POETRY.

On Saturday Night.

On Saturday night when the whistles blow,

I drop my work and wash my hands,

And I touch the rush and feel the glow,

And I hear the music of other lands.

To-morrow the children, with mother and me,

Will wander and watch the lake tide

And wonder I feel I can better be,

No wonder I feel that I nearer God

On Saturday night.

I can't lose an hour—put a single hour,

But all the week it is work and slave;

Sometimes my heart grows cold and sour,

A struggle it is to be strong and brave.

But on Saturday night, when the whistles blow,

Don't blame me—they seem the voices

Of God—

They let me free, and they me go,

And I know that fortune lays down

The road.

On Saturday night.

Mother and babies are strong and well—

What do you think that the babies say?

I'm almost ashamed my friends to tell.

The call the Sabbath "poor daddy's day."

It's the only day long time I'm near them.

To them it's a day a present from God;

It's the day long day that I always cheer them.

No wonder I bless the bells abroad

On Saturday night.

I ain't downhearted—I work and strive,

And I earn enough to make us a home;

Our babes are like bees in a little hive,

Their mother the queen of the honey comb.

To-morrow we'll have a most glorious time;

Though Sunday we'll walk in the fields abroad;

No wonder I'm saving up my dime,

No wonder I'm lifting my hat to God

On Saturday night.

STORY.

The Tide that Came up

Pleasant River.

Concluded.

"Where are your stockings?" she asked, with no possible loophole for excuse in the stern voice.

"I don't know," said Dean, horrified at what might befall on the disclosure of the carelessness. "I left them on the shore, and"—and then a sudden thought illumined all the sorry case, and seemed to clear up all the doubt, even in her own anxious mind.

"And the tide came up and took them out," she added, in brave, relieved tones.

"Oh! the scorn that shot into the hard face and shone out the keen blue eyes. It withered the child without addition of a word as the great-aunt turned into the house, with no further rebuke.

"Oh! for the lie, and the Pleasant River miles and miles from the turbulent tide!

That she had told a lie, the child knew, but the depth of it she could not comprehend. She knew she had lost the stockings through her own carelessness—that is what she wished to evade by the lie; and brought up as she had been by the seashore, where the ruthless ebb and flood swept away her hand houses, and her ship boats, she had but applied the destructive mysterious force to all waters.

And as I have thought of it often, I have tried to solve the ethics of it and believe it was not a lie, only in the large sense of all evasion and deception being untruth—but I fear it was.

Aunt Nancy did not allow any margin. Not a word did she speak to Dean through the tea, and Dean swallowed the barley soup heated over from dinner, without a word of protest, though every kernel seemed swollen to double its size, and choked its way down past the big lump already in the little throat.

Where should she find escape from that stern face? Where should she go? and where but up to the black-eyed aunt on the great hill!

When tea was through she slipped out of the house, not even stopping for the stuffing process which was her nightly, horrible fascination, when Aunt Nancy, as stern with her cats as with her grand-nieces took the long white-legged animal, and holding it tight on her knees, forced down its unwilling throat the food left from what had been set out as his daily portion in the little wooden trough.

Dean would soon have missed her supper as this performance, but to-night it had no charm; and she hurried out and over the bridge, not once stopping to look down upon the placid running water with its limpid sunset lights, to see if the tide was out or in.

Over the stony highway, through a hole in the thorn-hedge, that faced the front of the great farm, up the long long lane, straight past the syringas and columbines, and into the house where the kind-hearted sweet-faced aunt was sure to be!

There was tripe frying for tea, and baked potatoes on the hearth, and cream-biscuits just emerging from the oven; and in the homeliness of the sights and smells Dean confessed the whole dreadful lie, and learned for the first time that the tides did not reach the Pleasant River. Oh! how the sleek old uncle enjoyed it! and how merrily the black-eyed, little lady laughed! Not at the lie, but at thought of the horror of the stern-faced Puritan sister, who had never had a flock of boys and girls to bring up.

They talked to the child, too, about her sin, told her in few, simple words how wrong it was, and the troubled little heart became somewhat eased with the appetizing tripe and brown biscuit, and the love and sympathy of the two old people whose hearts had never hardened.

Dean had to go back, though, and face the stern aunt, for five days yet remained of the long, last week. Very frequently did she wish for something to shorten the time.

Uncle Jim, as usual, accompanied her to the big gate, and laughed shrilly and long again, as he thought of the horror of the stiff sister-in-law, and said, as he swung back the stone gate, "She'll never forget it; she'll never forgive you!"

How slow the little feet dragged over the stony highway, and down upon the bridge! No, there was no tide, she could see that now! the water was not a bit higher or lower on the big rock than it always had been, and there was never a sound of the swish, swish of the sea-shore.

How should she face the scornful aunt, and oh! what relief and delight to see the kind-hearted Jason standing in the doorway, to have him come down the steps to meet her; even if he, too, knew the dreadful sin, it was better than to face that stern justice alone.

And not only Jason to defend her, but in the house the dear grandfathers, and out by the back gate, yellow old Caro, and the high-backed, b x seated carriage. And to find that she was to get ready at once and go back with him, instead of dragging out the dreadful five days. What a relief it was!

Not a single word about the lie!

Aunt Nancy kissed her good-bye, and Jason lifted her up, in his arms and kissed her, too, and just whispered in the very lowest voice as he set her in the high-backed box-seat, that "when the tide went out he was going down to the shore to look for those stockings."

Not a single word of reproach from Aunt Nancy, nothing but the scornful, withering look; but Dean knew a well as Uncle Jim that she would never forgive her, say for it.

It is long years since, and the little girl is now a woman grown, her head and heart full of the memory of the dear old places and faces. Last year she was back to them all. Fifteen years since she had left the little house behind her on that summer night.

It was not the dear old grandfather this time who drove her down the hill to the bridge over the Pleasant River in the high-backed, box-seated carriage! Ah! the changes! He was not even at the old house, to welcome her with loving embrace. Out on a slope of a hill, at the foot of a white stone, the toiling hands, and busy brain, and the sweet, true heart were at rest, and forever; full of rest at last, from the long disquiet. God be thankful for the sweet memory of him!

Neither was the white-haired, rigorous face of Aunt Nancy in the little house on the corner lot. No fear for the look of scorn again; whether she forgot or forgave was now one, for she, too, was at rest. And in the little house on the corner, and the big house on the hill, were strangers' faces.

Down in the Brighton house a poor, miserable family made themselves at home in the big square rooms; and the long rows of windows were stuffed with rugs, and the pond was drained, and the fences flat. And scattered in other lands were the children and grandchildren of the stately uncle who had built the house with the hope that generations far removed would occupy its strong walls, and keep up the old family name and honor. Ah! the changes! and ah! for the restless, roving wills that had other dreams!

Down the meadow road, to the house of the kindly nephews! And there, too, the change had come, and the loving, great-hearted man was gone, laid beside the stern old aunt who had loved him as she loved nothing else in life—they were not parted long. Up the earthy step to the high gate, and between the great willow trees, to the front door! Not even good-souled Sophie to answer the summons; and the yellow-haired little girl who came instead could not understand why the stranger's eyes were full of tears, as she stooped and kissed her, and left her love and name for the grey-haired father who was absent from home. She had never known, as the stranger had, the loving companionship of the uncle who was at rest years and years ago; and she did not know that the stranger was not alone as she walked again down the path and past the bitter-sweet tree, and up to the ruins of the old house where the great-grandmother had lived and died. She could not see, but the stranger could, the sweet kindly face bent down to listen to her foolish prattle, nor hear the gentle, loving voice of the man who could become as a little child in thought and word. Tangled, as of old, were the ruins with primroses and lilies, and lilies all about. And picking one of the purple languorous plumes she turned away, and all the way back over the lonely road, with her face buried deep in the dear, old-fashioned velvet hand that had led her so often over the grassy way in the lush and quiet of the ending day.

Ah! the changes!

And up in the long, low house on the great hill, the cheery laugh of the black-eyed aunt was stilled forever, and the genial old uncle would never walk again down the long, long lane to the highway. Even the gate was swung with iron hinges! Cut down were the syringa trees, ploughed up were the rose bushes and columbines. The gay, pretty young wife of the son had gone back to her Western home; the red curtains no longer hung to the parlor windows; divided and subdivided had been the acres of the great farm, and strange hands and feet touched the doors and floors of the old house.

Only the Pleasant River the same! Gaily, as of old, the clear waters flowed over the yellow, sandy bottom. Down from the bridge-railing; was the big gray stone, on the sides the same shelving rocks—only the river the same! The tide has not yet reached the placid waters with its red-roses, changeable floods, and it seems well.

But who can tell? A tidal wave of prosperity is sweeping over the long forgotten hamlets round about the river, a golden wave, that is making things once impossible, possible; steamers are parting the waters of lakes untouched since the canoes of the red-men crossed them, villages are springing up in the fastness of the deep woods, seething iron horses are drawing up the bowels of the earth and crushing them to bricks of gold, and the steam-engine shrills its cry ten miles from the Pleasant River, years ago as meritable as the story of the ruthless tide, and the golden wave is but just "coming in." Who shall say but some day the river may meet the sea and feel the salt breath flooding its shelved rocks! Canals, and ship-railways, and tunnels are making the ends of the earth meet—who can tell?

As yet it is peaceful and quiet as of old. And it was happily restfully so to the girl who leaned down from the shelving rocks to dip her hands again in its yellow clearness; again, after so long a time—a child, and now a woman! The currents which ebb and flow with such restless undertow had swept and swayed her many times, would sweep and sway her many more ere her hair would be white as the rigorous-faced aunt's who slept, "secure or change," in sound of the rushing river.

Again! but never again, perhaps never again!

And the memory of the lie so long ago was fresh as all the other memories that had not changed nor grown less a lie.

For all of us "true"—but "with a difference." This spring is mine.

GRACE DEAN M'LEOD.

The Cost of Fencing.

It has been pretty well demonstrated in the past years that the fences of the United States have cost something like two billion dollars. The cost of annual repairs is a heavy burden upon rural industry. The agitation of the subject has resulted in great good in many quarters where "no-fence" laws exist. In the South there was great opposition to such legislation as opposed to the interest of the poor man, black or white, who wanted the whole range, preferring a nomadic life. After laws have been passed the poor man is encouraged to have a garden, a patch of cotton, sweet potatoes and other products, who otherwise would have declined to meet the expense of fencing. If he has a cow, or two, or a horse, it is easy to fence in enough ground to accommodate so small a herd. In many places the poor man has been compelled to acknowledge that the law was in his favor. The effect has been favorable to agriculture, lifting a serious burden from crop production. When fences are desirable their cost has been greatly cheapened by the introduction of less expensive fencing. The barbed wire is cheap, but it is also barbarous. There are modifications of it, making the fence visible by a combination of wood and wire, and leaving off the barbs. Iron is coming into use for almost everything, and will doubtless still be used for fences in some form, but the primitive barbed wire must go. The tendency is also toward breadth as far as possible, large instead of small fields. Any boy who has had a few lessons in arithmetic can see the economy of large fields. Where paddocks, pen, or yards are needed, some form of movable fence or hurdle is desirable, otherwise small fields should not be tolerated. The economy of fencing is a subject worthy of careful consideration. Invention is by no means exhausted in this direction. With all the increase of farms and of farmers, it is probable that the value of existing fences is very little if any greater than the aggregate of all fencing of farmers twenty years ago.—N. Y. Press.

Talmage on Newspapers.

A good newspaper is the grandest temporal blessing that God has given the people of this country.

In the first place all the people read the newspapers, and the newspapers furnish the greater portion of the reading to the people. They don't read books. The old people look for the deaths, the business man reads the business and financial column, and those who are unemployed read the want ads. Great libraries make few intelligent men and women, but newspapers lift the nation into sunlight.

My idea of a good newspaper is a mirror of light itself. Some people complain because the evil of the world is reported as well as the good. The evil must be reported as well as the good or how will we know what to guard against, or what to reform? There is a chance for discrimination as to how much space shall be given to reports of such things as prizes, fights, but the newspaper that merely presents the fair and beautiful and bright side of life is a misrepresentation. The family is best qualified for the duties of life who have told to them not only what good there is in the world, but what evil there is in the world, and is told to select the good and reject the evil.

Money Cannot Do It.

Rothschild, with all his wealth, must be satisfied with the same sky that is over the head of the poor man; he cannot order a private sunset that he may enjoy it with a select circle of friends, nor can he add one single ray to the clear, bright beams of the queen of night, as the magnificent

Thomas G. Edwards, M. D., Blanco, Texas, writes: "Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred ailments, there are none within the range of my experience and observation, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

John Meyer, Florence, N. Y., says: "I have used all your medicines, and keep them constantly in my house. I think Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life some years ago."

D. M. Bryant, M. D., Chicopee Falls, Mass., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has proved remarkably good in croup, ordinary colds, and whooping cough, and is invaluable as a family medicine."

ly through the heavens. The richest banker cannot have more than his share of the air to breathe, and the poorest of all men can have the same. Wealth may buy a brilliant bracelet, dazzling with rubies, but wealth can't not buy a graceful and well-turned arm on which to display its splendor. God only can give that, and to many of the poor he has given it. "I wish I had the health of the rosy-cheeked peasant girl," sighs the aristocratic invalid, propped up with pillows in her costly carriage. "Ah me," says the girl, "if I could only ride in such style as that." Wealth cannot purchase health, nor can it give a contented mind. All that is most valuable can be had for nothing. They come as presents from the hand of a kind and indulgent Father, and neither the air, nor sky, nor beauty, health, strength and genius, can be bought and sold. Reader, whatever may be thy condition in life, remember these things and be content.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., NOV. 15, 1889.

A Chance for Wolfville.

We have frequently in the past referred to the need of more manufacturing in Wolfville, and have endeavored to show some of the advantages offered by our town for manufactures of almost any description.

A Productive Country.

This valley may certainly be called the garden of Nova Scotia. In productiveness and fertility the land is wonderful indeed.

Billtown Matters.

The public school was resumed last Monday under the management of Mr. Griffin.

The Division held a very fine entertainment last Saturday evening and realized the very creditable sum of $10.

Mr. Ladd Reid is to teach a singing school at this place this winter. As there is considerable musical talent in the place he will no doubt have a good class.

An old woman named Susan Seem, an inmate of the Cornwallis poor farm, went out to pick peppermint last Friday, and not returning search was made for her.

N. S. CENTRAL.—The continuous open season of the past two months has so favorably impinged work of construction on the Nova Scotia Central railway that the consummation of the enterprise is rapidly drawing near.

The Directors' Annual Report of Kings Co. Agl. Society for 1889.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN.—Your Directors have the honor to submit for your consideration and approval the one hundredth annual report of our Society. The old "Colonica Societas," unchanged except as to name, has lived a century and outlived a generation.

The bull Prince Landowne has been replaced by a thoroughbred shorthorn Durham bull, one year old, purchased from E. P. & E. J. Armstrong, Church St., Cornwallis, for $100.

At the quarterly meeting your directors were authorized to purchase a ram and two ewes, but they have been unable to find satisfactory animals so far.

BYAM'S

Improved "Common Sense"

SASH BALANCE.

LOOKS AND LIFTS.

The only practical substitute for weights invented. The most durable, the cheapest and best device for all ordinary window. Balances when in position are entirely out of sight. Especially valuable for repairing old buildings as they can be put in a trifling expense, as easily put in old buildings as new ones. Sash can be removed from frame in a moment for cleaning or repairing broken glass. Can be used where it is impossible to use weights or other fixtures. No unsightly cord wearing paint off side of frame. No rattling of sash as pressure against sash prevents it. No rattling weights or pulleys when sash is raised or lowered. No sticking of sash in frame. No cords to run over pulleys and break. No rollers to wear out and fastened by standing loose, requiring some time. No danger of breaking delicate mechanism to "break" or lift out of order. It simplifies construction and operation in the window of all.

Byam's Automatic Sash Locks (self fastening) and Sash Lifts of upper and lower sash are the best and cheapest in the market.

C. V. R.—The work on the Cornwa' is being rapidly pushed.

Lost.—Between Greenwich corner and the Academy hollow, a black overcoat. Finder will oblige by leaving at this office.

Obituary.—The story on our first page by Miss Grace Dean M'Leod should have been credited to Arthur's Home Magazine, but was in some way overlooked.

Go to Payant's for Dentistry.

INCORPORATION.—Amherst has again voted in favor of incorporation, and this time has increased the majority vote which before became ineffective through some illegality.

OBITUARY.—Choice Fresh Oysters in shell. R. PRAT.

OUR "PI"—Our readers will kindly excuse us if any error occurs in these columns. Our "pi" last week has made an unusual amount of work in our office and we have not yet got in perfect order again.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.—This old and popular play was presented in Witter's Hall on Wednesday evening to a fair house. We were not present but are told that the company is the poorest that ever performed in Wolfville.

Wine Feeding, plain and barbed, and posts at WALTER BROWN'S.

PHOTOS.—We notice that Mr Rice has a number of fine new photos on exhibition. Among them are a fine view of the steamer Hamouha, one of Windsor's fine residences, and other good pictures Mr Rice is doing a good business in Wolfville.

Wheat Bran, a few tons, Choice, just received at R. PRAT'S.

FIREWORKS.—On Saturday afternoon past a boy named Cornelius Corkum, 14 years of age, had the two middle fingers of his left hand taken off by a circular saw at White Rock Mills. He was at once brought to Wolfville to Dr Bowles who dressed the wounded hand.

Laboratory Herring very choice. 1/2 bar. ribs and barrels at O. PRAT'S.

SAD NEWS.—The sad news reached here a few days ago of the death of Mr Benton S. Vaughan, Mr Vaughan, was a brother of Mr Chipman Vaughan of Wolfville, lost this county some years ago and died in Montana of typhoid fever on the 6th inst. He leaves a wife and one child.

A full line of Brushes of all kinds at WALTER BROWN'S.

HORSE SOLD.—Mr Joseph Jowdry, of Gasperow, has sold his fine Hartford five-year old horse to Mr Kinman Palmer, of Long Island, for $150. Mr Alexander Fullerton, of the latter place, has 'sold his fine five-year old Nelson Morgan mare to F. J. Faulkner, of Grand Pre, for the same price.

Lanterns, the latest and best, 75c. at PRAT'S.

WILLOW BANK.—We notice some improvements in Willow Bank Cemetery which were certainly needed. The new bridge at the south gate is a fine piece of work, but we think if a little more regard for appearance had been exhibited in the construction of the affair extra expense would have been amply compensated for.

DIRECTOR'S REPORT.—A large portion of our space this week is devoted to the report of the Directors of the King's County Agl. Society. It will be concluded in our next and will be found good reading, and should be carefully perused. A few communications have been crowded out to make room, but we feel sure our correspondents will excuse.

GRAND DIVISION.—The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance has been in session in Halifax this week. The election of officers took place on Wednesday and resulted as follows: G. W. P.—R. T. Murray, Halifax.

Meeting of School Commissioners.

A special meeting of the Board of School Commissioners was called on November 9th by the Chairman, Wm Laton, Esq., at the request of Commissioners, B. H. Calkin and W. E. Boscoe. The object of the meeting was to provide for the distribution of a part of the school land fund, set apart by the board, to supply maps and school appliances for the schools of Cornwallis. Eleven commissioners were present. The Inspector reported the requirements of the various schools, and a pretty full discussion of their condition and ability to provide for their own wants was entered into by the commissioners, and it was resolved, That the Inspector be empowered to supply the schools of Cornwallis with maps and other apparatus, which in his opinion are most needed for present use, to the extent of the sums appended, to each of the sections:—

Letter of Condolence.

Wolfville Division, at its last regular meeting, expressed much sorrow in the sudden death of Mr Frederic Angus, a member of that society, and an motion the following letter of condolence was ordered to be forwarded to the parents of the deceased brother and a copy of it to be sent to the ACADIAN for publication:—

To Mr and Mrs Burton Angus:

Whereupon dost thou build thy hopes, O son of the winged days—thy strong desires? But a few suns roll, and the northern blast howls o'er the desolate grave; then what avails it that our hopes for eternity be sacrificed to the pleasures of this world?—For "this world is all a fleeting show, For man's illusion given." The smiles of joy, the tears of woe, Deceitful shine, deceitful flow. There is a certain selfishness in weeping for the departed good, for in doing so we grieve only because of their instead of rejoicing because of their eternal gain—a resting-place in God. Such is the philosophy of grief. But in spite of all doctrine, man must still retain human feelings—joy for the happiness, sorrow for the misfortunes, and grief for the death of friends. Great is the loss to our brotherhood in the death of your dear son, and—dear is our affliction. Our tears shall flow with yours; your grief shall be our grief; and our entire sympathy is poured out to you. His place occupied so usefully in our order is empty; the merit of his voice bids us no longer smile; his presence no more aids us in our glorious work, and his absence cannot be filled. But it is truthfully said—

We never know how much we love Our friends until they die.

When Death's stern hand hath ripped the veil of immortality.

Yes, death indeed is the measure of our love, so find succor of sorrow for your son, for though

The path by him in childhood trod Shall know his steps no more, His voice is silent where it sang In tones of mirth before,— His feet now tread Elysian fields "Mid never-fading bloom; His voice has joined the choral song That swells the praise of the tomb.

Please accept these few words as the expression of the Division—with your bereavement.

A sad accident occurred at the Folly Lake on the 5th inst. Mr Robert Stevens was instantly killed by the falling of earth upon him while loading a car with gravel by means of a steam shovel. The bank at the place is about 25 feet high. Some half dozen men are required for the work, part of them at the top to keep the facing of the bank perpendicular. Biame is attached to the railway authorities; either the work was placed in incompetent hands or an insufficient force was employed. The machine excavated the bank so that the men were endangered by the overhanging earth, with the fatal result indicated above. Com.

Berwick.

The Rev. E. O. Read preached his farewell sermon last Sunday morning to a crowded house, and in the evening at the social meeting of the church the following address was presented to him:

To Rev. E. O. Read, from the Second Cornwallis Baptist Church:

DEAR BROTHER: Permit us on the eve of your departure for a new field of labor to place on record our appreciation of your labors as our pastor during the past six years. God has blessed you in the pastorate and your labors have been highly appreciated. A large number have been converted and brought into the church through your instrumentality, many of whom are now among the "bright and shining" of our membership. The spiritual activity of the church has been maintained. The weak ones of the flock have had your sympathy and encouragement. You have comforted the sorrowing ones. The widow and fatherless have found in you a friend and helper, and the erring ones have been lovingly and tenderly borne with. Nor has denominational rivalry and missions has been constantly kept before us. A larger number of our young people have studied at our institutions at Wolfville during your pastorate than for good to the Berwick church. Your sons have been an honor to the pastor and a blessing to the church. They have labored faithfully and efficiently in the Sunday school and will be greatly missed in our meetings. Your estimable wife has ever been a faithful and devoted co-laborer. You both have rejoiced with us when we rejoiced and mingled your tears with ours in seasons of affliction and sorrow. Your leaving Berwick will be deeply regretted not only by the church but by the entire community. You have lived in the affections and esteem of all. It has been said, that "there's a Divinity that shapes our lives, rough how them as we will." By that Guidance, you, with us, are being led, and we believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God." In conclusion, dear brother and sister, allow us to say that our best wishes and prayers will follow you to your new field of labor and we humbly trust that as the Great Shepherd has guided and blessed you in the past, so in the future may you be led beside the gently flowing streams and into the green pastures, till at the end of life's journeyings you may have the welcome, "Well done," and be gathered into the fold above where there is no more going out or coming in, but will be forever with the Lord. In behalf of the Church, COMMITTEE.

Berwick, Nov. 10th, 1889.

Mr Read left for Lockport on the 13th inst., to enter upon the pastorate there.

FLOWERS AS EMBLEMS.

of Heraldry Whose Mys- tery is Past Finding Out.

ave, Historical and Romatic. Regarding the Various Floral Badges Told in Ancient and Modern Myths, Traditions and Theories.

"A good symbol," it was the opinion of Emerson, "is the best argument, and is a missionary to persuade thousands. There is no more welcome gift to men than a new symbol." This says the London Standard, may possibly account for the rise, popularity and persistence of floral symbols.

Yet it seems difficult to explain why Wales should have chosen the leek for its cognizance, though the Cymric poets have a good deal to say about the broom. The Scottish thistle is more to the point. Yet the northern botanists are by no means at one in assigning the heraldic plant to any known species, or even in asserting that it is a Carduus at all.

The plant which with Holyrod is decked on festive days is usually the cotton thistle, which is certainly not a wild plant in North America. It is, of course, a romantic tale to explain its choice as the emblem of old England, though, like the majority of such tales, this legend may be true.

It is not the thistle, but the fleur-de-lis, the proper heraldic emblem of France. It is still less easy of explanation. For, though it is conventionally regarded as the heraldic emblem of France, it is, in fact, a plant which is not native to France, and it is not the fleur-de-lis, but the fleur-de-lis, which is the emblem of France.

It would certainly be difficult for any one to explain why Florence adopted the "fleur-de-lis" as the emblem of the city. It is, of course, a romantic tale to explain its choice as the emblem of old England, though, like the majority of such tales, this legend may be true.
