Poetry.

The Saddest Safety Wheel.

Life, my boy, is a bicycle path.

And words are the wheels you should ride.

If you would come to the crest of the hill

Just off the machine with cheerfulness

And see that the parts are in trim,

Thus avoiding the crash and the fall

With a ready, steady vim.

Don't start with a rash up the hill of life—

Just pedal a medium gait;

For this is the safe and the sound

And likely to finish last.

Grasp the handle bars of the wheel of work

With a firm hold—no too tight grip—

But the safe and the sound

Push for the road that's right!

You may wobble, slip, and puncture, too,

But play up the holes with smiles and pluck—

They are the plucks which count.

There are other makes of machines than "Wells"

There's the "Elli," the "Lacy," the "And"

And hosts of others of tempting type,

But the one called "Work" is best.

It's a low gear wheel of homely frame,

But it's safe and strong through the gate,

And the man who rides it perfectly

Can never let it go.

So straddle the saddle of "Work," my boy,

For you'll get to the top of the hill of life,

And the which was the goal of his aim.

—Joe Kerr, in New York Herald.

Advice to a Young Man.

The following letter from Henry Ward Beecher to his son is declared on good authority never to have been published.

My dear Henry—You are now for the first time really launched into life for yourself.

1. You must not go into debt. Avoid debt as you would the devil. Make it a fundamental rule: No debt—cash or nothing.

2. Make few promises. Religiously observe even the smallest promise. A man who means to keep his promise cannot afford to make any.

3. Be scrupulously careful in all statements. Accuracy and perfect frankness—no guess work. Either nothing or accurate truth.

4. When working for others, seek your self out of sight—seek their interest. Make yourself necessary to those who employ you.

5. Hold yourself responsible for a higher standard than anybody else expects of you.

6. Concentrate your force on your own proper business; do not turn off. Be consistent, steadfast and scrupulously industrious.

7. The art of making one's fortune is to spend nothing in this country any intelligent and industrious young man may become rich if he keeps all his leads and a hurry. Do not make haste to be patient.

8. Do not speculate or gamble. You go to a land where everybody is excited and strive to make money suddenly, largely, and without working for it. They blow soap bubbles. Steady patient industry is both the secret and the safest way.

9. In regard to Mr. B.—he is a Southern gentleman; he is reading in a favor to me to do not let him regret it.

10. I beseech you to correct one fault—speak to others; never speak evil of any man, no matter what the facts may be.

11. You must remember that you go to Mr. B.—to learn to manage a farm like his. One or two hundred acres is not a great deal, but you must be able to manage a farm like his.

12. If by integrity, industry, and well-earned success you deserve well of your fellow citizens, they will in years to come seek you to accept honors. Do not seek them; do not receive them while you are young—wait until you are old and gray.

13. Read often the Proverbs, the precepts and duties enjoined in the New Testament. May your father's God go with you and protect you.

Practical Talks and Plain Precepts for Farmers.

Edited for the Farmer readers of the MONITOR by an Annapolis Valley Agriculturist

Hay. It is a curious fact that most of our level-headed farmers do not know how to make hay. In many cases the best cut is too ripe, and when cut on some large farms for six weeks or more, the hay is so dry that it is really little better than straw...

Some of the best farmers manage to get two crops of hay in one season from a piece of all their meadows. Where this is practiced early cutting is particularly necessary.

Getting Good Results in the Hay Field. After forty years of active farm life I think it is safe to say that the best hay is made from a good seed and a good soil...

It is not about time to begin hay, as the neighbors were, in small way, clipping about his grass. He was told that it had reached that stage of maturity that the cured product would be the best...

None of the crop should be allowed to come over-ripe, even the herbage for horse feed. The exact time for cutting grass is when it contains the greatest feeding value...

Just as the bloom is commencing is probably as perfect a time to cure the grass for milch cows, and herbage just out of the milch house, as can be suggested. It is considered where there is a mixture of grasses the time for cutting must be earlier...

Hay should never be stored till October from dew and rain has been perfectly evaporated. A good fair crop can hardly be cured enough in one day at the beginning of harvest to store the material through the location and variety of grass would have much to do with this.

It is in poor policy to leave grass flat over night. This can be avoided, when it is desirable to store during the afternoon, by following the mower with the horse rack, which draws it into windrows in a very satisfactory manner.

It is worth everything to have the ground clear of the weeds and grass that are in the way and there is much less risk of frost damage to the crop than if it is left in the field.

When the cover-crop is plowed in its chief value lies in the water contained in it. This is due to the fact that the material which is composed has a strong affinity for water...

One must be governed by his own best judgment to a large extent in the hay-making. Twist a wisp of hay and if it has the feel of a wet rag it is not fit to cut. If the day is very dry and the hay cutting rapidly, do not immediately prevent over-drying. Let the whole and aim to be to preserve in a perfect degree the rich juices in the stem, and the way some that possess the surface of every grass plant.

Securing the Hay Crop. The hay crop is one of the most important on the farm, and especially when dairying is followed is the value particularly apparent. There are other crops that come largely into account, but still that of hay will hold its own individual place.

But to be of the most value after it is grown it should be harvested at the best manner. As a prime factor in the feeding of covering milk in the winter time is this particularly desirable.

The grass of the various kinds grown should be made into hay at the period of growth and development when they will possess the most value for the purpose. This both science and practice has decided to be as early as possible when the full bloom is reached.

Perhaps not quite as much will be obtained at this period as later, but the superior quality will more than compensate for any loss in this direction.

On a large farm it may be difficult securing all of the crop when at its best, but with proper management this can be very satisfactorily accomplished. Better economy is made than is usually made on a small farm.

Some farmers there is quite a variety of grasses, or in different stages of growth and development, that will facilitate the process of drying. Cut the earliest first, and as long as the other grasses. It is necessary to require a little more time and labor to do this than to take the fields as they come, but it will pay.

Cargoes that Kill. "You don't know how much you can do with the small of coffee until you have been on board a cargo steamer laden with the green berries of a trading vessel, quoted in Amoske."

"For a week or ten days it isn't so bad—'till you get a pleasant smell, that of the green berry after that it begins to touch any food, simply because of the coffee, which causes to impregnate everything on board."

"Some other cargoes are just as bad. Sugar, for instance. Didn't suppose there was any smell in sugar, eh? Well, you take a bowl, and there isn't! But take a charge of it, and let it steam in a temperature of from 80 to 110, and it's worse than coffee."

"On many farms there will be some fields or pieces of the wild native water grasses. These should also be harvested early. If this is done they will make a fair quality of hay, tender and palatable."

It will require some more work and care to cure grass, early cut grass has no time to take the sweet taste out of its mouth. "Get busy, get busy," that is the word, and not a heaver only. A dozen years ago we were told that the best hay was made from a piece of all their meadows. Where this is practiced early cutting is particularly necessary.

There is a whole sermon in the parable of the fig tree, "that is, get to doing something; get to work; be a doer of the word and not a hearer only. A dozen years ago we were told that the best hay was made from a piece of all their meadows. Where this is practiced early cutting is particularly necessary."

The Household.

Tomato Soup—Cook one can of corn in an equal quantity of milk until perfectly tender, then add the milk and cook for ten minutes. When done, pour through the colander, making as much of the corn as possible through with the liquid. Mix a large tablespoonful of butter in the frying pan, then mix in it a heaping tablespoonful of flour. Add gradually a little of the milk and corn and when the mixture is thoroughly smooth, pour all together into the saucepan, making as much of the corn as possible through with the liquid. Mix a large tablespoonful of butter in the frying pan, then mix in it a heaping tablespoonful of flour. Add gradually a little of the milk and corn and when the mixture is thoroughly smooth, pour all together into the saucepan, making as much of the corn as possible through with the liquid.

Tomato Jelly is an appetizing and effective relish that will be found particularly acceptable at tea or luncheon. It is made from a few simple ingredients. Season the juice well, remembering that tomatoes stand generous salting, and add a half a box of gelatine.

Cheery Cheese—Take a head of cauliflower, wash thoroughly and boil until tender; drain well and cut up into small pieces. Have ready a pint of rich cream, butter, and add pepper, salt and an ounce of grated cheese to it, put the celery into the sauce for a few minutes, then fill with the cream and butter and the top and bake for ten minutes in a quick oven, when the cheese should be evenly browned.

Ham Patties—Two cups of cold minced ham, one cupful bread crumbs, moistened with milk. Mix and put the batter into gem-pans. Break an egg over each, sprinkle the top with bread crumbs and bake till nicely browned.

Before you go further into winter in your ear these pieces of bread should never be thrown away. No matter how dry, if they are clean and the bread is good, they will be good in making up these rolls, for crotons, garnishing and other purposes. If not wanted for immediate use, dry through in a dry place to prevent moulding.

Cheese Potatoes—Add to half a pint of cold mashed potatoes one egg well beaten and a tablespoonful of butter. Beat the mixture till it is very thick. Then add plenty of seasoning, salt and pepper and two spoonsful of grated cheese for this amount of potato. Again beat light and turn the mixture into a buttered tin and bake in brick oven. This is a good way of using a small quantity of mashed potatoes for luncheon without meat.

Cheese Pudding—One half pound of grated cheese, four tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of cream or half a cupful of milk, one table spoonful of butter. Rub cheese and bread together, add the milk, then the cream, and lastly the well beaten butter. Bake it evenly in a tin, serve at once. Very good.

Why let it matters do not teach lessons of personal conduct to their daughters? Take a group of children to illustrate. They are to be taught; associated in their play, their Sunday school and their classes; they are companions during the early part of their lives. Youths together, they learn the characteristics of each other better than their mother know them. As the years pass on some of the girls come to be known among the boys as "good fellows." In their evening outings, their dancing and their parties, the "good fellows" find that they are more popular among the boys, and they seldom learn why. More sorrow to them if they do.

Bye and bye, when the boys become young men and seek wives, the "good fellows" are passed by. They never understand that the young men have memories of girls into whose lives and impulses they have never been permitted to approach. While the "good fellows" may have given their companions to understand that they know how to take care of themselves, they have not been able to do so in the same manner as the "good fellows" find that they are more popular among the boys, and they seldom learn why. More sorrow to them if they do.

John's Corner.

The Revelations of a Rummage Sale. There is a dear old lady for North Charles Street, Baltimore, who for years cherished a hope that some day she might be fortunate enough to discover the male to a splendid old android that had been in her possession for many decades. It was an exquisite piece of brass, and its shape and carvings were so unique that its individuality was firmly established.

Every one of the old lady's kith and kin had searched diligently for the old android, but without success. The owner herself had ransacked every junk shop and second-hand store in half the big cities of the East. A few months ago she reluctantly came to the conclusion that the twin android was lost for evermore.

Two weeks ago, on being invited to contribute to a "rummage sale," she sent the old brass—not a tatter of rag at its departure.

That same day the old lady's daughter
