BERLIN, May 6 .- The excitement of politicians and press over the "Clear View" lottery has been renewed to-day on account of the report that the present Landtag would shortly be asked to consider a bill for the realization of the project. The bill is said to provide for the leveling of several hundred yards of buildings behind the old palace, for the terracing of the grounds thus laid free, and for a great fountain and a small lake. The cost would be millions of marks, and in view of the decreasing revenues from customs duties, the falling off of the railway revenues by 57.-000,000 marks, the expenditure for the year where the falling off of the railway revenues by 57.-000,000 marks, the expenditure for the cutlay of $05,000 would centerly burdens contemplated in the next army bill, the project is more unpopular than was the school bill.

Lordon, May 6. — Within both Mr.
Gladstone's immediate circle and the rank and file of the Liberal party, his refusal to receive the delegates from the workingmen's conference, who desired to present to him the eight-hour question, is keenly felt to have been a tactical mistake. The Conservative members of the House of Commons for London held a meeting, and decided to influence the Government to take the opposite course. The Liberal members also said a special meeting, but referred the matter to a committee, who have instructions to bring in a report next Tuesday. In the meantime the Conservatives the desired to propose the desired to propose the desired to propose the desired to a committee to case and the barriered to a committee to case and the barriered to a man and the barriered to a man and the barriered to a man and the barriered to a special committee for adjustment.

Salisbury Stirring Up Strife. LONDON, May 6 .- Mr. McDonnell, Lord Salisbury's private secretary, has written to an Oxford clergyman that "his Lordship is glad to see you impress upon the electors the probability that home rule would produce that greatest of all curses—a religious civil war." After this it is no wonder to hear of men drilling in Ireland and that rifles and munitions of war are being stored in England.

The opinion of the Loyalists in Ireland had not changed. The conditions with which Ulster had to struggle appeared clearer every day. He had been accused of attacking the Catholic reliable. igion, but nothing was further from his houghts. What Ulster had to dread was thoughts. What Ulster had to dread was being submitted to the despotism of her foes. While Parliament had the right to govern Ulster, it had no right to seil the province into slavery. Any attempt to use the English military to subject Ulster to Archbishop Walsh would rend society in two. Home rule was not a message of pence, but of civil and religious war. The Barbarous Compartment Car. London, May 6.—Another railway outrage is reported to-day. The victim is a dressmaker named Amy Faulkner, and from present indications her assailant, if arrested, will have to answer a charge of murder. Some men walking along the railway near Leeds found a woman lying near the rails. Her clothing was disarranged and she was terribly injured. She was just able to state that she had been assaulted in the compartment of a railway varriage, and that afterward was thrown Brown, an American who came over on the

MONTREAL, Que., May 7.—Judge Doherty
in the Circuit Court this morning rendered judgment in the case of Horace St. Louis against Henry Thomas and C. A. E.
Harries, awarding the plaintif $7 and costs. The case is an interesting one and arose out of the failure of Madame Schalki to appear as advertised in the Grand Opera, "Foust," at the Academy of Music in July last, as one of the leading members of Albani's company. St. Louis claimed that the opera was a failure on this account, and that Thomas & Harries, the managers, should refund the amount of admission.

A GRAND ARMY MISSION. Cashing Pension Vouchers Free Before

"The Gand Army Mission of the City of New York" is the name of an institution as unique as it is worthy, which opened its doors at No. 396 Canal street, under the United States Pension Agency, at 11 o'clock last night. Col. H. H. Hadley noted the fact that four times a year a large number of grizzled old warriors had to stand in line for 24 hours at a time to get vouchers for the money paid them by the Government as pensioners.

The line, as a rule, begins to form about 10 o'clock the night before the third day of each quarter, and the gray-haired old fellows secure places in it as soon as they lo clock the night before the third day of each quarter, and the gray-haired old fellows secure places in it as soon as they reach the building. There they stand during the long hours of the night, until at 7 o'clock in the morning, the doors are thrown open, and the man at the head of the line gets his check. By mutual agreement a man may absent himself from the line for a brief period several time during the night. Numbers take advantage of this privilege to visit the neighboring saloons, and imbibe more of the tangle-foot sold there than is good for them. The result is that many of the old fellows get "half seas over" before they receive their vouchers. In doing this they not infrequently form acquaintances who do not lose sight of them, and as soon as the vouchers are handed out these new friends escort the pensioners to a neighboring ginmill, where their vouchers can be cashed at a liberal discount. It is not an unexament thing for the battender or the at a liberal discount. It is not an un at a liberal discount. It is not an uncommon thing for the bartender or the new friend to get the balance before the day is over, and the pensioners goes "strapped."

Out of the 14,000 men who are thus compelled to visit the Pension Agency, probably 2,000 undergo this experience to a greater or less degree four times every year. It is for the benefit of these men that the Grand Army Mission will be

A quorum was lacking at the meeting of the Finance Committee yesterday afternoon, and those present—Ald. Gartshore (chairman), Mayor Spencer and Ald. Jeflery, Yates and Dreaney—decided to make a minority report. The request of the Hobbs Hardware Company for free water and ten years tax exemption on their new industry was considered. The committee declined to entertain the free water question as being beyond their power. Exemption, as requested, was recommended with the promise that 25 men be continuously employed. Life or Death?

Life or Death?

Life with some is a thick and murky vapor, spreading darkness, obscurity, fear and dread around the walks of business, pleasure and home. Men and women can make life or destroy it—they can make home and the world joyous, or they can assist in making the world more miserable than it now is.

As free agents in this world, what a vast responsibility rests upon us. We can throw sunshine and joy around us; we can make our homes Edens, and our circle of friends can be made to feel our influences for good. Are we trying to do this work? Some are, but unfortunately for our country, thousands cannot do it.

Circumstances—events—which men and women could have avoided if they had followed nature's kind and gentle laws, have brought on a condition of misery and suffering, of grief and sorrow, which has a widespread effect on society. We have men and women around us who are victims of nervous complaints; they are sleepless, despondent, weak, dyspeptic, rheumatic and broken down. These are the men and women who are spreading darkness around instead of sunshine, and filling the world with dent, weak, dyspeptic, rheumatic and broken down. These are the men and women who are spreading darkness around instead of sunshine, and filling the world with hideous scenes of suffering.

There is, amid this afflicted class, a host who look for another chance to live anew for family and friends—who have an earnest desire to live as a kind Providence would have them live—so as to shed joy, pleasure and sunshine in dark places.

Reader, are you one of this class, earnestly longing for this new life and extended years? If you are, you can have what the heart craves for and desires. There are no hard, harsh and expensive terms to meet. The remedy—the cure—is simple and almost within your grasp. It merely calls for the use of that agent that has broughtnew life, joy and happiness to so many thousands of Canadians who once suffered like you. Paine's Celery Compound, the all-powerful and never-failing remedy of our day is the agent. You have heard sufficient of its worth and merit; you know that your friends have used it and have been cured. With Celery Compound to aid you, your future is clear and bright; without it, all is darkness.

If you would live, east off at once the enemies of your very life—doubt and unbelief—then, and only then, will gentle hope show you how to act. blood.

Indigestion and Dyspepsia are caused by the food fermentling. The result of fermentation on all organic matter must be acid. This decomposes the food (which should be digested) and from that decomposition evolves gases that produce pressure on the nerves, disorganizing the system and producing various symptoms of disease. All's right with the world. -[BROWNING. London, Saturday, May 7.

Galt's assessment shows a decrease in population of 207 compared with last year. Galt is a manufacturing town. What is trade restriction doing for it?

The following extract from the House of tains a world of meaning:
When the item of $60,000 for the Welthe Minister if it was the intention to build other bridge over the canal at the town Mr. Haggart replied that he did not see any provision for it in the estimates. He did not think so.

Mr. Devlin said that when he was up at Welland on a visit, while the recent elec-tion was being held, another bridge was promised.

Sir Richard—Yes, but that promise was contingent upon the Government's candidate being elected.

Lady Aberdeen has hosts of friends in Canada who will be interested to know that in her own land she is just as busy as ever forwarding the interests of humanity. In Edinburgh the other day she spoke strongly in favor of establishing Home Rule in Ireland, declaring her belief that the granting of such self-government would establish good feeling between England and Ireland and strengthen the ties between the United States and the Motherland. Lady Aberdeen can speak on this subject with authority, as she resided in Ireland for several years, when her husband was Viceroy. Her ladyship thinks it is even possible to federate the whole

English-speaking world. She asks: "And what could we not do for the world "And what could we not do for the world if the English-speaking people of the world were thus united together in one great alliance, each independent, not intermeddling with another's affairs, but standing shoulder to shoulder in their services for humanity, and for the forwarding of everything that is good in the world? And so, while we may look upon this as a dream, let us remember that all great movements in the world's history began first as dreams let us remember that all great interesting in the world's history began first as dreams in wise meu's heads. May we not also dream this dream, and so try to inspire our children with a desire for that unity of the children with a desire for that unity of the English race that will some day result in the wise men and women on both sides of the Atlantic rising up and saying that the results of the faults of England's King in the eighteenth century shall be wiped out of history, and the countries be once more

OPPOSITE PORT STANLEY.

Cleveland for the last ten years shows wonderful growth. The number of manufacturing establishments rose from 1,055 to 2,005, an increase of 90 per cent. The number of employes rose from 21,724 to 83.349, or 145 per cent., and the annual increase of 257 per cent. There seems to be room for growth in the country south of us. Of course the mossbacks in this country asserted ten years ago that our neighbors had all the factories they wanted-that, in fact, they had more factories than they had work for, and so on. They repeat this at every election here, wholly ignoring the facts. The market of the continent demands a constant increase of manufacturing industries. When are we to have a share in the prosperity that follows, as certain as the days come and go, the opportunities provided by a large and

While the lack of growth or expansion makes the struggle keener here each year, the widening market of the United States 500,000 to the population of Massachusetts in ten years, and about 1,000,000 each to New York and Pennsylvania. The New South is having a wondrous development. While all this is going on our Government is exhausting its energies in the new gerrymander. Their main anxiety is how to keep themselves in power and "manufacture" public places for their camp fol-

QUEBEC'S STAR CHAMBER.

The investigation into the criminal most impossible, and the offer of the King and Queen of Italy was made with the obcharges against Mr. Mercier preferred by his political enemies is being conducted with closed doors. Why this secrecy ? Surely the day has gone by for the holding of Star Chamber trials. Whether Mercier is or is not guilty, the public have a right to know on what grounds criminal action was taken against him, and in any case they will naturally view with suspicion a tribunal that is afraid to have its operations taken public cognizance of.

READINESS FOR WAR. The average annual cost of the British

The Advertiser army has steadily increased during the recent century. At the present time it is more than double the average cost of the years from 1820 to 1850. Then from $40,-000,000 to $45,000,000 was spent on the 1881 it was brought down to about $70. to prevent the constituencies from giving a 000,000. In 1885 it reached nearly $95,-000,000, and now it is $100,000,000.

it is now alleged that the British Army is shockingly inefficient. The First Army Corps, in round numbers 30,000 men, is fondly supposed by the British people to be ready to take the field at two days' notice. It is this division that would first be launched upon a continental battlefield should England become involved in a conflict with her European neighbors. Dr. Hambleden, in a report to Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood upon this force, a synopsis of which has been sent by cable, says only a small proportion of the men are sound and reiable, while the remainder are undeveloped men and boys who are physically otally incapable of enduring the hardships of war. He gives their ages, heights, weights, chest and other measurements to prove this, and then strongly urges that ooy recruits should be put through a course of physical exercises to aid their development, be provided with a sufficiency wholesome food, and trained under the highest sanitary conditions. He holds that the preventable waste in the British army from consumption and other diseases reaches a total equaling a financial loss of Commons proceedings on Friday night con- £500,000 per annum. Coming so soon after the revelations made before the recent commission, the people of England are beginning to ask what they get for the enormous sum annually spent upon what is officially described as an army. Dr. Ham-bleden declares that this condition of affairs is a grave source of danger to the State, and were there any immediate prospect of Great Britain going to war with a first-rate European nation, or combination of European nations, few would disagree with his deductions. The British army has become much more expensive and less robust in recent years from two causes. Unlike continental filled up by voluntary enlistment. The pay is small, and the chances of promotion beyond the grade of non-commissioned officers not very great. Thus the class of men offering their services has, in the main, not been of a high standard of physical stamina, for the trade of soldier is not generally regarded as a profitable or desirable one. To offer much higher pay would be to greatly increase the cost of maintenance, and here again comes the trouble from the enormously increased cost of military equipment. The cost of experiments in new inventions alone must be great, and there is reason to fear that while this portion of the service has been advancing the equally important element of strong, healthy manhood for the ranks has been neglected. To those of us who look upon resort to arms as an unnecessary argument in the settlement of international disputes, these revelations are most instructive. That preparedness to fight is costing even Great Britain a sum so large as to be oppressive, and that the provision of new weapons of destruction is so costly that it is difficult to supply monetary inducements for men to enter the ranks, shows to how great an extent military despotism presses down the workers in continental Europe. No wonder tain districts, but that rule has been devalue of the product rose from $48,604,000 conference in Rome. He announced that to $98,926,000, or 104 per cent. The the King and Queen of Italy had offered a that is a mere coincidence? Why is South number of employes rose from 21,724 to 183,349, or 145 per cent., and the annual wages from $8,500,000 to $30,123,635, an wages from $8,500,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,123,000 to $30,1 rifle, now introduced in all the great armies of Europe, had rendered necessary an improvement in the sanitary service in the field. If unhindered, the ball from one of these rifles would go a mile. The ball would penetrate walls and trees that had hitherto served as protection to soldiers, and would pass through bodies in successive the widening market of the Chickenship wars. The dangers of the sandard would also be increased. The slaughter in facturing plant. As it is in Cleveland, so the front lines would be tremendous, and, the front lines would be tremendous, and, has it been at Detroit and Buffalo, in Grand Rapids and Rochester. It has added

THE GERRYMANDER EXPOSED. The ADVERTISER has already referred to the absurdity of the contention that the gerrymander, so far as it affects London and district, is an attempt to "equalize the population of the constituencies." Where is the man who can the blunt contention of an Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Witness who contends that the object of the measure is to convert a minority of in the country into a majority of Tories in the House? Let the reader examine the following facts and see if he is not forced to the same conclusion. The well-established principle of representation by population is ignored in a bill which purports to be based upon that fixed principle. Sir John Thompson said that the unit of population in Quebec is 22,800, in Ontario 23,000. The electoral divisions to be disturbed were, upon this principle, those which fall short of or exceed this unit of 22,800. Here is the population of some of the electoral divisions which were disturbed

d some which were distributed by the distributed by .13,523 W. Northumber

Here are six examples of disturbance, where the divisions, as they stand, are so near the unit as to be satisfactory, but they are changed, and twelve examples o divisions so far below the unit as to call for a change, but no change is made.

The bill does disturb a number of divisions which are below the unit, and these are compared in the following list, with divisions which are so much above the unit of representation as to violate the principle the bill pretends to vindicate:

Chambly 11.704 Beauce 37,221 Chateauguay 13.8°5 Drummond and Iberville 11.895

It might be argued by some that the object was to limit the disturbance to certhey flee to the northern half of this con- parted from in several instances, for Bruce, tinent, so free from armed menace, as fast as they can find means to moved from the district in Ontario which it leave their native land. Reviewing the whole question, the To ronto Telegram (independent Conservative) ines of battle. The aim with the new rifle was also truer, and the rapidity with which successive shots could be delivered surpassed anything conceived of in former wars. Smokeless powder, and electric lights for illuminating fields at night, would aggravate the slaughter. The percentage of the troops wounded in the next war, therefore, would exceed enormously the percentage of former wars. The dangers of the sanitary service would also be increased. The slaughter in the front lines would be tremendous, and, as the lines would advance at greater intervals than heretofore, and the front and rear would be further separated, the work of carrying off the wounded would be rendered much more laborious and perilous. In a battle in which 18,000 or 20,000 were wounded, not fewer than 1,000 stretchers and 2,000 porters would be needed and then "The redistribution of 1892 is in spiri

The highest priced newspaper in the world is the Mashonaland Herald and Zambesian Times, printed at Fort Salis-Zambesian Times, printed at Fort Salisbury, in Mashonaland. It costs a shilling a copy, is the size of a sheet of foolscap, and is issued daily. The printing is done by the useful hektograph, the printing machine evidently not yet having penetrated into this interesting region of South Africa. A recent issue announces the arrival of the telegraph at Fort Salisbury, and this region, only two years ago wholly occupied by savage people, is now within an hour of London. HOLYHEAD, April 9, 1785. DEAR GEORGE: What you said was ex-actly right, the work of God is undoubtedly instantaneous with regard to sanctification instantaneous with regard to sanctineation as well as justification, and it is no objec-tion at all that the work is gradual also. Whatever others do it is our duty strongly and explicity to exhort the believers to go and explicity to export the believers to go on to perfection, and encourage them to perfect love by simple faith, and consequently to expect it now.

After the sermon I prayed that God would give us a full and speedy passage. Whilst I was speaking the wind sprung up, and in twelve hours brought us to Doublin and in twelve hours brought us to Double Bay.

Reflections.

It is not true that repression is good for the soul. It is only good for some souls, and good for them only under some conditions. Even if they fail to perish under it, you can never know how much sweeter, finer, riper, they might have been under different incumstances. The night-blooming cereus is the only flower absolutely injured by sunshine; and though it keeps its grace in the dark—indeed, only wins it in the dark—there are fewer to appreciate and enjoy the grace so hardly won. The soul under repression is like the closed piano that you see in the houses in the country; there is a fine cloth over the piano, and the dust is kept out, and there are vases scattered over the closed top, with very pretty flowers, perhaps, in the vases; but if it were open there might be music. You remember how "Romola, who loved homage, flourished under it as a lily visite in the tent of the light". To a woman of vases; but music. You remember how "Romola, who haved homage, flourished under it as a lify lifting itself to the light." To a woman of fine literary culture, complaining of her isolated life, I said, "But your isolation has made you what you are." "Yes," she answered quickly—"what I am, but not what I might be,"—[Alice Wellington Rollins, in May Lippincott's.

Tolstoi at Home.

Count Tolstoi at Homes.

Count Tolstoi is a firm believer in the maxim that work is a sacred duty. He always devotes four hours of every day to nanual labor of some kind, either plowing, in the fields or making shoes, and he laughs at the ideas of those who despise toiling with their hands. The village shoemaker is a chosen chum of his, and they are accustomed to work together in the count's house. On his literary labors Tolstoi expends great pains, both from an intellectual and a mechanical standpoint. His manuscript is full of interlineations and erasures, and the handwriting is small, fine and hard to read. The countess tranfine and hard to read. The countess transcribes it for the printer, and I know of one instance where she made fifteen copies within a year of one of her husband's books. So lives Lee Tolstoi, the master-mind of Russian thought, and one of three or four great thinkers who stand alone in the intellectual record of this century above and beyond all others. Thus he journeys to the goal of life, preaching and practicing the sweet doctrine of man's humanity to man. His bare, rude house is never closed to the hungry or the wanderer. His recent practical efforts in the cause of his starving countrymen have proved, moreover, that he is no mere theorist or dreamer, but that in the teeth of a great emergency he can fine and hard to read. The countess tran he is no mere theorist or dreamer, but that in the teeth of a great emergency he can be a most practical man of action. In person he is of giant frame. His face is a trong one. From beneath a massive wrinkled brow, blue-gray eyes seem to look you through and through, to scan at once four outer and inner man. Powerful flat cartills int from between high cheek bones. four outer and inner man. Powerful flat postrils jut from between high cheek bones. A mouth made for pity is not wholly obscured by the vast gray beard sprawling downward over a mighty chest. spin, the blouse gathered at the waist by a leather belt, and his feet are eshod in shoes made by his own brown sinewy hands. They are very roughly fashioned footwear, too. When out of doors in stormy weather he wears long boots, into which the ends of his trousers are stuffed.

Russia has been blessed in the possession of the Tolstoi family—a fact that has come home to her with peculiar force very recently in the presence of the famine disaster. When the cry of distress arose, a responsive echo of sympathy sounded from the quiet home at Yasnia Poliana; and not only the great recluse himself, but his self-sacrificing wife, daughters and sons went forth without an instant's hesitation to labor amid the suffering peasants in the sweet cause of charity. From what I personally witnessed during my visit to the Tolstois, I can form some idea of their noble work in the famine centers. During a walk through the village, which I was none work in the famine centers. Dur-ing a walk through the village, which I was privileged to enjoy in company with the great writer's daughter. I had an excellent opportunity of observing the relations maintained by his family with the villagers. Everywhere we went, whether along the highway or into the interiors of the humble houses, were evident the signs of lave and highway or into the interiors of the humble houses, were evident the signs of love and veneration. Not a mujik we met but would raise his hat with intense respect, and murmur a simple benediction on my companion; and when we entered a cottage where anybody was sick, she would tenderly inquire for the patient, either offer assistance on the spot or arrange for its speedy arrival, and in every instance be hailed as a succoring angel. The deeds of this noble family long after they have passed away will smell sweet and blossom in the dust, remaining a precious memory to every Russian heart.—[James Creelman, in Harper's Weekly.]

Equal Rights for All.

Equal Rights for All.

Our rights are determined very largely by the equal rights of others. One may claim justly the right to walk upon a crowded street, yet that right; is modified and must be adjusted every moment by the equal right of hundreds of other individuals. Should we presume to exercise our right in such a manner as to interfere with the rights of others the public good may justly demand that we be deprived of our right until we can recognize the rights of others. Upon this principle human society is tounded and upon its observance, in all things, depends the measure and progress of the world's permanent advancement.

A Study of Psychology.

One rainy morning in October I sat quietly reading my paper, when there suddenly came to me the realization that I was not alone. In the midst of my perusal of the stock market quotations I experienced the peculiar and indescribable psychic phenomena which indicate the presence of another living being. As I am somewhat near-sighted, it is my custom to hold the paper rather close to my face when reading; and yet, with it in this position on the morning in question. I was positive there was someone standing directly in front of me and looking at me intently. In fact, it seemed to me as though, through the four intervening thicknesses of my newspapers, a pair of eyes were burning into my very soul. Suddenly I lowered my paper and looked up. Then, just as suddenly, I raised the paper and went on reading. My worst fears were realized! The being who stood before me was a woman, and there was not an un-convicial east in the whole car.— [Life. Christopher Columbus' Early Home. In Genoa, Italy, there still stands to this day, on one of the narrow, crowded streets, the house in which Christopher Columbus passed his boyhood days. An effort was made to secure the building and bring it to Chicago for exhibition at the Columbian Exposition, but the Genoese still retain a great admiration for Columbus and his achievements and refused to permit its removal. They will themselves celebrate this year the great explorer's successful voyage, when all things belonging to him and his time will be on exhibition.

Columbus, during his boyhood and early manhood, gave no greater promise than many of his companions and associates of being the one to open to the world new continents, and prove to the men of science that their theories were false. In fact, the very theories that in atter life he proved to be correct, by his successful explorations, made him the subject of ridicule. There were only a few who looked upon them

He asised the aid of kings and noblemen to further his proposed voyage, but met with refusals upon every hand, until finally, appealing to the Spanish Government, he gained the support of the beautiful Queen Isabella. She was advised against the Isabella. She was advised against the undertaking by her counselors, and conformed with an empty treasury, but against all opposition she undertook the expedition, and was ready to pawn her royal jewels to provide the necessary money. The Folly of Fashion.

The Boston Herald inveighs against the stape veil at the theater, claiming that it is as difficult to dodge as the big hat and farmore depressing. It argues, "when people truly grieve for their loved and lost the theater is the last place to show themselves. A correspondent of the Sunday School Times writes that journal expressing gratitude for the great increase of interest in temperance and temperance teaching, but viewing with alarm the rapid increase in the organized strength of the liquor traffic, and urging increased organized temperance effort on the part of Christian churches, claiming very properly that it lies within the power of the Church of Christ greatly to lessen and eventually to destroy entirely this greatest of evils. The writer adds: "If a few men in each church or community will earnestly take the matter in hand, they will find themselves strong in the righteousness of their cause and in the great number who will tollow their the great number who will tollow their lead."

Fay Mills, the evangelist, recently said concerning the drink traffic to a Cincinatti audience of 8,000 to 9,000 to a Cincinatti audience of 8,000 to 9,000 persons: "I believe that the people of righteousness should rise up and by the use of the ballot take it by the throat and say You must stop. That was the sign above a third story window opposite a mansion on Fifth avenue. It appeared there one misty morning. When the fog lifted a bit Miss Mangrove eaught sight of it and exclaimed:

"I shall positively sell this house and move farther up town. Trade is as resistless as the sea, and for society to endeavor to stop its enroachments on the aristocratic portion of the city is as vain as was Mrs. Partington's broom fight with the waves. I abhor trade!"

Miss Mangrove was besieging society.

Jabez Mangrove, her father had been a persistent success from the time he left the farm and sold tinware from house to house.

When he bought for a song a prescription for a liver pill, he quitted peddling and devoted his energies to pushing "Mangrove's Liver Pills." Fate may have been sarcastic when it took him out of the world by congestion of the liver, but the public had no idea how congested his pocketbook was till the amount of his estate became known, and then there was amazement that there had been so many bad livers in the world during one man's lifetime.

The first step taken by his only heir, Amelie, was to sell the pill manufactory, its good will and patent, at such a sum that proved she was borne to commerce. Then she bought the mortgage on an aristocratic mansion, foreclosed it and took possession. From there she had besought society to take her in, had hoped to ensnare some seion of one of the old families, and had failed because her father had been in the patent medicine husiness. That was why she hated trade.

But her tactics had changed. She was determined to break into society. She wasn't pretty, exactly, but she had a good figure, wore no corset, and flattered herself that she had a manner as pronounced, not in the way of the Four Hundred. But she was not in it—that was the sum of it all, and accordingly she frested excited the land. was not in it—that was the sum of it all.
And accordingly she fretted outside of the closed doors, and lay awake at night in her dainty bed devising ways of making a break

been scheming how to obtain the coveted entree. And now, in her uneasy slumber, she began again the wearisome will-o'-the-wisp chase after the magic word entree. Even in her sleep she felt herself uttering a protest against the repetition of the use-less pursuit, but before she had wholly voiced her unwillingness to follow the dancing, teasing spirit labeled entree she saw the letters of the ladies' tailor sign march before her. They were in command of the before her. They were in command of the word they broke into a double quick, and in a few seconds they had surounded and held prisoner the agile and evasive little devil she had chased so many times in vain.

The company of gilt letters faced about, and marching within a respectful distance of her, halted. While they presented arms, the corporal M. led forward the mischievous imp and placed him on the palm of her outstretched hand, which she closed gently, holding fast the coveted privilege which in her dreams the sprite always had repre-

"I have the entire at last," she exclaimed and awoke to vedition at having felt so much joy over a diclusion, and finally to wonderment about the significance of the letters having made the entree a prisoner and then presenting it to her.

The dream troubled her not a little the next day. To her its meaning was plain—M. Dufre, fadies' tailor, could procure for her the entree to society. But how could she call upon him, when nobody that was anybody patronized him? At last she concluded to request him to call upon her, and she sent him a succinct, businesslike note. The following morning he called upon her, and she was astounded to meet a handsome, quiet, well bred man, who proceeded at once to open a case of samples.

"Not those," she said haughtily. "Somebody else will wear a dress off the other end of the same web."

"Ah," said the tactful business man,

I may be original in my costumes. If you are a reader of the society gossip published in the sarcastic weaklies you will see that I am laughed at because I, as they vulgarly say, am not in it, meaning that I am excluded from the circle to which I aspire. Yesterday, owing to a dream of the night befor, I had an idea, which I determined to confide to the first ladies' tailor whose face inspired confidence. You seem to be a gentleman, and one not likely to betray a secret."

She paused a moment to note the effect of her words upon him, and was pleased that he showed no symptoms of excitement or eagerness to learn the nature of the communication she was about to make.

"I determined never to wear the duplicate of the material or the pattern of a dress or hat worn by any other woman. To that extent I can be exclusive. Do you think you are able to meet my demands? And if you are, what is it worth to you to andertake to render me wholly original in the matter of dress?"

M. Dufic did not reply hastily. He seemed to be estimating the probable loss that his devotion to one person would cause him. One society woman might make the fortune of a ladies' tailor, but a woman not recognized by the Four Hundred was not likely to make other wealthy women yearn to have M. Dufre make their dresses, Miss Mangrove interrupted his thoughts:

"Are you doubting your ability?" she asked.

"Come to me again to-morow. We shall then draw up a contract, and you can give me a design for a new dress."

M. Dufre bowed, and taking up his sample case left the room with the case of one who had been accustomed to the best society. That day and night he worked on a design for a morning robe. As he was a good draftsman and a fine colorist he was able to present to Miss Mangrove at the appointed time a peture of herself engaged in opening the morning's correspondence and dressed in a beautiful gown of unique pattern.

The ladies' tailor examined the document

The ladies' tailor examined the document carefully, asking occasionally for an explanation of a clause, and then put his signature at the place left blank for it.

At the first night of the opera season Miss Mangrove appeared in the box rented from a family that was in mourning. When she slipped out of her cloak and stood for a moment in the front of the box while the maiden anut who acted as her chapterou was moment in the front of the box while the maiden aunt who acted as her chaperon was seating herself, there was a leveling of lorgnettes in every part of the house. Her dress was pronounced perfect by every woman in the audience who was possessed of an opera glass, and the society women enviously admitted that the creator of that costume was a genius. Who had made it? That was an injury that more than one of the ladies asked of herself in a wondering way, and resolved to instruct her maid to way, and resolved to instruct her maid to quiz Miss Mangrove's maid at the first op-

On the second night of the opera season, On the second night of the opera season, Miss Mangrove appeared in a different costume, but one as beautiful as the one worn by her on her first appearance in the sacred precincts known as the millionaires' boxes. The third night sie was again gowned in a no less becoming dress, but one that she had not yet worn in public.

The society ladies became excited. "What will she wear to-night?" they asked one another, and they waited impatiently.

When it was rumored that M. Dufre, a when it was rumored that M. Dufre, a new man on Fifth avenue, had created her marvelous costumes, society smilingly said that it was a good advertising story, but one to be skeptical about till admitted by Miss Mangrove herself.

But at the beginning of the second year of M. Dufre's contract with Miss Mangrove, it was whispered that M. Dufre was a genuine count, who had temporarily abandoned his title while he repaired his finances by engaging in trade. This report was one that aroused the most intense interest among the Foury Hundred, and an was one that aroused the most intense interest among the Four-Hundred, and an investigation was set on foot at once. The result of the inquiry was the conviction that a real nobleman had set up on Fifth avenue in the tailoring business. The evidence adduced to bring about this conviction was a series of letters written from Paris by one of the matriarchs. She had inquired at the establishment where M. Dufre had learned his trade, and after carefully following up the clews to his identity she had assured herself that he was the only living representative of one of the oldest titles in France. That settled it. Society was willing to patronize him as Count De Nino! Of course his contract with Miss Mangrove precluded his filling as Count De Nino! Of course his contract with Miss Mangrove precluded his filling orders for anyone else, but he was at liberty to accept the invitations that were showered upon him.

Soon he was seen everywhere, and being affable, polished and well educated, he became a general favoire. Soon he was seen everywhere, and being affable, polished and well educated, he became a general favorite. Soon the society reporter stated that he was engaged to one of the belies, but the announcement of the betrothal would not be made till a certain business matter of the count's was settled. Everybody knew what the business matter was, and smiled at the vexation the item would cause "the Mangrove," who was known to be a studious reader of society gossip. The season was well under way when the count suddenly, departed for Europe, leaving behind him a lot of hastily pennedigerets for social functions. Society felt hurt and thought it horrible of "the Mangrove" to send away their delightful French nobleman just at the height of the season. Envious of his brilliant social success, she had ordered him to Paris about some new dress for her. Such was the popular explanation of his absence.

He rejurned a week before Easter and was enthusiastically received by the Four Hundred.

"Good. You are very clever."

"Ah, Mile, Mangrove, it is you who are clever. You have created me the Count de Nino. Is it too presumptuous—may I hope it is not?—in me to ask you to do me the honor to become the Countess de Nino?"

"I rebuke your presumption," said Miss Mangrove playfully, "by consenting to do you that honor."

A moment later Miss Mangrove summoned her aunt, the chaperon, and startled that worthy lady by the announcement:
"Aunty, the Count de Nino has asked me to be his wife and I have accepted him."

The chaperon promptly tendered her congratulations to the couple, and then inquired with apparent solicitude, "That sign over there, it willefome down?"

"Certainly," said Miss Mangrove, "since frem this day there is no longer 'M. Dufre, ladies' tailor."

tiade. The total is about 15,265,000 hundrels, and all but 140,000 bushels is of the finest milling grade.

The past winter has proved a very favorable one for fall wheat, and the crop—particularly the early sown—presented an exceptionally promising appearance when spring opened. Being protected by a sufficient depth of snow, it suffered but slightly from winter killing. The snow left very rapidly, and fair growth was made until about the end of the first week in April, when the field looked at their best. Frosty nights, sunny days and cold winds then followed, and on this account the young crop received a noticeable set-back. The warm rain that has fallen, however, during the past week has brightened up the crep, which is now looking luxuriant and promising. As regards the condition of the crop on various soils—although there is much uniformity—it is looking particularly well on light, warm loams and well drained elays and clay loams. On black mould and on low-lying wet lands it has suffered to some extent from frost. The damage from insects, etc., appears to have been inconsiderable. The Hessian fly did slight injury in some localities on early sown fields, as did also the wire worm on recently broken pasture lands.

A good way to prevent the ravages of mice in oats is to salt the grain in layers when it is harvested. The straw is devoured more greedily also as fodder when this has been done.

There are reasonable prospects this season of a fair yield of clover. The drought of last summer did much harm to old fields and the catch of seed in the fall was in many places uneven, so that a very heavy crop may not be looked for. Red clover in some localities has been injured by the frost this spring. The recentrain, however, has given a refreshing impetus that insures an average yield.

Although the growth of all crops during April was tardy the prospects are favorable or speedy vegetation in May. This condition is preferable to rapid growth in April followed by checks from frost and cold.

Corn, the Silo and Silage.

[By Thos, Shaw, Professor of Agriculture.] liy Thos. Shaw, Professor of Agriculture.]
There is probably no question relating to the farm in reference to which there is so great a desire for information at the present time as that of corn, the silo and silage.
The principal object of this paper, therefore, is to furnish the desired information in a concise and practical form. This information is based (1) on our own experience, (2) on that of farmers who have made a decided success of the work, and (3) on ence, (2) on that of farmers who have made a decided success of the work, and (3) on the finding of various experimental stations which have given special attention to the various aspect of the same.

CROPS FOR THE SILO.

1. In this country, beyond all doubt, corn is pre-eminently the crop for the silo.

2. Nearly all kinds of other fodder crops can be cured so readily as to make it at least an open prescripts.

3. Green rye and red clover should probably form exceptions to the general statement in paragraph 2.

4. Good rye silage was made at this station in 1891 by cutting the rye at the blessoming stage, tramping it down firmly in the silo, and weighting it to some extent.

5. In feeding rye silage, some form of drying too rapidly of the surface.

6. In choosing varieties of corn, the aim should be to secure the largest amount of stock and grain consistent with that maturity which is necessary to insure Dreacvaries.

7. For the past three years at this station we have obtained satisfactory results with Compton's Early and King Philip, of the carly varieties; Learning Dent and Wisconsin Yellow Dent, of the medium maturing kinds, and Chester County Mammoth and Sheep's Tooth, of the later varieties.

8 Of the other varieties that have done well here, and also in other sections of the Province, we may name the Mammoth Cuban.

Province, we may name the Mammoth Cuban, Thoroughbred White Flint, the Mammoth Southern Sweet, Pride of the North and Smut Nose.

9. As a power of germination in the seed of corn is easily destroyed, care should be taken to secure that which may implicitly be relied on to start well under average conditions.

be relied on to start well under average conditions.

10. The purchase of seed should receive attention afficiently early to cnable the grower to test its germinating power some time before it is wanted for use.

11. The most aatisfactory way of testing seed is to plant a number of grains chosen promisenously in a box of average soil which iskey warm and moist.

12. Only the most perfect ears should be chosen in selecting seed corn, and it must be theroughly ripened before it can be relied on to grow. There are some sections where the growing of seed might assume the dimensions of an industry in itself.

13. Corn prefers a deep, rich, warm, dry, rdinary soil, but will grow well in any

PREPARATION OF THE SOIL

FLEFARATION OF THE SOIL.

17. The mode of preparing the land for corn will vary with the place given to it in the rotation.

18. When it follows a grain crop, the land should be at once gang-plowed, and again harrowed or cultivated before the final deep plowing late in autumn to aid in the destruction of weeds.

19. In spring thorough and frequent surface cultivation should be given to secure the retention of ground moisture, and the more complete destruction of weeds.

20. When the corn is to be planted on an old sod the ground should be plowed late in autumn or early in the spring.

21. When it follows a clover sod the plowing may be deterred till near the time of planting the corn.

FERTILIZERS.

22. Farm-yard manure is probably the best fensilizer for corn where it can be obtained in sufficient quantities.

23. Not more probably than fifteen tons per acre should be applied in any case.

24. Frequent applications of manure in moderate quantities are decidedly preferable to heavy applications but seldom given.

Spring good results may be looked for.

PLANTING.

26. The time for planting corn for the silo varies with the climate, locality, soil, and sometimes with the variety of corn

27. In Ontario it will range between May 10 and June 5, as it is considered more safe not to plant corn until the soil has become warmed to the temperature of 52° to 54°

Fahr.
28. All things considered, we favor cultivation in drills, separated from 36 inches with the smaller varieties to 45 including the larger.
29. The distance of the plants in the drill will depend upon the kind of corn, and to some extent upon the character of the soil.

30. The actual seed requirements will ou. The actual seed requirements will vary from 6 quarts per aerc in the largest varieties to 24 quarts in the smallest.

31. At the usual time of planting, and under ordinary conditions, the average depth for planting is about two inches.

32. In some countries corn planters made for the purpose are used, but in Canada it is usually planted with the ordinary grain drill, when only such of the tubes are used as may be necessary.

33. In dry weather the land should be rolled both before and after planting.

CULTIVATION.

34. After planting the harrow is sometimes used once and sometimes twice before the corn comes up, and it is usual to harrow twice after it is well above ground.

35. The cultivator should then stir the sail between the research. soil between the rows or hills not seldome than once a week until the corn commence than once a week until the corn commences to tassel, but not after that period.

45. It is now pretty well decided that filling may be rapid and continuous, or periodic, as may be convenient.

46. Of the several methods adopted in covering the silo, no one has proved uniformly and completely satisfactory

47. It is at least questionable if there is economy in using any kind of covering, all things considered, as the silo when left in this condition soon coats over with a white mould several inches thick, and so forms its own covering.

48. The waste in such instances has varied from six to twelve inches.

49. A favorite covering with many is old fence corner hay cut and wilted, as it lies compactly when put on in this way.

THE SHO.

50. In locating the sile, it is usual for those who have bank barns to utilize a portion of the basement along with a corresponding portion of the mow overhead.

51. Whether the sile is erected outside or in the stables or barn, it should always be on the same plane with the live stock, and as near as possible to the central point of feeding.

Lambs for the Buffalo Market.

G. D. Matheson, president of the Matheson Live Stock Company, Buffalo, has made an important announcement. He writes:

"As the Canadian lamb season will soon begin, we wish to draw the attention of the farmers and dealers of Ontario to a rule that has been adapted by the dealers on this market which is of great importance to them. It is in regard to the castration of lambs, and as it is the intention of dealers here to force a difference of one cent per pound between ram lambs and ewe and wother lambs, in favor of the latter, we hope you will give this letter sufficient prominence, so that this fact can be fully brought to the notice of the farmers in time, and thereby enable them to save thousands of dollars by having all their ram lambs castrated that they intend for the market. We have always advocated the castration of lambs, knowing that it would be beneficial to all in the trade, as ram lambs have always been a drug on the market, and very difficult to dispose of, but as the farmers have seemingly ignored our advice, the dealers here have taken this action to protect themselves, and as the castration is a simple matter, we hope that the farmers of Ontario will see the benefits to be derived by doing it, as their lambs will be more salcable, will thrive better, and will always be in demand." and will always be in demand.

Indeed, judging from the rapid progress the breed has made in recent years and the wide popularity it now enjoys, it will be surprising if the expectations of its sanguine supporters are not at least in some degree realized. Although his qualities are many-sided, however, the high-stepper is by no means, as might be suspected, a weak servant at any of the services most congenial to him. He is an admirable—the ideal—harness horse; he is safe and fast in the saddle, and he is not wanting if a fair amount of carting is required of him. For his size and keep the Hackney combines the capabilities for the important duties in a higher degree than is attained by any other class of horse.

The pure-bred Hackney has a peculiar value beyond that of utility in saddle or harness. The stallions of this breed are found by experience to possess a wonderful

In growing pork it is economy to produce as little of the most unprofitable parts as possible. By selection reduce the size of bone, head and ear. It costs as much proportionately to produce these as it does to produce the ham. We once had an economical neighbor who argued that there was a saying in cutting of the tail it does to produce the ham. We once had an economical neighbor who argued that there was a saving in cutting out the tail and ears, that it cost as much to grow them as the valuable parts of the animal, and we believe so far as the tail was concerned he practiced what he preached to some extent The barbarous custom of depriving swine of their tails used to be practiced to a considerable extent, not on the score of seconomy so much as a matter of fashion. harness. The stallions of this breed are found by experience to possess a wonderful power of leaving a most serviceable class of animals when mated with mares of other breeds or of no distinct class. The Hackney stallion seems to be as impressive when mated with animals outside his own breed as the Aberdeen-Angus bull is en horned or colored cows—the offspring in both cases generally taking after the sire in style and characteristics.—[Farming World, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Bee-pasturage, like any other pasturage, can be overstocked, and it shows a lack of intelligence or business sense where beekeepers crowd a multitude of bees on to a limited territory, though that locality may abound with good nectar-producing plants, shrubs and trees. It would be just as resonable to expect 5,000 sheep to thrive on ten acres of land, because when they were turned in upon the land it was covered with burr-clover two feet high.

Quite a discussion has been carried on in the past relative to bees having hearing, most of which tends to prove that bees are as "deaf as adders." This being the case, the beating of pans, ringing of bells, etc., which many resort to, has no bearing upon restraining a departing swarm. The throwing of the sun's rays into the flying mass, by means of a mirror, is generally effective in stopping runaway swarms.

Clean Milk. Clean Milk.

Every patron of a creamery or cheese factory is deeply interested in this question, because each one is so dependent on the quality of his neighbor's milk. In associated dairying 'no man liveth to himself alone." For this reason there ought to be a strong central sentiment at every factory or creamery among the patrons on the question of producing neat, clean milk. Fully 75 per cent. we believe, of the damaged butter or cheese which mark the history of so many establishments, can be clearly traced to the filthy habits of a few of the patrons. Every farmer knows or ought to know that flavor is the one great history of so many establishments, can be clearly traced to the fithy habits of a few of the patrons. Every farmer knows or ought to know that flavor is the one great thing that makes butter and cheese sell well. Bad flavors are as a rule imparted not by the cow, but by the conditions that surround the cow.

A clean cow, a clean wholesome stable and a clean barnyard, and a clean, neat farmer to do the milking and take care of it, mean every time more money for the butter and cheese. Every community of patrons for their own protection should insist on this matter of cleanliness. Cows can be kept clean and neat by some of the modern methods of stabling. All that it requires is a little energy and study. That means better milk, and better milk means more money for the butter and cheese. Just at this time we are "between hay and grass." Unless extra effort is taken in these warm wet days the cows and the stable premises will get filthy very easily. Among the most profitable things that the patrons could agitate—and discuss among themselves—is the question: "How can we best produce clean milk?"—[Hoard's Frierment]

A horse's tail is his pride, his ornament, his defense while in service, and to cut it lown to a stump is to cut off his hands.

By not watering your horse after feeding, you can teach him to drink before eating, and thus avoid a possible attack of colic. The practice of training mares after breeding them seems to be increasing in popularity. More mares in foal will be trained this season than ever before. The gray mare Nellie W., that created quite a sensation last season by making a record of 2:14½ in the hands of a country-man, was recently sold for $6,000, and will be driven by Crit Davis.

The practice of buying cheap stallions, reporting themas having cost fabulous sums, and then filling their books at fees four times larger than either their breeding or performances warrant, has become entirely too common.

The inevitable salary and teacher questions worried the members of No. 1 Committee of the School Board last night. A petition from the teachers had been referred to them by the board. The new method of rain-profing coats and cloaking fabrics will revolutionize the trade in waterproof goods. With the general adoption of goods treated by the Melissa process the reign of the old style mackintosh is forever ended. This is a foregone conclusion with all people who have tested the claims of the new process. When merely handling the goods which have undergone treatment no evidence of the strange quality it possesses is apparent. Unlike goods treated in the old way, the fabric retains its softness, and has in appearance none of the characteristics by which waterproof goods are determined. The cloth retains its porous quality and can be breathed through. It is this fact which makes one skeptical previous to witnessing the test by water. After that all doubt is dispelled. The strange power of repelling water is wonderful and a matter of surprise to all. Coats and cloaks made with material treated by the Melissa process are not alone rain-proof, but porous and oderless. Being porous, a circulation of ar around the body is permitted, which is absolutely necessary to health and comfort. This feature is one which cannot be found in any other garment.—[Chicago Drygoods Reporter. Conclusion of Evidence in the Strathroy Murder Trial.

Addresses of Counsel and the Judge's Charge-The Prisoners Acquitted-Hodge's Trial Postnened to

In continuation of the Strathroy murder trial Wm. Watson, of Metcalf, was sworn. Witness was in Fitzpatrick's hotel a couple of weeks before Upton was injured. On this occasion John Fitzpatrick took a piece of pipe similar to the one Mr. Lount, counsel for the Crown, produced, and threw it on the bar. The pipe was closed at both ends with cork. Fitzpatrick said it was his "billy" er "jimmy," and witness tapped his head with it. Prisoner then laid it back where he got it.

John Smith was with Watson at this time. He also saw the pipe and the corks or sticks in it. Fitzpatrick got it under the counter behind the bar. Witness had a poor memory and could not recall anything that was said by any of the mon then in the barroom.

Hiram Wilson was employed by Fitzpatrick as bartender on the day that Upton was fatally injured. Witness was there until 2 o'clock on that day; did not see anything resembling the rubber pipe; was present when Dr. Billington called, and heard the doctor say that Upton was full of liquor and that he would be all right.

Dr. W. W. Hoare, of Strathroy, had been practicing for 28 years; assisted in a post mortem examination on the body of deceased; there was a bruise over the right eye, another on the right side of the body and two on the left side; it would take considerable force to produce such a bruise as that on the right side; a heavy blow from the fist might cause it; an ordinary blow from the fist would cause the bruiso over the eye; there was a large clot of blood between the scalp and skull on the top of the head; the skull was fractured on the right side, and the fracture was eight inches long; this fracture might have been caused by a heavy blow or a fall, or it sion to hold his entrance examinations in a city school.

It was recommended that Inspector Carson's salary be increased $200, making his stipend $1,300 per year.

Trustee Alexander proposed that an inventory of school property be submitted to the board at least once a year.

All accounts were passed, save one from the London Printing and Lithegraphing Company, which the chairman will investigate.

The city treasurer wrote to say there was a deficit of $5,274 84 in the School Board balance sheet. It was accounted

SATURDAY.

Robert Brown, of Adelaide, testified to the good reputation of Wilson as a peaceable man. John Brady, of Strathroy, gave like evidence regarding Fitzpatrick. This concluded the defense.

Mr. Meredith, in his address to the jury, paid a high compliment to the three city doctors who were witnesses for the defense.

"Dr. Eccles," he said, "is as far ahead of the Strathroy doctors as could possibly be. Now, gentlemen, I urge you do not accept the Now, gentlemen, I urge you do not accept the theories of doctors." Mr. Meredith chaltheories of doctors." Mr. Meredith chal-lenged any man to say that the case was a strong or convincing one, and asked the jury to acquit both men on the charge. Mr. Folinsbee pleaded especially on be-half of the prisoner Fitzpatrick. The only evidence against him was the fact that he produced two or three weeks before the day on which Upton was fatally injured a produced two or three weeks before the day on which Upton was fatally injured a piece of rubber pipe corked at one or probably both ends similar to the one produced by the crown counsel. This weapon was, according to the evidence, not in the bar on the unfortunate day, nor was it there afterwards; It was unreasonable and improbable, he said, that Fitzpatrick, a mere boy but 20 years of age, would reach over the bar and strike an old man. Mr. Folinsbee advanced a number of theories as to the cause of death, and dwelt at some length on the peaceable disposition of Wilson.

Mr. Lount, Q.C., for the Crown, said that the law did not permit in such a case as this a prisoner to be a witness upon his own behalf. It was impossible, therefore, to try the two prisoners separately and allow each one to give evidence for or against the other. The injuries received were wholly inconsistent with the theory that they were the result of a simple fall. John Fitzpatrick was not accused with having intended to take life. Striking with intent to stun was just as serious a crime as plunging a dagger into a man's breast without intent to kill. The defense had signally failed to account for the bruise on the brow. There was a clearly established, vile blow causing the old man to fall to the floor. There had been no admission that Fitzpatrick was a clearly established, vile blow causing the old man to fall to the floor. There had been no admission that Fitzpatrick struck the blow, but it had been admitted that Wilson pushed deceased, causing him to fall? The question was, said Mr. Lount, did Wilson push Upton, causing him to fall, and did the fracture on the head result from the fall. Then there was, he continued, an attempt to conceal the fact that deceased had been injured. In concluding, Mr. Lount defined the difference between manslaughter and murder, and told the jury deceased had been injured. In concluding, Mr. Lount defined the difference between manslaughter and murder, and told the jury that it was within their province to find the prisoners guilty on either charge.

Mr. Justice Street in his charge to the jury reviewed the various theories advanced by the defense. There was no reason why Wilson should say that he pushed deceased thus causing the injuries unless he meant what he said. Abusive language as that alleged to have been made in this case did not justify the prisoner in committing assault. If an assault, however unintentional, resulted in death, the prisoner was guilty of manslaughter. The evidence was not of sufficiently serious nature as to justify the jury in finding the prisoners guilty of murder. The statements made by Fitzpatrick were evidently intended to shield Wilson from trouble. His misstatements caused the suspicions to be cast upon him and caused his arrest and trial.

The jury then retired, and the court adjourned for dinner. NOT GUILTY.

The jury, after a brief deliberation, re-turned a verdict of not guilty.

Powderly Says the Reading People Are Trying to Buy Pulpit Indorsements.

At a Knights of Labor mass meeting at Archibald, Pa., General Master Workman Powderly, referring to the Reading combine, said there was no other State so firmly held in corporate power as Pennsylvania, which lacks the vittue in herexecutive officers which would prevent her disgrace. He closed with the starting statement that for some time past a Reading emissary had been in the Lackawanna Valley to advance the interest of the combine; that this and had seen every minister and priest of every denomination, to some of whom he offered passes and money.

MONTREAL, Q... May 6.—There were about 130 milch cows offered on Viger market to-day, and a good mony more were sold at the yards yesterday afternoon. There was an unusually large nuineer of milkmen and other persons around with a view to buy cows, and as the prices were not high, many more cows were sold during the forenoon than is generally the case. The best cow on the market was so.d for $50, and a number of others at from $40 to $45 cach, but much the greater number of saies were made at about $35, and some of the smaller bossies went down as low as $25. A good many pretty good milkers were sold at the yards yesterday afternoon at from $35 to $45 cach.

—Head Master McQueen explains that there are no autocratic rules in connection with Askin street school. The children are made to march out of the grounds in order to teach them order, and if they desire to stay in school during noon hour, through fear of rain, they can do so. The kindergarteners were accidentally caught in the rain on Monday. They were dismissed early to let them get home before the rain, but it came up too suddenly for them. The teachers, Mr. McQueen says, will send no one out in the rain if he or she desires to stay in; if any one asked to stay, the teacher did not hear her. It is well for teachers as well as pupils to know that these are the regulations.

"Yes."

The rain again became wild, but this time it only tore by the manse as if to a conflict beyond.

"Are you there yet?! I daurno let you in till I'm sure the mistress is bedded. Gang round to the front and see if there's ony licht burning in the high west window."

"There was a light," the voice said presently, "But it was turned out as I looked."

"Then I will let you in, and God kens I mean no wrong by it."

Babbie entered shivering and Jean rebarded the door. Then she looked long at the woman whom her master loved. Babbie outered shivering and Jean rebarded the door. Then she looked long at the woman whom her master loved. Babbie outered shivering and Jean rebarded the door. Then she looked long at the woman whom her master loved. "What a pity it's a fause face!"

"Do I look so false?"

"Is it true? You're no married to him?"

"Yes, it rue."

"Yes, it is his teaching, doubtless?"

"And he told you that to do to me as you have done was to be pleasing in God's sight that I shall suffer for it always."

"But he has done no wrong, but his punishment will be worse, probably, than mine."

"That," said the earl, scoffing, "is not just."

"It is just. He has accepted responsibility for my sins by marrying me."

"And what form is his punishment to take?"

"For marrying me he will be driven from his church and dishonored in all men's eyes, unless—unless God is more merciful to us than we can expect."

Her sincerity was so obvious that the earl could no longer meet it with sarcasm.

"Yes, it is true? You're no married to him?"
"Yes, it is true."
"And yet you look as if you was fond o' him! If you cared for him, how could you do it?"
"That was why I did it."
"And him could hae had wha he liked!"
"I gave up Lord Rintoul for him."
"What! Ka, na; you're the Egyptian."
"You judge me by my dress." You judge me by my dress."

Babbie explained why Gavin had set off for the Spittal, but Jean shook her head incredulously, saying, "I canna believe you're that grand leddy, and yet ilka time I look at you I could near believe it."

"I thought it was the precentor's voice, Margaret said.

Jean was a poor hand at lying, and she stuttered in her answer.
"There is nothing wrong, is there?" cried Margaret in sudden fright. My son——" "Quick, Jean! what?"

"Mr. Dishart has been called to a sickbed in the country, ma'am—to the farm o' Look About You, and as it's sic a rain he's to bide there a nicht."

"And Whamond came through that rain totell me this? How good of him! Was there any other message?"

"Just that the minister hoped you would go straight to your bed, ma'am," said Jean, thinking to herself, "There can be no "You dare to look me in the face !"

"It seems to be more than the man is capable of," he added sourly.

"Do you think, Babbie exclaimed, taking fire, "that he is afraid of you?"

"So it seems; but I will drag him into the light, whever he be skulking."

Lord Rintoul strode to the door, and the brake was off his tongue already.

"Go," said Babbie coldly, "and shout and stamp through the house; you may succeed in frightening the women, who are the only persons in it." the only persons in it."

"Where is he?"

"He has gone to the Spittal to see you."

"He knew I was on the hill."

"He lost me in the darkness, and thought you had run away with me in your trap."

"Ha! So he is off to the Spittal to ask me to give you back to him."

"To compel you," corrected Babbie. "Pooh!" said the earl nervously, "that was but mummery on the hill."

"It was a marriage."

"With gypsies for witnesses! Their word would count for less than nothing. Babbie, I am still in time to save you."

"I don't want to be saved. The marriage had witnesses no court could discredit."

"What witnesses?"

"Mr. Mackenzie and yourself."

"I am so sorry," Babbie began in a broken voice, then stopped because they seemed such feelle words.

"If you are sorry," the earl answered eagerly, "it is not yet too late. Mackenzie and I saw nothing. Come away with me, Babbie, if only in pity for yourself."

"Ah, but I don't pity myself."

"Because this man has blinded you."

FIRMNESS.

In order to facilitate lodge work and free it from the blekerings that frequently occur a presiding officer should be firm. Whenever a question arises on which there is a difference of opinion and in which much interest is centered, effort is made by both sides to carry their point by every conceivable parliamentary measure. It is on occasions of this kind that firmness on the nart of the chair is necessary FIRMNESS.

It is on occasions of this kind that firmness on the part of the chair is necessary and of advantage. A wavering on questions of order causes confusion and chaos. Members must be kept within proper bounds.

It is preferable for the chair to be decisive and firm. Decide as quickly as one can consistently, and then be firm in adhering thereto. Allow no one to question the correctness of the decision except in the proper way, under the rules of parliamentary appeal. If the point is not clear invite opinions before deciding, but after the decision is rendered adhere to it and let it rest there. If for any reason a change of view arises in the mind of the chair as to the correctness of his position, and he feels eatisfied he was wrong, let him frankly and voluntarily reverse it. There is no disgrace in that. A Serious and Critical Case-Was Not Able to Get Out of Bed Without Help-Captain Neal, of the Northwest Mounted Police. Recommends the Great Cure

As far as Paine's Celery Compound is concerned, it can be positively stated that to-day the doubters and skeptics are silent. They are mute—dumb—and look on with wonder, awe and astonishment. Their jeers and uncultured remarks are not heard now. Their predictions are not tailed. Their predictions are not fulfilled. now. Their predictions are not fulfilled, and the wise, prudent and discerning man and the wise, prudent and discerning man and woman treat them with contempt and indifference.

Why this mighty change? What has occurred to silence the scoffers, the mockers, the gibers and the contemptuous? Simply the fact that Paine's Celery Compound has achieved great and glavious victories, grand achieved great and glavious victories, grand achieved great and glavious victories grand. chieved great aud glorious victories, grand onquests over disease and death, and now elevated to a pinnacle of fame never reached by any remedy that the world ever heard of. This accounts for the silence heard of.

Mr. M. E. Roy says:

"Permis me to say a word in favor of your excellent preparation known as Paine's Celery Compound. I was taken sick last winter with inflammatory rheumatism; my case was a very bad one. First, there came red blotches on my arms and legs, and that would be followed by large swellings in the knees and arms. I was so bad for three months that I could not get out of bed without help. I was advised by Captain Neal, of the Northwest Mounted Police, to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did; and, after using four bottles, I was completely restored to health; and to-day I feel as well as I ever did. "Sweet As the Odor of Fresh Hay."

"The County Fair," which appears at the Grand Tuesday and Wednesday nights with a Wednesday matinee, is carried in two special cars, and the play will be embellished in the same complete manner as in New York. Two great sentimental and sensational features are announced, viz. An old-fashioned husking bee, in which as core or more people are used, and a running horse race, in which three thoroughbreds are seen running full till in all the enthusiasm of a close finish. In this seene 10,000 pounds of machinery are used. Of the play itself it is generally described as superior to "The Old Homestead" in its portrayal of New England character. She conservative critic of the New York Herald says: "The play is sweet as the odor of fresh hay and the laughter of village maids in midsummer."

The Theatrical Benefit, The Cannot for their extreme kindness.

Three cheers were given for Mr. Roote, and he was pronounced "A Jolly Geof Fellow." In chorus. A pleasant hour was spent before the company parted. Among the latter were Mr. Fred. C. Whitney and Prof. Yolina were represented by Messra. Prof. C. Cardner, A. D. F. McIntosh, Fred. Hancock, A. D. Hodgins, Will Clark, Charles Patton and E. Wolfe.

The Theatrical Benefit.

The complimentary benefit to the Grand Opera House management last evening was fairly well attended. The new farcical comedy, "A Modern Husband," by Prof. Alfred Hennequin, was the attraction. It is an exceedingly well-written piece. The lines are sparkling, and the central idea of the play is novel. It is interpreted by a well-balanced company, the principal, Mr. C. F. Montaine, being a superior actor. "A Modern Husband," in its present state, is hardly perfect for the stage, but there is simple material for splendid dramatization. The defects incident and inseparable from initial productions will, in all probability, be remedied speedily and the comedy made thoroughly presentable.

last evening after the benefit performance and found himself confronted with about 50 of his triends.

"No local manager of the opera house since its establishment has made more friends than you," said Mr. Geo. C. Davis. advancing to the table. "You have been a quiet hustler in your way, and you are a gentleman every inch of you. In your unostentatious manner you have discharged your duties with credit to yourself and with satisfaction to your patrons. Allow me to present you, on behalf of your many admirers with this purse of gold, which will serve as a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by Londoners."

Mr. Davis handed over the purse, containing about $150, to the surprised recipient, and the company applauded heartily. Then Mr. R. Ironside stepped forward and presented to Mr. Roote, in addition, a handsome gold watch charm, suitably inscribed, the gift of the London Knights of Pythias. In doing so, Mr. Ironside paid a high compliment to Mr. Roote, and spoke of the regard he had inspired in his brother Pythians.

Mr. Roote was almost overcome. He thanked his friends for their generosity, which he feared he had hardly merited. He had come to London a stranger but a short time ago, and felt the honor more on that account. He had tried to fulfill his duties as treasurer of the Grand Opera House to the best of his ability and was deeply grateful for their tokens of appreciation. Once again he thanked his friends for their extreme kindness.

Three cheers were given for Mr. Roote, and he was pronounced "A Jolly
