A MELANCHOLY drowning accident cocurred at Diligent River, N. S., on Thursday afternoon last. Two young men, Robert McNudge and Fred Canning, put off in a small boat with provisions for a wood scow which was anchored a short distance off Refugee Cove. A squall struck the boat, which capsized. The man on the scow saw the men struggle in the water, but having no small boat was unable to render assistance. A boat was picked up at Port Greville on Friday. It contained the body of McNudge. Canning has not been recovered.—Moneton Times.

DECLARED. Maxwell in the Field.

TARMERS, don't be gulled by agents who keep the papers stuffed every week with their puffing and blowing, and telling you they can sell as good a reaper or binder as the Maxwell. We will put up five dollars to one against any other in the market. The Maxwell goods have been in use for over thirty years in the States and Canada, and have been thoroughly tested on this Island for the last two years.

If you want to buy the best, ask the following gentlemen: James Doyle, of Charlottetown, who worked with the late Owen Connolly, when the Maxwell Binder cleaned out the Walter A, Wood in the harvest of 1886. After Mr. Connolly having a trial of three or four other binders, he bought the Maxwell. Henry Hyde, West River, which binder he bought after inviting all the binders in the market to his field for trial, and having a trial of the Patterson and Buckeye, and saw the Milwaukee Junior working. Norman McLeod, Orwell, what reaper he bought after using a Frost & Wood. Wm. Fraser, Seal River, what binder he cut his harvest with, using but two horses in the first crop in new land. Thos. Duffy, Morell, what reaper cut his field of new land oats when all others failed to try it. Ask Henry T. LePage, Charlottetown, what rake cleaned out his in Miss Ann McWade's field, Johnston's River, and he will say the Maxwell. And over one hundred others who bought from us the last two years, and they will tell you to buy the Maxwell; and take no other, for it is fifty per cent, ahead of any other in the market.
