, the Admiralty and War Office are supplying the large surplus stocks of Dover flares, rockets and handlights at the very lowest possible prices, so that for even the smallest communities they may be cheap enough. The flares, the invention of the late Wing Commander Brock, brilliantly illuminate an area of three miles radius. They burn for seven and a half minutes, weigh ninety pounds, stand three feet high by eight inches diameter, are non-explosive and are fired by friction, so that they are safe enough even to the most inexperienced. Eight of these flares will maintain the illumination for an hour, and conveyed to mountain tops in sufficient number the whole Empire should be made bright as day for an hour even on the darkest, moonless and cloudiest night.

Great Peace Pageants.
But the bonfires will not be confined to the farly alone. All the waste brushwood and hedgerow clippings, which at this time of year are usually burned up, are being collected to make bonfires on "the night." They will make a dull red glow with a maximum of smoke, but they will serve.

Then there is to be a wonderful series of peace pageants to be given in various great centres in aid of St. Dunstan's Fund for soldiers blinded in the war. St. Dunstan's, which has the patronage of Queen Alexandra, is striving now to enlist the help of 20,000 voluntary performers, for whom costumes are being prepared. It is to be a gigantic production with scenic and mechanical effects never before attempted or even thought of in connection with open air displays. This pageant, which will have a vast central arena and subsidiary stages on either side, will open with an episode showing the Empire at peace. Then, showing the Empire at peace. Then, with the call to arms, come the "Old Contemptibles" boarding a great troopship.

The early stages of the conflict will be realistically depicted, and it is proposed that in each city where the Peace Pageant is given the most notable deeds of local regiments shall be reconstructed, where possible, by the men who fought in the engagements.

The Navy is the theme of the fourth episode, which will begin with the Spithead Review of 1914 and close with the glorious attack on Zeebrugge. In the final scene of triumph all the regiments of the Allies will be represented in a parade of colors reminiscent of the days before khaki replaced distinctive and decorative uniform. As a finale, symbolic of the coming generation, a thousand children clad in red, white and blue will form a living Union Jack.

Choir of 20,000 Voices.
The League of Arts is arranging for other entertainments on a colossal scale in London. On from twenty to thirty of the parks and commons stands are to be erected capable of accommodating about 1,000 instrumentalists and singers, and in addition there will be raised stages for the production of such plays as "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "As You Like It."

The organization of a choir of 20,000 voices to sing in the open air is being undertaken by Dr. Charles Harris. "I will raise a choir of 10,000 in London and 10,000 in the provinces and bring them together in a London park," says Dr. Harris. "All the things we sing are known to most people. We are not going to attempt to sing over people's heads, but just simple things which appeal to the multitude—the national anthems of the Allies; 'March of the Men of Harlech,' parts of the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' while there is a wealth of expression both in words and music in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' which are worth singing. In a big demonstration of this sort the singing must be on simple lines, and if it is kept within this area of modesty in music every one can understand and every one can sing."

A Shrewd Turk.
Writing in Asia, Mr. John Van Ess relates a tale that exhibits an interesting bit of Turkish acumen. I once happened to be on a Turkish steamer, he says, when there were four Europeans in the first saloon. The cook had prepared a roast for our dinner and had placed it in the scullery window. A short time before the meal he came frantically in to the pasha who commanded the three hundred soldiers on board, exclaiming that the roast had been stolen.

The pasha, undisturbed, detailed an aid to hunt out the thief.
"Line up the soldiers on deck," said he, "and smell every man's breath. He whose breath does not smell of onions is the thief. Bring him quick!" In an incredibly short time the aid returned, leading a gaunt soldier, who meekly admitted his guilt. All the other soldiers had dined on onion stew, but the guilty man had eaten choice roast beef.

Roundly, $4,000,000 worth of orders have already been booked in Europe by Canadian woolen manufacturers who formed a trade group, as advocated by the Canadian Trade Commission. Other groups are now being rapidly arranged.

SPINNING STEEL.

Intricate Process Used in Manufacture of Steel.

Steel for wire making is delivered to the wire mill in bars four inches square, a yard long and about one hundred and fifty pounds in weight. The wire makers bring the bars to a white-hot, pliable condition, then run them through a series of grooved rolls in the rod mill. It forms them into rods of lead-pencil size that are conveyed through a pipe to a mechanism that coils them into bundles. The rods are then carried on moving platforms to the open air and cooled. From that point on, says the Scientific American, the wire makers bring the metal to its final shape while it is cold by the wire-drawing process.

The bundles are first immersed in a vat of dilute sulphuric acid, called a pickling solution. Then after most of the acid is got rid of in a hot-water bath, the rods are run very slowly under successive sprays of water. The rods are then dipped in milk of lime to neutralize any remaining traces of acid, in order to protect them from further atmospheric action, and to provide them with a lubricant during their subsequent passage through the steel die. In an incredibly short time the aid returned, leading a gaunt soldier, who meekly admitted his guilt. All the other soldiers had dined on onion stew, but the guilty man had eaten choice roast beef.

The drawing process was continued long enough, the wire would become brittle. It is therefore necessary to stop drawing and run the bundles through an oven to anneal the wire and to make it soft. Finally, the wire passes through a molten zinc galvanizing bath and runs through a shredded asbestos wiper that carries off the surplus zinc. It is then cooled and wound on reels.

OYSTER PEARL INDUSTRY.

Japanese Farm Where Blivale Is Encouraged to Produce Jewels.

There is an extensive salt water farm in Japan, where the gardeners encourage oysters to make pearls. The farm has an area of about fifty square miles, and the water varies in depth from five to fifteen fathoms. The pearl farmer selects spots where the oyster spawn is plentiful and plants small rocks and stones.

As soon as they are covered with oyster spat he places them in special beds, where they lie undisturbed until the third year. It is said that an oyster will not produce a pearl unless a foreign substance irritates it. As soon as it feels the irritation it proceeds to cover the troublesome object with nacre, layer upon layer, until after a few years it has made a pearl.

When the oysters are large enough the pearl farmer takes them from the beds and, carefully opening them, introduces into their bodies, a tiny speck of some foreign substance. After that he replaces them in the sea. At the end of from three to five years the oyster has costed the foreign substance with nacre and a pearl is the result.

BRITISH GLOVE FABRICS

Old Country on the Way to Recapture
Lost Industry.

The glove fabric industry, which until the outbreak of the war, was a German monopoly, is being rapidly recaptured by Nottingham manufacturers. It originally had its home in Nottingham, but the success of German chemists in discovering the method of dyeing black on cotton, known as the Hemsdorf process, which not only produces a permanent black, but makes the gloves suede-like in appearance and touch, spelt ruin to the English manufacturers. The Germans before the war exported 30,000,000 pairs of these gloves, valued at three-quarters of a million sterling to England.

The dyeing and finishing of lace and hosiery by Nottingham firms has, however, reached such a high standard of late years, and has revealed so many German secrets, that the manufacturers are now entering again into the glove fabric trade. So successful are they proving that whereas in 1913 England only made 880,000 yards of glove fabric, that figure is now being quadrupled.

Nottingham firms are spending large sums of money on chemical research and are turning out gloves equal to anything produced by Germany, but they are appealing to the Government not to allow the trade to be killed once more by Germany, where labor, which represents one-third of the cost, is less well paid.

Human wreckage can seldom be salvaged; it must be prevented.

BITS OF HUMOR FROM HERE & THERE

Will You Walk Into My Parlor?

A Mr. Cobb has married a Miss Webb. He knew that they were meant to be joined as soon as he spied her.

Tender-Hearted.

Mrs. Gamp—Good morning.
Green Grocer—Good morning, ma'am.

Mrs. Gamp—I want three-penny'orth o' Brussels sprouts. I want to help them distressed Belgians.

How He Got It.

A colored veteran just back from the other side when questioned about an iron cross he was wearing explained: "Boss, it was a extra decoration. De Kaiser hisself sent it to me by a special messenger what dropt daid jus' befo' he give it to me."

An Appealing Feature.

General March was talking about the impressions soldiers received in the war. "One," he said, "when I asked him how he felt, said he was too busy to feel, and when I asked him what appealed to him as the most remarkable thing about the war, answered: "The number of bullets that missed me."

Decision.

"You know, Pat, it is said that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."
"Is that so?"
"Yes, Pat. Now, which would you prefer to have—a good name or riches?"

No Money Needed.

Anxious Mama—"Little Dick is upstairs crying with the toothache."
Practical Papa—"Take him around to the dentist's."

"I haven't any money."

"You don't need any money. The toothache will stop before you get there."

For Ever!

Two Rhinelanders—not from choice, but from necessity—were having an argument about the music—and musicians—of their native lands.
"Talk about long playing," said Pat. "Why, your countrymen wouldn't get a look-in with us." I know of a fellow who played 'Kathleen Mavourneen' on the piano for several hours."

Said Sandy:
"You ought to be ashamed of yourself to be talking about nothing. Sure, I know a liddle that played 'Scotland For Ever' on the pipes!"

What's in a Name?

No man is so well known as he thinks he is, says Enrico Caruso, the world-famed tenor. To illustrate his point he tells the following incident:
While motoring in New York State my automobile broke down, and I sought refuge in a farm-house while the car was being repaired. I became friendly with the farmer, who asked me my name, and I told him it was Caruso. The farmer leaped to his feet and seized me by the hand.

"Little did I think I should see a man like you in this here humble kitchen, sir," he exclaimed. "Caruso! The great traveller! Robinson Caruso!"

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You simply say to the drug store man, "Give me a quarter of an ounce of freestone." This will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn should relieve the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn, root and all, dries up and can be lifted out with the fingers.
This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that, while freestone is sticky, it dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.
Don't let father die of infection or lockjaw from whitening at his corns, but clip this out and make him try it.

Cause of Early Old Age

The celebrated Dr. Michenoff, an authority on early old age, says that it is "caused by poisons generated in the intestines." When your stomach digests food properly it is absorbed without forming poisonous matter. Poisons bring on early old age and premature death. 15 to 30 drops of "Seigel's Syrup" after meals makes your digestion sound. 10

Canada, following the example of other Allied countries, has made it possible for wage earners—men and women—to invest in safe securities without effort.

These securities are called War Savings Stamps.

The cost now $4.04, but by compounding interest, the $4.04 you invest now will be worth $5.00 in 1924. There is no other security in which you can invest such a small amount that is as safe and that bears so high a rate of interest.

Or you can start with 25 cents, by buying a Thrift Stamp. When you have sixteen Thrift Stamps, you can exchange them for a War Savings Stamp.

You take no risks. The Government of Canada guarantees to pay you back your money—with interest—at any time during the five years, or to pay you in 1924 $5.00 for every $4.00 (and a fraction) you invest now.

War Savings Stamps can be bought wherever this sign is displayed.

Gentleman Bros. disposed of a fine bunch of steers to P. Campbell at 14c. What might have been a serious accident happened a few days ago. On the railroad section some steel rails were being carried on two gasoline cars, when the end of a rail dropped off the leading car, throwing several of the men off the leading car. No one was seriously hurt, although one or two were badly shaken up.

McDonald & Son are improving their store by painting, which adds much to its appearance. There are a number of other houses in town that a coat of paint would benefit.

No better protection against worms can be got than Miller's Worm Powders. They consume worms and render the stomach and intestines untenable to them. They heal the surfaces that have become inflamed by the attacks of the parasites and serve to restore the strength of the child that has been undermined by the draughts that the worms have made upon it, and their operation is altogether health-giving.

MOSA

On May 6th the Ferguson Crossing Needle Club met at the home of Mrs. Archie Purcell. The ladies have laid aside Red Cross work and turned their attention to ladies' aid work, the proceeds of their gatherings to be divided among the five different churches whose congregations are represented in the society. A useful gathering of excellent workers was present, and it was decided to hold a lawn social on the grounds of S. S. No. 12, Mosa, on July 12. Mrs. Purcell served a tasty and dainty lunch with ice cream to about 40 ladies. A free-will offering was taken up after lunch. Rev. and Mrs. Robertson of Kilmartin were present and opened and closed the meeting with a word of prayer.

Silverwood's ice cream

"SMOOTHER THAN VELVET"

THE reason Silverwood's tastes so good is that it is simply frozen cream, with none of its creamy smoothness or richness lost in the freezing process.

It is sweetened with cane sugar and pure, dainty flavorings are added, of course.
