Now the great argument of the Finance Minister, and the argument that is used throughout the country, is this: We have given you another market for your wheat. As I said before, there are two markets for wheat now. The Canadian northwest farmer need not sell his wheat to the miller if the miller does not give him the fair ruling price; he can export it to London and Liverpool and get the price that the world gets, which fixes the price that the miller gives, outside of certain incidental circumstances of location and the like of that. Thus he has two markets now. But the Finance Minister forgot to go any farther, forgot to trace out just what he was doing when he presented the gift of free entry of Canadian wheat into the United States market. He forgot to point out that the miller of the Canadian west, and the miller of the west United States, has in the end, after the local supply is satisfied, to find the same market in London and Liverpool. He forgot to point out that he made it possible for the United States miller to get Canada's No. 1 hard wheat, to mill it in the United States mills and satisfy the people in the United States who ask for high grade flours and pay fancy prices for them and then take the less strong flours and export them to the European market, which is largely, as I am informed, for those grades not the strongest and not the best. So that what happens is this: The Canadian miller will be at a disadvantage in competition in the export market in flour with the United States miller, who draws on his best, who has the offal to supplement his gains, and to diminish his charges, and has at least shorter and possibly cheaper routes of exit to the old country markets. The milling industry is an important industry in this country. It is important because of the by-products and the absolute necessity for those by-products if we are going to have improved and intensive farming in that great northwestern country. Did you notice that President Taft and Mr. Hill in their arguments, lay great stress on this? They say that the people of the United States should now turn their attention more and more to improved and intensive farming. Is not that as good advice for Canadians as it is for the people of the United States ? and if that impetus is given to the export of raw wheat because you have got a more facile market, and may be at times a better market, although it is certain at other times to be a less good market, you make a set and tendency in that great northwestern country to shear off the wheat and sell it with less trouble of farming and by doing that, neglect the improved and intensive and mixed farming which alone can restore your impoverished soil, bring it to its natural state as productive and as valuable as it was at first. The more milling you have in the west, and the more offal for feeding the better you will attain this end.

Take again, the pork packing industry. The Minister of Finance comes back and says to the hog raisers and the cattle raisers in Ontario: I have brought you a gift, I have got a free entrance into the United States for your hogs and your cattle. We had representatives here from the west. What did they say ? They said that the cattle industry in the west could be made a splendid industry, but in order to do it, they must do something other than raise and export stock cattle, they must carry out the refining processes and perfecting processes in the west in order to cultivate their farms, to feed back what they have taken from the soil and make sure and steady the occupations of the farmer and the cattle grower. That was true. You will hear no more about that, if this arrangement goes into operation; every stocker that can be raised will be cleaned off the ranches and farms in the west and carried down to the perfecting and manufacturing processes in the United States of America. There they will have the advantage of the by-products for the enrichments of their land and can carry out in that way the advice of Mr. Taft and Mr. Hill, to turn their attention to mixed farming, to intensive farming, that kind which yields best and keeps the soil up to its quality and its standard. The Finance Minister came back and said to the farmers: We have got a market for your hogs and your cattle, another market for you. They already had a market, the packers of Ontario and Quebec. The market that you give to them in the United States at times is higher and at times is lower than the market in Canada. The absolute condition, I am informed, of good, straight, honest packing and preservation of the market for the product of the packers, is that delivery shall be steady and constant and shall be made directly, the product not being stored for any length of time. But if you take the prices of hogs in the United States and the prices of hogs in Ontario and Quebec, year in and year out, the average price is higher in the province of Quebec and Ontario, than in the United States of America. Just at this present time the prices of hogs are higher at Buffalo and Detroit, than they are in Ontario. What would happen if the market were opened ? Every hog that could be got away, would be taken to the Buffalo and the Detroit market, and a supply would not be possible for the packers of Ontario and Quebec and the packers' establishments would close. The Finance Minister is trying to give to the farmer another market for his hogs, but in the process, he runs the risk of destroying the stable market he now has, destroying that stable market and leaving the Ontario hog raiser to the United States market. To-day that market is away up, and he gets a good price; to-morrow it may be away down, and he gets no price, and so, discouraged and disheartened, by the rises and falls of the American market, the Ontario farmer finds less inducement to carry on his business and hog raising goes out of its present stage in Ontario and Quebec. What else have you done? You have reduced the preserved and cured meats duties. Into the northwest provinces, millions of dollars worth of these cured products have been going and a large trade has been carried on during the last seven years. Under this arrangement, if it comes into force, the northwest provinces will be supplied absolutely from the packing establishments of Chicago, Milwaukee and the nearby places in the United States of America. You take away from the packing industry of this country, a part, and a valuable part, of its local market, the domestic market in the northwest, and you transfer it to the United States market. What else do you do ? By making the supply fitful, now up, now down, now plentiful, now nothing, you destroy his chance for export to Great Britain, and the $7,000,000 of products which to-day are exported to the British market, run the risk of being diminished and ultimately of coming down to the vanishing point. There is more in it than simply the selling of raw material, more in it to the man who sells the raw material, and more in it to the man who does the finishing processes, and more in it to the country in which both are carried on.

So much with reference to reciprocity. The next point I wish to make is, that this instrument restricts and may ultimately destroy our fiscal freedom. Has this people of Canada lost its sense of what is due to it as a responsibly governed people. I do not believe it. But it is hard not to believe it just at this particular time. I put the matter in this way before, and I put it again, because it is vitally important : Here are two men, members of the government that have absolutely had no mandate from the people of any kind or sort ; no mandate because they declared to the people that they had done with reciprocity and were cultivating now the British market. These two men with no extraordinary business ability or experience go down to Washington, make a pact with the administration there, sign it with their hand and seal, come back here and present it to the free parliament of Canada, to the free people of Canada. And when the people get their breath they say : What does this thing mean ; why, this goes the wide length of the Dominion ; it enters into productions of every sort and kind, it makes an absolute change in our fiscal relations, it may go further and affect the productions of our country immensely, it may go further still and affect our national ideals and our imperial relations. And, yet Sir, these two men with their limited knowledge, consulting with nobody but 14 other men of equally limited knowledge—and I give them credit for all they are worth ; I was there myself once and I know how limited really the knowledge of a minister of the Crown is with reference to these things—these two men bring back an instrument and without asking leave of the people, without giving to parliament a free hand they impose that as a pact, and backed up by the whole party force and power they put it into operation no matter whose back is broken, no matter what interest is invaded, no matter what great national consequences hang upon it, and what interests may be injured thereby. I say, Sir, that if such a thing had happened 30 years ago in any province of the Dominion of Canada there would have been a revolt in that province. It amazes me to think that men could dare to assume such rights ; it amazes me still more to think that they dare to assume such responsibility. Why, when this pact was made I can imagine the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, two good men, two simple-minded men, two men of fair but limited knowledge, with two clerks with them, facing the trained men of business at Washington, going down there with fear and trembling, wondering if they could get a little bit of a slice so as to justify their going, creeping into Washington, and when they meet, the United States representatives suddenly hand out to them a proposition which in their wildest imaginings they did not suspect would be offered to them. Overwhelmed, overpowered, they pick it up and telegraph back to Ottawa : Goodness gracious, Sir Wilfrid, see what they have given us, shall we take it. And Sir Wilfrid looks at it, and he says it is the whole thing, and he telegraphs back : Take it, take it, take it. And the pact is signed. Sir, the gift is brought back but the mortgage has to be met. And if this is passed the future of this country economically and nationally will pay that mortgage to the last cent and curse the men who made that mortgage possible.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That wakes them up.

Mr. FOSTER. So, as I have said, from this time out, if this holds, Canada's interests cannot be met and satisfied by the Canadian parliament in the Canadian forum. Our hands are tied. Ninety-three millions of people plus eight millions have to give their assent. The predominant partner has to be seen and has to give his consent, and to every grievance brought by the individual interest the government must answer ;—we know we are wrong, we see you are going to be destroyed but it is the whole pact or none, we cannot let you off or the whole business goes by. Now, let me put this to my right hon. friend : You started out on the right track in 1910 just before the big stick was lifted ; you told us in parliament that you were brave and that you would continue to be brave ; you said you would do what was best for Canada and let the United States do as it liked, and you carried through the French Treaty in that fit of bravery and courage. But the February of 1910 came when a surtax of 25 per cent was possible within a month of going on, when the big stick was raised, and then Sir, you wilted ; you forgot your brave words and your brave sayings even in parliament, and you came here with the excuse : Well, it was unjust, we knew it was, we should not have asked to do it, it was not neighbourly treatment, we had treated them splendidly and they have treated us in niggardly fashion ; they had no right to do it, but see here, we cannot face a disturbance and dislocation of the $300,000,000 worth of trade between the United States and Canada, and, therefore, we give in. And if this pact should increase your trade between Canada and the United States to $600,000,000 as you say it will, then let a demand come from the other side equally as unjust as that, and you will again say : It is unjust, it should not have been, we should not be asked to make a sacrifice like that but here is $600,000,000 of trade involved and we cannot disturb and dislocate it. Don't you see the fetters you have put about you ; don't you see the bonds in which you have wrapped yourselves up, the more this is successful in stimulating trade between the two countries the more we are in the power of the predominant partner. Let a man with $8,000 go into business with a man with $100,000, and who manages that business? It makes no difference that the man with small capital is wiser than the man with large capital, the man with small capital sees his interests are not being well cared for and sees he is subjected to injustice, and he goes to the predominant partner and says : I want this thing changed, and the other says : You do, do you, well I don't want it changed ; what are you going to do about it? So the United States can say to Canada.

I am the predominant partner; I have a hundred millions in this, and you have only eight millions; do you want to sell out, or are you prepared to grin and bear it, and take the injustice? One or the other ; and it is not an alternative for a young nation to have placed before it. It does not square with that spirit which has been cultivated for the last forty years, and you know it does not. Then, why don't you simply say so, and say as patriots and good citizens have said before, in every crisis of their country's history: Sacrifices, if necessary, we will make that our country may be saved and our flag may be preserved. I say, therefore, that we have given up our fiscal freedom to a large extent, and we have endangered it absolutely. This country is young; it develops rapidly. Who is wise enough to say to-day that five years from this we ought not to have a totally different alignment of our tariff? But under this you bind yourselves; you are not free to make it. Suppose that, five years from this, this country came to the conclusion that with regard to one of these products Canada's duty to herself, and her people was to prohibit the export of it, or to put restrictions upon it that it should be manufactured in this country with our own capital, with our own labour, and for our own first uses. You come up against the fact that the predominant partner says: You cannot do that without disturbing the whole arrangement; are you going to imperil $400,000,000 worth of trade? The argument is not irresistible, but it is almost irresistible practically. Theoretically you are free; practically you are bound; your strength and your power and your sovereign right of first service to your own citizens in your own country has been bartered away, and bartered away, in my opinion, for a petty mess of pottage.

Mr. PATERSON. We are in bad shape, aren't we?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the Minister of Customs has his biscuit box yet; he is not in bad shape.

Mr. CARVELL. Two-and-a-half per cent on it.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, his previous profits will keep him chewing quite a while Of course, the market gardeners, poor fellows, are in a hard way ; but they don't make biscuits, and they don't smile about it. The minister smiles sitting on his biscuit box when he surveys the troubles of the market gardeners.

Mr. PATERSON. Don't you think you would be better of a biscuit now. You must be tired?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if you send over one of your best, I will send back a cent for it, and will not charge you anything for the advertisement. Another feature of this proposal is that it clashes with the new sentiment and, I hope, policy of conservation in this country. I am not able to give very much time to that, but I think it is well worth mentioning, even though the Prime Minister smiles at my taking up so petty a matter as conservation.

Mr. PATERSON. Only at the three hours.

Mr. FOSTER. These hours which I take up will not be grudged by the country, and if they have any effect in restraining the madness of these two estimable gentlemen who constitute themselves the judges for the whole people——

Mr. TALBOT. We have heard that story before.

Mr. FOSTER. And there are some stories which my hon. friend might hear very often and much to his improvement. The Ten Commandments and the moral law and all the maxims of business and of social refinement and of civilization never can be repeated too often to any of us in this world of struggle and temptation. So I am willing to take a little more time, and repeat it again for my hon. friend if I thought it would do any good. I think it will do good; I think he is appreciative of it. Are we simply playing with this matter of conservation, or are we in earnest? Is it merely something to display to the people, something nice to talk about on the platforms and in great meetings with people of other countries, that we are alive to the conservation of the natural resources of this country and are doing something towards it? If it is not simply display, the government is in earnest in this matter of conservation. It is an important question. The government have become seized of the facts if it is important, and they are going to set themselves towards a line of policy, and a line of conduct which shall aid in the conservation of our natural resources. Now, Sir, there is no meaning in conservation unless we approach it from this point of view, that we in this generation are the trustees for the generations that come after us. If we divest ourselves of that feeling, there is nothing for us to think about, but this present generation and day—take, eat, drink and be merry; you may die to-morrow, but you will have all you want whilst you live. Trusteeship is the foundation of conservation in principle as well as in method. If that be the government's idea, the point I wish to raise, and the only point in this, is: Is an agreement like this, which aims at an invasion of all the rich natural resources of this country, with added yearly incentives to their destruction and extinguishment, a matter which affects this country at all or which may affect it in respect of its conservation? If it is, we ought to be careful before we enter into it; for if we enter into this pact, we have practically made an agreement with the United States that so long as it continues, they shall have free access to our natural resources. Unless that is an underlying part of this agreement, then there is no underlying principle in it at all. Now, Sir, the whole bent and force of this arrangement, so far as I have seen, is that this is wanted in the United States on economic grounds for the purposes of supply out of our raw materials. This goes into force; a year from now, this government may find and the Conservation Commission may advise this government, that certain of our resources should not be exported except under certain conditions, or that they should not be exported at all, or that such of them as are used should be made up under regulations, and made in this country alone. As we are now, you have a perfect right to pass that legislation; you have given bonds to nobody.

You have given bonds to nobody, but if this passes you have not a perfect right to enact such legislation. Before you can adopt any such enactments you have to go to the United States and ask their leave. Otherwise you would be violating the conditions of the pact. But they say the pact was made for the very purpose of getting free access, and we do not wish to accede to your request. There is the difference; how is it to be settled? $600,000,000 of trade is involved, and the government say: There is enough for our time; we will tell the Conservation Commission that we are under a contract with the United States and that we cannot now carry out its recommendations. That is a sample of what is liable to happen in every department. The fish foods of this country are a most important article of our consumption now, and if conserved will be a most important article of our consumption for all generations. We therefore establish our close season, and prohibit export. We do that now with game and fish, and may have to extend that policy to other things. That is our national right if our national interests require it; but we can only do that fully and properly when we keep our full rights to legislate unimpaired.

Mr. FOSTER.

I venture, now, with some timidity and in all humility to approach this question from a national standpoint. I make no apology for doing it. The economic side of this question is important, but no good citizen will satisfy himself by keeping his mind fixed simply on the economic side, if he believes that there is in the thing itself a peril to the nation and his country. Unless you admit that, you deny that countries can exist, you deny that there is anything like patriotism, you deny the right of the people to keep up their own national home for themselves and make sacrifices for that object. If a foreign army threatened us on the border every Canadian would rise and take up arms to defend his country, but have we no duty, no service to perform in defending our country in times of peace? Battalions of armed men are not the greatest menace to the country. Oft times the peaceful warfare of trade and pact is more fatal than open arms. You cannot get away from the proposition that there comes a time in the examination of this subject, when you have to look at the national as well as the economic side. If it be for the better preservation and maintenance of your national ideas and your national life, well and good. But what is the American view? My hon. friend the Finance Minister appealed to history. I am also going to appeal to history. What has been the American view since the American republic came into existence with reference to this British North American country? At the first they tried to persuade this country by every art to rebel against the mother country and join in the revolution and become a part of the United States. They failed in that. They next sent their armed detachments to conquer us into submission and annex us forcibly. In that also they failed. Afterwards they took a long, tedious and annoying course of trade restrictions, prohibitions and harassment of our fishery grounds, the negation of our fishery rights, the assumption of privileges which they did not possess under the treaty, and for long years they worried and harassed us on these lines. For what purpose? For the avowed purpose of tiring us out and inducing us to throw in our destinies with them. Is there any doubt about that? But they found a people, sturdy, independent and strong, who did not urge unreasonable pretensions, but at the same time did not give away its well-known rights, and I make this assertion, that to-day the United States have a respect for us, a hundred times greater, than they would have had if, like poltroons, we had given way to their influence and menaces. Consequently there is absolutely the best of friendly feeling between us and our neighbours. It is of no use for hon. gentlemen opposite conjuring up the existence of some dangerous feeling between us and the United States, which it requires sacrifices on our part to assuage. There is nothing of the kind. The American people respect and admire us, and they do so for one thing. They respect and admire us because we have clung to our rights, our nationality and our own standards. Well, after this long course, Senator Sherman, speaking in 1888 in the United States Senate, pointed out to his countrymen a change of method. He said:

Now, Mr. President, taking a broader view of the question, I submit if the time has not come when the people of the United States and Canada should take a broader view of their relations to each other than has heretofore seemed practicable.

Since the conquest of Canada by Great Britain in 1763, she has been a continuous warning that we cannot be at peace with each other except by political as well as commercial union. Canada should have followed the fortunes of the colonies in the American revolution. The way to union with Canada is not by hostile legislation, not by acts of retaliation, but by friendly overtures. This union is one of events that must inevitably come in the future. The true policy of this government then is to tender freedom in trade and intercourse, and to make this tender in such a friendly way that it shall be an overture to the people of Canada to become a part of this nation.

That was the advice given by a far-seeing man, and a senator of the United States. Years go by, and in 1903 the Chamberlain idea was to the fore, and we find a representative New York paper, the 'Post,' in combating the Chamberlain idea, saying this:

Instead of any such mad course as retaliation, the path really open to us is one that will quietly, peaceably and forcibly defeat the whole project of discrimination against our goods. Canadian reciprocity is, in our judgment, the only road of safety and profit now open to us.

Mr. Blaine was at that time trying to make a treaty with Newfoundland.

The Boston 'Herald' says:

The underlying motive of Blaine's Newfoundland treaty was to draw the British colonies into the net of annexation.

And the Springfield 'Republican'. a very representative American paper said:

There need not be any hesitation in saying that the Newfoundland treaty should be regarded as a stepping-stone to a similar one with all Canada, and that the great end in view which should appeal to any American statesman with imagination and foresight is the ultimate peaceful combination of Canada's destiny with our own.

That is explict. But the objective is still there, just as strongly as it was in 1775, or in 1812, or in all the years since then. But here was a change of methods suggested. And now we come to President Taft's message to Congress. He carries out the very same idea:

They are coming to the parting of the ways.

Who? Canada. What ways? One the broad highway that we began to construct in 1867 running transversely across this continent with its east-and-west lines and ending, for our market, in the grand old mother country, the emporium of the markets of the world. And what is the other way? It is the way brushed out and trailed by Messrs. Paterson and Fielding, leading off this old and well-beaten highway down amongst unknown obscurities and hazards, but ending in the United States of America. These are the two ways; and we are at the parting of the ways, says President Taft, and something must be done.

They must soon decide whether they are to regard themselves as isolated permanently from our markets by a perpetual wall or whether we are to be commercial friends.

Is that a threat? If we are to think of a perpetual wall, who put up the wall?—42 per cent high on their side while our neighbourly wall was only 26 per cent; a wall that gave us a paltry $33,000,000 of free entry into the United States, while we gave $104,000,000 of free entry into Canada for the goods of that country. Is it a threat that, while we are looking nationwards, forces us to a path looking United States-ward? Does it mean?—Come down this path at the peril of isolation and commercial war between your country and ours.

Should we not now, therefore, before their policy is too crystallized and too fixed for change, meet them in a spirit of real concession, facilitate commerce between the two countries and thus increase the natural resources available to our people.

President Taft is, I believe, a very far-seeing man. He knew the history of these men—knew it well. He knew that in the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) he was dealing with a man who, not so many years ago, declared that the maritime provinces could not live and endure as part of this Canadian confederation; who headed a campaign in his own province to take Nova Scotia, and, if possible, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island along with Nova Scotia, out of this union. President Taft knew the Finance Minister's history and felt that there was reasonable ground for working upon a man with such a record. He knew that the Finance Minister, in 1891, pledged his party to, and fought tooth and nail for, commercial union with the United States as against closer trade relations with Great Britain; and he thought he had good hopes when working upon a man with such a history. And the Finance Minister had with him the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) behind whom was the towering figure of the old knight of Ontario, Sir Richard Cartwright, who had declared in the halls of Boston that Boston, New York and Portland ought to be the metropoli of the maritime provinces, that nature had so made it and the decrees of nature ought to be carried out; who declared that there was no market in the world which would compensate us for failure to acquire free access to the United States of America; and who, when asked the question: Would you go into a scheme like that and discriminate against the mother country? Answered promptly: Yes I would discriminate. And Mr. Taft had some very fair idea that he could work upon a government which had members such as these. Then he had the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). President Taft knows the right hon. gentleman's history from A to Z. It has been tortuous work following it, but President Taft is a very active minded man, and he has good men to help him. I have not the least doubt that there is not a political path that the right hon. gentleman has trod, in which he has turned and twisted, but President Taft has followed his course, either himself or through some of his advisers. And he knew well that the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stood in the market-place of Boston and declared that trade should not follow sentiment, that the time would come when Canada's interest would differ from the interest of the mother country, and when that time came he would look to Canada's interest; that the right hon. gentleman had declared that the interest of Canada lay with the United States rather than with Great Britain. President Taft knew all that. So, knowing the history of these men, knowing that they were guided by no principle save political opportunism President Taft thought that this thing should be clamped now before the 'policy became too crystallized' as it might very well be if these gentlemen happened to go out of office and another government came in. Can there be anything more clear than President Taft's opinion? He did not say: You have to come into this country, and this is the first step. But he said what was equivalent to it, absolutely equivalent to it; and it is in the lines I quoted.

But I not only take President Taft then, I take President Taft since. He is now stumping the United States in favour of reciprocity, and as he goes he grows a little more and a little more decided. At Columbus, Ohio, he declared:

> The greatest reason for adopting this agreement is the fact that it is going to unite two countries with kindred people and lying together across a wide continent, in a commercial and social union to the great advantage of both.

What says Mr. Hill, the railway magnate?

> I want to say to you that we cannot afford to let this opportunity pass. It is said that 'opportunity calls once at every man's door,' but that if you leave the door open it will come again. Let me say to you that the conditions in the British Empire are such that if we let it pass it will never come again. If we neglect the opportunity that is now manifesting itself, if that is refused, it is almost a certainty that imperial federation will follow, and if it does, where is your independence, where is your market?

What says Senator Beveridge? What says Governor Foss? What say the newspapers from one end of the country to the other? What is the allusion, what is the call to the United States for viewing this question, not simply from the low business standpoint, but from far-sighted reasons of statesmanship and National Policy? What does it mean? It means that the old objective is there, it means that the methods have changed, they propose to have the Trojan horse with its big gifts introduced into the fortress. Sir, 'I fear the Greeks when they are bearing gifts.'

I could go on quoting from one and another ; these are but samples of what I could quote, and therefore, are indicative of the general trend in the United States. All their methods of the past we have withstood and met, and we are on terms of absolute good friendship with the United States. I want to repeat what I said before, that to-day they have more respect for us in Canada, and more admiration for our enterprise and our work, than at any other period in the history of these two countries ; and we on this side have just as high an appreciation of them as they on their side have of us. There is absolutely to-day no cause of dissatisfaction or ill will between us and the United States. But it does not follow that, because you are friendly with your neighbour and are doing each other good turns, you should give him half or three-quarters of your house and install him in it. Neither does it follow that because we want to be on good terms with the United States we are to hand over the rich possessions we have hewn out and made for ourselves, and go into a dangerous partnership with them. Nor does it agree with our policy, our instincts and our ideals. It was the conquest of Canada aimed at in 1775 ; it was the conquest of Canada aimed at in the years around 1812, and since ; it was the conquest of Canada and its incorporation with the United States aimed at by the methods I have spoken of in respect to our trade and fisheries ; and the dominant spirit in the United States that is pushing reciprocity through to a successful enactment today is not economic, it is political. It is still the conquest of Canada. But it is conquest of Canada by peaceful means and large gifts, to bring about the time when, from the frozen north to the Mexican gulf, there shall be but one power predominant, and that the United States of America, and when British and European influence shall be banished forever from this North American continent.

This being the ideal of the United States let me in conclusion—and I know you will all breathe a sigh of relief, and myself as sincerely as my hon. friends opposite—let me say a few words on the national aspect of this question, and just now, by the national aspect, I mean the Canadian aspect. I yield to none in my devotion to the British flag and empire ; but it is not necessary, in order to view the national interest properly in connection with this subject, to go outside the bounds of Canada itself, our own country, our own nation within the empire. Patriotism is to the soul and conscience of a nation what religion is to the soul and conscience of the man. Religion soothes the soul, gives it peace, assures security, it strengthens the conscience, and rounds out the man for better and nobler work. Patriotism does the same for a country. It purifies the soul of a nation, it reinforces the conscience of the nation. And I tell you, Sir, that a nation has a soul and has a conscience ; and when the soul is not aflame with high purpose, and that conscience not reinforced and righteous, healthy patriotism cannot exist within it, and the nation is robbed of one of its strongest bulwarks. So I make no excuse in appealing to the patriotic feeling of Canada in a discussion of this subject, limiting it just for the present to our own Dominion of Canada. Fifty years ago we began pursuing the quest of reciprocity, at first a reality, later a phantom. In 1891, and in 1897 we abandoned the quest, the Liberal-Conservative party first, the Liberal party afterwards; and from 1891 and 1897 the quest was absolutely abandoned in this country from one end of it to the other. If we had abandoned the quest of reciprocity 25 years before we did, we would have been 25 years further advanced on the road of progress. Uncertain and doubtful, now hoping and now despairing, with a narrow horizon, capital and enterprise alike timid, what could we do in the way of nation building and in the way of settled endeavour and enterprise? No fixed purpose, no ideal, and a country that has no fixed political purpose and no fixed political ideal, has but a wobbling and uncertain gait, it cannot make progress.

Then, Sir, we suffered what seemed a stroke of adversity, but what, under God's Providence, was the best kick that Canada ever had administered, that was the abrogation of the treaty of 1854 in 1866. Then our ideal began slowly to evolve, then gradually a purpose was developed, then a policy was established of Canadian nationality within the empire. That was our ideal, Canadian resources for Canadian developments, Canadian and British capital for Canadian industry, Canadian workmen for Canadian production and Canadian routes for Canadian trade. That sums up the economic and political ideal of Canada as it gradually evolved itself from the doubt and uncertainty of 1866 and 1869, and first formulated itself and next found its place in the hearts and affections of the people. Then, Sir, new blood pulsed in our veins, new hopes fired our hearts, new horizons lifted and widened, new visions came to us in the night watches. We faced geography and distance and fought them to a standstill. We shamed the croaker and the pessimist and the coward into silence, and then recreated him into a good citizen at the glowing fires of optimism and of hope. The plains were belted with steel, the mountained tamed and tunnelled, our national arteries were well filled with the rich blood of commerce, our industries grew, our workmen multiplied, our villages became towns and our towns became cities with astonishing rapidity. Across the seas, we clasped hands with our sister nations within the empire, and surrounded with a cordon of love and defence the old empire that gave birth to us all.

And with all this we have made great material progress. Can any one doubt it? In all this struggle and toil, when was the hand of the United States extended to us with helpful aid? Not in one single case. This land is ours, we have made it, we and our fathers—please God we will keep it for our children and our children's children, to the remotest generation. We have not wrought so in order to bestow a great gift upon a rich nation, we have wrought to build ourselves a national home with a fireside and altars for ourselves and for those who come after us in this great far-flung country that God has given to us for our own.

This proposal cuts square across that national ideal, challenges it at every point, will endanger it undoubtedly, may destroy it entirely. Should we not think before we enter into it? Ninety-three millions to the south of us mean it in the way of absorption and hegemony and mean it in no other way, hence these gifts. This proposal cuts our country into sections and at every section bleeds the life blood from it. The well-filled arteries of interprovincial trade will be drained until the whole system grows aenemic and flabby. Do not treat it lightly. The sustained pressure of ninety-three millions to eight millions, the far-reaching effect of business affiliation, the close proximity and constant efflux and influx, the seductions of commercialism, the constant intercourse of business, social and official life, will inevitably weaken the ties of empire and wean the thoughts of our newer generations, if not of ourselves, towards the predominant power, and create new attachments, until like Samson we would arise and would shake ourselves and find that our strength is gone.

I utter the most solemn words I have ever uttered in my life, and I believe them to the very bottom of my heart, that there is danger, and deep danger ahead. This path entered upon leads us away from home to a strange country. I pray, Sir, that the full meaning of this first step may sink into the hearts of members of parliament and into the hearts of the people of this country until there shall burst forth a protest of such strength that the steps contemplated will be recalled to the old paths, leading east and west, in and out amongst our own people, converging on the great metropolis of the mother land, and which we may follow without uncertainty and without menace to our national existence.

PRIVATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the Guardian Accident and Guarantee Company.—Mr. Doherty.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

The House resumed in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt). Mr. Chairman, the remarks that I shall address to the House on the resolution before us for consideration will be as brief as I can make them consistent with what I conceive to be the very great importance of the question. The House listened with very great patience for some two hours and a half this afternoon, and for an hour or so last week to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) discanting, according to his viewpoint, on what he conceived to be the great disadvantages of Canada entering into reciprocal trade relations with the United States. It would appear to me, Sir, that the position taken by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on this question is possibly the most astounding ever taken by a public man in Canada since confederation, when a question of trade and commerce was before the people for their consideration. The whole history of this reciprocity question must be familiar to every member of this House. One of the strong points that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) endeavoured to make against this agreement was the fact that the government undertook to negotiate it, as he said, without a mandate from the people. Why, Sir, as far back as I can remember—and history tells me the question was a live one in the minds of Canadians long before that—the question of better trade relations with the great republic of the south occupied the attention of all our leading public men. We have only to turn to the history of bygone days, the days when Sir John A. Macdonald formed his administration in 1879, and propounded his famous National Policy, on which he was elected to lead the government of this country, to find that in the tariff provisions of that very policy there was incorporated a statutory enactment which provided for practically the same reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Canada as that announced to the House a few days ago by the Minister of Finance. It is not news to any member of this House, although it may be to some of our newer citizens, that the very government that established the National Policy, a policy of protection, incorporated in it a provision for reciprocal trade between Canada and the United States. Now, strange to say, that provision deals with practically the very same articles as are dealt with in the measure now submitted to us and for the benefit of those who may not be familiar with it I shall place on 'Hansard' a list of the articles dealt with in that section of the Tariff Act of 1879. The clause reads:

> Any or all of the following articles, that is to say: animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bran, seeds of all kinds, vegetables, including potatoes and other roots, plants, trees and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, peas and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat and all other grains, flour of wheat and flour of rye, Indian meal and oat meal and flour meal of any other grain, butter, tallow, meats, fresh salt or smoked, and lumber, may be imported into Canada free of duty or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada.

As I read this list I am borne out in the statement that it covers to a very large extent the list of articles that are placed on the free list in the proposed trade agreement now before parliament for its ratification. I might just mention en passant, what I am sure will be very good news to the people of this country who are interested in seeing this trade agreement rushed to a speedy conclusion, that word has come over the telegraph wire that the first step has been taken by the Congress of the United States towards ratification as the Bill has to-day passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. LENNOX. That was dead sure.

Mr. NEELY. That is the telegraphic report, and I assume it is reliable. Now, Sir, to show that better trade relations with the United States has been the traditional policy of both great political parties in this country since confederation, at least until 1897, I have only to quote from the manifesto issued by Sir John A. Macdonald to the electors prior to the general elections in 1891. Here is his statement of the position that he and his government took in reference to this question:

> We said to the Americans: We are perfectly willing to trade with you on equal terms; we are desirous of having a fair reciprocity treaty; but we will not consent to open our markets to you while yours remain closed to us.

That, Sir, was the position taken by Sir John A. Macdonald, in the year 1891, and we know, as a matter of fact, that following that election, his government sent representatives to Washington in order, if possible, to negotiate a reciprocity treaty. Their efforts were unsuccessful, for what reason, we at this time are not prepared to state. Suffice it to say that it would appear that from the time of the confederation of the provinces of Canada into a Dominion, the people of the United States had determined to follow a fiscal policy of their own, a policy of protection, and because of that fact, the various advances made by the delegates of different Canadian governments, were not favourably received by the government of the United States. The Liberal party were equally strong in their belief, that this country would prosper very much better if we had better trade relations with the United States, and, as a result of that conviction, when this government was elected in 1896, one of the first duties that it carried out was to endeavour to put into effect the promises they had made preceding the election to bring about better trade relations with the United States. I regret to say that the efforts of this government were apparently no more successful than the efforts of the government that had preceded them, and the leaders of state affairs in this country were compelled to take the position that in future we would have to look elsewhere for our market. Now, whether wittingly or not, the hon. member for North Toronto, laboured to leave the impression on this House, and to convey it to the country, that the Premier of Canada, and the government of the day, took the position, when their advances to Washington in 1897 were not favourably received, that henceforth there should be nothing done by way of improving conditions of trade between Canada and the United States; in other words, that Canada took the position—to my mind a most absurd and ridiculous position—that even if the United States made offers of reciprocity, they would not be listened to by the public men of this country. So far as I know, no such statement has ever been made by the leader of the government, or by any member of the government. I quite agree with the position taken by the public men of this country, that until the United States came to see for themselves the advisability of better trade relations with Canada, the necessity for some trade agreement, by which at least the natural products of each country might be interchanged for those of the other, the only position in dignity which the leader of this government could take was, that no more pilgrimages should be made to Washington. But my hon. friend from North Toronto, failed to notice the fact—indeed, he gave the opposite impression—that the present trade agreement is not the result of this government going on any pilgrimage to Washington, but is rather the result of the authorities at Washington coming on a pilgrimage to Ottawa. That is the essential feature of the present situation. In that respect Canada has been true to the position she took some years ago; and, therefore, the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto that this government had no mandate from the people of Canada to enter into these negotiations and to bring them to a successful issue, is the most absurd statement that has probably ever been made in this House or in this country by a public man with a knowledge of public affairs, such as has the hon. member for North Toronto. I would like to know if the government of a country have not always a mandate from the people of the country to provide them with better markets. It seems to me that is one of the essential duties of government, and no government would be carrying out its functions which did not make every effort at all times to improve our trade relations, not only with a country situated alongside of us, as the United States is, but with every country in the world with which Canada might profitably trade. We are not responsible, Sir, for the fact that Canada is geographically situated where she is. This government is not responsible for the fact that lying all along our southern border, there is a republic which possesses some ninety millions of people; and it does appear to me to be a most remarkable position for any public man to take; especially a public man of the experience of the hon. member for North Toronto, in dealing with great affairs of state, that it is not possible for Canada to trade profitably with the United States of America. This trade agreement, as I understand it, opens the United States market to the natural products of Canadian farms, Canadian forests, Canadian mines, Canadian fisheries and to all the resources of this great Dominion. It also provides a market for some of the manufactured products of the United States, notably some manufactured food products; and so, as a result of the agreement, Canada, with a population of some eight million people, is to have thrown open to its natural products, a market of some ninety million people, while, on the other hand, as a return for that privilege, the ninety million people are to have thrown open to them a market of some eight million people. It seems to me a remarkable position for any man to take, to say that we shall not profit by this arrangement. I do not say that Canada will profit more largely than the United States. We have not had the fullest opportunity to investigate this subject in its details, but it would certainly appear, from even a casual observation that the provisions of the agreement are provisions that must appeal to the people of Canada, and the United States, as being as fair as it is possible to have them in a trade arrangement of this kind.

In the three or four hours' speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) we heard a great deal about the necessity of conserving our resources. One of the great evils in this trade agreement, he argued, consists in the fact that in some way or other we are not going to conserve those resources; and ever since that subject has been mentioned, I have been puzzling my mind to find out what my hon. friend actually meant. I live in a farming community in the west, and I know that when a farmer harvests his crop and it is ready for the market, he is not content until he has taken it to market and exchanged it for money and turned that money to some good purpose. The same holds true of everything he raises. The object of all his exertions is to bring those products to the highest perfection and when they have reached that maturity to put them on the market as quickly as possible. He does not want to conserve his wheat in his granary, or to keep his live stock to a greater extent than is necessary. Just as soon as any of his products is ready for the market, his ambition is to get it to market as rapidly as possible. That surely holds true of the other natural resources of this country. I do not see of what use are our fisheries, if the fish in them are never caught. I do not see what good the gold or iron is down in the bowels of the earth, if you are going to leave it there. Our forests do not last forever, but trees have been known to grow on the ground where they have grown before. If we cut our timber and sell it to advantage, and if the proper care is taken by the provincial and federal authorities to regulate the cutting I do not see what danger there will be in our having a larger market open to us in the United States for the lumber taken from our woods. This conservation of our natural resources seems to be something that oppresses the brain of my hon. friend, so many times did he refer to it in the four hours' speech he delivered a few hours ago. I am just as much opposed to a wanton waste of our natural resources as any member of this House, but I fail to see how this argument for the conservation of these resources applies in any sense to this trade agreement with the United States. If there is one thing the people of Canada desire, it is freedom to sell their produce in whatever market will give them the largest prices. If there is anything which Canadian citizens consider their heritage, it is that privilege. But under the tariff conditions which have existed in the United States and this country for many years, the consumers of Canada have had neither the opportunity to buy nor the opportunity to sell where they listed. Our own tariff prevents them from buying where they list, and the tariff of the United States prevents them from using the same liberty in selling. This reciprocity agreement, however, will go a long way towards lightening the burdens complained of by the producer of this great country.

I listened with the greatest attention to the speech of the leader of the opposition the other day, and I was particularly anxious to hear what his remarks might be when he came to discuss the economic side of the agreement. But to my very great regret and disappointment, as I am sure it must have been to many other members on both sides, he passed by this feature of the situation—which to my mind is the essential feature, namely, its economic side—with the most casual remarks. He said that there were those who saw in this trade agreement some immediate future advantage. Well, we are thankful for at least that prospect. And I would like to know if this immediate future advantage is not just exactly what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had in mind when they went to Washington to negotiate this arrangement. This very immediate future advantage, to be continued as long as the pact will last between the two countries, is the strongest argument in its favour.

Possibly there are some people too optimistic, but on the other hand I am confident that those who are prophesying ruin to any industries as the result of this trade agreement, are guilty of excess in the opposite direction. There may be some who are too optimistic; but my own staunch conviction is that if this trade agreement be carried through it will open up a new era of prosperity in the history of both countries such as neither has ever experienced before. There is no value in having a fertile soil, there is no value in having the very richest iron ore or other minerals, there is no value in having our waters teeming with fish, if we have no markets for the products of our soil and mines and fisheries, after we have exploited them. The great drawback in the past to the development and prosperity of Canada was the difficulty of finding profitable markets. As a result of the British preference established by this government, we have found markets across the sea for much of our products. But is it any evidence of disloyalty on the part of a member of this government, a member of this House, or a citizen of this country, to say: We are doing a large business with the mother country, but if we look to the south we may obtain markets that are more easily accessible than the markets of the old world?

I wish to speak of some of the different items mentioned in this trade agreement, not dealing exhaustively with any individual item, to show wherein, as I believe, this trade agreement will be beneficial to the producers of Canada. We in the prairie provinces are more largely interested in the production of wheat than in the production of any other single article. Wheat is the great staple article of the western plains, and I believe will continue so to be for many years to come. We are told that many evils are going to befall our grain trade as a result of this reciprocity agreement should it go into effect. As to increase in price, we are told that there cannot be such a thing because the prices of our wheat are governed by the prices in Liverpool and other world markets. There is no doubt that, so far as the better grades of western wheat are concerned, Liverpool prices govern. But I am sure that any man who is familiar with farming in the west is aware of the fact that a great deal of the grain in the west, in certain seasons, does not classify in the grades that are listed for export. You may have a very fine sample of wheat, which, in milling quality, will be equal to No. 2 or even No. 1, yet there may be some falling off in shade or something of that kind which makes it impossible to place that wheat in any particular grade. As a result, we have what we call a rejected grade—wheat that is practically as good as that exported, but, because it is not listed in the classified grades, is not suitable for export. Wheat of these rejected grades is manufactured by the millers of western Canada, and of Ontario. Here has been one of the great sources of loss to the western grain producer. These rejected grades have not been exported to the United States because of the duty, and so the producer has been compelled to take for this wheat whatever price the western or the Ontario miller wishes to give. I conceive that, in this connection, there will be one very great advantage to the producer of wheat in western Canada; in fact that, as a result of this agreement coming into force, a sample market will be established in Winnipeg, and probably in other leading points in the west, and buyers will come from Minneapolis and St. Paul, and will buy this grain on sample, and the miller of western Canada and Ontario will be compelled to compete with the United States millers in the purchase of this product, and so the producer will get the actual value of his wheat. I am convinced that some of the strong objections taken by certain representative millers of this country against the trade agreement are probably founded on this very situation in the grain trade.

I am told by those who ought to know that, so far as the cattle trade of Alberta is concerned, this trade agreement is going to be of the very greatest possible value. As we know, the agriculturists of Alberta who have an organization known as the United Farmers of Alberta, have been urging upon the government the necessity of establishing some system of cold storage in the province for the benefit of the meat trade. I have here a copy of the Grain Growers' Guide,' the official organ of the Grain Growers' Association of western Canada, and in this journal appears an interview with Mr. James Bower, president of the United Farmers of Alberta, on the question of the effect of this reciprocity agreement on the cattle trade of Alberta. Mr. Bower says:

> The placing of cattle on the free list will revolutionize the trade in our province. If we could get cattle free into the Chicago market we will be more than satisfied with the result of the negotiations. It will practically mean a solution of the rate question in Canada, for it will force down the freight rates which now exist and which we have been endeavouring to reduce for so many years.

Two features are there spoken of. One is the better price the stock raiser is going to get for his cattle from the Chicago market, and the second is the beneficial effect upon freight rates that the President of the United Farmers of Alberta sees in this reciprocity agreement. Our Canadian railways will be brought more or less into competition with the railroads of the United States and will be compelled to govern themselves accordingly in regard to freight rates.

Now, these are two of the staple and important items of the western prairies that are dealt with in this agreement. I might speak also of oats and barley. As hon. members know, oats are very largely produced on our western plains. Barley is not produced to any extent for the simple reason that the price in Canada does not warrant the farmer in growing barley. I am told that to-day barley sells in Toronto at 60 cents a bushel while across the line in Buffalo it sells at 90 cents, the difference being practically the duty into the United States. We have not the extensive requirement in this country for barley that they have across the line. They need our barley, and, with this duty off, the farmers of Ontario as well as the farmers of the west will be able to go into barley growing and will make very considerable profits from this feature of their farming operations.

I am willing to discuss this matter in this practical way with any one who will discuss it with me. Take these items all down the list such as flax, potatoes, hay, dairy products and so on, and I think we shall find that putting these things on the free list of the United States will be a great benefit to the farming class of this great country. And I quite agree with the statement made by my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) when in speaking on another subject, he took the position that the agricultural classes are, after all, the foundation of our prosperity, because Canada is primarily, an agricultural country.

We are told that certain features of this agreement will work great harm to certain other interests in this country, interests that, I am sure, we are all anxious should not be injured.

In the first place, I will remark that so far as the reduction of the duties on manufactured products is concerned, particularly agricultural implements, if I were to voice my own personal views, I would have been glad to see a somewhat greater reduction in the duty than is proposed in this trade arrangement. But I have this also to say, that the farmers of Canada are reasonable men, they do not expect revolutions in a day, and I am sure they will be satisfied with the fact that they are being provided with free markets for their produce; and while the reduction on agricultural implements is not as great as probably many of the western grain growers have expected, yet they are sufficiently material to afford satisfaction to those who do not hold too radical views on this point. I should not be at all surprised, in view of the remarks that were addressed to this House some days ago by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), and which were spoken of in complimentary terms by the leader of the opposition in discussing this trade agreement a day or two ago, I say I should not be surprised if the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, and those who support him in the resolution he brought before the House the other day, and that still stands on the Order paper, do not express some dissent at the small reduction that has been made on farm implements. Well, Sir, this great Conservative party has always been a conundrum to me, in so far as its trade policy is concerned. We know that in the eastern provinces, where the manufacturing interests are strongest, the policy of protection is the only thing that is ever breathed by the apostles of the Conservative party. But when we get west of Lake Superior, where we find a different sentiment among the grain growers, the Conservative newspapers and the Conservative public men, are very generally in favour of a low tariff. The Winnipeg 'Telegram,' the leading Conservative organ west of Lake Superior, has been giving lectures for some twelve months back on the necessity of the government listening to the complaints of the farmers, and reducing the duty on agricultural implements. Now, I am glad to see this change of heart on the part of at least a small section of our friends opposite, and the only thing I regret is, that the conversion is not thorough and complete enough. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie must be an admirable political chef when he is able to serve up sufficiently savoury proposals to the electorate of his constituency, to secure their consent to represent them in this House. But, Sir, there is in this dish that he furnished to this House, some days ago, a seasoning that I do not think will be at all palatable to the electorate of Portage la Prairie, or indeed to the electors of any other constituency west of Lake Superior. In that resolution which calls for a substantial reduction of the tariff on agricultural implements, my hon. friend asks the government to admit that a ten per cent reduction will be in just accord with the principle of a protective tariff. Now if my hon. friend can explain to the people of western Canada that a reduction on agricultural implements, or anything else, is in just accord with a protective tariff, he will perform a feat of mental gymnastics that is beyond my comprehension.

Why did my hon. friend select this particular item of agricultural implements? Is it not true that practically everything the farmer wears or uses in his family, their shoes, their clothing, their furniture, their kitchen utensils, are all subject to taxation, if they are imported from foreign countries, and by a taxation I mean a protective tariff. Yet my hon. friend is very careful to single out agricultural implements, he goes even farther than that, and he narrows his view to mowers and binders. Why does he do that ? I wonder if my hon. friend possessed the information I possess, when he brought that motion before the House, that there is a certain plough manufacturer in the province of Ontario who, for the last few years has been shipping his manufactured product to certain points in the United States for sale among his American customers. Yet my hon. friend has nothing to say about ploughs. I would like to say to my hon. friend, that while I admire the distance he has gone on this question I regret that he did not see his way clear to go much farther ; I regret that he has to take his steps forward in such a halting and limping manner. The people of the west are not to be deceived on this question. They are not protectionists. My hon. friend cannot make protection acceptable to them in any way, shape or form in which he presents it to them. While, as I said, he must have some abilities as a political chef, because the dish he served to his constituents when he appealed to them for support in the election of 1908 was evidently acceptable to them, I very much fear that the proposition he places before them in this resolution will not meet with hearty support.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, and though a discussion of the subject referred to in the resolution on the Order Paper by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, on a cognate subject is clearly in order, I do not think he need direct the attention of the House to the resolution itself.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I have no wish at all to depart from the subject before us. I am dealing with one particular item of the agreement which refers to the reduction of the duties on farm implements, and I was simply saying that I should suppose my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie would be hardly satisfied with the small reduction that is being made along those lines. Now, Sir, there is a story in the good old Book about a certain younger son who sought to obtain his blind father's blessing by disguising himself so that he resembled his elder brother. But the old blind patriarch was not altogether deceived, for he said, as the son attempted to obtain his blessing: The hands are the hands of Esau but the voice is the voice of Jacob. The position taken by a great many of our western friends reminds me very much of that story from ancient Bible history. They go to the people seeking to obtain their blessing by offering to them a greater tariff reduction on farm implements, but alas, Sir, the voice is the voice of Jacob because they are protectionists and they cannot get away from it. While I am quite agreed that, in reference to the features of this argument as bearing on manufactured articles, probably many of our western farmers will not be wholly content nevertheless it is an old adage and a true one that half a loaf is very much better than no bread.

We have heard a great deal from the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to the great damage that this agreement is going to do to the transportation systems of this country running east and west. I am sure that our sympathies go out very strongly to the transportation systems of this country, especially to the Canadian Pacific railway, because it is such a weak, delicate institution that it is entitled to a lot of sympathy. But there are those people in this country, who they are I do not know, who appeal to the public in a very striking way sometimes, and one of these appeals we find distributed very assiduously through the country, published and printed in the Montreal 'Star', of Saturday, February 4, and copied into many other papers of this country. It is published on the front page of the 'Star.' I am quite sure, as some of my hon. friends suggest, that it is a paid advertisement, nothing more or less. I would like to know who are the parties interested in publishing such an hysterical appeal to the people of Canada, as this appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the one man who can save Canada. There is, as some of my friends suggest, a very important admission in that. We on this side of the House are quite agreed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the one man who can save Canada. Our hon. friends admit it, they are talking all the time about the great strides forward in Canada's progress in the last few years. What has done it? Surely it has not been the carrying into effect of any policy which they bequeathed to this government, for in the declining years of the late administration it is a well known fact that our trade and commerce was falling off as rapidly as it possibly could, and yet, ever since the advent of this administration, Canada's trade has been increasing by leaps and bounds. We find transportation systems extending east and west all over the country where formerly they did not exist. We find our prairies populated by many who to-day are fairly prosperous people, not all of them perhaps, but many of them. To whom, Sir, shall we give the credit? Our hon. friends say: Give it to Providence. Well, Providence does not build railways, Providence does not conduct an immigration policy, at least not the kind that gets the people from some other country to ours. These are matters to be dealt with by a progressive administration, and in passing I want to give credit to this government, the credit which to them is due for having instigated an immigration policy on their advent to power that is quite as progressive, as, if not more progressive than that adopted by any other country under similar conditions in the history of the world. We are getting the people almost as rapidly as we can assimilate them. In this connection let me say that I believe farming in the west will become so much more advantageous to the farmer, so much more profitable, that in the next four or five years we will see such an influx of immigration from the United States of America that not only will our Canadian railways running east and west have all the business they can handle, but they will be compelled to have the assistance of the Jim Hill roads to the south to carry some of the surplus products in that direction. We hear talk going around that if this thing goes through we will not need to deepen the Welland canal or to build the Georgian bay canal, and that the Hudson Bay railroad will be money absolutely wasted. If my faith in the results of this agreement is anywhere near the mark, not only will we need the Hudson Bay railway and the deepening of the Welland canal and the building of the Georgian Bay canal, but it will not be many years before we will need another transcontinental railway running from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I might mention in passing, one very remarkable thing about these prophecies of despair that we find in this appeal that has been sent broadcast throughout this country : that while on the front page of the 'Star' there is pictured for our consideration the blue ruin that will result to the transportation system of Canada if this trade agreement goes through, on the back of the very same sheet at the head of the stock department in large bold type you will find the querry: Will the Canadian Pacific railway go to $300? That would not appear to indicate any very serious loss of faith in the transportation systems of the country on the part of the financial interests who are behind these transportation companies, when even after this trade agreement has been announced, after it is fully expected it will pass this House and the legislative bodies of the United States, these financial interests are still willing to stand behind these transportation schemes. If there is one thing in connection with our transportation companies in which this agreement will work more beneficially to the people of Canada it will be to my mind in the competition that will be brought about with the railways of the United States and in the consequent reduction of the rates for which the people throughout Canada are clamouring.

I am sure that my hon. friend from South York will cheerily hail with acclaim this reciprocity agreement, being convinced, as everybody must be convinced, that it will tend very largely to lower freight rates in western Canada and bring about that condition that he has pleaded so often for on the floor of this parliament. Sir, this reciprocity agreement will not change the transportation routes of this country from east to west to north and south, but it will multiply the routes by which the products of Canada will be carried east and west and north and south to the markets of the world. The feature of the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Foster) that most pleased me was the modesty he showed in waving the old flag. I expected that the hon. gentleman would have given us quite an exhibition in this line because we all know of his ability in that direction, and I was more or less disappointed that he refrained. He did, however, refer to the possible danger to imperial connection if this trade arrangement went through, but that question I shall not discuss at any length because on the face of it it is so entirely absurd that it seems to me the intelligent citizens of Canada will take no stock in it. It does not appear that the people across the water are worrying about it, and I have here a short quotation from the London ' Spectator,' one of the leading Unionist weeklies of Great Britain which says :

> We do not wonder that the agreement has been received in a noticeably lukewarm spirit by tariff reformers in Great Britain. Great Britain obviously cannot give a preference to Canadian corn if the American and Canadian markets are thrown into one. We should, of course, have no regrets on this subject ourselves, for we believe that the best policy for Canada is to trade where trade is easiest. Only about three and a-half per cent of British exports go to Canada. It is only those who accept the fallacy that trade is dependent on political relations who urge the policy of linking up the empire by artificial bonds. Our great trade with Germany proves that commerce is independent of political intimacy. If Canada gradually approaches something like free trade with the United States all round, so much the better.

When such a view is held across the water, I do not think that we in Canada need worry much. My hon. friend from North Toronto has found great fault with this agreement because, as he says, it interferes with the British preference, and he expressed his amazement that this government dared to carry through the negotiations without a mandate from the people. Well, Sir, it has always been a matter of very great surprise to me that the hon.

member (Mr. Foster) could ever muster courage to discuss on the floor of this House any injury to the British preference because it is a matter of record that the hon. gentleman has always been opposed to Canada giving a preference to British manufactured goods. In 1892 when the hon. gentleman and his friends occupied the treasury benches, one of their supporters brought in a resolution to the effect that Canada should give a preference to Great Britain if Great Britain would undertake to change her whole fiscal policy and give a preference to the products of Canada in the British market. That was the kind of preference that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) advocated when he was in power, and the Liberals then in opposition moved an amendment which introduced the principle of the British preference such as we have it to-day. Why, Sir, for many years in this country the Conservative party claimed a monopoly of the flag and all the flag waving there was to be done, and tried to make believe on every possible public occasion that they possessed all the loyalty that was possessed by all the political parties in this country, yet when it came to the practical question of establishing a preference for British manufactured goods coming into Canada, these loyal gentlemen took a position of absolute opposition to it unless Great Britain would agree to give in return a preference in her markets for the products of Canada. I say to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster)—and I am sorry he is not in his place that I might say it to him directly —I say to him that the people of this country have fairly good memories, and it would appear to me to be first-class politics if nothing else, if the hon. member for North Toronto said just as little about the British preference as he can possibly get along with. As was truly said by the Minister of Finance the other day, the people of Canada feel that the British preference is perfectly safe in the hands of the men who created it. I have expressed some sentiments which possibly the manufacturing industries in this country are not very much in accord with, and I think I would not be doing justice to myself or to the people I represent, if I did not say a word or two to the manufacturers of Canada. That deputation which came from the west some time ago to place their views before the government on trade questions did not come here for the purpose of injuring the manufacturers of the east. We realize that in a young country like Canada when these industries are first established probably it is necessary that the state should throw around them to some extent the arm of protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. NEELY. But we have come to the conclusion that that privilege has been exercised to altogether too large an extent, and I would advise my hon. friends opposite not to say 'oh, oh,' until I get through. The farmers of the west have come to the conclusion that their burdens have been too heavy, that the protection has been too great, and that while the Canadian tariff may not be as high as the United States tariff or possibly the tariff of some other countries, all the same our manufacturers have flourished under that tariff, and the farmers think the day has come when there ought to be still greater reduction in the customs duties on manufactured articles. I am free to say that I heartily agree with those views in every particular. I do not think that any man in this House can argue for one moment that the ideal condition of trade is not freedom of trade—freedom to buy and freedom to sell wherever we list. But we have had our difficulties in the past in establishing manufacturing industries in this country. Those difficulties have been largely overcome, and it would appear to me that the manufacturers of eastern Canada might very well concede that the requests of the western Canadian farmers were not by any means premature ; and, while the reductions on these manufactured articles are not as great as we might hope to see, yet we are glad that the government took those views into consideration, and made substantial reductions on many important lines of agricultural implements.

Now, Sir, I have just one word more to say on this question : So far as I have been able to ascertain the sentiment of the people of western Canada since the announcement of this trade agreement was made, has been one of entire approval of the agreement. We are an optimistic people in western Canada. There may be those in eastern Canada who conceive that their interests have been injured by this agreement; and I am free to say that the large deputation that visited this chamber some days ago for the purpose of interviewing the government with respect to the apprehended injury which it would bring to the fruit-growing industry of Canada, had a large measure of my sympathy. But I cannot see for the life of me wherein the contention of that deputation can possibly be true when they come to prove the agreement after it is put into effect. If our soil and climate are adapted to fruit growing, I cannot see why the Canadian fruit-grower cannot compete with the fruit-growers of any other country. So far as the home markets are concerned, they have the benefit of a less cost for transportation. If there be anything in the argument that fruit is grown cheaper in the southern states because of the cheapness of coloured labour, that surely is made up for by the lesser cost of transportation from our orchards to our home markets; and I am satisfied that the opinion expressed by many fruit-growers in the Niagara peninsula and in other fruit districts of Ontario, that the best thing that has ever happened to our fruit industry has been the placing of fruit on the free list, will eventually prove to be a true prophecy.

There was one other point in the argument advanced by the hon. member for North Toronto which I think is worthy of a moment's consideration. He said that if this agreement went through, it would tend to discourage the investment of foreign capital in Canadian enterprise and Canadian securities. Well, Sir, I wonder what is the consideration that attracts the British or other capitalist when he comes to invest his money. Is it a question of what flag the country flies, or is it a question of what interest he can get on his money? I think that is the answer to the hon. gentleman's argument. To my mind, instead of capital being frightened away from investment in Canadian industries and Canadian securities as a result of this agreement, there will be such rapid development and prosperity in this country that we shall find an ever-increasing stream of population coming from other countries, bringing with it more and more capital for investment in this country and for the development of our national enterprises.

Sir, I have only to say in conclusion that while conscious of my inability to do justice to the many important features of this agreement, I believe that, if it is ratified by this parliament and by the Congress of the United States, as we have every reason to believe it will be, it will prove to be a measure of the greatest possible relief to the producers and the consumers of both these great countries; and the public man who undertakes to stand in the way of an arrangement which opens up the markets to the south of us for the product of our Canadian farms, so that the tillers of the soil in this country will get the opportunity for which they have been longing for years, will assume a most serious responsibility, and one for which sooner or later he will have to give an account at the bar of public opinion.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Chairman, no member of this parliament, either on this side of the House or the other, will venture to express a deliberate opinion on the question now before the House without feeling the heavy responsibility resting on him as a representative of the Canadian people. It is no idle statement to say that these proposals are more revolutionary in character than any put forward by the responsible government of Canada since 1878. They are proposals so radical and so far-reaching as to profoundly disturb the present economic conditions of the country—proposals, which, if carried into effect, will lead us into entirely new paths; which will undoubtedly deeply affect, not only the economic, but the political future of the country, and which, if consummated, will take us no man knows whither. When submitting the proposition to the House the Minister of Finance, in a carefully worded introduction, endeavoured to prove that reciprocity with the United States was the historic policy of the country, long and continually advocated by both political parties. The argument was based on a half-truth, and in many respects was entirely misleading. It is true that in 1878 the government, while inaugurating a new policy for the nation, had some measure of reciprocity still in mind as a desirable aim. But as year after year passed, each witnessing the constructive and successful efforts of the people in their determination to make this a self-sustaining country the desire for closer commercial union with the United States weakened, its necessity vanished. Even the Minister of Finance hardly cared to intimate that the Conservative party was associated with the doctrine later than 1891, and we know what one of the ablest and sanest Liberals of the day thought of these matters at that time. I refer, of course to the Hon. Mr. Blake. But, Sir, since 1891 there have been vast developments and changes in this country along all lines of industrial and national life. There has been no lessening of the desire to live on friendly and self-respecting terms with the people to the south, but there has unquestionably been a strengthening and hardening of the conviction that Canada is amply able to stand alone, that she is able and willing to work out her own salvation, economic and otherwise. In that unalterable conviction she has built up, especially during the past 20 years, a commercial and industrial structure which is the pride of every Canadian to-day. And in no respect is that pride more justified than in the reflection that our industrial life is of that varied character that it ministers to the needs and promotes the happiness of all classes of the nation and especially that it has crowned the efforts of statesmen dead and gone by binding far east and far west by bonds not only of kinship but of mutually successful national commerce.

No one has borne more frequent testimony to this than the supporters of the present government. In season and out of season, the constant refrain of government speakers at every election has been, what? Nothing but the marvellous prosperity of the country, the soundness of her fiscal policy—the unwisdom of ousting a government which was standing by all the principles which had made this prosperity possible. If these things are true, if the triumphant shoutings of this government for the past 10 years are to be taken seriously how can they ask us to jeopardise everything which they have acclaimed as good, by a change so fundamental as the one they are now asking the House to endorse?

I say the House, because the government, as is their custom, are not pretending to consult the country. Theoretically we are enjoying representative government. In actual practice this is government by a small handful of men who use their power to absolutely change the whole fiscal system of Canada without the smallest reference to the people who placed them in power. The minister speaks of ratification by this parliament as if the act of ratification were an act of the people. No one knows better than he that such is not the case in this and other instances. By our system the government stands or falls by the result of the vote in parliament and not a man in this House but knows full well that under such conditions, whatever may be the private opinions of the individual members, the party will save the government. In what measure, to what degree have the people themselves been consulted on this far-reaching and revolutionary programme? Not a man on this side of the House or the other, not a business interest in the country had the faintest idea of the sweeping character of the proposed changes. Vague talk of reciprocity there may have been, but so vague that the country could only discuss it in equally vague terms. Even the minister himself couldn't recall what protests or suggestions had been made. Sir, there is something inherently and radically wrong in the working out of our constitution theories when it is possible for a small group of men to bind the country hand and foot to so gigantic a proposition as this without the opportunity to anybody of saying yea or nay or of offering a single word of protest or advice on a question of such transcendent importance to the whole of the Canadian people. The Minister of Finance expressed a pious hope that we would all be satisfied with the results of his work and that of his colleague, the Minister of Customs. Let me quote his words page 2495 'Hansard':

> I am persuaded, and my colleagues are persuaded, that those who have formed a hasty judgment against reciprocity and against the reciprocity negotiations have not spoken over their own deliberate judgment, and now that the time has come when we are able to disclose the results of our negotiations, we are most hopeful that not only the negotiations themselves will be approved but that the results of these negotiations will be approved not only by the country at large but by a great number of gentlemen who have hitherto taken up a different position.

But how could we form hasty judgments, or any judgment when we were in complete darkness as to the essential facts? By virtue of what right, in the name of what political principle can a government calmly deal a smashing blow at a great national industry, such for instance as that of Canadian horticulture, without giving that industry a chance to speak a word? Mr. Speaker, instead of a pious hope that we should approve their efforts it would have been infinitely fairer and more honest to have in some measure consulted those whom they were about to injure, and to have given them that full measure of consideration which any large section of the Canadian people are entitled to, from the government who, after all, are the sworn servants and not the masters of those whose affairs they are trustees for. It may be retorted that parliament, at any time, as the minister says, is absolutely free to change the arrangement if on reasonable trial it is found to be unfavourable. But all men know the friction, the difficulties, of hasty readjustments, and alterations of matters which have been placed definitely on a new basis, and, although I should have been bitterly opposed to these measures if they had been made binding for a long term of years, conceiving, I think rightly, that the injustice involved would have been still more glaring, yet there is also a grave and peculiar danger arising from the very want of permanence in the whole arrangement. It is a policy eminently calculated to create a divided Canada instead of making for the greater growth of unity. It will bring not peace, but a sword. What will happen after a year's trial? It is not unreasonable to believe that some alteration will be urged by certain powerful interests in the United States. Such alterations may also be in the interest of some one section of the Canadian people. The powerful forces exerted by self interest on that side of the line, reinforced by sectional interests on this, will make the appeal irresistible. For years we have struggled, not without some measure of success, to make a united Canada. It is the frequent boast of the Prime Minister that this lofty ideal was the cherished object of his public life. No policy could be devised so likely to frustrate that ideal. East and west, and central Canada, gradually drawn together by increasing ties of sentiment and commerce, will find those ties rudely sundered; sundered not only by self interest, but by the wedge driven in by great vested interests entrenched in power on the other side of the international line. It is small wonder that daily throughout Canada her citizens are voicing their protests against the policy to which this government has pledged itself.

There is another great aspect of this question besides the purely Canadian one to which I have not referred, and which to thoughtful people presents great dangers and gives cause for much anxiety. I allude to the diversion of trade from that great country which is the mother of our free institutions and the source and inspiration of much that is best in our national life. With Great Britain and with other British dominions across the seas it is the earnest wish of the Canadian people to form closer ties, commercial and other. It may be true that Britain has been slow to take what some may conceive to have been the necessary steps, it may be true that Australia has regrettably delayed in her efforts to foster closer commercial ties with this country; but at least this government may well have waited to discuss these high matters at the imperial conference next May. The Prime Minister knew well that such matters would be discussed; knew that it was the earnest desire of all the dominions to strengthen the bonds commercial and national between our scattered peoples. Why could he not, in fairness, wait before plunging the country into a step which makes, not for unity, but for disintegration in the empire. We were doing well enough —the hour had struck for the republic to the south to move in new directions—it had not struck for us. This, too, will be counted heavily against the men who to-day are assuming to guide us into paths when the instructions for so guiding us have not been given to them. Government speakers deride the suggestion that there is any national danger in the drift and final tendency of this new policy. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in a speech which was characterised by time-worn platitudes and many extraordinary omissions, closed by regretting that there was any opposition to this proposal. He added: 'I regret it for the sake of hon. gentlemen opposite.' Sir, is the minister fatuous enough, misguided enough, to dream that British Columbia members can fall down and worship the golden calf he has set up?

Mining is one of our foremost interests, and the particular section of that enormous industry which might have been helped by free, or easier entry of its ores into the United States is the zinc industry. Did the minister lift a hand to help it in this way? Not he. This is something for the Minister of Mines (Mr. Templeman) to explain to the people of his province. Did the Minister of Customs, after dealing a knock-out blow to the fruit industry of British Columbia expect us not to oppose this measure? Sir, all through his speech there was not a single word which even acknowledged the existence of the fruit industry. Whether he was ashamed to touch it, or afraid to, I cannot say. And then, Sir, the Minister of Customs closes by saying:

> Well, I am sorry to say they appear unwilling to join in this last patriotic movement for the benefit of the people of this country.

We do not join because we do not believe that it makes for the permanent benefit of this country. We do not join because we believe it is not patriotic, that in the last analysis it will be found to undermine and destroy Canadian and imperial patriotism. Thoughtful men on both sides of the water are to-day feeling this. Prominent statesmen in Great Britain have voiced their fears. And, Sir, what did this government immediately do? The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) sent a cablegram to Lord Strathcona, and conveyed the impression that Canada was, or ought to be, a unit in the matter. His precise words were:

> It is evident that some British journalists and public men have received erroneous impressions concerning the reciprocity agreement. Reciprocal trade relations with the United States have been the policy of all parties in Canada for generations.

Sir, I may not very well understand political ethics, but this is a strange message to place before the people of Great Britain. If the end justifies the means, if all is fair in political war, there is nothing to say. But there are many people in Canada who will condemn so singular a use of official power as this. The policy of all parties in Canada for generations!—I need not labour this point. In the powerful speech which has been delivered by the member for North Toronto he has dealt with this whole matter in a way which will make a tremendous appeal to the thinking men of this country. So far from the Conservative party being tied up to this policy we have long cut loose from it. The trend of events in Canada for the past score of years has been in other directions. Years ago Mr. James G. Blaine said 'We will give you reciprocity if you will discriminate against Great Britain in our favour.' We know that when that famous proposition of commercial union was made by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1891, he was unable even to retain within his party Mr. Blake who saw then, as he would see now, whither such a step would lead. Let me give the Prime Minister a few extracts from Mr. Blake's letters which are singularly applicable to the present hour. Speaking of commercial union he said:

> No manufacturer, looking to the continental market, would fix or even enlarge his capital or business in the country of five millions at the risk of being cut off from the country of sixty-five millions. Our neighbours, instead of engaging in manufactures here, would take our markets with goods manufactured there. And our raw material, instead of being finished on the ground, would be exported to be finished abroad. Uncertainty would alarm capital and paralyze enterprise.

Could there be any statements more absolutely apropos to the present proposals before the House? But Mr. Blake went further, and sounded a note of alarm which the people of this country should heed at the present hour:

Assuming that absolute free trade with the States thus described as commercial union, may and ought to come, I believe that it can and should come only as an incident, or at any rate, as a well understood precursor of political union, for which indeed we should be able to make better terms before than after the surrender of our commercial independence.

Now those were the words of a man whose intellectual force carried enormous weight in this country, and he would have nothing of such a proposition. The proposals now before the House are leading in the same fatal direction as they led in 1891. The advocates of reciprocity on the other side of the line are speaking of annexation as a logical result. Let me point out what President Taft said the other day in speaking to the Illinois legislature:

It will give to the United States much greater control of the wheat market than it ever had before. It will enable its milling plants to turn Canadian wheat into flour and send abroad its finished product, and it will stimulate the sale of manufactures and other things that we have to sell to Canada.

Chairman McCall, of the Ways and Means Committee, in his report, says significantly:

And the benefit to us would be enormous if we could sweep away all tariffs between the two countries, it would have the effect upon our trade of another Louisiana purchase.

And still more significant is the closing paragraph of his report:

The Bill takes a long step towards establishing for the continent of North America a policy of unrestricted trade and commerec.

If that is not commercial union, what is the meaning of the English language? Now there are other proofs of the certainty with which we are drifting along this road. Senator Beveridge, one of the ardent and able expounders of reciprocity, said the other day:

There must be reciprocity with Canada. Our tariff with the rest of the world does not apply to our northern neighbour. That policy already has driven American manufacturers to cross the Canadian borders, build vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workingmen to supply trade. That capital should be kept at home to employ American workingmen to supply Canadian demands.

Now Sir George W. Ross, a good friend of this government, and one of our foremost public men, said last November:

The United States now supplies us with $80,000,000 annually of manufactured goods. Even that is too much, but to increase it, as Senator Beveridge proposes, would be treason to Canadian industries, the very thought of which makes one shrink from the consequences.

And speaking further of this design of the United States, and of the design in 1866 which was to compel us into annexation, Sir George Ross said:

Coercion having failed, annexation through commercial privileges is now announced.

And Mr. W. R. Hearst says:

Let us have commercial union first, and political union afterwards.

Now surely no man can avoid seeing where the Canadian people are drifting in this matter. Canada is literally to be the hewer of wood, the drawer of water, the purveyor of food to the powerful nation which aims by such an arrangement to be the great workshop of the continent. The Prime Minister, willing to go one step, will soon be willing, or be forced, to take the other. Great as is his facility for swallowing his own words, he can hardly forget the passion with which, on the platforms of this country in 1896, he vowed that he would not be satisfied until he had wiped out every vestige of protection. Sir, it is in vain that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) thunders forth about the patriotism and the benefits of this measure. In the long run it will be neither patriotic nor beneficial, but subversive of both.

Now it was not my intention so much to indicate the national dangers in connection with these proposals, as to point out to the House and the country, one dark blot in particular on the pages of this agreement, and to protest in the most vigorous manner possible against a grievous wrong that is being done to a great national industry, the fruit industry of Canada. What has been the animating principle governing my hon. friends the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance in making their arrangements with the negotiators at Washington? Certainly the desire, the oft confessed and repeated desire, on their part to find for the producer of Canada a freer and a wider market. I noticed that when the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) was speaking just now, he practically agreed to the soundness of this argument. I took down his words: 'The agricultural classes are the foundation of this country'. Well, we can all agree to that, and I presume he will include the fruit growers of this country as forming part of the agriculturists. He touched on the very small reduction in the duty on agricultural implements, but he thought it was helpful, and added: 'The farmers are reasonable people, they do not expect a revolution', that is, they do not expect to sweep away protective duties. 'They are satisfied for the present to get free markets for their products'. That was his argument, and it was the argument that had all along been put forward by the government. Let me remark to my hon. friend that although he did not believe in the revolutionary process of sweeping away the duties on agricultural implements, the government is now proposing to sweep away the duties on the fruit industry, and my hon. friend does not object. Now this is the plain and open defence put up by the government, the producer and not the consumer of Canada is primarily considered by the government. If I wanted to prove my point, I need only to allude to the remarks of the Minister of Finance on the coal industry. He has made in these proposals an insignificant cut of eight cents a ton, certainly no help to the consumer, yet so anxious is he that the producer of his own province shall not be hurt that he says: 'I hope, as one who has warm sympathy for the coal trade, that they will be able to stand it'. Turn to his remarks about the trifling reduction of duties on agricultural implements, a reduction so small as to little affect either consumer or producer. I quote the whole passage and ask the House to note the extraordinary significance of the words and their logical application to the case of the fruit-growing industry of Canada:

With regard to agricultural implements, the House need not be reminded of the strong desire on the part of our western farmers to have better terms on these articles. They would be glad to have them free of duty, but anxious as I am to meet their views I must frankly say to them that we do not think that is fair. Like all others they must be prepared to give and take, they must be prepared to bear their share in the burdens of the country, and I believe that when the matter is fairly put to the farmers, they will recognize that principle. We do not propose to make agricultural implements free but to make some reductions, and we trust that, while these may not be all the farmers want, they will be evidence of the desire of the government to meet their views as far as possible without doing any injustice to the industries of Canada.

Without doing any injustice to the industries of Canada? Mr. Chairman, in wiping off every vestige of protection which the Canadian producer of fruit has hitherto been afforded, the minister has violated the very principles laid down by himself. He has singled out one large class of producers, and one only, and has dealt that great industry a blow, the effect of which, will be a shrinkage in value of all the great orchard areas of Canada and especially of Ontario and British Columbia, and the discouragement of thousands who have invested their all in slowly building up what has come to be recognized as one of our great national assets.

Mr. Chairman, I shall make no apology for dealing with this matter with some degree of fulness. I am persuaded that few men in this House appreciate the nature of the blow which has been struck. I am equally persuaded that members of this House will recognize the injustice of the blow, when they are more fully apprised of the facts. I may not know any more or as much of political economy as many of my hon. friends opposite, but they will admit that 28 consecutive years spent in the practical work of fruit growing ought at least to enable a man to speak with some little authority as to what will help, or what will hurt, the special business in which he has been so long engaged. I have stated that the case of the fruit-growers stands out as a glaring instance of one large body of producers who are unquestionably going to be injuriously affected by this arrangement. The government's own action in the past warrants the statement. In 1896 the House will remember that great uneasiness was manifested as to the trade policy of the present government. The country had been led to believe that widespread reductions of the tariff would follow and the rapidly growing fruit industry shared the general alarm. It fell to my lot to assist in the preparation and presentation of the fruit-growers' case to the Tariff Commissioners, who were the very ministers who have negotiated the present reciprocal arrangement with the United States. In the course of my remarks, I shall have to summarize the arguments and data then put forward, but I may simply state now that the commissioners were sufficiently impressed with the strength of the fruit-growers' case to decide that the moderate protection they then had, should be continued. Under that decision, the industry still further expanded. Since that time we have witnessed the establishment of commercial horticulture in my own province of British Columbia, and the investment of enormous capital in all lines of horticultural development. In 1905-6 the government undertook an exhaustive investigation of tariff matters and for that purpose a commission toured the country from ocean to ocean, giving careful hearing to all Canadian industries. Again it fell to my lot to assist in presenting the case of the fruit-growers to the commissioners, this time in British Columbia, and still to the same two ministers, the Minister of Finance, and Minister of Customs. Strong as the case was, and is, for Ontario it was still stronger for the far west, and once more, after full consideration, the government acknowledged the justice and strength of our pleas and the industry remained in statu quo. I ask the government, I ask the Minister of Finance, have circumstances altered since that date? Is the case weakened at the present moment, nay, is it not rather strengthened? He cannot reply that the wiping out of the United States tariff alters it. Not at any time did we urge this feature. It was not free entry into the States but protection against a mammoth and more favoured competitor in our own markets that we persistently asked for.

When that has induced the government to do what an overwhelming majority of the fruit producers of Canada have implored them not to do, and agreed not to do in 1907, Sir, I am driven to the only possible conclusion, viz: that our interests have been bartered away for privileges to other interests which otherwise may have been difficult to obtain. I am justified in such a conclusion, by a significant passage in President Taft's message to Congress. In the main President Taft has considered the interests of the American consumer but in fruit no one knows better than he that the American consumer will receive no benefit and he frankly and directly acknowledges that he has taken this step in the interests of the American producer. He says: It has been found possible to obtain free entry into Canada for fresh fruits and vegetables—a matter of special value to the south and to the Pacific coast in disposing of their products in their season.' Here then is the United States reason, nakedly, plainly expressed for reciprocal free trade in fruit. What answer has this government got? What justification can it offer to the House, to the country, and to the industry itself for thus penalizing the Canadian grower in his already difficult fight against an immensely powerful foreign competitor in the Canadian market. Absolutely none! Sir, this industry means far more to Canada than the layman realizes. It means so much that anything which can in the slightest degree injuriously affect it is an injury to the whole of Canada. What has been our continual pride and boast in Canada but this, that we are a nation, not primarily of shopkeepers, but of farmers. The settlement of every great province of the Dominion has been the history of settlement of the land, the foundation of the rural homes, from which have sprung so much that is strong and clean in our national life. We have arrived now at a different stage. The problem, acute in all older countries, is already showing itself here, that of too great a congestion of the cities and towns. There is a vital reason for the universal cry 'back to the land,' and in no form is that cry so successful as when it appeals to the man to throw his energies into horticultural work. The first effort of the new settler to create a real home in his new environment was the planting of the orchard. The man who plants trees thereby gives hostages to that particular spot of earth. Unlike the cattle man, the sheep man, the general agriculturist, he is in no sense nomadic. Consciously or unconsciously he has pledged himself to his soil. Each additional tree planted ties him more firmly to his home. In the earlier days it was not without doubts that he did plant. Canada was reputed the great north land of snow, ice, and harsh climate. Those pioneers who had courage and faith to attempt the beginning of our orchard work builded better than they knew, and deserve the heartfelt gratitude of those who came later. With the progress of years, with the growing proofs, orchard work branched out into a special industry, and thirty years ago, though as compared with the present development still small, it had assumed in various portions of Ontario and eastern Canada a large importance. It called for a heavier investment than ordinary agriculture. It demanded a more special attention, and I may here fitly quote the words of Dr. James Robertson that:

> The highest form of labour applied to the cultivation of the soil is that of the horticulturist.

It involved years, not only of patient labour but of patient waiting, for financial results, and in all these things it deserved and will ever deserve, the sympathy of the great mass of Canadians who are following other pursuits. In 1890 to the Montreal Horticultural Society was entrusted the task of organizing the first conference of fruit growers throughout the Dominion—the seal and sign of the industry having attained something like a national growth. Expansion continued and when the census of 1901 was taken we have the following figures of development: Apple trees, 15,053,875; peach trees, 1,301,775, pear trees, 962,101; plums, 2,415,695; cherry, 1,288,368; other fruit trees, 179,425. A total of over twenty-one million trees besides 2,783,596 grape vines, and large acreages of small fruits.

In this large area amounting to nearly 400,000 acres of orchard the great province of Ontario ranked first with nearly seventy per cent of the total, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island following, in the order named. It is impossible to state accurately the increase in the last ten years but from the careful researches which I have made I am approximately correct when I place the present acreage at more than half a million acres. The most remarkable growth is in British Columbia where since the census we have increased ten times, having at the present time some 5,000,000 trees representing roughly from 100,000 to 110,000 acres.

Does the government ; do members of this House realize what these figures mean; what potential and actual wealth of investment they represent? Ten acres of bearing orchards will supply the railroads with freight equivalent to that from 100 acres of grain. Ten acres of orchard means the employment of practically as much labour as that employed in 100 acres of wheat land. A similar proportion exists in reference to values and I am giving the House a very conservative estimate indeed when I place the orchards of the Dominion of Canada at a valuation of $150,000,000. But if these figures imply an industry so important as to deserve the amplest consideration at the hands of the government, I ought to also point out other equally strong reasons for the same consideration. The great bulk of these 30,000,000 trees are apples. The development of these orchards calls for special skill, and great expenditures, and a close and eternal vigilance against innumerable enemies of the orchardist. It means five or six years in the west, and eight or ten years in the east, before the fruit-grower gets returns which will even pay current expenses, and many more years before he can hope to be recouped for his years of constructive but not productive work. In this respect his position is more nearly similar to the manufacturer, who is through a series of years perfecting his plant and machinery before he makes his large output. He is in a more hazardous and difficult position than the ordinary farmer. The wheat grower, the cattle grower can under pressure of adverse circumstances move to fresh fields and pastures new. The orchardist must stand or fall by the capital which he has locked up in the trees which have taken many years of patient intelligent toil to bring to the stage of production, and any blow which strikes him must strike with exceptional severity, and it can be demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that such a blow will be dealt if the proposals now before the House go through.

I have referred to the fruit-growing industry as a great national asset. It is in very truth such an asset. No specialized form of agricultural industry employs an equally large amount of labour with corresponding distribution of wages. It adds a heavy volume of traffic to the railways of the country. It feeds large and import- and subsidiary interests such as box barrel and basket manufactories, canneries, nurseries, cold storage plants, and so on. It does an invaluable service to the country by building up compact and thickly-settled communities of the best type and it affords to the world the best proof of the unrivalled climate and soil of the country. It was not long since we laboured under the imputation of being 'Our Lady of the Snows,' and you need not go far in the world even now to find the idea prevalent that this great land of the north is an inhospitable clime. There is no finer or more convincing proof to the sceptic to the contrary than that which is afforded by the magnificent fruit grown in Canadian orchards and coloured by Canadian sunshine. Sir, I remember in 1884 the first visit of the British Association to this country. Some of the world's influential men were in that great group of men, many of whom, for the first time, set foot on our soil. They, too, had harsh and convinced ideas of the character of the country. I can recall a number of them standing on the wharf at the old town of Niagara-on-the-Lake when 10,000 baskets of peaches were awaiting shipment to Toronto. It was a revelation to them, and thousands of dollars of government literature could not have conveyed the truth to those men in the manner which that sight did. Yet, of all the branches of the industry, peach-culture will be hit the hardest if reciprocal free trade in fruit becomes an accomplished fact. The theory set forth by the government, is that free entry of our fruit into the United States will compensate for such losses as we may sustain by the unrestricted influx of American fruit. I am not dealing with anything but the effect on the producer. I will touch the case of the consumer later. I have been at some pains to obtain information from authoritative sources as to the effect of these proposals in the east. Those near the border believe that the sale of their earlier apples and berries will be helped by free entry to New England markets, and I am not disputing it, although I may here point out that New England annually produces 3,000,000 barrels of apples, of which she exports twenty per cent, so that too much faith cannot be pinned to that market for apples. Nova Scotia, by far the most important horticultural area in the east, is essentially an apple-producing province, and ships, and will always ship, the great bulk of her crop to England. Prior to 1907 her exports for several years averaged 400,000 barrels. In 1909, 700,000 barrels were exported. Last year was a comparative failure.

A somewhat small percentage, then, of the whole industry in the east will be helped by these proposals. On the other hand, there will be no great effect one way or the other on the main industry. I may quote a telegram, which I have received from Mr. S. C. Parker, of Berwick, Nova Scotia, one of the foremost authorities in the maritime provinces, and the weight of whose name was used by the Prime Minister on behalf of free fruit, in his reply to the delegation which came here the other day. His telegram to me was as follows:

Nova Scotia fruit growers practically indifferent to abolition of fruit duty. Britain is our market for winter apples. For early apples think we will gain on United States. Berry growers are pleased.

It must be borne in mind, however, that important as the fruit industry is to the maritime provinces—and fruit-growers elsewhere in the Dominion will rejoice in their progress—it occupies relatively a small position in respect to the whole industry in the Dominion. Quebec is not producing for export to any extent, and it is absolutely sure that New York State with its immense production will with free fruit find a favourable market in Quebec, and this will not tend to increase the price of his product to the Quebec grower. I am informed by good authorities that, outside of cranberries and wild berries, the orchard acreage in New Brunswick is approximately 10,000 acres. I am informed by an equally good authority that in Nova Scotia it would approximate 25,000 acres. I am aware that great progress in planting has been made in recent years, and a fair estimate for all kinds of cultivated fruits in the Dominion would be as follows:

	Acres.
Prince Edward Island	7,000
New Brunswick	18,000
Nova Scotia	35,000
Quebec	50,000
Ontario	320,000
British Columbia	100,000
Total	530,000

It will be seen that the maritime provinces constitute only two-thirds of the area of British Columbia, and less than twenty per cent of the orchards of the Dominion. Admittedly their chief market is England, and it will at once be seen that the benefits from free fruit, if benefits there are, affect only a very small portion of the industry in the east, while the enormous and valuable orchards of British Columbia are badly smitten, to say nothing of Ontario.

Now as to Ontario, fruit-growing is scattered over a wide portion of the province, but for climatic reasons necessarily centred more heavily in certain districts. Lincoln, with 20,169 acres of fruit heads the list of the great fruit counties of the province. There follow in order of importance Northumberland, Middlesex, Grey, Wentworth, Huron, Kent, Prince Edward county, Lambton, Simcoe, Norfolk, Essex, Hastings, Oxford and York, besides many others ranking closely behind. The great bulk of this fruit, more especially the more tender classes, is marketed in the Canadian markets of the east. A considerable portion, especially of apples, finds its way across the ocean, an increasing quantity reaches the markets of the prairies, and a small percentage across the international boundary. Now, Sir, let me examine for a moment the international trade as it applies to the fiscal year of 1909-10 in both countries. There was imported into Canada an amount of fresh fruit, not including those already on the free list, such as bananas, oranges, &c., made up as follows:

Peaches (duty 1 c. per lb.), 200 cars (12 tons)	155,139
Grapes (2c. per lb.), 267,000 baskets (81 lbs.)	112,218
Plums (½c. per lb.), 198,587 baskets (20 lbs.)	158,756
Pears, apricots, quinces (averaging ½c. lb.), 247,000 baskets (20 lbs.)	170,346
Cherries (2 c. per lb.), 31,860 cases (10 lbs.)	40,376
Cranberries (25 p.c.), 40,854 bushels.	91,754
Berries (2c. per lb.), 2,503,594 lbs.	210,796
Other fruits	4,369
Total	$1,205,546

As to the importations into the United States, the returns are not itemized so fully, but for general purposes the comparison will be found sufficiently clear:

Apples (duty 75c. per barrel), 14,800 barrels, value	$ 29,323
Grapes	2,800
All other fruits	200,653
Total	$232,776

The United States fruit-grower then sends into the markets of this country, under present conditions, from five to six times the amount that the Canadian grower sends into his markets. What will be the effect of the abolition of the duties? Undoubtedly a lessening of the producer's prices in these markets. The reasons for such a statement are obvious to those who have given this matter any study and are perfectly plain to those great fruit-producing states who have, in their own interests, been instrumental in getting fruit placed on the free list.

It may be remarked that while the Canadian duty on apples is less than that imposed by the United States on apples entering their country, yet with other fruits it is not so. In the case of pears and plums the duties are nearly the same, the Canadian tariff being a shade higher. Grapes come here facing a duty of 2c per lb., while our product would face a duty of 25c per cubic foot, or less than the Canadian tariff. Peaches, with a duty of twenty-five cents a bushel in the United States, face a duty nearly twice as high on entering this country. Berries, on which the Canadian grower has now a protection of 2c per lb., enter the United States with a duty of only 1c per quart. Yet, in spite of having to face a higher tariff to get into this market, the United States grower, in 1910, placed $210,796 worth of berries into this market, or practically equivalent to all the fruit shipped into the United States from this country, with the exception of apples.

Let us take for a moment the case of grapes. In 1883, when I first became connected with grape culture in Ontario, we obtained 10c per lb. for the fruit. Year by year, with added acreage, increased output and strong competition amongst the Canadian growers, the price came steadily down, until the Canadian consumer could obtain the fruit at a price which put it within the reach of all, and left an extremely small profit for the grower. For the past eight or ten years the average wholesale price to the grower would run, for his main crop, from a cent to a cent and a half per pound. The ordinary commercial package is the eight-pound basket. For this he obtains from 12 to 15 cents. But, Sir, the late Mr. Murray Pettit, one of the foremost and ablest of those who cultivated this fruit on a large scale, estimated that grapes cost 12c per basket to produce. It is, therefore, obvious that the grower's main opportunity for getting a fair profit for the whole crop lies in the special cultivation of earlier varieties, when the price is somewhat higher. The Canadian grower can and does produce enough to amply satisfy the needs of the Canadian consumer, and the present duty of 2c per lb. simply secures some immunity to the grower here against a wholesale and disastrous exploitation of his own market by New York state, which has more than 60,000 acres of grapes under cultivation. These things were very ably put before the government, in the tariff discussion of 1907, by Mr. E. D. Smith, then member for Wentworth, and then, as now, an acknowledged authority on the subject. Right here I will call the attention of the Minister of Customs to a remark made by him in that very discussion. It will be found on page 1914 of 'Hansard,' 1907. The minister says, in answering Mr. Smith:

> I have listened to the hon. gentleman's remarks in regard to grapes. If I might state my own personal views I think there is a great deal in what he says, but I am of the opinion that his remarks which would apply with force to grapes, would not apply with equal force to peaches. In reference to grapes I think he is right.

Let me ask the minister how he can reconcile his words and conviction then with his attitude now. His answer then was directly applied to the argument that United States competition would injure the Canadian grower. Four years have passed. The conditions have not changed, or if they have only in a direction which makes the case still stronger for the Canadian grower. In the face of the minister's strongly worded belief at that time, I can only again assume, and I am amply justified in doing so, that he and his colleague have sacrificed our industry and their own convictions in order to benefit some one else.

Mr. PATERSON. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question, in order to be sure that I understand him? He says the conditions will be the same under this agreement as they were at that time. Does he insist that that is correct?

Mr. BURRELL. I certainly do.

Mr. PATERSON. Was there not a duty on grapes going into the United States at that time?

Mr BURRELL. I have explained that.

Mr. PATERSON. It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. BURRELL. I do not think the minister's (Mr. Paterson's) remarks are well timed or very relevant. I have already explained that the duty on grapes coming into this country is greater than the duty on grapes going into the United States. The hon. minister will not question that. And, with the enormous acreage of New York state, they are able amply to supply their own market, and their enormous output will not permit of us getting into that market with any profit; but the removal of the duty will assist the growers there, at certain seasons when prices are somewhat higher, to crowd into our market.

Mr. PATERSON. I am only pointing out that, if the hon. gentleman wishes to be fair, he must recognize the difference in the conditions. At that time there was a duty against our fruit going into the United States; under this agreement there will be no such duty. When the fruit growers and others who spoke on this question addressed the tariff commission, the argument they used was that the United States duties were much higher against us than ours against them—I am not alluding to the particular item of grapes, but am speaking of the general argument,—and they ask that our duty be put up to equal theirs so that we might be on fair and equal terms. The terms will be fair and equal, so far as tariff is concerned, under this Bill.

Mr. BURRELL. I am afraid the minister has not followed the course of my remarks very closely. He evidently has not followed what I stated with reference to that very tariff commission.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I have.

Mr. BURRELL. I think not. I am speaking about all the conditions of growth and crops and not the conditions of tariff. I know that the conditions of tariff under these proposals are different, but I am speaking of the condition of the crop, of production and the result of the producer's investment. As to what the minister has said, I followed all these tariff proposals. He knows well that I helped put up the case for British Columbia; he knows that I did the same for Ontario in 1896. I could bring resolution after resolution to prove that his statement is not correct—that it is only a half truth. It is true that the growers of Canada have always said that the United States tariff is much greater than ours and that ours should be raised to equal theirs. But he will not find in one resolution in a hundred—not one in a thousand—anything to show that any association or grower believed that it would be a benefit to have the duty entirely taken off. We never argued—and the minister himself knew it—that the abolition of these duties would put us on fair terms. It would put us on equal terms in one sense, but on hopelessly unequal terms in another sense. The minister ought to know that. And I think that if he will permit me to continue my argument I will drive this fact home with compelling force, if he is willing to listen to a fair statement of the case. The minister ought to admit, if he knows anything of my general method of argument in this House, that I try to avoid putting up an unfair argument. I want to put my case fairly, even in those matters which tell against myself. I am so deeply interested in this industry and my convictions are so profound that this is a serious blow, and that that fact can be so clearly proven, that I want to be perfectly fair in my contentions.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrell) a question? Do not the grapes come in much earlier in the United States than in Canada?

Mr. BURRELL. Certainly. I am going to cover all these arguments as I go on. I had dealt with the question of grapes and when the minister interrupted me I was about to take up the subject of peaches. Now, as to peaches: In 1907 in the tariff discussion to which I have alluded, Mr. E. D. Smith, then member for Wentworth, was asking for a duty of 3 cents per pound. The minister (Mr. Paterson) refused, but he was satisfied that 2 cents the present duty—was fair. The peach industry is not only a very large industry in Ontario, but an important one in my own province, and in a variety of ways is one which deserves the special sympathy and encouragement of Canada generally. The area of peach culture in Canada, owing to peculiarly favourable requirements of soil and climate is comparatively limited. It takes some years of waiting before the productive stage is reached. The crops are not always regular, danger from frosts is always present, the investment in the industry is heavy. Not always do the growers reap a reward commensurate with the labour and investment. I remember vividly the last large crop we had before I left Ontario. I think it was in 1897. The crop matured quickly, markets were flooded, and in common with many others I had thousands of baskets on which I got absolutely no return, not even sufficient to pay the cost of production. Those people who attempt to argue that free competition from the United States will not injure the producer in Canada are absolutely ignorant of the facts. Sir, facing a duty now of twice their own the American grower sent into this country last year 200 carloads valued at $155,000. What he will do when that cent a pound is removed is easily foreseen. It must be borne in mind that the great southern states have immense areas adapted for successful peach culture. The crop can be cultivated by cheap labour and handled as it is on an enormous scale with every facility of transportation they are in a position of great advantage compared to our own. But it is not only the southern states. Through Delaware, Maryland and northerly to Michigan and New York the areas still exist. I am leaving out the Pacific coast phase for the moment. I am in close touch with friends in New York state who are intimately connected with horticultural work and what is their frank opinion as to all this. Sir, they tell me that they are delighted at the prospect of free fruit, that western New York will find an easy and profitable market now in the cities of Ontario and Quebec, and while candidly admitting that it will be a hard blow on the Canadian grower they are very cheerful as to their own benefits. The more thoroughly one looks into this question the more one is amazed that ministers of the Crown, who were presumably guarding, or should have guarded the interests of the Canadian fruit farmer, have thus injured and discouraged him.

Before leaving the case of the Canadian producer in the east, a case which becomes stronger the more closely it is examined, I desire to point out in passing the nature of the injury which will be inflicted on the vegetable growers of the country. In Ontario no less than 57,000 acres are given up to market gardening and vegetable growing. In my own province we are to-day shipping hundreds of carloads of vegetables, practically none of which go to the other side of the line, but which do meet a heavy competition from the states of Washington and Oregon. The government has had laid before it in detail the case of this class of producer. It is intensive farming in a very real sense. It involves an immense expenditure in labour, a heavy investment of capital and a large portion of this investment depends altogether for its return on the prices obtained in our cities and towns in the early part of the season. Wipe out such protection as they now have and you expose these men with their millions of investment to a fierce competition from the tremendous area devoted to this class of work in the United States. An earlier season, a vast area, low priced labour, are the factors which will enable the American producer to filch such small profits as he now has from the home grower.

Sir, arguments of this character are not advanced solely from this side of the House. Two years ago the present member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) a supporter of this government through thick and thin, moved a resolution asking for greater protection to the fruit and vegetable growers and argued at great length that the present duties on fruit and vegetables were not sufficient and that this government ought to increase them, and see that Canadian growers were not crowded out of their own market. What will that non. member do now that his government has given free entrance to United States produce thereby dealing a smashing blow to my hon. friend's constituents?

Now, before leaving the case of Ontario, I want to refer particularly to the demands made by that great delegation of 800 fruit growers from Ontario generally, and from the Niagara district in particular, and to the Prime Minister's answer. I have a good deal more to say, and if the Prime Minister would allow me to move the adjournment of the debate, I would esteem it a favour.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 10.53 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 15, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—PROPOSED REDUCTION OF QUORUM.

Mr. MILLER moved :

That the quorum of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce be reduced from 21 to 11 members.

Mr. LENNOX. Explain.

Mr. BURRELL.

Mr. MILLER. At the last meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee, a resolution was passed asking this House to authorize a reduction in the number of the quorum. It was then urged by a member of the House who is also a member of the committee that, perhaps, the discussion which took place at that time would lead to a larger attendance at the meeting of this and other committees. The Banking and Commerce Committee was called for business for last Friday morning at 11 o'clock. We had no quorum. The committee was called again for this morning at 11 o'clock, and, although there was present a solicitor interested in one of the Bills to be up for discussion, and though that solicitor endeavoured to drum up a quorum, he failed to do so. I understand that the new Banking Act will be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee this session. If so, there will be a large number of meetings of the committee, and I think it is very important that business be not impeded, and, with that view, that the quorum be reduced to a possible number. It has been urged, as the members of the committee number 132, that 21 is not an unreasonably large quorum. But I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House, that while there are 221 members of this House, 20 constitute a quorum. It does not seem unreasonable that we should have the same proportionate quorum on committees of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. When the committee proposed the reduction of the quorum, their recommendation was that it should be reduced from 21 to 15. The chairman (Mr. Miller) now proposes that it should be reduced to 11. I think that number is low, and especially in view of the very important Bill likely to come before the committee, the general banking Bill. I think that the quorum of the committee to consider so important a Bill should be more than 11 members. It seems to me that 15 would be a reasonable number, but quite low enough.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think that the House should make any change in the quorum of the Banking and Commerce Committee. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) spoke of the meeting this morning. Well, this morning, three different committees were called for the same hour—eleven o'clock ; Public Accounts, Agriculture and Banking and Commerce. If the chairman of committees are not more careful in seeing to it that committees are not called for the same hour and day, they cannot expect members to attend in such numbers as, I am sure, my hon. friend from South Grey would expect in the case of a committee that has to deal with such important questions as those which come before the Banking and Commerce Committee. I rather think that, when any change is made with respect to the quorum of these committees, it should be by a change in the rules of the House, and not by selecting one committee for change while leaving the others as they are. This is a matter that ought to receive very careful consideration by the House, and should not be done in this sudden way of simply passing a resolution. Perhaps it would have been all right to pass a resolution of this kind even with respect to the Banking and Commerce Committee at some other time, but my hon. friend knows that there is to come before this committee the most important matter that will come before any committee this session, the change in the banking law. I think that the committee should not take up the consideration of these very important enactments without at least 21 members out of the 221 members of this House present. I suggest to the chairman that he leave this over for further consideration and for more thorough discussion in the Banking and Commerce Committee itself. Surely he will not wish to press a matter of this kind now. I think that when the discussion was on in the House the other day the general expression of opinion was in opposition to the proposal to reduce the quorum of this committee.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not able to be present at the meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee at which this matter was considered. Personally I should be willing to accept the judgment of the committee and its chairman on this subject ; at the same time, unless there is something like a general concurrence of view in the House, it would not be desirable that the change should be made. If there be any considerable difference of opinion, I would suggest—though I agree with him on this subject—that it would be better to withdraw the resolution for the present, and let it be further considered in the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. HUGHES. It was not considered in the Banking and Commerce Committee this morning?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise with some diffidence to discuss this matter as I am not a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee, but I desire to be heard because this is a very important time in connection with the work of this committee and it is a very important committee, and its action affects the interest of all classes of people in Canada. It seems to me that the difficulty pointed out by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Miller) is not overcome by his motion. Did I understand him to say that when the committee was called to meet a few days ago no one attended?

Mr. MILLER. I said that not a quorum attended.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood him to say that no one was present. And how many were present at the meeting called for this morning?

Mr. MILLER. About eighteen or nineteen.

Mr. SPROULE. There were nineteen present at one time.

Mr. LENNOX. That, I presume, was after the drumming up referred to by the chairman. This difficulty arises out of a general condition of things, and not out of anything connected with this committee specially. I have taken the liberty more than once of calling the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to this subject. No matter how good and active a member of parliament a man may be, he cannot be in two places at the same time. Nor can the member of parliament do his work properly by trying to divide his attention between two committees that are meeting at the same time. The trouble arises through summoning a number of committees for the same day. And the reason for that—which may be regarded as another difficulty—is that we do not summon committee meetings for Monday or Friday.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes, the Public Accounts.

Mr. LENNOX. I am corrected as to the Public Accounts Committee. I venture again to suggest to the Prime Minister that it would be better if we had committees meeting on Mondays and Fridays as a regular thing. There is no reason why members should be encouraged to absent themselves from attendance on their public duties on these days. If the suggestions I make were adopted, and if the membership of each committee were reduced to a reasonable number, the difficulty we are now discussing could not arise. Now, the special reason why I speak at this time is that a most important matter is supposed to come before the Banking and Commerce Committee this session. I have heard the rumour that the government does not intend to introduce and pass the Banking Act this session. I trust that is only an idle rumour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It has been introduced.

Mr. LENNOX. I said 'introduce and pass.' I have heard, since the Bill was introduced, that the government does not intended to move forward and pass it.

Mr. FIELDING. No foundation for that.

Mr. LENNOX. I am glad to hear from the Finance Minister that there is no foundation for that. I would urge the Finance Minister to get a little active in regard to this matter, and not leave it till the last of the session, when, as we know by experience, matters that come up do not receive very close attention. The Banking and Commerce Committee this session has more important work before it than any other committee of the House, I venture to say; and I can promise my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) who moved this motion that when the Banking Act comes up for consideration there will be no lack of members there, and there will be no lack of spectators either. The country is aroused on the question of the banking law of Canada, not only by reason of the Farmers' Bank, but by reason of other earlier events, and of events that have supervened. When this Bill comes up to be dealt with, we want a full attendance of members, we want a quorum which will guarantee responsibility to the people, and we want a condition of things which will insure a most careful and rigid handling of that question. Therefore, speaking with a sense of responsibility, I for one decidedly object to a change in the number constituting the quorum of the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). I do not agree with the remarks of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lennox) as to the work being less efficiently done by a smaller quorum of members. I think 11 or 15 members of that committee are able to do the work just as well as twenty-one. As a matter of fact, referring to one very important matter, the Lumsden affair, the House felt perfectly safe, and in the opinion of my hon. friend the interests of the country were perfectly safe, in the hands of only seven members.

Mr. LENNOX. The four did better than the seven.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). As a matter of fact, after some of them saw fit to leave the committee, the affairs of the country were thoroughly well managed by four members of this House who were on that committee. Now it occurs to me at the moment that there are two ways of bringing the 130 members of that committee to a sense of their duty, to bring them into action. The first way is by persuasion, by sweet remembrance of the duty of each one of them. The second way is by chastisement—my English expression may be poor——

An hon. MEMBER. It is all right.

Mr. WILSON (Laval) but if it is all right so much the better. I was a victim of the second way a few days ago. In the Montreal 'Gazette' and Montreal 'Star' a list was published of the members who were absent when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) presented his motion asking for delay in regard to the reciprocity arrangement; and the insinuation was made in those papers that the member for Laval was not in the House for the very good reason that he approved of the motion of the member for Jacques Cartier. But it so happened, Mr. Speaker, that I was not aware that the hon. member was going to present that motion, and that is the reason I was absent. Now, I would propose that the members of the Banking and Commerce Committee should be chastised in the same way in order to induce them to do their duty, and that the names of the absent ones should be published. But when the names of the absent are published, I for one will be under a great disadvantage, because the names are usually published in alphabetical order, and as my name begins with the letter W, it comes last on the list—always excepting one other hon. member of this House, that is the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright). He may be the wrong Mr. Wright some times, or he may be the right Mr. Wright at other times. So I think perhaps the best way to settle the matter would be for each member of this committee to perform his duty. Now the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) used an expression about members getting 'busy.' Well, perhaps I am not entitled to speak for other members in this regard, but there is another member of this House, a very prominent one, who is nearly always busy at his duty somewhere else than in the committee. I venture to suggest to my hon. friend from Simcoe that he urge upon his friend, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), to attend more often the Banking and Commerce Committee, where his services would be so valuable.

Mr. NESBITT. I think hon. members lose sight of the fact that we do not want to change the number of members on that committee. Everybody can attend the committee, and it is their duty to do so, even if the quorum is reduced. I quite agree in the view of the importance of the Bank Bill that is to come before the committee. I might also mention the Insurance Bill which was before the committee, when it was very difficult to get a quorum, although the Bill was just as important perhaps as the Banking Bill which is to come before the committee. In the case of the Insurance Bill it was very difficult indeed to get a quorum, and nearly every morning the chairman had to preside over the committee when there was not a quorum present. I do not see any reason why the quorum of the committee should not be reduced, because at present we do not get a full quorum there. It is not fair to those who do attend to keep them waiting from 15 to 20 minutes or half an hour for other members to turn up. So far as I am concerned, I strongly endorse the recommendation to change the quorum so that we can get on with the business.

Mr. MILLER. This is a matter not of much interest to any except those members who are interested in the work of the committee. They have been doing business morning after morning without any quorum at all, and we thought that it would be better to do business with a quorum that could be obtained under the authority of the House. The members of the committee who are in favour of reducing the quorum are those who are regularly present. I do not care to press the matter contrary to the wishes of the House, and if it is the wish of the House that the quorum should not be reduced, I beg to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

QUESTIONS.

GRAIN STORED IN ELEVATORS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What quantity of grain was stored in the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William during the four months commencing September 1, 1910?
2. How much of the grain so stored has been forwarded to the sea-board?
3. By what routes have the same been sent forward, and what was the quantity forwarded by each route?
4. How much was forwarded in Canadian bottoms?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. 56,673,690 bushels.

2, 3 and 4. The government have, as yet, no information on the other three questions.

NORWEGIAN BARK 'PETRA.'

*Mr. CROSBY:

1. Has the Marine Department any information regarding the Norwegian bark 'Petra,' which was lost at Pennant on or about the 20th or 25th of December?
2. Have the men from Pennant and Sambro who went to the rescue of the crew, running great risk of their lives in doing so, been in any way specially provided for, or any payment given to them, by the Marine and Fishery Department? If not, has the department any intention of remunerating them liberally for their services, and when may it be expected?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. Yes. The 'Petra' stranded on a ledge of rocks near Big Pennant island, Pennant Bay, Nova Scotia, on the afternoon of Monday, 19th December, 1910.

2. No. The matter is being inquired into, and any persons who will have been shown as having assisted in saving life will be rewarded.

RIFLE RANGE AT BEAR RIVER, N.S.

Mr. JAMESON:

1. Have any communications, telegrams, letters, petitions or plans relating to the rifle range at Bear River, N.S., been received since January, 1909?
2. If so, from whom have such been received, and upon what dates respectively?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to make that a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand as a notice of motion.

PRINTING BUREAU EMPLOYEES.

* Mr. HUGHES:

1. How many persons are employed in the Printing Bureau now?
2. How many were there on or about December 23, 1910?
3. How many are Protestants, and how many are Roman Catholics?
4. Are there upwards of seven hundred persons employed in whole or in part at the Printing Bureau?
5. Is it true that of that number only about eighty are said to be Protestants and upwards of six hundred are Roman Catholics?
6. What is the reason for such recognition of ecclesiastical influence?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. 687 employees; 6 carters; 36 charwomen.
2. 682 employees; 6 carters; 36 charwomen.
3. The information asked for could not be obtained unless each employee of the Printing Bureau was questioned as to his or her religious belief, and the government is of opinion that in the public interest, it is not advisable that this should be done.

The Printing Bureau is a manufacturing establishment, and, in accordance with the rule that prevails in mercantile houses, the employees are engaged not on account of creed but because of their fitness for the work, which they are to perform.

4. Answered by reply to No. 1.
5. The statement, if made, would be untrue.
6. No such reason exists as ecclesiastical influence has neither been exerted nor recognized.

POSTMASTER GENERAL'S VISIT TO ROME.

* Mr. HUGHES:

1. What was the object of the mission of the honourable the Postmaster General to Rome as he returned from South Africa?

2. What correspondence, either by voice, letter, wire, or otherwise either direct with him or indirect through others, passed between the government or any member thereof and the honourable the Postmaster General concerning his visit to Rome?

3. What instructions, requests, or suggestions were indirectly or directly given him?

4. Has it been arranged with His Holiness the Pope of Rome that ecclesiastics of his church in Canada are commanded not to take, or are to be prevented taking, part in political discussions?

5. Has it been arranged with the aforesaid personage that the Nationalist party in Quebec is to be an ally of the Liberal party?

6. Why is it necessary in Canadian political affairs to obtain or to permit the intervention of His Holiness the Pope of Rome?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

The answer to all these questions, is simply that the Postmaster General had no mission to Rome.

SHAD FISHERIES.

Mr. STANFIELD:

1. Who composed the commission that took evidence re shad fisheries in 1908?

2. What was the cost of said commission?

3. When may the House expect the report, and what is the reason of the long delay in presenting it?

4. Will the said report be printed, and when?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. S. F. Morrison, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Simon Melanson, Moncton, New Brunswick; E. E. Prince, Commissioner of Fisheries, Ottawa, Canada.

2. $2,651.07.

3. The report is now in the press, and will issue within a few days. The preparation of some shad fishery maps has delayed it.

4. Answered by No. 3.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

* Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What is the total amount of bounties paid by the present government since 1896 in connection with the steel, iron and other industries, respectively?

2. Before the government commits the country to the renewal of the iron and steel bounties, will parliament have an opportunity to discuss the advisability of such plan?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. From June 30, 1896, to January 31, 1911: iron and steel $16,315,862.00; lead, $1,580,793.37; manila fibre, $243,254.15; crude petroleum, $1,888,195.38.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

See unrevised 'Hansard,' p. 3346, 1st paragraph of answer to Mr. Middlebro's question as follows:

'It is proposed to send representatives of every regiment or independent unit of the permanent force and active militia, including departmental corps.

'Preference will also be given to those who have served in the field.'

So far as the above may include veterans of 1866 and 1870, they will be represented, but no special contingent of veterans will be sent.

ST. ANDREWS WHARF, P.Q.

Mr. PERLEY:

1. When were tenders called for building the proposed wharf at St. Andrews, Quebec?

3. Yes, to the Bridge and Wharf Builder Company for $3,245.00.

4. $135.78 for advertising and printing.

THE RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the orders of the day are called I desire to ask a question of the government. On the front page of the Montreal 'Gazette' of this morning, I find the following:

Washington, D.C., February 14.—'We are preparing to annex Canada,' announced Champ Clark, leader of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives, in the course of the discussion on the proposed reciprocity treaty. Immediately after he had made that sensational statement, he and all the other Democrats except three from Louisiana, proceeded to vote for the passage of the reciprocity agreement.

As a result of Democratic support of the proposed treaty, the final vote by which it was passed in the House to-night showed 220 members to be for it and 92 against it. Eighty-nine representatives refused their support to a measure backed by a Republican president. On the other hand, with the exception of the three votes mentioned, all the Democrats supported the titular leader of the opposition party, a thing that has not happened in this country for many years.

Annexation of Canada was the keynote of the speech by Mr. Clark, who will be Speaker of the next house, in whipping the members of his party into line in support of the reciprocity agreement with Canada. Not once, nor twice, but thrice, did he boldly declare:

'We are preparing to annex Canada.'

Further down it says:

Mr. Clark, who at a public meeting yesterday joined with President Taft in advocating reciprocity between the United States and the whole world, has now called attention to the rumored movement of the 'one flag, the Stars and Stripes, from Central America to the north pole.'

Has the attention of the government been drawn to this matter? Have the government taken any cognizance of this statement, and if so what is their intention? Do they propose immediately withdrawing the reciprocity agreement if the foregoing report is verified.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not had my attention drawn to this until this moment, and I have only to say that the policy of the government is already settled on, but if some nefarious intention of the kind mentioned in this article should be put into action, I shall call upon my hon. friend as a gallant soldier to dispose of it.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the right hon. gentleman place the matter in my hands? If so, I shall proceed forthwith to Washington.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Might I ask whether, if the statement made by Mr. Clark, the leader of the Democrats, be true, will that in any way alter or influence the course of action of this government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I gave my answer a moment ago.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance what countries will come under the free list and the reduced list in the reciprocal arrangement with the United States. It seems to me that to give that information ought to be a simple matter. I asked my hon. friend, when he brought down the information we have already had, to include that in it. It must certainly be accessible because such a list was prepared in connection with the French treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend refer to the question put to-day by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to know to how many countries besides the United States will the proposed arrangement apply under the favoured nation treaty clause.

Mr. FIELDING. A memorandum was sent me answering the question as I came into the House, but I found it imperfect and thought better to let it stand over. The exact number of countries is twelve. I do not remember what countries they are, but they will be found in the published tariff list. The only qualification is that France is not a favoured nation country generally but to a limited extent. The list will be found in the customs tariff book, but I shall bring it down in a more formal way if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In answer to a question my hon. friend said there were certain countries as to which he could answer definitely, but certain others as to which he could not and therefore I should like a definite statement as to which these countries are to which these provisions will certainly apply.

Mr. FIELDING. At earlier stages there were some doubts—perhaps I should not say difficulties—in answering the question because the imperial authorities were not very clear themselves as to the operation of all these old treaties, but there came a time, particularly in connection with the French treaty, when we had to determine officially what countries were so entitled. A list was then made up which will be found in the customs tariff book, but I shall bring it down in a more formal way.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask if, when these changes were being arranged in Washington, quarantine regulations were considered. The hon. minister will remember that some 30 or 40 years ago quarantine regulations were made by order in council under which live animals coming into Canada must have a certificate of health. For instance, in the case of hogs, a certificate was required from the parties who raised them that they were free from disease; but as I understand it, if hogs or other cattle went from Canada to the United States they did not require any certificate as there are no quarantine regulations in that country. You cannot, however, bring hogs into Canada under this arrangement unless you have those certificates which it is impossible for the pork packers to get.

Mr. FIELDING. The reciprocity arrangement does not touch on the question of quarantine regulations at all. Each country remains free to impose any quarantine regulations it may deem necessary either for public health or for the health of animals. That matter has not been dealt with at all.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Chairman, in continuing the remarks which I addressed to the House last night, I wish to refer for a few moments to the demand made by that great delegation of 800 fruit growers who came from Ontario generally and from the Niagara district in particular, and the Prime Minister's answer to them. They came to Ottawa on February 10 and on February 6 the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked the following question of the Prime Minister:

Mr. BLAIN. I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether or not serious consideration will be given to any special interest in Canada that may be affected by the proposed reciprocity arrangement should it become law? In the county I have the honour to represent there is a very strong feeling in respect to these matters. Throughout the western part of Ontario, at the present moment, large sums of money are being subscribed to send delegations to the government to explain the position of specific interests that will be affected if these tariff changes become law. Will the government give serious consideration to the representations of these interests if they are made to the government? I may anticipate by saying that a general answer that the government will listen to all complaints of everybody will not be quite sufficient. I want to know if the government will give serious consideration to these matters, or whether it will be better for these gentlemen to stay at home on the ground that this proposal will not be changed?

To this the Prime Minister replied:

We will give most serious consideration to all the interests represented, reserving our judgment.

I think the Prime Minister will frankly admit that the unanimous views of these men, practical fruit growers, all of them, men who are thoroughly familiar with the multitudinous details of their own special business, presented, the Prime Minister will also admit, in a fair and moderate and absolutely convincing manner, should have been listened to with a great deal of attention. From 1883 to 1899 I lived in that district, devoting myself entirely to fruit growing. I may fairly say that I know the conditions as no other man in the House knows them. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs could not have listened to that careful presentation backed by statistics, and presented not by opponents of this government, but largely by their political friends and not realize how grave an injustice had been done these great interests. I am not going to repeat those arguments, but two phases of this matter I will touch on for a minute. In that belt of country stretching from the Niagara river to the city of Hamilton, a country, Sir, which is the pride and delight of every Canadian who knows it, there are 1,000,000 peach trees in cultivation, roughly 10,000 acres. A low estimate of their value would be from three to five million dollars. There is absolutely no doubt that this special and vastly important branch of horticultural industry is grievously injured by these proposals. I can tell this House that western New York has been earnestly hoping for some such thing as this. Even with the duty it has been possible for some of the canners to buy at twenty cents a basket, or a cent a pound, on the New York side of the river, the duty protecting the Canadian grower so that he can get a livable price. Let me point out to the Prime Minister another grievous wrong done. Amongst other matter presented on that day was the following memorial:

To the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled:

We, the undersigned, the president and executive committee of the Old Country Association, composed entirely of men born and bred in the British Isles, and the great majority of whom are engaged in the fruit industry, respectfully and earnestly beg to draw the attention of the Dominion government to the peculiar hardship which will be imposed upon us should this proposed tariff legislation come into effect.

We have been induced to leave Great Britain, and to come to this peninsula, and to invest our capital in the purchase, planting and general improvement of fruit lands in a large measure owing to the very wide distribution of official pamphlets and other literature emanating from Canada, and distributed throughout the British Isles, positively stating that 'the Ontario grower is protected in the home market by a high tariff against foreign grown fruit and vegetables, and thus enjoys that market without serious competition from outside sources.'

The amount of customs tariffs on the various fruits is specifically stated in these pamphlets and literature; and in order that this particular advantage to the Canadian grower may be clearly understood by the Britisher, this tariff scale is not only set forth in Canadian money but is also set forth in the coinage of Great Britain. Under the belief that these conditions would be stable, we have not only sunk our own capital, but have been instrumental in bringing many of our countrymen here to invest in this growing industry, which owing to the steady rise of recent years in the values of land now requires a large amount of capital to purchase and equip even the small farms the majority of us own, and to provide for the maintenance of our families during the years it takes to bring an orchard into bearing.

St. Catharines, Feb. 4, 1911.

Now, Sir, the facts are as stated. Some of these men, and there are a great number of them, were sent by the Dominion government officials to the officials of the Ontario government, because, as is natural, that government had special knowledge of the Ontario fruit districts. Canada invited them to come and embark their capital. Canada set forth the advantages they would get. Stability of tariff in relation to the fruit industry was assured them. They came, scores of them. They have been a splendid type of immigrant. These men have done what I wish Englishmen would do elsewhere, joined themselves together in an association to help others who come here in their initial steps; to assist them in learning to know Canada and to so adjust themselves to its conditions as to become worthy citizens of their adopted country. They have invested their thousands, and have in many cases brought their orchards almost to the bearing point. They have found it an expensive process, more especially as they had to pay, and still have to pay under these proposals, heavy duties on their spraying machines, their tools, their implements with which they had to equip themselves. Is it any wonder that this large body of men feel that Canada has betrayed them?

Sir, what was the character of the Prime Minister's answer to these 800 Canadian citizens? I do not want to use extravagant language; but no man can have heard the Prime Minister without feeling that it was a hopelessly trivial, unbusinesslike and disappointing answer that he gave. He made no attempt whatever to give a serious answer to a serious statement. He showed no appreciation of the issues involved. I do not expect that my right hon. friend should be intimately acquainted with the details of the fruit industry, but I did expect, and these men had the right to expect, that the First Minister of the country would at least have given an intelligible and intelligent answer to their presentment. He told them that the Canadian orchards were the finest in the world—that the Montreal melon was eaten in New York. If he attempted any answer at all to arguments, it was this, that some time before a delegation of farmers had come to the government, and that amongst them the fruit interests were voiced in favour of free fruit, and therefore, as the opinion of the growers was a divided opinion, the government found it a difficult matter to deal with. Sir, if the delegation on December 16 from the west had been a delegation of the fruit growers of the Dominion, I could understand such a reply; but what are the facts? One gentleman from Nova Scotia spoke—and I have already dealt with this statement and shown that the Prime Minister cannot shelter himself there. One man from New Brunswick spoke, and I cannot find that he spoke with authority even from that province; but his remarks were to the effect that he would find a better market for his hay and potatoes and turnips in the United States, and would have saved $200 on his strawberry crop by free fruit. Sir, it is almost inconceivable that the Prime Minister of this country could cite such evidence in detail as a reason for refusing these eight hundred men, and the thousands whom they represented, their requests. One man also from Ontario spoke, an apple grower of Norfolk who has had business connections in the United States for some time past and is interested in shipping some of his fruit in that direction. But even from Norfolk much of the fruit has gone to the prairies, where it will now not be able to withstand the free competition from the western states, and I may point out that even if every Norfolk apple grower wanted free fruit, which is far from being the fact, Norfolk county, excellent district though it may be, is only tenth in the list of the fruit growing counties of Ontario. Its orchard areas are not so valuable as the single strip of peach area to which I have alluded, and not one-tenth of the area of British Columbia, where the damage brought by these proposals is deplorable. Yet, Sir, this was all the argument brought to the consideration of this great delegation's case.

I have read the report of the western farmers' delegation very carefully. They stated that they had come to Ottawa at great expense and inconvenience, but that they felt justified in incurring it all in order to show the government they were in earnest. Sir, was that still greater delegation on February 10, representing the fruit industry, less in earnest? In the report of the western farmers' delegation 17 pages are taken up in a lengthy plea for government ownership and operation of terminal elevators—this was what they pleaded for at greatest length; 3½ pages in a plea for the establishment of the chilled meat industry, 7 pages in urging the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, and amendments to the Railway Act, 8 pages in dealing with the customs tariff, chiefly, I might almost say solely, with the argument for a lowering of the duties on manufactures and on easier entry into the United States' markets for grain and cattle. One of the most forcible addresses on customs tariff matters was from Mr. Thos. McMillan. He said on page 43:

> We come before you asking no favours, but we claim that agriculture should under the tariff be placed on an equal footing with the other industrial enterprises of the land.

That applies with equal force to the horticulturists. Let me commend it to the Minister of Customs. But, Sir, in the whole of this report there is but a scant page which deals at all with fruit, and which even then deals with it in the fragmentary and unrepresentative way which I have already touched on. To say that the western farmers were making the abolition of the fruit duties an important part of their case is to mistake plain facts. To say that the fruit interests were in any adequate way represented at that time is also entirely contrary to the facts. The Prime Minister may have been in a tight place—he may have already made up his mind; but it would have been fairer to have told these men not to come than to have treated them in so shabby, so unconvincing, so hopelessly inadequate a manner. Man after man, family after family, in that district will see his business prospects clouded, will see his long years of waiting unrewarded; and it leaves but a bitter taste in the mouth to be told in reply that they must go home and sacrifice themselves and their hopes—not, as the Prime Minister suggested, for other horticulturists, but for other and not more important interests, who are being catered to by these proposals.

Now, Sir, I wish to turn for a short time to the case of the fruit growing industry in my own province of British Columbia. In no part of Canada is this national industry hit with equal force by the proposals before the House. Not within the whole range of our economic history in Canada can there be found so strong an instance of a great industry, which has deserved, and has had some encouragement and some aid from all governments, being deprived of such help without the shadow of an equivalent, or of compensation. I can emphatically state that the pressure of the western fruit-growing states, which are already faced with great difficulties in disposing of their large surplus of second grade fruit, is responsible for President Taft's desire to obtain the privilege of free entry into Canadian markets.

The very first fruit trees planted in British soil west of the Rocky mountains were planted in the life time of many members in this House. Until the eighties the vast interior of the province was practically a terra incognita. Such settlements as there were made under unusual hardships and drawbacks. The trees for the earlier orchards were, in many cases, brought hundreds of miles on horseback over dangerous and difficult mountain trails. Mining and cattle ranching formed the chief activities of the huge, but sparsely settled, country. But there were not wanting evidences of the special suitability of the climate and soil for the production of fruit. The coming of the Canadian Pacific railway stimulated the work, but even up to 1891 but slow progress had been made, and it was not until 1897 that the first shipment of fruit was sent beyond the limits of the province itself. Commercial horticulture in British Columbia practically commenced then, commenced when this government had decided that fruit-growing was still to have something approaching to a fair measure of protection in common with other Canadian industries. In 1901, ten short years ago, our industry was still small, 567,000 trees representing the orchards of that far west. We have had the faith and energy to build it up under conditions more expensive and difficult than those ever faced in other fruit-growing districts of Canada. We have had to bear the enormous cost of clearing land of our heavy timber and immense outlays in engineering works for irrigation purposes.

I may point out to hon. members that in one valley alone, the Okanagan, $1,500,000 have already been spent in irrigation works for orchard purposes and vast outlays of the same kind are going on all over the province at the present time. We have had, and yet have, unusual difficulties in transportation, owing not a little to the mountainous character of the whole country. We have had, in addition, always a scarcity of labour, with a corresponding high remuneration. We have had little or no help in procuring more labour or additional settlers. I might refer ministers to a speech in this House in 1907 delivered by the former member for Yale-Cariboo, in which he pointed out to the government which he supported that they had done nothing to assist in solving this problem. Yet, Sir, in spite of these things, we have progressed to an extent that in the past ten years we have increased our orchards one thousand per cent, and to-day have 5,000,000 trees. It is a record that should be a source of pride, not only to ourselves, but to every true Canadian who realizes that the sound development of the Pacific coast province is as vital to the welfare of the nation as the development of the east. But although we have made rapid progress we are still only in the beginning of things. Immense tracts of land are in process of being subdivided, and of being turned into more orchards. As yet but a small percentage of our trees are in bearing. Thousands of men have spent their all in the expensive work of bringing their small holdings to a stage when they will see some reward for their labours, and it is a deplorable and cruel proposal put forward by this government, for the wiping out of the moderate tariff assistance now in force can be described in no other terms.

What is our position? Our natural, our great market is in the Canadian prairies. We face there competition from our sister province Ontario, whose friendly rivalry we do not deplore. But we face, also, a much more dangerous and fierce competition from the Pacific coast states. Absolutely no argument can be advanced to show that British Columbia has an equivalent in the form of a market in those states. Their markets are glutted with their own products, and each of the great fruit-producing states is exporting an enormous annual surplus. California, besides her vast exports of citrus fruits, exported this last year 14,050 cars of such fruits as we grow in British Columbia and Ontario. A careful estimate of existing conditions indicates a twenty per cent increase in their output annually for the next few years. I submit an extract from a report carefully prepared by the chief of the horticultural department in British Columbia dealing with production last year:

Apricots—Wenatchee valley, 300 cars, Yakima valley, 12 cars, other producers, 15 cars.

This is in the state of Washington alone.

Peaches—Wenatchee valley, 300 cars, Yakima valley, 1,000 cars, other districts in Idaho and Washington, 300 cars. Total, 1,600 cars. The tremendous preponderance of these districts in peaches over British Columbia districts resulted in a bad glut and low prices this year. In plums the American side produces principally the Italian prune. The Williamette valley put up 200 cars of the dried article. Washington valleys shipped 100 cars of the fresh fruit, and southern Idaho shipped 450 to 500 cars. This latter district broke the market for British Columbia prunes and made the season, while not disastrous, one of quite low prices.

Apples—Yakima valley, actual shipment about 2,800 cars. Wenatchee, 2,000 cars. Walla Walla and Dayton not quite 400 cars. Mood river, 500.

And many other similar returns from the innumerable well established fruit valleys of the whole of the northwest states.

In apples the tremendous production indicated above broke the market latterly.

The market referred to is our own prairie country.

And No. 1 Rome Beauties are being offered in Calgary laid down at $1.45, which equals $1.10 in the Okanagan valley for high class fruit. The total yield in the States west of the Rockies, including Colorado, this year was close to 15,000 cars.

A typical illustration of these valleys is that of Yakima, in Washington. A recent sketch in the 'World of To-day' magazine contains the following:

Yakima valley is 200 miles long. The Yakima river extending through the valley irrigates the immense orchards. The acreage in full bearing is relatively small, but there are in different stages of bearing about 18,000 acres principally apples, peaches and pears. There are at present 45,000 acres set to fruit and the acreage adapted is fully double that now planted. The shipments for 1910 are upwards of 5,000 carloads of which 3,000 carloads are apples.

Now Sir, the tale of this great horticultural field in the western states might be extended, but I have already given the House a sufficient idea of the standing of our competitors. With this enormous output, it is obvious that profitable markets are a matter of keen anxiety to the United States. And here I might read part of a speech of President Taft as showing why they want these markets and why, from their point of view, this agreement should be put through. President Taft said:

We have, with pioneer energy, pushed on to the Pacific, and taken up all the good land. We are now spending millions to reclaim the arid and semi-arid lands of the great western desert.

They are reclaiming these lands for the purpose of extending their fruit ranches.

Should we not, by taking down a useless and unnecessary tariff wall, bring within our agricultural resources the great plains of the Canadian Northwest?

In other words: Should not we get this duty removed in order that we may get the enormous Canadian market in the Northwest.

The United States secured for the farmers the free listing of such important agricultural products as cottonseed oil, all kinds of fruits and vegetables, timothy and clover seeds, eggs, and numerous other products in which the movement to Canada from the United States is much greater than from Canada to the United States.

I think it is absolutely clear what President Taft intended, and what is the knowledge on this particular matter of the men on the other side of the line.

The transportation rates of Washington and Oregon to Winnipeg are as favourable, if not more so, than our own. American capital is already quite heavily interested in the wholesale trade in the western provinces. The wholesalers who have American connections, keep in constant touch with the shipping houses and packing firms of Washington and Oregon. The highest class fruit is customarily shipped eastwards to the big American cities, to which they get a more ready access than we could ever hope for. The tremendous surplus is forcing its way into our own market, competing against our No. 1 stock and often beating down our prices to a point none too profitable for us, but which their growers accept rather than get nothing. Much of the fruit is bought outright f.o.b., on the American side, but Sir, in addition to the great quantity of cars handled in this way, there were this last season, 95 cars sent into our prairie markets on consignment—not ordered, but literally dumped—the growers of Washington and Oregon prepared to take whatever a commission house could procure. These conditions obtain with a duty of 13 cents a case on apples, 20 cents a case on peaches and 10 cents a case on plums. What will happen when that duty is wiped out? I need not point out that the danger to the Ontario and especially to the British Columbia, producer, is not only the loss of the amount of the duty, but the fiercer competition from those large and ever-growing areas which will naturally deflect a far greater volume of their products when even that slight barrier is swept away. If it is retorted that we have just as good a country and should be able to hold our own on equal terms, I can but reply that the terms at the present time are not equal. To say nothing of the handicap which a business in its constructive stage must always have as against a powerful rival firmly established. I may point out that our costs of production are greater than those of our southern competitor. I again quote from a careful report made to our Provincial Association:

In the Rogue river valley, Southern Oregon, a team costs $4 to $5 per day, as against our $6 and $7. Day labour is from $1.50 up to $1.75 as against our $2.50. The average cost of packing apples is 6 to 7 cents a box as against our 8 to 10 cents. The boxes themselves cost 10 to 11 cents as against our 14 cents. In the apple districts of eastern Washington prices are somewhat in advance of these, but as a rule prices for labour and boxes are 25 per cent cheaper than in British Columbia. Our selling prices, however, must be based on those of our competitors who are operating under those more favourable conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavoured to place the claims and the position of the British Columbia producer as fairly as I could before the House. It is the same position that was taken in 1907 when the last tariff revision took place, a revision which slightly increased the fruit duties. At that time the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), remarked that it was a tariff which applied to the whole Dominion of Canada and he urged members to look upon it from the standpoint from which the Finance Minister felt it to be his duty to look at it—that is—and I quote his exact words (Hansard 1907): 'to see what he could do that would be fair to all parts of the country.' No further hearing was given to the fruit-growing interests before this blow fell. There was a bare possibility that our fruit interest might be endangered by pressure from Washington and accordingly, the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association at a representative meeting in Toronto on November 17 last, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, that in view of the possible negotiations with the United States in regard to reciprocity of tariffs, the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association wish to put on record our unqualified disapproval of any reduction in the duties on fruit coming into Canada without consulting a committee to be appointed by this association, the same being now much lower on an average than the duties on manufactured goods and lower than they ought to be in view of the fact that there can be no monopoly or combine in fruits, the prices being fixed absolutely by the law of supply and demand within the Dominion, which contains ample territory suitable to produce in the utmost profusion all the fruits that the country can consume for at least many decades to come, which insures that the consumer cannot be injured in the long run, and the fruit industry can be extended in proportion to the growth of the population with some assurance of a permanent market at home.

Now, Sir, I desire to call the attention of the House particularly to two points in connection with this matter. The Prime Minister hinted to the delegation of fruit growers the other day that they were too late, that their views should have been made known when the western farmers' delegation presented their case on December 16. Sir, this very resolution which I have read was forwarded to the Minister of Customs, and he acknowledged receipt of it, on December 15, the day before the western farmers were heard. But, Sir, the report of the western farmers' meeting, the report which I hold in my hand, contains a resolution specifically setting forth the views of the fruit growers along the very lines of the other resolution which I have read. I will not read the resolution, it can be found in the earlier part of this report, and is from the Niagara District Fruit Growers' Association, and is along the same lines. It was brought before this House, or telegraphed, on the same day. Does the Prime Minister think that these subterfuges were creditable to him? Did he think they were likely to deceive those men who came up here? Should it ever be too late to keep faith? Should it ever be too late to fulfil promises? Should it ever be too late to do justice to the people of this country? Now, in addition to the resolution to which I have referred, there was another one passed almost a year ago by the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association. On January 7, before these proposals were put into effect, the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, in annual convention, passed this resolution:

That this representative meeting of British Columbia fruit growers is absolutely opposed to any reduction on fruit entering Canada, as such action will undoubtedly result in great loss to the fruit industry here in its present stage of development.

Now, when I was speaking here last night, urging upon the Minister of Customs that the condition of the fruit industry had not altered since 1907, except in the direction of making a still stronger case, the minister took a rather curious stand. Hon. gentlemen who were here will remember that he interrupted me and claimed that I was not fair in my presentation, and that the conditions were different, as we would now have free entry into the United States. In all, or nearly all, the resolutions recently dealt with, the consistent plea is for retention of our duty. Where we have asked for equalization or revision, it has been for revision upwards on a scale something like that of the United States. Equalization by the abolition of all duties would not be equalization, but it would be the absolute destruction of those interests. No fruit grower ever dreamed of abolishing the Canadian duties. Why, Sir, the minister was there for the express purpose of guarding those interests. If he, who should have known the facts, has allowed himself to be over-reached, or to be out-played by the great fruit interests of the United States, upon him and upon this government the responsibility must rest, and for ourselves we can only regard it as the most culpable negligence on their part. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to this point.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Customs is not here.

Mr. BURRELL. I very much regret that the Minister of Customs is not in his place, the Minister of Finance is not in his place, and the Prime Minister is not here either, when a great national industry is being menaced with destruction. I am glad my hon. friend has called attention to the fact that they are absent. I must say that when the only fruit grower in this House, representing this enormous industry, is doing his level best to put a moderate and fair presentation of the case before the House, and to protest against the proposal to destroy this industry, one of these ministers ought to be in his place to listen to the case.

Mr BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest to my hon. friend that he move that the committee rise until we can get some of the ministers present.

Mr. BURRELL. I understand that the Minister of Customs is not very far away. But I think the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is one that should commend itself to this committee, and I beg to move that the committee rise and report progress, or rise until a minister comes in.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can move that the committee rise and report progress, but he cannot move that it rise for the other reason given.

Mr. BURRELL. Well, I move, then—Ah, here is the minister. Now, Mr. Chairman, that we have got one of these gentlemen back in his seat, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to a point which he did not seem to understand last night. I regret, of course, that he has not been able to follow me when I quoted the resolutions which bore on that matter, but if he will carefully read the various resolutions to which I have referred, he will note that the one from the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, which he received and acknowledged the day before the western farmers' delegation came here, plainly put on record its 'unqualified disapproval of any reduction of duties,' and it states that the duties are now 'lower than they ought to be.' The resolution from the Niagara district, to which I have referred also, urges that the present duties, if continued, will be to the advantage of the country. The whole argument is against the abolition of duty. The British Columbia resolution urges in positive terms that no reduction be made. Now, Sir, these protests came to this government before the reciprocity proposals were known, and since the nature of these proposals has become known to every industry of Canada, and since the intention of the government has been disclosed, the government is aware that petition after petition, resolution after resolution, have been sent in, and all these are along the same lines, deprecating a reduction of duty, and pointing out the grave nature of the injury to the fruit industry of British Columbia especially. I have many of them here, and not a day passes without more of them coming. Here is one from a district where the fruit interests are as great as those of the whole province of Nova Scotia. I refer now to the valley of the Okanagan. I received this letter only yesterday, and there is with it a resolution from the Associated Boards of Trade of the Okanagan valley. I call upon the Minister of Customs, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Inland Revenue, who have all been down in that district, to pay particular attention to this resolution. I received this yesterday, but it was dated five or six days ago:

Associated Boards of Trade for the Okanagan Valley.
Office of the Secretary,
Vernon, B.C.

Copy of Resolution.

That the Associated Boards of Trade for the Okanagan Valley at their annual meeting now assembled urged in the strongest manner upon the Dominion government the absolute necessity of maintaining the present import duty on fruit as from the United States.

The fruit industry in British Columbia is in the infant stage with great possibilities which has been stated by responsible men will equal the lumber industry of the province, and at present stage requires careful handling and fostering. There are millions of dollars invested in the fruit industry in the province more than in the farm implement business of Ontario which has been nursed and protected; by so doing these factories of Canada are classed in this line as the leading industries of the world. Without this protection through their growing years these magnificent plants now employing thousands would never have existed. The same applies to the British Columbia fruit industry in which the growers have invested many millions of dollars, besides the very large investments of capital in irrigation systems running into millions of dollars.

The necessity of a protection duty outside the fostering of a young and promising industry, is the undeniable fact that the natural market for British Columbia, 'The Northwest Territories' is made the dumping ground for surplus fruit from the Northwestern States which already possess a large and fully developed fruit industry and the pernicious action of consignment is resorted to on a large scale. It is well taken that the fruit growers are entitled to have their rights guarded the same as has been the case for other enterprises.

Now, the Prime Minister knows something of the development in that country. The Minister of Agriculture has been over a considerable portion of the fruit districts of British Columbia. He stayed in the great peach district along the Okanagan lake. He knows, or ought to know, what positive and direct injury and discouragement will be inflicted on that section of British Columbia. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) told the House the other day that as a bachelor he had great difficulty in living on $9,500.

Mr. FISHER. I said I had no difficulty in doing it.

Mr. BURRELL. I certainly understood the hon. gentleman to suggest that he had all he could do to live comfortably on it.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. BURRELL. Did not the minister say that while he could live on $9,500 a year it was very difficult, indeed, for a minister with a family to properly support that family on that income?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I did.

Mr. BURRELL. Now I will say that if ministers with families are hard put to it to keep within their salaries of $9,500 a year, if $2,000 or $3,000 a year was struck off from the minister's salaries what a dismal howl of lamentation, what tearful, what indignant protests would we not hear from the Minister of Agriculture when he came to address the House? Yet, that is what the Minister of Agriculture and the government practically propose to do to the peach and other fruit growers of British Columbia—to knock off a large portion of their income. The ministers sit comfortably in their seats with their emoluments undiminished and yet with a light heart they hit right and left at other people's slender earnings. These are things that sink deeply into the mind and will not be very easily forgotten. I have under my hand here a number of resolutions along the same line as those to which I have referred. I am not going to read them all, but I will just mention some of them. Here is one of the Metchosin Farmers' Institute, in the riding of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith); the Victoria Fruit Growers' Association; the Hammond Fruit Association; the Kamloops district and the large and important Kootenay district embracing an enormous territory from all the sections of which there came delegates to a large meeting at Nelson, when a resolution of strongest protest was passed unanimously.

What has the government to say in reply? Last session I asked the hon. Minister of Customs—he will remember it—to remit the duty on an ambulance for hospital purposes in my own town. He replied that one firm was manufacturing ambulances, and that it would not be fair. We paid a duty of 35 per cent, amounting in that case to over $200. Does the minister still think it is a fair tariff which wipes off the duty on a whole industry and charges 35 per cent on such articles for the benefit of one man? Last fall I purchased a wagon which was needed quickly. It came from Washington state. I paid 25 per cent duty. Under the present proposals it will still be 22½ per cent. Does the Minister of Customs think it fair to charge me 22½ per cent on a wagon with which to help produce my fruit and wipe out the moderate protection of 13 cents a case on that fruit?

The Minister of Finance reduces the duty on agricultural implements by the insignificant amount of two and a half per cent and says:

We trust that while these reductions may not be all the farmers want, they will be evidence of the desire of the government to meet their views without doing any injustice to the industries of Canada.

Does he in truth consider that he has done us no injustice? In common with other men, what does the British Columbia fruit grower pay in the way of enhanced prices for other people's protection and benefit?

He produces food in the shape of fruit himself protected by a duty of from 10 to 20 per cent, and off goes his protection. He buys amongst other food products:

Coffee, on which he pays three cents a pound.

Canned vegetables—still a cent and a quarter.

Sugar—which a Conservative government made free and on which he has now to pay a heavy tax.

Meats, bacon, hams, on which he will still have to pay a cent and a quarter per pound.

Biscuits, on which he will still have to pay from 20 to 32½ per cent to help the Canadian manufacturer.

How as to his other necessaries?

On the buggy, with which he drives to his town, 35 per cent.

Machinery of various kinds severely taxed.

Nails, of which he uses large amounts, 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Cotton manufactures, 35 per cent and 25 per cent, even to Great Britain.

Silk manufactures, 30 per cent to England, and more to the United States manufacturer.

His gloves, his hat, his caps 35 per cent, and 22½ to Great Britain.

Think of it, Mr. Speaker; Great Britain, the author of our free institutions, the guardian of our liberties on all seas, penalised heavily in our own markets, a penalty which the fruit grower has to pay, while the products of his foreign rival enters without let or hindrance to cut the ground from under the feet of the British subject.

In Heaven's name, Mr. Speaker, do not let us play the hypocrite in this matter. If along the line of all our expenditures we have to pay the tax gatherer and get absolutely no protection for our own industry, it would be more manly, more honest, more just, to clean the slate, buy in the cheapest market, sell in the dearest, and resort to direct taxation.

The consumer in the prairie provinces is said to ask for free fruit. Sir, there was last year brought into Canada from the United States $4,634,268 worth of fruit. Of this amount $3,428,722 came in absolutely free. That is, for every dollar spent on fruit which is protected in the interest of the Canadian grower, there are three spent on fruit which bears no duty.

But having made it harder to enter our own market the government turns round and in this very same proposal creates difficulties for us in other markets. We have been endeavouring to get a market in Australia for our British Columbia apples and from my own valley we have already sent several carloads. Australia has a tariff against apples of two shillings a cental—75 cents a barrel. There was a reasonable hope that we could get this duty lowered by making concession ourselves, but Sir, under these very resolutions which we are discussing, the government proposes to wipe off our duties on Australian lumber, butter and all other things which are given to the United States free, thus rendering it out of our power to get a lower tariff against our apples by a friendly bargain with Australia.

To some small extent we are preparing for the English market, but Sir, anyone who knows anything at all of these matters, knows that special markets require special lines of products, special varieties, and the fruit grower with years of work behind him in growing his orchards cannot start all over again without disaster. In so far as they affect British Columbia horticulture the proposals are stamped with a lack of business acumen, an unfair discrimination, a wanton disregard of the interests affected which would be incredible if we had not the plain facts before us.

We may confidently believe that the prairie farmer, when he understands this question, will not harbour any wish to injure the business of his brother farmer to the west. The average man in the prairies would probably not buy two barrels of apples a year. If he paid the whole duty, he would pay 80 cents. For 80 cents a year would he be willing to inflict a blow, however slight, to extend discouragement, however small, to the farmer of British Columbia? I cannot so believe. Surely when we have problems of an extraordinary kind to face in the great Orient it is absolutely vital to the British farmer in the three great prairie provinces, that our waste spaces should be peopled by men of his own white race. Facing the teeming millions of the Orient, we have in the future, perhaps in the not far distant future, problems of a grave, of a portentous nature. Can Canadians on the prairies afford to withhold a helping hand to an industry which is doing more than all other agencies combined to fill the vast interior of our province with a class of men who stand for Anglo-Saxon civilization, who stand for Canadian solidarity, who stand staunchly for imperial citizenship. I cannot believe that, understanding this question in its full import, the men of the prairies would endorse a proposal which, though it may involve what may seem to some a slight injury, yet is an undoubted injury in that, it checks rapid development of fruit-growing and the farming population. If I did believe that a savage hunt for the dollar was the dominating principle of our life—that every man and every province would ruthlessly pursue their own interests absolutely regardless of the hurt to others—that the knife was to be plunged into a Canadian brother for the sake of personal gain, then, Sir, I should indeed despair of our citizenship and could but say: God help this confederation which was built up on very different and very much more noble principles.

Sir, why did British Columbia enter confederation? There was much to lose, there was much opposition—but the deep-rooted, the passionate desire to see a great highway from east to west, in order that scattered peoples holding the same traditional faiths, might become one nation, overcame every obstacle. The echoing thunder of the first transcontinental train as it swept through the Fraser canyon to the Pacific coast, meant much for Canada. It meant not only that it was possible for east to trade with west, it stood for the close linking of province to province, of brother to brother, in ties of sentiment as well as ties of commerce.

I have said we lost much. That is too long a story to tell now, but I may remind the House that, owing to the exceptional and difficult character of our great mountainous country, we have faced a burden of administrative expenditure utterly out of proportion to any other province in the Dominion. We received an absolutely inadequate compensation financially, and that fact has been recognized, though somewhat late in the day, by the Prime Minister. But I will say to the Minister of Finance especially, that we in British Columbia accepted the responsibilities, the obligations, the burdens of confederation, though we have tried and shall still try to get them honourably and equitably adjusted. But the Minister of Finance with less reason, with far less justification than ourselves, was the man, who himself, preached a fiery and bitter crusade throughout his own province, with disruption of confederation as his text. He, of all men, knowing at least something of our difficulties, should be the last man in Canada to add another pound to our burden.

My right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, cherishes a grievance against British Columbia. He has himself to blame for the fact that the whole province is solidly arrayed against him. But, Sir, additional injustice meted out to the people of the far west is not the way to heal old wounds. No one should know better than the Prime Minister, that the alienation of a whole province is a bitter and irrefutable proof that his government has not dealt justly with British Columbia. No additional harshness of treatment can strengthen my right hon. friend's hold on the popular heart, it will lead inevitably to the further weakening of himself and his party throughout Canada.

Sir, this is a movement, confessedly initiated by the United States for their own purpose. It is in some respects a ceding of our own control over our own destiny. If consummated, it will loosen and not tighten existing ties between province and province. We who have for years purchased hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of products from our prairie friends will find ourselves compelled to buy from the immediate south, from the foreign producer. It does irreparable harm to our interprovincial trade—it lessens the national feeling of the people of Canada and turns their energies in new directions. It means the exploiting of our natural resources and raw materials by a people who will expend their own energies and labour in the varied work of turning out the finished article. If it is an economic truth that every import must be paid for by an export, then our natural products, finding their market in the United States, will soon be paid for by a great flow of their manufactured goods.

If it has a shattering effect on our interprovincial trade and puts a new face on our national life, it also foreshadows possible changes in our political future. I have only to allude to the item in to-day's paper, already referred to, the statement that the annexation of Canada, was the keynote of Mr. Clarke, Speaker of the House, in whipping the members of his party into line in support of the reciprocity agreement. Not once or twice, but thrice, did he boldly declare: We are preparing to annex Canada. In the light of these words, there is some ground for that noble and passionate appeal in the closing words of the speech delivered yesterday by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who said:

> This is our land, and please God we will keep it for our children and our children's children. This proposal cuts square across our national ideas and will endanger them. We should think well before entering upon it. The path we are about to enter leads from home; it should not be entered upon lightly.

I do not say that we in British Columbia are more imperial, more anxious than our fellow Canadians in other provinces to strengthen the bonds which bind us to the mother country, but British Columbia, of all the great provinces which form this confederation, would be most loth to see any step taken which would conceivably end in sharing the political future of that great country to the south, and in this proposal, we see nothing that strengthens the grip of hands across the sea, but much that weakens it. The pact was unnecessary, the arrangements as a whole, have dangerous tendencies, and the scheme involves a grave injustice to one large body of Canadian producers and citizens.

No redress for plain grievances. No remedies for obvious injuries; take it or leave it, says the government. Have it all, or have none. Sir, I say for myself then, and I think I speak for my constituents too, I want none of it.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). Mr. Chairman, like every hon. member in this House I realize the magnitude and the importance of the question now before you and the great influence which it will, in all human probability, exert upon the future of this country. I happen, in this debate, to follow my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) who has devoted by far the greater part of his remarks, to one particular branch of the subject, namely the effect of the present proposals upon the fruit industry in this country. I do not for a moment claim to have the knowledge of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo either in regard to fruit or in regard to general conditions in British Columbia. It was, I believe, arranged that my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), who is at present indisposed and has sickness in his family, should reply to the speech of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo, and I think that I had better leave that task to my hon. friend from Nanaimo, who expects shortly to be present again in his seat. But there are a great many general principles involved in this question which can be, and should be discussed by members from the various sections of Canada, not as they pertain to local or special interests, but as they bear upon the whole trade and future development of this great country. This is the eleventh session that I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this House. I represent a riding in the central portion of western Ontario having a population equally divided between rural and urban. The whole county of Wellington may be said to be a fair average of the counties in the western portion of the province. Its industries are similar to those of neighbouring counties such as Waterloo, Oxford, Perth, Brant, Huron, Grey, Bruce, Dufferin and other counties. These are all to a considerable extent manufacturing counties, but to a very much larger extent agricultural counties. The agriculture carried on in my own county is not the agriculture which is carried on in the west. It is not to any large extent a grain-producing county. What grain we do produce is largely consumed in the feeding of live-stock, which may be said to be the leading farm operation of the county. Consequently the county of Wellington is very greatly interested in the proposals now before the Chair. The grain we produce is fed to a high-bred class of cattle. We raise beef cattle for the supply of the local market, the Toronto market, and very largely, at certain times of the year, the Ottawa market ; but by far the larger portion of our cattle industry is concerned with foreign markets. We have in the county of Wellington a large class of pure-bred cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry. A casual drive through any part of the county of Wellington during the summer time would serve as an eye-opener to many people in regard to the conditions as they exist among the rural population of that county. I would like to take my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on a short trip through the riding of South Wellington, and let him see the class of people who are engaged in the great farming industry there. I realize that these proposals affect my constituents directly. I realize also that I represent a city population of 16,000 people, living in the city of Guelph, as well as five villages, each containing some manufacturing industry besides the ordinary village population. I believe that the various classes of the population are all vitally interested in these proposals ; and, having given them my best consideration and judgment, I have come to the conclusion that it is of the greatest interest to the county from which I come, and to all counties similarly situated in the western portion of the province of Ontario, that this measure be adopted by this House.

In this instance I desire to follow the lead and the good example set by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in dealing with this question. He discussed it in what I consider the best parliamentary form—not from the standpoint of party politics at all ; but he gave us what I assume was from his point of view his reasoned judgment—his conclusions and the reasons for those conclusions ; and while I do not agree with him, I do not think I can do better than follow his manner and method in presenting my case to the House. I may say also for the hon. member of the opposition who also preceded me (Mr. Martin Burrell), that he argued his case from his point of view without that asperity, that bitterness, which we frequently have in this House over questions which should be argued rather on their merits. I regret that I cannot endorse or approve of the method adopted by my hon. friend from North Toronto, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place this afternoon. It might be the part of presumption for me to offer any suggestions to the hon. member for North Toronto as to parliamentary style or as to the method or manner of presenting his case ; but were he in his seat I would tell him that if his speech were stripped of its rhetoric, if the feathers and the plumage were taken from it, and we came down to the facts he presented and the arguments he sought to make, we would find that the speech was perhaps the most meagre and insubstantial that he has delivered in this House. I hope to be able to show before I conclude that some of the arguments he presented are absolutely without foundation, or, if they have a foundation, he certainly did not reveal that foundation to the House. Some of them are ridiculous and some of them absolute absurdities. I believe that the hon. member for North Toronto himself realized that, and hence we find him in his best declamatory style, a style of parliamentary eloquence which during the last half-century has, I think, rather dropped out—if not in this House, certainly in the Imperial House of Commons, where all that they ask is the facts and the arguments, waiving the declamation.

It has been said in this debate that it would be well for the government to withdraw this measure for the present. It has been suggested that the House has not had sufficient information on the subject. I take issue with that statement. This question has been very prominently before Canada for a year at least, since March, 1910, in the newspapers, on the platforms, in political arguments at various places. Every man of ordinary intelligence knew that it would be a subject for discussion in this House, and I am sure that hon. members of this House have canvassed the situation and canvassed it pretty thoroughly. That of course was only as the question presented itself in abstract form, but since the 26th January last, we have had it presented in concrete form, with all the details and information necessary to enable us to give it full consideration and form an independent and calm judgment upon it. The ordinary channels have been open to all hon. members. We have been educated by the press, by the representations of deputations, by communications from our constituents and by petitions of various kinds, and we have had at our disposal a very complete summary of the whole case in the tariff blue-book handed to the House some ten days ago, so that if any hon. gentleman should complain that he has not sufficient information on the subject, I can only say that he has not shown the necessary energy and perseverance, because otherwise he would have had all the information he could possibly desire to enable him to pass an intelligent judgment on the question. It has been said also that there is no demand for any such measure. Where is the demand, has been asked? Whence does it come? Why, it almost seems waste of time to answer such a question, but for the purpose of my argument I desire to do so; and I state without hesitation that there has not been a period in this country since 1866 down to the present year of grace when there has not been a positive demand in Canada for better trade relations with the United States. And that demand has not been a dormant one, but one made public in many ways and on many occasions. Nor has it been the demand of one political party or one political leader, but from every government and from the whole population of Canada; and I desire, even at the expense of a few moments of our valuable time, to relate something of the history of that demand.

In the first place the old reciprocity treaty was abrogated in 1866. Sir Alexander Gault and Sir William Howland representing Canada, and Mr. Smith and Mr. Henry representing Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, proceeded to Washington and remained there a couple of weeks before the abrogation and pleaded to get a new treaty. In this they failed. Confederation came in 1867, and our first tariff Act in 1868 expressed our demand for reciprocity by containing a clause stating our readiness to enter into such a treaty. In 1869 another demand was made on Washington by the government of Sir John Macdonald. That government despatched Sir John Rose to Washington to obtain reciprocity, but he also failed. In 1871, I think it was, another deputation went to Washington, headed by Sir John Macdonald, when the treaty of Washington was negotiated, and again a demand was made for reciprocity and again refused. The government of Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, which came into office in 1874, sent a deputation to Washington with Hon. George Brown at its head. As the result of their mission, a draft treaty was submitted to the Senate of the United States which that body refused to pass. In 1879, there came a change of government, and the tariff policy of the Conservative government contained a statutory offer to the United States for reciprocal tariff legislation or reciprocity. Then we come down to 1891 when Sir John Macdonald put himself on formal record in regard to that matter in his address to the electors of that year, a copy of which has recently been published in the Montreal 'Gazette.' Commenting on the policy of the Liberal party of that day, he said of the policy of the Conservative party towards the United States.

We are perfectly willing to trade with you on equal terms. We are desirous of having a fair reciprocity treaty, but we will not consent to open our markets to you while yours remain closed to us.

In 1891, after the Conservative victory at the polls, we had another deputation going to Washington, and on this deputation, was my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) then Minister of Finance. Nothing again was accomplished. The American authorities still turned a deaf ear to our requests, and these gentlemen were not able to make any impression on them. In 1893 was held the great Liberal convention in this city of Ottawa in which a reciprocity plank was placed in the platform as one of the things which the Liberal party would attempt to obtain if returned to power. They were returned in 1896, and in 1898 sent a deputation to Washington for the very purpose of securing a reciprocity treaty. That deputation also failed in its mission.

That then is the record up to 1899 of both parties with regard to reciprocity with the United States. Now the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that in the year 1899 the leader of the present government, the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), declared in this House and afterwards in England that he had turned his back on Washington, that he would no longer seek reciprocity with the United States, but that he would endeavour to make trade arrangements with the rest of the world and particularly the British Empire. Well, there is this to be said, that my right hon. friend was the first Prime Minister of Canada who took that dignified stand with regard to negotiations with Washington. Previous governments had made offers and had been refused, and sometimes the refusal was not couched in the most polite terms, as my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) could tell us if he would. The only proper, dignified, statesmanlike course to pursue was that taken by the right hon. the leader of this government. If any further attempts, he declared, were made to obtain reciprocity, the offer would have to come from Washington and not from Canada. We waited many years during which we made no further demand or request, nor did any come from them, but at the end of ten years a request did come from Washington, and at the end of eleven years that request is now before the House in concrete form. In the face of these facts, how can the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) or the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), argue that there has not been a positive demand in this country for such a measure since 1866.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that times have changed, that we are now in the year 1911, and not in 1866, and that conditions have changed. True they have, but neither geographical nor climatic conditions have changed. The nature of our products has not changed nor has the character of the products of the United States, but our lines of transportation east and west and north and south have been perfected, and if there was good reason for a demand for reciprocity in 1866, there is just as good or better in the year 1911.

Just a word as to the proposal itself. The proposal does not come in the form of a treaty, and I think it is well that it does not. Had it been in the form of a hard and fast binding treaty for 25 or 50 years, I could have seen some force in the argument that we had tied our hands and could not enter into reciprocal arrangements with other countries and could not improve our relations within the empire with regard to trade matters. It came in the form of a simple international bargain based on good faith. I think that is one of the best features of the measure as presented to the House. The terms of the measure can all be taken from a single clause in the letter addressed by the hon. Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs to the Secretary of State of the United States, on the 21st January, 1911. These are the words :

> Nevertheless, it is distinctly understood that we do not attempt to bind for the future the action of the United States Congress or the parliament of Canada, but that each of these authorities shall be absolutely free to make any change of tariff policy or of any other matter covered by the present arrangement that may be deemed expedient.

Surely, that is clear, plain and simple; and it is a statement which is formally confirmed by the letter of the Secretary of State of the United States. And that is all the bargain or agreement between the two countries at this time.

Now, treaties may be good at times and they may be bad at times. Treaties do involve, sometimes, international entanglements of an unforseen kind. Treaties sometimes involve or cause subsequent embarrassments. A treaty made between a country having the wealth and population of the United States on the one hand and Canada on the other hand might, some day, prove an embarrassment to this country and an embarrassment to Great Britain. So, if my opinion is worth anything, I give my opinion that the present arrangement, based on the mutual good faith of both countries, and, as we hope, for the mutual advantage, of both countries, is the best possible arrangement, so far as Canada is concerned, in the way of reciprocal trade arrangement with the United States.

It has been argued: Why do not you wait until the colonial conference has met in London this year; something new may be developed there, something new may be evolved. The answer is that we have not made any hard and fast treaty; no binding arrangement has been made; our hands are not tied, our hands are free; and, if anything better for the interests of Canada shall be developed or evolved at the colonial conference, Canada is perfectly free to take advantage of it. These are the reasons which lead me to the conclusion that the present arrangement, resting as it does on a mutual bargain, is by all means the best form in which to put an arrangement with the United States.

It has been said by some that Canada has all the best of the bargain and by others that Canada has all the worst of the bargain. I do not believe that arguments of that kind will appeal to any reasonable man. A bargain has always two sides to it, and unless the advantage of the arrangement be mutual, it will not last a twelve month. We cannot have it all our own way, the other contracting party must have some of the advantages. It is very much as was said by David Harum in the book of that name: 'When you make a horse trade, it is always well to let the other fellow get something out of it.' I do not think that a one-sided bargain would have been of any advantage to us at all. But what I do say is that the arrangement presented before us will give Canada tremendous advantages over the position which she now occupies, and, on the other hand, I am ready to admit that the United States may get some advantage also. But I do think that the advantage preponderates on the side of Canada very, very largely.

In order to place my case connectedly before the House, I would like to examine the trade position of Canada to-day? I do not intend to impose a lot of figures on the House, and I shall only refer to them in round numbers and as rapidly as I can; but I think that it is necessary, if one is to have a proper appreciation of the effect of the present proposal, to have regard to our present conditions. I find that the total trade of Canada of last year, exports and imports, amounted to $693,000,000: based on home consumption, $649,000,000. And the astonishing, even startling, fact is that $580,000,000 of our total trade is done with the United Kingdom and the United States. Our export and import trade with Great Britain is $245,000,000, and our export and import trade with the United States, $336,000,000. In other words, 90 per cent of our whole foreign trade is done with two countries and only ten per cent with the rest of the world. As this trade proposal or agreement affects the trade with our two best customers, it is of far more consequence that we should scan it very carefully to see that in what we may now do we injure neither our trade with the one nor our trade with the other of them.

Mr. GUTHRIE.

It is well also to note the nature of the trade we have with Great Britain, and the nature of the trade we have with the United States. From Great Britain we import $95,000,000 worth of goods, and to Great Britain we export $149,000,000 worth. From the United States we import $223,000,000 worth and to the United States we export $113,000,000 worth. In other words, Great Britain buys from us 54 per cent of all our exports, but the United States buys from us 40 per cent of our exports. Great Britain sells to us 20 per cent of all our imports, and the United States sells to us 60 per cent of all our imports. Now, it is frequently said that the balance of trade, as between Canada and the United States, is entirely against Canada. It is also argued and urged— and was urged by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax)—that we have given Great Britain no real preference at all, that all we ever gave was a sham preference, a pure fiction. I must say that, on the tariff rates which my hon. friend gave to the House, and which I believe to be approximately correct, there is, apparently, a discrimination against Great Britain in favour of the United States. But I think the leader of the opposition should have been candid enough to give the reason, because he knows the reason and knows that the discrimination is not a real discrimination but an apparent one. You may examine the rates of duty which we charge in Canada, and you will find in the Trade and Commerce report, page 15, the following average rates: On all imports entering Canada from all countries, the average rate is 16·416; on all dutiable imports coming into Canada from all countries, 26·713. On all imports coming from Great Britain, the average rate is 18·914; on all dutiable imports from Great Britain the average rate is 25·107. On all imports from the United States, the average rate is only 13·570 and on all dutiable imports from the United States, the rate is 24·837. And the difference on total imports as between the United States and Great Britain on goods coming into Canada, is now 5¼ per cent in favour of the United States, and the average difference on all dutiable imports is one-fourth of one per cent, or 25 cents on $100 in favour of the United States. So that there is an apparent discrimination in favour of the United States and not a preference for Great Britain. But, as I say, it is apparent and not real. The reason for it is not hard to find. The reason for the apparent discrimination is to be found in the list of free imports. On our total imports from Great Britain, amounting to $95,000,000, only $23,000,000 came in on the free list.

On our total imports from the United States, amounting to $223,000,000, over $98,000,000 come in on the free list.

When you average the free and the dutiable goods together, an apparent discrimination in favour of the United States appears, because the United States supplies to us so much of our free imports. Well, some one says, why don't you buy them from England? Why do you buy them from the United States? The reason is obvious, and if any one will glance over the trade and navigation returns of this country he cannot fail to be struck with the reason almost in the first two or three pages of that report. Of the free imports I will take only a few of the large items. The imports of corn amount to $4,600,000; we get that all direct from the United States free, and it is not produced in, nor is it exported from, Great Britain. We want it here to feed our hogs and cattle. Hon members will remember that prior to 1896, under the Conservative government, the farmers paid 7 cents a bushel to get that corn to feed their stock. I wish the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was here now, because I never look at that corn item without thinking of the anomaly which he permitted to exist in the government of which he was Finance Minister. He charged the farmers 7 cents a bushel to bring in corn to feed to their export cattle, and he allowed the distillers to bring in corn free to make whisky for export purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? If I understand him correctly, he said that there was an apparent difference in favour of the United States, but it was only apparent, and he gave the free imports from Great Britain and the United States to show that the duty charged against the United States was only apparent. But leaving out the free imports entirely, when he considers the dutiable goods separately, the balance is really in favour of the United States; in other words, the duty was a little lower against the United States than against Great Britain.

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is correct; I will come to that.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be so, is it not real?

Mr. GUTHRIE. No, it is not, as I will show presently. Do not anticipate me. Before I leave that question of importing corn for the distillers, I must say that after a time that anomaly in the tariff was removed. The people in my county who imported dutiable corn to manufacture export cattle did not like their neighbours in the adjoining county of Waterloo to have the privilege of importing free corn for the manufacture of export whisky, and the present junior judge of the county of Wellington informs me that he, as the leading prohibitionist of this House on the Conservative side, called the government's attention to it, and they took it off.

Mr. BLAIN. Which government did this?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The government of which the hon. member for North Toronto was Finance Minister. The next item of importation of free raw material from the United States is anthracite coal and coke, amounting to $16,000,000. Then comes binder twine, $1,750,000, made free for the benefit of the farmers. Then comes manilla grass, or hemp, or fibre, $1,000,000, I think chiefly used in the penitentiaries. Then comes raw cotton, $9,360,000. That is not a product that England exports, but one that she imports in tremendous quantities. The next item is tropical fruits, $3,700,000. Then, crude rubber, and rubber sheets for manufacture in rubber factories, a little over four millions. Then lumber imported, chiefly hardwood, $8,000,000. Raw tobacco, $3,115,000; metal ores and minerals, $16,000,000. These are some of the items on the free list. You can go over the free list of goods imported into this country, and you will find that about seventy or seventy-five million dollars worth come in from the United States free of duty which are not the product of Great Britain at all, and are not goods that she exports.

Now, in regard to dutiable goods, there is an apparent discrimination of 25 cents on the hundred dollars, and how is that accounted for? It is accounted for by reason of this fact, that this government, and, for aught I know, its predecessors, considered that the manufacturers of Canada should be allowed to bring in partly manufactured goods at nominal rates of duty, largely goods used in iron and steel industries. I know of goods coming into Guelph by the carload for the manufacture of an article of iron called skelp; it comes in sheets at the rate of five per cent, and comes in on the list of dutiable goods, but the duty is placed at a nominal amount. If you look over the trade and navigation returns you will find item after item of this kind going into the manufacture of implements, into manufactures of hardware, and into the manufactures of various kinds of machinery, on which the rates run from as low as 2 to 5, 7 and 8 per cent. Then there is the matter of agricultural implements, on which the rate is only 17½ per cent. We do not get any of these goods from England. So that in the general average there is an apparent discrimination in favour of the United States to the extent of 25 cents on the $100. But is that a test? Here is the test: Take goods that both countries manufacture and export, take goods of common manufacture which Canada buys from the United States and Great Britain, and see whether there is a preference or not. Woollens or manufacture of woollens—last year we bought from Great Britain $19,000,000, and from the United States $925,000. Is there not a discrimination in favour of Great Britain there? And so on with the other articles in this list :

	From Great Britain.	From United States.
Silks and manufactures of	$ 2,500,000	$ 571,000
Ribbons..	650,000	106,000
Oil cloth..	1,000,000	274,000
Flax, hemp, jute and manufactures thereof..	3,000,000	210,000
Fancy articles..	1,500,000	740,000
Earthenware and china.	1,100,000	269,000
Manufactures of cotton..	12,500,000	3,250,000

Now, that, I submit, is the test. There are goods which both countries manufacture in their complete form and send into Canada, on which we have given a British preference of one-third less rate of duty on goods coming from Great Britain. Now, compare the sales made by Great Britain and the United States of that class of goods which they manufacture in common, and see whether there is a real preference or an imaginary one. I have only enumerated nine of the larger items, and I find that in the nine items the volume of imports from Great Britain is $42,000,000, and the volume of imports from the United States is $6,-000,000. The United States goods come on an average five or six hundred miles, and Great Britain's goods come on an average of about 3,500 miles.

I am going to turn now to another definite question involved in the proposed arrangement. A great portion of the speech of the member for North Toronto yesterday and the day before, was directed to an effort to show that you are interfering with the British preference, and generally wiping that out, that you are interfering indeed with our imperial standing. I propose to show that we are not interfering with it, and I submit that he gave no facts that would convince any reasonable man that we are interfering with it. In the first place, I know that he has devoted time and attention to this subject. I know that he is a man very capable of examining this question from every point of view. I believe he has left no stone unturned. He has gone into it from top to bottom, turned it over and examined it. Taking his speech, as reported in 'Hansard,' at page 3405, I find he says that the total trade to be displaced or affected will be $95,000,000, that the arrangement will affect an import trade of $47,800,000 and an export trade of $47,300,000. I do not think his figures are correct, but I will, for the purpose of my argument, give my figures which are largely in excess of the figures which he quoted; so that, if his argument be correct, it will be more correct and more imposing than the presentation which he put before the House. I do not know where he got his import figures, which, as given by the blue-book, are $40,000,000. Adding to that $650,-000 for pulp wood and paper under a special item, the amount would be about $41,-000,000. Then he places the imports which come to us under the schedules under discussion at $47,800,000. He has increased the amount by about 18 or 20 per cent, but I do not know that that will make any difference in his argument. As I say, I do not know where he got his figures. I submit that the present arrangement will not affect merely $47,000,-000 of our exports, but that the amount of our exports to be affected is the amount set out in the blue-book, called Tariff Relations, at page 68 and that is $205,000,000 and not $47,000,000 as stated by the hon. member for North Toronto. That $205,000,-000 is made up of exports as follows: To Great Britain, $127,000,000; to the United States, $49,000,000; and to all other countries in the world, $28,000,000. Take these figures as set out in the blue-book, which are entirely favourable to the contention of my hon. friend, and arguing from that basis, let me show first the situation with regard to schedule 'A' that, I know my hon. friend must have gone through from top to bottom, because he counted the items. He says there are 69 items in schedule 'A,' 39 of which have been untouched—not a very good word to express what he meant, a word that might be very misleading to many people. In regard to 30, he says the duty has been wiped out. What he means by 'untouched' I do not know. What he should have said was, that there was not any duty on them, because they have always been on the free list, and the other 30 articles have been placed on the free list. But, in looking over schedule 'A' I found that there were 44, sections, subdivisions or groups, schedule 'A' being the free list, and that 30 of these groups relate exclusively to natural products, that 11 of these groups relate exclusively to partly manufactured goods, which come into this country as raw material for the benefit of the manufacturer, and that only three of the articles under schedule 'A' consist of manufactured goods. These three articles are (1) cream separators, which have always been free; (2) type setting machines of which we only got from Great Britain last year, $177 worth, and (3) paper, paper being a special item by itself. These are all the manufactured goods included in this schedule. Cream separators always were free, and I do not know that they should always have been free, because I have been down here with one or two deputations to get a duty put on them. I thought they were machinery just as much as other things were, or that they should properly be classed as agricultural implements, but the government persistently refused to place a duty on them. They always have been free and if they did come in from Great Britain, they would still come free. Type setting machines never did come from Great Britain, and as we only imported $177 worth last year, we could not have brought in any complete linotype machine. Wood pulp never came from Great Britain, but paper did. Paper to the extent of $7,302 came from Great Britain last year. What are our total imports under schedule 'A'? Last year we received of goods now under schedule 'A' $13,894,000 worth. Of that $13,000,000 worth we received from Great Britain, $4,190,000, and from the United States $9,163,000. One third of the goods coming into this country last year now under schedule 'A' came from Great Britain and two thirds from the United States. The reduction in duty, by reason of the change and by reason of placing the thirty articles mentioned by the hon. member for North Toronto on the free list, will be, on the trade of last year, $1,400,000, or about 17½ cents per head of our population, placing it at $8,000,000.

Now, my hon. friend's objection was that you have injured the trade of Great Britain, that you have displaced the trade of Great Britain by the effect of your free list embraced in schedule 'A'. I am not going to the extent of quoting his language: it can be found in 'Hansard.' It was a most extraordinary statement, and one for which he had not the slightest foundation. If we examine the list we must be convinced that the hon. member for North Toronto wanted to cover up the scanty foundation by a wealth of words, where he was at a loss for argument. What is that trade? We import from England $4,190,000 worth. It is nearly all made up of the single item of rolled iron and steel plates, amounting to $3,490,000. That is on the free list, but that always was in the free list and Great Britain sent that amount into Canada last year as a free article. Will that be displaced?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That is not free.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Not from Great Britain?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is from Great Britain.

Mr. AMES. From Great Britain, but there is 5 per cent, when imported from the United States, on that article.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I understand that it was a free article from Great Britain, and I also thought it was free from the United States, but I will not be sure about that.

Mr. AMES. It was free from Great Britain, but there is a duty of five per cent from the United States.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It came in on the free list from Great Britain and from the United States it came in with a five per cent duty.

Mr. AMES. It was last year free from Great Britain, but there was a duty of five per cent when imported from the United States. Now that five per cent is wiped off, and it is free from both countries.

Mr. GUTHRIE. That represents about seven eighths of the free list embraced in schedule 'A'. I am not going to take up all the items; I only propose to deal with the larger ones. The next item that I shall mention is that of grapes, of which we imported from Great Britain $104,000 worth. Every one knows, who knows anything about the kind of grapes we import from Great Britain, that they are the grapes that retail at $1.50 a pound, or $2.50 a bunch, and are not produced in Canada. They only had a duty of 1½ per cent and the duty amounted to nothing in comparison with the value of the grapes. That trade will not be displaced. Then, we take vegetables and beans. Of vegetables, we imported $91,000 worth. These are not the vegetables we grow in Canada. I am informed that almost the whole value is represented by the one item of Spanish onions, which can only be produced in tropical countries and which are shipped into Canada via Great Britain. Another article is beans, by which, they tell me, is meant Lima beans, which represent an import of $64,000. These are not produced in Canada; they come from South America and are shipped into Canada via Great Britain. Therefore, no trade will be affected with respect to these articles.

Take the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto, that when duties are reduced down to 10, 12 or 15 per cent, your preference amounts to nothing. I say that under that argument rolled iron and steel plates will come in from Great Britain just as freely as they came in before. These items that I have enumerated amount to almost the entire free list, as represented by schedule 'A'. What is that to the total imports into this country from Great Britain—$4,191,000 out of a total of $95,000,000? In all probability,—indeed I would stake my reputation upon it—in two or three years, as our purchasing power increases our purchases of goods under that same schedule 'A' of which we now buy $4,191,000 will be largely increased and not diminished.

Now, let me look at schedules 'B' and

'D.' These are the schedules of goods on which there has been a tariff reduction. The total tariff reduction is $1,095,000, or about 12½ cents per head upon the population of Canada, and if my estimate is correct it is about 3§ per cent on the average. Now, is that going to seriously affect trade either with Great Britain or the United States? It cannot affect it with Great Britain because the duties are maintained at substantial amounts and Great Britain has one-third off that duty, which constitutes a decided preference. It cannot materially affect trade with the United States or imports from the United States because there is not enough reduction in any instance to allow American manufacturers to compete with Canadian manufacturers. If we have to-day a duty of 30 per cent against the United States upon manufactured goods of any quality and it is reduced to 27 per cent, the increase of imports will be small at most because the reduction of duty has been small, and that argument applies to all the goods comprised in schedules 'B' and 'D.' What do sections 'B' and 'D amount to? Last year all the goods enumerated in sections 'B' and 'D' imported into Canada amounted to $26,500,000. Of these we imported from the United States $23,196,000, and from Great Britain only $2,196,000. Our imports from Great Britain amounted to practically nothing, $2,196,000 out of $26,000,000 of goods included in these schedules. I maintain, and I think I can maintain it in the face of any argument, that there is every probability that next year and the year after, and the year after that we will have an annual increase in our purchases from Great Britain of the very goods mentioned in schedules 'B' and 'D.' When you look at the schedules of the goods that come in from Great Britain you will find they are made up nearly all of goods that sell on their own brand or patent. By reason of their inherent virtue they not only come into this country but in the face of a 40 per cent to 50 per cent duty they go into the United States and are sold there. The whole list comes to only $2,196,000. How is that made up? Biscuits and confectionery make up $522,000 in that list. Do you mean to say that one, or two, or three, or four cents duty will affect the sale in this country or in the United States of Huntley & Palmer's wares, made in Great Britain? Go into any large purveyor's store in New York like Park & Telford's, and see the magnificent display of Huntley & Palmer's biscuits and confectionery. They are there in the face of what? A duty of 40 per cent to 50 per cent. Is there any reason why they should not come into Canada in preference to any goods from the United States with one-third tariff advantage over the United States goods?

Take another large item, pickles, Crosse & Blackwell, Lea & Perrin, Holbrooke, these are the names and brands that sell goods, and they sell them by reason of their inherent quality. They sell in the United States in the face of the highest kind of competition and of very stiff tariffs. Is there any reason to suppose that these goods will not come into Canada just as freely as before?

Then take cutlery, of which we import from Great Britain $223,854. People who know, or are supposed to know, tell me that English cutlery retains its place in the markets of Canada by reason of its brand, by reason of its name, its reputation and its inherent virtue. They tell me also that the cutlery from the United States never did have any large market in Canada, the chief competitor of British cutlery here being Germany, and Germany does not receive any advantage under this reciprocity arrangement with the United States. There is no reason to suppose that the cutlery imports from Great Britain will be reduced one dollar if this arrangement is brought into force.

Imports of automobiles from Great Britain amount to $106,000. These are all controlled by patents and a man who wants an English motor car can get an English motor car, the question of duty does not, as a rule, enter into the consideration.

Another item is musical instruments of which we import $118,000. They are sold largely on the reputation of the maker of the instrument. I think these are largely band instruments, and if English band instruments are better than American, and I believe they are, they will probably come in, in just as great quantities or greater, because they still retain their one-third preference, and we will have far more purchasing power to buy musical instruments than we have had in the past.

I have gone over only a few items but if they are figured out they amount to almost three-quarters of our total imports under schedules 'B' and 'D.' Will the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) or any other member rise in his place and state as his considered judgment that the British manufacturers are going to be injured by schedules 'B' and 'D.' Can they be injured? They will retain their position in regard to the tariff with their one-third preference. Nearly all goods mentioned in schedules 'B' and 'D' are sold by virtue of the reputation of the makers, by virtue of patents, trade marks, designs, &c. I think we have every reason to believe that as our prosperity grows we will import very much more of these same articles than we have ever imported in the past.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) grew very eloquent on the question and even went so far as to charge the Minister of Customs, not directly but indirectly, with something like a breach of faith in a cablegram which he had sent to the Colonial office in Great Britain, setting forth that the proposed changes in the tariff between Canada and the United States would not interfere with the British preference. The statement made by Mr. Asquith, the Premier of Great Britain was :

The American-Canadian agreement had been carefully watched by the British Ambassador at Washington on behalf of British interests and he has been assured that, so far as British imports into Canada are concerned, the British preference would be scrupulously maintained.

I submit that that statement is true in substance and in fact, and I submit further that Mr. Bryce is perfectly satisfied on behalf of Great Britain with the arrangement that has been made. The official correspondence sets forth that Mr. Bryce was a party to it. Let me, in passing, read to the House a clipping which has been handed to me, taken from the Manchester 'Guardian,' a very influential paper published in Great Britain. It reads :

The whole policy of Mr. Bryce, the most successful British Ambassador at Washington in our generation, has been—if we may speak of an Ambassador's policy—directed towards drawing closer the bonds between Canada and the United States. He has been called the first Canadian Ambassador at Washington, and his policy has been in the best interests of Canada. But it has been governed primarily by British interests. Canada, in British world policy, is a gage of friendship between England and America. England gains a friend by every act that brings Canada into closer relations with the United States. There is no rivalry between England and the United States for the affections of Canada. She will best serve our policy by broadening the basis of her own prosperity and by a cordial policy of friendship with the United States.

Coming to the end of my argument on that point my statement is, and I am absolutely convinced in my own mind that I am correct in what I state, that in no way, shape or form, in no way general or particular, are we interfering with British trade interests in Canada by the proposals now before the Chair, and that if these negotiations when passed into law have any bearing whatever upon the status of British trade in Canada, it will be a beneficial effect, that our imports from Great Britain will not decrease ; there is no reason to make them decrease. As our prosperity increases, our imports from Great Britain will increase year after year. So that the action of the Minister of Finance in sending his telegram, and the statement of the Premier of Great Britain founded on that telegram, were strictly in accordance with the facts.

Let me touch upon another of the more important points made by my hon. friend from North Toronto. I do not know that I have ever heard in this House, during an experience of eleven sessions, a more exaggerated statement of fact than was given to the House by one of its old members in the person of the hon. member for North Toronto yesterday, when he referred to the effect of this treaty upon our natural resources and the inroads which were to be made upon them by American grabbers, American grafters and American millionaires. So far as I can see, the present proposal does not afford one shred of argument to support my hon. friend's noisy declaration in that respect. To dignify it, I might call it dogmatic assertion. It was more than that: it was deliberate exaggeration, because there is nothing in the proposed agreement to support it, and I will ask any hon. member opposite, as I would ask the hon. member for North Toronto if he were in his place, to stand up now and quote any statement on which that assertion was made.

Mr. SPROULE. If there was nothing of that nature in it, why did President Taft say the other day that one of the great virtues of it was that it opened up the forests of British North America to the United States?

Mr. GUTHRIE. My hon. friend either did not follow me or else he spoke too soon. I say that there is nothing in this proposal to give the United States one whit of advantage in their access to our natural products that they have not had during the last 50 years. We have not changed the status one iota. If the United States wanted our lumber, our minerals, our fish, our wheat, or our live stock, all they had to do at any time during the last 50 years was to take off their tariff and come in and take them.

Mr. SPROULE. Then Mr. Taft must have been entirely wrong?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The hon. member for North Toronto must have known these facts, because he has told the public of Canada time and again that the United States could obtain all the access they desired to our natural resources by dropping their tariff, and so they could. Yet he spent yesterday a whole hour in a laboured argument to show that there was nothing standing in the way of Canada if this treaty came into force, but devastation of our natural resources, that they would be taken to the United States, there manufactured into the finished product, and then shipped back to Canada. How could they come back to Canada under this treaty? Where is there any reduction in the schedules that would permit them? One branch of his argument is just as unfounded as the other. The United States, if they want our lumber, our minerals, our wheat, or our cattle, will come here and pay for them. We are not asleep; we are the owners, the proprietors of these natural resources. If we see fit to dispose of them to the United States, it must be at a price and on conditions satisfactory to the private owner or the public of Canada. There is no opportunity given to them to raid our resources—nothing of the kind; and yet the hon. member for North Toronto so argued in this House, and was applauded by every member on the Conservative side. I do not care what President Taft may say in regard to this matter; I do not care what Senator Beveridge may say; and I do not think it is in very good taste for my hon. friend from North Toronto or my good friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to be guided by what these gentlemen or the newspapers of the United States have to say on this subject. Let them be guided rather by such papers as the Manchester 'Guardian', which I have quoted. But an effort has been made to bring into this debate all sorts of political entanglements in the United States. There is an effort to found the Conservative opposition to this measure upon the statements of President Taft or of the leader of the Democratic party in the United States Congress or of Senator Beveridge, or of the newspapers of one political creed or another. Surely we as Canadians can judge of this matter irrespective of what the people of the United States may have in their minds.

The statement which has been read here to-day as having been made yesterday in Congress by Mr. Clark has a queer bearing upon another incident which I might mention. Perhaps the greatest annexationist in the United States for many years past has been Speaker Cannon. In a speech which he addressed a few weeks ago to the Grand Army men, and which has been going through the press, he said he was looking forward to the day when Mexico and Canada would be annexed to the United States, and when the American flag would float over the whole of the North American continent, and yet he is the greatest opponent of this measure in the United States Congress to-day. Why should we be upset by any wind of political opinion that blows across the way? The only consideration that should guide us on this question is: How is this measure as a pure trade matter going to operate in Canada—will it be to our advantage or against our advantage?

Take another instance of what I consider to be the utter inconsistency of the hon. member for North Toronto on this matter. People sometimes in the heat of debate say things which they do not positively or actually mean; but when a man deliberately sits down and writes an article, copies and recopies it and corrects it, he is taken to mean what he has written. Now, the hon. member for North Toronto has distinctly said in print, in an elaborate composition in the 'Canadian Magazine' for the month of December last, entitled, 'Reciprocity—why the United States wants it', by the Rt. Hon. George E. Foster—I suppose that was a Christmas present to the hon. gentleman—this is his own vigorous language:

> No sane man will predict any large overflow of natural products from the United States Northward.

And yesterday he argued to a demonstration that market gardeners, fruit growers and pork men would be ruined by the natural products of the United States coming into Canada. I never heard a greater mass of contradiction and inconsistency in the space of a three or four hours' speech during my eleven years experience in the House of Commons.

Now, I am going to take issue with the hon. member for North Toronto on another point, and I think I know a little about this: that is, the question of the price of hogs and cattle as between the United States and Canada. When he made his plea for the pork men, he said that there was a steady supply of pork at a good price in Canada, and that only for a few weeks of the year was the price of pork at Buffalo any higher than in Canada. He makes the same plea with regard to cattle, but I challenge the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and will let the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' decide the issue—let him take the columns of that paper during the last five years.

An hon. MEMBER. Not its editorials.

Mr. GUTHRIE. No its market reports, and let him compare Montreal and Toronto markets with Buffalo and Chicago, and he will find that the general average is higher, and markedly so, in Buffalo and Chicago during the last five year period. Now what is it we want? We want in my county the privilege of selling our cattle and hogs in Buffalo and other farm produce as well. You say: What is the use, the Buffalo market is lower. Well, if it is, are we hurt? We will then sell in the British market, and not touch Buffalo or Chicago. My hon. friend tells us that we have two markets now, the home market and the British; but when this arrangement comes into operation, we shall have three markets, and the one we have not got now, but which we want to get, is by far the largest. We will not send our products to Buffalo or Chicago unless we get better prices than we do at home or in the mother country. Our western people are not going to send any cattle to Chicago unless they can get better prices there than elsewhere. If they cannot, they will send them to eastern Canada or Great Britain. What is there unpatriotic or disloyal in that proposition? How do business men conduct their business? If the prices in Buffalo are good, they send their wares there; if not they send them elsewhere. Then why should not the government carry on the business of this country on business lines? Why should the government stay its hand at this juncture and deprive our people of one of the great opportunities of their lives?

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) took a rather strange position with regard to the framing of a tariff. He said he did not believe in the way in which our tariff was altered or revised at present. He thought that the system was an improper one. Now the reason I refer to this is that this is a question of vital interest to our people. If my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, desires to place himself on record on this question, I think it well the people should know it. What he said is to be found on pages 3379 and 3380 of 'Hansard.' There he practically proposed that the framing or revision of the tariff should be taken away from this House and placed in the hands of a permanent tariff commission. I do not say, from the language he used, that he gave that as his concluded opinion, but he certainly declared that he thought that was the best method to be adopted. No doubt such a plan would meet the desires of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association; but if my hon. friend would adopt such a system, he would be reversing one of the cardinal principles of the British constitution, which is that the right to tax must remain with the peoples' representatives. The right was established many long years ago, and I have no doubt will survive to the end; but if the leader of the opposition desires to depart from that principle and appoint a permanent tariff commission to regulate our tariff, the sooner the people know it the better. I do not know what his proposal precisely is because he did not put it in very concrete form. He merely said it would be well if we established a permanent tariff commission in Canada, and I take it that means a delegation of the powers of this House to a tariff commission.

If he made any definite statement in regard to the proposed agreement at all, it will be found on page 3374 of 'Hansard.' These are his words:

> Now in view of the statistics I have given, are we not moving along the line of material progress and development about as fast as we could expect to go or about as fast as it is desirable to go?

And in this he was heartily applauded by hon. members opposite. Further on he said:

> To use a well known expression, what we have we will hold in that regard. But the proposals of this government if they mean anything at all, seem to me to mean a considerable departure from that path which we have pursued with so much success.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend read the whole sentence.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I thought I had.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman would read further, he will find that it conveys an entirely different impression.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Well, at all events what the hon. gentleman said will be found on page 3374 of 'Hansard.' The point to which I wished to call special attention is conveyed in these words:

> Are we not moving along the line of material progress and development about as fast as we could expect to go or about as fast as it is desriable to go?

Mr. BLAIN. Read the lines that follow.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have no objection. He went on to say:

> Are we not at the present time following a perfectly sure and safe path.

Is that the position taken by the leader of the opposition and the Conservative party. Are they reduced to this position: Let us leave well enough alone; we are doing well enough now. Have I not fairly stated the position taken by my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition. He believes in the good old maxim: What we have, we will hold; but let well enough alone. I submit that with regard to trade and commerce that is neither a statesmanlike nor a proper position, nor is it one which the people will endorse. You cannot get a young country like ours, full of vigour, vitality and energy, to sit down and fold its arms and let well enough alone. Is there any period in the business life of any business man when he can conclude to sit down and let well enough alone? He can do this if he retires from business, but we are not retiring from business in Canada. We must keep moving. If we do not go forward, we shall be drifting backward. That is what was the real trouble with the Conservative government from 1890 to 1896. They flattered themselves that they were doing well enough, and were content to stand still, and I am inclined to think that they really believed what they said. I really think that they had convinced themselves of this, and no one was more eloquent on that point than the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Session after session he pointed to the increase in our exports, which had leaped up some $66,000,000 in eighteen years, to the increase in our bank deposits, to the business disorders in the United States which we have escaped, and urged his audiences to let well enough alone. But as a matter of fact we were not progressing at all, but were actually going backwards, and that is what we would do if we were to adopt the policy advocated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. And I ask any one to note this—and it is the proudest, grandest fact, I think, in connection with the present administration—that from 1896, from the day whereon they took power, you can go to the record of any department, you can open any blue-book we have, and you will see, year by year, during the whole fourteen years, without a single halt in any year, forward—forward—forward! And the reason for that is that they were not content to say, we are going fast enough; we will let well enough alone, content with the old maxim, 'What we have we'll hold.' That is a good maxim, it is a Liberal maxim; but we add, 'We will get more if possible.' And this is one instance in which we are endeavouring to hold our own and get more.

Now, I must say a word about the effect of the proposal upon what is, perhaps, the largest branch of the subject, so far as Canada is concerned, and that is the export trade of this country. Up to this time I have discussed the effect only on our trade with Great Britain, the effect on our imports from Great Britain and the United States. Now, what about our exports? I believe that, without exaggeration, the exports of Canada to the United States, if this proposal is adopted, will increase by leaps and bounds. I agree with what has been said by others, and inferentially stated by my hon. friend opposite, that the great increase will be in what we may call natural products—I do not mean natural resources; I mean the products of the farm chiefly. I note that we only sold to the United States last year $113,000,000 worth of goods, but I note, also, that we bought from them $223,000,000 worth. And that, according to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—and I will not say it is my opinion—constitutes an adverse balance of trade, which, in the end, has to be met through the banks with cash. My hon. friend from North Toronto has had an annual complaint against this government, an annual criticism of its policy. Whereas trade conditions with the United Kingdom were satisfactory—we sold them more than we purchased from them, the balance of trade, he said, was in favour of Canada—he argued, and pages in 'Hansard' will show the argument, that our trade with the United States has been absolutely unsatisfactory; in fact, he said the condition of things had become startling, that we were only selling them a small quantity as compared with the goods which we were purchasing from them, and ultimately this balance would have to be settled. He discussed it as an adverse balance of trade, and, from his point of view, I must say, he discussed it very ably. It is a vexed question, it is about as intricate and difficult a problem as any that I know of, and I do not feel able to cope with the argument of my hon. friend in regard to the adverse balance of trade. But I think the present proposal should cause a genial smile, 'the smile that won't come off,' to illumine his countenance, because he must see, if his statement in the House is correct, that the balance of trade as between Canada and the United States will now shortly be in favour of Canada. Speaking in this House, in March, 1908, the hon. gentleman gave a statement of the goods exported and imported as between Canada and the United States, which statement appears at page 5273 of 'Hansard' of that year, and shows:

Ten years Conservative rule, adverse balance of trade of $167,841,393.

Ten years of Liberal rule, an adverse balance of trade of $384,950,596.

Then he proceeds:

In 12 months ending June 30, 1907, the imports from United States were $206,715,914, the exports to the United States, $82,194,661, and the adverse balance of trade reached the enormous sum of $124,521,253.

Now I think that is a somewhat startling showing. This adverse balance of trade has to be met, it has to be met every month, every three months, every year. You cannot run credit for that adverse balance of trade, it has to be adjusted through the banks and through the business of the country. Now let me point out that in this statement I have simply taken the exports of home products, because I wanted to show the exact relation of trade as regards the export of Canada's own produce, to the foreign produce we were importing. Now if you deduct the foreign produce also exported to the United States in that period of ten years, it amounts to $30,000,000. Subtracting that, taking both the home and foreign products, the adverse balance of trade against us in those ten years, with the United States, was $552,000,000.

That would be an average of $52,000,000 a year of an adverse balance. Turning to page 5277, we find the hon. gentleman saying:

Now, what I think about the balance of trade is this: That the balance of trade in the first place must be settled presently. It is not as if I could go to my friend here and borrow $100 from him and give him a note for three years and pay him interest. These international balances are not arranged in that way. They have to be adjusted every month, every three months, every six months at the longest and they are so adjusted, and the banks are the mechanism which we use for that adjustment. That is the first point I make. We have got to pay our balances; we cannot run credit from year to year on them. Now, they can only be paid either in goods or in gold, and whichever it is it is our export trade which in the final analysis has to pay our bills and we have nothing else to pay them with. Well, so far as trade and navigation figures go you may call that a trade balance if you like. That is the visible trade of the country. You might so far as that goes balance one by the other, or be in debt, or have a profit. But it may be said: That is not all that is coming and going between the countries; there are invisible exports and imports. And that is true. But yet it is absolutely true that in the end even the actual international balance has got to be settled by exports from the country that owes and it can be paid in no other way.

There is hope, and I think a splendid hope, that the result of the present proposal, if carried into effect, will be to adjust that adverse balance of trade. There is no doubt, in the opinion of my hon. friend from North Toronto, in the opinion of any member of this House, I think, that Canada, under this arrangement, is going to sell a tremendous quantity of goods to the United States, a tremendous quantity of our natural products. And if I may take the written statement of my hon. friend from North Toronto upon the question: 'No sane man will predict any large overflow of natural products from the United States northward.' The balance will be in our favour. And I add to that, we need not fear an increase of imports of American manufactured goods; there is nothing to warrant the idea that we will have more than we have now. The reductions in the tariff on these goods have been so small that there is no encouragement for more importations, and gradually our manufacturing establishments are assuming larger and larger proportions, and are able to produce more and more goods and at lower prices, so that with the reasonable tariff which is still retained under schedules 'B' and 'D,' there is not the slightest reason for believing that there will be any increase in United States manufactured goods coming into Canada. Trade will go from the north southward. I, in my county, look to a heavy increase in the exportation of cattle, sheep, lambs, poultry and the like. In my county, and in the counties surrounding, we looked to the old barley crop, which, prior to the McKinley tariff of 1901, was a vastly paying crop in the province of Ontario. Barley, which used to bring 85 cents a bushel, latterly brought only 55 cents. Barley, I believe, this week in Toronto brings 60 cents, and in Buffalo 90 cents. Barley, no doubt, will be a large and profitable crop in the province of Ontario if this proposed arrangement should take effect.

I cannot say so much in regard to wheat. The wheat that is grown in my county is largely used for local milling purposes. and for the purpose of feeding stock. I am not familiar with the movement of wheat as between Canada and the United States, so I prefer to leave that question to be settled by those who are familiar with it. I do say this, however, that so far as I have been able to examine the matter—and I have looked into it with some care—I cannot see any reason why we should expect any very great increase in the price of wheat for exportation to the United States. There may be a reason, and there may be an increased price, but I am not able exactly to find out how it will come about. I do think, however, that the time is coming, the time indeed is almost at hand, when the United States will not be exporting wheat. The time is coming, indeed the time I believe is at hand, when the United States will not export cattle. By the end of the present year, it is said. there will be no exported cattle from the United States ; and if the figures I have seen are correct, the time is almost at hand when there will be no wheat exported from the United States. I think there is a great chance of the wheat growers of the west obtaining in the markets of the United States an advantage which perhaps they do not enjoy now, as the price of wheat is still regulated in the British market. I have taken trouble to look up some facts in regard to wheat, chiefly having reference to a statement made in the address of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition.

Mr. LENNOX. As the hon. gentleman is apparently going to another subject, I have been waiting to direct his attention to a point on which he started to speak, and left it. He directed us to pages 3379 and 3380 'Hansard,' containing the speech of the leader of the opposition, and I understood him to say that he proposed to deal with it. But inadvertently, I suppose, he immediately turned to page 3374, and dealt with what was there, taking two disjointed sentences and dealing with them. The hon. gentleman, however, did not take up what I understood he intended to take up when he gave us pages 3379 and 3380 dealing with the policy of the opposition. The hon. gentleman told us beforehand that he intended to refer to the policy laid down by the leader of the opposition in reference to the framing of our tariff.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I thought I said all I intended to say, which was that the statement as set out in the 'Hansard,' and as I heard it in the House in regard to a permanent tariff commission, came to me as a great surprise, and I did not consider from the language the leader of the opposition used, that that was his matured and fixed idea, and I hoped it was not, but that if it was his settled opinion and his policy, the sooner the country came to know about it the better, because it was a reversal of the foundation of the British constitution.

Mr. LENNOX. This is the point to which I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention. I understood when he referred to the policy of the leader of the opposition, and gave the pages containing his speech he proposed to do the leader of the opposition the justice of reading them. Now he did not do so. I understood his object was to show specifically and exactly what the leader of the opposition said.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The leader of the opposition was not in his place at the time I mentioned it. I referred to the pages mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe, but that was in regard to the policy of letting things alone.

Mr. LENNOX. No, my hon. friend is wrong about that. The hon. gentleman first referred to pages 3379 and 3380.

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is in regard to a tariff commission ; I said all I intended to say on that. I was discussing the question of wheat, and chiefly in reference to a remark made by the leader of the opposition in the course of his speech to the effect that if Canadians were not particular we would find that foreign countries like the Argentine Republic would send their products to Great Britain, and I was under the impression that they send a large quantity of their natural products there now. Great Britain is not disposed to be over particular as to where she purchases those products, and there is no benefit to her to buy from Canada rather than in Argentina. So I looked up the reports, and I found in the library a volume published annually known as the 'Statesman's Year-Book' for 1910. And here I wish to remark, that in looking through the volume I saw that some vandal has cut out 15 or 20 pages of the most valuable information in it. I mention this, for one reason because I have noticed the same thing in regard to other statistical works. It ought to be brought to the attention of those having care of the library, that mutilations of this kind should not be allowed, and that anybody who does mutilate a volume should be deprived of the privileges of the library. However, I found the report that I required, and I find in the 'Statesman's Year-Book' for 1910, that wheat imported into Great Britain during 1909 from all parts of the British Empire amounted to 69,000,000 bushels. The figures given in the volume are given in hundred weights, 60 pounds to the bushel and 100 pounds to the 100 weight. I find that the total imports of wheat into Great Britain for 1909 were 163,000,000 bushels. I thought it rather strange to see a published interview with the Hon. Robert Rogers within the last three or four days, I think after he left Ottawa, in a Minneapolis newspaper, in which he expressed himself as opposed to the present trade arrangement, and said that if this arrangement were negatived, in a very short time, I think he said next year, Canada would be exporting to Great Britain 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. I think, on the face of it, that statement is ridiculous, because all that Great Britain takes from the whole world is 163,000,000 bushels. It is interesting to know where she gets her wheat. Have we interfered with Argentina in that respect? Why, Great Britain takes more wheat from the Argentine Republic than from any other quarter of the globe. From the Argentine Republic in 1909 she took 33,000,000 bushels ; from Russia, poor distressed, protected Russia, 30,000,000 bushels ; from Canada, 27,500,000 ; from the United States, 24,000,000 ; from India, 24,000,000, and the balance is made up of wheat from Chili, Australia, Lower Egypt, and all other quarters of the world. I wont give the statistics in regard to flour, though the member for North Toronto did give them, and probably they are correct. Now, what is the position with regard to wheat in the United States? I looked up the statistical year-book of the United States for 1910, and here let me say that the statistical information prepared by the United States government is far in advance of that prepared in Canada ; it is in a more convenient form. I have the greatest difficulty in finding the information I require in our blue-books, and I think it would be a good thing if our government sent a deputation to Washington for the purpose of learning a better method of preparing statistics.

However, in the United States Statistical Year-book, I find that the greatest year of production was 1892, when they produced 748,000,000 bushels. The exportation that year was 235,000,000 bushels to all places in the world. That is nine years before the next item that I give. The wheat produced in 1909 was 664,000,000 bushels, there was consumed in the United States 550,000,000 bushels, and there was exported 114,000,000 bushels. But, take the year 1908, and you will find that in that year they exported 163,000,000 bushels—not 114,000,000—and that they consumed only 490,000,000 bushels, whereas the following year they consumed 550,000,000 bushels, and so the ratio of consumption is increasing, while exportation is decreasing. It has been said by such men as Jas. J. Hill, in fact, I think the President of the United States—anyway by competent authority—that it is only a question of time when the exportation of wheat from the United States will stop. Then, I take the question of cattle. My statement with regard to cattle is hardly as precise. In some cases numbers are given and in some cases values are given. I find that in England, in 1909, there was received from all sources 321,000 head of cattle; no value given. In the United States Statistical Year-book for 1910 I find that in 1900 the United States exported 397,000 head of cattle, and that in 1909 they exported only 207,000 head, a decrease of almost 45 per cent. The value of cattle exported in 1900 was $30,000,000, and in 1909 $18,000,000. But I have it from pretty fair authority that during the present year—that is 1911—there will be no cattle exported from the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he has taken into account the amount of chilled meat they are exporting now?

Mr. GUTHRIE. No, I have only taken into account the export of live cattle. I also have this to say with regard to the cattle trade and the export of cattle finished in my county, that during last fall and summer fine export steers weighing 1,400 pounds were shipped to Toronto for export to Liverpool, but on account of the better price being paid in Chicago they were reshipped from Toronto back to Chicago. This has not been in a single case, but in many cases, and, as my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture reminds me, they were shipped to Chicago in spite of the duty. I believe that in all western Ontario we will ship a tremendous amount of live stock to the United States if this proposal succeeds. It will be more convenient to ship to Buffalo than to Liverpool. The freight rates will be less, and I believe that on the average the price will be higher—I do not say to any great extent higher—but on a 1,400 pound beast, if only one cent a pound, that is $14 to the farmer, and that is a most important increase in price to him. I believe that the price of mutton and lamb is higher in Buffalo on the average than in Toronto, and Buffalo is the market for lambs for the southwestern portion of Ontario. They now pay a duty of 75 cents on lambs, and of $1.50 on sheep. I believe the farmer will get a better price and have a better market for sheep and lambs if this tariff change takes place. Turnips we ship in large quantities. Turnips are a paying crop in our county, because we feed and ship a great quantity of them. The regulations which the United States have been enforcing at the border have interfered with a profitable trade in that product. Turnips now pay a duty of 25 per cent or something of the kind, but it is not only the rate of duty but also the regulations of which we complain. A turnip shipper told me that turnips which he has bought for 10 and 12 cents a bushel are revalued at the border at as high as 18 and 20 cents, and that he has lost on the transaction because of such re-valuation. The United States have some system by which they regulate what they believe to be the actual value of any article. These drawbacks to trade, I understand, are to be removed, or it is the intention of both parties that they will be removed. Potatoes, which, likewise, are very largely produced in my county, and in counties similarly situated, are placed on the free list. We will ship a tremendous quantity of such articles, and of poultry, butter and barley large quantities will be shipped to the United States, which we do not ship there now.

I mention these facts to show that the balance of trade is going from the north to the south, and that there will not be a great quantity of trade coming from the south to the north if this arrangement is carried out as it stands before the House to-day. I do not know sufficient about the case of the fruit growers to discuss it intelligently. But I hear on the one hand the cry that if this trade arrangement goes into force the cost of living will be increased, and I hear, on the other hand, the cry that the cost of fruit to the grower will be lowered, the cost of vegetables to the grower will be lowered, and that the price of meat and bacon and beef products will be lowered—so the packers' association tell the people of Canada. I will give my own best judgment in regard to that question. I am as convinced as I can be of anything that the great farming community of this country, representing sixty per cent of our population, is going to be very materially benefited. The farmers are going to make money, they are going to make a lot of money, and year after year they will make more money as long as this arrangement lasts.

What about the people who live in the villages, towns and cities? It would be illogical to declare that there would be an increase in the price of farming commodities and no increase in the price of living. What I say with regard to that is that there is not going to be anything like any immediate jump, there is going to be a fair increase in value, and there will be a steady value, there will be no fluctuation between this country and that country, as there will be no tariff between them. There will be a fair increase of value, and where you have a general prosperity and increased receipts by the great bulk of the people of this country, it will be in the nature of a national prosperity, and every man, woman and child in the land must feel the result of it. I believe that it will be a tremendous advantage to the people of the northwest, the people of the prairie provinces, if this trade arrangement is put in force. It will increase the rapidity with which that great country is being settled up. What would be the effect on the manufacturing industries of Ontario if we had one million more farmers in the northwest raising wheat and cattle? That is the true policy of the east and west, and I wish to be understood as not to say one single word against the development of our own manufacturing industries.

One reason I have for appreciating this trade arrangement in particular is that our commissioners, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, have scrupulously avoided anything in that arrangement which could be an injury to any section of our manufacturing industries in the Dominion of Canada as far as I am aware. I wish to see them enjoy a fair amount of protection. I am not an out-and-out free trader; in fact, I disagree with the principles of free trade as expressed in this House unless we have the broad world to trade freely with. I believe we must have some kind of protection in Ontario.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not for the farmers as well as others?

Mr. GUTHRIE. If the farmers were to come here and cry out for it that might be a very good reason for granting it, but they seem to desire it the other way around.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman had been here last week he would have seen 800 of the most intelligent farmers crying out for protection and presenting very strong arguments for it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The fruit growers?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, and vegetable growers.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Well, that is a subject I am not competent to discuss. I do not know that I had better venture upon that subject because I do not know anything about it. I am talking about conditions as I find them. I have no quarrel with any industry because I believe that if we adopt a measure that will promote the general prosperity you help the manufacturing and every other interest in Canada. I am not supported very largely by the proprietors of factories in Guelph. I am sorry I am not, I have tried to support them, but the fact is I am not. In Guelph we have a very large industry manufacturing all grades of hardware. We have another large factory manufacturing sewing machines and cream separators. We have a carpet factory making Brussels and other high grade carpets. We have a large pipe industry making iron pipe and employing 200 or 300 men. We have the Bell Organ and Piano Company, we have an axle works, two stove foundries and many other important manufacturing concerns. I am sorry they do not yield me much support at election time, and I think they should. However, I want to support them if I can and so long as our tariff, kept down to a revenue basis, affords enough protection to protect them I am satisfied with that feature of the tariff. I am not a high protectionist; I think high protection in Canada would be a ridiculous proposal, but for the last five or ten years Guelph's shipments have gone where? To the Northwest. Where have they gone from Toronto and other cities in Ontario and Quebec? They are finding their best market in the Northwest to-day. Give them a million more prosperous farmers out there with a convenient market, increase their purchasing power, and you will increase their demands and then if you maintain a revenue tariff with sufficient incidental protection you will increase the industry in every manufacturing establishment in Canada. You will increase the price of wages, you will increase the demand for labour. Make the great bulk of the people of this country prosperous on their farms and the cry of 'back to the land,' will have some effect and a large number of people who are to-day coming into the towns and cities who are not mechanics or artisans will go back to the land where they can make a reasonable profit for their labour. You create a demand in that way in the labour market. I believe in a thorough examination of the immigration that is coming into Canada. I congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior and the branch of his department that has charge of immigration on the efficiency of that service at present. We have a better class of people coming in, more suited to conditions in this country. We have a carefully selected immigration coming in, and I believe that the figures this year will run to about one half million people, nearly all for the Northwest. Place these on the farms, make them comfortable, and increase their purchasing power and you solve the problem of the cost of living. Give an artisan in my city an opportunity of earning $2 or $2.50 more per week, and he is more than repaid for any extra cost of living that may be engendered by the farmer receiving more for his produce. In the case of the individual, the proportion of increase is very small. An additional fourteen dollars on a beast to the farmer means but one or two cents extra on a piece of steak to the customer in the city. Let the clerk have a chance to get a better salary. On what does the ordinary merchant in a country or village store depend? On the prosperity of the surrounding farmers. We have it in Guelph, they have it in other towns the same way, our great commerce is between the townships and the city, between the villages and the city. Give these farmers more money to spend, and the merchants in town will make more. They can pay more salaries to their clerks if the farmers of the country enjoy a greater power of purchasing. They will want more home made goods and more British goods, and it is on that principle I argue that the purchasing power will be increased and imports from Great Britain will be increased and not decreased—and the preference will be a real preference.

I take no stock whatever in the cry that we are going to ruin the railroads; the railroads have always been able to take care of themselves. I take no stock in the cry that we will frighten British capital. I believe the hon. member from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) yesterday based 75 per cent of his argument on the declaration or letter written by Mr. Blake in 1891 upon a proposal radically different from the one now before this House. That was a policy of unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union; this is a proposal for a very limited trade agreement. The one was to be in the shape of a definite binding treaty, this is in the shape of a treaty which we or the United States can set aside at will, which will remain in force only so long as it proves mutually beneficial. The arguments of Mr. Blake, for whom I have the highest respect, do not pertain to the question now under consideration in this committee, although they might have pertained and probably did pertain, to the question under discussion at the time Mr. Blake wrote his letter. But what about the railroads? Who says the railways of Canada have any fear of this? Who has the right to say so? Who has heard from them in regard to the subject? Have any railroads pronounced upon the question? The only railroad man who has pronounced upon it is Sir Donald Mann of the Canadian Northern. It was rumored in one paper that Sir William Mackenzie had said something but this was promptly denied by Sir William. But Sir Donald Mann is quite clear in his statement, which is published in a very respectable financial paper in Canada called the 'Financial Post' in the issue of February 4. Sir Donald Mann there says:

> The products of the farm, of the sea and of the mine are entitled to especial consideration. Nor should the lumbermen be overlooked. Timber is a crop which ripens, and should be reaped. If it is not, it deteriorates. He who cuts down one ripe tree and plants one or more in its place is a producer of wealth.
> If we have seven or eight millions of people in Canada, with a free market for the producer, and to that number we add the 95 millions of the United States, we are assisting the most important industries in Canada.
>
> Next in importance to the producer comes the manufacturer and it is the duty of the government to provide increased market facilities for both. The United States has ceased to export cattle, and may soon cease to export wheat. The balance between production and consumption is drawing nearer adjustment. If it were possible to prevent grain from going south, without injury to the producer, I would say avoid a treaty or other reciprocal arrangement, but it is beyond our power to hold our wheat within British territory. The United States can remove the tariff whenever it suits her convenience so to do, without consulting us.
> With regard to the export of wheat, Canada will have her own lines of railway across the continent as well as ships upon the sea. This will enable them to take grain for export from the producer to the consumer, without any division of rates, and, in the same way, manufactured goods as return cargoes from the producer to the consumer in the west. On the other hand, going south through the United States, wheat for export would have to pass over three or four lines of railways, and thence by independent vessels to European markets. This through rate, which is necessarily low, would be divided among three or four transportation companies, making it impossible to compete with Canadian through lines. Depend upon it Canadian railways handling natural products of the west for export will retain the traffic on their own tracks and in their own vessels to destination.
> Personally I would prefer to have a preference between the United Kingdom and the Dominion, and between the Dominion and other colonies. This preference should be increased from time to time until, say in 25 years, the cost of production would reach a common point throughout the empire. Then we would be able to have free trade within the empire, and protection against the non-British nations.

That is a very strong statement and it is the only authoritative announcement by any important railroad man I have seen. Why then raise that cry about railroads? The railroads are not afraid of it. What are the Canadian Pacific railway doing. They have completed their lines to Chicago and Duluth, owning now the Wisconsin Central through the United States and the Sault line to Duluth. What are the Canadian Northern doing? At this moment they are completing their line from Winnipeg to Duluth and by the first of August that line will be in operation and it will be carrying grain in September. The railroads are not afraid of it. Who is afraid of it? I do not know that the Manufacturers Association have made any pronouncement upon the subject. I do not think they have. They probably will oppose it on the ground that they have opposed almost everything that emanates from this government in regard to tariffs.

Then, what is their real objection? I think the weakest objection I have heard, and one which it is almost useless to discuss, is that a good trade agreement between Canada and the United States, which will be beneficial to this country—and if it is not, we will abrogate it—and which will be beneficial to the United States—and if it is not, they will abrogate it—will lead in some way to a commercial or political union between the two countries. Some people say—I do not think they are very brave in the idea—that it is the entering of the wedge, that it is the beginning of the end. Well, I cannot see in a trade measure anything of the kind. There is nothing to support such an idea. There has been no experience, so far as I am aware, of anything like it. Never anywhere throughout the world, so far as I know, have good trade relations between two countries brought about commercial or political union. Look at the trade today between Great Britain and Germany, amounting to £60,000,000 or £70,000,000 a year. Is it drawing them together? Why, hon. gentlemen opposite say they are ready to spring at each other's throats. Did the trade treaty between England and France, negotiated by Richard Cobden 50 or 60 years ago, bring about political union between those two countries? Previous to that treaty there was a pretty bad feeling between England and France, and out of it came peace and harmony, but no political union. On what is this theory based? I know of no reason why there should be any annexation feeling in this country. Before the negotiation of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, there was an annexation party in Canada. We have not forgotten the annexation manifesto signed by such men as the late Sir John Abbott, afterwards Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John Rose, Sir Francis Hincks, and other staunch Conservatives. They afterwards changed their opinions and became great men in public affairs, I am free to admit. Why did they sign that manifesto? What was the cause of it? It was because they could not get reciprocal trade relations with the United States. When I make that statement, I am backed up by a very high authority. Let me read what was said by Lord Elgin himself, in a letter written to Lord Grey, which is to be found in the 'Letters and Journals of Lord Elgin,' published in London, in 1872.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. GUTHRIE. March, 1849. Lord Elgin said:

> There has been a vast deal of talk about annexation, as is unfortunately always the case when there is anything to agitate the public mind. A great deal of this talk is, however, bravado, and a great deal the mere product of thoughtlessness. Undoubtedly it is in some quarters the utterances of very serious conviction; and if England will not make the sacrifices which are absolutely necessary to put the colonists here in as good a position commercially as the citizens of the States—in order to which free navigation and reciprocal trade with the States are indispensable—if not only the organs of the league, but those of the government and of the Peel party, are always writing as if it were an admitted fact that colonies, and more especially Canada, are a burden, to be endured only because they cannot be got rid of, the end may be nearer than we wot of.

In November of the same year Lord Elgin wrote to Lord Grey:

> But if things remain at their present footing in this respect, there is nothing before us but violent agitation, ending in convulsion or annexation. And I much fear that no measure but the establishment of reciprocal trade between Canada and the States, or the imposition of a duty on the produce of the States when imported into England, will remove it.

Now, that was the cause of the disturbance at that time.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the hon. gentleman say that was the cause of the agitation?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I take the word of Lord Elgin for what I said, because I was not in being at that time, and I am only stating the fact as written by a Governor General of this country.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). What is meant by free navigation as the alternative to reciprocity?

Mr. GUTHRIE. It says free navigation and reciprocal trade.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Does he not mean that the navigation laws should be abrogated there?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The hour of adjournment is so near, that I cannot continue this discussion longer. I have heard no substantial reason advanced against this proposal, which will bear investigation. Every interest of Canada is guarded. It gives us three markets, instead of two. Every interest of Great Britain is guarded. If a day comes when Great Britain is able to enter into better arrangements with the colonies and to bring us all together, our hands are free. If we become a greater and more prosperous people, if we become a richer people, we shall be all the stronger as a British nation and a part of the British Empire, and we shall never, with my consent, be other than a part of the British Empire. But why mix this matter up with questions affecting our political relations? The whole and sole question for us is, have we made a good bargain? As for me and the part of the country which I represent, this proposal will be welcomed as one of the most progressive acts of a government which for 14 years has shown nothing but progress, development and success in Canada.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 118) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to amend section 477 of the Shipping Act so that coal barges under tow may come into the ports of Canada without being obliged to pay pilotage fees. Up to a recent decision of the Privy Council, coal barges have been coming into our ports in the maritime provinces without paying pilotage dues. Under this decision it is held that the words in the Act 'ships propelled wholly or in part by steam' do apply to coal barges under tow. For example, the Cumberland Coal and Railway Company send from Parrsboro' to St. John coal in barges towed by a steam tug, two or three barges in tow; and they have been coming in under the decision of the court as to the meaning of those words I have just quoted, holding that they do apply to coal barges under tow. This decision of the Privy Council holds that they are obliged to pay pilotage. The object is to allow coal barges of that description towed by steam to be exempt from paying pilotage dues.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ARBITRATION.

*Mr. FOSTER:

1. When was the commission appointed to settle the difference between the Intercolonial railway and Grand Trunk railway in reference to matters in dispute in Montreal?
2. What were the points to be determined?
3. What have so far been settled and how?
4. What has been the cost so far?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Board of arbitrators appointed under agreement of February 1, 1898, clause 46 thereof, for award and determination of questions, arising under said agreement prior to the appointments of said arbitrators, June, 1904.

2. Questions arising under agreement of the 1st February, 1898, confirmed by statutes of 1899, chapter 5, and brought into force on September 26, 1899, in the matter of issue of bills of lading, routing of freight, diversion of traffic, disputed accounts. The several matters were submitted for arbitration under the provisions of the said agreement, either at the initiation of the Crown or of the company and disposed of by the arbitrators, some in favour of the Crown, and others adversely, and were practically questions of interpretation of the provisions of said agreement as applying to matters from time to time arising in connection with the operation of the respective railways, subject to the agreement. Other questions submitted were not disposed of by the board of arbitrators, owing to the death of the then chairman, the late Judge Killam, and are now for the consideration of the board of arbitrators as at present constituted.

3. Answered by number 2.

4. Amount paid by Intercolonial railway to date is $49,737.97.

2. What number of men have been taken on since the 1st November, 1908, working at a daily wage; and also the number of men that have been taken on as clerks and officials generally, working by the week, month or year?

RECIPROCITY—TRADE OF OTHER COUNTRIES.

*Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What is the number and the names of the countries, if any, that will be entitled to have their natural products and manufactured articles come into Canada under the same terms as the United States under the proposed reciprocity agreement?
2. Was there any understanding reached at the recent conferences regarding reciprocity that the Canadian tariff or articles not specifically mentioned in the treaty would not be increased?
3. If the tariff of Canada on all or any articles not specifically mentioned in the agreement was considerably increased, would the United States have any cause for complaint or excuse for terminating the reciprocity agreement?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. France is a favoured nation country to a limited extent, that is to say, as respects the lists of articles specified in schedules B and C to the French Treaty. Twelve countries: Argentina Republic, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Venezuela—are accorded most favoured nation treatment generally. These are consequently enjoying the benefits of the French Treaty. As respects the dutiable schedules in the agreement with the United States, the concessions to be granted to the United States are largely the same as already have been granted to France and the favoured nation countries. As respects a large part of the list, therefore, no additional advantage will be enjoyed by such countries. There are however, a few articles in the French schedules which in the agreement with the United States are made free or dutiable at lower rates. In these cases the advantages granted to the United States will extend also to France and the favoured nation countries. In the case of a few articles which are not to be found in the French Treaty the favoured nation countries will be entitled to receive the concessions on the same terms as the United States, but France will not be so entitled. Although not arising from any agreement, in no case has any advantage been granted to any foreign country that did not at the same time extend to all parts of the British Empire. In the few cases in which the rates to be established are lower than those already enjoyed by British countries the reductions will apply to such countries.

2 and 3. There is no understanding of any kind except what is found in the correspondence and schedules already before the House.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar):

1. Is the tariff agreement with the United States made to apply with that country alone so far as Canada is concerned?
2. If not, what other countries besides the United States would be allowed to import into Canada farm products on the same terms as the proposed arrangements with the United States?

Mr. FIELDING:

The answer given above also applies to this question.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY MILEAGE.

Mr. DANIEL:

1. What is the present mileage of the Intercolonial railway?
2. What is the value of the rolling stock on said railway?
3. What is the number of locomotives, freight cars and passenger cars, respectively, included in above valuation?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. 1,456 miles.
2. First cost, $19,049,837.93.
3. 397 locomotives; 454 passenger cars; 12,491 freight cars.

IMPORTS AT KINGSTON FROM UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. What quantities of cheese, butter, eggs, dead poultry, potatoes, hay, straw, oats and barley, with their respective values, were entered at the port of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States for home consumption during the fiscal year ending March, 1910?
2. How many horses, cattle, sheep and pigs, not for improvement of stock, were brought into Canada from the United States by way of Kingston, Ontario, for the fiscal years 1908, 1909 and 1910, and the respective values thereof?
3. What were the quantities and values of pork, bacon, lard and other animal products entered at the port of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States during the fiscal years 1909 and 1910?
4. What were the quantities and values of fresh vegetables entered at the port of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States during the fiscal years 1909 and 1910?

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC LABOURERS' WAGES.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Is the government aware, as alleged, that men working for the Grand Trunk Pacific railway at Lafond, in Alberta, have not been paid moneys owing to them by this company, which have been long overdue?

2. Is the government aware that these men after alleged repeated demands have been absolutely unable to obtain either payment or satisfaction?

3. Does the government intend to take any steps in this matter?

4. Is there any reason why these men should not be paid what is owing to them?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. There is no such station on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway as Lafond.

2. The government has no knowledge of men on the railway not having been paid; the general manager reports that all men employed on Grand Trunk Pacific railway are paid promptly.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Answered by No. 2.

GLACE BAY BAIT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MADDIN:

1. How much money was paid to the Glace Bay Bait Association, Glace Bay, N.S., during the years 1906, 1907, 1909 and 1910?

2. What were the dates of payment?

3. Who are the members of the Glace Bay Bait Association?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. 1906, nothing; 1907, $1,000 advance on account of construction of Freezer; 1909, $100 on account of bonus earned by association during 1908; 1910, nothing.

2. October 21, 1907, and January 28, 1909.

3. The department has no list of the present members of the association, the freezer having become the association's exclusive property when it was completed.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to an item which I see in to-day's 'Citizen', which reads as follows:

Washington, Feb. 15.—Action was taken to-day by the senate committee on foreign relations which if sustained by the senate will not only put an end to pelagic sealing in the Behring sea, but will also stop the killing of seals on shore for a period of years. The committee to-day ordered a favourable report on the draft of a treaty between America and Great Britain providing for the protection of seals in this manner. It is based upon the declaration of experts that the seal herd, now nearly exterminated, will be completely restored to its original strength in the course of a few years if left completely undisturbed. Russia and Japan must also make similar treaties to make this effective.

I would like to inquire of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if such a treaty is being negotiated, and if he can communicate to the House any information regarding it, or upon what lines it proceeds, or tell us if we are bartering away any rights which we possess in the seal fisheries at the present time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There has been a treaty signed between Great Britain and the United States, of course Canada being a consenting party, not for the abolition but for the cessation during a term of years of pelagic sealing upon terms which have been mutually agreed upon and which, I have no doubt, will be found satisfactory. I am not in a position to-day to put the treaty before the House, but I hope to do so within a short time, and certainly as soon as we have received it.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the right hon. the Prime Minister say whether that treaty goes into operation unless it includes the other pelagic sealing nations?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say as to that at the present time. I do not think it does, but I cannot say certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. Does it cover sealing on the American islands off the coast of Alaska or only upon the islands which are common to the two countries?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, it applies to pelagic sealing on the high seas. It affects only, as far as I remember, the Pacific ocean.

THE FLAG ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to bring the attention of the government to the fact that it has never been customary to fly the flag on the public institutions of Canada on St. David's Day. St. David's Day is the 1st March. The white cross of St. David forms a part of our Union Jack and I am satisfied that the people of Welsh descent in Canada will be only too glad to find the government ordering up the flag on public buildings on that day. The eldest son of our Sovereign takes his title as Prince of Wales from that part of the United Kingdom and Welshmen have always been found to the front doing their duty in defence of the empire. I trust the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will be good enough to order the flag to be flown on public buildings on the 1st March.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) will receive due consideration. While the question of flying the flag on public buildings is before the House I might refer to a question put by an hon. gentleman a short time ago. He asked me for information with regard to flying the flag throughout Canada. There are certain days, with which hon. gentlemen are no doubt familiar, upon which the flag is always flown upon all the public buildings, and then it may also be flown upon other days to be named by the Minister of Public Works. Latterly the question has come up with reference to flying the flag upon public buildings upon every day in the year. It has been thought that would be a somewhat expensive matter, and, therefore, it would be worthy of some consideration before deciding to do it. In an informal way I have conferred with my colleagues upon this subject, and they approve of the suggestion that in the border cities and towns, including the seaports of Canada, it would be desirable to have the flag flown every day in the year. The reason for that is that the United States flag is flown upon the American consulate every day in the year. It was a matter of remark in the city of St. John that a stranger coming by steamer to the city, upon whatever day he came, saw the Stars and Stripes flying to the breeze and unless it happened to be a special occasion he would not see the Union Jack. Therefore, in the seaports to which strangers are constantly coming, and in the border towns I have directed that the flag shall be flown upon our public buildings every day in the year. With regard to having it flown upon all public buildings in Canada upon every day in the year, that is a matter that is still under consideration.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the minister consider the flying of the flag on public buildings on St. David's Day?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I have told the hon. gentleman that it will be taken into consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I have thought sometimes that it would be a good plan if the flag were flown on public buildings during the time that parliament was in session so that in any part of the country, if the flag were seen flying from public buildings, it would be known at once that parliament was in session.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when the report of the Ottawa Improvement Commission will be brought down. Under the statute it should be down fourteen days after the beginning of the session. I mentioned this to the Prime Minister about a month ago.

Mr. FIELDING. The finances of the Ottawa Improvement Commission have already been reported to the House by the Auditor General's Report but the formal submission that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) asks will be made immediately. I thought I had the report here, but there is really nothing which is not already before the House in the shape of the Auditor General's Report, I think.

RENTAL OF OTTAWA BUILDINGS—LIGHTING CONTRACT.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. In the Evening 'Journal,' published in the city of Ottawa last evening, I find a statement prepared by Mr. Ellis, the treasurer of the city of Ottawa, and who is the head of the municipal lighting department of the city. Referring to certain statements which I made in the House with reference to the lighting of certain buildings owned by the Imperial Realty Company, Mr. Ellis is reported as making the following remarks :

On my return from Toronto a few days ago I found that the Hon. Dr. Pugsley had in the House of Commons charged me with having issued false vouchers in connection with the electric light consumed by his department in the buildings rented from Mr. Woods.

I emphatically say that no vouchers or accounts, false or otherwise connected with this matter were ever issued by me, or on my instructions, or with my knowledge.

When the department became a tenant of Mr. Woods, he had a flat rate from the Consumers' Company. The department was offered but refused a flat rate, and determined to pay according to the meter rate. It then requested Mr. Woods to instruct the Consumers' Company to place meters in the building in order to measure the current. The company complied with this request, for the sole purpose of enabling the Public Works Department to be furnished officially with correct statements of the amount which they had agreed to pay. Mr. Woods had nothing to do with the meter readings. He had a flat rate with the Consumers' Company and he continued it.

The position therefore was that Mr. Woods, as landlord of the buildings, had a flat rate with the Consumers' Company, and the department, as tenant, desiring to pay according to the amount of electricity which it should actually consume, obtained installation of meters and required for its own information quarterly statements taken from the meters. These statements were furnished by the Consumers' Company until the city took over its plant, and since then have been furnished by the city. There is no other way in which the department could have been informed as to what it ought to pay. Neither the Consumers' Company nor the city need have taken the trouble which they did to give the department the information which it desired to have. Both did it merely as a business courtesy, and the return which the city gets is a recklessly untruthful villification.

In March, 1906, the city offered to give the Department of Public Works direct, Mr. Woods' flat rate contract, but this offer was not accepted, the department thus refusing a flat rate for the second time. The government therefore could from that time have had a contract direct with the city at the same rate which Mr. Woods paid the city, but instead continued paying him the full meter rates. If Mr. Woods has made a profit in the meter out of the government the Public Works Department is alone to blame.

Mr. Pugsley has no justification whatever for the statements he made regarding myself or for bringing my name into the matter at all. In fact, he had information at his disposal at the time he made the statements which conclusively showed this.

The remarks which I made and to which Mr. Ellis refers will be found on page 3240 and following of 'Hansard.' I have looked over the statement I made and I have nothing to add to and nothing to retract from that statement, except in one respect. I find that upon page 3240 I stated that when I became minister there was rendered to my department by the Imperial Realty Company bills upon a meter basis. I stated, further, that these bills were rendered by the company, that they were accompanied by bills on their regular account forms rendered by the electric light department of the city of Ottawa, presided over by the city treasurer, Mr. Ellis, showing the indebtedness of the Imperial Realty Company, or James W. Woods, as the case might be, to the city for the amount of current consumed based upon the meter rate, and that these bills were marked 'settled' by the electrical department of the city, that they were receipted as vouchers, and that they accompanied the bills which the Imperial Realty Company rendered to my department. You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that I stated that these bills had been rendered by the electrical department of the city of Ottawa. I did not mention Mr. Ellis's name then, although I knew that Mr. Ellis was the gentleman who presided over that department, and who I would suppose would be responsible for vouchers or bills that would be issued by that department. A little later in the discussion, as will be seen by page 3241 of 'Hansard,' the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) referred to Mr. Ellis—and this was the first mention that was made of Mr. Ellis's name in that connection, as follows:

Mr. SHARPE. Would not that arouse suspicion?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because I would never dream that the treasurer of the city of Ottawa would issue a false voucher.

Then the member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) proceeded to say:

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). It is only fair to the city treasurer to state that the president of the Imperial Realty Company went to him and personally asked him to supply the amount of electricity that was consumed on a meter basis. He said he did not know what purpose it was to be used for; he had been personally requested by the president of the company to furnish the amount on the meter basis. He did not get paid for it and did not do it with intent to deceive the department.

Then I replied:

Mr. PUGSLEY. So also the Imperial Realty Company say they did not do it to deceive the department.

That was the first intimation that Mr. Ellis, the treasurer of the city, had personally intervened in the matter. All that I was concerned in was to inform the House of the fact that the electrical department of the city, over which Mr. Ellis presides, had rendered these bills, as showing the indebtedness of Mr. Woods to the city, and which showed an indebtedness for the identical amount as contained in the bills which the Imperial Realty Company rendered to the department, and which were paid by the department. Now, in the statement of Mr. Ellis, he says:

I emphatically say that no vouchers or accounts, false or otherwise, connected with this matter were ever issued by me or on my instructions or with my knowledge.

Now, I am not concerned with the fact as to whether Mr. Ellis actually put his hand to these vouchers, or whether they were issued by an official of his department. That was of no importance to me; it would be of no importance to the department; it would be of no importance to the Auditor General, whose duty it would be to examine into the accounts; the question of importance was that the electrical department had issued these accounts and that based upon them were the bills which were rendered. Now, Mr. Ellis says that no vouchers, either erroneous or otherwise, were ever issued with his knowledge.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Would the minister allow me? Was the Department of Public Works deceived by these accounts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes; I say they were.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Was the city treasurer mistaken in his letter when he stated the department was not deceived?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The city treasurer could know nothing with regard to that. The various departments of the government are made up of officials, and above and beyond the officials of the departments is the Auditor General, and then comes the Public Accounts Committee, and it is all important, it seems to me, that in matters with which the government, or the various departments are connected everything should be open and above board, and I can imagine nothing which would be more calculated to deceive the officers of the department whose duty it is to check the accounts than to have erroneous statements presented as vouchers; statements which were not true on their face, but which contained statements which were absolutely incorrect. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 580 of the report of the Public Accounts Committee of last session they will find a sample of these accounts which were rendered and which Mr. Ellis, in his statement, says never were rendered with his knowledge or authority. I find that one of these, which is printed here, is as follows:

Mr. PUGSLEY.

The Municipal Electric Department.
Ottawa, September 20, 1909.

Mr. J. W. Woods,
Slater street, Ottawa.

Acct. Folio 32 Meter No. 20212.

Discount of 10 per cent if this account is paid on or before October 5, 1909..		47 41

Arrears on which no discount is allowed——
Settled by Imperial Realty Company.—Municipal Electric Department. (Sgd.) G. E. Pennock, September 23, 1909.

Now, I understand from the statement of Mr. Ellis that no accounts, no vouchers, no bills, were issued by his department with his knowledge or authority. Well, we have here a statement showing the indebtedness of Mr. Woods to the municipal electric department of the city of Ottawa, charging him with the quantity of electric current consumed, charging him by the meter rate upon that quantity, showing the balance which Mr. Woods paid to the city of Ottawa, and showing that the account had been settled by the Imperial Realty Company. Now, Mr. Speaker, I leave it to you and I leave it to the House, as to whether or not that is a mere statement of the meter reading which Mr. Woods, or the Imperial Realty Company might hand over to the Department of Public Works. I ask you, Sir, whether I was wrong in the statement I made that the municipal electric department, from the time I became minister at all events, had furnished the bills showing the actual indebtedness of Mr. Woods to the municipal electric department of the city.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Would the minister permit another question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did the electric department offer a flat rate to the department in 1906?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it did not.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Then Mr. Ellis is mistaken in that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ellis is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). After reflection, will the minister say now that his department was deceived by these accounts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is true as I stated, and as is found in 'Hansard,' that away back in 1904, before I became minister, when the question was put to Mr. Ewart, chief architect, as to whether he would prefer to pay by the meter or flat rate, he preferred the meter rate, because he said the department would prefer to pay for the electric light actually consumed. But so far as the records show, at all events during the years that I have been in charge of the department, it does not appear that the government was paying one cent more for electric light than the city was charging Mr. Woods or the Imperial Realty Company, that, in other words, the accounts show that the department was paying to the Imperial Realty Company the identical amounts which the city was charging for the electricity consumed. You will observe that these accounts show that they were settled by the Imperial Realty Company, and so the accounts go along all in the same way. A little later on I find in the very last account rendered a statement exactly in the same form upon the bill-heads of the municipal department of the city. Here is a statement of what it was alleged by the city Mr. Woods was indebted to them for lighting, and on it there is this statement. 'Settled by cheque, Municipal Electric Department,' signed by Mr. Pennock. That is a little stronger than these others, because there is here an allegation that a cheque had been given by Mr. Woods to the city of Ottawa for the identical amount which Mr. Woods was charging to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Ellis refers to the three buildings. The evidence before the Committee on Public Accounts discloses that in respect to the Queen street building the city of Ottawa was paid by a meter rate and not by a flat rate, and if you take the accounts from beginning to end, you will find that the city dealt with the lighting of the Queen street building in exactly the same way as it did with the lighting of the buildings on Slater street, so far as the issuing of these accounts and vouchers was concerned.

Mr. Ellis says:

> In March, 1906, the city offered to give the Department of Public Works direct, Mr Woods' flat rate contract, but this offer was not accepted, the department refusing a flat rate for the second time.

I have examined the records of the department and I cannot find a trace of any such offer having been made. No offer was made, so far as I have been able to discover, but I do admit that in 1904, and I so stated when I addressed the House previously upon this question, the department, through Mr. Ewart, had the opportunity of paying for lighting by meter or flat rate, and it preferred to pay by a meter rate, but there is nothing to show that the officials of the department knew that Mr. Woods was receiving anything from the Public Works Department beyond what he was paying to the city of Ottawa, and I wish to emphasize the statement which I have already made that I cannot conceive how it is possible for Mr. Ellis to be mistaken in regard to these accounts. It may be that he did not see the accounts which were rendered by an official of his department, who is acting under his supervision, it may be that they were issued in entire ignorance upon his part, but that they were issued and were presented as vouchers from time to time there can be no doubt, as appears from the vouchers as they appear in the report of the Committee on Public Accounts, and as they appear also in the records of the department.

I ought to call the attention of you and of the House to what took place upon the 23rd of May, because I think I will show that the official of the municipal department recognized that what he had done had misled the Department of Public Works. Upon the 23rd of May, 1910, I wrote this letter, addressed to the mayor of the city of Ottawa:

> Dear Mr. Mayor,—During the recent session of parliament it was stated by a member of the Public Accounts Committee, who professed to know, that the government was paying a considerably larger amount for the lighting of buildings owned by the Imperial Realty Company, Limited, in this city, than was actually charged by the city.
> In looking over the accounts, I find that the Municipal Electric Department of the city furnished from time to time bills charging the company meter rates, and which bills were for the same amounts, as paid by the department. These accounts were submitted as vouchers, and the proper officials of my department, as well as the Auditor General, acted upon these vouchers, presuming that they were correct, and paid the bills.
>
> As an illustration, I find that an account was rendered by the Imperial Realty Company on the 22nd September, 1909, a copy of which is attached. Accompanying the account are vouchers, copies of which are also hereto annexed. These accounts are marked "Settled by the Imperial Realty Company," and are signed by the Municipal Electric Department.
>
> I shall esteem it a favour if you will kindly advise me as to whether or not my information in regard to there being a difference between the amounts paid to the city, and the amounts of the vouchers, signed on behalf of the city, is correct, and, if so, I shall be glad to have such explanation as the officials of the city have to offer upon the subject.
>
> I am, dear Mr. Mayor,
> Yours very truly,
> (Sgd.) WILLIAM PUGSLEY.
> Charles Hopewell, Esq.,
> Mayor, Ottawa.

On the 27th of May I received the following reply:

City of Ottawa,
Mayor's Office,
Ottawa, May 27, 1910.

The Honourable
The Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Mr. Pugsley,—Your letter of May 23rd to hand, re lighting of the buildings owned by the Imperial Realty Company, Limited, in this city. I beg to say that I have written to the officials in charge asking for an explanation and will forward to you, a copy of same as soon as received.

Believe me,
Sincerely yours,
(Sgd.) CHAS. HOPEWELL,
Mayor.

On June 9th, I received the following from His Worship the Mayor:

To the Honourable
The Minister of Public Works,
City.

Dear Mr. Pugsley,—I am enclosing you copies of letters sent by me to Mr. G. E. Pennock, and his reply in explanation of yours to me of some days ago.

Believe me,
Very sincerely yours,
(Sgd.) CHARLES HOPEWELL.

And this is the letter of Mr. Pennock, the accountant of the Municipal Electric Department, an official under Mr. Ellis, to His Worship the Mayor:

Ottawa, June 3rd, 1910.

His Worship,
Mayor Hopewell,
City.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of May 27th, regarding a letter received by you from the Minister of Public Works in reference to account for electric current furnished to the Woods Building.

You say that the Minister of Public Works asks: 'Whether his information in regard to there being a difference between the amounts paid to the city and the amounts of the vouchers signed on behalf of the city is correct, and also if such be the fact what explanation can be given.'

In reply I beg to say,—

Mr. Woods pays the city for the Queen street Building the regular meter rates and for the Woods and Canadian Buildings, the flat rate. I am informed that his agreement with the government provides that they shall pay him on a regular meter rate for all the buildings. The meter rates are invariably higher than the flat rates. In order to enable him to render his account to the government on the meter basis, meters were installed in these buildings and meter readings have been regularly made, first by the Consumers Company and afterwards by the city.

The practice of installing meters for this purpose was commenced in 1904 before I was employed by the company.

The accounts referred to in the minister's letter were made up from such meter readings and for the purpose only of enabling Mr. Woods to render to the government his accounts upon the regular meter rate.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

The statement put upon them by me 'Settled by the Imperial Realty Company' was not intended to lead anyone to believe that the company or Mr. Woods had paid the city the amounts of money shown in them but only that the claim of the city against that company and Mr. Woods had been settled.

On the fuller consideration which I have recently given to the matter, I believe it would have been better for me to have made such a statement in a separate document and that I should not have made the memorandum on the copies of the accounts.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) G. E. PENNOCK.

Having presented those facts to you, Mr. Speaker, having called your attention to the vouchers issued by the city and the accounts which profess to show the indebtedness of Mr. Woods to the city for the supply of light charged by him to the Department of Public Works, I think you will agree that the city treasurer is not justified in making the statement that no accounts or vouchers were submitted to Mr. Woods by the city treasurer or with his knowledge. If Mr. Ellis means that he had no personal knowledge of it and that it was done by the accountant of the city behind his back, it may be that his statement would be correct; but if he meant that the city did not issue those statements and vouchers, as I said in my previous explanation, you will agree with me that in this he was not in accord with the facts. I therefore have felt it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the House at the earliest opportunity. I desire to repeat now what I said before that I did not charge either the Imperial Realty Company or the electrical department of the city with fraud.

What I said was that they both had made the statement that they had no intention to deceive the department, but that they did deceive the officials of the department. I came in as minister in 1907 and a year or so after, or a considerable number of months after, my deputy came in, and he would not know what had taken place some years before. So far as I am able to discover neither did any of the other officials know that a lesser rate was being charged Mr. Woods by the city than was being charged by him to the department from time to time. It is true, as I have said, that Mr. Ewart had the opportunity in 1904 of getting the light at a flat rate, but he decided it was better to take it by the meter rate; but so far as I am aware, there is nothing on the files to show that Mr. Ewart or any other official of the department supposed that Mr. Woods was making anything out of this contract. So far as I am concerned, I never knew it, and my deputy says he never knew it, and so far as the Auditor General is concerned, whose duty it is to protect the interests of the department, these vouchers which were issued from quarter to quarter for the amounts which the department was called upon to pay, would indicate that the department was simply paying Mr. Woods the charges made by the electrical department of the city of Ottawa from time to time.

THE WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to recall the promise made by the hon. the Minister of Public Works some time ago to the effect that before we discuss the Waterways Treaty, the plans, so far as they are made by the commission, would be laid on the table. I would like to ask the hon. minister if those plans are ready and when they will be laid on the table.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made the inquiry at once and found that the plans were not completed and it was supposed they would not be for some time. I shall make further inquiry and if my hon. friend will bring the matter to my attention I will let him know.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

House in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I am glad to see that the very general attendance of members on this side indicates the deep interest the Conservative party are taking in this question. It is no wonder that this should be the case because never during the past 15 or 20 years, or perhaps a longer period, has anything been presented to this House which will probably have such far reaching consequences as the resolution now before us. I paid very careful attention to the very able address made yesterday by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), and if I have to take exception to that address, it will not at all be as to the fluent and eloquent way in which he presented his argument, but rather to the attitude assumed and his failure to carry out the promise he made in opening his speech. After making a very elaborate and carefully prepared statement of figures and drawing from them many somewhat strained and difficult conclusions, he closed his address by saying that in the bargain made between Canada and Washington, every interest affected had been guarded both as regards this country and Great Britain. I submit that my hon. friend will hardly be prepared to stand by that proposition if he gives the matter a moment's reflection. Around about the city of Guelph, comprising some 16,000 inhabitants, there are market gardeners and others raising fruit and vegetables—a growing industry—so that he need not go beyond his own riding to ascertain that interests of a very important character have been struck, and struck very hard by the proposed arrangement. In the exuberance of words in which he indulged yesterday, he forgot that within the last week we had within this very chamber some 1,500 representatives of the two important industries of fruit growing and market gardening who protested that their interests were about to be injuriously affected, and he forgot also that the right hon. the Prime Minister had to admit that he was absolutely helpless to assist that large delegation which had so ably pressed on him its views.

I might multiply instances and point out that, whilst my hon. friend may think this is a matter of comparative insignificance, yet these men represent families probably aggregating 8,000 or 10,000 people; that they employ perhaps tens of thousands of labourers in their industry—which is a growing industry, and in the early stages of its development,—and that the people in the towns and cities which are surrounded by these industries, are receiving large emoluments from dealing with these people. So I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a trifling matter to be brushed aside by my hon. friend as beneath his consideration. And it does not end there. Does my hon. friend forget that the whole future of British Columbia is practically sacrificed by the proposals which the government have presented to this House; that, so far from guarding the various interests of this country, the government, or the government's representatives, negotiating behind closed doors, utterly ignored the rights and interest of a whole province of this Dominion?

Now, the hon. gentleman saw fit to attack the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), in a very animated, if not to say vicious way. He greatly deplored that the leader of the opposition had spoken in reference to the appointment of a tariff commission, and he pointed out that this would be a complete departure from precedent and from the system upon which British countries are usually governed. Not to do the hon. gentleman any injustice, I will read what he said:

> No doubt such a plan would meet the desires of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association; but if my hon. friend would adopt such a system, he would be reversing one of the cardinal principles of British politics, which is that the right to tax must remain with the peoples' representatives. The right was established many long years ago, and I have no doubt will survive to the end; but if the leader of the opposition desires to depart from that principle and appoint a permanent tariff commission to regulate our tariff, the sooner the people should know it the better.

Was that—especially as coming from a gentleman of the ability of my hon. friend—a fair way to present the remarks of the leader of the opposition ? Did the leader of the opposition propose to rob representatives in parliament of any of their rights; did he ever propose to shackle parliament in the exercise of its powers ? No, Sir. It comes with rather poor grace from a supporter of this order in council government, which has been so actively at work, in this direction, in the last few years to talk of limiting the rights of parliament. But so that we may know exactly how that matter stands, I will read a few lines of what the leader of the opposition really said. And I might call the attention of the committee to the fact that, while my hon. friend was brave enough to start out with the idea of reading the language of the opposition leader, he changed his mind and could not afterwards be got to do it. What the leader of the opposition said was this:

Upon what should our policy be based? Should it be based upon an attempt to create millionaires in this country or to impose unfair conditions upon any portion of the community?

Not by any means. Does my hon. friend object to that proposition? I believe that we in Canada, in the future still more than in the past, should attempt to shape our tariff upon scientific consideration of known facts. I believe it would be well that we should have exact information as to these matters laid before parliament. I believe it would be well if we established a permanent tariff commission in Canada so that our tariff should not be made by rule of thumb. An agitation arises in some part of the country against a duty of 25 per cent, and it is said it should be reduced to 15 per cent, and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs get together and the industries affected declare in stringent tones that a reduction of 15 per cent would absolutely wipe out their industry, and throw thousands of men out of employment, and then the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance say: We will compromise, and we will make it 20 per cent. I do not think that is the manner in which our tariff should be framed; I think it should aim at equalization of cost of production so far as that can reasonably be accomplished. We ought to give the people of this country a fair opportunity to create industries and to give employment, but we ought not to give it under conditions as would impose burdens upon a portion of our people.

Does my hon. friend object to that proposition which he would not read ? He seems to think that we should not consider the Manufacturers' Association. He had his little fling at this side of the House, in connection with that matter. Therefore, I can assume, surely, that neither he nor any hon. gentleman on that side of the House has been coquetting with the Manufacturers' Association upon this subject. Let us see what the records show. There was a meeting of the Manufacturers' Association in Montreal in October, 1908. At that meeting, several distinguished members of this House were present. A gentleman addressing the banquetters said:

It is in this spirit that I am authorized to state to you, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that while we recognize that the responsibility rests upon the government of the day of settling the tariff, this association will heartily welcome the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, to which the multifarious details that enter into the tariff question must be referred for investigation and report. Such a suggestion does not flow from any desire to infringe upon the rights of parliament or to restrict its responsibilities, but rather to aid it by bringing to bear upon the difficult and complicated tariff problems which are constantly calling for consideration, the fullest possible light from every possible quarter.

What the leader of the opposition proposed was, that we should not be dealing with this question in the dark, that we should have a permanent tariff commission to investigate matters pertaining to the tariff; that they should collect data and that the information which they collected should be reported to parliament so that parliament could intelligently act upon and deal with the question. Well, Sir, I have the opportunity of showing that a reasonably prominent gentleman in the ranks of the government entirely concurred in that view.

There is just another idea as to which I want to have a word of expression. You have stated, Mr. Chairman, in your address, that you desired to have a permanent tariff commission. I do not exactly realize yet what is meant by a 'Permanent Tariff Commisison,' but I am free to say that if it be meant that you would have a permanent commission such as I think they have in the United States to follow the workings of the tariff from day to day, to follow the incidence, to follow the effects upon the producer and the consumer, and its daily effects upon the community, I do not see any reason why such a commission should not be appointed.

That was the statement of the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But he did not stop there; as he so often says, 'that is not all,' because he also pointed out to them that he had decided to appoint a commission, which would not be composed of politicians or party heelers, but of business men and of experts, to make inquiry in foreign countries. And that was not all, either. He told these gentlemen whom my hon. friend is so much afraid of, that if that did not satisfy them, he was willing to appoint another commission, and he was willing to have them represented upon that commission. So the government, to say the least of it, has gone one better upon that question of a tariff commission.

Now, my hon. friend also thought that the leader of the opposition was very weak in using the expression 'let well enough alone.' Well, if he had read what the leader of the opposition said as the foundation for that advice, he would have realized that it is pretty sound advice. The leader of the opposition had pointed out the policy upon which this country has been built up, with transportation lines running from east to west. He had shown that we had for a great number of years, for forty years, pursued the steady policy of self-reliance, that every industry in this country was practically booming at the present time, and he intimated that in this condition of things, for a shadowy chance of gain it was not wise to make this radical departure without consulting the people, and it would be wise, perhaps, to leave well enough alone. I want to say, Sir, that I believe there is a large majority of people in this country who would echo that sentiment to the full. Why, listen to some facts in addition to those referred to by my honoured leader as showing the prosperity of the country at the present time. Take the building permits, last year they amounted to $94,000,000, and in 1909 to $65,000,000; so there was a net gain in the building industry, indicating the prosperity of the cities, of $29,000,000, or 45 per cent. Back to the farm, said my hon. friend; the rural population is also in a thrifty condition. We must remember that Ontario is being drained to some extent by the flow of her sturdy sons to the west, yet notwithstanding that drain, Ontario, according to the last report, has gained 5,000 in population in two years, while the annual products of the farm now amount to $250,000,000. Live stock in Canada, in 1910, was valued at $599,768,000; in 1909 it was valued at $555,879,000. So there has been a net gain in the value of live stock alone of nearly $35,000,0000. Let me give you a summary of other evidence of progress. Since 1868 we have doubled in population; we have enormous American industries planted in Canada, representing $250,000,000; we have more than that number of millions of capital waiting to come to Canada, and halted by reason of the attitude of the government at the present time. The area of Canada under cultivation is ten times what it was in 1868; the banking capital is ten times what it was; deposits in the banks are nearly thirty times what they were; our railway mileage is about twelve times what it was, and the freightage is about twelve times what it was in 1868. We have an unexcelled system of railway transportation in Canada; we have a greater railway mileage and greater facilities for carrying our products to the markets of the world, rated per population, than any other country in the world. Therefore, having made this progress in face of the steady opposition of the Americans for forty years, is it not wise, even without regard to what this may lead us to, in a political sense, is it not somewhat wise that we should adopt the motto of leaving well enough alone?

My hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) promised us something that he was not able to carry out; he promised us that his address would be non-political, but he could not keep that promise. I do not think there is an hon. gentleman on that side of the House who could redeem a promise of that kind. Within four or five sentences, he had plunged deeply into politics. He did not lash and slash the leader of the opposition to any great extent, but there is one man whose influence upon him cannot be withstood, and that is the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). So within a few sentences the hon. gentleman got into his old habit, he forgot all his good resolutions, and he plunged deeply into politics, where he wallowed until the end of his address. My hon. friend had a leader whom he could not disregard in that respect; he was only following in the lead of the Minister of Customs, who, after he had uttered four sentences, following the speech of the leader of the opposition, in which not one political sentence is to be found, in his fifth sentence, plunged into a comparison of the old way and the new—the prosperity of the country was all due to the Reform party—it was all brought about by this magnificent government now in power. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and you are a fair man, what has that got to do with the matter? How does it affect this great issue, whether our prosperity was brought about by the Liberal party or by the Liberal-Conservative party? It is business we are after, and it is safety we are considering in this matter, and in the consideration of these questions, it is a poor policy to descend to the discussion of which party has brought about prosperity.

Then my hon. friend referred to geographical conditions—a boundary line of 4,000 miles contiguous to the United States, it was a pity that these geographical conditions should be ignored. In that he is only following the lead of American newspapers The New York 'American' is very eloquent upon the geographical conditions of the two countries. Do not fight against nature, they say; it is not right, it is not christian, it is not kind, it is not wise, and yet for thirty years these same Americans fought against 'geographical conditions' and the geographical conditions have not changed one iota in these forty years. Then if that is so, we want some better explanation of not fighting against geographical conditions than we have got so far. My hon. friend spoke of the wheat industry. I must say he was rather fair in that. He said that he did not expect any great quantity of wheat to be exported to the United States, that he did not expect any immediate increase in price, but that he expected a gradual rise. He is contradicted in that by the President Mr. Taft who says that he expects a gradual fall. Mr. Taft has studied this question. The object he has in view is to lower the cost of living in the United States. If the cost of living is to be decreased by bringing in Canadian wheat, of course, it goes without saying that you must reduce the price of wheat in the United States. Mr. Taft says :

Reciprocity with Canada must necessarily be chiefly confined in its effect on the cost of living to food and forest products.

He says again :

I do not wish to hold out the prospect that the unrestricted interchange of food products will greatly and at once reduce their cost to the people of this country. Moreover, the present small amount of Canadian surplus for export as compared with that of our own production and consumption would make the reduction gradual. Excluding the element of transportation, the price of staple food products, especially of cereals, is much the same the world over, and the recent increase in price has been the result of a world-wide cause. But a source of supply as near as Canada would certainly help to prevent speculative fluctuations, would steady local price movements, and would postpone the effect of a further world increase in the price of leading commodities entering into the cost of living, if that be inevitable.

In other words, agreeing with Mr. Hill and agreeing with all people who have studied this question, the President recognizes that as both Canada and the United States have a surplus of wheat the price must be ruled by the price at Liverpool, and it is just as idle as anything possibly can be ; it is not appealing to the intelligence of the people of Canada, to argue that there will be any substantial or permanent increase of price by reason of this reciprocity arrangement. My hon. friend argued though that the United States would soon cease to be a country producing a surplus of grain. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) tells us that there will be immediately an enormous increase in the production of grain in Canada by reason of this reciprocity and that reciprocity is going to be mutually beneficial. With the vast areas available for producing wheat in the United States, and with an enormously increased production there, is it not idle for my hon. friend to talk about getting an advantage by reason of that feature of the argument? My hon. friend says that if we had a million more people in the west what a great stimulus it would be to the industry of Ontario. Yes, it would be if we were getting their trade. He says that the manufactured productions of his own city, and probably of Ontario generally, go to the west. Yes, they go to the west, but they go on the basis of exchange. Will that continue if the products of the west are poured down into the United States? My hon. friend says : How can you expect that manufactured goods will come into Canada? They will come into Canada because of a law which has been in existence for a long time that where you will sell you will buy, and the return cargo is something which enters very largely into the question of the price. They will carry grain, cattle and other products of the west down into the various states of the union, they will have a cargo and what more natural than that we should deal very largely with people to whom we have sold. I notice that the hon. member for South Wellington is quite convinced on this subject—when he became convinced I do not know—but he is perfectly convinced that this proposal is all right, and that Canada as a whole is going to gain by it. I admit he did not show us how but he said that Canada is going to gain. How long has my hon. friend been of that opinion? I remember that a little while ago a prominent gentleman from the Senate, Sir George W. Ross, made a very eloquent address before the Board of Trade in Toronto. He demonstrated as clearly as a proposition can be demonstrated that reciprocity would be prejudicial to the interests of Canada. He demonstrated that and he pronounced his opinion very distinctly at a time when reciprocity of a much more confined character was supposed to be what was in contemplation than what it has turned out to be. I have to ask my hon. friend from South Wellington if it is a fact that he wrote Sir George W. Ross approving of his attitude, or of the address he made upon that occasion, and congratulated him?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not think I did. I have no recollection of ever having done so, but I will verify that information. I have no recollection whatever of writing him on any subject within the last five years.

Mr. LENNOX. We will leave it at that.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If my hon. friend knows anything I wish he would remind me of it now because I would like to be correct in my statement.

Mr. LENNOX. I have reason to believe that the hon. gentleman did, but I am quite prepared to accept the statement that he does not recollect having done so.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not.

Mr. LENNOX. And if the hon. gentleman will inform us later on I am sure that I will appreciate it because I have a very considerable respect for my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is very kind of you.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps it is a case of sudden conversion.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, he did not expect these gentlemen were going to get into such a hobble, and my hon. friend is one of those who very frequently has to come to the rescue. The forces would seem to be a little lacking on this occasion, they do not seem to line up as they used to do, there seem to be a number of them faltering and so my hon. friend is compelled in a sense to take the position that he takes at the present time. I have a great admiration for the hon. member for South Wellington as regards his power of speaking—everybody on this side of the House, I think, has—but I have no admiration for the hon. gentleman when he begins to deal with figures. Somehow or other, whenever that hon. gentleman begins to deal with figures, he seems to be lost and anybody who would follow him would be lost too. I do not therefore, purpose following him through the dense mass of figures he presented yesterday, but at some time at my convenience I shall pick out the most glaring inconsistencies, which judging not only by the indications we had yesterday, but on many other previous occasions they undoubtedly contain. For instance, he was going to annihilate the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—he seems to lose his head when he gets after the member for North Toronto—and in endeavouring to show that every tittle of the British preference was being preserved, he takes what he says is the largest item namely rolled iron and steel billets to the amount of $3,490,000, and he says it is free all round. Well, he is just 5 per cent out. He told us Britain and the United States were on the same basis before with regard to this item and they are on the same basis now, and therefore the preference remains. That is not a very strong argument in any event, but it turns out that the hon. gentleman is wrong, and that we have had up to the present time—I hope it will continue and that the common sense of this parliament will not allow this arrangement to go through—we have had 5 per cent against the Americans and nothing at all against Britain on $3,500,000 worth of imports of this character. Britain came in—to use a colloquial expression—upon the ground floor, and the Americans had to climb a wall, and Britain therefore, had a preference. And, it is proposed in this and other respects—and the Americans are gloating over it—it is proposed now that we shall wipe out the preference, and that the Americans shall come in on the ground floor with Britain. Indeed, the Americans will come in on better terms than Britain, because the United States are at our doors and Britain has to transport her products over the sea and thence by rail to their destination. Therefore as a matter of fact on this item and on all items of the same class, Britain is actually in a worse position than the United States. But that is only a slight error for my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie). A little while ago he pointed out that in 1896 our import trade with Britain amounted to $41,000,000, and that to-day it amounts to $270,000,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE. What is the hon. gentleman referring to?

Mr. LENNOX. I will explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If it is something that occurred in the debate at the beginning of the session the hon. gentleman must not refer to it now, and as a matter of fact I explained it at the time.

Mr. LENNOX. I have a perfect right to illustrate why I would not like to follow the leadership of my hon. friend with regard to figures.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I take the point of order that the hon. member has no right to refer to a former debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A former debate may not be referred to for the purpose of entering into the merits of it in any way. But, if the reference is not too prolonged, it may be allowed as an illustration.

Mr. LENNOX. I will try to make it brief. My hon. friend said that Britain sells us $270,000,000, but when his attention was afterwards called to it, after mature and careful consideration, he stated that in revising his speech he had changed it to $217,000,000, which, therefore, may be considered the best my hon. friend could then do in that regard. But the facts are that in 1910 our imports from Great Britain instead of being either $217,000,000 or $270,000,000 were $95,000,000, and in 1908 is was $70,000,000, and in 1909 $94,000,000 odd. On the original figures my hon. friend was out $175,000,000, and on the corrected figures he was $122,000,000 astray. But, in a matter of that kind he is not unlike the government, for on their estimate of the cost of the Transcontinental railway they also were woefully astray in their figures. Then, in order to show how weak the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had been as Minister of Finance the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) said that our trade is now a little more than five times what it was when Mr. Foster was Minister of Finance. This, and other figures introduced by my hon. friend in the debate are illustrative of the fact that he is utterly unreliable when he deals with figures. Later he was dealing with immigration, and said he had applied to the Immigration Department and obtained the information that for a certain number of years—I think nine years and nine months—ending 31st March last, the total immigration had been 1,453,391, made up as follows: From the United Kingdom 562,054, which would be 38·67 per cent of the whole immigration; from the United States 497,390, which would be 34·22 per cent of the total immigration; from other countries collectively 393,947 or 27·10 per cent of the total immigration, and he sums it up by telling us that the immigration consisted of less than 25 per cent of foreigners. Well, he who runs may read; from the United States alone there came in 34·22 per cent, and from other countries 27·10 per cent some of whom certainly would be foreigners, but taking only the immigration from the United States the hon. gentleman makes the palpable error of saying that our immigration comprises only 25 per cent of foreigners, and therefore that the process of assimilation is easy.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is the hon. member still referring to a previous debate?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It seems to me these figures are not being applied to the question before us, and are rather longer than I would feel at liberty to grant the hon. member permission to use, unless they apply in some specific way to the debate, and merely as a passing illustration.

Mr. LENNOX. I will not go into details.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Shall I have a chance to reply?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the committee there is of course always a reply.

Mr. LENNOX. I may say that this is all illustrative of the fact that when my hon. friend is quoting figures I cannot follow him, much as I respect his judgment in some other matters.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the reason offered by the hon. gentleman, but it was still my duty to protect another hon. member and to enforce the rules of the House, so while I permit this reference to a previous debate for purposes of illustration, it is my duty to see that it is not prolonged.

Mr. LENNOX. I was in the middle of a table, I shall be at liberty to complete that?

Mr. FOSTER. Please let him out of the middle of that table.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman understands my mind in the matter, and will as rapidly as possible get through the reference to it.

Mr. LENNOX. Bringing the figures down to the date with which my hon. friend was dealing, he says the foreign population was only 23 per cent, whereas I find there were from the United States alone, 37 per cent of the population and of course, that was foreign. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), made a statement, directly attacking the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that contrary to the statute as he understood it, the hon. member for North Toronto had, in 1896, failed to set aside a sinking fund to provide for the management of the public debt.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is this from the former debate also?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon member rise to a point of order?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do. This is another reference to a former debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If that is correct, the reference to former debates have been rather prolonged, more so than is usually allowed. I hesitated to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it has been prolonged to such an extent that I think he should confine himself more directly to the question that is before the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I shall not attempt to argue that question. I shall take your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I think I could perhaps convince your Honour that inasmuch as this was a speech upon the address, when pretty nearly everything comes up for discussion, we would have a right to go into it. However, I shall not prolong the debate by insisting on it on this occasion, and I know there will be an opportunity of calling my hon. friend's attention specifically to this matter at another time, and as the charge against the hon. member for North Toronto is a significant one, I hope when he is challenged directly on the matter, he will withdraw the statement he made on that occasion.

Applying ourselves to the question of material prosperity, how will this affect the country? I have referred to the question of grain, but there is another feature of it, that if a large quantity of our grain goes to the United States without being converted into a more finished product such as flour, meal, food cereals and the like we will be losing all the advantage that results from the by-products, and that is a very important question in mixed husbandry such as we will have to practise in Canada. There is one feature of this tariff that I think will be invoked as being a source of profit to the farmers, that is hay. What effect that will have in places where the farmer lives near the border, I am not prepared to say, I do not think it will have very much. It is not a question of course, of what the tariff is, but of what the prices are in the two countries, and if we do not want to ship hay into the United States, it matters not at all what the tariff may be. But having some practical knowledge on this question, as I always profess to have on agricultural questions, I would say he is rather a poor class of farmer who aims at selling his hay. The wise farmer, the progressive farmer, will not generally sell hay, he will convert it into the finished product by feeding and fattening his stock and thus getting an additional advantage. Further, he restores to the soil the fertility and the productiveness that has been taken temporarily from it in the production of this hay. So a wise farmer will not avail himself to any extent of this opportunity, and I would deplore it very much if any large quantity of our hay should go across the boundary line, because I feel it would be almost equivalent to transferring the fertility of our farms to the United States. Thus, after giving the Americans command of our fruit growing industry, we would be furnishing them with means to build up more and more their fruit industry and proportionately impoverishing that industry in our country. I have never been in the cattle business to any extent and so do not profess to be an expert on that question, but it seems to me the same argument applies to it in regard to by-products. From the hide which you take from the animal down to other less valuable by-products, all can be utilized in building up industries and promoting production in Canada, and we lose all this if we transfer the live animals to the United States.

By this arrangement, we rob the home market and we destroy our carrying trade east and west to a large extent. We will increase the cost of carriage and that is a very important matter. We have at enormous expense, built our transportation lines east and west. My hon. friend says that vast volumes of trade will flow north and south. It cannot flow two ways at the same time. If it is flowing north and south it will not be flowing east and west and in proportion as the volume flowing south increases, the volume flowing east and west decreases, and as you decrease the traffic on the trunk lines east and west, you will increase the cost of carriage to every farmer in the west and increase his expense in shipping his produce to the markets. It must be remembered that the Railroad Board cannot fix rates lower than what will enable the railway companies to live. My hon. friend says the railway companies have made no outcry. Well there are a good many interests in this country which do not like to make much outcry against the government. From a minister of the Crown, who resigns his position and turns against this government to the most insignificant servant who makes a complaint against them, those men are hounded down and can get nothing whatever at the hands of this government. The railway companies, which are very human, know perfectly well that they had consequently better keep quiet, until they see which way the cat jumps. But they will have something to say in the near future. That is not however, the point. The Railway Board will have to fix the rates at which the railway company can carry their freights, but how will that affect the farmers in the west? The rates will be increased on the farm products and thus will be indefinitely postponed the era when our farmers may expect reasonable rates from the railway companies.

It will also necessarily check railway enterprise in this country. One of the great sources which cause an active flow of money is the enormous expenditures on public works and railway building. Check railway building and there is no industry in Canada, from the little shop at the corner of the four roads to the biggest manufacturing establishment, from the market gardener to the largest farmer, which will not be affected, and certainly a halt will have to be called in the building of public enterprises generally if this policy be carried out. Why do we build our transcontinental railway? We do so to complete our system east and west, and it is beyond conception that, if this scheme be carried out, the Hudson Bay railway or the deepening of the Welland canal or the Georgian Bay canal can be proceeded with. It would then be perfect madness to go on with these works, and you could not borrow the money to build them. We want to be left in a position to build them.

That brings me to another point, and that is that we are going to impair our credit in Britain. We cannot repudiate our obligations, as we shall be doing by this agreement, and then go back to the British market and ask them to go on lending us money. Our hon. friends are no longer sane if they think they can go on with this scheme of theirs and then be able to finance any great enterprise in the markets of Europe.

Let me now call your attention to the message of the President of the United States to his government. The dominant note in that message is warning: That the Dominion of Canada has greatly prospered, that it has an active, aggressive and independent people, that 'they have come to the parting of the ways,' that the United States have repelled those people for 40 years, that the Canadians had been looking to the United States for years for the development in their trade but had now turned their faces away from that country to Great Britain, that the United States had gone too far, and would have to act now promptly or Canada would escape altogether. Another note of warning in the president's message is this: We have wasted our natural resources, we have overrun half a continent, there is a rich half continent to the north of us in the possession of the Canadians, we need to be active now to take the opportunity of overrunning that other half. The Canadian people, he says, have now a definite self-reliant, safe policy, a policy which they have implemented by a magnificent transportation system, and which is calculated to work in harmony with the interests of Great Britain, and therefore now is the time for the United States to act. The tables are turned on us, says President Taft, the Canadians have taken stock. they are guarding their pulpwood and at any moment they may take means to safeguard their forests and mines and fisheries, so that we shall be cut out from these permanently unless we act without delay. How shall we meet them? We must meet them in the bond or semblance of friendship before their policy becomes too crystallized and fixed for change. That is the statement summarized of the President of the United States to his people. Well, I have a dominant note which I would like to put into my address to you this afternoon. I say also that we are at the parting of the ways, that this is a momentous crisis in the affairs of Canada and Britain. It is the most momentous crisis since the Boer war. What should we do? My reply is this: Stand firm by the policy which has made Canada, build up our own ocean ports, increase transportation, multiply and stimulate the avenues of communication, strengthen our interprovincial bonds, promote interprovincial trade, unite all Canada in commerce, in interest, in sympathy and in aspiration, foster the sentiment of Britisr-Canadian nationality, preserve at all hazards our British connections, and steadily and strenuously strive for imperial preferential trade.

Now I come to deal very briefly with the statements of my hon. friend the Finance Minister. You must have noticed, Mr. Chairman, that the Finance Minister was ashamed of himself when he came to this House to deliver his statement.

Mr. FOSTER. He ought to have been.

Mr. LENNOX. He absolutely was, and so was my hon. friend who followed him in the same line. Otherwise how did it happen that the Minister of Finance, who is always quite ready to take a reasonable amount of credit to himself, spent a dreary 20 minutes—during which we hardly heard a syllable from the other side, which is generally quite ready to applaud—in endeavouring to prove that we on this side were as much to blame for reciprocity as the other side. He went on laboriously to point out that mission after mission, and delegate after delegate, had gone to the United States, Conservative as well as Liberal, endeavouring to obtain reciprocity, and therefore he was not so much to blame for having gone in that direction also. Almost in the same words, my hon. friend from South Wellington went over the same ground, and showed to his own satisfaction, that the Conservatives had been desirous of the same thing.

I have read the statement of the president, and I have listened to and read the statement of the Minister of Finance in this House. I do not like the tone of the minister's statement—too much slobbering and 'brethren' in it for a business transaction. He starts out by telling us that the president acted so nicely, and goes over it again and again instead of treating this as a business transaction. 'Brethren, let us sit down and reason together'. It is 'brethren,' 'brethren,' until you get a little bit nauseated at this kind of thing in a big diplomatic matter. And, of course, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) would not be behind the Minister of Finance in that. 'Brethren' comes to him more naturally even than it comes to the Minister of Finance. So, if possible, there was more 'brethren' in his speech and less business. In contrast with that, we have the clear-cut diplomatic statement of the president to his people, and the contrast does not by any means heighten the dignity of Canada and her representatives. There is too much palaver in the statements of our representatives to suit me. 'Brethren,' forsooth! This is not a question of 'brethren.' The sons of Jacob were the brethren of Joseph, and if I remember rightly, that did not prevent them from putting Joseph in the pit, or leaving him to be destroyed by wild beasts, or, later, selling him into bondage to cover their crime. And so one gets a little tired of this palaver—that may be a rather dignified name for it, but let it go—about 'brethren' in this negotiation. Who are these 'brethren,' anyhow? Are they the people who interpreted the treaty of 1782? Are they the people to whom the entire United Empire Loyalists appealed and who interpreted that treaty in a manner that was not very satisfactory to those loyalists, and not very consonant, I should think, with the principles of justice and equity? That was a long time ago? True. Are they the same 'brethren' who entered into the Treaty of Washington and provided that there should be free fish all round, our fish to go into their markets free and theirs to come into our markets on similar terms? And we let theirs in free and they let our fish in free—but taxed the cans and packages until our fish were shut out? Are they the same 'brethren' who, in the matter of navigation of canals and waterways, though ours were opened to them, by a subterfuge prevented our vessels from using theirs? I am not speaking this in condemnation; I am merely pointing out with whom we are dealing. These are the same people. And they are the same people with whom we dealt in that much-talked-of treaty of 1854. Do we want the kind of thing that arose in connection with that treaty repeated? A lot of people wh do not know much about the circumstance talk glibly about the treaty in force from 1854 to 1866. But those who have taken the trouble to read that up, and analyse the conditions, are not much in love with it. That treaty had not been long in force when the United States began to make complaint. It had not been long in force when we had bad times in Canada, so bad that our necessary public expenditure could not be met without additional taxation; and when we began to amend our tariff they began to kick. Will that occur again now? If we begin to amend our tariff, outside the articles covered by this tariff arrangement, shall we have just the same kind of commotion that we had then? On the equity of the transaction, on the broad, general view of the case, will they come and say: That is not fair, and you will have to take that duty off or give us additional concessions in some other direction? Will they say: The manufacturers think it very unfair that they are shut out from our markets, and you must let them in, too? Well, under this old treaty, they were not satisfied. You remember how, Mr. Chairman, they employed a gentleman named Israel Hatch, and he considered our situation from end to end. He found and reported that Canada was framing a policy of her own—that was wrong. He said we were aiming at being independent of the United States; that we were scheming—these were not his exact words—to employ our own ships and man them with our own people, and that was wrong. He said that we were taxing American imports in order to build our railways and canals, and these railways and canals were coming into competition with the United States, and that was all wrong. He said that we were endeavouring to build up our own cities, and the result of that was to prevent trade from drifting to American cities, and that was all wrong. And what was the result? They said: We cannot allow this state of things to continue; your tariff may be made in Canada, but if made in Canada it must be made to suit us; what you will have to consent to is either a zollverein or a customs tariff. And many of their public men spoke about that question, and I would like to take the time to read a line or two of what they said. The leader of the opposition, the other day, quoted the very eminent German, Prof. Von Schultz-Gævernitz, who said:

> A zollverein between the United States and Canada would be both politically and commercially the death of British dominion in North America. Political union must follow commercial union.

But let us take what was said by eminent Americans at that time. Mr. Seward was very clear upon the subject, in defining what a zollverein meant. Speaking of it in connection with what he wanted as a trade relation with Canada, he said:

> Under its influences kingdoms, states and principalities have been blended into one.

That is the kind of 'blend' they want now 'Blended into one.' Which is to be the 'one?' You know how it is settled between husband and wife; they are made one, and generally the wife is that 'one.' And the United States will be the 'one' if there is but one. Now, a Mr. Darby, a prominent American of that time, said:

> Is not America for the Americans? Are not Asia, Africa and Australia sufficient for Great Britain?

That is a reasonably clear proof of what they wanted. Mr. Wharton Barber declared:

> That for Canada free trade with the United States would be a final settlement of her continental sympathies, and a farewell to imperial aspirations.

So, as a consequence of the treaty of 1854, the Americans arrogated to themselves the right to dictate what our fiscal policy should be. Their declarations were reasonably clear on that occasion, but they were not at all so clear as they have been on this occasion, and as they have been upon many occasions in the meantime. The Finance Minister says that the National Policy was justified; that is, he says it was attempted to be justified on the ground of probably forcing the Americans into reciprocity. The National Policy has forced the Americans into an offer of reciprocity now. So when hon. gentlemen on that side of the House go into wild rejoicings over what these two estimable gentlemen have accomplished for us, without consulting the people of Canada, they should not forget that but for the National Policy which they defamed for a third of a century, and which, during fourteen years in office, they have villified yet retained—because they dared not abandon it—but for that National Policy, which was bequeathed to them by the greatest statesmen of them all, Sir John A. Macdonald, they would have no offer of reciprocity to-day, for they would have nothing to offer in exchange.

Now the Minister of Finance says that Sir John A. Macdonald went to the country in 1891 upon the question of reciprocity in order to get a mandate from the people. If Sir John A. Macdonald went to the country in 1891 in order to get a mandate, it is in strange contrast with the action of these gentlemen at the present time. Now, it was not to get a mandate from the people upon the question of reciprocity that Sir John A. Macdonald went to the country in 1891; it was to stamp out the most dangerous proposition that was ever, until now, presented to the Canadian people, it was to stamp out the insidious treason of Erastus Wiman and his Canadian associates set in motion at that time; and if hon. gentlemen opposite want to know who those men were, I am prepared to give the names. Now the National Policy of Sir John A. Macdonald, summarized, was to develop interprovincial trade, to create a bond of interdependence and support, to protect our industries, and to build up Canada, close-linked in sentiment, in aspiration and in destiny, with the mother country.

I desire to trace a little further the reason for this offer from the United States. If we look into the causes we will probably be able to ascertain the motives at work. There were three important events occuring about 1893. There was the Chamberlain propaganda at the time, the idea of creating a closer bond of trade between the various parts of the British Empire. It had its beginning earlier, but taking definite form about 1893, it began to attract attention then. Then we had the launching of the National Transcontinental railway scheme. These two matters together had a very marked influence upon the opinion in the United States. Why? Because of the declarations made at that time by the right hon. gentleman who leads this House. It is true that before then there had been on our statute-books an offer of reciprocity. But at that time my right hon. friend came out distinctly and told the people of the United States, in effect, that he was in harmony with the movement in Britain, that whatever his leanings had been previously—and they had been a little wavering—whatever tendencies he had had to look to Washington previously, he had at last taken a definite stand, and was not going to bother any more about Washington, he was going to develop Canada upon the lines of British connection. At that time the American papers began to say that reciprocity with Canada would be a good thing. And why? Because they realized that they were losing their opportunity; they realized that there was a likelihood that a closer bond of union between the empire and Canada would be effected, and that if imperial preferential trade was ever accomplished, then goodbye to the chance of the United States having closer union with the Dominion of Canada. Well, now, just mark the sequence of events. The Chamberlain doctrine, the Chamberlain activity, the National Transcontinental railway, which was to render us independent of the United States, and give us a Canadian railway, every foot of which was to be upon Canadian soil, and the immediate growth of the reciprocity idea in the United States.

For forty years, or nearly, they had shown no disposition to trade with us. Then this laggard lover, Uncle Jonathan, comes in and begins to court Miss Canada. Gentlemen, on this side of the House, I appeal to you as guardians of Miss Canada, to stand up and say: We will investigate very closely and see whether Uncle Jonathan's 'intentions are honourable.' The meaning of this, summarized, is that the United States are all alert now to head off Britain. They see that there is a chance that the imperial preferential idea will shortly be accomplished. The right hon. gentleman says that there is not much indication of that in Great Britain. Forty eight per cent of the British electorate are in favour of a reformed tariff. The watchword over in the United States is: Detach Canada from the Empire. The agreement, says Austin Chamberlain, removes Canada out of the imperial orbit. That is a significant statement. But the policy with which hon. gentlemen opposite are agreeing, is to head off imperial preference, and to get back our manufacturers. Two hundred and fifty millions have been invested in Canada already and there are two hundred and fifty millions more awaiting investment say the American press, at the present time. If so, get the Canadian raw materials. That is an important point, but it is a secondary thought. It is the basis of industry. Get the timber, get the lumber, the grain, the minerals, the green fish, get the fruit markets for the perishable products of the United States, get the population, which necessarily follows industry, transfer the industry over to the United States, and the population follows the industry, get the finished product profit, get their fiscal policy made at Washington, get their business dislocated, the home markets destroyed, the transportation system paralysed, get Fielding and Paterson, get them to gulp it all down and after they have taken the dope and, when a reasonable time has elapsed after the obsequies, get Canada.

That is the meaning of it all. There is a great political combine in this matter. I have no doubt about that. Hands across the sea, say some people. Yes, and not only hands across the sea, but hands across the boundary line as well. This is a great political scheme, put up by my right hon. friend, concurred in by the government of Great Britain and promoted by President Taft and the government of the United States. Is there any doubt about what it means? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance was very much touched about President Taft having done the government the honour of coming to Canada, and this government did my hon. friend the Minister of Finance the honour of sending him down to Albany to work on Sunday. He was very much honoured. It is like the story of the lady of high rank who asked a common sailor to watch here while she jumped overboard, and then rescue her. He said: 'If you will excuse me, madam, it would be too much honour for the likes of me.' Well, my hon. friend was very solicitous about the honours—too much honour, too little sense. President Taft is an astute, able statesman, a gentleman for whom I have great respect, but he is acting in his own interest. When he came to Canada, when he fostered these negotiations, he was looking to conditions in the United States, and he was trying to tide over a great political difficulty that confronted him. When Mr. Asquith smiled beneficently upon this scheme he too had some interest in the matter from a political standpoint. He had the opportunity, he thought, of effectually killing the preferential trade idea in Great Britain and the evidence of it is, that the government in Great Britain were only a little behind the government of Canada in their rejoicings when they found that the matter was about consummated. That the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), had a great big political game to serve in this matter nobody in his senses denies or doubts. Why, Sir, not to speak of wanting to distract attention from the long array of scandals of this government, there is that last great big blunder that the right hon. gentleman would like to draw attention away from—his naval policy. So, we have this great triangle, this great trinity, this political combination at work, and it is a little hard for the people of Canada to assert themselves and get their rights under such conditions, but we are going to try.

Now I have to refer, I think, to only one matter more, and that is, the attitude of my right hon. friend the leader of the government. Already in this debate we have been reminded of the fact that on three different occasions the right hon. gentleman declared that he had ceased to look to Washington, that he had repented of the idea that we should shape our policy in harmony with the policy of United States. Aside from the three explicit declarations, which he made in this House on the subject of the tariff, he pronounced a definite war speech in 1903, with reference to the transcontinental railway scheme, and I shall, because it really reads exceedingly well in the light of events now, take the opportunity of quoting some of the hon. gentleman's observations on that occasion. He said:

> Why this expenditure? Why should parliament be called upon to assent to such a policy as is here indicated? We ask parliament to assent to this policy because we believe—nay, we feel certain, and certain beyond a doubt—that in so doing we give voice and expression to a sentiment, a latent but deep sentiment, which is to-day in the mind, and still more in the heart, of every Canadian, that a railway to extend from the shores of the Atlantic ocean to the shores of the Pacific ocean, and to be, every inch of it, on Canadian soil, is a national as well as a commercial necessity.
> To those who urge upon us the policy of to-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow; to those who tell us, wait, wait, wait; to those who advise us to pause, to consider, to reflect, to calculate and to inquire, our answer is: No, this is not a time for deliberation, this is a time for action. The flood of tide is upon us that leads on to fortune; if we let it pass it may never recur again. If we let it pass, the voyage of our national life, bright as it is to-day, will be bound in shallows. We cannot wait, because time does not wait; we cannot wait because, in these days of wonderful development, time lost is doubly lost.
> We consider that it is the duty of all those who sit within these walls by the will of the people, to provide immediate means whereby the products of those new settlers may find an exit to the ocean at the least possible cost, and whereby, likewise, a market may be found in this new region for those who toil in the forests, in the fields, in the mines, in the shops of the older provinces. Such is our duty; it is immediate and imperative. It is not of to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour and of this minute. Heaven grant that it be not already too late; heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute, the trade of Canada is not deviated to other channels and that an ever vigilant competitor——

What other channels? What other competitor?

> —and that an ever vigilant competitor does not take to himself the trade that properly belongs to those who acknowledge Canada as their native or their adopted land. Upon this question we feel that our position is absolutely safe and secure; we feel that it corresponds to the beating of every Canadian heart.

How is it now? Where is the heart now? Does it beat for that same national aspiration? It ought to. I hope it will. I will not predict anything with regard to this matter, but, Sir, let the result be what it will, as long as I have a voice in this House of Commons I shall raise it against anything that will tend to disunite Canada from the British Empire. The next paragraph is not absolutely relevant, but it is relevant to another branch of the subject. My right hon. friend's propositions are so diversified they will adapt themselves to almost any condition of things. He said :

Sir, the men of 1867 built for the condition of things which they found in 1867; but we the men of 1903, have to build for the condition of things which exist in 1903.

How does that apply to the argument that we have to go back and root out the old tariff provisions of 1878 and 1879 to find out what we should do to-day. The men of 1879 built for the condition of things that existed then, and built well, as the history of Canada shows, but the men of 1911 have to build for the condition of things in 1911, and have to fortify themselves to-day against specific declarations of the people of the United States in 1911. The Prime Minister continued:

—and not only for that condition of things, but also for a condition of things we see looming up in the near future.

But, Sir, there is something more than that. When Sir Charles Tupper stated also at that time that it was essential to the welfare of the people of Canada that the terminus of any transcontinental railway that we might have should be in Canadian territory in Canadian waters, he simply voiced what is the conscience of the Canadian people. I am sorry that Sir Charles Tupper did not with equal firmness insist that not only should the terminus be in Canadian territory, in Canadian waters, but that the route itself should be in Canadian territory. When he agreed that the line should be in American territory, Sir Charles Tupper went back on the heart and conscience of the Canadian people.

Now, Sir, we lay it down as a principle, upon which we are to be judged by friend and foe, that we are to have a transcontinental railway, that its terminus must be in Canadian waters, and that the whole line, every inch of it, must be in Canadian territory. We say further that such a line is a necessity of our commercial independence.

Mr. LANCASTER. Whose commercial independence?

Mr. LENNOX. The commercial independence of the people of Canada. What does the right hon. gentleman say about our brethren at that time? He referred to what Mr. Carnegie and other prominent men said, and then used these words :

But what will you say when I bring to your attention the expressions of the highest in the land, of those in authority, of those who are in a position to speak for the American government and the American people? What will you say when I bring you messages of Presidents of the United States and reports from the American Senate? In the month of August, 1888, President Cleveland sent the following message to Congress asking power for executive to suspend the bonding privilege.

Mr. LENNOX.

This was the language, the peremptory language of the President of the United States. Now it is perhaps not out of place, nay it is exceedingly important, to make clear what was the cause which brought President Cleveland to hold such a threat over our heads. The cause was the fact that we would not agree—the Canadian government, the Canadian people, to the abrogation of the Fisheries Convention of 1818.

But, because we would not agree to give away our birthright, we were threatened by President Cleveland with the withdrawal of the bonding privilege.

Here was a fresh case of rank injustice. The right hon. gentleman said the Americans did this because we would not give away our birthright, and we were threatened by this dishonest and very unfair President of the United States, as the right hon. gentleman would have it at that time when it suited his argument. Then he said:

Nor is that all. A few years afterwards, in the session of Congress of 1892, a report was brought down to the Senate from the Committee on Interstate Commerce again dealing with the bonding privilege.

The American railways wanted to have certain privileges upon our territory which we were not prepared to give them; and because we would not give them these advantages, because we were not ready to make the soil of Canada, for railway purposes, part of the territory of the United States, again we were threatened with the removal of the bonding privilege.

Then comes another climax by my right hon. friend showing that these gentlemen, who have so frequently, but not very properly, been referred to as 'our brethren' by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, should be dealt with on a business basis the same as we would deal with any other nation, and the Prime Minister continued:

Even that was not all. In the following year, President Harrison again approached the subject, and again approached it in the same hostile spirit, and approached it, as the committee of the Senate had done, from the point of view of American railways. He made the following recommendation to Congress in a message dated November, 1893:

I need not read the message; I need only quote the right hon. gentleman's opinion in reference to it:

For my part—I have never made any secret of it—I have the greatest possible admiration for the American people. I have always admired their many strong qualities. But I have found in the short experience during which it has been my privilege and my fortune to be placed at the head of affairs, by the will of the Canadian people, that the best and most effective way to maintain friendship with our American neighbours is to be absolutely independent of them.

Well we have a pretty clear indication from the events which are of record during the time that the treaty of 1854 was in force, and about the time of its abrogation, of the attitude of the American people at that time. We have, I think, a still clearer indication of what this proposal really means by the utterances of some public men and newspapers of the United States to-day. As to the general American attitude in reference to this question I will read an extract from a speech of Senator Sherman, and in doing so I want to make it perfectly clear that I have no attack to make upon the American people. They are a great people, we want them as our neighbours, but I want to treat this matter from the Canadian point of view and let them do what they like. What I call upon the government to do is what is in the interests of the Canadian people and of British connection at this juncture in our affairs. This speech of Senator Sherman's is headed 'By Friendly Overtures,' and reads :

The way to union with Canada is not by hostile legislation; not by acts of retaliation, but by friendly overtures. This union is one of the events that must inevitably come in the future; it will come by the logic of the situation, and no politician or combination of politicians can prevent it. The true policy of this government is to tender freedom in trade and intercourse, and to make this tender in such a fraternal way that it shall be an overture to the Canadian people to become a part of this republic.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I think that if you cannot keep better order than this the committee had better rise.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has a right to ask for order, but I think his method of addressing the Chairman is not in accordance with parliamentary usage. He asks for order. I shall certainly endeavour to obtain it, but his method of addressing the Chair is not the usual method.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was wrong with it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The method used was in addressing me, and telling me that if I could not keep better order it would be better for the committee to rise. I think that was not a correct form of address to the Chairman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I still insist that if you cannot have better order the committee ought to rise.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be just as well if order should be observed on both sides of the House. I notice hon. gentlemen opposite conversing with one another and usually the mere calling of order would at once bring order.

Mr. LENNOX. It did not bring order. Less than five minutes ago I called the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that he was turning around and talking to gentlemen beside him. I then endeavoured to continue the reading of the extract and the Minister of Customs resumed his conversation. If any people should set an example to this House and to the public it should be the ministers of the Crown.

Mr. PATERSON. I would at once apologize if it is true that I interrupted my hon. friend. I did not hear the hon. gentleman mention my name or allude to me.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not mention his name, I spoke of the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. I am very sorry if I interrupted, I did not intend to.

Mr. LENNOX. I accept the hon. minister's statement in the frankest possible way. While I feel that there is a certain amount of injustice to myself I am convinced that my hon. friend would not willingly disconcert me.

Mr. PATERSON. I would not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The reason I spoke somewhat abruptly was that five gentlemen were talking in their ordinary tones of voice while my hon. friend was endeavouring to continue his speech. That had gone on for some considerable time, and apparently had not been noticed.

Mr. FIELDING. On the other side I find hon. gentlemen not only talking but standing up while they are talking.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not heard anything of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend cannot see over there, I can.

Mr. LENNOX. I can see both sides of the House, and whilst occasionally when I make a particularly telling remark against the government there was some comment on it from this side of the House I was not disturbed by anything that occurred on this side.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I should remark that absolute order is apparently not obtainable, that is the standard that theoretically the rules ask for, and every hon. gentleman knows that he is in the habit of occasional conversation. Too much conversation interferes with the proper hearing of the gentleman who has the floor, and if at any moment there is any indication that it is either preventing him from properly speaking or preventing others from properly hearing him I shall at once interfere, but it is in accordance with the rules of the House to allow a certain quiet method of conversation. If this incident will call the attention of the House to it, it will aid the Speaker or the Chairman very much in attaining and retaining the order that is proper and necessary to allow any hon. gentleman to address the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I quite realize that it is absolutely impossible to altogether prevent conversation in the House, and I do not object to that ; but I was objecting to at least five gentlemen talking in their usual tones of voice while an hon. gentleman on this side was endeavouring to proceed with his speech. If the conversation had taken place in the method usually adopted by gentlemen in the House, I should not have said a word but it got absolutely beyond endurance and beyond decorum at the time I spoke.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I should not allow any further remarks on this matter as the hon. gentleman who has the floor wishes to conclude before six o'clock.

Mr. TALBOT. If we are called to order for conversing together sometimes what is your opinion of a gentleman who addresses the House with his back turned to us?

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to conclude before six o'clock. To continue the extract from Mr. Sherman's speech.

The settlement of the northwest territory, the Louisiana and Florida purchases, the annexation of Texas, and the acquisition from Mexico are examples of the adaptation of our form of government for expansion, to absorb and unite, to enrich and build up, to ingraft in our body politic adjacent countries, and while strengthening the older states, confer prosperity and development on the new states admitted into this brotherhood of republican states. . . . With a firm conviction that this consummation most devoutly to be wished is within the womb of destiny, and believing that it is our duty to hasten its coming, I am not willing, for one, to vote for any measure not demanded by national honour that will tend to postpone the good time coming, when the American flag will be the signal and sign of the union of all the English-speaking peoples of the continent from the Rio Grande to the Arctic Ocean.

And running through a recent editorial in the New York 'American,' I find the following:

On the opening day of the British parliament the Conservative leaders of both Lords and Commons forgot for the moment their critical and distressing domestic difficulties and uttered a loud cry of protest against trade reciprocity between Canada and the United States. Lord Lansdowne exclaimed in the House of Lords: The whole history of the British Empire will be changed if the great Dominion is encouraged, by agreement with the United States, to develop itself not on imperial lines but in accordance with geographical conditions.

In this outcry of an alarmed British toryism we have the strongest of arguments—strong because of its testimony against the interests of the speaker—for the unhesitating ratification by Congress of a momentous trade compact with Canada. Let Congress pass the Canadian reciprocity Bill and all the plans of the English reactionaries for killing American trade will crumble to the ground.

In ratifying this trade agreement we should understand therefore that we are settling a world problem, and settling it right. British imperialism will wane in consequence, but American trade routes will run along the lines that were ordained by nature.

Then as to the results upon the trade of Canada and the lines along which trade will flow the writer says:

When all is said the natural interchange between the United States and Canada is of immense scope, in spite of all artificial barriers. It will be something prodigious—like the sweep of tides—when a new reciprocity agreement shall breach the tariff walls and give disappointed nature half a chance to have her way.

This proposal to give nature a helping hand comes at a very significant time. Again Congressman Clark expresses the motive that lies at the root of this matter. I notice that it is said in the press to-day that he said it was all a joke.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not say so; others say so for him.

Mr. LENNOX. So, they say it was all a joke. Let me read exactly what he said, and the country can judge whether it was a joke or not:

Washington, D.C., February 15.—During the debate in the House yesterday on the Canadian reciprocity Bill, Congressman James Beauchamp Clark, the man who will be next speaker of the House of Representatives and whose party will be the majority in the next House, made this reference to the Bill.

Now comes what Congressman Clark said:

'I am for it, because I hope to see the day when the American flag will float over every square foot of the British North American possessions clear to the north pole. They are people of our blood. They speak our language. Their institutions are much like ours. They are trained in the different art of self government. My judgment is that if the treaty of 1854 had never been abrogated, the chances of a consolidation of these two countries would have been much greater than they are now.

I do not have any doubt whatever, that the day is not far distant when Great Britain will see all of her North American possessions become a part of this Republic. That is the way things are tending now.

Having said that much, I want to say another thing. I do not confine my support of reciprocity bills to this one. I am in favour of reciprocity treaties with the Central and South American republics, including Mexico. The intelligent farmers of America know that the agricultural products of Canada are inconsiderable when compared with the agricultural products of the United States. To use a common phrase, they do not constitute a drop in the bucket. They also know that wages are as high in Canada in many lines as in America, and higher in labour pertaining to the production of lumber, so they know too much to be scared by the overworked cry of 'pauper labour.'

Mr. Norris—'I wanted to ask the gentleman (Mr. Clark) something along the line of universal peace. As I understand it, the gentleman favours this Bill, for at least one reason, that it will have tendency in the end to bring Canada into the Union?'

Mr. Clark, of Missouri—'Yes, sir; have no doubt about that.'

Mr. Norris—'Will that have a tendency to preserve peace with Great Britain?'

Mr. Clark, of Missouri—'Why, certainly it will. I do not have any doubt whatever that the day is not far distant when Great Britain wil joyfully see all of her North American possessions become a part of this Republic. That is the way things are tending now.'

Mr. Martin, of South Dakota—'Will the gentleman favour the abrogation of our tariff law entirely so far as Canada is concerned and making free trade with Canada on all products?'

Mr. Clark, of Missouri—'By taking Canada in to become a part of the United States. Yes.'

That is pretty clear language.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. And that is the language of one of the most prominent men in the United States, who will probably have more power in the immediate future than any other citizen in the great republic.

Just one word more. What I have said does not require any peroration. I have dealt with straight, clear and definite facts I had proposed quoting from Sir John Macdonald's address in 1891, but I do not think that is necessary, and I will conclude with a watchword: 'Hands across the sea; keep both hands on the Union Jack.'

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. B. WARBURTON (Queens, P.E. I.). Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the speech of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in which he outlined and defined the policy of his party not only along the lines which were taken by his leader and others, but on other lines as well, elaborating even to a somewhat greater extent than they did. I do not propose to discuss directly the remarks of the hon. gentleman at any great length, because a good many of the subjects that he touched upon—and touched upon so well—I propose to take up in the course of the remarks I had outlined for myself before he spoke. But I would like for a moment, to touch upon one or two of the points to which he referred. I do not say that in all cases I take exception to what he said, because he often says things with which I agree, but, often says things to which I cannot personally assent. As to the subject of a tariff commission, which the hon. gentleman brought up, I go so far as to say that the question is one that might well be discussed. I cannot say, however, that I personally agree with the idea of such a tariff commission as the hon. gentleman evidently had in mind. If you like to appoint a number of experts with whom the government or any one else can consult on tariff questions, well and good. But that course, I take it, the government can follow for themselves; they do not need any recommendations or any legislation to that end. No doubt, every minister takes good care, and especially, perhaps, the Finance Minister, to consult with experts on subjects with which he has to deal. But to appoint a tariff commission such as I understand to be proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Lennox), would be, I think, as has been said in this House, in effect, to alter the position of ministers as responsible advisers of the Crown; it would be more or less an abrogation of the principles of responsible government. I can quite understand that the Manufacturers' Association, that body of able, influential and talented business men, would like to have a tariff commission, particularly as it would be almost certain that that commission would be largely, if not entirely, composed of those who would, perhaps, be recommended by that association. Whether the great mass of the consumers, the farmers, would have an equal voice in such a commission I think open to question. When the people of this country send something over two hundred members to this House, and when, at the head of this House is a government responsible to the House, and to the people for what they do, I do not think it would be well to relieve the government or this House of the responsibility which they were sent here to assume.

Now, we are told 'let well enough alone.' That is a very good saying in its way, but, as has been pointed out before, it does not go quite far enough. Had we 'let well enough alone' in the past, there would have been no progress. This country must move on. In this I am only repeating what has been said before, but this idea of leaving well enough alone has been so pressed upon this House, and, by the press of the country, upon the people, that I think I am justified in returning to it. The Anglo-Saxon race is incapable of standing still. The French Canadian race and the various other nationalities which go to make up the Canadian people, and which will eventually be fused into one race in this country, are incapable of standing still. If they tried to stand still, they would soon deteriorate, and then Canada would become a country that would be fit to be annexed to some other, because it would be unfit to take care of itself. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) announced somewhat oracularly that he hoped the common sense of parliament would not allow this Bill to go through. I shall have to plead guilty to great lack of common sense, if the hon. gentleman is right in assuming that common sense would be against this Bill; because my feeling has been and is to support this Bill to the utmost of my ability. And, in so doing, I know that I shall have the almost unanimous support of my constituency; and if, to-morrow, I had to run an election I would want no other question than this upon which to go before the electors. I trust the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) , in that oracular deliverance of his, did not arrogate to himself the right to say that there is no common sense to be found outside those holding the views that commend themselves to his judgment. I hold that there is common sense on both sides of the House; that neither side has the monopoly of common sense, though it is a much rarer thing than its name would imply.

One exception taken to the agreement was that, the United States and Britain, having been placed on a parity so far as concerns the admission of their manufacture into this country, Great Britain would be really placed in a worse position because of the long haul she has. There might be some small ground for that argument, but really the matter is so small that, when you remember that Great Britain has practically the carrying trade of the world and carries all the products in her own bottoms, and that this is mainly water carriage, which is the cheapest carriage there is, it is questionable whether the cost of bringing goods from Great Britain to Canada would be much, if at all, greater than the cost of bringing them across, for instance, from New York to Toronto. I know that, as a matter of practice, it costs more to bring English goods from Halifax to Charlottetown, than it costs to bring them from Liverpool to Halifax. That is one of the perennial subjects of complaint with us—that we pay so much for rail carriage when water carriage is so cheap.

In dealing with the various articles which have been made free, the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) referred to the article of hay. To a great extent, I agree with the remarks which the hon. gentleman made in regard to the way farmers should treat their hay. But as to the way farmers put up their hay or as to the way they dispose of it, that is a matter the government cannot very well control. It is only on the commercial side that the government and parliament can deal with it. I agree that the best course for the farmers to take with their hay, under ordinary conditions, would be to feed it. But it sometimes happens that there is a superabundance of hay. That is what happened in Prince Edward Island last year. While we had really a failure in what is usually our best staple crop, potatoes, the hay crop was fifty per cent higher than it had ever been before—an enormous crop. We cannot feed it, because we have so much more hay than the stock we have can use. There is no use sending it to Quebec or any of the other provinces, because they have plenty of hay. We have been shipping a little to England, but that is a long and difficult matter. If the hay is allowed to go into the United States markets in the spring, I think we ought to be able to do a good business with our surplus hay. And that is the best thing to do with it, as it cannot stay there forever, and we have not sufficient live stock to use it. But, even if the farmers do not adopt the scientific method of farming and feed their hay, working it up into the finished product of beef, why should we say to them: You have to do as we tell you to do; you must feed when we tell you to, and you must not ship until we tell you to? This is a free country, and we must leave them some judgment as to how they shall treat these matters on their own farms.

But, that is not the matter that affects this agreement most. The point is raised that the agreement will be apt to divert trade from the lines running east and west to the lines running north and south. I have not many fears on that score. I listened to the wail when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) tried to convince us that there was now no need for the Transcontinental railway, no need for the Hudson Bay railway, no need for the Georgian Bay canal or the deepening of the Welland canal. Individually, it would not affect me very much whether these public works were built or not, but as a Canadian it affects me very closely, and I desire to look at the question from the general standpoint of Canada. For that reason, though these things are no direct advantage to us, I believe they should be undertaken, and I do not think the agreement will militate against the completion of these enterprises. When this agreement comes into operation, the chances of these works being soon built will be greatly improved. With the great fertility of our soil, with Canada's enormous production in minerals, in lumber, and in the fruits of the field, I have no doubt whatever, but that our population is sure to increase, and, in a few years, we shall be able to provide traffic for all these roads whether they run north and south or east and west.

Not only that, but I believe the time is coming shortly when we will have to increase the number of our railroads, not only north and south, but also east and west. It may be that I am unduly optimistic, nevertheless I have a firm and abiding faith in the future of Canada, in our producing powers, and in the energy and ability of our people. I believe as firmly as I believe I am speaking to you, Mr. Chairman, that the superabundance of the produce of Canada of all kinds will afford ample employment for all these roads and canals, and you will even have to multiply them. The opposition of our Conservative friends is in line with the course that they have been pursuing for many years. I do not know whether it has become second nature to them to look upon every move that is undertaken as an indication of coming blue ruin, but certainly whenever a proposition is made to improve the condition of our people, if it means any advantage worth talking about, their course leads us to believe that they have no hope whatever for Canada, that they are pessimistic, even ultra-pessimistic, and that if we were to believe all they say we had better pack up and get out of Canada for some other country. I do not believe that this agreement is going to affect our credit in Great Britain adversely. When we see that since this agreement has been made public the stock of our greatest railway company, and the one most likely to be affected, the Canadian Pacific railway, has gone up several points within the last 48 hours, we must recognize that the shrewd men who manage that road have no fears of the effect of this agreement upon the money market, or upon the condition of affairs in this country. They have no fear that their great road is going to become a streak of rust for want of traffic. I saw, the other day, a statement from Sir Donald Mann, who ought to know something about railroads, that this agreement was not going to affect adversely his road. Now, I would take the opinion of Sir Donald Mann, aided by what little common sense I may happen to possess, to be that this agreement, instead of being likely to harm his road, is much more likely to do it good. Then there is the loyalty cry. Whenever a matter affecting the tariff or the position of Canada is brought up, we always expect to hear the loyalty cry raised, and I propose to discuss it at some length later on. Just here, however, I will say one or two words. My hon. friend points out to us that we should strive for imperial preference and preferential trade. Well, that is a nice thing, a pleasing thing to listen to; but within the last three or four years imperial preferential trade has been beaten out of its boots in Great Britain itself. Not long ago, in 1906, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) went to Great Britain to stump the country in favour of preferential trade within the empire, preferential trade was defeated in the new House of Commons by a majority of something over 300, and the member for North Toronto did not deem it advisable to stay there long, because he was not making much impression. Again, a little over a year ago, in January or February last, the matter was again brought before the people of Great Britain, and again it was defeated in the new parliament by a majority of something like 120. Only the other day it came up again, along with other matters, when the leaders of the Tariff Reform party looked upon it as such an absolutely hopeless proposition that in his great speech in the Albert hall Mr. Balfour was obliged to throw it overboard, and to say that now all they were asking for was a referendum, in order to get their own followers into line. This shows that the big men of the party in Great Britain have lost confidence in the cry of preferential trade. Of course, if the people of Great Britain should offer us a preference in their markets we would be only too glad to take it, but that is a matter for them to decide, not for us, and already they have spoken very clearly and have said that they would have none of it.

We are just now hearing a good deal about the foolish remark made by Mr. Champ Clark the other day in the United States Congress. Well, we must always expect talk of that kind on the other side of the line; we have lots of it here, and we cannot expect that our people should indulge in talk about annexation, and this, that, and the other thing, impugning the loyalty of their opponents, and trying to make out that our lot is ultimately to be cast in with the great republic—I say we cannot expect to have a monopoly of that sort of foolish talk; it must spread to the other side of the line, they are men like ourselves, pretty much the same blood as ourselves, and they will talk. But I will tell you how it appears to me in reading newspaper extracts from time to time. It appears to me that a great part, I won't say all, of this filbustering talk in the United States has been manufactured for the purpose of defeating the Bill there, pretty much as I believe a great deal of the talk of a like character has been manufactured on this side of the line—I won't say all of it in the House of Commons—for the same purpose. If you find our own press throughout the country, or a large part of it—because there are noble exceptions on the Conservative side—if you find large and influential portions of our press taking the ground that this is going to lead to annexation, you can scarcely expect that it will not have some effect on our American friends, and that they will not think that perhaps there is something in it. But they do not recognize as clearly as we do that it is simply a piece of political manœuvering, and that it is of small importance, as we know it to be. We also see a statement in the papers the last day or two that the right hon. the Prime minister went into this undertaking in concert with the government of Great Britain and President Taft; in other words, that the only meaning to be derived from this agreement is that the government of Canada, with the Prime Minister at its head, the Premier of Great Britain, and the President of the United States, have joined in a foul conspiracy in order to detach Canada from the British Crown, and to add it to the territories of Uncle Sam. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the mere statement of an agreemen such as that carries with it its own refutation. The idea of the Prime Minister of the British Empire intriguing with the head of a foreign state, and with the head of the greatest of the over-sea nations of the empire, to bring about a dismemberment of that empire, carries its own refutation with it, and I do not think it requires to be referred to at any greater length. I see in this morning's paper a telegram by the Canadian Press cable, an extract from a speech of Mr. Asquith, which I will read:

London, Feb. 15.—The American-Canadian reciprocity agreement came to the fore in the House of Commons again to-day. The government was questioned regarding the statement attributed to Henri Bourassa, Nationalist leader in the legislature of Quebec, to the effect that the home government had encouraged the Canadian government to conclude a reciprocity trade understanding with the United States.

Premier Asquith replied: 'The statement is entirely without foundation in fact.' The premier also denied that Ambassador Bryce has been engaged actively in the process to bring about the agreement.

Now, Sir, I would again point out, as it cannot be too often pointed out, that off and on for forty or fifty years past, some form of reciprocity has been advocated by both parties in Canada.

They have differed from time to time as to the method by which that policy should be carried out but it was recognized until recent years by this country and this parliament as the policy of one party as well as the other. In 1891 Sir John Macdonald made his last appeal to the electors of Canada, and he appealed to them on this very question. Although the language used by him on that occasion has been quoted more than once, as it is necessary in order to connect what I wish to say, I propose to read it again. He said in his manifesto to the people of Canada:

We said to the Americans we are perfectly willing to trade with you on equal terms. We are desirous of having a fair reciprocity treaty; but we will not consent to open our markets to you while yours remains closed to us.

That was a very laudable position to take. That was the position I would expect Sir John Macdonald to take. He was an astute statesman. I was not a follower or a supporter of his, but I always recognized his great ability.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that on natural products only?

Mr. WARBURTON. He does not say. Now, Mr. Chairman, at that time I remember that reciprocity was in the air. The National Policy, as it was called, was not doing the good to this country which its advocates have ever since claimed that it did do. The country was not in a prosperous condition, and the people were looking for reciprocity if it could be obtained. That was the feeling which permeated the air at that time. Sir John Macdonald, perhaps as astute a political leader as Canada has ever seen, saw the lay of the land and he at once adopted reciprocity as the cry upon which he would go to the country, and he went to the country upon that question and won. What was the result? Without intending the slightest disrespect to the memory of Sir John Macdonald or to his followers in this House, or to the party which still reveres his name, I may say that at that time there was a very general belief that while the government went to the country on the question of reciprocity because they felt they could not succeed unless they did, so they were really not sincere in their desire to bring reciprocity about. That was the belief that the country had at that time, and I remember also that when the delegation went to Washington after the government was formed it looked to the people, and that belief seemed to be borne out by the course which they adopted there, as if they were trying how not to do the thing which they ostensibly went there to do. The opinion that I, myself, and many others held was that while they went there ostensibly for the purpose of getting reciprocity they tried really not to get it.

But, I wish to call your attention to another fact in connection with that appeal to the country. Sir John Macdonald at that time was prepared to go in for a reciprocity treaty not an agreement such as we have now, but a hard and fast, entangling treaty, and that was adopted by the great Conservative leaders of the time as the keystone of their policy. It is true that they have wandered far afield since then, but, when Sir John Macdonald led them for the last time in his life, they adopted that as the keystone of their policy. It was a treaty. Of late, and before this agreement was brought down to this House, or before the measure was known the great objection taken to the negotiations with the United States was that we are going to form a treaty, an entangling alliance and that sort of thing. Had a treaty been made I have no doubt that the changes would have been rung upon that, and possibly there might have been some little ground for taking exception to a treaty because if you agree to a treaty you cannot vary it for the term of years for which it is intended to be in force without the consent of both parties or without a breach of the agreement. You would be bound, hard and fast. There would be some ground for an argument in that case. I do not know myself that the ground would be sufficiently strong to justify this House in throwing out an arrangement if it had been brought down in the shape of a treaty because if the treaty were in itself good such little entanglements as might come about would not be sufficient to justify its rejection.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the old treaty the maritime provinces prospered amazingly. Of course, I cannot speak from personal memory, but, having been brought up as I was in the country there, and knowing from my people what had gone on, I know that the maritime provinces, and my own little province among the rest, did increase and prosper amazingly. They increased in population very largely, a thing that they have not been doing of late. They also increased in wealth ; in fact, the farmers were getting to be well off. It is almost a tradition to this day in the maritime provinces that the reciprocity treaty of 1854-66 had been the best thing that the producers and people of these provinces ever had, and it has been handed down—I was going to say—from father to son, as something to be sought for.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that before the terms of this agreement were known the opposition in the press, wherever we met with it, was largely based upon the supposition that this was going to be a treaty. In connection with that, I would like to read a short extract from a speech delivered by Sir George W. Ross on Nov. 3 of last year, in which he directs as strong an argument as he could make against reciprocity. But he assumed, and the argument throughout is based on the assumption, that the arrangement to be made with the United States would be a treaty. He says, on page 12 :

> If they were anxious for better trade relations with Canada let them negotiate through their own Congress at Washington and reduce their tariff as it may suit them, and let us reciprocate if we deem it expedient through the parliament of Canada.
> Theirs is the first move on the commercial chessboard. We gave Great Britain a preference without any treaty or even negotiations. Why should we treat the Americans with greater formality? At the same time let us receive their representatives with the utmost courtesy. They have proposals to make, we want to know what they are. They should be made as openly as if they were submitted to parliament. Public opinion should be heard upon them, and there the matter should rest until the United States Congress had given its sanction and approval to the action of its representatives. It would then be the duty of the parliament of Canada to take similar action if in the public interests so to do. Only in this way can we preserve perfect freedom from the possible entanglements of a treaty, which, no matter how carefully drafted is liable to be misunderstood and misinterpreted.

The arrangement brought down has entirely done away with the basic principle upon which that address was delivered. Sir George Ross is a man that the people of Canada, especially the people of Ontario, the Liberals of Canada and, I think, I might say, the Conservatives of Canada, greatly respect. He will always be listened to with respect and attention. Whether we always agree with him or not is another question. But I imagine that when Sir Geo. Ross saw that his speech had been sent all over this Dominion in pamphlet form by the Manufacturers' Association and others in order to create a prejudice against reciprocity that he must have wondered and asked : What have I done to deserve this? He had not always got these encomiums from the people of Ontario or from those who are now lauding his utterances.

My recollection is that he had a pretty hard time of it with those Ontario people who are now lauding him. Nevertheless, Sir George Ross is a great man, but so many years has he been working for the province of Ontario that he scarcely has eyes to see beyond the boundaries of that province, especially so as his political vision would seem to be largely circumscribed by the city of Toronto. However, as I say, Sir George Ross is one of the great men of Canada to-day. Recently I had sent me a pamphlet written by Mr. E. B. Bigger, of Toronto, in favour of reciprocity, and in it the same ground is taken, so that, of course, the same answer can be given to it. Speaking for myself personally, even though the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs had brought back from Washington a treaty, which in my opinion would not be as good as the present agreement, I would have supported it on the ground that the good in it would have been infinitely greater than any harm it could do. The present arrangement, not being a treaty, is much more elastic, and it leaves us free to change as conditions change. One of the strong points is that with experience of its operation, if it commends itself to the people of both countries as mutually beneficial it can be continued, and if it fails in this respect then it can be put an end to. Some hon. gentlemen on the Conservative side hold up the British preference in this debate and express great fears that it may be militated against by this agreement. True, a few articles are placed on the free list of which we import a comparatively small quantity from Great Britain, but it is equally true that the great bulk of the articles we import from Great Britain will still remain under the preference. The people of Great Britain are not alarmed, because they recognize as we do that it is in our power to increase the British preference at any time we wish. On this point I might quote from an authority for whom every member of this House will have the greatest respect; I refer to the Duke of Argyll. According to a despatch published in the 'Citizen' on the 4th of February, His Grace said:

The Duke of Argyll, who is probably better versed in Canadian conditions than all the rest of the politicians now voicing their opinions in the British press, does not, however, overlook the main point and the point Mr. Fielding emphasized when introducing the agreement to parliament, namely, that the arrangement guards preference to Britain which may be increased by Canada without violation of the reciprocity arrangement.

If the Duke of Argyll, whose loyalty will certainly not be questioned, has no fear, I do not think that we need worry our heads much about it. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was very solicitous about the preference, and he wished to take it under his fostering care. He quoted, as is his habit, a little nursery rhyme which he said was illustrative of the position the Canadian commissioners found themselves in in Washington; he said they had had the wool drawn over their eyes, that they were deluded by President Taft and that they practically gave away everything to his blandishments. This is the rhyme the member for Toronto (Mr. Foster) quoted:

Come into my parlour said the spider to the fly;
A prettier little parlour you never yet did spy.

I wonder why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has such a hankering for nursery rhymes, but perhaps it is because he was present at the birth of this British preference and was one of those who tried to strangle it before it got into its swaddling clothes. But, if he wished to quote poetry about the British preference, the following parody on his nursery rhyme, which has been sent to me, would be more appropriate in his mouth:

Come into my parlour, said the strangler to the child,
It is the prettiest little parlour that ever you did spy.
I will not go to your parlour, to the strangler, said the child,
I bear in mind that parlour in my baby days of yore,
When you vampired o'er my cradle, and sought my infant gore.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very bad poetry.

Mr. WARBURTON. I submit it with all its infirmities and imperfections, and, while it may be bad poetry, it gives a very clear idea of what would happen if the British preference fell into the hands of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). Then, for fear the cry of the British preference would not be enough, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have on this, as on many other occasions, raised the cry of loyalty. During the course of my career as a public man in Canada, I can recall no occasion of this kind when an important public measure was advanced by the Liberal government, that the cry of loyalty was not raised by our opponents. Indeed, so often has it been raised that like the cry of 'wolf, wolf,' the people of Canada pay very little attention to it. At best it is an absurd cry. The loyalty of Canadians, whether they be Liberals or Tories, is too robust to be destroyed by any question of our trade relations with the United States. I do not think that any man can honestly and sincerely say that he believes in his heart of hearts that a single Canadian citizen will have his loyalty impinged in the slightest degree because we have freer trade relations with the United States or with any other country.

If it were not that I personally know so many of the hon. gentlemen on the opposition side of the House, and so many of their supporters throughout the country I would almost feel that they had lost confidence and belief in the robustness and virility of their own race, I would feel that they had almost lost confidence in their own loyality; but knowing them as I do, knowing them to be as loyal as we are, no more and no less, I feel that they are doing themselves a great injustice when they put before this country for political effect this matter of a possible want of loyalty. It is unworthy of them, unworthy of men of their class. If we were a lot of hoodlums or if we were to be bought and sold perhaps they might be justified in taking that ground, but if we were that class of people it would not matter much what country we belonged to. But we do not belong to that class of people, the people of this country are of an entirely different class. Nor do the people of this country think, as our hon. friends seem to think, that everything is going to the bad. Still, if one were to judge by their uttered words, he would almost be inclined to think so. Sometimes when I hear these hon. gentlemen talking of loyalty and annexation, that we are going to be annihilated as a nation, and I do not know what else, I look around; I see that if you take their words literally these men have lost faith in their country and I am inclined to say : Oh ye of little faith. I believe, however, that they have a better faith than that, that their belief in the country is strong and robust and that when we get this reciprocity agreement fairly under way we will find among them among the strongest of its true and loyal supporters.

I used to belong to a vestry where we had one fine old gentleman who opposed everything proposed, no matter what it was. He was a very fine old man, and a generous supporter of the church, and when we got to know him we simply let him talk a little and then went ahead with what was proposed in spite of his opposition. When he had opposed whatever was suggested, he felt he had done his full duty, and always supported what we had done by his money and his efforts, and if you wished to repeal next week, what he had opposed last week, he would oppose the repeal. Just so with our opposition friends and the British preference. If you attempted to repeal the British preference now there would be as strenuous an opposition from the hon. gentlemen as there was to its enactment. One of the evils of the protective system, and I have no belief in protection myself and never had, is that it has the effect of destroying a man's self-reliance, he will rely more on the assistance of a high protective tariff than on his own exertions. I would like to test the loyalty of the hon. gentlemen in another way, and I hope and trust the government will see their way to make the test, although I do not know that they have any intention of doing so. I would like to see the British preference increased to 50 per cent, and I for one will assure them of my strong support; I will work for it, and do the best I can for it, I will hail it as a further and greater exhibition of our loyalty, and I am sure from what we have heard since the discussion here that hon. gentlemen opposite will support the government with both hands in anything of that kind.

Mr. PATERSON. You think so?

Mr. WARBURTON. And I would be very much interested, I would not leave my seat for one moment when that matter came up, as I would love to listen to the cries of loyalty that would then be uttered by them.

Turning to the question of annexation, I would say and I have no doubt I speak for many others here that it is humiliating for a loyal subject of the empire, such as I am, to be placed in a position where it is necessary to defend any section of this country or to have to denounce even the suspicion that this great country of ours has the slightest inclination or intention or could be induced to go into annexation. I believe there is a way, by a long course of treatment, in which you might force this country to go in for independence, but never for annexation. I do not want to see either independence or annexation, I think we are remarkably well off where we are. But we had talk about reciprocity many years ago. Conditions and times may change, but the effect of similar principles is always the same although conditions may divert them somewhat. Before 1854 it was notorious that there was an annexationist sentiment in this country. I do not think it got down to the maritime provinces, but there certainly was such a sentiment in the present provinces of Quebec and Ontario. That sentiment was voiced by a number of very able men, and I think they were not confined to one side of politics—although some one said yesterday that they were all Conservatives—young men and very able men, of whom a remarkable number on both sides of politics later came very much into the limelight and rendered good service to their Queen and to their country. After a few years of weakness when they entertained annexationist sentiments—it was the hot blood of youth, I fancy more than anything else, they perhaps were benefited by having gone through the annexation fever just as patients are sometimes better after suffering from certain fevers—they held high place in the councils of this country, and their names to-day are deservedly held in honour as those of loyal, manly subjects of the British Empire, none more loyal than they. I read in this pamphlet opposing reciprocity that was sent to me a very good summary of the history of that annexation sentiment. If we are to believe what we are told of that period, that annexation sentiment was stopped by reciprocity. I quote:

> Though reciprocity Bills had been defeated in Congress in 1848 and 1849, it was seen by the southern representatives.

And here is how we came to get it.

> That the idea was not only favoured by Great Britain and Canada, but was gaining ground in all the northern states, and, when the agitation for annexation began to develop, leaders of opinion in the South took quiet note of it, and foresaw that the alternative to a reciprocity treaty might be a complete union of the Canadian provinces with the States, in which case the separatist movement in the southern States would be swamped by a new union element in the North. Then the southern senators yielded and withdrew their opposition to the treaty, and thus in the decree of Providence, the motive which determined the southern States to secede, and which brought on the terrible civil war, gave to Canada her desires without the sacrifice of her British connection, and, the economic waste of the same war bringing up at its close new revenue problems, cut Canada off from her dependence on the trade of the States, and thus confirmed her against her wishes, in the path of a separate existence as a nation.

Again the same writer, at page 13, says:

In the northern States political opposition to reciprocity yielded partly to the pressure of commercial needs on both sides, and partly to the belief that the new commercial relationship would lead to political union. The south, believing with most Canadians that reciprocity alone would satisfy the provinces, favoured the treaty to keep them out of the union, fearing their influence on the secession movement. The intuition of the south was correct, for, as soon as the treaty was negotiated, the annexation sentiment, which was never very deep, died out.

I would like also, although it has often been quoted before, to read you an extract from Joe Howe's speech at Detroit. It cannot be quoted too often in Canada:

In my own family and person I have suffered not a little by this unhappy rebellion. I have five boys, and one of them took it into his head to enter your army. He has now been nearly two years in the 23rd Ohio Regiment, and has fought in all the battles of that regiment during this period. He was in both the great battles under Sheridan, in which General Early's forces were scattered and the Shenandoah valley cleared. All the personal benefit that I have derived from the reciprocity treaty or hope to derive from its renewal, will never compensate me or that boy's mother for the anxiety we have had with regard to him; but when he produced his certificate of his commanding officer, showing that he had conducted himself like a gentleman and had been faithful and brave, it was some consolation for all our anguish to know that he had performed his duty. (Enthusiastic applause. As the applause subsided a gentleman proposed 'Three cheers for the boy,' which were given with great heartiness.) I have heard it said since I came to the convention that if the reciprocity treaty is annulled the British provinces will be so cramped that they will be compelled to seek annexation to the United States. I know the feeling in the lower provinces, and I believe I am well enough acquainted with the Canadians to speak for them also when I make the assertion that no considerations of finance, no question of balance for or against them on the interchange of commodities can have any influence upon the loyalty of the inhabitants of the British provinces, or tend in the slightest degree to alienate the affections of the people from their country, their institution, their government and their Queen. There is not a man who dare. on the abrogation of the treaty, if such be its fate, to take the hustings and appeal to any constituency on annexation principles throughout the entire Dominion. The man who avowed such a sentiment would be scouted from society by his best friends. What other treatment would a man deserve who had turned traitor to his government and violated for pecuniary advantages all obligations to the country that gave him birth? The very boy to whom I have alluded as having fought manfully for the stars and stripes would rather blow his own father's brains out that haul down the honoured flag under which he was born. If any member of the convention harbours the idea that in refusing reciprocity to British America they would undermine the loyal feelings of the people of those colonies, he is labouring under a delusion....I sincerely hope that all thought of forcing annexation upon the people of Canada will be abandoned.

Mr. Howe's speech was throughout received in good spirit, and it is worth noting that at this convention a resolution was unanimously passed in favour of a reciprocity treaty between the two countries, and of extending its scope so as to include British Columbia, the Selkirk Settlement and Vancouver Island.

For my part I say 'Amen' to these words of that perhaps one of our greatest Canadians. In that connection I would like also to read a short extract from a report in the 'Citizen,' a Conservative paper, which does not support the government in many things, but does, I am glad to say, in this matter:

The New York Sun declares that annexation is 'a dead issue,' and continues:—

The reciprocal trade relations of 1855-66 did not weaken the tie with the mother country. They set Canada up in business and gave her confidence in her own resources. With their development that confidence has steadily grown.

And in reference to the situation as it exists to-day it is worthy of note that a condition parallel in almost every particular obtained over half a century ago in our trade relations with the United States and Britain. But remarkable as it may appear in view of the interpretation placed upon such negotiations to-day, the modification of tariff duties was at that time considered the only possible salvation of Canada and the only method whereby annexation to the States could be prevented. In 1849 Lord Elgin, then Governor General, wrote that if Britain 'did not make the sacrifices which are absolutely necessary to put the colonists here in as good a position commercially as the citizens of the United States in order to do which free navigation and reciprocal trade with the States are indispensable, the end may be nearer than we wot of.' And Lord Elgin followed this up some time afterwards with another communication in which he was even more outspoken. 'If,' he declared, 'things remain on their present footing there is nothing before us but annexation. No measure but the establishment of reciprocal trade between Canada and the United States or the imposition of a duty on the produce of the States when imported into England will remove it.'

The reciprocity treaty of 1854, which resulted from Lord Elgin's representations, was followed by an almost complete cessation of annexation talk both in Canada and across the line. The fact became apparent then that the annexation spirit had had its origin in Canada in dissatisfaction with the commercial indifference of the mother country to her only North American colony, and that even the slightest consideration in this respect was sufficient to dispel all such sentiment. Yet to-day we are told by political gospellers that the effort to promote friendlier trade relations with the United States is a menace to the imperial tie.

Now what took place before, may take place again. If there were any annexation sentiment in this country—and I have never seen the slightest sign of any—I believe the best cure for it would be freer trade relations. We are told by a very great authority Adam Smith:

> That to prohibit a great people from making all they can of every part of their own produce, or from employing their own stock and industry in the way that they judge most advantageous for themselves, is a manifest violation of the most sacred rights of manhood.

This reciprocity agreement, which we are now discussing, is an effort made to allow the great mass of the people to make the best use of their own produce. It is to enable them to dispose of the produce of their fields and orchards, &c., to the best advantage absolutely in conformity with the principle laid down 100 years ago by Adam Smith and warmly approved of very recently by the most profound of modern historians Lord Acton. But, as I said a moment ago, there might be one possible way in which by a long continuance of a certain treatment our people might gradually be led to look for independence, although I am convinced they will never want annexation. Let me call attention to what was the real cause of the revolt of the North American colonies against Great Britain. We are so accustomed to hear about the Boston Tea Party that we perhaps do not often go as far back as the real origin of this trouble which caused a dissatisfaction in the New England colonies that grew until it became an overwhelming force and resulted in a severance of those colonies from the British Crown.

> The real foundation of discontent which led to the American revolution was the effort of Great Britain, beginning in 1750, to regulate and control the occupation and business of the colonists. The final cause before the attempt to tax without representation was the effort to enforce the navigation law.

In other words, the effort to cramp and restrict the trade of these colonies was the underlying, the active, the effective cause of their separation from the motherland. Now, I do not think that even that would bring about annexation with the United States. I think we are too big a country; we have room enough for a nation. While we believe and hope and pray that we may ever remain a nation, one of the great congeries of nations which make up the British Empire, still, if, by any extraordinary concurrence of events, we should ever separate from Great Britain, it would be as an independent nation. We have a vast country; it is a northern country, and northern countries send out the best breed of men. And, if there is any other destiny open to Canada to which she is likely to attain, it would be independence and not annexation. And God forbid that it should be either.

But let us ask ourselves the question: Why should we join the United States? We here sit on opposite sides of this chamber—we do not know how long the parties will occupy their respective places; it may be fifteen or twenty years, perhaps only half-a-dozen years—but, though the sides oppose each other on the questions that come before us, I think we all agree that we have a much better form of government than the United States have. I do not think there is any dispute about that. Ours is a really responsible form of government. It can scarcely be said, if you examine it at all critically, that the United States government is really a responsible government. When you find that the members of the cabinet have not places on the floor either of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, that they are not directly responsible to the people, that when Congress changes its complexion the government still remains in office, it does not appear to me that that is, fairly speaking, responsible government at all. Ours is responsible government, and, on the whole, a better form. I believe, also, that we have a better country. In saying that I recognize the fact that we have a colder country, but the colder climate is the more bracing. We cannot raise the same great variety of products as can be raised in the United States, but those which we do raise are of the best, including men. I think we agree that we can raise in this country all that we really need. Even if we could have that country under the British flag, and if I were given my choice, I would not be willing to change countries. I believe, owing very largely to our northern latitude, the individuals in this country, taking them on the average, taking them man for man—and I am not underrating the greatness of many of the men on the other side of the line—are better than in the United States. Why, then, should we want to change? I could understand our American cousins, sometimes, when they are sick and tired of their form of government, wanting to join us, but I cannot imagine our wanting to join them.

Now, I have quoted passages from several writers and speakers. I would like to quote the opinion upon the general scope of the treaty of a man now living in Montreal who is very highly thought of as a thinker and writer. I refer to Dr. Andrew Macphail. I have here an interview with

Dr. Macphail. He was asked his opinion of the present agreement. And this is what the newspaper says:

Amongst the Montrealers who expressed their views on the reciprocity proposals, Dr. Andrew Macphail said that these proposals were so important that no man could foretell the results. One fact stood out clearly—that the proposals were not of the nature of a treaty of reciprocity, and so were free from the objections inherent in that form of agreement. He had always contended that reciprocity was the most vicious form of protection, because it was a surrender of fiscal independence, and prevented people from dealing freely with their own affairs. These lowered duties were proposed in what was conceded to be in the interests of Canada. The duties in the United States were proposed to be lowered in what was conceived to be in the interests of the United States. If they worked to the mutual advantage, so much the better, but each community was left free to lower them still further, or go back to the original arrangement.

The people of the United States appeared to want certain Canadian products, and they were free to decide what duties they shall pay to themselves. The people of Canada appeared to want certain products from the United States, and they were about to decide what duties they will pay to themselves. No identification of interests has been made with an alien country.

The only fear he had was that interested persons would raise the cry that freer commercial intercourse with the United States would lead to a lessened loyalty to British ideals and institutions. That allegation could be left to disprove itself. He felt that the people at large would accept these proposals with enthusiasm, especially in the Maritime provinces, where, for thirty years, they had borne the full force of the protective system, and profited the least by it. If these proposals were put in force he believed a new era would be opened for these provinces, especially for Prince Edward Island, which he expected would double its population in this generation.

The only objection he had seen was that this was a farmers' tariff. This he thought, its chief merit, especially in a community of which farmers form 65 per cent of the people. He thought it quite possible that hardship might result to special persons, but these should comfort themselves by reflecting upon the benefits which they enjoyed for the past thirty years.

We have had much discussion over the question of the home market. And when this subject is discussed it always looks as though the speakers and writers thought we had only one home market. We have not one but two home markets, and both good. The only one usually spoken of is that which is provided in manufacturing centres. But we have an unprotected as well as a protected home market. If the unprotected home market, that is the market afforded by the farmers and other producers to the manufacturers for their wares, can, by means of this agreement or in any other way, be enabled to obtain higher prices for its wares, and if it gets richer its people will live better and will buy more goods. That market will grow enormously if you give to the people who control it and live in it and own it a chance to increase their receipts by better trade relations, as I firmly believe this agreement will enable them to do. As that market grows real prosperity of all classes grows with it. If the profit on any single article be reduced, the larger market will more than make up for the loss. I believe, further, that, while our population is increasing rapidly, largely by immigration, it will increase in a much more rapid ratio under this agreement. I have reports from the maritime provinces in which they assure me that, if this treaty comes into force it will add materially to the value of farm lands there. We are losing population there. The maritime provinces are standing still, or actually going back, as regards population. Yet we have great wealth, not only of farm, forests and minerals, but of the sea as well. The province from which I come unquestionably increased enormously in population and in wealth during the time when the old reciprocity treaty was in force.

In 1871, four or five years after the treaty was repealed, the effects of the repeal had not yet begun to be felt by our population. In 1871 our population was 94,021. We went on under the old low tariff from 1871 to 1881, when our population increased to 108,891, or an increase of 13 per cent. In the next ten years, our population had increased to 109,078, a gain of 187; and in 1901 it fell to 103,252. In the earlier period the people used to leave the maritime provinces and go to the United States, but I am glad to say that in late years the stream of emigration, though it still flows outward, has been diverted to the Canadian west, and our people now still remain under the British flag. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the movement of population is shown by these figures:

NOVA SCOTIA.

1881..	440,572—gain of over 50,000.
1891..	450,396—gain of 10,000.
1901..	459,574—gain of 9,000.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

1871..	285,594
1881..	321,233—gain of 35,000.
1891..	321,263—gain of 30.
1901..	331,920—gain of 10,000.

So you see that Prince Edward Island, one of the most fertile parts of the Dominion, with fisheries surrounding it, suffered severely, our little manufactures were crushed out, and people left the country in considerable numbers. Nova Scotia, with almost unlimited natural wealth, between the two last censuses only gained 9,000; and New Brunswick was in a similar position.

Now I believe that this agreement, when it comes into effect, will do away to a large extent with the exodus from our provinces. I believe it will give our farmers better prices for their produce, and our fishermen better prices for their fish than they now get, and an improvement in those respects will tend to keep our young men at home on the farms. Much has been said in this House, and in the country as to the meaning of the balance of trade. I never had much confidence in the balance of trade theory, when I saw Great Britain, a free trade country, getting on so well, and Russia, a protectionist country, also showing a trade balance in its favour. During the last fiscal year we bought from the United States to the amount of $223,000,000, and they bought from us $113,000,000. Now that, as has already been pointed out, was largely due to the enormous quantity of raw material brought into this country for our manufacturers, and putting a number of articles on the free list. I think that the best way to encourage manufacturers is to put their raw material on the free list. But one reason especially why we have not sold a corresponding amount of goods to the United States, is owing to the high tariff that country has imposed upon our goods. We are accused of selling to our best customer, England, and of taking her money and spending it in the United States. There may be some truth in that, but it is not our fault, it is the fault of the high tariff in the United States.

I have said that we ought to look upon these matters rather from a broad and national point of view, than from a sectional or provincial point of view. I believe that every member of this House ought, as far as possible, to disassociate himself from all narrow views, and try to ascertain what will be for the greatest good of the greatest number in Canada, and I believe that that greatest good will be secured by the removal of these restrictions on trade with the United States. I have been informed by those who know, that while many farmers in the western provinces are becoming wealthy from the splendid crops they raise. there are many others, of whom we don't hear so much, who are heavily involved in debt, and have been obliged to mortgage their farms in order to find money to pay for the machinery they use. In this way the profit that they make upon their crops goes largely to pay the interest on loans. It is well known that the loan companies in Canada, and probably the same remark will apply to the United States, have large amounts invested in the west that have been taken by farmers. Now it takes the farmer some ten or fifteen years to place himself in a good position, and as so much of his money has to go in payment of interest, he has an uphill road to pursue. He will get through all right if he is a man of vim and vigour, but he has got a terrible fight to put up in the meantime. Now I cannot see why, if these men, by selling their grain south of the line, can get a better price for it, they should not have the privilege of doing so. I for one, have a great deal of sympathy with the western farmer, who is struggling to make a start in life, and I say if he can get a few cents more for a bushel of wheat, it means a big relief for him, and will help him to get out of debt sooner. I think it is true that this agreement will bring about a relief to the consuming population of Canada. It means a reduction of the tariff, perhaps not to a great extent. But to my mind, a substantial reduction has already been made by the British preference, as well as by the treaties we have made with other nations, and the numerous articles put upon the free list. Still, with all these reductions, I am free to confess as an old Liberal, that I would like to see a still greater reduction in our tariff against foreign countries. To my mind, it does not render this agreement less valuable, because incidentally it takes in some other nations with which we have favoured nation treaties, I think it makes it so much the more valuable.

Now let us see what we give and what we get by this agreement. We place a considerable number of articles on the free list, and we reduce the duty upon a number of others, and the United States does the same for us. How do we come out from the point of view of revenue ? I will read an extract from the 'Citizen' of the 9th inst, in which this matter is well put:

The 'Citizen' says:

> The total production on Canadian products going into the United States is $4,849,933 under the terms of the new agreement. Of this sum the gain to Canada under Schedule A, which wipes out all duties, is $4,236,988; under Schedule B, which admits articles to the United States at the same rate at which they enter Canada, the gain to this country's exporters is $234,984, while under Schedule C, which calls for special rates, our gain is $377,961.
>
> In other words, the reciprocity agreement means in dollars and cents that Canada is getting the long end of a bargain, which will prove to the advantage of both countries concerned, to the extent of the difference between $4,849,930 and $2,363,763. Disregarding the advantages that must ensue for the consumer, the producer and the exporter the agreement is one that should appeal even to those who consider the financial aspect of such matters first and the effect upon the general prosperity of the country only when such an argument serves to support the original premise.
> Nothing in the agreement would seem to justify the statements made in opposition to it that 'it will weaken the imperial tie' or 'result in Canada's annexation by the United States.' In the last analysis these statements are reflections on the loyalty of the people of this country.

So that, in the matter of revenue, upon the articles placed on the free list, or upon which the duty is reduced, we have made, it seems to me, a remarkably good bargain. I believe it is one that is good for both sides of the line. What are the articles which affect us particularly? The arrangement takes in all classes of cereals. We do not, in the maritime provinces, grow much wheat for export, but we grow other articles. We grow a sufficient quantity of wheat for our own use, or largely so, but we do not pretend to be an exporting people in so far as wheat is concerned. Then we grow potatoes. Last year with us the potato crop was almost a failure. It is a very rare thing for it to be a failure in Prince Edward Island. It is usually our staple crop, but last year it was only half a crop, and I am not sure that it was even half a crop. There were produced last year in the maritime provinces:

—	Potatoes.	Turnips and other roots	Hay and clover.
	Bush.	Bush.	Tons.
Prince Edward Is..	4,915,000	4,155,000	495,000
Nova Scotia.....	6,432,000	7,012,000	1,284,000
New Brunswick...	7,486,000	1,417,000	1,261,000

The hay and clover in all these provinces was a remarkable crop. Turnips and roots were good, but potatoes were practically a failure. These potatoes were formerly shipped very largely to Boston by water, but the duty of 25 cents a bushel practically shut us out from the American market. We largely now supply Sydney, St. Pierre and Miquelon, Newfoundland, and some other places, but our natural market is Boston. While our shipments to the United States were at one time enormous, they have dwindled to very little. If that duty of 25 cents a bushel is taken off, is it conceivable that the shipment to our natural ports by water will not again be resumed and be as great a success as it formerly was, if not greater? If we can get that market for our potatoes and turnips it will add enormously to the wealth of our farms, and our farmers, as it is, are a pretty well off class.

Then again, we have fish. We scarcely realize the value of the fisheries of Canada. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), occasionally brings up the question of the fisheries in the lakes of the west, and I myself, once in a while, say something about them, but I do not think that we realize the enormous value that our fisheries are to the country. Last year the total catch of fish was worth $29,629,169.68, divided amongst the provinces as follows:

Provinces.	Value of Fish.	Increase.	Decrease.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
British Columbia	10,314,755 50	3,849,717 50
Nova Scotia	8,081,111 56	71,272 63
New Brunswick	4,676,315 25	.....	77,982 00
Ontario*	2,177,813 00	77,733 37
Quebec	1,808,436 65	.....	73,380 35

We have had to contend with great difficulties owing to the fact that our fish—and this applies to all the maritime provinces—have been practically barred from the United States market by their duties. We have shipped largely to the West Indies, to South America, to Spain and to some of the other European countries, which use large quantities of fish, but the near-by market we are, to a large extent, barred out from. If we get free entry of fish and fish oils into that near-by market it is inconceivable that a trade will not spring up as it formerly did, because we are right on the ground, transportation by water is cheap and there is an enormous demand for the fish that we put up—mackerel, for instance, and that sort of fish. Then, we raise a considerable amount of poultry, which now we send very largely to Sydney, Newfoundland, and other places down there. We also produce dairy products. Up to now, we have sent these dairy products elsewhere than to the United States, although the United States would be our great market. We have been practically barred out from there. It happened by accident, in making up the schedules of the last tariff Bill of the United States, that they put cream in at five cents a gallon, although I believe the intention was to put it in at five cents a pound. But, however, it does go in at five cents a gallon, and already a large business in the exportation of cream has sprung up between Prince Edward Island and the United States. It began with only a few gallons, because people did not realize what it meant, but it has grown very largely and it will be a very important trade in another year. I hear that in Ontario the same thing has happened. Then again, we have large resources in live stock. We ship, as it is, large numbers of lambs to the United States. They come down and buy lambs in great quantities from us, because Prince Edward Island lamb is noted for its peculiar excellence. But every lamb has to pay 75 cents, and every sheep, I believe, $1.50. Then we come to the question of fruit, which has been so much discussed by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), and others. We have no dread whatever of the duty being taken off fruit. We are quite prepared to meet the Americans in their own market or anywhere else, we believe that the quality of our fruit will carry it anywhere. Our fruit comes in later in the season than the American fruit. Our strawberries are sent to the Boston market, after other supplies have failed, and we get a good market there. Our apples and pears are better than theirs, the flavour is better, and we are quite prepared to put our apples and our plums and such other fruit as we raise, in competition with theirs in any part of the world.

Mr. BURRELL: What is the acreage under fruit in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. WARBURTON. Speaking from memory, about 8,000 acres. It is notorious that the fruit growers in the Dominion are not united in this agreement as the following interesting letter published in the Toronto 'Globe' will make clear:

To the editor of the 'Globe': It is interesting and very amusing to read the articles of the various interests for and against, specially against, the proposed new tariff with the United States. The Niagara district fruit growers would have us believe that they will be terribly hurt. I cannot agree with them on that point. There are only three or four months that they can supply the market anyway, and there is no need to fear competition from the States during that time, to any great extent as the American is somewhat in advance. For example, we have had many inquiries in September for carloads of plums from such cities as Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, New Orleans, New York, and Chicago. This would go to show that by that time their season was over. Then the Niagara people have the advantage in freight rates. This alone should give them all the advantage they require to make a profitable business.

It would certainly be to the advantage of consumers at large to be able to get supplies at reasonable prices when our own growers cannot supply them. Mr. E. D. Smith said at the hearing given to the Ottawa deputation that during the time they cannot supply the market it would be the rich that would have to pay the duty on American supplies coming in. Is there any reason or fair play in a policy which would hold up prices so that only the rich could afford to buy? I have no sympathy with any dog-in-the-manger policy that would almost compel the ordinary consumer to do without supplies until such times as ours are ready for market.

Mr. Smith also stated that the fruit growers of Canada were a unit in regard to the opposition of the proposed new tariff. When he says that, he is either not candid or he does not know it all. Now in regard to apples; generally speaking, the best apple men are favourable to the tariff. In view of the proposed changes there is more interest taken in the apple industry in this Georgian bay section than for many years. Hundreds of acres will be planted with varieties specially suited to both the western and American markets. We ourselves have in view the planting of five hundred acres. When I say I am satisfied with the tariff proposals I am voicing the sentiments of a great many apple growers, representing many thousand acres of orchards.

J. G. MITCHELL, General Manager,
The Georgian Bay Fruit Growers, Clarksburg, Ont., Feb. 11.

Although I am not very well acquainted with the Niagara Peninsula, I have travelled through it, and it seems to me that those who live there, are a most favoured people. They can grow almost all fruits and of the finest flavour, and it does seem to me their natural advantages ought to enable them to compete advantageously in the markets of the world. It may be that the Americans would interfere with their trade in the earlier variety of berries, but I should think that in the end the excellent quality of the Niagara fruit would give it pre-eminence in the American market so that in a few years even the Niagara fruit growers would not want to see the tariff barriers raised again. The Niagara peninsula is one of the most favoured countries in the world, and it is not a bad test of its prosperity to see what land costs in that district. I was informed that land producing fruit, runs from $500 to $1,000 an acre, and the fruit growers certainly have beautiful homes and well ordered grounds which can only be possessed by a prosperous people. If land be worth $1,000 an acre an the fruit growers can live in fine house and luxurious surroundings, they certainly must make large profits which could not be cut into very much by the removal of the duty. Although I do not know much about British Columbia, I am told that fruit land there is worth $50 an acre in a wild state, that when it is cleared it costs $250 an acre, and when planted and growing fruit $500 an acre. When people pay such prices for property it is reasonable to expect that experience has taught them that it is a profitable investment, and I don't think they need fear the reciprocal agreement. While possibly British Columbia may not be benefited as much by this agreement as we in the maritime provinces are, yet the pacific province is not left out in the cold. There is free coke, and coke is a valuable product in British Columbia, and there is free fish, which, when the National Transcontinental railway is built and the port of Prince Rupert equipped, must be a very valuable asset to that province. At present, it is two or three days sail from the most productive fishing grounds in the world, to the point of shipment, but when the Transcontinental line is completed it will only be a few hours sail to Prince Rupert, and as Canadians have a monopoly of this fishery the removal of the duty on fish must be of enormous advantage. Mr. Speaker, it is only the importance of the subject now before the House, that justifies my having spoken at such length. I presume that our friends in the opposition will vote against this measure, as they have a right to, if they wish, but, when I heard the Minister of Finance on the 26th of last month introducing the measure, and when I saw the very general applause which greeted him, I thought to myself that on this occasion if never before, we would have unanimity in this parliament.

After the resolutions introduced at various sessions, seeking to do away with the duty on different lines of manufactured goods, after the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) undertook the impossible task of reconciling the cutting off of an important part of the duty on certain lines with a policy of high protection, I cannot see how he can vote against this. I cannot see how the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) or the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) having the interests of their constituents at heart, in that wheat growing country, can very well vote against this measure which will be of such manifest benefit to their constituents, and I will not believe that they can do so until I hear the names called out. I might go further and point out that many of these western gentlemen have shown signs by the resolutions they have introduced into this House in the last few years that the free trade sentiment that is now growing in the west is getting hold of them, and the fact that they have introduced resolutions at various sessions in the past, and this parliament tending to a reduction of duties shows that they are being impregnated with the revenue tariff or free trade bacillus. They are in contact with their people ; they know what their people desire. They saw the enormous delegation that came here in December from the west and know how the members of that delegation spoke, with no uncertain sound. I thought that delegation put the case very well although in some respects they perhaps asked rather more than they could reasonably expect to get, but still they made a good case and showed the trend of opinion in the west. That opinion has to be considered and dealt with by any one who runs up against this reciprocity agreement. It would be interesting to me to know how my genial friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) can vote in this House against the removal of the duty on Nova Scotia fish going into the Boston market, and then go to Halifax and tell them why he did so.

In conclusion I desire to quote from the 'Globe' several extracts from Conservative papers, showing that this matter has been fought in different ways in different parts of the Dominion, it is not opposed in the same way in all places, they have one story in one place, and another in another. The 'Globe' says :

CANNOT BOTH BE RIGHT.

The following editorial extracts from the Toronto 'News' and the Victoria 'Colonist,' the chief Conservative organ of British Columbia, indicates the sort of thing that is going on in every province of the Dominion in regard to the reciprocity agreement. The 'News,' three thousand miles away, predicts disaster for the British Columbia lumbermen as a result of freer trade. A representative British Columbia lumberman induces the 'Colonist' to say editorially that it does not know what will happen, and hopes for the best:—

The News (Con.)—"The British Columbia lumberman has developed a large trade with Alberta and Saskatchewan, and has been able to compete on satisfactory terms with the products of the American mills, but with the reduction of the tariff as foreshadowed in the agreement made at Washington the mills of the United States will monopolize the lumber trade, and the British Col-

The Colonist (Con.) —"Mr. Cameron of the Cameron Lumber Company writes us a letter on the effect of the reciprocity agreement upon the lumber trade of British Columbia. The examination which he has made of the schedule prepared for President Taft leads him to the conculsion that British Columbia merchants will be under no greater disadvantages in the Canadian market, whereas they umbian will be forced to send his rough hewn timber to the United States to be prepared for the market of the middle West, instead of doing it in his own mills in British Columbia. The greatest need of the Pacific province at the present time is a larger white population. The new trade arrangement cannot have any but a retrograde effect on immigration."

may gain very considerably by reason of the opening to them of the markets of the United States. This is certainly very interesting, and if the agreement is going to be brought into effect will be a source of local satisfaction. . . . . While opposed on principle to the negotiation of any reciprocity agreement with the United States, we very sincerely hope that, if the agreement is consummated, the most sanguine expectations of its friends as to its beneficial effect upon Canadian business will be more than realized."

Which view is the more likely to be correct—that of the man on the spot or that of the critic three thousand miles away?

I think I can assure my hon. friend who is now leading the House, (Mr. Paterson) that he will receive a strong and enthusiastic support from the very bottom of their hearts as well as from their lips of the gentlemen who sit about me. I believe that this is the best measure that has been brought before this House or any other House in Canada in the last 50 years in relation to its benefit to the province from which I come. If there is any difference in the benefit it affords to different places it is perhaps possible that we may benefit most because there is not one thing in which we are injured while we are benefited by every thing. I do not believe that many of those in other parts of the Dominion, who are complaining are hurt, they are crying before they are hurt. But with us it is a benefit in every respect, and I hail it with delight, and I congratulate the two ministers who negotiated it on the important work they have done.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Chairman, the question now before the committee is one of the most important that has been before parliament since confederation. The hon. member from the Garden of the Gulf has taken the position that he is very strongly in favour of reciprocity, and also of free trade with any nation on the face of the globe. But I venture to say that his good people, and the hon. gentleman himself, after he investigates this question more thoroughly will come to the conclusion, unless he and his people are taking a provincial view of the matter, considering only what is best from an island standpoint that we are facing a crisis in the affairs of this country. These people are big enough, and patriotic enough and have sufficient national pride, I am sure, to say that even if they are going to get a few cents more for a bag of potatoes or some other commodity, and are thereby going to injure some of the other large industries in the different parts of this country, they would be willing to forego that slight advantage and work for the best interests of all.

My hon. friend does not believe in a tariff commission. He says that 220 men are sent to this House to look after the tariff and should be able to do it. Well, what about the measure now before the House? Does he not know that it was submitted to us by two ministers of the Crown on behalf of the government, and that they are practically forcing their followers to line up and vote for it. Talk about 220 men having the right to decide this matter, I am not exaggerating when I say that every man on the government side is compelled to support this measure under penalty of seeing the government go down to defeat. This agreement is the work of two men, who are two of the strongest free traders and commercial unionists the country has ever known. Go back to the history of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) and you will find him going up and down the highways and the byways of his province in the early days urging the people to secede from confederation and join their fortunes with the country to the south. And as to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) we have heard him on the public platform throughout the cities of Ontario with that splendid voice of his crying aloud for free trade as it is in England. These are the two men who went to Washington and entered into a pact with the American people in order to bring about free trade between the two countries.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Warburton) says: Keep the hay on the farm. Yes, I would like to voice that sentiment. I would like to say to him that if he will get up in this House and condemn the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) for either his lack of knowledge or lack of interest in the agricultural industries of this Dominion during the last 15 years, owing to which our agricultural interests have been seriously interfered with, he will be doing something worthy of his election to parliament. If we had had a good, live, active Minister of Agriculture during the last 10 or 15 years, our farmers would not want to trade with the country to the south, but would be independent of any such necessity.

My hon. friend referred to the statement of Sir Donald Mann, which has also been referred to by other speakers on that side as supporting this agreement. The other day the hon. member for Wellington (Mr.

Guthrie) read the whole of that statement. I propose to quote the last paragraph of it, which reads as follows :

Personally I would prefer to have a preference between the United Kingdom and the Dominion and between the Dominion and other colonies. This preference should be increased from time to time, until, say in 25 years, the cost of production would reach a common point throughout the empire. Then we would be able to have free trade within the empire, and protection against the non-British nations.

Does that statement indicate that Sir Donald Mann is strongly supporting the government on this question? I should say it indicates the very opposite, and that if he had his way he would take an entirely different course.

My hon. friend talks about a mutual preference, which, he says, would be a splendid thing for this country if it could be brought about. Let me go back to the days of 1896, just before this government came into office, and read what the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said in London, Ontario, and again in Massey hall, Toronto, and a little later I propose to read what the right hon. gentleman said at the Colonial Conference in old London. In London, Ontario, he said:

Now, the statesmen of Great Britain have thought that the governments of the colonies have come to a time when a new step can be taken in their development. What is that? That there should be a commercial agreement between England and the colonies. That practical statesman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible to have within the bounds of the empire a new step taken which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations.

He said further:

What would the possibilities of such a step be if it were taken? We sell our goods in England; we send our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products, but there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia, and from other nations. Just see what an advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat, cheese and butter which we would send to England should be met in England with a preference over other products of other nations. The possibilities are immense. England does not expect that we should take her own system of free trade, such as she has it; but I lay it before you that the thing the English people would expect in return is that instead of the principle of protection, we should adopt a form of revenue tariff. Those are the conditions on which we could have that boom.

In closing he said:

My hope is—nay, my conviction is, that on the 23rd of June the Liberal party will be at the head of the polls. Then it will be the Liberal party, with its policy of revenue tariff, that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

Now, I would like to ask my good friend from the island (Mr. Warburton) what did the Prime Minister do? Did he send the commissioners over to old London? No one knows better than the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) what the Prime Minister said on this matter when he landed in Liverpool. In the first speech he made in that city on that question, the right hon. gentleman spoke as follows:

I claim for the present government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted on the rate of their tariff at 12½ per cent, next year at 25 per cent reduction. This we have done, not asking any compensation. There is a class of our fellow-citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a quid pro quo. The Canadian government has ignored all such sentiments. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade, which has done so much for England. What we give by our tariff, we give you in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we are prospering. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation. Protection has been the curse of Canada, and we would not wish you and we would not see you come under its baneful influence, for what weakens you must weaken us.

This speech no doubt won for the hon. gentleman the Cobden medal.

Follow up the ministers of the Crown from that day to this, follow up the men on the other side of the House, and what do you find ? You find the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), for instance, rising in his place and practically condemning the proposal of the men on this side, who were working for a mutual preference. Man after man on the other side has condemned in the strongest kind of language the position that a mutual preference would be of benefit to the Dominion of Canada. We should have a mutual preference, and I firmly believe we will have it before many years go by. And, if it were not for this stumbling block of reciprocity, which these men put in the way, mutual preference would come all the sooner. Let me tell my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Warburton), that 48 per cent of the men who voted in the last general election in Great Britain, voted in favour of a mutual preference. It is idle to say that this idea is dead in the old country. It would increase the value of every farm in the Dominion, it would bring immigration to her shores that would fill our lands with a population worthy of our nation.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island talks about being a free trader, and is anxious to take a step nearer to free trade. But I notice that the men who are such pronounced free traders, are not satisfied with the step; no sooner is one step taken than they want a further step. And what would free trade mean to the Dominion of Canada. One hundred and fifty millions of dollars per annum is collected for the purposes of this Dominion from our people. Assuming our population at 7,000,000, this means $20 per head or $100 per family. I only wish that, for a single year, the people of Canada had to put their hands into their pockets and pay out that $100 per family. They would watch where the money was going; and, instead of the government being allowed to squander, as they have been squandering, for the last fourteen years, the people would see to it that honest and clean administration was the rule in this country. My hon. friend wants free trade with the United States. That means that he is going to the most highly protected country in the world, and he is going there, because he can buy there cheap goods. He tells us about his potatoes. Why, what is he going to gain by having access to the United States markets ? If he had read the Canadian reciprocity book, which has come to us from the Washington government, and printed by them, he would have found among the 'articles included under the reciprocal trade agreement imported into the Dominion of Canada from the United States in the fiscal year ended, March 31, 1910,' the item of 215,288 bushels of potatoes valued at $179,000 and paying a duty of $43,000. (And the government is doing away with that $43,000.) The hon. gentleman would have found that of sweet potatoes and yams we imported from the United States, 37,000 bushels, valued at $33,000. And before I get through, I will be able to show to my hon. friend that as to the farm products, which he is boasting of as being in so much demand among the people of the United States and of such increased value to the people of Canada by reason of this arrangement, the United States is not only a large exporter of these goods, but is not paying any extra price worth speaking of for any of them.

The hon. member referred to the British preference and told what a splendid thing it was for this country, but he did not take the figures into consideration. We imported from the United States within the past six years, $581,000,000 worth of goods, of which $502,000,000 were free goods. We imported from Great Britain during the same period $542,000,000 worth of goods, of which $113,000,000 were free goods. The rate on dutiable goods from Great Britain was 24·78 as compared with 24·26 per cent on dutiable goods from the United States; and the rate on the total imports from Great Britain was 18·64 per cent, while the rate on the total United States imports was only 13·4 per cent. Yet we hear these gentlemen boasting throughout the length and breadth of Canada of the splendid advantages which, under this preference, they have granted to Great Britain. Our exports to the United States in the last six years amounted to $506,000,000, of which a large proportion was raw material, while our exports to Great Britain amounted to $726,000,000. During the past six years, Great Britain bought $300,000,000 worth more from us than we bought from her. During the same period, we bought from the United States, nearly $600,000,000 more than they bought from us. The British importer is paying higher duties to the revenue of the country than the man importing from the United States. Yet these gentlemen would lead us to believe that we are dealing with Great Britain to such a wonderful extent, and are, according to her many advantages.

My hon. friend (Mr. Warburton), spoke of annexation, and deplored the fact that the people of Canada were even discussing the subject. But when you take into consideration the prominent position that this great question holds in the United States to-day, you cannot but feel that we should, at least take it into our serious consideration in this parliament. Hon. Champ Clark, the leader of a triumphant party, which swept the country in the United States elections last November, led his followers in the House of Representatives, in support of this reciprocity arrangement. Only three of his followers bolted this vote. He is the most prominent man in the Democratic party to-day. And we find that hon. gentleman making use of the words: 'We are preparing to annex Canada'—making use of them three times in his speech in the House of Representatives, on the subject of this agreement. He said further, 'One flag, the Stars and Stripes, from Central America to the North Pole.' And we find prominent men in the United States backing him up in this. I can give quotations from the statements of many prominent men in that country. I do not give many, because I do not wish to take up time. Senator Jones, of Washington, stated:

> Canadian annexation is not an impossibility. It is remote, much as I would like to see Vancouver and British Columbia an integral part of the American Union.

Senator Smith of Michigan:

> Champ Clark spoke in prophetic vein, and I am not surprised at his deductions. Mr. Clark's views, as expressed by him on the floor of the House on Tuesday, almost carry as much weight as if the Prime Minister of England had spoken. No doubt the jingoes in England will do all in their power to use the Clark incident to defeat the Canadian reciprocity pact, if for no other purpose than the fact that reciprocity between Canada and the United States probably will shatter the well laid plans of England's statesmen to create a central parliament in London—a parliament that would make its purpose to secure advantage over trade relations between all countries flying the Union Jack and the world. Mr. Clark's utterances are bound to cause uneasiness in Europe, and are a blow at the English scheme of centralization, the feasibility of which is apparent to any one who studies the wonderful resources of the British Empire.

Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, a stronger statement than that coming from one of the prominent senators of the United States? Then Senator Cummings, of Iowa, says:

I am for the annexation of Canada. I have always been, and if it were generally understood that Canadian annexation was the purpose of the pending pact, it doubtless would help the measure in becoming a law here. Mr. Clark's speech may have some effect on the outcome of the measure in England and Canada, but surely not in this country.

Senator McCumber, of North Dakota:

Canadian annexation is the logical conclusion of reciprocity with Canada. Once the Canadian farmer has tasted the advantages of our market he won't want to withdraw. It would be a signal for a universal demand for annexation.

These quotations are from the utterances of leading statesmen at Washington. They undoubtedly voice the general idea in the United States with regard to this reciprocal agreement. Let me read a paragraph from a paper that serves a large district in western Ontario, the Detroit 'Free Press.' On February 2 it made this statement:

Its (the reciprocal agreement) principal merit is political and social. . . . It will, it is hoped, and confidently hoped, be the beginning of the end of the stupid separation of two halves of a continent which is inhabited by substantially one people.

Then, what do we find President Taft of the United States saying at Champaign, Illinois:

What we ought to look toward is the general effect on the social and business relations of the two countries. We have no forts along our borders; we have no battleships: we are able to live at amity with them. Why not then take down the only thing that separates us in our business relations?

Then at Springfield he said:

The plank in the platform of the last Republican convention, carried to its logical conclusion, would lead to substantial free trade with Canada.

He further said:

It will give the United States much greater control of the wheat market than it ever had before. It will enable its milling plants to turn Canadian wheat into flour and send abroad the finished product, and it will stimulate the sale of manufactures and other things that we have to sell in Canada.

Now let us inquire why the old treaty was abandoned:

The New York 'Sun' reviews the causes which led to the cancelling by the United States of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, and says:

The treaty lasted about eleven years, dying of various causes on January 18, 1865. Among them was the charge that Canada in bad faith had raised her duties on manufactured goods (she has been acquitted by impartial commentators), a belief that Canada had the best of the bargain, the dissatisfaction of the American farmer and lumberman, and toward the end a general feeling of hostility toward England on account of her attitude toward the north during the civil war.

Can you imagine any arguments more trifling than those used for denouncing the reciprocity treaty in years gone by? And is it not possible that within the next few months, or the next few years, these same men may bring up like arguments when the Minister of Customs goes to change his tariff? He will find that the United States will hold the big stick over him as they did over the Finance Minister last year, when he had to withdraw from the position he had taken in reference to the French treaty, when he led us to believe that the United States had no resource against the French treaty? He was told on the floor of parliament that he would have to yield to the United States, and he did yield by giving a number of concessions. Now you can depend upon it, that when you come to change your regular tariff from time to time, you will have to go over to Washington and consult with those men, and they will tell you plainly that they will withdraw from this reciprocity agreement unless you allow them certain privileges for their manufactured goods.

In a few weeks' time I believe the destiny of Canada will be fixed; we will either decide to be masters of our own future, or we will enter a path which can only lead to annexation. In 1866 Canada set her face towards welding together the British Empire. During all the years since, the United States has never held out her hand to help us, but on the contrary you find her building up against us a tariff wall forty-two rails high, while our wall is only twenty-six. To-day we are asked to take the first step towards turning aside from our beaten path. For fifty years we have gone on increasing in prosperity. Canada should have an ideal, and that ideal should be to become a great nation, while at the same time remaining a daughter in her mother's house. Everything a nation needs is produced in the British Empire. Australia has the meat and the wool, Canada has the grain, the raw material and the lumber, Great Britain herself is the great manufacturing centre, and the clearing house of the world. Canada and Egypt can grow more and better cotton than the United States. Surely this is a world combination that cannot be beaten. To-day this government asks us to take the first step towards the disintegration of the empire. Does the government realize that the United States has precious few raw materials left compared with her needs? Let them go to the libraries in the United States and investigate the facts, and they will find that if the United States were compelled to use only her own pulpwood, in fifteen short years her supply of pulpwood would be consumed. Many of her coal mines and minerals have already struck rock bottom. Why is President Taft so anxious to carry out this agreement? Why is he going up and down that great country and gaining political prestige at every step? He realizes the need of prompt action on this agreement. He tells the people that it will conserve their resources, it will open up new markets for their manufactures. He says Canada is at the parting of the ways. Until the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs went to Washington, President Taft was politically a defeated man in the eyes of the people of the republic. To-day he can be elected easily on the ground that he was able to get this treaty from the hon. gentlemen; there is no question about it.

Why are the prominent men in the United States supporting this measure? Because they believe and know that they have the best of the bargain, and that it will lead to annexation. In so far as this reciprocity deal is concerned our representatives have been buncoed, and they have come back to this country with a gold brick. The premier's hands are tied with regard to this matter and the Minister of Customs has helped to tie his hands. The hon. gentleman knows full well that the hands of the Premier of Canada are tied and that he cannot change one jot or tittle of this important measure. We have the premier of this young Canada sitting in parliament with an important measure before him, his hands tied, and simply saying: In so far as I am concerned I will not be able to change any part of it, and my followers will have to vote with me. Hands tied by whom, may I ask?—tied by the American diplomats, by the Yankee diplomats, by the men who got the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs to go over there. After treating them no doubt in the most royal manner possible our representatives were invited in and finally, when the measure was placed before them, they thought it was of great advantage to Canada, no doubt, owing to their free trade ideas, and they brought it back in the shape which it is presented to the House. No use for delegates to come to Ottawa! The Liberal press says to the manufacturer: Don't you grumble about the government's position on this question or they will hit you with the British preference. That position has been taken over and over again by the Liberal press. It is the same with the transportation companies—if you squeal your stock will be hit, and the important transportation companies of this country are in a most serious position, because should they condemn this measure, as they want to condemn it, and as they believe it ought to be condemned, that report will go abroad and it will be practically impossible for them to sell the stock of their railway or transportation companies. Canadians on this question like all others, ask for a square deal, but I cannot believe that this is a square deal. This government are the servants of the people, and not their masters. Instead of their bringing this measure down and forcing it through this House in the manner in which they are trying to force it through they should have given the people time to think over the matter and consider it properly. They must feel at least that they are taking an unfair advantage of the people in this regard.

We have had a great many treaty deals. We have had bungling mismanagement of our trade relations with many countries. When this government came into power in 1896 they granted a preference of 12½ per cent to the mother land. When they granted that preference Sir Charles Tupper stood up on the floor of parliament and said distinctly and emphatically that they would have to grant the same concession to many other countries and Germany was one of those countries. But the Finance Minister said: No, we are not going to do anything of the kind. The outcome of it was that in 1898 he increased the preference to 25 per cent, and finally to 33⅓ per cent. Germany said: You are hitting below the belt, you are taking an unfair advantage of us in reference to our position as a favoured nation in our treaty relations with the mother country—and rightly so. The outcome of it was that Germany put this country under the maximum tariff. This government turned around and put German goods under the maximum tariff. Germany said that this was another slap in the face, and placed a surtax on our goods. Our government placed a surtax against German goods coming into Canada. The result was a tariff war and that tariff war was carried on year after year for twelve long years until the trade that we had with Germany which should have amounted to $50,000,000 a year had dwindled down to a paltry million or two. Who was the cause of this trouble? This government. We find these hon. gentlemen coming down last year and removing that surtax, but not placing us back in the position that we were in in 1896. Our position with the German Empire is not anything like as favourable as it was in 1896. The Minister of Customs knows full well that in regard to many of the items they are not on the minimum tariff as they were in 1896. What about the German market? Germany with 62 million of people, Germany that imports two billions worth of goods, Germany that imports a billion worth of food products and 300 millions worth of just such products as we are producing on the farm offers us one of the best markets in the world. The market of the United States is an exporting market, and I will prove to you before I sit down that instead of the United States being a great consuming market like the German Empire it is a market that is exporting large quantities of the very products that we are asked to send into the United States. On the other hand here is the German market which is the best market in the world, but one, and we are not in anything like the favourable position that we were in with regard to that market in 1896, a condition of things which was brought about by the present government. What about the Japanese Treaty? I have not time to go into this question, but the hon. gentleman knows what the outcome is of the Japanese Treaty. Then, take the French Treaty, and I ask what good has it done to us? Look up the trade and navigation returns, and find the different kinds of things we are sending into France and see what little advantage this country has derived from the French Treaty. It was brought about in a manner that must have been humiliating to the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance. We remember the boastful way in which it was given to the people of Canada in the first place, and then we remember those hon. gentlemen coming down to the House, and having to take back, for instance, the entry of cattle into the French market. As a result of the position in which these gentlemen were placed they were only able to get into that country a very small amount of goods from the Dominion of Canada in return for the splendid concessions they gave to France. What was the outcome of it? Last year the United States held the big stick over them with reference to the French Treaty and obtained large concessions the ultimate outcome of which was our friends going over to Washington and entering into the present commercial arrangements. We have now a Yankee agreement, but the Yankee agreement opens the door to many other countries as well, and when these gentlemen on the government side of the House argue in favour of this agreement as regards dairy products, like my good friend from the island, (Mr. Warburton), they want to take into consideration that last year in the month of January 5,000 boxes of butter came from Argentina into the Montreal market, and the price of butter dropped from 25 to 19 cents a pound in a few days. What about the fact that within the last ten days, in this very year, 2,000 boxes of New Zealand butter came into British Columbia? What position is our country going to be in when the door is open to all these lands to ship their dairy products in? If you investigate this question you will find that in opening our doors to these countries, as you are compelled to open them now, you are going to make of Canada a dumping ground for butter, cheese and dairy products from other countries.

Not only that, but Australian mutton will supply the western market to a very great extent. Under the most favoured nation treaty Canada will have to extend the same tariff advantages she gives to the United States to the following countries: Argentine, Austro-Hungary, Bolivia, Columbia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela, and in addition, by special arrangement with Canada, France and Germany must also share in the concessions. We are opening the markets of Canada to make them a dumping ground for the products of these countries. My good friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Warburton) spoke of the wonderful advantages the people of Canada would have in farm and dairy products by this arrangement. Does he know that we imported into Canada from the United States last year $52,597 worth of poultry, and that we exported only $3,576 worth to the United States; does he know that our imports of potatoes from the United States were valued at $213,554, and our exports to the United States $36,770. Does the hon. gentleman know that $177,577 worth, or 750,000 dozens of eggs came last year from the United States to Canada, and that we were only able to send back there 39,910 dozens valued at $12,596? Let the hon. gentleman remember these figures and perhaps he will not have such a high idea of the advantages we will receive in the matter of dairy and farm products. We would expect a large quantity of wood pulp go to the United States, but we must remember it is manufactured to some extent here, and last year 30,627 pounds came into Canada from the United States while 4,224,000 went from Canada to the United States. Of newsprint 234,000 pounds came to Canada while 1,600,000 pounds went to the United States, and the people of the United States buy it simply because they can't help themselves. Then, I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton) that the horse men of western Ontario are deathly opposed to this reciprocal arrangement, because they know it will take away from them the northwest market which is very profitable, and it will allow a class of horses to be imported into this country which should never be allowed to come here. I know my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton) is big enough and broad enough, when he knows the facts to admit that he is wrong, and to vote against this reciprocal arrangement, and I think he will be ready for that admission when I tell him that 6,604 horses came from the United States last year, and that Canada sent only 2,615 in return. Then again, gentlemen who support the government have told us of the wonderful advantage the cheese men are to have from this reciprocal arrangement. Let them remember that a couple of years ago the Dominion produced over 300,000,000 pounds of cheese, and that our exports of cheese to the mother land were valued at $25,000,000, we supplying 60 per cent of the British market. Let them remember the danger there is to our trade in that market from this reciprocal arrangement, and then perhaps they will not have such a high opinion of it. The Minister of Customs knows that the United States is a large exporter of dairy products—

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman remember that the dairy associations of eastern and western Ontario unanimously desired that this treaty should go into effect?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When?

Mr. PATERSON. They should know their own business.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When did they express that desire?

Mr. PATERSON. I read the report of their meeting when I was in Washington.

Mr. BLAIN. So do the fruit men know what is wanted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They did not know then the position their industry will be placed in. This agreement was not before them.

Mr. PATERSON. They wanted what they have got.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am satisfied the Minister of Customs is making a statement which is wide of the mark. I have no doubt that when these men investigate this question and see the loose cheese and the cheap salt butter coming into Canada and filling the market they will realize that their industry has been injured. You can depend upon it that the bacon hog industry in Canada will be ruined by the bacon products of Illinois and the hog-raising states, and depend upon it Mr. Canadian Farmer that if you allow cheap United States cheese to come into Canada and be shipped out to England as Canadian this reciprocity arrangement will be an expensive luxury for you. I believe it will be found that the salt butter, flabby pork, and cheap cheese of the United States will be entered into Canada by thousands of tons and shipped to the British market as a Canadian product, thus depreciating the reputation of our Canadian goods.

Mr. PATERSON. Do not scold them too much ; they did not have the benefit of your advice before they pronounced themselves.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No, nor the ministers brainless agreement to look at. While the farmers of Canada are looking for a market in the States, the States will be stealing the splendid position which Canadian produce holds in the British market. We find last year that 215,681 pounds of cheese came into Canada from the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. Did biscuits come with that cheese?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No, the Minister of Customs as a biscuit manufacturer would look after that. As one hon. gentleman said the other day, he sat tight on the biscuit box as his colleague sat tight on the coal scuttle. Canada was able to get only 163,000 pounds of cheese, or $27,000 worth into the United States. Of timber of all kinds $4,156,000 came into Canada while timber of all kinds went into the United States to the extent of $22,000,000. But remember that these men paid the duty. You can depend upon it that when that duty is wiped out as far as the farm products are concerned, the cheaper products will come in here in greater quantities. While the world's market fixes the price, the purchaser in other countries has to pay the duty and you must remember this fact that Liverpool and London are the world's markets. We have created new markets, we have established them at a very great expense, and now we are asked to revolutionize all our trade arrangements. Let us develop these markets and perfect our transportation and cold storage systems to get our goods to the markets of the world in proper and safe condition, and depend upon it the price we will receive will be in advance of what we get on the other side of the line. The British market is easier of access to-day than the United States market was fifty years ago. If our tariff needs arranging we can surely do it ourselves without the Yankee. Think of the humiliated position in which Canada is placed to-day, Canada with an area greater than the United States including Alaska, almost as large as Europe, eighteen times as large as France, eighteen times as large as Germany, thirty times the size of the United Kingdom, thirty-three times the size of Italy; Canada whose farm crop in 1910 amounted to $507,000,000, her mineral production to $90,000,000, her timber cut to $62,000,000, her fisheries to $30,000,000, her manufacturing output to over $900,000,000, and who borrowed last year over $200,000,000 from the mother country. Is this not a heritage to be proud of? Is the credit of Canada not worthy of consideration in this question? To my mind that is one of the most serious facts in regard to the whole question. You can depend upon it that the British investor is looking to-day to the position that Canada is taking in regard to this important question. Who has built up the great railroads of this country? The British people have invested in Canada to-day over $1,800,000,000 and yet——

Mr. PATERSON. What for?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Let the hon. gentleman go into the bond market, let him take our railways, our transportation facilities, let him go on west into Winnipeg and see the magnificent blocks of buildings and the street railways in that city. Who are getting the bonds, who are buying the bonds from the Finance Minister of this country to build the Grand Trunk Pacific and increase the debt of this country?

Mr. PATERSON. Who is getting the interest?

Mr ARMSTRONG. Who is paying the interest, that is all right. But you must have a higher rate of interest if you are going on with your reciprocity deal because you will interfere with these transportation companies, with these great cities in the west; and instead of them building up and becoming the great manufacturing centres, you will have the people of the west fixing their eyes on the city of Chicago or New York and doing their trading in that direction, because you can depend on it if our wheat and cattle and other farm products go to Chicago these cars are not coming back empty. These cars will come back filled with manufactured products to supply the people of our great west and these supplies will not come over the Canadian railroads. The Minister of Customs knows that he can go on to Regina and will find that the bonds of the street railway there are held in the old land. In Calgary practically the whole city is owned by Britons and run largely by them. Whose money is it that is building up Vancouver? Is it United States money that is building up these great enterprises in our western cities? No, it is the money of the mother land. Come to Toronto, Montreal, Quebec or Halifax, and you will find British capital invested everywhere.

Prominent men of the United States have already distinctly and emphatically said that this step is in the direction of annexation and no other. They are entering into it with that consideration in view apparently and I have heard some men go so far to say that the Minister of Customs and even the Minister of Finance had some vague messages of this kind put up to them while they were in the United States. But let me tell the Minister of Customs that as far as British capital is concerned, there is great agitation about this important question. British capitalists have invested in our railways and financial institutions and undertakings to an enormous extent.

We also find that in the last few years 225 American firms have invested $320,000,000 in Canada. Does the Minister of Customs expect that these gentlemen are going to continue to invest in the Dominion of Canada if you are taking steps towards free trade? Where is the manufacturer who would leave a market of 90,000,000 people for a market of 7,000,000 and expect to improve his position unless the seven millions market was protected for him? The Minister of Customs knows that and by this Bill he has given a serious setback to the bringing in of American capital for investment in the Dominion of Canada. If the manufacturer established on this side he would live in fear of the 90,000,000 market being taken away from him. So the only hope of permanence for this arrangement lies in political union. Do the people of Canada want it? They do not. The United States has a tariff of 42 per cent against us, while we have one of 26 per cent against them. Let them lower their tariff so that it conforms with our own before they start to talk of trade arrangements. When the United States abrogated the reciprocity treaty Sir John Macdonald enunciated his policy, that policy which to-day gives us the home market for 80 per cent on our products. That national policy is still the trade policy of Canada, it has been the policy for the last fifteen years and the Minister of Customs knows full well that were it not for that policy the splendid prosperity and advancement that we have had in this Dominion would not have been brought about by anything that the present government have undertaken. The free trade Liberal in Canada, it is true, has been told that the tariff has been revised downwards, but the men who make such statements know better and the Minister knows better. $33,000,000 of the goods of our country go free into the United States and $104,000,000 of goods from the United States come free in to the Dominion, and yet the United States are said to be giving us a square deal The Americans were convinced that they would have to make a change in their tariff and to make it downward. A dying congress gave them the opportunity. They offered to open up negotiations with this government and this government, which had been in power fifteen years and was pretty near the jumping off place, joined with the United States government, which was in the same position, for the purpose of keeping the two in power. Our government said: We must do something to draw the people's attention away from the graft and the corruption which has been rampant in this country during the past fifteen years and from our abortive naval policy. On the other side President Taft was practically a defeated man before he made this reciprocity agreement, but now he is able to go boasting throughout that country of having the advantage over Canada and there can be no doubt that he will be re-elected on this measure.

Mr. PATERSON. What about us?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Let me tell the Minister of Customs that when the people of Canada come to thoroughly understand the workings of this scheme, they will never forgive the government for having put it into execution. The government are making themselves servants to the men at Washington. They are taking away our right to making our own tariff. Let the Minister of Customs listen to the utterances of some of the prominent men of his own party. Why did he not listen to the Hon. G. W. Ross who said that reciprocity would be the ruin of Canadian industry? Had I the time I could quote statement after statement by prominent Liberals against this agreement. Take again the position assumed by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) with regard to this deal, and also that of Senator McMullen. Go to your banks throughout the Dominion, and I understand there is only one general manager of a bank in the whole country who is in favour of this proposition. The others are distinctly and emphatically opposed to it.

The motto 'Leave well enough alone' has been quoted here to-day, and it is one well worth keeping in mind. The United States are the most aggressive competitors we have, and yet we are entering into a pact with them. We have had gentlemen from the west say: Let us sell in Chicago and New York. But what then would be the use of our building the Hudson Bay railway at a cost of $50,000,000 or the Georgian Bay canal at a cost of $100,000,000 or the new Welland canal, or the Grand Trunk Pacific? Why should we pledge the credit of the people to the extent of over $300,000,000 to build that great transcontinental railway, if the producers in our great west are going to send their products to Chicago and New York? What is the good of our improving our transportation facilities east and west, or of our building the Hudson Bay railway if we are to deal with Chicago and New York?

Mr. PATERSON. But the leader of the opposition wants the Hudson Bay railway built at once.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If you will alter this reciprocity deal we can assure you that as far as we on this side are concerned, we are ready and willing to build the Hudson Bay railway under government control and management.

Mr. PATERSON. Read his speech.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Our Canadian ports will be side-tracked. Let us see what has been our expenditure on railways up to 1910. The federal government has expended $427,000,000; the provincial governments, $36,000,000; the municipalities, $18,000,000. Or the total cash expenditure taken out of the public treasury since 1878 and invested in railways is nearly $500,000,000. But that is not all. The federal and provincial governments have besides guaranteed bonds for railway construction in Canada to the extent of $27,000,000 more. In addition the various governments' federal and provincial, have granted in aid of railway construction no less than 55,000,000 acres of the public domain.

Then there is no permanency to this arrangement. The Finance Minister said it was not a binding agreement, and if after reasonable trial it was found unsatisfactory we could change it. But if you pass this agreement and have it in force even for only a short space of time, you will do untold injury to our people. Our financial institutions do not want it; our transcontinental railways do not want it. If this deal goes through our great transcontinental railway will be but a sink hole for the wealth of our country. Our trade and shipping will be done by the Yankees because the cars and boats which carry the wheat south will not come back empty. We were a happy and contented people before this tariff matter developed, our cities were alive with prosperity, but to-day Canadians and the Canadian press are appealing to the premier to stay these arrangements. They are appealing to him to restore confidence in our industries, to restore confidence in the old land from which we borrow money in large quantities, to restore confidence in the money market, to restore confidence in our railways and transportation lines. Canadian enterprises and corporations must borrow abroad. They do not borrow from the United States. You are injuring the credit of the loan companies and financial institutions of Canada. The insurance companies take the same position. Railways and transportation companies declare, as far as they dare without prejudicing their stock against it.

Our policy should be closer trade relations between Canada and the whole empire, because the 450,000,000 people in the British Empire are the greatest consumers of our natural products. We have the best granary in the empire, and it is to be taken away and handed over to the Americans. Our trade will go through American instead of Canadian ports. By drawing nearer to the United States, Canada will set her foot on the road to separation from Great Britain.

Let us look for a few minutes at our trade from 1856 to 1866 under the old reciprocity treaty. I have here the figures, showing Canada's trade from 1856 to 1866, under the old reciprocity arrangement. Canada's total imports in 1854 amounted to $40,529,325. These dropped in 1858 to $29,078,527. Canada's total exports in 1854 amounted to $21,249,308. In 1858 they amounted to $22,029,565. In 1865, the year before the abrogation of the treaty, Canada's aggregate exports were $39,607,919 and her total imports amounted to $44,620,469. Two years after the abrogation of the treaty, in 1868, Canada's exports were $44,000,000, and her imports, $57,000,000; in two years an increase of $5,000,000 in her exports and of $18,000,000 in our foreign trade. During the life of the treaty we sacrificed our St. Lawrence ports and route. Shipments to and from Great Britain were sent and received by Oswego, Buffalo, and New York. The exports from Montreal and Quebec fell 33 per cent in one year. And what are the figures to-day? Our exports amounted in 1910 to $301,358,529, and our imports to $391,852,692. Why not leave well enough alone. The hon. member for South Wellington said that this would open the door of the United States to our trade in agricultural products. What does that mean? What does Mr. Hill, the head of the great Transcontinental road in the United States say, speaking of wheat?:

For the year ending December last the average price in California was 84 cents a bushel, 12 cents a bushel higher than the price in Oregon.

And he says further:

The average price for wheat per bushel, in 1909, in the North Atlantic states, was $1.12; in the South Atlantic states it was $1.17½. What made the difference between the two? Was it the tariff? But there is no tariff whatever, so you have to seek for some other cause to account for the difference. The average value per bushel on the farm, in 1910, for Iowa, was 72 cents; for Missouri, 78 cents; for Tennessee, 90 cents; for Alabama, $1.02; for Oklahoma, 73 cents; for Arkansas, 85 cents; for Oregon, 72 cents; for California, 84 cents; for North Carolina, $1.01; for South Carolina, $1.14. Now will some one explain that great difference in price? It is not due to the tariff.

These are statements by one of the prominent railway men of the United States, which go to show that when hon. gentlemen opposite state that opening the door of United States trade, will increase the value of our wheat, they do not allow for these differences in price in different sections of the States. You can depend upon it, that when that door is opened, we shall be placed in a very different position from what hon. gentlemen opposite would like us to believe.

Consider, for a moment, the exports of the United States in different kinds of animal and agricultural produce. In 1909, the United States exported $18,000,000 worth of cattle. And yet we find men from the Northwest who will tell you of the wonderful advantages to be gained by getting into that market. If they will only look at the statistical year book of the United States, they will find that the United States itself is an exporter of cattle. Of horses, the United States exported in 1909, $3,386,617 worth. The total value of animals exported from the United States in that year was $22,645,438. I wonder if the Minister of Customs saw these figures before he entered into that arrangement at Washington? I venture to say he did not take these into consideration. Here is a statement of the breadstuffs exported from the United States in 1909:

UNITED STATES BREADSTUFFS, EXPORTS, 1909.

Barley	$ 4,672,166
Oats	804,759
Corn	25,194,466
Rye	1,049,809
Wheat, bushels 66,923,244 valued at	68,094,447
Wheat flour, brls. 10,521,161 valued at	51,157,366
Total breadstuffs	159,929,221

If the Americans could use our wheat for home consumption, that would be a redeeming feature of this arrangement. But they do not need it. And when men talk of receiving a wonderful addition to wheat prices, they will find that the Liverpool and London markets regulate the prices of these products.

Now, let us look at some other exports of the United States:

UNITED STATES MEAT AND DAIRY EXPORTS, 1909.

	Valued at.
Eggs, 5,207,151 doz	$ 1,199,522
Butter, 5,981,365 lbs	1,268,210
Cheese, 6,822,842 lbs	857,091
Condensed milk	1,375,104
Lard, U.S.	52,712,569
Pork, pickled	4,599,431
Ham and shoulders, cured	23,526,307
Bacon, U.S.	25,920,490
Beef, fresh	12,698,594
Beef, salted and pickled	3,438,048
Total meat and dairy products in 1909	$166,521,949

In view of these figures, what about the butter industry in Canada ? Did the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), take into consideration the fact that the United States exported nearly 6,000,000 pounds, valued at about a million and a quarter of dollars ? Surely, that should have been taken into consideration.

Mr. PATERSON. It was, by the dairy associations that passed resolutions in favour of the arrangement.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. minister seems worried about what the dairy associations say. I think he will find, when these associations take this matter into full consideration, there will be a different story. And here are the figures of the fruit exports:

UNITED STATES FRUIT AND NUTS EXPORTS, 1909.

	Value.
Apples, dried, 33,474,634 lbs..	$ 2,339,936
Apples, green, 896,279 barrels..	2,782,007
Total exports, fruit and nuts..	$16,568,080

Yet, the minister is trying to make the fruit men believe that their industry will not be hurt by this arrangement.

UNITED STATES SEED EXPORTS, 1909.

Clover seed..	$1,706,780
Flax seed and linseed..	1,092,539
Timothy seed	1,009,557
Total seeds..	$5,256,623

Then our good friend from the island told us the advantage it would be to the fish industry of the eastern provinces. If he will consult the statistical year book of the United States he will find that $6,000,000 worth of fish were exported from the United States to other countries; so there may not be all the advantage to his island that he expects. What is the position of the meat packing industry? If this Bill passes, the pork packing and dead meat industries will be practically ruined, the meat trust will be in the saddle, and the Minister of Customs knows it. The farmer, in the long run, will not be benefited. Let me read to the hon. gentleman a statement in regard to the meat trusts of the United States:

The United States public pays the six big packing concerns of Chicago the colossal sum of $945,000,000 a year for meat. The net profits of these concerns which are being prosecuted by the government as a monopoly in restraint of trade, amounts to $25,000,000 a year. Such is the light thrown on the present high cost of living, as seen in the enormous profits made this year by the big beef barons.

Of the gross annual business of the packers the following is from authoritative sources:—

Armour & Co..	$275,000,000
Swift & Co..	260,000,000
Morris & Co..	125,000,000
National Packing Co..	100,000,000
Suizberger & Sons..	100,000,000
Cudahy & Co..	85,000,000
Total..	$945,000,000

The net profits are as follows:—

Armour & Co..	$ 9,808,305 69
Swift & Co..	8,000,000 00
Morris & Co..	2,171,339 00
Suizberger & Sons..	1,600,000 00
Cudahy & Co..	1,700,000 00

HOW FIGURES WERE GOT.

For years the profits of the packers were known only to themselves and the public had no way of ascertaining whether the profits were unduly large. Since the packers, to raise money to extend their business, began to offer bonds and other securities for sale to the public, they have been compelled by rules of stock exchanges, in which the securities are listed, to make an annual statement of assets and liabilities. Swift & Co. have made statements for several years, but the Armour and Morris Companies only began last year to give the public a bookkeeping view of the packing business.

BETTER THAN GOLD MINE.

The Armours have a surplus capital investment of $74,000,000 which represents their gigantic profits of past years. Morris & Co., show a profit around 50 per cent annually, last year 69 per cent being earned on the stock. Boasting of their vast business recently, President Suizberger said the packing business was one of unusual stability, the profits being rarely subject to wide fluctuations. In declaring the annual business of his house to be $100,000,000 annually, he said it was exceeded only by the gross earnings of two railroads, the Pennsylvania and Southern Pacific.

In face of these facts, is it not reasonable to expect that when you open the door of the United States to the products of Canada you are opening the door to the Yankee trusts to come in and to swallow up the stores we have in this country? Is it any wonder that the Minister of Customs is visited by delegations of meat packers and exporters begging him not to open that door? But in spite of that, we find him ready and willing to do it. What about the flour milling industry? In Ontario we have over 300 flour mills, and they are all opposed to this agreement. They believe it will, to a large extent, transfer the milling industry to the United States. There is no question that it will transfer the large mills to the United States. Take into consideration the fact that a mill grinding 5,000 barrels of flour a day, and with flour going into the United States at 50 cents a barrel duty and free wheat from Canada, that mill, by moving over the line, would make $2.500 a day. The milling industry will, therefore, be transferred largely to the United States. In the western provinces the people will not long buy from a market to which they sell nothing. The United States will run that business. They will buy our wheat for high grade flour, and take our market for low grades. The American miller will have a better market for his offals. Did the minister take that into consideration? Thousands of carloads of offal from the mills are distributed throughout the province of Ontario, a splendid food for animals on the farms, largely from the fact that they are able to get this offal from the mills grinding grain from the northwest country. What do you find to-day? Some of the men in the west boasting because that offal will be fed in the United States, and the United States will be placed in a better position in that regard than the Canadian farmer by feeding their cattle on the coarse grains and offal from mills. What about our manufacturing industries? Food prices will be raised to the working men through the trusts and the corporations that will control the food of the people who consume them. The reduction on manufactured articles is an important one to many of these industries; thus it will stop the American manufacturers from locating in Canada to a great extent. You must remember that labour in the United States is, on the whole, much cheaper than Canada, on the whole. In the city of New York to-day you will find 50,000 men crying for bread. In the city of Pittsburg you will find 30,000 men working at $1.25 a day, wages that our working men would not care to accept. We place the making of our tariff in the hands of the American Congress. Take the salt industry. The minister has had salt deputations waiting on him, and they have said to him: You are wiping our industry out of existence by these tariff regulations. How do you do it? The salt industry in Sarnia last year consumed over $6,000 worth of coal, on which they have to pay duty. They have to pay a duty on the bags coming in, and in many instances on machinery and the products that they use to manufacture salt. What about the cattle industry? The United States is exporting $18,000,000 worth of cattle, and with their cheap food coming over from Canada, what chance would our farmers have of competing?

What about the butter industry? I told the minister of the large amount of butter coming into the Dominion from New Zealand and other countries, lowering the price of our product. Cold storage and the transportation of these products will be demoralized. It is my privilege to be president of one of the largest butter factories in the Dominion of Canada. Last year, if we had made all the cream into butter that we received, we would have made over 350,000 pounds of creamery butter. But we only made 185,000 pounds, because, during a portion of the year, we shipped the cream to the other side and got a good price for it. But that good price only continued for a small portion of the year, and we found that we could make more money for the farmers by making that 185,000 pounds in our own factories. You can depend upon it that the butter industry of the Dominion of Canada will be seriously interfered with if this arrangement goes into effect.

You will find the salt and cheap butters of the United States coming into Canada, and filling our market and supplying it to a very great extent. Oleomargarine and the process butters of the United States have full sway in that country, and there is no doubt that if this government will allow all sorts of cheap butters in the Dominion of Canada they are going to undermine the great butter industry of this country. If you undermine it here you undermine it in the markets of the world, because our butter sells for a good deal more than United States butter on the British market. Our cheese and dairy products command a higher price than United States exports of these same products in the markets of the world. Take the fish industry of our great lakes; the Americans own to-day the great fishing boats and Canadians will continue to eat the small fish, pike and whatever is left as we have in the past, and our choice fish will go to feed the Yankees. The Canadian bacon hog has gained a record which it has taken years to bring up to the market standard will disappear and this arrangement will leave the market open for the American animal. There are few constituencies in the older provinces that are not directly interested in these industries. Take my own riding; you have seriously interfered with two salt industries, two wagon works, six flour mills, ten cheese factories, twenty miles of fruit land along the south short of Lake Huron, six evaporator works, two canneries, besides many other industries. Cheese and butter factories were built up under British connection. The government assisted them by cold storage and transportation to the extent of something like $600,000 or $700,000. We stand higher in the British market than the Americans in these products. The vegetable industry pays a duty on its coal, glass, fertilizers, implements, &c., and it is asked to compete with the man outside who has all these things at his disposal free. There have been millions invested in this vegetable industry all over Canada. In fruit and vegetables it is always harder for a northern country to compete with the south. American fruit will arrive several weeks before ours is ripe and by the time the Canadian fruit is ready the consumer has tired of that certain fruit and will wish some other kind that the United States will supply; so, the Canadian farmer will walk at the tail end and get the glut prices for the fruit if he can sell it at all. With regard to early vegetables the same condition obtains. In Ontario there are 57,000 acres given up to the growing of vegetables, 250,000 acres to fruit and 500,000 in the whole Dominion. It requires years to develop a fruit farm. Fruit men are developing our natural resources just the same as any other line of industry and the industry is one which is launched on the sea of doubt. Fruit men are compelled to pay tribute to every other industry. Our western trade will be demoralized if we cannot ship into that country. From the Niagara district in 1904 a sample car was sent. It was followed in 1905 by 25 cars, in 1906 by 264 cars, sent from one shipping point, and in 1910 by 600 cars. It is expected that 1,000 cars will represent the shipment of fruit this year to that western country. For every dollar that United States people spend on Canadian fruit we spend $22 on theirs. There is an investment of $150,000,000 in the fruit industry of Canada, and there are 30,000,000 bearing trees. It takes from eight to ten years to get returns and ten acres of orchard will employ as much labour as one hundred acres of wheat. Even with the present duty the United States have made a dumping ground of our markets. The fruit growing industry is a great natural asset, it gives a large amount of traffic to the railroads and consumes the product of box, barrel and basket factories besides supplying canneries, cold storage plants, &c. The prices that the fruit men receive for their products depend upon the time they can be marketed. You will turn the fruit men over to the American trusts to handle their goods and you can depend upon it that in so far as the consumers in Canada are concerned they will not get cheaper fruits. Canada imported from the United States last year $4,634,268 worth of fruits of which $3,428,722 were free. I would like to place a few statistics with regard to this fruit industry on 'Hansard' because I come from a district that is developing into a most important fruit producing country. At the little town of Forest 55,000 trees are sold to be planted this coming spring. At another place they will plant about 30,000 trees, a large number of them peach trees. This is rapidly developing into a fruit district, from a farming district, and remembering the position in which it is to-day you cannot help but feel that the government have dealt most unjustly with the fruit industry up in that country. When you consider that there are 50,000 acres of fruit land in that district alone you cannot but realize that the government have taken a most unfair advantage of the fruit men located there.

Let me examine for a moment the international trade as it applies to the fiscal year of 1909-10 in both countries. There was imported into Canada an amount of fresh fruit, not including those already on the free list, such as bananas, oranges, &c., made up as follows:

Peaches (duty 1c. per lb.), 200 cars (12 tons)	155,139
Grapes (2c. per lb.), 267,000 baskets (81 lbs.)	112,218
Plums (½c. per lb.), 198,587 baskets (201 lbs.)	158,756
Pears, apricots, quinces (averaging ½c. lb.), 247,000 baskets (20 lbs.)..	170,346
Cherries (2c. per lb.), 31,860 cases (10 lbs.)	40,376
Cranberries (25 p.c.), 40,854 bushels.	91,754
Berries (2c. per lb.), 2,503,594 lbs...	210,796
Other fruits	4,309
Total	$1,205,546

As to the importations into the United States, the returns are not itemized so fully, but for general purposes the comparison will be found sufficiently clear:

Apples (duty 75c. per barrel), 14,800	$ 29,323
Grapes	2,800
All other fruits..	200,653
Total..	$232,776

The United States fruit-grower then sends into the markets of this country, under present conditions, from five to six times the amount that the Canadian grower sends into his markets. What will be the effect of the abolition of the duties? Undoubtedly a lessening of the producer's prices in these markets.

Let us look at this question from the farming standpoint. Shipping hay from the farmers' standpoint is a suicidal policy. We need our hay to feed our own cattle and we should sell them on the hoof. Cheap feed will go to the south. You would enrich the United States farmers by reciprocity and cheap feed for their cattle. The United States lose made moist cheese and their high coloured salt butter would go to England as Canadian butter. The sheep industry, the cheese industry, the butter industry, our cattle industry have been declining under the present Minister of Agriculture and the hog industry as well. The production of grain per acre has also been declining year after year. Our Minister of Agriculture is wrong on this question as he almost always is. He should leave our farmers to send their products from the farm not as grain, but on the hoof, We do not want to send our grain to the United States to feed their cattle but that is exactly what this agreement will do. The United States have unlimited resources; with a thrifty, intelligent application of intensive farming they can double their output.

We may expect the tariff fence to go up again any day, and we will have to look elsewhere for our markets. It has been said that trade follows the flag, but it may come about in this case, that the flag follows trade. For years Great Britain has been ready to purchase anything we had to sell, the British market was ours when no other market was open to us, and were it not that the United States government find themselves at present in an embarrassing situation they would not offer us their trade now. How soon the United States market will be closed to us nobody knows. The Finance Minister cannot give us an idea of how long we may expect it to remain open and then when we want to get back in the British market, we will find it occupied by others. It is the duty of this government to place the Canadian farmer on the same footing as the American farmer. The Minister of Customs knows well that the agricultural industry in the United States is assisted generously by the federal government and by every state government, and that millions of dollars are spent where we spend only hundreds of thousands, on experimental farms, and experimental stations, and agricultural colleges educating the American farmers to a high standard of intensive farming, while we are away behind in that work. The time has come when this government will have to take a more active interest in educating Canadian farmers along new lines of industry, when they will have to establish four times as many experimental farms as they have now, and when they will have to assist the colleges of our great west to educate newcomers in the proper cultivation of their land. Twenty million farmers in the United States have the benefit of rural free mail delivery while we have not even made an attempt worthy of being called rural free mail delivery. In telephonic communication by independent lines the American farmers have far greater advantages than ours. It is encumbent on this government to give to our Canadian farmers better transportation facilities, better cold storage, better freight rates, to remove the embargo on cattle, and to encourage by money grants, some of the local governments in the splendid work in which they are engaged in assisting the farmer. When the Liberals came to office they found a united Canada ; they found the Canadian Pacific railway from ocean to ocean, they found the Canadian Pacific railway boats plying to China and Japan, and ships trading from Canada to the West Indies and South Africa, they found the Canadian Northern, under MacKenzie & Mann, developing at a wonderful rate; they found our canals on which the Conservatives spent $80,000,000 ; they found the Ste. Marie canal and an improved water system to the Atlantic which made us independent of the States. When the Liberals came to office they found in their desks a fast Atlantic steamship contract which they threw out and they attempted to give us bottle nosed steamers and turtle back ships both of which failed. The Liberals when they came to office, found in our factories 300,000 workmen, paid $100,000,000 per annum in wages, and with an output of $600,000,000 worth of manufactured goods. The Liberals had fought the establishment of these industries and the undertaking of the great national railway. They have tried to build a railway to the Yukon between two ice-bergs, for which they offered 4,000,000 acres of land and in respect to which they afterwards had to pay MacKenzie & Mann $347,000, out of the treasury of the country. Now the Liberals propose to disrupt this happy Canadian family and to deliver to the United States our natural products. In 1776 the United States objected to taxation being levied from London and what followed is a matter of history. Canada has been independent up to the present time, but now she goes to Washington to arrange her tariff. The Liberals have given us a tariff in which there is no stability ; we have a maximum tariff and a minimum tariff, a medium tariff and a preference tariff, a French tariff and now we are to have a Yankee tariff. I trust the day will soon come when we will have a maximum and a minimum tariff, and a mutual preference between the colonies and Great Britain.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would not that interfere with the argument against New Zealand butter coming in ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman must remember that under these circumstances, we would have a preference in the British market, for our products, and that would more than compensate for the small amount of New Zealand butter that might come in. Let the hon. Minister of Railways who is interested in Transportation remember that 77,000,000 tons of freight passed down the River St. Clare last year, and let him remember what the result of this policy will be, our shipping industry will be crippled on the Atlantic ports, on the ports of the Great Lakes and on the Pacific coast. To-day Canada stands at the parting of the ways. For years we have spent our energies towards developing our markets and our tariff has been framed with that object in view, but just as everything is going along smoothly, there comes the cry: we must trade with the United States, and not with Great Britain. It is proposed to dam the trade and commerce of Canada so that it will flow through American ports and channels, break up our commerce with the old land and divert our great trade which flows east and west to north and south. There are few citizens of Canada, who are not affected adversely by this arrangement entered into by this government to sell our heritage and endanger our national existence. The Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs who made the agreement, after 14 long years of office without any apparent effort or change in the fiscal policy of the country, have at last found the opportunity to open the door to continental free trade. A tottering government in the United States has entered into an arrangement with a government tottering to its fall in Canada. I believe, Sir, that this is the first step towards the dismemberment of the British Empire. We possess a country so vast and so rich in grain producing and mineral wealth and so advantageously situated that of all the lands on the globe we offer the most favourable outlook of any nation. This land belongs not only to us, but to our children's children, and it is our duty to preserve it intact for their heritage.

We are building a nation and building it our own way and according to our ideals to-day but what of to-morrow?

Our neighbours to the south say: Come in with us, we will help you but you must build as we desire. We answer: Canada is not for sale—our laws are firm, yours are lax. Our marriage vows are sacred, yours are lax. We can control our trusts if our government will only go about it in the proper way while yours are running rampant. We were kicked out of the American market in 1866. Who will say that we cannot be kicked out in 1912? In 1867 we started a system of interprovincial trade, the development of our natural resources, the creation of home industries, and the disposal of our surplus products in the permanent market of Great Britain.

The government of that day opposed unrestricted reciprocity. They advocated national development, and opposed continentalism. They were right and time has proved it. The United States ignored us then, they are courting us to-day. In 1891 this country registered the course it would follow. This government registered its protest against reciprocity in 1897 when they came back from Washington. The power rests to-day with the United States to cancel this agreement, unrestricted reciprocity means free trade, free trade means direct taxation. Using the words of Sir John Macdonald in 1891: 'Shall we endanger our possession of the great heritage bequeathed to us by our forefathers, and submit ourselves to direct taxation, for the privilege of having our tariff fixed at Washington with a prospect of ultimately becoming a part of the American Union?

Canada is sure of her future, if she remain free, Canada has to-day a trade for her goods outside the United States, Canada has to-day a market for her goods outside the United States, Canada is independent of the United States, Canada would not be independent of United States if this treaty went into effect. Our infant industries have had a struggle and have survived without the United States tariff. In 1910 we sold the United States $100,000,000, they sold us $223,000,000. The Canadian tariff is 26 per cent; the United States tariff 42 per cent. This is a sample of Yankee fair trade. I am opposed to this arrangement because it is not consistent with the policy of conserving our natural resources. Are Winnipeg, Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal and other leading cities and towns throbbing with life and activity to be content, with the left over trade of the United States.

Quebec, Halifax and St. John cities which the Grand Trunk Pacific were to help will be sidetracked and the trade go and come through the United States. Why disrupt our general business conditions, disturb the activities of our cities, lessen the earning power of our trunk lines of railroads if we are to be a united people with common political ideals and aspirations? Let us throw out this measure.

As a people we are only emerging from childhood; let us leave well enough alone. As Canadians for Canada let us guard well the political destiny of our future.

There is no use offering amendments to the deal, any change would nullify the whole agreement. Canada by adopting this policy will bid a long farewell to her greatness, and as the handmaid of the American trusts, contribute the 51st Star to the flag which will control the continent. It is the work of little Canadians. I belong to a nation to-day that is full of hope and prospect. In a few weeks if this measure passes the future of this country will be fixed. The wealth of our forest are the heritage of our workingmen and capitalists alike.

The labour interests of our cities and towns are vitally affected. You send the raw material to United States to be finished instead of at home. Let us keep the raw products at home and employ our own men in preparing them for the market. Taft cannot wait. The United States government say 'Canada dig your ore, send it to us and we will refine and perfect it. Canada give up your raw materials, and we will finish them and export the finished product.'

If you pass this Bill you will lead us back to pre-confederation days when the eastern provinces traded with the eastern States, Ontario with New York and the western States and British Columbia traded with the States on the western coast. You have sold the salt men, meat men, the fruit men, the manufacturers, the financier, the railroad, the lake freighter, labour man and farmer. These men live in Canada, they pay taxes, they are good citizens; they pay duty on almost everything they buy. The Yankee would take your last salmon, your last stick of timber, your last barrow of ore. Trade invariably follows the line of least resistance. The American tariff has been the means of developing our exports to the mother country. It has taken years of time and much money and energy to bring this trade to its present importance.

The great forests of our western provinces are open to exploitation, the Dominion government is in control of them and should guard them. If it is a good thing for Canada to send her natural products to United States why not send our pulp wood from Ontario and Quebec.

Surely our loyal Canadian people will not allow this agreement to become law without being given a chance to vote on it. This is the thin edge of the wedge. How can we as Canadians who have received all that we possess, all that we hold so dear, insult the country from which our fathers came. Great Britain for years has purchased all we had to offer and is willing to do so yet. We had no other market a few years ago, the German market was closed the United States market was closed and who knows how soon again it will be closed. Many of our forefathers left their homes and surroundings in the United States so they might live and die under the British flag. Others have taken up arms to protect their country against the Yankee invaders. We look to Great Britain for our support, for our defence. The Canadian people are loyal to the core. Let us stand to our guns and fight this deal with every energy we possess and forever end that Yankee cry, one flag, and that the Stars and Stripes, from central America to north pole.

On Motion of Mr. Paterson, House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

DAMMING OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question with reference to the proposed Long Sault dam, and before doing so it is necessary that I should read a letter that I have received from Washington. The letter is as follows:

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Washington, February 13, 1911.

Dr. J. D. Reid, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Dr. Reid,—I am taking the liberty of writing you at length, advising you of the position I have taken in opposing the 'Long Sault Development Companies Bill,' now pending in both Houses here.

An investigation of the Bills pending in the interest of the Long Sault Development Company discloses the fact that the company is endeavouring to get legislation that will enable them to develop power south of the International boundary line entirely independent of and without the consent of the Canadian government. The original Malby Bill, introduced December 14, 1909, contained a provision that the authority thereby vested in the company would not be operative until the consent of the construction of the dams, canals and locks and other works of the proper authorities of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada was obtained. This Bill was submitted to General O. H. Ernst, the chairman of the American section of the International Waterways Commission, who has devoted about six years to the consideration of this great International waterways, for his opinion. He, with the other members of the American section, joined in the opinion that the co-operation of the two governments was essential and necessary and recommended a section to be attached to the Malby Bill, for the purpose of accomplishing that result, reading as follows:

'This Act shall not become operative until the government of the Dominion of Canada shall signify to the Secretary of State of the United States its consent to the construction of such dam and other structures; provided, that if said consent be not given within two years from the date of this Act, then this Act shall be null and void.'

Notwithstanding this proposition of the original Malby Bill and this specific recommendation of the American section of the International Waterways Commission, the Bill finally reported by the Rivers and Harbours Committee and the Bill now pending in the Senate, both being identical—entirely omits any provision requiring the consent of the Dominion of Canada. It does contain a section which provides that the Long Sault Development Company shall be subject to the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relative to boundary waters, proclaimed May 13, 1910.

An examination of the treaty discloses the interesting fact that article IV which relates to dams, is subject to approval in accordance with the provisions of article VIII. Article VIII provides that a majority of the commissioners shall have power to render a decision and further provides that in case the commission is equally divided separate reports are to be made on each side by the commission to their own agreement and in that case, the governments are to endeavour to agree. But it is obvious that if they do not agree no result is reached, the result of which is that, if dams proposed to be built by the Long Sault Development Company are not approved by a majority of the commission equally decides, that as far as the International Waterways Commission is concerned the situation of the company is not in the slightest degree changed, because the provisions of the treaty with reference to the approval of the commissioners will have been exhausted without any definite result.

The pending Bill evidently anticipated this situation, because it not only omits all provisions requiring the approval of the Dominion of Canada to the construction of the dams, but expressly provides that the company is 'authorized to construct, maintain and operate for navigation, water-power and other purposes for a period of ninety-nine years, a dam or dams in so much of the St. Lawrence river as lies south of the International boundary line between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada near Long Sault, Barnhart and Sheik Islands either independently or in connection with like works now erected or to be erected in so much of said river as lies north of said International boundary line.'

It discloses the specific and deliberate purpose of authorizing the Long Sault Development Company to build its dams south of the International boundary line without the consent or approval of the Dominion of Canada.

I strongly urge upon you to lay before parliament the above facts, and oblige,

Yours very truly,
J. WESLEY ALLISON.

I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has any further information in connection with this matter. If the facts as contained in this letter are as he understands them to be with reference to the situation at Washington, and if he has instructed Ambassador Bryce to protest against the Bill now before the United States Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have heard only a part of the statement of Mr. Allison. For my part, I do not agree at all with some of his conclusions. We have made representations to the government at Washington and the correspondence will be brought down as soon as completed.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether the treaty now being negotiated with the United States regarding Pelagic Sealing will require to be ratified by this House before it goes into operation or whether it will take effect without the concurrence or assent of this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This treaty will take effect without the concurrence or assent of this House, but it is our intention to bring down the treaty as soon as received and if parliament desires to express any opinion upon it it may do so.

SUPPLY—CORRECTION OF 'HANSARD.'

FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to call the attention of the House to an error that occurred in some of the figures I presented yesterday. In doing so I think it is right that I should say that I expect it is my own fault, because I turned my back literally, not figuratively, upon the 'Hansard' reporters when speaking. I was addressing my particular friends on this side of the House, and so I did not give the members of the 'Hansard' staff a fair opportunity of hearing what I was saying. The first is in reference to the product of Ontario farms in which I am made to say that it increased in two years $250,000,000. What I did say was that the annual product of Ontario farms now amounts to some $250,000,000. Then again there is an error in reference to the amount of American capital invested in Canada. I mentioned distinctly that there was $250,000,000 invested in Canadian industries by American manufacturers. In that connection, in the course of two or three sentences there are several errors. I will read what I said and as I have revised it now. Otherwise, as far as I have gone through the report it is satisfactory, but I have not got through it all yet. This is what I said:

Since 1868 we have doubled in population, we have enormous American industries planted in Canada representing $250,000,000, we have more than that number of millions of dollars capital wanting to come to Canada, and halted by reason of the attitude of the government at the present time. The area of Canada under cultivation is ten times what is was in 1868; banking capital is ten times what it was; deposits in the banks are nearly thirty times what they were; our railway mileage is about twelve times what it was; and the freightage is about twelve times what it was in 1868.

I hope it will not be said at any future time, if it should turn out that in the figures later on in the course of the report of my remarks yesterday there should be an error, that I adopt them because I do not refer to them now. As I have said, I have not had time to go over the whole of my speech yesterday and there may be errors later on, but these are important, and I desire to call the attention of the House to the correction.

DUTY ON FRUIT.

Mr. BURRELL. I have to-day received from Vernon, B. C., the following telegram which with permission of the House I shall read :

Vernon, B.C., Feb. 16.

Mr. Martin Burrell, M.P.,
Ottawa.

The humble petition of the ratepayers and residents of the district, municipality of Coldstream, Vernon, British Columbia. Whereas the Dominion government is about to introduce a Bill providing for reciprocity with the United States of America on certain commodities under which are included fruit. And whereas the inhabitants of the said district municipality of Coldstream are dependent entirely on the fruit industry for their subsistence and the future prosperity of the district, we your petitioners desire to lay before the House of the Dominion parliament the views of the fruit growers of this district as hereunder set forward. Opinions may and do differ as to the relative merits of protection and free trade, but there can be no difference of opinion in the point that if protection is given at all it should be given equally to all interests according to the requirements. It seems to be accepted that manufacturers are entitled to protection especially during the early years of any industry. So far as need of protection to the building up of an industry is concerned fruit growing stands in much greater need of protection than any manufactory as must be plain on the face of it to any one conversant with the conditions of this particular industry.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. gentleman reading a telegram or a petition?

Mr. BURRELL. I am reading a telegram bearing on a matter of importance.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BURRELL. I was going to read this as a petition, but there are not a sufficient number of names on it for a petition.

Mr. SPEAKER. Petitions cannot be read in the House.

Mr. BURRELL. This is not a petition inasmuch as the technical conditions have not been complied with, there being only two signatures to it. I thought it was in order to bring it up on a motion to go into supply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and cannot be discussed.

Mr. BURRELL. I am in the hands of the House, and I would like to have an opinion on it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no objection to allow the telegram being read, but the matter cannot be commented on now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think it is the intention of the hon. gentleman to discuss the matter.

Mr. BURRELL. I have no intention of discussing it ; I simply wish to read the telegram :

A manufactory can start production as soon as the plant is completed, an orchard after being laid out has to be tended for quite a number of years at a considerable outlay of capital before any return can be hoped for. The newer orchards of British Columbia planted in recent years and comprising an immense acreage are just now coming into bearing and the owners look to current conditions for marketing their fruit to advantage. No worse time as regards the fruit industry in this province could have been chosen to remove the duty on imported fruit. In ten years the fruit industry of British Columbia which is now in its infancy should be in a position to carry the battle of competition across the border having used the interval to build up its connections in the home market with the hope of the very moderate protection hitherto afforded. At the present time the home markets are mostly in the hands of the American producers who have the advantage of many years start, have organized thoroughly for the fight and have admittedly a distinct advantage over us in the cost of production. Even with the present protection it will be a long and uphill fight to get the home markets out of the hands of the Americans without it, the fight will be so long and uphill that many British Columbian producers will go under. Handicapped in this way in the home markets, our efforts to develop sufficiently to invade foreign territory are certain to fail for many years if not altogether. An enormous amount of capital has been invested in orchards in British Columbia during the past six years, the period during which the fruit industry has been strenuously promoted and the fruit growers looked to a continuance of the current conditions to enable them to realize interests in their invested capital out of which up to the present time it has been practically impossible to obtain any returns. We unanimously consider that the Dominion Houses of parliament should refuse to sanction the removal of the duty on fruit at the present time. There is no justice in sacrificing the interests of an infant industry for the benefit of a full grown industry which is in a very prosperous state under present conditions, and your petitioners are in duty bound will forever pray, &c.

JOHN KIDSON, Acting Reeve.
E. HENDERSON, Clerk.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Yesterday a question was raised which could not be disposed of with reference to my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and a statement he made in the debate on the address. His statement referred to the Public Accounts, and as it was brought up yesterday and questioned, I thought that perhaps it was worth while to take the time of the House sufficiently long to rise to a solemn question of privilege, and just simply note the statement and make a remark with reference to it. The member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in his address on November 22, said in reference to me :

He would not let the militia go out to drill; he saved several hundreds of thousands of dollars in that. He would not grant any money for the necessary repairs to public works, which from year to year go down, so that a dollar spent this year in repairs may save ten dollars next year; he saved hundreds of thousands of dollars there.

Now, this is the part I particularly refer to :

Contrary to the statute, as I maintain, he did not that year provide a sinking fund to meet the national debt, saving hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of dollars there. That is the way he squared his accounts for the election year.

Some days afterwards the member for South Wellington on November 24, had his attention called to his error in figures in reference to the trade of the country, and he corrected that error. I then rose and said :

Mr. FOSTER. While the hon. gentleman is in a correcting mood, I will call his attention to page 96 where he is reported as having said:

Contrary to the statutes, as I maintain, he——

That is, myself.

—did not that year provide a sinking fund to meet the national debt, saving hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of dollars there.

If my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) will look that up he will find that he is quite mistaken.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have no correction to make there.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Willing to let the statement go uncorrected.

Mr. GUTHRIE. So far as my knowledge goes, the statement is correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) does not follow the other side in refusing to correct even wrong statements.

I thought it was better to settle this question between the member for South Wellington and myself by getting a statement from the Finance Department, and I, therefore, put upon the Order Paper the following question :

What was the amount legally required to be invested in the sinking fund for the fiscal years 1895 and 1896 respectively, and what was the amount actually invested in each of these years?

The answer given by Mr. Paterson for the Finance Minister was:

In 1895, amount required and actually invested in sinking funds, $2,002,311.36; in 1896, amount required and actually invested in sinking funds, $2,005,287.52.

The answer of the Finance Department being of course that the amount required by the statute was so much, and that the amount invested was so much. I do not want to debate the question, but it is rather a grave charge against a Finance Minister to say that he tried to square his accounts by juggling with the sinking funds, a thing which under the statute he could not do; it would be an impossibility for him to do it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I noticed the question that was placed on the Order Paper some time in November in regard to this matter, and the reply that was given by the Finance Department. I thought that the matter would probably have been brought up then, and I had a memorandum in regard to it which I cannot place my hand upon at this moment. I am satisfied that the words which I used in my remarks, 'contrary to the statute', were not the appropriate words to describe what I meant. I find that the statute applies only to sinking funds on what are called guaranteed imperial loans. The sinking fund prescribed by statute is one per cent to be laid aside annually. There are other loans besides these, but I cannot give the amount of them now, nor the years, not having the memorandum. I can recollect one of them, of which the particulars were furnished in a return to this House—the loan of 1884 for $24,000,000. There was no statute, so far as I know, providing for a sinking fund on that loan; but it was the custom of the government to raise such a sinking fund. There were a great many other loans, negotiated by the late Conservative government. They finally decided for some reason best known to themselves to stop the sinking funds altogether on the new loans. They discontinued—through what I should have said instead of 'contrary to the statute', was unbusinesslike methods or some such words, which would probably have better described the situation, as the statute applied only to the loans guaranteed by the imperial government. Now, my statement, in that aspect, is not so far wrong, because I think the saving by not having a sinking fund on all the later loans made by the Conservative government was from $500,000 to $700,000 a vear. This government also did not provide a sinking fund for a long period, but latterly I believe they have provided a sinking fund with all their loans. If the matter has caused my hon. friend from North Toronto any anxiety, or if he thinks I intended to cast any reflection upon him personally, I take this opportunity of entirely disavowing any such idea or intention. I now find that there was no statute applicable to the later loans. It was a mere custom to provide sinking funds, which I think should not have been discontinued, as it certainly resulted in a great saving of money.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps I may be allowed a single word. There is a great difference between criticising a man for issuing a loan without providing for a sinking fund along with it, and criticising a Finance Minister for failing, contrary to the statutes, to invest a sinking fund, in order to cover up a deficit. There is not a single word more to be said on my part in that respect. My hon. friend would have occupied a more frank position if he had at once said that he was wrong in that, and had done me an injustice. I have not been bothering about it, but such things are just as well not said. Now he is wrong again. He acknowledges that the Finance Minister whom he supports issued loans without putting on sinking funds. Has he been, 'contrary to the statutes', juggling with funds and thereby covering up his deficits? My hon. friend then made the statement that the Finance Minister had since taken wiser advice and that with his later loans had sinking funds. He is mistaken there also.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have been so informed by the Finance Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I may advise my hon. friend to get good information before he makes charges of that kind. They are not nice.

Mr. FIELDING. Does that rule work the other way too?

Mr. FOSTER. I think my right hon. friend would be well advised if he would not try to buoy up and boost his supporters in bad practices.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. Several days ago we laid on the table a small sheet of supplementary estimates for the current year, containing several items of urgency to which I now call the attention of the committee. The items are four in number—one for Agriculture and Statistics, one for Immigration, one for the Naval Service, and one for the Department of Labour.

Exhibitions—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. FISHER. I am asking for this vote because of our participation in a Festival of Empire which is to be held at the Crystal Palace in London during the coming summer in connection with the coronation ceremonies and the colonial conference. This festival originated last year, and it was expected to have been held last year, but not nearly on so large a scale, as is now proposed. In consequence, however, of the death of His Majesty King Edward it was stopped and was postponed until this year. In view of the coronation and the colonial conference, the gentlemen in charge of this exhibition and festival have greatly enlarged their plans, and are proposing a most imposing and splendid celebration at the historic grounds of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham. We were invited to take part in it, and I went over the matter in London last spring, and formed a plan for a worthy representation of Canada at such an important event. When I returned home I submitted it to my colleagues, and they approved of the suggestion that Canada could hardly be absent from such a festival, and that if we took part in it we should do so in a manner worthy of the country and worthy of the occasion. My exhibition commissioner has been proceeding with the plans. We had a little money to spend from the vote for this year, but we are now being dunned for obligations which we have incurred, and I am therefore obliged to ask for a prompt passage of this item to meet the obligations which we have already incurred or which will be incurred before the first of April next, when next year's appropriation will be available.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the minister propose to expend part of this money for which obligations have not already been incurred? The minister is now asking $100,000 and some money has already been expended.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, not voted specifically for this exhibition, but out of the general vote for exhibitions for the year.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is using money voted for exhibitions for this Festival of Empire?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it comes under the head of exhibitions. The vote of $120,000 is for exhibitions generally. Some of the money left over after we had done most of the work connected with the Brussels exhibition has been utilized for the preliminary work in connection with this exhibition. There are still some outstanding accounts in connection with the Brussels exhibition which have not been paid, as those rendering the accounts did not furnish sufficient information about them. Usually the accounts for different exhibitions overlap to a certain extent. As a matter of fact, during the current fiscal year we still have some accounts to pay for the Seattle exhibition of 1909-10.

Mr. FOSTER. What has the Brussels exhibition cost so far?

Mr. FISHER. About $125,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Apparently the minister has used money for another purpose than that for which it was voted, and has given the explanation that the government decided to take some of this money for another purpose other than that for which it was voted. If this policy were pursued there would be no limitation to the minister's power to spend money.

Mr. FISHER. This vote for exhibitions is like a vote for running the Intercolonial railway or anything of that kind. We mention exhibitions generally, and if there is a new exhibition after the vote is given we hold ourselves free, if in the judgment of the government it is thought best to take part in it, to utilize to a certain extent that money.

Mr. BLAIN. Was this exhibition in contemplation when the vote was taken last year?

Mr. FISHER. The Festival of Empire of last year was under consideration and was provided for by this parliament. It was not proceeded with on account of the death of the King but was postponed until this coming summer. It is now being gone on with on a much larger scale. We intended taking part in the Festival of Empire last year and as a matter of fact spent $4,000 or $5,000 in preliminary work on it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If I understand it correctly, this $100,000 for which the minister is asking has all been spent, or will be spent, between now and March 31? How does it come that, though we voted $120,000 last session, he has exceeded that, and has spent $100,000 more?

Mr. FISHER. The money has not been spent. We have not had it to spend. We have incurred obligations, I confess. The festival of last year was a small affair as compared with what is now proposed. We have been invited to take part in an affair planned on a much more magnificent scale at the time of the coronation of His Majesty the King, and the holding of the Colonial Conference. We feel it necessary that Canada should be worthily represented, and so have arranged to spend this $100,000 before the end of this fiscal year. This was not contemplated when the vote of $120,000 was asked last session.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How does the minister intend to spend $100,000 between now and the 31st March?

Mr. FISHER. I have here full details. As I explained to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), these accounts of exhibitions lap over one year upon another, because we are not able to close up the accounts within the year. The following items are included in this proposed expenditure of $100,000:

On account of freight charges from Seattle to Brussels	$12,166.67
On account of London Exhibition, 1911	5,420.22
On account of Edinburgh & Seattle.	60.00
Balance due T. Meadows on account of additional freight charges ..	12,167.67
Humphreys & Co., building at Brussels	6,746.17
Due on account sale of building at Shepherds Bush	661.50
New specimens for ensuing exhibition, London	9,000.00
Account due on London building for ensuing exhibition	24,333.33
Amount due to be paid on account of building, due 1st April	14.600.00
Various exhibits of agricultural products	3,500.00
Contributions to the general expenses of the Festival of Empire in view of rental of land which we usually pay at exhibitions	9,733.33
Total..	$98,394.89

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Practically every dollar of this $100,000 has been spent?

Mr. FISHER. As a matter of fact, none of it has been spent, for we have not the money.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). But debts have been contracted, so that practically the money has been spent before parliament has voted it. Might as well have no parliament and let the ministers spend what money they like, for they spend it and then call on their supporters to vote it.

Mr. FISHER. I explained all that. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that, if we had waited until this session opened to decide whether we should take part in this exhibition, it would be a physical impossibility to get ready for it. We had to assume the responsibility, and we ask parliament to support us in that action. I venture to think that hon. gentlemen opposite who have seen the work done on the part of Canada at these various exhibitions will uphold us in deciding to take part in this festival at the heart of the empire on the coming auspicious occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. It would help us more if you would tell us what you are going to do.

Mr. FISHER. That is what I am trying to do. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) interrupting, I shall be glad to go on. But my explanations are too satisfactory, ap-.ny explanations are too satisfactory, apparently—hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to hear them. I want to go on with the explanation—

Mr. FOSTER. Get at it.

Mr. FISHER. I am not going to let hon. gentlemen opposite have the pleasure of asking for explanations without giving them the answer. Does my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) wish me to read again these figures that I have given?

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that these were mere details of boxing and housing. But what is it going to be? Tell us so that we may know where we are.

Mr. FISHER. The Festival of Empire is an organization started on a comparatively small scale last year under the auspices of a committee authorized by the King and under the patronage of the British government, and with Lord Plymouth as chairman. That organization planned a festival of empire for last year, in which the overseas dominions were invited to participate. They planned a great pageant of the whole empire under the management of Mr. Lascelles, well known in Canada as the successful director of the pageants in the Tercentenary at Quebec. While the arrangements otherwise were on a comparatively moderate scale, the pageant was a large one. This year they invited us to undertake exhibition work on a much larger scale, to do what we have done at many international exhibitions—put up a special Canadian building and display in it a thoroughly representative exhibit of Canada's resources, industries and institutions. That we propose to do. We intend to have a building on the grounds at the Crystal Palace, to take the form of a facsimile of these parliament buildings, to show to the world the parliament buildings of Canada as a part of our exhibit.

Mr. FOSTER. And have the members there?

Mr. FISHER. Those who will visit the place will be made very welcome, and I think it will be well that many of them should be there. I am glad to know that many members on the other side of the House who have seen Canada's exhibits at different foreign exhibitions have, in unstinted measure, praised the work done by the exhibition commissioner of Canada and his staff, and have recognized the value to the country of these exhibits of our progress and industry.

Mr. FOSTER. You are getting away off. Confine yourself to the Crystal Palace.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) need not be so captious. We know how jocular and facetious he can be, but I think that he might give serious attention to this important part of the country's business.

Mr. FOSTER. That's what we want—

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman wants it, then let him allow it. He is the first man in the House to resent any interruption himself when he is on his feet, and he should have a little more regard for the rights of others. Hon. members are aware that the exhibit at the Crystal Palace will be visited by hundreds and thousands, probably millions, of people, and that if Canada is going to be worthily represented, we must have a complete assortment of her products, her industries, and something to show her progress. This cannot be done without a considerable expenditure of money. I am willing to take the full responsibility of asking parliament to grant this money, because I have seen year after year the beneficial effects of these exhibits abroad, and am sure that the money will be expended to the advantage of Canada. I understand from my hon. friend that the other self-governing dominions are taking part, and are contributing; I hope so, because I am confident that Canada will be able to shine in comparison with any other part of the empire. That is one reason why after a good deal of hesitation and consultation with my exhibition commissioner, I authorized him to proceed to build, as nearly as possible, a facsimile of this central parliamentary block. We are all proud of our parliament buildings, as an example of Canadian architecture and construction. I think that everybody who comes to Ottawa is charmed with the appearance, with the magnificence and with the site of our parliament buildings here; and consequently, strangers who visit that festival in the Crystal Palace, will admire the Canadian building. The building will be so arranged as to contain the exhibits inside, these exhibits will be a modification and augmentation of what we have had at Brussels and other places, and will be renewed so as to be entirely up to date. We will transfer a considerable part of the exhibits from Brussels to the Crystal Palace, and others will be added.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the minister to say that the proposed building will be a facsimile of the parliament buildings. In that case, does he propose to have a restaurant installed in it, with all the other conveniences ?

Mr. FISHER. No, we never have a restaurant in our exhibition buildings; we leave that to other contractors, and people who get privileges to establish restaurants on the ground.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Will there be a bar ?

Mr. FISHER. No bar there. I may inform hon. gentlemen opposite, that if they go there to find a bar, they will have to go elsewhere. The grounds are laid out so as to form practically a circle occupied by the buildings. The grounds are very extensive, covering, I think, some seventy or eighty acres of land. They are to be laid out so that the buildings of the different parts of the empire will form a circle; and the proposition is to have a railroad track going around these grounds, and touching at the buildings of the different parts of the empire.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that be a mono rail ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister is going to make the illusion perfect with a facsimile of this building, I would suggest that he make a mound or something like our parliament hill, and have some streams of water on each side to represent the rivers. It would not cost much, and it would make the illusion perfect.

Mr. FISHER. We have not the control of the grounds of the Crystal Palace; we have a certain space given us on which to erect our building, but the general commission will manage the laying out of the grounds in general; we have no control, outside of what is given to us. But I can assure the House that the building will be so placed as to give a good impression of its grandeur, and its architectural beauty. In connection with the festival, there will be a great pageant of the history of the empire, for which there is provision on the grounds of the Crystal Palace, and which is to be managed by Mr. Frank Lascelles, who managed the Tercentenary celebration of Quebec, and who has just returned from South Africa, where he managed the celebration in connection with the opening of the South African parliament. The whole exhibition, as I have said, is under the control of this commission of which Lord Plymouth is chairman, and is under the immediate patronage of the King and of the imperial government. I believe the occasion is one in which Canada ought to be well represented, and I think that from the skill and well known capacity of the exhibition commissioner for Canada, who has now had twelve years experience in this work, he will be able to make a good representation of Canada and one which will be a splendid advertisement for this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Usually when we vote money, the object is stated and the money is specifically voted for that purpose. In this case, before there is comparatively any money voted, the money has been expended, or contractd for, although it could not be regarded as a case of emergency requiring a Governor General's warrant. Yet the minister goes on and expends money or contracts to expend the money and commits the country to obligations, and then comes and asks parliament to vote the money. I could not understand at first the meaning of the term 'Festival of Empire,' or what was the nature of this great pageant about which the minister has spoken, whether it was a kind of mardi gras procession, or a great feast. We do not know whether the greater part of this money will be consumed in pageantry, and very little in the exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. We make no payment for pageantry at all, except one payment of £2,000 to the general expenses of the whole festival, and which takes the place of a rental for the grounds. We get the ground free for our building, and we pay £2,000 for general expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. That is $10,000 for the grounds. Now, there is another feature of this case, it is something which must have been foreseen, therefore it should have been provided for, by a vote, instead of by Governor Generals warrants. The minister admits in his own explanation that it was not a thing that could not be foreseen. Therefore, it ought to have been provided for, and if it was not provided for I respectfully submit that there was no justification for spending the money and therefore radically wrong. The minister says that we have from year to year voted money for exhibitions. This, according to his own showing, is not an exhibition ; it is a festival, a pageant, a show, but I presume that a few exhibition attachments have been tacked on to give it the semblance of an exhibition, so as to provide some justification for what would otherwise have been an improper and illegal expenditure of public money without that money having been voted. I am afraid that somebody is going to have a hippodrome as we have had them at Quebec, in South Africa, and in London. I am afraid this is a kind of a hippodrome business that the minister is trying to get up, and that he is going to carry on under the name of an exhibition. We are asked to vote $100,000, but whether it is worth the money I am not prepared to say. I would be better prepared to say if I saw it but I presume I will not have an opportunity of seeing it. It seems to me that we will get very little return from this expenditure of this money ; we keep a number of people who would otherwise be unemployed by the government, and who would, therefore, be obliged to resort to some other device for making a living. I do not think we are justified in going so far. We give these things high sounding names to make it appear that they are different from what they are. Is this a festival or is it not? If it is a festival it is not an exhibition. It is a mere pageant, it is not an exhibition, where there is likely to be a large number of people gathered together, but it is going to be given the semblance of an exhibition in order that we shall have some justification for the expenditure of this money. I think it is rather that than the usual expenditure of public money upon an exhibition where people will be benefited by what they see, and where their attention will be likely to be attracted to Canada and her industries. If I am correct we have an exhibition going in London all the time at which there are exhibits from all portions of the empire. Do we require a half a dozen of them, or is this an addition to that, or is it something different from it? It must be something different or otherwise we would hear something about it. But it seems to be another device to keep an army of the unemployed spending the country's money, making displays, or exhibitions or festivals, or gatherings, or pageants, or something of that kind for which we must pay a lot of money, and from which expenditure it is very questionable whether we are getting anything like an adequate return. It seems to me that we are not very likely to get a proper return for this $100,000.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman at all. I am sorry that he has not attended any of these foreign exhibitions. He tells me that he has not, and I can, therefore, forgive to a certain extent what he says. I have heard most appreciative words with reference to these exhibitions uttered by many people, but not by Liberals alone, but by many foreigners and by several hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I remember that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) spoke in most glowing terms of the use to Canada of these foreign exhibitions.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like the minister to make a distinction. This is not a foreign exhibition, but a festival of empire. How many have been held, and what beneficial result has come from them?

Mr. FISHER. The work we propose doing there is exactly the same as that in connection with the Franco-British exhibition three years ago in London, the exhibition in Brussels last year, Milan a few years ago, and Dublin a few years before that. The work will be exactly the same. The festival of empire includes an exhibition from all the different parts of the empire, the wonderful resources, progress and industries of the empire. It is true that in addition to that there is this pageant that I spoke of. My hon. friend seems to think that is something in the nature of a circus. I do not know whether he saw the pageant at the Quebec Tercentenary, or if he is familiar with the work of Mr. Frank Lascelles the originator of these pageants whose reputation is world-wide. A pageant of this character is as far removed from the ordinary wandering show as the work of a great artist from that of an ordinary person, who knows nothing about such things. This will be an exhibition of the marvellous history of this empire and an incitement to the people of to-day to remember and to honour the achievements of their forefathers as represented in a most magnificent way, not by a lot of hirelings but by volunteers, many of them from the best families in the empire. I have had letters from people in Canada asking the privilege of taking part in the pageant at the Crystal Palace. Last year there were many applications when the question was first brought forward for the privilege of taking part in it, and I am informed that, as a matter of fact, there are some volunteers taking part in that pageant who are going to the expense of supplying their own dresses and everything connected with their appearance as well as spending their time in going there without our hiring or engaging a single individual. That was the case at the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec. I think I am within the mark when I say that there was not a hireling who appeared in that celebration at all ; so that my hon. friend in that respect is entirely wrong in his estimate of what is going to occur. He asks if this pageant is a festival or an exhibition. It is both combined in one, and it is to be upon the grounds of the Crystal Palace which is one of the best resorts in the neighbourhood of London ; celebrated the world over as a place of resort for people who wish to enjoy and instruct themselves and where we will have an opportunity of making a representation of the great historical events of our empire and will at the same time be able to present the fruits of the labours, industry, progress and enterprise of the to-day people of the empire. This is an opportunity that I do not think the people of Canada would like Canada to omit being present at, and I think we would be derelict in our duty if we did not see that Canada took advantage of it. Above all my hon. friend who has a high opinion of the value of our position in the empire, and of our connection without it—

Mr. BLAIN. Who will represent Canada? Will my hon. friend tell me if he is going over next summer himself?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think I shall, as a matter of fact. But it is a matter of no consequence because I will not appear in the pageant. I would not appear particularly in any capacity if I did go over. The people who will represent Canada in the pageant will be the people who volunteer to do so. My hon. friend may if he chooses, and I have no doubt that they will be very happy to put him in. Those who will represent Canada in the exhibition will be the exhibition staff and they will be so busy with their work that they will not have time to take part in the pageant. As for this not being an unforseen expense ; the pageant of empire was intended to have taken place last year and a vote was taken, but in consequence of the death of the King it was postponed, and the idea being renewed when parliament prorogued we had to decide whether we would take part in it or not without consulting parliament, because had we waited for parliament it would be too late to make the necessary preparations.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the money voted?

Mr. FISHER. Last session.

Mr. SPROULE. That would not lapse before the end of this year.

Mr. FISHER. The proposed pageant last year was to be a comparatively very small affair and although the King expressed his approval it was not under his patronage. On this occasion, in view of the coronation and the colonial conference the scope of the coming pageant has been enormously increased and the vote of last year would nowhere nearly meet the necessary expenditure. We took $5,000 or $6,000 last year and spent $3,000, while now I am asking for $100,000 and I expect that the total cost will be between $250,000 and $300,000. Last year the intention was to have Canada have a little court in the Crystal Palace building, but this year we intend to erect a great building on the grounds and to show our products as we have been in the habit of doing at great international exhibitions. I venture to say that never before has there been a better opportunity for advertising to the people of the world, and especially to our fellow subjects of the empire, the glories and the greatness and the progress of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister stated he would be glad if my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) would volunteer for the festival of empire. What class would he put him in? I hope not amongst the mules, because he is a chronic kicker from the minister's standpoint.

Mr. FISHER. I do not believe there will be any western bronchos in it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the minister does not send my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) there, he will be missing the best Canada produces. I notice amongst the expenditures for this festival of empire last year a charge of $40 for a map made by Joseph Aube, Ottawa, and $1.50 for a book, The Cradle of New France, written by A. G. Doughty. What is the explanation?

Mr. FISHER. I think the map was a map of Canada, and the book is a well known book by Dr. A. G. Doughty the Dominion archivist.

Mr. BLAIN. How will you select the products of Canada for exhibition purposes?

Mr. FISHER. The staff buys them as best they can.

Mr. BLAIN. What do they consist of?

Mr. FISHER. Everything we can find in Canada. We have a permanent exhibit of minerals which we are adding to all the time, and which was one of the most magnificent exhibits at Brussels last summer. We have a timber exhibit, agricultural exhibits, fruit exhibits, fish and animal exhibits.

Mr. LALOR. Does the minister think that an expenditure for an exhibition of the agricultural products of Canada will be necessary in England, if we are to secure the American market for all our Canadian produce?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt there will be an immense number of Americans at that exhibition, and they will be able to come and buy.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will our old friend William Hutchison be the commissioner?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am somewhat surprised to see how Mr. Hutchison figures in the Auditor General's Report, and it will be of great interest to the farmers of Canada to see how their money is being wasted in that direction. William Hutchison was commissioner at the Brussels exhibition at a salary of $250 per month for one part of the term and $375 per month for the other part. In addition he got a living allowance for 144 days at $12 a day, and in addition his fare and transportation and sundry expenses and cab hire and everything else was paid by the people of Canada. Mr. Hutchison was also at the Alaskan Yukon Pacific exhibition, and there he got a salary of $250 a month and a living allowance of $20 a day for 214 days in addition to his travelling expenses, cost of sleepers, transfers, and everything else. That is a most ridiculous allowance to give to an official who is paid a salary of $250 a month. I notice that for his services at the Pacific Yukon exhibition he was paid up to the 31st of October, 1909, and on the 1st of November his salary commenced at the Brussels exhibition at $250 a month and just a week later, certainly before he had time to get to Brussels from Seattle his salary was raised to $375 per month. I would like the minister to explain how he juggled in order to get our friend William Hutchison from Seattle to Brussels inside of a week.

Mr. FISHER. The exhibition branch and its work go on all the year around. It is true, when one exhibition closes another may not be officially opened for a few months; but the work of the commissioner and of his staff is just as arduous outside of exhibition times as in exhibition times —in fact, more so, for at such times they have to take down, pack and unpack all their exhibits, and see to their shipment. As a matter of fact, I know that Mr.

Hutchison hurried from Seattle, spent only two or three days here to talk over matters, and had only a few days in Brussels to get ready for the opening of the exhibition there. I am glad to know that he was so successful that the Canadian pavilion was the only one ready on the day of the official opening. My hon. friend speaks of Mr. Hutchison's pay. I can only say that he is inadequately paid for the service he has done for the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Hutchison seems to have a perfect genius for exhibition work. He has been permanent exhibition commissioner for Canada for over eleven years, and has attended eleven international exhibitions, and he has been honoured for the work he has done by the authorities of most of these exhibitions. He has been praised, and his work has been copied by commissioners from other countries. I had an evidence of that last spring in Brussels, where I spent a few days just after the opening of the exhibition. I met a number of the foreign commissioners. I met, also, the members of the English commission, one and all of them praised without stint the work of the Canadian commissioner and the results of his work in exhibiting Canadian products, telling me that they had derived the greatest assistance possible in regard to showing their own products from the advice which Mr. Hutchison had been able to give them. With regard to Mr. Hutchison's pay, I would say that for a number of years we paid him at the rate of $3,000 a year, and during the exhibition time we made him an allowance of $20 a day. This sounds a little high, but any one who knows exhibition work knows that there is hardly a day during the exhibition when he does not have visitors whom he has to entertain more or less.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is to cover his wine account?

Mr. FISHER. It is to cover all his expenses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Surely my hon. friend does not approve of a wine account?

Mr. FISHER. It includes whatever Mr. Hutchison has to get to entertain his guests. Mr. Hutchison, however, felt a little hurt at some criticisms which were made in the House last year, or the year before, and he asked me to reduce his allowance. I increased his salary, but decreased his allowance, with the result that he got several hundred dollars a year less than he had been getting before. I did that at his own request, not to save the country any money, and not to make any change from my own point of view, as I did not think that Mr. Hutchison was getting too much for the services he was rendering, or the expenses to which he was put.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. LALOR. I desire to express my appreciation of Mr. Hutchison's services to Canada. I have had the pleasure of attending some of the exhibitions under his management, and I have found him most courteous, obliging and painstaking towards Canadian visitors. I have had more than one experience of that kind. I believe Mr. Hutchison is a most efficient officer, and I do not believe he is overpaid. I think Canada may well be proud of Mr. Hutchison as her head official at these exhibitions. Any Canadian who visits them, whoever he may be, will receive from him most gentlemanly and courteous treatment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not by any means finding fault with the amount paid to Mr. Hutchison. I am finding fault with the method of bookkeeping. I do not think it is right that the onus of spending $20 a day of the people's money should be laid upon a public servant. If he is not paid properly, I think it is up to the department to give him an adequate recompense for the work he is doing. To the average farmer $20 a day for spending money appears to be a very large amount. Twenty cents a day, in my country, is considered a fair amount.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. What amuses me is the hon. minister's description of his employees. Whether a man is a horticulturist, a botanist, an exhibition commissioner, or anything else, he is the one man par excellence for that particular job. You would imagine they were all heaven-born and government appointed.

Mr. FISHER. No, Canadian-born.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister describes every selection he has made in the superlative degree. Every one of his officials seems to have combined within him all the excellencies that it is possible to combine within the same amount of human hide. Each one seems to have been born for his particular position, whether to manage a festival of empire, an exhibition, a piggery, or a chicken hatchery. I am glad to know that they are all such excellent men, but the results, I am afraid, do not always prove it. When you pay four men $5,000 a year for looking after a few poultry, and get a return of only a few hundred dollars, there is something wrong either with the man or with the hens. I notice that all these things are very much like the widow's cruse of oil, or the expenditure on the Transcontinental railway: they look small at first, but they seem to grow as time goes on. We are never given, at the beginning, any approximate idea of what the whole expenditure is going to be. I think it would be well, when these matters are submitted to parliament, that we should be given some approximate idea of what they are going to cost, and what we are likely to receive in return, before we commit ourselves to an expenditure, the end of which we do not know. I am not saying anything about Mr. Hutchison; I have not attended any of the exhibitions at which he was Canadian commissioner. He may be the best man in the world for that position, or he may be a commonplace man. Eleven years ago Mr. Hutchison was employed for one exhibition, but the department have been able to keep him engaged at other exhibitions each succeeding year up to the present. We are always told that the expense of these exhibiting at these exhibitions will be slight, and the results will be something wonderful, but as time goes on they do not pan out exactly as they were represented to us.

Mr. FISHER. I have to take exception to my hon. friend's statement. I said a year and a half ago when the Brussels exhibition was started that it would cost between $125,000 and $150,000. It is costing between $125,000 and $130,000. I said this afternoon that the Festival of Empire would cost at least $250,000. I venture to say it will not cost more than $275,000.

Mr. SPROULE. When the minister got the first appropriation he represented that it was a comparatively small affair and would not be very expensive.

Mr. FISHER. I have explained repeatedly the reason for the change, which is not only justifiable but necessary. I think it will be money well expended and my hon. friends and gentlemen with him would be amongst the first to criticise the government if they did not take part in the Festival.

Mr. SPROULE. Oh, no, I will exonerate the minister.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the agricultural exhibits be similar to those at the Alaska-Yukon exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. To a great extent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it intended to send many back-benchers supporting the government over to these exhibitions?

Mr. FISHER. We never send members of parliament to exhibitions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see in the accounts of last year eight cases of dummies at $8.64. I was wondering if these would be supporters of the government.

Mr. FISHER. We do not have any dummies on this side. Silence is sometimes golden.

Mr. BRADBURY. I had the pleasure of attending the Brussels exhibition and I was surprised when I heard the statement of the salary paid to Col. Hutchison, $300 a month. I do not believe he is sufficiently paid for the work he is doing. The $20 a day, I understand, is for entertaining.

Mr. FISHER. At Brussels he was getting only $12 a day.

Mr. BRADBURY. It was not enough. I want to be fair. I believe that Mr. Hutchison is doing good work and the Canadian exhibit was a credit to him. I think there should be a fair allowance made to any man occupying such a position, and the country would be well advised in paying him a reasonable salary. I do not consider $300 or $400 a month is a fair salary for the work he is accomplishing; I would be willing to see him get $500 a month. Something should be done so that we would know exactly what was being spent in connection with the work. The minister might fix a salary which would include all other expenditures. I spent two days at the exhibition and received from Col. Hutchison all the courtesy that any one could expect. He was very kind in showing me around the exhibition and he extended to me the courtesy which he would extend to any man who went to that exhibition.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not agree with the hon. member who has just spoken. Col. Hutchison, in addition to his salary, gets $20 a day, so he is drawing about $10,000 a year for salary and expenses. He is getting more than the minister presiding over his department. He must be worth more than the minister himself.

Mr. FISHER. Possibly he is.

Mr REID (Grenville). Then he should take your position and you should take his, because the best man should be Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. A man may be a first-class commissioner and not be able to do something else. Col. Hutchison is commissioner for exhibitions, and he is unexcelled.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When he went to the old country he had never been in charge of an exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. He had been in charge of the Central Canada Exhibition for years.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Running a small fair is nothing compared with running these exhibitions. There is no doubt the position was given to Mr. Hutchison because he was a defeated member of this House.

Mr. FISHER. There is every doubt and that is not the fact. I had the appointing of Mr. Hutchison, and he was appointed to go to Buffalo because he has had experience in exhibition work and had been the manager of the Central Canada exhibition for years and had brought it up from being a very small and unimportant exhibition to be a very good one; it was that which attracted my attention to him. He was not a defeated candidate because he did not run and was not defeated; but his having been in the House before had nothing whatever to do with his appointment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The running of a small exhibition in Ottawa does not seem to me to be any great qualification for the position of manager of these large exhibitions.

Mr. FISHER. His success shows that it was.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister could have got men who had had experience

Mr. FISHER. Not so good as Col. Hutchison.

Mr. REID (Grenville) He could have got them for $10,000 a year to pay their expenses and entertain more than Col. Hutchison does. As to Col. Hutchison being a defeated candidate, I may have been wrong in that statement, but at the same time he was willing and did try to get the convention in Ottawa and could not.

Mr. FISHER. Again my hon. friend was wrong because he refused to go before the convention.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Because he knew he could not win. The minister knows that his being in Ottawa and a former member of the House supporting the government was the reason for his appointment.

Mr. FISHER. That is not the reason he got the appointment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister can have his opinion; I have mine.

Mr. FISHER. I know, but my hon. friend does not know.

Mr. REID. (Grenville). No doubt. these exhibitions have done good. But what has the minister done for the farmer ? Take, for instance, the farmers of eastern Ontario, in which district I live, the minister has an experimental farm here at Ottawa, but no person sees it, except a few who go out on excursions; no information is sent throughout the country, as to what is going on there. I have tried, and I cannot find any way in which the minister is helping the farmers of eastern Ontario. He tells us: See the way dairying in eastern Ontario has improved. Why, that is the work of the local government, which sends its instructors and inspectors to the cheese factories and creameries. The minister does not spend as much in a year in promoting the interests of the farmers as does the Department of Agriculture of the single province of Ontario. It is true, about a million is spent every year through the minister's department, but it goes for quarantine, for exhibitions and other things that do not help the farmer. It seems to me the minister has lost his influence in the cabinet. When this government took office, the expenditure of the Militia Department and the Agriculture Department were about equal; now, the Minister of Militia gets appropriations of about $15 for every $1 that the Minister of Agriculture gets for agriculture. Which of these, then, has influence in the government ? The Minister of Militia, of course.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, he has.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, it is time that the farmers should demand that a man should be put at the head of this department, who will have influence and use it in the interest of agriculture. The first thing the minister (Mr. Fisher), knows, the Minister of Labour will be getting larger appropriations for the Labour Department than he gets for the Agriculture Department. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), smiles because since he came in, he has been able to grab more for his department, than the Minister of Agriculture, by ten to one. There is no department that has stood still so long as that of the Minister of Agriculture, and I want the farmers from the Atlantic to the Pacific to realize that. The minister gets a little more money for exhibitions and to pay men like Colonel Hutchison and other supporters of the government, money spent where the Public Accounts Committee cannot show up the graft that goes on because the people are on the other side of the Atlantic. So far as eastern Ontario is concerned, the minister has not done anything for the farmers for ten years. There are many ways in which he could help them, instead of lying idle.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville), wants the farmers to know about these things. I am afraid he will have to bring further proof than his assertions about them.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If the minister will refer to page D-12 of the Auditor General's Report, for 1909-10, under the heading Alaska-Yukon exhibition, he will find this item:

Fournier, Fournier Limited, St. Hyacinthe, P.Q.; Red Line Cocktails, 7 cases at $8, $56.

I desire an explanation of this item. Were these for the minister's own use, or were they for Mr. Hutchison to distribute among his friends ? Why these should be bought at St. Hyacinthe and exported to the Pacific coast, I do not understand, unless it was, that the minister wanted to have really choice stuff for his own use.

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I cannot answer that question, I did not use the cocktails, and did not know they were there. Why cocktails should have been bought at St. Hyacinthe, I do not know; I was not aware that it was a particularly favoured locality in that respect. I am afraid I am not a judge of cocktails myself.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). But the minister bought 7 cases at $8 a case.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that this was an exhibit, bought and sent to the Alaska-Yukon exhibition, to show what the province of Quebec could produce in these things.

Mr. BEAUPARLANT. I understand that these were goods bought in St. Hyacinthe for exhibition somewhere. They were bought for that purpose, because they were good goods; that is all. It is a compliment for the establishment for which I thank the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). These supplementary estimates, I believe, are what they are called. The item before us is for something that has been overlooked in the original estimates. There has been an oversight in connection with a certain other exhibition. I refer to the Selkirk Centennial. The minister (Mr. Fisher), will, no doubt, thank me for calling his attention to it. Over a year ago, a delegation of important business men from Winnipeg, came here during the sitting of the House, and I believe the Minister of Agriculture received that delegation, and there were with him the Prime Minister and some other members of the government. The delegates explained their resources and put their case before the government. And I believe that the Prime Minister told them that they had not resources enough, that they must dig up some more money, and when they had done so, he would see them again. They went back. They say that they complied with his requisition, and carried out his suggestion to the letter. Since that, they have had, I believe, two or three interviews with the government, and I think the minister (Mr. Fisher), himself knows the situation. We have had some statements from the press and from some of the delegations; whether they were authorized to make those statements or not, I do not know. But the people would hear with interest the position in which the matter now stands, and they would be very much pleased, I know, to see in subsequent estimates a substantial sum to carry out that exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart, Winnipeg), understands that these supplementary estimates are for the current year, but the exhibition of which he speaks, is for the future. I think my hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has stated to the House that the matter was one which was still under advisement and the government were not prepared yet to give a definite answer. I cannot say more at this time.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). As to these being estimates of the current year, I might remind the minister that, this being a world's exhibition, those concerned cannot wait until that year; they must have at least three years for preparation.

Mr. STAPLES. Do I understand from the minister (Mr. Fisher) that he is going to use his influence, whatever little help it may be, towards getting the necessary money to carry on that exhibition, or bring it about? I believe that if the Minister of Agriculture would get at his fellow members in the cabinet and work a little more diligently, he would be able to accomplish something. But since I came here I have observed that the Minister of Agriculture does not ring in and try to get the money that is due to the agriculturists of this country, in order that they may show to the world at large what Canada can do in that line. There is no doubt that our agriculturists have the greatest claim for government assistance of any class or profession in Canada, but judging from the figures in the estimates year after year, they are not getting their just portion of the expenditure. I am not criticising what other departments may spend, but I am criticising that minister for not expending on agriculture what we are entitled to. The farmers pay the greatest portion of the taxation, as is well known, and that is a consideration that should have more weight with the government than it appears to have. It is all right to put the blame on the Prime Minister. But this world's fair at Winnipeg is practically an agricultural undertaking. There is no doubt that it would do more for that western country in showing the world what it is capable of, and what all Canada is capable of, than anything else the minister could think of. But unless he rings in his fellow-members and tells them that he is going to give the agriculturists what they are entitled to, I do not see much hope of his succeeding. Now, I want the minister to make a promise that he will do his utmost towards getting such an appropriation for the Winnipeg centennial, as the delegates from that city have asked for, in order that they may proceed with the great undertaking. If the minister will promise to use his efforts with his colleagues, perhaps he will be able to accomplish something.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman does not encourage me to do that, because he says I have no influence, and that I do not succeed with my colleagues.

Mr. STAPLES. I want you to rehabilitate yourself.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say that I have no doubt whatever that an expenditure of this kind on a world's exhibition in Winnipeg, or at some other central place in Canada, in the near future, would do this country a great deal of good.

Mr. STAPLES. Does not the minister think that Winnipeg is the best place?

Mr. FISHER. I am not sure, but I am inclined to think that Winnipeg would be the best place for such an exhibition, and I have no doubt that Canada could make such a display there as would attract a great deal of attention throughout the world.

Mr. BEST. It is not my intention to find any fault with this amount, but I want to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that the agriculturists of Canada are getting this year less than one million dollars from the government, and even one-tenth of that is going to this festival in England. I am not saying that is wrong, but I do say that it is a disgrace to Canada that less than one million dollars is expended for the benefit of this, the greatest industry in Canada. I do not think the farmers have a right to more than their share, nor do I think that they have been asking too much, but no man can honestly stand up in this House and say that the farmers are asking too much, when the fact is that less than one million dollars are expended on the agricultural industry, on the other hand. Now, I believe that if the minister tried to do his duty he could get more for this industry than he has been getting. It was a common saying among the farmers' delegation which came to Ottawa from the west, that this Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa was a disgrace to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I heard many people say just the reverse.

Mr. BEST. I want to tell the minister, from a farmer's standpoint, that if the people in the county I represent could not produce better stock than he has on that farm, I would be ashamed of them. That is a fact, and I am not trying to make little of the farm, either. But I can honestly tell the minister that farmer after farmer that goes to that agricultural college says that it is a disgrace to this Dominion. I have seen for myself, as hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House have seen. and know well, that there are pigs kept there, I suppose for breeding purposes, who were born blind, and they are kept there as a disgrace to this Dominion. Now, the minister says that some people tell him that the dairy was well kept there. Now, the minister's own report of 1910 shows that the milk products of his dairy herd only amounted to 6,115 pounds. Now, there are herds in this Dominion that produce over 10,000 pounds. I say that this experimental farm, which should be the greatest and the best kept in the Dominion, makes a very poor showing, after it has been in existence for a quarter of a century, and still has a dairy herd the production of which is only a little more than half that of other herds in this Dominion. Now, I say that these are facts that cannot be got over. I find them in the minister's own report. I do not think it becomes a country such as Canada to occupy that position. I have been at that experimental farm myself twice during the last session, and once this session, and I say that the beef cattle there—I presume they are beef cattle, we know that there are only two purposes for which cattle are kept, one for dairy and the other for beef—and the beef cattle at the experimental farm, with the exception of a few that were imported, are a disgrace to any farm, let alone the experimental farm.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend refer to the shorthorn herds there?

Mr. BEST. All, except a few herds of shorthorns that were imported.

Mr. FISHER. There are no beef cattle kept there as beef cattle for breeding purposes at all; it is entirely a dairy herd.

Mr. BEST. Then the dairy herd is not paying very well.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I shall have to interfere with this discussion, as the item before the committee is for an entirely different subject, that for an exhibition. If other branches of the Agricultural Department are to be opened up for discussion, it would take the committee too far away from the item before the chair.

Mr. BEST. I am quite willing to submit to your ruling. I simply wanted to say that when so large an amount of money is being taken out of the country, the farmers ought to receive more consideration, and I am of the opinion that part of that money should be spent at home for the benefit of the farmers. I really think that the farmers of this country are not getting their share.

Mr. FISHER. Probably before the end of the session, I shall bring down some more agricultural estimates, and I hope that hon. gentlemen will show their good faith in what they are saying now and support them.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I certainly shall.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). With reference to the Winnipeg exhibition, I would call the minister's attention to the fact that it is very important, not that they should get this money at once, but that they should know the decision of the government at the earliest date possible because there would be an excellent opportunity at this London pageant of advertising the date.

Mr. FISHER. I sympathize with what my hon. friend says, and I shall press upon the Prime Minister the decision of the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reply to what was said by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) the minister made the statement that he would have to show that the farmers of Canada were not getting what they should get from his department. I would like to quote from the Auditor General's Report, to show what is being expended by my hon. friend's department for the farmers of Canada.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I take it from the announcement the hon. gentleman makes that he proposes to enter generally upon a discussion of the expenditure of the Department. This item is particularly for exhibitions. I do not wish to draw the line too stringently, yet, from the announcement he makes himself, I think it my duty to point out that unless the argument can be applied to exhibitions somewhat rapidly I will have to rule against him.

Mr. SPROULE. May I most respectfully submit that when we are dealing with an item of expenditure for exhibitions which is under control of the Department of Agriculture we are within our rights in showing whether there is too much or too little spent in that department, and whether the department is well or properly conducted. I take it that the exhibits which the minister is going to make will be of grain and fruit which will be supplied largely from the farm. That brings us back to the farm, and we might very well discuss the question as to whether the produce that he is likely to supply from there will be likely to constitute a creditable exhibit or not. It seems that the connection is very close between them, and I think it is very hard to draw a line and say you shall not refer to the general question of agriculture in dealing with this item or any other item in connection with the expenditure of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that the line of relevancy is not easily drawn and that cognate subjects may be referred to. It depends very largely upon whether the argument touching cognate matters is applied in any way to this item of exhibitions. The hon. gentleman to whom I spoke a moment ago desired to discuss a particular question without any reference to exhibitions, and if the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) desires to speak in the same way I shall have to rule against him. But if his argument can be applied to exhibitions, then an argument arising out of the Department of Agriculture would be applicable. It was his announcement of what he proposed to do that suggested to me that I should warn him that the argument should be applied to exhibitions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have always recognized the merits of the Chairman, but did not know until now that he was a mind reader. I was going to bring forward these facts to show that it would be more desirable if the Department of Agriculture should make expenditures, that were more pertinent to agriculture and to suggest that the money would bring better returns to the farmers than by expending it in the way suggested by this vote.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that such an argument would be applicable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, taking it up from the point at which I was interrupted, I was going to point out, in answer to the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture, that this department was not spending as much money on the agricultural industry as it should spend. Looking up the Auditor General's Report of this year I see that a total expenditure of something less than a million and a half is charged to the Department of Agriculture. A million and a half, were it spent for the farmers and in the interest of the farmers in propagating good seed and in educating them in proper and up to date methods of farming, would be a very respectable sum, but in looking over the accounts I find that a very small proportion of it is spent in that way. For instance, the first two items I find are salaries and contingencies which amount to $351,000 and odd. I see that other items are charged up that should be in no way chargeable to that department as they have very little to do with the farmers, such as exhibitions, archives and patents, amounting to $221,000. Then, there are fumigation $4,900, Seed Control Act, $48,200, health of animals, meat and canned foods, $110,000 making a total of $735,535 that cannot be justly charged to the farmers. Take Archives for instance; what interest have the farmers of Canada in the Archives? Then there is the Patent Record, $17,000. What interest is that to the farmers? Statistical Year Book, $6,000; Census and Statistics $11,000—I suppose we will have a much larger sum charged up to the farmers for that this year—Gold and Silver Marking Act $2,000; how does that affect the farmers? Then we have Canadian exhibits and the Swine Industry Commission $8,242. While I approve of money being spent in that way for the farmers as an educative process, I think it would be better, judging by this very identical Auditor General's Report, to have an inquiry into that matter of the proper breeding of swine by certain men who are really competent because I see that after the Swine Commissioners were appointed a certain gentleman had to be appointed to further educate them in their duties, a man named C. C. Meyer of Ottawa, who is paid $100 for his services in instructing the commissioners.

Then, there is an expenditure of thousands of dollars for reindeer in the Canadian Labrador, which I cannot see are of much importance to the farmers of Canada. As a matter of fact out of the $1,492,000, considerably less than $500,000 has been expended for the benefit of the farmers. While I appreciate the value of the work in connection with exhibitions I think the money would be far better spent at home if applied to the improvement of agriculture in the northwest. The entire expenditure on agriculture in the west amounts to only a few thousand dollars on the experimental farms there. These experimental farms ought to be located in different parts of the four provinces of the west, because there we have a very big territory and an experiment that will prove useful in one locality is not applicable three or four hundred miles away under different climatic conditions, and different quality of soil. Anything the minister can do in the direction of improving agriculture in the west will have my ardent support, but when it comes to wasting money in this way I must object to it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As has been pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) not more than $383,000 of this large vote is actually expended in the interests of the farmers of Canada. That alone proves that the Minister of Agriculture is not devoting himself as he ought to the improvement and advancement of agriculture in this country. This government has now $130,000,000 a year to spend, and yet the Minister of Agriculture has not, since they came to power, been able to get the Minister of Finance to spend one dollar more in the interests of the farmers than was expended by the Conservative government when the annual revenue was only one-third of what it is to-day. It seems strange that the Minister of Militia can influence the Minister of Finance to give him ten dollars for every one dollar he gives to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) has referred to the establishment of experimental farms, and when the item for that purpose comes before the House I think he will see that I am meeting his views in that respect to a large extent. I ask for this vote because I think it is necessary, and justifiable in the interests of the farmers as well as the general interests of the country. I can assure the committee that if the $100,000 is granted it will not influence me to spend less in connection with agriculture in other directions.

Mr. BLAIN. I regard this as a very important expenditure, and I am sure that it will receive fair consideration from this side of the House. I recall a statement made in this House by the Minister of Agriculture not long ago, that he had never been refused any expenditure for the benefit of agriculture in Canada, which he had asked from parliament. My hon. friend acquiesces in that statement. Then, if there has not been enough expended in the interest of the farmers of Canada, it is because my hon. friend does not ask for more. That is the only conclusion we can come to, as he has never been refused.

Mr. FISHER. I am willing to acknowledge that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the responsibility which my hon. friend from Dauphin has pointed out must rest with the minister.

Mr. FISHER. I accept all the responsibility for that.

Mr. BLAIN. Does he think that the expenditure for agriculture is sufficient or fair, compared with the expenditure on the militia of Canada?

Mr. FISHER. I am not going to criticise the expenditures of other departments. I have been able to obtain for agriculture all the money I have asked for. Just as soon as I can see that I can expend more in the interests of agriculture, I will not hesitate to ask for it, and I believe the House will vote it, as it has done in the past.

Mr. STAPLES. Can the minister tell the committee how much the committee that undertook the work of making arrangements for the exhibition at Winnipeg has expended so far?

Mr. FISHER. I would not like to say off-hand from memory.

Mr. STAPLES. I know that they have expended thousands of dollars and have gathered many valuable statistics. Has the minister looked them over or given any attention to the information these gentlemen have placed in his hands?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Does he consider them of any material value ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Does he purpose, in case that exhibition does not go on, to remunerate those men for the expenses they have made ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not even thought of any such suggestion.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister tell me whether or not he thinks they are entitled to it ?

Mr. FISHER. I shall have to consider it very carefully.

Technical Education Commission—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. KING. This amount is required to enable the Commission on Technical Education to continue during the balance of the present fiscal year the work which it is now carrying on. At the last session of parliament $25,000 was voted towards the expenses of this commission. The commission has now been engaged for about seven months, and the appropriation made by parliament last year has been exhausted.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister explain how the money already voted has been expended ?

Mr. KING. The commission entered upon its duties about the 18th of July last, and it has held sittings in the different cities and towns of the Dominion, has visited industrial establishments and taken evidence under oath, from manufacturers, workingmen and educationalists as to the needs of the Dominion in the matter of industrial training and technical education. Up to the present time, the commission has visited 99 different localities, and has heard 1,466 witnesses. It commenced its work at the Atlantic coast and has followed a course which has taken it through the different provinces to the Pacific. The work of taking evidence in Canada will be completed with the session to be held in Ottawa next week, and then the commission will prepare an interim report summing up the findings so far as the needs of the Dominion are concerned. It will then go abroad and study the methods adopted in other countries to meet similiar needs. The members of the commission have travelled about 10,000 miles.

Mr. BLAIN. What is expected to be the total cost of this commission ?

Mr. KING. $25,000 has already been voted, $25,000 will be asked in the estimates for next year, and $10,000 is asked in this vote. I should think this would be enough to enable the commission to complete its inquiries. Something further may be necessary for the publication of the report.

Mr. BLAIN. When is it expected to be completed ?

Mr. KING. It is expected that the commission will return from abroad in the latter part of August, and I hope to have the report ready for presentation to parliament in the session to be held next fall.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do the commissioners travel together ?

Mr. KING. In the larger centres, like Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, they have sat together, but in some cases they have divided, and two or three have visited one locality and two or three another.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was there any special reason for having such a large commission ?

Mr. KING. The reasons that governed the number of the commission were that the subject was a large one, and the Dominion a large dominion, and a great many interests had to be considered. The manufacturers had made strong representations as to the need of this commission, and it was thought well to have a representative of them. Similarly the labour men had made strong representations, and it was thought advisable to have them represented. The commission does not seem to be too large, considering the nature of its work.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will agriculture be taken up at all?

Mr KING. Yes; agriculture is one of the subjects, and my hon. friend will recognize in the name of Dr. Robertson, who is chairman of the commission, one of the leading agricultural authorities in the Dominion. With Dr. Robertson on the commission as chairman, I think the hon. member may feel quite sure that the agricultural interests will be very fully inquired into.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation was the manufacturers' representative selected?

Mr. KING. The manufacturers presented their veiws to the government on the subject through Mr. Murray, secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, who had made a very complete study, up to a certain point of the subject from the manufacturers' point of view. The government felt that they could not give greater satisfaction to the manufacturers than if they chose for the commission the man whom the manufacturers had themselves chosen to present to the government the needs of such a commission. That is why Mr. Murray was chosen.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that some of the provincial legislatures are also inquiring into this question. Is there any co-operation between this government, and, say, the government of Ontario?

Mr. KING. Yes; I am happy to say there has been the most cordial co-operation. In each instance the members of the commission, in visiting a province, have called first of all upon the Prime Minister and members of the government of the province being visited and explained that the federal government, before appointing the commission, had conferred with the premiers of the several provinces, and had secured from them their express wish that the federal government should take this step and co-operate with the provinces. In each case the provincial government, Dr. Robertson informs me, has done everything in its power to assist the federal commission in getting information. In Toronto, for instance, Sir James Whitney's government had appointed Mr. Seath a commissioner to inquire into certain phases of the work. Mr. Seath intimated to the chairman of the commission that he had been instructed by his government to give to the federal government's commission the benefit of his views in advance of submitting his report to his own government, should this be desired, he of course intimated that he would prefer giving his report to his own government. I mention that to show the hearty manner in which the provincial authorities have co-operated. Prof. Robertson assures me that in every province the provincial authorities have expedited the work of the commission and have used their good offices to see that the commission got the fullest information possible.

Mr. SPROULE. What salaries do the commissioners receive?

Mr. KING. Each commissioner receives $16 a day and his necessary travelling expenses. Out of the $16 the members of the commission pay their own hotel and incidental expenses, and they do not receive any remuneration for Sundays.

Mr. BLAIN. How was the labour representative elected

Mr. KING. In a manner similar to the selection of the representative of the manufacturing interests. The Trades and Labour Congress, for a number of years past, have been asking the government to appoint this commission and on each occasion they have designated Mr. Simpson, the vice-president of the Trades and Labour Council, to present their case to the government, and, in fact, the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress at one conference suggested that Mr. Simpson should be the person appointed to represent labour in the event of the request being granted, so the government simply took the nominee of the Trades and Labour Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is Mr. Simpson's occupation?

Mr. KING. A reporter, I think, on the Toronto 'Star.' He seems to be especially well qualified for this position. He was a former vice-president of the Trades and Labour Congress, and was, as I have mentioned, nominated by that body as their representative. He was, at the time of his appointment, chairman of the Toronto Board of Education. He had been a member of a special committee on technical education of the Toronto board in 1906. He was a member of the Technical Education Commission which visited seven United States cities and recommended a curriculum for the new Toronto Technical School in 1909. He had presented the subject of technical education before the provincial government at different times.

Mr. BLAIN. Was he a candidate for parliamentary honours?

Mr. KING. No; I do not think so. I might say that so far as I know he is not a Liberal.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the members all the same?

Mr. KING. I cannot say what the politics of some of them are. The government sought to choose the best men.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume it would be one of the duties of the commission to outline a scheme by which technical schools may be established and maintained jointly with the provinces or independently of the provinces, and to suggest the curriculum of study.

Mr. KING. Yes; the commission is for the purpose of gathering information generally which will be compiled in the form of a report, and this report will then be available for distribution, and the provinces may take on this report such action as they think best. The scope of the commission would be best indicated by this communication, which the chairman of the commission has sent out in each locality visited. In each case it has been similar to the following.

Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education.

Ottawa, Ont., December 27, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to intimate to you that the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education proposes to visit places according to the itinerary outlined in the sheet which is inclosed herewith.

The commission will give particular attention to the manufacturing industries, to agriculture, to domestic occupations, to mining, to the fisheries, to the lumber interests, to the building trades, to the transportation services, as well as to the technical training required for commercial operations.

The commission will also make inquiry into, (a) the needs of existing industries in respect of labour, (b) the quality of labour which is available, and (c) the needs of such labour for industrial training and technical education.

The plan for the work of the commission at each place has ordinarily been as follows::— A local committee representing the mayor, the board of trade, the manufacturers' association, the educational institutions, the trades and labour interests, and any organization identified with training for women, makes provision for a place in which to hold the sessions of the commission. That is usually the council chamber or court house. The local committee also notifies persons who represent the various local interests and industries that they will be expected to appear before the commission to testify in regard to the present equipment and needs of the place and locality in respect to industrial training and technical education. The commission devotes part of each day to visiting the industrial establishments and educational institutions, and holds one or two sessions to receive testimony from those who desire to appear before it. The inquiry is ordinarily conducted by questions and answers, although those who appear before the commission may present information either by oral or written statement, bearing on the matters of the inquiry.

The commission will appreciate your co-operation in any manner which you may consider appropriate regarding any or all of these matters.

A reply to this might be addressed, care of Deputy Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
JAS. W. ROBERTSON,
Chairman.

I think that communication covers largely what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), asks.

Mr. SPROULE. Partly and partly not. What I had in mind was this: there are many people in the country who desire to acquire knowledge of the principles of certain arts or trades, not with a view to making them a permanent lifework, but with a view to equipping themselves better for that which they have chosen as their lifework. For instance, many a young man would like to gain knowledge with regard to mechanics, another with regard to agriculture. Will there be in these technical schools, branches where agriculture, mechanics, artisan's work, and other lines will be taught ?

Mr. KING. It is impossible for me to anticipate what the recommendations of the commission will be, but the scope of the commission, as I understand it, covers just the kind of thing my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), has suggested. I asked Dr. Robertson if he would give me a brief statement of what, up to the present, had come under the notice of the commission along the lines they were likely to report upon. Perhaps, if I read his statement, that will indicate to what extent the commission has in mind, making recommendation along the line my hon. friend has spoken of. This is Dr. Robertson's statement:

In general the testimony has been that provision for industrial training and technical education, in institutions and industrial establishments, exists in very few places and in them not to an extent adequate to the needs of the industrial population. The testimony indicates that some further opportunities are necessary to enable young men and women, from the ages of 14 to 18, to enter upon the various industrial and productive occupations with such educational qualifications that they may become industrially efficient.

I. In almost every place representative men have stated that urgent need exists for night classes for boys, after the age of 14, who have left the day schools.

II. The workmen have been practically unanimous in the expression of a desire for opportunities for such a measure of technical education as will enable them to acquire a knowledge of the principles which underlie the processes of their occupations, and also to give the more energetic and ambitious of them a fair working chance to prepare themselves for advancement and promotion.

III. There has been a unanimous expression of opinion that the several towns need some provision for industrial training and technical education which, in its general character, shall have an educational value equivalent to the high school or academy courses of study, but which shall be adapted specifically and directly to the needs of those who are to enter upon industrial occupations; and also to meet the case of those who would like to matriculate into, or enter upon the more advanced work of, technical colleges or agricultural colleges.

IV. Statements in respect of these four matters have come alike from the representatives of industries, from those who are responsible for educational work, and from the workingmen and women themselves. Not only are they all agreed as to the need for industrial training and technical education, but they have evinced enthusiastic keenness in offering co-operation, towards meeting the need in some adequate manner.

In other words, the commission has been endeavouring to ascertain from as many sources as possible, what are the needs in Canada, with respect to the different industries and industrial callings which employers and artisans are experiencing in the matter of a proper equipment for industrial efficiency. I think they have already got a good idea of the needs of Canada. The idea now, is that they should visit Europe and see how similar needs are being met in the different countries there. They will then return and prepare a report which will be of service in enabling the provinces of this country to shape their educational work, so far as it relates to industrial training and technical education, along lines which will be of the greatest benefit to the classes in whose interest the work is undertaken.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this cover the field for female as well as male labour ?

Mr. KING. Yes. That is a phase to which the commission is devoting some special attention.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there any females on the commission ?

Mr. KING. No, but a number of female witnesses have testified before the commission.

Mr. SPROULE. It does seem to me, thinking it over, that it might have been the part of wisdom to have one member of the commission, at least, an intelligent lady, who had shown an aptitude for such educational work and had acquired a general knowledge of industrial life among the female population.

Mr. KING. I think there is much to be said in favour of that view.

Mr. SPROULE. If I followed the figures correctly, we have voted $25,000, and are voting $10,000 now, and I understand that $25,000 more is likely to be asked for in the——

Mr. KING. Main estimates of next year.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be $60,000 all told. Is that expected to be sufficient to do the work including the report?

Mr. KING. I answered a moment ago, that possibly the printing of the report will require some further appropriation. I am inclined to think it will take $25,000 to cover the expenses of the commission in Europe.

Fisheries Protection Service, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been urged upon the department that better protection should be given to the fisheries on the British Columbia coast, and it has been considered advisable that we should charter a couple of vessels for that purpose. With this vote of $20,000 devoted to that special service it is expected that, with a couple of ships, we will be able to protect our fisheries adequately.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like some information with reference to the appointment of new fishery overseers throughout the province of Ontario, and perhaps on this item the minister would be able to give me some information. I notice some 37 new appointments have been made in the other provinces. I would like to know whether these men are intended to supplant the provincial overseers, or to implement their work.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am glad my hon. friend has mentioned the matter, and I will furnish him with the reason for that change. I may say that in British Columbia, the western provinces, and the maritime provinces the overseers are all appointed by the federal government; I do not think there are any other overseers in those provinces except those appointed by the federal government, though there may be a few appointed by the provincial authorities. It was found advisable that we should have in Ontario our own officers to carry out our own laws and regulations. Formerly, all the officers were appointed by the federal authorities. But by a judgment which was rendered in 1898, it was decided that the beds of the rivers above the tide were the property of the provinces, and that the provinces had some rights in the fisheries, one of which was to issue licenses for catching fish. As a result of that judgment, most of the officers were kept on by the provincial authorities; we had, however, to maintain a limited number of our own officers. It was found, however, that the provincial officers were looking chiefly after the execution of the provincial regulations concerning the issuing of licenses, they were not supposed to carry out the federal regulations. It seemed proper, therefore, that the regulations passed by the federal authorities should be carried out by federal officers. I am not making any reflection upon the way the fisheries had been protected by the provincial officers, but they were not of course appointed to carry out our regulations. There were numerous complaints that our regulations were not properly enforced, and facts were reported to the department which rendered it advisable for us to appoint our own officers to look after the protection of the fisheries in pursuance of our own regulations.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the minister regarding the appointment of some 37 fishery overseers in the province of Ontario—as to what their duties will be, why they are now appointed, seeing that no such officers were required before, and whether they are to take the place of the provincial overseers now discharging duties of a like character, or whether they are to implement their work by doing some other kind of work in connection with the protection of the fisheries.

Mr. BRODEUR. As I have already explained, since the judgment rendered by the Privy Council on the fisheries case, both the provincial and the Dominion authorities now exercise jurisdiction over the fisheries. It was decided by the Privy Council that the provinces, by virtue of their proprietary rights in the fisheries, are entitled to issue licenses and to make regulations as to the manner in which those licenses shall be issued. By the same judgment it was recognized that the regulation of the fisheries, generaly speaking, devolved upon the Dominion authorities. So that there is to-day a double jurisdiction in respect to the fisheries. The Dominion authorities are required to adopt the necessary laws and regulations for the protection and preservation of the fisheries, and we have been trying to exercise our powers according to our best judgment. We found that the regulations affecting the fisheries were not properly carried out. In Ontario there were only three officers to exercise supervision over the fisheries. The provincial officers are necessarily called upon to look after the observance of the laws and regulations passed by the provincial authorities concerning licenses. They have to see whether there are many people fishing without licenses, and, if so, to call upon them to cease fishing. But there are many regulations over which the provincial authorities have no jurisdiction, such as those relating to the size of the mesh, the gears with which fishing operations are carried on the close seasons, &c.

We had only three officers in Ontario who had general supervision. We could not expect the provincial authorities to enforce the observance of the Dominion laws and regulations. As there were complaints that our own regulations were not properly observed we thought of appointing a certain number of officers, whose duties would be to look after the carrying out of those laws and regulations. I have divided the province into districts and have appointed about 40 officers, who are going to supervise the fisheries in Ontario, as the officers are doing in the provinces I have mentioned. We have adopted a new principle of having a less number of officers who will be called upon to devote all their time to this work, and we expect that the salary they will receive from the government will enable them to discharge their duties in such a way that the complaints which existed before, as to the carrying out of our regulations, will not be heard in future. These officers will enforce the Dominion laws and regulations and will report violations of them to the Dominion authorities, and on the advice of the department, take the necessary action.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Dominion authorities do not propose to issue licenses to fishermen to fish, that will be left in the hands of the Ontario government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The authority of the provincial government of Ontario in that respect, is absolute, we have no right to prevent them from issuing licenses. We have, however, the right ourselves, which was not denied to us by the judgment of the Privy Council, to issue licenses. We do not intend for a moment to exercise any such right.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I cannot understand why it is necessary to appoint a lot of these officers in Ontario. I assume that the minister wants to run his department as economically as possible and not to appoint unnecessary officers. Between Kingston and Brockville the Ontario government have three efficient fishery overseers. They have gasoline launches running up and down all the time to see that the laws are not violated, that nets are not used. The overseer in my county has a wagon load of nets that have been seized. Through the good work of these overseers there is now practically no illegal fishing there. It looks as if the minister is simply appointing these men to give them positions and that men will be paid as fishery overseers to do electioneering work. I defy the minister to show where these officials are going to be of any use. At Brockville there are now two officials appointed by the Ontario government, who are doing the work properly. There were complaints a few years ago that the Ontario government officials did not do good work and the reason was, that they paid men $50 a year and of course, the men could not be expected to do work of that kind for that salary.

Mr. PARDEE. What do they get now ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). They now get $300 for the season and a launch. The present Ontario government, when they came in, saw fit to pay a reasonable salary. I suppose the minister will pay about $600, but the men he appoints, cannot do anything more than is done by the men now on the ground. How much territory will the man at Brockville cover ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is to supervise the Thousand Island district from Lake Ontario down.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That would be from east of Kingston to perhaps Brockville and there are now three men in that district. In appointing these men did the minister consider that there is now an efficient staff of provincial government officials, and did he consult the Ontario government to see whether they had men doing the same work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We made our organization to cover Ontario with our own officers. My hon. friend says the service has been well performed by the Ontario officers. The department has no means of ascertaining such a point, for we never get any information from these men. If there have been violations, seizures and impositions of penalties, they have not been reported to us.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I take it that the minister receives the official records the Ontario government are supposed to reports, these official records, come to him?

Mr. BRODEUR. We get their annual report, that is all. The men appointed by the Ontario government are supposed to look after the enforcement of the laws of Ontario, and not to enforce the Dominion regulations. In fact, I do not think they have authority to do it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In the official record of the Ontario government there is a report of every fishery overseer, and I cannot believe but that the minister or his officials see that record showing the number of seizures and the fines imposed. If there are any laws of the Dominion which will assist in protecting the fisheries there is no doubt that the Ontario fishery overseer would use those laws in addition to the Ontario law. In making these appointments along the River St. Lawrence, the minister should have taken that into consideration. I think it does not show the best administration of the department that he has never even consulted the Ontario government on this subject. And now he has to admit to the House that he never even knew they issued an official report of the work done by the Ontario fisheries service. The appointment by the minister of a lot of officials under these conditions is simply squandering the people's money.

Mr. BARKER. As I spend, whenever I can, a month or more in Muskoka—where there used to be plenty of fishing, and still is some—I know a little on this subject. The Ontario government, for some years past, has been making very strenuous efforts to do something practical in the way of protecting the fisheries. They have, at the head of the department there, an old sportsman, Mr. Tinsley, a very strong and very good Liberal, appointed by the Conservative government of Ontario, to supervise this work. He is a most excellent man and was appointed simply because of his lifelong experience. On these lakes the Ontario government has officers who supervise everything connected with the fisheries from the point of view of the provincial law. What I fear from what I have seen of the minister's proposal is that we shall come to a realization of the old proverb, that too many cooks spoil the broth. With two governments, Dominion and provincial, acting independently and without communication, neither knowing what the other is doing, you will find the Dominion officers and Ontario officers getting into what is called a 'scrap' occasionally. Besides, you will find that when alleged violators of the law are summoned before the magistrate by the officers of one government, they will plead that they were acting in accordance with what was told them by the officer of the other government. So, between the two, we shall have no law, or worse than no law. In the interests of us all, not only those who live by fishing, but those who take pleasure in fishing, the fishery laws should be enforced. Both governments are striving for the same end. But the present method is very much as though you had two officers in the same custom house, each entitled to exercise his own judgment as to the duties to be charged upon goods. You cannot have effective work under such a method. I would beg the minister (Mr. Brodeur) to consider whether he should not send the chief officer of his department to meet the chief fishery officers of Ontario and Quebec, or ask the provincial officers to come here and discuss the possibility of agreeing upon a common system. If you act independently my judgment is you will ruin everything.

Mr. HENDERSON. In justice to the overseer in my county, because there is a very important fishing station adjacent to the county of Halton, I want to say that I have no recollection of hearing any complaints such as the minister speaks of in respect to the non-enforcement of the regulations. I am quite sure that the Ontario overseer there insists stringently upon the regulations being observed, the chief one of which has reference to the size of the mesh, the other I suppose would be the close season. But I have not heard any complaints with regard to neglect of duty or of the non-observance of the regulations. The fishery overseer there considers it his duty to see that the regulations of this government are enforced as regards the size of the mesh, and the close season.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am glad the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has raised this important question of jurisdiction between the Dominion and the provincial authorities with regard to the fisheries. I may remark that before 1898 the fisheries were entirely administered by the federal authorities. Since then, as a result of a legal decision, the jurisdiction has been divided ; that is to say, everything pertaining to the issuing of licenses was taken over by the provincial authorities. Although the Dominion authorities had power to issue certain licenses, we have not exercised that power, but have left it entirely in the hands of the provincial authorities. However, I agree with my hon. friend that this dual jurisdiction is not at all satisfactory. I hope that some day the two authorities will be able to reach a settlement of this question of jurisdiction. I may say to my hon. friend that I have discussed the matter with a minister of the provincial government, and I think we are not very far apart. I think in view of the good relations which exist to-day between the two authorities as to the administration of the fisheries of Ontario, we may be able before long to reach a compromise, or a settlement, which will put an end to this dual jurisdiction. But it would be premature to discuss that question now in the House. It may be a question whether the fisheries should not be administered entirely by the Dominion authorities, and that we should pay a certain amount of money to the provincial authorities in lieu of the licenses. Now there are two important features of the case to keep in mind. In a short time we are going to have in force regulations on the Great Lakes, and the boundary waters between the United States and Canada, that is to say, upon the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence where that river forms the international boundary, the Niagara river, the Detroit river, the St. Clair river, and the St. Mary's river. The treaty between the two countries which has been laid before the House provides that regulations shall be made by two commissioners, one appointed by this government and one appointed by the United States government. Those regulations have been framed and have been laid before the House, and in a very short time, perhaps, the proclamation will be issued by the two governments declaring that these regulations shall govern the fisheries on the Great Lakes and the boundary rivers. In such a case, as my hon. friend from Hamilton knows, the treaty will have to be enforced by the Dominion authorities, because there is a special provision in the British North America Act to the effect that laws which have to be passed in execution of treaties must be enforced by the Dominion authorities. It will, therefore, become our duty when these regulations are passed to see that they are enforced on the lakes and rivers I have just mentioned. Perhaps we could reach a settlement on this basis : That we should assume the protection of the fisheries on the Great Lakes, while the provincial authorities took over the protection of the inland fisheries and their regulations ; that of course, would require an amendment to the British North America Act. But I think that every effort should be made to reach a settlement of some kind, because this divided jurisdiction, even with the best intentions in the world on both sides, leads to some conflict. Take the question of the fish hatcheries for example. The hatcheries which exist in the province of Ontario have all been built by this government, the Ontario government has no hatcheries.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are private hatcheries.

Mr. BRODEUR. I mean the provincial government has none.

Mr. BARKER. I am not so sure that the hon. gentleman is correct. They send up large quantities of fry.

Mr. BRODEUR. There may be a few hatcheries controlled by the provincial government, but the federal government has built practically the whole of them, and maintains them. When the eggs become ripe, and are hatched, the fry might be considered to a certain extent as the property of the provincial authorities. Therefore, we are spending money for the artificial propagation of fish which becomes the property of the province, and for which they issue licenses. Well, many people say : Why should you go on and build more hatcheries? Why do you not make an agreement with the provincial authorities by which at least you may get a share of the money which comes from the licenses? Remember that all the revenue which comes out of the fisheries goes into the provincial treasury and the Dominion treasury gets nothing. This is evidently an unjust situation, and the sooner we reach an agreement in that respect the better it will be for all parties concerned. My hon. friend spoke about the absence of relations between the officers and the department. I may say that so far as I am concerned, I have had several opportunities to meet one of the principal officials of the provincial government, we have been often in communication discussing questions of general interest, both by correspondence and otherwise. Besides, the officers of the department are in constant communication with the officer whose name has been given by my hon. friend. Coming to the question of the observance of our regulations, it has been alleged that there has been a violation of them. If so it cannot be wondered at. Regulations are, in the ordinary nature of things very often violated. I do not know if that is the case, but no report was made to us by the provincial authorities or their officers that there had been violations or that penalties had been imposed. The hon. member for Grenville has referred to the fact that in the report issued by the provincial government it is stated that a numbe of penalties have been imposed. We have their report, and we have noted its contents but there is nothing in the report which says that these penalties have been recovered for violations of our own regulations. They must have been violations of the provincial regulations concerning the issuing of licenses. If they had been violations of our regulations concerning gears, size of mesh, or close season they would have been reported to us.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But they do not issue any licenses at all on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but generally speaking.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But you spoke of complaints in so far as the St. Lawrence is concerned. I say that they do not issue any licenses at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. I speak generally of Ontario, I do not speak particularly of the St. Lawrence, because I know that they do not issue any licenses there. If there have been some violations of the close season they should have been reported to us. If penalties have been imposed and money has been collected as a result of these violations not only should the violation have been reported to us but the money itself should have been returned to us.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It has reference to the close season established by the Ontario government in the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the provincial authorities have no right to make any regulations as to close seasons. If they make regulations they are entirely ultra vires. They would be against the law because the right to regulate the fisheries belongs exclusively to this parliament. But, they have the right to issue licenses and they may make regulations in connection with the issuing of licenses. But, they would have no right to determine any close season different from the one which had been determined by this government. A similar case was brought up in one of the provinces and it was decided by the Superior Court that the province had no right to make any close season. I do not know but that the case is now before the Privy Council.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to understand the situation in the St. Lawrence. The minister states that the Ontario government have no right to make any close season unless it is in connection with the issuing of licenses. I suppose that their law is the same in so far as the close season is concerned as that of the Dominion. If they established a regulation in so far as close seasons are concerned, I suppose it would apply to licenses only. Is that how I am to understand it?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Dominion parliament and the Governor in Council have the right to make regulations as to close seasons. The provincial government cannot do it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand there are regulations now of the Ontario government under which there are close seasons.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that on the St. Lawrence——

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will permit me, let us take the season for bass for instance; the close season or the open season is determined by a regulation passed by the Dominion authorities here, whether by Act of parliament or by order in council. The right to issue permits for the catching of bass may be exercised by the provincial authorities and licenses may be issued for the open season which is provided by our own regulations.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I know that the fishery overseers appointed by the provincial government have printed instructions about the close seasons when bass and other fish cannot be caught. If the minister states that close seasons cannot be established by the Ontario government then they must be acting under the laws of the Dominion government and the Ontario government may have conveyed the instructions of the Dominion government to these overseers, by making their licenses conform with the regulations of the Dominion government. As these three overseers on the St. Lawrence are carrying out the regulations as to close seasons, as they are doing the work faithfully, constantly running up and down the river, and as no licenses are issued at all at the present time, I would like to know what there is for another man to do.

Mr. BRODEUR. The provincial authorities may have their own officers to carry out the regulations which they have the right to make with regard to the licenses themselves. They have a right to see whether a person is fishing with or without a license or, it may be, to make some further regulation in connection with the issuing of licenses, but as to general regulations with regard to gears, close seasons, open seasons, &c., there is only one authority and it is the Dominion authority. The law says that these regulations have to be enforced by the fishery officers appointed under this Act. If these officers appointed by the Ontario government have undertaken to carry out these laws they may find that they have not the right to do it; in fact, they do not undertake to do it because they do not report to us any violations of their own regulations. Will not my hon. friend admit that in that case it is very much better that we should have our men to report to us all the information with regard to the fisheries? Should we require to change the regulations concerning the fishing season these three officers do not travel the country enough to be able to inform us as to local conditions which it is absolutely necessary we should be aware of. For instance, the size of the mesh is a very important matter and we must have men on the spot to report to us as to that and other such matters of detail.

Mr. BARKER. I admit that the Minister of Marine like the provincial minister, is desirous of carrying out the law for the general good, but where we have the admitted difficulty of a dual authority surely it is the duty of the governments to see whether or not, in the public interest, they can agree upon a common ground. If the minister is going to appoint a lot of officers to see that Dominion rights are vindicated and the provinces are actuated by a similar spirit the result is that you have thrust upon the Dominion, as upon the provinces, a host of officials. In two years you find, perhaps that the people condemn the whole thing and force the Dominion and the provinces to agree upon a uniform system, and then you have to pension your officials and you are thus mortgaging the country to a considerable extent. Why should not the federal Department of Fisheries agree with the representative officers of the province upon a common mode of work. No province in this Dominion is more anxious for the preservation of the fish than the province of Ontario. They have spent large sums from year to year and they are prepared to expend still more towards that end. But if the province should know that there is a big sum of money per annum paid out by the Dominion to overlap their work, instead of good, mischief will be done. I cannot see why in a matter of common interest the federal officials cannot sit down with the provincial officials like business men and agree upon what is right for all. You are standing apart holding each other at arms length, each insisting on its right, and that means that somebody suffers between the two. There are millions of dollars brought into Ontario every year by families who come from the United States to the Muskoka lakes, the Thousand islands and Georgian bay, and who fancy they will have some fishing. The cultivation of that business is of enormous value. On the Muskoka lakes I suppose $1,000,000 have been expended by Americans in erecting dwellings; they sit on the wharfs and if they catch one fish a day they are content, but they want to do the fishing. There is no use telling these people that they have to inquire whether it is the Hon. Mr. Brodeur at Ottawa, or some gentleman at Toronto, who lays down the law; their only desire is to know what the law is. Surely the rights of the people are paramount to the dignity of any official whether provincial or federal. Before we sanction the payment of a host of officers and give them the powers of the czar, we should ask the minister whether any effort has been made with the provincial minister to agree upon a common system. However zealous the federal officers may be they cannot be more zealous than the Ontario officer, a good old Liberal, a man who gives his life to the business, a sportsman who has his heart in it; and who was appointed by the Ontario Conservative government because of his qualifications. He is just as anxious to do what you want as any man could be, and why not sit down with him and agree upon common regulations. What is the sense of having one set of regulations here and another in Toronto, and two officials going to the person and fighting over the body of the prisoner to see who will get him. I submit that is not business like.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am absolutely converted to the idea of putting an end to this dual jurisdiction, and for years past I have made many efforts to bring about the result the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) desires. As far as the maritime provinces are concerned, the matter is in very good shape. In fact, we have reached an agreement with the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. So far as Quebec is concerned, the gulf part of the province is under the exclusive control of the federal authorities, who not only make regulations concerning the way in which fishing shall be carried on, but issue licenses and maintain vessels for the protection of the fishermen and the fishing industry. In the inland part of the province, the provincial authorities issue licenses, and the regulations, so far as I have seen, are generally well enforced. In the province of British Columbia there is the question of jurisdiction, which has been submitted for the judgment of the Supreme Court, and I expect that the matter will be reviewed during this month. Hon. gentlemen opposite have suggested that we should agree with the provincial authorities as to the question of making regulations. Less than four months ago the provincial authorities of British Columbia and ourselves agreed that we should have a regulation as to boat rating in the northern part of the province, and a commission was appointed composed of their chief officer and one of our inspectors for British Columbia. They went on the ground of the interested parties, and made a report, which I adopted, and my colleagues accepted my recommendation that this boat rating should be observed. I fully agree with my hon. friend that this overlapping of jurisdiction is not for the benefit of the fisheries themselves, but rather is very detrimental to them, and the sooner the question is settled the better. It is not a question that can be settled by the officers; it will have to be settled by the representatives of the respective governments. In regard to improving the regulations, I thought I should have the provincial minister of Ontario come and confer with me as to the regulations which should be adopted for the Great Lakes, and we passed a few days together and discussed the regulations. I mention this just to show my hon. friends that good relations exist between us. But the fact remains that there is overlapping. In some parts of Ontario we are face to face with the depletion of the fisheries, and some day, when the fisheries have disappeared, it may be charged against us that we did not protect them, if we do not now look after the regulations for that purpose. Some reference has been made to politics. There is no politics in the administration of my department in respect to the fisheries. We do not claim not to make any mistakes, but we try our best to meet the exigencies of the situation by adopting the best regulations possible to preserve the fisheries. In some provinces we are issuing licenses, and they are issued to bona fide fishermen, and I have never heard of any complaint that we are granting licenses or refusing licenses for the purpose of obtaining any party advantage.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I quite agree with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it is very unfortunate that the jurisdiction with respect to the fisheries has, by the decision of the Privy Council, been made concurrent as between the provinces and the Dominion. But I cannot agree with him, at least so far as my section of the country is concerned, that the fishery regulations are not being enforced. Indeed, in my county the complaint made is that when the Ontario government took charge of the regulations they were made too stringent, and I know of four cases where seizures have been made for infringements of the fishery laws. In one case at least the seizure was unjustly made, and the man was returned his nets and is going to be compensated for the injury done him. I think it is unfortunate, from what has been said to-night, that the minister did not delay the appointment of these 40 overseers in Ontario, because their duties will overlap those of the provincial officers. There will be two sets of officers to punish people for the offences committed. If a man fishes within the close season, the minister contends that the provincial officers have no right to prosecute him. On the other hand, if he fishes without a license, the Dominion officer would have no right to interfere with him. How is a Dominion official to know whether a man is fishing without a license or not? He would have to get that information from a provincial officer. On the other hand, when a man is fishing in the spring of the year, he cannot be prosecuted by the provincial authorities. It is the practice in Ontario not to give a man a new license if he has infringed the law in the previous year, so that the provincial authorities will have to inquire of the Dominion authorities whether or not he has been convicted under the Dominion regulations. I would like to know how many overseers are going to be appointed by the Dominion government on the Georgian bay.

Mr. BRODEUR. One at Parry Sound, one at Leith, one at Wiarton, one at Penetanguishene.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I said there would be three, apparently there are four. Then these seven fishery overseers are in the southeastern portion of the Georgian bay. That is altogether too many officials, three or four competent men would be quite sufficient. Thus it looks to me as if politics had something to do with these appointments. One of the main strengths of the fishery overseer is that the fishermen look to him to exert his influence to lengthen the open season or shorten the close season, or hope to have him act as leniently as he can with reference to the enforcement of the fishery regulations. When this government had no fishery overseers the petitions of these men had to be transmitted to the government through the provincial overseer and it was to him that the fishermen looked for a reply. It looks as if these officers were being appointed by the Dominion government so that the information may be sent back not to a provincial official, but to a Dominion official. From whom has the minister had complaints that the provincial regulations have not been properly enforced?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether the provincial regulations were enforced, but we know that ours have not been properly enforced in some cases.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Can the minister cite a single case?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, I can cite many.

Mr. GORDON (Kent). I can cite one. A short time ago I visited a fishing country and found leads of 550 feet being used, contrary to law, in Mitchell's bay.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Did the hon. gentleman advise the provincial authority?

Mr. GORDON (Kent). Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Did he take action?

Mr. GORDON (Kent). Shortly after, but it had been going on for a year without being noticed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That is a case where something was brought to the attention of the officer and he rectified it. That is all that could have been done by a Dominion official. There can be no argument for the appointment of these men and it would be in the interests of the fisheries not to have them appointed. Did the minister consult the Ontario government as to the necessity of appointing them?

Mr. BRODEUR. The law says that the fishery officers appointed under the Act are the ones to have authority to enforce the Act. There must have been violation of the law, but there has never been any return to us of money collected as fines, while the law provides that all money so collected must be turned in to the Receiver General for Canada.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Have you applied to the province for it?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, we have.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The minister admits that he has not communicated with the provincial authorities to find out whether they have been enforcing the Dominion regulations, although he is willing to forego his right to fishery licenses. Has he intimated to the provincial authorities that he was going to appoint 40 Dominion officers, and asked them if they thought it was necessary or whether the provincial officers would perform the duties which the 40 Dominion officers are about to perform.

Mr. BRODEUR. I must admit that I have not asked the provincial authorities whether they would advise me if these officers should be appointed or not, because I thought it was our duty to do it ourselves. So long as we were satisfied that there were violations of the law and that these violations were detrimental to the fisheries, we thought it was our duty to prevent such violations. The provincial authorities have their own officers to look after their own regulations concerning licenses, but it is our duty to see to the observance of our own regulations. As to violations of the law I might mention the Killarney case, a very flagrant case, referred to in the report of the Georgian Bay Commission. In view of these facts we are not going to beg of the Ontario government to carry out our regulations. It is our duty to see that they are properly observed, for fear that we may afterwards be charged with not having performed our duty. I feel I would have been derelict in my duty if I had not adopted this course.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the minister not think that the provincial officials going over the same ground, could, without any additional labour, perform the duties which will be performed by these 40 officers to be appointed by this government.

Mr. BRODEUR. But once more, my hon friend—

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I quite understand that what the minister wants is the enforcement of the regulations of his department by his own officials. But he tells us that he is in perfect harmony with the provincial authorities, yet he has given the provincial government no chance to come to an agreement with him on this point, he has not consulted with them as to the appointment of these officials. And I do not see why something should not have been done along that line.

Mr. BRODEUR. One point, perhaps, I did not make very clear. The officers appointed by the Ontario government, of course, receive instructions from the provincial authority, and these instructions must refer to the provincial laws and regulations. For the enforcement of our regulations, we must give those who are to enforce them specific instructions, but how can we give instructions to these provincial officers? We have no authority over them, and they would probably tell us so. I expect that the men whom we appoint will see to it that our regulations are observed, while the provincial officers will especially look after the regulations in relation to issuing of licenses and matters under the authority of the provincial government.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. But could not the minister appoint these provincial officials to carry out the regulations of the Dominion? If that suggestion were made to the provincial authorities, I have no doubt they would agree to it. There would be no confusion and one corps of officers would carry out the two sets of regulations.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would rather have our system than one under which a large number of officers are appointed. We have suffered in some provinces by this system of appointing guardians and overseers at such small salaries that they could not be expected to devote their time to the work. But we appoint fewer men, pay them salaries that will cover all their time, and look to them for results.

Mr. BARKER. What will the 40 men with all their paraphernalia cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. Five hundred dollars for each man.

Mr. BARKER. Twenty thousand dollars per annum on a little question of dignity.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The point the minister raises is one of those that could have been amicably arranged between the two governments. If the number of officials is too large, and the salaries too small, an agreement could have been made to follow rather the plan that he thinks best.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How does the minister expect that these men are going to devote their whole time to the work for the money he speaks of—$500 per annum each? These men, if they are going to perform their duties, must be away from home a good deal, travelling up and down the river. I suppose each will have to pay his own living expenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. His living expenses, when he is out, will be paid by the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then the minister did not give us the facts correctly. He said these men would cost $500 each per annum which—

Mr. PARDEE. You asked what the salary was.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) asked what these men would cost, and the minister said $500 per annum each. But now the minister says their expenses must be paid while they are out, and it is clear they must be out every day, for the men along the river have small nets which they will use in an effort to evade the law. The Ontario government men are running up and down the river in their little gasoline launches all the time. I have seen them come along where men were trying to spear fish at night. How much will the minister allows these officers of his for living expenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. We pay the actual disbursements. That is the custom that has always been followed in the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I suppose you will furnish each man wish a gasoline boat?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.

Mr. BRODEUR. Where necessary, but not in all cases.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How is a man going to watch the fisheries unless he is out on the river? Such a man must have a gasoline launch, and it must be a fast one too, because the men who are fishing illegally generally have pretty fast little launches themselves. The running of the launch and the living expenses of the men will add at least $2 a day while they are travelling around—the expenses will probably be more than the salary. Instead of $500 each, these men will cost $1,000 each. That is, $40,000 is to be paid by this government quite unnecessarily. The only point that the minister makes, it seems to me, is that the Ontario officials have not authority to carry out his regulations. But, if the minister would have an order in council passed that the fishery officers appointed by the local government should have power to enforce the Dominion regulations, he could save this $40,000 per annum. Am I not right in understanding it that way?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, will the minister explain.

Mr. BRODEUR. These men would not be under our control or subject to our instructions. It would be a system absolutely detrimental to the fisheries. The hon. gentlemen (Mr. Reid, Grenville) seems to be surprised at an expenditure of $40,000 in connection with these fisheries. These fisheries in Ontario are very important.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No doubt.

Mr. BRODEUR. And I say that spending a sum of even $40,000 for the preservation of those fisheries would not be an extravagant expenditure. I think it worth while to expend that amount of money to make sure that the fisheries shall be well preserved.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The issue I take with the minister is that it is not necessary.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister states that these fishery overseers have no jurisdiction, and could not carry out his instructions. As I understand it, the only instructions he could give them, would be the official regulations.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not only the official regulations, but there are a great number of specific instructions, which we have to give, and how could we do that to officers over whom we have no control ?

Mr. BARKER. Has the hon. gentleman never heard of a station master at a union station, who obeys the orders of several railway companies, and he only draws one salary ?

Mr. STAPLES. Is the minister going to make any appointments in the province of Manitoba ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have one inspector and several overseers in Manitoba. It is not intended to increase the number.

Mr. STAPLES. Where are they located ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The inspector is at Selkirk; there is one overseer on Lake Manitoba and some on Lake Winnipegosis.

Mr. STAPLES. Are any of those additional officers you are providing for, going to be located in Manitoba ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Those officers have been appointed for some time, and occasionally we may increase the number. I am informed that last year we appointed a new overseer.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Is it the intention of the minister to collect any license fees from the fishermen in Ontario ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The matter has been considered by the department, but no decision has been reached whether we should issue licenses in Ontario or not. We hope some day there will be an agreement, and we do not want to complicate the question.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Will the minister state why the fishermen in British Columbia have to pay licenses to both governments, while in Ontario, they get off with a license to one government ? Notwithstanding what the minister said about the importance of the Ontario fisheries, the revenue collected by his department in that province was only $1,520 last year, while in the smaller province of British Columbia, the amount collected from the fishermen was $41,000. It seems to me there is a discrimination which should not be continued, and that the money of the fishermen of British Columbia should not be taken to pay the salaries of those supernumerary overseers in Ontario, because that is what it will look like to them, when they find a difference of $40,000 between the revenues of the two provinces, and 40 new men are to be put on in Ontario to absorb this whole $40,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This sum of $1,520 which the hon. gentleman speaks, must represent penalties which we have collected. We do not collect anything in the way of licenses for the reasons I have just explained. But we are expending a large amount of money in British Columbia, much more than we are spending in Ontario. This amount under discussion is for the purpose of providing for the fishery protection service in British Columbia. Outside of that, we maintain several ships for the protection of the fisheries; we have also a large number of gasoline launches, and small boats for the same purpose. So the money expended for fishery protection in British Columbia does not compare with the amount spent in Ontario.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The point the minister has not touched is this: I have a large number of fishermen in my constituency, and when I go to them they demand an accounting from me as to why they are taxed $5 a year, and their brother fishermen in Ontario are not taxed at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken; the fishermen in both provinces are taxed. But in Ontario the money is collected by the provincial authorities, while in British Columbia it is collected by the Dominion authorities. Lately the provincial government saw fit also to put a tax upon the fishermen by imposing a new license. Formerly, there was only one license, that imposed by the Dominion.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister still has not met my point. In British Columbia there are two licenses exacted from the fishermen, one by the provincial government and one by the Dominion government. In Ontario there is a license by the provincial government, but none collected by the Dominion government. So we have two licenses to pay, while in Ontario, there is only one license to pay.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is in virtue of an especial agreement we made with the two provinces. After the judgment of the Privy Council we made an agreement with the British Columbia government by which we were to continue to protect the fisheries, to maintain the hatcheries, at the same time to administer the whole business, and also to collect the licenses, with the understanding however, that a certain portion of the amount which we collected was to be paid back to the provincial authorities. If I remember right, the amount voted last year by this parliament that we paid to the provincial authorities was $56,000 in virtue of that agreement. In Ontario an agreement was made that the province should collect the fees, pending a settlement of the fishery question. In the maritime provinces we continue to collect the licenses; in Quebec we collect the licenses in a portion of the province, and the provincial authorities collect them in another portion. But since we have made this agreement with the British Columbia government, the provincial authorities have seen fit to issue licenses themselves. They may have had a right to do so, I do not say, it was a violation of the agreement which was made, but I think it would have been just as well to leave the situation untouched, and not to impose another license upon the fishermen. They could have left the matter in the hands of the Dominion authorities, until it had been definitely settled. But my hon. friend cannot find fault with the Dominion government for having continued to carry out the agreement which existed before. We claim that there is a part of British Columbia over which the provincial authorities have no jurisdiction. I mean the three-mile limit, and we claim that the right to issue licenses within the three-mile limit belongs exclusively to the Dominion authorities. That is a matter which is before the courts and of course, we will have the point settled by the decision which will be rendered.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I think the minister has not yet met my position, which is why his department collects licenses in British Columbia, while it collects no license in Ontario.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is in virtue of the agreement which was made with the provincial government after the judgment of the Privy Council was rendered. An agreement was made in Ontario that they should collect the licenses, and with British Columbia and the maritime provinces that we should collect the licenses. Now, to our great surprise, the provincial government of British Columbia goes to work and passes laws taking power to issue licenses itself. In British Columbia we are under very large expense for the preservation of the fisheries. I suppose my hon. friend would think it only fair and right that as we are spending so much money for the preservation of the fisheries in British Columbia we should have some revenue out of them. The provincial government maintains one hatchery, but the most important hatcheries are maintained by us. The fishery protection service is maintained by the Dominion authorities. We have several ships that we are maintaining there for the protection of the fisheries, and I think it is only fair and just that we should issue these licenses for the purpose of meeting at least a portion of the expenses of protecting the fisheries. The situation is not the same in Ontario. There we do not maintain a fleet as we do in British Columbia. If the provincial government has seen fit to impose another tax upon the fisherman, I have no fault to find with it, as it simply exercises the power that it has to issue licenses and collect a fee. That is a question that the provincial authorities will have to discuss with the fishermen.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Perhaps my English is defective, but the minister has altogether avoided the point I tried to make. I have no fault to find with the expenditure in British Columbia. I think it his duty to make that expenditure, and that he is trying very hard to make the expenditure effective, but I am speaking just for the moment from the standpoint of the licensed fishermen in my riding, who are taxed five dollars a year, while their contemporaries in Ontario are taxed nothing at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they are taxed in Ontario, too.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Well, they are taxed by the provincial government, but I am speaking of the federal taxation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is the provincial government spending for the purpose of the fisheries the money which it collects from these fishermen? Is it not true that almost all the money that is spent there is spent by the federal authorities?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister has discussed the fishery policy of the British Columbia government with the ministers of that government, and I think they are quite able to take care of themselves, so it is not necessary for me to appear here as their champion. I will leave their case to themselves. But I would like to put on the records the contributions from the several provinces, as the subject has been mentioned. I have it here in the Auditor General's Report, at page O-204, and it is as follows:

Ontario	$ 1,520 75
Quebec	4,948 46
Nova Scotia	3,865 81
New Brunswick	13,029 88
Prince Edward Island	2,359 93
Manitoba	3,952 88
Saskatchewan	1,211 44
Alberta	703 00
Hudson Bay District, &c	309 83
British Columbia	41,864 80
Yukon Territory	457 00
	$74,223 78

One province contributes just about sixty per cent. It seems to me that an injustice is being done to the fishermen of that province, inasmuch as they are so heavily taxed as to pay sixty per cent of the whole fisheries revenue of Canada, while all the other eight provinces and a couple of unorganized districts contribute only the other forty per cent. I do not think the minister has met that situation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, take the case of Nova Scotia. The fisheries in which the Nova Scotia fishermen engage are mostly those on the Grand Banks. The results of those fisheries are included in the reports which my hon. friend will see as to the yield of the fisheries in Nova Scotia. We could not very well issue licenses to go and fish on the Grand Banks. Sir Charles Tupper introduced a law some years ago under which fishermen going on the Grand Banks should receive a bounty. In British Columbia most of the fisheries are on the Fraser, and the other rivers in which they catch salmon. Fishing there is carried on in a different way from the method pursued in Nova Scotia, and that is the reason why there is a difference.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I see I cannot budge the minister on that point, but I would like to call his attention to another matter of some importance in connection with the fisheries protection service in British Columbia. About three years ago, when the government had its dispute with the British Columbia government, and when the two sets of officers were first put on, the minister issued licenses to a number of fishermen along the Fraser river, giving them certain rights, as they supposed. While they were exercising those rights they were interfered with by other fishery protection officers acting the same as the minister's own officers, in the name of the King. These men should not be subjected to any penalties from any quarter for doing anything which they were licensed to do in His Majesty's name, but they were brought before the courts by the provincial inspectors, subjected to heavy losses, fined and their occupation interfered with to a considerable extent in the height of the fishing season. These men naturally looked to the government, whom they had paid so handsomely for their licenses, to protect them from any of the consequences of the exercise of the power granted by those licenses. They have received no satisfaction whatever from this government, not even a sympathetic response, but merely a heartless declaration that this injury was not inflicted upon them by the federal authority, but that it was inflicted upon them by the provincial authority, and that, therefore, they must look to the province for compensation. I submit that is not the proper attitude for a federal department to take. It is not for me to say whether the federal government or the provincial government were in the right. To my mind that question should not be raised as regards the individual fisherman. The only correct course to take would be for the federal government to protect the holders of its licenses, to compensate them for any loss they met with through relying upon those licenses, and then in turn the federal government should look to the provincial government for compensation if compensation is due. Does the minister not think that as a matter of right this government should protect the holders of its licenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. We undoubtedly have the right to issue licenses in British Columbia as in other provinces, and to make laws and regulations concerning the fisheries. The provincial government was authorized by the legislature to issue licenses and they requested the fishermen to take provincial licenses. The provincial government undertook at the same time to pass regulations in connection with the fisheries and the fishermen of British Columbia thought the provincial government had no right to do that. The provincial government did not dispute the right of the federal government to issue licenses.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). That is the very point; the authority given by the federal license was put in question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think so.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The point was this: The Dominion regulations permitted the fishermen to carry on their calling during certain hours, and the provincial regulations provided certain different hours, and it was because the fishermen were found fishing in the hours permitted by the Dominion but forbidden by the province that they were brought to court. These men were fined for fishing at a time when the Dominion license told them they could fish.

Mr. BRODEUR. They were prosecuted because they were violating the provincial regulations, in that some of them did not take licenses as the provincial law prescribed. The fishermen fought the question in the courts, and though the question before the court was whether the provincial government had the right to make these regulations or not, I thought we should be generous enough to extend some help to these poor fishermen contending against a wealthy province. It was not because the province questioned our right to issue licenses, about which there is no doubt, but because the men were violating a provincial regulation, that they were prosecuted. In the first instance we got a lawyer to follow the case which was won by the fishermen, and on appeal to the high court that judgment was sustained. I should think it was a case in which the provincial government should pay the costs of the fishermen, but as they refused I thought it was only justice that we should reimburse them their costs.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Was the payment of the costs made recently?

Mr. BRODEUR. We paid the court charges.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I think the minister is in error; they never were paid their costs.

Mr. BRODEUR. Claims were made by some of the fishermen for loss of time, but of course, we could not pay such. As a friend of the fishermen, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) should commend us for having reimbursed them their costs. Not only that, but we are now before the Supreme Court to argue the stated case in which is involved the question of the three-mile limit.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am delighted to hear that from the minister, but I am afraid he does not mean all he says. If he is really going to pay the fishermen all their costs, that is all I have been asking him to do, but that has not been done yet.

Mr. BRODEUR. We paid all the court charges and the hon. gentleman should not press us to do more. If the fishermen have any claim for loss of time it should be paid by the provincial government which instituted the proceedings, and I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) with his influence and prestige can get the provincial government to do that.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Unfortunately for the fishermen my commission is not to the provincial but to the federal government.

Mr. BRODEUR. I know my hon. friend has great influence with the provincial government.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). My point is, that the federal government should look to the provincial government for reimbursement as it is the federal government that ought to protect the holders of its licenses. The minister was a little in error about what is done with the fisheries revenue collected from British Columbia, when he said that part of it is by arrangement paid over to the provincial government. True, there was an arrangement several years ago when the decision of the Privy Council was first given, and under a modus vivendi the federal government was to continue to collect the license fees and remit one-half to the provincial government. What went wrong with that arrangement I do not know. But I do know that this government for some reason did not carry it out, and did not pay to the provincial government the part they agreed to pay; and it was in consequence of their failure to pay that amount during five or six years that the provincial government eventually took control of the situation by issuing regulations and imposing a license fee which from that time on they have collected. If this government had stuck to the modus vivendi, there would never have been any difficulty between them and the province of British Columbia, but one authority or the other would have imposed the license fee and divided it with the other government. The minister seems to be under the impression that that is going on now, but such is not the case, as I understand. I understand that this government is under no obligation to pay any part of the revenue which it collects to the provincial government, and I would not like it to go on record that British Columbia was getting something which is not coming to us.

Mr. BRODEUR. After the judgment of the Privy Council there was an agreement that we should reimburse the government of British Columbia for some of the license fees collected if it transpired that we had not the right to issue such licenses. For many years no claim was made by the provincial authorities. But finally they made a claim, and we tried to determine what the amount of the claim was. There was a great divergence of opinion as to the basis of settlement, as to what should constitute the cost of administration. There was one contention on our part and another on the part of the provincial government. After a couple of years of discussion, we reached a settlement, and in the meantime the provincial government notified us that they wanted to put an end to the modus vivendi; and last year, after we had reached a settlement as to the amount that should be paid, the money was voted by parliament, and it has since been paid to the provincial authorities.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I would like to ask if the minister's attention was called to a report in the daily press the other day, of wholesale poaching on the west bank of Vancouver island, and of complaints that the protection service given there is altogether inadequate. Is any part of this money which we are now asked to vote for the purpose of strengthening that service, and, if so, in what respects is it to be strengthened?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not only part, but all of this money is for the purpose of affording better protection to the fisheries on the western coast of the Island of Vancouver. The poaching my hon. friend refers to has been reported to the department in different ways, and it has been brought specially to my attention by my colleague, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) who urged very strongly upon me the advisability of providing more boats for the protection of our fisheries, and this vote is for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). What nature of boats is this to provide?

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall be glad to give my hon. friend privately all the information as to what we are going to do; but I think it would perhaps be better that the poachers should not know.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). That is a very smooth answer of the minister, and I am very much obliged to him for the offer; but I am afraid that he cannot keep his boats so private that the poachers will not learn what he is doing almost as soon as his officials do; because I can tell him that the men engaged in poaching in our waters have the very fastest boats that money can supply them with, and he must be very alert, indeed, to keep up with them. Up to the present our so-called fishery protection boats have been a laughing stock to the poachers. They know in advance the proposed movements of these boats, and every time a vessel of our protective fleet is due to approach, they are able to move in the opposite direction. I do not think that an apprehension or conviction of a poacher occurs once in a year, although scores of boats are poaching there all the time. No doubt these facts are known to the minister, but I mention them so that they may be placed on record, and perhaps act as a stimulus to the department to do a little more than it has been doing to bring to an end a state of affairs which is almost ruining our fisheries. I would also like to ask whether any part of this vote is for the protection of the fisheries on Puget Sound in connection with the regulations under the International Fisheries Treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. I may say that the treaty is not yet in force. It has not yet been passed by the United States authorities. When I was in Washington some days ago, I took up the question with the United States government, and the Secretary of State intended to advise the President to request the passage of the necessary legislation as soon as possible. I do not know whether that has been done yet or not. This vote is entirely for the protection of the fisheries on the west coast of the Island of Vancouver. If the necessity arises for the protection of the fisheries on Puget Sound, that will be attended to.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Of course, the protection of the fisheries on Puget Sound is a matter of joint arrangement between the two countries; and if the fishery regulations, which are now overdue, are proclaimed simultaneously in both countries, it will be necessary for us to have our arrangements for protection ready, otherwise the season will pass with our fisheries there at the mercy of fishermen from the American side.

Mr. BRODEUR. Provision is made for that in our main estimates. This vote is only to make provision from now to the first of April.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Does the minister rely altogether on the Americans for the inspection of their traps, or will there be Canadian boats also for police duty?

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course, we have to rely on the American authorities, because under the treaty the carrying out of the regulations on each side of the line must be carried out by the authorities of each country.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister has a regulation in regard to the export of fish. Will that be carried out under his inspection, or are the Americans under any arrangement to assist in keeping our fish out of their markets?

Mr. BRODEUR. The fishery regulations for preventing the exportation of fish in order to preserve the fisheries are certainly going to be attended to by this government.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister has no intention of making any other regulations this year with regard to the exportation of fish than the regulations in force last year, and for some years previous?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not considered any change in the regulations in connection with that.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I ask that because I observe in the arrangement recently under discussion here that there is to be a free interchange of fish between the two countries, and that there is also an engagement on the part of Canada that no regulations of any kind will conflict with this offer of the free interchange of fish. Of course we have induced the American government to take off the duty on fish in the expectation that they will get our salmon to use in their canning factories, and they would regard it as a violation of our promise not to have any conflicting regulation, if the minister maintained his prohibition of export. This matter ought to be clearly understood, because it is important to our fishermen to know well in advance if they are to be permitted to export their catch during the present season. They are advised by the arrangement we have recently been discussing that they will be permitted to export while the minister's regulations provide that they will not be permitted. We have here the two ministers concerned in what seems to be a conflicting arrangement, and I think it would be well to have an authoritative statement, so that men on the Fraser who are so vitally interested should be advised as early as possible.

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing in the arrangement which interferes with the right of the Canadian Fisheries Department to make any regulation which may be deemed necessary for the protection of the Canadian fisheries, and in like manner the American government will be free to make any regulation that seems reasonably necessary for the protection of their fisheries. That is the general state of the situation. What would be the effect of any particular regulation that might arise would have to be considered. I can only state the general principle governing the arrangement.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am sorry to hear that, because that was one feature of the arrangement at Washington that pleased me, that we were to have free interchange of fish. It was a matter I had urged on the House during the three sessions I have been here. I have always thought that the exportation of fish should not be prohibited, as it is by order in council, and I read in the agreement from Washington that no regulation shall be made or maintained which unreasonably hampers the more liberal exchange of commodities now proposed. It seems to me quite clear that the prohibition of the export of fish does unreasonably hamper the interchange of this commodity, and that it would be so held. It seems to me the ministers would do well to take council together on that point.

Mr. FIELDING. I am content to state the general principle. As to how it shall apply in this particular case I must leave the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to study that out for himself.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that this regulation has been put on the statute-book for the purpose of protecting our fisheries, and if I remember rightly such a provision was unanimously recommended by the British Columbia Commission which sat some years ago, and on which all interests were represented. It was unanimously recommended that this was a measure necessary to protect our fisheries. It is a regulation of local concern for the special purpose of protecting our fisheries, and we may exercise in respect to it the same right as we do with regard to licenses.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). If that interpretation is carried out it puts us in this position, that an arrangement has been made for the free exchange of fish, and that under that we are bound to admit all the American fish offered to us in competition with the catch of our own fishermen, while under the regulations made by the Fishery Department those same fishermen are prohibited from passing their fish across to the canners on the American side, which I think is a condition most unfair to the fishermen.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be a matter entirely under our control, of course.

Immigration, amount required for seed grain and relief advances, $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This amount is asked for to meet requirements which have arisen by reason of the unfavourable nature of last season in the southwestern part of the western provinces. The season was very dry, and the crops short, and so far as our information goes there are about 4,000 homesteaders who are short of seed grain. Seed grain has been supplied in the past under similar circumstances, and it is understood to be the policy of the country that where people are in occupation of land in the west, of which they have not acquired the ownership, so that they can raise money on it as security to buy grain, the government will make advances, taking a lien upon the land as security for those advances. The government does not make a gift of the grain; it makes an advance of the grain to the farmer, and, being the only authority that is able to take a lien upon his land, takes that lien as security for the advance. We are afraid we will have to ask for more than $50,000, but $50,000 is sufficient for the purchases that will have to be made now, so that the grain will be ready for distribution at the beginning of the season. We may have to ask for a further sum in the supplementary estimates for the coming year.

Mr. ROCHE. How does the minister estimate the quantity? Has he reports from his officers or does he judge by the applications from farmers?

Mr. OLIVER. It was known, of course, last summer, that the crop was short in that part of the country. The immigration branch has had officials, from time to time, go through the country and size up the situation. Also, of course, we have received a large number of applications. But we depend rather on the investigations of our officers. Of course, there are many people who are apt to leave off making an application until the time they need the grain, and so, between now and the spring, we may expect applications to come in of which we have not heard. But we have, as far as possible, covered the area affected by the drought and believe we have made a fair estimate of the requirements.

Mr. ROCHE. For the three provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we are not taking any action with regard to Manitoba so far as I am aware. In Manitoba, as my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) knows, in the part where the shortage occurred, the land has practically all been patented, and so there does not exist the position of which I have spoken in which the Dominion government is the only authority that can take security against the land. We are not touching cases in any of the provinces in which the land has passed out of the hands of the Dominion government. In such cases, we feel, the settler is in a position to make provision for himself, or the provincial government is the authority that should undertake the responsibility.

Mr. LAKE. Would the minister mind specifying the district to be covered. He speaks of four thousand homesteaders to be supplied. I do not think that $50,000 will cover, or anything like cover, what is necessary to supply so many. How much seed does he propose to allow?

Mr. OLIVER. At the moment, I can only outline the district in a general way. It is particularly, south of the Canadian Pacific railway main line and west of the Sault line, that is, it is in southwestern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta. It is quite true, and I have already said, that the amount we are asking for now is not all that will be required, but we think it is sufficient to carry us through the present fiscal year. As I have said, we shall have to ask for a further sum in the supplementary estimates for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. LAKE. I notice that this is for relief advances also. Is there necessity for relieving farmers in distress?

Mr. OLIVER. There has been, I am sorry to say, some necessity, and some advances have been made—not on a large scale, but there have been cases in which we felt it was needed in the general interest and that something might be done so that suffering might be avoided.

Mr. ROCHE. Does the department look to the individual farmer for repayment or to the provincial government?

Mr. OLIVER. We collect direct from the individual. On the occasion of the seed grain advances of two or three years ago, the advances were made to the provincial government, though we handled the actual distribution. The provincial government dealt with the farmers who held their patents, and collected from the farmers, and we collected from the provincial government. But in all cases where the farmer has not received his patent, he is not in a position to give security to any other authority than the Dominion government. In such cases, the Dominion government deals direct with the homesteader.

Mr. ROCHE. What has been the experience in the past as to repayment of these advances? Have repayments been made promptly?

Mr. OLIVER. I may give a few figures on that subject. Advances were made in the years 1886, 1887, 1888, 1890, 1894, 1895, 1896, total amount advanced was $4,660.08, and in 1908 the total amount advanced was $401,621.76. The aggregate of these advances for all the years named was $745,303.05. Of that total $549,858.56 has been repaid. The remainder, $195,444.49, is still outstanding. Six per cent interest was charged on advances before 1900, and since then 5 per cent has been charged. I think, under all the circumstances, the repayments have been made fairly promptly. We do not press the settler for payment. We hold a lien against his land, and when he applies for his patent the patent is issued to him, but the lien is inscribed on the face of the patent. Whenever he wishes to dispose of his land, or raise money on it, this lien must be paid off before he can complete the transaction. We find that effective in securing repayment, and, inasmuch as we are receiving 5 per cent on the advances, we have never pressed settlers for repayment. The result, I think, is a fairly satisfactory statement.

Mr. ROCHE. Does that cover patented as well as unpatented lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Only the unpatented. We have made no advances on patented lands except through and on the responsibility of the provincial government.

Mr. LAKE. I presume that, in the case of relief advances, a lien is made?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; it is the same.

Mr. LAKE. This whole question, I suppose, is being watched by the officials of the Immigration Department?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. And I presume they receive information from the mounted police and from other settlers, the people watching to see that there is no suffering?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the severity of the winter and the conditions have been such that we cannot guarantee that there have been no cases of suffering. But, so far as it has been possible and reasonable, we have done what could be done to prevent any serious cases of suffering. We believe we have done very good work and have not unduly burdened the resources of the country.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 20, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the First Minister prepared to give to the House any information regarding the treaty that is being negotiated with respect to the seal fisheries?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not to-day; we have not yet received the text of the treaty.

DAMMING THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the following letter from Governor Dix of the state of New York to the Hon. Senator Frye which appears in the New York Evening 'Post,' of February 17:

February 16, 1911.

Hon. William P. Frye, chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to Senate Bill No. 10588, introduced by Senator Oliver of Pennsylvania, which carries congressional approval of hydraulic development in the St. Lawrence river by the Long Sault Development Company, chartered on May 27, 1907, by the legislature of New York.

Congress will of course, appreciate the very careful consideration which this proposition demands, in view of its relation to both a state and international boundary stream, and a stream of primary importance to navigation as well as one whose use has been specially guarded and regulated by international treaty. The State of New York is, from its location, more directly interested than any other state in the preservation of St. Lawrence river navigation, and it is the only state with ports on that river.

In view of the superior jurisdiction of the federal government, and of its superior opportunities through its appropriate departments to pass upon problems affecting the navigation of this river, the legislative action of New York in regard to this proposed hydraulic development very properly and expressly and very clearly made concurrent action of the federal government essential to the creation of the rights in the river defined in the state Act of 1907. While the state of New York in that Act deferred wholly to the judgment which should be passed by the federal authorities on what would or would not injure or perhaps improve, the river at this point for navigation uses, it remains the duty of the authorities of this state to scrutinize any particular federal Bill which by its terms or by its necessary effect shall give vitality to the very great powers sought by the Long Sault Development Company. The state Act expressly recognizes the interest of the state in the proper settlement of all questions affecting the navigation of the stream.

Mr. OLIVER.

In my opinion, the pending Bill fails to cover properly the interests of navigation. While a survey of that part of the channel to be affected is provided for in the Bill, the survey should, in my opinion, be made prior to final action by Congress. Official approval by the secretary of war, and, if possible by the Dominion or other necessary authorities, of any specific plans for construction work should be secured before instead of after final action by Congress, and I would suggest that procedure in place of the course proposed by the Bill.

The possession by this company of the enormous powers defined in the Act of the state legislature would embrace both the state and federal authorities in negotiations with our Canadian neighbours concerning this matter, and embarrass efforts to conserve the interests of navigation and of other property owners whose holdings would lie within the reach of the impounded flood waters and ice of this great river.

This proposed development and the development of the Niagara river are the only two instances involving state boundary waters, and both had their origin in special state legislation, in each case as it seems to me, without full appreciation of the nature and extent of various phases of public interest to be immediately or ultimately affected. As in the Niagara river case, which is now involved in another Bill pending before Congress, so in this case, I do not feel justified in speaking alone for New York state at this time, but intend to call the Bill to the notice of the state legislature, which is now in session, for consideration. Pending an expression of views by our legislature, I request through you that action by Congress on the Oliver Bill may be suspended.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

I would ask the Prime Minister to draw the attention of Ambassador Bryce to this letter and urge him to have Congress delay that Bill. As I understand it the Bill was reported by only one majority in the Senate Committee, and with a protest from New York state, a protest from our provincial governments and a protest from the Dominion government. I think the Senate will hesitate before passing the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it would be proper for us to transmit this protest to Mr. Ambassador Bryce. I would suppose that possibly he has taken notice of it already. We have made our own representations.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. MR. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I do not often complain of statements that appear in newspapers with regard to myself, but in the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' of February 18, there is a report of some remarks purporting to be made by me in the course of a debate which is supposed to have taken place on the previous day, and I think the House should be placed in possession of the facts. It appears that my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) intended to bring forward the subject of the St. Peters' Indian reserve, and there appears in the 'Telegram' a report of a very comprehensive statement on his part, and a report of what I am supposed to have said in reply, as follows:

The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Hon. Frank Oliver, opened his reply with a tirade of abuse.

He did not demonstrate to the House the correctness of his bold and reckless assertions. There was not an argument in rebuttal. He denied the correctness in a general way of the charges, but in no case did he address one tittle of evidence to sustain his denial. He adopted, said Mr. Bradbury, unfair and insincere methods to counteract the damaging effect of the serious charges made by the Indians of St. Peter's against his department.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to offer to any report that may have been given of what my hon. friend from Selkirk did not say on that occasion; but I do very strongly object to the Winnipeg 'Telegram' giving me credit for a statement which certainly I am not to be credited with.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. Speaker, just one word in explanation. I am unfortunately the victim of circumstances. I do not think I am the first man in this House with regard to whom this has occurred. The facts are simply these. I expected to have had an opportunity of laying my views before the House eight or ten days ago, I was approached by a newspaper man, and I gave him an idea of what I intended to say. The criticism to which my hon. friend refers was a criticism of a speech that he made last year, and I did use the language exactly as he quotes, that is, that he opened his remarks last year with a tirade of abuse, which was quite true. If my hon. friend refers to the Minister of Railways, he will perhaps find that he has been in the same position; he has had matters published before it took place. I understand that the same thing happened with the Minister of Labour. I was simply following the footsteps of greater men than myself in giving to the newspapers an idea of what I was going to say.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend went beyond what has occurred on previous occasions when he not only gave the newspaper a report of what he himself intended to say, but what another was to say in reply.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECURITY TRUSTS CORPORATION.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). On Friday evening last this Bill was allowed to stand over in order that the parties interested might if possible come to some arrangement in reference to the name. I have been asked to state the facts for the Security Trusts Company, Limited, which has been incorporated in the province of Manitoba, and which has been doing business there. The name proposed to be given to this company is the Security Trusts Corporation, and the promoters have asked further to be allowed to add the words 'of Saskatchewan,' that is, however, not the name that is in the Bill. Now, a company incorporated by an Act of parliament is an invisible, intangible thing, with power to perform the objects set forth in the Act; it has not a body to nourish or to starve, it has not a soul to damn or to save, but it must have a name. A salutary rule of all the committees of this House is that the name of a corporation must not be the name of any other known company, incorporated or unincorporated, or a name liable to be confounded therewith. The first two words of the name that this company wants are 'Security Trusts.' These are the first two words of the name of the company that we are now operating in the west. The third word in our charter is 'company.' The third word in theirs is 'corporation.' So that there is very little difference in the names of the two companies. The Companies Act, under which we get a charter upon an application to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, lays down the salutary rule that 'the proposed corporate name of the company shall not be that of any other known company, incorporated or unincorporated, or any name liable to be confounded therewith.' These are the express words of the statute, and the same rule is observed in this House. Most corporations are known by the first two or three words of their name, so that confusion between these two companies is very liable to occur, such as one party receiving the claim of another. It is just as inconvenient and as liable to confusion as if there were two James or two Johns in the same family. The promoters of this Bill contend that the word 'Saskatchewan' added to the name would be sufficient to distinguish it, but I submit that it would not. They also claim to have used the name. I admit that in Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan, there is a company, not a trusts company, but a loan company, called Security Loan Company, and they claim that because they have been using that name in connection with their loan company, they ought to be allowed to use it under the present charter. I submit that they ought to take some other name.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). This Bill has been waiting some weeks pending conclusion with respect to the name of the company. The Winnipeg company, I believe, was incorporated under the name of the Security Trust Company, Limited, for the purpose of transacting business in Manitoba, and there is no evidence to show that it used the word 'security' before we did. I do not know how long it has been in business. The company whose Bill I have in charge, has been carrying on business in Saskatchewan two years, under the name of the Security Loan Company, and it has a large number of loan agencies in that province. The new company which we are asking to incorporate under the name of the Securities Trust Corporation is taking over the business of the Security Loan Company, and has, therefore, the same interest in retaining the word 'security' in its title. And I submit it has just as much right to use that word as has the Winnipeg company. I am anxious, however, that there should be no conflict of names, and I am going to suggest that the name in the Bill, which is now security and trust corporation, be changed to the Security Trust Corporation of Canada. That, it seems to me, is a sufficiently distinctive name to enable this committee to pass the Bill.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not think that would be fair to this other company because it would lead to confusion between the two. The company, whose Bill is before us, intends doing business in Winnipeg and probably in eastern Ontario, in looking after trusts and estates, &c.; and the mails of each company are liable to get mixed since the only difference in their titles is that between the word 'corporation' and the word 'company.' The word 'Canada,' which the hon. member intends to add might be added in small letters and would not alter the position. There ought not to be any hesitation on the part of the hon. gentleman in giving his company some name which would prevent any possible danger of confusion.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina) Why should we give up the name 'security'?

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand it, this corporation, of which my hon. friend speaks, is a corporation that did nothing but lend money in Saskatchewan. It proposes now to do the business of trust company all over the Dominion, which is entirely different. It was not a trust company before, and it is now undertaking an entirely different business. No doubt it will do a loan business with the money on deposit, but I submit that the Finance Minister should see that it is given such a name that there could not be any possible conflict between the two companies, so that people would see exactly the company they are doing business with. So far as the Bill itself is concerned, I have no objection to its going through so long as the name of the company is such that there will not be any danger of confusion in the minds of the public.

Mr. SPROULE. Of the two companies, the one has been in operation about four years and the other about two years.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I do not know whether that is correct or not. To which one does he refer?

Mr. SPROULE. The one in Winnipeg.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have no information of that kind, and I do not think that was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. It was from him that I got the information, and I take it that it must be correct. It was doing business a considerable time before this other company was doing business at all, and consequently has a prior right, and we should not create the danger of confusion by giving a younger company a similar name. The practice we have always followed is not to allow any corporation to take a name similar or nearly similar to that of one previously incorporated; and I am sure that if the attention of the committee had been drawn to this, they would not have passed this Bill without changing the name. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) says that the company whose Bill he is promoting has been doing business in Saskatchewan for two years, and wants to keep its name; but it has not been doing a trust business at all, and it is now going into that business and thus coming into conflict with the other company in the same line. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart) made a very fair suggestion when he suggested that the name 'Saskatchewan' should be added which would make a sufficient distinction between the two, and my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) will be ill advised if he does not accept that.

Mr. BLAIN. If my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart) would direct his remarks to the Finance Minister, I am sure he will get his support. I cannot believe that this matter has yet been drawn to the attention of the hon. minister, for I remember very distinctly that, on more than one occasion, he has taken exception to a similarity of names in companies doing the same kind of business. He will bear in mind that these two companies are both doing business in the same section of the country. There might be some excuse if this was a charter for a company to do business in eastern Canada without touching the west, but in this instance, by the very nature of the case, they are competing with each other. When I recall, as I do very distinctly, the objections that have been taken by the Minister of Finance, I am quite sure my hon. friend will not consent to a Bill of this kind with a name so similar passing the House this afternoon.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is quite right, the Minister of Finance has sometimes raised that question; but I regret to say that in one or two instances his objections have been overruled. I suggested to gentlemen connected with this matter, on both sides, that this question could be better discussed if the Bill was referred back to the committee than it could be in the Committee of the Whole. I would renew that suggestion.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I accept it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad the Minister has taken that course as I have received three or four very strong remonstrances against it from gentlemen who have put their capital in the company and who feel it would cause great confusion and trouble to have this company given a name practically the same as theirs. I hope the committee will be able to find a way out of the difficulty.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I am quite agreeable to the suggestion.

Progress reported.

SENATE AMENDMENT TO PUBLIC BILLS.

On the order being called:

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 9) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.—Mr. Carvell.

Mr. SPEAKER. On Monday last when these amendments were first before the House the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) raised a point of order to the effect that these amendments could not be considered because the Bill at its original introduction into this House had not been proceeded by resolution of the Committee of the Whole, as the Bill related to trade.

At that time I stated to the hon. member that his objection was taken too late; also that the Bill itself was not before the House, but only the Senate amendments.

At the suggestion of some hon. members I allowed the matter to stand until to-day.

After careful consideration of the subject, I see no reason to change my opinion. The time at which an objection is taken to any procedure of the House has always been considered as of importance, and some objections which might have very fairly prevailed had they been taken at the proper time, have failed on account of delay. There is no special precedent upon this particular case, but there are abundant precedents to the effect that an objection to procedure must be taken promptly and before the matter has passed to a stage at which the objections would be out of place. This, I consider, to have been the case in the present instance, the Bill having passed its three readings and Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons before this point was raised. Any other ruling would lead to very undesirable complications.

It was formerly decided by Mr. Speaker Blanchet, as far back as 1880, after discussion in which the Speaker was warmly supported by Sir John A. Macdonald, that when Senate amendments were before the House these amendments only could be discussed. See Bourinot, 3rd edition, page 676.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

HOPE TOWN LOTS.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. With respect to receipts issued to Thomas D. Shorts, Hope, B.C., by the Dominion lands Agent at New Westminster, B.C., for payment of first instalment on purchase of lots in town of Hope, subject to approval at Ottawa, has said agent any authority to so deal with the matter?

2. Was the transaction approved by the department at Ottawa?

3. In cases requiring the approval of the department, is it the practice to signify such approval to intending purchaser, or is he notified only in the event of decision against approval?

4. Is there a time limit within which approval or disapproval is to be signified? If no recognized limit, within what period does the department usually take action?

5. On what date were the receipts issued to Mr. Shorts, and on what date did the department signify approval or disapproval?

6. Was any other application for these lands pending before the department?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. The Dominion land agent at New Westminster had authority to receive the application of Thos. D. Shorts for the purchase of lots 5, 6 and 7, block 10, town of Hope, subject to the approval of the department.

2. Approval or disapproval has not yet been expressed by the department in reference to the transaction.

3. There is no stated practice.

4. There is no given limit or period.

5. The applications of Thomas Dorlan Shorts are dated 9th December, 1909, the payment of $60 on account was included in the return of the agent, for the 15th December, 1909.

6. A previous application had been received from James Corrigan, who claims to have improved these lots. The claims of both parties in the case will be considered after an inspection has been made.

MR. N. D. ENNIS.

* Mr. MEIGHEN:

1. Has a claim of N. D. Ennis, of Liverpool, for expenses for sending Scandinavian and Finn immigrants to Canada, amounting to £989 6s. 0d. or to any amount been received by the government?

2. If so, has it been entertained? If not, what are the reasons?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

MR. JOHN JARDINE.

Mr. BARNARD:

'John Jardine, when he was elected in the Victoria 'Daily Times' of Wednesday, February 1, 1911, true?

'John Jardine, when he was elected in 1907, claimed that he lost work on account of his position as a Liberal representative. He appealed to the Public Works Department and was given work at the quarantine station. He was authorized to do work to a certain extent. He went on and did work and put in claims, I am speaking conservatively, to the extent of several thousands dollars in excess of the cost of the work he was authorized to do. He received that money without the knowledge of the Minister, and without the knowledge of the government.'

2. If the said statement is not correct, in what particulars is it untrue?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1.& 2. The extract in question appeared in the Victoria 'Times' of February 1, as part of a speech made by Mr. John Oliver on the evening previous. As to the statements that Jardine claimed that he lost work on account of his position as a Liberal representative and that consequently, he appealed for work to be given him at the quarantine station, these possibly may be facts of local knowledge, but the department has not been advised in respect thereto. Mr. Jardine was authorized by the agent at Victoria to do painting to a stated amount at Williams Head quarantine station and ignoring the instructions given him did work to an amount several thousand dollars in excess of what he was authorized to do.

2. No, except in case of railway mail clerk M. W. Sloan, of the Toronto district, who settled with the railway company for a very small amount before the result of his injuries was definitely determined.

3. The widow was quite aware that she had recourse at law against the railway and the department had reason to know that she received compensation for her husband's death.

4. & 5. The department is not aware of any policy other than that of considering each case on its merits. The railway mail clerks are perfectly aware of their rights in these cases, and are quite capable of enforcing them. The question of accident insurance is one entirely for their own decision.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Was William D. Tye, a railway mail clerk, killed in an accident near Paris, on or about 4th February, 1911?
2. What is the amount of contributions paid by the said William D. Tye, in his lifetime, to the superannuation fund?
3. What claim has the estate of the said Tye got on account of such contribution?
4. Is it the intention of the government to place in the estimates or supplementary estimates, the sum of $2,000, as a compassionate allowance for the family of the said William D. Tye?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Yes.
2. $530.85.
3. None under the Superannuation Act.
4. The question will be dealt with in accordance with the policy of the department to treat all cases on their merits.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MAINLAND.

Mr. A. B. WARBURTON (Queens, P.E.I.) moved:

For a copy of all reports, correspondence and documents, not always brought down, including report of survey made in 1909 of the harbour of Cape John and Tatamagouche bay, in the counties of Pictou and Colchester in the province of Nova Scotia, relating to the route of the winter steamers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of Canada, and suggesting or recommending a change or changes on such route, and an increase in the number of trips daily of such winter steamers; also a copy of all similar papers, not already brought down, relating to the route of the summer mail steamers between Charlottetown and the mainland of Canada, and suggesting a change in that route, and an increase in the number of trips daily; and also with regard to connecting such suggested route with a point on the Intercolonial railway. Also for a copy of all such similar papers, if any, relating to or suggesting the route between Cape Traverse in Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine in the mainland, as a route for the winter and summer steamers. Also for a copy of all reports, papers and correspondence relating to additional or improved aids to navigation of the harbour of Charlottetown and entrance thereto and in Tatamagouche bay and harbour.

He said: In bringing this resolution before the House I desire to make a few remarks. On previous occasions I have brought this question before parliament. It may be wearisome to hon. members of this House to hear this matter brought up periodically, but there is no other way open to me to obtain the object I have in view. I must press upon the attention of the House the difficulties with which we have to contend in Prince Edward Island, and try to enlist the sympathy of the government and of the House in an effort to remove those difficulties. Last year I went into this subject with considerable detail, pointing out the various routes which were possibly available for carrying on a winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I also went at considerable detail into the nature of the topography of the harbour on the Prince Edward Island side, that is the Charlottetown harbour, which I think is the best harbour on that side of the straits for the purpose of winter communication. I do not propose to go into that branch of the subject again this afternoon with the same detail that I did last year, but for the purpose of my argument it will be necessary for me to touch upon it. I wish to point out that the channel leading into Charlottetown, about five miles from where it leaves deep water in the Straits of Northumberland is a couple of miles wide, but it gradually narrows until it gets to the mouth of the harbour where it is a third of a mile wide. The depth of water varies from 37 feet to 75 feet, a depth ample for any ship that floats. There is plenty of water there to prevent the ice from grounding and the ice never does ground. In addition to that, there are three rivers flowing into the Charlottetown harbour, which has an entrance of a quarter or third of a mile, and as the tide ebbs and flows twice a day, it creates very powerful currents. There is a current sweeping in and out of that harbour at that channel, which keeps it pretty free from ice. As I pointed out last year, for winter purposes, and also for summer purposes, owing to the larger ships that now come there in the summer time than formerly came, some improvements are required to aid navigation. In the winter, of course, the bell buoys have to be taken up, they cannot be left out: consequently vessels plying there in winter have no buoys to guide them in coming in or going out of the harbour. Most all of the time they can manage very well without these buoys, but if by any chance vessels require to come in at night, there might be some difficulty, although even at night it would not be so bad. But occasionally, as I pointed out last year, as the weather changes, as the weather gets colder than the water, or warmer than the water, the change in temperature causes a haze to rise sufficiently high above the water, on a fine day, to interfere with navigators seeing the lights on the land itself. It is a matter of rare occurrence, this year and last year it did not happen at all, and it only occurs once in a while. But for all purposes, in the summer as well as in the winter, some improved aids to navigation are required. One that I suggested last year has been made, that is, the placing of a gun on St. Peter's island on the right hand side of the harbour, where one has now been established. In addition, the Board of Trade have been urging the erection of a light-house at the extreme outer or eastern end of St. Peter's island bar. I think there is a better place still. There is a bank or mound of sandstone at a considerable further distance out, almost at the edge of the channel coming into Charlottetown, upon which there are only nine feet of water and upon which a light-house if built, would answer all purposes. Probably the department would be able to abolish some of the lights there which are now to be found lighting the entrance of that harbour.

We had a water survey made I believe a year, or a year and a half ago, in the summer of 1909, of Tatamagouche bay on the Nova Scotia side, directly opposite Charlottetown. I may say that the distance from wharf to wharf, from the Charlottetown wharf and the wharf that could be built in deep water in Tatamagouche bay either on the Colchester side, or the Pictou side, would only be some 25 miles. I am informed, and I think I can say with certainty, that the survey made there found a depth of 30 feet of water on the Cape John or Pictou side of that bay, and a depth of 27 feet on the Colchester side. Whichever side is chosen for a pier to connect with that line of railway, I am informed that a wharf not exceeding 1,200 feet in length would be ample in order to reach this deep water. I brought this matter of Tatamagouche bay up last year, and objection was taken by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that it would require an immense amount of dredging. I think my hon. friend had not taken the precaution to acquaint himself with the conditions of Tatamagouche bay, or he would scarcely have made that remark. But his statement uncontradicted is liable to create prejudice against this route. Now, the very fact that the water on one side of that bay is 27 feet in depth, and on the other side 30 feet, and that the channel from the mainland through the Straits is of not less a depth than that, is in itself a sufficient answer to anv objection that dredging would be required there. The winter steamers never require more than 20 feet of water, as they draw only 17½ to 18 feet, so there would be a depth of some two feet more than would be required under any circumstances. I wish to emphasize the fact that dredging could not be required on account of the depth of water. I do so for the reason that persistent efforts have been made to prejudice and belittle this route by making out that such dredging would be required. A year ago the department very properly undertook to investigate the ice conditions in Tatamagouche bay, and in the winter of 1909-10, I believe that investigations were carried on there to see what those ice conditions were. It so happened that the winter of 1909-10 was an exceptionally mild one, there was very little ice, and I have no doubt that an investigation held under those conditions would not be as satisfactory as if it were held when there was more ice. Almost every winter there was more ice than there was that year, there must be much more ice now, and I would like to have an investigation made under the worst conditions as well as under the best. The tides in the Straits of Northumberland at either end are very swift. They meet in the centre and when they ebb or flow they do so at a rate varying from three to four knots. It so happens that they practically meet in the neighbourhood of Tatamagouche bay, and at that particular part the tide runs at a rate of half a knot which is almost still water.

When I took this matter up the year before last and last year I had to encounter the opposition—I do not blame him for it—of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). This question of winter navigation has been brought up time and again, although I do not think that until I took it up in the first session of this parliament the route which I am now advocating and have advocated continuously had been seriously taken in hand. Other routes have been tested, but this has not been, and I wish to point out that, owing to the short distance across Tatamagouche bay, laying directly opposite Charlottetown, very much less time would be required in making the trip across there, and the difficulties which have arisen this winter, as they have arisen regularly, would not arise. Steamers running to and fro between Prince Edward Island and the mainland occasionally encounter a snow storm, or mist, just after leaving the harbour, and you cannot expect any vessel to pursue her way in the ice when there is a snowstorm. But the distance between Tatamagouche and Charlottetown harbour is so short—it is only 25 miles from Charlottetown wharf to the proposed wharf in Tatamagouche bay, and not more than 18 or 20 miles from land to land—that a ship, such as the 'Earl Grey,' leaving Charlottetown would be able to cross from shore to shore, from harbour to harbour, in an hour and a half or less; in fact, she would get inside the entrance to the harbour in an hour. Any captain with his eyes open could tell, before starting, if he had time to make the short run from harbour to harbour, and under these circumstances it would be possible to obviate any condition which would cause harm or danger. The objection raised last year, as in fact, every year, was that the members from Prince Edward Island are not agreed upon the course that should be taken in this matter. While the members from Prince Edward Island sometimes do not see eye to eye upon all questions, there are some matters upon which they do see eye to eye. The hon. member for Pictou last year took this matter up and pointed out that he would like to see the members from Prince Edward Island agree on this question. At page 3192 of 'Hansard,' my hon. friend was good enough to say:

> I have not heard the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who come from east of the island, but I venture the prediction that they will not agree with my hon. friend from Queens in the proposition that the present winter port should be changed and that a new and experimental route should be established between Charlottetown and Tatamagouche.

The hon. gentleman did not remain in his seat to hear the reply, but the hon. member from Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Fraser), who represents the eastern end of Prince Edward Island, spoke upon that occasion, and he spoke very strongly, He said, as reported at page 3197 of 'Hansard' of last year:

I will not say much as to the relative advantages of the different ports on the mainland, because I do not pretend to have as much knowledge of the Brulé route as those gentlemen possess who have made a special study of this question. But I want to tell the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who I see is not in his seat, that if there is one thing upon which the people of Prince Edward Island are united, it is in the opinion that the Pictou harbour is the poorest harbour on the mainland for winter navigation. Let the government make no mistake on that point. The hon. member for Pictou almost taunted us to-night because we were not unanimous upon any route; but we are unanimous in the belief that the Pictou harbour offers the poorest harbour for winter navigation of any that can be mentioned. Let the government take that much for granted. Then I trust they will go on and make a good survey, and obtain sufficient knowledge to enable them to give us a better harbour. This is not my opinion only. I have studied the records and the reports of the surveyors that have been sent down by this government and by other governments, and I find there is a unanimous expression of opinion from these surveyors in their reports that Pictou harbour, on account of its shape and its situation, is certainly the least feasible on the mainland for winter navigation. It is a V-shaped harbour, opening towards the northeast, and without any protection whatever. When the northeast and easterly winds blow the ice into that harbour, the whole harbour is blocked with ice, and navigation is completely stopped.

Other members from Prince Edward Island agree upon that point. So that the objections raised to this change based upon the disagreement of Prince Edward Island members, or people, are not well taken, and there is a unanimity of opinion as to the undesirability of Pictou as a winter harbour. We all agree upon that point. I must say that although the hon. member for Kings does not hold the same political views that I do, when he took that ground he took a very manly ground, because he knew that he was, to some extent, antagonizing some of his warm political friends. I must say that I compliment him for the courage and manliness displayed by him in expressing a view which I know he honestly and conscientiously held. But I have spoken upon this question on two previous occasions at some length, and the reply that I had from the hon. member for Pictou last year, in defence of Pictou harbour, was given us in a rather superior sort of way. He informed us that men living on the mainland had a practical knowledge of the conditions subsisting there, that we poor unsophisticated Prince Edward Islanders could not have a practical knowledge of the conditions, although we had crossed year after year, and that we could not know or speak about the actual conditions of the ice in the Straits of Northumberland. We have crossed and have been stuck in the straits time and time again, but he said that we could not know and speak about those conditions as could those living on the mainland, who never had crossed there at all. That seemed to be the inference to be drawn from his remarks. As a matter of fact, we, the people of Prince Edward Island, are compelled to have a practical knowledge of those conditions, because this matter of winter communication is one of the most vital questions which concern us. Any man living on Prince Edward Island who moves about at all, who does not know more about the conditions of ice to be encountered in crossing these straits than any man on the mainland must be a person of very weak intelligence. But while my hon. friend was talking about these conditions and about the superior knowledge of gentlemen living on the mainland, he, in that very same speech, showed conclusively that he himself did not understand or know the conditions which frequently exist in the very harbour upon which he lives. I will show that. My hon. friend, replying to me and seeking to minimize the force of my argument, stated ('Hansard,' 1909-10, page 3192):

> I am surprised that my hon. friend should once more undertake to entertain the House about this imaginary ice bar that forms in front of the mouth of the Pictou harbour. I was born in the little town of Pictou and have lived there some 40 years. Only once in all the years during which communication has been maintained from that place with Prince Edward Island has an ice barrier existed there at the time of winter navigation. Since that accidental circumstance which occurred some years ago hon. gentlemen in discussing this question have talked about it as if it were a permanent and continuous obstruction that came as sure as the winter came. Any hon. gentleman who wants to make an argument for better facilities for Prince Edward Island, whether by increased facilities or a change of route, and who rests his argument upon the basis which has no existence in fact and which is an accidental circumstance which should not be used as the basis of any argument for a change in the conditions of affairs.

The statement made here is that only once in forty years has a vessel crossing from Prince Edward Island been held up by ice at Pictou harbour. I do not know what the experience of gentlemen on the mainland may be, but I have a very practical and prolonged experience from which I can cite many instances of navigation being held up at Pictou harbour. In 1873, when I was returning from college, I was stuck for four days in the ice off Pictou harbour, in a sailing ship, but of course a sailing ship could not be expected to get through when a reasonably strong steamer could, and I merely mention the incident merely as an illustration of my experience. I can fairly claim to have as much knowledge of existing conditions there as any man inside or outside of this House. Again, when I was returning from England in January, 1890, to run my first election, we were stuck in the ice off Pictou until the election was over, and any hon. member of this House who knows the anxiety there is about an election contest, will admit that I must have a very vivid recollection of that incident. But that is not all. In 1898 I was stuck in Pictou harbour for ten days, when the 'Stanley,' a very good ship, was tied up at Pictou wharf and could not get through the ice barrier outside of the harbour. In 1905 I was detained at Pictou 14 solid days, and then I had to go round by the capes. I was home for a month, and in returning got as far as the ice barrier near Pictou island, when we had to disembark and traverse about two miles of intervening ice to connect with the 'Minto' which came from Pictou harbour to meet us. That is the year my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) admits there was an accidental delay, but it is the kind of accident we don't want to occur more than once if we can help it. Again, two years ago, a member of my own family in crossing to Pictou was stuck in the ice for three or four days and finally had to return to Georgetown. The year before that a friend of mine from Prince Edward Island left Georgetown on Monday and after trying in vain for the balance of the week to get into Pictou, he got back to Georgetown on Saturday afternoon. This present season my brother was returning from here a fortnight ago and he left Montreal on Sunday expecting to be home on Wednesday, but he did not get there until Friday or Saturday morning, because the vessel was stuck on the Pictou side. Since then, the 'Earl Grey,' which is a magnificent vessel, has been stuck on the Pictou side for two or three days at a time. The 'Earl Grey' left Pictou on the 16th of this month in the morning, but she could not get further than six miles from Pictou, and she had to give it up and returned to Pictou at half-past two in the afternoon. I have this in correspondence received to-day.

Cannot make crossing until wind changes: we want a good northwest wind to move the ice clear of the light at Pictou.

I am informed by letters received in this mail that the ice off Charlottetown harbour is not anything like so heavy or troublesome as it is off Cape Bear, which is on the eastern end of the straits, on Prince Edward side, nearly opposite Pictou, and where the ice gathers. The ice coming down from the north fills up the eastern end of the straits and it blocks at Cape Bear, and some other points further up. At the present time, owing to the difficulty of crossing, our mails have to go round by the old Cape Tormentine—Cape Traverse route. I do not know that many members of this House have had to face an ice boat journey between the capes, but if so it is an experience they will not soon forget. I have been obliged to cross that way about a dozen times, the last time being five or six years ago, when we were eight and a half hours getting across. The crossing there is about eight miles wide, with about a mile of bord ice on either side and when you are trying to get over these hummocks of moving ice in a current running three or four miles an hour, with open holes all through the ice, into which the unsophisticated traveller is apt to fall, necessitating your travelling a distance of probably 20 miles to cover the eight miles actual distance, it will be realized what desperate work it is. I hope never to be compelled to cross that way again and nothing except sheer necessity will ever induce me to. I have here a picture post card bearing a photograph of these crossings, and if any hon. gentleman is curious he may have a look at it. I see here among the papers the following telegram from Halifax:

Halifax, Feb. 17.—Heavy ice has tied up all navigation in Northumberland Straits and on the north coast of Cape Breton. The government steamer 'Minto' which left Georgetown on Monday, is still in the ice off Cape Bear.

This is a week ago, and I think she is still in the ice, unless she got out on Saturday.

The government steamer 'Earl Grey' which has made uninterrupted trips between Pictou and Prince Edward Island, was yesterday for the first time unable to get through the ice. She left Pictou as usual yesterday morning, but was compelled to put back on account of the heavy ice. She will make another attempt as soon as possible.

There are, Mr. Speaker, some half dozen instances to my own knowledge of these steamers being tied up by the ice off Pictou harbour along the bar near Pictou, where the ice stretches from shore to shore, and where there is not sufficient depth of water for the steamers to get clear of it. If you meet with ice in the open sea with plenty of water on both sides and plenty of water underneath, a ship can smash through it because she has some place to dispose of it, but at the narrow entrance to the harbour where the ice is packed from shore to shore, nothing that you can build will go through it. I shall give a few more illustrations of the number of times ships have been stopped crossing over. I quoted these last year, and I am rather surprised that my hon. friend did not take any notice of them:

In the winter of 1898 I was stuck at Pictou ten days and was kept there by a northeast wind which blocked the place with ice. Many other stoppages have taken place. I looked up the other day in the reports of the department to see the record of a few more of these stoppages and I found that in 1898:

The steamer entered upon the winter mail service on the 25th December. It was not considered prudent to continue the 'Stanley' on the Charlottetown and Pictou route; the steamer, therefore, kept up communication between Georgetown and Pictou until the 22nd of January, 1898, when the ship was hemmed in by heavy packed ice off Pictou island; in trying to get through between Pictou island and the ice jam the ship ran aground on the reef. After emptying the after-ballast tank the steamer was backed off without damage on the 23rd of January. The ice loosening up, the steamer returned to Georgetown, finding it impossible to get into Pictou. On the 24th January the steamer left for Pictou again, but could not get in. The passengers and mails were landed by ice boats. The mails were transferred to the Capes route on the 26th January. The steamer was jammed in the ice at Pictou from the 27th of January to the 2nd of February.

Again in 1901:

The winter service between Charlottetown and Pictou began on January 7, the 'Stanley' running in conjunction with the steamer 'Minto,' each boat making bi-weekly trips. On February 5, the 'Stanley' got caught in the ice off Pictou harbour and remained in the ice until February 20, and did not arrive at Georgetown until February 21.

Again, the same year:

Owing to the heavy ice in the harbour of Pictou between February 5 and 21, and also on account of the shoal water on the bar the steamer was unable to move out of Pictou harbour until February 19. This matter was made more serious by the fact that the steamer 'Stanley' was at the same time icebound six miles out of Pictou harbour.

Again, in 1902:

The service between the two latter places was begun on January 10. The service was fairly regular until February 12, when the 'Minto' was caught in heavy ice off the end of Pictou island and remained fast until February 15. She was then able to get into Georgetown.

In 1905:

In leaving Georgetown on January 25, 1905, the ice was found to be very heavy and the 'Stanley' returned to Georgetown, and although repeated attempts were made to force the steamer through the ice, it was found impossible to cross to Pictou until March 3, when the 'Stanley' forced her way to the Pictou ice barrier, and the passengers and mails were transferred over the barrier to the steamer 'Minto' two miles away. The 'Stanley' reached Pictou harbour.

was found impossible to make another crossing until March 16, when the ice barrier, off Pictou, was reached and the cargo transferred to the 'Minto.' On March 21, the 'Stanley' then returned to Georgetown. It

I know about that because I was there.

On February 25, 1907, on a trip from Georgetown the 'Minto' was caught by a heavy ice-jam, in a strong gale and thick snow storm, and did not reach Pictou until March 2, and from that date until March 19 it was found impossible to reach Georgetown again, although several attempts were made. The return trip to Pictou was accomplished only on March 26.

I think this pretty effectually disposes of the idea that only once have these boats been prevented crossing by ice in Pictou harbour.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to tell us whether, from the reports he has received, the winter of the present year is considered as severe as those of the years he has just mentioned?

Mr. WARBURTON. The private reports I have received are that the winter this year is quite as severe as those of other years. But the severity of the winter is not the trouble so much as the northeast wind, which drives the ice into Pictou harbour. It is not the local ice that is the trouble; but there is a clean sweep of 250 miles from the Strait of Belle Isle to the mouth of Pictou harbour, and when a northeast wind prevails for a fortnight, it fills Pictou harbour with ice not only from side to side, but right to the bottom, and there is not a vessel built that could then go in or out of that harbour. The Strait of Northumberland separating Prince Edward Island from the mainland is a narrow strait 140 miles long. At the eastern end the strait opens up into a very broad gulf something of the shape of a letter V. At the inner end of this gulf there is Pictou harbour and Pictou island. On the Prince Edward Island side there is Cape Bear. From that point westward the strait gets narrow. Further up on the Prince Edward Island side there is Point Prim, running three or four miles out into the strait like a wedge. The trend of the current in the strait is from west to east, and if there were no northeast wind driving the northern ice into the gulf at the eastern end of the strait, the current would tend to loosen up the local ice; but if the northeast wind continues for any length of time, the ice is driven further up between Bear Point and Point Prim, and there the steamers often have trouble in attempting to carry on winter navigation between Charlottetown and Pictou, or between Georgetown and Pictou. The ice does not pass Point Prim, which is eight or ten miles to the eastward of the entrance of Charlottetown harbour. The route I advocate is entirely to the west of Point Prim and is actually protected by it. In this connection I wish to read a short extract from a letter written by the late Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Desbarats, in reply to a letter of August 7, 1909, from Mr. Patton, president of the Charlottetown Board of Trade:

I may say that it is not the fault of the captains of either the 'Stanley' or the 'Minto' that the steamers do not come to Charlottetown; it is because it is impossible for the ships to make their way through the heavy, closely-packed ice in the strait, up to Point Prim, even with such power as can be obtained from their engines. Could either of them get to the northward (westward) of Point Prim there would probably not be so much difficulty in Hillsborough bay or Charlottetown harbour.

That accords with all our experience. The difficulties in the route between Charlottetown and the mainland do not arise to the west of Point Prim, but always eastward of it. So when I am accused of basing my argument upon an isolated case or an accidental circumstance, my answer is that the dozen cases or more which I am able to give, in which the steamers have been hung up, bear me out in my contention. I can quite understand how an hon. member who lives on the mainland and has probably never crossed in these steamers in his life, can contemplate our difficulties with great serenity. If I lived on the mainland, and did not make use of these boats, I am not quite sure that I would feel so impressed with the necessity of a change as I do now.

My hon. friend, who no doubt, will dispute my statement, lives in a very nice place, on the mainland, where he has no difficulties to contend with, so far as the ice in the straits is concerned. But the people I represent, have to face any amount of difficulty coming from and going to the island. It is easy to say there is no danger, when you are not suffering yourself. We are told by the great poet of the epicurean philosophy that it is pleasant to recline on the summit of some lofty headland overlooking the storm tossed ocean, and from that place of security look out on the ships struggling in the grasp of the raging ocean. Not because we rejoice in the perils and trials that beset our fellow mortals as they battle for life and safety with the angry waves, but because we rejoice that we, ourselves, are free from such trials and difficulties; and I think the old poet pretty accurately summed up the position taken by gentlemen on the mainland, who object to any change. I wish to make another statement, because I propose, when dealing with this matter, to deal with it as completely and as earnestly as I can. Another drawback of the route to Pictou is this, that the department is practically forced to take an inferior quality of steam coal. For this I cannot blame the present or any other government, because the department cannot very well avoid doing so, so long as the steamers have to come to this port. In this connection, I would quote a clipping from the 'Guardian' of the 27th of January last, and I may add that this is not a paper which supports this government:

A considerable source of trouble on the 'Earl Grey' recently has been a poor supply of coal. The grade used is of such quality as to make it difficult to get up steam and to keep it regular.

Four weeks ago from last Friday, I am informed that the 'Earl Grey' was stuck in less than a foot of ice. But if that steamer were able to get up sufficient steam, she is capable of making her way through 18 inches of green harbour ice. She stuck however, in a foot of ice, and the reason was that, with the class of coal she had on board, she could not get up sufficient steam. I speak, of course, of the quality of that coal, only in connection with the purpose for which it is supplied in this navigation. The summer steam boat people, who run their summer steamers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, will not use it, but get coal from some other mine in Sydney which is better suited for steam producing purposes. So long, however, as this winter port in question is the one used, so long will the department be compelled to use this inferior coal. But any one can see that the winter service is not thereby given a fair chance, nor is the magnificent steamer the 'Earl Grey', which cost this country some $500,000 or $600,000, given a fair show, when she has to face the difficulties of this winter passage with an inferior coal which only enables her to get up about two-thirds of her power.

We are told that the coast at Tatamagouche bay will be very great, that it will probably cost a million or more to put up the requisite piers, warehouses, &c. Well, I cannot see any ground for that assertion. It would, of course, cost something to build a line of railway to that port, but that line will be built some of these days in any case. But to say that it will cost a million dollars, or even a quarter of a million dollars, to build a pier or such warehouse accommodation as will be required, is absurd. We have on the the Georgetown side, a good pier and warehouse and ample provision for this trade when the crossings are regular. We have at Pictou, an enormous warehouse which must have cost an immense amount of money, and which could only have been built of its present dimensions, because it was known that when the ice conditions in Pictou harbour would prevent the regular transportation of commodities, these goods would have to be stored at Pictou. When I was ice bound in the winter of 1905, there were five or six hundred car-loads of freight bound for Prince Edward Island tied up, and the only reason for the building of this large warehouse was, because occasions had arisen, and which, no doubt would again arise, when, owing to the stoppage of traffic through ice conditions, it was necessary to have ample accommodation for the storage of goods which would otherwise perish. But there would be no such need in a harbour whose navigation could be kept up reasonably well. I would not at all be disposed to criticise if a steamer were held up by a storm or a fog as that might happen anywhere. We have not many fogs down there, but we have snow storms just as you have up here. But to say that this work at Tatamagouche, to make it a suitable harbour, would cost $1,000,000, is very much exaggerated. I do not believe it would cost one quarter of that, because you would only have a 1,200 foot pier to build, and a small warehouse. But even supposing it did cost the amount estimated, we must not forget that Prince Edward Island was allowed damages to the extent of $1,000,000 up to 1901, through the failure to keep up winter navigation, and that failure occurred during many years, when this navigation was purely experimental and it could not be expectel that the authorities would know the drawbacks inseparable to this route. But these difficulties and drawbacks are now known. The traffic both passenger and freight, has largely increased and would increase still more, if we were sure of continuous navigation without any unreasonable interruption. And if these delays caused the loss of a million dollars in 1901, when the business had not very largely developed, what would the damages amount to since ? In fact it would seem to me that to-day we would be entitled to ask for aggravated damages, because experience has shown that this port of Pictou is an impossible one.

I said a moment ago that our difficulties were due to the northeast wind, driving in the northern ice, and that the trend of the current carries the ice out of the straits from west to east and and not from east to west. My reason for this statement is this, that the steamer ' Stanley ' some years ago lost her propeller blades up in the Straits of Northumberland. She was in the ice a considerable time, and slowly drifted eastward some 140 to 150 miles. She must have drifted 130 miles to the east. In the old days of wooden ships occasionally a ship leaving harbour late in the autumn got caught in the ice in the Straits of Northumberland and invariably drifted to the eastward, showing that the trend of the current is in that direction. Thus if there were no wind the natural trend of the current would have the effect of loosening up the ice even in the eastern end of the straits but, in view of the fact that this northern ice does not come down the straits beyond Point Prim, we have not even that to contend with. We have, it is true, heavy ice going up and down the straits between the two shores, but it is not that terrible ice which is packed in, and the distance is only a short one. From investigations made over a number of years, I do not know that any investigation was made this year although I have had a report, it would appear that there is no ice jam that would prevent the vessel from crossing. The western ice does not come down, it never finds its way up the straits except in small quantities; it is the ice that forms and piles up along the straits to the south and which does not present insuperable difficulties in crossing. In the early part of this season, up to the middle of January, the ' Earl Grey ' made trips to Charlottetown and Pictou. Up to that date we had a mild season. I crossed on the 14th and a sail boat could have crossed that day, but the weather changed the following day, and the next week they had it bad, a heavy snow storm set in, and the ' Earl Grey ' had to go to Georgetown. I have taken an extract from the ' Guardian ' of January 19, in which it says:

> The severe weather of the last three or four days has evidently made heavy ice in the straits. Yesterday at nine-thirty a.m. the 'Earl Grey,' en route to this port from Pictou, encountered very heavy ice off White Sands——

White Sands is between Point Prim and Cape Bear.

> ——and was compelled to back up three times to make headway through it. She came around the east end of Pictou island, making her trip one half an hour longer. A Marconi received here from the 'Grey' at 11.15 stated: 'The strait is full of ice from Pictou, west, which is very heavy in places. 'Grey' in good trim, is doing splendid work.' At eleven ten she was abeam Point Prim and at 12.30 docked here.

It took her an hour and twenty minutes to come from Point Prim. The distance must be fourteen miles, which shows that she could not have had very heavy ice there, whatever she may have had east of Point Prim.

> When she docked at this port, Captain Brown was tendered three hearty cheers and a tiger in appreciation of his successful determination to reach this port.

She went over to Georgetown. She decided for another reason not to discharge her cargo, and the following day she went to Pictou and brought her cargo up to Charlottetown on January 17. After that the heavy ice drifted into the eastern end of the straits and prevented her getting further down the straits. It was not the difficulties to the west of Point Prim, but the ice packed east of Point Prim that caused the trouble. In all of these cases, if my information is correct, notwithstanding the severe frost we have had this winter there would have been very little difficulty, no difficulty for the 'Earl Grey,' in passing backwards and forwards in a direct line between Charlottetown and Tatamagouche. If that is the case, considering the experience we have had in so many years, the proof we have had that Pictou is not adapted to be a winter port, the Tatamagouche route ought at least to be tried, and I would suggest that even this winter, now that the mails are being carried round by the capes, and if you have a northeast wind the vessel might approach Charlottetown, it would be a very good idea to let her try for herself and see what she can do with the ice between Charlottetown and Pictou in this very severe winter.

There are also some matters connected with the summer route, but they are not of such moment as those connected with the winter route because we can always get across in the summer, although we have to take a slightly round about way. I have pointed out on other occasions that if we have to do business for instance in Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia, it takes us three days to go a distance of 120 miles as the crow flies, about 170 or 180 by the route we have to take and return. There is 54 miles by water instead of 25, and we have to go over 100 miles further before we get to Halifax. We have to leave the island at 7 or 8 in the morning, and we get into Halifax about 8 in the evening, too late to do business. Then the train leaves Halifax at eight o'clock the next morning too early to do business, so if you have any business to do you have to spend a third day in Halifax, and get back to the island somewhere about eight in the evening. I would like members of this House from other provinces to have similar experiences for one week, when it would take them three days to go say from here to Toronto and back. That would serve as an object lesson. There is no reason why we should not get to Halifax and back in 12 hours. I have been told that we have not the right system, but we should start from the island in the evening and come back in the morning. That might be very nice for those who did not need to go, but not for those who have to. Going in that way you would have to spend two nights, one going and one coming, in Pictou instead of in Halifax, because the way the time tables are arranged now, if you got to Pictou in the evening you would be too late to connect and to get to Halifax and vice versa on the return trip. It would be out of the frying pan into the fire.

There is another matter in which the Minister of Railways may be interested. The Canadian Pacific railway have acquired the Dominion Atlantic railway and the Midland railway down to Truro. They have now practically a straight line from Yarmouth and Pictou down to Truro, and will have steamers running from Pictou and Yarmouth to St. John and Boston, in almost a straight line. They are now within almost 31 miles from Tatamagouche at Truro. It is inconceivable that a company conducted on the business principles of the Canadian Pacific railway will stay at Truro when by running a few miles further. by building a wharf and putting on vessels of 18 knots, like the 'Prince Rupert' now running on the Bay of Fundy, they can make one or two trips a day across that narrow strait, one vessel between Tatamagouche bay and Charlottetown tapping the centre and east of the island and the other between Tatamagouche bay and Summerside taking in the western trade. It is inconceivable that the Canadian Pacific railway having got that far will stop there for the sake of 35 miles of railway. That will mean that practically the whole business of Prince Edward Island will be diverted from the Intercolonial railway, the government railway, to the Canadian Pacific railway. That will mean a serious loss to the Intercolonial railway, as Prince Edward Island, instead of being a valuable feeder to the Intercolonial railway, will become largely a feeder to the Canadian Pacific railway. We discussed some time ago the question of taking over branch lines, and we should consider whether it would be wise to let the Canadian Pacific railway get ahead of us, and put this branch line down there and take over all this traffic, which they undoubtedly will. I do not think myself it is in the interest of the government railway to allow this to take place, but it is going to take place. As I have said, the Canadian Pacific railway have these fast vessels, which will be on their hands, and they might just as well send them there as anywhere else, and they will send them there. When that happens, the traffic through Pictou will die of itself, and largely the traffic between Summerside and Point Du Chêne will also die out, although a larger percentage of it will remain there than on other parts of the island owing to the fact of its affording a shorter distance to the west.

There is another route which has been suggested often, and that is the Traverse-Tormentine route. I do not propose to say anything about that just now. Of course, it is a short route, but whether you could lay our piers on the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island sides and establish a regular service there, I am not in a position to say. Before I conclude I wish to mention another grievance which we suffer by our not being able to have a direct service in the winter time. Our merchants and business men have been complaining year in and year out that they have to submit to three short hauls; instead of having two hauls, or two carriages, they have three. We cannot avoid two hauls, in as much as one has to be by water. But I think there is no need of having three. As it is, the winter traffic is carried down through Pictou, which makes one haul. It is then transferred to the winter steamers and carried over to Georgetown, another haul. Then it has to be carried some 40 odd miles to Charlottetown, a third haul. This third haul is very expensive; it takes the profit away from the business, and our merchants look upon it as a serious grievance and loss to their business; any business man must agree with me that it is so. If the system I have been urging on this House the last two or three years were adopted, and a route made directly across from Charlottetown to Tatamagouche these three short hauls would be obviated. While the route from Cape Traverse to Cape Tormentine appears to be the most direct, according to the map, and might be less unsatisfactory if it were made continuous, still, as we are at present, unless you build the tunnel, it would not do away with the three short hauls.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak at so great a length, but I wished to bring before you the salient points of this subject, and to point out what our experience has taught us, and has taught others, who are not compelled to undergo the difficulties we have had to contend with. I wish to commend this matter to the favourable consideration of the House, and to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, I must say, has always displayed the most lively interest in this winter navigation, and has done much to improve it. I specially commend it to him, and to the government, and I hope that one of these days an effort will be made to remove this unnecessary disability.

Mr. J. W. RICHARDS (Prince, Prince Edward Island). At the last session of this House I took occasion to make a few observations on this important question of transportation in the winter season between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of Canada, and this afternoon I propose to say something more on the same subject. It is very important to us on the island to have the best route that can possibly be selected for our winter service, though there is a considerable variety of opinion as to which route is really the best. As I said on a former occasion, if it can be shown that the route between Charlottetown and Tatamagouche is the best route and that it can be kept open during the whole winter, then I should say that the people of the province would be in favour of it. On the other hand, if it is not considered to be the most practicable route, and that the Georgetown-Pictou route is a better one, then I would say that we should adopt the latter. But a question as to which is the best route can only be settled by investigations, and I do not see that there can be any objection to making further investigation, in fact, I think it would be a proper step to take. We have had this winter unusually severe weather, in fact, at the present time there is heavy ice around the coast of Prince Edward Island, and around the coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and steamers have been considerably delayed, though, on the whole, they have done remarkably good work. Trade over this winter transportation has grown very largely of recent years. A large quantity of produce of all kinds is taken over by these boats, and it is highly in the interest of the people of the province that we should have the most regular and convenient route that can be chosen. Now, I am not going to dwell at length upon this phase of the subject, because it has been so well discussed by my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton), who has just resumed his seat. But I rise this afternoon more especially to draw the attention of the House and of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the desirability of making proper arrangements at Summerside in the fall of the year by which one of the steamers could be sent to that place and take away the freight that accumulates there at the close of navigation. It is true that the 'Minto' was sent there last fall. She made one trip, and it appears she loaded with a large cargo at Summerside. But instead of landing it at Cape Tormentine, she went on to Pictou and discharged it there. This arrangement was not at all satisfactory to the people of that town, and of the county I represent. There was considerable annoyance and vexation caused in consequence of the boat not remaining on what is called the western route for a longer period than she did. Where the blame lies I am not prepared to say, but I have been told that proper arrangements had not been made at Cape Tormentine by which the boat could land her freight there as should have been done, and for that reason the officers of the boat decided to proceed to Pictou. Now, if that statement is correct, I presume it was an oversight on the part of some one. I hope that when another winter comes round such arrangements will be made as will avoid any inconvenience to the handling of freight at the Cape Tormentine pier.

Summerside is one of the best harbours of the island. Some of the shoal places in that harbour have recently been dredged. Further dredging of the north shoal or middle ground is much needed and will, I hope, soon be attended to. During the summer months of each year large steamers, such as those of the Black Diamond Line and other boats, make that place a port of call. There is a railway wharf with which the trains make connection. There is a fairly good warehouse on it, although in that regard some improvement is needed. The export trade, I may say is very large from that place. During the summer months something like nine-tenths of the freight shipped from Prince Edward Island goes through Summerside and nearly all the passenger travel. The distance from Summerside to Cape Tormentine is not more than 17 miles, so that the trip is made over there in a little more than an hour. Summerside is situated in the midst of a most thriving and prosperous farming community. It has several large business establishments, three at least of the stores being among the largest of the maritime provinces, the volume of business is very large and as our agricultural development goes on, and it is going on very rapidly, we will make great progress in that regard and the amount of stuff shipped from that port will increase to ten times what it was last year—perhaps a greater extent. Considering all these things I wish to draw the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) to the importance, when next fall comes around, of having such arrangements made as will give proper facilities for shipping freight after the summer steamers stop running. This is an important matter to my constituents, and it is an important matter to the people who live in a part of Queens county represented by hon. friends who sit beside me. A great deal of the produce from their county goes that way, so that it is not a local matter alone, but it is one of provincial interest. I found the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very ready last year and on other occasions to do the best he could to meet the views of the people of my county and my own views in regard to transportation late in the fall of the year, but, unfortunately, last season things did not work at all in a satisfactory way and I would like to impress upon my hon. friend the great importance of having proper arrangements made in good time so that there will be no delay and no difficulty. I would also point out to him the desirability of giving instructions to the officers of the boats that they will not leave that port upon the first appearance of frost or because the weather may happen to be unfavourable for a day or two. They should have positive instructions to give that western route in the fall of the year a fair trial. The people have been asking for it for a great many years and until it has received a fair trial there will be grumbling and dissatisfaction. In my way of thinking, on every principle of right and reason, the people of that part of Prince Edward Island are entitled to have these transportation facilities which they have been for so many years demanding.

I had a letter only to-day from a friend in Prince Edward Island, a prominent citizen, and one of the leading merchants of Summerside. He has recently made a trip in the 'Earl Grey'. He tells me that he has read some of the criticism that has been passed upon that boat in an unfavourable way, but being a man who is well qualified to express an opinion upon such a matter, he says that the 'Earl Grey' has simply done marvellous things this winter, that she is a fine boat in every respect and very much superior to the boats they have there—the 'Minto' and 'Stanley.' There is, however, a feeling that the 'Minto', having been there for a number of years, has now pretty well outlived her usefulness and people down there are looking forward to the time at no distant day, when perhaps the Department of Marine and Fisheries may see their way clear to give us another boat similar to the 'Earl Grey.' When we get a boat of that kind we will expect that the people of Prince county will have the 'Minto' for service on the western route. But, as I stated here last session, we will never have regular and continuous communication in winter by the best of boats that can be built, because the ice conditions are such that when it packs in and around the coast of Prince Edward Island and the mainland there are periods, such as at the present time, when I believe no boat that could be built would be able to go through it. But until we get the tunnel we want to have the best possible arrangements we can have with regard to ice breakers so as to keep up communication from our little island to the mainland.

The day, no doubt will come when we shall have the tunnel, and I hope that day is not far distant. But, in the meantime, I do not think I would be asking too much of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if I were to suggest to him that he might keep the matter in view of giving us a boat similar to the 'Earl Grey' at no distant day. In view of the great development in our agricultural resources and of the rapid strides we are making in every way we expect that trade will go on increasing not only in summer, but in winter as well. From the favourable way that the minister has acted towards us in many respects we have every reason to hope and to believe that he will take up my suggestion with regard to a new boat and that he will give us the 'Minto' for the western route. Then we would have communication from both ends of the province, this would give satisfaction to us and would remove many grounds of complaint that we have had in the past. I would again earnestly impress upon my hon. friend the desirability of giving instructions so that proper arrangements will be made next fall for putting a boat on the western route at the close of navigation, or when the summer boats stop running, and that such arrangements be made and carried out in such a manner as will leave no cause for complaint.

Mr. AUSTIN L. FRASER (Kings, Prince Edward Island). Mr. Speaker, the question is sometimes asked by members of this House, why the members from Prince Edward Island take up so much time—perhaps they may use the word 'valuable' time—pressing their claims before this House, and discussing this matter of winter communication. The reason why we do this, is not far to seek. When our province entered confederation, one of the things that were promised at that time was that this government would give us continuous and efficient steam communication with the mainland for the carriage of mails and passengers. I am sorry that neither this government nor the former government has been able to carry out this provision. I am safe in saying that until the last effort is made to fulfil this provision of the terms of confederation, the members of Prince Edward Island will be compelled to occupy more or less of the time of parliament in advocating their case, and that is my excuse, if excuse be needed, for speaking now. The present winter has been a very severe one all over the North American continent, and in respect to the carriage of mails between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, we are to-day bringing them across in small iceboats between the capes, just as we did fifty years ago. No improvement therefore, has been made in this respect in half a century, when everything else around us has made a wonderful advance. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no knowledge of the feasibility of the new Tatamagouche route proposed by the mover of this motion (Mr. Warburton), and if parliament or the country is in possession of any exact information concerning it, I have been unable to discover it. I do not wish to say anything against that route for I would be glad to see a new harbour on the mainland but, while not taking back anything I said last year about the difficulty of winter communication being at Pictou, I would say to the government: Before you abandon that route and take up a new route, you should feel perfectly convinced that the new route will be the solution of the difficulty. Unless the government has positive knowledge that the new Tatamagouche harbour will be a better harbour than Pictou harbour, it would be a waste of money to experiment on Tatamagouche. There is, in my own county, Georgetown harbour, which is without doubt, the best harbour on the island, and even if Tatamagouche should turn out favourably, the steamers would still have to come to Georgetown from Tatamagouche, because I believe it is impossible to navigate the Straits of Northumberland into Charlottetown harbour in heavy winter ice. I am informed, and I believe it to be true, because I have often entered Charlottetown harbour, that it is a shallow harbour and one great danger is that, if the iceboat touches bottom, a catastrophe would happen, because the running ice would pile over the boat. Above all, what is required by ice navigators, is plenty of water and plenty of sea room. On one thing I can congratulate the department, and that is, that a few years ago, they decided to leave, to a large extent, the navigation of the straits to the captains of the boats. I cannot agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton), that the captains ought to be restrained from leaving Charlottetown or Summerside or any other port, when it is thought there may be danger. Nobody knows better than the captains whether there is danger or not, and the department was right when it decided to permit the captains to use their own judgment and to give them a free hand in this matter. I feel that the men in charge of these boats, will continue to give the very best satisfaction that men can give who are engaged in the most difficult navigation on the North American continent. I wish to add a few words of praise for the captains of these steamers. Captain Finlayson, of the winter steamer 'Minto' has been for 37 years engaged in the navigation of this difficult passage, and during all that time, he has never lost one life or one pound of freight.

Mr. BRODEUR. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. If there is any man in Canada to-day, who deserves reward for long and faithful service, it is Captain Finlayson, who after 37 years in active service, still pursues with vigour, his arduous calling. I may add that Captain Brown, who is in charge of the ship 'Earl Grey', is, I am informed and believe, also a very experienced and careful navigator. I do not think the department need have any fear of men of this class, whose judgment has been tried and found not wanting on many an occasion. I trust the department will continue to allow the captains to go in and out of such harbours as they deem fit. I am aware also, Mr. Speaker, that the merchants of Charlottetown and Summerside wish to keep these boats on the run late in the fall, to carry away their freight. I have no fault to find with that, but I do believe the government would not be justified in taking any risks with the ships. The government is not bound to find boats to carry freight; their duty is to provide transportation for the mails and passengers and the merchants of Summerside should not forget that there are merchants in Georgetown and other parts of the island which have a right to be considered when it comes to carrying freight in the fall and spring. The merchants of Charlottetown require these boats to be kept there at considerable risk, and if they had their own way, they would probably keep them there all winter, even at the risk of being frozen in. The department is not supposed to run boats for the accommodation of Charlottetown merchants. The Charlottetown merchants sometimes scold these poor captains, who are trying to do their duty, and they keep the wires hot up to the department at Ottawa, with complaints, and even some of the newspaper editors of Charlottetown so far forget, what we should all join in asking for, namely, continuous accommodation for mails and passengers, that they sometimes find a great deal of fault with the captains, when in their wisdom, and as the result of their experience, they deem it necessary to go to Georgetown. As I have said, the merchants in Charlottetown and Summerside should not forget that there are merchants in other parts of the island; they should not forget that during nine months of the year the merchants in Georgetown, Montague, Murray Harbour, and other points, have not a word to say about the landing of freight at Summerside and Charlottetown, where the great bulk of the freight goes. But, these same gentlemen find fault, because for three or four months in the year, the ships go into Georgetown, which is the only natural winter harbour on the island. Now, I must draw the attention of the minister to what is really only a small matter in connection with the port of Georgetown, and I am sure he will have the complaint rectified. I want to read an extract from the Island 'Patriot,' the leading Liberal newspaper on the Island, of the 15th instant, to show the minister that even at the port of Georgetown, where all the shipping is going, the facilities are not as good as they should be:

> There was a rumour that a telephone had been installed in the railway station in Georgetown. A shipper however tried to call the station up, and he found to his consternation that the rumour was unfounded. Yet this is the twentieth century when the old stage coach is no longer with us, and many other old things have passed away. Nevertheless certain antiquated services such as a deaf and dumb telephone at what is now the principal shipping station of the island are still with us. How long, oh how long, must the public endure such back woods methods.

This is a small matter, and I trust, now that the minister's attention is called to it, that he will see that a telephone is put into the station at Georgetown, which would cost only $20 or $25 a year. It is very annoying to shippers and travellers who want to learn whether the boat is in or when it is going out, to find that there is no telephone at this, the principal shipping port of the province, and that the nearest public telephone is at least a quarter of a mile distant. While on this subject I wish to call the attention of the minister to another matter, for which he may be able to provide a remedy. The Charlottetown 'Guardian,' of the 16th of February refers as follows to the crossing at the capes:—

> To-day we are for a time back again to primitive conditions, the conditions of fifty years ago, with regard to our communications for mails, passengers and freight, to and from the mainland. Let us hope that it may not be for long, and let due credit be given to Captain Taylor and Post Office Inspector Whear for the promptness with which the change was made when the winter steamers proved unequal to their work.
>
> The change is the fourth of the season so far. The winter service began with one steamer on the Summerside-Tormentine route, progressed with one steamer and then with both on the Charlottetown-Pictou route and later, first one and then both steamers on the Georgetown-Pictou route, until that route has become impassable. Now, as already stated, we are back to the Traverse-Tormentine route and the little ice-boats of fifty years ago.
>
> This means that until the steamer service can be regularly resumed travel to and from this province will be mainly limited to a very few robust persons in the most active period of their life, whose business is urgent and who are willing to undergo the risks and hardships of the trip at the capes. Women, children, the aged, and infirm are practically debarred from coming to or leaving the province in that way.
>
> This is, of course, beyond immediate remedy. But better things were promised us by the terms of our union with Canada, and by Sir John Macdonald and by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, many, many years ago. And in the meantime what has been done or is now doing to prepare the way for better things? Little has been done and nothing is doing.
> An obvious need is a better steamer to replace the 'Minto,' which never was a good ice boat and is now practically useless in any emergent ice conditions in the straits.

This was referred to by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Richards), and I thoroughly endorse what he has said with regard to it. The most successful steamer on that route was the 'Stanley.' After some years the 'Minto' was built, but it did not quite come up to expectations. As a matter of fact, it is well known to everybody that the 'Minto' was not better, if she was as good as the 'Stanley.' But the new steamer, the 'Earl Grey,' which was put on a year ago, is proving to be superior to any of the steamers that preceded her, and it is thought now that until we get the tunnel, which I thoroughly believe is the only permanent solution of this question, we should get another new steamer of the type of the 'Earl Grey.' I would urge the department to consider the advisability of so doing. It may perhaps be said that in asking for this we are asking too much, but I think not. When the 'Stanley' was built a few years ago, the government said to us, we are giving you the 'Stanley,' but the 'Stanley' has been taken off the route last winter and this winter and has been put on service at other parts of the Dominion. Therefore I do not think we should be charged with the cost of the 'Stanley;' we should rather be credited with it, since the steamer has been taken away from us, and this is a reason why the government should now give us another steamer of the type of the 'Earl Grey. This extract from the Charlottetown 'Guardian' continues:—

Nothing short of another steamer as powerful as the 'Grey' as a sister ship—a pair of 'Greys'—can meet the reasonable demand till we are altogether relieved of dependence upon steamers. There never can be an adequate winter service by steamers.

But for the present distress it seems reasonable to ask that the 'strap passengers' who help to haul the government boats and mails should be given free passage in return for their labours, and that the few other passengers who are compelled by age or weakness to remain in the boats should be taken over at regular summer passenger rates. This is a reasonable proposition. On sea-going vessels the man who 'works his passage' is not expected also to pay in money for his passage. Any 'strap passenger' who crosses at the capes earns his passage twice over.

The ice-boat service at the capes is a government service. Passengers who cross there and utilize it are compelled to do so solely because the government has failed to maintain the stipulated continuous service by steam between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. For this reason it seems to the 'Guardian' that passengers who assist in the arduous work of launching, working and hauling the boats should be allowed free passage.

And the rates heretofore charged, and which passengers to and from the island have been paying for thirty-eight years since confederation, are exorbitant. The charge of four dollars per passenger for a distance of seven miles is exorbitant. It is 57 cents per mile. And the charge of 28 cents per mile for a 'strap passenger' who works his way is even more so.

From what we know and have heard of Hon. L. P. Brodeur, he is disposed to be just and fair, and is not unsympathetic towards our people in their winter disabilities and hardships. We, therefore, appeal to Mr. Brodeur, and to the government through him, to reduce or sweep away altogether the unreasonable charges upon passengers at the capes. This request has been made before by the 'Guardian' and has not been heeded. It will be made again and again whenever the people are compelled to use this route in winter. We sincerely hope that this matter may be put right at an early day.

I shall not make any further comment on this, as the hon. minister is present, and I merely wished to place it before him for his consideration. It is not fair that these passengers, who have to cross the straits, and who have to get out and assist in hauling the boats, should be charged the exorbitant rate of 28 cents a mile for that service, especially as it is a government service.

One of the great difficulties in travelling to and from Prince Edward Island in the fall and spring is the uncertainty of the route you have to take, and I would ask the minister to remove that difficulty by placing one of the winter boats on the Pictou and Georgetown route on the first day of December and let it remain there until the first of May, and not rove around from one route to the other, as is sometimes done. The people on the island would then know that there was a decided route on which they could always depend, and they could buy their tickets and know which route to take to go to the mainland. Then, if instead of taking the Pictou and Georgetown route, they preferred to take a chance and go by Summerside or Charlottetown, that would be their own choice. This uncertainty about routes is one of the great drawbacks of our winter traffic. When I was going home during the Christmas holidays and got down to St. John, I could not find out whether I had to go to the island by Georgetown or Summerside, or Charlottetown, and there was nobody there to give me the information. I would, therefore, ask the hon. minister to carefully consider the suggestion of placing at least one winter boat just before the close of navigation, say the first of December, and keeping her on that certain settled route up to the first of May, when navigation opens again. Of course, the general impression among the people is that the steam navigation company want to keep the winter boats off all routes until the ice forms and navigation is closed, so that the company may get all the passenger and freight traffic up to the last minute. But the winter never comes on any settled day, and there will always be an uncertain time, a hiatus, between the summer and the winter travel, when the people do not know whether they should go by Georgetown, Summerside, or Charlottetown. But if you would put one of the steamers on the Georgetown and Pictou route and keep her there between the first of December and the first of May all that uncertainty and inconvenience would be removed.

Mr. BRODEUR. Even if the summer vessels continued to run?

Mr. FRASER. Yes; because the summer vessels may run to-day and to-morrow be unable to cross, and the passengers would be unable to tell whether they should go to Summerside or Georgetown, or Charlottetown.

Mr. BRODEUR. Would it not be better to put a boat on the route from Charlottetown to Pictou?

Mr. FRASER. The only difficulty is, as has been the case this winter, that you have to make a change. This winter there have been four changes. There comes a time when you have to change to Georgetown, and this year the 'Minto' had to make a change of route quite a long time before the 'Earl Grey' changed. What I would urge on the hon. minister is that there should be one certain route from early in December until May, and that is the route between Georgetown and Pictou. If the government will do this they will certainly give great satisfaction to the people.

Mr. JOHN STANFIELD (Colchester). As I represent a county which is interested in this resolution, I feel it my duty to say a few words in its behalf. Ever since I have had the honour of a seat in this House I have heard this question brought up from session to session, and previous to that period this question was also brought up, as I see by 'Hansard,' every session. If my information be correct, that the time of the House is worth $21 per minute, we have already expended on this subject more than $3,000 this afternoon, and if the hon. the Minister of Finance would calculate the time given to this subject every year, he would find that the amount of money thus expended would go a long way towards meeting the interest, if not on a tunnel, at least on a new steamer. Reference has been made to Tatamagouche, which is in the county I have the honour to represent. Well, last summer I had the pleasure of visiting that part of the county, and an old resident informed me that very little trouble had been experienced with the ice there during any winter. From that district to Truro, a little over 30 miles, the railway, which is in prospect, would give the people of Prince Edward Island much better communication and would also furnish a shorter route from that locality to Truro and Halifax. I would, therefore, urge the Minister of Railways to take up the question of building this railway at once. If it were built, and the government put on a line of steamers from the mainland, we would have one rate from Prince Edward Island to points on the mainland, instead of three, as at present. So important was the building of this railway considered at one time that two local members pledged their seats that if it were not constructed at once they would walk across the floor of the House, but so far neither of them has done so, although one has gone to the Supreme Court. I must congratulate my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Warburton) on the able manner in which he has presented his case. As he has said, if the Canadian Pacific railway should build that line, that would take away from the Intercolonial railway a considerable amount of business. I do not propose to say any more on this subject, further than to urge on the government the imperative and immediate necessity for better communication with Prince Edward Island.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). We have had, particularly during the last few sessions, since my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Warburton) has had a seat in this House, this question of winter navigation discussed from a new standpoint. During the last parliament, and for some parliaments before that the hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island insisted that the government of Canada should enter upon the enterprise of the construction of a tunnel between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. I well remember in the last parliament an hon. member who represented that province, every year entertained us with the most vigorous protestations that unless a tunnel was immediately constructed for the people of Prince Edward Island, so that they would have railway communication under the Straits of Northumberland, connecting their railway with the railways of western Canada, all kinds of dire consequences would follow to Prince Edward Island, and to the rest of the Dominion. The Department of Marine and Fisheries pursued the same policy, that had been adopted in the past, of seeking to obtain the best communication that could be obtained by steam vessels, and as a result of the wise policy of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the ice-breaker 'Earl Grey' was procured. She has now been on the service for two years and I believe every gentleman who spoke here today and every gentleman from the maritime provinces who understands the situation will say, she has been a great success. But the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Warburton) does not appear to have been satisfied by the best possible means of communication that can be obtained by steamship; he has to find something else to growl about, and raise an agitation among his constituents and please a coterie of patronage hunters in his constituency. Therefore this House has had inflicted on it for two sessions this long imaginative story about having communication between a port in Prince Edward Island, which is never open in the winter even according to hon. gentlemen who live in that province. The hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fraser) has told us that Charlottetown is an impossible port in winter, but my hon. friend comes here and seeks to obtain a winter service continuously between this impossible port in his province, and a port in which there are no wharfs to which a steamer can go, and to which men who belong to the island, and have owned steamers all their lives, never thought of going until this little coterie in Charlottetown evolved the scheme which the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Warburton) exploited. This is a very frank and practical statement of the case in regard to the story we have heard this afternoon. My hon. friend has dilated upon every possible shortcoming that he thought could be found to exist in the port and the constituency from which I have the honour to come. He is not content with attacking our facilities as a port, although it has been and is the only port on the mainland from Point du Chêne to the straits during the whole history of the Straits of Northumberland, from which communication has been maintained by sea not only with Prince Edward Island, but with the Magdalen Islands and the west coast of the island of Cape Breton, and no one, until my hon. friend evolved this story, has heard of such attacks as he has made on the port which every one has recognized as the one and only port on the northern coast of Nova Scotia. He has shown his prejudice in this matter by going so far as to attack the quality of the coal mined in my county. He may know something about crossing the straits in winter, but what he does not know about coal is a very large quantity. If he goes to Mr. Hyndman, the centre of the coterie exploiting this scheme, and asks him if he will endorse the proposition that Pictou coal is not good, that gentleman will not follow him. If he goes to Mr. Sharp, the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island railway, who has especially asked the Railway Department during the last five years, that the coal from the county of Pictou should be supplied for the operation of the railway, he will find that that gentleman will not stand by him in the charges he has made here, and when he told us that the people who run the Prince Edward Island Navigation Company's boats go somewhere else for coal, he forgot to say that the people who control the obtaining of supplies for the Prince Edward Island Company's boats are agents for a coal company and are interested in selling other coal. Further the Navigation Company's steamers have not time to coal at Pictou. They get there at eleven o'clock, and leave on the arrival of the train. For these reasons they get their coal from the gentlemen who are interested in the navigation company and in the company that sells the coal. My hon. friend, in dealing with a large question of this kind cannot hope to raise a case by descending to such miserable, unnecessary attacks upon industries that stand in the front ranks of the industries of Canada.

He seeks to raise a bugaboo about the danger it would be to this country if the Canadian Pacific railway undertook to build from Truro to Brulé. At this moment, I am advised that the Canadian Pacific railway recognizing the advantages as a railway centre and as a port of the town of Pictou, are considering the advisability of applying to the Minister of Railways for running powers in order to get into the industries in the county of Pictou and to get the advantage of the port there. My hon. friend need not fancy that the Canadian Pacific railway, with all its judgment and capacity, will be led into any such ridiculous proposition as he has advanced in this House, or that they would think of building a railway in the place he suggests. He speaks as if Charlottetown was the whole province of Prince Edward Island. He utterly ignores the conditions in the western part of the island, which my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Richards) represents. The hon. gentleman there represents a constituency from which communication is maintained in the summer months between Summerside and Pointe du Chêne. My hon. friend from Prince has the greatest difficulty in keeping the winter steamer as long as she might run there on account of the importunities of gentlemen in Queens county who do not want their brothers in Summerside to have the advantage of that steamer as long as she could go there, but continuously insist that she shall be brought to Charlottetown.

Mr. WARBURTON. That statement is not correct. I appeal to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if I did not back up to the member for Prince county to the best of my ability, to get him to send the steamer to Summerside.

Mr. RICHARDS. My hon. friend from Pictou misunderstood me. I do not think I stated that the hon. member for Queens had done anything to prevent us from getting our steamer in the western part.

Mr. MACDONALD. I did not attribute to the member for Prince any such statement and I did not say that the member for Queens had prevented the steamers or tried to prevent them from going to Summerside, but the coterie he represents have been continuously asserting through the newspapers, and otherwise, that the proper place to run from was Charlottetown and not Summerside. That was the point I was making, and had a right to make. The member for Kings (Mr. Fraser) comes along and tells us that the hon. member for Queens did not know what they were talking about when they spoke of Charlottetown being a possible winter port. There is only one winter port in Prince Edward Island, and that is Georgetown, and I agree in that statement. Every man who has lived along the Straits of Northumberland and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, every layman, and every man accustomed to the sea, and acquainted with seafaring conditions there in winter, will tell you that such a thing as navigation to Charlottetown continuously in winter is ridiculous, that no one would ever consider it as a matter of possibility. My hon. friend knows that the reason the 'Earl Grey' is not running to Charlottetown from Pictou to-day is not because she cannot get into Pictou but because she cannot get into Charlottetown, and he knows that the coterie he represents abused privately and publicly that honoured public servant Captain Finlayson, whose long service in connection with this winter route entitles him to admiration from every fair-minded man, because he took the 'Minto' away from Charlottetown sooner than they thought she should have been taken.

Captain Finlayson, who entirely deserves the compliment paid him by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fraser), took away the 'Minto' from Charlottetown merely because he could not get in there; as a prudent officer, he had to take her to the only port in Prince Edward Island, where navigation could be properly maintained in winter. I regret that I have to speak with some heat in regard to this matter. But my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton) both last winter and this winter, has gone out of his way to attack the constituency I have the honour to represent, and to make statements which are without foundation. I regret that he finds his case so weak that he must take the course of attacking everybody who happens to be associated with another route, and everything which is connected with the permanent conditions which have obtained for the last fifty years, until my hon. friend had this new idea. Now, let us examine the facts. First let us ask which is the best port in Prince Edward Island from which communication could be made. My hon. friend from Kings says it is Georgetown, and I say it is Georgetown. Nobody ever proposed seriously to take the chances of making the long windings which have to be followed from the time you leave Cape Bear unless you pass the lighthouse, and go up to Charlottetown, until my hon. friend himself put forward this view. I say my hon. friend will find it impossible to get from the captains of the winter boats a statement that Charlottetown is a port which can be navigated in winter, or if so why did Captain Brown and Captain Finlayson go elsewhere? Captain Brown cannot be charged with not being anxious to do everything possible to utilize Charlottetown. Why did these gentlemen in the exercise of their judgment and having regard to the safety of their boats, remove them from Charlottetown? Simply because they know they could not go there safely, and they did not wish to risk the government's property and the lives of the passengers in attempting to enter that harbour. Georgetown is situated on the eastern portion of the island and faces the Gulf of St. Lawrence ; and while difficulties which are to be found in winter navigation exist in that vicinity, yet I am in the judgment of every one in this House who is acquainted with the matter when I say that Georgetown is the only possible port in Prince Edward Island with which winter communication can be maintained at all seasons of the year. My hon. friend tells us that Georgetown is not the best port but that Charlottetown is the best ; because if Georgetown is the best port in Prince Edward Island from which certain and continuous communications can be carried on from that island, then he must at once assent to the proposition that Georgetown must be the base of operations there. He has to satisfy the government that Charlottetown is a better place than Georgetown to start from, before he can ask the Department of Marine and Fisheries to take the steamer away from Georgetown. My hon. friend cannot do that, and he knows it ; it is not a matter for argument, because the results have shown it, and conditions exist there which contradict any proposition of that kind. In considering this question I think we can start from the fact as absolutely proven, that Georgetown is the one and only place in Prince Edward Island from which winter communication has been maintained in all seasons of the year. Now, winter communication has been maintained from Georgetown on the island with Pictou on the mainland, ever since there was any attempt by any government to solve this question. I say the onus is on my hon. friend, and upon the gentlemen who are behind him in this matter, to satisfy the minister, and the government with evidence on that point which shall be so clear that there can be no doubt about it. The onus being against him, they should show that they have something better to offer than Georgetown and Pictou, before conditions are to be changed in any way. My hon. friend has not found a better port than Georgetown to start from, and he cannot start from Charlottetown and go to the mainland at all.

He says it is unfortunate that we have these three interruptions in the transportation of our freight, as if no person else in any other part of Prince Edward Island was interested in this question; and, therefore, because certain goods are assigned to Charlottetown, you must try and carry the goods to Charlottetown, even though the boats cannot get in there. That is, in brief, my hon. friend's argument. In order to sustain that weak premise, he attacks the conditions which he says exist in the ports of the constituency I have the honour to represent. Last year my hon. friend went over this question at great length. I endeavoured to find out the truth of some of his statements, and I applied for information to a man who knew. I wrote to the pilot of the 'Earl Grey,' a man who has been piloting on that service for the last ten years. I thought he would be able to tell us whether my hon. friend's information was accurate or not, and this is what that gentleman wrote to me on February 15, last year :

Pictou, N.S., Feb. 15, 1910.

Dear Sir,—In a report of the speech of A. B. Warburton, Esq., M.P., made in the House of Commons on the winter service between Pictou and Prince Edward Island and which appears in the 'Patriot' of Charlottetown, there are many incongruities, contradictions and untruths, regarding the entrance of ice into Pictou harbour and also concerning the grounding, &c., of the 'Stanley.' I would therefore call your attention to the following facts:—

1. Regarding the ice from Belle Isle entering the harbour, I may say there is not any of that ice enters the strait, and hence cannot find entrance into Pictou harbour. All the ice we have to fight against here is made in Northumberland strait. Ice comes out of Egmont bay, Bay Verte, and other places on and about Northumberland strait in sheets, and moves east all the time till it 'brings up' against Cape Breton Island, where it begins to back and fill up the strait. The ice continues in this way until a southwest wind drives it out to sea, after having cleared the eastern route, Georgetown to Pictou and gives a good crossing.

Of course you know the prevailing wind during the winter is from west to northwest, then the wind comes southwest and clears Pictou it blocks Charlottetown.

Now the northeast wind which he claims blocks Pictou is worse for blocking Brulé. There is nothing to prevent the ice from entering and blocking that place so that nothing could come out or enter that port. Whereas the ice brought by the northeast wind as regards Pictou is broken by Pictou island by means of the tides about there.

Regarding the time three years ago to which he refers when we were blocked in Pictou 59 days. The ice came in with a very high spring tide and grounded, when the wind shifted as by that time the tide had fallen and we grounded. That was the only time in all my experience I have seen it do anything like that.

That is the occasion of which I spoke last year when I said that it was the only time in forty years when it had occurred. The pilot agrees that in his experience that statement is correct.

As regards the 'Stanley' getting ashore he claims it was owing to the heavy northeast winds and ice. This was not the case. The facts were as follows: We made a mistake as to the tide. It should have been ebb according to the tables, and also to the regular tides, but the tide was ebbing and we were carried ashore. Captains Brown and Finlayson could substantiate that statement regarding that occasion if it were required.

To prove the statement that the ice is made the way that I stated, i.e., makes in Northumberland strait and drifts down. Take the case of the 'Stanley' which drifted away from Sea Cow Head on January 12, and drifted down back of Pictou island, further towards Arisiag and thence down to Cape George and Palmere island, and then back to Pictou island where she was freed from the pan of ice. The foregoing shows very clearly there is very poor chances for Belle Isle ice to get into our strait and as a consequence into Pictou. We went to relieve the 'Stanley' in the 'Minto' from Pictou with coal, &c., and she was then stuck five miles southeast of Pictou island.

Let me say to my hon. friend that when he was speaking about occasions upon which he was stuck in the ice none of these ice barriers to which he referred were found in the vicinity of Pictou. Here is an illustration of what I said last year:

We got within two miles of her, and got into heavy ice and had to stop there, whereas if we had continued to Georgetown that day with passengers and mails we would have made the run from there in two hours. What makes the passage from Pictou to Georgetown so clear is that the tides open it. As a usual rule it is open water from Cape Bear to Panmere Island with the wind off shore.

Another good example as to where the tides run is that one winter a buoy went adrift from West Cape and it took all winter to drift down to Port Hood.

Regarding the boats being stuck outside for a number of days the ice jams them so that a ship cannot get free until a change of wind.

All those incidents of which my hon. friend talked last session as if they had occurred in or about the harbour of Pictou occurred out in the Northumberland Straits.

The foregoing statements are facts and can be proven by myself from experience, and also by the captains and other pilots, while on the other hand the statements made by Mr. Warburton are simply from hearsay.

This has been a very mild winter, or the 'Grey' would not be running to Charlottetown as long as she has been running. I know this from experience, not from hearsay. I hope the foregoing facts will be of use to you in presenting the Pictou side of the question for the consideration of the hon. Minister of Marine and the members of the House of Commons.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONALD. When the House rose at six o'clock, I had demonstrated, I think, that Georgetown was the one available port in Prince Edward Island from which winter communication could be maintained. That being so, the question is as to the best place for the steamer to run to on the mainland in winter. It is manifestly absurd to suggest running from Georgetown to Brulé because Pictou island intervenes, but it is still more absurd to suggest, as my hon. friend from Queens has done, that the steamers should ply between Charlottetown and Brulé. The hon. gentleman from Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm) has argued that Cape George was the proper place for the steamers to run to from Georgetown, and while it has the merit of being the nearest point on the mainland to Georgetown, it labours under the unfortunate difficulty that it is many miles distant from a railway. Surely my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Warburton) and the special coterie whom he represents would hardly be satisfied with a proposition that the steamer, starting from the best seaport on the island for winter service, should land its passengers at Cape George some 25 miles away from a railway. I understand that my hon. friend from Inverness is disposed to urge seriously that Port Hood in his county is a place with which winter communication might be maintained, but there my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Warburton) would run across the difficulty of meeting the ice from Belle Isle which has always been the terror of their dreams by night and their aspirations by day so far as winter service is concerned. The result is that these hon. gentlemen are forced to come to Pictou which their forefathers (who probably had as much judgment in this matter as they have) selected as the best place on the mainland and with which the subsidized boats which are owned and controlled by Prince Edward Island people have maintained connection uninterruptedly through all these years. It does seem to me that my hon. friends from the island in discussing this question could have freed the discussion from the peculiar elements which they have introduced into it this afternoon. I say that the attack made by the hon. gentleman from Queens (Mr. Warburton) in regard to the coal which is produced in my county was entirely gratuitous and unnecessary. It was not prompted by proper motives; it was entirely unjustifiable, and the hon. gentleman was going far afield in looking for some argument in which to discuss the availability of a winter port on the mainland when he dragged that question in, without any knowledge on his part, and without any justification from even the people whose mouthpiece he is here. He chose to tell us that the railway accommodation provided at Pictou was entirely provided on account of the winter communication, and were it not for that it never would have been provided. The hon. gentleman does not know anything about the subject when he spoke in that way. Let me tell him that the four towns in my county contribute to the Intercolonial in gross revenue three-quarters of a million dollars a year, and that is contributed entirely by business inherent in the county and is not dependent upon any of the imaginary conditions mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I resent the attack of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Warburton) on my constituency in the strongest possible way, and I reiterate, that the argument he presented to the House is not based upon a desire to find a true solution of the best way to maintain winter communication with the island. On the contrary, the hon. gentleman is prompted by a coterie of patronage hunters in the county of Queens who do not represent the people in any degree whatever. The hon. gentleman says now that although Georgetown is the best place to start from, Georgetown should be eliminated and Charlottetown made the starting point, although the captains who are sympathetic to maintaining winter communication with Charlottetown if they could, have been obliged to abandon it solely on account of the difficulties of entering that port. Leaving the best port on the island, these gentlemen ask this House seriously to adopt the poorest port on the island for the maintenance of the winter service. Where do they want to go; for what do they ask the minister to disarrange the conditions of 50 years in regard to summer and winter transportation? They ask the minister to take a route which begins nowhere and fix the other end of it nowhere. That is their proposition. I have here a blue print showing the results of the examination and surveys made in Tatamagouche bay; this glorious harbour which my hon. friend (Mr. Warburton) has found in his imagination after so many years of mental worry. I find here a place called Brulé wharf situated in Tatamagouche bay, and I find the depth of water at Brulé point and Brulé wharf as shown on this plan to be 3 feet and 4 feet within a radius of a quarter of a mile of the existing wharf. I go out half a mile further and I find the deepest water you can get is 13 feet, and the hon. gentleman would have to go nearly a mile out before he finds enough water to float either of these winter steamers. True, the nominal draught of the 'Earl Grey' is only 18 or 20 feet, but, when these vessels are engaged in the winter service and their bulkheads filled with water which is necessary in order to enable them to operate in the ice, their draught is increased to about 30 feet. It is quite evident that hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars would have to be spent in dredging before the steamer could ever reach this haven of theirs at Brulé.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It would be just as cheap to built a tunnel.

Mr. MACDONALD. Pretty nearly. My hon. friend (Mr. Warburton) wants this railway to come to Brulé and the steamers to go there, but he and his friends have apparently not studied this chart because we find here a bay called Tatamagouche bay and another called John bay and at the mouth of both of them there is Amet island and the distance between the mainland from either side of Amet island is a mile or thereabouts; and Brulé, the point to which they want to get is a point away inland where a large amount of dredging would be required. There is on either side of the mainland at this point, at Malagash—which is not in Colchester county by the way,—and I am sorry my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) was deluded by the hon. member from Queens who talked about this place Brulé being an available point, because the only available points in Tatamagouche bay to which steamers can go safely are Malagash which is in Cumberland county and Cape John in Pictou county.

Mr. STANFIELD. What is the depth of water at Warsaw point?

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman takes me into geography I am not acquainted with but I remember that my hon. friend (Mr. Stanfield) attacked the Minister of Public Works because he built a wharf at Tatamagouche which at low tide had no water near it, and that is the bay to which the hon. member for Queens (Mr Warburton) wants these winter steamers to go.

Mr. STANFIELD. What is the depth of water at that point?

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman can look it up from this map.

Mr. STANFIELD. I never mentioned Brulé.

Mr. MACDONALD. My attention was called to Brulé, by the argument of the hon. gentleman from Queens, and it is that point I am dealing with. The hon. gentlemen who are interested in this question will find that Malagash, in Cumberland county there is available water and at Cape John or John river in my county there is available water to which these steamers could come. Although my hon. friends have been discussing this question a long time, and have been occupying a great deal of the time of this House upon it, they do not know yet to what place these boats would run. There is not enough water at Brulé, and there are only two places where there is enough—Malagash in Cumberland county and Cape John in my own county. Before this House is asked seriously to consider a proposition to risk all the money which has been put into these expensive steamers, and the lives of the men and property carried by them, I would like to see some accommodation provided at a point on the mainland which the steamers could reach; and if my hon. friends have any practical appreciation of what they are asking for, I am willing if they are willing to join with me, to go with them and press upon the Minister of Public Works the importance of building a wharf at Cape John, and this I have already done. My hon. friend from Queens must know that all the conditions that he argues against as existing farther down the gulf exist in an equal degree between Charlottetown and Tatamagouche bay. The whole problem of winter navigation turns on the question of the steamers having sufficient sea room when they are in the ice shove to prevent them toppling over, and the merit of the present route lies in the fact that there is ample room for them to run out to sea in a northeasterly direction. My hon. friend knows that the proposition of a winter steamer running between Charlottetown and Brulé, starting from one impossible point and going to another impossible point, means that at all times the steamer will be wedged in by the narrowest kind of waters, and in the event of a storm from any point of the compass, will be liable to be driven ashore because unable to make any deep water for safety. In former years I have regarded my hon. friend's proposition with some degree of amusement; I did not think he could present for the serious consideration of the minister such an impossible proposition as the one he put forward last year, and has put forward again to-day; but the manifest feeling with which my hon. friend has approached the subject, and the animus which has dominated his utterances, particularly with regard to my constituency, warrant me in saying that he has come to the point where he regards himself seriously in making the proposition. I have no doubt that the minister duly appreciates the feeling that animates my hon. friend in this matter. The intelligence which has always been displayed by the department in dealing with this subject of winter navigation is such that I am certain the minister will regard it as absolutely impossible to take these winter steamers away from the only point on the mainland where they can cope with the ice conditions, where they are in proximity to the deep water east of Pictou island, and to start them from an impossible point in Prince Edward Island to another impossible point in Nova Scotia. I need not point out to the House the inconvenience that would result from bringing the steamers to a point where there are no means of communication and no accommodation in the shape of a wharf or otherwise. Until such facilities are provided, my hon. friend is merely wasting the time of this House in making the proposal he has made. I do not know that I need detain the House any greater length. My object was simply to resent the aspersions which my hon. friend from Queens cast on the facilities provided in my constituency. My hon. friend has told us about having been in Pictou waiting for the winter boats. Of course, he has. Usually, when my hon. friend is not talking about this winter communication from a narrow standpoint, he is the most genial of men, and the people whom I represent are glad to see him there; but when he was loafing around the hotel at Pictou waiting for the steamer, she was not at Pictou wharf, but was floating about in the ice.

Mr. PROWSE. The boat was at the wharf.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend, whose cheery ways are known to us all down there, is, I think, the man behind the scenes in this matter. He has his ear close to the ground in regard to some things in his constituency, and I think the activity displayed by his colleague in this matter is to be attributed somewhat to his efforts. I submit that my hon. friends have submitted an impossible proposition for the consideration of the minister and the House, and they realize that they have not all their colleagues from Prince Edward Island with them. The hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fraser) tells us that beyond all question Georgetown is the only place on the island from which the boat can start. It does seem to me, therefore, that until we have wharfs and other facilities at the only available point in the bay to which my hon. friends would have boats run—and I am willing to join with them in an effort to secure those facilities—their suggestion that boats should run to and from Charlottetown is absolutely impossible, as has been proved by the events of past years.

Mr. L. E. PROWSE (Queens, P.E.I.). After listening to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), I feel it my duty to stand up for Prince Edward Island as he does for Pictou. I have heard so much about Prince Edward Island this afternoon that I have almost forgotten that there was any other place in the Dominion; and if we could only get the Prime Minister, the Finance Minister, and the other members of the cabinet to think so, in twelve months we would not be asking for anything, because they would give us everything we needed. I do not think there is any need of the hon. member for Pictou getting so hot under the collar at what my hon. colleague (Mr. Warburton) said this afternoon. I do not blame the hon. member for Pictou, because of the deficiencies of Pictou harbour. We know that he is not to blame for that; it is due to nature, and I have no doubt that if my hon. friend could change Pictou harbour for the better, he would do it. In Prince Edward Island we have two good harbours, one at Charlottetown, and the other at Georgetown, but we have none on the mainland. The hon. member for Pictou said we do not know exactly where to run the boats to. That is correct, but we want to find out where to run them to, and that is why this question is brought up so often. We know that Pictou is an impossible harbour. I was once caught outside that harbour seven days and had to walk ashore seven miles and during that trip got into the water two or three times. I, however, got ashore safely because I had an oar that kept me afloat. You can see, therefore, that Pictou is not all the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) claims it is.

My hon. friend and colleague spoke about the coal. In that connection I might say that a few weeks ago I received a letter from an officer on board the 'Earl Grey,' complaining about the coal. They said they could not make the steamer go through more than 12 inches of ice, because of the inferior quality of the coal, whereas with good coal they could work through 18 inches. I am not prepared to say whether the coal is good or bad, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) should have the different kinds tried and see which would give the best results. The 'Earl Grey,' cost a lot of money, and the government should get the best they can out of her in return. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that if we would ask Mr. Hyndman he would be able to tell us about the coal, but Mr. Hyndman is agent for that coal and would be very unlikely to say anything but good about it.

My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) said also, that we should stick to Pictou harbour, because that is the harbour we used 50 years ago. But the people of the island are not disposed to think that what was good enough 50 years ago is good enough at present. This is an age of progress, and we should try our best to bring the producer as close as possible to the consumer. In the winter they are a long way apart. At times in that season we cannot get anything off the island during two, three and four weeks at a time. I am willing to admit that the government have made an honest effort to do the best they could for the island. My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fraser) says it is the same to-day as it was 50 years ago. In that opinion I do not agree with him. We know that there has been very great improvement. First, we had the old steamer 'Albert,' which did very poor work. Then we had the 'Northern Lights,' which was an improvement, then the 'Stanley,' then the 'Minto,' which was an improvement, and finally the 'Earl Grey,' which is a very great improvement. And I have no doubt that the captain of the 'Earl Grey,' with the experience he has had, could suggest some further improvement, and if the government would purchase another vessel like the 'Earl Grey,' only improved, the people of Prince Edward Island would be fairly well satisfied. Of course, I do not believe that any steamer can give perfect satisfaction, but improvements can be made with the present one, and the people would be well satisfied if we had another such steamer, with such improvements as the captain could suggest. No doubt the government could then find a place to utilize the 'Minto' without any loss. I would suggest, therefore, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that he should, as soon as possible, procure another steamer, so that we might then have two as good as the 'Earl Grey.' The people of the island feel deeply their present condition, but, of course, this winter has been an exceptionally severe one, and the steamers have had very hard work. We have had again to take to the iceboats at the capes to carry mails and passengers. Speaking of these iceboats, I may say that the men who handle them receive a very small pittance. They have to work like galley slaves; at each crossing they take their lives in their hands, and all they get is $2 a day. They should get, instead, $4 to $5 a day. Each passenger pays $2 for the privilege of working his way across the strait. That is not fair, and I would suggest that passengers who work their way across should not be charged anything. I know that if any member of the cabinet were to cross once and have to work his way he would be strongly of the same opinion.

A few years ago, on one occasion when I crossed, the thermometer was several degrees below zero. I had to go into the water up to my waist, and my pants were frozen so hard it was impossible for me at the time to sit down. I then made up my mind I would not cross again in the ice boats, but, nevertheless, I have since crossed some 20 or 25 times. The second last time I made the passage I was completely played out, and I vowed that would be the last crossing I would make, but when I came back from England I found that the steamers were still tied up and I had again to use the boats.

I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to take up any more of your time, but I want to stand up for the people of Prince Edward Island. I am only sorry that we cannot get the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) to help us, which I think he ought in gratitude to do, because, if it were not for the island, there would be no Pictou at all. We are the people who supply Pictou with everything it gets, and yet the people of that county do not seem thankful. Of course, I understand that my hon. friend does not like to be rubbed up against the grain, and if all hon. members were able to do for their counties what he does for his our counties would be much better off. I was reminded quite lately that if I fought as hard for Queens county as my hon. friend for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has fought for his, we would have in my county better results, but while I have fought hard for my county, I do not manage to get as much as I could wish.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I have no desire to take up the time of the House, but the circumstances justify me, I think, in making some observations on the resolution before us. During the past five years which I have spent in this parliament, the sympathy of the House has been extended session after session to the people of Prince Edward Island, because of the conditions of their existence. There can be no doubt that the people of the island are subjected to great inconvenience and expense, and that at times the experience they have had to endure have been almost intolerable. The question is what is the best route to select. Sometimes when lawyers have a bad case they take to abusing the other side, and we have had an illustration of this on this occasion. We have had a good deal of abuse of Charlottetown harbour from the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), and a strong condemnation of Pictou harbour from the senior member for Charlottetown (Mr. Warburton). Well, I think that the condemnation of Charlottetown was due to the fact that my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) felt he had no defence for the port of Pictou, and the condemnation of Pictou was provoked by the fact that my hon. friend from Charlottetown (Mr. Warburton) recognized that his port could not be defended as a winter port. I agree with what my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has said as to Charlottetown being an impossible harbour in the winter, and I agree, also, as to what my hon. friend from Charlottetown has said as to Pictou harbour being at certain times in the winter inaccessible for weeks and months. Some years ago there was no communication for two months, because of a blockade in the harbour of Pictou. On another occasion Prince Edward Island was isolated during 48 days, and there is scarcely a winter season when there is not detention during a considerable length of time, all due to the fact that Pictou was not intended by nature to be a winter harbour. The ice blocks in there so that you have virtually an impenetrable wall which no steamer can cut. This is due to the situation of that harbour, and its funnel shape.

The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that the capes routes as it is called is out of the question. I agree with him. That Georgetown on the island is an excellent harbour is admitted by all. Two or three years ago some papers relating to that harbour were brought down to this House which I took occasion to examine carefully. They contained reports that showed beyond doubt that Georgetown, in the winter, is always open and the reason is given. As my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has pointed out, Georgetown is on the eastern side of the island, and that harbour is exposed to the gulf, where there is a wide expanse of sea, and the ice kept loose and mobile, there is never any trouble getting through if you have steamers which are strong enough. In Pictou the conditions are different when you go down opposite Charlottetown, because the ice is jammed in such a way that it is impossible to make either point. I could quote from the evidence of Mr. Chas. Duguid, naval architect of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and also from the reports of the late deputy minister of the department to show that what I say in this connection is correct.

I could also call attention to the report of Mr. Windham, an expert sent by the Board of Trade of Charlottetown and others who must be recognized as having expert knowledge more satisfactory than that of simple pilots whose opinions were quoted by the hon. member for Pictou to show that Pictou harbour is not a satisfactory one, and also that the capes route has been tried and proven to be a failure. As is mentioned in one of the reports, that route —the capes route—was simply a political route and had to be abandoned. It being established that the only harbour you have on one side on which you could depend all winter is Georgetown, the next question is where is the best harbour on the mainland side? Pictou harbour is bad in winter, proved to be bad, and I venture to say that Tatamagouche bay is just as bad as Pictou. Of course we have not the evidence of this before us, but I have no doubt it will be shown by the evidence when it is obtained that the same conditions obtain at Tatamagouche as at Pictou. Then the question arises where is there a harbour? The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) referred to a harbour at Cape George, Ballentine Cove. That is an excellent harbour, open the whole year round, deep, with plenty of sea room and always accessible. The reason why it is open during the winter season when Pictou is jammed with ice is the same as in the case of Georgetown, because it is exposed to the open gulf, you have the wide expanse, the ice does not jam and is movable.

Mr. McCOLL. What constituency is that in?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). In Antigonish. In this particular case, I am not speaking with a view to making political capital in my constituency. Other hon. gentlemen who have spoken might be charged with making appeals for their own constituencies, in order to strengthen themselves with their friends, but I am speaking from a purely altruistic standpoint. My constituents are not seeking for this as their right. It is not for them to ask for it as a matter of right, it is for the people of the island to ask it. I am only pointing out how they can have this difficulty solved, with very little trouble. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) admitted the conditions in Ballentine Cove at Cape George. No one can dispute the facts. The department asked the lightkeeper at Cape George to observe the conditions during the past few seasons between Cape George and Georgetown, and a report is that at all times there was open water between Cape George and Georgetown. A few years ago a coal laden vessel left Hastings on the Straits of Canso, and went to Georgetown when the island boats could not get to Pictou because of the ice. The hon. member for Pictou mentioned the fact that these steamers were down quite a way from Pictou, and it was not because Pictou harbour was blocked that they were drifting. No, they were drifting while those on board waited in the hope that the wind would shift and the ice would then be driven out and ultimately they would get into Pictou harbour. But during that time they could land anywhere along the eastern Pictou shore or in Antigonish, which are opposite the eastern shore of Prince Edward Island, where there is a wide expanse of water. I know that on several occasions when the boats could not get into Pictou and allowed themselves to drift down along the Antigonish shore the passengers were landed on the Antigonish shore and were driven across to Antigonish where they took the train. This has been quite a common occurrence, and if there was railway accommodation, then every time Pictou harbour was blocked they would go into Ballentine Cove or Arisaig or Georgeville, but these are not as good harbours as Ballentine Cove and, therefore, Ballentine Cove is the one I would recommend. It is about 18 miles from a railway now. Two years ago the late member for Kings county, Prince Edward Island was coming across some time in April and when he came to pictou it was blocked. For three days they drifted down towards the Antigonish shore, and he said they could easily have landed anywhere along the Antigonish shore to Cape George.

The next question is a railway from Cape George to Antigonish, a distance of 18 miles. When we remember that proper steam communication between the island and the mainland was guaranteed by the terms of the agreement made between Prince Edward Island and the rest of Canada, that this country is pledged in this matter, the building of 18 miles of railway is but a small and unimportant matter for the people of the island to expect, and a railway there would be an immense benefit. Ballentine Cove is one of the busiest of places in summer. My hon. friend said that the only harbour from some place west of Pictou down to the Strait of Canso was Pictou. I differ from him. The best harbour and the only good harbour is Ballentine's Cove. In substantiation of that I could refer to the reports of engineers who have had occasion to report on Ballentine Cove, and I could produce other reports that Ballentine Cove is the best harbour along Northumberland straits. Five or six miles from Ballentine Cove which is a thriving fishing centre there are magnificent coal properties and shale from which coal oil and other products could be produced. The reports on the coal properties are most glowing, they have been examined by large capitalists in recent years, and there is every hope and prospect that they will be developed. There are also valuable iron properties near at Arisaig and Doctors' Brook. This will undoubtedly become one of the best mineral producing districts in the country. When that time comes, of course, the railway will be required so that the building of a railway from Ballentine Cove to Antigonish would be only a trifling matter, so far as expenses goes. The railway would pay from the start, and it would be the means of developing a rich country.

It may be said that this is a new route. It is not. It was brought to the attention of the House a quarter of a century ago. In 1874 the then member for Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Sinclair) called attention to the unsatisfactory conditions that obtained at that time owing to the condition of Pictou harbour, and he directed attention to the fact that there was another route which he had no doubt would serve the purpose, that it would be open all winter, that is the route from Georgetown or Souris to Ballentine Cove. Two or three years afterwards the attention of the House was called to this route by the member for Antigonish and others. At a later date it was advocated by my predecessor in this House. Since I have had the honour of a seat in parliament I have called attention to it on several occasions. I have also called the attention of the department to it, and they have been making tests and investigations. Last year the winter was very mild, so it was not favourable for the tests, but an officer of the department was sent down there, he reported from day to day, and his report was that there was open water all the time from Ballentine Cove to Georgetown. I have no doubt there would be open water between Pictou and Charlottetown that year; but that year did not afford a proper test. I hope the test will continue for a number of years, and then we shall know which is the best winter route by which to maintain communication with the island.

I trust the members for the island will look into the route carefully, and I have no doubt they will then be unanimous in advocating the route. Until then, I can do no more than direct the attention of the House to its superiority over other routes and point to it as a solution of the difficulties that now exist so far as winter communication goes.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I may say to my hon. friend the member for Queens (Mr. Warburton), that there is no objection to bringing down the papers he asks for by his motion.

Mr. WARBURTON. Would the Minister of Marine and Fisheries follow me ? There are one or two remarks I would like to make in reply before the debate is closed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the hon. gentleman will have the right to reply after I have spoken; I could not speak after him.

Mr. WARBURTON. My hon. friend is quite right, I will follow him.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend's motion asks for the production of papers concerning the route between Tatamagouche bay and Charlottetown; at the same time he asks for an improvement in the service in the direction of increasing the number of trips, applying his remarks not only to the winter service, but also to the summer service. In regard to the summer service, I do not know that there is much correspondence on this subject, because the summer service does not pertain to my department. The boats during the summer service are subsidized by the Department of Trade and Commerce, consequently whatever correspondence may exist in regard to that service, will be found in that department. As to the summer service, I do not think the question presents much difficulty. Some suggestions might be made, but generally speaking, I think the service is fairly satisfactory. I see however, that there is some difficulty in respect to the winter service performed by this department.

Now, when the province of Prince Edward Island was admitted into the confederation, it was agreed that the government of Canada should maintain a steam navigation service between the island and the mainland. This obligation has been fulfilled, perhaps not absolutely to the letter, perhaps the service has not been all that was desired or intended. But at the present time, at least, we have what I may call an absolutely daily service. In fact, last year, the two vessels we had on that route, the 'Stanley' and the 'Earl Grey,' were able to cross daily, and this year the 'Earl Grey' has been able to cross throughout the season with the exception of one day, if my information is correct. So in that regard, we may say that the obligation which was undertaken by the government of Canada when Prince Edward Island entered the confederation, has been entirely carried out. We must not forget that for many years past a great deal has been done for the purpose of improving that service. Before the province entered confederation, communication with the mainland was made by iceboats tha is to say, a service that is still resorted to when absolutely necessary, was maintained to carry the mails. But after the entrance of the island into the confederation the government acquired a vessel called the 'Northern Light,' for the purpose of making the service. Later on, we produced an ice-breaker, the 'Stanley,' about 1888; then we procured the 'Minto,' in 1899-1900, and lastly we got the 'Earl Grey,' during the year 1908.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the service which is being maintained today is far more satisfactory than that which existed prior to confederation. I suppose nobody will undertake to deny that not only has the obligation entered into at confederation been maintained, but we have provided the best available vessels to carry out our obligation. Three or four years ago serious complaints were made to the department, and in the House, to the effect that the service performed by the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' was far from being satisfactory. In one year, I remember, the two vessels were caught in the ice, and the service was suspended for a considerable length of time. The result was that a serious agitation was started to improve the service, and we began to examine the question, and to ascertain whether it would not be better to put on a stronger ice-breaker than the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' which were then in service. I remember that in 1907, when I visited Europe, I brought with me Captain Brown, who is certainly a very capable officer, and a man whose advice in a matter of that kind, was of great value. Captain Brown not only came to England with me, but we visited Germany together. We were advised that there were in Germany some very good shipyards which turned out ice-breakers of a high class, which were used in the Baltic. We thought it advisable to visit Hamburg, in order to acquire all the information we could. The result of our visit showed that the best ice-breakers were not built in Germany, but could be built in England. About the same time, we called over from England, a naval architect, to study the situation on the spot, and also to give us advice as to the best class of ships we could secure to perform that service. These things show you, Mr. Speaker, that we have taken all the necessary steps to obtain the best possible advice in regard to ships capable of maintaining that service. I am glad to say to-day that the expectations we had with regard to the 'Earl Grey' have been absolutely fulfilled. I have now in my hand the report of last year, which, as I have already shown, demonstrates that during every day of last year—it is true that last winter it was rather mild—that vessel has been able to cross between the island and the mainland.

We have found this year, which has certainly been one of the worst years that we ever had, a year, I think, without many precedents, that the result has been absolutely satisfactory. The 'Minto' which was the running mate of the 'Earl Grey' was caught in the ice and was obliged to stop her trips, but the 'Earl Grey' was able to cope with the situation all the time excepting, as I said, for just one day. On that day she could have crossed over but it was somewhat dangerous, and it was thought by the captain and by our agent at Charlottetown that it would probably be better that she should not attempt to cross. The great difficulty that exists with regard to crossing in these boats is the northeast wind. Northeast winds come through the strait and cause a blockade which almost prevents vessels from getting through at all I have here a list of the different days on which this north or northeast wind was encountered during this season, and I am going to give the House the dates and temperatures. Hon. members will find that in spite of the low temperatures and gales which were prevailing on many days, this boat has been able to cross at all times with the exception of one day. The boat started on the 17th December. During the month of January she was able to cross over from Charlottetown to Pictou. On the 21st December there was a northeast wind and also on the following days; on the 21st December the temperature was 30 degrees above zero; 26th December 10 above zero; 31st December zero; 6th January 13 above; 7th January 13 above; 12th January 25 above; 16th January 4 above; 17th January 12 below; 18th Januarv 12 below. For three consecutive days a northeast wind was prevailing, but during the whole of that time the boat was making a trip every day. I have extracted the following statement from the report which I have received:

January 18.—The ice was very heavy; the boat had to back up three times. So far the straits are full of ice from Pictou west and very heavy in places. 'Earl Grey' in good trim and is doing splendid work.

On the 20th January.—Still northeast wind with 7 above zero; they met heavy ice on that day, too; Jan. 21, there was a northeast wind; 23rd, through heavy ice, 8 above; 25th, 15 above, heavy ice at Point Prim; Feb. 4, 'Minto' was caught in ice but 'Grey' passed through; Feb. 7, ice close packed and very hard fighting, 2 above; Feb. 8, 20 above; Feb. 18, the two boats started running.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think these temperatures show the difficulty of the situation, and also show that the 'Earl Grey' has been running all the time, with the exception of one day. I understand the suggestion which has been made that we should try to get a sister ship to the 'Earl Grey' and be better able in that way to have a continuous service. I do not know whether it would be advisable to build a new ship right away or not. I think, on the contrary, that we had better wait a little. We have gained a great deal of experience, and we are gaining experience in connection with that service. We have improved our service from the 'Stanley' to the 'Minto', and from the 'Minto' to the 'Earl Grey'. It is possible that we might still be able to improve the construction of the 'Earl Grey.' We are studying the question. We are continuing our inquiries in that respect, and it may be that a stronger ship even than the 'Earl Grey' can be constructed. Let us examine that point very carefully, and perhaps some day the government of Canada may find itself in a position to suggest the construction of even a stronger ship than the one now in existence. I think I have carried out the promise that I made some years ago that I would get a ship that would be capable of performing this service continuouslv without any interruption.

We have been discussing to-day the question of changing the winter route. Many suggestions have been made. I see that my hon. friend from Prince, Prince Edward Island, (Mr. Richards), would have no objection to the establishment of a service between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. We have also the suggestion that a service should be put on between Charlottetown and Brulé. Some others are suggesting Georgetown and Pictou, and another member has been proposing a service from Georgetown to Cape George. That means that there is a great difference of opinion between the members of this House who have spoken about the route. I am not going to give my views upon this question, though, having had to deal with this subject for many years, I might have a personal opinion upon the matter. But I may perhaps be permitted to lay before the House some facts, some statements or some reports which might be of interest to hon. members. We will discuss first the question of the Cape Tormentine-Cape Traverse route. This question has been before the department for a great many years. Many many years ago, statements were made to the effect that if trials were made on that route it would be found that the service could be very much improved. Trials have been made between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse, but the results do not seem to be very much in favour of the opening of the route. The reports on this subject have been brought before parliament, and they can be consulted. In the last two years my hon. friend from Prince has brought the question before me on several occasions. He is still urging upon me that we should open that route and that we should have a vessel plying during the whole of the winter between Cape Tormentine, or Summerside, and Cape Traverse.

Although I have not been able to go as far as the hon. gentleman would wish, still I think the proposition I made last year meets with general approval among the people of his county. It was stated to me by my hon. friend that when the summer boats ceased operating between Pointe du Chêne and Summerside a great quantity of freight was left lying on the wharf, and it had to be reshipped to Charlottetown or Georgetown and sent to Pictou. I endeavoured to come to the relief of the people of Summerside, and I wrote the following letter on the 26th November, 1909:

26th November, 1909.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th ult., with respect to the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

After a careful consideration of the representations which have been submitted to me, I have authorized an extension of this service, as follows:—

1. From the time the summer steamers go off the Summerside route, until the summer steamers cease running on the Charlottetown-Pictou route, the department will give (ice conditions permitting) a service from Summerside to Tormentine, if possible, and when not possible, then from Summerside to Pictou.

2. After the date on which the summer steamers cease running on the Charlottetown-Pictou route, the department will continue the service on the Summerside route, until all the freight then in Summerside, or which, on or prior to said date, has been shipped, or billed in carload lots to Summerside for transportation to the mainland, but which has not yet reached Summerside, shall have been carried over to the mainland.

3. The department will not undertake to carry any freight to the mainland, which shall have been billed or shipped, even in carload lots, to Summerside, later than the date on which the summer steamers cease running on the Charlottetown-Pictou route.

4. In case of emergency, the department will if necessary, immediately withdraw the winter steamer on the Summerside-Tormentine route, whether freight is at or on its way to Summerside for transportation to the mainland or not.

Instructions are being sent to the agent of the department at Charlottetown, to have the 'Minto' prepared to give a service in accordance with these conditions.

Yours very faithfully,
(Sg.) L. P. BRODEUR.

D. K. Currie, Esq.,
Secy. Board of Trade,
Summerside, P.E.I.

That arrangement, as I understand it, proved satisfactory last year, but, unfortunately, there was a hitch this year. The freight was taken from Summerside in accordance with the arrangement, but when it arrived at the mainland the wharf was not in a proper condition to unload the freight on it, and arrangements had not been made for its transit on the railway, which is owned by a private company. I am quite sure that next year these difficulties will be removed, and I assure the hon. gentlemen that it is the intention of the department to carry out to the letter the arrangement detailed in this letter of the 26th of November, 1909. My department has communicated with the Department of Public Works, asking them to take steps to see that the wharf will be in good condition next winter. I do not think it is altogether desirable that the boats should remain longer on the routes, as has been requested by some, because so long as the boats ply freight will be sent there, and in the end it will be necessary to send the steamers by the Georgetown and Pictou route, and the freight will have to be reshipped all the same and dissatisfaction ensue. I think the arrangement we have made ought to meet the legitimate wishes of the people living in that section. The question as to a winter route between Charlottetown and Brulé was brought to our attention by the hon. members for Queens (Messrs. Warburton and Prowse). They have represented to us that the entrance to Charlottetown harbour was easy of navigation, and that Brulé harbour, or Tatamagouche bay would furnish a desirable port on the mainland. Acting on the request of these hon gentlemen, we gave instructions to the hydrographic survey branch to make surveys of Tatamagouche bay, and as the chief question was not whether the bay was navigable or not, but whether the ice conditions would not be as difficult as in Pictou harbour, Mr. Stewart, the officer in charge of the bay, sent us the following interesting report:

MEMORANDUM FOR MINISTER.

In accordance with your instructions a survey in detail was made of the northeast shore of John bay, in Tatamagouche bay, between Cape John and the mouth of John river, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it would be feasible to construct wharfs off the shore and a branch line from the Intercolonial railway, in the vicinity of the village of River John, to one, or all of these wharfs.

The survey shows that there is very little water inside the bay more than 30 feet deep, and that the 18-foot contour line generally skirts the shore, examined at a distance of 700 feet from the points and about 1,400 feet from the heads of the bays between.

This 18-foot contour line is nearly straight, and the bottom between the shore and it deepens very gradually, there being no sign of rock outcropping nor of reefs.

The bottom is nearly all mud outside of a narrow fringe of sand off the beach. This condition of affairs exists for a distance of two miles inside of Cape John.

The land inside the shore line is slightly hilly, but is nowhere higher than 50 feet above low water. The banks close to the beach are generally steep, about 20 feet high, so that there would be no difficulty in constructing wharfs or a railway line to meet them.

In addition to this survey, instructions were issued to make an examination of the bay in the vicinity of Peninsula point, this being on the south shore about 7 miles northwest of River John village.

This examination shows that the 25-foot contour reaches to within one-quarter mile off Peninsula point at best; that the bottom is rocky, and that there is a rocky reef uncovering at low water situated about one-quarter of a mile northwest off Peninsula point.

Whilst a wharf built here would have a good foundation, there would require to be a considerable amount of expensive dredging to enable vessels to reach it. The 30-foot contour does not reach within a mile of the point.

A blue print of the work done is attached.

WM. J. STEWART,
Hydrographer.

January 16, 1911.

But there are other matters to be considered in connection with this proposal. To make the change proposed would require a new branch railway, a spur line, some wharfs, and better accommodation than exists to-day. The port referred to is on the Oxford branch of the Intercolonial railway. On that branch, I understand, no large business is done and the passenger trains are very few. I am afraid that if the route of the steamers were changed, there would be required at the same time to be some very important changes made in the running of the passenger trains in that direction. We also instructed the superintendent of lights in Nova Scotia, Mr. P. C. Johnson, to make a report on this question of the conditions of the ice at Tatamagouche and Brulé. In his report, which is dated December 10, 1909, Mr. Johnson says:

Regarding my knowledge of the conditions at Tatamagouche and Brulé harbours, the body of water known as Amet sound and at the entrance to Brulé and Tatamagouche harbours freezes over generally about the latter part of January, and some winters it freezes right out to Amet island. They have often teamed material on the ice to Amet island, but some winters they cannot do this. After Amet Sound is frozen over there is teaming every winter from River John past Brulé harbour to Tatamagouche, bushes being put into the ice to mark the track to prevent teams from going astray on the ice in snowstorms. There are also trees staking off the road from River John to Cape John or nearly to the end of Cape John as far as Reef Point. I have driven myself over this ice as far as Tatamagouche many times.

Not satisfied with that, we thought it would be very important to have a man on the spot who would make a full inspection during the last winter, and Captain Robinson of the steamer 'Vigilant' was instructed to go to River John and stay there for some months to study the conditions of the ice. His report is here. I am not going to read it, because it is rather lengthy, but it will be laid on the table with the other papers. In the face of the difficulties which these various reports show, and in the face of the divergence of opinion which exists among members and others on this question, would it be advisable on our part to change the route? It is certainly not our intention at present to do so. We would require further information before we could take such a step. The situation at present is this. Immediately after the summer boats have ceased running from Charlottetown to Pictou, we have the two ice-breakers run between those two points as long as possible. It has been suggested that these vessels should start at a fixed time from Charlottetown to Pictou and at a fixed time from Georgetown to Pictou. I may say that I had that idea myself at one time—that it would be more satisfactory to the people of the island if they knew that at a certain date the vessels would be at Summerside or Charlottetown and on a certain date at Georgetown; but after having ascertained the views of the people on the island, I find that generally speaking they preferred that the vessels should continue to sail from Charlottetown to Pictou as long as possible, and only then be changed to the route from Georgetown to Pictou. In view of this general expression of views, I had of course to recede from the position I had taken because the people of the island were more conversant with its needs than I am, and I was very willing to submit my personal views to theirs.

My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fraser) says that the conditions under which Prince Edward Island came into confederation have not been carried out in the matter of communication and that they are to-day where they were 50 years ago. I think that is going a little too far.

Mr. FRASER. I do not think I said that. I said that the conditions to-day with respect to the carriage of mails, is just as it was 50 years ago. I did not say that some progress had not been made, but that, on account of the frequent storms and severity of the winters, the conditions so far, as regards the crossing in little iceboats, are the same as they were 50 years ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. True, the iceboats have been in use a few days, but according to the report I have read to-night, the 'Earl Grey' has been running all the time in spite of the severity of the winter, except one day, and consequently, I do not think that we are open to much blame. The criticism I refer to, was not made so much by my hon. friend as by the newspaper he read, and I submit it is a little outside the true note that should be struck in the circumstances. My hon. friend agrees with me in the decision I have taken that in the running of these boats, whether from Charlottetown to Pictou or Georgetown to Pictou, or Cape Travers to Cape Tormentine, that should be left entirely to the discretion of the captain.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. I made up my mind a few years ago that the captains should be the men to decide. They are men of great experience, honesty and devotion to the service. There are no better men in the service of the country than Captain Brown and Captain Finlayson. They are both old officers, and I hope will remain much longer with us. Some criticise them, and say they are too cautious, but those men have been in the service many years, and during all that time, not one casualty has happened. That is the greatest record which could be made in circumstances so difficult for any navigator. I prefer to see these men cautious, than to be more risky and perhaps meet with some serious disaster.

My hon. friend called my attention to the question of a telephone at Georgetown. This is the first information I have had on that matter. I have taken note of his representations, and will bring them to the attention of my officers and see whether a remedy can be affected.

My hon. friend called my attention to the government reducing the rates.

Mr. FRASER. I meant the rates charged on the little iceboats between the capes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I thought my hon. friend was speaking of the rates on the boats. According to a statement I have in my hand, since we have had that service under our control, the government has expended on it $1,313,334, and the revenue has only been $385,744, showing a net loss of $930,864, and that includes only the working expenses. It does not include the cost of construction. If we take the cost of construction of the four boats devoted to that service, the amount expended on them has been $870,915.

Mr. FRASER. What four boats ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Northern Light', The 'Stanley', The 'Minto' and the 'Earl Grey.' I do not wish to detain the House any longer. I was very glad to hear what has been said to-day. Some very important statements have been made which will not fail to be taken into most serious consideration. I may say that the questions which have been discussed to-day will be considered by the department and we shall take all the necessary steps to give Prince Edward Island the best service possible.

Mr. WARBURTON. I have listened with much pleasure to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). I have no desire to flatter my hon. friend at all, but I think that my colleagues from Prince Edward Island will agree with me that we never had a Minister of Marine and Fisheries—and we have had some very good ones—who has taken more active interest and shown greater sympathy with the difficulties which we have to contend against, than the present minister. Should he ever run short of a constituency, he would have a mighty good chance on the island, because we believe he is in earnest, and doing his best. For that reason, I am always trying to impress these matters upon him, knowing as I do, that in him we have a sympathetic listener, who will do his best to remove any grievances under which we may suffer.

I was astounded at some of the remarks made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). He told us that the trouble was not in the harbour of Pictou, but out side in the straits. But I never have said that the trouble lies in the harbour, because steamers can break the harbour ice, but where the trouble lies, is off the mouth of the harbour. If it is not, how comes it that the steamers are stuck inside the harbour from a day to two months at a time, not able to get out? That statement, which I have proved up to the hilt, is sufficient to show that the trouble is with Pictou harbour. My hon. friend read a long pronouncement from the pilot of the 'Earl Grey' and he also referred to Mr. Hyndman, who, he said, would take a very different view, regarding the coal. Well, Mr. Hyndman is, as has already been said, an agent for the company that supplies the coal, but he is a high minded gentleman, and I do not think he would declare that that coal was of the best quality for steam purposes. We can quite understand however, why Mr. Hyndman was referred to. There is an old saying: Divide and conquer. If my hon. friend can create dissention among the people of Prince Edward Island, that will enable him to still further postpone the time when we can get clear of Pictou harbour. But the gentleman whose letter he read at great length, the pilot of the 'Earl Grey', is himself also a resident of Pictou, and has been for years and has no desire whatever to go into any other port, if he can help it. He is a very good man, but it is not in his interests to go to any other port; and as to his opinion on the value of steam coal, I do not think it should carry very much weight. I would prefer an opinion from the engineers who use the coal and work the engines, and I would be glad if the hon. minister would have the logs of the engineers brought down some of these days and see what power they get up, although that is not included in the resolution.

We are told that in February Pictou is the only place where the steamer can run. I absolutely take issue with that. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) had to make up a case and how did he go about making it up? I said and I say now, that the harbour of Georgetown in Prince Edward Island is an excellent harbour, I never said anything else. In the winter when we have storms and east winds, if you have four days' northeast wind Pictou harbour becomes an impossible harbour. But because I admitted that Georgetown was a good harbour my hon. friend had to make up some premises on which to oppose the argument I was using and he said that because Georgetown harbour was a good harbour therefore Charlottetown is a bad harbour, and then it was easy to go further and say it was the worst harbour in Prince Edward Island. As a matter of fact my hon. friend does not know anything about any harbour in Prince Edward Island. He knows nothing of Charlottetown harbour. I proved from the charts last year that the entrance to Charlottetown harbour at its shallowest part is 37 feet in depth and within the harbour there is 75 feet of water. We could take all the water of Pictou harbour from the bottom of Charlottetown harbour and still have water enough to float those ships. My hon. friend says that if you go into Tatamagouche you have no conveniences and no wharf. I know that perfectly. One of the reasons why I bring this matter up is to try to get the conveniences there. I do not believe it would cost more to do so than to keep up the enormous erections you have in Pictou, the work would not require to be anything like as extensive.

He says we cannot get out of Charlottetown harbour to-day. I say you can get out of Charlottetown harbour to-day with the 'Earl Grey.' I am accused of taking up the time of the House with impossible proposals. I would like to know where the impossibility of my proposals has been tested. We have had the entrance to Charlottetown harbour tested and the ice bored year after year at the expense of the people there and it has been found in all those years that the ice has never formed in such thickness as to prevent the 'Earl Grey' going there. I have not the same personal knowledge of the harbour at Tatamagouche, but I believe there is no difficulty with ice, and that Tatamagouche is protected from all winds. The longest sweep of the wind they can get at Tatamagouche is from Prince Edward Island and it is guarded by Pictou island and different points up the straits, it is guarded in every direction, as any hon. member can see by consulting a chart. The gentleman who supplied information as to no northern ice coming in there was prepared to make up a case. I can quite understand the strong desire to make up a case, but the information I had was from men who had as good information as he had. The hon. gentleman speaks of Mr. Hyndman being the centre of information. Mr. Hyndman is a first-class hydrographer of the British navy and spent years surveying this part of the sea and many of the charts now in use were plotted with his own hand. You cannot say that a man who holds that position is not capable of saying something of currents and the way the wind blows. I had that information from him that the northern ice came down with the northeast wind and if you look at the map you will see that it stands to reason it must come down. I have had the same information from seafaring men and the only information we have to the contrary is from the pilot of the 'Earl Grey,' who resides in Pictou and does not want to leave that port. If it is not the case why have we always been troubled in Pictou when there has been a day or two of continuous northeast wind? He says we cannot get out of Charlottetown to-day. He probably means that we cannot get backwards and forwards from Pictou and that is about it. The reason is that when you get east of Point Prim you get into the ice that is drifting in. As Mr. Desbarats, the late Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, pointed out, if you once get past Point Prim you will have no difficulty about Charlottetown harbour and its entrance. I admit that if you try to go from Pictou to Charlottetown to-day you will have trouble, but it will not be at the Charlottetown end, it will be at Pictou in the eastern end of the straits. We all know something of this in the island, because we are forced by our circumstances to become acquainted with the conditions.

The hon. gentleman says his reason for speaking warmly was to resent aspersions on Pictou. I do not propose to cast aspersions on Pictou, I have a great regard for Pictou, but the fact that the hon. member gets warm over Pictou or that I have a personal regard for it, is no reason why we should be compelled to stop in a port and have people and mails sent down to the capes and brought across on iceboats, and our business held up for anything of that kind. That is what has happened, notwithstanding the statement of my hon. friend. If they get a few days of northeast wind that will happen again.

The hon. member undertook to say where I was when I spoke about my own experience of being tied up at Pictou, he says I was not on the ship but on shore. In 1898 I did live up in the hotel, but in 1905 the town of Pictou was so full of people trying to get over to the island that I went on board the ship and was there the whole 14 days and I saw the efforts that were made to get out. Any one who had eyes could see that it was an impossibility to get out of Pictou harbour. You could get out of the harbour, past the lighthouses but not out into the straits, you had three or four miles of solid ice through which no vessel could go. My hon. friend says I was having a good time in Pictou. I must give my Pictou friends credit for always trying to make it as pleasant as they can and I thank them for it but that does not affect the question we are discussing.

Because my hon. friend from Kings said that Georgetown is a good harbour, my hon. friend from Pictou takes that up to again force his contention that because Georgetown is a good harbour Charlottetown is necessarily a bad one. We have more than one good harbour in Prince Edward Island, we have more than there are on the corresponding section of the mainland. In Charlottetown harbour and Georgetown harbour you could float nearly all the ships of the British navy; they are splendid harbours, both of them. My hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm) spoke strongly saying that Georgetown was the only harbour in Prince Edward Island and Pictou was no harbour at all, and that we should therefore go over to Ballentine Cove. I do not suppose my hon. friend was serious about that. At the same time I shall not kick up much of a row if you can get a good harbour which you can enter all the time, even if it is Ballentine Cove but Georgetown would not be the Prince Edward Island harbour it would be Souris in Kings county where with a little work you would have a harbour open all the year round.

My hon. friend says that evidence has been obtained to show that Tatamagouche harbour would be impossible. My hon. friend spoke of the harbour of Brulé. The harbour of Brulé is a harbour inside the harbour, I believe there is a bar across the mouth. The place I spoke about lies in the outer harbour of Tatamagouche bay where you have plenty of water. Brulé, of course, is a place difficult to reach. The hon. member for Pictou said that no one ever dreamed of going to Brulé. I tell him that in summer the steamers plied to Brulé fifty years before they plied to Pictou, within my memory, and it was only because the railway was brought down to Pictou landing that they left Brulé so as to get to the railway. In Charlottetown harbour, one hundred yards from the wharf, the water is 50 feet deep. The water at the wharf itself where the 'Earl Grey' lies now is 26 feet in depth. In Pictou we have sufficient water for boats. They had to dredge a considerable cutting at the entrance to the harbour in order to get enough water. I believe originally they had 18 feet, now they have 24 feet, which compared with Charlottetown or Tatamagouche, seems rather shallow.

I regret that I was a few minutes late in coming in, but I have been informed that my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that these boats at certain times draw thirty feet of water, and that there is only 17½ feet of water a mile from the shore at Tatamagouche. These boats never drew thirty feet of water. Ordinarily the draught of those boats is 17½ feet of water. It is true that neither the 'Minto' nor any other of those vessels ever drew thirty feet of water, no matter how it was trimmed, she never drew 22 feet of water. If she drew thirty feet of water, she could not get into Pictou harbour at all. Last year the 'Earl Grey' went up and down between Charlottetown and Pictou backwards and forwards when there was no ice in the straits. Last year the 'Earl Grey' lost only two days, but that was more on account of the thick weather than on account of ice. Last year was not a year to test a vessel at all; this year being severe will afford a better test.

Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us that when the 'Earl Grey' started out this year on the 17th of December she ran to the 16th of January, between Charlottetown and Pictou. That is perfectly right. I crossed in the 'Earl Grey' myself from Charlottetown on the 14th of January when there was no ice or anything else to interfere with navigation. When I crossed over on the 14th of January you might have passed in a good sailing boat. It is true that the weather changed on the following day, but there was no ice at that time. I desire to thank the minister for the care with which he has investigated this matter, and I hope that he will do whatever lies in his power in order to remedy the grievous condition of affairs under which we labour. I do not believe that the expenditure of a little money at Tatamagouche or anywhere else is going to stand in the way of removing this grievance, once the minister is convinced that it exists. More than that, I believe that the main reason why my hon. friend from Pictou argues so warmly upon this matter, is that he himself is beginning to see that sooner or later, and I think sooner than later, this route will have to be changed. He sees now that, with the conditions as they exist in the other harbours, it is almost certain that in the course of time when this great change is made we will have a good system, with a harbour in Prince Edward Island accessible throughout the winter, and a harbour on the mainland also accessible throughout the winter which now we have not.

Motion agreed to.

ACCIDENTS ON CANADIAN RAILROADS.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey) moved:

That, whereas it is stated that on Canadian railroads last year one trainman in every 199 was killed and one in every 33 was injured, in the opinion of this House it is the duty of the government to cause to be made a most thorough investigation as to the facts and conditions, as a result of which some means may be devised for the better protection of railway employees, and of preventing so great a loss of life and so great and frequent accidental injury.

He said: When I read in a Canadian paper that on Canadian railroads last year one trainman in every 199 was killed, and one in every thirty-three was injured, the figures seemed to me startling. There are no men in Canada, I think, more worthy of our consideration, or whom the government ought to try harder to assist and protect, so far as they can be assisted and protected, than the trainmen who run our railway trains. These men work very hard, they expose themselves to great dangers, they endure great hardships. After putting that resolution upon the Order Paper, I made a somewhat careful study of our Canadian legislation and of United States legislation having in view the protection of trainmen. I find the requirements of Canadian laws and of United States laws to be very much the same. I will with your permission point out the similarities of the laws in the two countries, and then point out the important differences, and make two or three suggestions.

The United States Congress in 1892 passed an Act intituled 'The Safety Appliance Act.' That has been since amended at different times. The Safety Appliance Act of the United States sets forth in detail what brakes, ladders, couplers and other devices and apparatus shall be used on United States railway trains for the protection of employees. The Canadian Railway Act, section 264 provides that certain safety appliances therein defined shall be provided. Section 30 of the Canadian Railway Act provides that the Board of Railway Commissioners may order regulations, among other things, with respect to the rolling stock, apparatus, cattleguards, appliances, signals, methods, devices and structures to be used upon the railways so as to provide means for the due protection of employees of the company and of the public. Section 414 of our Railway Act stipulates that every train employee intoxicated while on duty shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $400, or imprisonment not exceeding five years. In both Canada and the United States, the laws provide that railway companies shall give notice of all train accidents. In the United States this notice is to be given to the Interstate Commerce Commission ; in Canada the notice is to be given to the Minister of Railways. In both countries, under and by virtue of their legislation, inspectors are to be employed and inspection is provided for, with this marked difference, that in Canada our inspectors perform all their duties when they inspect the cars and the devices made to protect the lives of the railway employees. But in the United States their legislation provides that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall enforce the law. In each country penalties are provided for the infringement of the laws, or for disobedience of orders of, in the one country the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the other of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Section 30 of the Canadian Act, subsection 3, says that :

> The Board of Railway Commissioners may by regulation provide penalties where none are provided by the Railway Act, but these penalties shall not exceed one hundred dollars.

Now, Sir, I have pointed out where, in the main, the laws of the two countries are similar. I have said that in the United States their laws better provide for the enforcement of their statutes and regulations. As I have said, our board has no power to lay any information, to bring any action against an offender. The Act I have referred to as the 'United States Safety Appliance Acts' provides as follows:

> That any such common carrier using any locomotive engine, running any train, or hauling or permitting to be hauled or used on its line any car in violation of any of the provisions of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

These two sections disclose a most important difference between the legislation of our own country and that of the United States. In Canada it is not the duty of any member of our Board of Railway Commissioners, nor is it the duty of any employee, or member of the staff of the board, to bring any action, or to lay any information. It rests with the person aggrieved, or with some other person not having any personal interest in the matter. It is reasonable to suppose that a railway employee will hesitate very much about bringing action against a railway company because of the fact that one of the likely consequences will be the loss of his situation, thus depriving him of his employment. The United States Sundry Civil Act, passed June 28, 1902, authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to employ inspectors to execute and enforce the requirements of the Safety Appliance Acts. The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, then, to employ and does employ two sets of inspectors, one to make a careful inspection of the cars used by the various railway companies of the republic, and the other to see to the enforcement of the laws that they provide. There is, Sir, other important legislation in the United States that we do not have in Canada. It is not upon our statute-books, it is not contained in any order of the Railway Commission, and I do not think that our Board of Railway Commissioners have any power to make such an order or law to limit the hours of service. The United States have an Act, passed on the 4th March, 1907, one section of which reads as follows:

> That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this Act to require or permit any employee subject to this Act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted to again go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty; and no such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four hour period shall be required or permitted to continue or again go on duty without having had at least eight consecutive hours off duty; provided, that no operator, train despatcher, or other employee who by use of the telegraph or telephone despatches, reports, transmits, receives or delivers orders appertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than nine hours in a twenty-four hour period in towers, offices, places and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than thirteen hours in towers, offices, places and stations operated only during the daytime, except in case of emergency, when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for four additional hours in a twenty-four hour period not exceeding three days in any week.

The next section provides as follows:

And it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violation as may come to its knowledge. In all prosecutions under this Act the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all acts of all its officers and agents.

I think that is very important legislation. I am informed that in Canada the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway have regulations of their own for limiting, in some such way as the United States statute does, the hours of labour. I do not know how carefully or how carelessly the orders of these two railway companies are enforced, and I do not know whether any other Canadian railways except these two have such regulations. I believe that a few years ago the Canadian Board of Railway Commissioners was asked to make an order, or to obtain legislation, limiting the hours of labour in some such way as the American statute does. I am told that the engineers and firemen were in favour of such legislation, but that the conductors and trainmen, meaning, I suppose, the brakesmen, were opposed to any such legislation. It might very well be that the employees of a railway company are opposed to any statute which will limit their hours of labour. It is very natural that a conductor, or brakeman, for the sake of making the greatest possible earnings, of receiving the utmost wages, would be willing to work longer hours than he ought to be permitted to work, having consideration for his own safety, those who labour with him and those riding upon the trains of which he is in charge. I think that oftentimes, when an accident occurs upon a Canadian railway, if it has been due to the negligence of any railway employees, the excuse or reason is given that the employee had been on duty so many hours that he could not possibly be in his normal condition, or as alert as he otherwise would have been. There is too rather novel legislation upon the American statute-books passed in February, 1905, and I will quote shortly from that Act. This Act, passed in 1905 by the American Congress, since amended and still remaining upon the statute-books, is entitled 'An Act to promote Security of Travel upon Railroads engaged in the Interstate Commerce and to encourage the saving of Life.' The first part of the first section of the Act reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the President of the United States be and is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared bronze medals of honour, with suitable emblematic devices, which shall be bestowed upon any persons who shall hereafter, by extreme daring, endanger their own lives in saving, or endeavouring to save, lives from any wreck, disaster, or grave accident, or in preventing or endeavouring to prevent such wreck, disaster, or grave accident, upon any railroad within the United States engaged in interstate commerce.

If we had not read the title of that Act one might suppose it to be merely philanthropy. The title indicates the purpose of the United States Congress had in view in passing the Act: An Act to promote the security of travel upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce and to encourage the saving of life. It may be questioned as to whether or not that would effect the desired end and yet if the United States Congress think it wise to pass it and allow it to remain on the statute-book after six years experience, it is perhaps worthy of our consideration. Complaint has also been made that many of our Canadian railways do not employ a sufficient number of section men to keep the track in condition so as to ensure the greatest degree of safety to employees and the travelling public, and that matter might perhaps be worthy of inquiry. I am pleased to note that in Canada and in the United States as well, those whose duty it is to protect railway employees are encouraged, with the result of their efforts. At page 352 of the report of our own railway commissioners, Mr. A. J. Nixon, chief traffic officer, reports that last year 51 passengers, 194 employees and 211 other persons were killed; while 211 passengers, 745 employees and 167 other persons were injured. Mr. Nixon says:

Investigations were made by the board's inspectors in 282 of the above cases and reports on same were handed to the board. General inspections have been made by the inspectors of equipment, stations and crossings of all railways under the jurisdiction of the board.

The commissioners at page 112 say:

The schedules to the report of the chief operating officer give a full analysis of the accidents during the year, which would have been a record one had it not been for the unfortunate accident at Spanish river. This has been and is being most carefully investigated.

I turn to the last obtainable report of the United States Interstate Commerce Commission and I read:

As showing the care with which the safety appliances demanded by the law are being maintained, it may be noted that while the railroads dispensed with the services of a great many employees to meet the economies necessitated by falling off of business in 1907, the force of men employed to maintain safety appliances suffered the least curtailment of any. As a result the condition of equipment continued to improve during the slack period of 1908-9, the year just closed, showing the least percentage of defective equipment of any year since the law became operative, notwithstanding that the number of cars examined by our inspectors was 125,000 greater than in any previous year. As indicating the great improvement that has taken place within the past five years, it may be stated that the defects per 1,000 cars inspected in 1905 numbered 309·56, while for the year 1909 the figure is 74·65.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission indicate that their efforts are meeting with great success and that their inspection of cars and equipment is very thorough. I trust that the inspection by the inspectors of our own board is equally thorough. Let me call the attention of the House, but particularly the Minister of Railways to three or four things: In the first place I think our Railway Act might well be amended after consultation between the Minister of Railways and the Board of Railway Commissioners, so as to give us something like the same machinery for enforcing our laws and regulations as prevails under the legislation of the United States. Notwithstanding that some of the employees oppose this, while others favour it, I believe it would be a step in advance if our Railway Act did contain provision that would limit as the United States law does, the hours of service of trainmen and of telegraph and telephone despatchers. Then, there is legislation in the United States as to the granting of medals, and the Minister of Railways might deem that worthy of consideration. I have no desire to push the resolution unduly, my object being to bring the matter to the attention of parliament, of the Minister of Railways, and of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways). The subject brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) is very important. In this country railway operation is much more difficult than in a country where there are not the same extremes of heat and cold. The accidents to employees may be divided into several classes, among which might be mentioned cases in which the employee becomes so accustomed to his work that he ignores conditions of danger, and no care on the part of the company can prevent accidents from that cause. I have in my mind a case where a few weeks ago two employees were working on a car in the yard, and they carelessly stepped in front of an incoming express and both were killed. No sort of regulation or rule can protect men against their own carelessness. Then, a number of employees are killed while on board trains as crews. Accidents arise from defects in the track or roadway, and others are caused by the neglect of some officials connected with the operation of trains. Then there are accidents arising from defective rolling stock. The extremes of heat and cold in Canada render railway operation very difficult. To-day the track may be in good condition and examine it carefully as you will you find no defect, but a heavy frost comes followed by a thaw, and the track heaves and accidents occur. It is almost impossible in a climate like ours to prevent this, but I think I may say that in recent years more care has been taken than formerly. As to the number of section men that should be employed, I have studied that matter somewhat carefully and while there is a difference in the number of section men employed on different railways, the differing traffic of the lines may account for that. On a trunk line carrying heavy traffic a greater number of men per track mile are needed than on a branch line on which there is only one or two trains a day. It is difficult to make a law that would apply absolutely to the number of men that should be employed per section on a railway. The sections differ in length, some are longer than others, and one section will carry more traffic than another section.

I discussed that at some length with one of the officials of the brotherhoods recently, and he agreed with me in thinking that in Canada at the present time a sufficient number of men on the average was being employed to keep the tracks in fairly good condition, considering the traffic on the various lines. But this must be remembered, that the brotherhoods themselves have a very strong influence in determining how many men shall be employed, their hours of labour, and all that kind of thing. No railway company is allowed itself to say how many hours a man shall work, and scarcely how many men shall work. The railway companies have to make contracts with the various brotherhoods as to all these things, and my experience is that they arrive at a pretty fair solution as far as the men and the keeping of the tracks in condition are concerned. Then, in the last few years the rolling stock has become so much heavier and the trains so much longer that a heavier rail and a better roadbed are required than was the case a few years ago. The rolling stock also is being improved very rapidly. It is heavier than it was, and no new rolling stock is allowed to come out of the shop, and to be used unless it complies with the requirements of the Railway Commission, and all old rolling stock is being brought up to those requirements. Then, there has been a great advance in the last few years in the protection of railway men by the introduction of the automatic brake and other improved appliances; so that if the railway employee is careful, unless there is a collision or a broken rail, his life is not nearly such a risky one as it was a few years ago. The requirements of the Commissioners are stringent and even if they were not the rolling stock of Canadian railways has to be up to the standard in these respects, because it is interchangeable with the rolling stock of United States railways, and a Canadian car that does not comply with the conditions of the laws prevailing in the United States is not allowed to go on a United States road. Our railways are in such close intercourse with the United States railways that even if we had no regulations of our Board of Railway Commissioners, we would be compelled to comply with certain regulations imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then, every railway company is practically compelled to make arrangements with the different brotherhoods as to the terms under which they shall work. It is a mistake now to suppose that all these arrangements have reference to wages. The schedules agreed upon cover every phase of a man's employment—his hours of labour, his holidays, his transportation, what he shall do, when he shall do it, how much he shall get if he does something else. Of this I know something, because I have had to make some of these arrangements. What we are after in Canada are results. I am not so sure about medals which might encourage philanthropic effort to rescue those who are injured. I would rather do something to obviate the use of medals by reducing the number of accidents. What can we do? The United States have various laws. Their conditions are different from ours. Their best railways have double tracks. The Grand Trunk railway has double tracks on its main line. On these double track lines the accidents are reduced to a minimum; and I think that a careful examination of the records, bearing in mind that the greater amount of business in Canada is done on single track lines, will show that there are far fewer accidents in Canada than in the United States. I think that on the whole greater care is exercised in Canada than across the line, and that rather than the making of laws tends to the reduction of accidents. I think that in Canada we perhaps make the mistake of thinking that the cure for any evil that exists is to pass a law of some kind and then forget it. What we are trying to do is to work out, through a practical board which has much greater power than the United States board, something that will encourage care on the part of the railway employees as well as on the part of the railway companies. Has this result been attained? To a large extent it has. After all, it is not so much a question of the laws that we should put on the statute-book as a question of the quality of the men engaged in the work. I have had a good deal to do with the railway men in Canada, and I believe I am safe in saying that in any country there is no more intelligent class of men employed than we find on the railways; and the more we encourage such men to go into the work on our great railway systems, the fewer will be the accidents and the greater will be the satisfaction of the people. The Railway Commission in Canada is in a somewhat different position from the Interstate Commission in the United States. Under their system the railways are chartered by the states, and the Interstate Commission has power only to regulate traffic that passes from one state to another, not traffic in each state. It has a greater power than our commission as to prosecution, and it is more in line with their constitution for the federal power to undertake prosecutions than it is with us in Canada, where the enforcement of the laws is left largely to provincial jurisdiction. In the United States there is a fine for a violation of the law. We have not the same procedure or the same fine, but if a railway company is found running a car against the order of the board, it is not allowed to run that car again until it conforms to the regulations of the board. No company dares to break that order, because the board can go much further; it can prevent the railway company doing any business until it complies with the order of the board. It could issue an order that this railway could not run a train except with properly equipped cars and that becomes an order of the court. I think that would be equivalent to an injunction issued against any one to prevent his doing something. So that the power given our railway board is much greater that that possessed by the United States board. There are appeals from the decisions of the latter in every case to some court or another.

Last year our Board of Railway Commissioners disposed of over 3,000 cases without almost a hearing, without any formality, in many cases after hearing the story by mail; and the results in Canada, whatever our laws may be, are as beneficial, or more so, than the results in the United States with their laws. But if we can improve our laws in any way, I should be delighted to do so. The Board of Railway Commissioners has appointed a certain number of inspectors in every section of the Dominion, and whenever an accident occurs, one of these inspectors is on the ground as rapidly as he can get there.

Mr. MILLER. Have the inspectors the authority to prosecute, and if not, would it not be well that they should have it?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a question for argument. The result is what we are after, and I believe that we have better results than in the United States. Although our inspectors have not the power to prosecute, they can be ordered to lay an information, but that is not part of their duty Under our system, when an accident occurs, if the circumstances warrant such an investigation, the coroner holds an inquest, and where there is any negligence, the coroner's jury lays the foundation for criminal prosecution and the provincial authorities prosecute the party supposed to be guilty. Therefore, I am not sure that we would gain anything in that regard, although the suggestion might be worth thinking about. His suggestion would make it imperative to institute a prosecution before some authority, but possibly that would take out of the hands of the coroner and the provincial authorities the machinery amply provided in cases of fatal accidents. We have appointed these inspectors, they are on the ground at every point, and give a full report of every accident. They do not make a speciality of saying that the company is guilty, but they go along these lines, if I remember rightly. Was the accident caused by a spread rail, a broken wheel, a misinterpreted order, by wrong orders, by something wrong with the locomotive, by some fault in the rolling stock or negligence of somebody. And they investigate on the spot, where every one knows all about the circumstances, and ascertain just what the reason was, and that practically tells us, so far as it can be told, who is the party in fault. This information is compiled and brought to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the board immediately takes the matter up with the company, if the accident was due to a faulty track, the board discusses that fairly with the company, and the result has been that tracks are kept in better condition. The railway company, knowing the workings of our railway board, in their own interests as well as the interests of the public, are very careful that all rolling stock now undergoes a thorough inspection. They do not even trust their own officials to inspect the cars, but there are certain companies which make a business of inspecting rolling stock, and the railway company engage their services. When an order is given for rolliny stock, such as cars or locomotives, these are not taken over by the railway company until these experts, independent of either the manufacturer or the purchaser, give a certificate that the stock is up to standard and specification, and fit for service.

There is a question discussed a good deal in the House and the country, and that is as to the further inspection of locomotives in this way, and I think my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee), has a Bill introduced in this connection. Railway men say that a locomotive may appear to be in good condition in the shop, but after it is on the road a little time, something becomes faulty to a greater or lesser degree. They think it would be in the interest of all parties, if there were inspectors who had authority at any time to jump on board one of these locomotives and inspect it. They think also that if there were men possibly who would jump on a train more frequently than at present and inspect the rolling stock in motion, that would be a good thing. If the board has not the power now to do that—and I am not sure that it has not—we may give it to them. My opinion, however, is that the board has the power under the Act to engage any official it sees fit to employ for any purpose whatever. However, the department will be glad to receive any suggestions to perfect the Act, because whatever will protect the employee, will of course, protect the traveller as well. We have a young country with a large expanse of territory and a great mileage of railways developing very rapidly and with our climatic conditions and other difficulties to face we have a greater problem to solv than they have to the south and much greater than they have in Europe. Still we are making good progress, and we are glad to take suggestions as to how we can improve conditions.

We hear a great deal about the Act being defective in protecting live stock from being killed by trains. As a matter of fact the original idea of all these provisions about fencing, &c., was not so much to protect the cattle as to protect the employees and passengers. The chief thing in the minds of the framers of the Act was, tha if cattle or horses or other obstructions got on the track, there was liable to be death for the employees and passengers and destruction of property. But we are asked now to legislate rather with the view of protecting the animals who get on the tracks from being killed. Of course, the one works as well as the other, but there is a double reason why cattle should be kept off the tracks, first, for the protection of the passengers and employees, and secondly for the protection of the animals themselves. That is one of the reasons why the old style of having a pit at the crossings, which is the only absolute way of keeping animals off the tracks, has been abandoned.

The employees complained that there was danger to the animals getting into these pits and thus throwing the locomotive off the tracks and injuring the employees and perhaps the passengers as well.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Are there any statistics to show the percentage of accidents in that way?

Mr. GRAHAM. At the time these pits were in vogue, our statistics were very incomplete, but the consensus of opinio is that these pits are not the safest kind of cattle guards to have on the railway. We are doing a great deal for the protection of life. Our rolling stock is being rapidly brought up to as high a standard as possible. It is being tested as it never was before. Our roadways in Canada are in better condition to-day than ever. More money is being spent, heavier rails are being used, double track is being installed, interswitching devices which wer not known a few years ago are being installed.

Level crossings are being protected by hundreds as never before. In all of these things we are moving along pretty well in the way of protecting life in all possible positions. But we live pretty fast in this country and are moving rapidly. Those of us who are most eloquent about the danger of trains are the most anxious to get on the fastest trains we can, and those who insist that we must not allow trains to travel rapidly through villages or towns are loudly indignant if a train even slows up in passing through a village. Our rolling stock and roadbeds are being improved, and, as far as we are concerned we are anxious that lives of passengers and trainmen and public should be protected to the fullest extent, and in that respect we are glad to receive suggestions from the hon. member or any one else.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). After the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), it may be unnecessary to add anything to what has been said, but this question of industrial accidents is one of such very great importance to the nation not less than to labour that I feel I should like to add just a word or two to what has been said by the mover of the resolution and the Minister of Railways.

In the first place, I should like to endorse what the minister said when he pointed out that although as the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) has said, the United States has excellent legislation, has put many statutes on the books, the result goes to show that there are fewer persons killed on the railways of the Dominion of Canada than on the railways of the United States in proportion to the total number of employees in the respective countries. I have here statistics which have been carefully compiled from the railway statistics of the Dominion, from the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, and from the Home Office reports of Great Britain, and these statistics throw a good deal of light upon the effect of legislation and the enforcement of legislation in the different countries. I regret to notice that the showing as to the number of accidents is even larger than that indicated by the mover of the resolution. In his resolution he has stated that it appears that one in every 199 trainmen was killed in Canada, and one in every 33 injured. That seems a very large percentage, but the records, unfortunately, show that the percentage is even larger than that, that the number of employees killed on railways in any one year is more than one in every 199, and the number injured than one in every 33. That, of course refers to all the railways of the Dominion.

The following tables are self-explanatory:

Statement showing the number of railway employees of all classes for one killed:—

	Canada.	United States.	Great Britain.
1909..	650	576	.....
1908..	499	422	.....
1907..	478	369	1,221

Statement showing the number of railway employees of all classes for one injured:—

	Canada.	United States.	Great Britain.
1909..	132	20	..
1908..	91	17	..
1907..	106	19	29

Statement showing the number of trainmen (engineers, conductors, firemen, baggagemen, brakemen) for one killed:—

	Canada.	United States	Great Britain.
1909..	172	205	.....
1908..	168	150	.....
1907..	136	125	1,084

	Canada.	United States.	Great Britain.
1909..	28	9	..
1907..	26	8	35

It will be seen that the percentage of employees killed in Canada in proportion to the total number employed is lower than in the United States. The difference, on the other hand, between Great Britain and Canada and the United States, is very marked. This difference is, of course, doubtless accounted for in part by the facts mentioned by the Minister of Railways, that we have in this country climatic conditions to contend with, vast stretches of territory which are much more difficult to safeguard and protect, and considering the difficulties and problems that nature presents in this country, it is natural to expect that the percentage will be considerably higher than in the old land.

These figures will come somewhat as a surprise to the public generally, who can hardly be familiar with the extent to which industrial accidents occur with respect to railway employees of the different countries.

Summarizing the figures, it would appear that the total number of railway employees killed in Canada in the past three years has been 633, the total number injured 3,134, making a total of 3,767 fatal and non-fatal accidents in this period.

Giving the House the figures in another form, of the 19,443 trainmen in Canada in 1909, 1 out of every 172 was killed, and one out of every 28 injured. In 1908 the proportion of killed was one out of every 168, and of injured one out of every 23. In 1907 the proportion of killed was one out of every 136 and of injured one out of every 26.

My hon. friend from East Grey has referred particularly to the United States legislation, and to results which have been achieved there. The figures I have read to the House go to show that with such legislation as we have, and with the facilities afforded particularly in connection with the Railway Commission, the number of accidents are fewer, and the number of fatalities are fewer, relatively. But the following figures taken from reliable sources in the United States, will help to bring out the significance of the loss of life in that country. I think they are worthy of being read to this House, because they help to show what is inevitably incident to the calling of railway employees. Mr. Daniel L. Cease, in an address before the fourth annual meeting of the American Association for labour legislation, in St. Louis, December 29, 1910, says:

> The railroad casualty statistics for the last year showed that 9 men were killed each 24 hours, and that 1 was injured or killed every 7 minutes. One man was killed for each 205 employed, and one was injured for every 9 employed. The working life of a brakeman is estimated at only 7 years.
> Full statistics covering other occupations are lacking, but the miners claim that 4 men are killed in America to one in Europe; and it is admitted that mining ordinarily and normally ought to be accomplished with less danger here than abroad.

Then I find the following statement, which is no less striking, in a book entitled 'Perils of Peace,' published in 1906, by the American Institute of Social Service. I will read one or two paragraphs:

> Our peaceful avocations cost more lives every two days than all that we lost in battle during our war in Spain. It has been pointed out that the Pennsylvania coal fields alone furnish 'an industrial Bull Run' annually.
>
> In these piping times of peace, we in the United States kill in four years some 80,000 people more than all who fell in battle and died of wounds, on both sides, during the four years of our civil war; that is, in the same length of time, we are now killing 53 per cent more people than two great armies could destroy, equipped with all the weapons that ingenuity could then devise, and making destruction their eager business.
> We are killing more than twice as many every year as perished by violence in both the French and English armies during the three years of the Crimean war. There are more killed and wounded on our railroads every year than the entire losses of the Boer war on both sides in three years.

That is a record of loss of life which ought to impress the minds of all who take an interest in the preservation of a people. Speaking only of the railroads in the United States, we are told that there are more killed and wounded every year than the entire losses of the Boer war on both sides in three years. Then I have here a reference taken from an article on the loss of life on the United States railways, by John W. Gitterman, which appeared recently in McClure's magazine for June, 1910:

> It is difficult to realize that in the fiscal year 1908 the railroads of the United States killed, in addition to passengers, 3,470 of their own employees, an average of 328 deaths each month since 1903.
>
> Injuries are twenty times more numerous than deaths. Last year six and four-tenths per cent of all the railway employees in the United States were injured: thus the chances are that no man can escape accident for nine years. No wonder that most of the life insurance companies refuse to insure a railroad man on any terms, while in any sort of company a switchman can be insured only at a rating twenty years in advance of his actual age.
>
> Where, twenty years ago, the employee had an even chance of remaining uninjured for more than fifteen years, his expectation has sunk nearly to eight. In spite of double-tracking and safety devices and palliative legislation, matters have come to such a pass that if the injured of one bad year could all wait in line before one hospital door, the queue, if laid side by side, would make a row nearly two miles long.
> In twenty-one years the percentage of employees killed or injured on the railroads of the United States has nearly doubled. At the present rate it would take only seventeen years to kill or injure all the employees now on the rolls. If the number of railroad employees remains constant for fifteen years, 1,300,000 men, at the present mortality rate, will be killed or injured. But the number, of course, will greatly increase. It is, therefore, probably no exaggeration to say that, unless the railroads radically improve their present methods of safeguarding their employees' lives, they will either kill or injure, within the next fifteen years, not far from 2,000,000 men.

These figures are reliable statistics, illustrating conditions on United States railways, notwithstanding the excellent legislation to which my hon. friend has made reference. I might make mention of one feature which he seemed to regard as important and as existing in the United States, but wanting in this country. My hon. friend referred to an Act to promote the security of travellers and tend to the safety of life, and if I understood him rightly, medals of honour were to be awarded under that statute by the President of the United States. Two or three years ago his late Majesty King Edward offered a similar medal for precisely the same purpose, and extended this offer to the self-governing dominions of the British Empire. So at the presnt time any man in Canada who performs an heroic act of that kind, is entitled to receive, not a medal from some local authority, but to receive the Albert medal, as it is called, from His Majesty the King. In fact, one such medal was awarded last year to a Canadian. I have here an account given in the Labour 'Gazette,' of 1910, page 1350, of the award of a medal to Mr. Thomas Reynolds, in connection with the Spanish river accident. This communication is dated Whitehall, April 25, 1910, and has the following:

> The King has been pleased to confer the Albert medal of the first class upon Mr. Thomas Reynolds, railway conductor, of North Bay, Ontario, Canada, for conspicuous gallantry in saving the lives of eleven persons on the occasion of the disaster on the Canadian Pacific railway at the Spanish river bridge, near Webbwood, Ont., on January 21 last, as detailed below.

Then follows an account of the action performed by Conductor Reynolds, and concludes:

> The presentation of the medal, in the name of His Majesty, was performed by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada at Montreal, on the 16th ultimo.

I believe it has since been arranged that this medal shall be presented for acts of heroism on the part of miners and men in other industries, as well as on railways, so that in so far as marks of honour or royal recognition may prove an incentive to acts of heroism a very strong incentive has been provided by His late Majesty. But while I think the hon. member for Grey has rendered a great service to the workingmen of this country in bringing out the facts which he has brought out in connection with industrial accidents, he might have rendered even a greater service if he had extended the scope of his resolution beyond industrial accidents on railways, to cover loss of life and limb which occurs in industrial accidents generally. This is a matter to which the Department of Labour has been devoting some attention for years past. By gathering from as many sources as possible the record of industrial accidents occurring in the Dominion we are in a position to lay before the country a statement of what the loss of life in industry amounts to in Canada. By referring to the annual report of the Department of Labour hon. members will find there statistical tables showing the number of fatal and non-fatal accidents which have occurred in Canada during the last few years. We have the figures for 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1910. These figures are gathered from a great variety of sources, from the press of the country, from labour organizations, from railway boards and from any sources which the department can find it possible to communicate with. Whenever the account of a fatal accident to a workingman in the course of his employment is brought to the attention of the department, the department communicates with responsible parties and obtains accurate information with regard to the accident. It is from information gathered in this way that these statistics relating to deaths have been compiled. Without attempting to give the House in any detail the figures contained in these tables, I might just mention that, taking industrial callings generally, the figures go to show that in the year 1907, having regard to the different trades and callings, 1,353 persons were killed outright in the course of their employment; in 1908, 1,272, and in 1909, 1,278; or an average of about 1,300 a year of deaths of workingmen in Canada occasioned in the course of their employment. I emphasize these last words because it is only such accidents as occur to men while they are actually working that are recorded in these statistics. These are necessarily incomplete. In a very large number of cases employers naturally try to conceal from the public the fact that men have been killed in their particular businesses and there are men killed in trades of whom the public never learns. Then again there are men who meet with accidents and are taken to hospitals or their homes where they die later. The department may get an account of the accident but never learns of the death of the man. I think we would be safe in saying that if we get a record of half the accidents we are doing about as much as can be expected. But, assuming that we get more than half, assuming that we get about three-fifths, the showing would be that something like 2,000 workingmen are killed outright in Canada every year in the course of their employment. That does not include, for example, men who may be going to work and being killed by a train but includes only men killed while actually working at their particular trades. The number whose industrial efficiency is impaired for all time through loss of limb or through some other impairment of physical health is at least five times the number killed. Hence it would appear that two thousand of the workers of the Dominion are killed outright every year, and that there are 10,000 whose industrial efficiency is impaired for all time. Take that average for a period of ten years and what is the result? As far as Canada is concerned we kill outright in our industries 20,000 men and we permanently impair the industrial efficiency of something like 100,000 others. That is a tremendous loss to the nation. In ten years 20,000 of its wealth producers killed and 100,000 whose industrial efficiency is impaired for all time to come.

Mr. SPROULE. What distinction do you make between killed and killed outright?

Mr. KING. I did not intend to draw any particular distinction. I presume that what I had in my mind when I said killed outright was that a man was killed immediately upon the accident occurring. A man who is injured and dies in a couple of weeks would not be killed outright.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand it is from secondary causes.

Mr. KING. However, the point I was trying to make is that while we are trying to conserve our natural resources, which is a worthy object, the conservation of human life, of human resources, is something of equal if not greater importance not only from the point of view of economic wealth but also from that of national strength and well being; and to the extent which the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) has helped to direct public attention to the significance of loss of life in that connection and the necessity for the state doing all in its power to help to reduce this death toll and this massacre of human beings he has rendered to the people and especially to the working classes of this country a very, very great service.

But there is one other phase of the question which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. It is not mentioned in the resolution of my hon. friend but it is suggested by the figures which I have given. My hon. friend said something about the appointing of a prosecutor on the part of the state to prosecute railway companies and, in that connection, he has drawn attention to the fact that the compensation which is to come in the case of loss of life or loss of limb frequently comes only as the result of some legal action. I think it is worth the while of members of this House and of other legislators in the country to consider whether or not there is not a necessity for remedying in some shape or form that circumstance. We can say with certainty at this moment that a year hence another 2,000 lives will be swept off the list of workers in Canada, and in another year there will be 10,000 men whose industrial efficiency will be permanently impaired as a consequence of accidents occurring in the callings in which they are engaged. We know that loss of life is incident to a calling itself. If that is so does it not appear that in some way the industry itself should be made to bear what is inevitable to it? Take the case of a railway company with its cars; so much is allowed for broken cars or for repairing damage done to cars. I am just suggesting this thought because it is a large subject and it would involve much consideration before anything in the shape of legislation could be based upon it, but it is not worth considering whether human life is not entitled to the same amount of protection and kind of provision as is afforded to what is part of the rolling stock of a company and whether in some way the industry could not be made to bear part of the cost of its inevitable loss of life and limb with the result that those who are left behind, those who belong to the family of the man who may have been killed outright, shall not, in consequence of his death, be put in the position that in order to get some compensation for the loss of his life they must enter upon litigation and add to the distress which they already have? These are the suggestions that I thought I should like to make because I think they are points which are attracting considerable attention among the industrial workers of the country and, having regard for the conservation of human life, for the upbuilding of the strength of the nation as a whole, too much attention cannot be given to a very serious aspect of this very serious question.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this hour to add very many words to what has already been said. It appears to me that the importance of this subject entirely warrants my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) in bringing it to the attention of the House. The remarks made by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Railways and Canals show that they both had notice that this motion would be presented this evening while some of us who desired to speak on it had no such notice.

Mr. KING. The only notice I had was seeing the resolution on the Order Paper and my hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) had precisely the same opportunity.

Mr. CROTHERS. I must congratulate the Minister of Labour upon his great ability in delivering such a well prepared speech without any previous study. The Minister of Labour took considerable pains to gather details of the appalling loss of life, but I regret that he is not in a position to suggest a remedy, as his duty would seem to demand. He told us he had been collecting statistics for years, but to what purpose is all this discussion if we let it drop without taking any action. The Minister of Railways has no suggestion to make, the Minister of Labour has no suggestion to make, but the subject seems to be of sufficient importance to warrant the government entering into a special investigation as to the means that should be adopted to lessen the deplorable loss of life which we have heard so much about. No reason is given why the fatalities are higher in Canada than in England, and it seems possible that our death rate from this cause could be lessened if proper methods were adopted. The Minister of Railways told us that we were improving all the time, but I know from mingling with railway men day after day that a great many of them complain that they are compelled to serve too long hours, that they have not sufficient time for rest between runs, and some railways have so many branches that a man is sent out and is sometimes on the go for three or four days with practically no rest except what he may obtain when his train is on a siding. The railway men of this country will expect the government to take some reasonable action on which to base legislation with a view of lessening the appalling death toll on Canadian railways.

Mr. MILLER. There was no intent of discourtesy on my part in not informing hon. members that the resolution would be gone on with to-night because I did not know myself that it would be called. I gave no notice to the Minister of Labour. He asked me to-day if I would go on and I told him I would if the motion were reached. Neither did I give notice to the Minister of Railways. One of the whips on the other side asked me if I would proceed with the resolution to-night and I told him I would if it were reached.

Mr. KING. I think it was to-night that I asked you if you would go on with the motion?

Mr. MILLER. It was. I somewhat agree with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) that we should have more than words and that there is something that should be done in this direction. I am glad to hear from the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Labour that in Canada as great interest is being taken in this question as in the United States, and that we are doing much, as they are, in preventitive measures. Still, I think there is something more that could be done. The Minister of Railways told us that Canada was a very difficult country in which to operate railway trains, because of the climatic conditions, and my answer to that is that the greater the difficulty the greater the effort should be to overcome that difficulty. He told us that certain accidents were due to the neglect of somebody connected with train operation, but in the United States, there is not only legislation to punish that somebody but there are officials whose duty it is to enforce it. That we have not in Canada. The minister also told us that accidents occurred through faulty rolling stock, but he himself gave the evidence that greater care is taken in the United States than in Canada because he told us that certain cars which were used in Canada would not be permitted in the United States and particularly in the state of New York. It is not sufficient protection for Canadian employees that faulty cars of Canadian railroads will not be interchanged by American railroads, because if the Canadian Pacific or the Grand Trunk Pacific had such defective cars they need not send them to the United States ; there is nothing in the world to prevent them sending them through Canada to the Pacific coast. The Minister of Railways told us that the coroner was the first to take action, and that the Board of Railway Commissioners followed, but the proper time to prevent accidents is before there is an accident, and before the coroner is called in. The Minister of Railways also told us that it doesn't do any good to pass a law and then forget it, and that is exactly my contention. In the United States they pass the law, and then they appoint an official whose duty it is to see that nobody is allowed to forget or neglect that law.

As to the hours of labour, the Minister of Railways has pointed out that there is always an arrangement between the railway brotherhoods and the railway companies that limits the hours of labour. One of the officials of the Board of Railway Commissioners in Ottawa informed me that some years ago there was a request from the railway men for legislation to limit the hours of labour, and that it was supported by the engineers and firemen and opposed by the trainmen. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has stated that the railway men in his city have complained of the long hours that they have to work, and of the disastrous consequences to them and to the people in the trains. It is not sufficient protection to the employees and the passengers that an arrangement has taken place between the brotherhoods and the railway companies. That is too elastic; it is too easy to evade it, and many a railway employee is tempted, by the larger wage he receives, to work longer hours than his own safety or the safety of those in his charge ought to allow him to do. I contend that, though it is a fortunate thing, and a thing on which, perhaps, we may congratulate ourselves, that the percentage of accidents is somewhat greater in the United States than in Canada, yet we may safely copy their legislation in so far as safety appliances and limiting the hours of labour, and particularly means of enforcing legislation are concerned. These are two matters of importance, which, if attended to, would reduce the number of accidents. Mr. Speaker, having brought this matter to the attention of the House, I would, with your permission, withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should the hon. gentleman do that, if he wants an expression of the opinion of the House? It is probable that the House would pass the resolution, and then we would be put in possession of the information sought for.

Mr. MILLER. I am willing that that should be done.

Mr. JAMESON. Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether there is any information as to the percentage of accidents per mile of railway operated in Canada by the different railway companies?

Mr. MILLER. If there is any such information, I am not aware of it.

Mr. JAMESON. Perhaps the Minister of Labour has that information?

Mr. KING. I cannot say that the statistics are compiled in that way. I think it would be easy to so compile them, from the records we have from the railways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the motion is not withdrawn, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal) moved second reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. PERLEY. This is a very important Bill, and it should hardly be passed at this hour. It was brought up last session or the session before, and a great deal of objection was taken to it in the House.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). I have an amendment to move in committee to meet the objection.

Mr. MILLER.

Mr. PERLEY. I think it should stand until we get some notice of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). Last year the Bill was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. It was said that the workingmen had never asked for it, but this year a large delegation of the men working on the Canadian Pacific railway have asked for it. It is proposed by the amendment that the men should be paid every two weeks. We know that if men have to work for a month without getting their pay they have to buy many things on credit. So I think the Bill is quite reasonable.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that the Bill be read a second time and be sent to the Railway Committee, where both the railway men and the railway companies could be heard.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). This is a public Bill, and I do not see why we should refer it to the Railway Committee. It was referred to that committee last year, and the railway companies represented that the workingmen had never asked for this. Well, I have a letter here, and a petition signed by over 1,000 men, and this petition was signed five years ago. The answer which Sir Thomas Shaughnessy gave was that as soon as the Angus shops would be built, and the Montreal Bank have a branch at the works, the company would be willing to pay every two weeks. That was the answer given by the Canadian Pacific railway four years ago, but last year in the Railway Committee they said that the workingmen had never asked for it. I do not see, therefore, why we should refer this Bill to that committee. We all know what happens when a Bill is referred to it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that in the face of the fact he has just given.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). I have the letter and petition here. I do not want to mention the name of the writer of that letter, because he has worked for the company 25 years, and if I disclosed his name he would be discharged. Here is the petition which was circulated around these shops. I have counted the number of names, and I find that 1,071 men have signed it. There is no reason why these men should not be paid every two weeks; and if this Bill be referred to the Railway Committee, it will not pass this session. This is the fourth session I have brought it up. All I ask is that any railway company, which has been given any aid by the government, should pay its employees every two weeks.

An. hon. MEMBER. How many men have signed?

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). Some 1,200 or 1,300, or 89 per cent of those employed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's) moved that the House go into committee on the Bill.

Mr. PERLEY. This matter should be referred to the Railway Committee. Last year it was given a very full discussion in that committee; and if we are going to change the decision then arrived at, both parties ought to be given a hearing before the committee. It was said then that the men were not making any demand for this change; and we must bear in mind that a railway company is very different from another corporation. Any company in which I am interested pays its men every two weeks, and it is easy for us to do so because the men are within reach. But with a large railway company the case is different. The Grand Trunk railway for instance extends all over this country, and has to make up its pay sheets in Montreal or Toronto. It sends out its pay car all over the line, and it takes the company really a month to get the sheets made up, and have the pay car out and back again ready to start the next month. I move that this Bill be sent to the Railway Committee for consideration. While I have every sympathy with the men, I do not think it is right to force a measure such as this through the House at this hour of the night when so few members are present, and when the matter is one which was before the Railway Committee last year.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). It is a very poor reason to say that the members are not in the House. If they are not, it is through no fault of mine. I have taken out the clause to which objection was made, and which provides that the companies shall pay back any money they had retained. I have done this because I have been made to understand that it would be impossible for the companies to do otherwise than keep part of the money back. The men will, therefore, have to work four weeks before they can draw two weeks pay, and that will give ample time to the companies to prepare their pay-lists every two weeks. In the old country the railway companies pay every two weeks although they have 65,000 employees at work. In New York also, and in Canada we have some railway companies which pay every two weeks.

Mr. PERLEY. What railways in Canada pay every two weeks?

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). I cannot mention the name, but it is one which was mentioned to me by Senator Casgrain.

Mr. PERLEY. It is a short railway line?

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's). If the men are two weeks behind, the company has plenty of time to make up its pay sheets every two weeks; and as to the point that a company's lines extend over a long distance, it takes only four days to get to Vancouver.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This Bill cannot be moved to a final stage to-day, but it can be passed through the committee. I sympathize with the object of the Bill which is that the men should be paid every two weeks if possible; but I would suggest that the third reading should stand over in order that the railway companies may be given a hearing before the measure finally passes.

Mr. PERLEY. How can the railway companies be heard, if the Bill is not sent to the Railway Committee?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They can communicate with my hon. friend, I am sure.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This clause which will be the whole Bill is amended to read as follows:

Section 259 of the Railway Act is amended by inserting the following as subsection 3 to said section 259.

And that the salary or wages of every person employed in the operation, maintenance or equipment of any railway company to which the parliament of Canada has granted aid by means of subsidy or guarantee, shall be paid not less frequently than once in each two weeks during the terms of his or her employment.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Railways ought to be present when this Bill is being considered. Would it apply to the Intercolonial railway, and what views would he have in regard to it?

Mr. KING. The Minister of Railways asked me to say that he has seen the amendment to be proposed by my hon. friend and entirely concurs in it and is quite prepared to support the Bill in its amended form.

Mr. SPROULE. Then he would think it feasible to pay every two weeks on the Intercolonial?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He approves of the amendment.

Mr. PERLEY. Have the government consulted the railways in regard to this matter?

Mr. KING. The Bill has been before the House a couple of years, and I think the minister has discussed it fully with the representatives of the railways.

Mr. PERLEY. I think the government should take the responsibility for such a Bill and make it a government measure if they decide to pass it, particularly at this hour of the night when it is forced through without discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. Would railways to which aid had not been given be affected by this?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is there such a railway?

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps not any railway in its entirety, but I think, for instance the Canadian Northern has lines under lease which did not receive aid. Would they be regarded as a portion of the Canadian Northern system, and would this Bill apply to the whole system?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That would be my view.

Mr. JAMESON. Would this refer to employees on board ships operated by railway companies?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it applies to ships at all.

Bill reported.
