House of Commons Debates

THIRD SESSION—ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 92) respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Alberta Electric Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 94) respecting the Western Central Railway Company.—Mr. Rankin.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT—LINE FENCES.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 95) to amend the Indian Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The object of this Bill is to amend section 45 of the Indian Act. That section deals with line fences between a reserve or the land of an Indian and the land of a white man, and by it the question of fences is left solely to the discretion of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. We have a band of Indians in my constituency and the line fences between the white settlers and the Indians have been in disrepair for many years. Application has been made to the department, but no remedy has been applied. The object of this amendment is to make the band of Indians amenable to municipal by-laws relating to line fences. Subsection 3 provides:—

The said band or the said Indian is hereby made amenable to any provincial law or municipal by-law regulating the question of line fences where the reserve is situated, and the said band is entitled to the same rights and privileges and is subject to the same liabilities thereunder as any other person.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[The questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. On what date and by whom was application for charter made by the provisional directors of the Farmers' Bank?
2. On what date or dates was the required deposit made with the Finance Department, and by whom and by what cash or cheques?
3. What steps were taken by the Treasury Board to satisfy the requirements of section 15 of the Bank Act?
4. What was the date of issue of the charter and to what persons?
5. Did the Finance Department or any of its officials, the Finance Minister or any other member of the government, receive any communications, verbal or written, previous to the issue of the certificate of the Treasury Board, cautioning, warning or suggesting inquiry as to the standing or character of the promoters, or the proceedings by which the deposit was procured?
6. If so, did the government make any inquiry or investigation with the view of satisfying itself as to the bona fides and sufficiency of the undertaking?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1 and 4. The application for a charter for the Farmers' Bank of Canada was made by way of petition, presented to the House of Commons on the 27th May, 1904. James Gallager and others were the petitioners. James Gallager, of Teeswater; John Watson, of Listowel; John Ferguson and Alex. Fraser, of Toronto; Alex. S. Lown, of Drayton, all of the province of Ontario, were the provisional directors under the charter granted by parliament (cap. 77, Acts of 1904) on the 18th July, 1904. On the 20th July, 1905 (cap. 92, Acts of 1905) the life of the charter so granted was prolonged for an additional year, and on the 26th June, 1906 (cap. 94, Acts of 1906) the further period of six months from July 18, 1906, was added to the time within which the certificate from the Treasury Board might be obtained.

2. W. R. Travers deposited, on October 23, 1906, $250,000 to the credit of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General in the Bank of Montreal, Toronto, and the following day the receipt of the bank for this deposit was received in course of mail in the Department of Finance.

3. A statutory declaration by Walter R. Travers, the general manager of the bank, together with exhibits attached, setting out in detail the manner in which the requirements of the Bank Act and of the special Acts of incorporation were complied with, was filed on the application for the certificate under the provisions of the Bank Act. The evidence of publication of the various statutory notices was verified. This evidence was submitted to the Deputy Minister of Justice, who stated that the statements in the statutory declaration of Mr. Walter R. Travers were sufficient, if accepted, to show compliance with the statutory provisions, and that on such evidence the Treasury Board might lawfully accept, under the Act, and thereupon issue the certificate referred to. The certificate authorizing the bank to commence business was accordingly issued by the board on November 30, 1906.

5 and 6. As it is not possible to give an answer to these questions in the absence of the Minister of Finance, a reply is for the present deferred.

* Mr. MONK :

1. On what date did the position of Canadian commissioner for Canada in France become vacant?

2. Has the government received any applications for the vacant situation?

3. What is the cause of the delay in providing a new commissioner?

4. Is it the intention of the government to make any changes in the organization of the said office? If so, what are the changes and alterations contemplated?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The position of Canadian Commissioner for France became vacant about the first of September.

2. The government has received no official application for the same.

3. The matter of the appointment of a new commissioner is now under consideration.

3. Is this interest periodically paid or is it allowed to accumulate?

4. If not periodically paid, is it periodically entered up, and at what intervals, to the credit of the contractor?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER :

1. $1,424,933.18.

2. The same rate of interest as that allowed by the post office and Government Savings Banks, namely, 3 per cent.

3. Interest is allowed to accumulate.

4. Interest is credited the account on the 31st March, each year.

such employees affected with phosphorus necrosis?

He said: An asterisk was put on this question, but there is no asterisk in the printed notice. If the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) has the answer, I would ask him to give it, because the subject may come up this afternoon.

Mr. KING:

1. The government is not in possession of information as to the number of persons employed in the match factory at Hull, Quebec, for the years mentioned. It is understood that the number of employees in the factory in question is at the present time about 200.

2, 3 and 4. This has not been definitely ascertained. I may say, however, that the government has instances of necrosis, and I will give information to the House on that subject when we come to the discussion. But it was impossible to ascertain the exact number of cases. That is why the answer is not more complete.

YUKON—REPEAL OF BEER IMPORT TAX.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the ordinance made by His Excellency the Governor General in Council in virtue of the provisions of section 16 of the Yukon Act, chapter 63 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, on the 9th day of December, 1909, and intituled: 'An Ordinance to rescind an Ordinance respecting the imposition of a tax upon ale, porter, beer or lager beer imported into the Yukon Territory,' a copy of which was, on the 13th day of January, 1911, laid before this House for its approval under section 17 of the said chapter 63, is now so approved.

Mr. OLIVER. Provision is made in the Yukon Act that the commissioner in council may make ordinances for the control and regulation of the sale of and traffic in liquor in the territory, subject to the provisions of any ordinance of the Governor in Council. In accordance with a resolution of the Yukon Council requesting the passage of an ordinance by the Governor in Council, an ordinance was passed in 1908 levying a tax of 50 cents a gallon on beer imported into the Yukon Territory. After an experience of one year of this tax, the Yukon Council saw fit to change its mind and pass a resolution asking that the tax be repealed. In accordance with the wish of the Yukon Council, an ordinance was passed by the Governor in Council repealing that tax. It is this ordinance of repeal to which the assent of parliament is now asked.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Does the minister intend to found a Bill on this resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The Yukon Act requires that when an ordinance of this nature has been passed by the Governor in Council it shall be placed before parliament for its consideration and approval. If parliament disapprove of it it falls to the ground, but, if parliament approves of it, it remains effective.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is this the first time the Governor in Council has placed a tax on these liquors in the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. I think this is the first occasion on which a tax was placed on beer imported into the Yukon.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What led the council to ask that this be done in 1908?

Mr. OLIVER. It pleased them to do so.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They very soon found they wanted it changed.

Mr. OLIVER. That is true. But, of course, I cannot hold myself responsible for the forming of opinion of the Yukon Council or for the change of that opinion. But, we thought that as it was a matter pertaining to local revenue we were warranted in following their resolution.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did not the government receive a revenue a number of years ago from liquors going into the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. From spirituous liquors. That remains; it has not been interfered with.

Mr. FOSTER. I had supposed that a Bill would be founded on this motion, but the minister tells us that is not the case. This, I understand, is to rescind a tax which has been, up to this time, leviable and levied, the proceeds of which have gone into the revenue of the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. No, we passed an ordinance in 1908 to levy such a tax; but, in 1909, at the request of the Yukon Council, we passed an ordinance repealing the ordinance of 1908, thereby repealing the tax. Now, it is the repeal of the tax that we ask the House to approve of. As soon as the ordinance was passed by the Governor in Council, the tax was thereupon and thereby repealed. It remains repealed if parliament approves of that order; if parliament does not approve of that order, then the order in council of 1908, establishing the tax, would, of course, again become effective.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it is a question whether we leave this tax on or not?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That affects their revenue?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent?

Mr. OLIVER. It would not be possible for me to give a reply to that question without a reference to the records. And I fear it would not be possible to give an answer without a reference to the records of the Yukon. I am not certain that we have the information here that would enable me to give the answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that makes it a rather important matter for us to think about. If there is any shortage in carrying on the affairs of the Yukon—which is a very costly appendage to the Dominion at the present time, under the government of my hon. friends opposite—Canada as a whole must come to the rescue. Prima facie, articles like this, I think, should bear a tax, and usually do. What in the world is the reason actuating the Yukon Council in taking off the tax? The matter of revenue is so important that I do not think the minister ought to put his resolution through without giving us information as to how this affects the revenue. Does not the minister think that reasonable?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not agree at all with the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). The Yukon Council is an elective body, not a nominative body, as it was a few years ago. It has pleased the people of the Yukon to elect the council, and the council have come to this conclusion. If it was a body independent of our control, I could appreciate the objection of my hon. friend. But this is now an elective body, and therefore they carry with them the will of the people of the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is a weak point in the argument of my right hon. friend. If they are elective and therefore their will should be carried out, what business have we with this thing here at all? But the very legislation under which they are acting is legislation of such a kind that this parliament holds the final approval of the matter in its own hands, and that is why the minister comes here. If the Prime Minister wants to give full democratic elective legislative power to the Yukon Council, let him get rid of anything which makes it necessary to bring down to this House the ordinances and laws passed by that democratic body. Evidently the meaning of the law was that there should be a supervision over them, and I think properly, in this sense, that after all, we have to come to the rescue in all financial matters with reference to the Yukon. It is inconsistent in the Prime Minister to demand this to be carried out. If he stands on the ground of representative power, let him abolish the necessity for revising their acts in this parliament. Does not my right hon. friend think that is right?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I think my hon. friend's memory is short. This law was passed when a council for the Yukon was adopted. That council was not elective but was nominated by this government, and therefore to a certain extent, we were responsible for their actions. Also, if my memory does not fail me, this provision was introduced at the time giving power to this parliament to review the acts of this nominative body, and I think it was at the suggestion of the hon. member for North Toronto himself that it was done. I think, if he will consult 'Hansard' he will find that it was his own suggestion, and a good one it was, that when the council was nominated by us, we should keep a hand over it. But since that time the council has been made elective, and though the council was made elective this provision was not abolished, and still we have to comply with the law, and give the sanction of parliament to this ordinance. Now my view of the matter is this, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me, that unless we are prepared to substitute our own wisdom for the wisdom of the Yukon Council, and to say that we know better what is good for the people of that territory than they know themselves, then we can say that we have power not to accept this, and to set it aside. But I think, unless there is a strong reason to the contrary, there is a prima facie case why this ordinance should be passed.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister has stated something which alters the case. But he must not hold me at fault, although he says it was a proper restriction to make when the council was nominated; I think it was. But when it was changed from a nominative to an elective body, that changed the basis, and the Prime Minister himself should have seen that this legislation was taken off, so that we would not lay traps for the unwary. But it seems to me it would be instructive to this House and to the people at large, if we could know why it is that an exception is made in the gay and merry Yukon, by not taxing commodities which in every other part of the Dominion, I think in almost every civilized country, are considered properly taxable. Surely the minister has some information with reference to that.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say what might have been the inner reason for their so doing. But it was thought wise by this government in the early history of the Yukon, to make provision not only for the levying of the ordinary license fees upon the retail and wholesale sale of liquors within the Yukon territory—which, of course, is provided for, and which does exist under the authority of the Yukon council—but it was thought proper that in addition a tax of $2 per gallon should be put on spirituous liquors taken into the Yukon territory over and above any customs duty or inland revenue. It was a super tax of $2 per gallon on liquor taken in, which I understand goes to the revenue of the Yukon territory. There was no such tax on beer. As I have said, I cannot give the inner reason why the idea struck the Yukon council in the year 1907, but the idea apparently did strike them; that the precedent in the case of the stronger intoxicant should be followed at a measurable distance in the case of the weaker intoxicant, and that if $2 a gallon was charged on spirituous liquor, it would be proper to charge fifty cents under like circumstances on malt liquor. They passed a resolution in accordance with that idea, and we acted upon it. After a year's experience I do not know why they saw fit to rescind their former resolution ; but they did, and we followed that by our action.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, we are getting down to a point where we can appreciate the whole case. As I understand it, this is an import duty—

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Which no province of the Dominion has a right to put on, and which the Yukon has exercised, and which we for a time exercised, and the benefit of that went to the Yukon. So it was done by this House for the benefit of the Yukon. The import duty on spirituous liquors is still on, but it is proposed now that the import duty on malt liquors shall be taken off, as I understand it, and as I think the House understood it. It would be a dangerous thing, to give an idea that in the Yukon you had free beer and whisky, and if that impression were to go abroad we might have less members of parliament here than we have now.

Mr. CROSBY. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior whether that tax of 50 cents a gallon pertains to all beers made in Canada, or only to those imported. I would like to know if there is any way by which we can discover whether there is any beer imported into the Yukon outside of Canadian beer.

Mr. OLIVER. It applies to foreign made beer, not to Canadian or British made beer.

Mr. CROSBY. Does the Yukon make any returns to this government, which would give us some idea of the amount of beer consumed in that territory?

Mr. OLIVER. They do not make any returns, under the system of government now prevailing they would not be required to make any returns. I do not think it would be possible to get the information my hon. friend desires. I could, however, inquire of the Yukon government, and get such information as may be possible, and give him the advantage of it later on.

Mr. CROSBY. That will be satisfactory.

Resolution reported, and agreed to.

Copies of each of which orders in council were laid before this House on the 11th day of January, 1911, for the approval of this House under the provisions of section 77 of the said Act, are now so approved.

On resolution No. 1,

Mr. OLIVER. Order 729, as stated in the resolution, is an amendment of the regulations for the disposal of coal lands which regulations were passed in 1907. After two years of operation it was found desirable to make amendments in certain minor particulars, but particularly in regard to the location of lands so as to secure proper priority to the person who actually located. In order to reach this end, instead of making an amendment to certain sections, it was thought advisable rather to draft an entirely new set of regulations for the information of the public, so that any person who had a copy of the regulations would have the law on the subject complete. There is no material difference between the regulations of 1910 and those of 1907.

For the information of the committee I may say that the regulations of 1907 made a very radical change from the regulations that prevailed previously. Up to that time coal lands were disposed of by sale at a fixed price per acre. The coal right was sold at $7 an acre and the surface right in addition, at an additional price of $3 per acre, so that up to the passage of the order in council of 1907 the condition was that any person had the right to apply for and purchase coal and surface rights at $10 an acre.

Mr. SPROULE. Had he the right to purchase any quantity?

Mr. OLIVER. No, he had only the right to purchase 320 acres, but he had the right to assign or take an assignment so that the effect was that any person might acquire any area of land that he saw fit to buy at that price. There was, however, a royalty of ten cents per ton upon the coal mined. The effect of these regulations was, first, to give an opportunity to acquire valuable surface rights when the policy and administration did not look to the acquirement of such rights by private individuals. Where the surface right had appreciated in value so as to be worth more than $10 an acre and where the ordinary purchaser could not acquire that land, an individual might come forward and, by applying for it as coal land, could acquire it subject, of course, to the royalty on the mined coal. But the fact of the royalty being ten cents per ton deterred the mining of coal upon that land because a great deal of land had passed from the hands of the Crown in the early days without any condition of royalty, and as there was plenty of such land to furnish an opportunity for coal operators the ten cents per ton royalty was a bar to development. The $10 per acre price afforded an opportunity for speculation and the ten cents per ton royalty was a bar to development. In 1907 the regulations were changed so that coal lands would not be sold, so that only the right to the coal could be acquired and that under lease at a rental per year. At the same time the royalty on coal to be mined was reduced from ten cents to five cents a ton upon such leased land, the result of which was that the man who wanted to acquire coal land for actual development found his opportunity improved by the change in the regulations because he acquired the right to operate by the payment of a yearly rental and on his operation he paid only half as much royalty as in the former case.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, only for the sake of getting clearly at this legislation—the minister will see that this is just the same as if he brought down fifteen Bills and put them before the House with the idea that the House would legislate upon them. If they were Bills they would be on file and every member would have the Bills and could study their provisions and go along with the minister in his explanations. These orders in council have been brought down, they have been put on the table of the House, but the clerk has put them in his capacious pocket and spirited them away, and from that hour up to this not a single member of parliament has seen one of them unless he has been curious or wise enough to get at them and look into them. Under these circumstances it seems to me that it is absolute blindness for us to pass fifteen Bills really simply from the minister's explanations, which are plain enough, but, although we listened to the explanations we cannot form a judgment upon them because they are diffuse, and there are too many of them. In some way or other, if legislation like this is to take place, orders in council ought to be treated the same as Bills, printed and put before the members so that we could have them the same as Bills. This just occurs to me; it is all a blind piece of work to me; I try to follow it as nearly as I can, and I think the same would be true with regard to most members of the House. It is important legislation. Does the minister not know any way by which he could suggest a more intelligent consideration of the matter than this? I suppose these orders in council are fairly voluminous, are they, or are they rather short?

Mr. OLIVER. They are not very long.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will suggest to the minister that it would make things far better if he would print a stated number of them so that each member of the House would have his copy the same as he would have a Bill and then in a little time take them up. Does the minister not think that would be a better way?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no objection, I know of, to following the hon. gentleman's suggestion, but I may say that I am merely following the terms of the statute and the precedent of other years.

Mr. FOSTER. If we had not so many of them thrown at us at once it would not be so bad.

Mr. OLIVER. We have every desire that every member should have the fullest information. These regulations have been printed for the information of every person interested, and I assumed there was sufficient information in the hands of members to enable them to form their judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably the minister has a sufficient number printed now.

Mr. OLIVER. Very likely. I do not know whether there would be enough of the order in council in its original form, but I think we would have sufficient copies of the information which was prepared for general use.

Progress reported.

CLOTHING OF DISCHARGED CONVICTS

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to say a word with reference to a matter that was brought to the attention of the House yesterday by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). It was stated that some articles had appeared in local newspapers complaining of the hardship a prisoner had suffered in being discharged from the penitentiary at Kingston at a time when the thermometer was below zero, with insufficient clothing. On seeing the article in the newspaper, I instructed a report on the subject to be asked at once from the warden of the penitentiary. That report has reached me this morning, and I think the substance of it ought to be made public in justice to the warden. This particular prisoner was released under direction of His Excellency as an exercise of clemency a few months before the expiration of his sentence by effluxion of time. He was a man liable to be deported to the United States, a citizen of the United States. All necessary inquiries and arrangements for his deportation as soon as he should be released from the penitentiary had been previously made, and an officer of the Immigration Department was in readiness to escort him across the boundary. The warden says that upon receiving the order for the release of the prisoner he stated that fact to the prisoner, and told him that if he wished he might remain longer in the penitentiary until he could communicate with his friends in the United States or elsewhere if he had any hope that he would receive money from them. It was the prisoner's own wish that he should not wait for any such communication, but should be released at the earliest moment possible. He was accordingly allowed to go. But before leaving the penitentiary he was furnished with the clothing which he had when he came into the institution, and also with a complete new suit, boots, cap and underwear, and he was also furnished with five dollars in money. Instructions were given to the immigration officer who was to accompany him to Ogdensburg that no part of this five dollars was to be expended within Canada. The prisoner was, therefore, when he arrived at Ogdensburg, not penniless, or in the condition which has been represented, and the regulations of the penitentiary, as well as the interests of ordinary humanity, have, in this case, I think, been fully complied with.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour when he will have ready for the House the report under the Combines Investigation Act, also whether regulations have been passed pursuant to the provisions of section 45 of the Act, and when we may expect the report of all such investigations as may have taken place under that statute, or whether any investigations at all have taken place.

Mr. KING. Such report as there is to present has been presented to the House already in connection with the report of the Department of Labour. The hon. member will find in the annual report of the department the information he has asked for.

Mr. MADDIN. Section 46 of the Act says that the minister shall lay before parliament within the first 15 days of the next session the annual report of proceedings under this Act. I submit that a mere reference to it in the report of the Department of Labour is not a report such as was contemplated by this section of the Act. One would look in vain for a report of the proceedings under this Act if he were to search for it in the annual report of the Department of Labour. I submit that the minister should lay before this parliament the report required under section 46 of the Act.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH.

THE HAGUE TRIBUNAL—FISHERIES REGULATIONS.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity to refer to the negotiations which took place last week in Washington with reference to the differences still at that time existing between the government of the United States and this country in regard to the regulations and laws governing the operation of Canadian fisheries in Atlantic waters. It will be remembered that one of the principal questions in dispute referred to the arbitrament of the tribunal at The Hague was the question whether the legislation of Canada or of Newfoundland could be considered binding upon citizens of the United States while exercising their treaty privileges within British waters; so long as such legislation had not been assented to by the government or Congress of the United States. If the decision of that question had upheld the contention of the United States that such legislation was not binding upon fishermen coming from that country into Canadian or Newfoundland waters it is plain, of course, that there would have been no further question in relation to any of our future or existing legislation. Such legislation would have been the enactment of regulations with which the inhabitants of the United States would have no concern, and it would have been indifferent to them what regulations we or Newfoundland might see fit to pass. The decision of that question, however, was in favour of the British contention, maintaining the sovereign right of Britain and her colonies to legislate with regard to these territorial waters, and maintaining equally that such legislation, so long as it did not transgress the provisions of the treaty under which the United States fishermen claim their right of access to our waters, would be equally binding upon such fishermen as upon our own people. That decision having been pronounced, it at once became a practical question what disposition should be made of the existing legislation and regulations on the part of Canada and Newfoundland.

The United States had taken formal objection before the tribunal to practically the whole of both Canadian and Newfoundland fisheries legislation, taking the position that, for one reason or another, all of this legislation contravened the true intent and meaning of the Treaty of 1818 and therefore, ought to be pronounced as of no effect so far as the fishermen from the United States was concerned. The disposition of that question, which had been agreed to by the parties in coming to their arrangement for arbitration, was that it should be pronounced upon by the tribunal itself. It was for that we had stipulated, it was that which we expected; but when the award was pronounced in September last, the tribunal, instead of proceeding to deal with these objections, made by the United States to existing Canadian and Newfoundland legislation, referred the whole of such legislation to a subordinate tribunal which the main tribunal then directed should be constituted, such subordinate tribunal to consist of one representative from the United States, one from Great Britain and one appointed by the tribunal. The government of the United States appointed as its representative, Dr. Smith, the leading official, I think, of their fisheries department ; the government of Great Britain appointed Mr. Morison, the Attorney General of Newfoundland ; and the tribunal itself appointed as the third member, Dr. Hoëk, professional adviser on the subject of fisheries of the government of the Netherlands. We were thus left in a position with regard to our existing Canadian legislation which was, to say the least, not a very satisfactory one. We had no representative from Canada upon this subordinate board which was to consider all of the Canadian legislation and regulations, and report to the main tribunal, leaving the parties, if dissatisfied with the conclusions of the subordinate board, to be heard before the main tribunal upon that tribunal reconvening at the Hague at some future time. For the reason that this disposition of the matter was not the one we had expected and which we thought we were entitled to by the stipulations of our agreement to arbitrate and not one which was in itself, satisfactory, it was thought that probably more could be accomplished by personal negotiation with representatives of the United States than by prolonging the litigation—more than could be hoped from any legal argument and examination in detail of the provisions before the subordinate board with a further appeal, if it should be necessary, to the principal tribunal; and because of the delay and the great expense which such a continuation of the litigation would necessarily involve, the course of amicable negotiation was very much preferred. Efforts were accordingly begun immediately after the announcing of the award in September last ; and by correspondence through the foreign office of Great Britain, an arrangement was made for a conference at Washington on the 9th of January last, at which representatives of the parties interested might meet and discuss the whole subject. Accordingly that conference was held on Monday of last week, at which there were present on the part of the United States government its Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, with his counsellor or assistant, Mr. Chandler Anderson, who had been the agent for the United States in the proceedings before the Hague tribunal, and Dr. Smith, the professional head or adviser of the Fisheries Department, along with Mr. Robert Lansing, one of the counsel for the United States during the proceedings at the Hague last summer. On the part of Great Britain, Mr. Ambassador Bryce and his secretary, Mr. Young, attended, accompanied by Sir Edward Morris, the Prime Minister of Newfoundland and Captain O'Reilly, a fisheries officer of Newfoundland, and on the part of Canada, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), and myself, with Dr. Wakeham, the fisheries officer in charge of operations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Meetings were had twice each day during the week and as a result of these ten or a dozen meetings, I am very glad to be able to say, that I think all our existing difficulties with regard to the fisheries, up to the present known, have been satisfactorily cleared up.

We had not only to consider the legislation and regulations of Canada, but those of Newfoundland as well. And after going through in detail, section by section and clause by clause, the whole of these regulations, the difference between the views entertained on the part of the United States and those entertained in this country and in Newfoundland seemed pretty well to classify themselves under general heads. It became reasonably evident, in the course of discussion, that at present at any rate it would not be possible for Newfoundland and the United States to agree. All parties were agreed in disliking the disposition of the matter which had been made by the award of last September. Every person present was convinced that a great deal could be done by conference, by explanation, by possible modification of any objectionable provisions of the regulations and by reasonable effort to come to a friendly understanding. And it was thought that if such effort should fail a much better practical means of settling the difficulty than the one which the tribunal had directed, could be found in the constitution of an independent board or mixed commission, one for Newfoundland and one for Canada, on which boards the United States should in each instance have its representative, and Canada and Newfoundland respectively, have theirs, with the intervention of a third man, who should not be a native of either country, in the event of the presence of such a third man being necessary. Accordingly, after going over all of the positions which were in question and discussing the whole situation generally, an agreement was reached on Wednesday of last week and that agreement was incorporated into a Minute of these Conferences, by which Minute it is agreed that this disposition of the matter which I have described, should be substituted for that which is directed by the award of last September. This Minute of Conference is a short memorandum on the subject signed by all of the gentlemen who were engaged in the negotiations, and it reads as follows:—

Minutes of conferences held at Washington the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th of January, 1911, as to the application of the award delivered on the 7th September, 1910, in the North Atlantic coast fisheries arbitration to existing regulations of Canada and Newfoundland.

The undersigned having considered in detail and with expert assistance the steps to be taken in consequence of the award in connection with the objections of the United States government to existing regulations of the fisheries in Canadian and Newfoundland treaty waters, as recorded in protocol XXX. of the proceedings before the tribunal of arbitration, and having conferred as to the best means of dealing with these objections, have arrived at the following conclusion:—

It is unnecessary to refer any existing regulations to the commission of experts mentioned in the award in application of article III. of the special agreement of January 27, 1909, or to reconvene the tribunal of arbitration; but any difference in regard to the regulations specified in protocol XXX., which shall not have been disposed of by diplomatic methods, shall be referred to the Permanent Mixed Fishery Commissions to be constituted as recommended by the Hague award, under article IV. of the special agreement in the same manner as a difference in regard to future regulations would be so referred under the recommendations in the award, unless by mutual consent some other rules and method of procedure are adopted.

It will be observed that this minute recognizes as the most desirable method of getting rid of the existing difficulties, diplomatic negotiations, and provides that failing diplomatic negotiations, the next best way in the opinion of those who signed the minute was the constitution of the special mixed fisheries commissions which the tribunal had recommended for settling future differences, if future differences ever arose, and that disposition of the matter by reference to these permanent mixed commissions was the one which the minute recommends to be adopted, unless by mutual consent, some other rule or method of procedure should be devised and agreed to. On the part of Newfoundland, it was thought when this minute was signed on Thursday evening last, that no further progress could at present be made, and in that view Sir Edward Morris and Captain O'Reilly left Washington on Thursday night. On the part of my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and myself the hope was entertained in view of the discussions which had then occupied four days of the week, that so far as Canadian legislation and regulations went, further conferences might not prove ineffective. Accordingly, before Sir Edward Morris left Washington, we discussed with him the whole situation, and our belief that an accommodation of all difficulties so far as Canada was concerned might be reached by further discussion, and with his full acquiescence and assent, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and myself remained at Washington with the object of renewing our conferences on the part of Canada alone during Friday and Saturday of last week. We had four meetings on those two days, morning and afternoon of each day, and as the result of these meetings we have reached such an agreement which, of course, applies to Canada and to Canada only. We found that the objections which were taken on the part of the United States to Canadian legislation with regard to the fisheries practically ranged themselves under four heads. They objected to our prohibition of purse seining, they objected to our prohibition of Sunday fishing, they objected to our system of issuing licenses to the individual fishermen, and they objected finally to the provision of our regulations authorizing the going on board of a United States vessel and searching her if she was suspected of any infraction of our regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. Would these infractions include customs regulations, or only fishery regulations, in the case of boarding and searching?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Customs regulations were not made the subject of discussion last week at all and no difficulty, I think, can arise in the future so far as customs regulations go, because the award of the tribunal has been quite clear in directing how far and just how far we have a right to impose customs regulations upon United States fishing vessels. However, probably some changes will require to be made in our customs regulations in consequence of the award. To mention one, I might point out that under the terms of the modus vivendi of 1888 a fishing vessel coming by reason of distress or for wood, water or repairs into a Canadian harbour was not required to report at customs unless she remained more than 24 hours. The tribunal at The Hague in its award last September changed that period to 48 hours so that under the award a United States fishing vessel so coming into a Canadian harbour has a right to remain without reporting for two days instead of one. No doubt that regulation will require to be changed and there will be some other details with respect to our customs regulations which will need to be made to conform to the directions of the award. Customs regulations, therefore, were not under discussion last week in any shape, but we limited ourselves to the fishery regulations applicable to the treaty waters on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and on the Labrador north coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

To summarize—and I need not do more than summarize because the details of the discussion back and forward are not of interest—we have succeeded in persuading, in convincing the representatives of the United States that there is nothing wrong, that there is nothing unduly burdensome or discriminating against them in either our provision for boarding and searching a United States suspected vessel or in our prohibition of Sunday fishing or of purse seining. We, of course, called the attention of the representatives of the United States government to the fact that the provision for boarding or searching a vessel was a necessary regulation of police ; that it applied to any suspected vessel ; that the control and policing of these waters was necessarily with the Canadian government as they were Canadian territorial waters ; and that no one ought to object to reasonable investigation if the circumstances seemed to justify suspicion; and, at all events, in the result, their objection to that provision of our law has been withdrawn.

In regard to the fishing during prohibited hours on Sunday, we, of course, pointed out that it was in the interests of the fisheries themselves that a season of rest weekly should be given to the fish; that the water where they are should not be daily and hourly threshed and disturbed by the setting and hauling of nets, and the fish harried from place to place, so that, perhaps, they might ultimately be so disturbed as to induce them permanently to leave. We pointed out that these regulations applied equally to Canadian fishermen. The objection made to these regulations was that they bore more hardly upon the fishermen coming from the United States; that these men, coming long distances and desiring to obtain their cargo and return as speedily as possible, were prohibited from exercising their calling on Sunday, even though they might be alongside the largest school of mackerel or herring, but the Canadian fisherman might set his net on the Saturday night and leave it catching fish for him over Sunday against the time, on Monday morning, when he might go to get his haul, and that, in that respect, the fishermen from the United States were placed at a very substantial disadvantage if this prohibition of Sunday fishing were to be enforced. Our regulations, however, were in such a shape that they were not open to this objection, because it was provided in our regulations that no net which is set should be allowed to remain out over Sunday or during prohibited hours unless a sufficient means of escape for the fish was provided by some apparatus in the net; and, on pointing out these regulations which, up to that time, apparently, had not been appreciated on the part of the United States, it was practically conceded that the prohibition of Sunday fishing was a regulation in the interest of the preservation of the fisheries—in the common interest therefore,—and one to which reasonable objection ought not further to be pressed.

And so in regard to the purse seining. Although that was a subject of considerable difficulty and in regard to which the professional advisers of the Fisheries Department in the United States seemed to entertain the view that it is not unduly destructive as a means of fishing, ultimately at all events objections in that regard were not pressed. No change is made or agreed to be made in our regulations under either of these three heads.

Now, with regard to our system of licensing individual fishermen, peculiar difficulties presented themselves. Under the treaty of 1818 liberty is given forever to the inhabitants of the United States to take fish of every kind upon these defined portions of our coast, and it was urged: That liberty having been freely conceded by Great Britain ninety years ago, how can you now seek to impede its exercise by a regulation which requires the issuing of a license, and the payment of a fee to obtain that license? No matter though the fee charged may be small, the principle of the thing, it was urged upon us, is against that system, and it ought not to be required of inhabitants of the United States who already possess under the treaty the unrestricted liberty to exercise their calling at pleasure in these waters. And additional difficulty was occasioned by the circumstance that when, five years ago, Newfoundland was proposing to adopt a system of licenses, that proposition had been vigorously objected to by Mr. Root, then Secretary of State for the United States, in diplomatic correspondence with the Foreign Office of Great Britain; and, in answer to Mr. Root's objection, a letter was written by the British Foreign Office in 1906 in which it is categorically stated that licenses could not be supported. And, in view of that holding and that distinct expression of opinion on the part of Sir Edward Grey as Foreign Secretary, Newfoundland has not attempted to put into force the licensing system. Still, it has been in force in Canada, and the Department of Marine and Fisheries regard it as a most valuable system, as one which gives great advantages in the way of control over the individual fishermen and in the way of securing compliance with the regulations which may be made. Mr. Brodeur set himself to the task of convincing the representatives of the United States that it was in the interest of the fisheries—that it was in the interest of their own individual fishermen—that a system of licenses should exist, and to the effort to prevail upon them to withdraw opposition to it and agree that it might be maintained. I am very glad, indeed, to be able to say that in that effort my hon. colleague has fully succeeded, and that by making concessions which he thinks are not of consequence practically, and which cannot do any injury to our own fishermen, to the fisheries, or to our system of maintaining licenses, he has been able to remove the objections which at the outset were very strongly entertained by the United States government to the continuation of these matters. In the result, we have agreed to recommend to council an alteration in three respects in our existing licensing regulations; and upon these alterations being made, the United States withdraws the continuation of its objections, not only to these features of our laws and regulations, but to the whole body of our existing fisheries legislation and regulations.

Of these three changes the first respects fishing for cod or herring by trap nets. Our existing regulation in that regard provided that such a thing should not be permitted in the Gulf of St. Lawrence without a license from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The modification to which we have assented is that this requirement of a license shall not extend, either as to Canadian or United States fishermen, to the case of a trap net set for either cod or herring, at a distance of a thousand yards or more from shore, or from any similar net which is set from the shore. In others words, we modify our regulation in that respect, so that whenever a United States fisherman finds a position enabling him to set his cod or herring trap net a thousand yards or more away from the shore, and also the same distance away from any other herring or cod trap net which is set from the shore, he may take that unoccupied position a thousand yards distant without requiring first to get a license. We exempt him in those circumstances, and we exempt the Canadian in those circumstances, from the requirement to take a license.

The second modification was one that we assented to at once on the practical effect of the present regulation being pointed out. The present regulation requires the leader of any herring or trap net to extend in every case from the shore; and it was pointed out on the part of the United States that we at any rate questioned their right to land for the purpose of taking fish. They did not concede that our position in that regard was correct. But they pointed out to us that we took the position that they had no right to land on the shores, for instance, of the Magdalen islands, and they said: If your regulation as to trap nets, both for cod and for herring, requires that the leader shall in every case extend from the shore, how is our fisherman to plant his leader, his anchor? He cannot do it from the water, and your regulation therefore practically prohibits him from participating in that manner of fishing. We conceded the position without hesitation, and agreed to substitute for our present regulation in that regard a provision by which, if the leader of a cod trap or herring trap net extends from the shore, the fishery officer may determine, in writing or orally, the length of the leader that shall be used, leaving the regulation silent on the subject of trap nets set for cod or herring where the leader starts from a location below low water line, leaving, by implication, the right, to either a Canadian or a United States fisherman, to set a cod or herring trap net with a leader starting from a location, not on the shore, but below low water mark. With that modification the regulation in question was not further objected to.

Then the final change is the addition of a regulation applying equally to herring and cod trap nets, which the representatives of the United States asked for, and which seemed to us no more than their right. It will be remembered that under the terms of the treaty of 1818 the inhabitants of the United States are given liberty forever to take fish of every sort in these waters in common with British subjects. The use of the phrase 'in common with British subjects' seems to imply equality of right on the part of such inhabitants of the United States as may choose to come to those fishing waters, to ply their avocation there under the like conditions in every respect as might apply to British subjects. In that view, it was said on the part of the United States last week that if we were intending to maintain our licensing system, and they were tacitly acquiescing in it, there ought to be a recognition on the face of our regulations that an inhabitant of the United States applying for a license from our government should receive it under the ordinary rules and regulations, and in the like circumstances, as would govern if a British subject applied for such a license. I think the likely effect of such a regulation being accepted by the United States, or of their fishermen taking our licenses, would be the clearest possible recognition on their part of our system and of its propriety; and in that view, there being no objection to this proposal from the standpoint of our fishermen, it seemed to me, looking at it from a lawyer's point of view, that it would be rather an advantage to Canada that it should be present in our regulations than that it should not. Accordingly, we have assented, and add to our existing regulations this third provision in regard to cod and herring trap nets:

Upon any inhabitant of the United States fishing with trap nets in Canadian waters in the exercise of his liberties under the treaty of 1818, applying for a berth site under the licensing provisions, such a license shall be issued in the usual course for any unoccupied berth site selected by the applicant upon the payment of the regular fee, in consideration of the exclusive use of such site, subject to the usual rules and regulations.

On our agreeing to make these three alterations in our existing regulations, a Minute was drawn up of the conferences of Friday and Saturday last by which Minute the understanding is recorded that in view of Canada's willingness to make these alterations, and in view of the present method of administering the Canadian laws and fishing regulations, the United States does not at present press its objections as recorded before the tribunal in the protocol I have already referred to. The United States representatives stipulated, however, that they could not at the present time close finally with Canada in view of the fact that the regulations of Newfoundland were still under consideration and that if they now concluded any final agreement in regard to the Canadian prohibition of purse seining or Sunday fishing it might prejudice their position in further discussion of like regulations which obtained in Newfoundland. In view of that difficulty it was agreed that this settlement with Canada, while it was confidently expected on both sides that it will be permanent and final, should not prejudice the United States, if, in future, conditions should so change that it became necessary for them to renew any of these objections. The Minute accordingly reads:

The undersigned, having considered the best means of dealing with the objections referred to, subject to the Minute of previous conferences signed January 12, have arrived at the following conclusion:—

Having regard to the present method of administering the Canadian laws and fishery regulations and to certain amendments which Canada is willing to make therein and to the present state of the fisheries and conditions under which they are carried on and places of fishing, the United States does not press at present any of the objections referred to in protocol XXX. which relate to Canadian laws and fishery regulations, it being understood that the right of the United States to renew such objections is not thereby in any way prejudiced should conditions change.

The amendments which were agreed to are set out in the Minute and the parties present signed this memorandum. The result of the whole matter then is that upon these changes which I have described being made in our regulations the United States agrees to drop, for the present, at all events, the litigation in which we were previously engaged. We have, by the arrangement agreed to with Newfoundland as well as with Canada, substituted a different means of disposing of these objections for the somewhat complicated and certainly expensive one which had been directed by the tribunal in September last, and we have, in so far as Canada is concerned, reached an agreement which will be final and permanent unless conditions change in the manner which I have tried to point out. It may be that conditions will so change and that some of these objections may at some future time be renewed. If that should be so we shall then be, at all events, no worse off than we are at present, or than we would be at present if this agreement had not been entered into. The probability that such a thing will take place is, I am sanguine to think, very remote. At the present time, at all events, those in charge of the administration of affairs in the United States express themselves as entirely satisfied. Misunderstandings with regard to the meaning and application of many of our regulations have been wholly removed by the thoroughly friendly and amicable discussion which took place last week, and I have to say with regard to the whole of the discussion that from beginning to end it was carried on in a manner which one would expect on the part of the representatives of a great and thoroughly friendly nation. The attitude of the representatives of the United States throughout was of a most reasonable character. I am satisfied that they most earnestly desired to reach, if it could be possible, a final settlement of these prolonged difficulties and on each side there was in every manner the desire manifested to put an end to these century-long troubles, to make concessions where concessions were necessary and to settle by friendly conference, if such a thing could be done, matters which otherwise would have to be litigated at great expense and at great length of time before the international tribunal which had been agreed upon. It is only due, it is only justice to the representatives of the United States that I should pay to their sincerity, in the effort which they made to meet us in our unwillingness to modify our regulations to any greater extent than possible, the tribute which I have sought to pay to-day and to found upon that belief my confidence in stating to this House that I think this arrangement has brought to a final end and determination all the difficulties which up to this time, at any rate, have presented themselves arising out of the fisheries treaty of ninety years ago.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise with the idea of debating the question, but there are two or three remarks which I will make if I am permitted. One blot upon the award at the Hague, in my mind and indeed, I think, in the minds of Canadians generally, was the extremely unsatisfactory position in which the matter of the fishery regulations of Canada and Newfoundland was left and the extremely costly and far-away tribunal, or double tribunal, which was arranged for the final disposition of these disputes if disputes should occur. I, for my part, after listening to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) in his very clear exposition of the matter this afternoon, am very glad indeed that at the present time it seems we are likely to escape from both of these great inconveniences. There is no reason in the wide world why two countries lying side by side with similar interests in a great many respects and similar ideals should not get very close together and arrange on business methods and on a business basis such details of a great question as arise out of the reasonableness of the regulations framed by Canada and Newfoundland.

The result of such a meeting seems to prove that there was nothing inherently difficult in having it brought about. To take into consideration whatever might have occurred in the future in the making of fishery regulations by Canada and Newfoundland, and to feel that to every one of these regulations the United States had a right to object, and that in order to get a final determination of it there must be an appeal to a mixed tribunal and afterwards to the main tribunal itself, opened up a vista of confusion, trouble, and vexation. If by this method of agreement that has been avoided for the present, that is so much gained. As the minister pointed out, the United States retains for itself the right to object even with reference to present regulations, and, of course, retains the right to object as to future regulations. But, if once we have come together and reached an understanding upon what exists, I think a very large part of the difficulty is removed. What can be done in one case and which is shown to be both convenient and inexpensive will very likely be followed in all cases which may come thereafter. I do not think there was anything inherently wrong in the position taken on these four points by Canada. I could not help but admire, however, the perspicacity of our representatives in Washington on one of these points, namely, with reference to the Sunday fishing. Now, a bluff, common man, you know, would have said to these people down there: The Lord's day must be held in honour and your fishermen ought to be at their prayers on Sunday instead of fishing. But, perspicacious and far-seeing gentlemen such as we had there preferred to put the argument on different ground; a broad humanitarian principle applied to fisheries, a sort of piscatorial humanitarian basis. Instead of asking a day of rest, and often much needed, I think, for consideration and contemplation by those who pursue the fisheries, on the means of grace and of making their lives better, it was thought best in this case to base the appeal on the ground of humanity to the fishes. It may be that in the long course of evolution the cod and herring which abound on these coasts will come to understand what the seventh day means, and maybe they will show an appreciation of it which sometimes their more highly developed pursuers lack. However, the main thing is that, however, the argument was approached the result was obtained, and the fishes will have the advantage of that one day in seven of rest, in which they can recreate themselves and get up more vigour for the six days' fight with the nets which are their common and deadly menace. As far as the purse seine fishing is concerned, that, I think, has been properly settled, and I do not see how objection could be taken to a regulation of that kind. Boarding and searching has been also settled, which, I think, was perfectly proper, for I do not see how the law could have been carried out without that power. With reference to licenses, I am afraid I did not altogether catch the meaning of it. Do I understand that licenses are not required for either Canadians or Americans with reference to (a) and (b). Distances seem to have been set within which these nets should not come, and do I understand that regulation does away with the license in regard to the first and second of the three changes that were made? Under the third agreement the United States fisherman asks for a license and receives it on the same ground, other things being equal, as the Canadians. That leads me to think that in the other two cases the license is done away with entirely.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I am afraid I do not understand the question which the hon. gentleman has propounded well enough to answer it categorically, but possibly I can strike the difficulty by explaining exactly the position of the existing regulations. In our unamended regulation, as it stood last week, it was provided that fishing by means of herring trap nets without a license from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is prohibited in the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The same regulation exactly existed in regard to cod trap nets. The effect, therefore, was that no one could fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for either herring or cod by trap nets unless he had obtained a license from the minister. Now, the change that has been agreed to with regard to such fishing is simply to make the regulation read: That such fishing by means of cod trap nets or herring trap nets without a license from the minister is prohibited in the waters of the gulf except at a distance of 1,000 yards from shore or 1,000 yards from any similar nets set from the shore.

So that, if any Canadian or United States citizen can find a location where he can set such a trap net which would be both 1,000 yards from shore and 1,000 yards from any similar trap net he can do it without a license. That is the modification. Then, upon the other point, the unamended rule prior to last week was:—

That the leader of each herring or cod trap net shall in every case extend from the shore, and any fishery officer may determine in writing or orally the length of leader which shall be used.

The fee for license at so much per fathom depended on the length of the leader. Now the change made is to repeal that rule and substitute this one. If the leader of a cod or herring trap net extends from the shore, any fishery officer may determine, in writing or orally, the length of the leader which shall be used, implying that if it does not extend from the shore no such power is given the officer to determine the length and implying, also, that trap nets may now be set with a leader not extending from the shore, but from a point below low water mark.

As to the requirements for a license for such trap net, nothing special is provided. It will fall within the rule I have first read, namely that a license is always required except in the case of nets set 1,000 yards from the shore.

Mr. FOSTER. That clears up that point, and it seems that with reference to trap nets at this distance and under those conditions, a license is not required, but I am not sufficiently expert to know whether that will interfere very much with the primary idea in licensing, to keep those vessels under proper regulation and control. I should imagine, however, that up to a certain point it would do so, but may not to a very large extent. There is one point upon which I could not get a very clear idea. The minister spoke of a commission board for Newfoundland and one for Canada, or a board made up of one appointee from each—I am not sure which —and that before this board, if diplomatic methods did not avail in bringing the parties to an agreement, the disputed points could be taken before being taken to the Fishery Commission. Is that view correct?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Confusion no doubt has arisen from the manner in which I stated the situation under the award and the situation under the agreement of last week. The award directed that existing legislation be referred to a board of experts subject to an appeal to the full tribunal when that tribunal should be reconvened. The award also recommended, but it did not direct, that to dispose of any difficulties which might arise in the future at any time, the parties should agree to constitute two fixed, permanent commissions, each to be composed of one representative from the United States, one from Canada or Newfoundland, as the case might be, and a third neutral, and that such board should deal with future cases if any should arise, as a permanent and final board, without resort to the existing tribunal at all. That recommendation has not as yet been adopted. It has not as yet been considered probably by either country; and so far as Canada is concerned, unless future difficulties should arise, or some of these past difficulties should be renewed, there never will be any necessity for constituting such a board at all. But if one ever should be constituted, its decisions will be final.

Mr. DANIEL. Am I correct in understanding that the advantage which the American fisherman would get from the amended regulations is that whereas formerly he was not given a license at all to fish with a trap net attached to the shore, now he is entitled to a license to engage in this form of fishing.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. The provision with regard to the obtaining of a license by United States fishermen is quite distinct, that upon any American citizen applying for a berth site under the licensing provisions, such license shall be issued in the usual course for any unoccupied berth site selected by the applicant, subject to the usual rules and regulations. That is, he must go a certain distance away from an occupied berth. In a word, he must be put in exactly the same position as a British subject who applies for a license.

Mr. DANIEL. Did he have that privilege formerly?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I scarcely know how to answer that question. I do not think there is any instance in which such a license has been given to any inhabitant of the United States. I am not aware that any application for such a license was ever made; but as a matter of legal opinion, I would not hesitate to express my view that he was always entitled to it from the day the treaty was made just as much as a British subject.

Mr. CROSBY. Is it the intention of the government to divide the interests of Canadian fishermen and those of Newfoundland fishermen, and let each make the best arrangement they can, independent the one of the other?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. There certainly was no intention on the part of either my colleague, Mr. Brodeur, or myself to desert Newfoundland in any way. On Thursday night last, when we had signed the agreement, to which, of course, Newfoundland is equally a party, substituting this new method, of dealing with existing objections for the method directed by the award, I thought and Mr. Brodeur thought, that it would be quite possible for Canada to settle, and we equally thought that there was no likelihood of any present settlement so far as Newfoundland was concerned, and before doing anything further we sat down and discussed the situation fully with Sir Edward Morris and it was with his full concurrence and assent that Mr. Brodeur and I remained behind, he leaving for Newfoundland on Thursday evening, and we remaining in the hope that by resuming our conferences on Friday or Saturday we might be able to arrange matters so far as Canada was concerned. In that hope we have been successful. I do not think we have prejudiced Newfoundland in the least degree by what we have done, but hope we have rather helped Newfoundland to a similar settlement of its own difficulties. There has been no idea on our part of in any way deserting our sister colony should further difficulties arise in regard to which there is any necessity for joint action.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose a copy of this memorandum will be laid on the table of the House?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. FRASER. Is there a definition of the point below water mark where the American fisherman would have a right to drop his anchor on the coastal waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. There is no indication in that respect in the amended regulation, it is not even stated that the leader may extend from a point below low water mark, but that is implied from the fact that the existing regulation which requires it to extend always from shore has been repealed and taken away.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I wish to ask the Prime Minister one or two questions respecting the Anglo-Japanese treaty which I understand came into force in July 1899 to remain in force for 12 years, but with the condition that after 11 years either of the contracting parties could give notice to terminate the treaty. Has any notice been given by either of the contracting parties to terminate that treaty and if so, will the termination of the original treaty between Japan and England also terminate the subsequent convention between Canada and Japan? Will parliament have an opportunity of discussing the matter before the treaty is renewed, if it is to be renewed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some correspondence has passed on this subject, but I do not know whether it is in a position to be brought down. I will be able to tell my hon. friend on Monday.

WATER SUPPLY, PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the Prime Minister observed the statements in the Ottawa Press in regard to the contaminated state of the drinking water in this city? There is, of course, a good deal of water supplied in this building in various places, and I see that the medical health officer has advised the people of Ottawa that the city water before being consumed should be boiled in order to prevent typhoid. I do not know whether the government have taken any precautions in regard to the water supplied to this building or not, but I should think it would be a subject worthy of consideration. Have any steps been taken to prevent the supply of impure water in these buildings?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My attention has not been called to that, but I suppose when we come to Ottawa, we must take the bad with the good.

INQUIRIES FOR REPORTS AND RETURNS.

Mr. LAKE. Has the report of the Ottawa Improvement Commission been brought down? Under the statute it should be brought down within the first 15 days of session, but I have not been able to obtain a copy at the distribution office.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will have to inquire as to that. I am not aware that it has been brought down, the matter seems to have been overlooked.

Mr. FOSTER. I would again ask the Prime Minister about the despatch of Sir John Thompson, for which he was to make inquiry.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had some communication with the under Secretary of State upon that point. I have not heard since.

GEORGIAN BAY SHIP CANAL.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew). I wish to call attention to an item appearing in the Montreal 'Star' and the Ottawa 'Citizen' of January 16. It is as follows:

ESTIMATES FOR GEORGIAN BAY CANAL READY.

Three Millions for Back River and French River Sections to be asked.

Special to the Montreal 'Star.'

Ottawa, January 16.—That the government has under consideration, as supplementary estimates, appropriations which really mean the commencement of work upon the Georgian bay canal system was learned to-day.

It is stated that in the supplementaries is likely to be included an item of about $3,000,000, half of it for deepening the Rivière des Prairies, the Back river at Montreal, and the rest for the French river section of the work.

When questioned about this to-day Hon. William Pugsley observed:

'The whole matter is under advisement. I can make no statement till it is dealt with by the cabinet upon the return of the Minister of Finance.'

Meanwhile it is learned that estimates with that end in view have been prepared and will be dealt with by the cabinet council.

The appropriations which are now proposed are for portions of the work which would be of utility even if the main scheme were not proceeded with, but at the same time they may rightfully be regarded as the beginning of the canal system.

The national character of the undertaking and its great importance as affording an additional outlet for the grain traffic of the west cannot, it is held, be over-estimated. It ranks with the Transcontinental railway as a huge undertaking of far-reaching consequences upon the transportation problem of the country.

Is it the intention of the government to place an estimate of this amount in the supplementary estimates and is it intended to have printed some additional copies of the report which was laid on the table of the House two sessions ago? This report is a very valuable one, and I have had several inquiries for it, but have been unable to procure copies, as it is out of print.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To the first question I could not give any other answer than that already given by the Minister of Public Works yesterday, that the matter is now under consideration. As to the other question, I see no reason why, if it is thought advisable, we should not have another edition of that report.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 47), to amend the immigration Act read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1, Canadian domicile—how acquired.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature and purpose of the change made by this section?

Mr. OLIVER. I will make a little general explanation, that the particular explanation may be better understood. As my hon. friend knows, last year we passed a new Immigration Act which did not alter the principles contained in the Act of 1906, but was drafted with a view to meet the exigencies arising out of the more strict administration of the Act. That is, the Act of last year was simply a more complete embodiment of the principles that had already been in force. One of the points that we found it very necessary to provide in the Act of last session was as to the rights of domicile acquired by those who were not citizens of Canada by residence in Canada. We went into that very carefully, and thought we had covered the point fairly well. But, since last session, one or two cases arose which brought the matter into question: and the two amendments which are contained in this section now before the committee are intended to meet the lack that, on the test being made, was found to exist in the section of the law as it stands. The section now before the committee is a reprint of the section passed last year with two exceptions, and the words making the change are contained in brackets. (Of course, if the amendments are agreed to, a motion will be made to strike out the brackets.) Except for these two alterations this section is word for word as it was last year. The first alteration is in the first line, and the words: 'can only be' are substituted for the word 'is'. The reason for the change is this: 'A judge held that, while it was perfectly clear under the reading of the Act as I had given it that Canadian domicile could be acquired in the way set out in the Act, he held that it could also be acquired in some other way which was not contemplated by the Act. Therefore, in order to meet that view of the case, we propose this change, the purpose being to restrict domicile in the operation of the Act to the definition we give in the Act. The second amendment is to provide for the case of a person who entered Canada previous to the passing of the Act of last year, but who had not resided in the country for three years. The Act of last session only contemplated that a person acquired domicile by residing in the country for three years. Now, the person who entered the country before the passing of the Act, who had not been three years in the country, under a strict reading of the Act as the judge applied it, was found by him not to have domicile, which, of course, was not the intent. So, this change is made to grant domicile to those who entered Canada before the passing of the Act of last year, but who had not been three years in the country at the time of the passing of the Act. These are the two amendments to the section, and the purpose is as I have stated, and the reason for the amendments is that the question has come up in court and the judge has ruled to indicate a lack in the section as it was passed last year.

Mr. McKENZIE (Cape Breton). I desire to get some information from the minister in connection with the Immigration Act. I suppose that, as a lawyer, I should know something about the Act, but I do not know very much about it. There are cases in my constituency in regard to which I would like to get some information from the minister. For instance, if an Assyrian comes to Canada and buys a property and settles down as a resident of, say, the county of Cape Breton from which I come, and after a year or so of residence in the country wishes to bring his family from Assyria to settle with him in Canada, what are the conditions upon which he can take his family into Canada, provided they are free from any of the diseases that would prevent them from coming under the Act?

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions will be found in the order in council 926 passed under the terms of the Act. The requirement is that any Asiatic coming to Canada must have in his possession the sum of $200. So the members of the family of the Assyrian that my hon. friend mentions would need to have that amount of money in their possession before they would be entitled to land in Canada.

Mr. DOHERTY. If I understand the minister, his purpose in this section is to provide that there shall be no other method of acquiring a Canadian domicile except the method provided here.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the idea.

Mr. DOHERTY. What is the effect of that? If he attains the purpose he says he desires to attain, I would like to ask him whether a child that is born in Canada after the passing of this Act, of a father domiciled in Canada, will not by that fact have acquired a domicile here?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course he will.

Mr. DOHERTY. But your Act says that the only way by which a Canadian domicile can be acquired after the passing of this Act is by a residence of so many years after having been landed in Canada. Here is a man who was never landed in Canada at all, and it is a very serious thing if this statute is going to do away with all the methods by which domicile is acquired by common law. I would like to ask the minister, is it the intention to modify the salutary rule that a wife's domicile is where her husband's is? Because I think under the wording of this statute, if the husband comes to this country and complies with all the requirements that are laid down here, he will have acquired a domicile in Canada; is it the intention that his wife, who did not come with him at that time, shall have no domicile in Canada until she has done all these things?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the express intent of the Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. Does the minister think it is a desirable thing that we should enact, in contravention, I think, of the universally-accepted rule, not only of our own law but of international law, that the domicile of a wife shall no longer be where her husband's is?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter for the committee to consider. I am merely stating what the law is.

Mr. DOHERTY. The minister is putting this Bill before the committee, and he is asking us to endorse it, and I am pointing out to him the far-reaching effects of it; and I think we are entitled to a statement from him whether he thinks there are sufficient reasons, and what they are, that justify us in making such a great modification in the general rules of law, for the purpose of this special Act. Moreover, I confess that it seems to me that the wording is such as to do some things which the minister says he does not intend. For instance, he lays down that a domicile can only be acquired in a particular way. Now if you understand that according to the latter, I think a child who is born in Canada hereafter, who has never landed in this country, will never have a domicile here. Will not the fact of his being born here of parents domiciled here, not give him a domicile here?

Mr. BUREAU. He is a Canadian by birth.

Mr. DOHERTY. One of the ways by which, under the general law, one acquires a domicile, is that the domicile of the child is at the domicile of his father. The child when he is born acquires his domicile at the place where the father was domiciled. This Act says that a Canadian domicile can only be acquired by living here three years after you have landed here.

Mr. BUREAU. That means a foreigner. A British subject by birth does not come under this Act. Supposing he goes away to a foreign country and, without taking the oath of allegiance there, comes back here still a British subject, he would not come under that Act. He would enjoy his privilege just the same as if he had not gone away.

Mr. DOHERTY. That is what I want to get at. I understood that under the Act as it previously stood there were certain methods by which a domicile could be acquired, but that Act did not say that a domicile acquired in any other way would not be a domicile under that Act. The wording of this Act now seems to say that a Canadian domicile can only be acquired by doing these particular things. It may be said in regard to a child born of parents domiciled here that it is not a question of acquiring a domicile, but a question of a domicile of origin. But I do insist upon the importance of the consideration that under the working of this Act you will do away with all the rules by which the domicile of classes of persons dependent upon or connected immediately with others, is determined; with the first result, that you will deny to the wife the domicile that shall be her husband's by right, because she personally has not done some things that he has done. In the same way, you interfere with the general rules for making domicile of minors with their guardians or tutors. Are all these rules going to be set aside, and when a tutor or a guardian has acquired domicile here in Canada, are you going to shut out the minor because he is not domiciled under this Act? Yet if you say that the only way by which domicile can be acquired is by an individual coming personally and residing here, you will produce that result.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the objection of my hon. friend that the child born in Canada would not have acquired Canadian domicile, I may say that this section only applies to the definition of domicile as acquired by those who are not Canadian citizens. The Act provides what shall constitute a Canadian citizen, and that naturally provides that a person born in Canada shall be a Canadian citizen. The purpose of making a definition of the word 'domicile' and of the words 'Canadian citizen,' is to enable us to carry out the intent which I understood was in the mind of parliament at the time this Act was passed, so as to define clearly and drastically, if necessary, the rights which should be derived by relationships between people. My hon. friend finds fault with this clear and close, or drastic, definition of domicile. There is no definition of domicile set out in the statute law. My hon. friend is aware of that.

Mr. DOHERTY. As far as I know there is not.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no definition of domicile in the statutory law, except here, but we found that in the administration of this Act this drastic provision, being the expression of the mind of parliament as I believe, it was necessary that there should be a statutory definition of domicile so that we would know, and so that the immigrant would know exactly what his rights were and what they were not, and so that there would be no question about where the line was drawn. We have, of course, very extraordinary legislation. The whole Act is extraordinary, its purpose is extraordinary and this undertaking to define the meaning of domicile by statute is an extraordinary attempt, but we believe it is rendered necessary by the exigencies of the administration of the Act, that is the exigency of carrying out the will of parliament with regard to the restriction of undesirable immigration.

Mr. DOHERTY. As I understand, the purpose of this section is to create a situation where a man coming here and acquiring domicile under this Act and doing everything which he is called upon to do for that purpose, his wife and children, having been left behind him and coming on later, are liable to be excluded because they have not got a domicile.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. DOHERTY. If that is the purpose of the minister and he has it carried, of course, I have nothing further to say, but it seems to me that there are some pretty weighty considerations against our adopting a definition of domicile that will be found in every case to produce that position.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not defending the position in any way. I am merely explaining the position that was taken by parliament when the Act was passed and the position taken by parliament when the Act was passed, was that it was necessary and desirable, in order to exclude undesirable immigrants, that each immigrant should stand on his own merits and be considered as an individual and not as a member of a family.

Mr. DOHERTY. The hon. minister is seeking by this amendment to change the position that was taken by parliament in the previous Act. Otherwise, why is he amending the previous Act? I understand the minister to say that the holding of the courts was that the position that parliament took in the previous Act did not operate farther than to create a situation where any person who came within the definition of the Act was entitled to claim that he had a domicile, but that it did not operate to prevent people who, without aid of the previous Act had, under the provisions of the common law, a domicile, from claiming their domicile. That is the interpretation which the court put upon the declaration of parliament in the previous Act, and that, it seems to me, represents what the position of parliament was when it passed the previous Act. The minister is asking parliament to change its position on that subject for the purpose of excluding the idea that any body is domiciled in Canada except persons who have met the requirements laid down in this particular Act, although the effect of doing so will be to create a situation where you will forcibly separate husband and wife, parents and children. Of course, that is a new position that the minister is asking parliament to take. For myself, I cannot pretend to be as familiar with the difficulties that may arise with regard to excluding undesirable immigrants as the minister, or those who are engaged in the operation of this Act, but I must say that for my part I would require to be satisfied of some very urgent necessity indeed and to have demonstrated to me the practical impossibility of otherwise protecting us from undesirable immigration before I would deem it desirable to lay down a rule of this kind which is not only liable to produce, but which the minister tells us and which his words clearly show it is intended to produce, the position which I have pointed out.

Mr. DEVLIN. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman would suggest that there should be a subsection similar to that in the civil court of lower Canada that the domicile of the husband be the domicile of the wife?

Mr. DOHERTY. That would be suggesting the contrary of the provision. I am objecting to the provision because the effect of it is to make it absolutely clear that a wife who comes here as an immigrant will have no right whatever to claim, that because her husband is domiciled here she has a right to do what the law in most countries imposes upon her as an obligation, that is to follow her husband to the domicile that he has chosen. The idea of this Act is to step in and say: No, madam, you shall not do it. Of course, there will be very little purpose in the minister's provision if he were willing to state that it should be subject to the exception made by the general law. I understand that the minister's reason is that he wants to make this provision as a derogation from the general law.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend says that this clause would prevent a wife from coming in after her husband had acquired domicile to enjoy the privileges which he only enjoyed.

In section 2 there is a definition of Canadian citizenship and it says: 'Canadian citizen' means (1) A person born in Canada who has not become an alien; (2) a British subject who has Canadian domicile; or (3) a person naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile.

Mr. DOHERTY. What is the section?

Mr. BUREAU. That is the old Act, section 2. There is a proviso:

Provided that for the purpose of this Act a woman who has not been landed in Canada shall not be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship by virtue of her husband being a Canadian citizen; neither shall a child who has not been landed in Canada be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship through its father or mother being a Canadian citizen.

Mr. DOHERTY. There a wife is excluded from claiming any right to Canadian citizenship. Here we are asked to go farther and declare that she is not entitled to claim to be a person having a Canadian domicile, though, as far as I know, not only by the general law of Canada, but, I do not think I am mistaken in saying, by the rules of private international law, or the conflict of laws, she will be, by the civilized countries of the world, denied the right to claim that she is domiciled anywhere else.

Mr. BUREAU. For the purpose of this Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. I quite concede that, but you are going to place that woman in a position where for no purpose, in the country of her original domicile, will she be recognized as domiciled there and for the purpose of coming into Canada in the fulfilment of her obligation to follow her husband wherever he is domiciled she will not be considered as domiciled here. I have said that I do not pretend to be familiar with the difficulties that present themselves in the operation of preventing undesirable immigration, but I do think that when this House is asked to go so far as that in contravention of a principle which is so generally accepted and one which is recognized throughout the civilized world as resting upon the highest considerations of public policy the minister should put before us what are the difficulties in the administration of this Act which make it impossible or exceedingly difficult to keep out undesirable immigration without the aid of a provision of this kind.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the mind of parliament can fairly be considered to have been expressed by the context rather than by the individual words.

Mr. DOHERTY. Does the minister contend that the court which interpreted this did not pay to the context the attention that ought to be paid to it? The authoritative determination of what was in the mind of parliament is shown by what the Act said, and the court is the only source from which you can get an authoritative determination of what the mind of parliament was. It is the first time I have ever heard the suggestion that there was any other method open to us for discovering the mind of parliament than by looking to what parliament expressed.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is very wide in his reasoning. I think there are sections of the most revered book in the world that might be read literally without expressing the intention, unless the context were taken into consideration.

Mr. DOHERTY. Surely the minister does not mean to intimate that the judge did not take the context into consideration. The court that pronounced upon this is entitled to the assumption that it applied these rules of interpretation which enable us to ascertain precisely what parliament did express. Of course, one of the most elementary of these rules is that the court should look at the context, interpret the Act as a whole, and interpret each disposition of it by the other disposition. If the court did its duty, as we must assume it did, we have an authoritative determination that the mind of parliament expressed in the Act was in the sense that the court found. What the minister does now is to ask us to change our mind.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter of opinion. The court may have the opinion that the mind of parliament was expressed in the words contained in the statute, but if my hon. friend will permit me to give my opinion, it is that it did not express the idea as clearly as may be that the intention was that domicile should only be as defined by this Act. That is as I read the context, and as a member of parliament, perhaps my view of the matter is just as good as that of a judge on the bench.

Mr. DOHERTY. Then, if, as the minister says, the statute does express the idea, why not leave it as it is? If, on the other hand, there is need for this amendment, it is because, as the law stands to-day, a person can acquire domicile otherwise than as stated in this case. And the minister is before us asking to enact this section, which has no reason for existence at all, unless it is true that without it a person can acquire a domicile in some other way than that specified here. If the minister is entitled to have his judgment stand on a level with the judgment of the courts, perhaps the rest of us in parliament are entitled to claim that what we meant should be interpreted in accordance with what we said. The change does seem to me to involve such serious consequence with regard to the general law of domicile that those who propose it should lay before us very strong reasons, so that we may intelligently pronounce whether or not it is necessary to make such a change.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no other intention than to place all the reasons before the House. I agree with my hon. friend that the opinion of the judge is quite as much entitled to consideration as my opinion, or the opinion of any other member. But we are here to exercise our judgment and take our responsibility as to what we are doing. I am placing before the House the view that the proper carrying out of the intent of the Act, and taking into consideration the decision of the judge as to the meaning of the word, requires that this amendment shall be made. It is for the House to say whether it agrees with that view or not. As to the reasons; we have found it necessary in the administration of the Act, in carrying out what we believed to be the mind of parliament, and in order not to do any injustice to any person, that we should define 'Canadian citizenship,' which is something which is not defined anywhere else, and that we should define 'domicile,' which is something not defined anywhere else. The reason we have to make these definitions is that we may not do injustice in such cases as are dealt with in section 3 of the Immigration Act of last session, which is practically a re-enactment of the Act passed in 1906. My hon. friend will agree that that at any rate expresses the mind of parliament, and parliament says distinctly:—

> No immigrant, passenger or other person, unless he is a Canadian citizen or has Canadian domicile, shall be permitted to land in Canada, or in case of having landed in or entered Canada shall be permitted to remain there, or, who belongs to any of the following classes hereinafter called prohibited classes.

That expressed the mind of parliament since 1906. In the Act of last year, in order to limit the hitherto unlimited application of this we introduced this exception in regard to Canadian citizenship, and in regard to Canadian domicile. In order to limit the formerly unlimited application of this provision, we thought it was right that there should be these exceptions ; but in order that we should make exceptions and not contravene the principle which has been in the mind of parliament since 1906, we had to define both Canadian citizenship and Canadian domicile, and I submit that it was carrying out the intention of parliament that these should be defined in a restricted and limited sense, and it would not have been carrying out the mind of parliament had we defined domicile as the hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not want to debate the question whether the mind of parliament last year should necessarily control absolutely the mind of parliament this year, particularly when we are asked to be controlled not by something expressed but by something that was in the mind of parliament and not expressed. The hon. minister says that his purpose is to avoid the injustice which would be done if we gave a less restrictive interpretation to section 3 of the old Act. The section applies only to persons who have neither Canadian citizenship nor Canadian domicile, and the minister admits that once that we pass this Bill, there are persons who have Canadian domicile to-day who will not have it to-morrow. There are in that section certain provisions which exclude classes of persons whom it might be desirable to exclude even if they had a Canadian domicile ; but on the other hand, under this section, any person, who has not a Canadian domicile, is for instance excluded if he is blind. It is necessary for our protection that we should enact a law that if a man comes here and acquires a domicile and his wife unfortunately should be blind, we should shut her out for ever. Still that would be the effect of this measure.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McKENZIE. Before six o'clock I was referring to some features of the immigration Act which I thought required an explanation. It is a well understood principle in British law that the head of the family to a very large extent regulates the rights of his children and his wife in any country. When the husband is entitled to a domicile or a settlement in this country, then I understand it follows that the wife is also entitled to a domicile, that the domicile of the father is the domicile of the children, at least until they are old enough to obtain a domicile or a settlement for themselves. That being the case, only with the greatest care and for the strongest reasons should any law be enacted in this country that would break up the family, that is that would enable the father to enter Canada and remain here, while preventing the mother and the children from following him. We can readily conceive a situation where a child might be born while the mother was in transit to this country and it would appear to me extraordinary that the mother, when arriving on our shores, would not be permitted to land with the infant, although under the existing regulations such a situation might readily arise.

I am not familiar with the reasons why Asiatics are singled out as different from other people coming into this country. There may be good reasons for making a special law for Asiatics. All I can say is that the great majority of the Asiatics in our country are about as desirable as any other foreigners who come into the country. We find them very industrious, clean, honest people, willing to earn a livelihood and taking part in any of the occupations offering in my part of the country. Personally it seems to me an exceedingly hard law that an Asiatic, an Assyrian for instance, comes to my country, stays for perhaps three years, is a naturalized British subject, has considerable property, running into the thousands of dollars, but when he wants to bring his wife and family here, they cannot be taken into the country, no matter how young they are unless each of them has $200 in cash. I do not say that children should be admitted if they are unhealthy or if there is anything the matter with them that should prevent them coming in, simply because the father is in this country, but when the father is a British subject and has ample property in Canada, it is a hardship that should not exist. If a man is to live in this country, if we give him the privilege of voting, and other rights of citizenship, I do not think we should prevent his wife and family from coming to live with him. Under our general naturalization Act it is stated that the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife and that the domicile of the father is the domicile of the children, at least until they are 21 years of age, and that if they have no father the domicile of the mother is that of the children. I have met several cases of this kind in my own county and I am not in a position to explain to these Assyrians and Asiatics why this hard rule is made against them as distinguished from other foreigners coming into this country. I would like to have some satisfactory explanation of this regulation from the minister, and if it be at all possible, I would like to see some amendment or some regulation by which the cases of which I speak could be taken away from the general rule so that a man who is given the privileges of British citizenship in Canada, should be allowed to bring his wife and family to live with him, if they are competent to enter Canada without violating any regulation except the requirement of $200 in cash. I think the enforcement of that law in the case of children who could not possibly earn it, is a hardship, that it should be applied only to those capable of earning it and who, if they were industrious, should have it.

Mr. OLIVER. It would seem from the remarks of the gentlemen who have spoken that there is a misapprehension as to the purpose of this law. This law is for the purpose of excluding certain classes of people for certain reasons and the desire is that this intent shall be carried out. If it is not the desire of the Committee that people should be excluded, the law could easily be amended, but as the case stands at present, we have a law which was passed last year, following up another law passed three years before, and we now propose to make certain minor amendments in detail in order to carry out more completely the intent of the law that was passed last session, and hon. members forthwith complain about the fundamental principle of the existing law. That is not the question before the committee, the question is the amendment of this law on the lines suggested. If any hon. members think this exclusion law should not be on the statute-book, it would be fair for them to place themselves on record as of that mind. It is hardly fair to take the opportunity of a proposed amendment to the details of a certain law to go upon record as criticising and objecting to the fundamental principle of the law as it stands.

As to the point that my hon. friend mentions, he asks for information why certain requirements should be made in the case of Asiatics. I am bound to say that the question has nothing to do with the amendments that are before the committee, but as my hon. friend asks the question, it is perfectly right to give the answer. My hon. friend is well aware, as is every member of this House, of the difficulties that have faced the government of Canada in dealing with the question of Asiatic immigration. He knows that very, very drastic and very, very extreme measures have had to be taken to counteract that immigration. Those measures had to differ in regard to the different classes of people who came to the country. In regard to one nationality, the Japanese, an arrangement was made with the Japanese government. In regard to the Chinese, a head-tax of $500 was placed upon their coming into the country. And, in the case of another class of people whose coming to Canada was considered by the people of Canada—certainly by the people more especially affected by that immigration—to be a very serious detriment to the country, the condition was met by requiring the possession of $200 in cash by each Asiatic immigrant other than those arranged for as being Chinese or Japanese. It must be obvious to my hon. friend and the House that when we have made arrangements in regard to the Japanese and in regard to the Chinese it is not desirable that we should make a special prohibition or special impediment to the coming of certain other classes of Asiatics. It was not considered to be sound public policy. It was thought very much better that the requirements should embrace 'Asiatics' and unfortunately for the constituents of my hon. friends, Syrians are 'Asiatics.' It is a case in which a very important national policy was given effect to. It was necessary that effective action should be taken, and it is, in my judgment, just as necessary that there should not be any exceptions made to the action that was taken.

On section 2, duty of officer to send complaint to minister regarding undesirable immigrants.

Mr. OLIVER. The committee will notice that the only amendment is in the insertion of the words 'or entering.' The reason for this amendment also is a judicial decision. The decision was that the person who came into Canada before the passing of the Act of last year was not 'landed' within the meaning of the Act, and therefore, was prohibited from remaining in Canada. With all deference to my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Doherty) that was not the intent of the Act, and it is not considered to be fair or just. And it is to relieve that situation that we desire to have these words inserted.

Mr. DOHERTY. I appreciate the deference of the minister, but I was not aware that I had committed myself to any opinion with regard to the significance of the word 'entering' in this section.

On section 3, penalty for rejected or deported person remaining in or re-entering Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. This amendment is a change from the Act as it now stands. It was considered, in looking over the Act, that a fixed penalty of two years' imprisonment was not in proportion to the offence, that, in fact, it was clearly an error; and we desire to correct the error by making the punishment so that there shall be discretion in the hands of the magistrate and that the punishment shall not be more severe than the offence warrants. Therefore, we propose to insert in the section the words 'on summary conviction to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year.'

Mr. JAMESON. This provides that any one rejected or deported under this Act who returns to Canada shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year? Would not that leave the person upon whom sentence was passed the option of paying a penalty or removing from the country? In other words, if he were convicted for a certain term, might not he remain in the country under restraint for the term of his conviction?

Mr. OLIVER. The idea is that having been ordered out and refusing to go, or coming back when he was forbidden, the only remedy was to punish him. The mere ordering him out again could hardly meet the case.

Mr. ROCHE. Has the minister had any such case as that?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that we have.

On section 4—deportation.

Mr. OLIVER. In this case we have not reprinted the whole section, as the proposal is merely to add certain words to provide that where a person is deported the deportation shall take place under such conditions as are ordered by the officer in charge. It is believed that, instead of the matter being in the discretion of the transportation company which is carrying out the deportation the transportation company should be under the direction of the officer in charge of immigration. The Act reads that he shall be reconveyed 'by the transportation company which carried him to the place in Canada where he was rejected, or where he is being retained for deportation, to the place in the country whence he was brought, or to the country of his birth or citizenship.' That leaves it discretionary with the transportation company as to the accommodation to be given to the returning immigrant, and, in order that that should not be entirely in the discretion of the transportation company, the words are added 'as may be directed by the officer in charge.'

On section 5,—penalty on transportation company refusing to return person ordered to be deported.

Mr. OLIVER. The first amendment is merely verbal but the second and third amendments in the section are important. As the explanation underneath points out, it is to make clear that the transportation company must take the deported person not only to the boundary of the country from which he came, but to the place in the country from whence he came. In order that there may be no question about it, the second amendment is made to read: 'As may be directed by the immigration officer.

Mr. DOHERTY. I understand the intention of the second amendment is to give the immigration official the right to decide whether the man shall be taken to the country he came from, or to the country of his birth or citizenship. Would it not be fair that the individual deported should have some choice in that matter?

Mr. OLIVER. The board directs that he shall be taken to the place in the country from whence he came, or to that of his birth or citizenship as may be directed by such order. It does leave discretion with the board. But I think it is right that it should be done, because we have difficulties with people who come through the United States from other countries, and some times it is possible to return them through the United States and sometimes it is not, according to the way the United States authorities administer their law.

Mr. DANIEL. Supposing a Ruthenian embarks at Liverpool for this country in one of the Allan or Canadian Pacific Railway steamers, and after having arrived here, he is ordered to be deported. Can this board order the steamship line, not only to take him back to Liverpool, but to make them see that he is conveyed as far as Ruthenia from whence he came in the first place?

Mr. OLIVER. If in Ruthenia or Galicia he bought a ticket to Canada from the agent of the steamship company, yes; but if he had only bought the ticket to Liverpool, and then bought another ticket from Liverpool, of course the company could be compelled to return him to Liverpool.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not suppose the board would be so unreasonable as to do that, but under the wording of the section they would apparently have a right in the case suggested to order that man to be taken back to Ruthenia from Liverpool.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that the words bear that construction. But there is no doubt that in order to secure substantial justice, that authority has to be placed in the hands of the board. I do not think there is any other way but to give such discretion and authority to the board.

On section 6, subsection 1,—prosecutions,

Mr. OLIVER. The amendments here, as will be noted, provide for a rather greater responsibility on the judicial side than in the present Act; and also provide that proceedings may be taken not only against the transportation company, but against the individual. Under the former Act proceedings might only be taken against the company, and it was thought better, while that might cover all cases, specifically to state that proceedings could be taken against an individual as well as against a company.

On paragraph 4, lien on property of transportation companies.

Mr. OLIVER. These amendments are in the line of the amendment in the first section, that is to say to provide where it is either a person or a company.

Mr. JAMESON. Last year, when this section was under discussion, there was some little doubt in the minds at least of some hon. gentlemen as to whether there would be jurisdiction in certain cases against these transportation companies. I would like to ask the minister if, during the year which has just passed, any proceedings have been taken against any transportation companies under the Act?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we have not found it necessary. The transportation companies have conformed to the Act substantially.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall I report the Bill?

Mr. OLIVER. The amendments are marked by brackets. I do not know whether a formal motion is necessary or not to have these brackets stricken out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand it is not necessary.

Mr. DANIEL. If you are going to take out the brackets you might correct the spelling of the word 'gaol' in the ninth line on the 2nd page. It is spelled 'goal' instead of 'gaol.'

Bill reported.

MANUFACTURE OF WHITE PHOSPHORUS MATCHES.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient, in connection with Bill 10 now before this House, to provide for the prohibition of the manufacture and importation of matches made with white phosphorus; to empower the commissioner of patents on petition to fix terms for the use of any process patented at the time of the passing of this Act for the manufacture of matches without white phosphorus, other than matches intended to strike only on a surface specially prepared for the purpose; to provide for the inspection of any place where it is suspected that matches made with white phosphorus may be found; to examine any receptacle or place in which it is suspected that such matches may be; to authorize the Governor in Council to make such orders and regulations as may be necessary; and to fix penalties for infractions of the Act.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, as the members of the committee may not be familiar with the subject with which this resolution has to do, and with the provisions of the Bill which is based on the resolution, I hope the committee will allow me a little time to explain the objects of the proposed legislation, and to outline the purpose that it is hoped to serve. I should like to point out in the first place that this legislation is not intended to embarrass in any way any existing industry. It is rather aimed exclusively at the stamping out of a disease connected with a certain industry which has been found in other countries to be of a very serious and, I may say, hideous nature. The disease is spoken of popularly as 'phossy,' and scientifically as phosphorous necrosis or poisoning from phosphorous. This disease is one which has been known for a great many years in different countries ; in fact, for something like seventy years the countries of Europe have been familiar with it. One after the other, they have found it necessary to pass legislation to protect the workers who are engaged in the match-making industry from the evils of it. Perhaps I might in a casual way, indicate to the committee in my own words what the nature of this disease is. It has been found where matches have been made of phorphorous that in the making of these matches, the phosphorous fumes not infrequently attack the teeth of the workers and sometimes very minute particles of phosphorus also find their way to the teeth and, going through the cavaties of the teeth, work their way to the jawbones which become festered with the result that little by little they break away and the workers lose their jaws altogether. I can describe more fully the nature of this disease by reading to the committee the definition given of the malady by the chairman of a commission appointed in England some ten or eleven years ago to look into the matter. I have here the report of a commission which was appointed by the British government in 1899 to report to the Secretary of the Home Department on the use of phosphorous in the manufacture of lucifer matches. It is by Prof. T. E. Thorpe, principal chemist of the government laboratory; Prof. Thomas Oliver, physician to the Royal Infirmary, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Dr. George Cunningham, Senior Dental Surgeon to the London Hospital. These gentlemen were appointed by the British government to look carefully into this industrial disease, and they reported at considerable length upon it in the volume which I have here. The definition of the disease given by Dr. Oliver, is as follows :

The malady that is dreaded is phosphorus necrosis. The presence of decayed teeth predisposes a match maker to the disease, for the phosphorus fumes penetrate carious teeth and readily induce a periostitis or acute inflammation of the covering of the jawbone. The gum becomes swollen, and both it and the jawbone painful. Sooner or later pus forms, and although the tooth, or the teeth, are extracted, the pain continues, but in a less severe form. The inflammation gradually extends to the bone, which undergoes a process of slow destruction. For months pus keeps oozing out into the mouth in minute quantities, some of which is swallowed, and tends to induce chronic toxaemia. By means of the use of antiseptic mouth washes the morbid process gradually ceases by a piece of dead bone being thrown off, or the decayed bone is removed by surgical operation, when the patient recovers with or without facial deformity.

The disease has recently been made the subject of a very full and complete investigation in the United States. It has been investigated there by Mr. John J. Andrews who is secretary of the American Association for Labour Legislation, and who is one of the best known of the younger economists of the United States. Mr. Andrews, in a pamphlet which was published a short time ago in regard to American industrial diseases, a pamphlet which has been distributed by the American Association of Labour Legislation, gives an account of the nature of this disease, and I will read it also to the committee because it is rather important that the members should realize the full significance of the industrial ill to which the workers in match factories are liable in order to appreciate the necessity for this legislation. Mr. Andrews says:

Poisoning from phosphorus has many evil effects. Some are local, others general. The general effect most frequently noted in cases of chronic phosphorus poisoning is anaemia. The daily breathing of air laden with phosphorus fumes and continual contact with the particles of phosphorus result in a gradual lowering of vitality, which in turn invites other forms of disease. This is one of the most prevalent and most serious results of phosphorus poisoning. But such general effects are much more difficult of actual determination and consequently the local effects which are more conspicuous receive the greater attention.

Phosphorus necrosis, the peculiar local form of the disease, is caused by the absorption of phosphorus through the teeth or gums. The generally accepted theory is that minute particles of the poison enter, usually, through the cavities of decayed teeth, setting up an inflammation which, if not quickly arrested, extends along the jaws, causing the teeth to loosen and drop out, and that jawbones slowly decompose and pass away in the form of nauseating pus, which sometimes breaks through the neck in the form of an abcess or, if not almost continually washed out, oozes into the mouth where it mixes with the saliva and is swallowed.

Treatment is largely preventive, but when the disease is once established a serious surgical operation is often the only means of arresting the process of decay. In many instances of poisoning it is necessary to remove an entire jaw, and in several cases both jaws have been removed at a single operation. A number of cases of necrosis have resulted in death.

It is the awfulness of the disease and the ease with which it can be prevented that has led many countries where the effects of the disease and the means for its prevention have been studied, to do away with the disease forever.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any cases in Canada such as the minister has described?

Mr. KING. There have been such cases and I intend to cite several of them. A few years ago the French government made a state monopoly of the match business, and it was found that a great many engaged in the making of matches contracted the disease and became a charge on the state. The authorities became anxious, and the government began to make inquiry to see if some substitute could not be found to take the place of phosphorus, and what is known as sesqui sulphite was discovered by two French chemists and was adopted by the French government. It is an interesting commentary on industrial conditions as regulated by public and private interests respectively that when the government found itself face to face with having to use part of the revenue which it was getting from the match industry to maintain some of the unfortunate workers in that industry, it undertook to provide a remedy, but that individual manufacturers, who had no responsibility for the loss occasioned to the worker, continued existing processes without seeking to adopt any substitute for the poisonous material. It was found by the French government that a material quite as good as phosphorus could be used in the making of matches, and having adopted it, other countries which had experience of this frightful disease later followed the example, and gradually enacted laws prohibiting altogether the making of matches with this poisonous substance.

In 1901 there was formed in Europe the International Labour Association, the purpose of which is to bring about, if possible, uniformity in the industrial laws of the different countries of Europe. Speaking on industrial affairs in this House, I have had occasion to point out that this is an age not merely of competition as between industry and industry and locality and locality within a country, but as between the industries of one country and the industries of another country, and that we are fast approaching the day when industrial competition will be not above that of one nation with another nation, but of one continent with another continent. Those who have looked deeply into industrial matters have come to see that any regulation to be really effective must spread over the entire area of competition, and that if one nation is going to improve the condition of its workers it can only do so effectively by the nation adjoining it, or competing with it, adopting the same standards. This association, founded in Paris, now has its headquarters in Switzerland, and it was founded in recognition of this fact. It was formed with a view of bringing about uniformity in the industrial laws of Europe and the industrial laws of the American continent as well. Branches have been established in the different countries of Europe and in the United States, and the association publishes from month to month bulletins in which the labour laws of the different countries are classified, and it holds annual meetings at which subjects of general interest are discussed. One of the main subjects taken up by the association at an early date was this question of phosphorus necrosis. Through the instrumentality of the government of Switzerland special meetings of the members of this association were called at Berne in 1905 and 1906 to consider the question of the several countries adopting uniform legislation on this occupational disease known as 'phosphorous necrosis,' and eleven different countries were represented at the latter gathering. On that occasion a convention was drawn up to which the different nations were asked to become parties, and which provided that each country should prevent the manufacture of matches from white phosphorus, and also prohibit the importation into it of any matches made from white phosphorus. I have here a memorandum on the international conference held at Berne in September, 1906. This memorandum was prepared by the British government, and it gives an account of the convention which was held to deal with this subject, and it points out that the following powers: France, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Denmark, Luxemburg and Italy decided to enter into an agreement on the subject between themselves and to sign the following convention:—

International Convention on the subject of the Prohibition of the use of White (Yellow) Phosphorus in the manufacture of matches.

His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia; His Majesty the King of Denmark; the President of the French Republic; His Majesty the King of Italy; His Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Luxemburg, Duke of Nassau; Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands; the Swiss Federal Council, desiring to facilitate the development of the industrial protection of work-people by the adoption of common provisions, have resolved to conclude with this object a convention respecting the use of white (yellow) phosphorus in the manufacture of matches, and have appointed the following to be their plenipotentiaries; that is to say:—

who after having communicated their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:—

Article 1.

The high contracting parties bind themselves to prohibit in their respective territories, the manufacture, importation and sale of matches, which contain white (yellow) phosphorus.

Article 2.

It is incumbent upon each of the contracting states to take the administrative measures necessary to ensure the strict execution of the terms of the present convention within their respective territories.

Each government shall communicate to the others through the diplomatic channel the laws and regulations which exist or shall hereafter come into force in their country with regard to the subject matter of the present convention as well as the reports on the manner in which the said laws and regulations are applied.

Article 3.

The present convention shall only apply to a colony, possession or protectorate when a notice to this effect shall have been given on its behalf by the government of the mother country to the Swiss Federal Council.

Mr. CROCKET. Is Great Britain a party to the convention?

Mr. KING. I was just going to refer to the attitude of Great Britain. In 1899 the British government appointed a commission to go into the whole question. That commission is the one whose report I have referred to. That report recommended numerous regulations thought sufficient to meet the evil, and the British government adopted these regulations and had them put in force. When this association met in 1906, these regulations were on trial, and the British government did not then see its way, on that account, to become a party to the convention. However, in 1908, the British government, having found these regulations insufficient, decided to give its adherence to the convention and did join the other countries to which I have referred, later Austria followed the example of Britain, so that with the exception of Norway, Sweden and Russia, which have regulations of their own, all the principal countries of Europe have become parties to an agreement which prohibits the use of white phosphorus in the making of matches and which prohibits also the importation of matches made with white phosphorus. Not only that, but since the British government became a party to the convention, the following possessions of Britain have given their adherence to it: The Orange River Colony, Cyprus, British East Africa, Gibraltar, Malta, Mauritius, Scychelles, Southern Nigeria, Leeward Islands and Fiji. Also the following French possessions: The Somali Coast, Reunion, Madagascar and its dependencies, the French settlements in Oceania and New Caledonia, Tunis and the Netherlands Indies.

In this connection it may interest the House to know how this government came to consider this particular measure. When the British government became a party to this convention, the Secretary of State for the Colonies sent a communication to the Governor General of the Dominion, informing him of that fact, and asked the Canadian government whether this country would adhere to the convention. In January, 1909, the following despatch was sent to Lord Grey:—

I have the honour to request Your Excellency to inform your ministers that, an Act having been passed last session by the imperial parliament to prohibit the manufacture, sale and importation of matches made with white phosphorus, a copy of which is inclosed, His Majesty's government have now notified the adhesion of the United Kingdom to the Berne Convention of the 26th September, 1906, on the subject of the prohibition of the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches.

I shall be glad to learn in due course whether your government desire that a notification of their adhesion should be made under article 3 of the convention.

Another despatch was sent in August of this last year stating that the British government were anxious to know as soon as possible whether the Dominion government proposed to give its adhesion to the convention.

Before sending any reply, the government deemed it desirable to get the fullest information possible as to the necessity for any such legislation in this country. The first step taken was to communicate with the authorities in every province in order to ascertain whether any legislation for the purpose of protecting their workers in match factories existed therein and also what was the extent of the industry, and whether there was any need for further legislation on this matter. Mr. Ackland, Deputy Minister of the Department of Labour, communicated with the various provincial secretaries, and the replies he received indicated that in none of the provinces was there any legislation protecting workers against the particular disease, phosphorus necrosis. Having obtained these replies, the department directed two of its officers, Mr. Dubreuil and Mr. McNiven, to investigate and find out whether there were any instances of phosphorous necrosis in the Dominion; and later on I shall submit the substance of their report to the House.

I have given a short account of the various stages so that the House may see clearly the genesis of this measure. It had its beginning in the request of the British government to be informed as to whether Canada would become party to the convention. But the British government did not ask the Canadian government or parliament to consider a measure of this kind until it had itself passed an Act dealing with the evil. The Act of the British parliament is intituled: An Act to prohibit the manufacture and sale of matches made with white phosphorus, and was passed December 21, 1908.

And the Bill I have introduced, is, as nearly as possible, a reproduction of the British Act, which is the source from which this proposed legislation has been inspired.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there any demand from any of the health associations of Canada respecting this matter?

Mr. KING. Not that I am aware of, and the surprising feature of the whole business is the lack of knowledge which there seems to have been as to the extent of this evil in this country. Had the attention of the federal government not been drawn to it, this disease might have continued to spread in this country. Certainly one might have expected some of the provincial inspectors to have come across and reported upon cases of this kind, but not one seems to have done so.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the hon. minister any evidence that the disease does exist?

Mr. KING. I have; and as I said a moment ago, I shall give it to the House in a few minutes. The reason I have spoken at some length of the genesis of this measure, is because an entirely erroneous impression has been spread throughout this country as to its origin. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite have seen in many of our daily papers the statement that this legislation, in some indirect way, was inspired by the Match Trust in the United States. As this seems to be the impression, and as something may be said to the same effect later, I want to refer for a moment to legislation in the United States and the alleged connection of the Match Trust in that country with this measure. I have here the article to which I have referred and which has been copied into the newspapers throughout Canada. It reads as follows:—

HON. MACKENZIE KING AND THE MATCH TRUST.

The Bill he introduced in Parliament looks suspicious.

The Minister has placed the Government in an Embarrassing Position—The Bill would Prohibt Manufacture of White Phosphorus Matches.

Hon. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labour, has, through inexperience, it is alleged, placed the government and himself in a most embarrassing position, from which they will have the greatest difficulty in extricating themselves. It is asserted that the Bill he has introduced into parliament to prohibit the manufacture and importation of matches made with white phosphorus is simply part of a scheme which had its origin in the United States to promote and aid the Match Trust. The Match Trust controls the patents governing the process of making matches with materials other than with white phosphorus.

Misplaced Zeal.

It seems that Mr. King, while looking around for legislation, stumbled across a Bill which has been introduced into the United States Congress, and which aims at putting out of business all firms that manufacture matches with white phosphorus. Of course, the real design of the United States Bill is to corner the market for the Match Trust. The Canadian Minister of Labour, without knowing all the facts of the case, clutched at the statement that white phosphorus was poisonous, and, thinking to gain eclat by similar legislation designed to save the workers from the cruel manufacturers, immediately introduced the measure mentioned into parliament.

Objects of Attack.

But in addition to charges from Washington that he is in league with the Match Trust, Mr. King and the government find themselves the object of attack not only by several Canadian manufacturers of matches, but also by work people who will lose their occupations if the Bill becomes law and thus shuts down a number of factories.

And so on—

That is a somewhat serious indictment to be brought against any one person let alone against a government as a whole, and that report has been sent out from end to end of the Dominion as being the explanation of the Bill I have introduced. It is only fair to point out that the paper which published this article in the first instance, on the following day, in its editorial columns, published a complete repudiation of the article. The editorial was headed: 'Poisoned victims,' and it goes on to show that the paper which published the article does not share this view. Giving the name of the paper, it says:

This paper prefers to be on the side of the legislation suggested against a manufacturing curse which undoubtedly was at no recent date rife throughout civilization.

We beg, therefore, to repudiate sympathy with the opinions which appeared in this paper yesterday, and on the contrary to range ourselves among the supporters of the government Bill until good reasons are proved against it.

Mr. OWEN. Is any white phosphorus used in the manufacture of matches in Canada and if so where?

Mr. KING. White phosphorus is used in all the factories. The largest is the E. B. Eddy Company at Hull, there are also the J. and G. Flewelling at Hampton, New Brunswick, the Eureka Match Factory at Halifax, Nova Scotia, there is also one in the province of Quebec, and I think there is a factory beginning business in Deseronto, Ontario. In all these factories I understand white phosphorous is used in the manufacture of matches.

I may say that simultaneously with the introduction of this Bill in this House or a little before a Bill was introduced in the United States House of Representatives which is now before that body. I have copies of the different Bills which have been introduced, one on June 3, 1910, a Bill to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches and for other purposes; another on December 15, of the same name and one on December 19, 1910. All of these Bills have been introduced with a view to having the United States also become a party to the convention to which these other countries have become parties, and if that legislation passes, and this legislation passes in this House, and there is reason to believe that in each case it will pass, then the countries on this continent and the leading countries in Europe will have united together to absolutely put down the possibility of the spread of this disease in connection with the match making industry.

On December 6, 1910, Mr. Taft, President of the United States, sent the following message to Congress:

I invite attention to the very serious injury caused to all those who are engaged in the manufacture of phosphorus matches. The disease incident to this are frightful, and as matches can be made from other materials entirely innocuous, I believe that the injurious manufacture could be discouraged and ought to be discouraged by the imposition of a heavy federal tax. I recommend the adoption of this method of stamping out a very serious abuse.

The president's message, I should say, was not sent until after the whole matter had been very carefully investigated by officers of the Department of Labour and Commerce in the United States. I have here a copy of hearings before the committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives on Bills relating to the health and activity of the general public, a report which deals with this one question alone, printed during the latter part of last year. It contains a complete account of the match making industry in the United States and cites cases of phosphorus necrosis which are known to be existent in the factories there. On the first page is a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labour, Hon. Charles Nagel, stating different reasons why an Act of this kind should be passed in the United States. It contains, on page 390, a letter which was given by the then president of the Diamond Match Company, the concern which owns the patent of the substance to which I have referred—sesquisulphide—in which the president of that company states that in the event of an Act of this kind being passed in the United States his firm will be agreeable to allow all manufacturing concerns to have the use of its patented substance on equal terms with itself. The same kind of a charge that has been made here in Canada in the article to which I have referred has been made also in the United States namely that this legislation is being promoted by the Match Trust and the reason that is put forward is that the Match Trust, the Diamond Match Company in the United States happens to own the patent for this substance, sesquisulphide, and will not allow other concerns to use it so that its competitors will be at a disadvantage if legislation of this kind should be enacted. That makes this letter of considerable interest. It reads:

Akron, Ohio, March 15, 1909.

Charles E. McKenna,
Special Agent, Bureau of Labour.
Washington, D.C.

Dear Sir,—The Diamond Match Company, owners of patents for the use of sesquisulphide phosphorus for the manufacture of matches in America, believing this article to be a remedy for the prevailing trouble in manufacturing matches, namely, phosphorus necrosis, is willing to permit the use of sesquisulphide in the manufacture of matches in America if the government provided for the prohibition of the use of white phosphorus by other manufacturers of matches not owning an interest in the patent, they all to be put on equal terms with the Diamond Match Company as to the use of the patents. The government of England has this last winter passed a Bill prohibiting the use of white phosphorus and providing for the use of sesquisulphide on equal terms, as per copy of Bill inclosed.

O. C. BARBER.

On seeing this communication in the report it occurred to me that it might be well to communicate with the Diamond Match Company in the United States and find out whether this company would be willing to grant the use of the patented substance to manufacturing firms in Canada on as liberal terms as they propose to offer in the United States. I may say that this patent in Canada is at present owned by the same company, the Diamond Match Company, they having obtained possession of the patent last year. It was patented in Canada some years ago by two Frenchmen. I sent the following communication to the president of the Diamond Match Company on the last day of the old year.

Ottawa, Ont., December 31, 1910.

Sirs,—In a report of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives on Bills relating to Health Activities of the general government, part VII, printed at Washington this year, I find quoted at page 390 the following communication:—

Here is set out the letter I have first read.

I understand from inquiry at the Patent Office of the Dominion that a patent for the use of sesquisulphide for the manufacture of matches in Canada was taken out in 1899 by Henri Sevens and E. D. Cahen, of Paris, France, and in 1910 assigned to the Diamond Match Company. I inclose for your information copy of a Bill which I have introduced in the House of Commons of Canada, and I am writing to ask if, in the event of this Bill becoming law, the Diamond Match Company is prepared to permit the use of sesquisulphide in the manufacture of matches in Canada on the same terms on which, according to the above quoted communication, it is prepared to allow its use under like circumstances in the United States, i.e., all manufacturers to be put on equal terms with the Diamond Match Company as to the use of the patents.

As this question is likely to be raised in the course of the debate on the second reading of the Bill which may take place very shortly after the reassembling of parliament on the 11th proximo, I would be obliged if your company would give me a statement which I might make public in this connection.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Minister of Labour.

The Diamond Match Company,
Akron, Ohio.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Has the Diamond Match Company manufactured in Canada under its patent?

Mr. KING. I am not aware that they have manufactured in Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then their patent is worthless.

Mr. KING. That would be all the better for the manufacturers in this country.

Mr. WRIGHT. What are these particular terms?

Mr. KING. The correspondence which I am about to read will probably answer that question.

January 11, 1911.

The Diamond Match Company,
111 Broadway, New York.

Sir,—We are in receipt of your letter of December 31, 1910.

In reply we beg to advise you that in the event of the passage of your Bill No. 10, entitled 'An Act to prohibit the Manufacture and Importation of Matches made with White Phosphorus,' we would be quite willing to permit the use of sesquisulphide of phosphorus in Canada on equitable terms.

The use of sesquisulphide of phosphorus as an ingredient in the composition of a match head as covered by letters patent of the Dominion of Canada granted December 5, 1899, to Henri Sevene and E. D. Cahen, of Paris, France, and assigned to this company.

The 4th section of the English White Phosphorus Act provides that any person who is manufacturing or proposing to manufacture matches may present a petition to the board of trade praying for the grant of a compulsory license, &c. So far as we, as owners of the Canadian patent are concerned, we would be quite satisfied with a similar provision in the Canadian law.

Yours truly,
The Diamond Match Co.,
EDW. R. STETTINIUS,
President.

W. L. Mackenzie King, Esq.,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Canada.

Since the receipt of that letter, a letter has reached me from Mr. Andrews, the secretary of the American Association for Labour Legislation which shows that the Diamond Match Company has gone a step further. As I have pointed out, the agitation in the United States, as in the manner attempted here, has been directed to make it appear that the match trust is really seeking to promote legislation of this kind and to use these patents to embarrass other concerns. This letter speaks for itself:

American Association for Labour Legislation.
Metropolitan Tower, New York City,
Jan. 10, 1911.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Canada.

My dear Mr. King,—You will be interested to know that the bugaboo of monopoly raised by some disingenuous persons with reference to our national campaign to secure the prohibition of the use of poisonous phosphorus in the manufacture of matches in the United States has been squelched for all time in this connection. The Diamond Match Co. has assigned its patent for the sesquisulphide substitute to three trustees: Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, of Columbia University, Commissioner Charles P. Neill, of the United States Bureau of Labour, and Attorney Jackson Ralston, attorney for the American Federation of Labour, Washington, D.C., with full power to deal with future applicants for the patented formula on any basis they may think proper.

These three gentlemen have been given power to fix the terms according to what they think proper, they being trustees. I think that answers the question my hon. friend asked.

In the United States we believe we have now overcome every objection that can be honestly raised and we hope every suspicion, no matter how unjustified. We are holding a conference in Chicago to-morrow on this subject, and within the next week we hope to see the Esch Phosphorus Bill reported out of the committee and well on its way toward early enactment into law at this present short session of Congress.

With best wishes for the progress of similar legislation in Canada, I am,

Yours very sincerely,
JOHN B. ANDREWS,
Secretary.

What I would like to make plain to the House is that in all the countries of Europe where this legislation has been enacted, this substitute has taken the place of white phosphorus. As I understand it, it is a chemical mixture which contains phosphorus and sulphur, the two being mixed in retorts away from where the people are working, so that there is no danger, after the combination has been effected, from the effects of the substance. And that is another important feature—that there is no danger to children of poisoning by sucking the heads of matches. That danger is done away with as well as the danger of phosphorus poisoning while the match manufacture is going on.

As I have stated, the countries of Europe have adopted this substitute. They have been face to face with the same condition that the match manufacturers here will have to meet. They have acquiesced in the legislation that has been passed; in fact, the British match manufacturers, when the matter was up for consideration there, petitioned the Home Office to adopt this very legislation. It may seem extraordinary that they should have done so, but the explanation is, I understand that they found that the regulations under which the British government was placing them with a view to preventing this disease caused them more expense than the use of the substitute would cause, and they felt that if they were all put on an equal footing it would be in their own interests to acquiesce in the enactment of a law of this kind. On Tuesday, the 24th of March, 1908, Mr. Gilbert Bartholomew, chairman and managing director of Bryant & May, Limited, the largest manufacturers of matches in England, headed a deputation to the Home Secretary. I will not quote the whole of his remarks, but will read two paragraphs. Mr. Bartholomew said:

I have the honour to represent here the match manufacturers of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland who use poisonous phosphorus. There are at present only nine of such manufacturers of matches, and they are Bryant & May, Limited, London and Liverpool; R. Bell & Co., Limited, London; J. Palmer & Son, London; S. J. Moreland & Sons, Gloucester; Maguire, Miller & Co., Liverpool; Paterson & Co., Limited, Dublin; W. J. Morgan & Co., Limited, Manchester; Hargreaves & Clegg, Limited, Manchester; The Hulme Patent Advertising Match Co., Limited, Manchester. The nine manufacturers are unanimous in appealing to you, sir, to take such steps as may be necessary to prohibit, at the earliest possible date, the use of poisonous phosphorus in the manufacture of matches.

And after giving a number of reasons in support of this request, the chairman said:

I want to emphasize another feature which is very important, and that is, that so long as phosphorus matches remain in use, so long there will be occasional deaths among children poisoned by sucking the heads of such matches. These considerations alone should be sufficient to win a ready response to our proposal. Another grave feature which I need not particularize: it is doubtless familiar to the Home Office, has brought about the present condition of things in Sweden, and yet, while phosphorus matches are not allowed to be sold or consumed in that country, their manufacture in the country is still allowed for export to this and other countries where such matches are not yet prohibited.

In conclusion, our case may be briefly stated to be:—

1. The manufacturers are unanimous in favour of prohibition.

2. The employees will heartily welcome prohibition.

3. Quite a number of other countries have already adopted it, and we believe the rest will gladly do so when led in that direction by Great Britain.

4. Efficient substitutes for poisonous phosphorus are available. The efficiency cannot be better testified to than by mentioning the fact that for the last eight years all Bryant &

May's matches have been manufactured without poisonous phosphorus. It is true that the two efficient alternatives are patented; but the owners of the better known of the two have offered it to their brother manufacturers in the United Kingdom, who have readily accepted the terms offered, which, I may say, are practically but a nominal recognition of the patent rights. The other alternative is the joint property of the manufacturers, except one, and that one has accepted proposals enabling him to use whichever of the alternatives he may prefer.

5. There is consequently no reason whatever why the use of poisonous phosphorus should be continued, and I believe it is well known to the Home Office that in other countries there has been very much more injury to the health of the workers than in this, and it is to be expected, therefore, that very soon there will be unanimity in this matter throughout the match-making countries. But whether there is or not, or whether it comes sooner or later, we claim the time has come and should not be delayed, when Great Britain should be ready to give effect to a proposal which can have none but beneficial effects upon all concerned.

Now, the attitude of the British government in both Houses of parliament, when the subject came up for discussion there, may be stated in a few words. In the House of Commons the Hon. Herbert Gladstone, Secretary of State for the Home Department said in reference to this legislation:

So far as the general necessity for the Bill was concerned, it was desirable, though he admitted there had been few cases lately of necrosis poisoning, if they could do it, absolutely to eliminate the chance of this very dreadful and painful disease occurring. It was so dreadful that, even if only one case had occurred in the last few years, this Bill, which would involve no trouble or expense, would be justified.

These were the words of the present Governor of South Africa. Then in the House of Lords, the Lord Steward, Earl Beauchamp said:

Representations have been made to the Home Office, on behalf of all the manufacturers of matches in the United Kingdom, that if the importation of matches made abroad with white phosphorus is prohibited by law they would be willing that the use of that material in the manufacture of matches in this country should be forbidden.

. . .I do not think, therefore, that there will be any increase in the cost of manufacture of these 'strike anywhere' matches. In these circumstances and especially in view of the fact that this Bill will go far to prevent the danger of cases of phossy jaw occurring among match makers in the future, I hope your Lordship will agree to the motion for the second reading.

I have dwelt a little on the English legislation, because I feel that rightly the precedent of the British parliament will carry great weight in this country. We have first of all, the match manufacturers themselves in Britain uniting in a petition to have this legislation passed in the English house, recognizing that the best regulation possible to have, was ineffective, and we have both the House of Commons and the House of Lords agreeing to the legislation. Now I do not believe that in this country we shall encounter any more opposition from the match manufacturers than was encountered in Great Britain. I have had a talk with Mr. Rowley, general manager of the E. B. Eddy Company, which I think produces something like ninety per cent of the matches used in this country. Mr. Rowley has stated to me that while he does not see that there is any necessity for this legislation from his point of view, and while he thinks the regulations at present existing are quite effective, I am at liberty to state that his company does not propose to offer any opposition to this legislation. Then I have had an opportunity of talking with Mr. Flewelling, representing the match company in Hampton, and with Mr. Corbett, of Halifax, and also with Mr. McCarthy, who has to do with the business just starting in Deseronto, Ontario; and these gentlemen, while perhaps they would prefer to see no legislation, have told me that if sufficient time is given them in which to make the necessary changes, they do not intend to offer any active opposition to the measure. So parliament, in considering this legislation, may keep in mind, not merely the precedent of Great Britain, the example of all the countries in Europe, but I think may rely, if not upon co-operation, at least upon the tacit consent of the match manufacturers of this country.

I would point out to the House that if there were no reasons other than those I have already mentioned, they are quite sufficient to justify legislation of this kind. Great Britain and the European countries have all found this legislation necessary. Is there any reasonable ground for believing that in Canada the reasons are less strong than they have proven to be in those older countries? If we do not enact legislation of this kind while other countries do, we give a premium to the manufacturer who may desire to produce matches from white phosphorus, and hold out, as it were, an inducement to him to come here. On the other hand, all the countries which have enacted this legislation have also prohibited the importation of matches made with white phosphorus, Canada to-day cannot export matches to Britain made with white phosphorus, nor to Germany, nor to any other European country I have mentioned. We have further the prospect, the probability, of a similar enactment in the United States; so we would also be shut out, if their Bill passes, from shipping matches into the United States. At any rate, one of the strong reasons why we should take part in this work is, that it is part of a great international movement for the purpose of suppressing a great industrial evil, and for Canada to stand apart in such a movement is equivalent to saying to these other countries that we are not prepared to do our share in bringing about a world reform of this magnitude.

But I can understand that members of the House might feel that while these reasons are good, they are not strong enough to warrant this legislation. A moment ago I referred to a report that officers of the Department of Labour were called upon to make, and this report relates to the question which I have been asked several times namely, as to whether in Canada we have any cases of phosphorus necrosis. I had hoped that it would not be necessary to make mention of any of these cases. It is not a pleasant task to cite instances which do not reflect credit upon industries or upon individuals, and I would much prefer being spared to make the statement I have now to make. On the other hand, if I do not cite instances, there are many who will say that the necessity does not exist, and that there is no sufficient reason for this legislation, notwithstanding all that has been said. However, in order to do as little injury to any one as possible, I have carefully eliminated from the report which was presented to me by the officers of the Department of Labour who investigated this matter, all the names of which the report makes mention. I can give the names to any member of the House and shall be glad to do so, if he wishes to have them, but for purposes of record and so far as the public generally is concerned, I think that the mere statement of the cases themselves will be sufficient.

The following statements are from the joint report of the two officers of the department who made the investigation. The first three cases cited relate to deaths from phosphorus poisoning which occurred during the past year.

Miss ———, aged between 22 and 23 years, resided with her parents at ——— street. Her death took place about a year ago. The following brief statement concerning her illness and death was made by her mother:—

She commenced work in the match factory at the age of 14. Her term of employment there lasted about 7 years, when she had to cease work. Her trouble commenced with toothache and extended to the jawbones, finally affecting the whole face. During the last stages of the disease she was completely blind. Her illness covered a period of 19 months. She was attended by Dr. ——— and Dr. ———. She was admitted to ——— Hospital on two occasions, where operations were performed, and was released from that institution shortly before her death. During the last few years she worked in the match factory she earned $1.25 per day.

Dr. ———, the first of the physicians referred to by the mother, states that phosphorus poisoning was the cause of this young woman's death. The other physician did not wish to be interviewed.

That is one case. I can supply the name of the physician who attended her, and who states that her death was due to phosphorus poisoning, and I can give the name of the hospital where hon. gentlemen themselves can see the records.

Mr. DANIEL. Was that given as the cause of death, or was it in the certificate of death ?

Mr. KING. It was given by the physician himself.

Miss ———, 38 years of age, resided at ———, died May ', 1910, after an illness of seven months.

The statement in connection with the illness and death of this woman was obtained at the home of her parents. She had worked in the match factory for eight or ten years before her teeth began to give her trouble. Dr. ——— then ordered her to have five teeth extracted, the operation being performed by Dr. ———. She continued to get worse, and Dr. ——— was consulted, who said that she had poisoning of the blood, caused by fumes. She was admitted to ——— Hospital on March 5, where she remained till May 3, two days before her death. While in the hospital she was operated upon several times, and portions of jawbone extracted. Each of the two physicians who attended this woman during her illness was seen in reference to this case, and both stated that the cause of death was phosphorus poisoning.

Miss ———, aged 25 years, resided with her parents at ———, died on April 17, 1910. The following facts were elicited in a conversation with her father, mother and sister:—

She died on April 17, 1910, after an illness of about a year, at the age of 25. She had worked in the match factory about five years before her troubles began. She was admitted to the ——— Hospital during the summer of 1909, and was under the care of Dr. ———, of ———. She had all her teeth extracted and portions of the jawbone removed. Was confined to bed for five months and endured terrible suffering from ulceration of the jaw and decay of the bone. In describing the cause of her death, the expression used by one of her parents was, 'She died of consumption, caused by swallowing pus from ulcerated jaw.'

The report next makes mention of several persons who are reported to have succumbed to the disease, but in regard to whose cases it was not possible to obtain reliable information.

The following are mentioned as examples of cases of phosphorus poisoning existing at the present time, but which have not proved fatal. Any of the particulars mentioned may be verified by persons who desire to see and converse with the parties:

Mrs. ——, residing at—— worked in match factory for some years, and left on the advice of Dr. —— fourteen years ago. Before leaving, she had fourteen teeth extracted, and was under medical and surgical treatment for a year. The doctor who attended this case states this woman contracted phosphorus poisoning in the match factory some years ago, but has been cured.

Miss ——, aged 28 years, residing with her parents at——.

The following brief statement was given by her mother.

She commenced to work in the match factory at the age of fourteen. Two years ago she had two teeth extracted by Dr. ——, when a piece of the jawbone was removed. Dr. —— was consulted and he advised 'that she discontinue working in the fumes, as she was too weak to counteract its influence.' Her face is still inflamed and swollen, but her mother does not anticipate any serious results.

The doctor who removed a portion of this young woman's jawbone states that the cause of her trouble was phosphorus poisoning.

Miss ——, aged 32 years, residing at ——, stated herself that she had worked in the match factory for eighteen years; that for four years she was sick and unable to work. During this time she was operated upon at —— and —— hospitals, ——, and at —— hospital, ——. She had worked only a few years in the match factory when her teeth began to loosen and ache. At one period of her illness her whole lower jawbone was removed. All her teeth have been extracted. It is twelve years since the last operation was performed, but the left side of her face is still inflamed and swollen. She has suffered more or less during all these years.'

Mr. ——, residing at — , states that he worked for twenty years in the match factory at ——; that he has had all his teeth extracted. About five or six years ago ulceration of the jaw commenced, and his teeth one after another, although perfectly sound, loosened and had to be removed. He was treated at —— hospital, ——, where he had five operations performed on the jawbones, and finally the entire lower jaw was removed. He was sick and unable to work for seven months. The surgeon who performed the operations told him that the cause of his trouble was due to phosphorus poisoning contracted in the match factory. He says he has great difficulty in masticating his food, being unable to eat anything of a solid substance. This man gave the names of three other men, employees of the same factory, whom he stated had been attacked with necrosis of the jaw. About four years ago a man had to have both upper and lower jawbones removed. Another man lost the left half of the lower jaw, including the ear. Another man named ——, died, he says, from the effects of phosphorus poisoning.

Miss ——, aged 41, residing at ——, stated that she was employed in the match factory for a great many years. About thirteen years ago her teeth began to loosen, and she had a number of them extracted. About the same time she had portions of the lower jawbone taken out. After that the ulceration continued, and affected her whole face. Dr. —— performed a number of operations, finally removing the whole lower jawbone. These operations were performed at her home. She was confined to bed for four years, and for two years the suffering was so intense that opiates had to be administered. She recovered sufficiently to return to work, although she suffered afterwards from inflammation of the jaw. About three months ago she had all the remaining teeth in the upper jaw, thirteen in number, removed, and her face is still swollen. Her health has suffered on account of her being unable to masticate her food. This woman stated that during her illness portions of her jawbone became so ulcerated that they were removed by herself without the aid of the surgeon.'

Miss ——, aged 46 years, residing at ——, states that she worked in the match factory for 17 years, though it is now six years since she worked there. She had worked in the factory for 10 years before she felt the effects of the poison. For two years before she finally ceased work there she had suffered a great deal from toothache and ulceration of the jaw, and was ignorant of the true nature of the disease she was suffering from. Dr. —— was her physician. She was confined to bed for two years. She had all her teeth extracted, and both upper and lower jawbones removed, necessitating many operations. She had never been admitted to a hospital, the operations being performed at her home. Her face is very much disfigured. As a result of the disease she has a hole under her chin which penetrates the mouth. Fluid taken into the mouth escapes through this hole unless prevented by holding the ball of the thumb under the chin, covering the hole. She says her health generally is poor; that at the time of her illness the pain was so great that she lost her reason for a while. She could remember cases of phosphorus poisoning in the match factory during her term of employment. She also stated that her mother had died from effects of blood poisoning while she was nursing her through her illness.

Dr. ——, who attended this woman, was interviewed in reference to this case. He said it was a bad case of phosphorus poisoning, and it was almost miraculous that the woman survived all the suffering she had endured.

The report concludes by making mention of one or two other recent cases of phosphorus poisoning, of which an account was given by the physicians who attended the same.

When I read that report I hardly believed the statements that were made in it, and I decided that before I would mention the subject in this House I would verify the statements myself. The two last cases, I think, were about as bad as any reported in the list, so I went to the homes of these people myself and had a conversation with them. I will vouch from personal observation for the truth of every statement that is contained in the account of the two last cases I have read. One of the women I talked with had both of her jaws removed entirely and had the abscesses in her mouth to which I made reference. The bones taken from that woman's face are at the present moment in my office. That women is supported by a sister who has to earn the food required for each of them, and she has been rendered an invalid for the rest of her life. I went to the other home and I talked with this woman, who had lain in bed for four years. At the present time she is the only support of her mother, and she is able to earn $4 a week. She is without a lower jaw at all and she told me that during her illness she pulled her jaw out with her own hands, such was the condition of the bones at that time.

It is not a pleasant task to bring facts of this kind before the House, but I must say that when I came back from attending a conference at which this subject was being discussed and these facts were put before me, I felt I would be negligent in the duty I owed this country if I hesitated to bring into parliament for the sake of concealing facts of this kind similar legislation to that which has been enacted in Great Britain. We talk a great deal in these days about the conservation of natural resources, but I think that more important than the conservation of natural resources is the conservation of human resources, the conservation of human health and of human life. Resources are well enough; our lumber, forests, ore and minerals were given to us for a purpose, but they were given for the preservation and not the destruction of life. So in the Department of Labour we have taken as one of the objects before us, as part of the work which I trust it will be possible to carry on through the years to come, this important question of the preservation of health, the conservation of human life, the protection of the working people the great mass of the people of this country from occupational or other diseases which help to undermine the strength of the nation. If this country is to be what we wish it to be, a country of happy, contented and prosperous people, it will only be by safeguarding the lives and welfare of the many, and by protecting from injustice and ill the homes of the humble in the land.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Would the minister be good enough to state to the House on what grounds he claims this House has any jurisdiction to pass such a measure?

Mr. KING. I may mention to my hon. friend that when I wished to proceed the other day with the second reading of this Bill I was prevented from so doing by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) on account of the fact that I had not preceded this Bill with a resolution, as apparently I should have seeing that it related to trade and commerce, and measures respecting trade and commerce came within the jurisdiction of this House. I think, perhaps, my hon. friend will feel that the opinion expressed by the leader of the opposition is one which he will care to accept.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am afraid the minister who has just taken his seat is about as far astray in the facts he has stated to the House, in the inference he has drawn from these facts and in his general information as to the law giving jurisdiction to this House as he is in the conclusion that he has drawn from the objection stated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition the other day. In this Bill there is one clause which forbids the importation of any of these matches into Canada. Beyond any question, apart from the rest of the Bill, eliminate every other word from the Bill, and there you have a clause forbidding the importation of matches into Canada which would bring the Bill under the rule which requires Bills relating to trade and commerce to be brought before the House first by way of resolution. But I venture to think, that when the minister considers the various heads under which jurisdiction is given to this parliament in clause 91 of the British North America Act, and the various heads in clause 92 under which jurisdiction is given to the provincial legislatures, he will find beyond peradventure that there is no clause there that in any way would give this House the jurisdiction he claims. Without going into that point, let me ask him to consider that the highest courts of the land have again and again held that the words: 'regulation of trade and commerce' must not be read in a literal sense. As the Lord Chancellor said: If we were to take these words literally giving the Dominion power to legislate on all subjects which related to trade and commerce, surely the Dominion would have the right to legislate with regard to bills and notes, and yet a head is given particularly for bills and notes; surely the Dominion would have the power right to legislate touching insolvency and yet a specific head is given under clause 91 for insolvency. Would not common sense lead the minister to the same conclusion that the Lord Chancellor of England has come to again and again, that when we take the words 'regulating trade and commerce they mean regulating our trade as between provinces, as between nations, regulating that trade which is existing. And, for the Minister of Labour to confuse the operations of an isolated factory, perhaps in a country town, with the trade and commerce referred to in the British North America Act, is hardly treating the subject with that respect which might be expected from him.

Mr. KING. I may say that I did not rely exclusively on the leader of the opposition, but before this matter was presented to the House I asked Mr. Acland, the deputy Minister of Labour, to see the Justice Department and consult the Deputy Minister of Justice, to whom the Bill was referred, and get his opinion upon it. I have before me the statement which was given me at the time by Mr. Acland:

Mr. Newcombe took the ground that the Dominion had the fullest right to legislate on the matter, such legislation being intended for the obvious good of the entire community. The question of the protection of public health was not, he pointed out, specifically mentioned in the British North America Act, and it was no more than a matter of convenience that for local reasons it was left in the hands of the provinces. In his view the Dominion had a perfect right to enact legislation prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of matches made from white phosphorus.

I think one may also draw attention to the fact that this measure if passed would constitute part of the criminal law, and that it would come under the head of the class of measures which have to do with the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I do not think the House would be inclined to waste much time discussing the value of the opinion of a gentleman who writes that it is clear this House has jurisdiction over this matter in as much as it is for the obvious good of the community. Is it possible that in this House we have reached a stage when a minister of the Crown will calmly and coolly give as a reason for bringing legislation before it—which it is most doubtful to say the least whether or not this House has the power to pass—that such legislation is for the obvious good of the community. Inferentially the local legislature would have no power to pass any measures which are for the obvious good of the community, and inferentially also section 92 of the British North America Act is at once annulled by such a plea as this. I do not think the minister on calm reflection will be inclined to ask the House to place on the statute-book such an important law simply on the ground that it is for the obvious good of the community. Let me take the statement of facts given by the minister at some considerable length. I do not for a moment intend to contradict the truthfulness of any statement made by him, but I think I can add one or two equally true statements so that we may have, if not the whole truth, a litle nearer to the whole truth, than the statement the House is possessed of at the present time. It is perfectly true there was a conference in Berne, it is perfectly true that Great Britain declined at first to accede to the wishes of the other powers, and to sign an agreement such as she has practically come to in this statute of 1908.

The stand taken by Great Britain was that it was not necessary for Great Britain to enter into such an agreement because there had been a very careful investigation into the working of the match factories in that country and a report had been handed in, and I venture to read a few words from that report:

In 1900 regulations were made and enforced. These regulations have had the effect of almost wholly suppressing the disease in England. In the five years that have elapsed since the alterations which they required having been made, there have been only five cases of necrosis and three of these were mild, the persons affected recovering and finding employment. Of the other two cases, both of which were fatal, one was that of a woman who was employed in a factory where no white phosphorus had been used for four years,—— —and the other was that of a woman who had been guilty of direct infraction of one of the most important of the regulations.

It is hardly fair to charge her case up to white phosphorus :

The report concludes :

There have been no cases in 1906.

And so, the state of affairs in England was not such as to require Great Britain to agree to this convention, and so she declined to sign at that time. But, she went more than half way and she offered to sign if all the other nations concerned would sign. Sweden declined, Spain declined, Portugal declined, Japan declined, Norway declined even to send representatives to the convention, and Austro-Hungary and Belgium took the same stand as Great Britain. We find, therefore, that but a small portion of the continent of Europe had agreed to this convention, and when eventually, Great Britain offered to subscribe if the others would subscribe, the others still held out and are holding out to this day. The countries subscribing were : France, Germany, Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Wurtemburg, and Italy, and of these seven the first five already had this law on their statute-books, and so their signature bound them in no way to do more than they were doing. That left Luxemburg which had not a match factory within its boundary, and Italy. So, Great Britain's offer to the nations' of Europe was not accepted by the nations of Europe and Great Britain did not sign. A year or two later on, and as the Minister of Labour says, a deputation came to the government of England, a deputation of match manufacturers asking them to pass this legislation, and I will not go beyond the words of the minister himself who said there were nine manufacturers representing all the match manufacturers of England ; that one of them Bryant & May had a formula which they had arranged with their colleagues to use. And so these gentlemen having the formula among the nine, being threatened by the importations from Sweden as referred to by the minister, calmly and coolly sacrificed themselves on the altar of patriotism by having an Act passed which gave them a monopoly for all time to come, shut out all competition on the part of others, and left these nine patriots in exclusive control of the English market. The minister has been so anxious that we should follow the English example that I think he had better study the circumstances under which England did consent, and see how the people of England were buncoed by the government when they passed such a Bill, and see that Canada delays, as England did, until all the match manufacturers come to the government and agree in asking this; then, perhaps, the government ought to consider their application. The minister pointed out that although on the face of this legislation it so invites criticism that the press throughout the land have been charging him with having been the recipient of a gold brick at the hands of the Diamond Match Company, the minister triumphantly pointed out this cannot be the case, because in the United States where the Diamond Match Trust stands side by side with the Standard Oil Company—a company that is morally certain to receive at least justice when it seeks legislation—the Diamond Match Company having applied for legislation in the United States was as the minister knows unable to obtain it from the federal power because as they admitted they had no jurisdiction, but indirectly they endeavoured to give the benefits the Diamond Match Company wished by imposing taxes. And, even then despite all the influence of the Diamond Match Company it was apparently unable to pass its Bill until it assigned to trustees the secret formula which places it in the position of making every other match manufacturer on the continent pay toll to it until a better formula is discovered. The minister places great stress on the fact that the formula has been assigned to three gentlemen whose names are above the possibility of reproach, giving them the power to do what is proper between the parties. Would the minister, or would I, would any man if the owner of a valuable formula of that kind assign it with authority to others to do what was proper and would he think it proper to hand that over without any consideration to any company who wished to use it. Surely the first element of proper conduct would be to do what is right by those who owned the formula. The first thing these trustees do is to exact a royalty ; and in the case of matches which sell by the million, it is a matter of no importance what the royalty is on each box, but the business is so immense that if the Diamond Match Company can secure that royalty, they will have secured something well worth having, and if they can obtain a monopoly in Canada that is surely something worthy of consideration, and one of those things which will add to the increased cost of living. Surely the Minister of Labour will not deny that by compelling every manufacturer in Canada to use a formula owned by an American trust company and pay that trust a royalty and by compelling him also to show the extent of the market he can supply, he will be putting the manufacturer here completely at the mercy of this powerful trust of the United States ; and in so doing the hon. minister will surely not say that he is thereby reducing the cost of living.

I have spoken of the report by the government commission in Great Britain which was appointed to inquire into the effects and ravages of necrosis in that country, and that report shows that practically by British legislation necrosis has become a thing of the past in the mother land. I think I have shown why the manufacturers of England might well ask for legislation which would give the nine manufacturers in that country a monopoly for all time to come.

I find by referring to the dictionary of chemistry by Thorpe—an authority which will not be questioned—that this whole matter was threshed out in England from 1840 to 1865, and that although necrosis was a very common and hideous disease there prior to that time, by recent regulations, the English authorities have practically stamped it out. Away back as far as 1879 in Germany, out of 5,724 workmen coming in contact with phosphorus, only nine cases of necrosis were observed and only three of deaths from this illness. But still, insignificant even as that number was, Germany made regulations in 1884 which practically stamped out the disease in that country.

The hon. minister has said that when his attention was called to this appalling state of affairs, when he learned of the ravages of necrosis, he took steps to ascertain by communication with the provincial authorities whether any legislation had been passed by any province bearing on this subject. Does not this strike you, Sir, as a singular commentary on the way our ministers carry on the public business? Instead of employing clerks to write letters to provincial secretaries, would it not have been much simpler to have turned up the revised statutes of each province and find out if they contained any legislation on this subject? All the minister would have to do would be to look at the statutes and thus save himself the trouble of dictating bombastic letters to the various provincial secretaries.

In the statutes of Ontario, there is a Factory Act, and he would probably find such an Act in the statutes of every province in the Dominion. In the Ontario Factory Act, chapter 256, he will find sanitary conditions imposed on all factories. He will find that ventilation, which in England was considered the principal remedy, is insisted on in the Ontario Act besides other regulations for the prevention of disease which have been found very effective. In the schedule at the end of that Act, page 3119 of the statutes, are included all those factories to which it applies, and I find match factories specifically named.

Mr. KING. Can the hon. gentleman give a reference to legislation by any of the provinces on this subject of phosphorus necrosis?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Does my hon. friend suppose for a moment that if the province of Ontario were to pass an Act to suppress necrosis, they could suppress it by giving the courts jurisdiction to grant an injunction against the presence of necrosis or to order its deportation? Does it not strike him that a practical government would pass an Act requiring the factories to do what would put an end to necrosis and would not require to mention the word at all. It is perfectly true that there is not a word in the statutes against necrosis, and I am not aware that there is a word in it against any disease known to the medical faculty, but the Act provides regulations which will prevent disease, and if this government, which takes such an interest in this matter, would draw the attention of the various provincial authorities to the information it has at hand, and point out any proper precautions that could be taken to prevent this disease, no doubt the provincial authorities would be ready to adopt any regulation which would have this effect. It would be very unfair to them to suppose for a moment that they would refuse to do so. The fact that this Ontario Act has been before the courts frequently and has always been declared intra vires, the fact that it provides sanitary regulations to protect the public health against all disease—these surely show that every province has the right to legislate with regard to sanitary conditions in its factories, and the fact that this Act to which I have referred is on the Ontario statutes is another argument against this House having the right to pass what is practically a factory Act.

The question of public health has been dealt with by our provinces again and again, and the right of the provinces to deal with them has been held in the case of Rinfret vs. Pope in the province of Quebec. That question has been held to be a matter for provincial jurisdiction, and consequently this House has no jurisdiction to deal with it.

A word or two as to the question of jurisdiction under the head of trade and commerce. If the hon. minister will look at the British North America Act, he will find that, on the one hand, the Dominion parliament has the power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the class of subjects assigned to the provincial legislatures. So the minister is quite mistaken and the Deputy Minister of Justice is quite mistaken if he thinks there is any clause in the British North America Act that gives this House power to legislate, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada. There is a long list of subjects assigned to this parliament and a long list assigned to the legislatures. Besides this, we have power to pass laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters that do not come within the class of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of each province. Each province is allowed to legislate in regard to local works and undertakings, to property and civil rights and generally in relation to all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province. Did the minister ever stop to consider what the meaning of these words, 'the regulation of trade and commerce' would be? They have received a judicial interpretation and I venture to say that any one's common sense would teach him just what the Lord Chancellor of England concluded, that is that if this parliament is given power to regulate the trade and commerce of Canada, the power to regulate implied a continued opportunity to regulate; there is all the difference in the world betwen regulation and prohibition. In case there is any doubt, we have the opinion of the Privy Council in the case of the city of Toronto and Virgo in VII. Appeal Cases in these terms:—

> Their lordships think there is marked distinction to be drawn between the prohibition or prevention of a trade and the regulation or governance of it, and indeed a power to regulate and govern seems to imply the continued existence of that which is to be regulated or governed.

In the case of the Attorney General of Ontario vs. the Attorney General of the Dominion, the courts held that:

> A power to regulate, naturally, if not necessarily, assumes, unless it is enlarged by the context, the conservation of the thing which is to be made the subject of regulation.

So the Minister of Labour, when he speaks of regulating trade, is in reality proposing to prohibit trade. This statute prohibits the manufacture of a certain kind of matches in Canada. I contend that when we speak of trade, the manufacturer is not a trader; the decisions are clear on that point, in the same way that the man who issues an insurance policy, an indemnity against fire, is not a trader, and the courts have so held. The manufacturer may become a trader when he comes to sell what is manufactured, but this Act does not deal with the selling, but with the manufacture, and so even on that narrow ground, you really do not touch trade and commerce and cannot properly regulate the manufacture.

In Todd there is a very full discussion based on some cases in the House of Lords, particularly the Citizens Insurance case, 7 House of Lords. I quote from Todd's Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies, second edition. The remarks he makes are based on the Citizens Insurance Company, 7 Law Reports Appeal, page 118. I am reading only Todd's comment which is interspersed with extracts from the case:—

In the interpretation of the words 'trade and commerce', in section 91 of the British North America Act, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in rendering judgment in Citizens' Insurance Company's case, construed the words 'regulation of trade and commerce' by the various aids to their interpretation above suggested, they would include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and it may be that they would include general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion. Their lordships abstain on the present occasion from any attempt to define the limits, the authority of the Dominion parliament in this direction. It is enough for the decision of the present case to say that, in their view its authority to legislate for the regulation of trade and commerce does not comprehend the power to regulate by legislation the contracts of a particular business or trade, such as the business of fire insurance in a single province, and, therefore, that its legislative authority does not in the present case conflict or compete with the power over property and civil rights assigned to the legislature of Ontario by No. 13 of section 92.

Although that was an insurance case, the principle laid down seems the same, that the Dominion has no power to regulate the contracts of a particular business or trade, and so here I say the Dominion has no power to say to a particular trade: You must cease to manufacture. I have here the particular case to which Todd was referring:—

In the head note to this same case the Citizens' Insurance Company of Canada, the reporter gives this summary:

In No. 2 of section 91, the words 'regulation of trade and commerce' include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and, it may be, general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion.

I think these few extracts from the various judgments show clearly that the meaning was to regulate trade and commerce, not to regulate this and that other little matter but to regulate trade in the interests of the whole country.

The minister, and I think the deputy Minister of Justice, in his opinion, spoke of the right to pass the legislation on the ground that it is for the peace, order and good government of Canada. In one of these cases the same argument was used by counsel as by the minister that the Dominion had a perfect right to pass certain legislation because it was for the peace, order and good government of Canada, and their Lordships taking that up, showed its absurdity on this ground that there was really no possible class of cases submitted to the local legislature that you could not change from their jurisdiction and hand them over to the jurisdiction of the Dominion if that wide meaning was given that the Dominion could legislate for anything touching the peace, order and good government of Canada; and then their Lordships pointed out that there were no such words in the British North America Act, but that we could legislate for the peace, order and good government of Canada only in relation to all matters not coming within the class of subjects assigned by this statute to the local legislature. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) seems to have a slightly different view from the Minister of Labour, because I notice that last year when the question of tuberculosis was before the House and the Minister of Agriculture was urged to take steps to suppress tuberculosis in our schools, he replied, at 'Hansard, 1909,' page 1438:

There is another point I would suggest, although it is a matter coming under the domain of the provincial authorities, and that is the problem of dealing with tuberculosis in public schools.

So the Minister of Agriculture last year admitted the contention I make to-night that so far as health is concerned, he had no right to deal with tuberculosis in public schools, because education was left to the provinces. Precisely the same argument will apply in this case, that you have no right to deal with necrosis in a factory because that is a matter coming under the Factories Act, which is under the provincial authorities. As showing how far the local authorities have power in one of the liquor cases their Lordships of the Privy Council have said, dealing with regard to the manufacture of liquor, and I merely give this, not as legal proof that the province has power to pass prohibition, but as showing the distance to which their Lordships of the Privy Council went on the very point I urge before this House to-night, that is the power of the provinces to deal with manufacture where it is a provincial and in no sense a Dominion matter. They say:

> In the absence of conflicting legislation by the parliament of Canada, their lordships are of opinion that the provincial legislatures would have jurisdiction to that effect (to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors) if it were shown that the manufacture was carried on under such circumstances and conditions as to make its prohibition a merely local matter in the province.

They point out that the parliament of Canada had certain rights to pass laws touching liquor from the standpoint of revenue and of trade and commerce, but where, as was pointed out, it was merely a question of manufacturing, then the province itself would have power to prohibit if it was only a local matter.

Take the case of a match factory. I quite understand that if the danger from matches lay in their use by the public at large, possibly an argument might be raised by the Minister of Labour that it was a matter with which this House could deal, because it was a matter of Dominion concern, but there is no pretense that the danger is to the public; the danger is to the manufacturers themselves, to the people working in the factory in Deseronto, or Hull, or Halifax, or wherever it may be. The people working in that local factory are the people this House is asked to protect. I submit with all deference, and ask the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to consider the question: Is it reasonably clear that this House has jurisdiction to interfere in the management of this local factory, whose whole business of manufacture is carried on within the small space of half an acre or so of ground? There is no question of trade or commerce involved; they have the right to manufacture under provincial law.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the House longer, but I hope I have convinced the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) that if he is to follow the example he asks us to follow, that of the mother land, he will have to get a requisition from the manufacturers themselves. Then it will be his duty to see whether there is any ulterior motive, or what it was that may have influenced the manufacturers of that country. He will have to consider whether this is a gold brick that is handed out—as I think it clearly is—by the Diamond Match Company. Then he will have to consider whether this legislation is in the interests of the country as a whole. And, while he is making such ample inquiries, he might seek to learn who this Diamond Match Company are. I know nothing about the matter personally, but my information is that this is, beyond comparison, the largest match company in the United States. I do not think the minister will contradict that statement. I speak subject to correction, and have had no means of learning the facts, because our trade and navigation returns are made up in such a way that it is impossible to learn what the importation of matches really is, but I am informed, and would like to know whether it is a fact, that not a dollar's worth of matches manufactured by the Diamond Match Company has come into Canada, except in the short time that elapsed between the burning down of the Eddy Company's factory and the rebuilding thereof. If these are facts they are very significant. Supposing that this House has jurisdiction, I hope the minister will consider what he is submitting our manufacturers of matches to. He is asking the small manufacturers to put themselves within the grasp of a mighty trust by compelling them to manufacture under a formula which this trust allows them to use, and to use, of course, on the trust's own terms. If they manufacture under a fixed royalty, it must be made known to the trust where the business is being done, and so the manufacturer must make known to a competitor who is strong enough to crush him in a week the very facts that it is necessary for the success of his business that he should withhold. And so the victim is subject to conditions for the calculation of the royalty that are more onerous and dangerous than the payment of the royalty itself. I trust the Minister of Labour will satisfy himself whether he has the right to pass this legislation, and also whether it will be beneficial to this country, and, after that, whether the evils of which he speaks cannot be prevented by the provincial authorities. I trust he will do this before he asks this House to pass this legislation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I followed very closely the argument of my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). For this evening, at all events, it would be sufficient, I am sure, if, without going into the merits of the question of the advisability of passing this legislation, which may be more fully considered when we come to the second reading of the Bill. I confine myself to considering whether we have, or have not, the right to pass this proposed legislation. The hon. gentleman has argued that it is beyond our powers, and that such legislation, if it can be passed at all, can only be passed by the provinces. Perhaps it will be sufficient for the present purposes for me to state, as stated already by my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), that, before introducing this Bill, he consulted the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice assured him that he had authority to pass this legislation. The Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), is a good lawyer; my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), is a good lawyer. This is not the first time when good lawyers have differed in opinion. Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to say that when we find the Minister of Justice on one side of a question and an eminent member of the House and of the legal profession on the other side, it will be safer for us to follow the view of the Minister of Justice. If the Minister of Justice is astray in his opinion, and, following that opinion, we pass legislation which is beyond our authority, the worst that can happen will be that the manufacturers of matches who, my hon. friend says, would be oppressed by that enactment, will not obey it, but will go on manufacturing, as they are doing to-day,—that is, the Bill will be a dead letter. But what are we to do when eminent members of the legal profession differ? I think we can safely trust to the legal advisor of the government and the House, until his opinion is set aside by the courts of law. In the opinion of the Minister of Justice, if it has been properly stated, we have the power to pass this law. But my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup), as a member of the legal profession, will agree with me that no legal opinion should be criticised unless we have it in writing before us. If the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice has been correctly stated, that we have jurisdiction in this matter, because this is a proposed law for the good of the country, I can only say that, that does not commend itself to my judgment. But for other reasons, I think the hon. Minister of Justice is quite correct, and in this respect I differ with my hon. friend. This is a Bill to prohibit the manufacture and importation of matches made with white phosphorus. We have discussed simply the prohibition as to manufacture. But, if it be the opinion of the people of this country that the use of matches manufactured with white phosphorus is injurious to health, the power to prevent the importation of such matches must reside somewhere.

It either resides in the Dominion parliament or in the local legislature. Now, my hon. friend will not differ with me when I assert that the power to prohibit the importation of matches resides with this parliament, and does not reside with the local legislatures. So far, therefore, we have jurisdiction in this parliament to prevent the importation or manufacture. That is enough to give us jurisdiction here. Later on in the Bill we shall have to consider whether we can prevent the manufacture as well as the importation. It seems to me that if we have power in this parliament to prohibit the importation of matches, therefore we have in this parliament power to say: You shall not manufacture matches in this country. It seems to me that the authority to prohibit importation carries with it the authority to prohibit the manufacture. At all events, I would take that ground. But I will go a step further. My hon. friend has stated that whilst we have jurisdiction in this matter on all matters of trade, the manufacturer is not a trader. Well, my hon. friend will agree that this is a very technical view to take of the matter. It is true, he says, that the manufacturer becomes a trader when he sells. But let me observe that the manufacture is made to be sold, the manufacturer has no other object than to sell his goods; therefore, if that is the object of his business, he is a trader in the broad sense of the term. The manufacturer being certainly a trader, therefore we have power in this Bill to regulate this operation of making matches. My hon. friend said, also, that we could not consider the question in this way, because, whilst we have power to regulate trade and commerce, this is a law to regulate a manufacture. It is simply a law to prohibit the manufacture of matches in a certain way. This also seems to me highly technical. It is very true that the object of the law is to prevent a certain kind of manufacture, but it is also true that it is a regulation which would compel the manufacturer to use certain ingredients instead of others, and would prohibit him from manufacturing them with phosphorus and force him to manufacture with something else. Therefore, it seems to me that from this point of view, also, the matter is one which comes properly within our purview. The object of the present Bill is to prevent the sale of certain matches, which is enough to give us jurisdiction, and I think that alone would warrant us in passing this resolution. The Bill will come again before us for a second reading, and for my part I shall read again the argument of my hon. friend to see whether my more deliberate judgment confirms me in this view. One other observation upon the merits of this Bill. My hon. friend said that this was a measure which would result in profit to a certain manufacturing company which holds a patent in the United States. But I think that point has been answered already by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who has said that this company, which has a patent under the laws of Ontario, has not used its patent, and therefore it has lost its power, and we have the right to use the patent. So, on the whole.

I think we can proceed with this legislation.

Mr. DOHERTY. Let me say, first, that I think the Minister of Labour fell into error when he cited the leader of the opposition as an authority for the proposition that this was a Bill for the regulation of trade and commerce. It is true that in so far as the Bill does prohibit the importation of these matches, it is dealing with the regulation of trade and commerce, and is to that extent within our jurisdiction. But I would like to point out that the leader of the opposition did not express any opinion upon the question of our jurisdiction to deal with this matter the other day, and that although rule 50 of the House required Bills relating to trade to be introduced by a resolution, that did not imply that it was a Bill for the regulation of trade and commerce, because the rule prescribes that any Bill that relates to trade and commerce shall be introduced through a resolution. Now, you may have many Bills that relate to trade and commerce, the purpose whereof will not be the regulation of trade and commerce. For my part, I would be disposed to think, differing in that respect from the Prime Minister, that in so far as this legislation going further than dealing with the question of prohibition of importation, it can be justified as being within the jurisdiction of this parliament, it would be in virtue of the general clauses which give the jurisdiction to legislate in regard to the peace, order and good government of Canada, and more especially the clause at the end, which gives jurisdiction in all matters not specially reserved to the provinces. But it would seem to me clear that this legislation cannot be justified as being a regulation of trade and commerce. Now, I am not without knowing that when we were first called upon to apply the British North America Act there was a pretty general impression that the regulation of trade and commerce meant the regulation of the carrying on of all the operations of buying and selling, so much so that it was urged in our province that the legislature could not deal with laws limiting the location in which a butcher's stall could be established, because it was said that that was a regulation of trade and commerce. Now, as my hon. friend from Hasting (Mr. Northrup) has pointed out, I think their lordships of the Privy Council have made it clear that what is meant by a regulation of trade and commerce is a regulation of trade and commerce in general, not the making of laws to govern one particular trade. In the case of the insurance company, I think they made it clear that though the carrying on for profit of the business of insurance was a trade, or commercial business, it was within the power of the provinces to legislate as to what sort of contract should be made in the prosecution of that business. The objection made was precisely this: You are regulating trade and commerce. Their lordships said: No, such legislation is not regulating trade and commerce in general; it is not regulating interprovincial trade, nor trade with other countries, nor making any regulation with regard to trade in general applicable throughout the Dominion. I think here, if we are dealing with trade at all, we are clearly dealing with what is going to be prohibited in one particular manufacture, and if a manufacture is to be considered a trade, then we are making a law for one trade. Now, how it can be said that in doing that we are regulating trade and commerce in the general way in which the Privy Council says the provision that we have power to regulate trade and commerce is to be interpreted, I fail to see. Now, the Prime Minister has justified this Bill by saying that it was a Bill to prohibit the selling of those matches, and that it has been conceded by the hon. member for Hastings that the operation of buying and selling was an operation of trade, whether a manufacture or not.

I have looked at the Bill and the resolution, and I have been rather struck with the fact that the clause of the English Bill does prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale, while neither the resolution nor the Bill, as I read them and I think I have read them correctly, prohibits the sale of these articles. Even if this Bill should be passed, although there would be a prohibition in it against the importation and manufacture there would be no prohibition against the sale of matches of this kind. As far as the argument in favour of our jurisdiction rests upon prohibition of the sale it necessarily falls because we are not trying to prohibit the sale by the Bill. I would not perhaps like to be quite as positive as my hon. friend from East Hastings, but it would seem to me that if we have jurisdiction it must be because of the fact that you do not find in the subjects exclusively allotted to the provinces the subject matter of the protection of health. In that connection a very serious question arises whether you do not find this within the subjects exclusively allotted to the provinces by reason of the fact that after the particular things that are found in section 92 enumerating the powers of the provinces you have the last one which is general, 'All matters of a merely local or private nature in the province,' and as has been pointed out by the hon. member for East Hastings what this Bill, outside of the question of importation, deals with is purely and simply a question in the interest of health and in the interest of the health of a limited class of people employed in a factory in a particular locality or in a number of factories in different localities. It seems to me, prima facie, that there is a very serious question whether in undertaking to do this we are not undertaking to determine what, from the point of view of the protection of the health of a certain number of individuals belonging to a certain class of the community, shall be permitted in a factory in a particular locality. I do not want to go into the merits of the matter, but it would seem to me that the decision of this question, whether this is to be prohibited or not, depends upon a careful investigation of the manner in which particular manufactories are carried on, so much so, that I would conclude from what I have listened to from the Minister of Labour—and listened to with a great deal of admiration—that it might be a perfectly true thing that while in one factory the using of white phosphorus under certain conditions would be extremely dangerous, in another factory by taking proper precautions it might be perfectly safe. If that is a correct view of it we are undertaking to determine whether or not a thing should be permitted when whether it would be proper to permit it depends to a large extent on the particular conditions of the different factories. I am not speaking of this for the purpose of discussing the merits at all, but I mention it because it seems to me to give considerable force to the proposition that the regulating of things of this kind is dealing with things of a purely local nature within the province. I do not flatter myself that any greater weight would be attached to my own opinion than to the opinion of my hon. friend from East Hastings, and of course I do not expect to outweigh in the scale the opinion of my right hon. friend the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or that of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), but I did gather, and I do not say it at all by way of depreciating the opinion, but merely for the sake of correctness, that the opinion which the hon. Minister of Labour had received was that of the Deputy Minister of Justice. I do not want to depreciate that opinion in any way because that gentleman is one for whom I have the very highest respect and I would treat any opinion given by him with a great deal of deference. But while I am quite sure that this House would feel justified, as the leader of the House has pointed out this evening, in following the advice of the Minister of Justice, I think it is a perfectly proper thing, when there does exist what I think after what has been said by both sides may fairly be conceded to be a grave doubt as to our jurisdiction in this matter, that the Minister of Justice, should give consideration to what has been submitted. None of us pretends to infallibility on these matters. It is a general saying that doctors differ, some people say that lawyers could not live at all if they did not differ, and I suppose it is expected that they shall differ. With the merits of the question I understand that we will have occasion to deal when the Bill comes up. Upon those merits I have only to say that in so far as the purpose which is sought to be attained by this legislation is concerned the minister would have the hearty sympathy of every member of this House. I am sure that we are all desirous of assisting the Department of Labour in doing everything not only that may be absolutely necessary, but that may be substantially useful for the protection of the health of all classes of this community and more particularly I think it is fair to say of those classes who are more exposed and have the least within their own hands, the power to control the conditions under which they live. Upon that I think there will be no possible difference in this House. But the matter when we come to deal with it upon its merits, resolves itself into the question: Is it necessary to go as far as to absolutely prohibit this manufacture in order to attain the results sought to be attained? If it is so, I, for my part, would not hesitate to adopt it. On the other hand, I think we ought to look into the matter carefully because it is possible that the facts would bear out the conclusion of the Royal Commission in England, cited by my hon. friend from East Hastings and also by the Minister of Labour, that by taking proper precautions, which might properly form the subject matter of factory Acts within the provinces, this material could be safely utilized, and if so I think we ought to hesitate before making an absolute prohibition.

Mr. A. B. CROSBY (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word in regard to this Bill. We have a match factory at Halifax. I listened to the very able manner in which the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) introduced his resolution, and his presentation of the matter would almost persuade anybody that the Bill was such a one as we should adopt at once. But, having heard the lawyers on this side, and the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), whom I always believed was a lawyer, on the other side, there seems to be some trouble as to the constitutionality of this Bill. Of that I have no desire to speak at all. But, I want to say a word with regard to the sickness said to have been brought about by the use of white phosphorus in the making of matches. In the city of Halifax we have a factory that, I think, has been engaged for some sixty or seventy years in the manufacture of matches and, as far as I can discover, there has never been any person who has been afflicted by the use of phosphorus. The foreman of that factory is 55 years of age, I think he has worked in the factory for 40 years, and he is quite a healthy man. In fact he is so healthy that he is actively engaged in politics and he is about to run an election, which is the best evidence you can get that there is nothing the matter with his jaws. I am afraid that if you are to take it that the want of teeth indicates that a man has worked in a match factory, you will come to the conclusion that some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have been engaged in the business. In Nova Scotia we have had a Factories Act for many years, and as the inspector resides near the match factory, I am quite confident that if there was anything in that factory detrimental to the health of the employees the inspector would have reported it. The Minister of Labour laboured hard to give us evidence in support of his theory, and he told us that of the five factories in the Dominion there had been only three fatal cases of necrosis.

Mr. KING. The three fatal cases were within the last year.

Mr. CROSBY. If the Minister of Labour was going to make an argument on that point he should have traced the matter back to former years, and given us fuller information about it. I want it to be understood that the use of white phosphorus has not affected our employees in the match factory at Halifax. I understood the Minister of Labour to say that Mr. Rowley, manager of the Eddy factory was perfectly satisfied with this Bill.

Mr. KING. I did not say he was satisfied, but that he authorized me to say that the Eddy Company did not intend to offer any opposition.

Mr. CROSBY. I also understood from the minister that Mr. Corbett of Halifax, and Mr. Flewelling of New Brunswick did not intend to oppose it, and while I am not always sure that the desire of the manufacturers should be followed, I am specially here to speak for the people who work in the factory. Now, suppose we find that the substitute for white phosphorus is such an expensive article that the manufacturer in Halifax could not continue in the business it would mean that 15 or 20 hands skilled in this kind of work would be thrown out of employment and might not be able to find a means of livelihood elsewhere. I am not so much concerned about the company who own the match factory, because like most manufacturers, they are fairly well off—at least so the farmers say, and we are sometimes inclined to believe what the farmers say when it suits us. This Bill, according to its terms will not come into force until 1912, and unless we can find that the substitute for white phosphorus is going to put Canadian match manufacturers in as good a position to hold the market as they are in at present, I think, seeing that we have been for years and years operating under the present mode of manufacture, it would not do any harm to defer the coming into force of the Bill until 1913, when we might be able to obtain further information on the subject. I am one of those who believe that everything that is used in Canada should be manufactured in Canada, and we should be careful not to take any step that would in any possible way interfere with our existing industries. Of course, I would not advocate the manufacture of anything that would be detrimental to the health of our people, but I have a strong belief that in the city of Halifax and in the province of Nova Scotia, under our Factories Act no injurious process of manufacture would be allowed. The entire argument of the Minister of Labour was based on conditions which were found to exist in other countries and not because of any evil condition existing in Canada, so that even if the Bill is found to be constitutional by the Department of Justice, we might at least postpone its operation until the year 1913.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I asked the Minister of Labour if the Diamond Match Company had complied with the Patent Act and commenced manufacturing in Canada and he answered that he was not aware that they had. I understand from him that this patent was taken out nine years ago by two Frenchmen who assigned it to the Diamond people a year or two ago. Under our patent law the patentee must commence manufacture within two years, and before the minister proceeds with the second reading of the Bill I ask him to inquire at the patent office as to when this patent was obtained, and if they have complied with the law.

Mr. KING. I am informed that the patent is held under section 44 of the Patent Act which does not insist upon the manufacture of the patented article, but only on the payment of certain prescribed fees. These fees have been paid I believe, and the patents will not expire until 1917.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). As I understand it they must commence the manufacture of the patented article within two years after the issue of the patent, and unless that law has been complied with this government ought not to pass an Act to compel the manufacturers of Canada to pay a royalty to some citizens of the United States. The government are in possession of the formula, and if they have not complied with the law the government can give that formula to the manufacturers of this country.

Mr. KING. Section 44 of the Patent Act gives the power I have reference to.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. minister, in his introduction, mentioned the fact that what is called sesquisulphide might be used instead of white phosphorus; but if my information is correct sesquisulphide itself contains white phosphorus, so that under this resolution and the Bill founded on it, this very sulphite could not be used at all and matches could not be manufactured with it or imported. How are you going to manufacture matches in this country if white phosphorus is not to be used at all? With regard to the horrible disease sometimes caused by the use of phosphorus, I remember very well seeing cases of it in London when I was a medical student, and I quite recollect the discussion and agitation that took place there with regard to it. I have not heard much about it lately, but new regulations were enforced in the old country to put a stop to the disease, and from what was said to-night regarding the report of the Royal Commission, no doubt these regulations had the effect of largely, if not entirely, stamping it out. I did not know, until this matter came up, that there were any cases of this disease in Canada. We have had for a number of years a match factory at Hampton, 20 miles from St. John, where they have been using phosphorus, and there has never been a case of this phosphorus necrosis that I know of among the employees there. Has the minister any different information?

Mr. KING. I am not aware of any.

Mr. DANIEL. I have been connected with the hospital of St. John a good many years, and if there had been any cases of phosphorus necrosis in the Hampton factory they would have been taken to that hospital, so that I feel quite satisfied there has been none ; and judging by the report of the Royal Commission it would seem that the disease can be eradicated from our factories, if it exists in any, by the enforcement of proper regulations. No doubt in by gone times, in these large factories where phosphorus was used, and there was very little ventilation, the fumes of the phosphorus occasioned this disease ; but down with us, under better circumstances, this disease is unknown. I quite agree that even if in one factory in Canada there has been found a case of this disease, the danger should be put a stop to by legislation if possible ; but at the same time I would like the minister to state if he has information whether the sesquisulphide does not itself contain white phosphorus, and therefore, would be interdicted by the passing of this resolution.

Mr. KING. I will just read a memo. I have from one of the examiners, in the Patent Branch, Mr. Charleton, who has given me much useful and helpful information in connection with the preparation of this measure. He has been experimenting in the government laboratory and has manufactured sesquisulphide himself; the past few days he has succeeded in making matches from it. In the memo. he says:

Sesquisulphide of phosphorus may be made by mixing, in the proper proportions, red phosphorus and sulphur and heating carefully to 260°C. The sesquisulphide, if properly made, contains no phosphorus, and is not poisonous if taken internally. The manufacture of the sesquisulphide on a large scale appears to be an unusually simple process in comparison with other chemicals of this class. It could probably be made as cheaply here in Canada as any place in the world. Perhaps more cheaply in the future when the country is further developed and the sulphur and iron pyrites are utilized.

White phosphorus enters into the compound but the compound is made away from the factory altogether, and apparently the fumes of the phosphorus are given off in the preparation with the result that in the case of the compound when used by the match workers the poison has disappeared altogether.

Mr. DANIEL. But it is made with white phosphorus all the same.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Mr. KING moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 96, to prohibit the Manufacture and Importation of Matches made with White Phosphorus.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, that it is expedient, in connection with Bill 22 now before this House, to provide for the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, sale and use of opium for other than scientific and medicinal purposes; to empower magistrates to grant warrants, to search for opium in any place in which it is suspected that opium may be found, and to authorize the destruction thereof; to provide penalties for violations of the Act; and to empower the Governor in Council to make such regulations as are necessary.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Mr. KING moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 97, to prohibit the Importation, Manufacture, Sale and Use of Opium for other than Scientific or Medicinal purposes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROHIBITION OF COCAINE AND MORPHINE.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for the prohibition of the sale and use of cocaine and morphine for other than medicinal or scientific purposes.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. DOHERTY. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply, continuing the estimates of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley).

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

LOAD LINES ON SHIPS.

Mr. LEWIS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 98) respecting load lines on ships. He said: Mr. Speaker, in 1905 I introduced a Bill in reference to load lines on ships. Last session the Bill was referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries. The committee objected to the Bill on one ground apparently, that it did not conform to the English Act. I have had this Bill drawn to conform exactly with the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1876, called the principal Act. The sections of this Bill are based on sections 25, 26, 27 and 28 of the English Act, and the wording of that Act is followed as closely as is consistent with the conditions. I can perhaps best explain the Bill by reading an editorial from the 'Globe' of Toronto, which quotes from a paper at Vancouver. The 'Globe' says:

The 'Globe,' Toronto, Friday, January 6, 1911.

A LOAD LINE NEEDED.

The wreck of the steamer 'St. Denis' on the shore of Vancouver Island has called forth many protests against the tendency toward overloading, and many demands for stringent laws such as are associated in Britain with the name of the late Mr. Plimsoll. The Plimsoll line on a British vessel determines her summer load, her winter load, and her winter load in the North Atlantic, and no captain is allowed to clear if the line which designates his vessel's carrying capacity is submerged. On the Great Lakes there are frequent demands for load-line regulations, and it is notorious that many vessel owners take serious risks by overloading every season. Occasionally there is a disaster, and the matter after a brief discussion is forgotten. But there is a growing reaction against the indifference that risks and sometimes sacrifices lives for the gathering of profits.

According to the Victoria 'Times,' the captain of the 'St. Denis,' a young and ambitious officer, was eager to take a record cargo from the Vancouver mines to Central America. In spite of protests from experienced officers and seamen more cargo was crammed into the vessel's hold than she sould carry with safety through the storms of the Pacific. In the shelter of the straits of Georgia or Puget Sound such a load could have been taken with comparative safety. But in the storms of the open sea the vessel was helpless. Just how she foundered will never be known. Her twenty-one men are lost, and only the wreckage on shore gives any indication of where the disaster occurred.

It is safe to conclude that with a proper load-line regulation strictly enforced the vessel would have been prepared for all emergencies, and she and her crew would now be safe. It is only when disaster occurs that the evil of overloading can effectively be attacked. Scores of instances occur in which risks are taken and by fortunate accidents the trips are finished in safety. The profit and prestige of such achievements are temptations to repeat them. When the inevitable happens there is an outcry. This lamentable experience should not be wasted, but should be held before the public until more efficient means are devised to prevent the sailing of unseaworthy craft.

I take it for granted that these facts are correct, coming from papers of such standing as these. There are many more instances which should cause this House to put on the statute-books of this country an Act covering the loading of vessels, especially in the winter. It is now 35 years since Plimsoll passed his Shipping Act. It took him eight years to accomplish that. This Bill has now been before this House for five years. I trust that this parliament will not require eight years to pass a Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LEWIS. Might I point out to the Prime Minister that under the rules four days are allowed for public Bills and Orders, the first four Thursdays of the session. The first Thursday was taken up by the opening of the House, the second and third by the Address, and the last Thursday by a public holiday, leaving no day on which public orders would have precedence. There are many Bills important to and in the interest of the people thus held back. Could the minister set aside a day on which public Bills would have precedence?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would have to look into the matter. Of course if that were the general wish of the House, it would be my duty to comply with that wish.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that a good many of the letters in a return which was brought down at my request relating to dredging in the Napanee river, are transmitted by Mr. Warburton. I do not see how Mr. Warburton could transmit these letters to the department without writing, and I would like to have his letters produced.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will look into it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to ask when I may expect a return ordered by this House on December 15, 1909, with reference to a government weir at the port of Montreal?

RECIPROCITY NEGOTIATIONS AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. PERLEY. There is a report in the press that a draft of the proposed trade reciprocity treaty that is being negotiated at Washington between representatives of the Canadian and United States governments, has been forwarded to Ottawa for consideration. Will the Prime Minister say if that report is correct?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That report is premature.

SUPPLY—CLOTHING OF DISCHARGED CONVICTS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDWARDS. Before this motion is put I desire again to call the attention of the government to a matter referred to by the Minister of Justice yesterday, when I did not happen to be present. The Kingston 'Standard' stated some day last week that more than one prisoner had been released from the Kingston penitentiary without sufficient clothing for this season of the year. With regard to the particular case referred to as having been deported to the United States, I happened to be on the same train with the officer who was taking that ex-convict to Ogdensburg for deportation; and he assured me that the ex-convict was not provided with any overcoat. I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to a statement which he made, referring to this matter yesterday. He said, in laying the facts before the House in regard to this particular case, that he thought the substance of it ought to be made public in justice to the warden. Now one would naturally infer from that language that any prisoner leaving the penitentiary without an overcoat, or leaving in the condition described the other day, was an isolated case, that in fact the warden would have instructions to provide the prisoners with clothing sufficient for this time of the year; and I take it for granted that in order to have sufficient clothing for this time of the year every man going out now should have an overcoat. I notice that all the members of parliament coming into this House think it necessary to have an overcoat, consequently it seems to be considered a necessary part of clothing at this time. But the particular case I referred to of the prisoner being deported was not an isolated one. A few days later an ex-convict whose home was in the province of Ontario left that institution without any overcoat, and with the thermometer on that day registering ten or twelve degrees below zero. Now I desire to place on the 'Hansard' a letter I received this morning from a gentleman who is in a position to speak with regard to this matter. The letter is dated Montreal, January 19, and is addressed to myself:

> I desire to thank you personally for drawing attention in parliament to the need of more clothing for discharged prisoners from the Dominion penitentiaries in mid-winter. I have been working with released prisoners from the various jails and penitentiaries for sixteen years, and it has been the rule to discharge men in mid-winter without an overcoat during the whole of that time, from the Dominion penitentiaries. The Prisoners' Aid Association of Montreal have written on various occasions to the Minister of Justice, mostly I think when the Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick was minister, but were generally put off with some excuse from a minor official. Perhaps some time, if needed, I could give you more particulars, but I can state positively that I myself, on different occasions, have purchased twenty or thirty overcoats for men discharged from St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in winter.
> Yours sincerely,
> JAMES ELLIOTT,
> Sec'y, Montreal Prisoners' Aid Assn.

Now I say this letter, in addition to the facts which have come to the notice of people living in the city of Kingston, very near the penitentiary, should be sufficient to cause this government to take action, and to prevent this sort of thing from occurring in the future. I am informed that the guards at the Kingston penitentiary are during this bitter weather pacing up and down on their beats—and they are working more than eight hours a day—with overcoats which cost this government the magnificent sum of $2.50 apiece. It is also stated in regard to the supplies, and food for prisoners who happen to be on the sick list, that they are cut down in that penitentiary, a cheeseparing policy is pursued to save a few cents, for what purpose I do not know. We all know that the idea of saving money in any direction is entirely foreign to this government, ever since they came into office in 1896. But when a prisoner is liberated from a government institution, the government of this country who found it necessary to place him there, ought to take sufficient interest in him to provide him at least with an overcoat against the severe weather which we have in this country during the winter. It has been stated that man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn, and I think that truth is exemplified in the government's treatment of these ex-convicts. A man who finds himself set at liberty without any overcoat, with the thermometer registering from ten to fifteen degrees below zero, cannot have a very kindly feeling in his heart towards his fellow men; he must rebel at that sort of thing. To be sent away without a few dollars in his pocket and insufficiently clad, it seems to me, would be enough to arouse in that man a feeling of resentment and hatred towards government authority and would go far towards preventing him from living in the right way. I do not know why the government should adopt the policy of not giving overcoats out to men who are liberated at this season of the year. I think that if the warden of Kingston, St. Vincent de Paul or any other penitentiary in Canada were simply given authority by this government to provide an overcoat for a man who was liberated in winter that is all the warrant he would require to see that men went out properly clothed. There is no fault attached to the warden of the penitentiary in this matter. The fault is with an authority higher than the wardens because it rests on the head of the department who permits regulations of this kind to exist.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, in what I said on this subject yesterday and the day before I was principally concerned to satisfy the House by repeating publicly the statement which had been made to me by the warden of the penitentiary that so far as he and the officials of the institution were concerned they had not been guilty of any conduct which properly could be characterized as inhuman, and had not permitted any departure from the rules which are established in reference to the matters concerned. The question of what these rules ought to be is, of course, a larger matter and one in respect to which the officials of the penitentiary are perhaps not so immediately concerned as we ourselves in this House, because these things are matters of regulation by law, and the law, as laid down in the Penitentiaries Act, is, I need not say, binding on the wardens and the officials of the penitentiary equally as it is binding on the minister in charge of the department. Our Penitentiaries Act evidently was passed with consideration of the circumstance that the winter season in this country is one when low temperature can be expected and for that reason, instead of giving an overcoat at public expense to each prisoner discharged, the statute provides that any prisoner whose sentence, either by effluxion of time or otherwise, expires during the months of December, January or February in any year, may at his option remain in the penitentiary at public expense where he will, at any rate, be sheltered from the severities of the Canadian winter climate, if he chooses to do so. It is only at a prisoner's own desire that he is discharged from the penitentiary at any time during any of these three months. If he prefers to remain where he is until the bitterness of the winter cold has to that extent abated, he has the right, or privilege, whichever you please to call it, to do so and in the particular instance which has led to this discussion, as I pointed out yesterday, the option was given to the man to remain for a few days, if he chose, if not until the first of March; at any rate, to remain long enough to communicate with friends or relatives if there was any source from which he could hope to receive assistance.

With regard to clothing, of course, a prisoner has the clothing which he is wearing when he comes to the penitentiary gates kept for him until his sentence expires. That clothing is returned to him whether it is expensive or whether it is cheap. Whatever it is, subject to such deterioration as time may have caused in it while the sentence has been current, that clothing is returned to the man. But, our law is not quite so merciless as to send a prisoner out of the penitentiary clothed only as he was when he came to its doors. Each prisoner, upon his discharge, is given the regulation suit of clothing, both underwear and outerwear, and not only a complete suit of serviceable new clothing, but also a sum of money, not a large sum, it is true, but something which is, at any rate, sufficient to keep him from absolute want for the few days that, in this country, ought ordinarily to be the limit which would intervene before he would be able to earn at least his own maintenance and support.

Now, whether or not our law in that respect ought to be changed is for the consideration of this House. Until now I had certainly not heard any complaint about it, and until now I had thought that we were not dealing inhumanly with our prisoners when we gave to them what I have described—the option of shelter and maintenance until the winter is over. If it is thought that there ought to be something different done, or something more done, that is a matter in regard to which, while I perfectly concede that the principal responsibility rests upon myself, still I do submit that a responsibility rests also to some extent upon each and every individual member of this House.

Just one word with regard to the allusion which was made to the cost of the overcoats which the guards wear. I do not know whether or not it was intended to suggest that because these coats cost $2.50 apiece they were insufficient for the purpose, or that the guards were compelled to be upon duty in bitter winter weather insufficiently clothed. No complaint has come to my knowledge from any guard in any of our institutions upon that subject, and I cannot think that there is any complaint. The price of the garment which has been stated seems, of course, the merest bagatelle, but hon. gentlemen should remember that with regard to all of our penitentiary supplies which we are able to manufacture within the walls of the institution, the cost to the public is simply that of the material used. I heard the figure $2.50 with a little mild astonishment, I must admit. I should not have supposed that the mere cloth contained in the outer garment could be produced for that figure, and I think there is probably some mistake in supposing that overcoats can be supplied for that cost, although I have no doubt, as such clothing is certainly made in the penitentiary by convict labour, that the cost to the country of each overcoat for the guards is a comparatively small sum. But, with regard to the question of prisoners clothing I have only to repeat what I have said already that the warden is governed by the Penitentiaries Act and that in so far as I am able to see he has not, in the matters referred to in this case at any rate, been in any degree to blame

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the observations of the minister yesterday to have been made in defence of the conduct of the warden in sending out in winter time this prisoner not properly provided with clothing to keep him comfortable. The Minister of Justice said that the man had been supplied, not only with an extra suit, but with $5 in cash, and, therefore, he considered him well provided for. In answer to the observations made to-day by my hon. friend in regard to several prisoners who have been discharged in winter without having been provided with an overcoat, the hon. minister said that they had the option to remain in the penitentiary for the winter, and, therefore, there was no reasonable ground for complaint. Now, it is natural to suppose that a man who has been incarcerated in the penitentiary for a considerable length of time would desire to obtain his liberty at the earliest possible moment, for two reasons: One is the unsatisfactory situation in which he is placed, and the other is the fear that his detention for a few days longer might result in his being kept there for many months longer. Therefore, he would take the option of going out, even though the conditions of the weather might be such that it would be almost inhuman to send him out. We are told that the overcoats supplied to the officials cost only $2.75. At that price it might be much more economical to give a discharged prisoner an overcoat than to keep him in the prison for a month or two longer, until he could go with lighter clothing. It seems to me that it is a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy that is being pursued. There is another point that appeals to my mind. A discharged prisoner is going out to the world with a brand on him, which makes it very difficult for him to get either employment or shelter, especially in the winter time, when labour is not plentiful and many are unemployed, unless he denied his previous history, and the small amount of money given to him on leaving the penitentiary would soon be used up. Therefore, it does seem to me that there is a little more inhumanity in sending out a discharged prisoner without sufficient clothing to keep him warm than the Minister of Justice tries to make out.

THE WASHINGTON NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Prime Minister say when he expects the Minister of Finance back again?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no positive information, but I think he will leave Washington to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to explain a little more definitely than was done yesterday the point in the tentative arrangement between Canada and the United States as to the licensing of American fishermen and Canadian fishermen using trap nets for cod and herring. In what cases are licenses not required and therefore the licensing system is not kept up?

Mr. BRODEUR. As my hon. friend is aware, by the former regulations concerning the Gulf of St. Lawrence it was provided in all cases licenses were required for cod trap and herring trap nets. By the amendments which have been agreed to it is provided that where a trap net is set 1,000 yards from the shore or from another trap net already set, a license is not required.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent does that go against the principle which was considered very essential, that we cannot control the fishermen properly unless we put them under license?

Mr. BRODEUR. I was advised by the Inspector of Fisheries, who was with us at the time, that in the case of a trap net set 1,000 yards from the shore, a license was not absolutely necessary. Besides, I am informed that a trap net is very seldom set at such a distance from the shore or from another trap net already set.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understand that certain negotiations took place between the representatives of Canada and the representatives of the United States subsequent to the time the representative of Newfoundland left. Was the latter aware of the nature of the negotiations that were about to take place, and did he leave because he did not agree with those negotiations?

Mr. BRODEUR. Before we entered into negotiations with the United States as to our regulations, we discussed the matter fully with the Prime Minister of Newfoundland, and was satisfied that we should try to settle the question so far as Canada was concerned. Those regulations had been discussed in his presence in the previous conferences, so that he was fully aware of the objections which were being made by the United States authorities.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister of Newfoundland expressed his dissent from accepting the further proposal which the Canadian representatives afterwards accepted?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, quite the reverse. He was very willing that we should settle the question on the basis on which it was settled.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was he satisfied with reference to Newfoundland?

Mr. BRODEUR. There were points affecting both Newfoundland and Canada; there were other points affecting Newfoundland only, which he was, perhaps, not ready to settle, but he was absolutely satisfied that we should settle the Canadian regulations in the manner in which they have been settled.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Did he express his dissent from the proposals which were subsequently accepted by the Canadian government as to those points which were common to both Newfoundland and Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. The two points which concerned Newfoundland and Canada were the question of purse seines and the question of Sunday fishing. There was another point which did not concern Newfoundland but which concerned us, and that was the question of licenses. In Newfoundland they have no licensing system; but as regards the other questions, which are almost similar, the Prime Minister of Newfoundland was perfectly satisfied that we should try to come to a settlement with the United States authorities.

VACANCIES IN SENATE AND SUPREME COURT, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to call attention to one or two matters affecting the province from which I come. I shall refer in the first place to the vacancy in the Senate. This vacancy occurred almost two years ago, and was caused by the death of the late Senator Ferguson, who died in August or September, 1909, and whose seat remains yet unfilled. This lack of representation of Prince Edward island in the Senate is accentuated by the absence through regrettable illness, of Senator Robertson from that province. The people of Prince Edward Island are beginning to complain about the neglect of their rights to representation in our second chamber. I have here an extract from a newspaper, which is not a Conservative organ either, which I wish to read:—

> Parliament is at work again at Ottawa with most important matters to deal with, trade, transportation, banking, extension of provincial boundaries, tariff reduction, the new navy, preparation for the coming imperial conference and maritime representation, are some of the questions of prime importance to be reviewed and dealt with. At such a juncture our province is surely entitled to be fully represented in both Houses, but while we have lost one-third of our former representation in the Commons, those responsible for the patronage persist in keeping vacant one seat in the Senate. Patronage is managed with little regard to public right and the wishes of the public. If it is the earnest desire of the government to throw this province wholly into the opposition column at next election nothing more is needed than to follow on the present course.

Another newspaper, also published in Charlottetown, has this to say of the failure of the government to fulfil its duty towards the island province:—

> Prince Edward Island is entitled to four seats in the Senate of Canada, the senators may be members of the executive; they may be heads of the great departments of the government. But notwithstanding the fact that one of her three present senators has been kept at home by illness and that the others find their strength giving way to the natural infirmities of age, one of Prince Edward Island's four seats has been arbitrarily kept vacant for two whole years, at a time that her need of effective representation in parliament was never half so great.

I do not think that I need dwell any longer on this matter. All I wish to do, was to call the attention of the government to the injustice being done the province from which I come, in allowing this seat in the Senate to remain so long vacant.

There is another vacancy which occurred some time ago in the province, and that is a vacancy on the Supreme Court Bench. This was caused by the resignation of Mr. Justice Hodgson, Master of Rolls, who resigned some time ago, and whose place is also left unfilled. Before his resignation, Mr. Justice Hodgson had been ill some time, and owing to his illness the Courts of Appeal in Equity has not been able to meet for fully two years. Yet this government has not seen fit to make the necessary appointment and allow the work of that important court to go on. The press in my province have a good deal to say on this matter, so that I am not here merely expressing my own opinion. Here is what I find in one of our newspapers:—

Why is it that no appointment is made to the vacant Prince Edward Island judgeship?

Certainly it is not because the federal government wants to save the salaries which appertain to these positions. No, it's not due to economy.

And just as certainly, it is because there is dispute as to who are to have the positions and to what 'party' advantage is to be had or lost in making the appointments.

The burden of work which falls upon the two remaining judges is excessive and will probably overwhelm them, while appeal cases in chancery involving large interests cannot be disposed of until the vacancy is filled.

Justice delayed is justice denied; and there is no shadow of excuse for a continuance of the wrong.

There was a time in ancient Rome when offices such as this judgeship were set up at auction and knocked down to the highest bidder. Have we reached that stage of degradation here?

If the delay is caused by the desire of the government to prostitute the administration of justice in order to serve personal or political ends, then* * * * *

And if the delay is not in order to serve personal or political ends then* * * * *

Another paper referring to this matter says:—

One of three seats on the Supreme Court Bench of this province vacant for a year past. Two of four chairs allotted to this province in the Senate now empty. One-third of our representation in the Commons gone. Of course, this is good enough for Prince Edward Island! Any other province would not take it.

I do not think it is good enough for the island. I appeal to fair minded men in this House, and country, if the government is not derelict in its duty in not having made these appointments promptly. It is unfair, it is a violation of the constitutional principles of government that, in order to serve party or personal ends, or because of party exigencies, the government should allow these two seats, one in the Senate, and one on the Supreme Court Bench, to remain vacant. I appeal to this government to at once attend to this matter, and I make this appeal, not as a matter of favour, but as one of right, to which the people of Prince Edward Island are entitled. These vacancies should be at once filled, and no party end should be allowed to interfere with this imperative and immediate duty. I sincerely trust that I shall not have to bring this matter up again, but that the government will see fit to put an end to a condition of things in my province which is simply disgraceful.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not catch the name of the newspaper which my hon. friend quoted, but I noticed it said that at present the government were very busy with very large questions affecting the tariff, reciprocity, the preparation of the naval service and so on. All this is true, and therefore, my hon. friend should not be surprised that when the government has to deal with such important questions, the appointment to the Senate should have been overlooked.

Mr. FRASER. But it is nearly two years since.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The delay has been long, and my hon. friend, therefore, may have some cause for his remarks. So far as the Supreme Court vacancy is concerned it is only within the last few weeks that the resignation of Judge Hodgson has deprived the province of the valuable services of so able a judge. I can assure my hon. friend that the appointment will be made at a very early date.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that for many years I have heard a more effective, a more sensible, and in a way a more cutting appeal made to the leader of the government than that made by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. In language well chosen, and simple in its form, without any shadow of exaggeration or party bias, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) placed the grievances of one of the provinces of this country before the House and the Prime Minister. If the purpose of having a Senate in this country is the one generally supposed, namely, to protect the minority provinces, all the greater care should be taken not to deprive the smaller provinces of that protection which the constitution meant to guarantee them. And, yet in the province of Prince Edward Island its senatorial force has been cut in two, and the place of one of its ablest senators taken away nearly two years ago has not been filled by the government. The services of the late Senator Ferguson were of great value to the island,, and the services of a worthy successor to him would also be of great value. The Prime Minister read his own condemnation when he said that the best reason that was given why the vacancy had not been filled was that important and weighty questions were before the government. That excuse might avail if he thinks that the government has to do altogether with legislation, and that the House of parliament have no part in it. But the greater the gravity of the questions before the government, and which must afterwards come before the House, the greater the reason why the provinces should not be shorn of their rightful representation. That was a very suggestive paragraph in the extracts read by my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) which stated that in the days of Rome seats in the Senate were put up at auction, and the question was asked how much better is it to-day? Has the Prime Minister given any good reason why the senatorship has not been filled in the province of Prince Edward Island? If for instance you have a battalion, and a certain part of it is for any reason shorn of a portion of its strength, and there are vacancies in another part of the battalion is not the weakness in one part an added reason why the vacancies in the other part should be filled. So it is with this present case. Prince Edward Island is vitally interested in the question of the fisheries and vitally interested in the question of our trade policy, and yet its representation in parliament is depleted. The Prime Minister was appealed to by my hon. friend and no answer has been given by the Prime Minister for neglect of his constitutional duty. He has a little more reason in the matter of the judgeship because the resignation of Justice Hodgson is recent, but in the matter of the senatorship, is there any other reason at all than that the warring elements in Prince Edward Island have not yet come to a conclusion as to whom the spoil should be given. Is not that the reason, and is there any other reason at all?

Mr. FRASER. I wish to ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to also appoint the senator in a very short time?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

NEW DEPARTMENTAL BUILDINGS.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). The following item appeared in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of yesterday which I think is worthy of consideration, and as to which I wish to ask for some information :

Mr. FOSTER.

The work of demolishing the buildings on Sussex street where the new departmental block is to be located is progressing. It was stated at the Department of Public Works today that the new plans are practically finished and at present the specifications are in course of preparation. It is intended to call for bids within a few weeks or in good time to allow for the commencement of operations in the spring. A substantial vote for the purpose appears in the main estimates. The plan has been altered materially through a story being taken off the building, while it has also been made narrower. The tower and top ornamentation has also been changed. The total cost will likely be about three and a half millions and big contractors from all over the Dominion have been making inquiries with a view of submitting tenders.

This indicates most important alterations in the new plans for the new departmental buildings. I do not profess to have any particular knowledge on a question of this kind, but I think we all look upon these public buildings in Ottawa as a national asset, and desire to see them worthy of this great Dominion. We are very proud of the buildings in which we sit at the present moment ; they constitute a beautiful block, and are well worthy their position as the seat of legislation for this Dominion. But, since the days in which these buildings were erected it appears to me there has been a gradual deterioration. The Langevin block is a dignified structure although it is not in harmony with the other buildings on these grounds, but from the parliamentary block down to the mint, and the archives buildings there is a very great descent indeed. The archives building with its cardboard battlements, and its altogether flimsy appearance is in no way worthy of the Dominion. Even the Victoria museum, although it has considerable dignity on account of its size, appears to lack many details which might have been supplied had competent expert architects passed upon the designs. I consider that the architects of the present day, generally speaking, are on just as high a level as those of the past, and we have a pretty good example of modern architecture in the splendid building which is being erected by the Grand Trunk Railway Company in Ottawa. I cannot help but think that with a proper effort the new departmental buildings could be made just as well suited to occupy the position they will hold in the Capital of the Dominion, as are the parliamentary buildings. Some years ago when this question was first brought up the House understood that following the precedent adopted elsewhere a competition was to be held for the purpose of obtaining the best designs possible from architects all over the world, but the prizes offered were hardly large enough to bring out the very best efforts of able architects. A year or two ago when the London county council purposed erecting new buildings they offered an enormous prize, and I understand the designs submitted provide for buildings quite worthy of the purposes for which they are intended. What has been done in connection with this competition? Have the prizes been awarded, and is the successful competitor to be entrusted with the new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Prizes were awarded by the committee entrusted with the consideration of the plans and awarding of prizes, but the department did not decide to accept any of the plans, and plans have been prepared by the architectural staff of the department under the direction of the chief architect.

Mr. LAKE. Are these designs to be submitted to a body of experts before tenders are called for, as indicated by this article?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, except to the experts of the department.

Mr. LAKE. This is a most important matter, and it is due to this House and this country that some more inspection should be made of these plans than apparently is proposed by the Minister of Public Works. However good, and however able his architects may be, I do not think it is sufficient simply to put this matter into the hands of one body of men, we ought to have these plans on exhibition, so that the public at large may see them, may criticise them and a body of experts should be appointed to look into them. The members should also have an opportunity of seeing the plans and understanding the nature of the building for which they are asked to appropriate this enormous sum of money. As I said, it seems to me, that the last buildings constructed in this city entirely from the designs of the department are not of such a character as in my humble judgment the great public departmental buildings of the Capital of Canada should be.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I have explained, some years ago, before I became minister, competitive designs were invited from Canadian architects. A number of designs were submitted and the committee of architects to whom the plans were referred, decided upon three sets of plans to which the first, second and third prizes were awarded. The plans were all exhibited in the Railway Committee room. After careful consideration, the department decided to adopt none of these plans for reasons which seemed good to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that on the question of style or of cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the question of style of the plans. In the opinion of the department, and I and other members of the government who saw the plans, entertained the same view, none of these plans were the best that could be devised and it was decided to direct the chief architect to prepare new plans. These plans were exhibited last session.

My hon. friend has referred to an article in the 'Citizen' about an alteration in the plans. An alteration has been made, and I regretted this, but it was necessary, in view of certain improvements in the nature of a driveway by the Ottawa Improvement Commission. Owing to this driveway it was thought better to preserve Mackenzie avenue as a public highway. In the previous plans, a building was provided to encroach upon or entirely take up Mackenzie avenue. Upon consideration and after hearing the views of the Ottawa Improvement Commission, the government decided that it would be better to leave Mackenzie avenue open as a public highway, as a part of the driveway. That necessitated narrowing the building. Then came the question whether we should leave the building of the same height. It will be understood that in erecting a departmental building of that size, it was desirable to have a well in the centre to afford light to the inner offices.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the width from Mackenzie avenue to Sussex street ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 200 feet. As we had to narrow the building by about 40 feet in order to leave Mackenzie avenue vacant, it became necessary, in order to give sufficient light to the offices on the well, to reduce the height of the buildings by at least one story. This will greatly improve the building so far as the lighting of the inner offices is concerned. The original plan provided for 7 stories on Sussex street and 6 on Mackenzie avenue. Under the changed plans there will be 6 stories on Sussex street and 5 on Mackenzie avenue.

A word in regard to the architecture of the buildings recently erected by the government. I do not profess to be any more skilled in architecture than by hon. friend, but I think I can safely say that opinions differ very much if my hon. friend's opinion reflects the views of any considerable number of people, because I have heard a good many people speak in terms of high praise of the Archives Building, of the Mint, and more especially of the Victoria Memorial Museum, which is spoken of as being of very beautiful design and one of which the country may well feel proud. My hon. friend speaks of the Grand Trunk hotel, which I think is a very fine building. But I am sure that if it were a public building it would receive a lot of criticism. Many people would say that there is not sufficient ornamentation about it, that it is too plain, and altogether unattractive, and yet it is a very fine building. I can point my hon. friend to many buildings around the city which are being erected by private individuals under architects of skill and experience, and yet if these were public buildings I am sure they would be strongly criticised. I will not mention any one, but hon. gentlemen who have been about the city will no doubt have remarked some of them. At all events, we have thought it best, under all the circumstances, to place the responsibility for this work in the hands of our own staff. I may say to my hon. friend that before we reach the items for public buildings chargeable to capital account, I hope to place the plans upon the table for the inspection of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might give us an idea of the style of architecture.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not seen the plans as finally adopted by the chief architect. He has promised to have them ready for me in the course of a few days, when I will bring them before the House.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). The Minister of Public Works has promised to perform all that is required of him by this House. Heretofore the plans of the various public buildings in the city of Ottawa have always been laid on the table of the House for our inspection. We are all, as the hon. member states, proud of the public buildings here in Ottawa, and we have always exercised the right to see the plans and to know what the Minister of Public Works intends to do in reference to them. Sometimes it has happened that opinions expressed in the House have had the effect of altering the plans. There is no blame to be attached to the Minister of Public Works because he did not adopt the plans he advertised for; he had prepared amended plans, which, he says, he will lay on the table of the House. He intends, before a vote is taken, submitting them to the House for our inspection.

THE FISCAL POLICY OF CANADA.

Mr. NEELY. I wish to ask a question which concerns the Postmaster General, and which refers to a report which appears in this morning's issue of the Ottawa 'Citizen,' and also of the Montreal 'Gazette.' The Postmaster General, speaking last night at the annual banquet of the Montreal branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, is credited with the following statement regarding the fiscal policy of this country:—

> Our commercial ascendency, thanks to the wise fiscal policy adopted by this country twenty-five years ago, is the admiration of the world to-day.

I rise to ask the Postmaster General if he did make that statement, and if he does consider that this country has had but one fiscal policy during the last twenty-five years.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My attention has been drawn to the report published in the Montreal 'Gazette,' and in the Ottawa 'Citizen.' I notice there is a difference between the report published in the French papers and that published in the English papers. In the Montreal French papers of this morning I am quoted as having said that it was the policy adopted fifteen years ago; and that is in fact what I said. There is only a difference in figures, the English papers have a two instead of a one. Besides I may say that there was no fiscal policy adopted twenty-five years ago, the policy of protection was adopted thirty-two years ago, and the only other policy since adopted was the Fielding tariff of 1897. If my hon. friend will read the remarks made by the leader of the opposition on the same occasion, he will find that the leader of the opposition spoke of my reference to the fiscal policy of fifteen years ago, and he said I should have gone a little further back to get at the origin of our fiscal policy—these are about his words—they have practised what we have been preaching.

Mr. FOSTER. When my hon. friend said fifteen years ago he was nearer right than he thought he was.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not wish to express any opinion, but merely to correct the statement.

WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT BILLS.

Mr. HENDERSON. A few moments ago the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) placed before you a motion to withdraw from the Order Paper two Bills, one relating to the manufacture of matches and the other relating to the importation of opium. We are not very sure whether these are the Bills he introduced last evening or whether they are the Bills that were introduced prior to his placing on the Order Paper the resolution on which they were based.

Mr. KING. The Bills I asked to have withdrawn were those placed on the Order Paper prior to giving notice of the resolutions which were passed last night.

FISH POACHERS ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. BARNARD. I would like to call the attention once more of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the depredations, regular and constant, of American poachers upon the fisheries on the coast of the province of British Columbia, and more particularly on the west coast of Vancouver island. I brought this matter to his attention on the 16th of December last, and called attention to an article which had just appeared in the Victoria Daily 'Colonist,' in which it was stated that officers and passengers of a passing vessel were surprised to see a string of light extending from Raphael Point to Estevan.

These lights belonged to a number of American fishing vessels engaged in poaching. The minister at that time betrayed such lamentable ignorance of the geography of the locus in quo that he got the fisheries of Hecate Straits confounded with those on the west coast of Vancouver island. It is in hope that the minister has since become better acquainted with the question during the recess, and has further posted himself upon the topography of the country and of the condition of the fisheries out there, that I venture to bring this matter up again to-day. I may say that the game still goes on. I have extracts from our own press and from the press in the United States, showing that what is complained of is not an occasional raid by these fishermen, but is a systematic business carried on by a number of Americans who are robbing us of our fisheries contrary to law. I propose to read a few extracts which will substantiate this position. I quote now from the 'Colonist' of the 29th December:

The steamer 'Tees' which returned from Quatsino Sound and way ports of the west coast yesterday morning with 25 passengers and a small cargo, including gillbone and fertilizer from the whaling stations, brought news that poaching by United States vessels is being continued off the west coast of Vancouver island, where the poachers use the harbours freely. One of the fishing vessels was tied up near the whaling station at Kyuquot when the steamer 'Tees' passed, and another was in Sidney Inlet.

The Seattle 'Times,' a newspaper published in the city of Seattle says:—

Part of the anxiety felt over the safety of the individual vessels of the Seattle halibut fleet this morning——

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, 'the Seattle halibut fleet'; that is the Seattle halibut fleet that poaches on the west coast of Vancouver island.

—was relieved by news brought by Captain Sam Larsen of the steamship 'Standard No. 2' that the gasoline fishing schooners, 'Lief E.,' 'Woodbury,' 'La Paloma' and 'Malola' were safe and sound when he left the grounds near Sidney Inlet Monday.

For the information of my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in case he does not know, I will tell him that Sidney Inlet is on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

The report made by the captain of the Standard Oil steamship, 'Col. E. L. Drake,' that he had seen the wreck of a halibut fishing vessel near Cape Flattery some days ago has caused anxiety about all vessels now absent from port.

I would like his attention to be given for a moment to this too:

Preparations now are being made for a number of gasoline schooners to leave within the next few days. Among those about to start are the 'Corona,' 'Roosevelt,' 'Northland,' 'Daisy' and 'Ida May.' The 'Ida May' possibly will be detained in getting away, as she has to have a new engine installed.

That is from a Seattle newspaper and is dated the 29th December. Again, on the 7th January, the following appears in the same paper, the Seattle 'Times'. I quote from the 'Colonist' of January 7, 1911:—

The Seattle 'Times' of yesterday tells of the departure of another fleet for Sidney Inlet.' The 'Times' says: The schooner 'Wiedling Bros.' arrived in port last night with 45,000 pounds of halibut, one of the largest catches recently reported. Together with the 'Northland,'——

The 'Northland' is one of the boats mentioned in the 'Times' of the 29th December.

—'Annie Larsen' and 'Sophie Jones,' the 'Wiedling Bros.' is preparing to sail again for the fishing banks. It is expected that the four vessels will get away from port sometime to-night. An attempt will be made first to fish off Cape Flattery, but if the weather will not permit the vessels will proceed to Sidney Inlet.

I submit that these reports show that there are two fleets maintained in Seattle for the purpose of exploiting these fisheries, and the complaint I make is not of an occasional raid which my friends of the fishery protection service might possibly find it difficult to deal with, but of the systematic and organized business in which there is a number of schooners employed all the year around. It is an outrage upon the people of British Columbia to think that this government is absolutely unable to cope with the situation. Some little explanation may be given of this. We have the explanation of Captain Newcombe of the 'Kestrel.' I may say, as I have before stated in this House, that the 'Kestrel' is an ordinary fishery cruiser that Captain Newcombe has time and time and time again told the department of Marine and Fisheries is absolutely unfit for the service. She is too slow, she is not properly equipped and is absolutely useless for the service in which she is engaged. Captain Newcombe explains the reason why he did not go to the west coast of Vancouver island. According to his own statement, if he had gone there, he would not have got any of these pirates, but probably he would have driven them away, because his boat is too slow to catch them. He says, according to a report in the 'Colonist' newspaper.

The 'Kestrel's' orders have been to cruise in Hecate straits, and although the depredations of the poaching vessels on the west coast of Vancouver island was known to her officers they were unable to proceed there, because in the first place their orders were explicit to remain in the north despite the fact that the poachers had changed their sphere of operations, and in the second place, the 'Kestrel' is not considered a suitable vessel for winter weather off the west coast of Vancouver island.

It cannot exactly be news to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to hear that the poachers were not to be expected in Hecate straits, but notwithstanding that fact, he ordered his cruiser to stay there and catch the poachers in a place where no poachers would go. I say that because I find in the report of the fisheries protection service of this year at page 353 that it is stated:

During the present season halibut has been extremely scarce in Hecate straits, and consequently the competition between fishermen very keen.

The fact of the matter is, that the Hecate straits fishing grounds have been seriously depleted by the depredations of the American fishermen. In the report of the department for the year 1908, I think, the minister, or his officers, states that halibut to the extent of 1,500,000 lbs, the value of which I have forgotten, was illegally taken from the banks of Hecate straits by American fishermen. That thing has been going on for a long time with the result that to-day the size of the halibut in Hecate straits has decreased to such an extent that it is no longer a desirable fishing ground, and fishermen have transferred their operations to the new banks which have been discovered on the west coast of Vancouver island. This matter is not new. We have, this year, Mr. John J. Williams, Inspector of Fisheries, complaining that the 'Falcon' which was going to be kept on the ground, was inadequate for the purpose. We have had this matter taken up in this House at various times and we had a most admirable speech made by Mr. Sloan, then member for Comox-Atlin, in which he went fully into this matter. We also had a speech from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself, on the subject, which will be found in 'Hansard' of 1906-7, page 1777. He states there:—

I have found that there is a great deal of poaching done, especially on the western coast of Vancouver and within the three mile limit. If, however, we have not the right to go outside the three mile limit in Hecate strait and Dixon entrance, I think we should adopt the policy of protecting our Canadian fisheries. We are very glad to see the American fishermen taking so much interest in our fisheries, but at the same time it is the duty of the government to protect those fisheries and keep them for our Canadian citizens. As they belong to us, they should be exploited by us; and if American fishermen go there they should at least—as has been done in the case of a New Washington company—give us as much benefit as possible. But we must do on the Pacific coast what I have said should be done with regard to the Atlantic coast. I am free to admit, however, that there seems to be more business activity shown by Canadians on the British Columbia coast. Our financial institutions have been investing large sums there, which is a condition of affairs I am glad to see. For my part, I am ready to take all the necessary steps to protect our fisheries along that coast. I have asked my colleagues to put at the disposal of my department another boat, a cruiser, which should be devoted almost exclusively to the protection of our fisheries. A sum is in the estimates for that purpose on which the House will be asked to vote; but I am sure, from the tenor of this discussion, that all the hon. members will be glad to co-operate with the government in that respect and give us the means of protecting our fisheries in the west, as we are doing in the east.

That was in 1906. In 1907, just before the general elections, the same vote was put in the estimates, but there is no cruiser yet. In 1909, shortly after the general election, I was informed by the minister that plans had been prepared for a cruiser, and I think he said that tenders had been called for. We have not got that cruiser yet, and apparently we are no nearer to having her than we were before. The hon. gentleman may say that the 'Rainbow' is adapted for this purpose, and I understand that there was some kind of an arrangement that in addition to being used as a training ship the 'Rainbow' was to be engaged in this service. However, the facts appear to be that these fishing boats lie so close inshore that the 'Rainbow,' with her heavy draught, would be useless for the service. The most suitable craft is a speedy gasoline boat of 20 or 25 knots, because these American fishing boats are all equipped with high power gasoline engines, and they can get out of the way of a steamer whose smoke they can see a great distance off. The fisheries of British Columbia to-day lead in productiveness the fisheries of the rest of the Dominion, and it is only in British Columbia that the revenues received by the Dominion from the fisheries far exceeds the expenditure. Prof. Prince, in his report, states that the British Columbia fisheries are probably the finest in the world, and it is the undoubted right of the people of that province to demand from this government that these fisheries shall be protected from depletion by the depredations which are now going on. I ask that the government shall provide, in the estimates this year, an appropriation for one or two gasoline boats to be used in this protective service.

Mr. BRODEUR. Some time ago my hon. friend (Mr. Barnard) read an article from a paper published in Victoria, and stated that there were depredations on the fisheries of British Columbia, and particularly on the west coast of Vancouver island. The hon. gentleman has been trying to poke fun at me, because, as he hints, I am not familiar with the geography of the country, but I would point out to the hon. gentleman that he read the newspaper article in such a low voice that I could not hear it, and then, after reading the article, he referred especially to Hecate straits, which lead me to think that his remarks were directed particularly to these waters.

Mr. BARNARD. I am afraid the hon. gentleman was not listening.

Mr. BRODEUR. On the contrary, I was paying every attention, but unfortunately, I could not hear the hon. gentleman's reading, and so, while part of my answers was directed to what I did hear, the other part may not have been appropriate to his question. If, when the hon. gentleman wishes to question me in future, he would give notice, I shall bring with me all the papers in the matter and be better equipped to answer him than I can possibly be speaking on the spur of the moment. However, the hon. gentleman will find, from the public documents, that we have largely increased, in recent years, the fishery protective service on the British Columbia coast. Perhaps it is not yet as efficient as it should be in view of the very active development of the fisheries there and the necessity for properly protecting them. I think, however, that the new addition made to the fleet will enable us to cope with the situation more effectively. It is true, as stated by the hon. gentleman, that some years ago we had a vote in the estimates for the purchase of a vessel, but although we did not purchase a vessel then we did charter one for the special purpose of looking after the fisheries.

Mr. BARNARD. Was that the 'Wm. Jolliffe?'

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the name of the vessel.

Mr. BARNARD. Is she not released from charter now?

Mr. BRODEUR. If it was the 'Jolliffe' I do not think she is now chartered.

Mr. BARNARD. Was there any other vessel chartered for that purpose?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not keep all these details in my memory, and I cannot now recall. I may say that after the vote appeared in the estimates the plans had to be prepared, and we afterwards thought that we could purchase the 'Rainbow' Notwithstanding what my hon. friend says, I think the 'Rainbow' is suitable for doing a large part of this work. She may not be able to enter certain waters where poachers are likely to be found, I do not think it advisable that poachers should be informed as to what our plans are, but I can assure my hon. friend that we are taking all the necessary steps to protect adequately the fisheries of the British Columbia coast.

Mr. LOGGIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether there is a close season when herring traps cannot be used, or does the season extend over the whole year? I desire also to ask him, what is the maximum length of the leader from the shore to the bowl of the trap? As I understand, the herring trap is one which takes all kinds of fish frequenting our waters, including mackerel and salmon, which are fish of great commercial value to Canada. With respect to salmon, there is a close season, when Canadians fishing in purely Canadian waters cannot take them even under license, and I would like to ask the minister, can the American or Canadian, as the case may be, fish for salmon on the Labrador coast, or the Magdalen Islands coast at a season when it is not legal to take salmon in the other coastal waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence? This is a very important matter which may very seriously affect the fishing interests in purely Canadian waters. I quite realize that the concessions given to our United States friends are equal to those given to Canadians who go to fish in those dual waters; but at the same time I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that licensing the American citizen gives him a prior right in placing his trap, and, as I understand, the leader of this trap extends practically to the shore, so that to all intents and purposes he has privileges which a Canadian has not in purely Canadian waters. For example, I understand that mackerel traps are practically prohibited along the St. Lawrence coast. There is one on the north coast of Prince Edward Island, but it is the only one, so far as I am aware, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is under a heavy license fee, and it was there for many years before the licensing plan was in vogue. So that mackerel traps are practically not allowed in the purely Canadian coastal waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, whereas we are now licensing, in the coast waters of Labrador and the Magdalen Islands, a trap which is to all intents and purposes a mackerel trap, and which will also take salmon, which I believe frequent those waters, especially the Labrador coast, in large quantities, and at a season when our own fishermen are not allowed to take them. I think it only fair that the minister's attention should be brought to these facts.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether my hon. friend has seen the regulations which have been adopted as a result of the negotiations with the United States authorities; but I can assure him that all the fears he expresses as to rights being given to Americans which are not going to be enjoyed by Canadians, may be discarded. There has been no change in the regulations which will in any shape or form be prejudicial to the salmon industry or to Canadian fishermen. The regulations which provide for a close season for salmon are still maintained, and the regulations which provide that traps must be made in such a way as not to affect the ascent of the salmon are also maintained. The changes, which are not of great importance, my hon. friend calls concessions to the Americans. The right we have given to Americans to get licenses is not a concession granted by us. It is a right which they had under the treaty of 1818. As a matter of fact, they were claiming that they had an absolute right to fish in those waters without any license at all. The hon. Minister of Justice quoted yesterday a despatch sent by the Foreign Office in 1906 to the effect that Newfoundland, and it applied also to Canada, had no right under that treaty to impose any license fee on American fishermen. That treaty gives them the right to fish on the Labrador coast and the Magdalen Islands coast in common with British subjects, and it was contended by the American authorities that we could not impose upon them a restriction in the form of a license. This claim certainly deserves a great deal of consideration, and, as the Minister of Justice said yesterday, was accepted by the Foreign Office. So I thought the other day, when the American authorities were willing to accept a license from us, thus virtually recognizing our right to issue a license, it was something of the utmost importance to Canada, because our licensing system is of great value for the preservation of our fisheries. The American experts who were there, after hearing the reasons adduced in favour of maintaining our licensing system, considered it a very fair one which is tantamount to their admission that the way we have been managing our fisheries is certainly commendable. My hon. friend asks what length will be the leaders. It was provided in the regulations, previous to the agreement made the other day, that all the leaders should start from the shore. The American authorities contended with a great deal of reason—I think they were right in that respect—that this was prejudicial to their rights on the treaty coast, because if our regulations provided that all the leaders should start from the shore, and if they had no right to go to the shore under the treaty, they meant that they could not put traps there where Canadians were permitted to put them, which would be discriminating. This struck me as a fair contention, and we tried to meet it by declaring that if the leader should start from the shore, then the length would be determined by our fishery officers and not by anybody else, and our officers determine the length of the leader by the depth of the water. I think that by all these changes which have been made my hon. friend may feel assured that we have not departed in any shape or form from the principle underlying our regulations, and that the mackerel as well as the salmon fisheries will be just as well preserved under the changes made as they were under the regulations which existed before.

Mr. LOGGIE. The minister has said that the length of the leader is to be determined by the fishery officer. Should the applicant say I want a leader only 100 yards from the shore, then the trap must be at the end of the leader, which would be simply one hundred yards from the shore. That is a point worthy of consideration. Regarding the protection of our salmon, the minister tells us that the close season will not be changed. That is not the question with me, as I understand it. The season for fishing the herring traps is all the year round, if the owner could fish all the year in spite of the weather. Therefore, if a trap catches salmon, and the owner is allowed to use the salmon, there is practically no close season for the salmon caught in the trap.

Mr. BRODEUR. Any fish caught in the close season contrary to the regulations is supposed to be caught illegally, and has to be thrown away.

Mr. JAMESON. I understood the minister to say that certain regulations had been framed as the result of this memo entered into by the American and Canadian authorities. If that is the case, may I ask whether those will be available to members and when we can have them?

Mr. BRODEUR. They will be brought down Monday.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) asked that the item relating to the Montreal barracks should stand, so we will pass to the Ontario items.

Public Works—Buildings, Ontario—Athens public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find that the postal revenue of this town last year was $2,152.63, money orders issued, $17,482.56, money orders paid $9,630.94. The population two years ago was 1,000. It is quite a rapidly growing town, has six churches, fourteen stores, two hotels, lumber mill and two planing mills and woollen factory among other industries. This will not complete.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Is this just for a post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. My instructions to the chief architect are to keep the cost of this building in the vicinity of $13,000 or $14,000. It will not exceed $15,000.

Mr. CROSBY. Does that include the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. Has the hon. minister had any requisition from the Post Office Department for this building as being required for the work of the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not from the Post Office Department. I may say, however, that my attention was called by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), in whose constituency this town is situated, to the very great need of post office accommodation there. My hon. friend no doubt is aware that the department allows a small amount to the postmaster to enable him to secure accommodation. The people of Athens have been urging, so the Minister of Railways informs me, that increased accommodation be given them, and he hoped it would be possible to make an arrangement with a banking company which was going to erect a building there so that my department should pay a portion of the rent necessary to get increased accommodation. However, the matter fell through, and I decided to ask for a vote for a building not to cost a great deal of money but one that would be suitable to the needs of the town.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a post office erected solely for the business of the Post Office Department. After it is erected who pays for the renting expenses of that building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the case all through ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The Department of Public Works does not require a building, but the minister, without consultation with the Postmaster General erects a post office building for post office business and then assumes the cost of that building after its erection. Does the rental now paid for post office accommodation there fall into the revenue of the post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that rental will cease. I have sometimes thought it might not be undesirable, certainly it would not be from the standpoint of my department, if the other departments would pay the Public Works Department a rental for buildings which we erect for them.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the present system when the Postmaster General goes before the country and presents his accounts, saying this is my revenue, and this my expenditure, he is not making a fair exhibit to the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not like to say that.

Mr. FOSTER. He is shouldering a portion of the expense of his department on another department, and concealing it, in effect, in that other department. I have no hesitation in saying that, in my mind, the Minister of Public Works ought not to undertake to erect a building for another department until requisitioned by that department. This slipshod method is carried on simply for patronage purposes. Two ministers who have nothing to do with the post office decide to build a building for the Postmaster General and the carrying out of his business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Rather for the public accommodation.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is bad policy

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, in this case, it is for the public accommodation.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Minister of Railways should some morning find the Minister of Public Works building a station somewhere on the Intercolonial railway, and on its completion this should relieve the Minister of Railways of the cost of maintaining that station, and then when the Minister of Railways presented his balance sheet to the country, he omitted the cost of that station, he would be giving a wrong account of part of the expenses of his department. I think the minister of post offices, the Postmaster General, ought to pursue exactly the same course as the Minister of Railways in this matter, and that he should not have the Minister of Public Works bearing the cost of part of the accommodation required by his department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend makes two points, one that we should not erect a building for another department without a requisition from the minister of that department, and the other, that if we do erect a post office the Postmaster General should pay a rental for it. Since when did my hon. friend entertain these views.

Mr. FOSTER. For a good many years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly not before 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. For the last 7 or 8 years I have advocated them steadily in the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I used to have a good deal of respect for the views of my hon. friend and have now, but I cannot find that when my hon. friend was Minister of Finance, and had a powerful influence in the disposition of public moneys, he ever advocated any such idea as he is now putting forward. There is much to be said in favour of the views he has advanced and if he were coming here for the first time to get us to lay down a course to be pursued, irrespective of what has been done in the past, I think he would find me favourable to his views, but the difficulty is, that if we are to compel the ministers of the different departments to pay rentals for the buildings occupied by them, it would greatly disturb the accounts of the departments and for purposes of comparison with previous years, the accounts would become valueless. I would be very glad if something of the kind could be done, because it would show my department as a good revenue producer. For instance, if I could get a rental of even 3 per cent on the Montreal post office, which cost $1,000,000, it would be $30,000 a year which would be quite a revenue of itself for my department, and if that were multiplied by the revenues of post offices, &c., all over the country, it would make a very good showing. The difficulty is, that that has been contrary to the principle which has been pursued, not only ever since confederation, but ever since the provinces of Canada were inhabited, ever since we had public buildings. The erection and maintenance of public buildings has always been cast upon the Department of Public Works, and it is very difficult to make these changes. I have suggested to my hon. friend the Postmaster General that it would not be a bad idea if he would take into consideration, and pay for the use of the post offices throughout the country, a fair rental, based upon the interest on cost. So far, he has not been able to agree with the suggestion I have made, only made in a tentative manner. If the member for North Toronto could persuade the Postmaster General and the Minister of Customs to adopt his view, certainly I would not object. But after all, it would not make much difference to the country, because it would be simply taking the cost out of one branch and paying it on behalf of other branches.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Postmaster General is anxious to give to the people of this country the very best postal service he can, and in the most economical way, he will study the question a good deal before he would requisition the Minister of Public Works to build a large number of these post offices, which the Minister of Public Works is now building for merely patronage reasons. Consequently, this country would be saved a very large amount of money, which the Postmaster General might well use to extend and improve the postal service. If a building is to be erected for the purpose of a post office the Postmaster General and the postal authorities ought to be the judges whether it is necessary or not. What does the Postmaster General want to give to the people of Athens? He wants to give them facilities for getting their mails in and out, he is doing it and can still do it, as they do on principle in the United States, in ninety-nine out of one hundred cases. He can give it to them by way of rental rather than by way of spending a large amount of money in expensive public buildings, and the people will get as good service, and the department will have the revenue to enlarge and cheapen the service of the country generally.

Mr. LEMIEUX. These public buildings are also used for other purposes. Generally, when the construction of a public building is decided upon by the Minister of Public Works, we select our space, we give our opinion of the space we will require in that building and that locality. The Minister of Inland Revenue is consulted likewise. I may mention, for illustration, the case of Nicolet, where I myself advocated the construction of the post office. Whilst the revenue of the town of Nicolet would not justify the construction of a building for a post office alone, yet we had to consider that there was a regiment stationed there, and they wanted a certain amount of space for armoury purposes. Then there was the customs and excise office to be provided for. Therefore, my hon. friend must not apply his remarks to the post office alone; he must consider all the other departments that use the building.

Mr. FOSTER. If you have in view economy alone, you could house half a dozen departments in the same building. The fact in this case is that the Postmaster General has never requisitioned for the purpose of his department to have a public building put up at Athens.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The name of the place is familiar to me as being a historical name, and I remember well that the request has often been made by the people of the locality for a post office. I do not want to bring politics into this matter, but I think Athens is in a county represented by an hon. gentleman of the opposition. I mention this to show that politics have nothing to do with the erection of this building.

Mr. FOSTER. What I am trying to bring out is the method on which these buildings are erected. Here is a minister who has nothing to do with the Post Office Department, and who is putting up a building without the request of the Postmaster General, with no hint from the Post Office Department that the work is necessary for that department. Now, I say that is not a proper principle. Take another and a more signal instance, the instance of Hampton, N.B., in the county of Kings, that I formerly represented. I was surprised, the other morning, in reading the 'Hansard,' to find a vote had been given for a public building in Hampton, and that the minister had declared that Hampton had a population of 2,000, that it was a remarkably live place, and a growing place, and so he persuaded the House to give him a vote of $5,000 as a starter for a post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, $3,000 as a starter, the whole thing to cost not more than $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I was anxious to know whether the Postmaster General had represented to the Minister of Public Works that for the purpose of his work it was necessary to have a $5,000 building put up in Hampton.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This may have occurred during my absence. But I am sure the department must have been consulted.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister to find out and bring down the information. I would like to know whether the minister, who is, I think, disposed to be economical, requisitioned that building, or whether he thought it was necessary.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I ask the Minister of Public Works if the Minister of Railways and Canals did not consult him in regard to this matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. And it is also in the constituency of the Minister of Railways and Canals?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, it is in the county of Leeds, but I think a part of Leeds forms a portion of the constituency of Brockville. My impression is that it is in the constituency of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is not the minister perfectly aware that there is a portion of Leeds in the constituency of Brockville?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No I am not, but that is my belief.

Mr. EDWARDS. Of course, there is no politics in this.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Part of it is in Brockville.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what I understand.

Mr. EDWARDS. This $5,000 is for a constituency represented by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and it is to be followed with another vote of $10,000 making about $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not exceeding that.

Mr. EDWARDS. It appears that the Postmaster General is not interested in what post office buildings are erected. He is not consulted when a post office is to be erected although it would only seem natural that he would be the very first person that would be consulted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am.

Mr. EDWARDS. You were not consulted in this case?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Many sessions ago.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understood the Minister of Public Works to say that this vote was asked for this particular building without consulting the Postmaster General, and without any requisition from the Postmaster General for the building. The Minister of Public Works explicitly stated the other night that it would not be expected that the Department of Public Works should consult the Postmaster General with regard to the erection of post offices in this country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong. As to the accommodation required for post offices I stated that we did consult the Post Office Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. I said nothing with regard to the accommodation for post offices at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. With regard to the architecture and the building of the office—no. Of course, that is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works, but the first requisition always comes from the Post Office Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, that is perfectly contrary to the statement made by the Minister of Public Works the other night because he said that he was endeavouring to get the Postmaster General to consider these matters with him. Does the Postmaster General think it is dealing fairly with the people of this country for $15,000 to be spent for the erection of a post office in Athens, or in any other village the size of Athens when there are whole townships in Ontario that have no post office within their bounds? Does he think it is fair today to spend $15,000 for a post office for a village the size of this when there are people in country places who have to travel all the way from five miles to twelve and fifteen miles to get their mail? He must agree that it is not fair play, and if he is not consulted in regard to the money being spent for the erection of post offices he should be and he should use his influence to see that the public get the postal facilities of which they stand in need. He should take a special interest in this because he is the man to whom they look for redress in these matters.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In answer to my hon. friend's question, I would say that there is no analogy whatever in my judgment between the case of a town and that of a whole township. In the town the population is concentrated at a given spot. There may be 2,000 or 3,000 or 5,000 people congregated together, but in a whole township the population is scattered. You could not erect one building for a whole township while you could for a town even though the population might be less than that of the whole township. As regards postal facilities in a whole township, I do not know that there is any reason why the people should not be provided with these postal facilities where the distance is about five miles from a post office. It is certainly the policy of the Post Office Department to grant any request which is made with such a distance in view. Whenever my hon. friend on behalf of his own township in Frontenac or any other non. gentleman makes a request to provide postal facilities, where there is a distance of about five miles, the Post Office Department cannot but accede to that request, and I appeal to him and to members of the House on both sides whether, whenever a request of that kind is made to the Post Office Department, it is not granted.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am very glad indeed that I intervened in this discussion, because I have got a very important statement in so far as my constituency is concerned from the Postmaster General. I am very glad he has made that statement, and I can assure him that the time will be exceedingly short when I shall appear before him and ask him to carry out to the letter the statement which he has placed on 'Hansard' this afternoon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Did we not live up to it in the past?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, the Post Office Department has not lived up to it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Can my hon. friend cite an instance in his county, where, within a distance of five or six miles, there are no postal facilities?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, I will cite an instance. Last year, or the year before——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know this case; be very careful.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, I will be careful. Thus far I have made no statement which I have had to retract. I made a request for a post office between Sharbot Lake and Maberly. I have in my possession now the answer which I obtained from the Postmaster General in regard to that matter. There was a settlement of 20 or 22 families. The nearest any of them lived to a post office was from 5 to 8 miles.

Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Five to eight miles.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, five to eight miles. They asked for a bi-weekly service. They were satisfied with a mail twice a week. I have the letter in my possession from the Postmaster General, in which he said that it would cost $70 to deliver the mail twice a week to this settlement, that it would cost $35 for the postmaster's salary, making a total of $105, that the revenue would not possibly exceed $10 or $15 a year, and that he did not feel that his department would be justified in expending the sum of $90 a year since there were only 20 or 22 families interested. That is a case in point to which I refer, and I am glad that the Postmaster General has put himself on record on 'Hansard' here to-day to the effect that his department is willing to grant postal facilities in country places where they have to go five miles or more for their mail.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is it a case of infrequency of service or the need of an office?

Mr. EDWARDS. They want an office; they have no service at all. They would be satisfied with a service twice a week which, I think, is a very mild request on their part. I do not want to simply criticise these items when they come up but I do think I would not be fair to my constituents if I allowed votes of large sums of money for post offices in cities and towns to go through here and put up no protest on behalf of the country districts where they have very meagre, and in some cases, no postal facilities whatever. I recognize that in large cities like Montreal and Toronto and some others, and in very large and enterprising towns it would be expected that there should be better facilities than in country districts, but I believe it is entirely unwarranted that large sums of money should be spent in these smaller towns while the country districts, where the people have to go five and ten and twelve miles to get their mail, have to come here begging for a twice-a-week service.

Mr. SPROULE. I have several times expressed it in this House as my opinion that in a place where no reasonable accommodation for a post office can be obtained by renting it may become necessary for the government to provide that accommodation, by erecting a building, but where a building can be rented, as in this case, at a moderate cost of $125 a year, including fuel and light, to incur an annual expenditure of $1,300 is altogether wrong. I do not think such a policy can be justified before any intelligent people. The minister told us that Athens was a rapidly growing place and that the population is 1,000, but the fact is that while it is a good business centre the revenue there is only $2,151. Now, in looking down this list I find that there are many places which contribute a much larger revenue to the government and which have not a post office building and are not asking for one. Acton gives a revenue of $3,600 a year and it has no post office; Allison gives a revenue of $2,365 a year and we get a building there for $175 per annum, fuel and light included. Alvinston gives a revenue of over $2,000, Arthur a revenue of $2,600, Aurora a revenue of $4,000 (nearly twice as large as Athens), and Aylmer West a revenue of $6,800, and none of these places have post offices.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Aylmer is strongly urging for one.

Mr. SPROULE. In view of the fact that there are so many of these towns that give a larger revenue than Athens and which have no post offices, there must be some reason for building a post office at Athens other than the needs of the public service. At one time Athens was in the constituency of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and then we never heard anything about erecting a post office there, but it is taken into the constituency of the Minister of Railways and immediately a post office is to be erected. It would look as if the government had determined that only in favoured spots represented by their supporters will they erect these public buildings.

Mr. CROSBY. What department now pays the $125 a year rent for the present post office at Athens?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Post Office Department.

Mr. CROSBY. And when this building is erected the Post Office Department will pay nothing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROSBY. It is no wonder the Postmaster General would like to see post office buildings erected by the government, because he is relieved of paying rent, and his revenue is consequently increased. Since I have been in the House I have never heard of a post office building being erected anywhere except through the influence of some members supporting the government, and I suppose it is hardly any use to condemn that bad principle now. The Minister of Public Works must have been misled when he told us that Athens was in the riding of the hon. member for Leeds, because, as a matter of fact, it is in the constituency represented by the Minister of Railways. I have no doubt it is the same in this case as in many others. The Minister of Railways wants to have a post office in that particular district, and some other day the Minister of Public Works may want to get something in his department, and so he gives a post office. In that way there is reciprocity between the ministers, and sometimes with members. As far as I am personally concerned, I would be glad to see a post office built in every village in the Dominion of Canada if we could afford it, but there is no policy laid down by the government in this matter, as we find post offices built in places much smaller in population and in revenue than other places which have no post office building. It is gratifying to find the Postmaster General stating that no request will be refused by him, so that we are in hopes of getting all the post offices we require.

Mr. CROTHERS. I would like to give the Postmaster General an opportunity to make clear one or two points with reference to the new post office built at Athens. Did the Post Office Inspector for that district report complaining of the inadequacy of the accommodation already provided at that village, or suggesting that better accommodation should be provided? If he did make such a report, was any attempt made to rent a more commodious place?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not the papers to enable me to give my hon. friend the answer to-day. I may give it to him at the next sitting of the House.

Brantford drill hall—Government share of cost of bitulithic pavement to be laid and storm sewers to be built by the municipal authorities, $900.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to pay what we think is a fair proportion of the cost of the pavement and the storm sewers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand that the hon. minister promised to build a drill hall in the town of Forest. Does he intend to do so?

Mr. PARDEE. I may answer the hon gentleman. All arrangements have been made to build it, and the matter is in the hands of the Militia Department. The minister has consented to it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I merely want to know from the minister whether it will be carried out or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will be in the Militia Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like the minister to inform me what the original contract price was for the Brantford drill hall, and what the final cost will be, including the amount now asked for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not be supposed to have that information, because the Brantford drill hall was built some years ago. All I am now asking for is a small amount as a contribution to the city of Brantford for a pavement and storm sewers, one-half of each.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would say, for the information of the hon. minister, that the Brantford drill hall is not a building of ancient date. The first building, a wooden structure, dates back to 1868, but in 1895 some $10,000 was contributed to enable local parties to erect a new drill hall, and in 1904 a contract was let for the construction of this building, amounting to $25,750, with further contracts for heating and electric wiring of $2,600 and $2,450 respectively. The total expenditure on the building from 1903-4 to 1910 was $49,311.43, to which add the $900 asked for in this item, and you have a cost of $50,200, or pretty nearly double the contract price. A few days ago my hon. friend spoke of the final cost of these drill halls and armouries compared with the contract price. On that occasion I said, on page 1628 of 'Hansard':—

If you take up the whole list of armouries from one end of the country to the other you will see that the actual cost, when the buildings are completed, runs from 25 to 75 per cent higher than the contract price, so that the estimated cost does not cut any figure at all.

For the information of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, I am prepared to substantiate the statement I made on that occasion, and to prove that the cost of the drill halls and armouries constructed in this country since 1896—the final cost—has been from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent higher than the contract price, not only in one or two but in dozens of cases, and not in one province alone, but in every province. Let me give him one or two instances, I might refer to the drill hall at Baddeck, N.S. Contract price was $3,750, and the cost $5,795.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For what portion of the work?

Mr. EDWARDS. If the hon. minister wants to take it in that way, it makes it all the worse for himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the only way in which you can take it.

Mr. EDWARDS. When I take the contract price, I mean the price of the contractor for the main part of the work, and the additional contracts for heating, lighting, &c. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. With regard to Baddeck I find that the final cost was some 59 per cent higher than the contract price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course I have not here the details of the building at Baddeck, and it is very inconvenient to have to go into matters with regard to which I cannot be supposed to have the information with me. My hon. friend says the contract includes the building, heating, plumbing, fittings and everything of that kind. How is the additional amount made up?

Mr. EDWARDS. The hon. minister is certainly putting a conundrum to me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought so.

Mr. EDWARDS. He asked me to tell how the additional price is made up. We have had a good many instances—I have one in my mind now, the construction of a building near Kingston—in which I venture to say it would puzzle the hon. gentleman himself to find out how the additional cost was made up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was the total amount paid for Baddeck drill hall?

Mr. EDWARDS. According to a return dated the 8th April, 1910, and which was ordered on the 15th December, 1909, the total cost was $5,975.62. I presume that return gave the cost down to the 8th April, 1910. What has been expended since I cannot say.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We were considering an item of $900 to be paid to the city of Brantford for a portion of the cost of bitulithic pavement and storm sewers to be built by the municipal authorities. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) was speaking. I would ask him to consider whether, particularly under the new rules, of the House, in discussing an item for the payment of an amount to Brantford for one-half the cost of a bitulithic pavement it is competent for my hon. friend to go into the cost of public buildings for a number of years. I would think that possibly on motion for supply, would be the proper time to discuss a subject of that kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman raises this as a point of order I shall endeavour to give a ruling, otherwise I shall not rule on the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman might consider it himself.

Mr. EDWARDS. We are considering the appropriation of some money towards a drill hall.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Towards paying the town for the cost of a pavement and storm sewers.

Mr. EDWARDS. No, the item was Brantford drill hall. The government's share of the cost of that pavement will be charged up to the total expenditure on Brantford drill hall.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to discussing the Brantford drill hall.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think it is quite pertinent to discuss any items connected with drill halls and armouries under this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend is desirous of going into a general discussion I will not raise the point of order. Perhaps he might as well do it now.

Mr. EDWARDS. I certainly intend to put some facts on 'Hansard' in connection with drill halls and armouries some time this session, and, perhaps, it might be as well to do it now as later. However, if the Chairman says I shall not go on now I will defer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There appears to be, not a point of order, but an appeal to me for either a rule or a word of guidance. The item is that for a pavement and storm sewers at Brantford. The discussion should be as relevant to that as it well can be made. But in a matter of supply I would not feel like drawing that rule very closely. In considering an expenditure for storm sewers and pavements, I think it is justifiable to ask for the expenditure on the whole building, and in doing so to refer, if necessary, to other buildings by comparison. But an extended debate on drill halls generally, rather for their own sake than this item, would scarcely be relevant, and if the hon. member can conveniently bring his remarks to bear upon some other items of drill halls yet to come up it would be more appropriate than at this moment.

Mr. SPROULE. There are other items for drill halls lower down on the list. But I respectfully submit that we are within our right to engage even in a general discussion on a question of policy when the government is asking for a vote in connection with any drill hall. They are all under this branch of public works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It ought to be borne in mind that both sides of the House last session joined together to endeavour to shorten the discussions. Now, it seems to me that if we are to be at all relevant in our remarks on the question as to whether we should contribute $900 to recoup the city of Brantford for one-half the cost of bithulithic pavement and storm sewers, it is clearly irrelevant to do what my hon. friend wishes to do, to go into a general discussion of the cost of drill halls and public buildings in order to show that the cost is more than contract price. I think consideration will show my hon. friend that such a discussion would not be relevant to that particular item.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a portion of the cost of this drill hall.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events, his honour has expressed his view with regard to it.

Mr. EDWARDS. I notice, in the first place, in reading this item 140, that you gave the total amount we are asked to vote, and that item includes several drill halls. This is an item pertaining to only one of these drill halls. Further down, there is another item for a drill hall. It seems to me that in considering the matter of expenditure in connection with drill halls this is a proper time to have a discussion bearing upon drill halls and armouries generally.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee has two ways of taking up each resolution as laid down by the rules. It may take up the whole resolution for $930,000 bodily, and in that case any item would be open for discussion. But if it chooses to take the other method of discussing each of the items separately, then each item must stand alone according to the rules of the House. In adition, in revising the rules last session, this was added to rule 13:—

Speeches in Committee of the House must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

That is the rule that I am endeavouring to enforce with reasonable care. In Committee of Supply, I believe, the House is entitled to the widest information that can be given, with due regard to its rules. I have not ruled the hon. gentleman out of order, but I have suggested to him that extended remarks on drill halls generally would be more appropriate on a later item. If he desires to proceed under this item I will allow him to do so, and judge, as he advances in his argument, whether he is relevant or not.

Mr. EDWARDS. I infer from your remarks that any extended discussion on drill halls now should be deferred to a later item.

Chesley public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the erection of a public building in the town of Chesley. I may say that the land has been purchased. It consists of a lot 104 by 104 on the west side of Main street, in the town of Chesley. The estimated cost of the building is not to exceed $15,000, that is, apart from the site, but including heating, plumbing and fittings. In 1901 the town had a population of 1,734. The information I have is that the town consists of 8 churches, 2 bank agencies, a woollen mill, sash and door factory, grist mill, saw mill, furniture factory, 3 hotels, 28 stores and a printing office. The revenue last year was $5,106, being a good increase on the year before. The building is required for a post office and custom house, also to afford accommodation as an armoury for the local militia company.

Mr. DONNELLY. Have plans been prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Plans have been prepared, and are now with the Post Office Department for consideration, and, we trust, approval.

Mr. DONNELLY. Permit me to suggest that the contract should be let at as early a date as possible, so that the work may be proceeded with during the coming summer. In the year 1908, $5,000 was put in the estimates for the erection of this building, so the minister cannot be accused of any undue haste in the matter. Speaking on this subject in 1909, the minister assured me that the work of erecting the building would be proceeded with as soon as possible. In view of the large increase in the public revenue during the past year I expect that the minister will proceed with the work of erecting the building at an early date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad that my hon. friend differs from many hon. gentlemen opposite in thinking that it is entirely right and proper to erect a public building in a town of 1,700 population. I quite agree with him and that is why I put the item in. I believe it will be in the public interest, the town is a good one, and I am entirely prepared to completely justify the erection of a public building there.

Mr. DONNELLY. In what year was the population 1,700?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1901.

Mr. DONNELLY. The town of Chesley has increased in population very rapidly. That was ten years ago and the population may be a thousand more now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad to know that. It agrees entirely with my own information, and it is typical of hundreds of other towns and cities throughout Canada I am glad to say that there is great growth going on all over the country from east to west which makes the demands for public buildings very much greater than they otherwise would be.

Mr. CROTHERS. In order to appreciate fully the minister's remarks I think we should have an answer submitted to the question from my hon. friend from Grey as to when the first vote in connection with this public building was asked from parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to give my hon. friend that; I have no memorandum of it.

Mr. DONNELLY. In 1908 $5,000 was included in the estimates.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am told that the first vote was taken in 1908, when the constituency was not represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Donnelly) but by a supporter of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, let me say to my hon. friend that it is never too late to assert one's views upon the floor of the House, and if my hon. friend thinks we would be doing wrong in going ahead with this building it is quite open to him to make a motion that the item be struck out.

Mr. CROSBY. If that is the case will it be open to strike out every other item?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, to move to do so.

Mr. CROSBY. Am I to understand that the minister will support every motion we make in regard to every other public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but it is open to any hon. gentleman to make a motion.

Mr. CROSBY. But the minister will not be open to do that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not say that the hon. gentleman will succeed in carrying the motion. I say it is quite open to anyone to make a motion if he wishes to put his views on record. I have not intimated for a moment that I would support such a motion.

Mr. CROSBY. The Minister of Public Works stated distinctly that it would be quite in order for the hon. member or any other hon. member on this side of the House to move that this item should be struck out of the estimates. I have not any doubt but if that motion were made the minister would support it, from what he said.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I would oppose it.

Mr. CROSBY. Then it would not be struck out, so that he could not really mean what he said. I wanted to see if we really had the minister on some footing where we could hold him for about a night.

Dresden public building, $17,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract, amounting to $13,000, has been let for this building. Thirteen thousand is a revote. Dresden is a very good town, indeed. Its population in 1901 was 1,613. It is about the same size as Chesley, I think. A lot has been purchased at a cost of $2,000, 60 feet on one street, and 103 on the other.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total estimated cost is $21,103.80. Hon. gentlemen will see that upon striking an average we are making quite a little reduction in the cost of public buildings.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Could the minister say when the first appropriation was made for the Dresden building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot at this moment. It was voted last year, but whether it was voted previously, I do not remember. If my hon. friend will turn to the estimates he can see for himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have not the estimates here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Neither have I.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think the minister's duty would be to have them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that would not be part of my duty.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Would the deputy know?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy says that he does not remember.

Mr. MEIGHEN. At all events, this is not more than the third year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure this is the second year at all events.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Can the minister explain why it is that the contract is let on this building and not on the one immediately preceding?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the close of the last session of parliament, there was a large number of buildings provided for and much more than the chief architect, with his staff could undertake within quite a number of months. He has to take them up, one after another ; they cannot all be done at once. In the case of Chesley, the plans are now in the department of the Postmaster General for approval. This contract for Dresden was just let a few days ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the minister would recall the principle he laid down in the first session of 1909, there would be no difficulty in answering the question whether he had the record or not. The minister laid it down then, that public buildings that were appropriated for, in the previous year's estimates, that is, in the pre-election year's estimates, would be gone on with before any other buildings were commenced. So that, if the minister remembered the principle he laid down and desired to follow it and knew that he had followed it, he would be certain that this building must have been appropriated for in the pre-election year. Otherwise it would be a violation of his pledge to go ahead with it before the building immediately preceding which certainly was first appropriated for in 1908. Consequently, the minister must, besides foregetting the first year when it was appropriated for, also have forgotten the pledge which he made in 1909.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend does not state what I said correctly. What I said was that, before asking parliament for appropriations for new buildings, speaking as a general thing, we would ask parliament to appropriate moneys for buildings which had been contained in the estimates of 1907-8.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the minister quite sure that is what he said ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have not 'Hansard' here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events, that is what I ought to have said.

Mr. MEIGHEN. We will test our respective memories as soon as I can get 'Hansard.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that must be what I said. If I did not say that, it would be a slip of the tongue. Immediately parliament votes money, all buildings stand on an equal footing.

Mr. SPROULE. I have noticed this custom which has been prevalent of late years and it is a very pernicious one. Items are voted year after year for public works and nothing is done. I do not know whether it is as bad this year as last, or the year before. That, in my judgment, is a very bad principle. The buildings are really required or they are not. If they are required, and the money is voted, the contract ought to be gone on with, and the expenditure made within the estimate. It is no justifiable excuse in the world to say that your architects are busy. If you had only a sufficient number of architects to prepare the plans for a quarter of the number of buildings, and we voted money for the other three quarters, would it be any justification for the government's conduct, in leaving over three quarters of the buildings for ten years and not starting them at all? That is practically what the Minister of Public Works says now. If they are not going on with these buildings, why should the government get the money for them? In my opinion, we should only vote sufficient money each year to prepare the plans and to provide for the work that is proceeded with in that year. Then, we would not have, as we frequently have, these items standing over until an election comes on when they are held out as a bribe to electors to return a supporter of the government. The present system is pernicious and should not be tolerated by the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract in Dresden has been let and I said that the plans were actually all prepared for Chesley post office and were in the hands of the Post Office Department for approval.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is the contract let for Dresden and not for Chesley? Is it not because the one is represented by a supporter of the government and the other is not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong, not as he usually is but as he sometimes is. Either one of us is stupid and probably I am——

Mr. SPROULE. You ought to know best.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is so much older than I that I hope he won't be severe on me. We go on with the plans as the staff is able to get them ready, and as the department interested in the building approves we call for tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is it that the plans are ready for one place and the contract let, and why are the plans not ready for the other place although the money was voted in the same year?

Mr. CROTHERS. The case is stronger than my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) puts it because the vote for Chesley was taken in 1908, a year before the vote for Dresden was taken, and yet the site for the Chesley post office has not been purchased yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes it is.

Mr. CROTHERS. Then if the site has been purchased it must have been paid for previous to last year because there is $15,000 asked, which is altogether a revote. But if the minister is right, the site for Chesley post office was purchased two years ago and nothing has been done since. One place is given the advantage of at least a year over the other.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans cannot be prepared until the site has been procured, and it happens in this case that the site for Dresden was ordered to be purchased on the 17th of August, 1908—so that there has been delay in the constituency, represented by Mr. Gordon, who supports the government—whereas the site for Chesley was not acquired until February, 1909.

Mr. CROTHERS. All the evidence tends to show that this appropriation has been dangled before the people of that constituency for at least four years.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister tells us that his architects are not able to get out the plans for all these buildings in good time, and perhaps I can suggest to him a remedy for the delay. A great many of these buildings are erected in towns ranging from 1,500 to 2,500 population; practically about the same sized buildings are called for; there is a great deal of uniformity about them, and would it not be well for the minister to have standard plans and specifications which might be used for say twenty different towns, and thus save time and trouble and expense, and expedite the erection of the buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That idea has often been thought of in the department, but the difficulty is that the style of architecture that is suited to the general surroundings of one town will not be suitable in another, and we find that it would not please the people to have one standard building for all sections of the country. Then, some towns are growing rapidly, especially in the west. The style of building must also have some reference to the location of the site. All these things have to be taken into consideration.

Dundas public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have purchased the lot, which has a frontage of 125 feet by a depth of one hundred and six feet, and we are at work on the plans. The building is to be used for post office, customs and inland revenue purposes, and the total cost will run up to probably $30,000. Dundas is quite an important town. It has a population of about 3,000 and several factories, and growing rapidly.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another instance in which the money was voted last year, and yet there was apparently no need of voting it. It would relieve the House of some work if we cut out all these votes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had a great deal of difficulty in getting the site. It was only recently that we got it. The wife of the owner refused until recently to sign away her dower.

Mr. CROTHERS. When was the first vote taken for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1907-8.

Elora public building, $14,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is under contract. The building is to cost $12,949. We paid $380 for the site. The fittings, furniture, lock boxes, sidewalk, fencing and contingencies will bring the total estimated cost up to $19,413.61. The site has a frontage of 69 feet by a depth of 132 feet. The population in 1901 was about 1,200, and I believe it is growing.

Mr. CROTHERS. That vote was first taken in 1907-8 also, I believe?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS. I find that the votes for all these smaller places—Preston, Dundas, Elora, Essex, Fergus, Harriston, Mitchell, Midland, Mount Forest, Seaforth, Goderich, Wallaceburg, Wiarton—were all taken in 1907-8, just before the general election, and nothing practically has been done since.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend surely does not forget that in 1908-9 there was a great decline in the revenue, and we made an appeal to parliament to justify us in allowing all except the most urgent public works to stand over, which parliament readily agreed to do. I remember that our friends were called together, and they all said they would not press for even urgent public buildings until the revenues got into better condition.

Mr. CROTHERS. If the hon. gentleman looks back to the year 1903-4, just before another general election, and the year following, he will find just the same state of things existing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not here in 1903-4.

Essex post office, $14,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been acquired at a cost of $1,000. The contract has not been let, but the plans are now before the Post Office Department for approval. We expect the total cost to be $15,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is Elora a shire town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is not, but the people there were complaining very bitterly of the want of accommodation, and in view of the fact that it has an excellent water-power, that its manufacturing is developing —carriage, sash and door factories, agricultural implement factories, saw and grist mills—that it has a large number of stores, and that it is the centre of a very beautiful country, we thought we might make an exception and give it a public building that would be suitable to a town of that size and with such a fine future.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that one of the qualifications for getting a post office is having water-power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is incidental to growth and development.

Mr. HENDERSON. Another is to have a certain number of stores.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. And another is to have one or two railways, and still another that the people should urge it very strongly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, think of the revenue, $3,500 last year.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not a big revenue. I have pointed out other towns with larger revenue which have not been thus favoured. I have in mind other towns which have all these qualifications, and requisites and more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The town of Milton, for instance.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not complaining, but if I can bring that town of mine within the scope of all these various qualifications—

Mr. PUGSLEY. The friends of my hon. friend would all fight very hard against it.

Mr. HENDERSON. In that case I would fight them. I notice that the minister does not forget the town of Milton. He brings it up every time I rise so that evidently his conscience is rather uncomfortable, and I want to keep him in that frame of mind until he does justice to the town of Milton.

Mr. SPROULE. If my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) thinks that the sensitive conscience of the Minister of Public Works is likely to compel him to do justice, I am afraid he will be sadly disappointed. I would never have credited the hon. minister with possessing any such conscience. What amused me was the answer which he gave with regard to the building in Elora, namely, that the people pressed for it very hard. Yet the vote was put nearly four years ago, and the plans are not ready yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must not jump to conclusions so quickly. He said the plans are not even under way. Why, the construction is well under way to-day. Let me say why I am pleased with my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). From the way in which he has developed along the line of the necessity for public buildings, I look forward to the day when he will have persuaded all our friends opposite into his own conviction, and we will find them approving every item in the estimates for public buildings.

Fergus public building, $14,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. What county?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wellington South.

Mr. HENDERSON. How far from Elora?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me first give the population. It was 1,396 nine years ago. Fergus also has an excellent water-power. It has an iron foundry, a planing mill, two saw mills, a factory for split peas, &c.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many churches?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Seven.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought so. It is a Scotch town.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And the people have been urging very strongly to have this building built.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What is the postal revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $4,300, money orders issued $12,633, money orders paid $20,614.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is for $13,449, cost of site $700, fittings, furniture, lock boxes, sidewalks, fencing, &c., will bring the total to $19,556, comprising everything.

Fort William public building, enlarging, $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is for the purpose of making additions to the post office owing to the rapidly increasing business.

Mr. SPROULE. What will the additions cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $7,450 is contract price.

Gananoque post office, addition, $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to build an addition to the main building, the addition will be 22 feet by 24—a one story brick building. We have got the land for the purpose from the town as a gift. The surveying and legal expenses cost us $75, the erection of the building $2,500, the alterations and fittings $1,500 making a total of $4,075. The specifications are now in the hands of the printer, and we will call for tenders as soon as they are ready.

Mr. MEIGHEN. A moment ago the minister challenged the accuracy of my recollection as to the statement made by him in the session of 1909, and which, if he meant it, would have constituted a principle for his department to follow in the construction of these public buildings. I said that the Minister of Public Works had clearly stated that such public buildings as were in the 1908 estimates and which he was not able to go on with in 1909, by reason of what he called his retrenchment policy, would be gone on with before any others were initiated. The hon. minister contradicted that statement. I have the 'Hansard' here which will show which of us was correct. At page 1300 of the 'Hansard' of 1909, I asked him the following question :

Will the minister also give us the assurance that those public buildings which were in the estimates last year and which now are unfortunately discontinued will be preferred and gone on with before other public buildings of a similar kind are initiated?

The minister replied :

I think that is a very fair question. I feel that is the course that I should pursue as Minister of Public Works, and will certainly recommend to my colleagues.

That was perhaps as pronounced a statement as the minister was ever tempted to make in Committee of Supply. He went on to say :

Of course, there may be cases arise, such as a public building being burned down or a wharf being carried away, which might create an exception, and we might have to include these new works, but as a general principle I am and would be committed to those works which parliament was asked to sanction last year.

The only exception the minister could think of was a public building burned down or a wharf carried away; that would be, I presume, a wharf built where there is water. A few moments ago a public building in Chesley was referred to. That public building was not in the estimates for 1908. Then a public building in Dresden was spoken of, which was in the estimates for 1908, and each year since. Under the minister's ruling, under his solemn pledge to the House and the country, because that quotation was largely circulated through the press, the minister would be bound to go on with the public building in Chesley before he even initiated a public building in Dresden. Now, in 1910, the minister is further ahead with the public building in Dresden than with that in Chesley, indeed, his department has been inactive and has done nothing in regard to the Chesley building. It would be interesting for this committee to have the minister exercise his well known and most admirable ingenuity in explaining the consistency of his course with that principle.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me correct an error into which my hon. friend inadvertently fell. He said the Chesley building was not in the estimates of 1908. He should have said the opposite. Chesley was in the estimates of 1907-8, while Dresden was not.

Mr. MEIGHEN I understand I was misinformed on that, but I shall give him an illustration. He has let contracts for buildings that were not in the estimates prior to 1909 all over the country, over and over again. Can he deny that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be obliged to deny that, because there are very few public buildings in the estimates of this year which were not in the estimates of 1907-8.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That would not be denying it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He says very many; I say very few.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Would the minister give an estimate of the number?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All my hon. friend has to do is to send for the estimates of 1907 and compare them with those of this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will not deny that there are a score?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should doubt that very much.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The presence of one would be inconsistent with his principle in 1909 and the minister doubts that there are a score. How will the minister explain that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the easiest thing in the world to do that. The words which my hon. friend reads are just what I thought, that before initiating any new works, as a general principle, the works which were provided for in the estimates of 1907-8 would be gone on with. I see how my hon. friend fell into error. By initiating, I understand to mean the putting of an amount in the estimates for the initiation of a public building, parliament voting the money, and there might be exceptional cases under which we would think it desirable to proceed with some work not in the previous estimates. Then the amount would be put in and that would be the initiation of a public building. As I said before, when parliament votes money I have to treat all works alike. This corroborates entirely the statement I make. I thought the criticism was going to be that all these public works for which we are now asking votes were in the estimates of 1907-8, before the election. It will be found that 95 per cent of the items which are in the estimates to-day were in the estimates of 1907-8.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what I found fault with. I pointed out that these were pre-election pledges, and I thought it was unfair that these buildings should have precedence over others where no pre-election promise had been given, and I promply came to the conclusion that simply because these were pre-election pledges they should not have priority over other places, which had really better claims. I am sorry to hear the minister say that 95 per cent of the works he is going on with are for buildings proposed before the last election. I do not think the minister has made much out of the statememnt that 95 per cent of these votes are simply carrying out pre-election promises.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Except to answer the hon. member for Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I would be sorry to have the minister think he had persuaded me or anybody that he had explained his own statement. He says that only 5 per cent are exceptions to the rule. That is a bad enough state of affairs as it is. There is no doubt ground for the complaint of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), but the minister is here making a solemn pledge, and unless he can show that his 5 per cent come within the exceptions he has stated he has deceived the country. He cannot show a single item of the whole 5 per cent, that he doubts amount to a score, where the need for a building was caused by flood or fire and not simply by the fact that the public building was in a constituency represented by a Liberal member.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend says I could not show one. Time is too precious to go through them all, but let me mention Campbellton, where the public building was destroyed by fire. That is one of the new ones.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is that the whole 5 per cent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend said I could not name one.

Goderich public building, addition, $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make an addition to the public building at Goderich.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the character of the addition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to build an annex to the public building, also to make alterations to the interior fittings of the post office, as requested by the Post Office Department, and also by the Board of Trade of Goderich. The addition to the building is estimated to cost $7,023; the post office fittings, $3,000; contingencies and superintendence, $977; total estimated expenditure, $11,000. We assume that we will expend prior to 31st of March next, $2,000, and we are asking for a revote of $8,000 and that will leave $1,000 still to be provided in order to complete the work.

Harriston public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Here the site has been purchased, we bought the larger portion of it from the town of Harriston. Total cost of site and expenses, $3,076; total estimated expenditure for this building will be about $20,000, not including the land. There is to be an armoury in connection with it that may increase the cost.

Mr. EDWARDS. How much of this item for the armoury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Possibly it may add $3,000 or $4,000 to the cost.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is part of this expenditure to be used for the armoury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had asked the chief architect not to exceed $20,000; but he tells me that in consequence of the instructions to put an armoury in it, the cost may run $3,000 or $4,000 beyond that sum.

Mr. EDWARDS. I presume I am quite in order under this item in discussing the question of drill halls generally?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Quite so.

Mr. EDWARDS. The other day, on page 1628 of 'Hansard', I stated that the actual cost, when the buildings were completed, ran from 25 to 75 per cent higher than the contract price; and the Minister of Public Works replied that I was entirely in error as to that. It is, then, a question of accuracy between us, and I propose to give a few facts to prove that my statement is correct. Before six o'clock I referred to one case in Nova Scotia, at Baddeck. I might also call attention to Halifax, where the contract price was $204,250, and the actual cost $279,136, or 36 per cent above the contract price. I might refer to Truro, where the contract price was $10,280, the actual cost $12,892, or 25 per cent above contract price; to which should be added, in estimating the total cost of the building, the cost of the site, which was $5,000, paid to a gentleman by the name of J. N. Pugsley, who I understand is a relative of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What relationship?

Mr. EDWARDS. I said I was informed that he was a relative. If he is, I presume the hon. gentleman knows the relationship better than I do.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have never had the pleasure of seeing or knowing that gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is a matter, I dare say, for mutual regret for the Minister of Public Works and Mr. J. N. Pugsley if they are not related.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be a distant relationship, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. EDWARDS. In New Brunswick I will mention Sussex: contract price, $10,523, actual cost, $14,011, or 33 per cent over contract price. Woodstock: contract price, $39,680, actual cost, $54,259, or 36 per cent over contract price. To that you may add $6,000 for the site. In Quebec, I may mention St. Hyacinthe, where the actual cost is 37 per cent above the contract price, not counting $7,500 paid for the site. In Manitoba I would refer him to Brandon, where the actual cost is 26 per cent over the contract price; and to Virden, where the actual cost is 83 per cent above the contract price. In British Columbia I might refer him to Kamloops, where the actual cost was 76 per cent above contract price; to Kaslo, where it was 85 per cent above contract price; to Rossland, where it was 45 per cent above contract price; to Revelstoke where it was 63 per cent above contract price; and to Nelson, where the actual cost was 125 per cent above contract price. Yet the hon. gentleman told me the other day, and told this committee, that when I stated that the actual price averaged from 25 to 75 per cent above contract, I was entirely in error. Now I commend these figures to his consideration, and I want to show him that he was the gentleman who was in error and not the member for Frontenac.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I have not the figures, and many of those buildings were erected a long time before I had anything to do with the department. Is, or is not this the case, that my hon. friend first takes what he calls the contract price, which may be for the building alone, and then he adds on, to make the total cost, plumbing, heating, electric lighting, possibly sidewalks and everything of that kind, which were not in the original contract, and the cost of the site also. Is that not so?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, that is not the case. The main item in the contract is the price for the erection of the building. Invariably there is added to that, contracts for lighting and heating. How the cost, over and above what one would apparently think would cover everything in the construction of the building, reaches these extraordinary figures, is more than I can understand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The details are all given.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is a difficult matter to understand. Take, for instance, the cottages erected at Kingston. Now at that time the hon. gentleman asked for $57,000 for those buildings. The year previous he had obtained $55,000, he then adds $75,000, which made $112,000, and he estimated at that very time $96,000. Yet he obtained from this House $112,000 for buildings which his own estimate said would cost $96,000. We inquired about the details, and why this extra money was required? That was the question which I put to him at the time the building was erected. The roof was on, the glass was in the windows, the heating apparatus was installed, the lighting fixtures were up, the walls were plastered, everything was done, yet he wanted something like $22,000 after all that had been done. I questioned the hon. gentleman in that case, and finally got him to agree to hand back $20,000 of that money. But to go on with drill halls and armouries, let me give a few instances in the province of Ontario. For Belleville drill hall, the contract price was $108,682, and the actual cost $138,511, or 27 per cent above; Brockville drill hall 30 per cent above the contract price; Woodstock 27 per cent above the contract price, not including the cost of the site which was $6,120; Kingston 28 per cent above, not counting the site, which cost $18,300; Hamilton 66 per cent above, not counting the site, which cost $6,000. That was in 1889. But let me give the history in connection with Hamilton from 1896 down. I find that the contract price was $254,276, over a quarter of a million, and that the cost was $317,937, or 25 per cent above the contract price not counting $29,000 paid for the site in 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why should my hon. friend count the site? The site is not in the contract.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not count it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then why mention it? You give the impression that the cost of the site should be added to the contract.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will explain why I mention it. I am showing that the actual cost is very much in excess of the contract price. I merely mention the cost of the site where I give it so that any person who is interested in the total cost of the building may add the cost of the site to the final cost, not that it makes any difference in comparing the contract price with the actual cost. Dundas cost 92 per cent more; Cobourg 44 per cent and the cost of the site was $6,000; Burford 57 per cent; Brantford 92 per cent. In St. Catharines the contract was awarded for the building in October 1900, to one William Garson.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the percentage that the hon. gentleman gives for Cobourg?

Mr. EDWARDS. 44 per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was the contract?

Mr. EDWARDS. $39,945.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman must be wrong there. What was the actual cost?

Mr. EDWARDS. $57,526. I think that will figure out to 44 per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman may be right, but that is not my information.

Mr. EDWARDS. The contract was awarded in St. Catharines in 1900, to William Garson for $56,000. This contract was cancelled and Garson was presented with $7,288. A new contract was entered into in June, 1904, with Sullivan and Langdon for $79,829, and with others for $14,940, or a total of $94,769; in other words the contract in 1904 was 69 per cent higher than the contract with Mr. Garson in 1900. The total cost of this building, including the $7,288 presented to Mr. Garson, was $110,534, or 97 per cent higher than Garson's contract which was cancelled in 1900. Now, the minister, a few minutes ago said that these buildings were erected before his time. The buildings that I have referred to have been constructed since the year 1896. For the buildings under construction I may say that the contracts total up $686,906, there has been spent on them $730,744, and it is estimated that it will take $72,905 additional. That will make $803,649 to which you will have to add the cost of the sites amounting to $22,200. If you summarize this you will find the following results: Take five drill halls or armouries in the province of Nova Scotia; the contract price was $234,830, and the actual cost $312,885, or 33 per cent. Take three in New Brunswick, and they cost 32 per cent over the contract price; seven in British Columbia show an advance of 33 per cent; two in Manitoba 33 per cent; two in Quebec an advance of 23 per cent; fourteen in Ontario an advance of 27 per cent. So that, I think that I have substantiated my statement that the actual cost of drill halls or armouries erected in this country ranges from 25 to 75 per cent higher than the contract price. There are 33 buildings, the total contracts amount to $1,800,- 866, and the actual cost is $2,315,148, or an average of 28 per cent above the contract price. Then, it is interesting in connection with this matter to note that the drill halls and armouries constructed between the first of July, 1896, and December, 1909, have cost this country for construction and sites over $2,049,510. We have in Nova Scotia 166 officers and 1,812 non-commissioned officers and men making use of these buildings. If you average this cost up to see what we are paying for the whistle it means that for every officer in Nova Scotia who is making use of these buildings for drill purposes this country has paid out over $1,900 since 1896 while for each non-commissioned officer and man it cost $174. If you apply it to British Columbia the average cost per officer is $2,557 and for each non-commissioned officer and man $233 for buildings erected in that province. So, you may go through the whole lot. If you take the country over it averages nearly $2,000 for each officer and nearly $186 for each non-commissioned officer and man.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to this you might put in the salaries of the engineers and firemen employed in only fifteen of these buildings and they will total $132,720 in fourteen years. The charge for maintenance alone from 1896 to 1908 is $76,103. We speak about the cost of militia and defence for this country. It is a matter of some $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 a year. But that is not all. You have to take in addition to that the cost of these expensive buildings, the cost of the men employed in looking after them, the cost of maintenance. Then, you have to take the millions of dollars which are being spent annually for militia and defence and put that along side the meagre, paltry sum of money which is voted by this government in the interest of agriculture. It is something that should call for strong protest from every hon. gentleman in this House. I take this opportunity of entering my protest as one member against this sort of thing. We have too much fuss and feathers. As one hon. gentleman on the other side of the House said, I think, last year we pay too much for red tape and gold braid in this country—entirely too much and I think the money, to a large extent, is worse than wasted. I think I have amply proven the assertion which I made in the House the other day, and I reiterate my argument that no dependence can be placed upon the estimates of the cost of these buildings as brought down by the Minister of Public Works.

Invariably when the final cost of the building is ascertained we discover that the estimated cost is so entirely different from the real fact, that there is no reliance to be placed on the the estimates of cost presented to the committee by the minister. When the Minister of Public Works challenged the correctness of my statement that the actual cost of buildings was from 25 per cent to 75 per cent in excess of the contract price, he did not know what he was talking about, and vast as his knowledge is there is something left for him to learn. Complaint is sometimes made that the estimates are not rushed through fast enough. That is not because the members on this side desire to prevent necessary expenditure of public money, but because they have learned from bitter experience that no reliance can be placed on the figures presented by the minister, and so we have to look at all these estimates with doubt. The Minister of Public Works tells us that a certain building will cost so much and that is all it is going to cost, and he tells us of the large business interests of the locality and we feel that the country can afford to spend that much money there, but ultimately we find that this building costs anywhere from 25 to 75 per cent, and in one case 123 per cent, more than the contract price, which he led us to believe would be some indication as to the total cost of the building. If the architects employed by the minister do not know what they are doing let him hunt around for men who can tell somewhere near what a building is going to cost and then he will not be subject to all this criticism.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret that my hon. friend with all his desire to enlighten me has not succeeded further than to lead to the belief that the hon. gentleman does not measure very carefully his words. I have always found in my experience that though you may not be able at the moment to probe all the statements made by a witness, or a member of parliament either, it is a very good rule to endeavour to pick out just a few things and show the inaccuracy in regard to these, and then leave it to the jury or to the public, as the case may be, to judge as to what reliance may be placed in every statement made by such a witness or member. The hon. gentleman stated the other evening that drill halls and armouries generally actually cost from 25 to 75 per cent in excess of the contract price. Every one who listened to my hon. friend understood that this statement had reference to the work which was actually supposed to be included in the contract, and his argument was that through some fault of the chief architect or a desire to help the contractor, or looseness in the administration of the department, the contractor was able to draw from the public treasury from 25 to 75 per cent more than he was entitled to receive under his contract.

Mr. EDWARDS. I made no such statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a fair inference to draw from the statement made by the hon. gentleman. He told us that the building at Baddeck cost about 35 per cent more.

Mr. EDWARDS. Fifty-nine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a matter of fact the contract price for Baddeck was $2,250, and the contractor was paid to the very cent what the department had agreed to pay him by the contract without adding one cent, but the cost of the fittings for that building was $1,500, which made the total cost of the building, including fittings, $3,750.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was the final cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $3,750.

Mr. EDWARDS. And here is your own statement from your own department saying that it was $5,975. This would show that we cannot get reliable figures from your department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes many other things besides the contract and the fittings.

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not say what it included.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but the hon. gentleman gave the committee to understand that through some fault of the chief architect the contractor had received from 25 to 75 per cent more than he had contracted to do the work for.

Mr. EDWARDS. My statement was just as clear as the English language could make it, namely that the actual price was from 25 to 75 per cent above the contract price, and that is all I said. I gave the contract price in each case as the department gave it to me, and I gave the actual cost as the department gave it to me, and I worked out the percentage. The hon. gentleman is at liberty to draw on his imagination, as he is apt and able to do, for all the inferences he sees fit, but there are the figures. The hon. gentleman did deny the correctness of these figures but he did not speak of my drawing any inferences at that time; he wanted the committee to get the idea that the statement I made was not a fact.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I certainly do deny not only the correctness of the figures given by the hon. gentleman, but I deny the inferences he sought to draw.

Mr. EDWARDS. They are your own figures.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman repeats to-night that these buildings cost from 25 to 75 per cent more than the contract price. Does that not mean that there was a contract price for the building, and that the contract price included the fittings and the heating and the plumbing and everything else. Surely that must be the inference from his language. Take the case of a building where the contract is simply for the building of the walls and the plastering and putting in the windows and doors, and if that contract was for $40,000, and there was a contract for the fittings and the heating, and the plumbing, and the sidewalks, and electric wiring at $10,000, would it be fair to argue that the building had actually cost $10,000 more than the contract price of $40,000. Surely the cost of the fittings, heating and plumbing, and improvements of the sidewalk must all form part of the contract price; yet my hon. friend has not included them in his statement of the cost of the Baddeck armoury. The cost of the building was $2,250, and the cost of the heating $1,500, making a total of $3,750.

Mr. EDWARDS. I got the figures from the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend gets from my department a statement of the cost of the armoury, showing that the contract was $2,250, and sundry work, which would be the heating, $1,500, a total of $3,750. That is exactly what was agreed to be paid to the contractor. Then the hon. gentleman has added to the record of the cost all the repairs which were made to the building from year to year from 1901, when it was erected, down to the time he got this statement, that is, for a period of nine years, and he tells this committee that that shows that this building has cost a vast percentage beyond the contract price. Does my hon. friend think that is fair?

Mr. EDWARDS. Is that not the report from the hon. gentleman's own department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The statement read by the hon. gentleman showed a total expenditure to date on the Baddeck armoury, including site, of $5,975.62. This return was given to the hon. gentleman on April 7, 1910, and he included in it the cost of the site and all the expenditure incurred on the building between the time the contract was let in 1901 down to 1910. Now, let us look at another; take the Cobourg armoury. I charge the hon. gentleman in that case also with adding into the expenses of construction all the expenditures for repairs on that building from year to year from 1903 down to 1910, to make a total of $57,526. Let us take another—Woodstock, Ont.; he said that had cost a very large percentage above the contract price. I charge the hon. gentleman with having done the same thing there—with having taken all the expenditures in the way of repairs upon the building during a number of years after the work of construction was ended and added them to the contract price. The figures which the hon. gentleman had before him ought to have satisfied him, if he had given any care whatever to an examination of them, that the effect of his statement would be to mislead the House as to the actual cost of the building. Take Woodstock, N. B., the contract price there was $31,980, and the total amount paid $37,306—a difference of about $5,000. The hon. gentleman there also added the expenses during two years at least after the building was completed, and when work was being done which had nothing whatever to do with its construction. Later on, when the hon. gentleman's figures are printed in 'Hansard,' it may be worth while still further to expose the fallacious statement he has made and show that he is entirely mistaken with regard to the cost of these buildings.

The reason I took the liberty of differing with him the other day was that since I have been Minister of Public Works, I have traced with a good deal of care the cost of the different buildings erected under the supervision of the chief architect of this department, and I knew there was no such additional amount of expenditure on construction as that which was stated by the hon. gentleman. And notwithstanding the assertions which are sometimes cast by hon. gentlemen opposite and by some others on the chief architect, I desire to say—and I say it with the greatest possible pleasure—that from the experience I have had of that gentleman, I can testify to the great industry and care he always displays in the most important work of his department. He has a great deal of responsibility in connection with the erection of public buildings; and from the observation I have had of his work, I am able to say that he does it faithfully and well. In Mr. Ewart, appointed long before this government came into power, as chief architect, the public has a most valuable servant, one who gives honest, faithful and diligent service to the country.

Mr. EDWARDS. If I had not the opportunity of being in this committee before and of listening on many other occasions to the Minister of Public Works, I might be surprised, but I must confess that I am not one whit surprised at the argument he has just made. Last year I asked for a return with regard to public buildings, drill halls and armouries. What I asked for, was this:—

At what places in the several provinces, armouries and drill halls have been erected; the total cost of the site in each case, and when and from whom purchased; the contract price of each building, and to whom and when the contract was awarded; the total cost of each building; in what places armouries and drill halls are being constructed at present, and the cost of the site, from whom, when, at what price the contract was awarded, and the names of places where other armouries and drill halls are to be built by the government in the near future.

That question bears on its face its object, namely, to obtain information as to the amount of money expended on drill halls and armouries. I do not think there can be any doubt as to its meaning. When I stated the other night that the actual cost was from 25 per cent to 75 per cent in excess of the contract price, the hon. gentleman—speaking of Baddeck—said that I included in that cost all that had been expended from 1901 down to the present on the Baddeck armoury. Well, I stated precisely what the hon. gentleman himself gave me. It was from the return furnished by his own department that I took my figures. In that return which I hold in my hand, there is no detail of the expenditure at Baddeck. All it states is that the contract was awarded to Joseph Queen for $2,250, and sundry work awarded to P. H. McFarlane at $1,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It states a little more. It gives the total expenditure to date.

Mr. EDWARDS. And it gives the total expenditure to date at $5,975, and that is precisely what I took into account.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to ask a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The minister rises to ask a question, but the hon. gentleman who has the floor can refuse, if he desires.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am going to accord to the hon. minister exactly the same courtesy which he did to me, and will ask him to wait until I get through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will suit me perfectly.

Mr. EDWARDS. And suit me better. In referring to Baddeck the minister said that I included everything in this expenditure, even the site. Will he allow me to inform this committee that, according to the return furnished by his own department, the site did not cost anything, but was a free gift. I might also draw an inference from that statement of the minister. I might say that it was his intention to try and make this committee believe that I was endeavouring to include some amount for the site of the building when I had a return showing that the site cost nothing.

Take the Woodstock armoury which happens to be the next one on the list. I included in the contract price all that was given in the return sent down by the Public Works Department. Under the heading of contractors, it says that the building was let to Williams & Fisher for $31,980; for heating apparatus, the contract was given another firm for $2,700; then there was a contract for electric wiring and fixtures $1,500. Then there was furniture and fittings $3,500. I included all these in the contract price and they brought the price up to $39,680. One would naturally think that when the contract was awarded for this building for $31,980, and when the contract was let, as shown in this return for heating apparatus, and when the contract was let for electric wiring and fixtures and fittings and furniture, you had pretty nearly all that the building could cost when completed; and I concluded that these covered the whole contract price. I made up the amount, from the statement given in the return sent by the hon. gentleman's own department, as $39,680. And I pointed out that notwithstanding everything appeared to be covered by the contracts I have mentioned, the building cost $54,257 or 36 per cent more than the total amount of all those various contracts I have enumerated. Could I have been fairer? Had the minister furnished me with the details of expenditures throughout these various years, I would have given them to the House; but the hon. gentleman's department furnished me with the expenditures for the different years and they amounted to $54,257, which I gave to the House and on which I based the excess of cost over the contract price.

We all know that these large buildings are not constructed in one year. The hon. gentleman makes quite a hullabaloo about the fact that this expenditure was spread over several years. Why does the hon. gentleman do that if it is not meant by him as a herring drawn across the track to distract attention from the facts of the case? The point I endeavoured to make, and it nettled the hon. gentleman, as he showed quite clearly, was that the actual cost of these buildings was from 25 per cent to 75 per cent in excess of the contract price. It is up to the hon. gentleman, if he is not satisfied with that, if he wants to draw inferences, and if he thinks the House draws inferences from that, to make it clear where the rest of the money went. It is not up to me. I take the return as provided by him. It is up to him to draw inferences, and to explain them to the House and to the country. There is a feeling in the country that these buildings are costing much more than they should, that men are given a contract on a building and that extras are thrown in before the building is completed to the extent of thousands of dollars. In the neighbourhood of Kingston we have a clear instance of this in connection with the construction of cottages for soldiers. After everything was completed the hon. gentleman asked this committee for $20,000 more than was required to complete the building, when even the glass and fixtures were in and it was only after drumming that point at him that he consented to give the $20,000 back, to reduce the vote, and now he tries to distract attention from the real point I am making by implying that I am throwing out insinuations. I am not dealing in insinuations to-night, but in figures furnished by the hon. gentleman's department, and it is up to the hon. gentleman to explain what inference is to be drawn from this sort of thing. The same thing applies to Woodstock, N.B., and Cobourg. He found fault with my statement in regard to Cobourg. That expenditure I gave, also, from the statement furnished me by the hon. gentleman's department. I included in the contract, which was for $35,550, also the contract for fittings, $4,395, making the total contract, which I had a right to suppose, from the documents furnished me by the hon. gentleman's department, amounted to $35,945. I take the hon. gentleman's own statement in regard to the expenditure of 1902 to 1909, for various amounts paid as the building progressed, and it appears to be $57,526.25. I repeat that it is not up to me to explain the details; I have not the information to explain them. If the hon. gentleman sees fit to draw on his imagination for inferences and to conclude that the people of this country think that these buildings are costing from 25 per cent to 75 per cent more than the contract price, and that the money might be spent more carefully, it is up to him to explain it. The inference does exist in the public mind, and the public are not satisfied with the way he handles their money. It is all very well for the minister to undertake to twist a man's statement, but in this case he is occupying the unique position of endeavouring to twist and distort a statement furnished by his own department in answer to an order of this House. We all know how able and capable the hon. gentleman is in turning around a corner, but it has kept him busy this evening to twist around and get on both sides of this question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I charge against the hon. gentleman, and what I reaffirm against him is that, having in his possession a return furnished by the Department of Public Works, which gave on its face the total expenditure to date down to 1910, when that return was asked for, he did not inform the committee that the figures he gave included all repairs and expenses of every kind and description, which had been made on these buildings subsequent to the completion of the contract. That is the charge I made, that is the charge I repeat, and that is the charge from which the hon. gentleman cannot escape. There is no question about that. When the hon. gentleman says that this department gave him a return, so it did, but what did it profess to give on its face? It gave the total cost incurred in connection with the building to date. The hon. gentleman has been here long enough to know that when I am asked in regard to public buildings, as, for instance, a day or two ago in regard to the post office building at Montreal, the total cost to date, I gave the cost from the construction of the building 40 or 50 years ago, not only during the time of construction, but down to the very time when my memoranda were made up in 1911. My hon. friend has been here long enough to know, he must have known, that such a return gives not only the cost of construction, the contract price, the fittings, heating, cost of site, all repairs to the building right from the very first down to the present time, whether it is 5, 10, 20 or 50 years. My hon. friend ought to have known that the figures he has given as to the total cost of the work, which he says exceeded the estimate by 25 per cent to 75 per cent, included all these items.

Mr. EDWARDS. I beg pardon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They do, whenever the site has been paid for, they do.

Mr. EDWARDS. I beg pardon, they do not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say they do. That return gives the total expenditure upon the buildings to date.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understood the hon. gentleman to say I included the cost in my percentage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not the hon. gentleman give the total expenditure to date from that statement?

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not include the cost of site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site is included in every case.

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not include the cost of site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did the hon. gentleman deduct the cost of site?

Mr. EDWARDS. I certainly did not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me take the case of Woodstock, N.B.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the cost of the site there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not a question of what difference it makes, because in either case it might be $6,000. What I charge against the hon. gentleman is that he had in his possession a return made by the department, showing the total expenditure to date, which the hon. gentleman either knew or ought to have known includes every item of cost of every kind or description, from the time the survey of the site was undertaken, including advertising, including legal expenses, including contract price, including fittings, heating, plumbing, electric wiring, sidewalks, any sewerage there might be, and all repairs from the day when the construction was completed right down to the time when the return was moved for ; and, the hon. gentleman sought to lead the committee to believe that that represented the cost of the building which was supposed to have been included in the original contract price. That is the charge which I make against the hon. gentleman, and that is the charge from which he cannot escape. Now, take the case of Woodstock. The hon. gentleman gave the total cost as $73,091.78, yet the hon. gentleman had before him a statement showing the expenditure beginning with the year 1902 running down to the year 1909, and I say that included, as the hon. gentleman ought to know, the survey of the site, the cost of the site, the legal expenses, the advertising, the contract price for the building, the fittings, heating, plumbing, electric wiring, sidewalks and all repairs which were made subsequent to the time the construction was finished down to the very day the return was moved for. But, the hon. gentleman sought to make this committee believe that this amount of $73,091 represented the cost which ought to have been included, and which was supposed to have been included, in the original contract price for the building.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is anything misleading in it, the parties who are responsible for it are those who furnished the return to this House. It does not appear, so far as I could learn on the face of the paper, that there were repairs included in that from time to time. We know for a fact that the erection of these buildings extends over many years. While I have been in the House I have watched the progress of the erection of buildings year after year. After the buildings are commenced it is sometimes three, or four or five, six or seven years before they are finished. The answer given to the hon. member's question including the contract price and cost of building complete, does not say down to what date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does say to this date.

Mr. SPROULE. That return was furnished by the minister's department and by his orders ; then I say that he above all others is responsible for misleading the House and the country, if there is anything to mislead in the statement that has been furnished here. My hon. friend only read out the return as given to him, and if the returns which we got are not reliable, then it behooves the Minister of Public Works to be more careful in what he presents to this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend from Frontenac ought to be very thankful to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) for trying to strengthen the defence he has endeavoured to make against the charge I have brought against him, and successfully, I think. The hon. gentleman says that the department is responsible. What would the hon. gentleman think if I were to assure him, as I have already assured the committee, that that return gives the figures showing the expenditure year after year, and shows the total expenditure down to the year 1910, when that return was moved for. It includes the cost of the site. The site in every case is included in these figures, and the hon. gentleman put that in and added it to the total figures, by which means he sought to make a comparison against the original contract price.

Mr. EDWARDS. Unfortunately for the argument of the Minister of Public Works in most of the cases which he saw fit to cite, the site did not cost anything. However, in comprising the total expenditure with the contract price, I took the figures furnished by the hon. gentleman's department, and proved what I stated the other day, that the actual cost was some 25 to 75 per cent in excess of the contract price. In the return thus furnished to me, in at least two-thirds of the instances which I gave this evening, the site cost nothing ; so that part of the hon. gentleman's argument falls entirely to the ground.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Taking the first item, Baddeck harbour : The contract price is apparently, $2,250, sundry work, $1,550, making $3,800. Taking that from the total expenditure, leaves $2,225. What would that be for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That could be arrived at by looking at the Public Accounts. I am not supposed to have that information with me. But that includes the total expenditure, the survey of the site, the legal expenses, advertising, salary of the clerk of works, travelling expenses, contingencies, repairs, everything right down to date.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the hon. gentleman think these small items would amount to the contract price of the armoury itself?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, running over that number of years.

Kingston post office, addition to building and alterations, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of making a two story addition to the building, 55 x 35 feet ; also to make alterations in the interior fittings, &c. The total estimated cost of $25,000. Additional accommodation is considered by the Post Office Department to be urgently required.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to ask the minister why no work was done on this building last year although an appropriation was made for the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We did not reach it in the ordinary course last year. The plans have now been approved by the Post Office Department and it is proposed to go on with the work as speedily as we can.

Mr. SPROULE. You must have reached it in some way because there was an expenditure of $2,000. What was that for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the estimated expenditure up to the 31st March next.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that there was a vote for this some years ago of $7,785, while the expenditure is only going on now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have been getting along as well as they could.

Kingston Royal Military College, covered drill hall, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The word 'covered' is a misprint and it should be struck out.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is this a new building or an addition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A new building.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When did it first appear in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was in last year and I am inclined to think that it was in previously.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is a drill hall?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, a drill hall for the cadets.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think I can advise the minister that it was not in previously. I have the proceedings for 1908. Would the minister kindly explain if the old drill hall was burned down or carried away by a flood?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. I may say that I am substituting this for a building which did appear. There was a skating rink which appeared and I decided to drop that item and put this drill hall in for the cadets.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have the estimates for 1908 and I will read the Kingston items for the information of the minister:

Kingston Royal Military College, new quarters, additional amount.

Kingston post office, addition to building and alterations to fittings.

Kingston military buildings, repairs and renewals to blocks A, C and E, Tete du Pont barracks, &c., inclusive of electric ligthing, &c.

That is all the Kingston buildings. I do not know which of these items relates to this vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was in last year at all events.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is being gone ahead with contrary to the pledge the minister gave in 1909, and it does not come within the exception of fire or flood. Will the minister explain why this is being gone ahead with in preference to buildings that were in the estimates for 1908?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had some items for the year 1907-8, I am quite sure. I do not profess to keep all these things in my head, but my recollection is that we dropped some two or three items for Kingston which did not seem to be quite so urgent as this drill hall and we put in an amount for the drill hall. This seems to be very urgent. Kingston Military College is doing a splendid work for the young men of the country, this is urged by the college authorities and we do not think that we ought to postpone any longer in providing for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am afraid the minister is not very accurate. All that vote in the 1908 estimates appears since as being pursued. I see nothing dropped. Is the minister going to assert that all that is necessary to any one of those later items is simply to assure the committee that they appear to be very urgent and consequently he has decided to go on? If so, the pledge which he made in 1909 was just so much chaff and straw.

Mr. SPROULE. If they were urgent and parliament voted the money last year why did he not spend it?

Mr. EDWARDS. There is another question that I would like to put to the minister in connection with this building. I notice that the item is for $15,000. I will not be very certain that I am correct, but I think I am correct in saying that we were informed earlier in the session that any militia buildings, the cost of which was not to exceed $15,000, were supposed to come under the supervision in their construction of the Minister of Militia; that is, that the Minister of Militia was supposed to be capable of looking after the construction of a building that did not cost more than $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost is $29,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN.

Mr. EDWARDS. Of course, that puts it beyond the intellectual powers, I suppose, of the Minister of Militia. We have to assume then that he is only capable of looking after the construction of a building that does not cost more than $15,000, but when the cost exceeds $15,000 it requires a person of the mental calibre of the Minister of Public Works to look after it. In that case, there are many buildings which, in my opinion, might be constructed for $14,000 or $15,000 which will cost a little more than that, so that the Minister of Public Works will get the handling of them.

Kingston Royal Military College, additional dormitory accommodation for cadets, $30,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is this a new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a new building. My hon. friend no doubt, has heard of the demand for this. I visited the Royal Military College, I saw the officer in command and he called my special attention to the necessity for another dormitory for the students of the college. He said that they needed that perhaps more than anything else in connection with the college buildings.

Mr. EDWARDS. How many cadets are in attendance at that institution?

Mr. HARTY. 104.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand the minister to say that this is also a new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Was it in the 1908 estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is two.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this building to cost when it is completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost is $75,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The contract is not let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the plans out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not ready yet.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume it will be let by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Where have the students been sleeping previous to this time—out in the air?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a dormitory, and it was first thought that we might provide the requisite accommodation by putting an additional roof on the existing dormitory, but the militia authorities, or Lt.-Col. Crowe, the commander, strongly urged the erection of a new building, stating that to put an additional story on the present one, would not afford the accommodation which it is desirable and absolutely necessary to give the students.

Mr. SPROULE. When was that building erected and how much did it cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a very old building erected by the Imperial government.

Mr. SPROULE. What has become of it, or what use is going to be made of it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is there still.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not suppose that it would move away. What use is it going to be put to ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will still be used as a dormitory because I do not imagine the new building will give all the accommodation that is needed and I presume that they will still use the old one.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the number of cadets been increasing from year to year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is so represented. There are 104 at present. If they had additional accommodation they would get more students. It is stated they are absolutely without the accommodation necessary for the comfort of the students.

Mr. SPROULE. If you accommodated 104 students last year and there is no increase this year why do you require such a large expenditure as this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not able to accommodate many of the applicants.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they accommodation for an extra number now in the buildings other than the dormitory?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Mr. SPROULE. We are to spend $78,000 to accommodate an additional number of students and there is no one to tell us where that additional number is to come from.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Militia Department, through Lieutenant Colonel Crowe, asks for accommodation for 100 cadets additional. I do not know how many additional students they would be likely to have immediately, but my information is that if the accommodation were provided the number would rapidly increase. The Kingston Military College is exceedingly popular among the people of this country and it has turned out a great many good citizens who have taken high positions in Canada and in all parts of the world.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard from time to time criticisms of the Kingston Military College. There are times when it is popular and times when it is unpopular.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think you hear much criticism now.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not say that the Royal Military College does not give a good education and turn out very good men, but there is an opinion in the country that everything connected with that military college is very expensive and that a great deal of what transpires there is nonsensical. There is a strong feeling in the country that a great deal of the money we invest there is wasted or worse than wasted.

Mr. CROTHERS. We are told that the estimated cost of this dormitory is to be $75,000, and our experience would lead us to believe that the cost will be $100,000 when we get through with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see why you should think that.

Mr. CROTHERS. The minister tells us that the building is to accommodate 100 additional students, and if that be so then we are to spend $1,000 per sleeping room per student. Some short time ago we erected sixteen little houses there at a cost of $7,000 a house, for the accommodation of labouring men who were receiving $25 a month in actual cash pay and some perquisites which brought their pay to perhaps $40 a month. The gross rental is supposed to bring about 10 per cent of the cost of a building, and here we are providing houses worth in rental $700 a year for men whose pay all told is about $500 a year. I have had acquaintance with Kingston for a great many years and I speak of what I know when I say that there were buildings there down near the water for the accommodation of these men, which we tore down and erected these new ones, and the old buildings were much better than the average man in Canada is living in to-day. It seems to me that in this case it would strike the people of Canada as very extraordinary that we should pay $1,000 each for sleeping apartments for 100 students.

Mr. CROSBY. In what way are we interested in these students of the Military College?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend can hardly expect me to reply to that, when for a great many years both parties in this country have recognized that the Kingston Military College is an institution which it was desirable in the first place to establish and afterwards to maintain in a state of efficiency. In this college our young men receive a military training and also a training in engineering which is of the very highest value to them and to the country also. In this country, which is developing rapidly, where important public works are being undertaken, it is most desirable to have coming out from year to year a number of young men who are thoroughly trained in engineering work. However, I am not here to-night to advocate the desirability of establishing the college. It has been established and has been maintained from time to time by both political parties. All will agree that if it is desirable to have the college, it is desirable to afford the requisite accommodation for the youth being educated there.

Mr. CROSBY. That does not answer the question I asked. I understand that there are 104 students there now, and I want to know if this building is to be erected to provide accommodation for another hundred students. I quite understand that the institution is for the purpose of educating young men as civil or mechanical engineers. If it is, there are many other places where it is possible for young men to get that education. I understood the minister to say that these young men were making good in other parts of the world. I do not see why we should be training young men to go to other parts of the world unless we want to get rid of them. There is a very strong demand for post office buildings all through this country, and the $100,000 which is the estimated cost of this building, would provide many post office buildings in towns and villages throughout the country where they are much needed. You will find very few of these Kingston military college men among the officers of the standing army which we have in Canada. In most cases they send across the water for officers. I would like to ask why the Minister of Militia, who would be particularly interested in this building, is not here to explain the necessity for it if there is any. Has the hon. Minister of Public Works any idea why he is not here and where he is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know personally, but I saw by the papers that he was at his home in Nova Scotia. If my hon. friend, or any other hon. gentleman desires the Kingston items to stand, I am quite willing to let them stand until the Minister of Militia is here.

Mr. CROSBY. I noticed that the Minister of Militia was attending a public meeting on the 18th of this month in Kings county, assisting to elect his friend, Mr. Wickwire, to the local legislature. I think the position he occupies demands his attendance here and not in Nova Scotia trying to elect a man whom the people refused to elect a short time ago. I would like to ask him how long it takes at Kingston to fit a man to be sent out equipped with spurs and feathers. As the Minister of Militia would rather be in Nova Scotia helping in the elections, I would say, let him stay there, we can do very well without him, and let us strike out this item and use the money in building post offices in a number of towns and villages throughout the Dominion which are entitled to them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As the Minister of Militia is not here, we will pass over the Kingston items.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like in the meantime to get some information. Is this to be a separate building or to be attached to some other building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be a separate building.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Of what material will it be constructed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A brick building with stone finish.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Have the plans been prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What will be the size of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 130 feet in length, 96 feet in front, and two wings each 35 feet wide at the rear.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How many stories?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three stories at least, besides the basement.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is there any limit now as to the number of students who will be taken into the college?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The accommodation is so limited that they cannot take any more at present. That is the reason given by the department for this new dormitory, which will give accommodation for 100 additional students.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has there been a rule in force restricting the number of students to one hundred?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, except that the accommodation is not sufficient for more than 100—that is, sleeping accommodation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is there not a restriction as to the number of students taken in the college each year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, being unable to accommodate more than 100, they would have to refuse applications.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the minister know, of his personal knowledge, that such is the reason why they refuse more students?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not, of my own knowledge, but that is what I am informed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understand there is a restriction for other reasons. I understand that a student can go to that college and be educated in the profession of a civil engineer without any reference whatever to his being adapted or required for military purposes thereafter. I understand that each student is given his education in that college regardless altogether of his services being made use of afterwards from a military standpoint.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not undertake to give information as to the military side of the college. Does not my hon. friend think that when I have said I would let the item stand until the Minister of Militia could be here, it would be better to await his coming before asking these questions?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If the hon. minister will answer those questions, we might let the item pass.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might give erroneous information. My information would only be hearsay.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understand that a student in that college graduates as a civil engineer, and then, when he leaves the military college, he is under no obligation to serve the state as a military man? If that be the case, I do not know that we are justified spending money for that purpose, especially under the head of a military building. Personally, I do not think I would be justified in voting for this resolution. As the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has said, this seems to be a very exorbitant sum that we are going to pay. It amounts to $1,000 per bed for sleeping accommodation for the 100 students who go to that college, many of whom do not go there for the military training, and for the purpose of serving the state in a military capacity, but simply to receive an education which will enable them to earn a livelihood in other professions. Does the $75,000 include furniture, fittings, electric lighting, or heating—

Mr. PUGSLEY. The $75,000 is estimated to include everything. I have not a detailed estimate, but that is what the chief architect tells me.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I suppose the government own the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. From our experience in the past of the actual cost of public buildings, especially at Kingston, as compared with the estimated cost, we are justified in saying that this will probably cost $100,000, or $1,000 per student. What guarantee have we that, even if we put up this building, the 100 extra students which it will accommodate will apply to be accommodated? Has the minister any assurance to that effect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have nothing beyond the request for the building.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The request from whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the commanding officer, Lt.-Col. Crowe.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. At the instance, probably, of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty).

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not heard from him at all.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think we are not justified in voting that amount for that purpose. I therefore move that the item be struck out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let the item stand.

Mr. HARTY. If I may offer a few words in explanation, I can give some information regarding the position of the college and the necessity for the building now under consideration, and the committee may then have a little better knowledge of the situation than at present. I have been slow to take any part in the discussion for the simple reason that while the college is called the Kingston Military College, as a matter of fact it is not in Kingston. It is situated in the riding of Frontenac, and I presume that the information which has been asked by various members might very properly have been furnished by the hon. member for that riding (Mr. Edwards) did he see fit to give it, rather than by myself, who represents a riding which is barely adjoining that in which this college is situated. The college, being in the county of Frontenac, in the village across the bay from Kingston, is usually known by the name of the Kingston Military College, no doubt from the fact of its being close to the city, which is much larger than the village of Barriefield, some three miles away, where it really is. The situation regarding the building is this: The wing which has been in use as a dormitory ever since the college was opened, was built by the Imperial government long years ago, and the late Alexander McKenzie was foreman of its construction. That building has been in use as a dormitory ever since the college was opened. For the past four or five years every room, which should be occupied by a single student or cadet, instead of being used only by one, has to accommodate two or three, and I believe, in some few instances, four. This made it necessary for the Commandant of the institution to ask the government to provide an additional building to be used as a dormitory, so that every cadet could be housed and cared for in a room of his own. Whether that is advisable or not is a question for the House to determine, and it is not for me to offer any opinion upon it. Regarding the question put by the hon. gentleman who last spoke (Mr. Middlebro) as to whether the hon. member for Kingston had asked the Department of Public Works or the Militia Department for the building under discussion, I can answer very readily. I desire to inform that hon. gentleman that from the time I have had the honour of a seat in this House until now I have never troubled the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Militia for a grant or appropriation of any kind in connection with that college. It is entirely a military institution, and as such is managed and controlled by the staff of the college, and whatever may be the necessities of the college, they are communicated to the Department of Militia directly by the college authorities, and the member for Kingston, from the day he entered this House until now, has never had occasion to interfere or ask for anything in the way of buildings or other improvements to be put into that institution.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) devoted some little time and attention to the question as to whether or not a military institution of the kind which exists in the county of Frontenac, and not in Kingston, is desirable. That is an issue altogether foreign from the one the House has under consideration when it is asked to vote a sum necessary to provide a better dormitory for it. I have not heard the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) take any exception to the establishment of a somewhat similar institution in his own city to be used for naval purposes. I am not competent to discuss the question as to whether a naval institution somewhat after the lines of the military college in Kingston is a desirable and necessary thing for the city of Halifax or, for that matter, for the Dominion of Canada, but it struck me at the time the gentlemen were criticising the military college that it was rather a question of taste for them to throw cold water at an institution which had been in existence since 1876 while at the same time the hon. gentleman from Halifax and the people whom he represents were reaping the benefits of the establishment of a similar institution to provide for the future naval requirements of the country. I trust that the House, in dealing with the question of the amount that has been asked for this dormitory, will deal with the question on its fair merits and make it clear whether or not they approve of the use of the old stone frigate now used as a dormitory with from two to four boys in each room, or whether they think it desirable to have a new building erected, which in my humble opinion should be done, so that each cadet at the college will be able to have quarters of his own. I am sorry the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) disappeared a few moments before I rose to explain to the House why I felt it undesirable on my part to make explanations in regard to this particular institution, which I thought more properly should come from him. That is a matter of opinion for him. I think he is as well posted on the whole situation and its requirements as I am, and I was slow to offer any information to the House regarding it because I feared I should be trespassing on his preserves.

Mr. CROSBY. The hon. member misquoted me altogether. I did not speak with regard to the doing away with the military college at Kingston, I simply spoke of the effect of making additions; of going on increasing militarism in Canada when I thought that we required the money for something else. If I indicated anything else I did not intend to do so.

Mr. HARTY. Perhaps I misunderstood you.

Mr. CROSBY. So far as the naval college in my own city is concerned, I think it is something like the college in Kingston, it is a college with nothing for the people to do after they get through it. We have a naval college but no navy up to the present day, and there does not seem to be much hope of getting one either under present conditions. I do not propose to discuss that question, the people in Halifax are prepared to deal with it and we have already put ourselves on record in regard to it. I have put myself on record in regard to the naval college and the navy and I feel something the same about that, as about the extension of the college at Kingston. If there is an estimate in this book that should be struck out, it is this very estimate that we are on now and I am quite prepared to vote that it be struck out. The Minister of Public Works tells us he cannot build a post office here or there, although requisitions have been in for years and years, and members on both sides have requested public buildings, yet we find that money is being thrown into an institution which the Minister of Public Works tells us is turning out engineers. There are other colleges in Canada turning out engineers, both civil and mechanical, and why should we set ourselves up in competition with these colleges all over the Dominion, which we are so glad to have. The military college has 104 students and we are now prepared to extend it and make room for another 100. I wonder what the farmers and other electors will think of this. If we go on spending $100,000 every two or four years on this college, we will soon have more fuss and feathers in Canada than anything else. That is not what I am here for. I am here to try and do the best I can for the people of Canada and not to go on constructing additions to the military college at Kingston. I have every desire and wish that this item should be struck out of the estimates.

Item allowed to stand.

Listowel public building, $18,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the erection of a public building in Listowel. The population was 2,693, nine years ago. It is growing well, the revenue from the post office is $6,000 odd, $30,000 were paid for money orders issued and $25,000 paid. The plans are now being prepared.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another example of what I spoke of, either loading up the estimates with items that it is not intended to go on with, or that are not needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been no unnecessary delay. An order in council was passed in March, 1909, to purchase a site. In the ordinary course we had to prepare plans and there is a vast deal of work in the department, hon. gentlemen do not realize how much. The architects are constantly at work and are doing the best they can. There has been no unnecessary delay.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What is done by the department after the plans are prepared and entirely approved of by the other departments concerned ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The specifications are sent to the Printing Bureau and advertisements issued calling for tenders.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How long does it take the Printing Bureau to print the specifications ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends on how busy they are, sometimes three weeks, sometimes four, sometimes longer.

Mr. SPROULE. In 1909-10 there was $15,000 put in for 1911. It says $1,100 lapsed. That is not put in the column where revotes of an estimate voted the previous year, that is 1909, are put. Therefore, it must have been at least 1908 or 1907 that this was voted. Now, I presume that an application has been made for a building, that the government reached the conclusion that a building was needed there. They asked for a vote in 1906, or 1907, or 1908. They got a vote of $1,100 for some purpose, presumably for buying a site, but nothing is done with it. That has been carried on up to the present time, and now we are providing for 1912. This same item, therefore, must have been under consideration for three or four years. Either the building was needed or it was not needed. If it was needed, and that conclusion was reached by the House, then the building should have been erected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we get the plans and specifications prepared, we may let the contract before the 31st of March this year. We can let it on the vote of last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Why didn't you let it before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because we did not get ready.

Midland public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide a public building for a post office and customs purposes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will admit that this is another building that was not provided for at all in the 1908 estimates. What explanation has the minister to offer for urgency, except that the constituency is represented by a Liberal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The explanation is that a public building is much required in Midland. Midland has been growing very rapidly of recent years, and it has outgrown altogether the present accommodation, which is in a rented building. The revenue last year was $9,000, while the customs duties were $56,734. Money orders issued were $59,556 ; money orders paid, $23,654. Value of exports, $341,000 last year ; imports, $1,065,528 ; goods entered for consumption, $1,121,561. Midland is forging ahead with wonderful rapidity. It has a great blast furnace, it is doing a very large shipping business, it has extensive coal docks, a large number of lumber mills. It would be simply a crying shame to leave Midland any longer without a public building. That is why I have made an exception to the rule, and am providing a new item for a public building at Midland.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That of course will always be the explanation. Now the minister knows as well as I do that that absolutely is not contemplated by him in his statement made on page 1300 of the 'Hansard.' If that kind of explanation is to be accepted, that the town is thriving and the accommodation is inadequate, then the minister's statement meant nothing, and he knows it. The cases he gave were these, there might be others, but they would need to be of the same character, that is to say, there may be cases such as a public building being burned down, or a wharf carried away, which might create an exception. Now that may have been all the minister thought of, but if the statement meant anything, it meant that there would be no exception except such as those given, not because representations had been made that the town was growing, that there were blast furnaces in it, that the revenue of the post office was increasing, that the citizens asked for it. That can be said anywhere you like. Now the minister must know that his statement meant nothing at all, if he is allowed to get out of it by the explanation he offers now. But I tell the minister that the people of this country at the time placed some reliance upon it, and I hope he has not got past the point when he is at least anxious that this committee will take him at his word.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have only to say this, that absolute good faith is being kept with the various cities and towns of this country in respect to which provision was made in the estimates of 1907-8. Have we left out any of these? Not one, except where further inquiry satisfied us the building was not needed in the public interest. We are carrying everything out in good faith. What does my hon. friend complain of? Does he complain because we are going to erect a public building at Midland, having the revenue at our disposal? Does he mean that we shall not go on with a public building in Midland, when we are not interfering with the erection of a public building anywhere else? I cannot understand what he is complaining of, what he is grumbling about. How am I guilty of bad faith? Surely I have a perfect right, when I am providing for these other buildings, to have regard to the necessities of people in other sections of the country, and to submit to my colleagues an amount for other public buildings. If my hon. friend means to say that a public building is not as much required in Midland as a public building at Portage la Prairie, or some other place, let him say it. But he knows that Midland is as much entitled to a public building as the town from which he comes, if not more.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am not comparing the necessities of Midland with the necessities of Portage la Prairie, and the minister knew I was not. I wanted to know whether the minister meant what he said when he uttered the works spoken on page 1300. I do not know anything about Midland. But what I am complaining of is this : The minister says the word 'initiate' means asking parliament for a vote. Now, if it means that, he is violating his word given to this committee on page 1300. He says he should not be debarred from going ahead in other places. He told the House that his department is overworked. What is it that overworks his department? The placing of estimates before the committee, the preparing of plans and specifications to get ready to go on with the work. Now, he gave this committee his word that he would not overwork his department in order that he might go ahead with other work. We relied upon that. It has not been carried out. That is what I complain of.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister gives as a reason why he goes on with this building that there is urgent need for it because Midland is a growing place. That very same argument could and would have applied with equal force at any time during the last ten years. Midland has been an active, growing place for ten years, and the need was as great six or seven years ago as now. But there is a strange coincidence in the fact that the proposal is made now when Midland or the constituency in which it is situated, is represented in this House by a friend of the government, whereas, up to the last parliament, it was not. That seems to be the explanation of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to object to the item?

Mr. SPROULE. No, I am not objecting to the item, but I am objecting to the argument which the minister advances as justifying the item. We find this very same condition of things in other counties as well. Take the county of Wellington, if you like. There are two post offices that we have voted money for to-night within three miles of each other. Two more post offices are being built in that same county. Another is hardly finished yet, making five in the one county that happens to be represented in this House by supporters of the government. Go to the adjoining counties, and how many do you find? In many of them not one government building. Midland was needing a post office for years, but so long as it was represented by a member of the opposition, in the judgment of the minister, and his friends there was no necessity for a post office. No money could be voted for it and none was asked. But, it turned out entirely different when they managed to get a supporter in this House from that riding. That, I take it, is a more correct argument in very many of these cases.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If a public building is needed my hon. friend ought to be glad that we are at last acceding to the wishes of the people.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to it at all, but I am objecting to the argument that the minister advances in support of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The item is all right although the argument may not be good.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Touching upon the same point brought forward by my hon. friend from Grey, that is the explanation of all this change, the minister told us a little while ago that 95 per cent of the estimates for this year were in the 1907-8 estimates leaving only 5 per cent for new buildings. I have gone through the list of new buildings in Ontario, there are thirty, as I make it, and eight were not in the 1907-8 estimates. But the most remarkable fact of all is that the whole eight are in constituencies represented by supporters of the government. Surely the thing is too transparent to last any longer. Surely the minister sees that it is utterly impossible to convince any sensible person that he is not making his department a party, political tool. If the minister wishes me to give the list of the eight I am ready to do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not anxious.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not wonder that the minister is not anxious.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I don't want to waste time.

Mr. CROTHERS. It seems to me we have no sufficient information respecting this $10,000 to justify our consenting to its passage. How much information have we so far? We have been told that it is proposed to erect a public building in Midland, and that Midland is a thriving town. That is not sufficient.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You have the population, the postal revenue and the customs revenue.

Mr. CROTHERS. Did the minister give the population ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave all that.

Mr. CROTHERS. Then it is my fault that I did not hear it. But, there are several other items of information. We are asked for $10,000. None of us understands that $10,000 is asked for the building. We are not told whether it is to be a mere post office or a customs house, or whether it is a combined post office and customs house, whether it is to cost $50,000 or $100,000, whether it is to be built of wood, or brick or stone, or what the dimensions of it are. We are not told even what the minister proposes to do with this $10,000. If the minister, when he approaches one of these items, would make a full and frank statement of the conditions in the town concerned, the necessity for the building, what the government are paying now for the use of a building so as to show whether it would be advantageous to the country, instead of continuing to rent, to erect a new building, setting forth the necessities for it, the amount of money that he proposes to spend, the dimensions of the building that he proposes to erect, whether it is to be for a post office or a post office and customs house, presenting a frank statement of that kind, I fancy, instead of waiting until two or three members of the opposition shy questions at him that he would get these items through much more expeditiously. Perhaps the minister would give us some more information of the kind that I have indicated now, and if he will, as far as I am concerned, I will assist the passage of this item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should be very glad indeed, if it would do what the hon. gentleman believes it would. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask questions for the sake of getting information. They would not like me to give all the information voluntarily, because it would leave them with nothing to question me about. They might think that I was taking too much time just as in the case of Chesley. I had just begun to explain a few of these things when hon. gentlemen called out 'carried' because it happened to be in a constituency represented by a member of the opposition. They might cry out with equal impatience if I were to go into details with regard to constituencies represented by my friends. In the case of Midland, I gave all the information which any reasonable man would require. I stated that Midland was a rapidly growing place, I stated the postal revenue, I stated the customs revenue, the imports and the exports which are very large, I stated that there was a great necessity for a public building, I referred to the different industries and I was ready to answer any question that any hon. gentleman would put to me. The population nine years ago was upwards of 3,000, and I suppose it is 5,000 or 6,000 to-day. With regard to the $10,000, we propose to use that for the purpose of buying the site, and with regard to the cost, we propose to erect a good, substantial building which will be a credit to the town and the country and we hope that it will not exceed $35,000. We intend to use it for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any offer for a site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there were some negotiations.

Mitchell public building, $18,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the erection of a public building at Mitchell. The site has been purchased, plans and specifications are prepared and we are now ready to advertise, which we expect to do in the course of a very few days. The population nine years ago was close on 2,000 the revenue last year was $4,079, customs duties. $96,689, money orders issued $25,540 and money orders paid $15,240. Mitchell is a thriving town in South Perth.

Mr. SPROULE. There was an expenditure last year of $2,000 on this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site was bought from the municipal corporation for $1,600, and we expect to spend $2,000 by the 31st of March.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the building to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From $20,000 to $25,000. It is for a post office, custom house, inland revenue and armoury for B Company of the Perth Regiment.

Mr. SPROULE. Then a portion of the cost should be charged to the Militia Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not charge anything to the Militia Department for armouries.

Mr. SPROULE. You ought to, or your bookkeeping is fallacious. When we ask for a return giving the expenditure on Militia and Defence, are we to understand that the cost of such an armoury as this would not be charged to the Militia Department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If a return showing the cost of armouries were brought down I should think that the proportionate cost of such a building as this devoted to military purposes ought to be properly included.

Mr. SPROULE. It should be charged to Militia in the public accounts, or else the public accounts are wrong.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We erect custom houses and post offices and do not charge them to these departments.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but you keep a separate account for expenditure on Militia and Defence, and unless such a cost as this were included the expenditure would not be correctly represented.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is worthy the consideration of the Minister of Finance as to whether a proportion of the cost of such an armoury as this might not be included in the account for armouries. I will mention the matter to the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Finance, and see what they think about it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is Mitchell one of these thriving, growing towns we have heard so much of to-night?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mitchell is a thriving town.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nine years ago it was 1,945.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the population now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would have to ask the Chairman as to that.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If I thought that was a subject of legitimate inquiry from the Chairman I would ask him myself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I will have to decline to answer any questions when I am in the chair, but if it is the desire to have information which I only possess I shall leave the chair and ask another hon. member to take my place.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I realize that very fully, and that is why I did not ask you.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As the Chairman is the only one I thought able to give the information with accuracy, I thought I would refer to the matter in an undertone, which is different from addressing Mr. Chairman across the floor. I do not know the population of any of these towns from year to year, but my information is that Mitchell is quite a thriving place

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister give the source of his information?

Mr. McKENZIE. What difference does it make? Is not this trifling with the time of the House?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The files in my department say that Mitchell is a progressive town surrounded by a thriving agricultural country, that it is a station on the Grand Trunk railway, has four churches, thirty stores, four hotels, five mills, two banks, two newspaper offices.

Mr. McINTYRE (Deputy Speaker). I am now quite prepared to give any information that may be asked with regard to Mitchell, which is in the riding I represent. When the item was last before the committee I told the committee that Mitchell is a thriving town like I think every other town in western Ontario. It is improving in its general appearance, in the wealth of its people, in the buildings it possesses, rather than in population. Mitchell is in the centre of an excellent agricultural country as are all the towns in Ontario, west of Toronto. It supplies an unusually large district with its mail matter, as I know from having sent to my constituents letters in much larger numbers to that town than to other towns in proportion to its size. The present post office is in a small crumbling building. I have had occasion to go into it on some wet days about the time of the distribution of the mail, and I can assure you I left as rapidly as possible. The town has needed a new post office very badly for some time. At the time the town itself requested a post office, there was no available building, as the shops were all filled in the business street. The desire for a public building was manifested by the people themselves. It is usually thought that the request for a public building comes from the member for the riding, but in this case I will be telling you the absolute truth when I say that when I was informed that the board of trade and the council of that town were moving in the matter, and had requested a public building, I regretted the fact. Not that I thought Mitchell was not entitled to a public building, when taken in comparison with very many such towns that had such buildings, but I realized that just such a situation as this would arise, when it is not very pleasant to have to explain the particular demands of your own place and have it compared with others that perhaps feel just as keenly they should have a public building, and may perhaps be able to show on the face of it better reason for having a public building. I realize that Mitchell is no larger than some other towns that have not public buildings, but when I consider that the present office is quite inadequate and even unwholesome for the officials who have to be there, and that it was not possible for the department or the postmaster to find a suitable building, and that the town was so interested as to offer a portion of its market square for the new building, I think I was justified in doing what I did, not on my own initiative or that of the town, but in reply to a letter from the department asking what my opinion was—expressing the opinion, as I did, that under the circumstances the town of Mitchell was entitled to a new building at a reasonable cost.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In order that I may not be misinterpreted, I wish to say that I was anxious that the accuracy of the minister's information as to all these towns should be put to any test that I was able to bring to bear. I have no doubt that what the hon. member who represents South Perth says is correct, in so far as it is a presentation of the facts. I make no statement as to the relative merits of Mitchell and other places; I do not know enough about it for that; but I think I do know enough about it to say, what the hon. member refrained from contradicting, that Mitchell, instead of growing and on that account deserving consideration, is on the down grade so far as population is concerned. I only wish, if the minister's inspiration has been the member for the riding, that he could in every other case rely on it as well as he could on that of the hon. member for South Perth.

Mount Forest public building, $18,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The tenders for this building have been called for, to be received on the 30th of this month. The site has been bought, having a frontage of 60 feet on Main street, by a depth of 100 feet on Wellington street. The object is to provide accommodation for post office and customs purposes, also armoury accommodation for E company of the 30th regiment, Wellington Rifles. The estimated cost of the building is $25,000. The postal revenues last year amounted to $4,924.33, the money orders issued were $20,113, and money orders paid $26,516. The population by the census of 1901 was 2,019.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was the cost of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $3,600. It will take about $25,000 in addition to the cost of the site to complete the building.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Pugsley, House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, January 23, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the government to expedite the preparation of two returns that have been very much delayed. One was ordered by the House November 22, 1909, for papers connected with Mr. Preston's mission to Japan, and the difficulties that arose there. The other was ordered on December 6, 1909, concerning expenditure in connection with the Imperial Defence Conference of 1909.

GIFTS TO MINISTERS OF THE CROWN.

Mr. BOYCE. I beg to give notice that tomorrow I will move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, to wit, the receipt by ministers of the Crown of gifts of money in the form of testimonials and of the reported contribution to such testimonials or testimonial of a sum of money by one William R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, now in liquidation, said Travers having been convicted and being now under sentence of six years' imprisonment for having falsified returns to the government and for theft of the moneys of the bank.

CONSTRUCTION OF PIER AT HALIFAX.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals whether the government propose to proceed without delay in the erection of the promised pier on the Cunard property at Halifax, acquired by the Department of Railways and Canals for that purpose. I make this inquiry because it is represented to me by the Halifax Board of Trade that the present terminal facilities of the Intercolonial railway at Halifax are very inadequate, and because that body believes that the congestion of outgoing steamers during the present season will be very great. I shall send the Prime Minister a copy of the representations I received.

QUESTIONS.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron):

1. Were any representations made to the government or to any member thereof, or to any official of the Finance Department, by the Canadian Banker's Association, or any private individual, during the past two years, in the nature of a warning as to the instability of the Farmers' Bank of Canada?

2. If so, what action was taken by the government for the protection of the shareholders and depositors of the said bank?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1 and 2. So far as the records of the Department of Finance show no such representations were made during the time referred to. The transactions in which the Farmers' Bank, through its General Manager, became implicated in December, 1909, with the First National Bank of Syracuse, New York, and the alleged obligation of the Farmers' Bank on a deposit receipt for $150,000 in such connection, were brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, but beyond suggesting the irregularity and impropriety of these transactions there was nothing in the correspondence received to indicate that the Farmers' Bank, by these transactions, came into a position of 'instability.' The whole matter was fully discussed in the Toronto press at the time and the shareholders and depositors had ample notice of the character of these transactions. Ultimately, the Department of Finance was credibly advised that there was no obligation of the Farmers' Bank in the above connection, and that the alleged deposit receipt was returned to the bank. The correspondence in this connection will form part of a return now ordered by the House. The only evidence, during the time in question, from which the 'instability' of the bank might be inferred and which came directly to the attention of the Finance Department, was in the form of broker's lists of market valuations. In these lists Farmers' Bank stock was quoted as equal to half its paid up value and lesser sums. These indications of value were circulated by brokers for the information of the public including shareholders and depositors in the bank. Upon information of this character no action which the government could reasonably and legally take would improve the position of the shareholders.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. THORNTON:

1. What is being done by the government to prevent the assets of the defunct Farmers' Bank from being sacrificed or eaten up in useless and unnecessary legal expenses?

2. What steps are being taken by the government to ascertain the value of the Keeley mine property, an asset of the defunct Farmers' Bank, and whatever value there is in it being preserved for the benefit of the depositors and shareholders?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. When the bank suspended payment last month a curator, appointed under the provisions of the Bank Act, took possession of the assets of the bank for the protection of the rights and interests of the creditors and shareholders. Until a liquidator, appointed by a competent court, displaces the curator that officer remains in charge of these assets for the purposes aforesaid. The shareholders, the persons primarily in interest, and the creditors who may be said to have a secondary interest so far as measure of loss is concerned, at a meeting convened a few days ago, have taken steps, pursuant, to the law as made by the parliament of Canada, to express their wishes in regard to the liquidation of the bank. The proceedings at this meeting will be reported according to law to the court, and the court will carry out the wishes so expressed and appoint a liquidator, nominated by the persons mentioned, whose duty it will be, under the direction of the court with due regard to all interests, to realize upon and distribute the assets referred to. Under the law the courts and not the government have the power to interfere and secure proper distribution of assets.

2. The duty of ascertaining the value of the Keeley mine properly belongs to the liquidator. The shareholders and the creditors in whose interests he acts may, under the provisions of the law, make known their wishes to him in this behalf for his guidance.

FRENCH CENSUS COMMISSIONER.

Mr. PAQUET:

Does the government intend to appoint a French Census Commissioner, as in 1901?

Mr. FISHER. For several of the census districts French commissioners will be appointed. The duties performed by the chief commissioner and assistant to the chief commissioner in the previous census will, in connection with the census of 1911, be performed by members of the permanent staff of the census and statistics office.

ARCHIVES HISTORICAL WORK.

Mr. PAQUET:

Mr. FISHER:

1. A regular staff of copyists is employed permanently in England and in France under the general direction of Mr. Biggar.
2. No regular agent is employed to make researches in the United States, but papers are copied in various places from time to time. The Rev. P. M. O'Leary is engaged in research work in the province of Quebec, and arrangements are being made for another representative in the province of Quebec, and special copyists are employed from time to time in Quebec and Montreal. Mr. Laidlaw, of the archives branch, is frequently sent out on a mission of investigation in the province of Ontario, and the government of British Columbia co-operates with the archives branch in research work. Research work is also carried on by means of correspondence.

Mr. MURPHY.

Mr. PAQUET:

1. Has the commission on historical manuscripts, established in 1907, completely discontinued its work?
2. What was the object of this commission, how many meetings have been held and why has it discontinued its work?

Mr. FISHER:

1. No.
2. The Historical Manuscripts Commission was established to act in an advisory capacity to the Minister of Agriculture and to co-operate with the Dominion archivist in collecting, arranging and rendering accessible those original sources from which alone an adequate knowledge of Canadian history may be gained, and in studying the best means of increasing the usefulness and opportunities of the archives branch.

Six meetings were held, but all the members were not able to attend the last three meetings for various reasons.

Mr. PAQUET:

Has the government sent to the archives building all the documents, charts and plans of the different federal departments, that are not protected against fires?

Mr. FISHER. The government has removed to the archives branch several thousand volumes of the older manuscripts and over three thousand maps and plans. There are possibly other documents that may be removed to the archives, but a large number of old plans are retained by the departments, as they are required for current business.

5. Does the government consider that because of this investigation now being held, it has done its full duty towards the men and relieved itself of all further responsibility, under the agreement or understanding had between the railway company and the government on 2nd August last, when the strike ended?

Mr. KING:

1. It was suggested by the government that a reference to some third party of the cases of those employees who had not been reinstated, would appear to be a fair means of settling the points in dispute between the parties. Judge Barron was mentioned as a person well qualified to act in such a capacity. The employees of the Grand Trunk railway expressed their willingness to have outstanding difficulties so referred; the company did not express a like willingness.
2. To the first part the answer is 'Yes'. To the second part the answer is 'None'.

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. By contract.

3. Yes.

PREVENTIVE OFFICERS.

Mr. MADDIN:

What are the duties of the preventive officers at outposts, and on whose recommendation or request are such officers appointed?

Mr. MURPHY. The duties of preventive officers of customs vary according to the locality in which they are employed. At outports, preventive officers are usually engaged in the prevention of smuggling, and in checking, manifesting and delivering bonded freight. They are appointed on the recommendation of the Minister of Customs.

CUSTOMS REVENUE IN GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY.

Mr. MADDIN:

What was the total amount of customs revenue received or collected during the last ten years at the following ports in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia: Sonora, Port Hilford, Oyster Ponds and Country Harbour?

He said: A return has already been brought down this year giving the units so that two of the three columns are already provided for. I would like to have all included in one return.

Motion agreed to.

DREDGING IN RIVIERE DES PRAIRIES.

Mr. WILSON (Laval) moved:

For a summary report on the state of the dredging works executed in the Rivière des Prairies up to the present time, making specially known the length, depth and width of the canal dredged up to date and the amount expended on this work.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House at any length on this motion. The object of the motion is explicit enough on its face. Last year there was a certain amount of money voted for this purpose. I understand that some work has been done and the object of the motion is simply to get a summary report to find out what the progress of this work has been. I move that this motion be concurred in.

Mr. MONK. Before the motion carries, I would like to call the attention of the House to a motion of which I have given notice. It is No. 26 on the Order Paper and it calls for the same particulars in regard to this work. I think it would suit the convenience of all concerned if that motion were carried at the same time as that of my hon. friend, because it merely asks for the report of the engineer upon that work, a report having been ordered by the Department of Public Works before the work was undertaken, some details as to the cost of the work executed, and an estimate of the cost of the work remaining to be done. It is very much in the same direction as that of my hon. friend. I suppose there would be no objection on the part of the right hon. the Prime Minister to allow my motion to pass at the same time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. None whatever, if my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson, Laval) is agreeable. The hon. gentleman's motion will be called during the day.

Mr. MONK. Then, I would like to say a word on my hon. friend's motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good; I have not heard my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) for some little time.

Mr. MONK. It is a very useful work and it is absolutely necessary that it should be completed. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), has already intimated, in answer to a question put here, that there is an item in the estimates for this year, regarding the completion of this work. It is only finished part of the way to St. Vincent. It would be essential that that work should be prosecuted to completion from the point where it is at present finished. Up to Cartierville or Bord-a-Plouffe, there is very little work to be done, I am informed. The bulk of the work is from Bord-a-Plouffe up to the Lake of Two Mountains and my information is that that part of the work is neither very difficult nor very costly. It would be of immense advantage to the daily increasing population along the shores of that branch of the Ottawa if this work were completed this year, as I hope it is the intention of the minister to do. If the cleaning of the river were completed it would be at once possible at certain seasons of the year to navigate from the Lake of Two Mountains down as far Cartierville, and to convey building material which is very expensive to bring in to that neighbourhood by any other than a water route. I strongly urge upon the Minister of Public Works to see that the work already begun, is completed this year. Furthermore, on both sides of the shores of the Back river a great number of Montreal people reside during the summer months, and the completion of the work contemplated by opening up the navigation of the river for the smaller craft, would enable them to reach the lake of Two Mountains. Montreal people pay such a large proportion of the Dominion taxes that I do not think it is asking too much of the government to undertake this small expenditure, so as to make the river navigable for small craft all around the island of Montreal. I therefore, join in the purpose of my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson), and earnestly ask the government to see that this work is completed without fail during the coming season. My motion is:—

For a return showing—

1. A copy of the report of the engineer who made the survey and estimate of the Back river or Rivière des Prairies, between the eastern end of the island of Montreal and the Lake of Two Mountains, in the province of Quebec, in view of the dredging and deepening of said river.
2. Details of work and expenditure to date in connection with the said work.
3. Estimate of cost of work remaining to be done and especially of the part between Bord-à-Plouffe and the Lake of Two Mountains.

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). There is no objection at all to bringing down the returns in answer to these two motions. With regard to the work of dredging the Rivièr des Prairies, I may say that when the matter was first brought to my attention, it was urged that the channel would give accommodation for motor or pleasure boats. I was not greatly impressed with the argument in that respect, but later on my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson), had a delegation wait upon me and presented petitions, and made very strong representations that the improvement of the Rivieré des Prairies would be of great advantage to the farmers, in enabling them to get their produce to market by water at a much cheaper rate than by rail. On the invitation of the hon. member for Laval, (Mr. Wilson), I had the pleasure of visiting the Riviére des Prairies last summer, and I would say to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that I was greatly impressed with the advantages which would accrue from opening up and improving the waterway between the St. Lawrence river and the Lake of Two Mountains. I concluded, however, that the work from the lower end of the Riviére des Prairies was more important, or rather that the improvement there was more urgently required than further up. That is where the work has been done during the past season. I have asked from parliament a further amount to continue this work and the intention is, as the money is provided, to continue the work up to the Lake of Two Mountains. However, for the present, I think the work on the lower part of the river is the most important, because it will afford better means of communication between that very beautiful and very rich section of the country, and the city of Montreal, than if we had begun the work further up in the first instance. But later on, as the moneys are provided I expect to continue the work right up to the Lake of Two Mountains.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand the minister to consent to the adoption of these two motions ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, to each of the two separately.

Mr. MONK. I would like to say that years before my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson), came to this House, and when he was still in the lower latitudes of provincial politics, I asked the chief of the Public Works department to carry out this work for the reasons which have been indicated now by my hon. friend from Laval. I repeatedly invited the Minister of Public Works to visit the locality, but I have never found him disposed to accept my hospitality. However, the advantages of, and need for, this work were pointed out by me more than 12 years ago.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval). I quite agree to a certain extent with the remarks of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), except on one point. When this appropriation was asked last year for the dredging of the river, it was my intention and as a matter of fact, I communicated it to the Minister of Public Works, that the work should be started at both ends of the river. But, when we came to commence the work, we found we could not find a suitable dredge for operations on the upper part of the river, and it was thought better to start from the main channel of the St. Lawrence, so that the navigation which formerly existed between St. Vincent de Paul and the St. Lawrence river, might be restored. I understand from the minister, that there is no objection (if the report of the engineer which is already in the department, endorses it), that the work will be completed next year if possible.

Mr. MONK. May I ask my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson), as he seems to have taken an interest in the matter, if the work on the upper part of the river is going to be carried out next year ?

Mr. WILSON (Laval). I understand that depends on the report of the engineer. My information is, that there was not a suitable dredge to start the work at the Lake of Two Mountains, and as a matter of fact, the only dredge adapted for the work, is known as an orange peel dredge—

Mr. MONK. This looks like a lemon.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). That dredge can work in five or six or eight feet of water, and the dredges which belong to the department of Public Works draw too much water to go down by the rapids.

ADMIRALTY COURT, N. S.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (N. Cape Breton), moved for:—

A copy of all correspondenec between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Nova Scotia in respect to the proposed change in the constitution of the Admiralty Court for that province.

He said: For some time past I have been endeavouring to get better facilities than now exist for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court in the province of Nova Scotia. As far back as 1905, when I first entered this House, I had some negotiations with the then Minister of Justice, now Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and the then judge of the Admiralty Court, and my proposition at that time was to form of the island of Cape Breton, or its four counties, into a separate admiralty district. However, something happened at that time to prevent that proposition from being put into operation. The then Minister of Justice and the late judge of the Admiralty Court both agreed that it was necessary to improve the situation in the province of Nova Scotia, and to give us better facilities for the administration of the business of that court than we then had. In the year 1908 a resolution was introduced by the present Minister of Justice proposing, by a Bill to be brought into the House, to give us the kind of facilities we desired. The Bill reached only its first reading on the 12th of March, 1908, and for some reason or other was dropped, and nothing much has been said about it since. Now, in the province of Nova Scotia, as well as in the other provinces of the Dominion, there is a great deal of work for this court to do. My complaint is not that the law and the practice are not properly administered by the court now dealing with it. We have had, for many years, a very capable gentleman at the head of that court, at one time Minister of Justice of this Dominion and afterwards chief justice of our own province. He is not now, however, actively engaged in the administration of that court, but we have in his place one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, who is well able to discharge the duties devolving upon him. What I am complaining of is not the law, or the practice of the court, but the difficulties in the way of starting proceedings in the court. It will be observed, on looking at the Admiralty Act of this House, being chapter 141 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, that there is only one place in each province where a writ of the Admiralty Court can be issued—for the province of Ontario, in the city of Toronto; for the province of Quebec, in the city of Quebec; for the province of Nova Scotia, in the city of Halifax; for the province of New Brunswick, in the city of St. John; for the province of Prince Edward Island, in the city of Charlottetown. It is well known that in Nova Scotia the admiralty business extends to every part of the province. In the port from which I come there entered last year over 1,000 large steamers, only a few ships in number below the number that entered the great national port of Montreal. Out of this business there arise a great many complications, requiring the speedy exercise of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court, and it is exceedingly awkward to be obliged to go to Halifax, a distance of some 300 miles, before we can issue a writ. The proceedings against a ship are different from those against a person. A writ against a ship can only be issued while the ship is within the bounds of the province, and often claims are lost to seamen, salvers and towboats because the ship against which the claims lie gets out of the jurisdiction before it is possible to get the papers from Halifax to proceed against her. It is not necessary to argue that it is not sufficient to have good laws, but that it is equally necessary to have those laws executed and to have the court so placed that litigants can with ease and expedition take proceedings. The purpose of my moving this motion is to ascertain from the government whether it is proposed to take any steps to correct the difficulty of which I complain, so that we shall have in connection with the Admiralty Court exactly the same opportunities of getting into the court as we have in the other courts of the provinces. Although not a very old barrister, I remember when we had only two sittings of the Supreme Court in the county of Cape Breton. To-day we have seven sittings of that court, which shows how its business has enlarged. While the business of the Admiralty Court is enlarging in the same way, even more rapidly proportionately, we have in that court the same condition of things that we had 150 years ago, at the time the court was established. I think that every hon. member of this House will acknowledge that to be obliged to go 200 or 300 miles to issue a writ in any court in this Dominion is rather behind the age, and that we cannot move too quickly in bringing about better conditions which will enable litigants more speedily to get their remedies in this court, which has exclusive jurisdiction in many matters.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the motion which the hon. gentleman has placed upon the Order Paper, there is, of course, no objection to the production of any such correspondence which may exist. The subject which my hon. friend has discussed in making the motion is one of very considerable practical importance. I may say at once that, so far as I am concerned, I have not in the least degree changed the opinions which I formed after a good deal of consideration of this matter, and which I stated to this House on the 12th of March, 1908. I then introduced a resolution, which was considered in Committee of the Whole, declaring the expediency of making better provision for the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction within Canada, and upon that resolution being adopted in committee, I introduced a Bill founded upon it. That Bill was not pressed to a conclusion, but was dropped at the end of the session. The only reason, so far as I am concerned, why it was not pressed to a conclusion was the very strong objections to what was being proposed, which, on that occasion, were given utterance to by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House for whose opinions I had the most sincere respect. The general feeling, as I gathered it from the course of that debate, was against making any change, and, indeed, some hon. gentlemen expressed themselves as entirely content with the existing condition of things in the different provinces of the Dominion, and as thinking that no improvement could be made upon it.

I am sorry that I was not convinced by anything I heard on that occasion, and the three years which have passed since, with the experience they have given me of the working of the present system, have confirmed the opinion I then had formed, and which I then strongly expressed, namely, that existing conditions in the administration of justice in admiralty matters in Canada are simply intolerable. My hon. friend has instanced one circumstance which, if it were the only one, would seem to me now, as it did three years ago, to call for a remedy. Action has often to be taken and taken speedily. It is often a denial of justice to a man and the loss of his claim unless he can assert it, in admiralty matters particularly, with promptness and despatch, as the proceedings are frequently issued, not against the individual but against the ship, with the object of fastening the claim upon something tangible and securing judgment against the thing itself. A ship is here to-day and gone to-morrow. Wages to the men may be due; they may be unable to collect unless they can attach the ship and force payment in that way of what is justly due them by the owner. The ship may be a foreign vessel, it may be in port in Canada only a few hours, and unless you can serve process against the ship while she remains within Canadian jurisdiction, there may be no redress. But, under the present system proceedings cannot be instituted except through the post. You cannot attach by telegram, so that no matter where you may live, you must have your papers issued from the centre of the province to be served in the port, a process which may take 48 hours or longer. In the meantime the ship is gone, and your claim with it. That position of matters, if there were no other reason, did seem to me to call for a remedy ; and I thought that in the proposition to transfer the admiralty jurisdiction from the Exchequer Court to the various provincial courts, I had found a remedy. I was not able to understand the violent—I think I am not using any too strong a word—opposition which this proposition created among lawyers generally in the different larger centres in Canada where legal business would no doubt be more or less affected by the change I was proposing. That change, I must remind hon. gentlemen who were here at the time, was what I have just intimated, namely, simply the transfer of the admiralty jurisdiction to the various provincial courts so that every judge of a Superior Court in every province would be clothed with that jurisdiction, and so that a Surrogate Court or local judge, having authority to act in Superior Court matters, could be found in the person of every county judge in every province. The effect would be that any one desiring to institute proceedings in admiralty matters could do so in his own county town with the same facility with which he could issue an ordinary writ of summons for the enforcement of an ordinary civil claim. But the proposal was infringing upon what had been supposed to be a greater or less extent, the private preserves of this, that or the other local practitioner. It was interfering with existing conditions and vested rights ; it was going to take from a judge in one province or another some exclusive jurisdiction and hand that over generally to all the Superior Court judges in that province ; and accordingly every friend of every judge who would be effected by this measure, and every friend of every local registrar or clerk of court who might see a possible diminution in his salary was in arms against the suggestion ; and with regard to the local legal practitioner who at present is compelled just because he cannot do this admiralty work in his own town or office, to send it to some provincial centre, all of the professional men in those provincial capitals were at once arrayed against this proposal which might cut into their incomes. It was too radical, it was wrong from every point of view, and the opposition offered both by friends and opponents in this House being all but unanimous, I was forced to think, in deference to the body of opinion which seemed to be against me, that I was altogether too radical and had better cease my efforts to become a law reformer. The Bill accordingly was not gone on with, and matters have remained in the same condition since 1908 that they were in since 1891. I think that is entirely anomalous, and if it appears, from the course of the present debate, that the views of hon. gentlemen in this regard have changed, and that a measure such as I introduced three years ago would now receive a different sort of welcome, I shall be only happy to introduce it over again and submit it for consideration. I should like to say further that if it be remembered how the admiralty jurisdiction which is now vested in the Exchequer Court, came to be conferred upon that court, I think it will be seen at once that in the suggestion to transfer that jurisdiction to the various provincial courts there is nothing really radical. Until 1891 the admiralty jurisdiction had been exercised in Canada by the British Vice Admiralty Court, which might be, and probably was in each case, presided over by a judge who possessed by appointment from Canadian source the ordinary jurisdiction of Superior Courts in Canada, but who received his admiralty jurisdiction from England, and the procedure differed materially, when he was sitting in admiralty from that which existed when he happened to be sitting in the ordinary discharge of his duties as judge of a Canadian court.

In 1890, the imperial parliament passed its Act by which jurisdiction was conferred upon colonial legislatures, if they saw fit, to alter that state of things; and the language of the Imperial Act passed in 1890, contemplated, as it seems to me, that the admiralty jurisdiction which was then being taken away from the British vice-admiralty courts in the various colonies should be conferred upon the ordinary courts of each colony by colonial legislation. Let me read the section of the British Act, which, as it seems to me, has that plain intendment:

> Every court of law which may be declared to be a Court of Admiralty shall possess this jurisdiction, or, failing any such declaration, every court of law which has in a British possession original unlimited civil jurisdiction shall be a Court of Admiralty.

Now, if we had made in Canada no declaration on the subject—as we did make by the statute of 1891—then, under the Imperial Act, this admiralty jurisdiction would have gone just where by the Bill of three years ago I proposed to send it—namely to those courts which had original unlimited civil jurisdiction. But in 1891 this parliament passed its Act by which admiralty jurisdiction was conferred upon the Exchequer Court, the only federal court available, not a court which possessed original unlimited civil jurisdiction, but a special statutory court which had then recently been established. If any one will take the trouble to examine the debate upon that occasion, he will see how much Sir John Thompson, who was then Minister of Justice, hesitated. He states his hesitation with perfect candour to the House and with how slight an overbalancing of the hesitation it was he came to the conclusion to try the experiment of conferring this jurisdiction upon the new Exchequer Court which, at that time, I suppose—indeed, I know—had not very much of Exchequer Court business to do as compared with what it has to-day.

Well, now, the practical working out of the course which was then taken is that there must be a deputy of the judge of the Exchequer Court in certain localities in the Dominion. These deputies of the exchequer judge are local judges in admiralty of the Exchequer Court. There is one in Nova Scotia, one in Prince Edward Island, one in New Brunswick, one in Quebec, one in Ontario, one in British Columbia and one in the Yukon. The other provinces, having no maritime business to do, have never had a local judge in admiralty appointed. Now, in each of the provinces where there is a local judge in admiralty, the individual holding the position is either one of the judges of the Superior Court of the province or a retired judge of the Superior Court of the province. The proposition that I made was, not that there should be only one such judge in each province and that one a deputy of the judge in exchequer at Ottawa, but that there should be as many judges in admiralty in each province as there were judges in the Superior Court of that province, and that these judges should not be any retired judges of the court who had been superannuated, but the active working judges for the time being of the provincial Superior Court, the work to be divided among them and taken by them exactly as their ordinary work is divided, and as they would distribute among themselves the ordinary work of the courts which they were assigned to take, and that there should be in each instance a surrogate or local judge of the provincial court in the person of the county judge of each county in each province possessing the jurisdiction to do the ordinary practice work which such judges now possess in the Superior Courts of the various provinces.

I was not able to understand the strong opposition which that proposition elicited; and I can only say that, in my humble judgment, the three years which have passed since then have made matters just three years worse. In some provinces, I think, there is to-day no practical difficulty. It would be invidious to particularize, but while it is the case that in some of the provinces everything is satisfactory, although all of the admiralty work is being done in each case by one judge instead of being distributed among all the members of the court, in other provinces, I am satisfied, things are certainly in a very unfortunate position at the present time.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I would like to join with my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) who moved the resolution in expressing the opinion that the time has come when there should be an amendment of the law in regard to the admiralty jurisdiction and the carrying out of litigation before that court, if not all over Canada at least in the maritime provinces. It is not necessary to supplement the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) who has gone into the matter so fully, and who, if I understand him, expressed the opinion that there is ample cause for the amendment sought by my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). Certainly, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, there could be no anomaly in assigning to each one of the members of the Supreme Court of any one of our provinces, the right to deal with all questions which may arise in regard to shipping. There is no magic, there is no mystery, surrounding the law relating to shipping. I remember that the discussion on the Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice three years ago, some hon. members ventured to assert that there was some particular quality in the law relating to shipping, making it so different from any other branch of the law that the only way in which it could be satisfactorily administered was to assign to it a judge whose sole duty it would be to deal with this subject. Those who deal with the practice of the law must know that there are many branches of the law of which this could be said with at least equal truth. For instance, in regard to companies; the complications that have developed in the law relating to companies have been so great that it might be said with greater reason than in the case of the law relating to shipping that we should have a special judge to administer that law. To those engaged in shipping and those living in the seaport towns, the grievance arising out of this matter is a very real one, the present system giving rise to great difficulty and serious expense. Even after giving due weight to the arguments in the debate referred to against the change in the courts, I trust that the motion of my hon. friend from Cape Breton will be implemented and that this much desired reform will be brought into effect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the operations of the matter referred to by the Minister of Justice are concerned, I should imagine that an easier remedy, or at all events, a more effective remedy might be found than the one suggested. As I understood his argument in the first instance it related to the necessity of expedition in admiralty proceedings. He pointed out that a ship may be in a Canadian port for only a few days or hours, and he spoke of the delay which resulted from the necessity of obtaining a warrant from the central office. All that could be avoided, it seems to me, by a change in the rules of the Exchequer Court, by the establishment of local offices in different parts of the province. So far as to the magnitude of the business is concerned, I do not remember the time in Nova Scotia and I am more familiar with conditions in that province than elsewhere, when the business could not be attended to by one judge in addition to the other work devolving upon him. I have had a good deal of experience in the work of the Exchequer Court and the Admiralty Court and I am bound to say I never had the slightest difficulty in effecting an arrest and I never had any special difficulty in getting any case heard in the Admiralty Court. In fact I have had just as much difficulty and just as much delay in respect of the ordinary every day business of the Exchequer Court of Canada as I have had in connection with the local Admiralty Court of the province of Nova Scotia.

I do not desire to again go over the arguments upon the Bill with which my hon. friend has dealt, at very great length. I know there was a great deal of opposition to the Bill which he introduced. Opposition developed in different quarters for different reasons. I fully appreciate the position taken by the Minister of Justice and the hon. member who introduced this motion that there ought to be no unusual or unnecessary delay in the Admiralty Court. I am prepared to go further and say that the Admiralty Court ought to be one in which cases could be proceeded with more expeditiously perhaps than in any other court in the country. It is so for the most part; in the Admiralty Court there are no pleadings. Within a few days after a vessel has been seized and without any formal pleadings the case is set down for trial unless the court in its wisdom orders that pleadings shall be filed. For the most part the case goes on without pleadings and without much delay. I venture to suggest that a great deal of what my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has put forward as a grievance can be met by the establishment of local offices of the Admiralty Court in the different provinces and by the appointing of deputy registrars. The conditions were not very much changed by the Act of 1891. Up to that time, in a great many provinces at least, the chief justice for the time being had been appointed by the imperial authorities to be the judge in admiralty. After the introduction of the Act of 1891 by Sir John Thompson the judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada became the judge in admiralty, and he appointed the same men to be the local judges who had been acting before, at least in Nova Scotia, so that after all things went on very much as they had been going on in the past. The practice of the court was rendered simpler, but otherwise matters went on in very much the same way. I repeat that the appointing of a number of registrars would do a great deal to remove the inconvenience which has been alluded to this afternoon by the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. CONMEE. I do not rise to discuss the question from a legal point of view, but it appears to me that the Bill to which the Minister of Justice referred is the best remedy to apply. There is no reason, so far as I can judge, why there should not be every facility for dealing with such matters. I happen to represent the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William where there is a large amount of shipping, I believe larger than in any other port in Canada, taking the two cities together. There is a great deal of difficulty there. Time and again it has occurred that vessels could not be arrested and the remedy which ought to have been applied under the Admiralty Court could not be applied because of the distance from any jurisdiction in that regard. I think that matter has been referred to by the legal profession in those two cities and called to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I am sure the Minister of Justice is right and I hope he will have the courage of his convictions and go on and put the Bill through.

Mr. McKENZIE. The remedy proposed by the leader of the opposition will to some extent meet the particular grievance that we complain of in Nova Scotia, particularly in the eastern part of that province, but unless the Act will provide that the judge will go on circuit and try cases when ready for trial we would still be in very much the same difficulty as before. Very often we have as our witnesses in a case every member of the crew of a ship. It costs $30 a head of conduct money to take witnesses from the town where I live, a seaboard town, to Halifax. If you have to take ten or twelve seamen it amounts to a large sum in trying a case in Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It has been the practice sometimes to take the evidence of such witnesses before a commission and thus obviate their being brought to Halifax. I know that is done in many cases and possibly it might be done still. But apart from that I would like to supplement my remarks by saying that I think there is no reason in the world why the judge should not go on circuit and try these cases.

Mr. McKENZIE. The practice of taking evidence before a commission does not apply much more to trials in the Admiralty Court than in any other court. There is, of course, a provision under the judicature Act which differs very little from the practice of the Admiralty Court that the judge may order that the evidence may be taken before a commission and submitted to the judge. That applies, of course, perhaps with greater facility to admiralty cases but if it is objected to on the other side and a desire is expressed before the judge for the cross-examination of these witnesses before the judge himself I do not know that the order would be granted or that it would be permitted to examine witnesses in that way. Therefore, having the judge go on circuit, having the cases tried on the spot and as speedily as possible, because you cannot hold these witnesses for any great length of time, would be the best remedy. It is desirable to have facilities for issuing papers in the Exchequer Court as in any other and the trial in the ordinary way by a circuit judge.

I do not quite understand how my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), hesitates in agreeing to throw this jurisdiction into the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. I think myself, that the tendency will be, to have a more competent better equipped court, than we have now. We would then have seven judges in admiralty with the ordinary life in the court which does not exist in any court when there is only one judge, and that one judge only dealing with admiralty as something subsidiary to his other business. I think, judging by the court we have to-day in Nova Scotia, it would be an exceptionally strong Admiralty Court, the practice being the same, the law not changed in any way whatever and a great part of the law being common to both courts. The law of evidence, the law of practice and procedure, and the law of damage is common to both courts and each of the judges being quite capable of trying a suit in admiralty, I can hardly understand why any lawyer from Nova Scotia should object at all to having the jurisdiction exercised by one of these judges exercised by each and every one of them. I would be in favour of the Bill if the Minister of Justice will introduce it again and in that way I hope that such remedies as will give us improved conditions in the province, will be brought about. I beg to move the motion.

Motion agreed to.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TUNNEL.

Mr. J. W. RICHARDS (Prince Edward Island), moved:

For a copy of all memorials, reports, correspondence and documents in the possession of the government, not already brought down, relating to a survey of a route for a tunnel under the Straits of Northumberland between the province of Prince Edward Island and the mainland of Canada, and also relating to the construction of such tunnel.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words upon this question before the motion is passed. It has been discussed upon several occasions very fully, especially during the last session of this parliament, when my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Warburton), gave us a great deal of information with regard to the necessity of such a work. In the province of Prince Edward Island, we are very often at a great disadvantage in consequence of not having regular means of communication. In a fertile island of that kind, productive as it is, especially in its agricultural lands, the question of transportation is one of very great importance to us. It is true, that the winter steamers which we have in the service there, have been a considerable amount of help to us during the winter season in taking our products from the province to the mainland and other parts of the continent, but during severe winters communication in that way is very irregular and uncertain, and it has, to a certain extent, a bad effect on the progress of the island from a commercial point of view. I am ready to give credit to the government for their good work in giving to the province that magnificent steamer, the 'Earl Grey'. That boat was designed and built as an ice-breaker. She has done very good work and no doubt will do as well as any boat of that kind can possibly do, but there are times when it is impossible for any ice-breaker, no matter how strongly she may be built, to keep up regular communication and during these times, I feel that we are at a great disadvantage in consequence of not having regular communication.

With reference to the tunnel, there are some who, perhaps are disposed to treat this matter very lightly. But, it is a well known fact that tunnelling has made great advances in the world. There are many tunnels in the United States, in England and in other parts of Europe and the cost of tunnelling to-day is not nearly as great as it was some years ago. A great deal more information has been obtained with reference to the work of tunnelling and consequently, the cost has been greatly reduced. Considering this matter in that light, I think that we are entitled in the province of Prince Edward Island to have some steps taken with the view of making an investigation or survey of the proposed route for the tunnel. This is a question of so much importance that it will not down until some investigation or survey has been made, in order that the question of the practicability or otherwise of the work may be settled.

I do not intend this afternoon to go fully into all the particulars with regard to tunnelling ; that is to say, the size of the tunnel, the material of which it should be constructed or such things as that because those are matters that have already been brought before this House, and it would be a subject which would be taken up by those who would undertake to make the survey. My object on the present occasion is again to bring this matter to the attention of this parliament, and I hope that in my efforts in this regard I shall have the support of members from the other provinces. I feel that the construction of this work would not only be of advantage to the province from which I come, but it would also be of great advantage to the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and, in fact, Ontario. It is not from the sectional point of view that I approach the discussion of this question. I look upon it as a question of national interest and importance. What benefits one province, especially with regard to the matter of allaying irritation and promoting harmony and good-will, is an advantage to all the provinces and, looking at the matter in this light, I think that we would expect that the people of the other provinces would give us their sympathy and support. I have understood that on some other occasions in this House, when this matter has been brought up for discussion, hon. members from the great province of Ontario who know practically something about tunnels have given expressions of opinion favourable to the construction of this work between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

My object, as I have said, in bringing this matter before the House, is to again direct the attention of parliament to the great desirability of having some steps taken with a view to making a proper survey. It is true that a survey was made some few years ago, but I am told by engineers who are capable of passing an opinion upon such a subject that the servey, though good as far as it goes, is not sufficient to enable anybody to make an estimate as to the cost of the work. The position, as far as I can gather, that the people of Prince Edward Island take with reference to this matter is this : They say that if we have a survey made, and it is a proper survey, and it is found that the construction of this tunnel could be undertaken at something like a reasonable cost, at such an expenditure as we would have a right to expect the government would be justified in making, then, let us have it. If, on the other hand, it is shown by an investigation that this work is of such a magnitude, that its cost would be so great that this parliament would not be justified in making such a big expenditure for a province like Prince Edward Island, then the question will be settled, and there will be no more about it. But, until something of this kind is done there will be this agitation for the construction of this work, and I do sincerely hope that serious consideration will be given to this matter, that it will be taken up vigorously, and that such measures will be adopted that the question can be settled as to whether the construction of a tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is a practicable work or whether it is not.

From the information that I have been able to obtain from engineers who have had experience in work I am led to believe that such a project may be practicable, but that it will be difficult to make an estimate of its cost until a survey has been made. If that work can be constructed for $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 I think the parliament of Canada would be amply justified in making such an appropriation to afford to the smallest province of this great Dominion regular and continuous communication both winter and summer with the mainland. I could say a very great deal more on this important question, but I think I have said sufficient to call the attention of the government to the desirability of taking steps towards having a proper and thorough survey made in connection with the tunnel project.

Mr. A. L. FRASER (Kings, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, I also wish to say a few words on this subject, which is not new to the House, and which in the past has been often and ably advocated. I shall not go at length into the subject, but I may say to those people who have expressed an opinion that the country would not be justified in building this tunnel at all on account of the cost, that they do not exactly know what they are talking about. However that may be, what the people of Prince Edward Island want now, and what they have been asking for years is that a survey be made to determine the estimated cost. If the cost is so large as to be unreasonable and unjustifiable, then the people of Prince Edward Island would not press their claim. But, Sir, the people of my province make a fair and reasonable request when they ask the government to provide money for a survey. I spoke on this point last year, and I was answered by the Minister of Finance in the following words, which I shall quote from page 290 'Hansard,' vol. I, 1909-10. These words of the Finance Minister, when circulated in our province, raised the hopes of many people that the survey would be proceeded with at once, but, unfortunately for us, nothing has been done. I quote from Mr. Fielding:—

I am glad to hear my hon. friends from the island say that all they ask is that this matter shall be thoroughly and impartially inquired into, and if the tunnel can be built at a moderate cost they think the work should be done. To that sentiment I most heartily subscribe, and I am quite sure that the government will have that feeling towards it. There have been some surveys in the past. I suppose that each of them in its day served the purpose, it was the best that could be had; but I quite agree with my hon. friends that the matter should be taken up more vigorously and more seriously, and that we should endeavour to get a reliable and thorough survey by the best engineers, and if, as a result of that survey, it is found that this important work can be constructed at a moderate cost, I for one, would promise my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island my most hearty and cordial support.

The Minister of Finance made this statement on the 22nd of November, 1909, in the early days of last session, and his announcement that the matter would be taken up vigorously and seriously led the people to think that last summer steps would be taken to begin this survey. I regret to say that the government are not entitled to claim any very great praise for the way in which they have since dealt with this question. The Minister of Finance told us it should be taken up seriously, and yet we are well on into the present session and the main estimates for next year are down and there is not one cent included in them for this tunnel survey. I would not like to accuse the government of holding this matter back until the next election, but I am afraid some people will be suspicious that the government is waiting until the approaching elections to take the matter up seriously and vigorously. I urge now that a sum of money be placed in the supplementary estimates of this year for the beginning of the survey, and that the government should proceed with the work without further delay.

Mr. A. B. WARBURTON (Queens, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, last session I had the honour of bringing this question myself before this House, and as I went into the question at considerable length and in great detail, I shall not speak at any great length to-day.

The question has been a sort of hardy annual before the House for many years, and unfortunately a great many people had come to look upon it, not in the serious light which it deserves. That, I think, is due to the manner in which this important question has been placed before the country in the past, by some well intentioned, but indiscreet, advocates in the press, on the platform, and in parliament. Owing to these ill-directed efforts this great scheme became, to some extent, I am sorry to say, a matter of more or less ridicule. At the first session of the present parliament, when I entered this House, I noticed this state of affairs, and in consultation with my colleagues we decided not to bring the matter before the House at that first session, but that the wiser course was to drop it for the time being, so that the absurd impression which had been created should be allowed to die out. I am glad to think that my anticipation in this regard has to some extent come to pass, and that now the people of Canada and the members of this parliament look upon the Prince Edward Island tunnel scheme in a more serious light than they formerly did. I shall not refer to the survey made 20 years ago by Sir Douglas Fox, further than to point out that in speaking of the method of the survey which he thought ought to be carried on before the government undertook the work, he was careful to state, in giving his estimate of the cost upon such data as he had before him, that this estimate would be likely to change as a result of more complete information than was then in his possession. He pointed out that the proper course would be to take the line across the straits, where it was proposed to build the tunnel, and then, taking two lines parallel with the centre line at a distance of 300 yards on either side, to bore holes along these lines through the underlying strata at intervals of 500 yards, so as to discover what the material was through which the tunnelling would have to be done. All that we ask at the present moment is that this recommendation of Sir Douglas Fox, or something similar to it, should be carried out. I wish it to be distinctly understood that at the present time we are not asking the government or the country to build a tunnel. Whenever we mention this matter in this House it is published in the newspapers that we are asking the government to build a tunnel. But, again, I wish it to be understood that what we are now asking is that a survey should be made to determine whether a tunnel is practicable or not. That, I think, is a very reasonable request. Owing to the supposed geological formation of red clay shale on a carboniferous or gray sandstone basis, said to contain small masses of fine standstone, it is said that there are likely to be fissures, and, therefore, a prime consideration in the question of cost would be as to how much water would percolate through these fissures if there are such. It is said that if there are no fissures there will be no difficulty in building the tunnel, and hence the absolute necessity for a careful and complete survey.

A very large proportion of the cost of this great undertaking will depend upon the nature of the ground through which the tunnel has to pass—not with regard to the difficulty of boring, but with regard to the difficulty of keeping out the water; and the great object of a survey is to ascertain whether there are any such fissures. This shale overlies a sandstone base, which it is believed continues for about one-fourth of the distance; so that if fissures were found to exist in the sandstone, the amount of water they would admit into the tunnel would be a most important factor in the whole distance, according to Sir Douglas Fox. My hon. friend from Kings county, has put this matter very briefly, but very well, and I am not going to take up the time of this House in going into it in detail, as I thought I was justified in doing last session. I wish simply to try to impress upon you, Mr. Speaker, and this House the very great importance of this subject of transportation to Prince Edward Island. There is no province of the Dominion, not even excepting the western provinces, to which that subject is of so much importance; and if the question of a tunnel can be taken up and settled one way or the other, it will be of great advantage. If it is found to be practicable, it will be of great advantage to have the tunnel. If it is found to be impracticable, it will be of great advantage to have the question removed from the public arena.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it would be possible to give to our hon. friends from Prince Edward Island any stronger assurance of the sympathy which the government has for this most important project than was conveyed in the language of my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), at the last session of parliament, when he used these words:—

> I am glad to hear my hon. friend from the island say that all they ask is that this matter shall be thoroughly and impartially inquired into and if the tunnel can be built at a moderate cost they think the work should be done. To that sentiment I most heartily subscribe, and I am quite sure that the government will have that feeling towards it. There have been some surveys in the past. I suppose that each of them in its day served the purpose, it was the best that could be had; but I quite agree with my hon. friends that the matter should be taken up more vigorously and more seriously, and that we should endeavour to get a reliable and thorough survey by the best engineers, and if, as a result of that survey, it is found that this important work can be constructed at a moderate cost, I for one, would promise my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island my most hearty and cordial support.

I have no reason, Sir, to suppose that the views which were presented by the Minister of Finance on that occasion, are any different from those which are entertained by the government as a whole. The question, however, of making a survey is a very important one. There is no use of making further surveys unless they are more thorough and complete than the surveys which have been made in the past. Speaking for myself personally, I would say that if a company were formed, which would undertake to build a tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland for the sum which has been mentioned, $10,000,000, I would favour the granting of that aid for the purpose. The difficulty, however, as presented to me by the engineers of my department, is that a tunnel may cost $10,000,000 or it may cost $40,000,000, depending upon whether fissures should be encountered in the progress of the work, and let in water from the ocean, which would enormously increase the cost. Anybody who has made a study of tunnels, even through mountains, on dry land, realizes how difficult it is accurately to estimate the cost and the difficulty is, of course, enormously increased, in the case of a tunnel under water. Therefore, when a survey is undertaken, it is necessary that it should be undertaken under the guidance of the most competent and experienced engineers, and that it should be thorough and complete covering almost every foot of the distance between the mainland and the island. I can assure my hon. friends that the matter which has already been engaging the attention of my department, will be seriously considered, and I am not without hope, that provision will, before long, be made for a thorough and complete survey, which will be entirely satisfactory to our friends from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the government ascertained anything as to the probable cost of a complete survey?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only in a general way. A complete survey would be pretty costly; but still, upon the information I have, I think the cost would not be regarded by parliament as larger than would be warranted by the great importance of the work, in case it should be possible to undertake it.

Mr. FRASER. Can the hon. minister give us any idea of the time at which he intends to take up this work of the survey?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I intend to submit the matter for the consideration of the government during the present session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say, that at least three years ago, I am not sure that it was not four years ago, I strongly urged upon the government to do this very thing. I stated then that the people of Prince Edward Island and the people of the whole of the Dominion of Canada were entitled to know whether this was a practicable project or not, that ample time had already elapsed during which that information might have been obtained, and that, in my opinion, not a single day ought to be lost in taking effective steps for the purpose of enabling the government to place on the table of this House definite and specific information on this question. I entertain the same opinion to-day. I only regret that three or four years have been lost between that time and the present in which this work has not been taken up.

Motion agreed to.

NEW WESTMINSTER PENITENTIARY.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster), moved:

For a copy of all correspondence since the 1st of January, 1910, with the Department of Justice or any officers of that department, making or supporting request for increase of pay to employees of the penitentiary at New Westminster; and of all reports or recommendations in that connection made by any officer of the department. Also a copy of all reports made during the period indicated by the grand jury at New Westminster with reference to the conditions at said penitentiary.

He said: My object is to bring to the attention of the government and the House the very unsatisfactory situation of the officials of the penitentiary at New Westminster. The subject of the pay of these officials is not new to the government because for two or three years they have been making most persistent efforts to get an increase which will to some extent put them on a level with their much better situated neighbours in the city of New Westminster. They have been encouraged by government officials to believe that their petitions were receiving serious consideration, and that in a short time they might expect good results, but the years have gone on the conditions of their labour have continued the same and their responsibilities and expenses have increased, and still, though the necessity for their being paid higher wages has increased, nothing has transpired to warrant the belief that they are any nearer success now than when they began to petition. In the meantime public attention has been directed to the conditions in that institution. We had a few years ago a report, a most unfair report, from an official at Ottawa referring to irregularities in that penitentiary, and claiming that these showed inattention, neglect or perhaps incapacity on the part of the officers, notwithstanding the fact that the officers had petitioned in vain for efficient help, and also to have the conditions of those who were employed made tolerable. We have had the matter brought before the public in a new and in a very formal manner in a report made by the grand jury at the city of New Westminster, in which report the attention of the government was invited to the conditions at the penitentiary, and which declared that these conditions were such as to invite and facilitate the escape of every prisoner confined in it. No doubt the Department of Justice has taken cognizance of that report and has resolved on some line of policy; but so far as the officials at the penitentiary are concerned, they have heard nothing whatever of anything being done for the purpose of providing a remedy and removing the reproach which the grand jury has fastened upon that institution. In bringing this matter before the House, I am anxious to impress upon hon. members as forcibly as I can, the fact that there is not in the minds of the public at New Westminster, any reproach upon the penitentiary officials. The view taken locally of that institution is that there is indeed a lack of that efficiency which we have the right to expect, but that this is due to the fact that the rate of pay offered by the department makes it impossible for those in charge to secure the class of help which they desire in order to carry out its work effectively. They find their old hands constantly leaving to accept more lucrative employment outside; they find the material available to fill the vacancies consists only of persons temporarily out of employment who take that service merely as a means to obtaining better positions outside it later. I am well aware that the conditions at New Westminster are not confined to that city but are common to all the penitentiaries in the west, and to a lesser degree, to those in the east; but the conditions at Westminster are accentuated by the excessive cost of living as compared with the east, and by the failure of the department to make a proportionate allowance to equalize these conditions.

I have had prepared a statement from the figures presented in the 'Labour Gazette' of the cost of living in different places in Canada. I find that, as compared with eastern cities having penitentiaries, the cost of living in New Westminster is 51 per cent higher than at St. John, N.B., the point of comparison for Dorchester penitentiary, and 56 per cent higher than at Kingston. There is allowed to the lower officials west of Ontario $100 per year in consideration of their location, but this is absorbed absolutely by the difference in rent between New Westminster and the eastern cities. The table of rents, as shown by the statistics in the 'Labour Gazette' shows that at St. John, the nearest town to Dorchester quoted in these statistics, the average working man pays $9 per month, at Kingston he pays $10 per month, while at New Westminster the lowest at which any of the staff of the penitentiary can secure a house is $18 per month. So you will see that the difference in rental between the east and the west absorbs the whole of the extra allowance and leaves nothing to compensate for the extra cost of living in other respects.

This matter of salary is regulated, I believe, by statute, and therefore, cannot be so readily adjusted as if the conditions were otherwise. But I see in the estimates a move on the part of the Minister of Inland Revenue to deal with the officials of that department west of Ontario by providing a special allowance of $150 a year for every employee below a certain amount. I would suggest that a similar course should be followed with regard to the New Westminster penitentiary and other institutions, pending a more thorough statutory adjustment which might well be made in the shape of a general increase in the salaries of the officials of those institutions. There is no purpose to be served by dwelling at any length on this matter, but I would ask the minister whether he cannot give some indication to these men to encourage them and their families to hope that there is a ray of light ahead of them.

Mr. BRADBURY. In this connection I would like to say a word or two regarding the institution at Stony Mountain. The employees there occupy very much the same position as those at Westminster. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) has put the case so well before the House that I need not say more than that I heartily concur in the opinions and sentiments expressed by him. The hon. Minister of Justice, has, I believe, received a petition from the employees of the Stony Mountain penitentiary drawing his attention to some of the facts in Manitoba similar to those described by my hon. friend from Westminster as existing there.

As everybody is aware who knows anything about western life, the cost of living is very much higher in the west than in the east. We also know that men occupying the position, for instance, of instructors in these institutions command, as a rule, very much larger wages outside than are received from the government. Men occupying positions similar to those of instructors in the Stony Mountain institution receive in Manitoba any where from $5 to $6 or $7 a day; and I understand that these men are working for the government for something like $2.50 a day. This, surely, should not be continued, and I enter a plea with the Minister of Justice to consider the position of these men, taking into consideration at the same time the fact that they must be men of ability to instruct those who are placed under their charge, and of a good deal of force of character to command the respect of those whom it is their duty to instruct. And that they have been successful is evidenced by many of the men who have been turned out of that institution in Manitoba. The class of instructors the government has secured for that institution, I am glad to say, is perhaps as high as that in any other institution in Canada. They are worthy of every consideration the government can show them. I urge upon the government the desirability of treating the instructors and others in these institutions fairly liberally to encourage them to take an interest in their duty by showing them that the country appreciates what they are doing for the unfortunates who are placed under their care.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think I may at once state that I sympathize very sincerely with the views which have been expressed by both the hon. gentlemen who have discussed this motion. It is no longer ago than this morning that, at the breakfast table, I heard a discourse which was very eloquent and moving upon this very subject of the increased cost of living. And I scarcely know what the solution of the difficulty is to be. I think, however, that I can assure my hon. friends of the west that it is not alone in their part of the country that these difficulties are felt. Possibly, we shall continue to have them until the views of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) prevail, and we get rid of the increased price of commodities by getting rid of our tariff. Then, I suppose, we shall have nothing to pay except our taxes. And if we can manage to meet the taxes, the increased cost of living, possibly, will not be one of the things troubling every one who has to depend upon a fixed salary.

Now, with regard to the particular motion that is made here, there is certainly no objection to bringing down all the papers which exist and which are referred to in the motion. There is not, so far as I am aware, any presentment from a grand jury such as is referred to in the motion. I certainly have no recollection of seeing any such document within the last twelve months. But, upon the other branch of what is asked for, the application for increase of salaries of officials in the penitentiary at New Westminster, there have been urgent representations made during the last few months, and I have been for a longer period than that aware from the practical administration of affairs in the penitentiary that conditions are not satisfactory. Exactly what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor,

New Westminster) mentions is taking place. We need good men, reliable men, men of good physical as well as mental qualifications, for the responsible position of guards in our penitentiaries. But such men can get better wages outside than they can get in the service, and the result is very generally that we no sooner get a good, capable man acquainted with his duties than some one else comes along and offers him more, and, of course, he takes it and we lose the man who has just learned to be valuable. But, while that is so, the practical question of what is to be done is far from being free from difficulty. The increased cost of living, as I said, seems not to be at all confined to the west. We have just as strong representations, just as numerous and emphatic representations, from our penitentiaries in the maritime provinces and in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and these representations have been so unanimous from each one of our six penitentiaries and there has been so much practical difficulty in securing anything like permanency of service, of our guards particularly, that the question has become one which, I am afraid, cannot be any longer put off from practical consideration. I had been sanguine, when I took up the duties of the Department of Justice four years ago that this question, so far as the penitentiaries were concerned, would probably not need to be considered again during my tenure of office. It was the first piece of work, I think, to which I fell heir when I took charge of the Department of Justice, to have in hand before the Committee of the Whole in this House the newly revised Penitentiaries Act which was passed in 1906. By that statute, a very considerable general increase in salaries was given. There was an effort to make that uniform. I think that effort was in the right direction. I should like to see the salaries uniform. It is difficult to satisfy the man from Nova Scotia or New Brunswick that his services in the penitentiary are not worth just as much as those of the man in identically the same position at Stony Mountain or New Westminster. And it is a very invidious sort of thing to make a distinction upon any such ground as that the cost of living is higher in one section of the country than in another. If it is to be recognized as right in the penitentiary service, it must follow in all branches of the service, and with the service to the country worth just as much in one part of the Dominion as in another, it is difficult to justify upon principle the making of any distinction.

In respect to what is to be done about it, I cannot give any other answer than to say, and I do say in all sincerity, that the subject is receiving, and will continue to receive, the most careful consideration of which I am capable. It is one which does not rest altogether with me, perhaps not at all with me; it is something in respect to which I must procure the assent of my colleagues to any recommendation I may make and, of course, the assent of this House. These salaries are fixed by statute. If the time has come, notwithstanding that it is only four years since there was an increase, it is for this House to say so, and if I can see my way to a recommendation which will to some extent alleviate the condition of things which has been spoken of by hon. gentlemen this afternoon and which in the practical everyday administration of the department, I certainly have very acutely felt for months, if not for years, I shall personally be only too glad.

Motion agreed to.

DISPUTED PATENT TO LAND.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster), moved:—

For a copy of all correspondence between the Department of the Interior or any of its officers and any other persons, respecting the timber on the Fanny Louise Irwin homestead in the district of Chilliwack, British Columbia, including any instructions to solicitors to issue a writ in Exchequer Court for cancellation of timber rights not reserved in Crown grant of the homestead.

He said: I wish in a very few words to call attention to what I regard as a bluff on the part of the Department of Justice, but which while it does not appear serious to me is giving a great deal of uneasiness to the farmers in the district of Chilliwack against whom it is directed. The story at the foundation of this motion, is told in a couple of official letters summarized in this communication from the legal firm of Davis, Marshall & Macneil, of Vancouver, addressed to William R. Barge, of Rosedale. That letter reads:—

In January, 1910, you purchased from Mrs. Jane E. Hermon 10 acres of land, being part of the northeast quarter-section 34, township 2. Mrs. Hermon purchased this property from Fanny Louise Irwin, who in turn obtained it from the Crown in August, 1903. The Department of Justice have instructed their solicitors at Ottawa to bring an action against you and the other holders of this property to have the patent issued, cancelled on the ground that it was issued in error, and should have reserved to the government the timber upon the lands in question. We have been asked by the solicitors for the Department at Ottawa to endeavour to come to some amicable arrangement with the owners before they issue a writ in the Exchequer Court against you.

The proposal made by the department is for the owners to agree to surrender the patent in question, upon the understanding that the Crown will issue a fresh patent reserving the timber. Would you be prepared to do this? Kindly let us know at once, as failing to hear from you, or should you refuse, proceedings will be commenced in the Exchequer Court against you.

I have another letter to the same effect from the same firm addressed to Mrs. J. E. Hermon.

If the Department of Justice were dealing with the original patentee of this land, there might be some sense in these proceedings, because so long as the original patentee held something to which he was not legally entitled, it would be proper for the department to endeavour to overtake the error it had made, and to remedy the error; but in this case you find that several years have elapsed, these properties have passed into 16 or 20 hands; the first patentee of 160 acres, as I believe, divided the property into about four sections, each of these subdivided it and they have continued to subdivide it since, and now all these persons are menaced by a threat from the Department of Justice to take proceedings in the Exchequer Court to assail the rights which they obtained by virtue of a patent from the Department of the Interior to the original holder of these lands. I do not think that these persons have anything to fear from the Department of Justice or any other department of the government if they stand upon their rights. I do not think the department will ever go to the Exchequer Court with a case of that kind; I do not think they would last long if they did, and I say that in all humility as the opinion of a layman upon a point of law. I say further that the Department of the Interior should not be a party to this, they should be ashamed to permit another department to issue this bluff against innocent persons. who had nothing whatever to do with the mistake in question, who had no possible means of knowing that any mistake had occurred, but who, on the contrary, owing to the conditions surrounding the timber in the Chilliwack district, had every reason to believe that this patentee who held the patent in her hand not reserving from the land the timber rights was indeed the owner of the timber as so many settlers in that locality are the owners of the timber. This matter having been brought out in this way, I think it would be opportune for the Minister of the Interior to give some assurance to these settlers that they will not be harassed in this matter by the government, but that the responsibility for the error will be placed where it belongs, in the Interior Department, instead of being visited on the heads of this large number of innocent persons in the Chilliwack district.

Mr. OLIVER. The case to which my hon. friend alludes is, in fact, as he has stated it. At one time, many years ago, it was the custom, to allow homestead entry upon timber lands in the province of British Columbia, excluding timber from the right of the homesteader and when the patent was issued to the homesteader, the timber was excluded from the patent. In this particular case, which my hon. friend has mentioned, and I think in one other case that has come to the attention of the Department of the Interior, the patent was issued to the homesteader without the reservation of the right to the timber.

The department, of course has no knowledge of what disposition has been made of his rights, or her rights, by the patentee but the department is perfectly aware that the original owner of the timber is still the owner of the timber and, in dealing with the matter, the effort has been made to secure to the holder of the timber the rights which he paid for, and which he possesses, that is, the right to cut the timber upon this land, a right of which the homesteader was perfectly aware at the time that the homestead entry was given, and, of course, at the time the patent was issued. Instead of the present holders of the land being willing to accept a patent for the land excluding the timber, according to the equity of the case, they have seen fit to stand upon what they are pleased to consider their legal rights. Holding a patent which does not exclude the timber, they refuse to give up the timber. It was a legal matter, and was left by the Department of Interior to that of justice. On the advice of the Department of Justice proceedings were being taken to reinstate the respective parties to their rights according to the conditions upon which they had been parted with. In so far as the Department of Interior is concerned, we are anxious not to do anything that will oppress or injure any individual settler, or the purchaser from an individual settler, but, on the other hand, the department is anxious to protect rights which it has passed to other individuals, and which by error have not otherwise been protected. If my hon. friend asks for an apology from the Department of Interior for the action taken, I can only say that I do not see that any apology can be offered, except that an apology might be offered by the officials of the government who made the error, which government I may say, was our predecessor in office ; but, for the action of this government in doing what can be done to protect the rights of the owners of the timber, who have unquestionably the right in equity to the timber, I do not think that there is any apology to be offered.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Was there a license on the timber when the patent was issued?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and when the homestead was given also.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to ask the minister if the letter written by the Vancouver solicitors was written with the authority or by the instruction of the Department of Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that unless I saw the letter.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It is the letter which my hon. friend from New Westminster has just read.

Mr. OLIVER. I would have to refer to the records of the department. I could not answer off-hand.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The letter, I see, states that they have authority from the government to take proceedings in the Exchequer Court. I can only say that this is the ordinary, usual case of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, and it is recognized in all the courts in the land that a person who gets a title in that way has a perfect title. I think it is idle for the Minister of the Interior to say that the department are justified in instructing a firm of solicitors to endeavour to recover from those parties, who have innocently purchased in good faith and paid full consideration, any compensation whatever because of the two they are the innocent parties. But here, notwithstanding that this letter states that if these innocent, bona fide purchasers for value, do not do as the department suggest—that is release the right to the timber, I suppose—action will be taken in the Exchequer Court of Canada. In the first place, I submit that no action can be taken as a matter of law and that as a matter of equity it should not be taken, and therefore, the department has no right to put up a bluff of this kind against innocent purchasers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The department seems to be very much more zealous in this case than it was in the case of the Blairmore townsite. There a grant had been procured from the Crown by the grossest fraud and imposition, proved by evidence, and found by the judgment of the Exchequer Court of Canada. Notwithstanding that fact, the department recalled the judgment of the court after it had been pronounced, took no further proceedings, and left those in possession of the property on whose behalf the fraud and imposition had been practised.

Mr. OLIVER. If I may have the privilege, I would like to point out a very wide difference between the two cases. In the case under discussion of the patent of Fanny Louise Irwin, if it were merely a question between the government and Mrs. or Miss Irwin, there would be no attempt on the part of the department to cancel the patent which had been issued. It is not an attempt to assert the right of the Crown to this property ; it is an attempt to protect the right of the proper owner of the timber upon that property, which right he has not disposed of, which we have no right to take from him and cannot take from him, and which the owner of this property knows perfectly well that he or she has no equitable right to. Because of an error in the issue of the patent, which, I repeat, was not the fault of the present administration, they hope to secure a value in the timber that does not belong to the Crown but belongs to another private person.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think there is a very great difference between the two cases, but for the reason that I pointed out, and not for the reason that the minister has assigned. In the Blairmore townsite case action was taken by the Attorney General of Canada upon the relation of a man who was entitled to the property as against the Crown. That man proved his case in court. He was the relator in the suit at whose instance the Attorney General of Canada took that proceeding. His case proved up to the hilt that fraud and imposition had resulted in the title passing from the Crown to some other person. That was absolutely proved by evidence, and that was found by the judgment of the judge of the Exchequer Court. Notwithstanding all that the Crown put to one side the man who had proved his case in court and directed that no further proceedings should be taken against the men who had received the benefit of the fraud and imposition that had been practised upon the Crown and which had been described in very emphatic and distinct terms not only by the judge in the west, Mr. Justice Wetmore, to whom the matter had been referred for the purpose of taking the evidence, but also by the then judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Burbidge. I think there is a difference between the two cases, but I do not think it is a difference that would impel the government to take action in the present case when they had refrained from action in the case to which I have alluded.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct a couple of errors into which the Minister of the Interior appears to have fallen. In the first place he said that the mistake, if any, was not of this administration but of their predecessors. I wish to call attention to the fact that the mistake was made in 1903 when this administration was in office as it is now. Next, the minister stated on two occasions, that these persons perfectly well knew they had not the rights to which they so tenaciously held. I am in a position to say to the minister that he has no warrant for that belief, that as a matter of fact the present owners, or some of them whom I know, had no reason whatever to suppose that they were not the absolute proprietors of this timber when they bought the lands under the deed giving that right to the persons from whom they purchased. I am in a position to say further, that one of the persons to whom this threat was addressed had actually resold his right before he was ordered by the department to surrender his patent. He would have been in the position of having to compensate the person to whom he had sold, but without any recourse himself. I have another letter here which I will read to round off the correspondence, and this letter covers one or two of the points unintentially mis-stated by the minister. It is dated April 13, 1910, and addressed to Mrs. Jane E. Hermon, Rosedale P.O., B.C., I would like to lay emphasis upon the chivalry of a department that will attack a helpless woman in this manner. The letter goes on:

Dear Madam,—In August, 1903, the Crown granted to Fanny L. Irwin certain lands in the railway belt in the province of British Columbia. On the 20th of November, 1909, the lands were conveyed to you by Fanny L. Irwin;——

So that, as you will see, the department very well knew that she was not the original homesteader:

—subsequently you sold a portion to Joseph W. Oakes and a portion to William Robert Barge. Apparently from the documents in the land registry office you still have an interest in a portion of this property. The Dominion government have instructed proceedings to be taken in the Exchequer Court of Canada against you and the other owners to cancel this patent on the ground that it was issued in error as the timber should have been reserved from the lands in question. Messrs. Chrysler, Bethune & Larmonth, of Ottawa, are acting for the Crown in this matter and have asked us to see if some amicable arrangement cannot be arrived at with the owners before commencing legal proceedings. The proposition made is that the parties now entitled to the property should surrender their patent to the Crown.

Mark the words: 'now entitled to the property;' that is what these lawyers said:

The proposition made is that the parties now entitled to the property should surrender their patent to the Crown, on the understanding that a new patent shall issue reserving the timber. Kindly let us hear whether you would be prepared to consent to such an arrangement.

Yours faithfully,
DAVIS, MARSHALL, MACNEIL & PUGH.

So, here we find an answer to the minister's statement that this was done by his Tory predecessors when as a fact it was done in 1903, and also to his statement that the department were dealing with parties who very well knew they had no rights. His own solicitor's letter actually refers to this long series of transfers. I think it is a most astounding thing that the government of a great country like Canada should presume upon the ignorance of settlers in a remote part of the Dominion to think that these settlers would accept a bluff of this kind, and at a cost of hundreds of dollars to each of them, enable the department to find an easy way out of an error which it had committed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster), moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Post Office Department and any of its officials or other persons, relative to making an allowance for the transportation of letter carriers on the tramway system in New Westminster.

He said: I am happy to say that since I put this notice on the paper its object has been accomplished by the issue of an order for the payment of the transportation of the letter carriers. However, if the minister has no objection I think it is well that the motion should carry because there was very extraordinary delay in securing this little concession, and I should like to know why this delay occurred.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I have no objection to the papers being brought down. I may tell my hon. friend that there was no ill-will on the part of the department towards paying for the transportation of the letter carriers, but we thought at the time there was a combine between the street railway companies of the various cities to claim an exorbitant amount for this service. We did not object to pay the transportation of the letter carriers in these cities, but at the same time we did not wish to pay the street railway companies an exorbitant amount. We were always willing to pay a moderate price. The reason of the delay was that we were conducting negotiations with the various street railway companies of the cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Motion agreed to.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier), moved for:—

A return showing in detail:—
1. All sums paid by the concessionnaires of grantees of the Beauharnois canal as rental or royalties upon the rights conveyed to them by the Crown on the Beauharnois canal, or paid by their assigns in the enjoyment of the said rights, since the concession.

2. Of all sums paid or expended by the government upon the said canal since the date of the said concession.

3. Of all sums actually due the Crown by the grantees or assigns for the use of said canal or in connection therewith.

He said: The object of this motion is to put the House in possession of all the facts and circumstances connected with the alienation of the Beauharnois canal. Some of these papers were brought down some time ago, but I have not been able to find them, and it is important at this juncture that we should become familiar with the facts, as there is now before the House a Bill to regulate the method of the alienation of our water-powers. I presume there is no objection to our obtaining this information. I may add that we have just had held in the city of Quebec a forestry and conservation meeting, at which the resources of this country have been discussed and enumerated and enlarged upon as never before. We were told there of the vast extent of our forest wealth, and it was asserted by those who are competent to speak upon the subject, that there was to be found in Canada probably 40 per cent of all the water-powers in the world. The importance of husbanding these resources and of alienating them only after the observance of most careful formalities, were subjects fully treated of at that meeting in Quebec. It is very important that we should know the extent of our resources, but it seems to me it is equally essential that we should do something practical towards their conservation, or otherwise the circumstances which have attended their alienation in the past would soon leave us without these resources. There were some guiding principles laid down at the Quebec meeting, which do not seem to have been observed when the government parted with the Beauharnois canal. The principle was admitted on all hands that none of our water-powers or other resources ought to be rented or alienated without, in the first place, the preparation of a careful estimate of what the particular object to be alienated consists of and upon what terms such alienation should take place. I have been unable to discover that this rule was observed when we parted with the Beauharnois canal. There was not a carefully prepared estimate of what that canal represented in the way of capital expenditure, what we should claim as a return upon that capital expenditure, what the future worth of the water-power to the surrounding country might be, and what we received as a return for that alienation. No such careful estimate was made before the property was alienated. There was no provision made in the deed of alienation for an increase of rental in case the water-power of the Beauharnois canal should be increased by subsequent work on the part of the concessionnaires in order to derive a larger revenue than was anticipated. There was no publicity before the alienation took place. There was no general invitation for tenders in order to ascertain whether others were ready to give more for that valuable property than was given finally by those who acquired it. That was another condition which is insisted upon not only in the laws and regulations of all the other countries that have dealt with the alienation of water-powers, but by all those on this continent who have studied the question. Here was a valuable water-power situated within reach of several important centres, and within easy reach of the city of Montreal. Indeed, I believe that it is at present intended to use that water-power to supply the city of Montreal with electricity. A vast field was thus opened to those who had the handling of the power, and no tenders were asked for. The alienation, I understand, was a perpetual one. On this matter there has not been much legislation in Europe, but there has been some in Switzerland and in France, and I believe attempts have been made to get legislation in the United States. There was no provision, as I understand, for a revision of the rentals from time to time. I speak without having seen the deed. The original grantee of the powers has, I understand, transferred his privileges.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). In what year was the grant made?

Mr. MONK. I do not know exactly in what year, but I think four or five years ago.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About five years ago.

Mr. MONK. So that, as far as we know, none of the principles which it is claimed everywhere should apply to such alienations from the state were observed in the alienation of the Beauharnois canal. I remember that my hon. friend paid a visit to Beauharnois at the time there was a rumour abroad that the alienation was about to take place, but I am not aware that rival parties were given a chance to make an offer, which I believe would have been superior to the one which was accepted by the government. At all events, it is conceded by those who know about the transaction that it has been immensely profitable to the grantees. I hope we shall have no more of such alienations. I hope that even at the present session the government will adopt some legislation which will, for the future, prevent any indiscriminate alienation of a most valuable asset. I cannot but believe that there is exaggeration in the statement, made by competent persons, however, that we have in Canada 40 per cent of the water-powers of the world, but even if we have a far less proportion of the world's wealth, it is evident that we must be careful of it, and that we must not merely announce the policy of conservation, but put it into practical shape, so that governments can never in the future be tempted to make such alienations as the one referred to in this motion. We can, of course, only speak fully as to the facts when the return is brought down. I desire, with the permission of the House, to add to this motion these words:—

4. The names of the shareholders of the present tenant or proprietor company, with the number of shares held by each and the par value of such shares.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, before the hon. Minister of Public Works answers my hon. friend with reference to the production of the documents for which he has moved, let me say that the granting of the lease to Mr. Robert of the water-power on the site of the old Beauharnois canal was the result of a long-standing fight between the citizens of Montreal and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co. For many years, as my hon. friend is aware, the taxpayers of the city of Montreal were endeavouring to get rid of that monopoly. Five or six years ago I took a personal interest in this matter, along with some citizens of Montreal, and I am glad to say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was one of those citizens. We were taxpayers of Montreal, and we intended, as soon as possible, to get rid of that monopoly.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid my hon. friend is giving me a merit to which I am not entitled. I have no recollection of this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will refresh my hon. friend's memory. Deputations were organized, not to go before the city council, because it was recognized that the citizens of Montreal could not get justice from the city council, but it was realized that there was a magnificent water-power to be had at the Beauharnois canal, which was not being used, and delegations were organized to ask the government at Ottawa to protect the taxpayers of Montreal as against the monopoly known as the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co. I remember the last delegation which came to Ottawa, composed of some members of the city council of Montreal, including the mayor and my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is mistaken there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sorry to say that my hon. friend has in this instance a bad memory.

Mr. MONK. I cannot lay claim to such patriotism.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course his presence there was all to his credit. He was present at the office of the Prime Minister with the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Mr. Martin), some of the aldermen of Montreal, as well as delegations from the surrounding districts of Jacques Cartier, Laprairie, Beauharnois and the various electoral divisions of Montreal. They all urged, irrespective of politics, that the water-power of the Beauharnois canal should be leased to a strong firm which would not be bought or would not be induced to give up its rights to the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company. And this is the reason why it was stipulated there and then and published throughout the press that the government would not call for tenders, but would be given to a body of men, respectable and responsible, the management of the Beauharnois canal water-power. If tenders had been called for, of course the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company would have repeated the very unsavoury operation which took place with regard to the Soulanges, Heron Island and Richelieu river water-powers. Therefore, when a company came before the Prime Minister, with a subscribed capital of $4,000,000, representing the best elements in the city, the government wisely decided to lease to it the Beauharnois canal power. What was the consequence? I happen to know the facts, because I took some part in the fight which took place a year or two ago in Montreal in order to obtain a pure civic administration there. The result was that after that water-power was given the Canadian Light and Heat Company, the prices for electric energy in Montreal for lighting and heating purposes fell some 30 per cent.

Mr. MONK. Not quite so much.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To what extent did it fall?

Mr. MONK. I cannot say, but not so much as that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course I cannot give the exact percentage, but there was a very large reduction, and the people of Montreal to-day are free from the thraldom under which they formerly suffered as regards electrical energy.

We are told that we have given away a very valuable concession for years and years to come. Well, the papers have all been laid before the House. The lease is renewable every twenty-one years during a period of some 70 or 80 years. I happen to know a little about this matter because some year and a half or two years ago, the Prime Minister being ill, I was asked to replace him when the first sod was turned at Beauharnois and the new building was being put up. Let me tell you that the new company have spent some $2,000,000 on this project. I do not know if my hon. friend has seen the building being erected at St. Timothée, but certainly it will be one of the finest power buildings ever put up on this continent. Is it reasonable then that a company which has broken the worst monopoly the citizens of Montreal had ever contended against and which is spending so much money should be called on to renew its lease every year. Every one will understand that what was done has been done in the interests of the taxpayers of the city of Montreal.

Mr. MONK. Is there any clause providing that the company may not amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think my hon. friend will find that such a clause is in the contract, and it was inserted at the request of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and myself. The Minister of Justice himself (Sir Allen Aylesworth) inserted that clause in order to prevent the possibility of that company joining the monopoly which had crushed the citizens of Montreal for fifteen years before. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk)—and I say it to his credit—joined his efforts with ours. There was no political bias, it was purely a municipal question, and both Conservatives and Liberals joined hands to get rid of the monopoly then existing.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). The hon. minister says that the lease is for 70 years renewable every 21 years. When renewable in 21 years, does that mean revising the rates?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The contract was brought down three or four days ago and is on the table now.

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Huntingdon). Just one word in answer to the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that the government had no report before them by engineers on the value of the canal. Before the Soulanges canal was constructed the Beauharnois canal was used for the purposes of navigation. At the time the Conservative government had under consideration the construction of the Soulanges canal, the people along the Beauharnois were very anxious that instead of constructing the Soulanges, the Beauharnois canal should be deepened. But the report of the engineer—no doubt a very distinguished man in his profession—then was that it would be impossible to deepen the Beauharnois canal because along by Valleyfield there was but a continuation of rock. Now we all know that the Soulanges canal has not been the success which the engineer expected; and the lessees of the Beauharnois canal discovered that the report of the engineer at that time was altogether wrong because they have succeeded in deepening that canal to the extent of about twelve feet. The people along the Beauharnois take an altogether different view from that taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). At the time there was an agitation for the leasing of this canal and I was upon the delegation of which the Hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has just spoken, which went to Ottawa, not for the purpose of urging the government to refuse to lease this canal but for the purpose of urging it to grant a lease to the present lessees and thus prevent it getting into the hands of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company and in this way deprive the people of Valleyfield, Montreal and the surrounding districts of the cheap electrical power which they so much desired. The Canadian Power Company have expended a sum almost equal to the cost of the canal and are not yet in operation, but the result of their operations has been that the people of Valleyfield are now offered their light and heat at a reduction of 40 per cent. That is one reason why they take an altogether different view from that taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier? I have not the lease before me, but my recollection is that it contains a clause which compels that company to give light and power to the city of Valleyfield, to the city of Montreal, to Beauharnois and the surrounding section at prices to be fixed by the Railway Commission. There could be nothing fairer than that. And I submit to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the conservation of natural resources does not mean locking up those resources but giving them to people with capital who will develop them. We who live on the south side of the St. Lawrence, along the Beauharnois canal, are very well satisfied with this lease. The people generally thought, in view of the report that engineer Munro had made twenty years ago, that the lessees of the Beauharnois canal had been buncoed by the government and were paying prices in advance of what their leases were worth. It remains to be proved whether that company will make the big lot of money that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) imagines they will.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN (Montreal, St. Mary's). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the House will allow me, I hope, to add a few words to what has been said on the question. As a Montreal city councillor and as a representative of St. Mary's division, I have had the honour to accompany the delegation which, a few years ago, interviewed the ministers with the object of obtaining the lease of the Beauharnois canal on behalf of the Robert Company, as stated by the hon. Postmaster General a moment ago.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier remembers no doubt that for some time past there was a movement going on in the Montreal city council with a view to effecting a change in the lighting system. We were intent on getting rid of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power, which, as stated by the hon. Postmaster General, had full control of the lighting.

Now, the city council, last year, advertised for tenders. The Robert Company put in a tender, and I remember fully well that one evening council sat until midnight in the hope of securing the contract for lighting to that company. However, the majority in the council made all kind of objections, so much so that the company found it impossible to accept the terms set down.

I remember, among other things, that they would not give them a contract for more than five years, and finally, they had to refuse it.

I sincerely believe that the government, by giving a lease to the Robert Company acted in the best interest of the public. It had the result of relieving the people of Montreal, in view of the fact that the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company had to reduce their rates to a very great extent. As a matter of fact, the Montreal Light, till last year, made an allowance of 15 p.c. upon the consumer paying within ten days. It is quite different now. I know what I am talking about, having had a contract with the same company for the lighting of my own house for a period of five years, and I got a discount of 46 p.c.

My opinion is that, while the government may not realize any profit by its lease to Mr. Robert, the benefit will all go to the people living alongside the canal, and more particularly the people of Montreal.

I do not see why the member for Jacques Cartier should ask any explanation about this matter. I am sure that the consumers in Montreal will greatly benefit by that arrangement.

I endorse all the statements made by the hon. Postmaster General, and I think that the member for Jacques Cartier ought to be quite satisfied.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). After the remarks which have been made by the hon. gentleman who followed my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), there remains but very little for me to say, beyond giving to the House a summary of the lease which was entered into between His Majesty and Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Robert, of the right to use water of the Beauharnois canal. I think it desirable that the terms of the lease should be placed on 'Hansard' in consequence more especially of the statement of the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that he trusted no such lease as this would ever again be entered into by the government. I understand that the reason my hon. friend made that statement is, that he is of the opinion that it does not follow out the principle of conserving the water-powers of the country. My own idea is that the proper way to conserve the water-powers of this country is not to lock them up, not to prevent them from being developed, but to encourage their development and to ensure, as far as it can possibly be done, that power shall be supplied to the people at the lowest possible price. It seems to me that in order to do that, first of all it is desirable that strong men, men of good financial standing, shall be induced to take hold of those water-powers with a view to developing them, that is, unless the government itself, on behalf of the country, is prepared to engage in the development of water-powers as a public work. That has not so far, been done in Canada. It is true that in Ontario they have organized the Hydro-Electric Commission, but that is only a commission for the distribution of water-power, it is not a commission that, so far, has had anything to do with the development of water-powers. The commission purchases its water-power from private companies which have expended large sums in the development of power. It seems to me that these are two essentials, but the most important of all is, of course, that this great public utility shall be furnished to the people desirous of using it at the lowest possible cost. In order that the people may get electricity at the lowest possible cost, there must be some permanency of tenure to the company developing the power. If the views of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), should prevail that a company should only be allowed a lease of a water-power for a short period of time, and the lease should then terminate, and if it is my hon. friend's views that the company then should receive no compensation for the money expended in the development of power, which might amount in many cases to a very large sum of money, then in order to recoup themselves, the company would be obliged during the short period of their tenure, to charge very much higher prices for the use of electricity than would otherwise be the case. I do not think that would be desirable or in the interest of the country.

Another feature which I think is essential is, that it should be provided that, if at any time in the future the government of the country should feel it desirable in the public interest to acquire the property and operate it as a public work, the government should be enabled to take over the property of the company on giving fair compensation, which I assume would embrace not only the actual cost, but a reasonable percentage on the moneys the company had invested in its undertaking. It seems to me that in that way, the public interest would be conserved, the people would get electricity at the lowest possible cost and the government would be enabled at any time in the future to take control of the property when it might become necessary to do so in the public interest.

You will agree with me when I have read this lease, that it fulfils every condition which I have suggested to the House as being desirable in the public interest. And looking back now to the time when this lease was executed and bearing in mind that the idea of the conservation of water-powers and other natural resources had not advanced to the stage it has now reached, it is remarkable that the government should have exercised such great care in seeing that in every respect the public interest was guarded in the lease of this water-power. I can account for it by this fact that even before the great number of people who are to-day interested in the conservation of the natural resources of the country became so interested, I can well remember my hon. friend the Prime Minister, both in Ottawa and elsewhere, putting forward in the very strongest manner possible, the desirability of taking steps for the conservation of the natural resources of our country and to him is largely due the forward movement which conservation has taken during the last few years and the very forward state which it has reached to-day.

The lease was made on December 10, 1907. It is between His Majesty, the King and Mr. William Cassels McIntyre and Mr. Edmund Arthur Robert, both of the city of Montreal. It recites that the Beauharnois canal is no longer needed for purposes of navigation and that it is considered desirable to lease it for the development of electricity for heating, lighting and industrial purposes and for the reasons which are set forth in the order in council, and which are to be found set forth to a considerable degree also in the lease, it was decided to grant a lease without competition to the gentlemen whom I have named. Then it provides that the lessees may have the right to take water from the Beauharnois canal and certain rights are given in the land bordering on the canal. The lease is for a period of 21 years renewable as therein provided, returning therefore the annual rent or sum of $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For how long may it be renewed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be two renewals. The lease is for 21 years with two renewals of 21 years each.

It provides that the lessees shall make all urgent and necessary repairs to the canal and the works in connection therewith subject always to the supervision and approval of the minister. It also provides that the lessees shall at their own cost and expense maintain, perform, operate and keep in good and sufficient repair, all bridges, including farm bridges, ferries, weirs, roads, fences, ditches and culverts, and all other servitudes whatever, which it is now incumbent on His Majesty to maintain and to keep in repair in the premises.

Thus the government is relieved of considerable burdens which would otherwise exist in respect to bridges crossing the canal and other matters to which this clause refers.

It is also provided that the lessees shall indemnify His Majesty against all liabilities for damage, detriment or injury that may result from the construction, or operation of the works or from neglect to maintain them in an efficient condition. It provides for the rights of the Montreal Cotton Company and of all other lessees. Here is a very important clause:

> The lessees shall, whenever so required by the municipality of Valleyfield, or by the municipality of Beauharnois, or other municipality adjacent to the canal, or by the city of Montreal, furnish the municipality or the city with electrical power for municipal lighting purposes at reasonable rates and on reasonable conditions, such rates and conditions in the event of disagreement between the parties to be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada; provided always that notification of such requirements be given by the municipalities respectively, or the city, as the case may be, to the lessees within two years from the grant of this lease, and that reasonable time be allowed the lessees after such notification to enable them to comply therewith.

You will see that evidently one of the objects which the government had in view was to enable the municipalities of Valleyfield, Beauharnois, and any other municipality adjacent to the canal, as well as the city of Montreal, to secure electrical power for municipal lighting purposes at reasonable rates, and it is provided that if the company and these municipalities cannot agree upon the rates, then they are to be fixed by the Board of Railway Commissioners. That, I think, Mr. Speaker, is a very important safeguard for the public interest. Then, certain other provisions are made with regard to sewer pipes, carrying cables over the canal, &c.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier stated that there is no provision that there shall be an increase of rental in case the company should develop additional power. Well, as I said before, I do not think the matter of increasing the revenue of the country is of such great importance as the reduction of the cost of lighting and power. It is the reduction of the cost of the supply of these important utilities to the people that is the essential thing to be aimed at, but, even in the suggestion which my hon. friend made that there is no power to increase the rental, I think it will be found that he is entirely wrong because my hon. friend would agree with me that it would not be possible, at all events, not reasonably possible—indeed, I do not think possible at all—to increase the power unless the flow of water through the Beauharnois canal were increased. That would necessitate the deepening and widening of the Beauharnois canal, so as to give a larger intake and to allow more water to flow into the canal. It is expressly provided by the lease that no work of that kind shall be undertaken except with the approval of the minister, who must be satisfied that any such works will in no way interfere with the level of the St. Lawrence river, and as no such works can be undertaken except with the consent of the minister, it would be quite within his power, if he thought it in the public interest, to exact a larger rental commensurate with the additional power which would be derived by the company by reason of the enlargement of the intake and the consequent increase in the flow of water.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister if any such additional works have been undertaken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not as yet, but plans for such works are now before the government, and are under the consideration of the engineers.

Mr. MONK. They have not yet been approved?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet. The parties interested have been here and they are to receive a further hearing before any action will be taken with regard to the proposed additional works. Then my hon. friend also asked if any provision had been made which would prevent amalgamation between this company and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company. As my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) stated, that was one of the objects which the people of Montreal had in view and if it is true, as my hon. friend the Postmaster General stated that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was present at certain interviews which took place when he urged that some steps should be taken towards enabling these people to develop that power, then I think my hon. friend would be entitled to very great credit for joining with my hon. friend the Postmaster General at that time. That is one of the points about which we were very particular and which is emphasized in this lease. It is expressly provided that these lessees shall not amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company and in order to effectively guard against any amalgamation it is expressly provided that whenever a company is formed and these lessees shall transfer their rights and powers to the company, there shall be placed with a trust company a controlling interest in the capital stock of the company which shall not be voted on except by the authority of the minister. It is expressly provided that this stock shall be laid away with the Montreal Trust Company giving a controlling interest, and this will effectually prevent any amalgamation with the Montreal, Heat and Power Company from taking place.

In carrying out that agreement it has been carefully seen to that on the formation of the company, called the Canadian Light and Power Company, 51 per cent of the capital stock of that company has been lodged with the Montreal Trust Company under that agreement in order effectually to carry out the provisions of the lease, and to secure the public interest by preventing any amalgamation between this company, and that great light and heat company, which very largely controls this important public utility in the city of Montreal.

I may say that in the papers which are brought down the assignment of the lease to the Canadian Light and Power Company is attached to the lease itself and there is also the agreement between the light and power company and the Montreal Trust Company, under which the Montreal Trust Company accepts the trust with respect to the holding of this 51 per cent in order to safeguard the public, and to prevent any amalgamation between the Canadian Light and Power Company and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there not a clause in the lease that the rates shall be under the control of the Governor General in Council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I read that. They are under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. In so far as the rates are concerned, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) spoke of there being a revision of the rental. That is of some importance from the financial standpoint in so far as the country at large is concerned. It might very well be, that, as the water-powers of this kind belong to the nation, the nation should receive a certain rental—not an unreasonable rental, but a fair, reasonable rental for the use of these water-powers—but what is of far greater importance than the question of rental is the question of the rates which the people are to pay for the use of electricity, light and power, and this lease expressly provides that every five years the rates that the company can charge these municipalities may be revised by the Board of Railway Commissioners. This is a most important provision and I think it is evidence of the very great care which the government exercised in the preparation of this lease. Then, Sir, I come to another provision, which I think is also of vast importance, and it is this:

If the demised premises or any portion thereof shall be required for public purposes, possession of the same may at any time during the said term be resumed by the government upon twelve months' notice in writing by the minister to the lessees. Upon such resumption all privileges and rights of the lessees hereunder shall cease, and His Majesty shall pay to the lessees the value, with an addition of five per cent thereon, of all work, plant, buildings, machinery and material done, erected, built, or placed by the lessees under this lease in or upon the leased premises or upon other premises leased or required by them, for the purpose of converting the hydraulic power of the canal into electric power and of disposing of the same in Beauharnois, Valleyfield, or other municipality adjacent to the canal or in Montreal, including the transmission and distribution system, such value to be fixed by arbitration as hereinafter provided as representing the fair value of the same in the then existing conditions.

To summarize briefly the important provisions of this lease—we have the fact that a fixed rental is reserved, that no works can be undertaken for the enlargement of the intake and thus increasing the flow of water and consequently the power, without the consent of the minister who can impose such terms as he thinks best in the public interest. We have the fact also that no assignment can take place without the assent of the minister, and upon assignment being made the controlling interest in the capital stock must be placed in a trust company. Then 51 per cent of the capital stock is placed in the Montreal Trust Company, by the agreement entered into, a copy of which is attached to the lease, for the purpose of ensuring that amalgamation should not take place between the company and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company. We have the further provision that the charges for light and power to these municipalities adjacent to the canal and to the city of Montreal, shall be subject to the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and subject to revision every five years. We have also the further and important provision, that the government, whenever it may deem it advisable in the public interest to do so, may take over all the rights of the lessees, all their power, all their plant, all their works of development, all their transmission lines, on simply paying the actual value to the company with an advance of five per cent thereon. It seems to me that if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier were to set to work to prepare a lease that would most effectually carry out the best ideas of those interested in conserving the water-powers of the country it would be impossible for him to improve upon the lease which the government gave in respect to the power in the Beauharnois canal. There is no objection, of course, to giving the information asked for in the notice as printed, but the hon. gentleman has amended the motion to ask that the government shall lay upon the table of the House a list of the shareholders in this company. There is no such list of shareholders so far as I am aware in any of the departments of the government. There is no provision in the charter by which a list of the shareholders is to be submitted to the government, and it would, therefore, be impossible for the government to comply with the motion if it were amended as asked by the hon. member.

Mr. MONK. After the description given by the Minister of Public Works of the absolute control and power which the government have over the grantees of the Beauharnois canal, I am surprised that he should find it impossible to consent to the proposed amendment by which it is sought to obtain a list of the shareholders, and the par value of the shares of this company. Surely if the government has all this influence over this company it is possible for the minister to obtain for parliament a list of the shareholders, particularly in view of a stipulation that a proportion of the shares will be placed in the hands of a trust company in the event of a transfer by the original grantees. It is very important under the circumstances that we should know who are the parties interested in this company and in the grant, and unless the House is adverse to getting that information I shall insist upon that part of the motion. It seems somewhat strange that just at this moment when the discussion of the disposition of our national wealth is so prominent, that a demand for such information as I have asked should be met with so much protest. I presume the Postmaster General is speaking as acting Minister of Railways, and if one were to believe him the whole of this transaction was dictated to the government by a zealous desire to come to the assistance of the city of Montreal which he says was some years ago suffering from the oppression of a powerful company which distributes electricity throughout the city. Therefore, according to the Postmaster General, in order to come to the assistance of the city of Montreal, the government without observing the rules and principles which now obtain throughout the civilized world in regard to such matters, conceded this power upon most favourable and happy terms to Mr. McIntyre and the other gentlemen associated with him. I wonder if it occurred at that time to the Postmaster General, that it would have been a fit and proper thing—as the establishment of a municipal lighting plant for the city of Montreal was then being discussed, and is to-day a live question—to offer these singular advantages to the city of Montreal itself. Why was not that done? Why was not such an offer made? It will be difficult to understand why it was absolutely necessary, in order to relieve the situation in the city of Montreal, to concede such a very favourable grant to two gentlemen, who, if we are well informed, have since, upon the transfer of that grant realized very considerable profits. That is a question of some importance. Was the situation of the city of Montreal at that date so bad that it was necessary in conceding this grant to omit all the precautions which generally surround grants of that nature. Why was not a careful survey made of the Beauharnois canal, and an estimate prepared by experts, setting out upon what terms that grant should be made, what the rental, and what conditions should be attached to it. None of these formalities, judging by what we have heard from the treasury benches this afternoon, were observed at that time. The Minister of Public Works tells us that the grant is not perpetual. Well, until we have carefully examined the deed it is difficult to see how far it extends, and what length of time it gives to the grantees or their assigns, but the minister himself has told us that it was a grant for 63 or 64 years. At Quebec, during the discussion of this most important subject, very strong objection was made to a grant over 50 years, and it was stated there by competent persons that a grant for that length of time was absolutely contrary to the public interest. I myself did not share that view, and I urged at the time that it was impossible within a period of 20 or 25 years in the case of important concessions given to concessionnaries to have sufficient time to carry out the scheme of development. But, 64 years is a very long period indeed, particularly as I assume from what has been stated by the minister that the rental continues the same during the whole period of the lease. The state receives upon a capital expenditure of over two million dollars, a revenue of $12,000 per year, which does not vary. It is true, as the minister says, that improvements and changes cannot be made without the consent of the government. But nowhere in that clause did I hear my hon. friend point out that if improvements and changes were made which the government could not otherwise accept, it might avail itself of that opportunity to exact additional rental. That would not be honest or proper on the part of the government, under the clause read by my hon. friend. It was not contemplated that improvements and changes would give rise to an increase of rental. It is now well known to everybody that a clause such as that mentioned by my hon. friend will not prevent a merger of interests, an evasion of what was contemplated by the clause, a fusion between these grantees or their assigns and the company mentioned by my hon. friend. There are so many devices known to the public by which clauses of that kind may be entirely set at nought that it seems almost a childish argument in the mouth of my hon. friend to suggest that such an obstacle could not be overcome. For instance, suppose this company made a contract to furnish electricity, not to the city of Montreal, but to the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company—my hon. friend is a lawyer—would we have a right to intervene? No. Our right to intervene, and the application of the clause cited by my hon. friend, is restricted to the case of the grantees or their assigns undertaking to furnish electricity to the city of Montreal. It is, therefore, open to this company—and this is only one way out of many—under this very deed, to furnish electricity to those who furnish electricity to the city of Montreal, without in any way coming under the control of the clause invoked by my hon. friend. My hon. friend the Postmaster General seemed to claim great merit for having brought about a diminution of rates in the city of Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not personally. I said the citizens who led the movement for better treatment on the part of the electric company. I claimed credit, not for myself, but in company with my hon. friend and the delegation which came to Ottawa at that time to ask for that power.

Mr. MONK. I would be glad to give credit to my hon. friend for the great public spirit which he manifested at that time and since, but I do not think the facts are exactly as he says. This company has not yet reached Montreal; it is not furnishing electricity there, and, although I would not utter a single word in disparagement of the great company which my hon. friend the Postmaster General thinks so poorly of, I do not think they are of a disposition to be terrified by what is going on now at the Beauharnois canal, for they long beforehand began reducing their rates to their customers. I quite sided with those who thought we were paying excessive rates, because it seemed to me that the city of Montreal, surrounded on all sides with water-powers of great magnitude, easily developed, ought to have electricity just as cheap, even much cheaper, than the city of Toronto, for instance. But other companies have since established themselves at Montreal, and this is the real cause of the reduction of rates.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend will admit that the first break in the monopoly was the granting of that lease of the Beauharnois canal, and since that policy was adopted there has been a reversal of public opinion in Montreal. Last year the good municipal organization fought a battle which brought victory, and since that victory the Local League of Quebec has given all other electric companies the power to operate in Montreal, and a commission was granted by the Quebec government, as a result of the fight which was begun here in the Prime Minister's office, where my hon. friend was so conspicuous in his advocacy of improvements which would bring about cheaper electricity.

Mr. MONK. I do not know whether my hon. friend refers to the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Mr. Martin).

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. member for St. Mary's division was taken to task last year, and the new city council accorded an investigation of the charges against him, but no one would bring a charge against him, and the worst opponents he had with regard to his municipal career had to admit that there was nothing against him.

Mr. MONK. I will not dispute my hon. friend's statement. When my hon. friend refers to the good municipal government which we have in Montreal, I quite agree with him that we had an end put to a state of affairs which was almost intolerable, but the result of the popular vote on that occasion does not seem to have favoured my hon. friend from St. Mary's division, and I would assume, from what he said to-day, that his electors were very ungrateful to him, after all he had done to reduce the price of electricity. Now, Sir, I have spoken of the futility of the clause mentioned by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. As a matter of fact—and this is some justification, I hope, for my asking for these documents—at the present moment there is a rumour of an arrangement practically amounting to a merger, or amalgamation between the very grantees to whom this concession was made and this very company which has been so much animadverted upon to-day by my hon. friends opposite. The grant was made some time ago. Transfers have taken place since, the government has intervened, payments have been made, at the present moment communications are passing between the government and this new company, and I hope we shall have all these documents before the House, as we are entitled to see them. To the control of rates under these circumstances I would apply the same argument as I would apply to the argument made by the Minister of Public Works respecting the furnishing of electricity to the city of Montreal. The right to control the rates arises when this company furnishes electricity to the city of Montreal. Until then there is no such right. Does it arise if the grantees or their assigns furnish electricity to the Light, Heat and Power Company? It does not seem so, from the clause read here by the hon. minister. Besides, we know what this control of rates amounts to nowadays. Companies must be allowed to collect sufficient revenue to pay the interest upon their capital and debentures, and we know something of watered stock, of over-capitalized companies, to know of what worth such an argument is in the mouths of those who carry out transactions of that kind. It is better to foresee than to apply a remedy, which, under the circumstances, must necessarily be nugatory one-half the time, if not more.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. (Translation). I ask the hon. member to let me say one word in order to answer the insinuation that he has made a moment ago against me.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). When I shall have done you will speak as you like.

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation). When you shall have done it will be impossible for me to speak because, according to the rules of the House the discussion shall be closed and nobody can speak after you.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). We have another motion immediately after this one on the order of the day and you can speak on that motion.

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker says that I cannot speak upon the debate when you shall have done.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) You will speak a little later.

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation). Therefore you do not wish I should answer the insinuation you have made.

Mr. MONK. I said that there were other companies in the city of Montreal. We have the Saraguay Company, we have the Central Light and Heating Company, there are other companies projected, there is the possibility of the city of Montreal establishing a lighting and heating plant itself, and there is, as my hon. friend the Postmaster General stated, the new administration of the city of Montreal. These facts, and these alone, have influenced the movement to which my hon. friend the Postmaster General pointed a moment ago. I find that there is no change in the rental. I find that the alienation is for more than half a century; possible it may be more than that; but, according to my hon. friend, it provides for sixty-three or sixty-four years of enjoyment, and I do not find that the clause invoked by my hon. friend as amply protecting the city of Montreal, is sufficient excuse for the government having violated in this instance the cardinal principles of alienation as they are recognized by all the authorities on the subject, short periods of alienation, changes of rates according to the amount of power developed, absolute control of rates under all circumstances, and, above all, the tender of an opportunity to all the citizens of Canada to make an offer before an alienation takes place.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN (Translation). If the House will allow me, I would like to answer the insinuation which has been made about me a moment ago by the honourable member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. SPEAKER (Translation). I cannot allow the hon. member to go on with his speech, the debate being closed, and he having already addressed the House on the subject.

Mr. MARTIN (Translation). I wish to speak on a question of privilege, with a view to giving some personal explanations.

While it is true that last year an investigation was carried on under a Royal Commission into the affairs of the Montreal city council, that investigation was held at my own request.

Without going into the particulars, I may say at the outset that having taken an aggressive stand in regard to the city council, having branded my collegues as 'boodlers' and thiefs, it was natural that they should do all in their power to crush me by whatever means available. Things even went to the point that false affidavits were forged, but the commissioner conducting the inquiry would not allow me to defend myself. Nevertheless, I was one of the eight who were singled out in the commissioner's report. I called on the Montreal city council at the time to institute proceedings against me, in order to give me a chance to vindicate myself, but without avail. I requested the present council to institute proceedings against me, in order to give me an opportunity of defending myself, but the new council did not move any more than their predecessors. I even went a step further, Mr. Speaker, and asked the attorney general for the province of Quebec to take proceedings against me so that I might be in a position to show the falsity of the charges laid against my character. Here again, I was unsuccessful.

If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who has thought fit to refer here to these slanderous insinuations, is serious, knowing as he does that a man guilty of fraud and corruption in the way that he gave the House to understand that I had been, that such a man, I say, is unworthy of occupying a seat in this House, it is incumbent on him— and I challenge him to do so—to move for an investigation into my dealings, in order to find out whetner or not I was guilty of such offences, whether or not there is any foundation to these charges against me. Let him move for an inquiry whereby my right to occupy a seat in this House will be settled one way or another. If I am unworthy of occupying a seat in this House, that inquiry will show it. It is the only means of finding out the truth in this connection and of vindicating my good name. I would welcome such a move on the part of the member of Jacques Cartier, as it would put me in a position of defending myself and setting matters right.

Notwithstanding what Judge Cannon or anybody else may have stated, I challenge whomsoever it may be to show that I failed in doing my duty while sitting in the Montreal city council, and I fear none of the insinuations which may be aimed at me, and especially by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I object to any important amendment being added to the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection being taken, I find that, according to Bourinot, the motion must be according to the notice given and its terms cannot be altered without the consent of the House. I therefore cannot allow any amendment.

Motion agreed to.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. MONK moved:

For a copy of all correspondence concerning the lease or alienation of the Beauharnois canal, of all reports called for by the government and made concerning the said alienation by experts, officers of the departments or others, of all orders in council respecting said alienation, and of the deed or deeds between the Crown and the concessionnaries embodying the said lease or alienation and respecting also any transfers of their rights and privileges by the original grantees.

He said: (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I need not repeat what I said on the preceding motion, in connection with the Beauharnois canal; it is substantially the same thing. But I consider it my duty to say a word in answer to my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin). I made no charges against my hon. friend. The hon. Postmaster General stated that he, together with the hon. member for St. Mary's had gone to much trouble to protect the citizens of Montreal against the monopoly set up by the Montreal Light, Heat and Power. I took occasion to state that the constituents of my hon. friend from St. Mary's had been very ungrateful, since in the municipal election which followed, they had forgotten the zeal he had shown for their interests. It is neither a charge nor an insinuation that I made.

I did not follow the inquiry carried on by Judge Cannon, but I understand that it was utterly unbiased, and the citizens of Montreal were satisfied with the findings.

If this statement which I make is satisfactory to my hon. friend, I make it with the greatest pleasure, as Judge Cannon has been submitted to vicious attacks before the public and in the press and he was without the means of vindicating himself.

Mr. MARTIN (Montreal, St. Mary's). (Translation.) Specific charges were made. I myself made specific charges against my fellow councillors, but he refused to look into them.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF THE IMPERIAL DEFENCE CONFERENCE, 1909.

Mr. MONK moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable for the convenience of members of the House and of the public, to provide additional copies of the printed report of the Imperial defence conference of July and August, 1909.

He said: I hope there will be no objection to the expression of this wish. I think the members of the House will admit that the Imperial Defence Conference of 1909 was a very important event indeed in the history of this country; that arrangements were arrived at there the result of which was to change in very large measure the understanding between the British government and the government of this country regarding the defence of this country and the share of Canada in the general defence of the empire. These arrangements and agreements are contained in a blue-book the supply which failed very long ago when we should have had an ample supply of a document of such importance. The consequence is that to-day—and even long before to-day—when any body wishes to refer to the discussions and proceedings of the Imperial Defence Conference of 1909, it is impossible to secure copies. Members of the House know the exceedingly large quantity of blue-books printed, to my mind unnecessarily, when you consider the matters treated in many of them. We are embarrassed from one year's end to the other with printed matter of which a very limited supply would, I think, suffice concerning analysis of honey or fertilizers or other such matters. But this imperial defence conference report is a document to which reference requires to be made continually, which the public desire to consult, which we wish to have at hand, and which will be required for a long time to come. Last year, before the session was half over, it was very difficult to obtain any copies of this blue-book. I myself suffered much inconvenience in this regard. One applied for the blue-book and could not get it; the French version particularly was wanting in an extraordinary degree. And during the public discussion and public meetings which followed the session during the by-election we could not possibly obtain a copy of this important document which the whole discussion bore upon. I have laid upon the table the letters of the three officers of the House from whom we most naturally would expect readily to obtain copies of the English and French versions of this report, but by these letters it will appear that I could get neither, because, as was stated, the supply was exhausted. We will require these documents again, and it is convenient that we should have them handy. This is not a very voluminous document; and I hope the House will adopt the expression of this desire that we should have easy access to this document, and that a certain number be printed in both languages.

While on my feet, I would like to say that I have been informed on very creditable authority that the whole verbatim report of that conference had been transmitted to Canada, and that certain members of the House had that word for word report what was said at the conference as well as of what was decided and done. That is what happened with regard to previous conferences. What I wish to call particular attention to is that some members of the House have access to that verbatim report though it was refused to others, and these others had no opportunity of seeing it. If this motion is carried, I hope the government will carry out the suggestion I make that the whole report be printed and placed at the disposal of members of the House.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). There is certainly no objection to the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) being carried. I understand that he refers to the blue-book brought down to the House last session. If there were no more copies printed, it is certainly not the fault of the government. I understand that questions relating to the printing of blue-books are decided by the joint committee on printing, a committee composed of members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons. This committee has standing rules stating how many copies of each blue-book have been printed and distributed, and, unless they pass some orders to the contrary, this standing rule would apply. I understand that the rule has been covered in this case. But I see that the number of copies of the French edition especially—I do not know anything about the English—are exhausted. Under these circumstances, there is no objection—quite the contrary—on the part of the government that some more copies should be printed. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) however, does not state in his motion what would be the number of copies required. Perhaps it would be better to have this defined in the resolution, in order that the clerk of the House may immediately give the necessary instructions for printing, or, what will be still more regular, refer the matter to the joint committee on printing to determine the additional number of copies required. But, as to the principle of the motion, there is absolutely no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to second the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the full report of the proceedings should be printed. I suppose that the government has that report. I presume the government could obtain the consent of the home government to have the report printed for parliament. I see no reason why we should not have not only the conclusions which were arrived at, but what is far more important, the grounds which were urged for or against those conclusions, and the attitude on these various questions of the representatives of the other Dominions of the empire. In the case of the conference of 1902, I think the Prime Minister himself suggested that there was no reason why the report should not be published in full and if I remember correctly he said he would communicate with the home government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Last session the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that so far as Canada was concerned, there was no objection whatever to bringing down everything.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I remember that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Unfortunately Canada was not the only party to the conference and objections were raised to bringing down the report. We have no objection, we had none then and we have none now, but I doubt if it will be possible to obtain the consent of those objecting until perhaps the next Imperial Conference. For my part no objection will be raised on the part of Canada to the publication of everything that took place. Not only that but we will urge it.

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries finds that the motion might well pass the House and I am satisfied with this. As to the number of copies, I do not like to make an excessive demand, but it is an important document and judging from the number of demands that have come for it, I should say that a large number should be printed in both languages, as in every province there must be many electors who would like to see the very terms of the agreement arrived at.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let it pass and we will confer with the clerk as to the number to be printed.

Mr. MONK. I had expected that the minister would say something about the verbatim report. Of course the Prime Minister has alluded to that. If we are all agreed that we should see that verbatim report, how is it that we are not given that opportunity? I could understand if the objections came from the imperial government that my right hon. friend would have to defer to that government but does he think that there is no distinction between an objection coming from that quarter and an objection coming from one of the other dependencies where perhaps for purely local reasons the publication of the verbatim report would not be desired. Such an objection would be no valid reason for not publishing the report here.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS OFFICER AT INGRAM DOCKS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax) moved :

For a copy of all orders in council, regulations and rules of the several departments of the government respecting the participation by employees of the government in civic or municipal affairs, and especially with regard to their disability from serving in civic or municipal councils; and all correspondence, documents and papers since the first day of January, 1900, touching the operation of the said orders in council, rules and regulations. Also a list of all employees of the government who have been elected to or have served in city or municipal councils during the said period from the first day of January, 1900, up to the present time, including all those now so serving and those who have been prevented by the government from serving.

He said: I mentioned this to the Prime Minister the other day. The facts are that a preventive officer in the county of Halifax holding a position which commands a salary of $150 a year happened to be elected in November or December as member of the municipal council of the county of Halifax. After his election it was brought to his attention that his position as a preventive officer might be lost by holding the position of municipal councillor. He wrote to me to ascertain whether this intimation was correct. I made application to the Department of Customs and in reply received from them the following regulation:

File No. 58140. No. 1345 B.

MEMORANDUM.

Department of Customs, Canada,
Ottawa, 2nd January, 1906.

To Collectors of Customs:

Customs Officers not to hold any Corporate Office.

The attention of customs officers is directed to the following regulation, under order of the Governor General in Council:—

'No officer of customs is allowed to hold any corporate office, nor to interfere in political questions, either local or general.'

That portion seems to be the language of the order in council. Then the memorandum continues:—

The corporate offices above referred to are such offices as warden, mayor, alderman, school trustee, councillor, &c.

The rule applies to officers in the inside and outside service of the Customs.

JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

As I understand it, no copy of this memorandum was ever sent to the officer to whom I allude. It is perfectly clear that the salary of $150 a year which he enjoys is absolutely insufficient for the support of himself and his family. It is, therefore, abundantly evident that a very considerable portion of his time must be devoted, and is devoted, to seeking other means of support. As a matter of fact, his appointment is simply made for the convenience of a small number of vessels visiting this outport, and he does not pretend, nor is it expected by the Department of Customs, that he should devote the whole of his time to the performance of his duties. The office to which he has been elected as a member of the municipal council of the county of Halifax takes, I suppose, ten, or twelve, or possibly fifteen days in each year; that is to say, he would be absent from his home at Ingram docks, in the county of Halifax, about that number of days in each year. The unfortunate position of matters at the present time is that his district will remain unrepresented for a portion of the year, because he cannot resign until he is sworn in after the council meets, and there will not be time to elect another representative of the district.

Well, what I desire to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister is, in the first place, that this seems to be a rather paltry and unnecessary rule in so far as officers of that status are concerned. I entirely agree that employees of the government of Canada, even holding a very small position, such as this man, ought not to interfere offensively in political affairs—I mean in federal or provincial elections—but I am bound to say that I see no particular reason why they should not be elected as members of the municipal councils, which, in this particular instance, and, I think, generally throughout the country, are not run on federal or provincial political lines. That rule seems to be rather unnecessary in so far as officers of this character are concerned.

There is no such rule generally prevailing in all of the departments of government, or else the rule is absolutely violated every day. I am not speaking from personal knowledge, but I am informed on good authority that there are at the present time, in the council of the city of Ottawa, no less than three civil servants who are receiving remuneration of a very considerable character and the whole of whose time is supposed to be devoted to the public service. Now, why is it that a civil servant at Ottawa, receiving a salary of $1,500 or $2,000, is at liberty to become a member of the city council and participate in the municipal government of this city and an officer holding the petty position to which I have alluded, a position commanding a salary of $150, and taking only a few days of his time in each year, should be debarred from doing exactly the same thing? It is perfectly obvious that the rules of the different departments are not the same, or that these rules are not being carried out. Therefore, I have asked for a return, which will set forth a copy of the orders in council, regulations, rules, &c., touching upon this subject. I think it is desirable that we should have some statement of the principle or policy upon which the government is acting in such matters, and that we should also know exactly what any employee of the government throughout the country serving in any department is to expect. So far as the unfortunate individual whose case I have brought to the attention of the House is concerned, he entered into this election contest in absolute ignorance of any rule or regulation which would debar him from doing so, and as a result he, and the district which he represents, have been placed in the unfortunate position which I have pointed out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I confess that I was somewhat taken by surprise when my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Borden, Halifax) informed the House that this customs officer in Halifax, who receives a salary, if salary it can be called, of $150 a year, should be called upon at the same time to resign a position to which he had been elected in the municipal service of his district. It is evident that this officer cannot live on the salary that he receives, that he must have another mode of living, that this is only an adjunct to his ordinary avocation, that, therefore, he is more of a private citizen than an official of the government, and I must say that under such circumstances I could not see the reason of the rule which has been exercised against him. But, I have not been able yet to take the matter up, as my colleague the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is away, but I intend, on his return, to confer with him and have the reason for such a rule, if such a rule exists.

At the same time, I must express my satisfaction with my hon. friend that he has brought the matter to the attention of the House, because evidently there is an anomaly which must be rectified in what is going on. It is perfectly true that at this moment there are three members of the civil service who are now in the service of the city of Ottawa. One or two of them are aldermen, and one is on the board of control. No exception has been taken to their election, and though some of them were elected after a somewhat severe contest, I am not aware—it has not reached me—that any exception has been taken by anybody to these particular candidates because they were in the service. On the other hand, I have at this moment correspondence showing that in another city where men similarly situated, that is, being in the service of the government, attempted to be candidates, objection was immediately taken to them. It is very often found here and elsewhere, that there are men in the service who enjoy the confidence of the community in which they live to the extent that no one has found fault with them when they sought to take part in the municipal politics of their locality. In other localities men quite respectable, but still having their enemies, as most of us have, were confronted with notice of objection the moment they attempted to enter municipal politics. Under such circumstances, I believe that we shall have to adopt a uniform rule. I have not talked over the matter, and I would be obliged for any opinion that would come from the other side of the House, but, expressing my own opinion, I would say that, perhaps, the safest course would be to make the rule absolutely uniform that any man in the service of the government obtaining a salary which provides for his living—I do not mean a customs officer who is receiving only $150 a year—should be debarred from entering the municipal service. I would not call on any man who is now in possession of a municipal office to resign, and, perhaps, the best course would be to give notice that in future no man who is a servant of the government should be allowed to enter the municipal council of the locality in which he lives. Either the rule must be that all servants of the government shall be allowed to enter municipal politics or else that all shall be debarred from so doing. I do not think the present practice of allowing some employees of the government to enter municipal politics and others not, should be allowed to continue.

Mr. PERLEY. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that if he is going to make a rule of that kind he should only apply it to civil servants who are in receipt of large salaries and who are supposed to devote all their time to the service of the government. All good citizens owe a duty to the municipality in which they live, and the civil servants owe that duty as well as the rest of the community. I think the government of this great country should be willing to put themselves to some little inconvenience, if some valued citizen who happens to be in the employ of the government, should be selected by his fellow citizens to represent them in the civic administration. If any salary limit is made, I would suggest that only those who receive large salaries should be debarred from accepting municipal honours.

Mr. EMMERSON. When I was Minister of Railways we had a great deal of difficulty in the department with reference to this very matter. We must recognize that the municipalities pay practically nothing for the services of their representatives. For example, in the city of Moncton, the remuneration is so paltry, if it is anything at all, that it could not strike any one to engage in civic politics, but there were cases in which men who sought the suffrage of the people, were foremen in different departments of the railway, and it was represented that as they had, in consequence of their position, control over the voters, it was unfair to those who were running against them. One hon. member has stated that these municipal contests are not run on party lines, but I think it is the experience of every hon. gentleman here that it is an unfortunate fact that too often party politics do enter into municipal contests. There should be discrimination as to what officers should be allowed to seek municipal honours, in any general rule that may be established, and when I was Minister of Railways that principle was given effect to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the principle; I do not understand.

Mr. EMMERSON. The principle is that where a man in the government service has control of a large number of men under him, and can grant them favours, he should not be allowed to enter into these contests. It is not that the government loses very much of the time of the employees by attending to their municipal office, but there were constant complaint that the government official had an advantage over the other man who was opposing him.

Mr. McGIVERIN. (Ottawa). It is very probable that this question concerns more particularly the city of Ottawa than any other municipality in the Dominion. The citizens of Ottawa have had the good fortune to have had many members of the Civil Service represent them on the board of aldermen, on the school board, and in some cases on the board of control. It would seem to me, Sir, that where we have a large body of civil servants, as in this capital city, gentlemen who are paying their taxes and who are deeply interested in the good government of the city, they should be allowed to have the ordinary rights of citizenship and permitted to aspire to any municipal office which is in the gift of their fellow citizens. If there should be any question as to their civic duties interfering with the discharge of the duties of their official position, that can be easily set right, because the deputy minister of any department can see that the official attends to the work of his office. Of course, the first duty of such officials would be to earn the salary they are paid by the government of the country, but surely in their spare hours, after they have rendered full service to the State, they should be entitled to take part in the municipal government of this city. It would appear to me that one of the great difficulties in this country, is to get men of position and intelligence to interest themselves in municipal affairs, and if we are to make a rule that no civil servant shall enter municipal politics, then the city of Ottawa would be deprived of some of its most honoured municipal representatives. We have been fortunate in Ottawa that we have had some very good men, particularly members of the Civil Service, to represent us in the city council, and on the board of control and on the school board. In this city the government officials, do not, as a rule, come under that class referred to by the member for Westmorland who is in a position to wield an influence over other employees, and consequently, the condition of affairs spoken of by that hon. gentleman, would not be applicable here. For my part, I would be extremely sorry to see any rule adopted by the government which would preclude members of the Civil Service, at all events in the city of Ottawa, representing their fellow citizens in municipal matters.

Mr. CONMEE. I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) that those who enter the public service should not be permitted to enter municipal politics. I should think that a civil servant running for municipal office might be able to wield a very unfair influence as against his neighbour who is not in the service. If the matter is dealt with by the government, and there is to be an exception made of the city of Ottawa I do not think that I would enter very much objection, but, as a general rule the civil servant cannot do justice to the public interest for which he is paid and at the same time do justice to the municipality. I know of cases where gentlemen of the Civil Service have entered municipal politics very much to the injury of the Civil Service, and I do not know that they were very much use to the municipality. When gentlemen enter the Civil Service, with the advantages it affords, it seems to me that they should devote their time and energy and ability to that service, and if they do that, I do not believe they will do more than justice to the reward they receive.

Mr. EMMERSON. May I be permitted to explain that if my hon. friend referred to me as having objected to government officials taking part in municipal or civic affairs, I failed to make myself understood. The point I wished to make was this. The right hon. leader of the government intimated that some general rule, perhaps a sweeping rule, would be desirable, and I asked him to discriminate by taking into consideration the relative positions of the officials. I thought it was not a question of the payment which they might receive from the municipality or the city, but a broader principle—that possibly men in the government service should be permitted to give their services to the advantage of the community in which they reside.

Mr. CONMEE. If I may be permitted, I did understand the remarks of the hon. gentleman in the light in which I spoke. Now I understand that he wants to draw a line, and I would like him to tell us where he would draw that line. If I understood him aright, he would draw it at the employees of a government railway. There are a great many others in the government service, however, whom it would be even more objectionable to have engaged in municipal affairs. Even men in the employ of a great company can wield and do wield an unfair influence in a small community as compared with other men.

Mr. LENNOX. I think in the course of ten years I have not had the pleasure of agreeing with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister until now. Listening to the debate, I find that the ideas enunciated by the right hon. gentleman are more in harmony with what I think would be a safe rule than any that have been expressed subsequently. I think the only safe way would be that those who earn their livelihood in the Civil Service of the country should be debarred from entering anything in the nature of political life. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that municipal politics are to some extent diverted into political channels. It is a happy circumstance when it is not so ; but it is the rule, almost if not wholly universal, that the municipal elections have a bearing upon the subsequent parliamentary elections ; and I think it would be a very dangerous thing—and here I agree with another gentleman whom I do not often agree with, the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee)—if the large army of civil servants that we have in Ottawa—and if this government is permitted to remain in power long, the army will increase in number—were allowed to engage in the municipal warfare of the city of Ottawa. An exception might be made in the somewhat limited number of cases of persons who are so locally situated that it is found convenient to employ them to perform some minor office for the government ; but the exception should be confined pretty strictly to that class of cases. The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) said he would like to have discrimination, and that the position of the person aspiring to municipal honours should be the determining factor ; that if he were a person likely to exercise influence over those who voted for him, it would be improper for him to have the position. On the other hand, if it be a position in which he would not likely exercise influence, he might well be allowed to exercise the rights of citizenship. But who is to draw the line? Is the candidate to ask permission of his minister to be allowed to take this position or not? And, if he is, where is the guarantee that all will be treated alike? I confess that I would not have perfect faith that all the employees of the various departments would have equal justice ; and we can well imagine that if a head of a department has to draw the line, there might be a feeling, and might perhaps be justified, that there was unjust discrimination, and that a Conservative, for instance, would be prevented serving a Liberal given that privilege. Or there might be a Conservative and a Liberal opposing each other, so that the minister would have practically the power to determine which one should be in the municipal council and which should not. I trust, therefore, the government will take this matter into early consideration, and make a rule on the lines the Prime Minister has indicated, that those who are drawing comfortable incomes from the Civil Service shall feel obliged to give all their energies to that service and shall not consider it a hardship to be deprived from engaging in municipal affairs.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me we can hardly apply the same rule to both classes of civil servants, namely, those in Ottawa and those on the Intercolonial railway, because the cases are not at all parallel. In a city like this the rule that I would be disposed to apply would be that when civil servants who own property and are therefore on a par with other citizens, they should have the right to go into municipal life because municipal officers have the power to tax or prevent taxation of property. If civil servants are property owners to an extent sufficient to qualify them for municipal office, I would be inclined to the opinion that they should have the right to be elected to those offices. But I would go a step further. I would make the civil servants here the same as any other citizens. I would enable their creditors to collect debts from them and deal with them in the business relations of life just as they would with other individuals. If that be done, I can see no reason why it would not be perfectly proper for civil servants to accept municipal office and take their share of municipal government the same as other property owners. It is unfortunate that in some parts of the country, of late years there has been a tendency to run these municipal campaigns on political lines. That is very wrong and it sometimes gives a civil servant an advantage in a contest which he should not enjoy. We ought to discredit as much as possible the tendency to run municipal contests on political lines. With that understanding, I can see no objection to civil servants who are property owners being elected to municipal office.

But when we come to the employees of the Intercolonial railway, who have a great deal of business patronage to dispense, the case is different. Take an important employee on the Intercolonial railway in some town where he can control many things, that railway has much to do with the municipality, and in such a case I think that these civil servants should not be eligible for municipal election. I think that there you might probably draw the line and say that where the employee is receiving a reasonable salary, he should give his whole time to the service and not take part in municipal matters. But if he be only in receipt of a trifling salary, such as $100 or $150, it ought to be beneath us to make any rule prohibiting such a man from taking part in municipal life, if he be qualified in other respects.

Mr. McKENZIE. In a former debate I had occasion to express the same opinion as has been given to-night by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with regard to the recipient of such a paltry salary as $150. These parties should not be disqualified from participating in any of the duties of citizenship. However, I find the expression of opinion prevalent in the House that the government does not begrudge the time which civil servants may bestow on their duties as councillors or municipal officers. If there be no objection on the part of the government to let civil servants give their time to the discharge of such duties, this subject might well be dropped in this House altogether. The qualification of our aldermen or municipal councillors is a purely local matter to be dealt with by the local legislatures. If any one will look over the statutes of the different provinces, he will find many which disqualify certain persons from running for municipal councils, such as sheriffs, clergymen and municipal employees; so that if we do not begrudge the time given to these municipal duties, it is perfectly safe for us to leave to the legislatures of the different provinces the duty of saying who shall be eligible. If any one who is running should abuse the office he holds from the government, that will very soon become known, and it will be in the hands of the local legislature to disqualify any such person. But there is no power in this House to enforce any such regulation except by the drastic method of dismissal. But if a regulation is to be enforced, let it be enforced by the local legislatures. Not so very long ago we had a drastic regulation in force in the province of Nova Scotia which prevented Dominion officials from voting in a Dominion election. I had the honour of introducing a Bill into the legislature of Nova Scotia to remove such disqualifications. So, I think, in the province from which I come, we are advancing along the line of being willing that Dominion officials should take part in municipal government. And, as I said, if this House is willing that the time should be devoted to the service of the municipality, I think we can well leave it to the provincial authorities to decide who are eligible for such positions.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have listened with great interest to the opinions expressed on this question, and perhaps I may not agree with any of them. I think that as to the inside service here in Ottawa, when a man accepts a public position with a fixed salary, he agrees to give all his time and all his services to the country. It may be said that his hours only extend from 9 a.m. or 9.30 a.m. to 5 p.m., and that outside of that time he is free to do what he pleases. I do not so regard it. I think the civil servant is paid for all his time and for his whole service, and that, besides the time, he spends in his office he should give time to rest and recreation in order to better fit him for his duties. But, if he takes advantage of that, and devotes five or six hours of the evening to a municipal council meeting, he is certainly not going to be as well prepared for service next day, and I do not think it fair to the country that he should accept the salary paid to a civil servant, and waste energy, if not his time, in doing work other than that which the country requires of him.

I think it would be a hardship to impose this condition upon the outside service, upon the man who does not agree to give all his time or, possibly, even more than a small part of his time, to the service of the country, as in the case instanced by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). It seems to me it would be rather a hardship to deprive such a man of the right to run for municipal office. But he is in a vastly different position from that of a civil servant at Ottawa, who accepts payment for his entire time. I have had occasion, before now, to appeal to the Minister of Customs in a matter somewhat similar, the case of a collector of customs in my own county who was running a hotel. I thought it not a reasonable thing that a man should hold these two positions. However, I think I was overruled. Nevertheless, I contend I was right. I do not think a man engaged in commercial business should be permitted to be an officer of the customs and pass his own goods through the customs. But that is very different from a civil servant engaging in municipal affairs. I think a civil servant whose whole time is paid for by the country should abstain from having anything to do with municipal affairs, but should give his entire time to the service of the country, including the time of rest and recreation which he should use in better preparing himself for his duties.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) consider it fair that a civil servant who owned a lot of property in the city should have no say in the way in which that property was taxed for municipal purposes? And, if you do not allow him to be elected to municipal office, he can have no say in the matter. The taxes he has to pay are low or high according as there are or are not qualified municipal officers. For the owner of property to have no say in the question of taxation would, I think, be unfair.

Mr. HENDERSON. He would be in no worse position than thousands and tens of thousands of other citizens who are not elected to the municipal council. I understand that the civil servant is allowed to vote for municipal affairs. He can express an opinion in that way. I think he would be under no hardship. Besides, the civil servant knows, when he accepts a position in the service, one condition of which is that he is to be paid out of the public treasury for his whole time, that certain privileges do not belong to him as they do to citizens who make no such engagement.

He should give his time to the service of the public, either in the shape of work or rest or recreation the better to fit him for the duties of his position.

Mr. DANIEL. It is easily seen that there is something to be said on both sides of this question. At the same time, so far as my experience goes—and I have had some experience in municipal affairs—I should agree with the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With regard to gentlemen holding positions in the outside service, most of them are in the same position as those in the inside service so far as being paid for all their time is concerned. Speaking for my own city, I know that the duties of an alderman or councillor require a great deal of the time of the person upon whom they devolve. A man who is not a master of his own time is not in a position to carry out the duties of alderman or councillor in that municipality at all events, so far as that municipality is concerned. I do not think the man elected for office, municipal office there, can fulfil his duty towards the government and perform his municipal duties also. Mention has been made also of the issues which arise, of the character of the issues involved in these municipal elections. While, in many cases, elections are not run on Dominion issues, yet, in almost every municipal election in this country, the influence of Dominion politics does enter to some extent; and there is no doubt that for his own welfare as well as for the general welfare of the community, I think, it is much better that the civil servant should not take any part whatever in political elections or anything of that kind. I think that is better for himself and also better for the service of the country. We recognize in our province and I presume it is so in other provinces, that an officeholder under this government is not eligible, for instance, for election to a local legislature. A civil servant who has once accepted such an office is under no greater disadvantage with regard to matters of that kind than those who wish to run for the local legislature. A civil servant would understand that he was debarred from seeking municipal preferment and I see no hardship in that. I believe it would be much better if this government made a hard and fast rule that persons accepting positions in the civil service of Canada were thereby debarred from entering into contests for municipal offices. A municipal council might have to do business with these civil servants on behalf of the government and if they were members of the city council the government might have an influence over them that would not be in the interest of the municipality. I endorse the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister that it would be better to make a rule debarring officials of the Dominion government from taking part in municipal politics, although I can understand that a municipality might thus be deprived of the services of very useful men.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be rather difficult to define where the line, if there is to be one, should be drawn. I would be inclined to accept the line laid down by the Prime Minister, that is a line between those offices which command the entire time and service of the officers and those of a paltry or petty nature, which are merely adjuncts to the chief means of livelihood of the person holding them. Take the office to which I have called attention. That man has been in the service of the government for 30 years. For 26 years he enjoyed a salary of 17c a day or $60 a year. About four years ago, some change was made in the Department of Customs, under which his salary has been advanced, I think to $150. It does not seem reasonable that a man holding a position like that, purely for the convenience of the country just as many postmasters throughout Canada, hold their offices, should be debarred from becoming a member of a municipal council. After all the main consideration is to make some clear and definite rule, to make all the employees of the government understand what that rule is, and then to carry it out uniformly all over the country. That does not now seem to be done and it is for that reason that I brought this matter to the attention of the House.

Motion agreed to.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the government or any member thereof, or any official of the Department of Finance, and any person or association, with reference to the conduct and affairs of the Farmers' Bank since the date of its organization.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution and the two that follow it, my desire is to get all the information possible in the hands of the government, which will enable the House and the country to form a correct opinion as to what, if any, responsibilities lie at the door of an imperfect Act on the one hand, or of an imperfect administration of the Act on the other and to define as sharply as possible, the line between the two.

The story of the history and failure of the Farmers' Bank, is, to say the least of it, not pleasant reading for the citizens of our country and no pleasant comment upon the Banking Act of which we have been so proud, and which probably we have been prone to eulogize a little too highly. Just as I would deprecate the too great eulogy of the Bank Act and the system that is founded upon it, so I would deprecate going to the other side of the scale and in a moment certainly of a good deal of stress and anxiety, where criticism is easily and largely evoked, undertaking over drastic legislation, because of any one failure or because of the circumstances which bring some of these matters more distinctly into the public mind. I do not imagine that this House proposes to lose its calmness or good temper or good sense, but at the same time the circumstances surrounding the failure of the Farmers' Bank and the public opinion which has been aroused because of that lay a duty upon this House of examining very carefully as to where the weaknesses have been and after examination of remedying them fully, completely and, I believe, just as soon as legislation can be passed.

Now what are the circumstances of the case? We have already had within the last few years, too few years, several rather bad bank failures. They came, some of them, suddenly; they struck very heavily, but there were certain circumstances in connection with them, which enabled the public to more quickly forget them. The principal circumstance was that, by the interposition of the other banks, no one lost anything. The note holders, of course, were paid and the depositors were paid, and if any loss occurred it was the loss of the capital by those who subscribed to a business venture with all the risks which surround a business venture. This is a different case. In the first place, this is a farmers' bank. The very name of it, and the canvass which was put on for stock appealed to the farming community, and it had the effect of introducing, amongst the shareholders of the bank, a large amount of the capital of farmers, which at the best, is earned slowly, and which when it is to be parted with in the way of loss, is a more serious matter possibly than it is to the average business man and to the business community. On that bank, being a farmers' bank, farmers were placed as directors and, without at this present time canvassing that subject at all, it certainly, in the results which have taken place, cannot be said to have eventuated in the very best conduct of banking affairs. Fortunately, under the banking system that we have, the note holder has been in this, as in all the other cases, absolutely protected. Unless there was an avalanche of failure, a cataclysm, that would hold good under our legislation, and to my mind is a very excellent point in our banking system. When they came to invest their money in it and expected to make a profit by it, you find that they lost, not only the money they put in, but all their prospective profit as well, and have to double up by adding to the amount they lost, an equal amount because under the liability clause they have to pay the losses that have occurred. Depositors who thought that when they were depositing in the bank, it was as safe as a bank, as the rule runs, and that they would have there not only their savings, but the interest thereon, find that they are liable not perhaps to lose everything, but yet a large part of the money which they had deposited and the interest which they had hoped to gain. But what makes it more particularly hard and bitter is, that, being a farmers' bank, the farmers putting their money into the stock of the bank, and followed up their confidence and optimism, by putting in their earnings and savings also, as deposits hoping to strengthen the bank while at the same time, they made their own profits.

You have the institution running four years, and in that time making a banking loss of $780,000, more or less. You find it at the end of that time on the rocks, and, from the curator's reports and the examinations which have been made in the court, you find that during that four years a strange series of banking operations was taking place—directors who did not direct, inspectors who did not inspect, a Banking Act framed for the purpose of preventing abuses which did not prevent a single abuse, and a government charged with the supervision and the working of the Banking Act during the whole time not supervising, at least, not to the extent of changing by a single inch the course which was being pursued, or saving by a single dollar the money which was at stake. Now, that is the presentation of the case, that is the way it stands.

But you find more than that. The Act was supposed to set out clearly and definitely the conditions to be fulfilled before an engine of that kind could get running rights on the broad track of finance and trade in this country. You find that every provision and particular of the preliminary conditions laid down in the Bank Act have been absolutely broken, flatly defied, and yet there seemed to be no trouble at all in the bank getting in a position to do business.

Mr. MILLER. Will the hon. gentleman go a little more into detail and say what provisions were not complied with?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will have all the detail before I get through if he will curb his impatience for a moment.

Mr. MILLER. That is all I want.

Mr. FOSTER. This is about the condition of things as it appeared. I do not want to enter into this matter too much in detail, as I am simply asking for papers, but one point that I want to bring before the House is this: On that condition of things there is a broad feeling of unrest, and, I might say, indignation, particularly in those parts of the country where the matter comes home to the depositor on the one hand, or to the shareholder on the other, and the demand is made, if I understand, not only for an investigation, but for a remedy as well. It is on that line that I want to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the conditions laid down by the Act, and to discuss the question as to whether or not the Act is all to blame, or the government, which called the engine into operation, is all to blame, or whether the Act is partly to blame, and the supervising authority partly to blame and to apportion, as I think we must before we can come to any definite and proper conclusion, just the amount of defect that there may be in each of these and where it chiefly lies. If the Act is defective, then the supervising authority is without fault, because it had not the powers under which it could act. If the Act is not defective and still that condition of things happens that I have spoken of, then it must be that the supervising authority has been careless, or lax, or inefficient in its work. Now, then, what is the power that the Act gives? Who is responsible for the formation of a bank? There is, first, the legislative authority granting the incorporation of the bank. This parliament is responsible for the instrument calling into existence a banking company in this country. The government lays down the conditions which govern the formation and running of a bank. It then puts into the hands of certain officials and certain departments the duty of seeing that the conditions are carried out. If the conditions are ineffective the supervising authority, as I said, has not the machinery with which to do the work, and you cannot hold it responsible, but, if the Act, in its provisions, gives a plentitude of power, then we must inquire if the supervising authority has done its duty under the powers that the Act has given. It is the company's incorporation that this House is responsible for. But the Act of incorporation cannot call the bank into existence, cannot authorize one single bit of the work to be done, cannot put a single operation into running order.

It makes the frame work, but something else has to be done to put the machine into active working order. The motive power is not the act of incorporation, it is gathered up by the provisional directors. The provisional directors, after parliament has done its duty, under the authority of that legislation open the stock books and take subscriptions. That takes a certain amount of time and has to be done under certain regulations, and when it is all done you yet have absolutely no bank because not a stroke of business can be done up to that point. After the provisional directors have done their duty and have assembled the motive power, to wit, the money which is to be put into the operation, and have called the subscribers together, the duties of the provisional directors cease and the subscribers take up the work and they elect their directors, and those directors make an application for what? For running orders; for leave to go ahead. And until these running orders are given you cannot have any harm done. Then we come right to the point: Who gives the running orders? It is the government of the country through the Department of Finance. The conditions laid down are in brief these: That there shall be at least $500,000 bona fide subscribed. That word 'bona fide' is in. It must be an actual subscription not a fake subscription. That must be subscribed in order that there shall be a backing to the bank in its operations. Is that a casual provision? No. It is elementary, it is fundamental, it is the essence of the contract arrived at by the wisdom of parliament. It was not always so, but after years of experience and much deliberation it is a fundamental condition now that if a bank shall go into operation it shall have at least $500,000 bona fide subscribed. But that is not all. It must have $250,000 of that $500,000 which is bona fide subscribed, collected in cash and put into the hands of the Minister of Finance. Both those things are fundamental and no running orders can be given until both those things are done. Now, if it is fundamental that $500,000 should be subscribed bona fide and that of that $500,000 $250,000 shall be paid up and paid into the Finance Minister, the next question comes: Who is to judge as to whether that $500,000 is a bona fide subscription or not; who is to be the judge as to whether that $250,000 has been paid up and is paid in? The judge is the government in and through the operation of the treasury board. Then, Sir, if anybody is made a judge as to whether these two provisions have been carried out, it is no perfunctory office that that person has to fill; it is vital. The interests not only of the shareholders but of all possible depositors, and to a large extent the business of the country are in the hands of that organization which decides whether these two actions are bona fide and whether they have been complied with. There is no prima facie complying with them, no 'possibly' complying with them, no complying with them by this or that man saying they have been complied with; no. Too big interests hang on that, too much is at stake; that must be an actual satisfactory decision come to on facts and the facts must be considered sufficient to make it beyond cavil. Is the act lame in tying the hands of the Treasury Board at that particular point? I do not think so; I do not think the act is to blame, for what does it say:—

No certificate shall be given by the Treasury board until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the board, &c.

If these words 'to the satisfaction of the board' were not in, there might be some reasons why it might be urged that the Act was defective:—But it matters not if one man makes a solemn affidavit or ten men make a solemn affidavit, or 5,000 men make a solemn affidavit the Treasury Board is not bound to take that as evidence. It has to be satisfied ; it can call for, and it has the right, and I think the duty to call for evidence which absolutely satisfies it. I think the language of the Act is clear enough and wide enough and inclusive enough to put the responsibility upon the deciding power. Now, Sir, what happened? It turns out that in the first place $500,000 was not bona fide subscribed. In the second place it turns out that $250,000 was not bona fide paid in ; was not paid in at all. What does the curator say? He says that $170,000 was all that remained of the collections from the subscribers. More than that was collected from the subscribers, but $41,000 was paid out by and to the provisional directors for the purposes for which it was paid which are not given in detail—we will say the expenses of promotion, and the like of that. And when that $41,000 was taken out there was but $170,000 left of the money that actually was paid in, the whole amount paid in being $211,000. But there were notes given where cash was not paid and these notes were used, possibly as collaterals, I do not know. But to make a long story short, there being a deficit some man borrowed $80,000, and out of his borrowings made up the sum of $250,000, and that $250,000 was deposited to the credit of the Receiver-General in the Bank of Montreal in the city of Toronto. There is actually the state of the case: The Treasury Board had the application before it. The fundamental conditions are, the subscription of $500,000, and the paying up and paying in of $250,000 of actual cash. Neither the one nor the other was done, and the only way that the $250,000 came to be paid in at last was that some men, the bank not being in existence, not having running power, borrowed a sum of money and added to it. If you contend that a man can borrow $80,000 to make up the deposit, you could just as well contend that not one dollar of the $250,000 need be paid up, but that the whole of it might be borrowed, and that would satisfy the meaning of the Act. Will any man say that it would satisfy the meaning of the Act? No, nor can he say that the borrowing of $80,000 satisfies the meaning of the Act? Yet, that being the condition of things, the Treasury Board issued the certificate on the 30th of November, 1906.

Now, I am not going to say that the case is complete, or that this House of the country should judge it until the other side is heard. I am simply putting the thing as it is, and asking the government for all the papers and all the knowledge in their possession, in order to get all the facts together with the version of the government. That it seems to me is eminently fair. But, I am putting this case as strongly as I can from the point of view of the sufficiency of the power which was put into the hands of the Treasury Board, and we will see what the information is and hear what the government has to say.

Now, what did the government do? The government—that is, the treasury board—evidently felt that there was some trouble in the matter. It went to the Minister of Justice for an opinion upon the evidence that came before it as to the sufficiency of the preliminary conditions being fulfilled. What was that evidence? An affidavit by Mr. Travers; that is all, so far as the Prime Minister's answer would lead me to conclude. An affidavit was handed in by Mr. Travers, stating that the money had been subscribed bona fide, and that $250,000 had been paid in, and that it lay there in the Bank of Montreal. According to the Prime Minister's answer, no other evidence was asked. Now, suppose that there had been no discussion of the matter, no cautions, no warnings, was the Treasury Board justified in taking the affidavit of the man interested—that and nothing more, and asking for nothing more? I say, not in a case of that kind. I say that was not the proper attitude of the Treasury Board. Even if not a breath of suspicion had reached the Treasury Board, it ought to have asked something more; it ought to have made further examination; for all the interests of depositors and shareholders in the future lay upon the shoulders of those who made that decision, a decision made under great responsibility, and the grounds of it should have been as broad and as well substantiated as possible. What did the Minister of Justice say? He said that the affidavit submitted, if accepted by the Treasury Board, was sufficient for them to base the certificate upon. The Minister of Justice did not estop the Treasury Board from going behind the affidavit of Mr. Travers. He said: If you accept that—as being sufficient, I suppose—you can issue the certificate; but that did not authorize the Treasury Board to issue it, or preclude it from saying, we think under the circumstances this is not enough, and we must make a further exemination. I say that even if there was no suspicion or hint of things not being as they ought to be, more information should have been insisted upon by the Treasury Board before setting that engine going. But were there no cautions, no warnings? We ask that question. I will not say positively that there were, but this I will say, that if there were warnings, if there were cautions, written to or whispered in the ear of any member or official of the Treasury Board that matters were not as they should be—and it was known on the streets of Toronto that they were not—and that an investigation should be made, a decision given by the Treasury Board in the face of these cautions and warnings would be a very serious matter. Were any such cautions given? Were they warned? Were they expostulated with, not once, not twice, but many times? I ask the government; we will get the answer. If they were not, that part of my argument will fall. If they were, their responsibility is undeniably greater and much more heavy. Then the order to go ahead is given, and the engine starts with its full train, and it runs for four years. But there is still the Bank Act; there is still the Finance Department; there is still the government; and just as that engine stood still on the track until the Treasury Board gave it the running orders, just so it could be pulled up at any time by the same Finance Department and ordered to report its conditions. Every month certain returns had to be made; but that is not all, and that is not the most. Those returns are scheduled, and the official mind might say, we have read over the returns and they seem to be all right; we need not go further. But there is another provision which gives additional power to the Finance Department—section 113 of the Act. I will just read that. Parliament in its legislation decided upon the questions that would be asked; arranged the schedule, tried to make it take in every important particular, so that when it came each month to the Department of Finance, that department might have grounds for criticism, for judgment. It is not supposed that the returns come to the Finance Department simply to be pigeon-holed. They are there for a purpose—to be carefully scanned, to see if possible what is the condition of the bank as revealed by those returns.

What if there be anything that does not seem to be just right to the minister? If he feels he has not what he ought to have and there is something still wrong, under section 113. 'The Minister may also call for special returns from any Bank, whenever in his judgment they are necessary to afford a full complete knowledge of its condition.' That is a power virtually untrammeled. Whenever the minister likes he may call for a return, the object being to bring about information which will guide him in ascertaining the exact condition of the bank. Those are the words of the Act 'to afford a full and complete knowledge of its condition.' This is a broad and strong power, and one which brings its own responsibility. After going orders had been issued and the bank was in operation, what happened? Among a number of others, one thing happened, the record of which we have in a non-official way. On the 11th January, 1910, the Superintendent of State Insurance in the state of New York wrote a letter to Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister. What induced the superintendent to write that letter? It was this: A man by the name of Tevis from Kentucky, with some associates, conceived the idea of buying out a mutual beneficiary insurance society or the control of it in the state of New York. It was a society which had about $3,000,000 of assets, and was in rather a comatose condition. Tevis and his associates came to Travers and borrowed $150,000 from him to buy control of that insurance company. They bought control and then immediately turned round and sold $180,000 of securities, with $150,000 of which they were to satisfy the loan. But the state of New York said, that is a mutual insurance company and the assets belong to it, and the state superintendent of insurance got busy to get back the $150,000, a part of the proceeds of the sale of securities of that society, from its lodgement in Toronto in the Farmers' Bank. He could not get it back from manager Travers, but it was necessary that it should be got quickly before liens could be put against it. He invoked the aid of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the 11th of January. He detailed the whole of the circumstances to that minister and he said to him: Can you help me in the matter to the extent of getting information as to just how this thing stands in the bank? What was the answer? It was: There is no government inspection and consequently we cannot act; but if you will just apply to Travers, I think you can get all the information you require. But Mr. Hotchkiss had been applying to Travers and did not get the information he wanted, so that the Finance Minister, on the 11th or 12th of January was made cognizant of that kind of transaction—a transaction which, if it had been explained to a proper kind of banker—and no banker would make $150,000 advance upon it until it had been explained to him—would have been dismissed in shorter time and in stronger words than I would take in telling you. But that was the kind of transaction of which the Finance Department was aware on the 11th of January, 1910, and that was the answer which the department gave. But after the department thought it over, it came to the conclusion that it was somewhat grave and made up its mind to communicate with Travers, and it so informed Mr. Hotchkiss and asked him if his letter could be used. Permission was given, and a letter was written to Travers, and in due time an answer came which was transmitted to Mr. Hotchkiss, and Mr. Hotchkiss again wrote in further explanation of the transaction and still asking the Minister of Finance for his aid as far as it could be given. In the reply of Travers to Mr. Fielding, there is this phrase: I regret that you think this an unusual banking transaction. Therefore, the letter of Mr. Fielding to Travers, which we have not got, but which we will get, must have contained that statement. There then is the confession by the Department of Finance that this was a peculiar banking transaction, that the department knew all about it, so far as its salient features were concerned, and that it had felt impelled to communicate with Travers and ask for an explanation. So far so good, but from the 11th of January up to the time of the closing of the bank, though often importuned, the Finance Department does not seem to have made any progress at all in aiding the insurance commissioner on the other side of the line to get at the rights of the transaction.

Now we want an explanation. Possibly a full and complete explanation may be given. We have no right to form a judgment until an explanation is given, and for my part I do not.

What else took place? We have what is called a bakers' association. What is that banking association for, and had it any particular duties or could it have exercised any rightful influence on a transaction of this kind and on the bank which was carrying it on? We had the idea in this House that whether by the direct giving of powers to the banking association or by that still stronger power which the association of all the banks must inevitably have upon any one of them, irregularities like this could be checked and managers committing them could be called down. Did the Bankers' Association know of this transaction? I should judge that they were fully appraised of it by Mr. Hotchkiss. Did they make any representations to the Finance Minister that something should be done? That information we want to get; but there is the fact that during the whole year, the Bankers' Association did not move to obtain an efficacious adjustment of that matter. Whether that association tried its influence or not we do not know. Whether its powers allowed it to exercise an influence in a case of that kind, I am not lawyer enough to be a judge.

But, I do have faith enough in the power of the associated banks to know that, if they had got a hustle on, they could have had an explanation and a restitution from the Farmers' Bank in a very short time. So that in this case, we evidently found no particular advantage from the Bankers' Association. The question comes up: If the Bankers' Association did not act, was it because they had not the power? If they have not the power, is it the proper thing for this parliament to enlarge their powers, so that, if the Finance Department does not do what some of us think its duty, the associated bankers will be able to remind the recalcitrant bank that it is outstepping the bounds? Not making any assertions as to whether they should have acted—I do not know whether they have the full power to act; one thing is certain, that, by some means or other, a remedy must be found. If the Banking Act is not strong enough in the powers it gives the Finance Department and the Treasury Board, give them stronger; if the Finance Department and the Treasury Board have not done their duty, let that be known to the country. If the Bankers Association is useful for balancing such things and has not the necessary powers, and we think it would be a good body to trust with such powers, let us give them the powers that are needed. The whole matter can be brought under review. For my part, there stand out clear before me two things: one is that a bank should not be able to get into operation in this Dominion under the conditions under which this bank got into operation; and the other thing is that, in this case as in the cases that have preceded it, the weak spot is the head office and the almost complete lack of effective inspection in the head office. Does any one mean to say that a level headed inspector, one who was at nobody's beck and call, absolutely independent of the bank he was inspecting, could have gone into the Farmers' Bank at any time in 1910 or any other year during which it has been running and not, almost in a trice, have put his finger upon the weak spot in that management? But, the inspector did not inspect, from the fact that it is almost impossible, under present conditions, for the inspector to inspect the head office. When the inspector of a bank goes out to the branch offices, he is boss there, and they know it; but when he is in the head office, he is not the boss there—the manager is the boss and the inspector knows pretty well his limits.

How that should be remedied is not for me to discuss to-night; but it is for me, and for other members of this House, to think about, and it is for us to discuss without fear and without favour, with the one supreme object in view of preventing such abuses in future, thereby conserving the people's confidence in the banking institutions of this country, which is the first great thing; secondly, the people's savings in these banks, and thirdly the capital which is put in good faith into these banks by men who hope to make a success of their venture in the banking business.

That is all I have to say on the point. The information I have asked for is designed to bring before the House what is absolutely necessary to my mind. And let me say just one word there: I have asked for returns over and over again; I have asked for bread and have got a little bit of a stone. That is too common in the returns brought down by the government. But this is a return that will not stand for anything like that; this is a request that calls for all the information and wants it frankly, freely, fully, no matter whom it hurts. We must have it before we can remedy the evils. And it is with that view, and with these reasons to support it, that I ask the House to pass this order.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has, in this case, asked for information. He works himself up into a great state of indignation, making out a case before the information is handed out. I think that in this, as in so many cases, it would have been more in keeping had he first obtained the information and then made his speech. He has told us that he reserves judgment until he has the information. I am glad that in one part of his remarks he made that statement. In the beginning of his remarks he said there had been loss, and there was indignation. Notwithstanding the statement that he would suspend judgment until the information was before him, and knowing that where there is a loss of money there is indignation and an effort to fix blame, it would seem that he was endeavouring to take advantage of that state of affairs to make a case against the government which he feared he could not make when the information came down.

I do not think that any hon. member of this House will say that in the Banking and Commerce Committee party politics ever plays any great or serious part. I think that committee is composed in large part of business men from both sides of the House who always endeavour to do business on business principles without regard to partisanship. I was not a member of the House when the Farmers Bank obtained its charter, which was in the year 1904. But that bank did not within the year prescribed, make the required deposit of $250,000, and applied, as many other banks have done, for a renewal of its charter. This application came up when I was a member of this House and of the Banking and Commerce Committee, in 1905. The hon. member who has spoken (Mr. Foster) has endeavoured, I think I may fairly say, to charge grave negligence to the Finance Department. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) is absent from the House, but he is primarily responsible for the acts of that department. I remember very well that when the Farmers' Bank Bill asking for a renewal of their charter was before the Banking and Commerce Committee, the Minister of Finance very strongly objected to the renewal being granted; and I remember that in that case, as in a number of other cases since, the Banking and Commerce Committee ruled against the advice of the Minister of Finance, and the Bill was carried through the committee against his hard opposition. That is not the only time it has occurred.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLER. Did I understand the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) to speak?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have been asked how that is, because I am a member of that committee, I think the Finance Minister, when he comes, will bear me out that on every occasion in the refusal to extend the time for bank charters, at any rate beyond one year, I have stood with the Finance Minister. And, on more than one occasion, the Minister of Finance has remarked: That is one question on which we agree.

Mr. MILLER. Then the hon. member for Halton affords the corroborative evidence that in many cases the Finance Minister has opposed the renewal for enlarging the time of bank charters, as he did in this case. The hon. member spoke of the shareholders of the bank. I think it is the duty of this government and of this parliament to protect, as far as possible, the rights of note holders, who are well protected, and the rights of depositors. I do not know by what process of reasoning it can be argued that the government or this parliament ought to safeguard the interests of the shareholders of a bank more than the rights of the shareholders in any other financial or other institution. The shareholders enter into the banking business, they elect their own officers, their own general manager, their own board of directors, and they have the same rights, the same privileges, the same opportunities of guarding the money that they have put into the stock of the bank that any other shareholder has. In this case the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that there had been a neglect and an overlooking of the preliminary provisions on that point. I asked him to speak more in detail and he said he would later on. I suppose he did and that he thought he was giving me the information for which I had asked when he said that the Bank Act points out that there must be $500,000 in stock, in bona fide subscriptions. The Act does say so. He argued further, and correctly, that the Banking Act, section 15, says:

No certificate shall be given by the treasury board until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the board, by affidavit or otherwise, that all the requirements of this Act and of the special Act of incorporation of the bank, as to the payment required to be made to the minister, the election of directors,—— and so forth—

—have been complied with.

The hon. member and others will note that section 15 says:—

Until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the board, by affidavit or otherwise.

The board may, if they choose, accept the bald statement of the incorporators, or they may require an affidavit. The Act seems to imply that if an affidavit is obtained that is all the evidence they may naturally be expected to ask for or require. But the hon. gentleman says they accepted the affidavit of Travers, who is a man interested. Let me say they accepted the affidavit of Travers, who was the man of all men who knew the facts. Affidavits in support of many actions in court are taken from the men interested because they are the men who have the knowledge, perhaps the only men who have, or ought to have, the knowledge. It turns out that part of that $250,000 was borrowed money. The Finance Department and the Treasury Board have given the right to many, many banks to do business; had they any greater ground in this case to suspect that part of the deposit had been borrowed than in any other case, or than they will have in any case in the future? If the hon. gentleman knows any reason now why the treasury board should have had suspicions, when that part of the $250,000 was borrowed and not paid in the usual way, he might state what information he has in that regard. It was not suspected, the Treasury Board had no such suspicion. It is all right for us now that the steed has been stolen to look back, but there was no reason then to suspect any wrongdoing. Mr. Travers is known now to have been a dishonest man, or a very weak man, but nobody knew that at the time. Many of the provisional directors of the bank were known to be men of good character and repute, and still they have that reputation as honest business men, so I repeat there is no reason why the Treasury Board should have had any such suspicions. The hon. gentleman has said: If there were hints and warnings. That is a style and argument characteristic of him: If there were rumours, if there were hints, if there were warnings—then he immediately goes on to build up his case as if he had proven there were hints and warnings, although he has not afforded one tittle of proof that there was anything of the kind. If I say that actually there were no hints or warnings the hon. gentleman cannot contradict me, because he does not know and he has no information that there were any hints or warnings, or that the Treasury Board or the Finance Department, or the minister had any reason to suspect that these people were not honestly doing an honest business.

Mr. SPROULE. Would not the hon. gentleman regard it as the duty of the Treasury Board to go beyond the mere statement of an interested party and ascertain from the stock books in what position they stood, if $500,000 was bona fide subscribed, if $250,000 in cash was bona fide paid in on the spot, because I assume the books would show it unless they are falsified? Would he not regard it as the duty of the Treasury Board to make at least that inquiry?

Mr. MILLER. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether any person in the whole history of the government of Canada has ever made any such hint or whether any person on either side of the House when the Bank Act was being framed, or at its last or any former revision, has ever hinted that an affidavit as required by the Act, was not sufficient evidence?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member has not answered the question.

Mr. MILLER. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Toronto that if at that stage there had been any warnings or hints, or any reason for the Treasury Board to believe that these people were not honest and the statement in the affidavit untrue, they would have had reason to go further afield for information.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend state from actual knowledge, that there were no cautions, no hints, no warnings at that time?

Mr. MILLER. We have often heard it said that it is not possible to prove a negative. I am not building up a case against the government.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not need to say that.

Mr. MILLER. If I could, I would not be unfair enough to endeavour to build up a case against the hon. member for North Toronto, upon any accusation whatever, upon fancied facts or mere rumours, nor has the hon. member the right to endeavour to build up a case against the Finance Minister, the department or the Treasury Board, upon rumours or street gossip, and I say, it is too often his habit, and it would be to his credit, if he did not do it as often as he does in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has stated positively that I had no such information. On what ground does he make that statement?

Mr. MILLER. I made no such statement. I said: If I say that there was no hint, that there was no warning, the hon. member for North Toronto cannot contradict me, because he does not know.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you know?

Mr. MILLER. I know that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), does not know. I know it very well, because I know if he had the evidence, he would have produced it, and he did not produce it. I am not pretending to give evidence for any one. The hon. gentleman is endeavouring to build up a case on evidence that he assumed to have and did not have.

The hon. member has spoken of the the Bankers' Association. The Bankers' Association are in a much better position to hear any rumours that may be heard.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume the hon. gentleman is making a defence, possibly for the government, possibly for somebody else. But if the treasury board or any of its members were informed that this $250,000 was not raised in such a manner as is described by the banking Act, would he then consider that the affidavit of Mr. Travers should be accepted without any further inquiry?

Mr. MILLER. That would depend very much upon the source from which that information came, and the shape in which it came. I can easily understand, and I do not know whether it was the case in this instance or not, that financial companies already existing, other banks, jealous of the incorporation of a new bank, might cause a rumour to be circulated that no one might reasonably rely upon, but if any person had absolutely that information he ought to have given it to the Treasury Board, before the certificate was issued, not as a mere rumour, but in some such shape that the Treasury Board could have accepted it, and would have had a reasonable right to believe that the information was true. I do not believe that the Treasury Board could act on mere rumour at all.

The hon. member for North Toronto spoke of the Bankers' Association. I was saying when the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) rose, that the Bankers' Association are in a much better position to know what is going on in banking circles than anybody else. The Bankers' Association are always jealous of the reputation of the banks because if one bank fails and causes loss to depositors and shareholders it always reflects upon and injures the credit of other banks as was done in this case. Therefore, the members of the association are always careful to give warning to the Finance Department in cases where the circumstances seem to justify it, and I do not believe that any such warning ever came to the Finance Department of the Minister of Finance from the Bankers' Association. The hon. member for North Toronto has pointed out section 113 of the Bank Act which does give the Finance Department or the Minister of Finance the right to call for special returns.

> The minister may also call for special returns from any bank, whenever, in his judgment, they are necessary to afford a full and complete knowledge of its conditions.

Section 147 of the Bank Act provides for regular monthly returns showing the financial condition of the bank:

> Every bank which neglects to make up and send to the minister, within the first fifteen days of any month, any monthly return by this Act required to be made up and sent in within the said fifteen days, exhibiting the condition of the bank on the last juridical day of the month last preceding, and signed in the manner and by the persons by this Act required, shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every day, after the expiration of such time, during which the bank neglects to make and send in such return.

So that the Minister of Finance must have had a return less than a month from the time he received a warning, in so far as it was a warning from the notice alleged to have been received from some one in the United States That return which showed, over the signature of the officials of the bank, the standing of the bank had been received not more than a month prior to that notice so that it was not necessary for a special return, nor could anything be gained by seeking such a special return. While this section pointed out by the hon. member for North Toronto gives the Minister the right to call for special returns there was no section of the Banking Act that gave the Minister of Finance the right to send any official into any bank to make an inspection of its books. The Bank Act expressly says that no person shall have that right except the directors and officials of the bank. There was some gentleman in the State of New York who it is said did advise the Minister of Finance that a loan of $150,000 had been made that was irregular. What would any person expect the Minister of Finance to do in such a case? He writes to Mr. Travers, the general manager of the bank, and points out that the loan was not a regular loan, that it was not properly made. This is not the only instance, I imagine, in which the Minister of Finance has had to point out to many men, managers of banks, insurance, loan and trust companies that the business that they were doing was irregular business not being honestly—I will not say honestly—but not being regularly carried on. In most cases it would be sufficient to call the attention of the manager, or the managing director, to the irregularity in the business that was being carried on. There was no neglect of duty. As to whether, in view of what has taken place in regard to the failure of two or three banks in the last few years, there ought to be an amendment to the Bank Act and whether the Department of Finance ought to have greater power, is another question. The Minister of Finance evidently thought, before the failure of the Farmers' Bank, not influenced in any way by that failure because the failure had not taken place at the time, that the depositors and shareholders of a bank ought to have greater protection than the Bank Act at present gives them because in section 56 of the new Bank Act submitted to this House there is provision for the election of shareholders' inspectors. This principle has been excepted by the Bank of Nova Scotia because for some time the shareholders have had the right to appoint shareholders' inspectors and inspections have been made by the shareholders' inspectors of that bank. The Minister of Finance is carrying that into the proposed new Bank Act. I do not know that I have really anything more to say as to that. I do not think it is fair at this time, simply because the Farmers' Bank has failed, to endeavour to make any capital out of any accusation against the Minister of Finance. I think that in the newspapers some very unfair accusations and charges have been made. We cannot help what is done in the newspapers, but I think that the hon. member for North Toronto is too old a parliamentarian to properly and fairly take advantage of any feeling which exists at the present time to make charges against the Minister of Finance or the Finance Department that are dependent entirely on rumour which has probably not the slightest foundation in fact.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, all the information in the hands of the government in respect to this matter will be brought down, in the language of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) fully, frankly and freely. There is no reason at all why all the particulars with regard to the formation of this bank and every other transaction should not be brought down absolutely as it is in the records of the government. I cannot but believe that my hon. friend from North Toronto on reflection. will agree with my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) that it would have been more advisable if he had waited until the whole of the information was before the House to make the comments which he has made, because I have reason to think that some of his surmises will not be borne out by the facts. If there has been laxness on the part of anybody, I think everybody in this House must bear the blame. This Farmers' Bank was incorporated—I forget in what year now. But it did not organize during the time allowed it in which to complete its organization. It had to come back to parliament, and it got an extension of time. It had to come back again to get a further extension of delay. I know, and, in fact, it has been stated by my hon. friend from South Grey, that there was some hesitancy on the part of the Committee on Banking and Commerce to allow this renewal of the charter which had been given to the Farmers' Bank. Perhaps it may be after all that this hesitation was overborne by the very title of the bank itself. It was to be a farmers' bank. It was to be outside of the general curriculum of the other banks, and if the committee had refused it incorporation it is quite probable that there would have been a great deal of murmuring and it is quite possible that it might have been said that when the farming community came to have a bank of their own the Bankers' Association were powerful enough to prevent incorporation being given. If the incorporation had been refused it is quite possible that instead of having the government blamed in the year 1910, it would have been blamed in the year 1905 because this incorporation was not granted. At all events, whatever may have been the motive, the committee thought it advisable to give the charter, and they renewed it not once, but twice. When it came before parliament, so far as my memory serves, not a word of dissent was heard from anybody. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) passes rather lightly over these facts, but he insisted on two points as to which he thought the government was to blame, basing his opinion on the information which he has before him at the present moment. The first of these was as to the action of the Treasury Board in giving a certificate to the bank, and the second with reference to a certain transaction which was mentioned in the press only a few days ago. With regard to the certificate granted by the Treasury Board, in considering the information we have before us at present, can any one say that the Treasury Board was in any way blamable. It may be said that other facts will be disclosed, although I do not think so, but even if the insinuation made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) turned out to be true, namely, that there had been outside information given to the Minister of Finance, or to some one I do not know who, would it have been advisable on the part of the board to exercise even more than the caution they did? Under our present information, I ask any man in this House, does he believe that the Treasury Board which is presided over by the Minister of Finance was in any way blamable in granting the certificate? The evidence before the Treasury Board upon which the certificate was issued that the bank should commence operations, was the very substantial fact that the $250,000 required by law was deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. This was accompanied by an affidavit that all the formalties had been complied with and that all the necessary requirements enacted by law had been carefully observed. Could any man under these circumstances have his imagination so perverted as to suppose that there was something wrong behind this? I ask any business man in this chamber, if, under such circumstances he would not have acted just as the Minister of Finance did, namely, take the advice of the Minister of Justice as to whether the law had been complied with, and then give a certificate. I am not a member of the Treasury Board, and I do not know what took place, but on the evidence before us at present I do not think any one will attach blame to the Minister of Finance. Then we come to the second point made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) with reference to the particular transaction revealed but a few days ago by the correspondence published in the press as having taken place between Mr. Hotchkiss, superintendent of insurance for New York state, and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. SPROULE. May I be permitted to put the same question that I put to the hon. member for South Grey? Would not the right hon. gentleman think it the duty of the Treasury Board, having this information from disinterested parties, to try in some way to verify the allegations by an examination of the books of the bank? That would be the best way to ascertain whether the stock had been subscribed bona fide and whether the amount the law required had been paid up bona fide.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think so. I should think that the proper man to give an affidavit was Mr. Travers, manager of the bank. It has been stated by the hon. member for North Toronto that the affidavit which had been put in the hands of the government was false. That may be, but my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows as well as I do that there never was a law passed by the legislature of any country which was not violated at some time or other. You can pass all the laws you want to in this parliament, or any other, but so long as human nature is what it is there will, unfortunately, be some one found to violate that law. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) states that the affidavit put in the hands of the Minister of Finance was false, but I put it to any business man if he would be likely to suppose, in a similar transaction, that such was the case. Now, the second point raised by my hon. friend was with regard to the correspondence between Mr. Hotchkiss and the Minister of Finance. It may be that the law is defective in this respect, but at all events the Minister of Finance answered very properly that we had no bank inspection provided for in our Act, and, therefore, he could not assist Mr. Hotchkiss as that gentleman wanted him to. I may observe, by way of parenthesis, that in the Bill now before the House to renew the Bank Act, the Minister of Finance has himself suggested that the law be amended, and he provides for a different audit, which, if it had been in force previously, possibly would have prevented some transactions of the Farmers' Bank. But there was no inspection provided for in our law at that time, and the Minister of Finance very properly answered that he had no authority to give Mr. Hotchkiss the information asked for, or to take the proceedings which Mr. Hotchkiss wanted him to take. But the Minister of Finance was not satisfied with that; he at once wrote to Mr. Travers, manager of the bank, informing him of the complaint which had been made against him. What followed then? If what I am informed is the fact, then the comments of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) fall to the ground. I am informed—I have not had time to verify the information—that this transaction between the Farmers' Bank and Mr. Tevis for the purchase of the assets of this Mutual Insurance Company fell through and was not carried out, and that the securities which Mr. Hotchkiss was after were returned to him. If that be so the Minister of Finance had nothing more to do when he was informed that the transaction about which complaint was made had been called off for some reason or other, and the Minister of Finance would be free from the blame which the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) tries to place upon him. The Bankers' Association is also free from the blame he tries to place upon it, because he said—if I have taken his words correctly—that from the 11th of January up to the present time, no explanation has been given of this transaction. Well, no explanation has been given of the transaction, because, if I am correctly informed, the transaction was never completed, and the moment it fell through there was nothing more to inquire about it. I think, therefore, that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a little premature in his judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I was premature, and if my right hon. friend will allow me to say it, I do not think his information covers all the ground.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know whether it does or not, but at all events it would be better for me and for the hon. gentleman to reserve our observations until we know all the particulars. However, if my information be correct, I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that his opinions are a little premature.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is just one observation which I would like to make with regard to the duty of the Treasury Board in such cases. I do not propose to pass any judgment upon the transaction, nor do I understand that my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has done so, in the absence of the evidence that is to be brought down, and before the inquiry that possibly may have been made. But I would like to point out to the Prime Minister, and to the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) that the provisions of section 15 seem to go a little further than the Prime Minister has intimated. The provisions of section 15 are:

No certificate shall be given by the Treasury Board until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the board, by affidavit or otherwise, that all the requirements of this Act and the special Act of incorporation of the bank have been complied with.

The expression, 'by affidavit or otherwise' is merely directory as to the character of the evidence which may or may not be accepted. The definite and specific provision of section 15 is that the Treasury Board must be satisfied. It is the right of the Treasury Board—more than that, it is the duty of the Treasury Board—to withhold that certificate until it is fully satisfied.

Mr. MILLER. Does the hon. gentleman think there was anything in this case that was unusual at that time, that ought to have made the Treasury Board act otherwise with this bank than they had been in the habit of acting with others?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend told us a moment ago that none of us could know anything about it, and therefore, from his own standpoint, his question is meaningless. I have no personal knowledge of what took place at that time; he reminded us that none of us could have any personal knowledge; therefore, his question is irrelevant at the present moment. I am pointing out to the Prime Minister that whether an affidavit was made or not is not the question. The question is whether or not the Treasury Board was satisfied, whether or not under the circumstances it had a right to report itself as satisfied. As my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has pointed out, it is not a light matter to give a bank in this country the power to begin business. The statute has very properly required that certain very distinct and definite conditions shall be complied with, and the last condition of all is that the Treasury Board, as trustees for the whole people of Canada, shall be absolutely satisfied.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Treasury Board in this case was satisfied with the deposit of the money and the affidavit.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As it turns out, they were entirely wrong in being so satisfied, if my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is right in his statement of what has transpired in connection with the liquidation of the bank. The Treasury Board were satisfied, but they ought not to have been satisfied, because the actual conditions, not the conditions as stated in the affidavit, should not have permitted that bank to receive a certificate from the Treasury Board. The Prime Minister argued that Mr. Travers was the man who knew more about this than any one else, and therefore when he made a certain affidavit, the Treasury Board, without any further inquiry, without calling for the production of the stock books, without making an investigation which they might have made, should grant a certificate as a matter of course. If that is what the Prime Minister intended to convey to the House, I do not agree with him. I say that, pre-eminently in a case where the man making the affidavit is the man who, to the knowledge of every one in the country, was the promoter of the bank, it would have been a very proper and a very reasonable thing, and not a very unusual thing, for the Treasury Board to say, we have your declaration as to all these matters, but we desire to make further inquiries and to have the production of certain other documents and papers. It is quite apparent to us now that if the government had taken that reasonable and not very unusual course, the condition of affairs would not now be so lamentably against the interest of many people in this country as it is, if we can judge by the press reports, in the case of this bank. However, I do not desire to pass judgment on the action of the government in that regard until we have the papers and until we have possibly some further inquiry into the whole matter.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

For a copy of the full report and finding of the curator of the Farmers' Bank, up to the time of his appointment as liquidator of the same by the shareholders for the requisition of which authority is given to the Minister of Finance by section 122 of the Bank Act.

He said: I suppose the Finance Department has already called for that and has it in its possession; but if it has not, the minister has the right to call for it. A curator's report is as full a résumé of the whole situation as we can get without a minute legal investigation, and would be very satisfactory for us to have.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

For a copy of the by-laws, rules and regulations of the Canadian Bankers' Association as approved by the Treasury Board and now in effect.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA MEDICAL ACT.

Bill (No. 15) to amend the Canada Medical Act—Mr. Black—read the second time.

Mr. BLACK moved:

That it be referred to a special committee composed of Messrs. Black, Daniel, Beland, Paquet, Schaffner, Roche, Neeley, Currie (Prince Edward), Chisholm (Huron), Sproule, Cash, Chisholm (Inverness), McAllister, Rankin and Carvell.

He said: I do not anticipate any opposition to this Bill at all. These amendments have been submitted to the medical councils and associations of every province and have been approved by them all. These associations and councils represent between 6,000 and 7,000 medical men in the Dominion. When this Bill was introduced in 1902, it met with a good deal of opposition, but all that opposition has passed away and from Vancouver to Halifax, as far as the medical profession is concerned, they are in favour of it.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir Wilfrid LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to say to the Prime Minister that the report we were speaking about a little while ago, was the one of 1902. I would ask that he take note of this and see that we get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Order (No. 6) was asked to stand at the request of the right hon. the Prime Minister on his assertion doubtless made innocently though wrongly, that I was out of the House. It was my desire that this order should be gone on with. It was left to stand until the next private members' day, and I should like to know what disposition is proposed to be made of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These orders were called at a quarter before midnight, so that this Bill could not be disposed of at the present sitting. We have reached the hour of adjournment and there was no discourtesy intended to my hon. friend in not going on with his measure. There are as many on this side who wish to discuss it, as on the other, and no doubt on Monday next we can reach it.

Mr. BOYCE. When I gave notice of my intention to move the adjournment of the House to discuss a certain motion, I was under the impression from what I had seen in the newspapers that the Finance Minister would be in his place to-morrow, I have since learned that he will not, and therefore announce my intention to bring on the motion at the earliest possible opportunity after his return.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If convenient, my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), would like to bring on to-morrow, a motion with regard to the amounts paid in Ottawa for the use of rented buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What buildings?

Mr. BORDEN. We will send my hon. friend a copy of the motion some time to-morrow forenoon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad if you will do so.

Mr. BORDEN. What business to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I intend to take up some Bills, but if convenient will take up Supply the first order to-morrow—Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Niagara, Welland and Lake Erie Railway Company.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 100) respecting the Orford Mountain Railway Company.—Mr. Hunt.

ELECTRICITY AND FUEL EXPORTATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CONMEE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 101) to amend the Electricity and Fuel Exportation Act. He said: In introducing this Bill, I desire to make a few explanations. The object of the Bill is to amend chapter 16 of the Act to Regulate the Exportation of Electrical power and certain liquids and gases. That Act was passed in 1907, and it provides for the export of certain quantities of electrical power or energy in cases where there is a surplus over the quantity that may be used in Canada. The purpose of the amendment is to make that Act a little more specific. In the Act as it now stands the word 'power' is defined by subsection (d), as follows:—

'Power' means electrical power or energy produced in Canada.

Then,

'Fluid' means petroleum, natural gas, water or other fluid, whether liquid or gaseous capable of being exported by means of pipe lines or other like contrivances and produced in Canada.

Then the Act provides that no person shall export electrical power or fluid without a license, and prescribes the conditions under which licenses are to be granted. Subsection 2 of section 3 provides that:

No person shall, without a license, construct or place in position any line or wire or other conductor for the exportation of power, or any pipe line or other like contrivance for the exportation of fluid.

The word 'power' in this case is used in this section of the Act, and is not accompanied by the word 'electrical,' as in subsection (d). In the definition of the word 'power' it is stated that power means electrical power, or energy, produced in Canada, while in this section power is referred to without any reference to electricity. Then, by subsection 4, and especially by subsection 5, the conditions upon which power is to be granted are set up. I may say that cases have arisen in which there has been some little difficulty in administering the Act. In one case that I have knowledge of the company claimed that they were not entitled to provide power. Power, as generally defined by that word 'mechanical,' means mechanical, or hydraulic power, the power of the water wheel, and they held they were not bound to furnish any power of that kind, but that it must be electrical energy or none at all. I assume that the intention in passing this Act in 1907 was to provide for, first, the use of power so far as power was required by Canadian consumers, whether that power was in the form of mechanical power or electrical energy. I assume the intention was that Canadian users should be first supplied, and that then any surplus remaining over and above the Canadian demand might be exported. The object of the amendments are to make that plain. For that purpose I propose to amend section 1 of the Act, chapter 16, by repealing that section and substituting a new section in lieu of it to this effect:—

This Act may be cited as the Power, Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act.

The difference is that in the present Bill it is stated:—

'This Act may be cited as the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act.'

Mr. CONMEE.

I introduce the word 'power' there so that it may be carried on through the different sections of the Act. Then I propose to repeal paragraph (b) of section 2 of the said Act and to substitute the following:—

Power means and includes mechanical or hydraulic power and electrical power or energy produced in Canada.

The only difference is that the words 'mechanical power' are introduced in that section. Then, section 3 provides for the export of power and fixes the conditions, and subsection 3, as it stands in the Act, reads:—

No person shall without a license construct or place in position any line of wire or other conductor for the exportation of power, or any pipe line or any like contrivance for the exportation of fluid.

It is proposed to amend that section in this way:—

No person shall without a license construct or place in position any line of wire, cable or other means of transmitting power or any conductor for the exportation of power or electrical energy.

The difference between the two is that the word 'cable' is introduced in the amendment, and for the reason that power can be transmitted otherwise than by electrical energy. I know a case where power has been transmitted by cable for mining purposes a distance of one mile and a quarter, and it is, therefore, necessary to provide that such a contingency shall fall under the regulations of this Bill the same as if it were transmitted by wire. Subsection 5 of the Bill deals with the question of supplying power in Canada, and it reads:—

Any such license may provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus after the licensee has supplied for distribution to the consumer for use in Canada power or fluid to the extent defined by such license at prices and in accordance with the conditions, rules and regulations provided by the Governor in Council.

That is the section under which the difficulty to which I alluded a moment ago arises. The company in the case I speak of claim that the word 'power' used in this section does not mean hydraulic, or mechanical power, but that it referred to electrical power, and no other. Now, in amending the section, the language I am suggesting is as follows, which I propose in substitution:—

Any such license shall provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus after the licensee has from time to time, as in this Act provided, supplied power or fluid, and has also provided all proper or necessary means of supplying such power or fluid for use by consumers in Canada to the extent defined by such license.

I think that amendment is very necessary, and I believe it will make the Bill much more workable, for the reason that the provision that power has to be supplied to Canadian consumers does not appear to go far enough. The Bill, as it stands, provides that prices may be regulated by the license, but in this it goes further and provides that the conditions and means by which the power shall be furnished shall be provided by the license. The power is no use to the Canadian consumer if he cannot get it. For instance, in the case to which I refer, where the power was locked up in the power house, and the door barred, and the Canadian consumer could not get it, it would not be of any value even if a price were fixed as he could not use it, and the purpose of the Act was defeated. The question of the means and methods of using as well as to distributing power is just as important as the question of the power itself. I think every one will agree that it must have been the intention in drafting this Act and providing that the power should be supplied, that reasonable means should be employed for supplying it. That being so, I think the Act should be more definite, and should stipulate with regard to these matters.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Would the hon. gentleman explain in what form is hydraulic power transmitted?

Mr. CONMEE. It is transmitted by cable for considerable distances. There may be other means of transmitting it, but in my own experience I have dealt with power which was transmitted three-quarters of a mile by cable, and I know a case where it was transmitted one mile and a quarter, and I see no reason why it should not be transmitted farther. But if it were transmitted 1,000 or 2,000 feet, that would be quite enough to span an international stream and convey it from Canada to the United States. If the power is to be used in the form of hydraulic power for certain purposes, either the machinery must be connected direct with the waterwheel or the power must be transmitted by some means. If you transform it into electrical energy, you have to add two sets of machinery. You have to generate the electric current, and then you have to transmit it to the motor. Thus you greatly increase the cost of the power, and the Canadian consumer should not be placed at a disadvantage in that respect. I can illustrate that in this way. So far as I am aware, it is not practicable to operate pulpwood grinders by electrical energy, and nowhere is it done. Attempts have been made to do it, and there are perhaps favourable conditions at some places; but no engineer or business man acquainted with the operation of such works will for a moment deny that if it is done at all, it is done at a disadvantage and at a very much enhanced cost. In certain cases it is utterly impracticable to use power for that purpose unless you can get direct connection with the waterwheel, either by connecting the grinders with the shaft of the waterwheel, or by belting or cable and that is one very important purpose for which power is used. In the case to which I refer, where some little difficulty arose, that was the trouble. It was at Fort Frances, where there is a power developed on an international stream. 15,000 horse-power from that development is to-day being used on the American side in a power-house built for the purpose of operating wood pulp grinding machines. There the grinders are connected direct with the shafting of the waterwheel, while on the Canadian side the difficulty arose because the company refused to permit any Canadian user to connect with the wheels, although there is a Canadian power-house in which power is developed, and although the plans that were filed, upon which the work was authorized, showed that the grinders were to be connected direct with the waterwheels on the Canadian side as well as on the American side. However, that is only an incident that might occur in any other place as well as there, and it seems to me the Act should provide for it. My reason for referring to these difficulties is that the department having the administration of this Act, chapter 16, interpreted it practically in the light in which I am proposing to amend it, because they asked the company to name the prices at which they would supply power to Canadian consumers by a series of questions. In those questions they asked the price for mechanical and hydraulic power as well as the price for electrical power; and indeed the regulations founded on the Act provide for fixing a price. There is really a necessity for the amendment if the Act is to be made more workable and plain, and if we are to remove difficulties which at present retard the use of power in Canada. I will take the liberty of reading some of the regulations founded on chapter 16, and dated November 7, 1907. Section 8 of those regulations reads as follows :

> Where a supply of electrical energy, gas or fluid is provided in any part of Canada by the contractor for export and home consumption, then the price charged to any person or company in Canada by the contractor shall not exceed the prices at which electrical energy, gas or fluid is sold by the contractor for export in like quantities under like circumstances.

In the regulations the generating company is referred to as the contractor. The protection here provided for Canadian users of power falls a good deal short of what appears to me should have been provided or perhaps was the intention to provide. There is no safeguard in that clause of the regulations against a great many contingencies, that can arise. All the company has to do is not to sell its power at all, but to use it itself. Then there would be no price at which the exported power was sold, and that provision of the regulations would not come into play. That is exactly what occurred at Fort Frances. The portion of power exported was not sold, but was used by the generating company, and no price has been fixed by them for power on the American side, for either the American or Canadian portion of the power, or for the power which they desire to take from Canada for use, after they have supplied the Canadian consumer. Therefore, I think provision should be made for the fixing of prices, and I propose the following in substitution for section 5 :

5. Any such license shall provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus, after the licensee has from time to time, as in this Act provided, supplied power or fluid and has also provided all proper means of applying such power or fluid for use by consumers in Canada, to the extent defined by such license.

Every such license shall stipulate:

(a) The price at which power shall be supplied for municipal, domestic, commercial, manufacturing and other purposes for use in Canada.

(b) The conditions and regulations under which the respective units of power shall be supplied.

(c) The methods to be employed in supplying power, the methods of distribution and the hours of service.

I submit that it can be no hardship to any company or person dealing with power under these circumstances if he is asked, previous to getting a license, to fix the price at which he will furnish power to Canadian consumers and the conditions and methods of service under which the power will be delivered. It seems to me that should necessarily be provided for, and the amendment seeks to provide for it. Then, there is the following section:

3. Every such license shall provide power for use in Canada for any of the purposes aforesaid upon the request of any municipal corporation or of any bona fide applicant for power or energy, and such license shall supply such power within a reasonable time after such request.

That is practically what the Act now provides, but the word 'municipality' is introduced. It seems to me that where a demand is made by a municipality upon a company for power or to fix the price, the company cannot very well complain that to comply with that request is a hardship. The Act provides that prices may be regulated by the Governor in Council, and that is not interfered with by these amendments. Where that power exists, it can operate no hardships to have it defined. I submit that in the case I am dealing with, we are carrying out practically the intention of legislation which has already passed this House. I refer to chapter 139, intituled an Act Respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, and to the latter part of section 4 of that Act The section provides for the settlement of disputes and the fixing of prices, &c., by the Railway Board of Canada. And the latter lines of the section read as follows:

Such disputes shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 of the Railway Act of 1903, be settled by the Railway Board of Canada on the application of any user or applicant for power or of the company or of the town of Fort Francis.

That same principle is embodied in these amendments. The other provisions in these amendments do not disturb the Act as it stands.

Mr. SPROULE. This is clearly a Bill affecting trade and comes under rule 50, which provides that no Bill relating to trade or alteration of the laws concerning trade is to be brought into this House until the proposition shall have been first considered in the Committee of the Whole House. This Bill, therefore, should be preceded by a resolution.

Mr. CONMEE. I understand the objection raised to be that this Bill should be introduced by resolution because it affects trade and commerce or the revenue. But there is no reference to revenue in it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The point is not that it will affect the revenue, but that it is a Bill affecting trade and commerce, and therefore under rule 50 should be preceded by a resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill will have to stand.

Mr. CONMEE. I would ask that it stand as a resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will have to be withdrawn and the hon. gentleman will have to give notice of his resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I raise the point of order as to whether the hon. gentleman will not have to withdraw his speech.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I raise the point of order that he will not be obliged to make his speech over again.

Mr. CONMEE. If this Bill is to be treated as a matter affecting trade and commerce, we are going to have a very live issue of provincial rights to deal with before long.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

THE GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Mr. GERMAN. Before the orders of the day are called I wish to call the attention of the government, and particularly the Minister of Railways and Canals to an article which appears in yesterday's Toronto 'Globe'. It reads as follows:

It is now regarded as a settled fact that this year will see a start on the Georgian Bay canal. A special estimate of three million dollars, allowing for a beginning, has been prepared, and it is expected that it will shortly be brought down. Confirmation of the report is indicated in the remarks of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux at Montreal, and also in statements that have been made by some of the ministers to members for constituencies particularly interested in the work.

There is more in this article, but I need not read the rest of it. I think this is of sufficient importance to entitle me to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if there is any foundation for the article, and to ask if he intends to place in the estimates next year the sum of $3,000,000 or any other sum for the beginning of the Georgian Bay canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as I know, no such appropriation has been discussed by council. As it is not in my department, I have no knowledge as to whether the head of the department in which it is, had it in mind to bring in such an appropriation. Personally I would not be disappointed to see both the Georgian Bay and Welland canals started.

Mr. GERMAN. I think I am within the rules of the House, but, if not, I ask to be allowed to speak again. If this is not in the Department of the Minister of Railways and Canals, it is probably in the Department of Public Works. I would put this question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) or to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who, I presume, knows what is going on in his government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. German) had better wait until the supplementary estimates are brought down, and then he will see.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA.

Mr. CROSBY. I desire to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has any idea where the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is at the present time, if he knows what that gentleman is about, and if that gentleman had his permission for being where he is just now? My reason for asking this question is that about a week ago, we were discussing the estimates in this House—which, as we all know, form one of the most important matters that this House has to deal with—and we found that we had to lay aside one estimate of $100,000 for the construction of a barracks in the city of Montreal—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crosby) will have to confine himself to a question.

Mr. CROSBY. But, if you please, Mr. Speaker. I am going to give my reason for asking this question.

Mr. SPEAKER. That may be given on going into supply, but not on the orders of the day.

Mr. CROSBY. But, surely if I am to ask a question, I must give a reason for it. I do not wish to put the Prime Minister to the trouble of answering without giving a reason—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can answer my hon. friend (Mr. Crosby) without putting him to that trouble.

Mr. CROSBY. But, if you please, I would like to give all the information so that the Prime Minister can answer. I would like to let the Prime Minister know where his Minister of Militia is, in case he may not know; then he would be better able to answer. But, Mr. Speaker, if you are going to rule that I cannot ask this question—

Mr. SPEAKER. The rules allow a question to be asked on the order of the day, but not an argument—

Mr. CROSBY. I do not propose to put up an argument—not the slightest. I only refer to this item in supply being laid aside because it was for the reason that the Minister of Militia was not in his place in this House that it was laid aside, and it has not been taken up since that time. I wish to read, if you will permit, from a paper that gives a statement as to where the Minister of Militia is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROSBY. I hold in my hand a copy of the 'Western Chronicle,' dated Thursday, January 19, in which there is an advertisement of a public meeting to be held in the county of Kings. A by-election is going on there, a very serious one, because in the local legislature of Nova Scotia, the Liberal government have 33 out of 38—

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crosby) should confine himself to a question, or wait until a motion for supply is made.

Mr. CROSBY. May I read this paper?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that it has been settled by the House under our rules that no debate is allowed on the orders of the day, but a question may be asked. This would be more regular on a motion to go into supply, which, I understand, is to be made in a few minutes.

Mr. CROSBY. If you rule, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot ask this question—

Mr. SPEAKER. I have ruled that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crosby) may ask a question.

Mr. CROSBY. I would rather await a better opportunity.

DISPUTED PATENT TO LAND.

Mr. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I desire to make an explanation in regard to a matter which was before the House yesterday on a motion of my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor), for certain papers. There seemed to be a question as to a fact which I had stated, and, as I had not the details before me at the time, I was not able to give the House the case as I understood it. If I may, I would like to do so now. The matter related to the issue of a patent to one Fanny Louise Irwin and to certain legal proceedings by the Justice Department to secure the cancellation of the patent on account of it having been issued in error, so that there might be substituted for it, a patent which would convey the title which was originally intended to be conveyed. I find on reference to the papers, that the homestead was taken by one Thomas Vance, who squatted upon it in 1888. He made application for homestead entry on October 19, 1891. He applied for patent on July 22, 1892, and the issue of patent was approved by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands and certificate of recommendation issued by him November 11, 1892. This gave to Thomas Vance an assignable right under the regulations, which provides,—under section 28:

A person whose homestead may have been recommended for patent by the local agent or senior clerk, and who has received from such agent or clerk a certificate to that effect in the form K in the schedule to these regulations, countersigned by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, or in his absence, by any member of the Dominion Lands Board, may legally dispose of and convey, assign or transfer his right and title therein.

On the 7th December, 1895, the agent at New Westminster forwarded an assignment from Thomas Vance to Fanny Louise Irwin, dated November 30, 1895, and on the 24th December, 1895, the department replied, stating that the assignment in question had been registered in the books of the department and that the land stood in Miss Irwin's name. That is to say, Fanny Louise Irwin acquired, under the law, the right to a patent to this particular land without any notice of any reservation therein. That was the question of fact between myself and my hon. friend from New Westminster. The department was in fault in afterwards granting the patent to Fanny Louise Irwin—but the patent was granted to her because she had already acquired her rights from Thomas Vance and under the law—without notice of any reservation in the right that was given to Thomas Vance. So, Fanny Louise Irwin was in exactly the same position when she applied for her patent, as the assignees of Fanny Louise Irwin are now, in contesting the right of the limit holders to the timber on that limit.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What was the date of the license to cut timber?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the figures before me, but I understand it was in 1886 that the license was issued.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to an article that appears in the Toronto 'News' of yesterday, and to ask him if the facts are as there stated. I will read the heading and the article:—

HOW TRAVERS GOT ENDORSATION OF PREMIER.

Sent one of the first notes of Farmers' Bank to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. A courteous reply.

An interesting development in connection with the wrecking of the Farmers' Bank was discovered this afternoon when it became known that a letter written by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the bank was largely used by General Manager Travers to secure shareholders and depositors.

The manner in which the letter was obtained from the Premier of Canada by Manager Travers was by sending to Sir Wilfrid Laurier a new $100 note at the time the bank commenced business. In reply, Sir Wilfrid wrote a letter to the Farmers' Bank, thanking them for the gift and prophesying a bright future for the institution when under the management of such a well known bank official as Mr. Travers. The letter was framed by the general manager, and was also photographed. Whenever a proposed depositor or shareholder entered the bank he was always shown the letter, and told that it was the Premier of Canada's statement to the effect that the bank would be a brilliant success.

I ask if the facts are as stated in that article?

Sir WILFRID LARUIER. On the 1st of January, 1907, I received the following letter:—

Toronto, January 1, 1907.

The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., Ottawa, Ont.

My Dear Sir Wilfrid,—I take great pleasure in enclosing to you the first $25 bill ever issued by any bank in Canada.

Please do us the favour of accepting this bill as a souvenir, with the compliments of the Farmers' Bank of Canada.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) W. R. TRAVERS,
General Manager.

To this I answered:—

Prime Minister's Office,
Ottawa, January 4, 1907.

Dear Mr. Travers,—I have your very kind favour of the 1st inst. I feel very much flattered by the honour which has been paid to me by your institution.

I accept the souvenir which you have enclosed with the greatest pleasure, and you will add to your kindness if you present my grateful appreciation to the members of your board.

Believe me, dear Mr. Travers,
Yours very sincerely,
(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

SUPPLY—ABSENCE OF MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CROSBY. Before that motion is put, I desire to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister, if he has any knowledge of the whereabouts of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) at the present time. I would ask whether he is away, if he has permission to be away, and to engage in the work he is now doing in the county of Kings, Nova Scotia. My reason for asking this question is that about a week ago, when we were in supply, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), placed before us an item of $100,000 to build a barracks in the city of Montreal, and nobody in the House knew anything about these barracks, and consequently, we could not vote the supply. We had to drop it for the reason that the Minister of Militia was not in this House, and he has not been in this House from that day to this. As I was anxious to know his whereabouts, I made inquiries, and I found in a paper published in Kentville, Nova Scotia, called the 'Western Chronicle,' of January 19, the following item of news:—

POLITICAL MEETINGS.

Political meetings in the interest of the Liberal party, addressed by the candidate, H. H. Wickware, K.C., Sir F. W. Borden, A. E. Wall, M.P.P., and other prominent citizens will be held as follows: Port Williams, January 21; Delhaven, January 23; Halls Harbour, January 24; Wolfville, January 25.

Now Mr. Speaker, the reason these meetings are being held is that a by-election is going on for the local legislature in the province of Nova Scotia. In this connection, I may inform the First Minister, and other hon. members of this House who may not be acquainted with the conditions in that province, that we have a Liberal administration in Nova Scotia, and out of 38 members, 33 are Liberals. You will see therefore, that there is no reason for anxiety with regard to the probable loss of the province by the Liberals; though I can well understand that intimate relations may exist between local Liberals and the Liberals in the Dominion parliament. However, I fail to see any reason why a minister of the Crown, during a session of parliament, when he should be here attending to the duties for which he is paid by the country, should not be here, performing those duties. I wish to ask of the First Minister if the Minister of Militia and Defence has his permission to absent himself from his duties in parliament, and to engage in a local election. The Minister of Militia has been appointed to the head of the Department of Militia and Defence, and is paid a good salary for performing the duties thereof, and he should be here to attend to them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no hesitation at all in saying to my hon. friend that I knew that my colleague was in Nova Scotia. He did not consult me before going, but he consulted me afterwards, and told me he was engaged in an election. My colleague the Minister of Militia and Defence is not only a member of this House but I understand he is an elector of the county of Kings, and at the present time he is exercising his duty as a citizen of that province, and nobody can find fault with him for so doing.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL AND THE FISCAL POLICY OF CANADA.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like to correct the memory of the Postmaster General with regard to a matter which came up in the House on Friday last, in connection with his speech before the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the previous evening. On Friday the member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), called attention to a portion of the report in the Montreal 'Gazette' of the Postmaster General's speech.

Our commercial ascendency, thanks to the wise fiscal policy adopted by this country twenty-five years ago, is the admiration of the world to-day.

The hon. Postmaster General, in replying to the criticism of his speech by the hon. member from Humboldt, practically denied the accuracy of this report, and, among other things he said:—

In the Montreal French papers of this morning I am quoted as having said that it was the policy adopted fifteen years ago; and that is in fact what I said. There is only a difference in figures, the English papers have a two instead of a one.

That struck me as being an extraordinary excuse for a minister to give for this report in the Montreal 'Gazette,' because the word 'Twenty-five' was not printed in figures but in letters. I therefore took the trouble to look over the French papers, and I have here two of them which I think the hon. gentleman will not question. One is 'La Patrie' and the other is 'La Presse.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. Evening papers.

Mr. PERLEY. Well, these are the evening papers which support the hon. gentleman. I propose to read from them extracts covering this point. First, I shall take 'La Patrie.' I shall not read the whole article, but simply the sections which refer to this particular matter.

Notre politique fiscale, adoptée il y a quelque vingt ans, est le sujet d'admiration de l'univers entier.

Our fiscal policy adopted twenty years ago is the subject of admiration for the whole world.

In another place, to support the argument which the hon. gentleman evidently was making that evening, it says:—

Mais il ajouta qu'il fallait reconnaitre que le Canada était l'œuvre grande et magnifique de sir John A. Macdonald et de sir George Etienne Cartier.

But he added, it was necessary to remember that Canada was the great and magnificent work of Sir John A. Macdonald and of Sir George Etienne Cartier.

Now, 'La Presse reports:—

Quoique la confédération ne soit un fait accompli que depuis 47 années seulement,—et M. Lemieux rend ici hommage à sir John Macdonald—nous avons joliment grandi, et dans 20 ans, nul doute que le dominion ne compte 25,000,000 d'habitants.

Although confederation had only been an accomplished fact for 47 years—Mr. Lemieux paid a tribute here to Sir John Macdonald—we have grown immensely and in 20 years, without doubt the Dominion will count 25,000,000 of inhabitants.

La politique fiscale adoptée par nous, il y a vingt-cinq ans, fait l'admiration du monde entier.

Our fiscal policy adopted by us 25 years ago makes us the admiration of the whole world.

'La Patrie' reports him as saying '20 years,' while 'La Presse,' which is the organ par excellence of this government in Montreal, reports him as saying '25 years.' When the Postmaster General was in Montreal before the manufacturers at their dinner he evidently made up his mind to give credit where credit is due, and I understand that he was applauded for his breadth of view in acknowledging the great work of his political opponents. I think, Sir, that the minister should be proud to bear evidence on behalf of the great Conservative party instead of being anxious to deny those sound utterances even though one of his supporters, the hon. member for Humboldt, finds them somewhat distasteful.

Mr. PERLEY.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is indeed a very big question. My hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) brought my attention to a report which appeared in the Montreal 'Gazette,' and wanted to know if, speaking on the fiscal policy of Canada, I had referred to the policy which had given Canada her ascendency as a policy adopted 25 years ago. I answered, and I wish to answer my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) again this afternoon, that I did not use the words 'twenty-five years ago,' but that I used the words 'fifteen years ago.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LAKE. It was the fiscal policy of the Conservatives which was enforced fifteen years ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I used the round figures 'fifteen years ago'; it is fourteen years ago since the policy of the Hon. Mr. Fielding was adopted. At all events, I said that I used the words 'fifteen years ago.' Now my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) says that I drew the attention of the House to the fact that some of the newspapers had used the words 'twenty-five,' some others 'twenty' and some others 'fifteen.' I think I have corroboration from him, because he has read from the evening papers, 'La Patrie' and 'La Presse,' words to that effect. But, there is a better means of settling this great difficulty. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) were present at the dinner. Now, to settle this very serious question, I am ready to throw myself into the arms of the leader of the opposition. If I really used the words 'twenty-five years ago,' I am very guilty indeed for having deceived this House, but I am quite positive, and I am quite sure my hon. friend from Pictou is quite positive, too, that I used the words 'fifteen years ago.' There is another point. My hon. friend seems to take exception to the compliments I paid before this very representative gathering to the memory of Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Etienne Cartier. The Manufacturers' Association of Montreal is an organization composed of the most important members of the Conservative party and one in which the Liberals are to a large extent in the minority, although I have always been on very friendly terms with both parties in that organization. But, my hon. friend seems to be under this delusion that a member of a Liberal government, speaking in the city of Montreal before manufacturers belonging to the Conservative party, is simply playing with them by saying something before them which he would not have the courage to repeat in the House of Commons of Canada. Let me tell my hon. friend that the compliments, and deserved compliments, I as a young Canadian paid to the giants of the Conservative party of 30 and 40 years ago, I am ready to repeat before the House of Commons. I hope that if ever my hon. friend is invited to speak before the Manufacturers' Association, and that if it comes to his mind he should say something in praise of Alexander Mackenzie, the great Reform Prime Minister of Canada, he will not be afraid to pay the memory of that great man a little compliment, as I did to the memory of Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have been appealed to by the Postmaster General, but I regret that my recollection of the occurrence is entirely different from his. There was a gentleman present who bore the outward appearance of the Postmaster General, and who said most distinctly, not 25 years ago, but 20 years ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The 'Gazette' says 35 years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not care what the 'Gazette' says. I know what I heard. It may be that the word 'five' was added, but I know that the word 'twenty' was used, and I know that the word 'fifteen' was not used. The reason that I am positive about it is that I turned to a gentleman on my right and I said it is rather a curious date for Mr. Lemieux to fix. I would have expected, if he were going that far, he should go back still farther. My hon. friend the Postmaster General must be a little confused in his recollections of it. But it really is of no moment; he is at perfect liberty to state 15, or 20, or 25, or 30, but as a matter of fact he did, on that occasion, in my hearing, use the word twenty.

Mr. RHODES. It may not be a matter of great moment, but now that the subject has arisen, I may say that I was present at that dinner, and I heard a gentleman whom I believe to be the Postmaster General deliver an address, and I can say positively that the word 'fifteen' was not used, but that the words 'twenty years' were used, as stated by the leader of the opposition. On that occasion the gentleman who sat beside me remarked that instead of using the word twenty, the Postmaster General should have mentioned thirty-two years. However, as is the custom with the Postmaster General, he was very pleasing and gracious on that occasion, and I thought it a particularly happy thing that he, as spokesman of the government of this country, should pay a well merited tribute to the fact that there was still in effect the policy inaugurated by Sir John A. Macdonald, to whom the Postmaster General made reference. I thought it a splendid tribute by the Postmaster General that he should state that fact at a gathering of that kind, because our Liberal friends are disposed to admit, outside of this House, but not inside of this House, that we are to-day living, in effect, under the National Policy as laid down by Sir John Macdonald. I am sorry that, in spite of the admiration I hold for the Postmaster General, he should see fit to be influenced by the sentiments of a few free trade protectionists, who support the government, and should find it necessary to revamp his remarks. I can understand that in addressing an audience one does not speak with the same accuracy as he would write, but I have a positive recollection of the incident at that dinner, and so far as my ears can be relied upon, the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). The fact that my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) thought this incident of sufficient importance to bring it before the House a second time, is an evidence of the lack of material in the possession of hon. gentlemen opposite to attract the attention of the people of this country. I attended the dinner referred to, and I may say it was a delightful dinner, where all seemed to enjoy themselves, and I was seated in the immediate proximity of the Postmaster General. I do not know what is responsible for the lack of memory and accuracy evidenced by some hon. gentlemen opposite, but certainly those who sat at the guests' table, in my immediate proximity, are aware of the fact that the Postmaster General used the words 'fifteen years.' The mental calculation was made at the moment that was made by my hon. friend from Assiniboia a moment ago who was so technical that he wanted to draw the inference that because the Postmaster General used the words fifteen years he was referring to some imaginary policy the Conservatives had in the year they went out of power. But there were other gentlemen present who did make the calculation, and they saw that, as we were now in 1911, and as the Liberal party came into power in 1896, the Postmaster General was sufficiently accurate in describing the period from which Canada's prosperity began to date. That was the period to which the Postmaster General referred, and that was the date from which Canada's prosperity began.

Mr. SPROULE. The ordinary man listening to what has been said in the House on this subject, and the divergent recollections of the incident, must come to the conclusion that the city of Montreal is not under the local option law.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. HERRON. When may I expect the return ordered by the House some two weeks ago with reference to the communications between the Alberta government and the Dominion government as to the restoration of the lands to the province? I am very anxious to get that return.

Mr. MURPHY. I will have the matter inquired into.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. On Thursday last I asked the Prime Minister with reference to the Anglo-Japanese treaty, and he said he would give an answer on Monday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Correspondence has been going on, and is going on, with reference to the treaty, and as it is not yet completed it would not be advisable to bring it down.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I also asked whether or not a notice to discontinue the treaty had been given. Is there any objection to answer that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Notice has been given by the Japanese authorities of the denunciation of the treaty, and a new treaty is being negotiated between Great Britain and Japan. It is with reference to this new treaty that correspondence is now going on.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, Japan gave notice of the denunciation of all her foreign treaties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is my understanding.

WASHINGTON NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the Prime Minister any announcement to make as to the present condition of the negotiations at Washington?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend refers to the tariff negotiations?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have a telegram from Mr. Fielding saying that he expects to reach Ottawa to-morrow afternoon, and he hopes to make an announcement on Thursday.

RENTED GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to direct the attention of the government and the House to a resolution, notice of which was given before the adjournment of the House last evening. It reads as follows:

Mr. SPROULE.

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following substituted therefor: 'In the opinion of this House the action of the government in renting certain buildings in the city of Ottawa at prices which give the owners annually from 15 to 18 per cent net on the cost of their property is unbusinesslike, indefensible, and merits the censure of this House.

In 1909 my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works leased on behalf of the government a building on the corner of O'Connor and Queen streets, in the city of Ottawa, known as the Regal Building, for five years, with the privilege of renewing the lease for another term of five years, at an annual rental of $16,095.73. The owners of the property are required by the lease to pay the city taxes, which amount annually to $1,186.07, for two stone walks that were put down by the city corporation $24.13 per annum, and for two roadways $75.75 per annum; and they will, of course, pay the insurance upon the building, which if insured for $50,000 at the rate of 65 cents per annum per $100, makes an annual payment of $325. These sums make a total of $1,610.95 which has to be paid by the owners of the building. Deducting this amount from the annual rental paid by the government leaves the net amount paid by the government to the owners of this property at $14,484.80 per annum. Now, the first question that arises is why should the government rent this building at all? This property was owned originally by the Young Men's Christian Association of this city. They were seeking a purchaser for it for upwards of a year and a half. The right hon. the Prime Minister had taken into his government a brand new administrator in the person of the hon. Minister of Labour, and the government were seeking new quarters for my hon. friend. So, I presume the Minister of Public Works was approached by the Minister of Labour, and although the Minister of Public Works was well aware that this property was for sale and could be purchased by the government if they had any faith at all in the policy of government ownership. But my hon. friend decided that it was much better to rent the property from his supporters; and so the middleman, who has been so much talked about in this House, and in this country, appears on the scene, and purchases the property from the Young Men's Christian Association in 1909 for the sum of $47,500. The owners of the property expended upon it a little less than $32,500, adding two new stories; so that their total investment was $80,000. On this amount the net rental they receive from the government gives them the handsome return of 18 per cent per annum after they have paid all their charges. I cannot understand why the hon. Minister of Public Works did not arrive at the conclusion that it would be in the interest of the people of this country, if not in the interest of the government, that he should take some of the boasted surpluses that we have heard so much about for the last 15 years, and purchase this property, which it was well known to everybody, was on the market. But my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works is well versed in the methods of dealing with property in the interest of his friends in the city of Ottawa as well as in other parts of Canada, and he concluded that the policy of public ownership of this building would not suit the government. So the middleman steps in and purchases the property. There are some other charges on the property which have to be paid by the government, such as water rates, lighting and heating, the caretaker's salary, and the operating of the elevator. The basement and the first and second floors are occupied, or are supposed to be occupied, by the Minister of Labour and his staff, the third floor by the Minister of Militia, and the top story by the Finance Department. I had the pleasure of going through the building the other afternoon, and I found in the top story one room about 30 feet square in which there was nothing at all. And alongside of it another room, not quite the same size, and in that story at present, notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend has rented it at this enormous price, and has had it rented for more than 12 months, there are five vacant rooms absolutely unoccupied. The Militia Department, a little lower, is not at all crowded because there are several vacant rooms in that part of the building. The Minister of Labour is brand new of course, and he has filled up his department pretty well except the basement, about one-quarter of which is not occupied. Therefore I am quite safe in saying that a little more than one-third of this building, for which we are paying this enormous rent, is not occupied at all. I do not wish to criticise too closely my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, but every man who has resided in Ottawa for the last few years realizes that property in this city has been rapidly increasing in value, and my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he came into power was well acquainted with the city and its outlook. One of the things for which the people of this country, and the opposition in particular, condemn my right hon. friend and his government, is that, notwithstanding the opportunities given them to purchase property at low prices they have allowed these opportunities to go by and rented from their friends at enormous prices. I may say that if my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works had taken out of the treasury $80,000, the amount put into these premises by the owners or had borrowed it at 4 per cent—if he had taken out of the treasury $80,000 to purchase and improve this property and allowed 6 per cent on the investment, it would have been a fair investment, considering the increase in value from year to year, and if he had taken the balance of the amount paid these gentlemen—being the difference between 6 per cent and 18 per cent—in eight and a half years the government would have owned the building altogether and have had in addition $2,320.80 in the treasury. Why did not my hon. friend adopt that policy? It is not only yesterday that these gentlemen have been seeking for properties in the city of Ottawa. They have been on many streets in the city finding properties that were once owned by Conservatives and now owned by Reformers, looking up properties, in the interest, not of the people, but of their friends in the capital. The condemnation I have to offer is that my hon. friend has been more careful of the interests of his political friends than of the great trust vested in him as Minister of Public Works. I am not going to add one statement after another in respect to public buildings, but I present this as a clear cut statement of the unbusinesslike policy of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the rental period ?

Mr. BLAIN. Five years with the privilege of renewing the lease for another five years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a privilege to the government and not to the lessor.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, a privilege to the government that makes it all the worse in my opinion. The assessed value of this property by the city when it was owned by the Y.M.C.A. was $30,000. If he has any criticism to make about the amount expended by the present owners $32,500, I answer by saying that after it was improved and enlarged, the assessment was increased from $30,000 to $55,000 by the city. Therefore there cannot be much doubt as to the amount expended upon it. The opposition and the newspapers have been criticising this government for allowing middlemen to step in between the people and the administration; the Liberal Conservative party moved a resolution condemning this government for allowing these middlemen to enter in and supply goods without public competition. In the Marine Department, in the Department of Railways and Canals, properties and goods were purchased from middlemen who repealed enormous profits in connection with the Intercolonial railway, and in connection with their business. In the Department of Militia, articles were purchased at enormous prices from middlemen, and when difficulties arose in some of the departments, American bookkeepers were brought in and paid to straighten out the books of the department at $15 each per day. According to the Auditor's statement of the Printing Bureau scandals, the country lost more than $70,000 by purchasing goods outside the country, and giving the advantage to foreigners. These conditions the people are anxious should be done away with. The policy of the Liberal Conservative party is that no middleman shall live at the expense of Canada; that middlemen shall not be allowed to stand between the people and the government and make enormous profits, in one instance of 185 per cent.

Mr. CONMEE. When was that policy adopted ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend must know if he knows anything, that I had the honour of moving a resolution in this House calling on this government to put out of business entirely middlemen, and my hon. friend stood up and voted to keep them there.

Mr. CONMEE. I had reference to the Conservative policy. That was not the policy followed in the building of the Langevin Block, for instance.

Mr. BLAIN. The Langevin Block, whatever may be said for or against it, is a monument of good administration, compared with other buildings to be found here at present. I shall not continue the discussion further. I have put the case fairly and honestly before this House, before the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Public Works, who is particularly responsible and who had an opportunity of purchasing this property for the government and saving the people thousands of dollars. The people will expect my hon. friend to explain how it is the government leased these premises from their own supporters, when they might have purchased in the open market, and when by so doing they would have saved the country these thousands of dollars.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will allow me to express my sympathy with him by reason of something which must have happened between yesterday and to-day. I do not know what it is, but something has certainly affected my hon. friend. Yesterday he gave notice of motion :

That in the opinion of this House the action of the government in renting certain buildings in the city of Ottawa at prices which give the owners annually from 15 to 25 per cent net on the cost of their property is unbusinesslike, indefensible and merits the censure of this House.

Between yesterday and to-day he has changed his motion from '25 per cent' to '18 per cent,' and from 'certain buildings' in the city of Ottawa he has come down to one building—

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) say where it was stated at 25 per cent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the motion sent to my office this morning.

Mr. BLAIN. If I may be permitted, the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) is absolutely aside from the facts ; and I will submit my case to you, Mr. Speaker, and my hon. friend can hand to you the copy of the resolution I sent to his office this morning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say is that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) stated last evening that he would have a copy of the amendment sent to me, and that amendment came to me in the form I have just read.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I say that '25 per cent' is not in that document. It is '20' per cent in that document, and I changed the resolution myself to '18' per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was 20 per cent, was it? In the copy the hon. gentleman sent me, the figures look to me like '25'. The typewritten figure has been changed, but apparently it should read '18' per cent.

Mr. BLAIN. Hand it to Mr. Speaker, and ask him to read it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) says it reads '20' per cent. Then, I congratulate my hon. friend on the change from 20 per cent to 18 per cent. I congratulate him further that whereas, yesterday, he proposed to ask the House to condemn the government because they had been in the habit of renting certain buildings, giving the owners a net profit of from 15 to—he says now—20 per cent, he has not only changed it to 18 per cent but has limited it to one building known as the Regal building.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On what evidence does the hon. minister say it was 25 per cent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was 25 per cent, I thought, in the copy sent to me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When the hon. gentleman makes a positive statement, I should think he would have the evidence. I have the original typewritten copy—

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is it there?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It reads '20 per cent.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well, put it 20 per cent if you like.

Mr. BLAIN. With the permission of the Minister of Public Works—for I think this is rather a small thing for a minister of the Crown to deal in—I may say that on this side of the House there are several typewritten copies of the same resolution, and in not one of them is '25' per cent stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And, what are they—twenty?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, 20 per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take the hon. gentleman's explanation—'20' per cent. It shows that, since yesterday he has done a little more figuring and has come down two per cent on the net profits, and two per cent on the net is a very important reduction to make. And will the hon. gentleman deny that in his motion yesterday he charged that the government had paid rents yielding to the owners of these buildings a net return of from 15 to 20 per cent, and to-day he limits it to from 15 to 18 per cent, and leaves out the word 'net'?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend knows—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BLAIN. With the permission of my hon. friend—I do not wish to interrupt him, and will not if he does not think it fair—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am asking a question.

Mr. BLAIN. What is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question is whether, in the resolution, the hon. gentleman has actually submitted to the House, he left out the word 'net' which he had in the resolution submitted yesterday.

Mr. BLAIN. There was no such resolution submitted to the House by myself or any other hon. member on this side yesterday. And my hon. friend knows that very well. At the close of the session last evening, the leader of the opposition rose in his place and courteously stated that the hon. member for Peel would move a resolution to-morrow, if convenient to the government. No resolution was read by the leader of the opposition or anybody else, and no resolution was forwarded to the Minister of Public Works other than the one to which I have referred which bears '20 per cent' since changed to '18 per cent'—and '25 per cent' is not to be found there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We passed that some time ago. What I am asking is as to the word 'net.' In the copy of the resolution sent to me, it was stated that the owners were receiving a 'net' profit. Has the hon. member omitted that word 'net,' in the resolution before the House?

Mr. BLAIN. The resolution that I moved, and that is now in your hands, Mr. Speaker, is an exact copy of the resolution that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) holds in his hand, if it is the copy I sent to him this morning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the copy I have received from the hon. gentleman the word 'net' appears.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, would the hon. gentleman read the resolution that I placed in the hands of the Speaker?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The resolution read by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain), as I recollect it—

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, 'recollect'! I make the statement that exactly the same words that are in the resolution in the hands of Mr. Speaker now, and that I read are in the copy of the resolution that I sent to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no necessity.

Mr. BLAIN. No, that's what I say—there is no necessity.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no necessity of getting excited. I listened to the reading of the resolution, and if 'Hansard' has taken the resolution as read by the hon. gentleman, I think it will be found that he did not use the word 'net.'

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend allow Mr. Speaker to read the two resolutions, his and mine?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker has just sent it to me, and the word 'net' is in the resolution. All I want to know is whether that is the charge of the hon. gentleman, that he was speaking of a percentage as the gross revenue upon the investment If he had said that he meant a net profit, we would have been saved any further discussion.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend knows that I did say net profit, and I repeat that it is in both resolutions. And I am not at all excited, as my hon. friend seems to be just now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. 'Hansard' will show whether my hon. friend used the word 'net' or not. At all events, perhaps he will not deny that in the copy of the proposed resolution which he sent me, he charges me with having rented a number of buildings yielding to the owners this revenue, and that to-day, in his speech, he is limiting his charge simply to one building, namely the Regal building.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend want an answer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. My answer is that two hon. gentlemen will follow in this discussion, and they will give other buildings, and we will increase them to half-a-dozen if necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad my hon. friend has said that, and I can only regret that he did not himself go into details as to all the buildings on which he invited his hon. friends to make their remarks to the House, before I was called upon to reply on behalf of the government. I appeal to you, Sir, and I appeal to members on both sides of this House, if that would not have been a fair course to pursue. What does my hon. friend do? He makes a charge against the government. He is the gentleman who makes the substantive motion, he simply makes a charge in regard to one building, and I, assuming that is the only charge that is to be made to-day, rise for the purpose of replying. Then the hon. gentleman proposes, after I have made my answer as head of the Department of Public Works, to call upon other gentlemen to make their charges, to which I will have no opportunity of making reply during this discussion. Whatever my hon. friend may think of that course, I am quite sure it is not one which will commend itself generally to the good judgment of members of this House.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend think I am responsible for that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Clearly my hon. friend must be, because his statement evidently shows that he is in concert with other hon. gentlemen who are to follow up his charges and refer to other buildings, different from the one to which he has referred. Now let me say that with regard to the charge the hon. gentleman makes that I should have invited my colleagues to approve a considerable time ago of the purchase of the Regal building from the Young Mens' Christian Association, I am quite willing that the charge of the hon. gentleman, so far as that is concerned, shall be judged by the House and by the country. I did not think it was desirable for the government to be going around the city of Ottawa purchasing buildings for the temporary accommodation of the different departments, becoming owners of them, and I am satisfied that had I done so the hon. gentleman, instead of commending me for purchasing those properties, would have been the first to condemn me and to say that I should have made some temporary arrangement for the rental of buildings. It is to be remembered that we have already taken large appropriations for the purchase of land and for the construction of the new departmental block which is to be erected upon Mackenzie avenue and Sussex street. Does my hon. friend think that in view of that fact, when we propose a very large expenditure which will run into three or four million dollars, including land, in view of the fact that we are making provision for housing all the different departments of the government, does he think that I would have been justified in making the purchase of the Regal building for the government? Yet the hon. gentleman says that it would have been much better to do that instead of renting the building. When the new departmental block is finished, we expect we will no longer need the Regal building, or a good many other buildings which are rented in different parts of the city. So much with regard to the charge that I ought to have purchased the property.

With reference to the rental, my hon. friend says that this building only cost the present owner the sum of $47,500. I do not know whether my hon. friend is correct as to that, I have no knowledge of what the building cost. Then my hon. friend states that the owners have expended upon it the sum of $32,500. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the cost of this building has been under investigation before the Public Accounts Committee; I do not understand that there has been any evidence given before any committee of this House as to what the owners have expended on that building. I would be glad if my hon. friend would give me the source of his information as to the expenditure by the owners.

Mr. BLAIN. I will be very glad to do so, I will be glad to take this matter up in the Public Accounts Committee with the hon. gentleman, and I will be able to substantiate every statement I have made this afternoon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And yet Mr. Speaker, to-day, in answer to a courteous invitation to my hon. friend——

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend accept the challenge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In answer to a courteous request that my hon. friend should give me the source of his information as to the expenditure, the hon. gentleman declines to do so. And yet, Mr. Speaker, without affording to this House the source of his information as to the expenditure by the owners, not giving to this House a particle of information which they should require as to what the owners have expended upon the building—because my hon. friend could not have personal knowledge of that himself—he asks this House to condemn the Department of Public Works because they have paid the rental to which he has referred.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend say the figures are incorrect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know nothing about them, one way or the other, I do not profess to know anything about the figures. But I would be very sorry indeed to ask this House to condemn the department in this matter unless I was prepared to furnish the House with positive proof of the amount which was expended, and to give to the minister and the House the source of my information, if I were in the place of my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. I am prepared to do that in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman, having made the statement, owes it to this House, and owes it to himself, to give the source of his information, so that the House may judge as to whether that information can be relied upon. Now, Sir, with regard to the owners of the property, the hon. gentleman has made the charge that we dealt with a middleman. Let me say to my hon. friend that I throw back at him that charge, and I say there is not a shadow of foundation for it. The department has not dealt with a middleman, the department has dealt with the owner of the property, and with him alone. There has been no middleman concerned with, or dealt with, or negotiated with. When the first negotiations began, when I first heard of the subject of renting this property, it was owned by Dr. Hanna of this city, whether any other gentlemen were associated with him, I do not know. The hon. gentleman speaks of political friends of the government. Sir, I do not know what the politics of Dr. Hanna are, I do not know whether he is a Liberal or Conservative. But I say that we dealt with him as a business man, and simply as a business man. The accommodation which could be provided in this building was convenient for the department, and we had an opportunity to rent the building from Dr. Hanna. We made every inquiry, we had examined it thoroughly, it was reported on by the officials of my department, and we agreed upon the rental. If my hon. friend had taken the trouble to inquire as to what rental is being paid for buildings similarly situated and of similar value in other parts of the city, he would have found that the rental is a very reasonable one indeed. Now, Sir, when we rent buildings for my department we do not enter upon the business without due consideration, and do not agree upon the rental or the terms without exercising the utmost care.

I do not personally intervene until all the information has been acquired, and until the reports of the proper officers in the department are made. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, the rental which is being paid per square foot for this building, and that is the only way in which you can judge as to whether the rental is a reasonable one or not. We pay 81·28 cents per square foot of space. We have made inquiries as to what rental is being paid in other buildings, and I find that upon Sparks street, in the 'Citizen' building, a building which would be no better adapted for departmental offices than this, the average rental is 90 cents per superficial foot, and that includes all parts of the building which are rented as against 81·21 cents per square foot for this building.

Mr. BLAIN. What street is that on?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The 'Citizen' building is upon Sparks street.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is a difference in the value of property on that street, and the street on which that other building is situated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not very much of a difference. As far as the ground floor is concerned I suppose there would be quite a difference, but the Regal building is admirably situated for a departmental building, and we pay 81·28 cents in rental as compared with 90 cents which the owners of the 'Citizen' building receive. Then we also made inquiry regarding the Carleton chambers upon Sparks street, and we have been informed that the owner of that building receives $1.25 per superficial foot of space or 44 cents per superficial foot more than we pay for the Regal building. Then, Mr. Speaker, there is a building which was rented quite a number of years ago when property was not so valuable as it is today in the city of Ottawa because we all agree with what the hon. gentleman stated that real estate is advancing with great rapidity in Ottawa. Does my hon. friend not know that one of the absolute essential and certain results of the advancement of real estate is that rents go up because it is the rental which a person receives which largely determines the value and, as real estate goes up, of course, the owners charge a larger rental. The Corry building was rented some years ago for the purpose of the Railway Commission, and the amount that is paid for that including taxes is 96·50 cents per superficial foot, or 15 cents per superficial foot more than we pay for the Regal building. If I am any judge I would say that the Regal building is just as well situated as the Corry building is. When the Corry building was rented inquiries were made as to what accommodation could be got in other parts of the city, and what other buildings were available, and after very careful consideration, as I am informed, the Corry building was rented, and the rental for that including the taxes is 15 cents per square foot more than we are paying for the Regal building.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the minister, if, in renting these buildings, he does not take into consideration the location of the property that is on the most valuable streets. He is giving us the rentals on the main street in the city of Ottawa as compared with those on a back street.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Necessarily the experts of the department would do that, but still we also have to consider the description, and the conveniences of the building because all these enter into the consideration. On Sparks street there might be a building which would not be at all adapted, or well adapted, for housing the officials of a department. My hon. friend knows that in each department—or, speaking generally, it is the case—there is a large number of clerks to be accommodated as nearly as possible in the one building; at all events, the clerks who are engaged in a particular branch of a department must necessarily be housed in one building. It is not every building that will accommodate them, and there are very few buildings on Sparks street which will be suitable for the accommodation of the officials of a department. For the Railway Commission building we pay 98·48 cents per superficial square foot or 17 cents per square foot more than we pay for the Regal building. Then, Mr. Speaker, take the Canadian and the Woods buildings. I suppose I shall have to refer to these because I presume that my hon. friend, with that wisdom of which he appears to be so proud, has kept back the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) in order to bring up the Woods building and the Canadian building after I have taken my seat; therefore, it will be necessary for me to make reference to the Canadian building, and the Woods building. I have heard it said that the Imperial Realty Company receive an exorbitant rent for those buildings, I have gone into the matter very carefully, and I am prepared to assert in this House what is my belief that the Imperial Realty Company only receive a net revenue of a shade over 7 per cent on their investment in those buildings. I am speaking now of the Canadian building, the Woods building, and the Queen street building, and I say that they are receiving a revenue of a shade over 7 per cent. I remember, Sir, that before the Committee on Public Accounts, there was an attempt made to show that the Woods and Canadian buildings had only cost somewhere between $200,000 and $300,000. The hon. member for North Ontario called somebody who had had a contract simply for the four walls, and floors of the building, or rather he tried to impress the committee with the fact that the evidence of this witness showed that it had cost $100,000, and this sum practically represented the whole cost of the building. He called Mr. Charles Holbrook of the firm of Holbrook & Sutherland, the gentleman who had built the four walls and floors of these two buildings—the Woods building, and the Canadian building, and I find on page 452 of the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee that Mr. Holbrook makes this statement:

Q. I would like to ask you as a practical man, what would you say would be the value of the Woods building at the present time?—A. I take it about $300,000—from $250,000 to $275,000.

That, Mr. Speaker, is entirely outside of the land which has to be added as a part of the cost. In regard to the other building, Mr. Holbrook says that it is larger, and that it will be worth about $300,000. If Mr. Holbrook is right in putting the value of the Woods building at $275,000, the value of the Canadian building would be very considerably more because it contains at least 200,000 cubic feet more than the Woods building. Assuming that Mr. Holbrook's value of the Woods building is correct, I would think that it would bring the value of the Canadian building up to from $350,000 to $375,000, or $380,000 at the very least to which also would have to be added the value of the land.

The Queen street building, with the land, would be something like $65,000 or $70,000, and if your add these two together and then take the ordinary expenses of insurance, and wear and tear, and cost of management, I believe the net revenue would only be a shade over seven per cent. The hon. gentleman from North Ontario, if he speaks on this question will possibly tell you that these properties are assessed at very much less than the valuation of Mr. Holbrook, but I think it will be generally agreed that the assessment value is not always a correct test of the value of a building. The hon. gentleman from Peel told us that the Regal building, although it cost about $50,000, and although the present owners have spent about $30,000 on it making $80,000, it is only assessed at $50,000, which would show that the assessors do not attempt to get near the value of these large buildings. Then, we have had it in evidence before the Public Accounts Committee that the cubic contents of the Canadian building are something over 1,200,000 feet, while the cubic contents of the the Woods' building are between 900,000 and 1,000,000 cubic feet. We have also had it in evidence by Mr. Ewart, the chief architect, that speaking roughly the fair average cost of a fire-proof building would be 30 cents per cubic foot, and taking the cubic contents of the Canadian building at 1,200,000 feet you would get $360,000 as the fair value of that building. To that, you have to add the value of the land. The hon. gentleman from North Ontario said this land was only assessed at a few thousand dollars, but that was a number of year ago, and to-day no expert in real estate would say that the land occupied by the Canadian building is not to-day easily worth between $40,000 and $50,000, that the land on which the Woods' building stands is not easily worth between $30,000 and $40,000, and the land of the Queen street building is not easily worth upwards of $20,000. Now, the total rental paid for the Canadian building and the Woods' building and the Queen street building is $72,000 per annum. If you take the valuation of these buildings with the land as being in the vicinity of $800,000 which I believe is a fair valuation for these three properties, you will find that after paying expenses of management and wear and tear and other charges that rental would give a little over 7 per cent, which, the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee shows is what the Imperial Realty Company gets out of these buildings. There is another very good way of testing whether or not we are paying too high a rental for these buildings. If you take the total amount we pay, including one-half the cost of the building of partitions, &c., which was paid by the government, it would amount in the case of the Canadian building to 96·09 cents per square foot. But if you distribute the cost of these improvements over the ten years during which the government has arranged to occupy that property you will find that it figures out at 60·85 cents per square foot, and it is one of the very cheapest properties which the government has been able to rent in the city of Ottawa. Of the three buildings which the government rents from the Imperial Realty Company, it is a remarkable fact that for the Queen street building, as to which there has been no criticism by hon. gentlemen opposite, we are actually paying 98 48 cents per square foot, or more than we are paying for the other buildings. Hon. gentlemen opposite have for a long time been criticising the rent we are paying for the Canadian building and the Woods' building, but they have never had one word of criticism in regard to the building on Queen street occupied by the Railway Commission.

Mr. BLAIN. We are coming to that building later.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has been a long time getting to it. Now, as to the value of these buildings. It was proved before the Public Accounts Committee that in the year 1908—I am not sure whether that was before the government rented the second portion of the Canadian building, but it was about that time—it was proved before the committee that the Imperial Realty Company which owns this building had, according to the evidence of Mr. Finnie, manager of the Bank of Ottawa, purchased it from Mr. J. W. Woods for $1,000,000.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That was in stock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was stock, but it must be borne in mind that while Mr. Woods received stock for the building, there were, as Mr. Finnie swore, a number of other gentlemen who bought stock in the company, and who would therefore be interested greatly in the value of the property because they were investing their money in it. However, in 1908, the company was proposing to raise money upon the security of these buildings, either through or from the Royal Trust Company. The property consisted of the Canadian building, the Woods' building, the Queen street building, and two other small properties of comparatively little value. As an act of precaution, the Royal Trust Company caused a valuation of this property to be made, and I shall read the report as to that valuation. The valuation was made by two experienced men, Mr. A. Pratt, formerly city assessor, and Mr. James Mather, a prominent and reliable architect in the city of Ottawa, and these gentlemen were engaged, not by Mr. Woods, or the Imperial Realty Company, but by this large financial institution in order to determine whether in justice to their shareholders they would be warranted in making an advance of $400,000 upon bonds to be issued against the property. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, it is very seldom that these companies lend over 50 per cent of the value of real estate. The Royal Trust Company was of course most desirous to have a correct valuation of this property.

Now, Sir, who are the Royal Trust Company? I suppose that if hon. gentlemen opposite did not know who they were they would be attempting to cast doubt upon their sincerity, and to insinuate that they had colluded with the Imperial Realty Company to boost the value of this property. The Royal Trust Company is a company closely allied with the Bank of Montreal. Its directors are: Right Hon. Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, president; Sir Edward Clouston, vice-president; Sir H. Montagu Allan, R. B. Angus, A. Baumgarten, E. B. Greenshields, C. M. Hays, C. R. Hosmer, Sir W. C. Macdonald, Hon. R. Mackay, A. Macnider, H. V. Meredith, David Morrice, James Ross, Sir T. G. Shaughnessy, Sir William C. Van Horne. These are the directors of the Royal Trust Company, and when the Imperial Realty Company went to them in 1908 for a loan of $400,000 on first mortgage bonds, it was expected that they would either lend the money themselves, or would, as a trust company, give the sanction of their name, which would enable the Imperial Realty Company to borrow this large sum on the property. I am told that the Royal Trust Company themselves underwrote the bonds. Therefore, you will see what value is to be attached to the report of their valuator, and I will take the liberty of reading that report. It is dated Ottawa, December 17, 1908. It is addressed to J. J. Gormully, Esq., barrister, &c., who, I presume, would be the solicitor of the Royal Trust Company, and is as follows:—

RE IMPERIAL REALTY COMPANY.

Dear Sir,—Herewith you will find report as requested on the value of the properties in schedule A belonging to the above company, being parcels numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Parcel number 1 being composed of the easterly thirty-three feet from front to rear of town lot number 25 on the south side of Queen street, numbering eastward towards the Rideau canal; size of land, 33 feet in front by 99 feet in depth. On this land is a substantial fireproof building, 33 feet by 84 feet, 5 stories high, stone front, steel and concrete construction, occupied by Canadian government.

Value of land..	$ 20,000
Value of building..	48,975
	$ 68,975

And yet, Sir, upon that building the total rental which we pay is $5,300, or less than 8 per cent of this valuation. Then the report proceeds:—

Parcel number 2 being composed of town lot No. 62 and the whole easterly portion of town lot No. 61 on the south side of Slater street; size 99 feet by 157 feet more or less. On this land there is erected a first-class fireproof building, 70 feet by 157 feet, 7 stories high, built of Indiana sandstone, brick walls with steel and concrete construction and terra cotta partitions, occupied by Canadian government. This building is known as the 'Woods Building.'

Value of land..	$ 23,314
	288,350

Now, Sir, if you compare the value which these gentlemen have placed upon the Woods building with the value which Mr. Holbrook, the gentleman who built the four walls and the floors, and who is well qualified to speak, placed upon it, you will find that they very nearly agree. Mr. Holbrook puts the value at from $250,000 to $275,000, while these gentlemen, who were valuing for the Royal Trust Company, put it at $265,036; that is the militia building, and upon that the gross rental which we pay, outside of the heating, the lighting, the elevator and the taxes, is $25,777, or less than 10 per cent. Out of that would have to come the wear and tear of the building, the expenses of management, the insurance and the local improvement tax; yet my hon. friend has taken no account of these, although, according to my information, the same information was given before the Committee on Public Accounts. These reduce the net revenue to the Imperial Realty Company down to a shade over 7 per cent.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that I made no statement as to the taxes, &c., in respect to the Royal building? I mentioned them all, and he will see them in 'Hansard.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am now speaking of my hon. friend's resolution. I am not speaking of the emasculated speech with which he attempted to cut down the force of his resolution, and in which he simply referred to one building when he made a charge with respect to others. I am referring to his resolution, in which he says that we have rented buildings at prices which give to the owners from 15 to 18 per cent net on the cost of the properties.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to ask whether that statement is correct with respect to the Regal building, to which I referred?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, because the hon. gentleman has not furnished us with evidence of the correctness of the figures. He has put before us figures as to the correctness of which we have no knowledge. But I am taking the buildings which have been investigated before the Committee on Public Accounts, where document after document and the sworn testimony of different witnesses shattered the charges made by the hon. gentlemen and his associates. What I am taking now is the amendment which the hon. gentleman has asked this House to vote for, an amendment which everything which has taken place before the Committee on Public Accounts shows to be absolutely false. I have taken one of the most important of the buildings we have rented, and I have shown the valuation put upon it by the Royal Trust Company as a basis on which that company proposed to lend only 50 per cent of its value.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is there any evidence on record that the Royal Trust Company put a dollar of their own money into that building? They lent the money on the security of the rentals, but not their own money—other people's money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman says the Royal Trust Company lent other people's money. As I understand, that is what a trust company does every day; it lends the money of other people. But it is trust money; it is the money of the widow and the orphan, which they are bound to guard more securely and carefully than they would the money of their own shareholders; and there is the implied guarantee that they would exercise the utmost prudence in dealing with it. When I show now, following up the evidence of Mr. Holbrook before the Committee on Public Accounts by the valuation given by these experts of that land and building, according to which it was worth $288,350, that the rental we pay is only $25,777, apart from the heating, running the elevator and the taxes—this is what would come to the owners, out of which they have to pay insurance, cost of maintenance, wear and tear of the building and local improvement taxes. When I show all that and show that necessarily it would reduce the amount down to somewhere between 7 per cent and 8 per cent, surely the hon. gentleman would not ask this House to vote for a resolution, false on its face, declaring that we have been in the habit of renting buildings at prices which net to the owners a revenue of from 15 per cent to 18 per cent.

Parcel No. 3 being composed of lot 63 and broken lot 64 on the south side of Slater street and also being composed of the northerly portion of lot 63 and 64 on the north side of Laurier avenue (formerly Maria street); size about 121 feet in front and 220 feet in depth, superficial area 27,530 square feet. On this property is a building eight stories high and of the same construction as the Woods Building. It is known as the 'Canadian Building,' and occupied by the Canadian government.

Value of land..	$ 41,295
Value of building..	392,575
Total..	$ 433,870

That was the total valuation in 1908, two years ago, since which time the values of the land and buildings has been very appreciably increased. What do we pay for this building? We pay $42,536.90, or less than 10 per cent, upon the valuation these experts have placed upon it, and as I stated with reference to the Woods building, out of this must come the local improvement taxes, the insurance, cost of management and wear and tear. All that has to come out of the 10 per cent. What justification then would there be for my hon. friend putting a resolution of this kind on the table?

Let me go on further with this report. It takes up then two pieces of land on the north side of Laurier, which I need not deal with, because they are not rented to the government, but they put them at $13,300 and $23,565 They are:—

No. 4, Nos. 87 and 89 Laurier avenue, $13,300.
No. 5, lots 62 and E½, 61 Laurier Avenue, $23,565.

And they make the total value of the properties—taking out the two last I have mentioned, of $36,000—$790,000 in round figures. Yet all that we pay for the Woods building, the Canadian building, and the Queen street building, is $72,000 per year, or a gross revenue to the owners of less than 10 per cent upon their value.

Mr. BLAIN. That does not include the Regal building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I am speaking now of the Woods building, the Canadian building, and the Queen street building. The Imperial Realty Company has nothing to do with the Regal building. The Royal Trust Company have nothing to do with it, as my hon. friend must know. I am reading the reports of the Royal Trust Company, which had the properties owned by the Imperial Realty Company examined, on which the latter were asking them to advance on their bonds the sum of $400,000, and this the Royal Trust Company did. The report concludes:

We the undersigned have carefully examined the several properties named in the above report and are of the opinion that the value set opposite each property is a fair cash value thereof, and that the total value of the five parcels of land is $828,060.

Out of that has to be taken the $13,300, and the $23,565, which are not rented to the government, leaving a net valuation of very close to $790,000. The rental upon the three buildings is $72,000, which would be less than 10 per cent on their valuation by these experts, and out of that the owners would have to pay the various charges for insurance, local improvement taxes, cost of management and wear and tear. The net result would be to give the Imperial Realty Company a net dividend of a shade over 7 per cent on the moneys invested.

Of the total rentals paid by the government, those which are paid for the Woods building, the Canadian building and the building on Queen street constitute the largest items. The hon. gentleman, has I suppose, in his mind, the Corry building. I do not know if he has anything in his mind beyond the Regal building, but hon. gentlemen who follow him may take up the Corry building, thus taking a course which, in all my parliamentary experience, is unprecedented.

Mr. BLAIN. It has been done in every debate in this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have never known it to be done. I have known lawyers, examining witnesses sometimes, pass over intentionally many things in the leading examination which they thought might be investigated, hoping they would escape the cross-examining counsel, and then would bring them out in the re-examination. But that is not considered good practice.

Mr. BLAIN. I think I was very fair in giving the hon. gentleman notice that this is not all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Take the Corry building which was rented a considerable time, like the Queen street and the Woods buildings, before I became minister.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Immediately adjoining the new Grand Trunk Railway station. It is that tall building which the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners occupy. What does my hon friend say to that? The total square feet in that building is 11,234. We pay a rental of $10,200, and the total, without taxes, amounts to 90·50 cents per square foot. Does he say that is too much?

Mr. BLAIN. I say, from a valuation of the property given in a correct way, it is altogether too much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does he say, having reference to what other buildings cost, that it is too much.

Mr. BLAIN. I say yes. I say that, speaking of the whole three buildings to which my hon. friend has referred, some of these will show not 18 per cent, as the resolution states, but 25 per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is too absurd for serious consideration. This is what we pay for the Corry building. As my predecessor had to do before I became minister, in renting these buildings we have to look around; we have to send the experts of the department to interview this owner and that owner to see where the requisite accommodation can be had and to test the fair value of the buildings by finding out what other property owners receive. Since I became minister, whenever we have rented a building, we have gone to owners on Sparks street, Elgin street, O'Connor street, in whatever locality the building was, and have exercised the best judgment we could and got the building at the lowest possible figure. Here is another building and the rent we pay per square foot is 90·80 cents. The taxes add something to that, bringing the total up to 96·50 cents per square foot.

Now, take the Seybold building. It may be that some charge will be made in connection with that building. The Seybold building has a total superficial area of 12,047 square feet. We pay a rental of $6,500. The heating costs $1,600 and the running of the elevator $966 and taxes $1,811.46. For that building, the owner receives 90 cents per square foot.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How much did you spend improving it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to tell my hon. friend. I am speaking of what we pay for the building. Not knowing what would be charged in respect of the Seybold building, I am at a great disadvantage in attempting to answer. I do not know whether my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), will follow the example of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and, without having a particle of evidence to submit, and without making known the source of his information, will declare that the Seybold building cost $10,000, $20,000 or $30,000 or any other sum. He may draw on his imagination even more copiously than the hon. member for Peel did. But hon. members will see at what a disadvantage I am placed, when I attempt to answer a terrible charge of this character, not knowing definitely what that charge may be.

Now, take the Trafalgar building. Is any charge to be made in regard to that, may I ask my hon. friend?

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman want an answer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend seems to be guilty not only in respect to the Regal building, but all along the line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Statements of that kind do not count for much. I was about to speak of the Trafalgar building.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the minister please locate these buildings as he names them; some of us are ignorant of where they are. I know where the Militia building is, and the one adjoining it, but I am not sure about the others.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Trafalgar building is on Bank street; it is occupied by the Department of Interior and the Civil Service Commission. This building is owned by Mr. Brennan. It has a superficial area of 14,991 feet, and we pay a rental of $11,964, which would amount to about 80 cents—or, to be absolutely accurate, 79.81 cents—per square foot. But that building is heated by the owner, and he also runs the elevator; we pay nothing besides the rent, except water rates; our total rental there is, as I have said, 79·81 cents a square foot. Now, let me ask my hon. friend (Mr. Blain), with his superior knowledge as to what buildings ought to be got for, is that too much or too little? I venture to say he cannot answer.

Mr. BLAIN. I will answer that. I may say, since the hon. minister is putting me in the witness box and cross-questioning me, that the records of 'Hansard' and of the Public Accounts Committee will show, that he paid an enormous amount for the rental of this building, and that the percentage will reach higher than that stated in the resolution I moved this afternoon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a satisfaction, at all events, to know the lengths to which my hon. friend will go. He objects to my putting him in the witness box.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has gone into the witness box himself this afternoon, for he told us what the Regal building cost. There is a class of witness who refuse to take the oath, but affirm and expect every one to take what they say, whether they know the facts or not.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend permit me?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is careful to keep away from the charge I made against the department, and deals with other matters. But I repeat that if he doubts, as he seems to do, the correctness of the statement in regard to the cost of the Regal building and the amount of money spent in improving it at $80,000, I repeat the challenge I made: I am willing to take the matter before the Public Accounts Committee and ask the minister to appear there. Will he accept that challenge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has jumped before he came to the stile. He asks the House to condemn us in regard to the Regal building without having the evidence. Just at the moment I was speaking of the Trafalgar building.

Mr. LENNOX. Would the hon. minister state what ground he has for suggesting that the statement of a gentleman who makes that statement upon affirmation is not as reliable as if made on oath?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I was rather suggesting was—

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to have an answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, in my experience, when a gentleman goes on the stand under oath, as he would before the Public Accounts Committee, he would be obliged to produce the evidence, he would be obliged to show his knowledge. A witness there could not say: That building cost so much; I have no knowledge of it, but I heard it on the street corner. A witness could not act in that way before the Committee on Public Accounts. But an hon. gentleman in this House might rely on hearsay evidence, which might be unreliable.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman say that my information is unreliable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It might be. And my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) might be entirely innocent. I would not think for a moment of accusing him of wilfully deceiving the House. But I am sure he has had too much experience to suppose that a body of intelligent men would condemn a government upon what must necessarily be a hearsay statement without having the facts produced before them.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Will the hon. minister permit me a question? Is not what he has given us concerning the valuation of the Woods building hearsay evidence?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). They were not put in the witness box; they dare not go.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman makes a statement which it would surprise me much to learn was accurate. It seems to me that when a company of high standing like the Royal Trust Company, proposing to invest in this property on first mortgage the large sum of $400,000 of funds held by them in trust, employs two experienced men to make the valuation upon which this transaction was to be based, I would not regard that as hearsay; I would regard that as most reliable testimony.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Why were not they called as witnesses?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why did not the hon. gentleman call them?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). We objected to the written report going in to the Public Accounts Committee and asked that witnesses be called.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend seems to think that his duty before the Public Accounts Committee is just to get in such facts as suit him, and suit his side. I have always taken the position that the duty of the Public Accounts Committee was to get at the facts and to investigate the truth. If my hon. friend had been desirous of knowing what was the real value of this property, what it was fairly worth, when he found that a valuation had been put in signed by two gentlemen well known in the city of Ottawa, one who had been the city assessor and the other a prominent architect of this city, if my hon. friend had really wished to get at the valuation of this property he would have said to the chairman: I would like these two gentlemen to be subpoened so that I may examine them as to the valuation. But that was not the course the hon. gentleman was pursuing. He dealt with the matter just as if he were a prosecuting attorney, and not a very good one at that, whose duty it was to get out such facts as suited him, and then leave it to the other side to break down his case if they could do so.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 92) respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Alberta Electric Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 94) respecting the Western Central Railway Company.—Mr. Rankin.

SUPPLY—RENTAL OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The order for private Bills having been exhausted, House resumed consideration of the motion for supply and the amendment of Mr. Blain thereto.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had referred, before the recess, to a number of buildings which had been leased by the department, but there are a few others to which I have not yet referred. One is the Imperial building on Queen street, belonging to the estate of one Mr. Pearson. The net office area is 12,082 feet, and the rental has been $4,200 per annum, which would be at the rate of 35·76 cents per superficial foot. This includes the power for the elevator, but the rest of the charges are borne by the government. We have agreed, upon the renewal of the lease, to make some increase in the rent, because it was lower than the building was fairly worth. Just what it will be I am not in a position to say at the moment. Then, there is another building occupied by the surveyor general's branch of the Department of the Interior, at the corner of Slater and Metcalfe streets. The net office area is 9,811 feet, and the rental $3,000 per annum. That is at the rate of 30·6 cents per superficial foot. We pay the taxes, heating and some other charges, which bring the total up to 45·26 cents per square foot. I gave the Trafalgar building, the rental of which is 79·81 per square foot; the Seybold building, the Corry building, the Canadian building, the Militia, or Woods, building, and the Railway Commission building.

Then, there is another building, a portion of which we are renting from the Molsons Bank, on Metcalfe street. It has an office area of 4,294 feet, and the rental we pay is $2,340, or at the rate of 54·5 cents per superficial foot. We also rent some premises in the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company's building, 1,006 superficial feet, for which we pay $420 rental, which is 41·75 cents per superficial foot. There is another building in which we rent premises; it is in the new station of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We have rented three flats there for the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission was very much crowded for room in the building on Queen street, and we have had a very strong requisition from the members of the board that we should provide increased accommodation. We made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company under which they will fit up three flats especially for the use of the Board of Railway Commissioners. At first they asked us a rental of $23,000. We carried on negotiations for, I think, about three months, and finally we succeeded in getting them to accept a rental of $19,500. That includes heating, elevator service and everything except lighting. My hon. friend may say that is higher than the rental we pay for some other buildings. So it is, but we get very superior accommodation, and, of course, we must have regard to the accommodation that is furnished. The building is to be specially fitted up for the accommodation of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I may say with reference to this, as with reference to the Woods, the Canadian and all the other buildings which the government leases, that when the government ceases to occupy these buildings, as it will naturally do when the new departmental block is erected, the owners may have their buildings idle for a considerable time while they are making alterations to accommodate the buildings to the wants of the new tenants who may be desirous of renting.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman give the floor area?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was just about to give that. There are 23,758 superficial feet in the three flats, for which we are to pay, as I said, $19,500 per annum. That is at the rate of about 82 cents per superficial foot, which includes heating and elevator service.

What I have done has been to refer all these matters with regard to rental, since I have been minister, to the proper officials of my department, and I feel sure, from the reports that they have made to me from time to time, and before recommending a rental to be agreed upon by me as head of the department, that they have made careful inquiry as to what rentals are charged by other owners of property in the city of Ottawa, and that they have based their recommendations accordingly. Let me call attention to the matter in another way for the purpose of showing that none of these rentals are excessive. When negotiating with the Grand Trunk Railway Company we made inquiries as to what would be charged for property in the city of Ottawa and as to what would be charged for property in the city of Montreal. I found that for a building conveniently situated in the city of Ottawa the rental would run from 90 cents per superficial foot up to, I think, as high as $1.25 per superficial foot, while in the city of Montreal there are very few offices and flats in office buildings which are rented at a less rate than $1.50 per superficial foot. If hon. gentlemen desire to ascertain what would be a fair rental for an office in the city of Montreal they could make inquiry with regard to the point. They could go to the Messrs. Rosenthal, to the Canada Life Company, to Mr. Hope, who owns a new building which has recently been put up, to the 'Citizen' Company, and to the owners of other buildings, which are conveniently situated in Ottawa, and I will venture to say that they will not be able to find that it would be possible to rent premises as conveniently situated as those which the government has rented at a less rental than the government is paying for the accommodation which it is now enjoying in these different buildings. And, Mr. Speaker, is not that the test?

Suppose my hon. friend's information is correct as to the price paid for the building formerly belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association by the present owners. As to that I know nothing, and the hon. gentleman has given us no evidence except his statement, which must be based upon hearsay. Is that the ground upon which we should act if we desire accommodation in the city of Ottawa, and, looking around, we find that accommodation can be had in a certain building? Are we to ascertain what the property was bought for? Is it not our duty rather to judge what the accommodation is worth to the government compared with what similar accommodation can be got for in other buildings in the city of Ottawa. I think that is the true test. If these gentlemen purchased the building for $50,000, they got a remarkably good bargain. I venture to say that that building with the land represents a cost to the association of a very much larger sum. The cost of this building to the government, including the heating and the lighting and the elevator service, does not exceed 81·28 cents per superficial foot. For an office 15 feet square, that would be a little over $180 a year. Why, Sir, in the city of St. John, where real estate is not worth within 50 per cent of what it is in the city of Ottawa, $150 a year is regarded as a reasonable rent for an office of that size, which is heated and lighted and has elevator service. I doubt very much if any office accommodation can be got in Ottawa for a less price. My hon. friend has not gone around in Ottawa and sought information as to what other owners have got from other rented properties; he has not ventured to produce a single owner to testify what such premises are fairly worth; and yet, without a tittle of evidence to support him, he asks this parliament to say that I and my predecessors have been guilty of some great wrong for which we ought to be condemned. I think I have shown that we have exercised good judgment and have acted with reasonable prudence, and are paying no more as rental for these properties than would be obliged to pay to the other owners of similar properties. When the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Samuel Sharpe) comes to speak, he will say that there was a witness before the Committee on Public Accounts, who was a city assessor, and who assessed the Woods' building at 13 cents per cubic foot. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is the basis on which the assessors value buildings of that character, which are fireproof in construction, and which have all modern conveniences, elevator accommodation, properly wired for electric lighting and provided with the best heating apparatus, all I can say is that they are assessing such property at only one-half of its cost, and less than one-half of its value. As against the statement of that witness, who is not a builder, we have the evidence of the gentleman who erected the Woods' building that it was worth in the vicinity of $270,000, and that the Canadian building which had 200,000 feet more of cubic contents, would be worth in the vicinity of $300,000. In addition to that, we have the Dominion architect, who estimates the cost of buildings which are not fireproof at not less than 23 cents per cubic foot, and buildings which are fire-proof at not less than 30 cents. As further evidence that these are thoroughly well built buildings, which are fire-proof, let me call attention to the fact that the owners receive the very lowest insurance rate which is put on the most up-to-date fire-proof buildings in Ottawa, being only 45 cents per $100 for a period of three years. There are many business men in this House who know that the insurance companies very rarely insure for more than from 75 to 80 per cent of the value; and these two buildings, which the appraisers of the Royal Trust Company have valued in the vicinity of $790,000, are insured for the sum of $590,000.

Now, Sir, in view of what I have stated with regard to these buildings—the Woods building, the Canadian building, and the Queen street building; in view of the statement of the builder that the Woods building was worth from $250,000 to $275,000, and that the Canadian building would be worth in the vicinity of $300,000; in view of the fact that the appraisers of the Royal Trust Company have put the values of these three properties at about $790,000; in view of the fact that Mr. Woods some years ago disposed of these properties to the Imperial Realty Company, for stock, it is true, to the extent of a million dollars, but a considerable portion of which was sold to bona fide investors at what was regarded as a fair value; in view of the fact that the Royal Trust Company, who are the custodians of the money of widows and orphans, and whose duty it is to see that that money is safely invested, and who, in accordance with the practice of loan companies, do not advance more than 50 per cent of the value of real estate, acted on a valuation of $800,000 when it lent $400,000 on the bonds on these properties; in view of the fact that the net rental, according to the figures I have given, only slightly exceeds seven per cent; I think my hon. friend cannot censure the government on the ground that they rented buildings which net the owners from 15 to 18 per cent. As to the other buildings we have no evidence whatever, as to the cost, but I have given you the average rental per superficial foot, I have spoken of the care exercised in renting these buildings, and I have challenged the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) to produce the testimony of a single witness before the Public Accounts Committee, or elsewhere that these offices are not worth the amount the government is paying, or that equally convenient accommodation could be obtained for less money elsewhere. The hon. gentleman has suggested that in respect to the Regal building, middlemen were employed. I deny it and I say that we knew no one in this transaction except the owner. The government desired this building for the accommodation of one of its most important departments and we rented it at so much per superficial foot, as we thought was reasonable and fair. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) says we rented it from friends of the government. Let me tell him that I have no knowledge whatever of the politics of Dr. Hanna, who owns the building, but on inquiry I am informed that he has never been identified with the Liberal party in this city. So far as I know he may be a Conservative or a Liberal when he casts his vote at the poll.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are his associates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know. Does the hon. gentleman know who they are? If he does he is at perfect liberty to mention their names to the House, and I invite him to do so. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that it is too much of a habit of my hon. friend and some other hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side to hurl insinuations in regard to middlemen and insinuations as to graft in connection with public buildings and public works. To-night and at all times I defy that hon. gentleman to show that so far as my department is concerned I have ever, in connection with public buildings or in connection with any other matter, employed a middleman to negotiate for a property. Every such transaction has been carried on between the department and the owners of the property and in the light of day. We did not buy the Regal building because we knew that in a few years when we had the new departmental block erected we would not require it, but accommodation was needed temporarily and we obtained it at a reasonable rent. We dealt directly with the owner and every transaction in connection with it was open and above board, and having negotiated for a considerable time we got it at the lowest rental and upon the best possible terms. I have not examined in detail all the evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee, but I have cited the evidence of an experienced builder who erected the walls and the floors, and the evidence of two men whose duty it was to place a reasonable value upon it for the Royal Trust Company. I have given, and I defy my hon. friend to contradict it, what are considered fair rentals in this city and in Montreal, where the rentals per superficial foot for these office buildings are double what we are paying in Ottawa. I feel that I can appeal with the utmost confidence to the members of this House to say that the hon. gentleman who moved the motion has not presented the slightest evidence upon which he can ask the House to vote for this amendment. In view of the facts which I have presented, I think it is an insult to the intelligence of the members of the House to ask them to sustain such an amendment.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE (North Ontario). If, Mr. Speaker, I have any objection to the wording of this resolution, it is that it is too moderate and temperate in tone. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) finds the net return to the owners on the basis of the rent paid by the government as 18 per cent, but I think the facts will show that the rent which the government are paying comes nearer 25, and even 30 per cent in many cases. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peel deals generally with certain buildings, but the minister failed to answer the specific case made out by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain), although he lashed himself into a frenzy and fury in connection with a charge yet unmade in regard to the Canadian building and the Woods building. There is an old adage that a guilty conscience needs no accuser, and when the Minister of Public Works indulged in frenzy and fury in defending the Woods and Canadian buildings no doubt his conscience told him that, to use his mild term, the government was paying more than a shade over 7 per cent. The whole defence set up by the Minister of Public Works was based upon a wrong hypothesis. He rested his case with regard to the Woods building and the Canadian building on the valuation made by two men on behalf of the Royal Trust Company, but it is significant that these two valuators were not produced as witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee to tell us on what their valuation was based. I have heard the Minister of Public Works object to accepting secondary evidence but there never was a clearer case of secondary evidence than the evidence he produced to-night, when the men who pretended to value the Canadian building and the Woods building were not called before the Public Accounts Committee but their written report was put in. I am safe in assuming that their valuation was based, not upon the actual value of the land and the cost of construction, but on the exorbitant and outrageous rentals guaranteed this company for ten years by this government. Any one who has any knowledge of the conditions in this country knows that a fair net return to a landlord is not much more than 6 per cent on his investment; and in Ottawa, by reason of the speculative value of property, landlords do not, according to the evidence of the city assessor, get more than 3½ per cent net. The Minister of Public Works himself in this House said that 6 per cent was a reasonable return on money invested in real estate; but when he rented a building constructed by this government to one of the officials of this government, and was asked what rent he was going to ask, he replied that he would ask for the reasonable return of 4 per cent. Yet he has been paying 25 per cent, in the case of the Woods building, as the landlord's net return, and 30 per cent on the Canadian building.

The hon. minister says that the assessment is not a proper method of calculating the cost of the building. I admit that in most cases the assessment will not show the actual cost of construction. But in this instance the assessor, when put in the box, was asked how he arrived at the estimate he had made, he replied that he compared the property with the valuations of other properties in the surrounding district and on that based his assessment. This assessment, however, was objected to by Mr. Woods. Mr. Woods said: You have assessed too high and I want you to lower the amount; here are my books. And he opened his books and showed the assessor the cost of construction. The books of the Imperial Realty Company showed the cost of construction, and based on that cost, the return to Woods and his associates is 25 per cent on the Woods building and 30 per cent on the Canadian building. In respect of those buildings, the assessor said they had a lifetime of 150 years, yet strange to say we are paying a return on their cost which will amount to a refund of the whole capital in four years in the one case and three and a third years in the other. Yet these buildings have a lifetime of 150 years. For the benefit of the House, I will put upon 'Hansard' the exact figures sworn to by the assessor:

Name of Building.	Asst. Building.	Real Estate.	Total.	Rental.	Permanent Improvement.	Return.
	$	$	$	$ cts.	$ cts.	p. c.
Woods	110,000	5,500	115,500	25,770 20	15,675 74	25
Canadian	134,000	7,800	141,800	42,536 90	45,990 69	30
	244,000	13,300	257,300	68,314 10	61,666 43

In the case of the Woods building, the assessment of $110,000 was taken, so the assessor swore, from the books of the company which constructed the building. The real estate cost $5,500 and the total cost of building and real estate was $115,500. Yet on this building we are paying a rental of $25,777.20. And in addition we have spent on permanent improvements the sum of $15,675.74. In other words, with respect to the Woods building we are paying a net return of 25 per cent to the landlord and in addition have improved his property to the extent of $15,675. The Canadian building is assessed at $134,000, and the real estate at $7,800 or a total of $141,800. And for a building that only cost $141,800, we are paying a rental of $42,326.90, and in addition we have paid the exorbitant sum of $45,645.69 on permanent improvements. In other words we are paying to the landlord 30 per cent net return on his investment and in addition we have expended over $45,000 on permanent improvements of a building which it only cost $134,000 to build.

The method of calculating rent is one peculiar to the present administration. In all my experience, I never before heard of a tenant renting a whole building by the superficial foot. I could understand renting one office in a building by the superficial foot; but to have the government calculate the rental it pays on the number of superficial feet in the whole building is a most extravagant method of proceeding. Of course the purpose is to give these enormous returns to the landlord by calculating the rent on the basis of the number of superficial feet. The rent is not, as it should be, based on the cost of construction by the landlord. It is not an amount which should give a fair and reasonable return to the landlord, but it is fixed so much per superficial foot including all the waste and vacant space, such as the elevator space, the stairway space, even the furnace room.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably my hon. friend has in his mind some evidence before the committee to the effect that, including all the corridors, the rental would be 36 cents per superficial foot. The figures I have given are for the rooms actually rented and do not include the corridors or furnace room.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I would suggest that in future the minister should not continually contradict without being sure of his position and the facts. I have sat here many times and have listened to the hon. gentleman, who is usually most courteous, but he has a faculty of contradicting members on this side without being sure of his facts. In connection with this rental, I want to read a passage from the 'Hansard,' of 1909, volume 1, page 615. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid), was questioning the minister with reference to this matter:

Mr. J. D. Reid.—It has been reported to me and the proof is that judging from the size of the building I do not believe you could figure out such a rental unless they measured the hall.

Mr. J. D. Currie.—And the roof.

Mr. J. D. Reid.—Yes, and the cellar as well.

Mr. Pugsley.—The honourable gentleman has the unhappy faculty of assuming things to exist which do not exist in fact. The honourable gentleman is entirely mistaken in saying that the corridors were included in estimating the area. We have the most correct measurement of every room in the building.

Now, in the committee, I put this question to the chief architect of his department, who was a witness:

Now when Mr. Pugsley stated that Mr. Reid was mistaken in saying that the corridors were included in estimating the area Mr. Pugsley was mistaken wasn't he?—A. He was mistaken in one of the buildings anyway.

Q. Referring to the Canadian building?—A. Well, the Canadian building, we have had the last lease exactly measured out.

Q. And it includes corridors you told us the last day, and the stairway?—A. That is right.

Q. And the elevator shaft?—A. That is right.

Q. As to the cellar?—A. That is right.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Public Works specifically contradicted the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), we find his chief architect of the department coming forward and declaring under oath that these measurements include all this waste space. I spoke a moment ago of the enormous sums paid out for permanent improvements on these buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me a moment? Does not he remember that the lease which was based upon the superficial area, and which, as he said, included the corridors and other waste spaces, was on the basis of 36 cents or 37 cents per superficial foot

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). No, I do not remember that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my information. The figures I have given to-night are the figures given me by the chief architect, which are considerably more than 36 cents but in which all the corridors are excluded for the purpose of comparison and the superficial area actually occupied is alone considered.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I was speaking of the permanent improvements on these buildings, and said that, in addition to the permanent improvements on the Woods building amounting to $15,675.74, the sum of $45,990.69 had been spent on the Canadian building, a total on the two of $61,666.43. Now, Mr. Woods stated—and the letter is on file in the minister's department—that the cost of alterations in connection with the Woods building would be only $16,000 and that he would make these alterations of his own accord and at his own expense. Yet, notwithstanding this letter, which shows that Mr. Woods was anxious to rent the building to the department, we find the department assuming that liability and of a total of $31,351 paying one half or $15,675.74, as I have said—within a few dollars of what Mr. Woods stated would be the whole cost of the alterations. In other words, though we were supposed to pay half the alterations, according to Mr. Woods' calculations, we paid all the alterations in connection with the building.

But these leases are most extraordinary, and have most extraordinary features. As I said, under the first lease, dated October 17, 1903, we find Mr. Woods agreeing to make all the alterations. And before the second lease dated August 30, 1905, was executed we find Mr. Woods offering to make the alterations. He was so anxious to rent to the department that he offered in a letter to the department which is on file there, to put the buildings in condition for them to immediately move into, without expense to the department. But we find the extraordinary fact that the department executed a lease under which they agreed to assume half the expense of these alterations. In other words, in the face of Mr. Woods' letter offering to make the alterations at his own expense, the department assumed half the expense amounting to over $15,000. The government voluntarily obligated itself, under all the other leases, to pay the expense of alterations, which amounted to $61,666.43, though Mr. Woods had voluntarily offered to make these alterations at his own expense. I say that the officials of the department who are responsible for a lease of that character, and in the face of a letter such as I have spoken of, on the files, cannot be charged with incompetency; I think a stronger term is applicable. It is absolutely dishonest to the people of this country to have a lease executed obligating the government to spend over $60,000 in improvements when the lessor had offered to make the alterations at his own expense.

I have another charge to lay at the door of the minister, and that is in connection with the nature of the improvements, and I say it is a very serious charge, because we know that these leases cannot be executed without authority of the Privy Council. We find a memorandum of the Privy Council which says that the government agrees to pay one-half of the 'interior fittings' and 'necessary alterations.' But many of the improvements paid for are neither 'interior fittings' nor 'necessary alterations,' but consist of such things as storm-sash, permanent walls, expensive stone floors, iron stairways and even elevators—and we pay half the expense of these. By what stretch of imagination can you call elevators 'interior fittings' or an iron stairway 'necessary alterations'? Not only that, but at page 187 of the records of the Public Accounts Committee, we find that we paid half the expense of elevators that had already been installed before the lease was excuted.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that established by the evidence?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Yes, by the sworn evidence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And no explanation of it?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). No explanation forthcoming. The renting of the Woods building was so profitable that Mr. Woods wanted to erect another building and let it out to this easy department with an easy conscience. It was a profitable business. The department determined to rent the Canadian building, and when the rental was fixed the building had reached only about the first story. Yet at the time when the department made up its mind to rent the Canadian building, there was a report from the chief architect that they required no more space. Why does the department negotiate an extraordinary lease of this kind when the chief architect declares that no more space is required by the various departments? Further, the order in council confirming and ratifying this proposed lease speaks only of 'alterations,' half to be paid by Mr. Woods and half by the department. But they were not alterations in any proper sense, but were new work put in as the building was being erected. The architect furnished the plans for each floor as it was constructed. The order in council did not contemplate this. Only 'necessary alterations' required after the building was erected were contemplated. But we paid some $45,990.69 for work put into the new building that was being erected by Mr. Woods. And to-day we are paying $42,536.90 annual rental. So, in three and one-third years we would pay for the whole building.

Then, we have—shall I say?—a more discreditable feature of these leases. We find that the rents are payable months before the execution of the lease, and the owners are drawing rentals months before the buildings were taken possession of.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that sworn to?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That is sworn to, and the documents show it. The lease dated September 13, 1906, carries rent from the 1st of January, 1906, eight months and a half before the lease was executed. The lease dated April 16, 1908, carries rent from December 1, 1907, four and a half months before it was executed. Under the first lease, dated September 13, 1906, the rent runs from January 1, 1906, although possession was not given of the basement and second and third floors until May following, and of the fourth and fifth floors until February 6, of the seventh floor until January 30, 1906. So we have the government of this country paying rent four and five months before possession was secured and seven and eight months before the lease was actually executed. In other words, the lease was dated on a certain date and the rent was made to run months prior either to the execution of the lease or the taking of possession. Then we find, under the second lease, dated April 16, 1908, the rent is dated back to the 1st of December, 1907. Of the second and third floor, possession was not given until April 8, and of the fourth floor until May, of the fifth floor until December, 1907. Consequently we find the department paying enormous sums in rentals, and they are high rentals, for five months under the first lease, amounting to $11,387.50, before the department has any use of the buildings at all. I say the Department of Public Works is responsible for this condition of affairs. Under the second lease we paid rent for five months, amounting to $6,336.25, before the department ever took possession of the building at all.

Now, the Minister of Public Works spoke about the heating and lighting of the buildings. I want to show that the heating of this particular building had the same extraordinary features as the rentals had. It is not based on the cost of the service, but is based on the cubic contents of the building. You have to come to the city of Ottawa and enter into the Public Works Department in order to get some knowledge of this peculiar method of paying for the heating of public buildings. It is only these two public buildings in Ottawa, under government supervision, where they hire the heating done according to the cubic contents. And how does it work out? On the sworn testimony of the chief architect of the department, he says he cubed the whole building, outside measurement. The walls are included, and the country is paying four-tenths cents per cubic foot for heating these two buildings, no allowance for outside walls, no allowance for inner walls, no allowance even for the furnace room. We are paying for heating the furnace room according to its cubic contents. Mr. Woods even claimed pay for heating the space under the sidewalk outside the buildings. Well, when we summoned witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee we find the department paying the cost of the coal, the wages of the men, and repairs, which are all the ingredients making up the cost of heating, an amount of $6,047.55. And what was this department paying for that same service? They were paying this Imperial Realty Company $9,163.51, leaving a rake-off of $3,115.96. Now, when these facts were brought out in the Public Accounts Committee they voted down a resolution which I propose to read, calling upon the government to cancel that contract. But the facts were brought out so clearly by their own witnesses, by the chief architect of the department, and by other witnesses, that the department has since cancelled the contract for heating, and has effected a saving to the country of over $3,000 in that respect. Then the Minister of Public Works referred to the lighting of the buildings. Strange to say, the government paid on the meter basis, although a commercial rate is always a flat rate. The city treasurer of Ottawa, when placed in the witness box, said that these were properly commercial rates, they should not have been paid on the meter basis at all, but should have been on the flat basis. Then we find that the department, instead of paying the city of Ottawa direct for the lighting of these buildings, pays the Imperial Realty Company, and the Imperial Realty Company pays the city of Ottawa, and the middleman again comes into evidence, and makes out of the government something like $3,000 or $4,000 a year on lighting contracts alone.

Mr. LENNOX. What minister is responsible for that?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The Minister of Public Works, it is in his department.

Mr. LENNOX. He defied us about the middleman.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). He said there was no middleman in his department, but there is the evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. An arrangement made before I became minister, and the amounts paid on vouchers furnished by the city of Ottawa—the identical amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not mention those vouchers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I will.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. minister will mention anything, if he will bring up a transaction like these vouchers. The minister has never looked into it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have looked into it.

Mr. FOSTER. Then for the sake of Mr. Woods, never open your mouth about it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not concerned about Mr. Woods, what I am concerned about is that Mr. Ellis, the treasurer of this city, should have furnished these vouchers professing to show the identical allowance which were paid by the Imperial Realty Company to the city of Ottawa, the identical amounts contained in the accounts which were rendered by the Imperial Realty Company to the officers of my department and which were paid.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The chief architect of the department was put in the witness box before the Public Accounts Committee and gave evidence. Speaking about the electric lighting contracts that this government had with the Imperial Realty Company, and speaking as to the illegitimate and illicit profit that the Imperial Realty Company was making out of the department, Mr. Ewart gave this evidence on page 182:

In view of the evidence that has been adduced before the committee, would you, as chief architect of the department would recommend the cancelling of them?—A. Well, I would.

Then on page 204 we have the evidence of the deputy minister, Mr. J. B. Hunter, who says:

Q. So that if the Imperial Realty Company were not paying the city the amount they were collecting from the department, the department would be entitled to reimbursement?—A. I would certainly go after them and get it. That is our understanding, that they pay the city and we pay them. If they are not doing it I will have to go after them.

Q. In that case you are entitled to reimbursement?—A. We are.

Now, in answer to a question that was placed upon the Order Paper not long ago, whether they had instituted an action against the Imperial Realty Company to recover this amount, the Minister of Public Works, although an astute and clever lawyer, said he had referred it to the Justice Department for an opinion. Now surely, with the minister's experience, and parliamentary knowledge, and astuteness, and cleverness in the law, he did not need to refer a question so simple to the Department of Justice before taking action against the Imperial Realty Company. I desire at this juncture to say a word in regard to the lighting contract where the facts were so conclusively proven, notwithstanding all the obstruction that was possible in the Public Accounts Committee on the part of the Minister of Public Works himself, and of the Liberal members of that committee. In this connection I desire to call attention to a matter that came up not long ago in the House when the Minister of Public Works said that he was not present in the Public Accounts Committee when this contract was ruled out which would have disclosed the whole facts, and that the Imperial Realty Company were getting an illegal profit out of the lighting contract. I quote from page 874 of 'Hansard':

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The Minister of Public Works objected to the production of the original contract because he said it was a private document.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I was not present when the chairman ruled out that contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did I hear the minister say 'hear, hear'?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it was from your own side.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). What does the minister say now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. You will hear from me by and by if you give me an opportunity.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario) (reading):

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The Minister of Public Works, and all his cohorts surrounding him, objected to the production of the original contract, because it would disclose the amount this company was paying the city of Ottawa for its light.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have made the statement that I was not present in the committee when objection was taken to the original contract, and when it was ruled out.

I want to say, with reference to that particular statement, that I have here a certified copy of the proceedings before the Public Accounts Committee, certified to by Mr. Thomas S. Howe, and this is another instance when the Minister of Public Works was so ready to contradict a member of the House without being sure of his facts. I had not this document in my hand at the time, but the minister deliberately contradicted me in this House and stated that I was not stating facts, and that he was not present. Now, we have the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee certified under the hand of the clerk.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend give me the page?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). 874 of 'Hansard.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but the reference to the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I will send you over this document when I read it.

Ottawa, Friday, April 29, 1910.

Committee met at three p.m., Mr. Warburton presiding.

Examination of Mr. Ernest Linton resumed by Mr. Sharpe.

During the examination of this witness he was asked to produce a contract between the Woods Company, Limited, and the Ottawa City Electric Light Company, and he refused to produce the contract.

Whereupon the chairman was asked for a ruling, and he ruled that the witness need not produce the said contract unless he chose so to do.

From this ruling Mr. Sharpe appealed.

The yeas and nays being asked for, and the question being put, the ruling of the chairman was sustained on the following division, namely:—

Yeas—Messrs. Chisholm (Inverness), Congdon, Fowke, Lanctot (Richelieu), Logie, MacNutt, Michaud, Nesbitt, Pardee, Prowse, Pugsley——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend give me the date of that?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). April 29, 1910.

—Reid (Restiguoche), Richards, Schell, Sinclair—15.

Nays—Messrs. Blain, Boyce, Crosby, Goodeve, Lennox, Middlebro, Rhodes, Roche, Sharpe (Ontario), Wallace—10.

The result being fifteen to ten.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee held on Friday, April 29, 1910.

THOS. S. HOWE,
Clerk Public Accounts Committee.

Ottawa, November 25, 1910.

Does the Minister of Public Works dispute the certificate of the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee? Does he still persist in saying that he was not present obstructing the work of the committee and upholding the rulings of the chairman ruling out legitimate, and pertinent evidence which would disclose the facts with regard to this nefarious contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My recollection now that I have seen this statement is exactly the same as it was when the matter came up previously. My recollection is that the chairman had ruled out the agreement before I came into the committee room.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my recollection of it. Will my hon. friend pardon me for saying that it is rather a strange thing that my hon. friend has not the proceedings of the committee for April 29.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I could not get them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How could my hon. friend get the certificate and not get the report itself?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Because the proceedings are on file and posted in the book of the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee. He has only one copy of them posted in his book. Does the minister dispute it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do dispute it ; I am satisfied it is not true.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). There is Mr. Howe's signature.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I am satisfied it is not true. My recollection is just as clear as it can be—I may be mistaken, but I do not think I am. I am sure I am not mistaken because I remember distinctly that what took place was this—

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend appeals to me, and I have the right to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sharpe, Ontario) has the floor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well, but the hon. gentleman asked me—

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I asked you what your recollection was ; that is all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My recollection is that when I came into the committee room the hon. gentleman sought to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document which had been previously ruled out by the chairman, ruled out before I entered the room, and that is what I objected to. I took the ground that as the chairman had ruled that document out, as I was informed when I came into the room, my hon. friend ought not to be allowed to give secondary evidence of its contents.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). If that is the hon. gentleman's understanding with reference to the chairman's ruling, how can my hon. friend, in face of that document certified under the hand of the clerk in Public Accounts Committee and which shows that his recollection is in direct conflict with the facts as set out in that certificate, make the statement which he has? But, notwithstanding all the obstruction to which we are subjected in this investigation before the Public Accounts Committee——

Mr. PUGSLEY. To which you were not subjected.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario)——the facts were so patent that at last we succeeded in having them given and placed upon the record in such a clear and distinct way that even the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) and the Liberal members of the committee voted unanimously for a resolution to request the government to cancel the electric light contract and save the country $3,000 or $4,000 a year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which they all voted for.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Which they all voted for!

Moved by Mr. Sharpe, seconded by Mr. Carvell, that whereas the expense to the government during the last year for lighting the Woods and Canadian buildings amounted to $9,465.91, paid to the Imperial Realty Company, which company is not an electrical lighting company; and whereas the city of Ottawa has a standard schedule of prices whereby the lighting would cost only $5,040 or less, thereby effecting an annual saving to the country of $4,425.91 or more; therefore this committee desires to urge upon the Minister of Public Works and the government the desirability of cancelling the present arrangement and recovering the excess unjustly paid to the Imperial Realty Company, and giving the city of Ottawa or some other company the contract at lower rates; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Minister of Public Works.

The question having been put, it was declared carried in the affirmative.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Unanimously, was it not?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). It was carried unanimously. There was no objection to it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The minister did not vote against that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, sir, I was in favour of it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Acting on the strength of that resolution unanimously adopted by the committee the government has cancelled the contract and saved the country $3,000 or $4,000 a year, but they have not taken any action yet to recover the amount of the illegal profit from the Imperial Realty Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has cut it down fifty per cent. Some time ago he said that it was $6,000.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). How the hon. gentleman does like to interrupt and draw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no red herring about it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). If the minister will agree to lay the papers and documents in connection with the investigation on the table of the House the House will see that the Imperial Realty Company took a rake-off of at least $6,000 a year. We knew it was $6,000, but we kept well within the mark in order to get the unanimous endorsement of the committee for the resolution that the government should cancel this contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I did was to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he now says it was $3,000 when before he said it was $6,000.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The resolution says it was $4,000, but the actual facts show that it was $6,000 that the company were making out of the government.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Were they middlemen?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). They were middlemen operating by and through and in the Public Works Department.

As we all know, the Public Works Department might have telephoned to the Electric Light Company in Ottawa and secured the same rate of $3,000 a year, but the government chose to pay the company $9,000 instead. In connection with the heating the following resolution was moved :

Mr. Sharpe moved, Mr. Blain seconding, that whereas the heating of the Woods and Canadian buildings, contrary to all established custom of the present and past governments, has been contracted for and let out to the Imperial Realty Company at the price of four-tenths of a cent per cubic foot of the total contents of the buildings, and whereas the cost of the heating of these two buildings last year amounted to the sum of $9,163.51; and whereas the cost of the coal, the wages of the men and the repairs amounted to only $6,047.55; therefore, this committee is of the opinion that the government should cancel the present arrangement, and should do its own heating, thereby saving at least $3,115.96 per annum in this item alone.

The yeas and nays being asked for, and the question being put, the motion was lost on the following division:—

Yeas—Messrs. Blain, Crosby, Currie (Simcoe), Goodeve, Hughes, Lake, Sharpe (Ontario)—7.

Nays—Messrs. Allen, Carvell, Congdon, Loggie, MacNutt, McAllister, McKenzie, Neely, Parent, Proulx, Rankin, Reid (Restigouche)—12.

That resolution was voted down but immediately after the committee rose the department cancelled the heating arrangement, and they are to-day doing the heating themselves at a saving of $3,000 a year to the country, but when the motion being put above it was lost on the division stated in the quotation, and in the majority will be found the names of all the government supporters present. The second resolution has to do with the rentals, and as it summarizes the evidence I shall place it on record.

Moved by Mr. Sharpe, seconded by Mr. Hughes, that whereas the government has entered into certain leases with the Imperial Realty Co., respecting the Woods and Canadian buildings on Slater street, in the city of Ottawa; and whereas the annual rental of the Woods building amounts to $25,777.20 and taxes, in addition to which the government has expended $15,675.74 on capital expenditure on the building, including payment of one-half the cost of elevators in the buildings, expensive Ferrozo floors, iron stairs, &c.; and whereas the annual rental of the Canadian building amounts to $42,536.90 and taxes, in addition to which the government has expended $45,990.69 on capital expenditure on the building, including payment of one-half the cost of elevators erected before the lease was executed, expensive floors, iron stairway, &c., therefore this committee is of the opinion from the evidence adduced that the terms and conditions of these leases are unfair to the government and display an utter lack of care and good judgment on the part of those persons negotiating the same on behalf of the people of Canada.

The question being put, the motion was lost on division as above recorded.

On account of the obstructive tactics employed by the Liberal members of the committee this resolution was moved :

Moved by Mr. Sharpe, seconded by Mr. Goodeve, that whereas one of the chief functions of the Public Accounts Committee is the investigation into all questions as to the fair and reasonable price paid by the government for the various commodities sold and services rendered to the government; and whereas to properly discharge this duty it is absolutely necessary that the greatest latitude be given to members of the committee to inquire into the first cost of such commodities and services to the persons selling same to the government; therefore, the committee deprecates the unwarranted and continued obstruction of the work of the committee by some of its members, and regrets that the rulings of the chairman, Mr. Warburton, in the present investigation before the committee prevented a full and free inquiry into all the facts of the case.

The question being put, the motion was lost on division as above recorded.

Now, to summarize the results of the investigation into this peculiar contract—the government were forced to cancel the lighting contract, and the government were forced to cancel the heating contract, and on these two items alone $8,000 or $9,000 a year was saved to the country. Again, the government were buying electric power from the Imperial Realty Company—a company that never developed any electric power at all, but purchased it from the city of Ottawa, and on this transaction there was a rake-off on the power for the elevator alone of $1,000 a year. In connection with these contracts we have these extraordinary facts : The improvements which were supposed to include only internal fittings or alterations but which included storm sashes. Terrazzo floors, iron stairs, elevators already erected, all permanent improvements amounted to $61,666.46. Again we have had the leases drawn to carry the rentals for months before they were signed, and before possession was taken which involved a loss to the country of $17,723. On the heating the rake-off was $3,159.60, on the power the rake-off was $1,000, the electric light rake-off was at least $4,000 a year, making a total illegal payment to this company of $87,390, which was utterly indefensible, improper, and dishonest. The Minister of Public Works referred to the Royal Trust Company of Montreal, and I desire to say to this House that there were most extravagant speculations by reason of these extraordinary and extravagant, and outrageous rentals the minister was paying to this company. We find that the formation of the Imperial Realty Company was in contemplation when the first lease of the Canadian building was executed. The date of the first lease of the Canadian building was 10th September, 1906 ; letters patent were issued to the Imperial Realty Company on 4th October, 1906; the bargain and sale from Mr. Woods to the Imperial Realty Company was on the 20th of October, 1906 ; the date of the second lease of the Canadian building was 16th April, 1908 ; the date of the supplementary letters patent to the Imperial Realty Company 20th November, 1908 ; the trust mortgage from the Imperial Realty Company to the Royal Trust Company was on the first of January, 1909, just a few weeks afterwards. We find that bonds were issued on January 1, 1909 for $500,000. There was no great difficulty in negotiating bonds for $500,000 with the Royal Trust Company or any other company that had the funds to loan, on buildings the rental of which was paying 10 per cent on a capitalization of over $700,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hardly, if the building was not worth that.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The rentals were for ten years, and the total rentals came to something like—

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lease of one building was only for five years.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). With the option of renewal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The option was to the government, and not to the company, and it might or might not be renewed.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Knowing how easy the Department of Public Works was the Trust Company had no doubt the rentals would continue, and the lease renewed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend think the Royal Trust Company would invest the money of the widow and the orphan on a speculation of that kind?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It would pay it all up in five years anyway.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The total rental was $68,314.10 or 10 per cent return on $680,000. There was no difficulty in negotiating a loan of $500,000 when the government guaranteed the rentals amounting to half as much again as the bond issue. But I want to say something about the bond issue. The bond issue was made on January 1, 1909, and this is a case of modern high finance. Talk about Sheldon and George Munroe, but in this instance the Department of Public Works working in conjunction with a party favourite could put Mr. Sheldon, and Mr. George Monroe in the shade. Here we see the Imperial Realty Company negotiating the bond issue on January 1, 1909, for $500,000 payable the first of January, 1939, or earlier, with interest at 6 per cent payable half yearly, numbered from 1 to 500, repayable by a sinking fund of $8,500 a year. To redeem a bond issue of $500,000 in 30 years they only required a sinking fund of $8,500 a year. They were getting $68,000 a year rent or in other words they were having profits of $60,000 a year, along with a sinking fund of $8,500 a year to redeem this bond issue, and out of this bond issue or mortgage they built the handsome Roxborough apartments. Let me do a little figuring for the benefit of the Minister of Public Works. The annual rental of the Woods building was $25,777.20, and 30 years rent at the rate that the Minister of Public Works is paying these landlords would amount to $783,316. The Canadian building was rented for $42,536.90, and if they continue to rent the buildings at the rate the minister of Public Works rented them for, that building will bring them in $1,276,107 in the 30 years. In other words the total rentals to the Imperial Realty Company, during the currency of the bond issue will amount to $2,059,425.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That assumes that after the government lease has terminated, the company would be able to rent it at the same rental to other parties.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). When probably the Minister of Public Works will renew the lease.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the company could easily calculate on the same rental from other parties afterwards.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The hon. gentleman knows that, by reason of the growth of the city and progressive values of real estate, rentals are higher to-day than they were when he negotiated the lease; and I have no doubt that at the end of 10 years the company could rent the buildings to the Minister of Public Works at higher prices.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Or to anybody else.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). At any rate, the total rentals of these two buildings in 30 years would net the company $2,059,425. The cost of these buildings, according to the evidence of a city assessor, was $257,300. So that there would be a net profit to the company of $1,802,125 in 30 years, and they would still own the building free of any claim. Among the shareholders of this company are:—J. W. Woods, 550 shares; D. R. Finnie, 800 shares, in trust; G. C. Edwards, 100 shares, in trust; Sir H. M. Pellatt, 250 shares; and Judge McTavish. There are a number of other shareholders, but I have not the list under my hand. Now, the total rentals are:—On the Woods building, $25,777.20; on the Canadian building, $42,626.90; a total of $68,314.10. The government can borrow money at 3½ per cent per annum, and hence with the annual sum of $68,314.10, have borrowed $1,951,830 with which they could have erected these buildings at a cost of $300,000, and then would have had $1,651,830 in the treasury to the good. That is to say: The rent equals net income at 3½ per cent on an investment of $1,951,830, while the company expended less than $300,000 in the construction of both buildings, towards which we contributed $61,666.43 in permanent improvements. Now, I submit, in conclusion, that the people of this country do not desire the various departments, under the control of ministers who are paid high salaries, conducted in this manner. Again we find that the hon. Minister of Public Works was in Winnipeg last July, and while there he made some speeches, in which he said that the only charges brought against the government were in reference to the sawdust wharf and the electric light contract, and these were utterly untrue. The Manitoba 'Free Press,' quoting his speech, under date of July 13, 1910, said:—

Mr. Pugsley touched upon some criticism which he had received from the leader of the opposition (referring to the sawdust wharf and the electric light contracts). The charges dealt with were two, which Mr. Pugsley proved to have been absurd and unfounded.

The Winnipeg 'Telegram' also of July 13, 1910, quotes the hon. minister as making that statement with reference to the electric light contract:—

There was nothing in the transaction that was not straightforward, and the opposition dare not challenge me on the floor of the House, though they make bold to use these insinuations against me in their speeches outside of the House.

When you reflect that one of the good old principles of the Liberal party was 'the ancient and undoubted right of the House of Commons to inquire into all matters of public expense,' you wonder why these hon. gentlemen go to the Public Accounts Committees and use every effort in their power to strangle investigation and to suppress the facts. When Mr. Ernest Linton, the secretary of the Imperial Realty Company, was in the witness box, as there were significant features about these contracts which impressed me very seriously, I asked him if there was any official of the Public Works Department who was residing in the Roxborough apartments. At first he refused to answer, but finally the chairman ruled that he had to answer. Then he said that the only officials who were residing in the Roxborough apartment were the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) and the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And I suppose my hon. friend suggests that we get free rent, does he?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I simply state what was the evidence of the secretary of the Imperial Realty Company, and the House and the country can draw their own inference. I say that the contracts were so outrageously unfair to the interests of this country that the right hon. the First Minister should appoint a royal commission to investigate the whole transaction from beginning to end.

Mr. F. T. CONGDON (Yukon Territory). Mr. Speaker, I think the House would have more highly appreciated the course of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat if he had made the many charges which he has made throughout his speech, at a time when it was within the power of the Minister of Public Works to reply to him. It may be the practice of this House to entertain charges of this kind made in the partial manner in which these charges have been made; it may be the policy of the opposition to call the minister to his feet to reply when only a portion of the charges are made; but I venture to say that no fair-minded man can have listened to the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat without coming to the conclusion that it is not a fair way in which to make charges of this character. The matters to which these charges relate are such as to be more within the knowledge of the hon. minister than of any other member of this House. He has control of them, he knows of them; matters which are unfamiliar to other members of the House are quite within his knowledge; and I have no doubt that had he the opportunity now to reply to the hon. member, he would answer him as completely and as fairly as he did the hon. member who made the motion. The hon. gentleman has recited the various leases in a way which tends to confuse the House in regard to the subject. One would think, from the manner in which he referred to them, that they all related to the same premises. If a little attention is paid to them, however, it will be found that the earliest one related to the east half of the Woods building, and as to that, the proprietor bore all the expenses of the alterations. The next related to the west half, and contained a clause by which the proprietor was to make the alterations and the government was to pay one-half the cost. The third lease related to the portion that was not included in either of the previous leases. There are two leases relating to the Canadian building, one for the west half, and the other for the east half. Now, to my mind, the question under discussion as to the propriety of the rentals paid must depend wholly upon the value of the buildings rented. It must be remembered that at the time the first lease was made there was a vast increase in the business of this country, and it was absolutely essential that the government should obtain premises in which that business could be properly carried on. No one who is familiar with the conditions in Ottawa as far back as 1903 can doubt that it was utterly impossible for the government to secure another building as suitable for their purpose as the Woods building. At that time that was the only building in this city that could be secured. Of course it is easy to go back to many years ago when real estate in Ottawa could be bought for a song, when building was much cheaper, and take the valuation then as basis for an estimate, but that is not a fair way in which to arrive at a reasonable rental on these properties leased by the government. In making a lease for ten years, the rental is not based wholly on the value of the year of making, but on the return which the building ought to bring during the period covered by the lease. It may well be that the government, in this lease made in 1903, will be considerably the gainer, before its termination, by the fact that the rental was fixed at that time.

I know of no way in which the value of real estate can be fixed except by taking the testimony of men who are accustomed to estimate such values. It would not have been possible to have brought before the committee better evidence of values than that given by the valuators to the Royal Trust Company. It is absurd to say that in 1908 the Royal Trust Company was influenced, in the loan it made to the Imperial Realty Company, by the fact that there were still a few years to run on the leases made in 1903 and 1905. That certainly would be a very small element in determining the value put upon the buildings as security for the loan. Turning, then, to the report of these valuators, we have the most explicit evidence as to what they considered to be the values of these different buildings. We have these values defined in various ways. We have the Queen street property estimated to be worth $68,975. On this the rental paid is $5,300, and I do not think that can be called an excessive rental. The next lot is the Woods property, which is estimated as worth $288,350. There is a lease of that building reserving a rental of $25,777. The next building is the Canadian, estimated by these valuators at $433,870, and the rental is $43,536. Taking these various properties as estimated in this valuation, they aggregate $791,195, and the total rental is $73,000, very considerably less than 10 per cent, and only about 10 per cent if, from the $791,000 you deduct the amount paid by the government on alterations.

My hon. friend criticised the various provisions in the leases and the various transactions with regard to alterations, and apparently confused the leases. No doubt in the first lease the cost of the alterations was paid wholly by the proprietor, but only half in the second lease. And in a second lease it is not unusual for the proprietor to change the terms of the first. No doubt in 1903 every one who knew anything about real estate in Ottawa expected a prompt and quick rise in prices and values. In 1905, when the second lease was made, such a rise had taken place, and from time to time since there has been such an increase that the rentals paid by the government are fair and just, if you take the whole period covered by these leases and strike the average.

My hon. friend talked of a rake-off as though there was such a thing in respect to the heating and lighting. The evidence shows clearly that the Imperial Realty Company meant to obtain a larger amount for these purposes than they were entitled to, but the moment the minister discovered that the vouchers were not in accord with the amounts charged, he suggested that action should be taken to cancel the contract.

My hon. friend charges some of the members of the Public Accounts Committee which investigated this matter with having obstructed the investigation, and put every obstacle possible in the way of securing a full disclosure. Well, in my opinion, no one can read the report of the evidence taken before that committee without coming to the conclusion that the very fullest and freest investigation was allowed. The very statement my hon. friend makes that the committee unanimously recommended the cancellation of this lighting contract shows that the committee was ready to do what was fair and just. There may have been one or two rulings of the chairman in which the hon. gentleman did not agree, but that frequently happens. In any court of justice one occasionally meets with decisions ruling out evidence, which decisions the counsel on one side is sure not to approve. But you cannot read the evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee without seeing that every possible opportunity was given to investigate these matters in every line and branch, and if the members of that committee did not do so the fault was their own.

The charge has been made that middlemen were employed, but there is no evidence to sustain it. The evidence, on the contrary, shows that the original owner was the only party who had any dealings with the minister. Even with regard to the heating and lighting, to which the hon. gentleman refers as though there was a rake-off, the profit, whatever it was, was made by the proprietor, who wrote to the minister that he was charging only what he paid those who did the heating and lighting.

I submit that the ground of this matter could have been better covered by the minister himself than it could possibly be by any other member of this House. Had these charges been made, as they should have been, covering all the various buildings, covering all the items in respect of which any accusation is made by the opposition, and the minister thus given an opportunity of meeting them, there would be some satisfaction in our knowing that the gentleman who possessed all the knowledge and information with regard to these matters was given a fair and just opportunity to meet these charges. It is easy enough to go into figures. An hon. gentleman who can work out such figures as my hon. friend from Ontario has is wasting his time when he spends it on an investigation by a committee of this House. He ought, instead, to be out in the high financial world engaged in making money. It is easy to take figures and estimate the cost of buildings at a less amount than they are actually worth and then estimate the rental on that estimate and say that what is paid is excessive. It is easy to do this and then point out what a saving would have been effected had the rent been based on a lower value than the proprietor would have accepted.

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), in answering the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), attempted to read into the resolution something which had not been put there by the mover of it. As a mere matter of courtesy, following the usual precedent, the hon. member for Peel had notified the Minister of Public Works that this question would be brought up. And I would say to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Congdon), and to the Minister of Public Works and the members of the government, that this investigation has been before the House and the country since last session, so there can be no complaint on the part of the Minister of Public Works that he has no knowledge, when he was notified by the hon. member for Peel, what matter was to be taken up or what the subject of the amendment would be. But I wish to refer again to the peculiar manner of entering into the debate of the Minister of Public Works. He suggested that the member for Peel had been rather ashamed or afraid of what he had undertaken, and had reduced the percentage rental of these buildings by two per cent, and the minister suggested that this was a very serious thing. He did not hesitate to read into the resolution a matter of 25 per cent, and, setting up that straw man in an attempt to deceive the House in the argument he adduced. As the percentage named, was 20 per cent, and not 25 per cent, he attempted to read into the resolution an increase of 25 per cent. In the same way, in arguing the rent per superficial foot of these buildings, the Minister of Public Works does what he attempted to do before in a similar debate in this House. He referred to the Citizen building, but he did not tell this House that any one going in to rent a room there was paying 90 cents a square foot for the space he occupied and that he got heat, light, repairs, snowcleaning, taxes, insurance and all the expenses in connection with the building, together with the advertising of a large central newspaper building of that kind which in itself is no small matter to any man doing business. These were not figured in in the comparison he made of 81 cents per square foot. That covered the entire building. And not only was he paying 81 cents per foot of the building, basement and attic included, but, in addition, he was paying for heating, lighting, repairs, and the removal of snow. This was the lease made in regard to the Seybold building. The Minister of Public Works refused to accept the certified copy of one of the officials of this House, but I have here a printed report of the Public Accounts Committee, printed by the King's Printer, and dated Ottawa, 1910, No. 3. Though the minister refuses to accept a statement certified by one of the officials, he surely will not refuse to accept the report of one of the committee of this House, printed by the King's Printer. At page 142, I find in a discussion of the very contract we have had before the House to-night, and on which the arguments of the hon. member for North Ontario were based, the following:—

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—The hon. minister has begged the whole question.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—In what way?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Because you are presupposing that you know this witness is going to say he will not answer the question.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—Not at all.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Excuse me, now, by your interjection you are intimating to the witness that he need not answer, before you know whether he will object or not.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—Not at all, what I am objecting to is this, and every member of this committee has the right to object to it, to the giving by verbal evidence the contents of a contract which is not produced and which the witness has declined to produce.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOODEVE. I will go on to show that the witness was willing to produce the contract had it not been for the attitude of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me a moment?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am appealing to the hon. gentleman himself, not to those who are crying 'Order.' But, with the permission of my hon. friend, I will ask him if he does not think that that absolutely corroborates my statement when I say that Mr. Middlebro is seeking to get verbal evidence of the contents of the document? Previous to that time, the document had been produced, and had been taken possession of by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), but the chairman had ruled it out of evidence, and had ordered the hon. member to hand it back. That is the information that was furnished me, and that was why I said before the committee at the time of which he speaks that Mr. Middlebro was trying to get in verbal evidence of the contents of a document.

Mr. GOODEVE. But the minister said, notwithstanding the evidence as certified by the clerk, that he was not present on that occasion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I must correct my hon. friend. I made no such statement. I said I was not present when the chairman ruled out the written contract. I came in afterwards and took objection to the attempt to get in secondary evidence of the contract. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) tried to get in, in a very ingenious way, verbal evidence as to the contents of a contract that had already been ruled out by the chairman.

Mr. GOODEVE. But the evidence shows that the minister was there from the beginning and remained to the end, for his name appears as voting when the vote was taken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may have been there at the end, but not at the beginning.

Mr. GOODEVE. The minister was present and refused to allow us to hold that contract until we were through with the investigation. That was the whole dispute. We desired that the papers, as in all these investigations, should be freely and frankly laid before this committee and this House. I will show that the minister was there, not as the Minister of Public Works, to assist in making known the facts, but he was there to prevent the witness giving evidence which the witness was prepared to give, and a portion of the committee desired to hear:—

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—The Minister of Public Works, by taking the stand that he has, is taking the stand that he is the private solicitor for this gentleman who is in the box.

That is exactly what I understood, and I was present.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—How absurd.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—He is, because supposing after you had made this objection, the witness says, 'I do not mind answering at all.'

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—That is not proper evidence.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Then you have no right to interject your objections until you know whether the witness objects to answering or not. You are taking the position of counsel on this question for the witness.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—The ground I have taken is this——

Mr. SHARPE.—You have taken it three or four times already.

Yet the hon. minister said on the floor of this House that there was no desire to prevent a free investigation into the questions that were at issue at that time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And I say so still, but it should be by proper evidence.

Mr. GOODEVE. (reading):

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Supposing the witness says, after you have made that objection, 'I do not mind giving the contents of that document.'

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—He might say it, but he has not the right to say that.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—He has the right to say it if he likes, he is the only man who has the right to say whether he will answer the question or not.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—No, he is not. Will you say that a witness has the right to enter into a dispute here and to be the judge whether he will give by verbal evidence the contents of a written document?

Mr. BOYCE.—Are you the judge?

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—Yes, and every member of this committee is the judge and the chairman is the judge of that.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Does this gentleman represent the Woods Company?

Mr. SHARPE.—Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Hasn't he a right to make any admissions he chooses, hasn't he the right to give any evidence he likes if it is true?

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—If it is true. I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Either yes or no, has he the right to give any evidence he likes if it is true?

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—You cannot always answer a question with yes or no. Neither this witness or any other witness has the right to give the contents of any document without producing the document.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Concerning his own company, if it is against his own company.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—No matter who it is against.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—It is against his own company.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—That has nothing to do with it. Because a man says 'I am a fool' it does not follow that he has any right to say it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.—Do you mean to say that if this man came here and said 'I am getting that electricity for one-half the price I am selling it to the government,' he cannot produce the contract?

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY.—He is not obliged to produce the contract himself.

Yet in face of that evidence we find the Minister of Public Works refusing to allow the witness to give us the necessary information whereby we can learn whether this country is paying unduly through a middleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend deny that long before that the chairman had ruled out the contract and I was objecting to secondary evidence of it?

Mr. GOODEVE. That was your own opinion, to which other members of the committee took exception. The whole evidence goes to show that it was with the greatest difficulty the opposition members on that committee could get the necessary evidence to prove, as eventually it was proved, that there was a large rake-off through middlemen, in the heating, lighting and using of power in this building. I think my hon. friend from North Ontario has dealt very fully with that question, and he has proved conclusively that an investigation into this question is sadly needed. Now, there is another building that has been referred to by the Minister of Public Works, and while I am not going to deal with it along the same lines as the other buildings, I want at least to show the care and the interest that the Minister of Public Works has for those with whom he is doing business, and who are on terms of friendship with this government. On coming down to this session I found, when the Auditor General's Report was laid on the table, this letter at page V—356:

Audit Office, March 31, 1910.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your application No. 991, for $2,500, in favour of the Otis-Fensom Elevator Company, being the cost of installation of one passenger elevator in the Seybold Block, Ottawa.

The Seybold Block is a building rented by the government for use as the local custom house.

We would like to have a copy of the lease, to see how the cost of this permanent improvement is to be distributed between the landlord and tenant.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
FREDERICK HAYTER, for A.G.

In that letter you will see that the Auditor General refused to issue his check for $2,500, the amount asked for the installation of that elevator. A copy of the lease sent by the office of the Minister of the Public Works contained a clause whereby the lessor was to provide a fully equipped passenger elevator, at the cost, of course, of the lessor. Now what is the answer of the Minister of Public Works and his department?

Public Works Department,
Ottawa, April 28, 1910.

Sir,—Replying to you favour of the 25th instant referring to terms of lease of the Seybold block, relating to elevator, I may say that on the report of the chief architect that the elevator which was in the building when leased had got into a condition incapable of repair and endangered the lives of those making use of it, the department called upon the owner of the building to install a new machine, but could get no reply from him. As an elevator in the building was absolutely essential, the department decided to make the installation and pay for same in the meantime until action was taken by the owner.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. B. HUNTER, D.M.

You will notice there that the only reason given why the Department of Public Works undertook to install an elevator at the public expense, although they had a contract under seal that the lessor was to supply the elevator, was because, he failed to answer when they called his attention to the fact that he had not lived up to his contract.

Audit Office,
Ottawa, May 3, 1910.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 28, 1910, respecting the installation of an elevator in the Seybold block, stating that the department had called upon the owner of the building to install a new machine but could get no reply, and that, as an elevator was essential, the department decided to make the installation and pay for the same until action was taken by the owner.

As the elevator was installed under agreement with the department, the responsibility for payment to the contractor rests with the government, and with that view assent has been given to the issuance of the check to the Otis-Fenson Elevator Company.

Under the terms of the lease, the owner agrees to supply an elevator fully equipped and ready for use. Please retain from the owner of the Seybold block any sums of money which may become due to him for rental of the said building until the department has been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred on account of the installation of this elevator.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
FREDERICK HAYTER,
For Auditor General.

Now, having some experience last year in the Public Accounts Committee, I thought I would like to know whether the order of the Auditor General had been complied with, and whether the rents had been retained to reimburse the government for the installation of this elevator. Therefore I put this question on the Order Paper, 'Hansard' page 1333:

Has the government been reimbursed for the $2.500 paid by them for the installation of an elevator in the Seybold building, as per letter of the Auditor General dated May 31, 1910? If so, how and when?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Department of Justice now has under consideration the question whether owner or department should pay under the terms of the lease.

A most remarkable state of affairs. Here we have a lease regularly drawn made between the government of Canada and the owner of this building in which he agrees to install a passenger elevator——

Mr. PUGSLEY. And what did he do.

Mr. GOODEVE. I will show that he did not do it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question was whether he should be obliged to put in a second one.

Mr. GOODEVE. I have read the letters up-to-date, and we have seen there was no reservation of that money, and we will see why.

Department of Public Works,
Accountant's Office,
Ottawa, August 8, 1910.

Memo. for assistant deputy minister.

The account to be retained from Mr. Seybold is $2,766.29, but I do not understand the order for that retention to be so imperative as to call for immediate action.

We are in actual possession of the building on a long lease, and the rental accruing between the present time and the 31st March next will be more than sufficient to cover the amount.

Under the circumstances, and in view of Mr. Seybold's explanation in conversation with yourself and myself last week, I consider that we might safely pay him the quarter's rent which is now due.

(Sgd.) A. KINGSTON, Accountant.

We have another letter in connection with that letter, a surprising one, because one is at a loss to know whether the writer, being a lawyer, was retained by the lessor, Mr. Seybold, or whether it is simply as a matter of friendship that he undertakes out of good will to give his advice to this government and tell them what they ought to do under the circumstances.

Ottawa, Sept. 27, 1910.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, D.C.L., P.C., M.P., Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the conversation which Mr. J. A. Seybold and I had with you to-day, in reference to the claim which the department has made upon him to pay for the new elevator which was installed by the department in Mr. Seybold's building, which was leased to the government by indenture of lease, dated the 5th day of May, 1908; I beg to state that I can see nothing in the lease which calls upon Mr. Seybold to pay for the installation of a new elevator.

The facts, with regard to the elevator, are shortly these:

The department had this building under lease for the census, and at that time installed a new elevator under the terms of the lease. The lease ran out, and after an interval of a year or so, a new lease was entered into in 1908, and the clause in the new lease which the department evidently relies on, is as follows: 'The lessor also hereby covenants and agrees to provide in said building an elevator, fully equipped and ready for use, to be operated by the lessee.'

The government took possession of the building on the 5th of May, 1908, and for nearly a year, or to be accurate, eleven months, maintained the passenger elevator which was fully equipped and ready for use, as provided for in the lease.

I feel sure that you will agree with me, after a perusal of the lease, that Mr. Seybold cannot be called upon by the government to pay for this new elevator.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) H. B. McGIVERIN.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that the member of parliament?

Mr. GOODEVE. The member of parliament. We have after the reception of that letter a remarkable change. We find that evidently he has great influence with the department because we have another letter which is as follows :

Ottawa, 11th October, 1910.

Sir,—I am desired by my minister to refer to you enclosed communication of Mc-

Giverin, M.P., and to ask for legal opinion whether this department is warranted in withholding, under the clause referred to in the lease, from the rent of this building, an amount to cover the cost of putting the elevator in serviceable condition.

I enclose for your information this department's file in the matter, No. 245, in which you will note a letter from me to Mr. J. A. Seybold, under date of March 24, 1909, calling on him to install a new machine; also correspondence from the office of the Auditor General in this connection, under date of April 25 and May 3, 1910.

I have the honour to be, sir
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. B. HUNTER,
Deputy Minister.

The Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Then we have another letter that I would like to read in conjunction with the letter from Mr. McGiverin, and it is from the chief architect :

Chief Architect's Office,
Public Works Department,
November 14, 1910.

J. B. Hunter, Esq.,
Deputy Minister,
Public Works Department.

I am returning correspondence re elevator in Seybold building. In reference to the question of the deputy Minister of Justice, 'I have to ask therefore whether the lessor provided at the time you entered into possession of the property under lease, an elevator fully equipped and ready for use.'

When the department first rented the building for Census Branch, the elevator was a freight elevator, and the lessor changed it to a passenger elevator, but it never gave satisfaction. When the building was re-leased in May, 1908, for customs purposes, the same elevator was in it, and the long room being on the second floor, the elevator was in constant use by the public, but it did not give satisfaction and was continuously requiring repairs, which were made by and at the expense of this department. Complaints were so frequent that the elevator was examined by our chief electrician, and he reported that the mechanism was beyond repair, and the elevator was dangerous. New mechanism has been put in and the elevator is now in good condition.

(Sgd.) D. EWART,
Chief Architect.

Now, after reading these letters in connection with the lease, there is only one inference to be drawn, and not an inference, as the letters themselves actually prove this condition. It is that the building was formerly leased to the Dominion government for census purposes. At that time there was in the building a freight elevator. There seems to be some confusion between the chief architect, and Mr. McGiverin as to who altered it into a passenger elevator, the one stating that it was done at the expense of the lessor, and the other stating that it was done at the expense of the lessee. In either case it was evidently unsatisfactory. That is admitted by both letters, but it is further proven by the fact that when the government undertook to renew the lease of this building they specifically set forth in the lease, notwithstanding the fact that they knew that there was already an old elevator in the building that the lessor should instal a passenger elevator ready for use. Why? There can be only one answer—because, having used the building before and knowing that there was already an elevator, they also knew that the elevator was dangerous, that it was unsatisfactory, and for that reason they put a clause in the lease stipulating that the lessor should furnish the government with a passenger elevator fully equipped and, of course, inspected that it might be used under the laws of the country for passengers. The government went in and took possession, and notwithstanding that they had that document, we find the deputy minister saying that because he wrote to the owner of the building and received no answer he felt that it was his duty to order the installation of a new public passenger elevator at the expense of the people of this country. I find in the Auditor General's Report in connection with that elevator that they paid out $3,031.18 although their lease called for the installation of it by the lessor. The minister objected to the resolution on the ground that they were only paying from 7 to 10 per cent in rental, and yet we find in this one case alone, certified to by the Auditor General, certified to by the chief architect, and the deputy minister of his department, that they voluntarily expended $3,031 or an amount equal to 47 per cent of the rental for one year for an elevator in a building that they had no right to pay for. Even in the Auditor General's Report it distinctly states that they had no right to pay it, and the deputy minister states himself in his letter that they were only paying this in the meantime because they feared the danger of the old elevator that had been condemned. Then we find them endeavouring to shelve this problem, as they shelve other problems, by saying that they had referred it to the Department of Justice. This is another instance of carelessness in the handling of the funds of the people of this country. I think we are not using too strong language when we speak of rake-offs of this kind. I have put in a question, and I hope to receive through the Public Acounts Committee the total amount which has been expended by this government in alterations, repairs and capital expenditures on this building. I was in hopes that I would have had these returns before this question came up in the House, but we will probably find it necessary to deal with the question later on when we get all these details. In the meantime I want at least to enter my protest against the manner in which the administration of the department with regard to these rented buildings is carried on.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton N.). The observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Goodeve), who has just taken his seat do not call for any strenuous reply from the government side of the House. He has given us some history in connection with the elevator, which history does not reflect the slightest discredit on the administration of the Public Works department. It turns out that a certain elevator used for passengers in one of these buildings is found to be in a defective condition and that human life might be jeopardized. The deputy minister in compliance with the authority which the lease gave him, called on the proprietor of the building to put the elevator in good condition according to the terms of the lease as he understood them. The moment the deputy minister did that, he put himself in a position to charge the cost of that elevator against the proprietor of the building, should he refuse to take action, and if the government are entitled under the lease to do so, they can deduct the cost of that elevator out of the rental. The deputy minister of Public Works was charged with the responsibility of seeing that the elevator was safe, and would any sensible man suggest that instead of taking immediate action, he should go into a court of law to get a mandamus or injunction against the owner of the building, when in the meantime, those using the elevator might be killed. Had an accident happened, would it avail the deputy minister of Public Works to say that in order to avoid the criticism of members of the opposition and to save a few paltry dollars, he had delayed action in making the elevator safe for the use of passengers. The elevator story therefore may be eliminated from a consideration of the case for it affords no proof whatever that there was any remissness on the part of the government; on the contrary, the action which was taken reflects credit on the department. It is a matter of common occurrence that there is difference of opinion between landlords and lessees as to the construction of an agreement, and pending a settlement of that dispute before a proper tribunal the deputy minister of Public Works removed the cause of danger as any honest conscientious man would do. Surely it is time enough to blame the government when they are found to be in fault, and pending a decision on this point is it not at least decent to withhold criticism. So far as I could learn from the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), the case with regard to the elevator is still sub judice, and as I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) is a lawyer, he will know well that the etiquette of the profession forbids him to come here and make a speech and discuss the evidence in a case which has yet to be dealt with by the courts. I understand the hon. gentleman to be a lawyer and a good and experienced one, and I would expect him to leave this evidence alone until we have had a final decision in regard to the matter. I appeal to the members of this House as jurors who have to deal with the amendment presented by the hon. member for Peel to say that no evidence has been submitted in support of his indictment. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), tried to make a great point out of the part the Minister of Public Works took in the inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee, and I regret that hon. members of the opposition who sit on that committee are continuously complaining without reason, upon the alleged obstructions that are thrown in their way. I have been a member of that committee for some years and I challenge any hon. member of this House to say that I have objected to any honest or proper inquiry that ever took place there. I am in the hearing of hon. gentlemen who sit with me on that committee and I challenge them to say that I ever unduly obstructed any proper inquiry. I speak, of course, only for myself, but I think I may be taken as perhaps a very ordinary sample of the Liberals who sit with me on that very important committee. I do not refer to what may have happened in years past when I was not a member of the committee, but my experience leads me to conclude that the practices then were not very different from what they are to-day. Hon. gentlemen opposite are making a great mistake if they think the people of this country will take much stock in this howling about obstruction unless they can produce more substantial proof of it, than they yet have been able to. I followed with some interest and concern the inquiry before the committee, and I give credit to the hon. member for North Ontario for having pursued this question with a great deal of energy and industry, but he only made one point before the committee and in that he was sustained by the Liberals as well as by the Conservatives. It came out in the inquiry that the department was imposed upon with regard to the lighting and that practically a fraud was being committed from day to day and from month to month. I do not know how long it lasted, but it came out flatfooted that fraud was being committed, and we all joined hands in passing a resolution that that wrongdoing should at once cease and that if there had been any money improperly received, it should be paid back. I voted against every other resolution moved by the hon. member (Mr. Sharpe), at the close of the inquiry, because I did not think he had sustained the allegations he had made. I do not think he sustained the allegations he made about the heating or about the renting and I am still of the same opinion after hearing the evidence rehashed to-night. Speaking in a general way, I submit that the government of the country is in no different position to an individual, when they go into the market to rent buildings. They have no business to look for cheaper rentals than any other man. True, the ordinary man would not require such large buildings, and therefore the buildings required by the government are naturally few, in a city of this kind, and you consequently would expect to find the rentals for such buildings higher than for ordinary buildings.

Gentlemen of my own profession know that law books are dearer than other kinds of books, because there is only a limited market for them. Doctors, I suppose, have a similar experience. The class of buildings the government require in the city of Ottawa are a special class, different from any other kind of buildings, and for different purposes. Therefore, the supply is limited, and those who have the supply can afford to put the price at a pretty steep figure. I suppose they know that and take advantage of it. All I wanted to know at the committee was whether the government was paying as much as others in the way of rental, no more and no less. I made that inquiry, and having satisfied myself that they were not paying more than the humblest individual in Ottawa who had to rent a building, I was content that the government should pay the same as other people, and therefore voted against the resolution of the hon. member for North Ontario. I am satisfied that there was not a scintilla of evidence given in support of the indictment of the hon. member for Peel. It was shown that we were paying 81 cents per superficial foot, or 90 cents, as the case might be. Is there any evidence that we could have got the accommodation for any less? If it can be shown that by the exercise of due diligence the department could have obtained a superficial area to suit the purposes of the government for one cent less they are to be condemned for not obtaining it. But when there is not a scintilla of evidence to show that they could have done any better than was done, what is the use of indicting them? They paid the price which the market demanded. and they could not get it lowered. I submit that there is not a particle of evidence of wrong-doing. Even if the rental was a little high, if the members of the government, and particularly the department under consideration to-night, exercised the best judgment they possessed in the interests of the people of this country, and gave the people the benefit of their judgment, honestly and squarely, are they to be indicted or condemned for having paid a cent per superficial foot one way or the other in renting buildings of the magnitude of those they have to deal with?

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend think 18 per cent a little high?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is not a particle of evidence that there is 18 per cent. My hon. friend from Peel has given us what is known in Scotland as a Scotch trial—he first hangs the accused and then tries him. The hon. gentleman asks for a verdict and he tells the jury: I have no evidence; I am putting the facts as I have them, and some time next week I will give you the evidence. Although not a lawyer, my hon. friend is not without experience and strong common sense, and he is one of the men who give tone and respectability to the opposition side of the House, and yet I must charge him with having a very crude idea of how cases should be tried.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask my hon. friend whether he disputes the facts I presented to the House this afternoon with respect to the purchase price of the property and the amount expended on it, to make the cost of it $80,000 in all to the present owners?

Mr. McKENZIE. I certainly cannot accept such evidence when we know nothing about it. I am not saying that my hon. friend's statements may not turn out to be correct, but so far they are not facts at all. There is no evidence before us, and we are bound in all fairness to deal with the Minister of Public Works upon the evidence submitted to us. He is charged with all manner of political crimes in connection with the leasing of these buildings, and surely he has a right as a minister of the Crown to ask his supporters and every honest man in this House to condemn him on facts, and not upon the bald statements which my hon. friend may make, however honestly he may make them. My hon. friend was asked to disclose the source of his alleged facts, but he refused to do so, telling us that some day in the Committee of Public Accounts he would give us those facts.

It is altogether unnecessary for me to go over any of the ground that was traversed by the Minister of Public Works himself. The answer he gave to the allegations contained in the indictment of the hon. member for Peel was so complete that there is nothing left for the jury even to pass upon As the old saying is, there is nothing of it left to be buried. There have been many insinuations of bad faith and what hon. gentlemen of the opposition call rake-off in connection with these matters. With regard to the electric light contract, is there a particle of evidence that there was any laxity or any wrong-doing in connection with it so far as the minister or any of the officials of the department is concerned? I think it quite proper that there should be further inquiry into that matter. I have seen the papers, and I am surprised that any official of the city of Ottawa should be allowed to be a party to a transaction of that kind. Whether wittingly or not, the city of Ottawa has become a party to a dishonest transaction in enabling certain individuals or firms to obtain money to which they have no right, and I hope the Department of Public Works will, before long, be able to tell us that proper steps have been taken to recover any moneys that have improperly gone out in that way.

When insinuations of this kind are made one is almost tempted to go back and to see whence came those men who are so very honest, what are their names, and what was their former occupation. I do not like it, and it is not according to my idea of public duty or public business to go into muck-raking of any kind. I ask the hon. member for Peel, when he goes home to-night, to think over the last 30 or 40 years, and to inquire how the public works of this country were built and what is become of certain public inquiries at certain stages of this country's political history. Having done that, if he thinks he can come forth and be the first to throw stones from a political standpoint I shall be willing to follow out some of the points he has endeavoured to make against us to-night, but I am satisfied that, from every standpoint, the arraignment he has endeavoured to make is completely unfounded, and that if this matter came before a judge in any court he would withdraw the charges from the jury and say that there was nothing left on which to found a verdict.

Mr. G. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has spoken about the elevator in the Seybold block and he was quite right in saying that an elevator was necessary there because human lives were in jeopardy and that the department could charge the proprietor with the cost. But unfortunately it did not charge the proprietor with the cost, and consequently did not do what the hon. gentleman said it should have done. It is hardly necessary for me to comment on the hon. gentleman's remarks with reference to the Regal building because he says no evidence was given by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) with regard to that matter, if the hon. member for Cape Breton is willing to swallow that 18 per cent rent, his capacity in that respect is unusually strong.

Mr. McKENZIE.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no proof whatever that it is 18 per cent or even 10 per cent except the hearsay statement of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. PERLEY. What strikes me as the worst feature in this transaction is the business inefficiency it has shown on the part of the Department of Public Works. The minister says that they take great care in the making of these leases. Well, they certainly take great care to pay too much. I listened with much attention to the hon. member for Peel with regard to this Regal building. As respects the other buildings I have very little knowledge, but I know a good deal about the Regal building and property in the vicinity, and in my opinion my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) showed conclusively that the government was paying 18 per cent to the owners. I have no fault to find with the proprietors for having got all they could—it was a business transaction, but I have fault to find with the department for having been so unbusinesslike as to give this enormous rental. The hon. minister said there is no proof of that. Why, that the exact cost of the building was $47,500 is a matter of public knowledge, can be seen in the registry office. All they did afterwards was to add another story or two to the building, and when completed I am safe in saying that $80,000 would be a full market price for it in this city. The minister has tried to cloud the issue by talking about rents by the square foot for other buildings rented by this government. That is a most unfair way in which to discuss the question. When I rent an office in a building by the square foot, I get the use of the elevator free, pay nothing for the hallways and as a rule get the use of the light and have the heating without charge. But in this Regal building, the government is doing all these things. All the proprietors have to pay out of their rent is the insurance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman say that in the figure I gave of 81·28 per square foot, I have included the hallway? Take the Regal building and all the buildings, the figures given are for the portions actually occupied for offices and do not include anything except the actual office space.

Mr. PERLEY. I still say, and I submit to the minister, that the proper way to judge this rental is to compare it with the rental of other buildings rented as a whole, and not take it by the square foot at all. Every one knows that in Ottawa, as in other places, a man who buys property in the heart of the city is very glad to rent the whole building to net him 5 per cent or 6 per cent per annum, because he gets the increased value which comes regularly and steadily in all these cities. I happen to know from personal knowledge of a lease of property behind this Regal building, slightly larger than the Regal building, and it is on Sparks street, and for that reason worth a great deal more, and it has been rented for $7,000 per annum within the last few days, and out of that the owner has to pay the insurance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What building?

Mr. PERLEY. The Bryson, Graham building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How large?

Mr. PERLEY. Slightly larger than this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How many stories?

Mr. PERLEY. Three or four, immediately behind and in a much more valuable part than the Regal building. I did not intend to speak on this motion, but rose to make that statement. I consider that it is only right and proper that the lease of the Regal building should be compared with a building rented as a whole, and it is not good business capacity on the part of this government to pay over $14,000 per annum net to the owners of the Regal building when other people are able to rent buildings in Ottawa of greater value for half the money.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford). With reference to leases, it is hard to make comparisons, but the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has said that some of these buildings were rented to net the proprietor from 18 per cent to 25 per cent. Now there are many towns in which commercial buildings are renting to pay more than that on the actual investment though perhaps not on the actual value. Values are continually changing. I know properties in Toronto that have been rented as high as 80 per cent on the cost, but still would not bring more than 7 per cent on the actual value, considering the value of the land and the value of the building, and so far as I have been able to judge with reference to departmental buildings here, they have nearly all to be constructed almost specially for the purpose of the departments. Take the building just mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) which he compares with the one leased by the government. The probabilities are that the building he mentioned was rented as it was without any particularly extensive repairs. And the probabilities are that the building rented to the department required extensive repairs in the way of elevators and other improvements for the department.

Now, these extensive inside repairs would cost a good deal of money. My hon. friend says they only added a couple of stories. Well, a couple of stories properly added to the building, with the repairs necessary to fit the building for occupation by a department of the government, might cost a great deal of money, and it is perfectly fair to add the actual cost. Suppose they bought the building for $47,000, and expended $25,000—say $75,000 altogether. They might have so improved that building as to make it worth $50,000 more in the eyes of any real estate valuator. It is a common practice among real estate valuators to take the gross rental at 10 per cent in order to pay the investor 6 per cent net on his money. The building must be in very excellent condition in which a gross 10 per cent will net the owner 6 per cent by the time he pays his ordinary wear and tear repairs. Now, as to the Canadian building and the others that were inquired into so much in the Committee of Public Accounts: I was in the committee a good deal of the time, and when the Minister of Public Works says that when the question was raised that the chairman ruled out of order, he was not there, I believe he is absolutely right. The vote was taken on a question of sustaining the chairman's decision.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And the report shows it.

Mr. NESBITT. The members on our side did not dispute the right of members on the other side to inquire into this question, and to compare the cost of lighting and heating with that in any other buildings of a similar size in town, or to get the cost of lighting and heating—of lighting more especially—from the electrical department of the city. But I remember saying that they had no right to inquire into the private agreement between the Realty Company and the lighting department. I said, and I still say, that that was beyond what we had the right to inquire into. I thought these hon. gentlemen had every right to compare the cost of lighting and heating with that of similar buildings elsewhere in the city. Now, as a matter of fact, when the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) and others proved that these people were getting what he calls a rake-off, that is, getting a profit out of the light, we immediately joined with them and the Minister of Public Works cancelled the contract. It appears that the contract was made many years ago when the government were using only a part of the building, and, for the sake of convenience, the owner agreed to light the part used by the government at the same proportionate cost that he was paying. They did not suspect him, I suppose; in any event, they did not know—at least, I do not think they knew—that they were paying more for the lighting than he was paying. It turned out by the evidence before the committee, that, apparently, they were, and the contract was immediately cancelled.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not a member of this committee, and perhaps I may be allowed a question for information. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) said that he was opposed to inquiring into what the Realty Company had paid for the lighting?

Mr. NESBITT. I said that was a private contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How would the hon. gentleman have found out about the rake-off?

Mr. NESBITT. It was simply the case so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But if you were not at liberty to inquire into it, how could you ever correct it, suppose that an unjust amount were charged to the government?

Mr. NESBITT. We took it in comparison with what we knew of the cost of other buildings.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am asking for information. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the committee ought not to have inquired into what the Realty Company were paying. But if they did not get it in that way, they would not have saved the country three or four thousand dollars.

Mr. NESBITT. They did not get at it that way; they guessed at it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I may be allowed: up to the very close of the inquiry it appeared as if Mr. Woods had had some old contract with the city and that the department had simply paid to the Imperial Realty Company the bills which had been rendered to it. But, towards the close of the inquiry, I learned that the city, through the electrical department, presided over by Mr. Ellis, the treasurer of the city, had, quarter after quarter, rendered accounts charging the Imperial Realty Company with the quantity of electrical current at meter rate which were turned in by the Imperial Realty Company to the government and charged against the department, these accounts rendered by the municipal electrical department to the Imperial Realty Company being marked settled by the municipal department of the city and sent in to my department as vouchers. The moment that appeared, I instructed the deputy minister to say that we would take steps to cancel the contract and to recover the excess money paid by the department under these circumstances. The committee did not further investigate the matter, but the resolution was passed unanimously. I took the necessary steps by communicating with the city and demanding an account of what the Realty Company had really paid to the city and sent the matter to the Department of Justice. That is the way it finally wound up.

Mr. NESBITT. I understood that, owing to the opposition to the heating contract, that also was cancelled. I understand, however, that the heating would cost more this year than it did under the contract; and, so far as I can find out, there will not be a saving to the country owing to the government doing its own heating. And you can easily understand that any private party could get this heating done by keeping the men working longer hours—you know the agitation that constantly arises here for shorter hours for government employees. Hon. members can judge of the matter for themselves, but, I understand, as a matter of fact, that the heating this year will be more expensive than under the old contract. As to the lighting, we do not know yet, but I question seriously if there will be so much saved on the lighting contract as was supposed to be saved when we cancelled the contract. We shall know at the end of the year, no doubt, how much will be saved. I understand there is a flat rate, and, if there is, there may be a considerable saving on the lighting contract.

The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) made quite a fuss over putting in an elevator. I quite agree that the government did exactly what any sensible business man would do in his own interest under similar circumstances. Rather than run the risk of actions by the employees, they put in a new elevator, and they purposed taking it off the rent, judging by the deputy minister's letter. But I suppose this lessor objected very seriously to them doing that; so the government, instead of jumping into a lawsuit, which is easily done by any government, and generally getting the worst of it, referred the question to the Justice Department. Now what else would they do, as sensible men? I think they did perfectly right in that respect. There was one little thing that I thought entirely uncalled for on the part of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), and I may say that I was very much surprised to hear him say it. He might have said it in the heat of debate, but all the same, it was a nasty little stab. He said that the hon. the Minister of Public Works was living at the Roxborough apartments, and that the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) was also living at the Roxborough apartments. Now as a matter of fact I know that the Minister of Public Works, when these agreements were cancelled, and during all the time they were in force, was living at the Aylmer apartments, because I was living there myself. It was after then that he went to the Roxborough apartments, this fall, after they were finished. My hon. friend smiles, he is very suspicious. 'Evil be to him that evil thinks' is an old proverb that you probably all know. Now I am not so suspicious of other people as he is; and I repeat, that was a nasty, dirty little stab, to say about the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Carleton, absolutely uncalled for, because it was made in such a way that it could not be got at. I was very much surprised to hear it.

Now I want to say a word with reference to this Public Accounts Committee. I go to the Public Accounts Committee, frequently, and I have heard so many suspicions voiced at it, so many insinuations made against it, such a hue and cry about what was going on in this committee, that I have become disgusted. There never was really anything proved to justify it. They bring witnesses there from all over Canada; it must cost something, I do not know who pays for this evidence. These men come from all over Canada, and you find there a half dozen gentlemen questioning them as if they were thieves. Why, if you were to go into an ordinary court of justice the judge would not allow witnesses to be badgered, and questioned, and subjected to all sorts of insinuations. It reminds me of an ordinary division court where there are a lot of cheap lawyers trying to plug some poor devil that owes a dollar. Now we do not try to oppose these gentlemen in ordinary reason and common sense, but they don't allow the witnesses fair play. I always like to see fair play anywhere. I don't like to see half a dozen men pile on to one poor innocent fellow, that is likely scared to death when he is in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. NESBITT. The chairman of the committee is a gentleman, and he treats everybody on that committee as gentlemen.

Mr. BLAIN. Does he not defend the witness?

Mr. NESBITT. Why, if he did, they would rag at the chairman worse than they do at the witness. The only thing that I can see for the witness to do is just to tell these gentlemen: Go to some-where else. But there seems to be no ordinary reasonable usage accorded a witness, especially if he happens to be a little timid when he gets up in the Public Accounts Committee; and then my hon. friend from Carleton generally steps in and tries to protect him a little, and perhaps somebody else steps in. Then our friends opposite say that he is obstructing the work of the committee. Now, I remember distinctly when that examination was going on, and I am quite sure the Minister of Public Works was just as polite as any man could be to the members of the committee. He only tried to observe ordinary decency towards the witness, and only to that extent did he try to protect him. Now hon. members on that committee, so far as I could judge, as a spectator, at least, were really nagging the witness unnecessarily, they were trying to put words into his mouth, just as is often done in some little country court. The lawyers on that committee are trying to get from the witness just such an answer as they want: Answer that question I put to you, yes or no. They don't give the poor fellow any opportunity to answer the question in a reasonable way, and many a question cannot be answered yes or no, and answered reasonably. Now I can tell our hon. friends opposite that if they will be reasonable, we will assist them in every possible way to investigate any question in the Public Accounts Committee; because I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we are just as much interested as they are in seeing the affairs of this country carried on economically and properly.

Mr. SPROULE. I hardly think so.

Mr. NESBITT. Has the hon. gentleman ever seen me give any indication that I was not willing and anxious to see the affairs of this country conducted properly and honestly?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member is asking me a question. Personally, I have not seen him raise objections which I thought were wrong, because I have not been on the committee much lately; I am not on the committee. But over and over again, I have seen hon. members supporting the government on that committee interpose what I consider absolute obstruction for the purpose of preventing information coming out.

Mr. NESBITT. Well, it is like everything else in the world, it depends largely on how you look at it, on the point of view, as it were. I suppose the hon. gentleman means my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., when he speaks of obstruction. Now, I have never seen my hon. friend from Carleton, unreasonable, unless the members of the opposition were attacking a witness unreasonably. I believe the member for Carleton, is just as anxious to see the affairs of this country conducted economically as anybody else in this House, I have always thought so, and I still think so. Now, as to the rentals paid for these various buildings by the Public Works Department. I cannot conceive that the Department of Public Works are anxious to pay these gentlemen more for their buildings than they can make out of them in other uses. You must bear in mind the peculiar position the department is in. They must have a building fit for their purpose. It is all right for hon. members to say that the government might go on and erect a building. So they could, but there is always such a hue and cry all the time about expenses, that the department finds it better in many instances to rent these buildings instead of buying them. For instance, take that building that is earning, as they say, 18 per cent. It would not pay the government to buy that building, it is not suited for their purpose even with the repairs. It is not the sort of building the government would put up for an office building. Therefore, they would have been shortsighted in my judgment to have bought the building. I believe that the government will, as soon as they reasonably can, erect a building to accommodate all the departments. It is a great pity that there was not sufficient foresight many years ago to retain the land around where these buildings are, so as to provide sites for all the public buildings in this vicinity. But, the government had to do the best they could to provide accommodation for the department. With reference to the calculation made by the hon. member for North Ontario, I quite agree with the hon. member for the Yukon, that the hon. gentleman is wasting his time in this House. There are many concerns in the world that, I venture to say, would give him $50,000 a year if he could float corporations and bonds in the same way as he calculated the government ought to float them. He assumed that the building would cost $650,000 and he said that there was no trouble to get a mortgage on that for $500,000. I would like to see my hon. friend go out and get it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Do the government guarantee it?

Mr. NESBITT. For how long?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Ten years.

Mr. NESBITT. Part of it for five years and part for ten years. What would that do? I would like to see my hon. friend take these bonds anywhere and try to float them.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). In ten years the total rental would amount to $683,141.

Mr. NESBITT. What about the repairs and interest on the money?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The government were doing the repairs.

Mr. NESBITT. That brings me to this point: The government did the repairs when they found it was absolutely necessary to get the lease. They did not agree to do the repairs in connection with the first lease. They had to undertake to do the repairs in order to get the second lease, just as any one in this House would do if he were forced. They had to do it and we have not the slightest doubt that the government did the best they could in the interest of the country in renting these buildings and that they did not pay one dollar more for repairs than they were forced to pay by reason of their having to secure accommodation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Public Works has invoked the sympathy of the House, and it has been invoked on his behalf by other hon. gentlemen for the reason that the minister has not the opportunity of making a reply to the very forcible observations of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe). My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is too old a parliamentarian not to know that he could have asked any one of his friends who have spoken here this evening to move the adjournment of the debate and enable him to answer my hon. friend from North Ontario if he had any answer to make. He knows that perfectly well, and he cannot deny it now. Therefore, it was rather idle to appeal to the sympathy of the House on that account when he might, in five minutes, by asking one of his colleagues to move the adjournment of the debate, have obtained the right to make any answer that he saw fit. Further than that, in so far as I am concerned, I will not object to his making any answer that he has to make at this moment to my hon. friend from North Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) for his courtesy, and after the other hon. gentlemen get through I will make a general answer to what has been said.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, my hon. friend can take the alternative; he may move the adjournment of the debate, or so far as I am concerned I have no objection at all to his answering my hon. friend from North Ontario at once; but I hope he will extend the same courtesy to some hon. gentleman on this side of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) opened the debate by simply confining his attention to one building out of a number. I followed my hon. friend and not knowing then what would be said with reference to other buildings I did refer to them. Now, then, it seems to me that a fair way to do would be that after other hon. gentlemen get through I may be allowed to reply.

Mr. LENNOX. Oh, no.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman afraid to allow me to reply?

Mr. LENNOX. I am not afraid of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) in any way, but I want to have a fair understanding. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) offers to allow the hon. minister an opportunity to speak now if he thinks fit, and that is a very great concession. The minister knew perfectly well the line of argument that was going to be taken. He anticipated the argument that was taken this afternoon, and if he has anything to say, now is the time for him to say it. Speaking for myself as the minister addresses me, I say that I am not afraid of anyhing which he can do, and I shall have a word or two to say myself before the debate closes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), saying to me or towards me, all that he desires to say, and later on, if the House will accord me the courtesy to make a reply, I shall be very glad. If the House should decline to do that, well and good; I would be quite willing that the hon. member for Peel, who moved the amendment, should have an opportunity of speaking in reply to me if he desires.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say, with the permission of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that I stated to the House that the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), would follow with some other evidence of the extravagance of the government and the hon. gentleman dealt with it before he sat down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not deal at all with some features in connection with the lighting contract which were specially brought out by the hon. member for North Ontario.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do it now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad to when hon. gentlemen get through.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, if the minister does not avail himself of the opportunity that I now present to him to give his answer, I shall continue my remarks. The opportunity still exists, because all he needs to do is to get some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not require the consent of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly not, and he required no consent all this evening. While this appeal has been made on his behalf, he has required no consent and he knew that perfectly well. I desire just to say one or two words, in the first place, in reply to the very temperate observations which have been made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). He will permit me to say that if I had not been convinced before of the absolute inefficiency of this government, his own speech would give me the most ample demonstration. What does my hon. friend say? He says that this building—taking what is called the Regal building in the first instance—was bought for $47,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he does not. The hon. member for North Oxford admitted nothing of the kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Public Works is very prone to contradict when he ought not to contradict. I listened very attentively to the hon. member for North Oxford and he mentioned the sum of $47,500 in my hearing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He mentioned what the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), had said. The hon. member for North Oxford will verify that I am sure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the hon. member for North Oxford to base his argument on the price of this building at the figure of $47,500.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). And $25,000 for repairs added to it.

Mr. NESBITT. I did say that hon. members had said that the building had cost $47,000 and $25,000 for repairs and I went on to say that that was not necessarily the value of the building.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that perfectly and I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the hon. member for North Oxford based his argument upon the assumption that this building had been purchased for $47,500. He said that, even so, it was a good thing for the government to enter into the contract which they had entered into for the rental of the building. He supposed that the repairs had cost $25,000. My hon. friend from Peel places them at $30,000, and he said that the building as it stands to-day could not have cost more than $80,000, which would assume the outside cost of repairs at $32,500. According to the statement of my hon. friend from Peel, which has not been contradicted, the government is paying for that building, after deducting taxes and insurance, a rental of $14,480 every year, so that in six years the government will have paid out in rental more than the actual cost of the building to-day. And yet the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), thinks that is good business. He says the government could not have afforded to buy the building, while in the same breath he tells us that the addition of $30,000 worth of improvements and repairs would probably add $50,000 to the value of that building, which would bring its value approximately to $100,000. Under those circumstances will any sensible man tell me that it is good business not to buy that building, but to go on paying this large rental, so that in the short term of six years, the government will have paid more than it would cost them to buy the building and put the repairs upon it.

Mr. NESBITT. What about the repairs in the interval?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would simply answer that question by saying: Well, what about them? Suppose they would amount to $15,000, would the hon. member still think it good business to continue paying this enormous rental? Does he realize, assuming the cost of that building to be $80,000, that the rental is 18 per cent of the cost of the building? If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) is correct that the $30,000 worth of repairs and improvements added $50,000 to the value, the government are still paying 15 per cent on the value of that building to-day, and the hon. gentleman thinks that the government, with unlimited resources at its disposal, should enter into a number of contracts of that kind with real estate owners around the city of Ottawa. With all deference to his judgment as a business man I would not be inclined to accept his view, and I venture the statement that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) had a business matter of this kind to deal with out of his own resources he would not think of pursuing the course which the Minister of Public Works has pursued in this instance. I know too well the business experience and ability of the hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) to think for a moment that he would think of doing such a thing.

Now, let us look at one or two other illustrations of the absolute inefficiency of this government in connection with all these rentals. During the past ten years we know that the government have been thoroughly aware that as time went on the existing departmental buildings would not afford the necessary accommodation for the needs of the public service. What has the government been doing in all these years? Some years ago they purchased a huge block of land on McKenzie avenue with the idea of erecting a great departmental building which would afford accommodation for the transaction of the business of this country, and they invited the architects of Canada to send in plans, but up to the present day absolutely nothing has been done except to expropriate the land and leave it there idle, while they are paying rentals of 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, or even 30 per cent on the values, to real estate owners in this city. Will the hon. gentleman from North Oxford suggest that that is a striking illustration of the business efficiency of this government? According to the sworn evidence of one of the assessors of the city of Ottawa, the Woods building and the Canadian building together cost about $240,000 outside of the land.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend believe that?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will come in a moment to something which the Minister of Public Works will believe, and as I am making this speech I propose to make it in my own way. Now, so far as the Woods building is concerned the figures with regard to it, according to the sworn evidence of that assessor, were taken from the building account of the man who erected the building. That is the evidence as I heard it quoted to-night, but I have not yet verified it myself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong. I think the witness said he could not say whether he saw the books or not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He said he saw the books.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think he said he did not see them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, until the minister is absolutely sure about it he had better not interrupt me. At all events the assessor gave the valuation at about $240,000. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) spoke also of $62,000 (in round figures) worth of repairs and improvements which have been paid for by the government. I do not know whether some of this $62,000 is or is not included in the total cost of $240,000, but I will give the Minister of Public Works the benefit of the doubt, and I will say it is not included and therefore I will fix the total cost of that property at $302,000. What rental is the government paying to-day? It is paying a net rental of $68,000 a year in addition to lighting and heating and elevator service and taxes. A lease for five years has been entered into for both these buildings, and five years rental at $68,000 a year amounts to $340,000, so that if the government of Canada instead of paying that remarkably excessive and exorbitant rental of $68,000 for five years had themselves erected the building, they would own the building at the expiry of the five years' lease and have $40,000 besides. But, the Minister of Public Works thinks there is something wrong with the computation I have made. Well, I will take the evidence of his own officer. By the way, I find that the hon. minister has not departed from his usual custom. He is quite as inaccurate as usual in the correction he made. I find on page 4 of the evidence:

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has the hon. gentleman the printed copy or the typewritten copy?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have the printed copy, so plain that any one who runs can read it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The reason I asked the hon. gentleman is that page 4 of my evidence does not refer to this matter at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will read it:

Q. I asked you about your assessment and you said $110,000?—A. So it is, but that is not an assessment I made.

Q. What is the assessment you made?—A. I told you before I do not remember.

Q. Where did you get $110,000?—A. After consulting Mr. Woods and looking at his book we reduced the building to $110,000.

I had not verified the evidence; I was depending altogether on the quotation which my hon. friend from North Ontario had made from it; but I find that this is only another instance in which my hon. friend from North Ontario was right and the hon. Minister of Public Works was wrong. Now, the hon. minister disputes that valuation, although he pays, so far as the Woods building——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me? With regard to the Canadian building, Mr. Duffy, the assessor, speaks as follows.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The Woods building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the Canadian is the most important.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend has any question to ask me, I will allow him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend permit me to read that?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I will not. I will permit my hon. friend to ask me any question, but I will not allow him to introduce a speech into mine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does it relate to the Woods building, which we are discussing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the Canadian building.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The controversy between my hon. friend and myself related to the Woods building, and I expressly and definitely limited my statement to that, and excluded the Canadian building. Therefore I am not going to have any side issue with reference to the Canadian building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not my hon. friend a moment ago give a valuation of both buildings and lump them together?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did, but I said at the same time, so far as the Woods building was concerned, that the valuation was based on the statement of the assessor, who had examined the books. My hon. friend seems to be curiously obtuse to-night; he is not usually so obtuse. Every hon. gentleman in this House knows that I referred in that regard to the Woods building, and to the Woods building alone. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works finds fault with that, although it is based upon the statement of the man who erected that building, and who ought to know the value of it, and who had the assessment reduced after the assessor had examined the books containing a statement of the cost of the building. That is not true of the Canadian building, and I never said it was. I said, so far as the Canadian building was concerned, that the valuation to which I alluded represented the best judgment of the assessor, according to his sworn evidence. But we will come to something more—not the cost of the building, but the value of the building according to the sworn statement of an officer of the department over which my hon. friend presides. That statement is to be found on page 189 of the evidence:

Q. Mr. Ewart, have you ever made a valuation of this building?—A. That is the Woods building?

Q. Yes?—A. Which building, the Woods building?

Q. The Woods building?—A. Yes, I valued the militia building at $196,380.

Q. And when?—A. Well, I valued a part of it, you know, away back in 1903, that was when I reported, when I first went over the building, and I valued it at 20 cents per cubic foot, and then you take the whole building, you know, 981,900 cubic feet, which, at 20 cents, makes $196,380.

Q. And that is your valuation down to the present time?—A. Well, I would say that is what the building would cost ready to be occupied.

Q. Would that include the improvements put on it by the government?—A. It would include the partitions and work of that kind.

Q. And what about the Canadian building? A. I valued that at $287,631.

Q. When was that valuation made?—A. That one was made lately. I valued it at the same rate per foot; I consider that style of building is just about the same.

We are not depending here upon the assessors. We are depending upon the sworn evidence of the chief architect of the department, an expert in such matters; and if you add together the total valuations which he places upon these buildings, you find that they amount to $484,000. Now, let us look for a moment at the rentals. These rentals, as I have already said, are exclusive of light, heating, elevator service, and taxes, which the government pays besides. Here you have a net rental of $68,000 upon a valuation fixed by the chief architect of the department at $484,000, or a rental of approximately 14 per cent upon the actual valuation of the buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend think that the land should not be included?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have left out the land, for the reason that I am coming to something else, and that is this; in seven years the rentals upon these two buildings will amount to the entire sum of $484,000 or thereabouts; so that at the end of seven years of payment of this net rental of $68,000 the government will have repaid to the owners of these buildings all that they cost, and will continue for a further indefinite period of seven or fourteen or twenty-one years, as long as this arrangement goes on, to hand over at every consecutive period of seven years the entire cost of these buildings to these landlords. Does my hon. friend from North Oxford or any other hon. member of this House say that the government of Canada, with all this land expropriated in the city of Ottawa and ready to be built upon, is pursuing a wise and businesslike course in paying out rentals of that character? I venture to say that the argument made by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) and my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), with great force and ability, has not been met in the slightest degree by any hon. gentleman opposite. Why, the very item of light which was gone into by my hon. friend from North Ontario, shows in striking degree the utter ineptitude and inefficiency of the administration of public works. Listen to the resolution which was proposed in the Public Accounts Committee and carried unanimously—assented by every member of that committee and no doubt also by the Minister of Public Works himself:—

Moved by Mr. Sharpe, seconded by Mr. Carvell, that whereas the expense to the government during the last year for lighting the Woods and Canadian buildings amounted to $9,465.91, paid to the Imperial Realty Company, which company is not an electrical lighting company; and whereas the city of Ottawa has a standard schedule of prices whereby the lighting would cost only $5,040 or less, thereby affecting an annual saving to the country of $4,425.91 or more; therefore, this committee desires to urge upon the Minister of Public Works and the government the desirability of cancelling the present arrangement and recovering the excess unjustly paid to the Imperial Realty Company, and giving the city of Ottawa or some other company the contract at lower rates; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Minister of Public Works.

I do not believe it has ever fallen to the lot of any minister of the Crown in Canada to receive a rebuke of that kind from his own party following. But what was the attitude of the hon. gentleman, and his followers when my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) was endeavouring to get at the facts upon which that resolution was founded? Their attitude in the Public Accounts Committee was this, that it was absolutely no concern of the people of this country what the Imperial Realty Company were paying for that light for which they were charging the people $9,000 and upwards. I have the words under my hand. It is none of our business, said an hon. member of that committee, to make any inquiry into that. The Imperial Realty Company can get that lighting done at any price they may see fit by the city of Ottawa, and the only thing that remains for the people of Canada is to hand over to them by quarterly payments the sum of $9,000 and upwards per year. The Minister of Public Works took credit, and hon. gentlemen on his behalf took credit, for the cancellation of that contract after the resolution had passed. Why it would have been absolutely impossible for him to have taken any other course.

But when there was a municipal electric light company carrying on business in Ottawa, and a private electric light company as well, how was it that the minister year after year permitted this country to pay out the sum of $4,000 and upwards in excess of what it should have paid, when a simple inquiry through the telephone, as my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Sharpe) has said, would have elucidated the fact that the government were paying every year $4,000 too much.

Take the whole combination of circumstances placed before the House and the country by the debate to-day, and we get a fair, but perhaps after all only an imperfect idea of the manner in which the public revenues of Canada are being squandered, not only in the Department of Public Works, but there is good reason to believe in certain other departments of the government.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). I have no intention to discuss the general question as it has been discussed by the several hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate, but I desire very briefly to examine some of the statements made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), and I have a very special reason for criticising the attitude of my hon. friend and the basis on which he founded the very emphatic and dogmatic statements he made this afternoon. I followed my hon. friend attentively, and I took down notes, which I think he will endorse. My hon. friend said that the cost of this building to the owner, when he purchased it from the Y. M. C. A. was $47,500. This was a private transaction between private parties, and it is very difficult for me to understand how the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) could state so very definitely what this building cost its present owner. The second statement he made was that the improvements put upon this building to make it suitable for the department cost $32,500, and he gave the total cost to the present owners as $80,000, on which he calculated the rental paid by the department was equal to 18 per cent. He made a deduction on the general rent received of $16,095, for taxes, insurance and other things which had to be paid by the owner, which brought the net rent to $14,485; and, dividing the sum of $80,000 by $14,485, he drew the conclusion that the department was paying in rent 18 per cent of the total value of this property. That statement was endorsed by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) and again by the leader of the opposition, and I have a very special reason for bringing this matter to the attention of these hon. gentlemen.

In connection with the position taken by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), I submit that no question has ever been raised about the lease of that property to the government, no complaint of any description has ever been made to any department of this government, and no opportunity has been given, nor has any hon. member availed himself at any time of any opportunity to bring this matter to the consideration of any select committee of this House. And yet, upon an absolutely private contract to purchase property by a respectable, intelligent and worthy citizen of Ottawa, hon. members opposite base positive statements that the building cost so much and that the department is paying 18 per cent annually on that value. I am personally friendly, and have been very closely acquainted for years with the owner of the Regal block. I did not know this afternoon what the building cost him; I did not know what rents he was collecting; I did not know the nature of his contract. But, being closely allied with him for years, I did know that he was the owner of the property that he had been negotiating with the government with a view to their utilizing it, and that he had arrived at a definite agreement with the government on that subject. When I heard the mover of this resolution (Mr. Blain) state positively, dogmatically, that he knew what this property had cost this private individual, and knew, also, the cost of the improvements put upon it by this individual, I questioned very much the accuracy of the statements. I question them more now since having taken the opportunity, during the afternoon recess, to approach my friend and acquaint him with what had been stated here in the House. And I will give the statement made by this gentleman on the subject. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has thought proper to expose in this House this gentleman's business, and has attempted to show that he had entered into an extortionate agreement with this government and had demanded from them, by some influence, an unfair rental. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has taken a special interest in the remarks of the hon. member for Peel. May I suggest to the hon. gentleman he should seek to bring this matter to the consideration of the proper committee of this House. If he did this he would be sure of the basis of his statements of facts. Now, against the public statement of the hon. member for Peel, let me put the statement of the owner of this building. And let me say that I would not have discussed this matter with the gentleman, nor would I have taken the responsibility of saying a word in his defence if he had not said: You are quite at liberty to inform the House of Commons that I am ready to be a witness before the committee, and to give all the facts in connection with the building. Now, the hon. member for Peel says that the building cost $47,500. The owner says, and is ready to make the statement on oath, that it cost $50,000. The hon. member for Peel says that the improvements placed on the property to make it satisfactory for the use of the department cost $32,500. The gentleman who placed these improvements there and owns them says they cost him $90,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Hon. gentlemen smile. Well, they have the opportunity to defend any position they take before the proper tribunal, and with the owner under oath to tell the truth about the matter. The total cost of the property, said the hon. member for Peel, was $80,000; the total cost of the property, says the owner, was $140,000. The net rent for this property collected by the owner, says the hon. member for Peel, is $14,485. The owner, who understands exactly what insurance premiums and taxes he has to pay, says that the net rent is $13,966. So, as against the conclusion of the hon. member for Peel, we have to divide $140,000 by $13,966; and, instead of getting a proportion of payment by the government of 18 per cent, we find it is 9·9 per cent. I know by acquaintance and association that this gentleman is an honest, reliable, truthful citizen, and, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to believe what he says and am quite ready that my hon. friend from Peel should call upon this gentleman to prove his case.

Another very important statement that my hon. friend made was that this man procured this agreement through middlemen? Will he tell me who they are?

Mr. BLAIN. I never made any such statement. What I said was that the government were aware that this property was in the market for sale, and that the price paid for it was $47,500, which could be proved; and I said it would have been better for the government to invest some of their surplus in buying such a property as this rather than pay the enormous rent they are paying.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I am glad to take my hon. friend's word on the point. I thought I had taken notes correctly, and that he had repeatedly said that no doubt the middlemen had profited by these transactions. But I take his word, for I am bound to say that I know, just as the minister said,—and this also I have on the authority of the owner of this property—that the owner negotiated his own agreement personally and himself entered into the contract with the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman state that Dr. Hanna is the sole owner of that property?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I did not say so

Mr. BLAIN. Does he know who are his associates?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I do. And will my hon. friend inform the House who they are?

Mr. BLAIN. Let the hon. gentleman give the names; he states that he knows who they are.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend has asked me whether any one is associated with Dr. Hanna. I believe there is to a very small extent; but I can say that only one other man and himself together own that property.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. gentleman give the name?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I know his relation, but I do not know the name. Will the hon. gentleman dispute that?

Mr. BLAIN. I am not disputing; I am asking a question.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My information is that one other man and Dr. Hanna own the property.

Mr. BLAIN. Did my hon. friend ask Dr. Hanna, in gathering this information, who the other gentleman was?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I did.

Mr. BLAIN. Did he state?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I have said that I know the relation, but I do not know the name. My hon. friend has an easy opportunity of knowing who he is. All he has to do is to take the proper course and bring this gentleman before the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Bring the gentlemen who sold the property, and they will swear that they sold it for $47,500.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Of course it would be better to give these gentlemen an opportunity to be present. Another statement made by the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) this afternoon was that the owners of this property who made this contract were political friends of the present government.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Well, then my ears have deceived me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I doubt if the hon. gentleman spoke at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I told the truth, and that is what the hon. gentleman did not do—I am not referring to my hon. friend from Nanaimo.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Well, I dare say there was some reason for the minister this afternoon denying positively that any middleman who had anything to do with this agreement, and that the men associated with it were not, to his knowledge, supporters of the Liberal party. Now, there must have been some reason for the minister making that emphatic statement. I desire to say that I have known this gentleman for many years, and as his friend I repeat that he has never in his life been associated with any political party. It is impossible for any individual in Ottawa to say that this gentleman has, to his knowledge, been associated in any degree, so far as I know, with any political party in this country.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works stated that his information was that this gentleman belonged to the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Well, the Minister of Public Works may have information that I do not possess. But I dispute that the hon. gentleman opposite had any sound reason or basis for the very positive statement he made this afternoon. No gentleman could possibly be authorized to stand up in this House and say to a dollar what another man paid for his property; no responsible member in this House could possibly state that a certain amount of money was spent on improvements on any personal property. I was astounded at the positive statements he made with regard to what was only a private transaction by a private citizen. Now, I repeat that the opportunity is presented to my hon. friend to call up these people before the proper committee and give them an opportunity to defend themselves. I think the opposition are intituled to make a thorough inquiry into these expenditures, that is what the country expects them to do. But I submit that they are too indiscriminate in their methods, they magnify cases out of all proportion, and in consequence of their excesses, it has become a disgraceful thing for an honest citizen to do business with this government and with this country, without having his name branded as a thief and a robber. There may be cases when there is reason to think that everything has not been done in the interests of the public, but that is a different thing from the indiscriminating manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite paint every thing black with a big brush. I believe every statement that this gentleman made, and the arguments upon which we are asked to censure against this government are as fallacious as they can possibly be.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand my hon. friend to state that the amount paid by Dr. Hanna and his associates for the property purchased from the Young Men's Christian Association, exceeds $47,500?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I have given the figures, $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Now as to the question of improvements, I would like to have that made clear.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). $90,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to state that Dr. Hanna and his associates, after they purchased the property, and before they leased it to the government, expended $90,000 upon it?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). That is the statement of my friend, and he is prepared to swear to it before a proper committee, and that the taxes carried by this government, instead of being $14,000 were $13,966, and that the interest earned is 9·9 instead of 18 per cent. Now, that is an example of the arguments upon which we are asked to pass this resolution—no opportunity for this private citizen to know anything about it, without the individual being acquainted with the transactions.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that I will give Dr. Hanna and his associates an opportunity of making this statement under oath, and then we will deal with this matter further.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon friend is asking this House to pass a resolution of censure upon this government for making payments that he admits now he has not taken the trouble to inquire into.

Mr. BLAIN. I admit nothing of the kind. I will be prepared, when an opportunity is given, to show where my information came from, and I will then leave the House to judge whether my information is correct.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Blain).

Amendment (Mr. Blain) negatived motion agreed to and House went into committee of supply.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to ask the Minister of Public Works if he can furnish the committee with a statement respecting the clock purchased by his department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I have the information from the chief architect which I shall gladly send to my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like my hon. friend to put it on 'Hansard,'

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is as follows:

September 9, 1908.

C. G. Schulze, Esq.,
Halifax, N.S.

In confirmation of my telegram of this morning, your tender of the 25th ultimo to supply an eight-day striking tower clock for the public building at Lunenburg, installed complete and in first-class working order and in strict conformity with the description attached to your tender for the sum of $1,800 is hereby accepted.

Please put this work in hand at once and have the clock delivered with the least possible delay, and let me know how soon you expect to have it delivered so that any carpenter work which may be required in connection with it may be put in hand in time to avoid any delay.

I should be glad if you would let me know what blacksmith work will be necessary in connection with the installation of this clock.

(Sgd.) CHIEF ARCHITECT.

Ottawa, January 20, 1911.

Memorandum re tower clock, public building, Lunenburg, N.S.

In June, 1908, Mr. C. G. Schulze of Halifax, Nova Scotia, was requested to submit a tender for supplying and installing a suitable striking tower clock equal to the best style of clock made by the firm of J. Smith & Sons of Derby, England. The clock, including an 800 pound bell, to be fitted up in the building complete with the exception of the necessary carpenter work, &c., which work would be done at the expense of the department.

In August, 1908, Mr. Schulze submitted a tender amounting to $2,420 for a tower clock, and he was informed that the clock offered was too expensive and that judging from the prices previously paid by this department a suitable clock should be obtained for about $1,600. He was asked to submit a specification for a striking clock fitted up complete for the sum named, $1,600.

In September, 1908, Mr. Schulze's tender and specification to supply and fit up a striking clock for the sum of $1,600 was received. The specification of this clock was satisfactory, and Mr. Schulze's tender of $1,600 was accepted, exclusive of the necessary carpentry, &c.

The carpenter work, &c., consisted of the building of a floor in the tower on which to set the clock, the preparation of a platform on which to set the clock, the cutting of openings in floors and the building of boxes for the clock weights, the repairing and making good of all damage to plaster work, wood work, painting, &c., and in order to have this properly carried out an officer of this department was sent from Halifax to Lunenburg to point out to Mr. Hedley N. Pyke what had to be done and to obtain his tender for this work. Mr. Pyke submitted a tender amounting to $240, which price was considered reasonable and the work was awarded accordingly.

The cost of carpenter work in connection with the installing of tower clock at the Antigonish public building was $307.

The cost of carpenter work in connection with the installing of tower clock at the Canso public building was $270.

I have to state that the size of dials of a tower clock have considerable to do with the cost of same, as the machinery to drive the hands on a large dial has to be more powerful than that for a smaller clock.

The Canso tower clock cost $1,250, and the dials of that clock are 4 feet in diameter.

The dials of the Lunenburg clock are about 5 feet 6 inches.

Public works chargeable to income—Ottawa printing bureau—New boilers, &c., $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote to make provision for the procuring and installation of new boilers, a new smoke stack and increasing the height of the chimney at the government printing bureau. The total estimated cost is $11,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Why does the minister only ask for $10,000, when the estimated cost is $11,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I expect that the chief architect expects to spend $1,000 before the 31st March. He can do that out of the vote for the current year and allow the other $9,000 to lapse.

Mr. CROCKET. We are voting $10,000 for this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. These boilers are very much needed.

Mr. CROCKET. Are these to replace old boilers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. We voted a similar amount last year for the same purpose. If it was needed, why was it not spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only answer I can give is that it was felt possibly that we might put off the work for another year.

Mr. CROCKET. Have tenders been called or will they be called for these boilers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have not been yet.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that it is the intention of the government to erect a new printing bureau. Is that a fact?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been some talk of it. I think that my hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy), has the matter under consideration, but even if that were done, it would be necessary to keep the present building in an efficient and safe condition, because the new building would take considerable time to erect.

Mr. SPROULE. This has the same defect which many of these items indicate; that it is voted year after year. It could not have been urgently required last year or otherwise I assume it would have been spent. The fact that it was voted last year and not spent, is evidence that it is not wanted. We have it this year again, and we do not know but what the same thing may occur next year. It is a small amount, but we find the same thing with regard to other public works, such as harbours, rivers and public buildings. I do not think that it indicates good business management, because if it is urgently needed and we vote the money, it ought to be spent and if it is not needed, it should not be in the estimates.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Knowing something about machinery, I cannot help wondering how it is that the boilers are all played out at once, and that it is absolutely necessary to put in $10,000 worth of boilers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that the boilers which are now there, were put in when the building was erected many years ago.

Mr. CROCKET. At what cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract for the construction of the building was made in 1887, and the boilers which are in the building were put there at that time. The chief architect says that the four boilers require replacing. They are getting in pretty bad condition, and the reason that new boilers have not been put in during the present year is that the chief architect let the matter run on supposing that the old ones would do for a year longer, but he now feels that they must be replaced.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the capacity of the boilers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect cannot say without making inquiries as to the horse-power.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Could the minister tell us what the old boilers cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I presume that they were put in as a part of the contract for the building away back in 1887. No doubt by looking up the old accounts the cost could be easily arrived at.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That amounts to something about boilers. I cannot help feeling that $10,000 for four boilers bricked is an enormous sum to pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes a new smoke stack, and raising the chimney.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That amounts to very little.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the estimate for the boilers?

Mr. DANIEL. I presume that the chief architect is not a boiler inspector, and that he relies on some other official for his recommendation. Has the minister the report of the boiler inspector, and when was it made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have a regular inspector of boilers who reports periodically, and I understand it is about three months' since his report was made.

Mr. MARSHALL. How long have the present boilers been in use?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Since 1887.

Mr. MARSHALL. What size are they?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret I have not the report of the boiler inspector here.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is strange the minister should ask for $10,000 to purchase boilers, and that he has no idea what kind of boilers he is going to purchase. Will the minister ask for tenders for these boilers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My intention is to ask for tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the minister has not the information, and it is near one o'clock the item had better stand, and the committee rise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why not continue until one o'clock?

Mr. SPROULE. The peculiar obstinacy of the minister's nature will get him into trouble if he should insist on going on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We could do quite a lot of business in 20 minutes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. At a quarter to twelve last night the Prime Minister told us that it was too late to discuss such an important matter as the duty on farm implements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not consulted.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister did not object ; he showed passive acquiescence.

Mr. CROTHERS. No time will be saved by going on at this late hour ; you will not pass an item to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I recognize the capacity of my hon. friends opposite to talk, and I, therefore, move that the committee rise.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Pugsley, House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. Wednesday.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—QUORUM.

Mr. MILLER moved:

That a quorum of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce be reduced from 21 to 15 members in accordance with the recommendations of the first report of the said committee.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter might be allowed to remain over for a day. There should be some reason given for this proposal. What is the number of that committee ?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know exactly, but I think there must be 70 or 80 members.

Mr. FOSTER. Fifteen would be a mighty small quorum.

Mr. MILLER. I am willing to let it stand till to-morrow.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What are the reasons for the reduction of the quorum ?

Mr. MILLER. Quite a number of committees meet in the morning of which members of the Banking and Commerce Committee are also members. This morning we had sittings of the Agricultural Committee, the Public Accounts Committee, the Banking and Commerce Committee, and the Printing Committee. We are in the habit of calling the Banking and Commerce Committee at half past ten o'clock, while most of the committees meet at eleven, and sometimes we are able to get through a good deal of business in the 30 minutes before the other committees meet. In the Banking and Commerce Committee, as I suppose in some other committees, we do not have a large attendance and it seems to be more difficult to get the members together at half past ten than at eleven o'clock. Often the committee would have to be dismissed or else do business without a quorum. The matter was fully discussed this morning before rather a large attendance of the committee and it was the unanimous opinion that the quorum might be reduced.

BILLS RELATING TO TRADE, QUESTION OF ORDER.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question of order was raised yesterday upon the introduction of a Bill by the hon. member for Rainy River, entitled: 'An Act to amend the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act.' The hon. member for East Grey questioned the propriety of proceeding with the measure without the principle of the same having been first submitted to a Committee of the Whole House, by virtue of Rule No. 50. This Rule reads as follows:—

50. No Bill relating to trade, or the alteration of the laws concerning trade, is to be brought into the House, until the proposition shall have been first considered in a Committee of the Whole House, and agreed unto by the House.

Not having had an opportunity of perusing the Bill itself, I could only judge from the observations made by the hon. member for Rainy River in introducing his Bill, as to its scope and intent. In the meantime I requested that the Bill should stand until I could look into the point raised.

The hon. member for Rainy River having submitted his draft of the Bill to me, I find that it amends Chap. 16 of the Statutes of 1907 in some material particulars: that it relates to trade in electric and mechanical power is manifest. Clause 4 of the Bill repeals section 5 of the original Act, and provides regulations as to methods of distribution and the hours of service. Subsection 3 of clause 4 makes it compulsory for licensees under the Act to supply power upon the request of any municipal corporation or of any other bona fide applicant for such power.

I, therefore, rule that the said Bill does relate to trade as contemplated by Rule 50 and can only be introduced after having been first considered in Committee of the Whole House.

FISHERY AGREEMENT AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg to lay on the table of the House the regulations and the minutes of the agreement reached between this country and the United States in reference to the fisheries in contiguous waters.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that printed?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that it should be.

Mr. BRODEUR. Very well, I move that Rule 74 be suspended and that these documents be printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. As we do not want to have too many printed documents to refer to, it seems to me that something more might be included in the papers which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has brought down, so that we would have the whole matter under our hand. The first suggestion I have to make is that, as the amended sections of the fishery regulations are given, it would be useful to have with them the present sections, so that we could tell at a glance what alterations have been made. Then, I think the protocols might be included so as to give us a concise and ready reference.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think most of the regulations are in the protocol itself, but for the sake of intelligent discussion, I think it would be well to have all the regulations included, and I will bring them down to-morrow.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of the Interior why the number of immigrants entering the country each month are not published in the 'Canada Gazette' at the end of the month in accordance with a resolution passed on the 5th of May, 1887, which will be found in the Journals of the House for that year, at page 92. I do not know that it has ever been changed.

Mr. OLIVER. I will have to ask my hon. friend to allow me to postpone my answer until to-morrow.

2. What assistance, if any, did the government or Department of Marine and Fisheries render in getting the said schooner off or in towing her to Lunenburg?
3. What expense, if any, in that connection did the government or department incur?
4. What amount, if any, did the government pay for such purpose, and to whom?
5. Was the grounding of said schooner attributed by the captain or owners to any defect in the aids to navigation? If so, to which?
6. Was an inquiry held into the cause of the grounding of said vessel? If so, by whom and with what result?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. Yes.
2. None. The vessel was reported to be a total loss.
3 and 4. The department paid to Mr. Joseph Ed. Noel $87.75 for board and lodging of wrecked crew.
5. Yes. A statement was made that Entry island lighthouse was not in operation at the time of the accident. As a matter of fact the lighthouse was being removed to a new site and was temporarily replaced by a less powerful light.
6. No inquiry was held.

IMPORTS OF BRICKS, TILES, &c.

Mr. MADDIN:

1. What amount of bricks, tiles, clays and manufactures of same was imported into Canada during the calendar years of 1909 and 1910, from the United Kingdom and the United States respectively?

2. What amount of these goods during 1909 and 1910 was entered at Montreal, Halifax and Sydney, respectively?

3. What is the present duty on fire bricks?

3. Fire bricks, of a class or kind not made in Canada, are free of duty. Other fire bricks are dutiable at the rate of 12½ per cent, under the British Preferential Tariff, and at the rate of 22½ per cent under the 'General Tariff.'

POSTAGE ON PERIODICALS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

Does the government collect any extra postage on the 'Review of Reviews,' an American monthly magazine, entering Canada from the United States? If not, why not?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The said publication enters the Canadian mails under regulations applicable to all United States publications.

MUTILATED MAIL MATTER.

* Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. Is the government aware that great quantities of mail matter are said to be daily mutilated, contents of letters exposed, and parts of envelopes torn off so as to render the mail matter open to inspection, and in many instances the documents and correspondence torn or destroyed?

2. What action, if any, has the government taken to investigate the careless handling of mail matter?

3. Has the government made any effort to use other means in small post offices than tying letters together with string for outside points? If not, why not?

4. Has the government made inquiry into the numerous complaints received by them within the past six months relating to the carriage and delivery of mails? If so, what are some of the improvements made regarding same?

5. What reasons, if any, are given for mail matter between Kingston and Ottawa requiring days to make the trip?

6. Has any investigation been made regarding said delays? If so, who is responsible for them, and what action has the government taken to remedy same?

7. What is the usual length of time that letters sent to the Dead Letter Office are held before returning them to the sender, and is it not possible to return them more promptly to the owner?

8. Are registered letters handled under different instructions than ordinary letters? If so, what is the nature of said instructions?

9. What arrangements has the government made with certain newspapers and corporations whereby said papers and corporations can have printed on their envelopes 'Postage paid in cash, by order of Post Office Department?

10. How are such envelopes furnished, and if by the government, what is the charge per thousand, what inspection is made in the general use of said envelopes, and how many firms and papers in Canada use these stamps?

11. Has the Atlantic mail contract been renewed? If so, to whom is the contract let, and what are the general terms of the said contract?

Mr. MURPHY.

12 What position does W. J. Johnston hold under the government, and what are his duties?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. No, but at times complaint has been made as to the damaged condition of mail matter, and upon investigation it is generally found that such damage is occasioned in part by the natural wear and tear incident to the various handlings to which mail matter is necessarily subject, and to the fact that paper used in the manufacture of covers in which such matter is inclosed is of inferior quality, and not sufficiently strong to resist the ordinary friction and pressure which it must sustain by coming in contact with other mail matter during course of post.

2. Whenever complaint is made of the careless handling of mail matter the same is at once carefully inquired into with a view to fixing responsibility and preventing a recurrence.

3. No practical substitute for string has yet been devised for tieing packages of letters.

4. All complaints respecting carriage and delivery of mails are carefully investigated, and when it is ascertained that the irregularities complained of could properly be charged against the postal service, such steps as are possible in order to prevent a recurrence are taken.

5 and 6. The department is not aware that other than the schedule time is required for the transmission of mail matter between Kingston and Ottawa.

7. There is no specified time, the instructions being that all letters sent to the Dead Letter Office are to be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

8. Yes. Registered letters are letters for which a receipt is given to the sender at the post office at which they are handed in, and for which a receipt is taken before delivery. A record is also kept at each of the post offices and railway post offices through which such letters pass.

9 and 10. No such arrangements have been made. In order to facilitate the posting and despatch of third-class matter mailed in large quantities the postmasters of city offices may, on prepayment of postage in cash, accept printed matter such as circulars and catalogues under conditions as set forth in section 78 of the Official Postal Guide.

11. This question refers to matters relating to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

12. Financial superintendent, to whom is assigned the supervision and inspection of the accounts of the city and semi-staff post offices, issuing necessary instructions to the officers employed therein, and the performance of such other duties of a financial nature as the Postmaster General may designate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a portion not answered because it related to another department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. About the Atlantic mail contract. I will call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to that contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that that portion be allowed to stand.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, and I will call the attention of my hon. colleague to it.

FACTORIES FOR EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. How many factories for the manufacture of explosives are there in Canada, and where are they situated?
2. How many people are employed therein?
3. What is the total capital employed in the industry?
4. What number of deaths have been caused by explosion in such factories since 1896?
5. What is the number of people who have been injured during same period by the same cause?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This department has, through inquiry, become aware of the existence of 23 factories in Canada in which explosives are manufactured. The following list shows the locations of these plants and the explosives manufactured:

B. C. Powder Co	North Arm, Burrard Inlet, B.C	Dynamite.
Giant Powder Co	Telegraph Bay	Dynamite.
Dominion Arsenal at Quebec.

2. This department has no record of the number of people employed.
3. This information is not on record in the Mines Department.
4. While the department has no official record of the number of deaths caused by explosion in these factories since 1896, it is known that at least 25 persons were killed in explosions at four plants in 1910.
5. As per question 4, the information is not on record, but it is known that at least 20 persons were injured in one explosion in 1910.

PRINTING BUREAU.

*Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Is it a fact that a portion, if not the greater portion of paper purchased by the Printing Bureau is not water-marked and consists largely of what are known as culls?
2. Are there any employees in the Stationery Branch of the Bureau who have had a sufficient factory or mill experience to qualify them to distinguish culls?
3. If so, has any such person examined the paper purchased during the past six months, and what was the result of such examination?
4. Has there been purchased lately between 40 and 50 tons of board, out of which to manufacture cases for use by census enumerators?
5. If so, from whom was it purchased?
6. Has all or a great portion of it become warped?
7. Has it been accepted and paid for? If so, how much was paid?
8. Who is requsition clerk at the Bureau.
9. When was he appointed and upon whose recommendation?

10. What are his qualifications for the position?

11. Has any loss been occasioned by reason of this requisition clerk, and what is the extent of such loss?

12. In proportion to the time he has held the position how has his work compared with the previous clerk?

13. On whose authority was the previous requisition clerk, Mr. A. E. Chamberlain, requested to send in his resignation?

14. What assistance, if any, is given the present occupant of this position that was not given Mr. Chamberlain?

15. What salary is now paid the requisition clerk?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. No. The Printing Bureau does not purchase paper 'culls.' Various grades of paper—required for different services—are purchased under contract, but in order to give all dealers and manufacturers an equal chance to compete, registered water marks, or trade marks, are not specified in the invitation to tender.

2. Several of the employees in the stationery office have had sufficient experience to enable them to distinguish 'culls.'

3. Yes. The results have shown that the papers are of good quality and value. All papers are examined and tested when received at the Bureau.

4. Seventeen tons of mill board, for general use, were lately bought from the St. Lawrence Pulp and Paper Company by tender.

5. Answered by reply to No. 4.

6. No. About half a ton became warped and it was replaced by the company without expense to the Bureau.

7. Yes. The contract price, forty-five dollars per ton.

8. H. M. McClory.

9. The 28th November, 1910, by the King's Printer who had personal knowledge of his fitness for the position.

10. Twenty years a practical printer in the Bureau, of which 13 years were spent at the case, 5 years as a monotype operator and nearly two years as a clerk in lithograph room.

11. No.

12. Very favourably.

13. The King's Printer.

14. None.

15. $18.35 per week, the same rate as that at which he was paid before becoming requisition clerk.

NAVIGATION LICENSES ON GREAT LAKES.

Mr. MACDONELL :

1. Is it true, as stated in the public press, that the Treasury Department at Washington has recently made a rule to the effect that only citizens of the United States will be allowed to hold navigation licenses for American vessels on the Great Lakes?

Mr. MACDONELL.

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to enforce a regulation prohibiting United States subjects from holding similar navigation licenses on Canadian vessels on the Great Lakes?

Mr. BRODEUR :

1. The government has no information on the subject beyond what has appeared in the public press, and to that extent only has the government been advised of the matter.

2. The matter will receive the consideration of the government should circumstances require it. In the meantime the existing legislation will continue to be strictly enforced.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY, HALIFAX TERMINALS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the notices of motion are called I would like to ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Railways has had any opportunity of considering the matter to which I called attention a day or two ago? I allude to terminal facilities required by the Intercolonial railway at Halifax for the purposes of a better dock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that the Minister of Railways has not been able to take cognizance of this matter yet, but before next week I hope to give my hon. friend an answer.

MARITIME MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) had an opportunity of considering the matter which I brought to the attention of his department during his absence, and which stood at the request of the Prime Minister? I allude to the representations of the Halifax Board of Trade with respect to the delay in the transmission of the mail to the maritime provinces during the summer months.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have a pile of papers before me, and I know that this matter is waiting. I will see that all diligence is had in attending to it.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing the full names of the permanent and temporary employees appointed at Quebec since the 1st of January, 1905, in the following departments: Post Office, Customs, Inland Revenue and Public Works; the age and place of residence of each of these employees at the time of their appointment, the dates and nature of changes, promotions or increases of salary granted them since their appointment.—Mr. Lachance.

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and papers relating to the late strike on the Grand Trunk Railway between the said railway and the striking conductors and trainmen, or between either and any person or persons authorized or professing to act for either, or between the government or any minister or deputy minister, or any one on his behalf, and either of said parties or any one professing to act on behalf of either, since the 29th day of November, A.D., 1910, and particularly all documents, papers, correspondence and agreements relating to the reinstatment of any of the men who had been on strike, and the appointment of Judge Barron.—Mr. Northrup.

TERMINAL ELEVATORS.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina) moved :

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the investigations recently made by the government into the conditions existing in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and in view of the disclosures as a result of such investigations, it is in the interests of the western grain producers and of Canada generally, that such measures be adopted by the government as will more effectually prevent the improper admixture of grain delivered to the several terminals and transfer elevators through which the grain of the western provinces may pass.

He said : In bringing this matter to the House, I have no apology to make. It is a question which is of great importance to western Canada, and of equally great importance to Canada as a whole. In western Canada it affects not only the men who raise the grain, but every citizen in that country, whether he be an agriculturist, a merchant, a professional or a labouring man. Every one there is affected by the quantity of grain produced, and the marketing of that grain. It is also a matter of the greatest importance to Canada that the grain produced in our country should reach the markets of the world in the same condition as that in which it leaves the farms of the west. We have had a number of delegations waiting on the government during the present year, but none of these was of greater importance than the one which came from western Canada representing the agriculturists in that part of the Dominion. They made a number of requests, one of which was that the tariff should be revised downwards. In that respect I am in entire accord with our western agriculturists.

They also made a request with respect to the operation of the Hudson Bay railway, with respect to the introduction of co-operative legislation, and with respect to government operation or control of terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. I venture to say that of all these questions, not even excepting the question of the tariff, the matter of the proper control of the terminal elevators and the proper handling of grain in the terminal elevators, was probably the most important question concerning western Canada that was submitted to the present government by the western delegation. This question has been troubling the residents of the west for a number of years past, and there is no question on which there has been so much discussion since the old trouble of the scarcity of cars. We had some years ago in the west the greatest difficulty in obtaining cars to market our grain with. That difficulty, I may say, during the past two years, has been practically removed; I know of no complaint with respect to getting cars for the shipment of grain in 1909 or 1910. But the trouble in the terminal elevators continues to go on. The provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan are those most vitally affected by the manner of the control and handling of grain in the terminal elevators, but the province of Saskatchewan is particularly affected. I want to give the House a few figures to show how important the production of grain is in that province, and how important it will be to that province in the years to come. I am not doing this as being at all provincial; but the fact is that at the present time the province of Saskatchewan produces more wheat than any other province in the Dominion, it produces three times as much wheat as Manitoba, and I am often at a loss to understand why all the wheat that is marketed from the western country should be called Manitoba wheat, when the fact is that we produce in Saskatchewan so much more wheat than Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. You must have got your seed from Manitoba.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). No doubt as regards the quality of wheat, the province of Manitoba compares favourably with that of Saskatchewan. But I want the members from Manitoba to understand that there is another province producing wheat in western Canada besides Manitoba, a province that produces three times as much wheat as Manitoba is doing, or has ever done. Consider the Saskatchewan wheat production for three years, 1903, 1906 and 1909, for the purpose of making a comparison.

SASKATCHEWAN'S PRODUCTION OF GRAIN IN BUSHELS.

	1903.	1906.	1909.
Wheat..	15,121,015	37,040,097	90,255,000
Oats..	9,164,007	23,965,528	105,465,000
Barley..	665,593	1,316,415	7,833,000
Flax	285,697	710,698	4,448,700
	25,236,312	63,042,739	208,001,700

Now there is a fact to note. The crop of 1909 placed Saskatchewan first, not only among the provinces of the Dominion, and not only in the production of wheat, but also in the production of oats, and third among the states of the American union.

Let me give you the figures. In 1909 the state of Minnesota produced the most wheat of all the states of the American union:

WHEAT.

Minnesota	94,000,000
North Dakota	90,700,000
Saskatchewan	90,255,000
Kansas	87,000,000

OATS.

Illinois	159,000,000
Iowa	116,000,000
Saskatchewan	105,465,000

Mr. SPROULE. From what source does the hon. gentleman get his figures?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). From the Department of Agriculture of the province of Saskatchewan. I have seen them cited in a number of newspapers, and I am satisfied they are correct.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought he gave the figures applying to the province before it was organized under a government of its own.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend is correct for the year 1903, which was before the province was formed. But the calculation was made in the provincial department of agriculture over the corresponding area of the province. However the figures for 1903 do not make much difference.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman know how the estimates he has read for the province of Saskatchewan agree with the estimates given by the Dominion Department of Agriculture? Is there much difference between the two?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have not made a comparison all the way through. I know, however, that the estimate of Saskatchewan wheat is given as somewhat less in the report of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, which gives the only figures I have knowledge of.

But the difference is not of much account. There is this further point to consider, that so far as the productivity of the soil is concerned, we occupy in Saskatchewan no mean position. Take again the figures for 1909. The crop reports for 1909 place Saskatchewan first, not only among the provinces of the Dominion of Canada, but also among the states of the American union, in the average per acre production of both wheat and oats. Now that is a fact of considerable importance, not only to our own province, but to the whole Dominion, when we consider how small a proportion of our arable area is yet under cultivation. Let me give the figures.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina).

WHEAT.

	Bushels per acre.
Saskatchewan	22·1
Minnesota	16·8
North Dakota	15·7
Kansas	14·1
United States	15·8

OATS.

Saskatchewan	47·1
Illinois	36·8
Minnesota	33·0
Iowa	27·0
United States	30·3

So that in respect to the productivity of the soil, our province occupies a very proud position. With these figures before us we can imagine what are the vast possibilities of that province with regard to the production of grain. In the year 1909 we had under cultivation only 7,016,272 acres; in 1910, slightly over 8,000,000 acres. The area under cultivation in 1909 was only equal to a little more than the area of our road allowances. And when it is considered that the area of the province of Saskatchewan, south of the city of Prince Albert, exclusive of lakes and rivers, is 80,000,000 acres, by far the larger part of which is as good land as that now under cultivation, it may easily be seen what a vast production of wheat will take place in that province in ten years, provided the population increases as it has increased in the past. To show the soundness of my contention, I would cite the statement made by Mr. William Whyte, of the Canadian Pacific railway, a gentleman who has lived long in the west and knows the west from Winnipeg to the coast as well as any man. Mr. Whyte says:

> Saskatchewan is now producing one-tenth as much grain as all the United States, and in ten years will produce as much as all the states put together.

When we reach the point that Saskatchewan alone produces as much wheat as the whole of the United States, Canada will have made good her claim to be the granary of the British Empire.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. member (Mr. Martin, Regina) any figures showing the relation between the product and the number of producers? In one respect, that is quite an important point.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I regret that I have no figures to show the average for each producer. Having given these figures, I think the House will agree with me that the question brought forward this afternoon in the form of this resolution is one which merits the attention of every representative of the Canadian people.

Hon. members will recollect that in 1906 a royal commission was appointed to investigate the grain trade. That commission held sittings all over the country and endeavoured to follow the grain from the time it was marketed in the west until it reached Liverpool. They finally made a report, and to show the relative importance of the question which is the subject of this motion and other questions, I may mention that this report declares that the main question then was that of getting cars. In 1906 the farmers simply could not get the cars to get their grain to market. The results were what every one who has been in the west knows. I have seen towns along new lines of railway when farmers living as much as fifty or sixty miles distant had driven in with their grain. They found they could not get their grain into elevators, and neither they nor the elevators could get cars to ship the grain. So, these farmers, were kept waiting there for days, taking the profit off the grain and preventing them from getting the money to pay the bills of merchants and machine men. Let me quote a few words from the report of the royal commission to show the House how the commission dealt with some of these questions. I refer, first, to page 8:

As our inquiry in the country proceeded it became apparent that the troubles that the farmers complained of, and also those complained of by the elevator companies, could be overcome by a plentiful supply of cars.

As I said, we have now the plentiful supply of cars, but we find that we have not fair treatment at the terminal elevators, so that this question of the terminal elevators is the most important question before us now.

A farmer dissatisfied with selling or shipping his grain through a country elevator could, with a plentiful supply of cars, load and ship direct to Fort William. Furthermore, as we have already explained, with a plentiful supply of cars an elevator operator would be able to pay the farmer a higher price for the grain sold on the street.

And so the report goes on with regard to car storage and car distribution. The commission dealt also with the question of special binning. An amendment was included in the Manitoba Grain Act of 1908 dealing with that and with special flag stations.

Mr. LENNOX. Would the hon. gentleman please state what special binning means?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I could not explain that better than by reading the sections of the Manitoba Grain Act, and the suggestions made by the commission.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not necessary. At what place is the special binning done?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). It has reference to the binning in the terminal elevators, keeping separate the different grades of grain and the shipments of different farmers and elevator companies. Now, when it came to the question of terminal elevators, the Grain Commission made certain recommendations. They advised the government that government ownership was not the proper solution of this difficulty, and rather favoured government control. Pursuant to their report, legislation was passed by this parliament in 1908 which was considered by many men who were well able to speak on the subject as being a complete cure of the evils that existed in the handling of grain in the terminal elevators at that time. I may explain that one of the main evils found by the commission in the terminal elevators was that they were practically controlled by other grain companies who thus were interested in the grain going through the elevators. That, to my mind, is one of the greatest difficulties of dealing with this grain question of the west, apart from government ownership and operation. If we could get legislation that would remove this element of personal and private gain in handling the grain, the question would be solved. Whether that is practical legislation or not, I am not in a position to say.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman say that the same people who handle the grain as an elevator company are handling grain for themselves?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). That is the idea. Hon. gentlemen will notice, as I quote from this report, that the charges I refer to are borne out by the facts. Referring to page 18 of the report, I find the following :

The private corporations operating the terminal elevators at Fort William are composed largely of the shareholders, officers and directors of grain firms and country line elevator companies in Winnipeg, and as such have a direct financial interest in much of the grain passing through their elevators at Fort William. We find that the Canadian Pacific railway elevator at Port Arthur is operated by a private company, but is used exclusively for the handling of off-grade grain of different descriptions, and does not stand in the same relation to the general grain trade as do the other terminal elevators.

And there are other authorities on the same point. It is generally conceded throughout the west that the elevators are controlled by men who have an interest in the handling of the grain there. On the same page the commission goes on to say what are the principal improvements, in their opinion, needed in these elevators :

The matters to be considered in connection with the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur in our opinion are the establishing of complete control of the cleaning and binning of grain in all elevators, and the establishing of a weighing department that will take over the weighing of all grain where public weighing is called for.

It was upon that recommendation that the legislation of 1908 was passed by this House. I may also refer to what they say with respect to government ownership and operation of these elevators. It is to be found on page 19 of the report :

Requests were made of us in the country that the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur should be taken over and operated by the government in view of the fact that so many of them were operated by private corporations interested in the grain trade. We also had a communication from the department under date January 23, 1907, inclosing a petition of members of parliament addressed to the honourable the Premier, requesting that we be instructed to specifically 'inquire into and report whether it is in the public interest that terminal elevators . . . continue to be operated by the common carriers or allowed to pass into the hands of or be operated by persons, firms or corporations engaged in the grain business.'

Then they go on to say:

In reply to this communication we addressed to Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce, a letter, dated February 1, a copy of which is appended hereto. We can see no reason for changing the conclusions arrived at at that time and we believe if our recommendations are carried out they will give the public the same confidence and protection in the operation of these terminal elevators as if they were owned by the government.

In that communication to Sir Richard Cartwright, the commission recommended rather government control of elevators, government inspection and not government ownership and operation. Their recommendation is given on page 39 of this report:

We find it has been the tendency at Fort William for elevators to go under the control of private companies and we believe this tendency will continue. These private companies, through their allied companies buying grain in the country, are able to secure shipments of grain to their terminal elevators, and are thus in an advantageous position to compete with the elevators of common carriers, who have no control over the destination of grain carried by them.

8. We believe the operating of terminal elevators by private companies under the present regulations would be detrimental to the interests of the trade, and would tend to destroy public confidence in the results obtained therefrom. Our reasons for believing this are, that the elevator companies (if they so wished) would be able to manipulate the grades for their own benefit, and not to clean the grain up to the dockage set by the government inspector.

9. The fact that an elevator is owned and operated by a railway company does not with the present regulations, in our opinion, necessarily insure protection to the public. We would like, however, to see the elevators at present owned, or to be owned, by the railways operated by them.

That, of course, brings up the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator at Fort William.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the members of that Commission ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). John Miller, of Indian Head, a farmer, W. L. McNair, of Keyes, Manitoba, a grain man and Geo. E. Goldie, of Ayr, Ontario, a miller.

It has been said that a solution of this difficulty might be arrived at by linking the elevator companies with our transportation system, making them in fact a part of that system. I believe that would remedy the difficulty to a very great extent, because if you did that, you would get rid of the one main difficulty in our way that these terminal elevators are controlled by speculators interested in the grain trade and in the products they are carrying, so that it is to their interest to manipulate that product in such a way as to deliver from the terminal elevators a worse sample than is sent out by the western farmer. I think myself that if the transportation companies handled all our grain, we would have very little to find fault with now, because all the evidence I have been able to find, the report of the Grain Commission, the evidence submitted by the Dominion Millers' Association and the admissions of the farmers themselves, go to show that the grain that comes out of the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator at Fort William is in much better condition and is marketed in better condition than the grain that comes out of elevators owned and operated by private companies. I mention that, only as one solution that has been suggested for this difficulty.

It has also been suggested to make the elevator men warehouse men pure and simple. I have mentioned this aspect of the question already; its object is to eliminate personal private gain which is the incentive to manipulation.

Another solution suggested is government control. We have had government control since 1908. According to the investigations and the confessions of these elevator men, made in the last year, that system undoubtedly proved a failure and we have to look now for some other system, either government ownership or some better system of government control so that the grain will be marketed in proper form and reach the market in proper condition. To start with, we are able to show, as I will prove from the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce with respect to the investigations held last year, that government control as at present enforced, has proved a failure.

Failing a proper system of government control there apparently only remains government ownership and operation. It has been suggested that we should bring into force the Minnesota legislation. I had intended to make some study of the Minnesota legislation, but have not yet been able to do so. I am told that in Minnesota the legislation permits mixing of grain. That is the principal difficulty in the way of enacting the Minnesota legislation in our country because the very thing we are endeavouring to prevent, is the improper mixing of grain in these elevators.

Let me deal with what has been proven to have taken place in terminal elevators. The system of government control went into force in 1908. It was tried for two years. We did have in 1909, as some hon. members will remember, a resolution in favour of government ownership of elevators, introduced by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). That resolution is found in the 'Hansard' of 1909 at page 3993. It reads:

That in the opinion of this House the present system of operating terminal and transfer elevators is detrimental to the interests of the western grain producers, and that the government should take immediate steps to operate terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and the transfer elevators between those terminals and the Atlantic seaboard.

At that time the legislation of 1908 providing for government control had been in force only some few months, I think since September 1, 1908. Only a part of one crop had been handled under that system, when in April, 1909, the hon. member introduced this resolution. I took some part in the debate and moved an amendment to his resolution which is to be found at page 4034:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

The amendments of last session to the Grain Act whereby all transfer and terminal elevators were put under government control have produced good results. And if, on further experience, it is found that the present system of supervision is not adequate to prevent the undue mixture of grain in such elevators, this House will be prepared to accept such further legislation as may be needed to that end.

I moved that resolution at that time for the reasons I have already stated, that it was only fair to give the system of government control inaugurated by the legislation of 1908 a fair trial, and the handling of part of the crop of one year was, I contended, not a fair trial. The system has now been given a fair trial with the result that it has proved itself absolutely inadequate to meet the situation. It seems to me still that a system of government control properly inaugurated and carried out should as effectively control and handle the grain trade and protect the interests of those interested, as any system of government ownership. Under government control, you have two sets of officials, one checking the other. I believe that at Fort William and Port Arthur there were seventy odd officials doing nothing, but checking up the grain, weighing it in and weighing it out, and during the past fall, after the disclosures to which I am about to refer, the Department of Trade and Commerce inaugurated a system of registration under which a man who brings in grain must register the amount and before he ships it out, must get his warehouse receipt so that the amount registered in must equal the amount registered out. Under such a system, it seems to me, that it should be possible to prevent the mixture of grain, but that result has not been attained, and now we are in a position where some legislation must be passed to properly protect the interest not only of western Canada, but of the whole Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. We now have some one before us whom we can question. When the grain growers were here, they had it all their own way, and we could not put any questions. I wish that either the hon. member who has the floor, or some other hon. member would give a very brief and clear sketch of the operation of handling the grain from first to last so that we could see the different processes in operation. Then we would be able to judge as to whether the checks and supervision were adequate. I would like to know what methods are employed in regard to the grain from the time it leaves the farm until it gets into the hands of the ultimate buyer, and also something of the difference between the terminal and transfer elevators.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). If my hon. friend wants a correct idea as to the handling of grain, either at the terminal or transfer elevators he will, I think, have to ask some member of the House who is a practical farmer. The system is most intricate and I am told that no one can understand it unless he investigates for himself. Although I have given the matter some considerable attention I do not understand it yet, and I think the only way in which one can get a true conception of the system is to have it explained by some one employed in the elevator who has an intimate knowledge of the system.

I cannot understand how the manipulation of grain that has been proven, could have taken place under the very eye of the large number of officials who were there to prevent it. If the officials have been honourable and painstaking in their intentions then the fact that it did take place, must lead us to believe that the system is intricate and that it requires care on our part in legislating towards improvement. In the amendment of 1908 providing for government control, subsection of section 126a of the Manitoba Grain Inspection Act provides:

The inspector shall keep the proper records of all grain received in store in any terminal elevator, which records shall show the particulars of each parcel or car lot of grain received, the date received, the grade, dockage, if any, and the number of the bin in which such grain has been stored; and shall keep similar records of all such grain shipped from any terminal elevator, which records shall also give the name of the vessel or the number of the car into which such grain has been delivered.

That section provides a fairly detailed system of the method of checking in grain and checking it out. Then subsection 7 provides:

In the month of August each year stock shall be taken of the quantity of each grade of grain in the terminal elevators.

That subsection was inserted, I presume, for the purpose of enabling the government inspectors to check up the amount of the different grades of grain that were in the different elevators on the 31st of August.

On the 12th of December, 1909, the inspectors inspected and measured the grain in some of these terminal elevators and they found a shortage particularly of Northern No. 1. An investigation was then conducted into the dealings of the Canadian Pacific railway elevator, the Consolidated elevator, the Empire elevator, and the Port Arthur elevator. With respect to the Canadian Pacific railway elevator, after looking into the matter very carefully it was decided that there was no case. Mr. C. C. Castle, the warehouse commissioner had charge of this investigation and he reported to the Trade and Commerce Department on April 22, 1910, and in his report he gives certain facts with respect to what was found in connection with the manipulation of grain and the sending of false returns to the government as to the different quantities of grain in the elevators on the 12th of December that year. With respect to the Canadian Pacific railway elevator he states:

The managers of each of the elevators against whom discrepancies were alleged, viz., Canadian Pacific Railway, The Consolidated, The Empire and the Port Arthur Elevator companies, were called in but no satisfactory explanation was given by them except in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway, who immediately after seeing me had their records with those of the inspection department carefully checked over; the errors found were of a purely clerical nature, so that all differences have been satisfactorily accounted for in this case. Mr. Frank E. Gibbs, grain inspector at Fort William, personally cross-checked his entries with those of the Canadian Pacific railway and certified to the correctness whereupon the matter was dropped.

But, in the case of the other elevators it was a different thing. For instance, as to the consolidated elevator Mr. C. C. Castle says:

Mr. Gibbs gave evidence that in the weekly sworn return to the commissioner for the week ended 26th November, 1909, the amount of No. 1 Northern wheat inspected out of that elevator exceeded the amount shown on the weekly return to the warehouse commissioner by 80,000 bushels. He also showed that a measurement had been made of the grain in store in the elevator on the 12th December last and such measurement indicated that the total quantity of No. 1 Northern wheat in store exceeded the amount shown by the weekly returns at that time by about 61,000 bushels.

The conclusion was in all these cases the elevator companies had taken No. 2, and No. 3, and No. 4, northern and mixed it with No. 1 northern and consequently shipped out far more No. 1 northern than they had taken in.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Is Mr. Gibbs a government inspector?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Yes, he is the government grain inspector at Fort William. In the case of the Consolidated Elevator Company the investigation apparently fell through, by which I mean, it did not go to the same extent it did go in the case of the Empire Elevator Company, and the Port Arthur Elevator Company. The Consolidated Elevator Company said that the increased amount of No. 1 Northern was on account of an error of their accountant in compiling the weekly statement to the government, and they also pleaded that they had loaned certain wheat to the Lake Shipping Association. Mr. Castle after investigation decided that this was not a very flagrant case, but he, however, laid information under section 25 of the Act charging the elevator company with sending in false returns to the government. Mr. Castle says:

However, I did feel that the officers were grossly negligent in sending in this statement, and felt it my duty to lay an information before the police magistrate here for sending in an untrue statement. The matter came up before the Hon. T. Mayne Daly, P.M., here to-day, and he fined the company the sum of $50.

As to the other two cases it will no doubt be interesting to some members of the House to give detailed figures with respect to the condition of affairs in these elevators, and I take my information from the report of Mr. Castle the warehouse commissioner. In the case of the Port Arthur elevator company the facts are as follows:

The shipments of No. 1 Northern exceeded receipts by 169,066 bushels.

In No. 2 Northern there should have been on hand 291,742 bushels, and there were only 175,096 bushels, a shortage of 116,646 bushels.

In No. 3 Northern there should have been on hand 346,460 bushels, and there were only 166,255 bushels, a shortage of 180,205 bushels.

In No. 4 Northern there was a shortage of 4,968 bushels.

This company was charged with sending in false returns to the government, it pleaded guilty and was fined $2,500. The question may arise as to why the manager of this elevator company was not prosecuted for something more serious than sending in false returns to the government. It was thought that the official who sent in the false returns should be prosecuted for perjury and also prosecuted under the Act for mixing the grain. I will quote what Mr. Castle says in regard to that and I think it will be agreed that it would be an exceedingly difficult matter to succeed in establishing a charge of perjury on account of the difficulty of telling exactly what amount of grain was in the elevator at that date. If you are going to prosecute a man criminally, you must have very definite information as to the amount of the grain. Mr. Castle says with regard to that, that he was advised by the government solicitor, I think Mr. Hudson of Winnipeg, that a prosecution for perjury or for mixing grades would be difficult to sustain, and he concluded his report in the case with the following statement:

> In viey of this, I do not consider that any action of this nature should be taken at present, but that a weigh up of the elevator should be made as soon as it could be done practicably and in the event of it then being ascertained that there is any serious discrepancy still existing in the grades, the question of cancelling the license should be considered.
> Mr. Hudson advises me that in his opinion this is the proper course—not only in this case, but also in regard to Empire and Consolidated Elevator Companies.

The Empire Elevator Company was also charged with making a false return. In that case the shipments of No. 1 Northern exceeded the receipts by 437,884 bushels. There was a large shortage of No. 2 northern.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What was the total amount dealt with by the company on which there was that surplus?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I cannot tell my hon. friend the amount of grain that went through that particular elevator, and I cannot give him that information. What I am saying is that there was that much more of No. 1 Northern shipped out than they actually got in, and they got that No. 1 by grading with it No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4 Northern. Of No. 2 Northern there was a shortage of 347,643 bushels, showing where they got the bulk of the grain. Of No. 3 Northern there should have been on hand 155,975 bushels, whereas there was only 5,502 bushels, showing shortage of 150,473 bushels. So that out of No. 2 and No. 3 you will get practically the amount of the excess grain that was shipped out as No. 1 Northern.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). It was just a change in classification?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Yes. In the case of No. 4 Northern there was a discrepancy of 43,969 bushels. In Mr. Castle's report there is some explanation given of the discrepancy between the amount of the additional No. 1 that was shipped out and the shortage of No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4. They do not exactly balance. Now, these facts appear to me amply to establish the charge that manipulation of grain has been going on in the terminal elevators. Our grain from the west has not been reaching the Liverpool market in the condition in which it left the western farmer. As a matter of fact, I believe a lower grade of grain is reaching Liverpool than is shipped by the farmers in the west, and that fact is due to the manipulation of the grades in the terminal elevators. Mr. Hudson, the solicitor who appeared for the government in the investigation, said this at its conclusion:

> This case proved what the grain growers have been contending for years—that there was a mixing going on.

Mr. BRODER. Is that grain only what is exported, or does it include the grain that finds its way into the hands of the millers in the east?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I think it must include both. There is no distinction drawn between the grain that goes to the milling interests of Ontario and the grain that goes to the foreign market. Now, all this manipulation went on in the terminal elevators under our so-called system of government control, with a large number of government officials there for the purpose of controlling and inspecting the grain with a view to preventing such manipulation. I said a few minutes ago that at the time the legislation of 1908 was passed it was generally agreed among men who understood the grain business, and who had investigated the subject, that the manipulation of grain and the troubles we complained of in the terminal elevators would be fairly well stopped, if not absolutely so, by the system of government control which was provided for in that legislation. In order to support that contention, let me refer to what Mr. John Millar, a member of the Royal Commission of 1906, stated at Weyburn on February 20, 1909. He said this:

The weights both in and out of the terminal elevators had been found satisfactory, but the grain going out seemed to contain rather too much extraneous matter, as some of the cleaners were not of the best. It was pointed out that there was a tendency for the elevators to go into the hands of private companies who were themselves handling grain, and the report of the commission had recommended that these and the transfer elevators farther east should be placed under strict government control. This had been done, and he believed the producer now had as much protection as government ownership would give him.

Another authority, the Hon. W. R. Motherwell, the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan, said:—

The government control secured over these elevators by amendment to the Manitoba Grain Act last session by the federal parliament has given the producer practically every safeguard and security which government ownership could possibly give.

As I said in the year 1909, when this matter was before the House, as a general principle I do not believe in government ownership. I do not believe that it is the function of government to carry on the business that properly belongs to private individuals. The function of government is to legislate to protect the people and to adopt, in connection with the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, such legislation as will leave these in the hands of corporations, provided the interests of the people are properly protected. But after hearing the matter discussed the past two or three years, after hearing the representations made by grain dealers and grain producers, I have gradually come to the conclusion that we will never be protected properly in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur until we have these elevators owned and operated by the government. I may be wrong, and if any settlement can be devised to properly protect the grain growers without government ownership and operation, that is what I would prefer. But failing that, I want government ownership and operation.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say in his resolution that he is in favour of the government ownership and operation of elevators?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend can read into the resolution whatever he likes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am asking the hon. gentleman whether that is what he wishes this House to vote for or not.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have endeavoured to express my opinion to the House. I have made the statement that while I am not in favour of government ownership as a general principle, I still feel, from the experience we have had, that we will not be properly protected until we have the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, owned and operated by the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why does my hon. friend not state that definitely in his resolution?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend can read this resolution as he pleases. I moved this resolution because I believed we should have legislation which will put us in a better position with regard to the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur than we are in at present. If my hon. friend does not want to vote for government ownership and operation, he is at liberty to vote against it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). In the case of the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, I believe a good case could be made out for government ownership and operation because the business is a profitable one. Apart from the mixing of grain, it is profitable from the point of view of storing the grain. Let me give you some figures which will prove this, and in that connection let me emphasize this point, namely, that all the grain of western Canada must go through the spout, it must go through these elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, so that the business is practically a monopoly, and secondly the storage business is very profitable.

During the year ending December 10, 1908, 80,000,000 bushels were put through the elevators, which, at ¾ cents per bushel, makes	$ 600,000
There was in store on January 1, 1909, to remain there perhaps four months, 7,000,000 bushels, which, at 4¾ cents makes.	332,500
In addition, say 3,000,000 bushels to come in after January 1, before navigation opens, yielding 3¾ cents per bushel	82,500
Total	$1,015,000

So that the amount received for storage alone should be sufficient to pay all the operating charges, and give a reasonable return on the capital invested. Of course, if these elevators were in the hands of the government, the storage charges might have to come down, because on this side of the lakes they are lower than at the terminals. Suppose you take the winter storage at Fort William and compare it with the storage on this side of the lakes :

Elevating and 15 days free storage, ¾ cent and 1/30th cent per day for 4 months, total 4 cents per bushel, or 4¾ cents on 1,000,000 bushels..	$47,500
Elevator rates this side of lakes from 1st December to 1st May, including ½ cent elevation, equal to 1½ cents on 1,000,000 bushels, being the rate on this side of the lakes..	15,000

Making the extra charges at Fort William on 1,000,000 bushels $32,500 ; which shows that the storage rates there are abnormally high.

I shall not detain the House much longer, and must apologize for having been so long, but there was, I understand, judging by reports in the newspapers and discussions in the lobbies, a draft Bill under discussion between the government and the grain growers when the western delegation was here in December. That draft Bill, I am informed, contains some provisions which might be beneficially put in the form of legislation. I understand it was suggested that a commission should be established, to be located at Fort William and Port Arthur which would have entire charge of the grain passing through the elevators at these two points, and have full control over the administration of the two companies which own these elevators. With respect to government control, I do not see why a properly constituted commission, composed of men who thoroughly understand the grain trade, with proper facilities for carrying out the Manitoba Grain Act and the Inspection and Sale Act, and with ample powers given them under any amendment that may be introduced with respect to these two Acts—I do not see, I say why the elevators cannot be properly controlled and the manipulation of grain prevented by that system.

Mr. LENNOX. That would be commission appointed by the government, would it ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I cannot say whether by the government or not, but I presume it would be. I do not know who else would appoint it.

Mr. LENNOX. Would that be part of the system the hon. gentleman advocates by way of carrying out this process of marketing the grain—a commission appointed by the government to carry out the operation instead of leaving it to private parties ? Or in what way does he expect to get the commission ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Of course, when I referred to a commission, I had in mind a government commission, as I understand it, without ownership of the elevators. My hon. friend, I think, is referring to the matter of ownership.

Mr. LENNOX. No, but I thought the hon. gentleman was expecting to put them under the control of the government with a self-appointed commission—virtually, the government operating through a commission.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). It seems to me that whether the government owned the elevators or put a commission in charge, there would have to be a body of men to carry on the business and to apply the Inspection and Sale Act, and the Manitoba Grain Act in respect to these elevators.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sorry to interrupt, but the question I was referring to was whether the government would own the elevators or not. The government in that case, would have to own them or lease them, I presume ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox), is quite correct. If the government decided to take these elevators over, they would have to own them or lease them. But I do not see how they could get along in any case without a commission or some body of men to supervise and operate them. I understand that it was also suggested between the farmers and the representatives of the government that more drastic penalties than those under the Acts referred to might be imposed under these laws.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Before the hon. gentleman proceeds, would he please explain whether the commission he refers to as being in charge of the elevators is a commission after government ownership has taken place or is it not ? I understand him to say that he saw no reason why a commission such as that suggested, should not make a success of preventing the anomalies that have occurred. Is that to be a commission under government ownership and operation or not ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). When I made the statement referred to, I was speaking of a commission without government ownership.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And the hon. gentleman said he saw no reason why it should not succeed. Why then, does he say that government ownership and operation is sure to be the only solution of the difficulty ?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have tried to make myself plain during the whole course of my address. Whether it is a commission or not, I believe that without government ownership and operation of these elevators, we should not have our grain properly dealt with. But, as I said a few minutes ago, I am prepared to support any legislation that I think is in the interest of the western grain producers and that will assist in getting our grain to Liverpool in better shape than at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN. But what I do not understand is this: If the hon. gentleman says that it will not be a success, except with government ownership and operation, how does he make that consistent with the statement that he does not see why a commission without government ownership should not succeed?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen), need not attempt to show that I am advocating a commission to handle the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. I have said that I do not see why a system of government control is not as good as a system of government ownership. I have said also that the present system of government control is not a success, but that if any hon. gentleman can suggest a system of government control, that will prove a success, I will support it rather than government ownership, which I do not believe in as applied to utilities. At the same time, my opinion is, and has been for some time, that we will not get proper control of our grain in these elevators until some radical amendments take place and I believe that government ownership and operation will eventually require to be resorted to in order to properly protect the western grain producers against the men who are manipulating grain in these elevators.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is the hon. gentleman making any distinction between government ownership and government operation?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I am not sure in just what connection I used the expression 'government ownership'. As a rule, when I speak of government ownership, I mean government operation. If the hon. gentleman would draw my attention to any particular statement that I made, I would be better able to answer his question.

But, I wish to get through. I know that this is a delicate question with hon. gentleman opposite. I am a little surprised that the resolution which appears on the Order Paper in the name of one of these gentlemen from Manitoba had not tacked to it something perfectly consistent with the idea of protection. That would be in line with the plan adopted by these gentlemen in introducing a resolution with respect to lowering the tariff on agricultural implements.

But, before I was interrupted by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) I was going to refer to the matter of drastic penalties. I believe that, if, instead of the fines imposed by the present Act, imprisonment or drastic penalties of that kind imposed, the manipulation of grain might be more effectively prevented. I desire to refer to a statement made by Mr. F. W. Thompson, of the Ogilvie Milling Company, Montreal, as reported in a despatch to the Montreal 'Gazette' of November 29. Referring to the millers of Canada, he said:

> We have always been unalterably opposed to the mixing of Manitoba grains, and will be glad to see such amendments made by parliament to the Manitoba Grain Act as will effectually put an end to any possibility of mixing. The simplest and most effective way, in my judgment, to bring this about would be to impose such penalties as would largely exceed any possible gain to the guilty party.

So, there is some reason to believe that by heavier penalties we might help to solve this difficulty. It has also been suggested that, in case of violation of the Manitoba Grain Act, or the Inspection and Sale Act, the leases of the elevators should ipso facto expire—the breaking of the law would cancel the lease. And I have already suggested the elevators might be taken out of the hands of operators who have an interest in the grain passing through them.

One other point I wish to refer to. Whatever legislation is passed with respect to the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, must, of course, be made to apply to all the transfer elevators between those points and the Atlantic sea-board; that would be necessary in order to preserve the identity of our Canadian grain until it reaches the European market. I do not wish to trouble the House with more quotations, but there is one matter that I do not see how to deal with, and that is the matter of grain transhipped to Buffalo. There is no possibility, so far as I know, of preserving the identity of our grain transhipped at Buffalo, of which there is a large quantity. Legislation passed by us must refer only to elevators upon our own side of the line. Let me read on that subject a very brief quotation from Mr. F. W. Thompson, whose words on another subject I read a moment ago:

> In regard to the suggestion of government ownership of terminal elevators, this, of course, would involve an expenditure on the part of the government of a great many millions of dollars, and to carry out the object desired by those advocating such a course, it seems to me they would require to go far beyond the terminals at Port Arthur and Fort William. It would be necessary to take over in the same manner all the elevators through which the grain must pass in course of transit to and at the sea-board. Moreover, a considerable proportion of Manitoba grain is shipped through American ports via Buffalo, and, of course, Canada would have no control over it after it had reached that point unless an international arrangement can be arrived at for preserving the identity of Canadian wheat. We have recently been informed by a Canadian exporting house that a system of mixing Manitoba wheat is being carried on at an American port, the grain being forwarded under another certificate issued at that port. As to whether it has gone any further than this we do not know, but it is plainly evident that if any change is to be made in the present system it has got to go infinitely farther than at present contemplated.

This proves that it is necessary to legislate with respect to the transfer elevators, as well as to the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and also shows the difficulty with respect to grain transhipped at American ports.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that no subject has been more prolific of legislation than the question of handling western grain. A great many beneficial amendments have been made to the Manitoba Grain Act in the last ten years. There was a time in western Canada when the farmer did not even have the right to get a car to ship his grain; the elevator companies and the railway companies were one vast monopoly, controlling all the cars, and no ordinary farmer could get a car to ship his grain at all. That difficulty has been long since removed, with many other difficulties, since the present government came to power. I believe there is no question which received more careful attention from the Department of Trade and Commerce than the handling and marketing of western grain, and I have every confidence that any legislation brought in by this government will be with the sole view of improving conditions at the present time existing in the west in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. I have much pleasure in moving this resolution.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the hon. gentleman resumes his seat, I have one or two questions to ask him. I notice in the amendment which he introduced a couple of years ago regarding government ownership, he used the term 'undue mixture of grain.' In his resolution of to-day he speaks of the 'improper admixture of grain.' It would help us if the hon. gentleman would briefly tell the House what he means by these terms. For instance, when he speaks of the improper admixture of grain, is there any kind of mixture of grain that would be proper, or should be tolerated?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The improper admixture of grain means mixing different grades of grain. The mixing of the same grades might be proper.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman really mean that in his resolution? He is surely not dealing with the mixing of the same kind of grain backwards and forwards. But if you take one grade of grain and put it into another grade of grain, is not that improper, and to be prevented?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend is quite right.

Mr. LENNOX. There is one other question. I think he has made it quite clear, because he repeated it several times, that as a result of the careful study he has given to this matter, nothing but government ownership and operation, in his opinion, will be effective. Now that being the hon. gentleman's view, would he tell the House whether he would advocate such ownership and operation by a commission appointed by the government, or by a department of the government?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I understand my hon. friend asks whether I would be in favour of the government directly operating these elevators, or by means of a commission. It is a subject that I am not sufficiently familiar with to express an opinion; but offhand, I would say a commission.

Mr. THOS. MACNUTT (Saltcoats). I desire to say a few words on this resolution before it is passed, as the subject affects not only the west but the whole Dominion. It is usually supposed that the farmers in the west are extremely prosperous, and can stand any kind of thing as regards tariff charges and so on. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer of the west is up against a good many things. He is, as it were, a partner of nature; he supplies the labour, and nature supplies the soil and climate. But nature is sometimes very unkind to him, and occasionally we have too much rain and sometimes too little. Sometimes we have a devastating hail storm which wipes out all chance of crops that year. At other times, a frost visits the fields before the grain is mature, and ripens it in fact before it is properly filled. This accounts for the different qualities of wheat. Now, I think the farmer is perfectly ready to accept any chances where he cannot control them. But I do not think he is at all willing to accept the extortions of the middlemen and others who are handling his grain, and who are simply watching the farmer to see how much grain he is raising in order that they may see how much they can make out of him when he sells his grain. The farmer is willing to pay all legitimate charges and costs of hauling and handling. But there is a class of men, owners or lessees of the terminal elevators, who, it is well proved, are in the habit of manipulating the farmers' grain to their own pecuniary advantage, and at the expense of the reputation of his wheat. While my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) was speaking, an hon. member asked him how this kind of thing is done, and my hon. friend replied that not being a farmer, he could not exactly say, but referred his questioner to a farmer. Now I happen to be a farmer, and I may say that I do not know exactly how this is done; I think the only man that can tell is the grain manipulator himself. He has got the science down pretty fine. But I understand it is something like this. The grain is graded into probably six or seven different qualities. The qualities are established by purity, by colour, and by weight. Now if the grain buyer gets in a number of cars of different qualities of wheat, he will take some small quantity of the best grade and mix it with inferior grades so as to bring them up probably to the weight of an intermediate grade; and consequently he will get a bigger price for that grade. I have seen a great many farmers who have gone to the old country and have interviewed millers there. They have taken to the old country samples of our wheat, and have been informed by the millers there that they rarely ever saw wheat of that quality in the old country, if they did they were willing to pay a good price for it. One of my neighbours took a sample of No. 2 Northern which he had grown himself, and showed it to a miller in the old country, who told him that he rarely saw wheat of that quality, but he would be willing to pay a good price for it if he could get it. He gave my friend a sample of what he bought as No. 2, and when he came back to this country he showed it to the inspector who graded it as No. 4. Now that grain had been mixed in this way, and in this way we are losing the value of our wheat. When a miller looks at a sample of grain he says. This will make so much flour, it may be a No. 2 or No. 3, and we will fix the price at so much according to its milling value. Now if it is an inferior sample, if it is No. 2 or No. 3, yet inferior in milling qualities, the price is fixed lower. So they never really get our wheat in the shape in which it leaves the farmers' loading platform, or the local elevator.

What remedy should there be to prevent this kind of thing? I think it will be acknowledged that it exists. A system of government inspection was inaugurated and I am of opinion that to a certain extent it was successful although a great many are of a different opinion. I base my judgment upon the facts ascertained and the conclusions arrived at which proved conclusively that this manipulating was going on. It took some time to find this out. The government inspectors could tell the quality of the grain going out but they could not tell whether that was due to mixing or whether the grain came originally from the farmers in that shape, and until the stocks in the elevators got low no comparison could be made. When the stocks got low, the balance of the grain was weighed and graded, and then it was found that this manipulation had been going on. Several of those who were guilty of this offence were fined. It has been said that this fine was nothing in comparison to the loss and damage that has accrued to the farmers, but they were not suing for damages, they were proceeding under the Criminal Code and a penalty was imposed, as is usual in these cases, not as heavy as it might be, but probably the fine for the second offence would be very much heavier, and imprisonment would be added. I think that when men find that they are sure to be detected they will not steal.

Like the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), I am not particularly in love with the idea of the government operating everything in sight. I think the functions of government are something different and that it is the duty and the privilege of private citizens to carry on the commerce and business of the country. But sometimes such government interference is necessary, and this may be such a case. At all events, it would give satisfaction to the farmers of the west, who are very uneasy owing to the existing state of affairs. If the terminal elevators were operated by the government, I think probably it would be the best plan. Under the present system there are a large number of inspectors and they are paid out of the general revenue. If the government purchased or leased these elevators, and the inspectors, who are expert grain men, were turned into operators, the cost of their salaries and rentals and insurance, &c., could be made a charge against the wheat. In that way a great deal of money would be saved and every one who raises any wheat is perfectly willing that all legitimate charges should come out of the wheat. I think also that a man should accompany every vessel loaded with wheat going to Port Colborne or Buffalo, and that he should accompany that wheat until it reaches the sea-going vessel, after which it could not be tampered with.

However, my reason for addressing the House is to point out the absolute necessity for a remedy that will be really effective. It is quite possible, I think it is quite probable, that the only system and the better system is for the government to take over the elevators either by purchase or lease and operate them under a commission. I believe that leasing would be best in the beginning. As a farmer, representing a farming community, I wish to place myself on record as being in great sympathy with this question. I know that these abuses have been going on, I know that very serious losses have occurred all through the west, it does not affect the east, I suppose, in the same way, but it certainly does affect the west as every western man knows. The problem is to provide a remedy, and I reiterate my belief that government operation under a commission would be the best. As there are other members who may wish to speak on this subject at length and as under the rules of the House this debate must close at six o'clock and may possibly not be resumed this session, I shall conclude my remarks in order to permit other members to express their views. I simply want to place myself on record as being strongly in favour of an effective system which will prevent the improper admixture of the farmer's grain. He is entitled to the market value of what he grows, less the cost of transportation, &c. Every one will admit that he is not getting that under the present system and therefore it is absolutely necessary that some better system be thought out and applied. I have much pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. A. MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, it would be hard to overestimate the importance of the subject brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin). At the same time if I keep my remarks in due proportion to the meaning that he has chosen to throw into his resolution I shall be able to be very brief indeed. The hon. member for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt) who has just taken his seat, has gone so far as to assure the House that on this great question he thinks that probably the proper solution is government ownership and operation. The hon. member has proceeded so far along the line of solving that problem that I venture to think it probable he will actually reach a conclusion by the time the government Bill comes down for consideration by this House. As for the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) I can only say that I can quite understand the resolution he has moved, and with all appreciation for his personal qualities and without perhaps even casting a reflection on the lucidity of his language, I must say that I am unable to understand his speech. So far as I grasped his meaning the hon. gentleman finds that a very great evil and very great abuses exist in the grain trade, as the grain passes through terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur and other transfer elevators. Up to that point we have no quarrel with him; we have only to say that these matters have been brought to the attention of the House by hon. gentlemen on this side for some years back, that this abuse is now recognized on all hands as existing, and that the injustice of it has appealed to all sections of the country. So there was no necessity whatever of further impressing parliament with its importance because the First Minister in this House has already laid it down that there was an abuse that demanded a remedy. To that extent I cannot see that the hon. gentleman has accomplished much. His position in relation to the various remedies suggested, as I understand it, is this: He says he sees no reason why government control should not be successful; he advises, as he did some two years ago, the enforcement of the Grain Act as a solution, if that succeeds. He sees no reason why control by a commission without government ownership or operation should not be successful and he favours that, if that succeeds. And lastly he says that while he is personally adverse to the whole principle of government ownership and operation he believes it is a case for government ownership and operation and he also favours that, if it succeeds. So that, the hon. gentleman's cogitations lasting doubtless over many years has brought him at last to this remarkable point, that in a moment of daring he is willing to assure this House that whatever solution will be a success he is in favour of it. I must commend to the attention of parliament and the country the very great political enterprise of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin). There was a meeting in a rural school district some years ago and the subject of discussion was what should be done with the school house in the cold winter months. There was a very large attendance and a great many were in favour of closing the school and a great many others were in favour of keeping it open. After wrangling for a very long time an old gentleman at the back of the hall got tired and he rose and made this startling speech: 'Gentlemen, we have been here now for a few hours, we have wrangled and quarrelled together and we are no nearer the point than we were when we started; now, I move that this school house be either kept open or closed up.' And, Sir, that is the attitude of the hon. gentleman for Regina as to a solution of the terminal elevator question. As far as the hon. member for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt) went in the direction of supporting the principal of government ownership and operation his remarks would be much more in point if he had made them to item No. 8 on the Order Paper which is the resolution introduced this session and for many years by the hon. gentleman for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). But it is not the record of hon. gentlemen opposite to fall in line with a good policy or principle if it comes from this side of the House, and consequently these gentlemen opposite must precede it by this aimless and meaningless circumlocution put on 'Hansard' by the hon. member for Regina. I have no quarrel to make with the motion in so far as there is any virility in it; in so far as there is any meaning to it. I would move an amendment to it along a line that meant something specific only that such an amendment would be simply anticipating the resolution now on the Order Paper in the name of my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner). Clearly, the bulk of the discussion well may wait until we come to this masculine and virile resolution which brings the matter before the House in the form in which I submit it should be brought.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt). Mr. Speaker, I am sure I share with every other member on this side of the House, especially the members from west of the Great Lakes, a feeling of very keen disappointment at the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) because I anticipated that when he rose in this House to discuss a question of such vital importance to the people of the west we would have heard from him something better than a criticism of the speeches of the hon. gentlemen who spoke before him. Sir, this question is of too much importance to the people to be made a sort of political football by the hon. member (Mr. Meighen) or anybody else. It is not a question of political expediency at all; it is a question that affects the marketing of the most important product of our western Canadian farmers and for that reason I find fault with the remarks of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) finds fault with the speeches of the hon. member for Saltcoats, and the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) in that they are too indefinite. Possibly my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) is a Solomon who possesses all the wisdom of the world, and knows the solution of every question off-hand, but does my hon. friend undertake to say that he knows a cure-all for all the evils of the grain trade of western Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does my hon. friend ask a question?

Mr. NEELY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If he will look in 'Hansard' at the speech I made last year he will see my views on the subject, and had he been here he would have heard them. My views have not changed since. I did not lay them before the House as the words of a Solomon. I laid them before the House as the straightforward view in definite form of an humble member of parliament.

Mr. NEELY. Well, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is a little more modest just now than he was a few moments ago, but even at this moment he does not undertake to say that his views provide the only solution of this question. I believe, Sir, that my hon. friends from Regina and Saltcoats were perfectly right in taking a moderate position on the question because I think a man would have a good deal of hardihood who would stand on the floor of this House and say that he had the only solution of this question that could be found anywhere in the world.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the Grain Growers' Association which came to Ottawa declare it to be their judgment that the only solution was government ownership and government operation?

Mr. NEELY. They did make that statement, and they also told us that the tariff is the greatest evil that the farmers of Canada suffer from, and does the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) agree with that?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. member had better ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. NEELY. The Grain Growers' Association of western Canada expressed the view that government ownership and operation is so far as they see the best solution of this question.

Mr. SPROULE. Not the best solution but the only solution.

Mr. NEELY. I must point out to my hon. friend that the commission appointed for the purpose of investigating this question some four years ago, came to the conclusion that government ownership and operation were not necessary, and that proper supervision and control were sufficient or ought to be sufficient to bring about the alleviation of the evils from which the farmers were suffering. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) tells us that he has expressed an opinion which is undoubtedly in favour of government ownership and control, but this off-hand method of finding a solution of the question without thorough and painstaking investigation is sometimes likely to produce very disastrous results. Take the case of the political associates of the hon. gentleman in the province of Manitoba. They undertook without investigation, without the appointment of a commission, to remedy the evils of the elevator system, and the grain trade within the limits of their own province, with the result that they placed an Elevator Bill upon the statute-books of the province, and put it into operation. I am not going to discuss that Bill, I am not going to discuss whether it is a good move or a bad one, but I am going to mention this fact: That the commission appointed by the adjoining province of Saskatchewan with Professor McGill at its head, and the other two members being leading members and directors of the Grain Growers' Association of the province of Saskatchewan, came to the conclusion after weeks and months of investigation, that the system adopted by Manitoba was not such as they would recommend to the government of Saskatchewan. I am not criticising the action of the government of Manitoba, but I am using that as an illustration to show how dangerous it might be to lay down here a principle as the only absolute remedy applicable to a certain situation before we have given the matter, by means of a commission or otherwise, a thorough investigation that will enable us to get all the facts of the case before coming to our decision.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Is the hon. gentleman aware that the report of the commission appointed by the Saskatchewan government was written and handed to the commission before they started out to investigate at all?

Mr. NEELY. I am not aware, neither is my hon. friend aware.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I think I am. It can be proven.

Mr. NEELY. I will not accept the statement of any hon. member of this House impugning the character and the dignity of the Saskatchewan Elevator Commission until the facts are laid before me in some definite form. I think my hon. friend has not strengthened his position in this House by making such an insinuation without delivering the goods. Why does my hon. friend make the statement? I say I am not criticising that commission one way or the other, and I am not criticising the action of the government of Manitoba one way or the other, and surely my hon. friend is not finding fault with what I said.

In reference to the resolution introduced by my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin), I am convinced that the government of this country is just as anxious to settle this question satisfactorily and in the best interests of the people of this country as the most enthusiastic and ardent supporter of western interests can possibly be. I heard the Premier of Canada, during his western tour last summer, make the statement, in answer to deputations of farmers who waited upon him, that as far as the question of terminal elevators was concerned, his government had put their hand to the plough, and they would not turn back until they had remedied the grievances complained of under present conditions. As to the method, he did not say that his government had decided what it should be, but he was prepared to go the length of government ownership and operation, if necessary, if that were the only remedy that could be afforded. We must remember that there are a great many things that may militate against the success of the farmers' operations. Many years ago, as my hon. friend from Regina intimated, the conditions of the grain trade in western Canada were very serious indeed. As a result of those conditions the farmers of the west became organized, and year after year they have come to Ottawa to lay their views before the government of the day in regard to the proper remedies for the evils that existed. The result has been that for many years past there has been an evolution in the grain laws of this country, an evolution, we confidently believe, wholly in the interest of the producer of grain. The establishment of a loading platform, the bringing into existence of the inspection of grain at Winnipeg, the introduction of government supervision and control at the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, have undoubtedly tended very largely to improve the conditions of the grain trade, and in recent years —in the last year, in fact—other changes have been brought about which, to my mind, have been responsible for a very great change in the grain trade of western Canada. I refer to the establishment at Fort William and Port Arthur of a clearing house, which was not in existence when this question was discussed in this House two sessions ago. Perhaps some hon. members will recall that on that occasion I called the attention of the House to one great loss from which the grain trade was suffering, in the fact that vessels which came to the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur to obtain loads required two or three times as long to load at those ports as they did at American ports, because of the absence of a clearing house. During the following summer the Department of Trade and Commerce, in agreement with the terminal interests at Port Arthur, established a clearing house, with the result that to-day, instead of finding great shortages on our Canadian shipping routes and a great loss of time in loading at Fort William and Port Arthur, the conditions are very much more satisfactory at these ports than they are at ports on the other side of the boundary in the same line of business.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Can the hon. gentleman give me the date when that clearing house was established, and can he say that it has anything to do with remedying the evils of which the farmers of the western country complain?

Mr. NEELY. It was established some time in the summer of 1909. It appears to me to be a very plain proposition that anything that causes loss or waste in the grain trade must affect the price to the farmer, and anything that stops the leaks from the time the grain leaves the farmer to the time it reaches its market must increase the price of the grain. The differences in the figures with regard to the shortages at the ports across the line, and at our own terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, and on the lakes, are very remarkable indeed. The average shortage at Chicago during the last season was 22 pounds of wheat to the 1,000 bushels; at Milwaukee it was 22 pounds. The smallest loss from any American port was 11 pounds per 1,000 bushels. At Fort William and Port Arthur there was actually a surplus of 2 pounds per 1,000 bushels shipped, and that is undoubtedly due to the establishment of the clearing house, which enables the government officials at these ports to fix any shortage at its proper place, and thus bring about a remedy.

I say that there is, in connection with this clearing house, a registration bureau at Fort William and Port Arthur, and this has been a very great step in advance as far as the remedying of the evils of the grain trade is concerned. With regard to this registration bureau, there may be those not familiar with the grain trade who may not understand its objects and effects, and I may point out that although there was a prosecution of a terminal elevator company for having made false returns during the season of 1909, or for having mixed grain, I have not heard of any serious complaints with regard to this season's operation from the purchasers of grain, especially from Fort William or Port Arthur. I have not heard of any complaints regarding the handling of grain at these points, and I think that one of the chief reasons for this improvement is the establishing of a registration bureau at Fort William. The object of this bureau is this, and it has this purpose and effect, that just as soon as an elevator gets a car load of No. 1 Northern wheat, the shipper comes to this registration official, who is called the registrar, who acts partly as a government official and also in the interests of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and whose interests, so far as the terminal elevators are concerned, are identical with those of the western farmer. This registrar gives a receipt for the amount of No. 1 or No. 2 Northern, as the case may be, which the elevator man has received in car lots and has put into his elevator. This must correspond with the grade of wheat certificate furnished by the government weighmaster and inspector. When the elevator man wishes to ship out a certain quantity of No. 1 or No. 2 Northern, he must go to the registrar, and the registrar cancels his receipts to the extent of the amount shipped. When the elevator man is compelled to register with the registration bureau the amount of each particular grade of grain which he takes into his elevator and when that must correspond with the grade of wheat certificate of the government inspector and weighmaster, and when before he can ship out of his elevator any amount of any grade of grain, he must cancel the certificates or receipts with the registrar to the extent of the amount he ships out, can any one tell me how, at the end of the season, it is possible for that man to get away with mixing the grain at those terminals. What would be the benefit? If, for instance, he gets in 10,000 bushels of No. 1 Northern at the end of the season he has cancelled receipts or certificates to that effect, and the inspector goes into his bins and finds 100,000 more bushels No. 1 Northern in them—why it seems absurd a man should undertake operations that lay him immediately open to the clutches of the law. My hon. friends may ask how has it been done before. As a matter of fact this bureau was only established the past season, and since its establishment I have not heard of any serious complaint along the lines of those made in past years.

But there are dozens of other ways in which harm may come to the grain trade, apart from that which came in former years through the operations of these terminals at Port Arthur and Fort William. Take a case of this kind. A short time ago, in conversation with a wholesale baker who purchased flour which he supposed to have been made from wheat of a certain grade, he gave me this information. He was purchasing his flour from a certain miller in Ontario, supposing it to have been made from No. 2 Northern wheat. He found however, that the flour was very bad and not at all what it ought to be. So one day he took a trip to the mill and discovered that the miller was grinding out wheat that averaged No. 4 instead of No. 2 and was selling the flour as No. 2. He went to the miller and charged him with dishonesty, but the miller said that is the wheat I got for No. 2. Now I am absolutely convinced that it was not what that miller got for No. 2. Here is the situation. We have an inspection at Port Arthur and Fort William, but the man who is shipping the grain from those points to any point in Ontario, for instance, says to the seller: I do not want you to put the grade of that grain on your bill of lading. The wheat then comes down to Ontario without any grade marked on the bill of lading, and the miller, in the instance I have cited, may possibly have done this. He may have taken an old grade certificate, a No. 2 grade certificate, and have held that certificate instead of destroying it, and he may have shown that to the baker and have said to him: Here is the grade certificate for the wheat I am grinding into flour for you, when that wheat probably came to him without any grade certificate at all. There you find a side light on this question which shows us that after all the serious trouble in the grain situation, which in years past was at Fort William and Port Arthur, extends today to every point throughout Canada where there is a transfer elevator. We must also remember that a considerable quantity of our wheat goes through the United States. The wheat that goes by the United States we have absolutely no control over from the moment it reaches an American port. The United States refuse to bond our wheat by the grade, they merely bond the quantity, so that in the case of wheat shipped to Buffalo or any other American port, all the shipper is responsible for is the quantity and not the quality, so that wheat of ours may reach the Liverpool market in a demoralized condition as the result of mixture that goes on across the line. I point this out simply to show that all the trouble is not centred, as some hon. members would suggest, at Fort William and Port Arthur, but that the whole grain trade of Canada is in such a position that the operator in grain who wishes to destroy the quality and grade of our grain as these grades are passed through the inspectors' hands at Winnipeg and Fort William has abundant field in any part of Canada. I call attention to these points to show that the question, after all, is not so simple as it might at first appear, and also to call the attention of the government to the fact that any schemes they may introduce—and as I said before, I am satisfied it is their intention to bring in something that will be satisfactory, that will touch the heart of the question—should have cognizance of the grain from the time it leaves the market at the farmers' door until it reaches Liverpool and other world market points.

My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie, (Mr. Meighen), has suggested that there is one remedy for the evils of the grain trade, and that is government ownership and operation. I believe that, before we can have successful government ownership and operation, if that be the necessary solution, we must have men trained to the operating of the terminal and transfer elevators. Thus, in my opinion, the very first step in the solution of this difficult question is the appointment of a commission as suggested by my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin). That hon. gentleman was asked as to the sort of commission he would favour, and I may very well be asked the same question. My answer would be that I would favour a commission with the very widest powers possible, so far as the handling of the grain trade is concerned. I would favour a commission that would hold the same relation toward the grain trade as the Board of Railway Commissioners holds toward the railways. Such legislation would not be entirely new, for such a commission already exists in the State of Minnesota, where, I believe, the conditions of the grain trade are probably more satisfactory than in any other part of North America. They have what they call a warehouse and grain commission which has powers and relations to the grain trade much the same as those held by the Canadian Board of Railway Commissioners in relation to the railways of Canada. The members of this proposed new commission should be men thoroughly versed in the grain situation. And they should be given wide powers; for, if they are the right stamp of men, they can be trusted with such powers. And they should have a length of appointment that would ensure them freedom from any political or partisan influence for a considerable number of years. They should not be subject in any way to corporation influence or control. Get such a commission, give them the powers I have indicated, and it would be in their province to make regulations governing the grain trade, not merely at the terminals, but in every part of Canada, including the Atlantic and Pacific seaports and also our future port on Hudson bay. I would go even further and give them power to send agents abroad to learn of the condition in which Canadian grain is reaching the markets of the world. I have already shown that our grain going through American channels is subject to being tampered with. That is a state of affairs that we could not directly remedy; but, if we had such a commission as I speak of, though they could not control that situation, at least they could notify the purchasers, or would-be purchasers of Canadian grain, that if they wished to secure Canadian grain pure and intact, as it left the inspection department at Winnipeg or at Fort William, they must specify that that grain must pass by all-Canadian routes. That also would be a very important matter that would tend very largely to raise the standard of our grain in the markets of the world. If such a commission were inaugurated, it would be one of their main objects, after having thoroughly familiarized themselves with the conditions as they exist, to come to a conclusion as to the best method of handling the terminal and transfer elevators. The views of this commission would be invaluable as to the necessity or otherwise of government ownership and operation.

Now, I am not prepared to advocate views simply because they are the views of somebody else; and, while all my sympathy goes out to the farmer, not only the farmer of the west, but all the farmers who in the past, have been subject to loss through manipulation of their grain, I must first be convinced that government ownership and operation is essentially and vitally necessary to remedy the evil. It is a very simple proposition, some hon. members would suggest, or may think, to take the step, to go into government ownership. Yes, but if it does not work well, it will be very hard to get out of it. Hon.

members must remember that the grain trade of Canada is only in its infancy. We talk of the large quantities of grain that have been shipped from western Canada within the last couple of years. Why, we are only on the fringe of things in the great west. So, if we take such a step to-day, no matter how sincere we may be, no matter how much we may think it in the interests of the grain producer, if what we do militates in the end against the grain trade, the evil resulting will grow with the years. Therefore, I say, it behooves us to go carefully. Insistent—as I am aware—as are the demands of the farmers of the west for the speedy remedy, and loud as some of them declaim that the only remedy is government ownership and operation, I am free to say that my advice to the government on this occasion would be to consider with the greatest care every step that they take on this question. If they make a mistake now, if they start out on a certain line of policy and that proves not to be what they expected, the harmful results in years to come would be inestimable.

Now, I want to call the attention of my hon. friends who are so strongly in favour of government ownership to one or two features of the government ownership and operation of terminal elevators, and other utilities of this kind. The large financial responsibility involved in the expropriation or purchase of the terminal and transfer elevators of this country is not a thing to be waived lightly aside. We must remember, as I have already remarked, that while at the present moment this would involve an enormous outlay of money, in the days to come when new seaports are established in Canada, and our grain trade increases, this will involve an ever increasing expenditure on the part of the government. I am not saying that the country is not rich enough to do this. I am simply reminding the House that we must not consider as a question of no moment the taking over of these elevators. There is another feature in this question. We might possibly have some difficulty in getting hold of these elevators, it might ultimately mean expropriation. I want to ask my hon. friends who are in favour of this principle if they consider that drastic measures of that kind at the present stage of Canada's development, form the best method we can adopt to induce foreign capital to come into this country for its development. The other day we heard a member of this House speak very strongly in favour of bringing our railways to account by reason of their excessive rates. These excessive rates probably exist to some extent, how far we do not know. But there is this to remember. The people of western Canada are so anxious to get railroads at the present time, no matter whose capital builds them, that I am quite certain the majority of the people would prefer to pay even excessive rates rather than have no railway transportation at all. So I say that we must be a little cautious how we proceed lest we discourage the investment of foreign capital in the enterprises that are necessary to develop this great country.

Another thing I would refer to the consideration of those who believe that government ownership and operation is the only principle to adopt. Any system that is adopted must be a flexible system. By that I mean that there must be no obstacle put in the way of the natural and easy flow of grain in the channels of trade as they now exist in Canada. I have already pointed out that it is essential that so far as possible we retain our Canadian trade in Canadian channels ; that is to say, we must encourage the shippers and buyers to ship grain by all Canadian routes if they wish the identity of that grain to be preserved until it reaches the markets of the world. Now, let this government undertake to impose conditions at the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur that will make the burden of shipping via those points onerous on the grain dealers, what will be the natural result? The natural result will be that trade will follow the lines of least resistance, and instead of the bulk of our grain going by Canadian ports as it does at present, we will find it directed towards American ports ; the grain will lose its identity, and we will lose the benefit of having it go by an all Canadian route. Take for instance, our customs and our post office administrations. We understand that there must be rules laid down for any government institution, and that it must be operated strictly according to those rules. You cannot leave everything at the discretion of the official who is operating. So conditions might arise under government ownership and operation that might be onerous to the man who is dealing in grain, and if that occurs once or twice in the experience of a grain dealer, the result will be that he will transfer the field of his operations to some place where conditions are not so onerous. Now, I am not suggesting that we should make the grain trade so flexible that the grain dealer can do what he likes with his grain ; that is not the point at all. I am referring simply to the problem of transportation, of getting the grain from the farmer's home to the markets of the world with as little friction and trouble as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, in solution of this question, a method that will preserve the quality of the grain intact from the time it leaves the government inspector at Winnipeg and Fort William until it reaches the markets of the world. I say again that government ownership and operation of the terminals and transfer elevators further east alone will not prove a solution of this difficulty, if, indeed, it be necessary at all to a solution of the question. This commission I suggest should have very large powers; they should be able, like the Railway Commission, to deal with every feature and phase of the grain trade from the initial elevator right through so far as our Canadian jurisdiction extends. There is no manner of doubt that to-day our law is too lenient. The men who in the past have been manipulating grain, making an improper admixture, under regulations less severe than we have to-day, have undoubtedly got off too light. The laws of the state of Minnesota are much more severe than are ours in regard to the penalties imposed. The question has been asked: What penalties should be fixed by a commission for elevator operators who break the laws? Unfortunately, many of the owners of our terminal elevators are not citizens of Canada; they reside in the United States, outside the jurisdiction of our law. The only remedy I can think of for that condition is that every elevator company operating at terminal points in Canada should be compelled to name and bond some prominent Canadian citizen, some business man on this side of the line, who would personally be responsible for the operation of their elevators. It would not be sufficient that the man who operates the elevator at a salary of, perhaps, $3,000 or $4,000 a year should suffer a penalty of 5 or 10 years' imprisonment for infractions of the law, there should be some substantial individual named as the representative of the company operating the elevator, and that person should be made responsible for any infraction of the law to the extent of any fine that may be imposed, as well as to imprisonment for that infraction. There is even a further penalty that may be imposed, cancellation of the license for a year or two years.

Mr. McKENZIE. Are the elevator companies incorporated?

Mr. NEELY. They are, and must have a license.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then they are subject to indictment and fine as corporations?

Mr. NEELY. But the penalties imposed under the present Grain Act are not sufficiently severe. I think that while this matter is under consideration the penalty should be made so severe and the power of the commission to exact these penalties be made so absolute that there would be no inducement to the terminal elevator operator to do anything but the right and proper thing. I have endeavoured to place before the House the different aspects of this question and to impress the necessity, before any definite principle is laid down by this House for the advice and direction of this government, that we should understand that the evils of the grain trade are of far greater extent than the manipulation of grain at Fort William and Port Arthur, that this mixing process may go on in any part of Canada outside of these ports and that whatever provision is made must be great enough and wide enough to protect our grain from the time it leaves the farmer's home market until it reaches not only the sea-board but the markets of the world.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). I do not intend to address the House at any great length on this question. I may say at once, on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread, that I will certainly support the motion presented by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) to-day; but in saying that I am thoroughly convinced that an operation will have to be performed on that resolution in order to squeeze out half a loaf. My friend from Regina referred to some very interesting figures of the amount of wheat grown in Saskatchewan. I only wish there were ten times as much grown there, and there no doubt will be at some future time. He made a comparison of the amount of wheat grown in Saskatchewan with the amount grown in Manitoba, saying it was about three times as much. I have not verified these figures but I have verified the figures that they have a province, given by this government, nearly four times as big as our little country of Manitoba, and I would like to know whose fault it is that our province is so small to-day? It is due to what I may call the ungenerous way in which the Prime Minister and his government have used that province of Manitoba.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER I said I was not going to occupy the time of the House because I intend to bring forward at the very first opportunity a resolution which I believe will be definite, which is on the Order Paper and about the next in order. One of the hon. gentlemen said that we on this side of the House felt ourselves in a very delicate position. I have only to speak for myself, and if I may judge from the arguments put forward and the tremendous effort that has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to speak on this question, it will not be difficult for a reading public to understand who are the gentlemen who are in a delicate position. So far as I am personally concerned, I am in no delicate postion, my position is definite, is decided, and I shall, when the proper time comes, speak to that motion and support it, believing that it is right. A number of questions have been referred to to-day but I shall defer discussing them until my resolution comes up. One of these question relates to the government operation of so-called line elevators throughout Manitoba and the other provinces. I shall content myself to-day with repeating that I hope we shall reach the conclusion of this debate this afternoon in time to enable us to place ourselves on record as to how we feel in connection with the government ownership and operation of these important elevators throughout this country, the terminal elevators.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to some of the hon. members who have been discussing this question that the trouble is not altogether with the terminal elevators. It is the general representation that there is a good deal of manipulation going on in these elevators. I happened to be in the House when the delegation of western farmers was here and I heard their arguments. The difficulty arises very largely long before the grain reaches the terminal elevators and it is a defect in part in the legislation. I believe that when the grain reaches Winnipeg, and it may be there purchased by A, B and C and transferred to the local elevators. I do not know what the practice may be to-day as there may have been some recent change within the last few months. It is not inspected into these elevators although samples are taken, but it is inspected when it comes out of the elevators and it is reinspected at the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. That leaves the door open for any amount of manipulation, it permits the operator to mix it as much as he pleases, to buy a low grade and to mix with it a certain amount of a higher grade and bring it out so it will all pass out as a higher grade. That cannot take place at the terminal elevator for the reason that the grain is inspected into the elevator and out of the elevator. According to the regulations the elevator company cannot give out a greater quantity of any particular grade than their records will show they have taken in. There ought to be no great difficulty in protecting the grain at the terminal elevator or elsewhere if the regulations go far enough. Under our banking system, there is no trouble to turn up the records at any time and find how a man's bank account stands, his deposits and audits, and so with the grain trade there could not be this manipulation if the regulations are enforced and proper records kept. I am not prepared to say that the regulations may not be improved, I am assuming they are sufficient if they are enforced. The only possible manipulation that could possibly take place at the terminal elevator is, that the inspector might say: This grain should be cleaned to a certain extent. It is graded No. 1 or No. 2 Northern provided a certain amount of small grain and waste material is eliminated, and if that full quantity is not taken from it then the grain will measure out more bushels than the certificate will show and to that extent there might be manipulation to the value of these few extra bushels of grain. I believe that has been frequently done, but it is an evil that could readily be prevented. I have not had an opportunity of reading the hon. gentleman's motion, and I am, therefore, perhaps at a loss in speaking to it, but I may say that the remedy would not be applied within a reasonable time by the taking over of the elevators under government control. The object of that is to remove temptation by having the staff in these elevators disinterested so that there would be no motive for the manipulation which now takes place. Well, Sir, I cannot see wherein there would be better protection for the public in that respect than there is to-day under the system of examination if the regulations are made properly workable, and if they are properly enforced. In that respect I fancy I agree more or less with the last speaker. Now, there is a good deal more than the terminal elevators to be considered. Grain is not inspected through all the country elevators; the grain buyers put their grain into the elevators in the country; they need not route it to Winnipeg; they may route it through to the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William, and in that case I admit there is very little if any opportunity for manipulation after the grain is shipped. But they may mix the grain previous to shipping it; they may say: Here, I can buy this at No. 1 Northern and this at No. 2, and this at No. 3. In my opinion these grains ought to be graded out No. 1, and they may be mixed, and if the buyer is a good judge he may get the No. 1 grade for the whole bulk of the grain he has purchased, and that does frequently happen. Then, as to our milling companies; the milling companies at Winnipeg, and Kenora, and Fort William, and all other points have their own elevators and they buy the grain without any restriction whatever as the regulations do not relate to them at all. They can mix it as much as they like, and they can grind the inferior grade or the better grades just as they please. The question is a very wide one, and if it is to be dealt with at all it seems to me there ought to be some system of dealing with it all along the line.

Now, there is another question in connection with this matter; there are certain elevators at different points in the country that do not deal with custom grain at all; they are built by certain men for the purpose of handling their own grain. I am aware that there is a question of some dispute just now as to whether an individual or a company should be allowed to carry on that business. I am not going to discuss that question because it is considerably involved and there is perhaps a good deal to be said on both sides, but at first blush it does seem to me that it is rather an extreme measure to say to any company or person: you shall not put machinery into a building to clean the grain that you may purchase. I believe the whole question of the protection of the farmer who produces grain can be worked out by proper regulations, if these regulations are wide enough and broad enough and extend not to one, but to all points, and are enforced. If the door is left open at one point for a continuance of the evil it is sought to remedy, then the door will be left open for manipulation all along the line, and I do not believe that a remedy can be applied in that way.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). It is so near six o'clock that I do not propose to speak at any length on this resolution. Another reason why I shall not discuss the resolution at length is that it is very indefinite in its character, and a third reason is that just two items down on the Order Paper there is a resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) which proposes to apply a remedy in concrete form for the grievances which exist and upon which the House can express a definite opinion. In order to show the aimless character of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) I shall read it:

That in the opinion of this House, in view of the investigations recently made by the government into the conditions existing in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and in view of the disclosures as a result of such investigations, it is in the interests of the western grain producers and of Canada generally that such measures be adopted by the government as will more effectually prevent the improper admixture of grain delivered to the several terminal and transfer elevators through which the grain of the western provinces may pass.

Now, that is a most indefinite and vague resolution, so indefinite indeed, that no one could offer any objection to it. It suggests no remedy and it leaves the hon. gentleman who moved it (as no doubt his object was) open to vote for any legislation that the government of which he is a follower may introduce into this parliament. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) approved of the legislation introduced into this House in 1908, and he expressed his approbation of it in a speech delivered here in 1909. He tells us that slowly and by degrees he has become a convert to government ownership, although it was rather difficult for us to ascertain what the hon. gentleman did pin himself down to, so contradictory were his statements. First he was opposed to government ownership, and then he was in favour of it; first he was in favour of operating these elevators under a commission, without government ownership, and when he sat down he left us altogether in the dark as to what were his particular views on the whole matter.

Now, this resolution in regard to the measures that should be adopted evidently did not meet with the approbation of his colleague from Humboldt (Mr. Neely), because that hon. gentleman's argument, if it meant anything, meant opposition to government ownership and operation of terminal elevators; otherwise, why did he point out to the government the disadvantages of such a policy? Why did he point out the expense of it, and say that it would necessitate expropriation and possibly drive capital out of the country? In fact, we do not need to read between the lines, because it was patent that the hon. gentleman was opposed to the measure suggested by the farmers of the west.

The hon. member for Regina paid a well-deserved tribute to the farmers who congregated in Ottawa in such large numbers prior to the holidays. In that tribute I can heartily join. The careful manner in which they prepared their case and presented it must convince us all that those gentlemen had made a careful study of the various questions dealt with, especially the question now under discussion, and on this question they came to the conclusion which, in my opinion at any rate, offers the only solution that would be satisfactory to the grain trade. The hon. member for Regina stated that he approved of their suggestions with reference to the tariff, because they advocated a lower tariff. He also approved of their suggestion regarding the Hudson Bay railway. Why did he not go a little further and say that he approved, also, of the remedy they suggested for the terminal elevator problem? If there is anything on which the judgment of the farmers should guide this House, it is the question under discussion. On the question of the tariff each of us is just as able, and possibly better able, than the average farmer to form our conclusions, whereas on this question, in which they are vitally interested, which they have been studying year after year in their various local associations and farmers' parliaments, they are in a much better position to express a competent opinion than on possibly any other question dealt with in their memorial to this House.

In the session of 1907-8 delegates visited this government and parliament on this question. The transportation companies, the farmers, the elevator companies and the bankers were all represented, and, indeed, almost every other interest connected with the shipping of grain, and they had an interview with the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his room. To that meeting the members of parliament were invited, and we heard the discussions proceeding day after day pro and con. As a result of those discussions the Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook to prepare amendments to the Manitoba Grain Act, and they were subsequently introduced to this House during the same session. Just prior to their introduction, however, a small delegation of farmers came here, consisting of Mr. Langley, a member of the Saskatchewan legislature, and Mr. Mackenzie, the secretary of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association, and they were here for some days. We on this side of the House were not honoured with an invitation to the conferences they were having with the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but we learned from some of the government members that they had access to those meetings. Session after session was held with regard to that Bill, but the Conservative members of this House were left entirely in the dark as to what was proceeding. However, when the amendments were brought down, they were the subject of criticism, not by hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House, but by hon. gentlemen on the opposition side. We expressed our conviction that the amendments introduced would not accomplish the purpose desired by the farmers, and the result has proved that our contention was correct. I remember, during the election of 1908, meeting a certain senator in my constituency, who, in defending the government's action on this question, took the ground that while they did not go so far as to provide for government ownership and operation of terminal elevators, they had given something just as good—like the proverbial dealer, who, when out of a particular article which is desired, offers something else which he asserts is just as good. The senator also said that the two farmers who were here, Messrs. Mackenzie and Langley, were satisfied with the amendments which had been introduced. I was rather surprised to hear that, for I felt convinced that it could not be so, and the very best evidence of that was that immediately after the election these same two gentlemen joined the farmers of the west in petitioning the government in favour of government ownership and operation of terminal elevators. Whether these two gentlemen had given their consent to those amendments merely until the election was over, for fear of injuring their political friends they themselves know best, but that the farmers of the west were not satisfied with the amendments proved to be correct, and both of these gentlemen have been since down here as delegates to protest against the present Act.

The hon. member for Humboldt has stated that he is in favour of a commission, not to operate the elevators, but something like the Railway Commission, to enjoy the very widest powers to make regulations with regard to the whole grain-growing trade of the country. The Railway Commission does not operate the various railways of the country, therefore I think my deduction is fair when I say that his suggestion was not that a commission should operate the terminal elevators, but should merely supervise the operation carried on under private ownership. This I am satisfied would not be any more satisfactory to the farmers than is the present Act.

Now the hon. member for Regina referred to the fact that the Royal Commission did not recommend government ownership and operation. They merely recommended a way of compelling the cleaning of the grain under government supervision by private owners. That is what the government provided for in the session of 1907-8, which has proved to be entirely unsatisfactory.

At the same time that the farmers were urging on this government to take over the terminal elevators they were also urging on the respective provincial governments in the west to take over the various interior elevators, and to operate them. The hon. member for Humboldt referred to the fact of the Manitoba government having done that, and while he did not condemn it, he left the impression upon the House that they had acted hastily, and he warned this government to take their time and not rush into government ownership and operation. We are not asking the government to do anything hastily. This question has been before this House for years. It has engaged the attention of this parliament and of previous parliaments, and it has been discussed by the press and by the farmers for years past. It is no new proposition. It is true, the Manitoba government did comply with the request of the farmers in that respect so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. They appointed a commission on which two out of the three members are gentlemen who were suggested by the executive of the farmers' organization, in response to the government's request. These three commissioners are running the interior elevators to-day entirely independent of the government, except that the government is responsible to the people for the expenditure of the money. And still this does not satisfy some gentlemen in the province of Manitoba of the political faith of hon. gentlemen opposite.

But, in order to have the interior elevators working to the best advantage, the farmers of the west feel convinced, it is absolutely necessary for this government to act in concert with them, and take over and operate the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur as well as the transfer elevators on this side of the lakes. And, while it is felt that provincial ownership of the interior elevators will redound to the benefit of the farmers, it is believed that it will not be a full success unless the terminal elevators are operated by the Dominion government. That does not necessarily mean the purchase at extravagant prices of existing elevators. As has been suggested by hon. members in this House to-day, and on previous occasions, those elevators could be leased. In fact, in conversation, I have heard some of the owners of those elevators express themselves as willing to lease the elevators to the government, thus making unnecessary the expense that would be entailed upon the country of initiating this policy by purchase. A lease might be made for a term of years for operation by the government, for, personally, I have no faith in the public operation of elevators that are privately owned, even under a government appointed commission.

I shall have an opportunity on the resolution of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) to express further my opinion on the question of public ownership, so I need not trespass longer on the attention of the House.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia). There is no doubt that the question under discussion is one of the big questions as far as the west is concerned. As was pointed out by one of the speakers on this side, a couple of years ago, some 80,000,000 of bushels of wheat passed through Fort William and Port Arthur. This is practically another way of saying that eighty million gold dollars passed through the elevators there. If there is anything wrong in the handling of this wheat by the men in charge of the terminal elevators, it is, beyond doubt, the duty of the government to find a remedy for that wrong. And, to my mind, this government, during all the time it has been in power, has shown every desire to deal in the best way with this question. During the past three or four years they have done much to better the conditions of the wheat trade throughout the western country and at the terminal elevators. I well remember that when the matter was under discussion two or three years ago, and when it was suggested that the government should take over and control the terminal elevators, it was felt by a great many who took part in the discussion that the same results could be secured by taking control of the elevators as would be gained by government purchase and operation. I am free to admit that I was one of the members representing the farmers of the west who took that view. I thought, and thought honestly, that if we had men in charge of the different elevators, we would be able so to regulate and control the wheat passing through these elevators and that such wrong-doing as had been complained of could be put a stop to. I expressed myself then, as I express myself now, as emphatically opposed to government ownership and government operation of anything in which these things can possibly be avoided. My experience of the government—not of this government alone, but of all governments, that we have had in Canada—in the operation of public utilities they have now in hand, does not induce me to support the taking over and operation by the government of any more public utilities. But I will go so far as to say that, if no other method can be adopted by which these 80,000,000 bushels of wheat, which in a few years will be 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, equal to two hundred million gold dollars, can be properly controlled,—if any combination of American wheat scalpers can get control of these elevators and practically pick out one dollar out of every hundred that goes through, then I say I am willing to go the length of government ownership and operation in this particular question. But I am not sure that all other expedients have been tried. I am satisfied now that the present system of operation by government control is not satisfactory. And I will tell you why it is not satisfactory. You may put a man in charge of an elevator, and he may be able to direct the men in the elevator where and how they are to handle the wheat. But he cannot be at a dozen places at once; and, in spite of everything he can do, and no matter how good a man you may select, if the elevator is owned by men owning also the interior elevators, whose object it is to make money by manipulating the farmers' wheat, that man cannot prevent that manipulation. Certainly, you cannot stop it by means of fines. Why, I look upon that fine of $5,000 that was inflicted upon one of them some time ago as practically a license to go on and do business. What is $5,000 to a terminal elevator? They could make double that in one day's mixing if allowed a free hand. If, as suggested by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), the law were amended and it were provided that if any elevator company were found guilty of fraudulent returns to the government or of mixing grades, their license would at once be cancelled and the guilty parties would be imprisoned for one year for the first offence and three years for a second offence, I think probably you would get over that difficulty. We have some of the same men operating in the elevators in Fort William to-day, who were chased out of Minnesota—some of the same gang. They have a law in Minnesota, as I understand it, something on the line suggested by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), on several occasions. They have a commission there to operate the elevators, composed of men who are not in the grain trade and who have never, at any time in their lives, been connected with the grain trade.

I do not know sufficiently about the system in Minnesota to say whether it is an absolutely good one; but I know that in the states of Minnesota and Dakota they had years ago the same difficulties in dealing with the question that we had some years past in the west—exactly the same only a good deal worse. But they have largely overcome them and, as I understand from grain men, millers and exporters, the present system applied in the terminal elevators at Minnesota is giving satisfaction. So that, while I am not at all sure about it in my own mind, if something in that line can be effected here which will give the same satisfaction as government ownership and operation, that would suit my ideas a good deal better.

Mr. ROCHE. Was the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) correct in his surmise that they allow mixing in Minnesota at present?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am not sufficiently familiar with their system to be able to speak definitely. All I can say is that I have spoken with a number of men who have looked carefully into the subject, and they have expressed the opinion that the Minnesota system of handling their terminal elevators by an independent commission, who have never been connected with the grain trade, was working very satisfactorily, so satisfactorily that these men who are now scalping wheat in Fort William and Port Arthur were driven out of business in Minnesota because they could not do business along the lines they wanted to and consequently drifted into our country.

Mr. CONMEE. They are still in business in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth as well.

Mr. TURRIFF. They may be, but they are doing business on a different basis from the way they are doing it in Fort William and Port Arthur. The trouble is that the terminal elevators have got out of the hands of the railways. As long as they were in the hands of the railways there was no great dissatisfaction. The Canadian Pacific railway always handled their elevators well. In Fort William and Port Arthur, that company always gave very good satisfaction. There used to be some objection to the charges made for the handling of wheat, but there was never any charge that the terminal elevators, owned and operated by the Canadian Pacific railway, ever tried to do the farmers up for the benefit of the dealers. There was no object in their doing so. Later on, however, when the Canadian Northern railway built its elevators in Port Arthur, it leased the operation to Americans, who have subsidiary companies all through the west and own hundreds of elevators in all parts of the three prairie provinces. There is where the difficulty originated. The trouble has been that they use their opportunities to the great disadvantage of the farmers. There is no doubt in my mind that some of the regulations made during the past year by the Department of Trade and Commerce are a long step in the right direction. It has been pointed out to me by men in the grain trade this winter that now it is most difficult for any of these terminal elevators—no matter how anxious they may be to do wrong—to do so without being caught. But here I want to say that I do not believe you can watch them successfully. They will find some way of getting around the law. What we want in the west, what the western farmer and the Ontario millers, and the exporters want, is to be able to buy 100 cars of No. 3 Northern wheat and be sure of getting that grade. And mind you there is a spread of 4 cents between No. 2 and No. 3 Northern, those 100 cars will average about half way up between No. 2 and No. 3 Northern, so that the wheat will be worth 1¾ cents per bushel higher than the price of No. 3 Northern, and will average that. What we want to accomplish is that when a farmer sells his wheat, the man who buys will be able to get that same quality and not a grade that is skinned right down so that it will barely scale say to No. 3 Northern. The question is how best we can accomplish that. This is not a political matter in any sense, and any one who tries to bring politics into it is very foolish and will not succeed in gaining anything.

Every one in the west, and I think also in the east, wants to have something done that will enable the farmer to get a fair price for his wheat. I have heard it often said that the grain dealers do not make more than a fair profit. There is a good deal in that, but I will tell you why. A grain dealer will make $50,000 a year up from the business but he will then go and speculate on margin in the Chicago market, and lose $45,000 of his $50,000. Then he will say that he has worked a whole year and invested a lot of money and only made $5,000.

There is not only difficulty in the way of grading, but there has been a certain amount of difficulty in connection with the weighing of wheat. When I was in the west some two or three months ago, I went into the matter somewhat fully, and it was made clear to me that a good deal of the difficulty which occurs from the weighing of wheat in Fort William and Port Arthur elevators comes from the fact that a lot of those elevators are old, and not from any desire to do wrong or injustice. They were built many years ago and their weighing machinery is obsolete, and when you have a thousand cars coming in in a day, as often happens in the rush in the fall, it is very difficult to give the same attention to each individual carload as should be given to it. I was asked by one man who was very much interested in having the weights correct whether something could not be done to have those elevators supplied with proper weighing machinery. Either the government should take them over or see that they were equipped with up to date machinery, or those who are running them should be compelled to put in such machinery so as to do away with the possibilities of making mistakes and causing dissatisfaction to the shippers.

Another difficulty is in connection with the cleaning of the wheat. For instance a farmer ships a carload to his commission agent in Winnipeg and the inspector grades it No. 2 Northern with a dockage of 5 per cent. That goes down to one of these terminal elevators, owned by a private company; and supposing they only take three per cent cleanage out of it, they can put it in and ship it out with the grade, and they just make that much in the weight. Something, therefore, ought to be done.

Something must be done. Either we must have a commission to take charge of those elevators and run them—and I cannot conceive how the commission could run them if they were owned by private individuals. If they were owned by railway companies, then it could be done, because railway companies have no object in doing anything but what is absolutely fair as between seller and buyer. But if the elevators are still to be owned by private companies who are working through the west, I do not see how you can obviate the evils that are said to exist, and that no doubt do exist at present.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has the hon. gentleman any suggestion to make other than government operation? Does he think government operation would cure these evils better than anything else?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am free to admit that I am not sufficiently familiar with the merits or demerits of the Minnesota system to say whether it would overcome the evils we have complained of. Under the Minnesota system, I do not know whether the elevators are owned by warehouse people or by interior elevator companies. I cannot say that at present I have any proposition in my mind that I feel would be satisfactory, outside government ownership and operation. But I want to say that if any other system can be found that promises to be equally effective, then, on the general principle of being opposed to government ownership, I would rather see that tried. But I think the commission system is at least the best adapted to government ownership and operation, and would result in the fewest difficulties. The western farmer is a reasonable man, he has never objected to paying for inspection, or weighing, or for freight charges. He is quite prepared to pay all the charges on every bushel of wheat he ships. So the government could take hold of these elevators and run very little risk of making any losses, because it is a much simpler matter to deal with than most other public utilities. But I want to point out that there are some serious objections to the government taking over these elevators. You may go ahead at present and build a new elevator with reinforced concrete, or brick, or of some fire-proof material; but you can operate that elevator so much more cheaply than the old elevators built ten, fifteen or twenty years ago, at Port Arthur and Fort William, that if the owners of those old elevators were to hand them over to the government as a present, the government could not run them any cheaper than they could build up-to-date new elevators, and make the other charges.

Mr. LANCASTER. What would be the objection to doing that?

Mr. TURRIFF. Obsolete machinery in the old elevators, and another objection is the matter of insurance. In an up-to-date elevator, if it is absolutely fire-proof, you do not have to insure, because nothing in it can burn. But the old elevator is a wooden construction which has to be insured, along with perhaps a million bushels of wheat worth a million dollars; and although the rate is reasonably low, still it runs up. It was explained to me in Winnipeg three or four months ago that the cost of operating one of those old elevators to-day, if you got it for nothing, would be higher than the interest on a new up-to-date elevator.

Mr. LANCASTER. Assuming it were wise for the government to operate them, what would be the objection to building new and properly equipped elevators upon the same sites as the old elevators?

Mr. TURRIFF. This objection, that these people put their money into a legiti-mate business years ago, built the elevators, according to the best method that was known at that time, and it would be unfair to pass legislation to put them out of business, and give them nothing at all for their property. So the government, in buying and running these elevators, will have to pay a great deal more than they are worth. That is one objection, but it is not an insurmountable objection. It would be better to do that even, if you could thereby stop the manipulation, and, mixing, and deterioration that goes on to-day. I claim it would be better for the government to take them over, even if we paid for them more than they were worth, and I scarcely ever yet knew of any government buying a thing without paying for it more than it was worth.

Mr. LANCASTER. Could not that be remedied by proper arbitration?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have seen a good many arbitrations between the government and individuals, and the government nearly always have to pay more than the private individual could get for it if he sold it to any one else. That is one difficulty, but it can be overcome. Now, with reference to the general question of public ownership, I was very sorry to hear my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe), who is usually a very mild and reasonable gentleman, make such an insinuation as he did on the members of the Saskatchewan commission. That commission was composed of a noted professor, I think from the lower provinces, who was chairman; one of the other members was president of the Grain Growers' Association of the province of Saskatchewan, and the third man was one of the executive of the Grain Growers' Association of Saskatchewan, and a member of the local legislature. To make the statement that this commission had their report written out and put into their hands before they ever started out to take evidence was, to my mind, an insinuation and a slur against the honour of these gentlemen that was altogether uncalled for, unless the hon. member was prepared to lay on the table of the House the absolute proof of that statement. I know Mr. Green, and I know Mr. Langley. I do not know Prof. McGill, but I am satisfied money would not hire either of these gentlemen to do such a thing. I think my hon. friend from Lisgar, when he comes to think it over, will feel it his duty to rise in this House and withdraw that statement. It is not a statement that should be allowed to go out into the country without contradiction. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) felt a little warm over Manitoba being small. It is true Manitoba is not as large as some of the other provinces, but I might ask who formed the province of Manitoba? I remember the occasion, and it was done by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald. A little later on, the Manitoba government thought the province was not large enough, and asked to have it enlarged, and the government of Sir John Macdonald, who had some very good points about it, gave them all they asked for, every acre. Then my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) starts in to abuse this government because the government of which he was a supporter many years ago, on two different occasions, in dealing with this subject, gave the people of Manitoba all they asked for. Now they try to put the blame on this government. I remember some years ago, when the present premier of Manitoba came to my part of the country, then the district of Assiniboia, and had the nerve to propose that we in Assiniboia, then part of the Northwest Territories, should agree to the extending of the western boundary of Manitoba up to about Moosejaw. That would have been all right, perhaps, for the present premier of Manitoba, but it did not suit us at all, and the province of Manitoba can never be extended on the west. But there is a great tract of country there to the north, which can be included in the province of Manitoba, and in reference to which this government has made reasonable offers to the people and the government of Manitoba, so although the province of Manitoba has not yet been enlarged, the blame does not lie with this government, but lies at the door of the present government of Manitoba. Thus I do not think any point can be made against this government in that respect.

Mr. ROCHE. Is it a fact that the legislature of Saskatchewan, at its last session, unanimously passed a resolution in favour of the Dominion government taking over the terminal elevators?

Mr. TURRIFF. I could not tell the hon. gentleman if they did or not. I am not aware. I regret that it is six o'clock, as there is a great deal more I would like to say on the subject.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is expected that to-morrow Mr. Fielding will make a statement to the House, and then we will take up Bills, probably the Bill in regard to the waterways.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if this is the proper time, I would ask leave to bring up the motion I made yesterday, which the hon. member for North Toronto suggested should be left over for consideration until to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the committee from which the report is made has between 70 and 80 members. That is a pretty large committee, and it seems as if we shall scarcely get from that committee such an authoritative revision and recommendation on matters concerning banking and commerce, as shall have force in this House, if we now reduce its quorum to 15. This would make it possible to get measures through the committee by drumming up a very few members, whose recommendation might not be at all representative of the majority of the committee and would hardly be called authoritative for this House. I would be very sorry to see the quorum of the committee reduced to 15. Possibly this talk and warning may have the effect of advertising members of that committee that they should be a little more careful in attending to their duties. I shall take that as a warning and advertisement to myself. The whole trouble arises, as I have said before, and as the Prime Minister has agreed, from having too large committees, so that when three or four are meeting on the same day, it is impossible for the members to attend properly to their duties on any one of them. Maybe this little discussion, and this statement of what seems to be coming if that committee does not attend to a greater extent to its duties, will be sufficient to bring about the desired end, namely, that it shall be a working committee. Nobody desires that it should be made any smaller than is absolutely necessary to gain the ends of revision and recommendation to this House.

Mr. MILLER. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that the membership of the committee is from 70 to 80. However, when only 15 members of the committee are in attendance, it does not necessarily mean that 55 or 65 are neglecting their duties.

Mr. FOSTER. I will set the hon. gentleman and myself right by saying that the clerk informs me that there are 134 members of that committee. This reduces the idea of making 15 a quorum for such a committee pretty well to an absurdity.

Mr. MILLER. It does not necessarily mean that all the members who are not present are neglecting their duties, because, as a matter of fact, every member of the Banking and Commerce Committee is also a member of at least one other committee, and many of them members of two or three other committees. Several of these committees meet at the same time. Yesterday there were meetings of the Committees on Agriculture, Banking and Commerce, Public Accounts, and Printing, and many of the 130 members of the Banking and Commerce Committee were actually in attendance on these other committees. It would be very desirable if we could get every member of the Banking and Commerce Committee to attend and take an interest in the business of that committee. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said just now that he would take this discussion as a warning to himself that he ought to be more constant in attendance on this committee. If so, that would bring about a very good result because the hon. gentleman is a member of this committee, and not very constant in his attendance. In saying this I am not implying that he is in any way neglecting his duties because no doubt, when not present at the meetings of this committee, he is doing possibly better work in connection with his public duties elsewhere. But that is also the position of many other members of the committee. The whole matter was carefully discussed in the committee on Wednesday morning, and both sides were unanimous in the opinion that the quorum ought to be reduced. Under present conditions, and that no doubt applies to many other committees, if business is to be proceeded with at all the chairman has to see a quorum when really there is none. Rather than have the committee do business in that irregular way, it would be better to have the quorum reduced.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I went to the trouble this afternoon to secure a copy of the printed list of committees in order to ascertain whether I was a member of this Banking and Commerce Committee, and I did so because I have never yet this session received a notice to attend any of its meetings, and it is quite possible there may be other members who have likewise not been notified.

An hon. MEMBER. Here is one.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I take great care to note my committees in my diary. The night before last I had only two and yesterday two, and was quite surprised to read in the evening papers that there was a meeting of this Banking and Commerce Committee. Before any action be taken, we should have this matter referred back to the committee, and have a full meeting. What is the use of holding hole and corner meetings, at which only some of the members are present, and then passing resolutions. No doubt it is very easy not to have a quorum if the secretary neglects to notify the members of a committee to attend the meeting, and the fact that all the members of this committee were not notified to attend ought to induce the hon. member to withdraw his resolution for the present.

Mr. SPROULE. During the discussion which was held at the last meeting of this committee, it was quite apparent that there was great difficulty in getting a quorum. No doubt that is partly due to all the members not being notified, but I think the chief trouble is the number of committees which hold meetings on the same day. Greater care should be taken not to have so many committees meet on the same day. When the meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee took place, there were three other committees being held and members could not attend them all, so that necessarily there would be a slim attendance at some of these. But because of the length of time taken in waiting to get a quorum, the suggestion was made to reduce the quorum. I think, in the first place, that the committee is entirely too large. The quorum would seem to be a small one compared with the size of the committee, but it is a reduction from 21 to 15, and it seems to me that if we reduce the quorum at all 15 is a fair number. My experience of late years is that the business is done by a few members, perhaps from 10 to 25. There may be a quorum at the start, but members leave and even if there be then no quorum, the business still goes on. One of two things ought to be done. Either an arrangement should be made not to have so many committees called for the same day or the size of each committee should be reduced.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Everybody will agree that the evil is that the committees are altogether too large. That matter was discussed by my hon. friend opposite and myself when we were forming the committees this year, but we did not think it advisable to make any alteration in the number during the present parliament, but to wait until the new parliament and then endeavour to reduce the committees to a practical number.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe that to a certain extent I am responsible for the motion to reduce the number from 21 to 15. The reason for this motion was that if the number was reduced we could do business legally and regularly and not do, as at present, the work with a lesser number than is required by the rules of the House. I may say it is no unusual thing to find a small meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee. I do not understand that every member who is on the list is expected to be present, but the idea of putting a large number on the committee is to give an opportunity of attending to any member who has any special interest in any matter that comes before it, and if there is nothing before the committe in which he is specially interested he is not called upon to attend. There is a good deal in what the chairman says, that the business of that committee from year to year is conducted by a few members, and I am not aware that the business is not just as well done as if a hundred were present. I remember on one occasion—I have not mentioned it before, and I mention it now to show how difficult it is to get business through that committee—on one occasion a good many years ago only two members of the committee turned up, the chairman even was absent, and a matter of some importance, at least requiring immediate attention, was to come up. I was moved to the chair by the other member, the other member made the motion, I put it, the clerk drew up the report, the report was adopted and presented, and I never heard that what was done on that occasion by two members was not just as well done as if it had been done by the whole quorum. However, I promised to myself that I would never repeat that. Perhaps it was not the proper thing to do, and I have no desire to repeat it. But I do not think the members of that committee are all expected to attend a meeting, when there are three or four committees sitting, but it gives the members of the House an opportunity, when there is anything special before the committee, of going there and expressing their opinion, and voting on the question. The same thing applies to the Committee on Railways and Canals that has, I think, 160 or 180 members. You never find them all there, perhaps not much more than half of them. Yet we have an opportunity, if a special circumstance calls for it, to be present. I do not object to putting the number back to 21 again if the members will only attend the committee. But let us do it in a legal way, instead of doing business without a quorum.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am a member of that committee, and I did not receive a notice of this meeting at which I understand this resolution was passed. I think at a meeting where you are proposing to change the number, we should all have an opportunity of being present and discussing it. This year especially, when the Bank Act is coming up, perhaps one of the most important Acts that has ever been before that committee, it is hardly fair that the members of that committee should be reduced just at this time. I think the Prime Minister should ask the mover of this resolution to let it stand, in order that we may have an opportunity of discussing it at a fuller meeting of the committee. I do not agree that the numbers should be reduced. We are all interested in everything that is going on in that committee, and in knowing what is going on. I think, therefore, that there should be no hesitation in withdrawing this resolution, or letting it stand until we have another meeting of the committee, where we can thrash the question out, and if a majority agrees that the number should be reduced, I am willing to fall in line.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). As a member of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I want to remind the chairman that he is in error when he said there are three or four committee meetings at the same time. The Banking and Commerce Committee is generally called, and was called, at 10.30; the other committees meeting on the same day were not called until 11 o'clock, and there was plenty of time for the members of this committee to meet at 10.30, and put in half an hour's work before they went to the other committees. If we cannot get a quorum at 10.30, it is not on account of other committees meeting at the same time. I think the quorum is quite small enough at 21 on an important committee like this.

Mr. NESBITT. Let me point out that the proposition is only to reduce the number of the quorum, because some times we have to wait a long while for a quorum to appear. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said the meeting was called at 10.30 and though we waited till 11, sometimes then we did not have a quorum. That is why the suggestion was made to reduce the quorum. I want to point out that we do not propose to reduce the number of the committee at all, but only to reduce the quorum, so that we can go on with the business instead of sitting there and waiting all the morning for a quorum to turn up.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest that the chairman withdraw the motion and let it come again before the committee.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to withdrawing the motion. I may say that I had no idea that every member of the committee had not received a notice. The clerk of that committee is usually very careful. I shall speak about that, and see that every member does get a notice of the future meetings.

Motion withdrawn.

Bill (No. 102) to incorporate the Imperial Traction Company.—Mr. Rankin.

QUESTIONS.

(The questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EASTERN DIVISION OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—OVERBREAK.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. In those cases in which agreement was come to last autumn between Mr. Kelliher and Mr. Gordon as to overbreak on the eastern division of the Transcontinental railway, what quantities of material, and of what class, and what sums of money were taken from or added to the progress estimates?

2. In the case where measurements had to be made, have they been made, and with what result?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would ask my hon. friend to make a motion for a return. I am endeavouring to get the information as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand as a notice of motion for a return.

EASTERN DIVISION OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—TOTAL COST.

* Mr. BORDEN (Halifax):

What was the total cost up to the 31st day of December, 1910, of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. The returns are not all in.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES FOR CLERGY.

Mr. JAMESON:

1. Is the government aware of any statute or railway regulation, now or formerly in force, under which the clergy of Canada, or any of them, are or were entitled to receive transportation from the Canadian railways, or any of them, at less than the regular tariff rates?

2. If so, when was such statute or regulation passed or made, is it now in force, what railway companies does it affect, and what is the extent of its application?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no statute to this effect. But the state owned railways of Canada do now, and have for years, granted half fare to any clergyman of any denomination making a request for it.

DREDGE 'NORTHUMBERLAND.'

Mr. STANFIELD:

1. What is the name, place of residence and occupation on ship, of each member of the crew, officers and men, of the dredge 'Northumberland'?
2. What members of the crew are at present on wages on the dredge?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. U. H. Lyons, Master; E. Nickerson, Mate; J. A. Ledingham, Chief Engineer; W. Curry, Second Engineer; C. Hannon, Operator; G. Jollimore, Assistant Operator; A. McDonald, Assistant Operator; H. McKinnon, Boatswain; U. Rafuse, Cook; W. Abbott, Steward; W. Hopkins, Oiler; W. Oaks, Oiler; E. Marden, Oiler; R. Bone, Fireman; H. Campbell, Fireman; J. Brownrigg, Fireman; D. McCrie, Fireman; B. Chambers, Deck Hand.

The department does not keep a record of the changes in residence of the men employed on the dredges, and I am unable to answer that part of the question which asks for the places of residences (which, I assume, means the present places of residence) of the crew, officers and men.

2. Watchmen.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY AND TEMISKAMING AND NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Has the government, or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, entered into any agreement or working arrangement of any kind with the province of Ontario, or the commission operating the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Company, regarding the securing of running rights, or right of way, for the National Transcontinental railway over the lines of the Toronto and Northern Ontario, between Cochrane and North Bay, or Scotia Junction, or any other point? If so, what are the particulars of the transaction?
2. Is it the intention of the government, or the commission operating the National Transcontinental railway, to discontinue the construction of this railway, in whole or in part, either permanently or temporarily, east of Cochrane, being the point of junction between the Toronto and Northern Ontario railway, and the National Transcontinental railway?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. No.
2. No.

Mr. GRAHAM:

IMMIGRATION BONUSES.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Did three Swiss girls named Wilhelmina Kuhner, Antoinette Chatelaine and Ida Brant, arrive as immigrants in Canada in August, 1910?
2. If so, were any bonuses paid to any steamship company or to any booking agent for bringing them into Canada as domestics?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. $52,261.
2. Commissions are paid on proof of arrival of the immigrants in Canada.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—STE. PERPETUE STATION.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Nicolet):

1. Did the Department of Railways and Canals call for tenders for the construction of a station at Ste. Perpetue in 1896?
2. If so, did Louis Gilbert tender for that work, and what was the amount of his tender?
3. Did the department decide to accept such a tender, or did they decide to do the work by day labour?
4. If they decided to do the work by day labour, what was the cost of such work?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes.
2. Yes, $1,397.
3. No. All tenders were considered too high and it was decided to have the work done by day labour.

TESTIMONIALS TO MINISTERS.

Mr. BOYCE. Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to state my position with regard to a motion to adjourn the House in order to discuss an important public matter, of which I gave notice on Monday afternoon. At the personal request of the Prime Minister, and in view of the very important statement by the Minister of Finance, for which the House is waiting to-day, I would postpone the discussion of this motion if the Prime Minister will now undertake to move the House into Committee of Supply at an early hour on Tuesday for the purpose of enabling this matter, of which I have given notice, to be discussed; otherwise I will proceed now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We had intended to move the House into Committee of Supply on Tuesday next, but I understand there are some friends of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) who wish to move amendments. Perhaps he could agree with his friends to be allowed to have precedence. The House will go into Committee of Supply on Tuesday.

Mr. BOYCE. The right hon. gentleman, of course, understands the position of matters. I gave notice on Monday that at the opening of the House to-day I would move to adjourn the House, and in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance then, who I thought it was desirable should be present, I stated I would make that motion on the first occasion on which the Finance Minister would be in his seat. That is the way the matter stands at present. I am quite willing to give place to the discussion set for this afternoon if the Prime Minister accepts my suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. member has given notice that he will move the adjournment of the House, and he can do that any day. If my hon. friend prefers to make his motion now instead of as an amendment to go into Committee of Supply, there is no objection at all so far as we on this side of the House are concerned.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FOSTER. On the 7th of December, 1910, the House ordered a return calling for all petitions, memorials, resolutions, from individuals, boards of trade and other bodies and corporations favouring or asking for a treaty of reciprocity with the United States; also of all similar documents protesting against or unfavourable to the same, and a copy of all correspondence had with the government or any member thereof concerning reciprocity with the United States since January 1st, 1910. This return was brought down on the 9th of January last, but as I pointed out then, and once or twice since, it only deals with one branch of the order. There is nothing in the return brought down except a number of resolutions and documents asking for reciprocity; there is no correspondence at all between any member of the government and any body outside, and there are none of the resolutions or documents which favoured reciprocity. The return has not been supplemented, and we are perhaps just now on the eve of a debate, and the information is not before the House, as it ought to be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know what correspondence my hon. friend can allude to. I was under the impression that the whole of the correspondence had been brought down. If there has been any exchange of correspondence between some members of the government and other persons, so far as I am concerned, I will ask that it be prepared and brought down.

RECIPROCITY WITH AUSTRALIA.

Mr. AMES. Now that the Minister of Customs is in his place, I would like to ask him to facilitate the speedy bringing down of the return asked for regarding reciprocal trade arrangements with Australia. I want to discuss that matter in the near future.

Mr. PATERSON. I will be pleased to do so.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means. He said: Mr. Speaker, the action of this government in consenting to reopen negotiations with the government of the United States with a view to bringing about if possible a satisfactory reciprocal trade arrangement, has been very severely criticised in many quarters. From that fact we may properly infer that there must be some people in this Dominion of Canada who hold the opinion that the commercial policy of the 92,000,000 people who live to the south of us is of no concern to the inhabitants of this Dominion. No other conviction could justify the action of those who have objected to the opening of negotiations. One may easily understand, Sir, that there would be room for difference of opinion as to the merits of any arrangements into which it might be proposed to enter, but that there should be opposition to the reopening of negotiations in response to the friendly approach of the United States government seems to us, in the light of history, to be very strange indeed. Sir, for us, for this government, for this parliament, for this Dominion, to set itself against a discussion of the question of the trade relations between our country and the neighbouring republic would be to emphatically reverse the historic policy of the Dominion from the first day of confederation down to the present time, and not only the policy of the Dominion but the pre-confederation policy of every province out of which the Dominion was subsequently formed. Whether we desire it or not, Sir, the conditions of our two countries, lying side by side, must always make us of much interest one to the other.

The 92,000,000 people to the south are willing to acknowledge that they are interested in the commercial policy of Canada, and we representing 8,000,000 people are not ashamed to confess that we have the deepest concern in the policy which those people may adopt in relation to their commerce with the world at large. It is because we have the feeling that there is a mutual interest, that we have entered upon the negotiations as to which it is my privilege now to address you.

It ought not to be necessary to speak of this historic policy to which I have referred, but in view of the very strong action that has been taken by many gentlemen adverse to reciprocity it will be necessary that I shall for a few moments recall some of the main facts of the history of this matter. I am persuaded, and my colleagues are persuaded, that many of those who have formed a hasty judgment against reciprocity and against reciprocity negotiations have not given their deliberate judgment, and now that the time has come that we are able to disclose the results of our negotiations, we are most hopeful, Sir, that not only will the negotiations themselves be approved but that the result of these negotiations will be approved, not only by the country at large but by a great number of the gentlemen who have hitherto taken up that adverse position. Not to go back any further than a time within the memory of those who are sitting within the sound of my voice, we have to recall the reciprocity treaty of 1854, which was a treaty covering a wide range of natural products. At the time that treaty was arranged for, between the then provinces of British North America and the United States, it naturally received some criticism. No measure of magnitude can at any time be presented to a deliberate assembly or to a great people without some kind of criticism being found. But, I think I am correct in stating that after that treaty had been in operation for some years it was recognized as being in the highest degree beneficial to the provinces of British North America, and as we thought beneficial also to the United States. Be that as it may, when the time came for the abrogation of that treaty in 1866, there was grave anxiety on the part of the people of British North America as to the effect of that abrogation. Our trade interests, it was thought then, were so much dependent upon the American market that the abrogation of the treaty was naturally a cause of much alarm. Every public man in the provinces as they then were, and every public man of responsible position from that day to this in the Dominion of Canada, has realized the necessity of trying to cultivate good trade relations with the United States. From 1854 to 1866 the treaty was in operation. That brought us down to the very eve of confederation. Confederation dates from 1867, and one of the arguments very frequently used in support of the union movement was that in view of the abrogation of the treaty with the United States it was desirable that the provinces should be united in order that they might be stronger in their efforts to bring about a readjustment of our commercial relations and the procuring of a new treaty.

So, from the beginning of confederation this desire for reciprocity became the established policy of the country. It was the established policy, not of one political party, but it was the policy of all political parties that have had to do with the government of Canada. In 1868, in the first year of confederation, there was enacted in the tariff of that year a standing offer of reciprocity to the United States. The men of that day who controlled the government of Canada felt that as one of their first steps they must make this declaration that they desired to renew some reciprocal arrangement with the people of the United States. Accordingly, there was carried into the tariff of 1868, the first tariff after confederation, that standing offer of reciprocity to the United States. In 1869 Sir John Rose, then, if I mistake not, occupying the position which I now have the honour to fill, was sent to the United States as a delegate from the Canadian government to endeavour to bring about reciprocity. In 1870, in the tariff legislation of that time, the standing offer was again inserted. It was changed somewhat in form, but it was renewed in principle and in substance. In 1871 Sir John Macdonald was concerned in the negotiation of what was then called the treaty of Washington, and he endeavoured to bring about commercial reciprocity, as well as settle the other matters that were afterwards dealt with in the treaty, but he was, as his predecessors had been, unsuccessful in establishing better commercial relations. In 1873 a change of government took place, the government of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie came into power, and Mr. Mackenzie again took up the question of reciprocity. So that, in the days of the Liberal government and in the days of the Conservative government this desire for reciprocity has at all times been found. The Mackenzie government dispatched Senator George Brown, of Toronto, to Washington for the purpose of negotiating a treaty, and a treaty was prepared at that time, but the United States failed to ratify it. In 1878, in the early days of what our friends opposite call the National Policy, one of the strongest arguments which they used in many quarters was that the National Policy should be adopted as a means of forcing the Americans to give us a new reciprocity treaty. In their first tariff, the so-called National Policy, adopted in 1879, a standing offer was made and the terms in which it was made were sufficiently interesting in view of what has now been accomplished to justify me in taking the time of the House for a moment by reading them. In section 6 of the Tariff Act of 1879 there is this standing offer:—

Any or all of the following articles, that is to say: animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bran, seeds of all kinds, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), plants, trees and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, peas and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat and all other grain, flour of wheat and flour of rye, Indian meal and oatmeal, and flour of meal of any other grain, butter, cheese, fish (salted or smoked), lard, tallow, meats (fresh, salted or smoked), and lumber, may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act, upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada.

So you will see, Sir, that our Conservative friends, upon coming back to power in 1878-9, deemed it necessary as one of their first steps that they should proclaim to the world they desire to re-establish reciprocal trade relations with the United States. That principle was continued in their tariff from year to year with some change of form, but not in principle, so that down to the day when the Conservative party retired from office in 1896 this desire to obtain reciprocity with the United States was to be found upon the statute-book, in budget speeches and in everything wherein they proclaimed the commercial policy of Canada.

Now, we turn to the change of administration in 1906. In the Liberal platform of 1893, reciprocity occupied a prominent part and soon after this government came into power—indeed, if my memory is correct, even before parliament assembled—two members of the government were sent to Washington with the view of ascertaining what might be done in the way of reciprocal treaty arrangements. They did not find the situation favourable and they came back to their colleagues and reported that they were not able to accomplish anything. There is one incident in this history that I had forgotten that is of importance, and that is that in the year 1891 the dissolution of parliament was ordered by the Conservative government of the day upon the ground that they regarded the reciprocity question as so important that they required a mandate from the people of the Dominion to enable them to proceed to Washington and deal with that question. The Liberal party of the day also was in favour of reciprocity. Both parties declared for reciprocity at that time and the only question was as to which one could get the largest degree of reciprocity. So, if we follow it from day to day and from year to year, taking the history of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, the early years of confederation, the period in connection with the national policy and the period since the change in administration, down to the joint high commission of 1898-9, we find that throughout all these years, whatever difference there may have been amongst the public men of our country on other subjects, there was no difference of opinion as to the great importance and desirability of re-establishing reciprocal trade relations with the United States of America.

Now, in view of the history which I have so hurriedly presented to you, and with which many hon. gentlemen in the House are more intimately acquainted than I am, would it not have been a strange proceeding, if this government had refused to entertain the friendly approaches of the President of the United States, and to join in a conference to see whether or not something could be brought about in the way of reciprocity? That was the position in which we found ourselves and I confess it was with much surprise that we found the many manifestions of opposition. Again I say I am presuaded that the gentlemen who on the public platform or in the press took such strong ground against our action, did not give us the benefit of their well considered judgment. I am going to appeal to them to revise that judgment, to give a fair consideration to the project we are about to submit to them, and in all sincerity I say I am most hopeful indeed that what we have to propose will not be regarded as a matter of party contest, but as something which if it can be brought about by the joint action of this parliament and the Congress of the United States, will work out for the good of the Dominion and we trust for the good of the United States as well.

These negotiations, Sir, may be said to have commenced nearly a year ago. They took at first the shape of a communication from the Secretary of State of the United States to The Right Hon. Mr. Bryce, His Majesty's ambassador at Washington. The matter being one purely of a Canadian character, Mr. Bryce, like the very sensible ambassador he is, turned it over to the government of Canada for consideration and from that time down to the present these negotiations have been conducted directly between ministers of the government at Ottawa and the Secretary of State or the officers of the Department of State at Washington. I wish to say in that connection that at every stage of the matter we have been favoured with the cordial sympathy and co-operation of the distinguished ambassador at Washington, and that on many occasions we found his co-operation and sympathy and advice of the utmost value to us. I desire in this public way to acknowledge the service he has rendered to Canada in his capacity as ambassador for His Majesty.

The United States tariff was revised a year or two ago, and the world received what is known as the Payne-Aldrich tariff. That tariff brought out an embarrassing situation between the United States and some countries, particularly between the United States and Canada. The Payne-Aldrich tariff provided that what was called the maximum tariff, a very high tariff, should be imposed on the products of all countries to which that tariff is applied. It was said in the course of the discussions arising out of our action in connection with that matter that Mr. Taft, the president, would never have put the maximum tariff on Canada. That has been very frequently said. Now if the situation had really been as it seemed to be in the minds of the gentlemen who made that criticism, I should have been disposed to agree with them. I will frankly say that I do not think Mr. Taft ever desired to impose the maximum tariff upon the products of Canada. The misfortune was that Congress had imposed the tariff. It was not a question of Mr. Taft doing it. Congress had put that tariff on and declared that on and after a given date the products of all countries not exempted by special action of the president should become subject to the maximum tariff. The maximum tariff existed and was coming into operation in a few days. It was not a question of Mr. Taft putting it on, but of Mr. Taft being induced to take it off, as he had the power to do. The President of the United States, as one evidence of his sincere desire to avoid trouble with Canada on that question, did us the honour of inviting a member of this government to proceed to Albany to meet him and discuss the matter. He came a long way from his capital and not very far from our own and was pleased to discuss the question there with a minister of the Canadian government. My colleagues did me the honour of sending me on that mission. I have said before and repeat that at my first interview with that distinguished statesman, the President of the United States, I became satisfied that he was animated by the warmest desire to make a fair and just and friendly arrangement with Canada. As I have already said, it was not a question of putting on the maximum tariff, it was a question of taking it off, and I found that the President of the United States was willing to take it off if we could give him some decent excuse to do so under the terms of the American tariff law. We made a few changes, a few concessions of no earthly importance, so small and trifling that I am sure hardly any of us in the House could remember to-day what they were. But they served the purpose; they were enough to give Mr. Taft the reason and excuse he desired and accordingly he issued his proclamation that Canada should not be placed under the disadvantage of the maximum tariff, which if applied would undoubtedly have done harm on both sides, most certainly to large business interests in Canada. Out of the negotiations at that time have sprung the larger negotiations of a more recent date. We were invited by the President and the Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, to take up the greater question of a reciprocal trade arrangement. The arrangements we made nearly a year ago, last March, were of such a small and trifling character that nobody could have regarded them as a final adjustment of our tariff question and we readily responded to the suggestion of the President that we should meet him and his cabinet ministers for the consideration of the question along broader lines.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it in any way one of the conditions on which President Taft consented to excuse Canada and lift her out of the rather embarrassing condition, that in addition to the concessions which we gave in a tariff sense, there should be an undertaking, implied or expressed, that that action should be followed by negotiations for a trade treaty ?

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of condition, no. There was no question, understanding, arrangement, condition or suggestion as between Mr. Taft and the Canadian government that is not set forth in the correspondence which has been in the possession of the House for the last ten months. That correspondence clearly shows that Mr. Taft expressed an earnest desire to have a discussion on broader lines and that on behalf of our colleagues we agreed that that discussion should take place; but it was not a condition of Mr. Taft taking any action at that moment; it was a matter which we jointly desired, which he had suggested, and which we were very happy to agree to.

I have, Sir, referred thus to the earlier stages of these negotiations, and brought the story down to a very recent date. I have pointed out that the desire for reciprocity was not a party matter, that it was universal, and we felt, as we had a right to feel, that we were bound to take advantage of any opportunity that offered to bring about that more desirable arrangement of trade between the United States and Canada for which this country had been seeking for the last half century. That was the position in which we found ourselves. If we thought the moment was favourable, if in view of that history which I have so briefly referred to, we thought the psychological moment had come when we could deal with the United States in a more favourable manner, if we thought they had repented, if I may use the expression, of the error of their ways, that they had seen they could not afford to treat Canada in the way they had been treating her in bygone years, if they had reached that happy frame of mind, was it our duty to refuse to meet them? Was it not our duty to meet them and say: We are glad, brethern, you think better of the situation, we are willing to sit down and discuss this matter in a fair and generous spirit?

We have, then, proceeded along these lines, and we have conducted negotiations first at Ottawa and afterwards at Washington, covering the whole question of trade relations. We have now been able to come to an understanding, and if we are able to bring about some of the good results which this country has been seeking for many years, I earnestly hope that the action will be one in which all parties in this House and in this country will be able to join and say, that that is for the good of Canada and for the good of the United States as well. Let me proceed to tell you, first in a summary way and afterwards in detail, exactly what the arrangement is.

In the first place, I am glad to be able to tell the House that at a very early stage in our negotiations, several months ago indeed, we informed the representatives of the United States government that while we desired to make a friendly reciprocal arrangement, while we were most anxious to broaden our trade conditions and to establish and continue friendly relations with them, we believed that could be now brought about as well by mutual legislation, as by the more definite form of a treaty; and therefore we informed them that while we were prepared to proceed with the negotiations and to make the arrangement as broad and generous as we could, it must be understood that we preferred the form of concurrent legislation, and that it was not our purpose to bind the Dominion of Canada or the United States in the way of a treaty.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister give about the date at which that information was sent to Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. It was never sent to Washington by any communication. It occurred in the personal communications between the representatives of the government and those of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. The date of that?

Mr. FIELDING. It occurred in the city of Ottawa, at the time the delegates from the United States were here. I cannot give my hon. friend the exact date. Intimation was given that while we were anxious to have an arrangement, we preferred that there should be no treaty, and we thought we could show that the arrangement could be made useful and effective without the formal binding of a treaty. It will, therefore, be found, in the document which I shall read presently, that we have made no binding arrangement—that if this arrangement which I shall present to you, commends itself to your judgment, is found to be advantageous, it will continue, but if on reasonable trial, it is found in any way to be unfavourable to the Dominion of Canada, the government and the parliament of the day, are absolutely free at any time to change the arrangement, and nobody will have any right to complain.

The next point is that we have arranged that there shall be a large free list. We have agreed upon a schedule containing a large number of articles which are to be reciprocally free. These are chiefly what are called natural products, though there are some things in them which would hardly be classified in that way. Some of these things are already free in Canada, but have been subject to duty in the United States. We have been able to arrange that the United States shall take off the duty, and, therefore, instead of having what some of our hon. friends have sometimes called a lop-sided free trade, there will be real free trade in this matter, and the thing that is free in Canada shall also be free in the United States.

In another schedule we have provided a rather numerous list of items on which there shall be a common rate of duty in both countries. A very common criticism on the part of gentlemen who have not viewed this matter as favourably as we would have wished, has been: If the United States want to make a tariff arrangement with you, let them come down to your rates of duty. It seemed to be taken for granted that that was what the United States would not do. But that is exactly what we asked them to do, and what they have agreed to do, respecting a large number of articles. They have not only come down to our rates, but in some cases they have come below them, and in those cases, in order to reach that common rate, we have had to make reductions. But as our tariff is a moderate one, while theirs, in the main, is a high tariff, the result has been that, in order to arrive at a common rate, we have had to make only moderate reductions, while they, in many cases, have had to make quite large reductions. There are a few exceptions to this general rule. We found a few cases with which we desired to deal, but with respect to which we were not able to agree upon a common rate. In some instances it was not so much the rate itself as the classification and the phraseology. Dealing with these cases as exceptions, we have provided one schedule of articles on which the United States impose the rates of duties therein mentioned on the products of Canada, and another schedule of articles on which Canada imposes the rates of duties therein mentioned on the products of the United States. The idea of reciprocity is in the arrangement, but it does not require both countries to adopt the same rate or the same classification. These two schedules, however, will be found to contain not many items.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is nothing in the nature of a treaty, how is this arrangement to be carried out?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will see as I proceed. It is not a binding treaty in any shape or form. The arrangement rests on mutual faith, mutual good-will, mutual conviction that the thing is for the benefit of the two countries.

Before dealing with the schedules in detail, I want to give an illustration of how we have been able to reach a common ground. For example, take the article of wheat. At present wheat is dutiable in the United States at 25 cents a bushel and in Canada at 12 cents a bushel. We make wheat free in both countries. The reduction in Canada is 12 cents a bushel, whereas the United States reduction is 25 cents a bushel. I give that as an illustration of the fact that the tariff of the United States being much higher than ours, in order to meet a common rate they have had to make very much larger reductions than we have.

Mr. OWEN. What will be the duty on our wheat going into the United States?

Mr. FIELDING. The duty on our wheat going into the United States will be nothing. As another illustration, take the article of barley. It was a large crop in Ontario some years ago, and when the American tariff increased the duty on barley it was regarded by Canadian farmers as a rather severe piece of legislation. Barley is now made free. Canada's reduction is 15 cents per bushel and the United States reduction is 30 cents per bushel.

Take another illustration, an item of importance to many districts in this country, the item of potatoes. Potatoes are now made free. Canada's reduction is 20 cents per bushel and the United States 25 cents.

Oats are made free. Canada's reduction is 10 cents per bushel, the United States 15 cents per bushel.

Flour is now to be dutiable at the common rate of 50 cents per barrel ; Canada's reduction is 10 cents per barrel ; the United States reduction is about equal to 70 cents per barrel

Rough sawn lumber is made free. It was already free in Canada but in the United States, even under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, there was a duty of $1.25 per 1,000 feet. That duty is removed, and rough sawn lumber may be exported free into the United States by the manufacturers of the Dominion.

In the discussion of tariff items in this House in by-gone years, there were two items which were commonly bracketed together, strange as it may appear. I refer to coal and flour. In the early days of the discussion of the duties on these articles, it was argued with much force that the coal duty was rather a burden on the people of Ontario, and that the flour duty imposed a burden on the people of the lower provinces, and that, on the principle of give and take, the people of the two sections should be willing to have these two duties imposed, each section profiting by that policy. I need not now go into the discussions which took place at that time. We are now proposing to bracket them together. We are making a small reduction in the duty of flour of 10 cents per barrel, and a small reduction in the duty of coal of 8 cents a ton. The present duty on coal is 53 cents, and we propose to make it 45 cents. The duty in the United States to-day is 45 cents, and our duty, under this arrangement will be 45 cents. But that is not fully placing the matter fairly before the House. In the United States the duty is 45 cents on the long ton of 2,240 pounds, whereas, ours is on the short ton, so that while nominally there is a similarity, there is not actually quite an equalization of the rates. However that may be, our coal people, who were alarmed over this reciprocity matter, will have to bear a cut of 8 cents per ton on their duty ; and I hope, as one who has warm sympathy for the coal trade, that they will be able to stand it and continue to do business at the old stand.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Is there any change in the duty on slack coal?

Mr. FIELDING. I am just coming to that. There is no change in the duty on slack coal coming into Canada, but there is a very important change in the duty on slack coal going into the United States. Slack coal is dutiable at 15 cents per ton in the United States. Recently, in the last amendment to the tariff law, words were used in the definition of slack coal which led to considerable trouble. The words used, if I remember correctly, were that all slack coal shall be deemed coal produced in the ordinary way. And the United States authorities ruled that coal which was washed for the purpose of preparing it is not produced in the ordinary way, and therefore, one of our coal concerns, which has large contracts in the United States, and desires to build up a large trade in that country in slack coal, found itself subject to this condition, that what it regarded as slack coal was regarded by the United States as coal screened and held dutiable at the rate of 45 cents per ton. We protested against that and we arrange that the duty of 15 cents per ton on slack coal should apply to slacked coal of all kinds, including washed coal.

Another item is that of coke. Coke is free in Canada, but dutiable in the United States. We asked that it be made free in the United States as well as free in Canada, and our American friends have agreed. I think that hon. gentlemen interested in the coal fields in British Columbia will be very glad to hear that news because coke is an important item, and I have every reason to believe that large quantities of coke will go from British Columbia into the United States under this arrangement.

With regard to some of the items made free, I have said before that they are largely natural products, but we have made some reductions in a moderate list on manufactured articles. I have already indicated that our reductions are not very large while those of the United States are considerable. Our manufacturers are rather alarmed at the competition of the Americans. No doubt, with their magnificent organization and great accumulation of capital, our American friends are in advance of us in most of the lines of manufactures, and I do not suppose that in manufacturing generally we can hope at present to send many things across the line. But I do hope that the reduced rates of duty will open up new facilities to our manufactures and that we shall be able to send more manufactured goods across the border. Our manufacturers, whose products are shut out to-day by prohibitory duties, may be encouraged to send some of their goods into the United States under a moderate tariff.

Take wire rods which are largely made in Canada. They are free in Canada but dutiable in the United States, and there is a bounty on them here which will expire shortly. We have thought it desirable that our manufacturers in that line should have a chance in the American market, and therefore, we claimed that wire rods, which are now free in Canada, should be free in the United States, and I think we will have a fair chance of making wire rods for Uncle Sam and sending them over from our steel plants.

With regard to agricultural implements, the House need not be reminded of the strong desire on the part of our western farmers to have better terms on these articles. They would be glad to have them free of duty, but, anxious as I am to meet their views I must frankly say to them that we do not think that is fair. Like all others they must be prepared to give and take, they must be prepared to bear their share in the burdens of the country, and I believe that when the matter is fairly put to the farmers, they will recognize that principle. We do not propose to make agricultural implements free but to make some reductions, and we trust that, while these may not be all the farmers want, they will be evidence of the desire of the government to meet their views as far as possible without doing any injustice to the industries of Canada. We have made a 15 per cent list on agricultural implements, including mowers, reapers, and harvesters. These were 17½ per cent, and we now propose to reduce them to 15 per cent.

Mr. BRODER. Is there any change to be made in the valuation for duty?

Mr. FIELDING. Our negotiations have not touched the question of valuation; that must be left to the operation of the customs authorities of the two countries. Then there is a list of implements: Cultivators, ploughs, harrows, horse-rakes, seed-drills, threshing machines, including wind-stackers, baggers and weighers; these are reduced from 20 per cent to 15 per cent. Then, hay-loaders, potato-diggers, fodder or feed-cutters, grain-crushers, fanning-mills, hay-tedders, farm or field-rollers—on these the Canadian reduction is from 25 to 20 per cent. These are the reductions which are being made in our tariff. On the other side of the question, the United States tariff on some of these things is 15 per cent. We have provided that parts of machines shall be introduced at the same rate as the machine itself. In the United States, where they had a nominal rate of 15 per cent upon agricultural implements of a certain class, it was provided that repair parts for these machines should be dutiable at the rate of 45 per cent. We have provided that the machines and the parts shall bear the same rate of duty. Then, portable engines, horse-power and traction engines for farm purposes, hay-loaders, potato-diggers, fodder or feed cutters, grain-crushers, fanning-mills, manure-spreaders, windmills, and parts thereof for repairs—these are now dutiable in the United States at from 30 to 45 per cent, and we have arranged that the American duty shall be reduced to 20 per cent.

Before I proceed to take up the schedules in detail, there are one or two interesting features which I am sure the House would wish me to explain at the earliest moment. We have had very interesting discussions from time to time over the question of the duty on paper and pulp of various kinds. Our American friends were anxious for some tariff change in relation to these articles. We ourselves were anxious for some tariff changes. As respects certain grades of pulp and paper, mechanically ground pulp, chemical pulp, common printing paper, known as newsprint, and the common pasteboard and the cheaper articles of paper other than newsprint, or common paper, up to a limited value of four cents per pound, we believed that we could compete with our American friends on these particular articles and that it was desirable we should have free trade in them. As to the paper of a more advanced quality, I doubt if we would be able to compete with them and we did not take that class of paper into our negotiations. But as respects pulp of its various kinds and common newsprint paper and common pasteboard and common paper of all kinds running to the value of four cents per pound, we would have been quite willing to have reciprocity with them. They said: We are quite willing to do that if you provide that the regulations which exist in some of your provinces with regard to the shipment of pulpwood shall be removed. Of course, there could be but one answer to that. We have nothing to do with the provincial regulations. These regulations have been made by the provincial governments in accordance with what they believed to be the best interests of their respective provinces, and whether they are good or bad regulations was not for us to debate with our friends of the United States. And so we had to say to them: If you propose to put any such limitations upon the arrangement we cannot object to your doing for yourselves what you think best respecting the terms and conditions upon which you will admit our paper into your country; you have the right to impose these conditions, and if they do not suit Canada no harm is done; but we on our side will not agree to make paper and pulp and these articles free in Canada until you have made them free into your country from every province and part of the Dominion of Canada. So, the matter stands in this way: that they will put in their tariff, as set forth in their correspondence with us, an item that these various grades of pulp and paper shall be made free if there be no regulations, either in the form of an export duty or in the form of the provincial regulations interfering with the shipments of pulpwood. Whenever that condition arises they will make paper free. We said: All right, but that is no concession to us, and we will not make your paper free in Canada until you remove the restriction.

Now, there was one other question. It has always been a matter of complaint against the United States (and I may say it has sometimes been a matter of complaint against my good friend the Minister of Customs) that the pious intentions of tariff makers are sadly interfered with by the administration which makes the regulations, and so we thought it necessary to bring that question to the notice of our American friends. As these regulations may arise from time to time, it was impossible to deal with them in detail, but what we thought we ought to do was to obtain on both sides a declaration that there should be no interference by means of vexatious regulations with the good intentions of this reciprocal arrangement, and that both parties would sincerely and earnestly endeavour to facilitate trade along the lines contemplated. It is set forth in our correspondence that if any regulation is found to work adversely either party would have the right to make representations concerning it, and each party pledged itself to the other that it would endeavour to remove any regulation as to which there was found just cause of complaint.

There is one other question, before I come to deal with the correspondence and the schedules, namely, the very important branch of our national industry which touches the fish question. Canada has never enjoyed the advantage of free fish into the United States except upon the condition that she should grant the United States not only similar privileges but the right to fish in the national waters of Canada. That was a condition of the old reciprocity treaty, and under that condition very satisfactory progress in our fisheries was made. There are some people in our country to-day who attach so much importance to the item of free fish that they would be willing, in order to obtain it, to give to our American friends the right to fish in our waters. We do not think that this represents the national sentiment. We said to our American friends that we were willing to meet them in the exchange of commodities, that we wanted to show our good will, but that we could not discuss this question at all of giving them free fishing, and practically at an early stage in the negotiations that feature was eliminated. One thing further we have done: We have secured, I may say unconditionally, for the first time what is regarded as the very substantial advantage of the free admission of our fish of all kinds into the United States markets. In what is commonly called the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty, made between Mr. Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper on the one side and Mr. Bayard, of the United States, on the other, in the year 1888, provision was made for free fish being admitted into the United States, and the condition set forth in that treaty was that Canada should give to the fishermen of the United States certain commercial privileges, such as the right to come into our ports and obtain bait, ice, and supplies, and to ship crews, and transfer their fish. These commercial privileges were to be granted free of all charge and cost to the United States in exchange for the privilege of free fish in the United States market.

It was believed at that time that the treaty would probably be ratified; but as there might be some delay in its ratification, and with a view of avoiding the friction which unhappily was existing in relation to our fisheries, there was put into the form of a protocol what was commonly known as the modus vivendi, in which it was declared that for a period of two years, that being the period within which it was thought the treaty would be ratified, the United States would be allowed to enjoy these commercial privileges by a license to be issued to their fishermen at the cost of $1.50 per ton. That arrangement, which was contemplated for two years, has existed down to the present time. The treaty was not ratified, the American government was not able to secure its ratification in the Senate; but inasmuch as the withdrawal of the modus vivendi, it was thought, might lead to some friction and some embarrassment, the Canadian government decided to let it remain in operation, and it has so remained down to the present time. We get a few thousand dollars from the licenses which are so issued to our American friends. We do not value this license system for the sake of the small revenue it yields. The important point is to maintain our national control of the inshore fishery. As we shall, if this arrangement be confirmed, receive the benefit contemplated by the treaty of 1888, which failed of ratification, we propose to give the United States fishing vessels these licenses, not exactly free, as that treaty proposed, but for the nominal fee of $1 per annum.

I think I have called attention to all the special features of this arrangement, and now I propose to present to the House the form in which the arrangement is made. The decision that was reached was that my hon. friend the Minister of Customs and myself——

Mr. BURRELL. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him how the new arrangement affects fruit?

Mr. FIELDING. When I read the schedules, my hon. friend will find that fruit is made reciprocally free.

Mr. SPROULE. What about dairy products?

Mr. FIELDING. Dairy products are free.

Mr. MONK. What about garden produce?

Mr. FIELDING. Vegetables are free. I was saying that the form in which this arrangement was made that my hon. colleague and myself should address to the United States Secretary of State a letter setting forth our understanding of what had been mutually determined, and inviting him to confirm it. I will now read the letter:

Washington, January 21, 1911.

Dear Mr. Secretary,—

1. The negotiations initiated by the President several months ago through your communication to His Excellency the British Ambassador respecting a reciprocal tariff arrangement between the United States and Canada, and since carried on directly between representatives of the governments of the two countries, have now, we are happy to say, reached a stage which gives reasonable assurance of a conclusion satisfactory to both countries.

2. We desire to set forth what we understand to be the contemplated arrangement, and to ask you to confirm it.

3. It is agreed that the desired tariff changes shall not take the formal shape of a treaty, but that the Governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by concurrent legislation at Washington and Ottawa.

4. The Governments of the two countries having made this agreement from the conviction that, if confirmed by the necessary legislative authorities, it will benefit the people on both sides of the border line, we may reasonably hope and expect that the arrangement, if so confirmed, will remain in operation for a considerable period. Only this expectation on the part of both Governments would justify the time and labour that have been employed in the maturing of the proposed measures. Nevertheless, it is distinctly understood that we do not attempt to bind for the future the action of the United States Congress or the Parliament of Canada, but that each of these authorities shall be absolutely free to make any change of tariff policy or of any other matter covered by the present arrangement that may be deemed expedient. We look for the continuance of the arrangement, not because either party is bound to it, but because of our conviction that the more liberal trade policy thus to be established will be viewed by the people of the United States and Canada as one which will strengthen the friendly relations now happily prevailing and promote the commerical interests of both countries.

5. As respects a considerable list of articles produced in both countries, we have been able to agree that they shall be reciprocally free. A list of the articles to be admitted free of duty into the United States when imported from Canada, and into Canada when imported from the United States, is set forth in Schedule A.

6. As respects another group of articles, we have been able to agree upon common rates of duty to be applied to such articles when imported into the United States from Canada or into Canada from the United States. A list of these articles, with the rates of duty, is set forth in Schedule B.

7. In a few instances it has been found that the adoption of a common rate will be inconvenient and therefore exceptions have to be made.

8. Schedule C specifies articles upon which the United States will levy the rates therein set forth when such articles are imported from Canada.

9. Schedule D specifies articles upon which Canada will levy the rates therein set forth when such articles are imported from the United States.

10. With respect to the discussions that have taken place concerning the duties upon the several grades of pulp, printing paper, &c.—mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, bleached and unbleached, news printing paper and other printing paper, and board made from wood pulp, of the value not exceeding four cents per pound at the place of shipment—we note that you desire to provide that such articles from Canada shall be made free of duty in the United States only upon certain conditions respecting the shipment of pulp wood from Canada. It is necessary that we should point out that this is a matter in which we are not in a position to make any agreement. The restrictions at present existing in Canada are of a Provincial character. They have been adopted by several of the Provinces with regard to what are believed to be Provincial interests. We have neither the right nor the desire to interfere with the Provincial authorities in the free exercise of their constitutional powers in the administration of their public lands. The provisions you are proposing to make respecting the conditions upon which these classes of pulp and paper may be imported into the United States free of duty must necessarily be for the present inoperative. Whether the Provincial Governments will desire to in any way modify their regulations with a view to securing the free admission of pulp and paper from their Provinces into the market of the United States must be a question for the Provincial authorities to decide. In the meantime, the present duties on pulp and paper imported from the United States into Canada will remain. Whenever pulp and paper of the classes already mentioned are admitted into the United States free of duty from all parts of Canada, then similar articles, when imported from the United States shall be admitted into Canada free of duty.

11. The tariff changes proposed might not alone be sufficient to fully bring about the more favourable conditions which both parties desire. It is conceivable that Customs regulations which are deemed essential in some cases might operate unfavourably upon the trade between the United States and Canada, and that such regulations, if made without due regard to the special conditions of the two countries, might to some extent defeat the good purpose of the present arrangement. It is agreed that the utmost care shall be taken by both Governments to see that only such Customs regulations are adopted as are reasonably necessary for the protection of the Treasury against fraud; that no regulation shall be made or maintained which unreasonably hampers the more liberal exchange of commodities now proposed; that representations on either side as to the unfavourable operation of any regulation will receive from the other all due consideration, with the earnest purpose of removing any just cause of complaint; and that, if any further legislation is found necessary to enable either Government to carry out the purposes of this provision, such legislation will be sought from Congress or Parliament as the case may be.

12. The Government of Canada agree that, until otherwise determined by them, the licenses hitherto issued to United States fishing vessels under the provisions of section 3 of chapter 47 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, granting to such vessels certain privileges on the Atlantic coast of Canada, shall continue to be issued and that the fee to be paid to the Government of Canada for such license by the owner or commander of any such United States vessel shall hereafter be one dollar per annum.

13. It is understood that upon a day and hour to be agreed upon between the two Governments, the President of the United States will communicate to Congress the conclusions now reached and recommend the adoption of such legislation as may be necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to the proposed arrangement.

14. It is understood that simultaneously with the sending of such communication to the United States Congress by the President, the Canadian Government will communicate to the Parliament of Canada the conclusions now reached, and will thereupon take the necessary steps to procure such legislation as is required to give effect to the proposed arrangement.

15. Such legislation on the part of the United States may contain a provision that it shall not come into operation until the United States Government are assured that corresponding legislation has been or will be passed by the Parliament of Canada; and in like manner the legislation on the part of Canada may contain a provision that it shall not come into operation until the Government of Canada are assured that corresponding legislation has been passed or will be passed by the Congress of the United States.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.
WM. PATERSON.

The Honourable P. C. Knox,
Secretary of State,
Washington, D.C.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Does that mean that all or none must be accepted on behalf of each government?

Mr. FIELDING. Practically, I would say, yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it an indivisible agreement?

Mr. FIELDING. I would think so, because if we should attempt to make changes our American friends would be equally ready to make changes, and I am afraid that there would be danger of our not making any agreement at all. In that sense. I would say, yes; it would be all or none, although parliament, of course, would have the absolute right to make any changes it saw fit.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It will be subject to modification or the reopening of negotiations?

Mr. FIELDING. It might be possible, but I am bound to say that I think the time is exceedingly favourable for the accomplishment of this purpose, if we agree that it is desirable, and any attempt made to delay it by further negotiations, I am afraid, would put in peril the whole arrangement. However, parliament is absolutely free to treat the matter as it deems best. Let me now read the reply of the Secretary of State, the Hon. P. C. Knox:—

Department of State, Washington,
January 21, 1911.

The Honourable W. S. Fielding, and
The Honourable William Paterson, Washington.

Gentlemen,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of this date in relation to the negotiations initiated by the President several months ago for a reciprocal trade arrangement between the United States and Canada, in which you set forth and ask me to confirm your understanding of the results of our recent conferences in continuation of these negotiations.

I take great pleasure in replying that your statement of the proposed arrangement is entirely in accord with my understanding of it.

It is a matter of some regret on our part that we have been unable to adjust our differences on the subject of wood pulp, pulp wood and print paper. We recognize the difficulties to which you refer growing out of the nature of the relations between the Dominion and Provincial Governments, and for the present we must be content with the conditional arrangement which has been proposed in Schedule A attached to your letter.

I fully appreciate the importance, to which you call attention, of not permitting a too rigid customs administration to interfere with the successful operation of our agreement, if it is approved by the Congress of the United States and the Parliament of Canada, and I desire to confirm your statement of our understanding on this point. I am satisfied that the spirit evinced on both sides gives assurance that every effort will be made to secure the full measure of benefit which is contemplated in entering into this arrangement.

The assurance that you give that the Dominion Government proposes to require only a nominal fee from the fishing vessels of the United States for the privileges in Canadian waters for which heretofore a charge of $1.50 per ton for each vessel has been required is most gratifying.

I heartily concur in your statement of the purposes inspiring the negotiations and in the views expressed by you as to the mutual benefits to be derived by both countries in the event our work is confirmed, and I take this opportunity to assure you, on behalf of the President, of his appreciation of the cordial spirit in which you have met us in these negotiations.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen.
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) P. C. KNOX.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In case the Congress of the United States or the parliament of this country should alter in any way the tariff as fixed by this negotiation, what would happen? Would it be, as you were, in regard to everything?

Mr. FIELDING. Each party is absolutely free to make its tariff in accordance with whatever it believes to be the interest of the United States on the one side or the interest of Canada on the other.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). What would happen then? Would everything then go back to the old condition?

Mr. FIELDING. If the United States should change one item in its tariff in a way to prejudice the trade in that particular article, the parliament of Canada might change its tariff on a particular item in such a way as to prejudice the trade in that particular article, and if, by and by, one item after another were changed and all the advantages of the arrangement were wiped away, I suppose we would come back to our old condition, and it would be a case of, as you were.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I would like to ask the minister if any articles have been signed, or is this just simply a convention, and not a treaty ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is neither a treaty nor a convention in the technical sense. The agreement is to be found in the letter addressed by my colleague and myself to Mr. P. C. Knox, Secretary of State for the United States, and in Mr. Knox's reply, the two documents being those which I have just read. These are the only documents that express the arrangement in any shape or form.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Then I understand this is not a treaty at all ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is quite correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask whether the proposed arrangement covers any articles which are imported to any extent from Britain or any of the British possessions, and if so, whether the lowering of duties which has been granted to the United States, is to be extended to Great Britain and the British possessions ?

Mr. FIELDING. Of course, as a general principle, whether Great Britain is to be interested or not, any duty that may be lowered to any foreign country, according to our well established policy, would be at the same time lowered to Great Britain, and a clause will be inserted in the resolutions which I shall have the honour to propose, providing that where in any case the duties are lowered the benefit shall be extended to Great Britain. As a matter of fact, they are only lower on a few items of food stuffs than the preferential rate and they are articles which Great Britain does not send us at all. Notwithstanding I think that if this arrangement be confirmed, it would probably lead to some readjustment of our tariff here and there, in order that we may maintain, as we fully intend to do, the principle of the British preference and that the concessions under the tariff now existing may be maintained under the condition of affairs when this arrangement is made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand from those who are more familiar with such matters from personal experience than I am, that the necessity of obtaining consular certificates for goods exported from Canada to the United States has been found sometimes a little oppressive. Has any arrangement been made in regard to that matter ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was mentioned and it is covered by the general clause in our agreement that all customs arrangements—and that will include consular certificates —shall be liberally interpreted whatever they may be. We did not think it was possible to go into things in detail because if we attempted to deal with any particular regulation and failed to deal with some others, we would have been embarrassed and we thought our best position would be to deal with the general principle. Therefore, we determined that no regulation should be allowed to hamper this trade unless the regulation were found to be necessary for the protection of the revenue against fraud.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not quite understand my hon. friend's answer to the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden). As I understood the Finance Minister if in the case of articles imported from the United States and from Great Britain a lower duty is made to the United States, a lowering will also be made to Great Britain. Great Britain now has a preferential rate on certain articles, that preference giving her such and such an advantage, and the lowering of rates on similar articles from the United States, unless the British preference is by that amount increased, diminishes the British preference. Did I understand my hon. friend to say that in all cases of that kind the British preference would be kept intact in its degree?

Mr. FIELDING. Not by the operation of this regulation in itself. I understand my hon. friend's question is whether in the event of any rates being lower on the products of the United States than on the products of Great Britain there would be at the same time a lowering to Great Britain. To that I answer, yes. But I also said, that if this arrangement be confirmed, it would probably necessitate some readjustment of the rates in our tariff laws generally with a view to the maintenance of the preference at whatever rate we may see fit to make.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister be willing to say whether that has simply to do with the principle of preference or with maintaining the degree of preference?

Mr. FIELDING. A large number of the articles covered by this are free; we cannot make them more than free to Great Britain, my hon. friend does not imply that. I think it will be found that most of the rates—I do not wish to speak too generally, for fear in some cases I should make exceptions—most of the rates we are giving, for example on manufactured goods, are the rates now laid down in the intermediate tariff, of which Great Britain and the world have had notice for several years. There are a few cases in which the rates are lower than the intermediate and even lower than the preference. That is in the case of food products, and as these do not come from Great Britain at all they are of practically no importance in relation to the preference. This instrument deals with duties on goods from the United States, but we would have to look over our tariff and see how it affected the British preference at any given point, and if we see fit to grant Great Britain a larger preference than would remain it is absolutely within the right of this parliament of Canada to fix that preference at whatever we think is a proper rate. That would be a matter for careful examination in detail and I do not think it arises at this moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that to-day Great Britain on any set of articles enjoys a preference of 33⅓ per cent. Suppose that by this instrument the United States is given, in that competing line of goods, a lower duty than it now has to pay, will the Finance Minister say that the British preference shall be kept intact as to degree?

Mr. FIELDING. We do not deal with that in this instrument——

Mr. FOSTER. I know you cannot.

Mr. FIELDING. But what we will do in regard to any particular item of our tariff in future Acts or resolutions, is a question which I find it impossible to answer at this moment, but I will say that we remain absolutely free to make the rates of the British preferential tariff as low as we like. If the effect of any given item is what my hon. friend says, to diminish to some extent the British preference, that is diminishing the proportion although not changing the rate, then if we want to give Great Britain a greater preference all we have to do is to reduce the British preferential rate. That is all.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister has declared that one prime consideration kept in view in these negotiations was that whatever happened the British preference would not be interfered with. The Finance Minister will not say they will keep the British preference intact but he says, as everybody knows, that this parliament can do just what it likes about that when it is legislating on that article. But if there was anything made fairly certain it was that whatever was done in this matter between the United States and us the British preference should not be diminished, that is that the degree of the preference should be kept intact. The Finance Minister, I believe, does not go so far as to say that shall be done, he simply throws it on the House and upon our power to do as we like.

Mr. FIELDING. We are dealing to-day with negotiations with the United States. We are giving to the House the result of our negotiations with the United States. It is not necessary for me to say to my hon. friend that the British preference never entered into these negotiations, and that we never discussed with our American brethren what the British preference should be. The preference is a great and important question. We have dealt with it in the past, we shall deal with it again. I do not want to import into this discussion anything of party colour, but I ask my hon. friend if he does not think that the British preference may safely be trusted in the hands of the men who created it?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not particularly interested now as to who created it or procreated it.

Mr. FIELDING. We are.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a document put before me, a set of negotiations, and as one member of parliament and representing my people I am asked whether I will assent to that or not. As one condition of my assent I want a straight answer to a straight question, that is whether in any degree my acceptance of this will diminish the British preference as it at present exists, either actually or relatively. I have been led to believe by the assertion of the Prime Minister that it would not. Will the Finance Minister allay my fears?

Mr. FIELDING. Unfortunately being possessed of somewhat orderly minds, we like to do one thing at a time. This is a tariff negotiation with the United States. We will have to deal with the items in the tariff generally, we will have to consider the British preference and to see how far it would be affected by this if we made any change. But that is an entirely distinct question which we will have to deal with at the proper time, and I do hope we will be able to deal with it in a spirit of greater sympathy with the principle of the British preference than my hon. friend manifested when the British preference was brought down.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Would it be considered a breach of faith or a breach of the agreement which has just been entered into if you should keep the corresponding duty on goods coming from Great Britain to Canada 33 per cent lower than the duty on similar goods from the United States?

Mr. FIELDING. No, Sir, we can do as we like with the duties on goods from Great Britain.

This agreement deals with the rates of duty on Canadian products going into the United States, with the rates of duty on American products coming into Canada, only that and nothing more. If my hon. friends will permit me, I will now read the schedules:

Articles the growth, product or manufacture of the United States to be admitted into Canada free of duty when imported from the United States, and reciprocally articles the growth, product or manufacture of Canada to be admitted into the United States free of duty when imported from Canada:

Provided that such paper and board, valued at four cents per pound or less, and wood pulp, being the products of Canada when imported therefrom directly into the United States shall be admitted free of duty, on the condition precedent that no export duty, export license fee, or other export charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) or any prohibition or restriction in any way of the exportation (whether by law, order, regulation, contractual relation, or otherwise, directly or indirectly) shall have been imposed upon such paper, board or wood pulp, or the wood used in the manufacture of such paper, board or wood pulp, or the wood pulp used in the manufacture of such paper or board:

Provided also that such wood pulp, paper or board, being the products of the United States, shall only be admitted free of duty into Canada from the United States when such wood pulp, paper or board, being the products of Canada, are admitted from all parts of Canada free of duty into the United States.

Note.—It is understood that fresh fruits to be admitted free of duty into the United States from Canada do not include lemons, oranges, limes, grape fruit, shaddocks, pomelos, or pineapples.

These things are largely free in Canada. In the United States they do not want to make them free, so they are not included in the fruits that are made free.

It is also understood that fish oil, whale oil, seal oil and fish of all kinds, being the product of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of the United States shall be admitted into Canada as the product of the United States, and similarly that fish oil, whale oil, seal oil and fish of all kinds, being the product of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of Canada, shall be admitted into the United States as the product of Canada.

That refers to fish taken beyond the three-mile limit, which would not be strictly a Canadian or a United States product; but if it is taken by Canadian fishermen it assumes the character of a Canadian product, and if it is taken by United States fishermen it assumes the character of a United States product, and is treated accordingly.

SCHEDULE B.

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing in our regulations touching anthracite at all. We have a few articles on the other side, and this sets forth the terms and conditions upon which these are to be admitted into Canada from the United States, being the items with respect to which we did not find it convenient to have a common rate.

This completes the schedules which, I am sorry to say, have occupied the attention of the House longer than I thought they would.

Mr. EMMERSON. Would the hon. minister, before he leaves these schedules, state the changes made in the tariff with respect to building and grinding stones?

Mr. FIELDING. I am going to include in the schedule a comparison showing the effect of the changes in each article—showing the American rate, our rate, and the new rate, and the reductions on each side. With the permission of the House I shall hand it into 'Hansard' without reading it.

Mr. BRODER. Is there any understanding about the packages in which free goods are shipped?

Mr. FIELDING. In some cases we have mentioned it. For instance, in the case of cream we have provided that the cans containing it, which may pass to and fro, shall be free of duty.

Mr. BRODER. They put a heavy duty on the packages.

Mr. FIELDING. We have thought of that, and my hon. friend will find that the wording of the item is entirely satisfactory. These reductions will apply to British goods as well, if they should be found in any case to affect them. But these cases will be found to be very few. They will apply, however, not only to the United States but they will apply to every country with which we have what is called the favoured nation treaty. It is well understood that by virtue of these old treaties (many of them made years ago at a time when Canada had hardly reached its present mature status, and when the colonies were not so consulted as they are now in regard to these arrangements), these old treaties still outstanding and binding the whole empire oblige us to give whatever is given to one country to all other countries possessing these treaties. We have had that question repeatedly up here, and hon. gentlemen no doubt understand it. And so, these reductions will have to be given in each case to the various countries which have what is called the favoured nation treaties.

It is too soon to make any very close examination into the financial results, but

I thought we ought to make an approximate estimate and that it would interest the House to know what that estimate is. As far as we can see on a hurried examination, on the basis of last year's business—assuming that for the first year under the operation of this arrangement the volume of trade to be the same as last year,— it would result in a reduction of taxation amounting to $2,260,000. Therefore, even from the point of view of the reduction of the burden on the taxpayer the matter is well worthy of attention.

We have been impressed, Mr. Speaker, from the beginning—my hon. colleague the Minister of Customs and myself, who have been charged with these negotiations—with the great importance of the matter. I need hardly say we have given to the work our best consideration and attention. We have fortunately had the benefit of the assistance of two capable and able officers of our public service. I refer to Mr. John McDougald, the Commissioner of Customs, or Deputy Minister of Customs as he really is, and Mr. James A. Russell, for many years in the Customs department, but now assigned to the tariff branch of the Finance Department. In the preparation of the information necessary for an intelligent study of this question, and later on in the working out of the details of the arrangement, we have received from these gentlemen a service of the utmost value, and I desire in this public way, to express how deeply we are indebted to them.

It would be too much to expect that an arrangement of this character should be adopted without careful criticism and perhaps it is too much to expect that it should be passed without adverse opinion. The common experience is that all grave and important movements are calculated sometimes to alarm people and that we are amazed afterwards as the years roll on to find how our anticipations have not been realized. I trust it will be found by those who have been somewhat anxious, perhaps nervous, possibly alarmed for the outcome of these negotiations; I trust as they look into the matter carefully, they will find, as I believe they will find, that their anxiety, while very natural, was hardly necessary. In this arrangement, they will find that every interest in the Dominion of Canada has received our careful consideration. We hope indeed to broaden the trade between our neighbours and ourselves; we have desired to find larger markets for our products. We are doing that all the time; we are sending our commercial agents to the uttermost ends of the earth to seek for business; why not seek it from the 92,000,000 people who live side by side with us?

We present this arrangement as one which we feel we can sincerely commend to the judgment of this House and of the people of Canada. We do not present it to the House as something in which we have won a victory over our American friends. That, Sir, would be a small return for the good spirit in which they have met us. I desire to say that throughout these negotiations the President of the United States has given us abundant reason to appreciate his sincere desire to carry out a friendly arrangement. He will carry into the completion of this transaction the authority of his great office and his great talents; he will carry into it, Sir, all the energy and ability he possesses to bring it to a successful issue, and I know he will make it a labour of love.

And, no less commendable has been the line of conduct of the distinguished Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. P. C Knox. As this is an international matter, it came under the direction of the Secretary of State. Mr. Knox gave it close personal attention for many days, day after day, and I know he is not less anxious than the President of the United States to bring about a friendly arrangement. From these two distinguished gentlemen, from every officer of the State department and Treasury department, and from all with whom we were brought in contact we found abundant evidence of an honest and sincere desire to make a friendly arrangement with us.

We present the arrangement to you to day, Sir, not as a triumph of one country over the other, but as the result of an effort to do justice to both; we commend this arrangement, Sir, to the judgment of this parliament as the President of the United States will commend it to the judgment of the Congress. The one fear I have is that there may be people who will say that we have made so good a bargain that the Congress should not approve of it. In times past friendly arrangements have been made with the United States government which have failed to receive the approval of the Congress, but we think the time is more favourable now. We think we have found the psychological moment for dealing with this question; we think we are within reach of some of the commercial advantages for which our people have struggled now for half a century. We commit this matter to the care of the Canadian parliament with the firm conviction that it is going to be a good thing for Canada, a good thing for the United States, and that we will continue to have it and maintain it not because there is any binding obligation to do so, but because the intelligence of the people of the two countries will decide that it is a good thing for the promotion of friendly relations and for the development of commerce of the two countries.

Resolution to be moved in Committee of Ways and Means.

That it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, and to provide as follows:—

1. That the articles, the growth, product or manufacture of the United States, specified in schedule A shall be admitted into Canada free of duty when imported from the United States.

2. That the articles, the growth, product or manufacture of the United States, specified in schedules B and D shall be admitted into Canada upon payment of the rates of duty specified in the said schedules when imported from the United States.

That the advantages hereby granted to the United States shall extend to any and every other foreign power which may be entitled thereto under the provisions of any treaty or convention with His Majesty.

That the advantages hereby granted to the United States shall extend to the United Kingdom and the several British colonies and possessions with respect to their commerce with Canada. Provided however, that nothing herein contained shall be held to increase any rate of duty now provided for in the British preferential tariff.

That it is expedient to provide that the Act proposed to be founded on the foregoing resolutions shall not come into operation until a date to be named by the Governor in Council in a proclamation to be published in the 'Canada Gazette' and that such proclamation may be issued whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the United States Congress has enacted or will forthwith enact such legislation as will grant to Canada the reciprocal advantages provided for in certain correspondence dated Washington, January 21, 1911, between the Honourable P. C. Knox, Secretary of State for the United States, and the Honourable W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance of Canada, and the Honourable William Paterson, Minister of Customs of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I shall not, of course, at the present moment attempt to follow the Minister of Finance in a detailed examination of the proposals which he has presented to parliament. The first thing that strikes one in connection with these proposals is that they are of a very far-reaching and comprehensive character and that they amount in many respects to a proposal to parliament to enact an entirely new tariff. What their effect may be upon many industries in Canada and especially on many of the smaller industries scattered all over the country I would not attempt to-day to suggest. Looking at them as the Minister of Finance presented them to the House, I was inclined to think that the conditions of trade as they are in Canada at the present time will be subject to very serious interference and dislocation from these proposals. Probably there is no man in this House of Commons to-day, not even the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs, who can foresee with any reasonable degree of accuracy just what the effect upon our trade conditions may be in the future as resulting from these changes.

One or two observations, however, of a general character I would like to make. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has referred to the history of reciprocal relations with the United States of America. He has said very truly that we in this country must always have regard to the fiscal policy of a great nation numbering nearly one hundred millions of people, whose boundaries adjoin ours for nearly 4,000 miles. I entirely agree with that. And I would like to suggest to my hon. friend that we ought, also, to have earnest and serious regard to our relations with the three hundred millions of people who are under the British flag with ourselves. But when the Minister of Finance spoke of the history of reciprocal relations with the United States in the past he might well have drawn a moral and a lesson which he did not draw in the spirit in which he addressed this House to-day. Let us look for a moment at that treaty of reciprocity which existed between the British North American colonies and the United States between 1854 and 1866. What were the conditions of trade during that period, and what followed the denunciation of that treaty by the United States? Certain lines of trade and of industry were established in this country during the years in which that treaty was in force. When that treaty was denounced my right hon. friend remembers, and most of the members of this House remember, that intense confusion was wrought in all conditions of life in Canada by the fact that that treaty was denounced upon one year's notice. Canada did not realize at that time her strength. Canada, it is true, did not then possess the strength which she possesses to-day. But Canada encountered that situation with a firm and confident spirit, and after many years of progress and development under a policy laid down by the Liberal-Conservative party in 1878, and carried out almost unimpaired by the gentlemen who now sit upon the treasury benches, Canada occupies a position at the present time which does not seem to call for the active interference with our fiscal conditions which has been proposed to this House.

Mr. Speaker, what has been the song, what has been the cry, of the Minister of Finance, of the Minister of Customs, and of the Prime Minister himself, in this parliament? During the past eight or ten years they have been telling us over and over again, in every budget speech to which I have listened, that the conditions of Canada were so absolutely satisfactory that every good and true Canadian ought thoroughly to rejoice therein. Canada found new markets after the denunciation of the reciprocity treaty, she found those markets for the most part within the limits of the British Empire, she found markets which she might confidently believe would be open to us, not only now, but in all the years to come. Well, Sir, what does the Minister of Finance propose to-day? He proposes an arrangement of a very far-reaching and comprehensive character, which will bring about a considerable dislocation in the business interests of this country; there is no doubt at all about that. What does he say as to the duration of that arrangement? He says it is expected that this arrangement will continue for a considerable time. Nothing could be more indefinite. My hon. friend the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) asked the Minister of Finance a question, which was upon my own lips; he asked: Is this an indivisible agreement? Does it mean everything that is contained in these resolutions and these schedules, everything or nothing? The Minister of Finance answered that by saying, in a rather indefinite and hesitating way, that he supposed, so far as he understood the situation, that it meant everything or nothing. Well, I would think that the Minister of Finance should be able to give to parliament, in presenting a statement of this important and far-reaching character, the certain meaning of this treaty in that regard. My hon. friend from South York asked the minister another important question, which had also occurred to me. Suppose the Dominion of Canada, next year, or the year after, or five years from now, interfered with one single item set forth in these schedules, or with half a dozen items contained in them, what would be the net result upon the understanding which has been arrived at between the two countries? In that respect, also, the answer of the Minister of Finance left it open to every member of this House to draw whatever conclusion he might see fit. The answer was no answer at all, and we do not know at this moment, the Minister of Finance has not seen fit, or is not able to say, what the result would be upon this understanding between the two countries if, in two years from now, the parliament of Canada saw fit to alter or amend the customs duties in respect to half a dozen of these items.

Mr. FIELDING. This parliament will be absolutely free to do what it likes, the United States congress and this parliament are both absolutely free. This is an arrangement to which we are committed because we believe it is for the good of both countries; and if one year hence we make up our minds, one country, or the other, that this arrangement is not mutually beneficial, we will change it, that is all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well I am bound to say that that seems to be an extraordinary arrangement, an arrangement of a most indefinite and unsatisfactory character, an arrangement the duration of which is uncertain, the character of which is uncertain, and the effects of which are uncertain—except that we are assured that they will in the immediate future dislocate the conditions which the government have pronounced for many years past to be absolutely satisfactory to the people of this country.

Now, let us look for a moment at the reasons which have impelled the government to enter into this arrangement. My hon. friend was exceedingly frank; he told the House, and very truly, that the government of this country, almost against their will, had been forced into making this arrangement by the suggestions from the United States that they intended to impose their maximum tariff, whereupon the government of Canada, only a year ago, saw fit to recede from the attitude they had held down to the opening of last session. My hon. friend placed himself and his government in an exceedingly curious position by one remark he made to-day. He said that it would have been the duty of the President of the United States to withhold the minimum tariff from Canada unless the concessions which were made by this parliament last year had been agreed to by Canada, and in the next breath he said that these concessions were of so paltry and trivial a character that the people of Canada need not be concerned with them at all. Now, will any hon. gentleman in this House tell me that the President of the United States would have felt himself constrained to hold the tariff of Canada, without those paltry and trivial concessions, as unjust or discriminatory towards the United States? Why, the mere statement of the case is sufficient to refute the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in that regard, and to show the people of Canada that if the government had stood firm at their post as they promised to do at the commencement of last year they would not have been obliged to make the concessions of last session or to engage in the reciprocity negotiations, the result of which has been brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance to-day. That is the true history of these negotiations, as I understand it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has said that the proposals which he submits to parliament may be roughly divided under three considerations; in the first place, that the arrangements are to be carried out by mutual legislation, and not by treaty, in the second place that there is a large free list which consists chiefly of natural products and, in the third place, that a uniform rate of duty is to be imposed by the two countries upon many articles which are enumerated in one of the schedules. Well, Sir, he has mentioned some articles that are free and he has mentioned some upon which there is to be a uniform duty. In so far as some of the items are concerned, for example, that of agricultural implements, I do not believe that the reduction of the duty upon agricultural implements, which he proposes, will yield the slightest iota of relief to any of the farming population of this country, and I am convinced that the price which will be charged the farmers in the future will not be affected in the slightest degree whatever by the reductions which he proposes to make in that regard. The Minister of Finance has referred to several important articles of agricultural production which are to be admitted duty free into the United States. We will discuss those later on. He has referred to the importation into the United States of fish free of duty and he has said that the government of Canada has declined to extend to the fishermen of the United States access to our fishing grounds. That also will be discussed later on. He says that the government of this country denied the United States free fishing. I would like to tell the Minister of Finance and the government that the fishermen of the United States at the present time enjoy free fishing in many Canadian waters simply for the reason that those waters are not protected as they ought to be.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of Canada in fiscal matters ought to be regulated and directed solely with a view to the interests of the Canadian people as a whole. I understand and I thoroughly appreciate the importance of good relations with the United States of America. The United States of America have fixed their tariff in the past and they will fix it at all times in the future purely from the standpoint of the interests of their own people and the development of their own country. It is our duty in Canada to do precisely the same thing. We have had in this country, since 1878 or 1879, a policy which has sought to protect and develop our own natural resources by the labour of our own people. The object of any government in this country ought to be to accomplish that good and desirable result without imposing any oppressive burdens on the people as a whole, and the Conservative party has stood, and it stands to-day, for a policy of that kind. The Conservative party stands to-day, as it stood in the past, for the policy of reciprocity within this great British Empire. As far as we are concerned we believe that the aim and object of the fiscal legislation of this country ought to be to promote that great end and object, and we believe that, for that purpose, as well as for the purpose of fiscal freedom in every possible respect, we ought to keep ourselves free of all entangling treaties, or alliances, or understandings; that that object and purpose, which I regard as the greatest consideration that could be before the eyes of any Canadian statesman to-day, should be kept constantly before our minds and that everything that would lessen the possibility, probability or imminence of carrying out that great scheme of reciprocity within the empire ought to be banished from our minds and put aside as unworthy of our attention.

Then, there is another consideration, Mr. Speaker, which, I think, ought to be borne in mind. As a natural result of the policy to which I have alluded—the policy of building up our own country, developing our own resources and keeping our people at home—we have had the lines of communication in the past running from east to west and not from north to south. They have run from the Atlantic to the Pacific, they have not stopped at the Atlantic or the Pacific, but they have stretched across both oceans, and I see in the proposals which the government has brought down to-day a purpose and object which seems to me to be absolutely inconsistent with that which has been, as I have understood, the purpose and object of the Canadian people for the last thirty years at least. I do not regard it as a good omen for the future of Canada that the government of the day should seek to alter that condition and to divert those lines of trade and communication, now running from east and west so that they shall run in the future from north to south. We have spent a great deal of money in this country, we have taxed our resources perhaps as the resources of no other people in the world were ever taxed to carry out the policy, the object and purpose to which I have alluded, and if there is any meaning at all in the proposals of the government to-day they mean the almost absolute and complete reversal of that purpose and object.

One would have thought that the present was an especially inopportune time for taking up tariff negotiations with the United States; in the first place, because the tariff of the United States, as is well known, is very much higher than our own in very many important articles indeed; and, for the further very good and important reason that if you can judge at all from the trend of public opinion in the United States, the probability is that the tariff of the United States will be revised and very largely reduced upon many of those articles which are enumerated in the schedules brought down by the Minister of Finance.

The negotiations, in short, are a sequel to the surrender which this government made last year. I am, at the same time, of the opinion that if our government had then stood firm the government of the United States would never have imposed their maximum tariff against Canada.

In conclusion, while not able to apprehend the full meaning and scope of these proposals or the exact results which will ensue from this tariff policy now proposed, I believe it is open to severe and grave criticism by reason not only of the considerations which I have very briefly addressed to the House this afternoon, but by reason of the fact that it does not sufficiently regard the position of this country as an integral and important nation of the British Empire and does not sufficiently regard the purpose, the object and scope of the policy to which Liberals and Conservatives alike, as I understand the records of the past have been committed with respect to the development of Canada and its status as a nation of the British Empire.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the debate was adjourned.

CHINA-JAPAN STEAMSHIP SUBSIDY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to, on or after the seventh of April, 1911, grant a subsidy for steamship service between a port or ports on the Pacific coast of Canada and China and Japan, for such period or periods of time as may be deemed expedient, not however to exceed in the aggregate ten years, and to pay therefor a subsidy or subsidies, as the case may be, not exceeding the sum of 25,000 pounds sterling per annum for such service as may be deemed expedient from time to time.

He said: The House will understand this resolution when I say it is to renew the subsidy which has been voted for some years past to the Canadian Pacific railway for the service which is now well known between Vancouver and Japan and China.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long has this arrangement been in force?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The subsidy was put in force shortly after the Canadian Pacific railway was completed and has been continued for some 20 years. It has been renewed once. The subsidy has been contributed by the Canadian and the imperial governments. We are not certain yet whether or not the imperial government will continue their contribution, but we are in communication with them on the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. What boats are engaged in this service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are three boats, the 'Empress of China,' the 'Empress of Japan,' and the 'Empress of India.' The service is about every twentieth day and the speed of the boats fifteen knots.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I saw some reference in the press to the refusal of this government to co-operate with the governments of Australia or New Zealand with respect to some such service.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, it is quite the reverse. My hon. friend refers to the Australian service. There is another line of steamers subsidized from Vancouver to Australia and New Zealand. That service has been in operation now for several years. We are renewing it now. There has been some difference between the governments of Australia and New Zealand. New Zealand is contributing a very large sum but the government of Australia has refused up to the present to again aid this service unless there is direct communication with them, avoiding the port in New Zealand. We thought it would not be advisable to give up the service to New Zealand. We have offered the governments of Australia and New Zealand to renew the service just as it was, simply with an improved service, but up to the present time the government of Australia has not thought fit to join. We are in hopes, however, they may be persuaded to do so. At all events, we have endeavoured to maintain the service even if it be confined to Canada and New Zealand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a distinct service from this?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Absolutely.

Mr. SPROULE. We should have some information about this service, whatever the expectations in connection with it have been realized, whether the trade with China and Japan has greatly improved, for instance, in wheat and fruit stuffs. We should also know what provision there is for the carriage of perishable products, whether there is cold storage and whether we have any control over the freight rates.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no arrangement for cold storage on the boats. The result as to improvement of trade has not been very much. We have some trade with Japan which has been increasing to some extent. Our trade with China has made very little progress, if any. Notwithstanding this, I believe that at the present time it would be very unfortunate if these services were abandoned, when China is developing very rapidly, and when Japan is also developing. The little trade we have with those countries would then go to San Francisco, and I think it is worth the sacrifice we are making to keep that trade in our own hands.

Mr. SPROULE. A few years ago there were trial shipments of flour to China and Japan, and rather bright anticipations were held out about the trade that we ought to develop along that line. It was said that it would be a very valuable trade to the Northwest. We ought to have some information as to whether that trade is being established or not, or whether we are making the proper efforts to get it.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt a large trade possible with that part of the world; but it seems to me that it is time we attached more stringent conditions to the subsidies we give to the steamship lines. We are missing a very important trade in lumber, because the rates in many cases are prohibitive. When we grant such a large subsidy as £25,000 a year for ten years, we should have some control over the rates. Then, unless there is a sufficient cold storage installation on these ships, we must necessarily miss a very important trade in perishable products. Therefore it seems to me that before we make this grant we should know something more concerning the details of that trade in the past, and the subsidy should be conditional upon the company providing such cold storage facilities as may be required by the trade. I hope my right hon. friend will take these two points into consideration before he asks the House to grant this subsidy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The suggestion that we should have cold storage on the ships is a very reasonable one. The conditions of the contract between the government and the company have not yet been adopted. We are merely asking here for the authority of parliament to renew the contract. I will report to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce the suggestion that has been made. I can give to my hon. friend the information that he asked as to the character of the steamers.

Mr. SPROULE. It has been stated in the press that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company intend to place larger boats on the Pacific next summer, I presume for this service. This proposal is to renew the contract for at least ten years, which would mean subsidies aggregating $1,250,000. This is a contract which has been in operation for several years, and the wisdom of parliament must be exercised to determine whether it be wise to renew it or not or whether, if it be renewed, different terms should not be insisted on. That can only be judged by the results we have had in the past, and for that purpose I desire to find out whether the trade has been developing from year to year and to what extent and in what lines. Many years ago when we agreed to give subsidies to certain steamship lines, we provided that they should be equipped with cold storage and we had an agreement with them as well regarding the rates. But, if I correctly understand the present position, the government do not seem to be taking any precaution in that line whatever, and thus we may be giving a big subsidy which may practically bring us no profit. If there be little or no trade, our subsidy will be so much money thrown away. To enable us to judge whether it be wise to vote this large amount for the next ten years we should know more about what have been the results under the contract about to terminate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall give all that information at the next stage.

Mr. MONK. I would like to be allowed to insist upon the cold storage provision. Undoubtedly, whatever may have been the results in the past, there is a very large cold storage trade to be done with the east. Large quantities of our perishable products are required in China, and these can only be sent there in steamers provided with cold storage. I think it would be proper, in a contract of this magnitude, to stipulate that cold storage facilities must be provided and further that the rates should be under the control of the government or the Railway Commission. Otherwise this company may charge the same rates to shippers as if they were receiving no subsidy whatever from the government. If they want to do that trade, they will have to equip their vessels with cold storage in any case; and when we give them a subsidy, they should be obliged, not only to provide that cold storage, but to submit their rates to the control of this government. Some time ago I heard a complaint regarding lumber shipments on these steamers. In the eastern ports lighters are used to take the lumber from the steamers to the shore, and it appears that the lighter charges were such as to render the shipment unprofitable, It would, therefore, be necessary to stipulate in the contract that the lighter charges should be moderate and not such as to make the trade unprofitable.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree that when the steamers, the 'Empress of Japan' and the 'Empress of China,' were put on the line between Vancouver and the eastern ports, the refrigerator system was not what it is to-day. But the Canadian Pacific railway authorities are contemplating putting new steamers on that service. My hon. friend from Jacquees Cartier (Mr. Monk) will see, by the last annual report of the Canadian Pacific railway, that its president, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, announced that before long new steamers would be put on that route. In 1891, and the years immediately following, when we gave a subsidy to the Canadian Pacific railway, the company was practically depending on its return cargoes of silk and tea, because practically there was no trade from this country to the east on the outward voyage except the tourist business. Since then, however, the Canadian Pacific railway has recognized that it must put larger steamers on this route equipped with the most modern refrigerator system. So far the company has given good service, but my hon. friend is quite justified in saying that the refrigerator service requires to be improved on account of the increasing trade in perishable products between the far east and Canada.

Mr. MONK. I have noticed that the Canadian Pacific railway contemplate improving that service, but we are now about to make a contract with it, and that contract will be made long before these new steamers are in operation. At any rate the point regarding cold storage should have the attention of the government. If we are going to give this large subsidy, we should reserve control over the freight rates on perishable products, as otherwise our trade will languish, whereas the American trade with the east is in full bloom and vigour. I do not know whether my hon. friend the Postmaster General, during his travels in the east, noticed whether the lumber was taken ashore in lighters.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They invariably use lighters to tranship their freight to the wharfs. As regards perishable products, I notice that the apple trade is growing immensely with Japan and China, and also the cheese trade. I told the ex-member for Perth (Mr. McLaren), that I had seen some of his cheese in Tokio and Yokohoma, but it had been shipped on American boats, just because there were no refrigerators on board our steamers. The point taken, therefore, by my hon. friend was well taken.

Mr. MONK. The complaint I particularly made was with regard to the special rates charged by the lighters, and these rates, in spite of the protests of the shippers, are persisted in by the Canadian Pacific railway. It would be necessary to guard against that by providing that the freight rates would cover the carriage from port to port irrespective of these additional charges. Such subsidies should be made absolutely conditional upon our control of the freight rates.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. SPROULE. Do we pay an additional subsidy to these boats for carrying the mails?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The mail contracts are made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and revised by the Post Office Department, but the subsidy is for the mails.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the subsidy simply for the carriage of the mails and not for the purpose of stimulating trade?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The subsidy is supposed to be not only for the carriage of the mails but to stimulate the development of trade between the two countries, just as in the case of the Atlantic service.

Mr. MONK. These subsidies are not paid only for carrying the mails?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. MONK. The main object of the subsidy is to encourage trade.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. If the subsidy was merely for the carriage of the mail there would be no need to stipulate about cold storage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And no need of such a large subsidy either.

Mr. BLAIN. This legislation will give the Governor in Council authority to spend $125,000 a year for ten years and the government should be able to tell us what the extent and nature of the trade it is expected will be developed with China and Japan. Usually, when we ask what trade has been developed by the voting of these large subsidies for steamers to different parts of the world the government have to answer that the development of trade was not as large as they expected. Again, I would suggest that although the resolution gives the government power to contract for ten years it would be much better to make the contract for five years so that parliament might have an opportunity to say at the end of the shorter period whether it was wise to continue the subsidy or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is of course merely for the renewal of the subsidy. My own personal view is that in the immediate future I do not expect there will be much development of trade as a result of this subsidy, but I certainly do expect that some years hence we shall have a large and growing trade with the Orient.

Mr. BLAIN. In what class of goods?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I should think in cereals, lumber, fruit, manufactured products, minerals such as lead, and as the Orient, Japan especially, is coming more and more to western civilization, I should think we would have a large trade in machinery with Japan and possibly with China. I shall remember the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that possibly it would not be wise to make a contract for ten years. Certainly I would be inclined somewhat to his view that the term should be five years.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Can the Prime Minister say how this would affect Prince Rupert as a Pacific port?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Sufficient for the day is the evil or the good thereof. It is quite possible that when Prince Rupert has come to be the terminus of the new Transcontinental line we may have to adopt the same policy with regard to it that we do with regard to the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. DANIEL. How many trips a year are we now getting for the subsidy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About eighteen.

Mr. MONK. This is a very considerable subsidy and I am inclined to believe that even if there was no subsidy it would be impossible for a wealthy and powerful corporation like the Canadian Pacific railway to abandon that part of its round-the-world route, and that it would be necessary for them to maintain that steamship line for the next ten years. However I believe with my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that ten years is a very long period to contract for. It would be more satisfactory if the contract were laid upon the table of the House for approval before it was finally entered into; so that we may see whether these features in connection with the freight rates and cold storage are carefully safeguarded. What information I have received would lead me to believe that there would be a very much larger movement of lumber from the province of British Columbia towards the east if it had not been that the rates charged were absolutely unreasonable.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The points raised by my hon. friends somewhat commend themselves to my judgment and I think I will be able to answer them at the next stage of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. When the next stage comes we shall have information as to what progress has been made in the quantity of freight taken in and out during the last twenty years and as to what class of goods have been carried. I sympathize with the Prime Minister and the rest of the government in the matter of the small amount of information we have been able to draw from them. It is almost wonderful how little ministers may know when they come to ask parliament for a subsidy of $125,000 a year for ten years, to a company like this. We can see from the blue-book reports what the trade with China and Japan is, but it would be very instructive to know what proportion of that trade comes by these subsidized steamers. If it should turn out to be that but a small proportion is being carried by them it might need investigation as to the cause, and if it shall be found to be due to high freight rates that should be guarded against. The Postmaster General told us that no allowances were paid to these steamers for the mails, and that it was included as one of the duties they were to perform in earning the subsidy. Is it the same in the case of the carriage of the British mails. What arrangement is there now about the mails between Great Britain and China and Japan? Who pays the cost of carriage across from port to port?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is an arrangement by which the imperial government pay £20,000 a year. The contract was renewed two years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the imperial government pay not more than £15,000. We pay more than they do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not exactly say, but there is a large amount paid by the imperial authorities, and then there is a subsidy by the Trade and Commerce Department, which includes the Canadian mails taken by the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose the minister traces it from London, how does it come?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It comes by our Atlantic steamers, by the Canadian Pacific railway or the Allan steamers, to whom we pay subsidies.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we paying for the British mails?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, not for British mail coming here, but we pay for Canadian mails going out. The British government is paying for British mails coming in. The mails are taken off the steamer by the Intercolonial railway as far as Montreal or Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. For which the Intercolonial railway gets paid?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Intercolonial railway gets a proportion.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the Intercolonial railway gets its proportion from?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That depends. If all the mails are delivered at the Rimouski wharf, then they are taken to Quebec, where they are delivered to the Canadian Pacific railway, or to Montreal, and then the Intercolonial railway get a proportion for carrying them from Rimouski to that point. Then the mails are taken by the Canadian Pacific railway straight on to Vancouver, where they are delivered on the Canadian Pacific railway boats and carried across.

Mr. FOSTER. Then for a British mail starting from Liverpool or other British port, the British government pays the cost of passage across the Atlantic?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It then goes on the Intercolonial railway, and is handed to the Canadian Pacific railway at Quebec. Does the British government pay for the cost of their mail, the China and Japan mail, on the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not give the figures to my hon. friend, but there is an arrangement made by the two governments at the end of every fiscal year, and adjustment as regards the proportion.

Mr. FOSTER. The object of the adjustment is that the British government shall pay for its through mails whatever that carriage costs. What I want to get at is whether we are mixed up with their accounts.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, we have a special contract.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me the time has come for us to consider whether we ought not to adopt the same system as they have in England, and I think in the United States, where they pay so much for carrying the mails, irrespective of any trade considerations. Trade subsidies are not given to ships in England nor in the United States. With us the situation is different. I am not opposed in principle to subsidizing steamship lines for trade purposes, but I think that those purposes to be entirely distinct from the carriage of mails. We ought to adopt the system they have in those countries, where they have more experience than we have, and pay for the carriage of mails distinct from all other purposes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree with my hon. friend that the time may have arrived when we should revise our mail subsidies between Canada and Great Britain. But my hon. friend knows under what conditions these subsidies were paid, in the infancy of steam navigation, when Sir Hugh Allan organized a service between Canada and Great Britain. The Canadian government at that time decided, and I think very properly, to give special inducements to the enterprise of Sir Hugh Allan. At that time Canada had not a population like that of the United States or of Great Britain. There had been no necessity at all for giving a special subsidy for the encouragement of that line for trade purposes, trade alone was sufficient to induce enterprising merchants to organize such a service. But we did it with a view of getting a mail service between Canada and Great Britain. This steam service has been going on something like sixty years. My hon. friend says we should revise that system, and I do not dispute it. I think the time has well come when we may, perhaps, think of having a mail service between Canada and Great Britain on the rule of paying so much per ton. Now, with regard to our trade with the Orient. Some time after the completion of the Canadian Pacific railway it was thought advisable to give them a special subsidy to help them to put on a service between Vancouver and China and Japan. This subsidy is not given exclusively for the carriage of mails; it is given in excess of what would be a legitimate compensation for carrying the mails. But it was done to encourage trade, and to establish communication between Canada and the Orient. I am bound to say that that trade has not developed to the extent we had expected. But I think no one at this moment would desire to abandon that service. We think it ought to be maintained, even if it has not done all we expected from it; at all events, we think it better to leave it as it is. I may say to my hon. friend that I did not expect to be able to-day to give to the House all the information which he desires. I expected a good many questions would be put to the government for information, and at a later stage we will be in a better position to give that information.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me remind the Prime Minister that when this service was started twenty years ago he was strongly opposed to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know about that.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I had the pleasure myself of bringing down the subsidy, and I had to put forth all my small powers to overcome my hon. friend's objections on that occasion. Does my hon. friend forget that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend does me a great credit and a great honour to say that he had to overcome my poor opposition. I think he will not find that I said a word against that service.

Mr. MONK. I quite recognize that the conditions of sixty years ago are very different to-day. I understand that some of the information we seek to-night can be brought down later. My right hon. friend will admit that we took on habits sixty years ago with regard to steamship subsidies that it is now high time we should abandon. I have no objection to continuing subsidies for trade purposes to steamship companies, but I think there must be a diminution in the first place, and in the second place we should make these subsidies absolutely subject to conditions which will protect shippers, and that is not done at the present time. Line after line of steamships has been established, and they have all received subsidies, but they fail to provide the accommodation which we should exact from them. I regret I have not the papers connected with trade in the Orient, but my recollection of the information contained there was to the effect that several very important contracts for oriental governments, or for private firms there, were lost on account of the excessive rate of freight over the Canadian Pacific railway lines. When investigation was made it was found that although the apparent freight rate was not excessive, the great expense was brought about by these special rates charged upon the lighter. I think that a complete reconsideration of the terms upon which we subsidize the steamship lines is now advisable.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I did not quite understand the Postmaster General to-day in answering the question with regard to the Atlantic mail service, as to whether the subsidy was granted or not, and who was carrying out the contract.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does my hon. friend refer to the question put this afternoon?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the subsidy had been renewed and if new conditions had been imposed with a view to just this question?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I answered, no, there is a contract which is not yet terminated between the government and the Allans and that contract has not been altered. It is still in existence, and I think it is in existence for one year more. It has not been renewed and no new condition has been attached to the contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help thinking that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has taken a proper position with regard to urging upon the government the necessity of adopting some kind of cold storage system when these subsidies are granted to the large steamship companies, and I hope the government will take that matter into consideration.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I understand that this subsidy is to be granted on the Pacific coast. Any one who knows the conditions of shipping on the Pacific coast knows that the Japanese are subsidizing their lines heavily. Not only do the Japanese subsidize ships that fly the Japanese flag but they also subsidize the building of ships for Japan and in Japan. I think that the subsidies granted on the Pacific coast should be narrowed down to the shipping companies that are owned and controlled in Canada. If we are going to maintain our trade on the Pacific and keep it in our own hands we must fight the enemy with the same weapons that they are fighting us with. They have succeeded in driving the Americans entirely out of trade by their methods on the Pacific. They have driven such a strong power as Jim Hill out of business and they now own his ships. In making this contract, I hope the Prime Minister will endeavour to take the national ground and, if possible, give the mail contracts to those ships owned in Canada at the present time and that he will also make a further condition that in five or six years, or within a limited period, the subsidy may be earned only by ships built as well as owned in Canada. The policy of the government with respect to the navy is intended to promote the shipbuilding industry, and if that shipbuilding industry is to be promoted it must be promoted along commercial lines as well as along naval lines. If there is to be a shipyard on the Pacific coast then, before very many years have passed, those ships that go out from the Canadian ports on that coast should be Canadian-built ships and the subsidies that we grant should be granted on the same basis as the Japanese have granted their subsidies to Japanese ships. That is the policy adopted by Japan and it is the policy adopted by Germany. These nations have, within the last ten or fifteen years emerged from obscurity in maritime matters and have become very important naval and mercantile nations. I do not see anything in this resolution which would narrow it down so as to ensure that the subsidy should only be paid to Canadian-owned ships. There is nothing to prevent it being granted to Japanese-owned ships. The ships of the Canadian Pacific railway line are now owned in this country.

Mr. MONK. But they are not registered here.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The registration is a mere matter of form. It is only a matter of a few dollars. Whether they are registered in Canada or England, they have the same rights in all British ports, but the question is, supposing that the Japanese succeed in driving our present shipping lines out of business on the Pacific coast, will this subsidy revert to the Japanese owners that may take these lines over? The condition that I have spoken of exists in so far as the American lines are concerned. I understand that the American ships are now owned and manned by the Japanese, and we should avoid that if possible. I hope the Prime Minister will take note of that and in making the contract ensure that the ships shall be Canadian ships, and if possible, before many years pass, that they shall be built on the Pacific coast, where they hope to have a large shipbuilding industry.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I might remind my hon. friend that this subsidy is intended for the Canadian Pacific railway ships, and I am sure that my hon. friend has no doubt at all in his mind that these ships will not go into Japanese hands, but that they will remain in the hands of the Canadian Pacific railway. As to the general tone of my hon. friends' remarks, if he will permit me I will offer them my strong commendation for their wisdom, and I hope they will be heard on the other side of the House especially by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. MONK. I quite approve of what my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has said, but when my hon. friend proposes to place the condition upon the subsidy that they should be Canadian ships does he mean to say that they should also be ships of Canadian register because we have some Canadian ships that are not registered in Canada?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). If I could narrow it down to have them built and owned here I would do so, but you cannot do that in twenty-four hours.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that. Of course, that condition would be impossible if there is going to be any continuity in the service. But, there is still further impossibility about the other condition mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe that they should be ships of Canadian register. There are no ocean-going ships on the Pacific ocean of Canadian register capable of carrying out this contract. All steamships of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are registered in England. That my hon. friend should confine the subsidy to British ships and that he should wish to keep it out of the hands of Japanese capitalists is all right, but he could not possibly carry out any contract of this kind with ships registered in Canada because there are none at all on the Pacific or Atlantic capable of fulfilling the conditions of this contract.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from Simcoe will see what an amount of missionary work he has to do on the other side of the House to convince them of the truth of his statements. I am a convert to his policy, and I hope that ships will be built at Collingwood to do service on the Pacific ocean.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe).

Mr. MONK. It is the expression of a very good hope.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, and a fact.

Mr. MONK. But my right hon. friend admits that I am right in my statement of fact, does he not, that these ships intended to be subsidized at the present moment cannot fulfil the conditions pointed out by my hon. friend from Simcoe?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. With respect to hopes for the future, I have just as many as my hon. friend.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, no, my hon. friend cannot have. This subsidy is intended for ships which are now built. My hon. friend from Simcoe referred to ships to be built afterwards.

Mr. MONK. Oh, no.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). As to the registration, any ship built in England and registered there desiring registration in Canada is registered here on payment of some small fee like $50, so it would not cost the Canadian Pacific railway much to have its ships registered here. Then they would be Canadian owned and Canadian registered.

Mr. MONK. I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension: ships are registered either in Canada or in England, the object of registering in England being to bring them under the operation of a government contract which renders them liable to serve as cruisers in time of war. If they are built under certain conditions set down by the British government, they possess advantages of a special kind. It is not a matter merely of a few cents or dollars to register ships in Canada that have been registered in England. The Canadian Pacific railway ships, like the Allans and others, are registered in England for a specific purpose, to serve, by arrangement with the British government, as cruisers or as transports in time of war.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is the reason why they have a special system of subsidizing in England and give only what is called poundage in the mail service. My hon. friend must not forget that the British government to-day pays huge subsidies for the Atlantic service between Liverpool and New York the Cunarders. The ships that ply between Southampton and South Africa, receive huge subsidies called mail subsidies, but for the very reason mentioned by the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that in time of war they may be utilized for other purposes.

Mr. MONK. It has nothing to do with trade at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I think it is a system of protection.

Mr. CROSBY. I am delighted to hear the Prime Minister give expression to his anxiety to have ships built in Canada. We in Halifax and those interested in Halifax, have been seeking for a subsidy for a number of years. I think it is 10 years since I had the honour on one occasion of coming here with a delegation asking the government to grant a subsidy to assist us in commencing a ship building industry in Halifax. I have no doubt there are other places where they could be built, but we claim that we at least have a reasonable right to ask some assistance. The local government of Nova Scotia, the city of Halifax, and the town of Dartmouth, gave bonuses towards the construction of a ship building plant. If the right hon. gentleman had been as anxious to have ships built in Canada 10 years ago as he seems to be to-night we would no doubt be building ships in Halifax now. I would ask if it would not be possible, even at this late date, to have provision made in the supplementary estimates for such a subsidy. Steel and iron ships have already been built in other parts of the province, but we in Halifax claim that the province and city have been interested in this project and have gone a long way in this matter, and should receive assistance, although we have almost given the matter up because we have not been able to get any encouragement from the present administration to assist us in starting a ship building industry in Halifax. If that had been done 10 or 12 years ago we no doubt would be now constructing ships there suitable for this kind of work. Of course it takes some time for any ship building yard to construct the kind of ship run by the Canadian Pacific railway on the Atlantic and Pacific. But we would be in a position to build commercial ships for transportation on the Atlantic and also on the Pacific. I think it would be well if the Prime Minister would give us that promise, and I am sure the people of the eastern part of Canada and of Canada as a whole would be glad indeed, to hear that we were to get some encouragement in the direction of a subsidy or assistance to the construction of ships in Canada and do away with all this worrying about having them built and registered in Canada, because unless the government could assist us there is not much prospect of our being able to build ships in competition with other countries that have long been engaged in the ship building industry. In the United States they are willing to pay large sums in order to have ships constructed in their own country. It is easy to prove that this government would be doing good missionary work for the Dominion of Canada by giving a good subsidy to encourage ship building here.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend has the opportunity of seeing his hopes fulfilled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what way?

Mr. MONK. Give a subsidy and we will have ships built in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give a promise, I am blamed every day by the Conservative press for making promises.

Mr. CROSBY. My right hon. friend had no hesitation in saying to my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) that he was anxious to have ship building in Canada, but when it comes to building ships in Canada the right hon. Prime Minister keeps his seat.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all, they have a ship yard in Collingwood.

Mr. CROSBY. Ship building in Collingwood, the right hon. gentleman does not worry about it very much. I say it is not fair to intimate these things and when an opportunity offers to do something definite to withhold assistance. If the Prime Minister would promise a subsidy it would be good news to send out to-night to offset some of the bad news for some parts of the country that will be in the papers to-morrow.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 103) relating to steamship subsidies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM AND OTHER DRUGS.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING moved second reading of Bill (No. 97) to prohibit the improper use of opium and other drugs. He said: Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that a year or two ago a Bill was introduced into and passed by this parliament having for its purpose the suppression of the opium traffic in Canada. That Bill came as a result of the inquiry which took place on the Pacific coast shortly after the riots which had occurred, affecting the conditions of the Chinese and Japanese residing in the city of Vancouver. A number of Chinese whose stocks of opium had been somewhat damaged in those riots put in claims for losses which they had suffered in the manufacture of opium. Those claims came as a surprise to a good many people in this country, who were not aware that the opium traffic was making any headway on this continent, particularly in Canada. Upon the report of the inquiry which I had the privilege of making, a Bill was introduced by the then Minister of Labour, the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, for the purpose of prohibiting the manufacture, sale and importation of opium. So far as the manufacture of opium is concerned that Bill has proved most effective. Where there were seven factories operating in different cities on the Pacific coast three years ago, there are none at the present time ; so that the manufacture of opium in Canada has been completely suppressed by that legislation, and the importation has been very largely suppressed. On the other hand, it has been found that in spite of the regulations, a considerable amount of opium has been smuggled into Canada. The police have found that the present legislation is not drastic enough, or broad enough, to give them the powers of seizure and confiscation which they regard as necessary. One of the objects of the present Bill is to make more drastic the regulations in that regard. Before submitting this Bill to the House I conferred with the chiefs of police in Vancouver and Montreal, two officers who have had a good deal of experience in administering the law, and obtained from them suggestions which are embodied in the Bill.

The legislation of two years ago did not prohibit opium smoking. It was thought, that as parliament was prohibiting the importation of opium, the smoking of opium would itself cease. But this has not proven to be the case, for it is found that the practice of opium smoking is considerable in a good many of the cities of Canada. The present Bill prohibits absolutely the smoking of opium.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House the international aspect of this question. In 1909 an international commission met in Shanghai for the purpose of considering whether it was possible for the different nations of the world to assist the Chinese government in its efforts to suppress the opium traffic in China. As is generally known, it is estimated that something like 20,000,000 people in that empire are victims of the opium habit, and the Chinese government, recognizing the importance of a strong manhood to the nation, has sought to eradicate the evil and has asked other nations to join with it in the effort to suppress the opium traffic. At that international commission some 13 or 14 different countries were represented. It was the first international commission which has ever assembled in the Orient. The British Empire had five representatives including one from this country. After a careful investigation and series of reports from the several delegations the International Commission adopted a series of resolutions which the various delegates were asked to present to their respective governments in the hope that these governments would give effect to them. I shall read those resolutions, inasmuch as we are seeking, by the Bill before the House, to give effect to those resolutions so far as Canada is concerned. The first resolution relates to the efforts which the Chinese government is making to suppress the opium traffic, and is in the following words :

That the International Opium Commission recognizes the unswerving sincerity of the government of China in their efforts to eradicate the production and consumption of opium throughout the empire, the increasing body of public opinion among their own subjects by which these efforts are being supported, and the real, though unequal, progress already made in a task which is one of the greatest magnitude.

The second resolution is:—

That in view of the action taken by the government of China in suppressing the practice of opium smoking, and by other governments to the same end, the International Opium Commission recommends that each delegate concerned move its own government to take measures for the gradual suppression of the practice of opium smoking in its own territories and possessions, with due regard to the varying circumstances of each country concerned.

It may be of interest to the people of this country to know that when that International Commission met in Shanghai it was possible for the example of this country to be cited as one to be followed by other nations. It was pointed out that that example had been followed by the United States, and the commission hoped that it would be followed by other countries. The third resolution is:—

That the International Opium Commission finds that the use of opium in any form otherwise than for medical purposes is held by almost every participating country to be a matter for prohibition or for careful regulation; and that each country in the administration of its system of regulation purports to be aiming, as opportunity offers, at progressively increasing stringency. In recording these conclusions, the International Opium Commission recognize the wide variations prevailing in the different countries, but it would urge on the attention of the governments concerned the desirability of a re-examination of their systems of regulation in the light of experience with other countries dealing with the same problem.

That is what we are doing in considering this measure.

The fourth resolution expresses the need for co-operation between the nations, and is as follows :

That the International Opium Commission finds that each government represented has strict laws which are aimed directly or indirectly to prevent the smuggling of opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations into their respective territories; in the judgment of the International Opium Commission it is also the duty of all countries to adopt reasonable measures to prevent at ports of departure the shipment of opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations, to any country which prohibits the entry of opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations.

The fifth resolution relates to the other drugs than the particular one referred to as opium and its alkaloids. It was recognized in this gathering, composed of men who had given careful study to the question, that as the opium traffic was suppressed other drugs equally dangerous might take its place, such as morphine and cocaine, and the commission took the ground that it was desirable that every country which sought to suppress the opium habit should also pass effective legislation with respect to other habit-forming drugs. It is found that the morphine and cocaine habits prevail in some of our cities to an extent which, to say the least, is distressing. I mention these two drugs because of the bearing of the fifth resolution of the commission on the proposed legislation, which resolution I will now read :

In the present Bill will be found a clause with this object in view :

That the International Opium Commission finds that the unrestricted manufacture, sale and distribution of morphine already constitutes a grave danger, and that the morphine habit shows signs of spreading. The International Opium Commission therefore desires to urge strongly on all governments that it is highly important that drastic measures should be taken by each government in its own territories and possessions to control the manufacture, sale and distribution of this drug, and also of such other derivatives of opium as may appear on scientific inquiry to be liable to similar abuse and productive of like ill effects.

In this report of the International Opium Commission, which held meetings at Shanghai from February 1, to February 26, 1909, we have the recommendation on the part of the representatives of thirteen different countries that each should pass legislation which would effectively suppress, not merely the habit of opium eating and smoking, but also the habits that are formed in connection with such drugs as morphine and cocaine. The parliament of Canada, by passing the legislation now proposed will, therefore, be assisting not merely to put down the evil in this Dominion, but will be taking part in a world wide movement which has for its object the suppression of this kind of evil in all countries.

Mr. JAMESON. Who represented Canada on that occasion?

Mr. KING. I had that honour. In addition to the report of this commission, it may interest the House to know that the druggists of this country at their last annual meeting in Halifax—the meeting of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association—passed on September 10, a very strong resolution on this subject. Of course in a matter of this kind the experience of physicians and of those who have to do with the sale of drugs is all important, and I would, therefore, ask permission to quote part of the speech delivered by the president of that association on that occasion. It will be found on page 4 of the report under the subject heading ' Control of the Supplies of Narcotic Poisons.' :

The control of supplies of narcotic poisons, notably cocaine might profitably engage your attention, and your deliberations should quite properly lead to a request to the federal government to consider the advisability of enacting measures to more completely safeguard the public from the harmful consequences of unregulated use of these dangerous drugs. It is futile to attempt to restrict the supply of these drugs in the absence of general and effective measures throughout the domain. The welfare of our public demands that inviolable laws be enacted by the parliament of our country to make it impossible to procure these peculiarly degrading drugs for any but legitimate professional treatment. As to the proper medium of supply, it is clearly evident that the trained and legally qualified pharmacist is the one person indicated for this function and control by conditions established by governmental regulation through co-operation with your association. This logically suggests the need of a Dominion Pharmacy Act, and as this aspect of the question is to come before you in another relationship, nothing further in this regard is necessary for my present purpose. The necessity for closer restrictions on narcotic drugs of less marked character than those usually recognized as dangerous might be dealt with at this section. It must have come within observation of more than one pharmacist that much harm and misery is wrought by uncontrolled use of even so apparently innocent a preparation as paregoric. There is no logical reason why it should not be sold subject to the same condition as other preparations of opium.

In addition to those two reports from specially qualified sources, I might give to the House information which has come to me unsolicited within the last few weeks from different parts of this country. The number is indeed amazing of the communications which have come to the department from all quarters since it became generally known that legislation of this kind was proposed. These communications all go to show the serious character of the evil we are endeavouring to deal with and the urgent need of immediate legislation. I have a letter sent me to-day by the Dominion parole officer, Mr. Archibald, who has had a good deal of experience with criminals as they leave the prisons, and he says in this letter —which incloses a confidential communication under consideration by another department:

It is only one of many I come in contact with, and I am safe in saying that 12 to 15 per cent of all the young prisoners I come in contact with credit these drugs with the cause of their downfall.

There you have the statement by General Staff Inspector Archibald that from 12 per cent to 15 per cent of the young prisoners he comes in contact with attribute their downfall to drugs. He adds:

I am grateful for humanity's sake that something is contemplated for relief of a system which is taking hold of many of our best young men and bringing in its train the consequent ruin to both the mental and physical life in our Dominion. Had I time and opportunity to make a census of prisons, I would be greatly surprised if the percentage would not reach over 25 per cent of their populations rather than the figures quoted from my actual experience.

When I communicated with the Chief of Police in Vancouver and sent him a copy of the Bill which I proposed with regard to opium, this is what he replied:

November 21, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of the 19th inst., having reference to the Dominion Act——

I had previously discussed this subject with Chief Chamberlain, in Vancouver, and communicated with him by wire when about to bring this measure before my colleagues.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of the 19th inst., having reference to the Opium Act, and asking for suggestions from me with a view of amending the same, and in reply beg to state that I would strongly recommend the following amendments:—

1st. It should be an offence for any one to be found smoking opium. At the present time it is not an offence.

2nd It should be an offence for any person to be found in possession of opium other than a qualified druggist or doctor.

3rd. The Act should provide for seizures, confiscation and destruction of opium found in an opium joint when searched under warrant and issued under section 641. The new section 642 providing only for the confiscation and destruction of the pipes, chairs, tables, &c., but not for the opium found in these dens.

I may say that opium seems to be coming in here in large quantities, as my officers are frequently capturing men with it in their possession, and I have no doubt for every one that is captured there are as many more escape the vigilance of the officers, and I am strongly of the opinion that there should be a close supervision of the water-front of Vancouver to prevent smuggling generally, as I am satisfied that it is carried on to an enormous extent and that no time should be lost in putting a patrol boat to keep a constant watch along the docks.

Hoping the above suggestions will meet with your approval.

I have the honour to be sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. G. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chief Constable.

Then in reply to a communication I addressed to Mr. O. Campeau, the chief of police in Montreal, I received the following:

Montreal, December 10, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of recent date asking if I had any suggestions to offer in connection with the Bill which was introduced in the House of Commons to prohibit the importation, manufacture, sale and use of opium, and especially as regards the best means of suppressing the opium traffic and the evils growing out of same.

I took communication of the Bill, and in my opinion its dispositions shall contribute in a great measure to the suppression of that disastrous traffic.

I wish, however, to call your attention to another traffic which, since about six months, spread devastation in this city especially, I mean to say the trade of cocaine.

Since six months the Montreal police have made over one hundred and twenty-five arrests of persons for selling or using that drug.

As you know, the only legislation which applies to the sale of cocaine is the Pharmaceutical Act of this province, and the penalties enacted for its violation are very lenient.

The fact that the violation of this law is growing up so rapidly and with so disastrous effects shows evidently that the present legislation is not effective.

Therefore, without offering specific suggestions concerning the Bill presently before the House of Commons for consideration, I will ask if it would not be possible to include in this Bill the cocaine and other drugs.

According to the medical men the cocaine produces worse effects than opium, and it would be a good occasion to adopt proper legislation to suppress the cocaine traffic and the evils growing out of same.

One of the means whereby information is gathered by the Department of Labour in relation to matters affecting industrial and social conditions is the selection from newspapers of items which are classified and kept for reference. I have here a very large number of such clippings referring to this subject, but I shall only read one or two to indicate the nature of the reports which have recently appeared in the press. In the Montreal 'Witness", of November 23, 1910, under the heading 'Cocaine a Social Plague' there is an account of some convictions that took place before Mr. Recorder Dupuis who is reported to have used the following language:

'This curse of cocaine,' proceeded Mr. Recorder Dupuis, speaking with emphasis, 'has existed for a short time in the city. It is a real evil. It is a social plague, and it goes on spreading so fearfully that it is time for society to take marked notice. Alcoholism and morphia are nothing to cocaine. It is the agent for the seduction of our daughters and the demoralization of our young men. I should be a doctor if I could tell you all the evil that exists in it. Those who know what cocaine is and what its evils are, are those who can hurt society most. If the chemists themselves do not give us a hand to assist in stopping the habit we can do nothing. There is no remedy. The able lawyer who represents the Pharmaceutical Association has asked for fine to be increased from $25 to $100. This would not help us at all. As it is now, cocaine is sold at $12 the ounce, and the profits made thereby are stupendous. A number of doctors, who know all the evils of cocaine, must be prescribing it right and left. I wish legislation would be passed so that chemists would have to be licensed in the same way that alcohol dealers are, and licenses could then be refused to those who went on selling cocaine. It is a crime against society. I know of my own knowledge a doctor who says that of ten chemists he knows, six sell cocaine, one he is not sure of, and the remaining three do not. Those who sell it are nothing short of conspirators against society. The College of Physicans and Surgeons should take the matter up. It would be a good thing if chemists were not allowed to sell cocaine without taking the names and addresses of buyers, so that it would be easy, if desired, to find out what doctor had given the prescription. As to selling without prescriptions, that should be positively forbidden.

'For the love of a few dollars these men have thrown away the lives and futures of young men and young girls. I said formerly that those who put foreign matter or water into milk were criminals. Well, I find no word adequate for those who poison the very life blood of society. I am giving the alarm. I call upon parliament, upon the legislature and upon our representatives to do all in their power to stamp it out.'

The 'Montreal Star' of November 17, 1910, has an article headed 'Much cocaine is sold here in an illegal way,' and it gives an account of the existence of the traffic in Montreal. The Montreal 'Gazette' of November 26, has a lengthy article containing this statement made by Judge Leet of that city:

I also think it should be made a criminal offence the same as opium is. That is to say, that it is such an offence for any person to open a shop where opium is smoked, and though the comparison may not be the same, it should be just as much a criminal offence for any one to aid another to snuff cocaine. The offence to be subjected to a fine or imprisonment or both, subject to the discretion of the judge. I intend to urge the necessity of making the illegal sale of the drug a criminal offence.

I may say that in the Bill before the House we have endeavoured to take cognizance of the suggestions made by the authorities who have had to deal with this particular question. The Ottawa 'Journal,' of July last, under the heading, 'The cocaine habit has a grip on Ottawa,' gives an account of disclosures made at a meeting of the trades and labour council of this city as to the existence of the cocaine traffic here. 'La Patrie' of Montreal reports a sermon preached on this subject by His Grace Monseigneur Bruchesi, Archbishop of Montreal. In a communication received from Mr. Gibbard the secrétary of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, dated September 10, 1910, there is the following paragraph:

It will only be necessary to inform you that at the last meeting of our association held at Halifax in September, a strong resolution was adopted urging the federal parliament to recognize the imperative demand for legislation prohibiting or controlling the sale of all 'habit-forming' drugs and narcotics throughout the Dominion.

In framing such a measure, the wisdom and knowledge acquired through experience by the entire drug trade is at the disposal of the government, and in its subsequent administration loyal support will be accorded. We, however, desire that such an Act should be a government measure, believing it of sufficient moment to command the attention of the cabinet.

I learned through the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) that Mrs. Henderson, of Montreal, the probation officer of the Children's Aid Society had given this subject very careful study during the past year or two, and I wrote Mrs. Henderson asking if she could come to Ottawa and give the government the benefit of her investigations into the existence of the evil. The story told by Mrs. Henderson was a very sad one indeed. She reported that of her own observation she had met as many as fifty or sixty little girls and boys within the same day, in the city of Montreal, all of whom had acquired the cocaine habit to some degree. She spoke of little girls taken out of cocaine dens, and of young boys whose whole futures had been blighted. It is a fact that this cocaine has been distributed amongst school children and that to-day in that city many a parent is having an anxious time for his child because of the contraction of this habit. Not merely has it come to have a hold upon men; but vicious people have sought this means of spreading the curse for reasons of their own, among the young as well as the old and have brought thereby unhappiness to many homes and many lives. I believe that to no person in Canada is so much credit due for the agitation against cocaine as to Mrs. Henderson, of Montreal, who has devoted her time willingly and persistently in an attempt to suppress this great evil. Without attempting to give the House what is contained in the file of correspondence I have here, I would like to indicate its nature, and to show how general is the desire for legislation of this kind. All the letters I have before me have come as I have already said unsolicited. In no case except those mentioned, have I written to any one asking for information. But in the last few days these communications have come to hand from public officials and many other sources.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister seems to be giving himself unnecessary trouble in presenting those communications to us. I have not heard of any one opposed to the Bill. The Minister of Labour will soon be as bad as the Minister of Agriculture in taking up the time of the House.

Mr. KING. It may be true that my hon. friend has not heard of any proposed opposition to the Bill, and I hope that none will develop. But I have found in my limited experience in the House, that it is after the second reading of the Bill that opposition develops. I trust there will be no opposition when I am through. But I desire to read these communications in order to avert any opposition that might otherwise arise. Here is my communication from His Worship the Mayor of Montreal, in which he says:—

In acting energetically in this matter, you will be doing a great good to our citizens and to humanity generally.

The recorder of Montreal emphasizes in strong words the need of this legislation. Several aldermen of the city have also written. Then I have here a telegram received the other evening from His Grace the Archbishop of Montreal, in the following words:—

I have learned that you propose to pass a federal law to combat the disastrous effects of cocaine among the people, and above all among the young people. You have my entire approbation. One is unable to take too severe measures against a plague which is still more terrible perhaps than that of alcohol.

Then His Grace The Right Reverend Dr. Farthing, the Anglican Bishop of Montreal, wires as follows:—

Delighted that you are giving hearty support to Cocaine Bill. Hope you will not rest until this much needed reform is accomplished.

There are several other letters from clergymen of various denominations speaking on behalf of their churches and on behalf of clerical societies and associations. Among these is a communication from the Protestant Ministerial Association of Montreal, one from Professor Welsh, of the Presbyterian College, and president of the Chinese Mission. In this communication Professor Welsh says:—

The use of cocaine is becoming so widespread, among young people as well as seniors, among foreign races (like Chinese, &c.) as well as Canadians, and the effects are so disastrous, that it is becoming a grave social and national peril.

The Rev. Dr. Gordon, of the Baptist Ministerial Association of Montreal, has written, and the following is contained in his letter:—

In view of the sad consequences that follow the use of these drugs, the measure, in our judgment, cannot be too drastic.

The president of the Montreal Congregational Council, Rev. F. J. Day, has also written, and in his communication the following paragraph occurs:—

In view of the frightful havoc which is being wrought in Montreal by the use of this drug, and doubtless in many other places in Canada, your measure is a most opportune one, and I desire, both in my individual and official capacity, to express my great gratification over this move and the hope that the Bill will speedily pass into law.

The Rev. Dr. Young of Douglas Methodist Church, Montreal, writes:—

Unfortunately the use of drugs is not confined to the so-called poorer classes. It obtains amongst the people who should and do know better. Any measure tending to reduce the evil of this habit will be heartily welcomed by every lover of his country. Again I would assure you of the hearty sympathy and support of the church of which I am a pastor, and of the Montreal North District of the Methodist church, of which I have the honour to be chairman.

The Rev. E. I. Hart, of the Dominion Methodist Church, Montreal, states:—

In connection with our personal work among the young men of Dominion Square and in the old brewery mission, I have met with many cocaine fiends. Two young men from our own Sunday School have fallen victims to the habit. Every effort has been made to save these fellows but thus far without results. They seem hopelessly lost—apparently without moral sensibility.... I hope that the House may be convinced of the need of immediate action, for every day in Montreal new victims are being claimed by this monstrous vice.

In a communication from the Rev. Dr. Sparling, of St. James Methodist Church, Montreal, appears the following:—

You cannot do a greater service for the young humanity of our country. The havoc wrought by that evil among the boys and girls especially is awful. I write to express not only pleasure but the hope that no interests arrayed against this Bill will prevent its passage into law.

The Rev. Dr. Johnston, of the American Presbyterian Church, Montreal:—

These evils have already become so widespread in Canada that I am sure you will have the sympathy of all who truly love our country in your endeavours to restrict them.

Then there is a communication from the Rev. G. H. Baker, of the Temple Baptist Church, and president of the Baptist Young People's Union of the province of Quebec; one from the Clerical Association of Montreal, signed by ten of the leading clergymen; a communication from the Local Council of the Women of London, Ontario. I may mention that the National Council of Women have taken up this subject and have asked parliament to enact a measure similar to the one that is introduced. The Montreal Women's Club, particularly the committee on child labour, has asked for this legislation. I have also a communication from the University Settlement of Montreal. I may say in connection with settlement work, that I regard persons living in these university settlements as exceptionally well qualified to pronounce upon the needs of legislation of this kind. Settlement workers are really sociological students, and are in the best position to express an opinion. The leter from the University Settlement of Montreal reads as follows:—

In this part of Montreal, our workers find themselves always confronted by the problem; some of our older boys have fallen victims, and it is terribly easy for the younger ones to learn the habit; while the danger to girls is even greater. We are very grateful for a proposal which will greatly strengthen all the work for the welfare of the city children.

The Young Men's Christian Association, of Montreal, have urged the legislation. The Dominion Alliance for the total suppression of the liquor traffic has also made representations and from the letter of Mr. John H. Roberts, secretary of the Alliance, I take the following:

Being in the thick of the battle for social and moral reform in this city, I have had many opportunities of realizing the ravages of this drug, and cannot but strongly urge upon you the necessity for drastic dealing with the evil.

Then the Pharmaceutical Association of the province of Quebec has sent in a request for a federal Bill and state in this connection:

This Bill has the entire endorsation of every honest druggist in this province, and it is the hope of this association that the restrictions and penalties shall be made severe. Statistics in the United States show that only ten per cent of the drug imported is used legitimately, and no such condition of affairs is desired in Canada.

A federal Bill should receive the support of every man who is interested in the health and morals of his fellows. The insidious effects of this drug are antagonistic to both, and the ease with which it is used—merely by sniffing—constitutes its use as one of the most pernicious habits.

The Royal College of Dental Surgeons, of Ontario, in their communication, state:

Our profession are heartily in accord with the restrictions.

In addition to that I have had a large number of communications from individuals, and a petition signed by 429 persons of Montreal, including many prominent citizens. I hope the House will not feel that in quoting these documents I have any other purpose in view than to show how many different classes of people feel the necessity for legislation of this kind. In the Bill which is before the House the government has sought to take cognizance of the views expressed by those who have come in contact with actual conditions, by officials who have had to do with the administration of the law, and we have tried to frame a measure which will be effective if put upon the statutes. We have tried to bring down a Bill that will stamp out for good and all, if possible, the use of these habit forming drugs for any other than scientific or medicinal purposes, and when used for these purposes, used in such a way as to safeguard the interests of all. I should like to again emphasize the fact that in this legislation Canada is not merely helping herself, but is helping also in a world-wide movement, because legislation similar to this is being presented to the congress of the United States at the present time, and as I have indicated by a reference to the International Commission which met in Shanghai a year ago, the governments of various countries may be expected to take similar action.

In conclusion let me say that this legislation belongs to the same class as the Bill I had the privilege of introducing the other evening which seeks to suppress the occupational disease known as necrosis. What we are striving for in legislation of this kind is the conservation of human life and of human well-being. A great deal has been said about the conservation of our natural resources; but natural resources are given to man for the use of man, and not for the destruction of human life. The first of all resources to be conserved are the health and life, moral as well as physical of our people, and it is to keep these intact, and to help to build up in Canada a strong, and happy, and a moral people, that the government brings forward this legislation, and does so in the belief that it will pass this House without any opposition.

Mr. DOHERTY. I desire to say that with the object of this measure I have the most hearty sympathy. The minister has expressed a hope that the Bill will meet with no opposition, and I think he will not be disappointed. I do not think that, after all he has so eloquently said, and the powerful testimony he has thought proper to invoke in support of the measure, it is necessary that I should add any words for the purpose of enforcing the desirability of adopting a measure of this kind. I may say as living in Montreal, and being more or less in communication with a great many of the authorities whom the hon. gentleman has cited, that I have had occasion to learn something of the very frightful and growing evils which, I am sorry to say, have prevailed in that city, as a result more particularly of the use of cocaine. So much so is that the case that when the hon. gentleman introduced his Bill dealing simply with opium, I was requested to take some steps to have added to it a provision respecting the use of this drug, cocaine, and I had even prepared an amendment in that sense when the minister anticipated me by remodelling his Bill. I am glad to express my sympathy with the purpose of his Bill, and, in so far as its principle is concerned, to give it my support. In going over it I have been struck with the possibility that some of the provisions do not precisely express the intention, or possibly go beyond the intention, but I understand that any verbal matter of this kind can more properly be dealt with when the Bill gets into committee than at the present stage.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Clause 3, which is the operating clause, I do not think, carries out the intention or desire that the hon. gentleman has in view. It reads:

> Every person who imports, manufactures, sells, offers for sale, has in his possession, or takes or carries or causes to be taken or carried from any place in Canada to any other place in Canada, any drug for other than scientific or medicinal purposes, shall be liable, upon summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment.

That disregards totally the intent of the person doing this; that is to say a man might innocently carry a package of opium —it might not be marked 'opium'—from the station to the drug store or an employee might put it on a railway express train. Any person who touches it at all, quite innocently, would be liable under this Act and the magistrate would have no discretion but to fine and perhaps imprison him. The minister should insert the word 'knowingly' before the word 'imports' to meet that objection. I notice that in section 4 he says:

> Every person who smokes opium, or who, without lawful or reasonabe excuse.

He puts this qualification in, and likewise in the next subsection:

> Any person who, without lawful and reasonable excuse.

There is all the more reason in the operating clause of the Act that he should insert the word 'knowingly'.

Mr. KING. I think we might consider a point of that sort when the Bill gets into committee. That very point was raised by me with the Justice Department when this Bill was submitted for consideration, but I was advised that perhaps it would be just as well to leave out the word knowingly.' It was represented that the judge would use his discretion in a matter of that kind. The trouble in the administration of Acts of this kind is that it is just such words as the one suggested that tend to nullify the real effect. However, I am quite prepared to leave myself in the hands of the Committee, and if members think it is advisable to make the change suggested by the hon. gentleman, to carefully consider it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How can the judge exercise discretion when the Act says that if you are found with opium in your possession you are guilty of a crime under this very section? If you carry or deal in it as an innocent employee you are liable to the penalties of the Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2: Definitions; (b) 'Opium' means and includes crude opium, powdered opium, and opium prepared for smoking, or in any stage of such preparation.

Mr. SPROULE. The only drugs mentioned in the schedule are cocaine, morphine and opium. Morphine and opium are practically the same thing. Would it mean any other preparations of the same drug? For instance, take 'opium'; will that include opium, tincture of opium, morphine, paragoric and other preparations?

Mr. KING. Section 14 will perhaps show why these other preparations have not been included. Section 14 gives the Governor in Council power to—

> From time to time, add to the schedule of this Act any substance, the addition of which is by him deemed necessary in the public interest.

It was thought advisable, before filling out that list, to confer with different associations and medical men with regard to the drugs that should be included in it. Additions I think, could be more advantageously made in that way, after getting expert advice from associations like the medical and pharmaceutical associations. Then in connection with our Conservation Commission we have an officer whose duty is in part to consider and advise upon questions of this kind. On the advice of such authorities the Governor in Council might add any preparations deemed necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. You specify opium and morphine. These are two preparations of one drug. Would any other preparations of the same drug come under the provision of the law? Different preparations of the same drug in different forms produce practically the same effect. If you take laudanum it produces the same effect as morphine. If you take opium it also produces the same effect. Would it apply to all preparations of the same drug?

Mr. KING. It is just possible that there are some preparations which it would not be wise to include in that list, but any that medical experts thought it desirable to include the Governor in Council has power to add.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the question I asked at all. Legally, do you come under the next clause of the Act if you are carrying, or using, another preparation of the same drug than that which is mentioned in the schedule?

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask if the word 'opium' means opium itself, or does it include alkaloids of opium, or the various preparations made from opium and from the alkaloids of opium?

Mr. KING. That is practically the same question as that which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has asked, As the Bill now stands in its reference to oppium in the interpretation clause, 'opium' includes 'crude opium, powdered opium, and opium prepared for smoking, or in any stage of such preparation.' But as respects other drugs the intention has been to leave them for the present until an opportunity has been had to confer with medical experts as to what preparations, what alkaloids and what derivatives shall be included, and they may be added by order in council. There are a great many of them, but I understand it is rather a technical subject. The government can get the advice of well qualified practitioners, and they can add these preparations by order in council as may be necessary from time to time.

Mr. BLACK. I think there are preparations and alkaloids of opium that need legislation to prevent their use by the people more than crude opium itself. In 47 years' experience in the practice of medicine I have found more people in eastern Canada suffering from the use of morphine than any other preparation of opium. I have found it taken by many people hypodermically, as well as by the mouth, and I think if legislation is required, as I am sure it is, to protect the people against the use of opium, it is equally required in the case of the alkaloids. Some persons drink laudanum, which is nothing less than opium and alcohol, but the great majority of people addicted to the opium habit take morphine, which is an alkaloid of opium, codeine, another alkaloid, and I have found individuals who prefer to drink paragoric or any other form of opium. If we are going to legislate we really ought to include some alkaloids of opium.

Mr. KING. In the schedule appended to the Act, the alkaloids including morphine are specifically named and section 14 of the Bill gives the Governor in Council power to add any other alkaloids, from time to time, as occasion may require.

Mr. DOHERTY. This provision, section 2, combined with section 14 to which the minister has referred, seems to me a very dangerous kind of legislation. I have said that I have great sympathy with the purpose of this Act, but it is to be borne in mind that this is a criminal enactment, we are making additions to the criminal law and by these two combined sections we are handing over the power of this parliament to make the criminal law to the Governor in Council, because if this is carried, a mere addition to that schedule made by the Governor in Council will make the having or selling or dealing in or carrying the substance which may be added to that schedule a crime. I think this is undesirable legislation. It is going very far indeed for us to enact that the Governor in Council shall be free to make a crime, the possession of any substance whatsoever which in his judgment he may consider he ought to add. I have no reason to suppose the power would not be fairly and reasonably exercised, but at the same time, as a matter of principle, it does seem to me very undesirable form of legislation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I entirely agree in what my hon. friend for the St. Anne's division of Montreal (Mr. Doherty) has said. I would like to emphasize the point that the entire pharmacopœia might be added by order in council to this schedule, and the possession or sale of any article enumerated therein might be made a crime. We have had a great deal of legislation by order in council, sometimes of necessity or for purposes of convenience, but I think that this is the first time that criminal legislation by order in council has ever been attempted. A certain evil is said to exist. I have no doubt it does, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the purpose of and object of this Bill. I believe there is an evil and we should have a remedy, but the government in this legislation should be able to point out the extent of the evils and so frame the legislation that it will afford an adequate remedy for them. To go further and to have further criminal legislation enacted by order in council is certainly a step beyond anything in my experience. Also it is going outside of the path of wisdom to adopt any such method of legislation. It is not probable that any evil at present unknown will spring up to any considerable or even appreciable extent before another session of parliament.

If by the time we are in session again it should become apparent to the minister that some further article should be added to this schedule, parliament in its wisdom can add that to the schedule, but in the meantime we should confine ourselves to those articles, the sale of which at the present time is injurious to the public interest, according to the evidence which the minister is able to submit to this committee.

Mr. KING. I am rather surprised at the attitude taken by my friend, the hon. the leader of the oppopsition (Mr. Borden). I remember when the House was considering the measure relating to the eight-hour day that hon. gentleman pointed out that all the legislation proposed could be enacted by order in council, and I gathered at that time that he was rather strongly in favour of legislation by order in council. I am not less surprised at the leader of the opposition saying he regards this as a departure from the path of wisdom and an entire innovation, in as much as this parliament in 1908, and I think with his consent, enacted a measure respecting patent and proprietary medicines in which exactly the same power was given.

17. The Governor in Council may make such regulations for giving effect to any of the provisions of this Act or in respect of the sale of any patent or proprietary medicine in stock at the time of the passing of this Act, and declaring the true intent thereof, in any case of doubt, as to him seems meet, and may also add to or remove from the schedule to this Act any poisons or potent drugs, as from time to time he deems expedient, and notice thereof shall be given in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there a criminal offence created?

Mr. KING (reading):

3 Every person who violates the provisions of this section shall, for a first offence, incur a penalty of fifty dollars and costs, and for any subsequent offence a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars and not less than one hundred dollars and costs, and the certificate of registration shall be cancelled.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As far as the remarks which I made the other day and which have been alluded to are concerned, I should think it would be apparent to the intellect of any person that there is a slight difference between what is purely a matter of administration and the creation of a criminal offence. If the Minister of Labour cannot understand that without argument and without discussion I shall not attempt to make him understand it. I would think it would be apparent to the humblest intellect in this country. The matter referred to the other day was one touching purely the employment of men upon works under the control of the various departments of the government. I said and I repeat that the object attained by the very limited legislation which was eventually passed by the committee could have been carried out by the government without the necessity of coming to parliament at all. It was of exceedingly limited scope. This is an entirely different thing, it is the creation of a criminal offence by order in council. If the minister can point out to me any reason why that should be done by order in council, instead of by legislative enactment, I am ready to consider it, but up to the present time he has not given any reason that I have heard, absolutely no reason at all. If the minister knows of any such substance now, add it to the schedule of this Bill. If he does not, leave the schedule as it is. If any substance of that character creates a detriment to the public interest between the conclusion of this session and the commencement of another, let us deal with that particular evil when we meet again. That seems to me to be reasonable and plain.

Mr. KING. The same reasons that were urged at the time the Act respecting Patent and Proprietary Medicines was before the House, apply to this case. It must be remembered that new preparations from these drugs are being made constantly, and it would seem to be preferable that cases of that kind should be dealt with by order in council rather than that parliament should be troubled with them. Where it is possible to get expert medical advice upon these matters, it would seem to be desirable to give the governor in council power to frame the schedule from time to time, as may be necessary.

Mr. DOHERTY. The effect of that would be that instead of having criminal legislation passed by and with the advice of parliament, we would be having it passed by and with the advice of certain medical experts. I have not read the Act to which the minister refers; but if parliament made one mistake under that Act, I do not think it is a very good reason why we should make a second mistake.

On section 3—importation, manufacture, sale or possession of drugs; penalty.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to move that the word 'knowingly' be inserted after the word 'who' in the first line of this section. This would render liable to the penalties under this Act a person who commits the offence wilfully and knowingly, and would preserve the rights of innocent persons. Otherwise persons would be liable to the penalty who innocently carried the goods prohibited under this Act. The minister has accepted the idea I suggest by making an exception in the fourth section. A railway company or any person might innocently convey the prohibited goods in a box from one part of Canada to another. Yet it would be liable to a penalty under this section.

Mr. KING. I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that by section 16, section 4 does not come into force until the 1st of July, 1911. That is the section which relates to opium smoking, and the provision of section 16 is for the purpose of giving to people who are addicted to the habit a little more time in which to get rid of it. As to the insertion of the word 'knowingly,' I am informed that this is a favourite word with the legal profession, but its insertion here, I fear, would make it practically impossible to secure a conviction, and would have the effect of nullifying the legislation. My hon. friend would hardly expect a judge to convict a man for simply having carried a box of opium without knowing what was in the box. The intention is plain enough.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. But under this provision, he would be liable to the penalties provided. Of course, a judge, knowing the circumstances, would make the penalty merely a nominal one. But that is not the question. He would still be convicting an innocent man of a crime of which he was not guilty. It is the intent which constitutes the crime, yet a man who carries a box of opium in all innocence, would, under this section, be guilty of this indictable offence.

Mr. DOHERTY. The minister says that he does not suppose a judge would convict a man who was carrying a box of opium across the street and who did not know the contents of the box. Well, if the minister intends that a judge should only convict a man when he does the thing knowingly, there can be no harm in saying so. While I do not want to show any lack of deference to the legal authority which my hon. friend says he has consulted, I quite agree with my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Middlebro) that if you leave that section as it is, a guilty knowledge will not be essential to the offence. Compare this section with the one following. The one following provides that every man who, without lawful or reasonable excuse, has in his possession opium prepared or being prepared for smoking is guilty of an offence. Why not apply the same qualification to both cases?

Mr. KING. I have no objection and would move to insert the words 'without lawful or reasonable excuse.'

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

1. Every person who smokes opium, or who, without lawful or reasonable excuse, has in his possession opium prepared or being prepared for smoking, shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be liable on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

2. Any person who, without lawful and reasonable excuse, is found in any house, room or place to which persons resort for the purpose of smoking or inhaling opium, shall be liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. KING. I would move to add in the fifth line after the word 'dollars' the words 'and costs' which were omitted in the printing.

Mr. DOHERTY. I would like to ask whether there is any intention in using different wording in the first section of section 4 compared with the other section. For instance in section 3 it is provided that every one shall be liable upon summary conviction ; and in the second subsection of section 4, the same formula is used. But in the first paragraph of section 4 it is provided that every one who, without lawful or reasonable excuse has in his possession opium shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be liable on summary conviction. I do not see that it makes any difference whether you insert the words 'shall be guilty of an offence' or not, but they are found in that subsection alone. In section 8 it is provided that when any one is convicted of an offence against this Act, the magistrate may order, in addition to any other penalty, that the drug be seized and destroyed. It might possibly be argued that inasmuch as the first paragraph of section 4 is the only place where a man doing a certain thing is guilty of an offence against the Act, a man who does all the other things mentioned in the other sections shall not be declared guilty of an offence against the Act. I would suggest that the words 'shall be guilty of an offence against this Act,' be stricken from the first paragraph of section 4, or else that you insert these words with regard to all the others so that it may be clear you are treating them all on the same basis.

Mr. KING. I am quite agreeable to that if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. DOHERTY. It is a fair enough argument to say that if you use a different form of expression in two different sections it must have been because you meant two different things, and there is no doubt that the intention of the Act is that all these things which are prohibited shall be placed on the same basis as being offences. I move that the words 'shall be guilty of an offence against this Act and ' in line 3 be stricken out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLAIN. While the minister is devoting special attention in this Bill to what may be called a minor evil, I would remind him that he is not doing anything to prohibit the greater evil of cigarette smoking in Canada. Not so long since petitions signed by thousands of inhabitants of this Dominion were presented to the government calling upon them to prohibit the sale, importation and manufacture of cigarettes and pointing out the great evils arising from the use of cigarettes. I notice that in the examination for candidates for the new navy a number failed to pass the physical test because of the excessive use of cigarettes. I suppose the Minister of Labour has taken the role of moral reformer for the government once held by the Minister of Agriculture, and I would remind him that if he expects to be a successful moral reformer he should deal with the evils which are staring him in the face, rather than seek for evils less glaring. I now invite the Minister of Labour to extend the scope of this Bill so as to prohibit the importation, sale and manufacture of cigarettes. If I remember well the Minister of Agriculture spoke in this House in favour of the prohibition of cigarettes, and while no doubt he is still of that opinion I notice that he is very inactive in urging on the government the introduction and passage of such legislation. If the Minister of Agriculture, as well as my new friend the Minister of Labour are sincere about improving the morals of the people, they will insert in this Bill an anti-cigarette clause. I wish it to be clearly understood that I am in favour of this anti-cocaine Bill, but my protest is that the government has not extended its scope so as to make it an anti-cigarette Bill as well. I venture to say that where there has been one request to this government for the introduction of this legislation, there must have been a hundred requests for the prohibition of cigarettes. If the Minister of Labour is not to-night prepared to adopt my suggestion I trust he will give it his serious consideration, and that he will during the present session introduce legislation to stop the cigarette evil. I might remind him that petitions have come from the important county he represents asking for the prohibition of the importation, sale and manufacture of cigarettes, and I think he should pay heed to the recommendations of his own constituents. I once introduced an anti-cigarette Bill, but the strong masculine majority behind the government refused to adopt it, and so the evil grows and is growing. I may tell the government that this question will have to be dealt with by them, or by some other government, in the very near future. I hope my hon. friend will set to work and pursue energetically his role of moral reformer that he seems to have taken away from the Minister of Agriculture. He is a new minister now, and is quite energetic, and the people will look to him to deal with these other great moral questions. He will not require to appoint a commission to find out whether they are evils. All this information is in the hands of the government, and people are waiting for legislation.

Mr. KING. It is hardly necessary for me to reply as my hon. friend has already indicated to the committee the obvious answer to his own question. This legislation is to prohibit the improper use of opium and other drugs. Cigarettes and tobacco have not yet been considered a drug, and is advantageous to deal with only one class of subjects at this time, and under this Bill. I must, however, thank my hon. friend for directing the attention of the country to the fact that the government has not been indifferent even to the evil of cigarette smoking. As he has pointed out, candidates for the navy have been refused admission, some of them, on the ground that they had been addicted to the habit of cigarette smoking. Action of that kind on the part of the government cannot but have a good moral effect in the country. No doubt that has been the object in the mind of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in enforcing a regulation of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask what we may expect from the government in respect to the cigarette question?

Mr. KING. That will receive careful consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. That is an old story.

Mr. DOHERTY. I agree with the minister that it would be scarcely proper to include cigarettes among these drugs. I would point out to the minister that it might be undesirable to put this power in the hands of the government. We might pass this Act just as it is, and the Governor in Council will still be free to add tobacco to that schedule. The Governor in Council are taking a power without any limit.

On section 5, dealing in drugs—penalty, prescriptions, penalty.

Mr. SPROULE. I think you are proposing a very onerous obligation on medical men, and a very inconvenient one on patients.

Any person who neglects to make or preserve a proper record in a suitable book of the name and address of the physician, veterinary surgeon, dentist or druggist to whom he gives, sells or furnishes any drug, and the date of such sale.

—is liable to a penalty. Usually the practice in our country is for medical men to write their prescriptions and to hand them in to a drug store, and these are generally kept in a book. It would be a serious task to copy into a book all prescriptions as they are written, they are usually kept on file. When once the medicine has been used up, the practice is to have the prescription repeated, if needed and the party gives a verbal order. According to my understanding of this section, it would be a violation of the law for a druggist to repeat that prescription, and also a violation for a medical man to order it unless a record is taken of it. You will see how much work and trouble that would entail. I think you would even compel the medical man to make a copy of a prescription that was sold to himself. Supposing a physician wants a medicine for instance, morphine, which he usually carries with him, he may want it in a hurry, but if it is not registered then the druggist is liable to a fine. I think that would be absurd. These drugs are carried by medical men in their cases, and as soon as the supply runs out they get their bottles filled again. How could that be done without their violating the law? This would not be workable without a great deal of unnecessary trouble and expense, both to the druggist and the physician.

Mr. KING. I regard the points to which my hon. friend has referred as being the essence of the section. Nearly every one who has communicated with us on this subject has pointed out the great necessity of placing all possible safeguards about the sale of these drugs, particularly in the matter of registration by a druggist of any sale, no matter to whom it is made.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister mean to say that it is necessary to register every purchase made by a medical man from a druggist of an article which he carries with him every day in the year?

Mr. KING. I would ask my hon. friend to consider an opinion that he will take as being more valuable than anything I could give myself. I have a letter from Dr. Chas. A. Hodgetts, medical adviser to the commission on conservation, who has been appointed by the government for the express purpose of watching matters of public concern of this kind. Dr. Hodgetts says:—

Drugs of this class are really becoming more and more in common use and in the interests of public health all the safeguards it is possible for the Dominion government to surround them with should be promulgated and enforced.

Elsewhere he says:—

Another important matter is that of the repeating of physicians prescriptions containing opium, &c., by chemists. To do so should be made a criminal offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, together with forfeiture of license by the offending chemist; and physicians who wantonly make use of these drugs should be brought within the criminal law.

From over ten years experience as a pharmaceutical chemist and 25 years as a physician, I can testify to the necessity of strong action on the part of the government, for as the evil of alcohol decreases that of the use of opium and similar preparations will increase and the evil of the latter is of the most insidious nature and therefore more difficult to combat.

I felt myself that there was a good deal in the nature of restriction about that clause. I consulted with some of those who have to do with the sale of these drugs and with physicians, and they were all agreed that if this legislation were going to be effective it could not be made too difficult for people to obtain these habit-forming drugs. It does not follow that because a prescription cannot be repeated except upon the instructions of a physician that the physician must himself give such instructions in person. I presume that the physician could indicate on the prescription when he gave it whether it was to be repeated or not. It is pretty generally conceded that it should not be left to the discretion of the chemist to repeat a prescription when it is known that the habit is formed by virtue of this very practice of repeating prescriptions.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has quoted an authority for whom perhaps a medical man would not have the very highest respect for the reason not that he is not a man of ability professionally but that he is not a practising physician.

Mr. KING. He says that he was a practising physician for 25 years.

Mr. SPROULE. Probably he was in the city of Toronto. It is one thing to be a practising physician in a large city but it is another thing to be a practising physician in the country, where you go out eight or ten miles to visit a patient, and where there is no opportunity of getting these things except you send for them or take them along with you. That is a different thing entirely. I am speaking of an experience extending over forty years as a practising physician when I am at home. I have gone through every stage of the drug business, I have run a drug store as well, I know the usual practice in our country and I am quite sure that there is not an active, practising physician in the country to-day that would not, if this becomes law, violate it every week in the year

Mr. KING. Then I think he ought to be prosecuted every week in the year.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister just shows how little he knows about lines which are not his own. There is no more danger of the respectable physician doing any harm with these things than there is in his carrying a pail of cold water around. He is acting on judgment and common sense. He is not carrying around these things with any improper purpose, but for medicinal purposes, and he is responsible as a physician, as well as the minister is. He has to contend with difficulties about which the minister knows nothing.

Mr. KING. There is nothing to prevent a doctor from carrying around cocaine with him.

Mr. SPROULE. If he is going out in a hurry and he orders a small vial of morphine to be refilled it goes into the case that he must take along with him, and unless he stops and goes through all the routine of registration that is laid down here he will violate the law. It may be that he sends for some more morphine pills, as is very often done. He sends a party in from a place where he is engaged with a sick person at the house. I do not think that a messenger could carry it without violating the law. Then he is not there to register. The druggist might keep an account of it, but you impose upon the druggist a very onerous and unnecessary amount of work. You have in another part of the Act a provision applying to the case where a medical man gives a prescription for a certain purpose, it may require to be refilled again, but that can't be done by the druggist without a violation of this Act. But I am speaking of the medical man engaged in the practice of his profession amongst sick people who requires these drugs from day to day and hour to hour, and who has to take this means of getting them because there are no drug stores near him. If such a law as this is enacted the result will be that hundreds of medical men will violate it over and over again, because they could not very well carry on the work of their profession without doing it. I do not think that any man should be subjected to that disability or danger.

Mr. KING. I am quite prepared to admit that if all physicians had the high sense of duty and the integrity of my hon. friend there would be no need for legislation of this kind whatever, but, unfortunately, as he only too well knows, there are in every profession men who are not a credit to it, and it so happens that in dealing with evils of this kind these are the men that the law has to get after. If my hon. friend can suggest any means whereby that class of men can be effectively prevented from doing the public an injury and at the same time not necessitate the sort of restrictions that we have here I shall be very glad to consider his suggestion, but all the advice that I have received on this point goes to show that some rigid legislation of this kind is absolutely essential. I think my hon. friend does not understand the proposal when he says that a physician could not go about with this drug in his possession and administer it if necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister misunderstood me in that. I did not say a physician could not carry it around with him as a medical man, because I think he could do that. But, I say that he could not send a messenger.

Mr. KING. I think that if he sent an order with the messenger he certainly would be entitled to have that order filled by the druggist, who would be obliged to keep a record which would show the transaction. On that point every one who has had to do with this evil is very strong in saying that such a provision should be insisted upon. I think there is no reason why it should not be.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Under the provisions of this section, would it not be possible for a medical man to send a prescription to a druggist and at the bottom of it to say: 'Give John Smith this dose as often as he requires it'? There is nothing in the Bill to prevent a druggist from giving it to a man as often as he requires it, or the medical man might give the prescription in the first place and telephone a repeat order afterwards, because the second authority does not require to be in writing. The Act could be overcome in that way quite simply. It is only intended to apply to the physician who would do that sort of thing. Therefore, a physician who wants to do it will do everything to get over this section. He might write on the bottom of the prescription: 'Give John Smith as many prescriptions of this as he likes.' Is the druggist legally entitled to make the further sales?

Mr. KING. I would think so.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The druggist would not be liable to any penalty?

Mr. KING. No, he would have the written order of the physician, and as long as he follows the written order he is protected.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was it not the intention of the minister that the druggist should have a separate prescription every time?

Mr. KING. No, I cannot say that was the intention, it is that no druggist should repeat the prescription unless he had a direct written order. That might be done by separate orders, or by one general order.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It says here that he shall not fill the prescription more than once.

Mr. KING. Without authority.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That would mean that no prescription should be sold more than once, that he should have a new prescription from the physician every time.

Mr. KING. No, it means exactly what it says.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think the druggist should not be allowed to sell for years on the one prescription.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) will give his opinion on that.

Mr. SPROULE. In the treatment of epilepsy or asthma, where spasms come irregularly, I give a prescription and instruct the patient to go to the druggist with the number and have it refilled when required.

Mr. KING. Would the hon. gentleman give a prescription to that effect with regard to morphine or opium?

Mr. SPROULE. In some cases they are portions of the prescription, and would come under the penalties of this Act. That system is more economical for the patient, and saves the physician's time. Many prescribing physicians have a percentage coming to them on the prescription, but if it is refilled the physician gets no percentage.

Mr. KING. The only additional trouble under this section would be that the physician would have to indicate on the prescription how often he wanted it refilled. It would fix on him the responsibility of so ordering.

Mr. SPROULE. If that would be a compliance with the law it is the easiest matter to get over it, but a judge might take a different view.

On section 6, prohibition of export to countries prohibiting opium.

Mr. KING. I would like to have it of record that this section is prepared in consequence of the resolution passed at the International Opium Commission at Shanghai to which I have referred and of which the following is the wording:

That the International Opium Commission finds that each government represented has strict laws which are aimed directly or indirectly to prevent the smuggling of opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations into their respective territories; in the judgment of the International Opium Commission, it is also the duty of all countries to adopt reasonable measures to prevent at ports of departure the shipment of opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations, to any country which prohibits the entry of any opium, its alkaloids, derivatives and preparations.

I might add that it is understood Great Britain has recently suggested, in connection with an international conference which is to be held at The Hague next year, proposed by the United States, that in addition to the suppression of the opium traffic, the conference should deal with the suppression of morphine and cocaine. In that connection these sections may be important in their international significance.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. In the interpretation section of this Bill, 'export' or 'exporting' is defined as meaning and including 'the taking or conveying, or causing to be taken or conveyed out of Canada.' I would move that the words 'unlawfully or without reasonable excuse' be inserted after the word 'person' in the first line of section 6. Otherwise a person might innocently do that and yet be liable to the penalty under this Act.

Mr. KING. There can be no objection to inserting those words.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. Would there be any objection to exporting opium to a country which did not prohibit it?

Mr. KING. This section only goes so far as to prohibit its exportation to countries which have prohibited the evil themselves. It was not thought by the International Commission that it would be advisable for this section to go any further.

On section 9—drugs unclaimed for three months destroyed, subject to order.

Mr. DOHERTY. I understand the purpose of this provision that the Customs Act shall apply is to make some provisions of that Act applicable in some way to this particular drug. But the person who reads the Customs Act does not find anything there to connect those provisions with this enactment, and, therefore, he will never discover that the Customs Act has any application to these things. Should there not be some connecting link between the two Acts in the way of some amendment to the Customs Act in order to enable people to discover in the Customs Act that those provisions of the Customs Act do apply to this Act?

Mr. KING. I think the reference here is to certain powers of search and seizure which are given to officials of the customs, and I may say that this section is similar to a section in the Canada Temperance Act. These words are incorporated simply to make it clear that these powers would apply to any effort to smuggle any of these drugs as well as to the smuggling of other articles. It may be that we are duplicating legislation to a certain extent by this section, as I think these articles would be included in the list of the prohibited articles in the Customs Act, and once they appear there, it would be made clear that these powers extended to them.

Mr. DOHERTY. A man goes to the Customs Act to find what are the prohibited articles, and he does not find these articles among them, nor does he find them in any amendment to the Customs Act. Having done that, he may unwittingly do something to bring himself in contravention to the Customs Act. It would not be very difficult, when Acts of this kind are passed, to pass a small Act amending the Customs Act, so that there would be some connection between the two, which a man would discover on examining the Customs Act, and the Acts amending it. The average man would think that when he had gone through the Customs Act, and the amendments to it, and found out what it prohibited, he had done all that was required, and he would never dream of going behind the Customs Act and examining this one. You surely could not expect a man to go through all the statutes in order to find out if in any particular one there is something affecting the Customs Act. The proper course would be to make an amendment to the Customs Act in the sense of this section.

Mr. KING. I think the suggestion a very good one, but as there are two or three Bills going through which affect the Customs Act, it would be better to deal with them all together at one stroke by a Bill amending the Customs Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have no objection, but certainly there should be some amendment to the Customs Act itself which would give information of provisions such as this.

On section 12,

No conviction, judgment or order in respect of an offence against this Act shall be removed by certiorari into any of His Majesty's courts of record.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not see why this remedy by certiorari should be removed.

Mr. KING. This was done on the advice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKENZIE. I cannot understand why the Department of Justice should give such advice. It is an extraordinary provision. It is only found in very few criminal Acts. There must have been some case presented to the Department of Justice before it would give such advice. This provision takes away the right of removing a conviction by certiorari, which is a remedy very much valued by the British subject, and I do not like to see any of the old landmarks swept away without strong reason.

On section 14,

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, add to the schedule to this Act any substance, the addition of which is by him deemed necessary in the public interest, and every order in council in that behalf shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and shall take effect at the expiration of thirty days from the date of such publication.

Mr. DOHERTY. While I do not want to take up time, I feel it my duty to insist as emphatically as I can against the adoption of this section. By this Bill we are creating new criminal offences, and this section proposes to vest in the Governor in Council the power, by simply adding the name of any substance whatever to this schedule, to make the possession, the handling in any way of such substance a criminal offence. I most earnestly urge upon the minister the impropriety of parliament delegating this most serious power to the Governor in Council.

It is an exceedingly grave thing for parliament to take the practical omnipotence it holds as a legislative body and hand it over to be exercised absolutely by the Governor in Council; it is asking the council not an executive, but a legislative body. The answer that similar provision is incorporated in other legislation is not to me a conclusive reason. Some one has said by way of criticism of the English system of law resting upon precedent that under it, when a man once went wrong he forfeited forever after the right to be right. However that may be with English jurisprudence, there is certainly no such limitation on this parliament to follow precedent, and I would strongly suggest to the minister that he should strike out this section. We have one exceedingly bad precedent in the other Bill already cited, and I do not think we should let it go down from precedent to precedent. I am of course strongly in favour of the legislation before us, but when we hand over to the government the power to make innocent acts, crimes, it really means the abdication by parliament of the power the constitution confided to it and to it alone. Certainly, between the sessions of parliament there is hardly a sufficient time for a new evil to assume such vicious proportions as to call for legislation to suppress it, and that being so what possible public danger is there in leaving it to parliament each session to deal with the evils that may have grown up in the interval? If we might expect new evils of this nature to spring up from day to day, there might be something to be said in favour of conferring this power on the Governor in Council but one may very well hope that human ingenuity is not going to be so determinedly devoted to finding new methods of debauching the people of this country as to make it impossible for us to keep apace with it in legislation from session to session. I speak with a good deal of earnestness in this matter, because I cannot conceive anything more undesirable in the way of legislation, and because each repeated instance will afford an additional argument for doing it again until we will have added to what are the legitimate functions of the Governor in Council, practically the enactment of the criminal law.

Mr. KING. In view of the opinion expressed by so eminent a jurist as my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), it is with diffidence that I still urge the retention of this section. I should hesitate to do so on my own responsibility, but the point has been carefully considered by the law advisers, who have thought it desirable to give this power to the Governor in Council. After all whatever is done by the Governor in Council, so far as criminal legislation is concerned, would be done upon the advice of the Minister of Justice, who, it may be expected, will zealously safeguard the administration of the criminal law were there any probability of this power being abused. I would withdraw the section were there likely to be any doubt as to the intention of parliament in the matter, but in naming the three drugs, cocaine, morphine and opium, parliament makes it plain that it is legislating against what are known as habit-forming drugs, and it recognizes that as from time to time, one form of the drug is suppressed, a derivative of it may rapidly spring up which it is desirable to check as speedily as possible. We have similar provisions in the Patent Medicine Act and in the Act dealing with noxious weeds. The business of parliament is becoming more considerable every year. Larger and more important subjects are constantly coming to the fore and require all the time and attention that can be given them. We should seek to limit rather than add to the number of measures to be brought up for consideration. Suppose it were found that between sessions one noxious weed had cropped up somewhere that was not named in the schedule attached to the Act respecting noxious weeds. Also one new proprietary medicine not named in the schedule to that Act, and one drug not named in this, all of which should be legislated against. New Acts would have to be introduced in each case and with the growing business of parliament it would be found impossible in time to go into such detailed legislation. For these reasons, I think it is desirable to allow the section to remain.

Mr. DOHERTY. The minister says that if it had not been for this clause there probably would have been additional substances included in this Bill which would have given rise to a great deal of discussion in parliament. I sympathize with any desire to relieve parliament of its burdens, but I do not think we should begin with the criminal law. I think it is objectionable to delegate this power of making men criminals to any authority other than parliament itself, however, great our respect may be for that authority, or for the gentlemen who occupy the office that entitles them to exercise that power.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to ask the minister if the government have discussed the question whether it was right to take from parliament power to declare what should be a crime?

Mr. KING. I would not say that that question had been discussed from the point of view my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If it was pointed out to the Minister of Justice that the effect was to enable the Governor in Council to constitute a new crime, he might not consent to it.

Mr. KING. This Act is a specific Act for a specific purpose. These articles, cocaine, morphine and opium, are articles with regard to which every member of parliament has some knowledge, and the intention is that any power given to the Governor in Council shall relate to these articles or to any other compound or mixture of which they form part. From time to time new combinations of drugs may be made under different names and come into general use. Cocaine may be mixed with something else, and sold under a different name, and the person selling it might seek to defend himself on the score that the drug is not mentioned in the schedule. It is to prevent any such evasions of the law that these general powers are taken.

Mr. DOHERTY. It seems to be that this legislation gives absolute power to the Governor in Council to say that tobacco is a drug, and ought to be treated in the same way as these here mentioned. That would create a situation which it is not intended to create, because every tobacco smoker would become a criminal. I presume alcohol might be treated in the same way.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest, in view of the fact that the attention of the Minister of Justice has not been drawn to this provision, and he being an eminent legal man, the proper thing would be to let the committee rise, report progress, and submit the Bill to him in the meantime. Many people in this country have a high respect for his legal attainments, and would feel better satisfied if he had recommended this legislation.

Mr. KING. I would hesitate to refuse the suggestion made to refer the matter to the Minister of Justice, but I might point out, that we could have the opinion of the Minister of Justice, before the third reading of the Bill. Moreover, the purpose my hon. friend has in mind might be obtained by an amendment which will make the intention clearer. For instance, instead of the words 'any substance named in the schedule hereto attached' use the words 'and alkaloids, derivatives and preparations of any articles named in the schedule.' It gives the Governor in Council power to add to this schedule alkaloids, derivatives and preparations of any articles included in the schedule.

Mr. DOHERTY. As long as parliament specifies the articles I am satisfied.

Mr. KING. If for the word 'substance' is substituted the words 'alkaloids, derivatives or preparations of the articles in the attached schedule' would that meet the objection of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. SPROULE. It would then throw upon the government the responsibility of going carefully into the matter to ascertain whether it was the part of wisdom to put any of these preparations on the list or not. For instance, take morphine; you could, by the same parity of reasoning put paragoric which is a comparatively harmless drug, and used very frequently, on the list. We will have to depend upon the Governor in Council to exercise common prudence as to what shall be put on the list and what not.

Mr. KING. Certainly. I propose that section 14 be amended by striking out the word 'substance' in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'alkaloids, derivatives and preparations of the drugs named in the schedule hereto.'

Mr. SPROULE. What is chapter 5 of the statutes of 1908?

Mr. KING. That is the Act that was passed to prohibit the manufacture and sale of opium. The manufacture of opium has been suppressed in this country. There are only two sections in this Act, one of which relates to a period of six months, which has already expired, and, therefore, it is not in force at the present time, and the other is covered by the provisions of the sections which we have already passed.

Mr. SPROULE. You do not allow the manufacture of opium at all?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I do not know that it is the height of wisdom to prohibit it.

Mr. KING. Parliament has already done it.

Mr. SPROULE. It may have done it, but parliament has done many things that are not wise in the judgment of some. There are many things in our country which we could make out of the products of our soil, and I do not think it would be wrong to manufacture anything that we require for medicinal purposes or the arts.

Mr. KING. This Act all through exempts any of these processes when they are for medicinal or scientific purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. Even the manufacturer?

Mr. KING. Yes. The old Act passed in 1908, prohibited the manufacture of opium absolutely. Under this Act the manufacture would be permitted if it were shown that it was for scientific or medicinal purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is as it should be. Opium is made out of poppies, and poppies will grow here as well as in any other part of the world. There is no trouble at all, if you go into it extensively enough, to manufacture a commercial article that is used extensively in the country. I do not know why any one should be prohibited from the manufacture of an article of that kind.

On the schedule,

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot understand why this list was not made larger. We have many drugs which are used to-day which are just about as dangerous as cocaine or opium. For instance, there are acetanilid, phenacetin, phenalgin, amonial and a number of those coal tar derivatives that injuriously affect the user and produce much the same results as does cocaine. In the ordinary drug stores you can buy these headache wafers containing acetanilid phenacetin, and phenalgin. They affect you just the same as cocaine, and very much the same as morphine. Those who use them contract the habit, and there is no prohibition under this Act for the sale of them. I do not see the wisdom of including in the schedule such a limited number of dangerous drugs as we find in this one, and leaving so many out that are being injuriously used the same as cocaine and morphine.

Mr. KING. My hon. friend will see that it is limited inasmuch as it is left to the Governor in Council to add any of these drugs if it should deem expedient to do so. This is one of the reasons why the schedule is made small. But, there is a special reason for naming these drugs inasmuch as they have all been demonstrated to be dangerous habit-forming drugs. In regard to the others which the hon. gentleman has named some of them may be such, but I think there are others that he has mentioned that would hardly come in the same class as cocaine and morphine.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me one?

Mr. KING. I should think that phenacetin, speaking off-hand, is not as bad as some of the others.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, it certainly is and it is used very much.

Mr. KING. I know it is used, but I do not think we have many phenacetin, victims.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not expect that the minister in his line of life would come in contact with them, but if he would speak with practical medical men who have been engaged in practice since this drug came into use they would be very likely to tell him that in their experience they have met quite a number of them. As a practising physician I know many who use these drugs simply because of the pleasant sensation, the peculiar soporific effect they produce, until they have become quite strongly addicted to them. Some of these are stimulant narcotics, and others sedative narcotics, but many of them produce much the same effect as cocaine.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that the minister will submit this Bill to the Minister of Justice for his opinion?

Mr. KING. Certainly, but I thought the amendment covered it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think so too, but the House would be better satisfied if it were submitted to such an eminent authority as the Minister of Justice for his opinion as to the wisdom or propriety of allowing the Governor in Council to amend the criminal code in this way.

Mr. DOHERTY. If this is to be submitted to the Minister of Justice I hope it will not be thought that I have been saying this could not be legally done. I have simply said that it was not advisable to do it.

ADJOURNMENT—SUPPLY OF STERILIZED WATER IN PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform you and the members of the House what has been done to secure a supply of safe drinking water for the use of the members and officials of the House. The department has had installed in the building a process for sterlizing the water. This is done by a machine which is manufactured by the Forbes Sterilizer Company. Since the machine has been installed and this process adopted we have had samples of the water tested. On the 11th of this month we sent 11 samples, which were taken from the sterilizing apparatus and from each of the faucets on the different floors, both on the House of Commons and the Senate side. The report is that these samples failed to show any growth and that the water supplied by the Forbes Sterilizers may now be considered perfectly safe. It is not desirable to take water from the tap in this chamber though I think it has not been completely turned off. We have on each floor a tap which carries the water directly from the cooler. The water is sterilized and then cooled so that it is quite agreeable for drinking. I think it is not desirable that any ice should be used in the water, but I trust that arrangements may be made by which the vessels containing the water may be surrounded with ice so that it may be kept even cooler than at present. The report we have is that the water is perfectly safe. Of course it is very necessary that care should be exercised by the officials of the House, and this morning a letter was sent to the clerk of the House as follows:

Dear sir,—In view of the present epidemic of typhoid in the city of Ottawa it is necessary that the utmost care be taken in connection with the drinking water. I enclose a copy of a memorandum prepared for me by the Superintendent of Dominion Buildings stating the steps recently taken by this department to prevent such a contingency in the parliament buildings, and I would suggest that arrangements be made so that only sterilized water be used in the receptacles in the buildings.

(Signed) J. B. HUNTER,
Deputy Minister.

I have not seen the Sergeant at Arms, but I spoke to the deputy sergeant and he informs me that the pages have been instructed to take water only from the taps that lead from the sterilizer, so it is quite safe to send for water.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the process?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the water is distilled.

Mr. SPROULE. One analysis is not always safe to rely upon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had eleven samples analysed.

Mr. ROCHE. Was the water examined before being sterilized?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The water in its ordinary state had been examined and it was found to contain some germs which might be objectionable.

Mr. DOHERTY. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will resume the consideration of his supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 27, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister whether there are any other documents to be brought down in connection with the proposal presented yesterday by the Minister of Finance, and whether there are any protocols in connection with the negotiations. Also at what date it is proposed to take up again the same question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are no other papers to be brought down, so far as I am aware. I cannot tell to-day when the debate will be resumed, but probably within the course of next week.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to suggest that before we go on with the debate we should have some commercial statistics to guide us, and give us a basis of information—statistics of imports and exports as between Canada and the United States and Canada and other countries.

CIVIL SERVICE APPOINTMENTS FROM SOUTH GREY.

Mr. BLAIN. When may I expect the return ordered some ten days ago with respect to the number of appointments in South Grey during the last few years?

Mr. MURPHY. That is being prepared but it is difficult to get the information.

Mr. BLAIN. A pretty large list, I suppose.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not know about the size of the list, but it takes time to get the information.

Mr. FISHER. I have been trying to get that information, but it involves our asking every employee in the department whether he comes from South Grey or not.

Mr. BLAIN. That should not be a very difficult task. Surely the list cannot be so very large, and the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) could give the information.

Mr. FISHER. We do not know where our officers come from and have to find out from each one.

Mr. BLAIN. When may we expect this return?

Mr. FISHER. We are doing everything we can as far as my department is concerned to get the information, and will send it to the Secretary of State as soon as complete.

MIRAMICHI BAY.

Mr. CROCKET. When may I expect a return moved for on the 12th December, in connection with the bridge at Miramichi bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make inquiries at once about it.

NORTH BAY WHARFS.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Has the Minister of Public Works any information to give regarding North Bay wharfs, which he promised?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall make inquiries.

HOUSE OF COMMONS AND SENATE.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that the return called for a long while ago with reference to the House of Commons and Senate has not yet been brought down.

Mr. MURPHY. It has been tabled to-day.

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. FOSTER. I have still another grievance. I would like to have the return called for about a year and five months ago with reference to the United States warships on the Great Lakes. This particular time may be the psychological moment to have some representation and redress in that connection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I hope to have it at a very early day.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I asked a question the other day with reference to the publication of the number of immigrants who come to this country and which should be in the 'Canada Gazette' every month and the minister said he would answer later on.

Mr. OLIVER. A resolution was passed by the House of Commons on the 5th May, 1887 to this effect:

That the Customs Department cause to be inserted in the 'Canada Gazette' at the close of each month a statement of imports, of exports, of immigration and of navigation for the month, and also for the expired portion of the fiscal year.

A search into the records of the Immigration Department show that during 18 years, in which immigration has been under contract of the Department of the Interior, no such return has been published, and no such return was ever published notwithstanding the resolution of the House of Commons. And, so far as the department is aware, no such returns were ever published notwithstanding the resolution of the House of Commons.

APPOINTMENTS FROM WENTWORTH.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the government please inform me when I may expect the return showing the number of appointments from the constituency of Wentworth which was ordered by the House some days ago. What progress is being made with this?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) would tell us what he particularly has in mind, the preparation of this return would be facilitated. But, as has been stated by the Minister of Agriculture, every department has to search its record to find whether anybody has been appointed from this or that riding. So far as I can ascertain, no such appointments have been made in the two departments over which I preside, the Privy Council and the Mounted Police. If the hon. gentleman tells us what he wishes to learn concerning any particular appointment, that would help in preparing the information.

Mr. BLAIN. I can only say that the members boast about the number of appointments that have been made as a result of their efforts. They would be able to tell the Prime Minister.

SUPPLY—SALE OF OFFENSIVE WEAPONS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) to certain articles that have recently appeared in the Montreal papers—the 'Herald,' the 'Star,' 'Pa Presse,' the 'Gazette,' the 'Witness,' 'La Patrie,' 'Le Canada,' and other daily papers of January 21, 23, 24 and 25 instant, referring to crime rampant in the city of Montreal, occasioned, these papers state, by the readiness with which lethal weapons, such as stilettos and revolvers, can be procured. Here, for instance, is what the Montreal 'Herald' published on January 23, last :

MURDER AT A PREMIUM.

Saturday the 'Herald' published, with apt illustration, a story of the 'murder mills' of Montreal—the second-hand stores and pawnshops whose windows are arsenals and over whose counters revolvers, magazine pistols, rifles, daggers, stilettos, deadly weapons of all kinds, can be purchased openly by anybody.

To-day, in grim confirmation of the 'Herald's' plea for some restriction in the sale of the implements of murder, the news is published of one actual murder in the streets of Montreal and two attempts which only missed being murder by a freak of fate.

In two of the cases the weapons were revolvers in the hands of men who had no good reason to carry arms—men who under sensible and decent legal conditions could not secure arms and would not be allowed to have arms in their possession.

For the murder of Giovanni Oland on Vitre street and for the shooting of Robert Ford on St. Antoine street Saturday night, justice should not be satisfied with the punishment of the assassins alone—it should strike through them at the murderous system that placed this means of murder in their hands and at the law which blinked complacently at the transaction.

Every deadly weapon sold should be sold only under license and only to men who have secured special permits to carry weapons for good and sufficient reasons. In the absence of such legislation this city maintains itself in the position of a patron of capital crime.

And, Montreal is not alone in this matter. yesterday, walking from these parliament buildings of Canada down Wellington street, as far as the waterworks building. I passed six different second-hand shops on the north side of that street that openly displayed, and offered for sale revolvers, stilettos, daggers and weapons of all kinds. I have here an editorial of the Montreal 'Herald,' of January 23, a part of which I quote as follows :

THE LETHAL WEAPON.

On Saturday the 'Herald' published an article describing the free and open-handed manner in which deadly weapons are sold in a hundred or more of the stores of Montreal. This morning one man was lying dead and another was in the hospital dangerously wounded as a result of the fact that such weapons can be had for the asking by anybody with a dollar or two in his pocket.

There is absolutely no excuse for the freedom of traffic in deadly weapons which is permitted in this city.

In the same issue of the 'Herald' there is a cartoon representing two foreigners looking at a notice on the wall. The reading is as follows :

NEWLY ARRIVED IMMIGRANTS.

Notice.—In order that you may feel thoroughly at home in Montreal the authorities permit the sale to you openly of revolvers, knives, &c. Thus you are enabled to settle your differences in your native way without the trouble of going to law. If you kill any one it is murder, and if you are caught you will be hung. But it is quite easy not to be caught, so do not let that worry you.

CITY OF MONTREAL.

And here, in the 'Herald' of January 24, is a cartoon entitled 'Accessory Before the Fact,' and representing the city of Montreal as a merchant dealing with a customer, a foreigner. And this is the conversation:

Montreal.—What do you want a revolver for?

Purchaser.—I want to kill a man who took my girl.

Montreal.—Tut! Tut! Dreadful; don't you know that is very wicked? However, we have them all the way from a dollar and a half up.

Now, Sir, for the last five years I have introduced and urged upon the attention of the government a Bill making it an offence under the criminal law—

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member (Mr. Lewis), but as he has a Bill dealing with this question already before the House, he cannot discuss the subject at this time.

Mr. LEWIS. I bow to your ruling, Sir, and will not discuss the matter further. I ask the Minister of Justice to take over this Bill and make it a government measure. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my Bill if the government will introduce legislation to bring about the result I seek. I think the time has come when action should be taken. And this is not a matter for the city of Montreal, or the province of Quebec, but is solely a matter for the Dominion of Canada.

POST OFFICE AT WALKERVILLE.

Mr. O. J. WILCOX (North Essex). I spoke in my place in this House on Friday evening, January 13, on the question of the importance of a public building being erected in the town of Walkerville. Among other statements which I made on that occasion was a statement to the effect that three hours elapsed before the mails were distributed under present conditions. I may say that in my head notes appear the words 'a few weeks ago.' If this was not an error on the part of the 'Hansard' reporter, then I was in error in not using the words 'a few weeks ago' that three hours had elapsed before the mail was distributed under present conditions. I have received information from a most reliable source that I was misinformed on that particular point. And in order that I might put myself right, and in order that the postmaster and his staff at Walkerville should not be placed in a wrong position, I desire to say that the postmaster at Walkerville and his staff are both able and attentive, and they are giving to the people of Walkerville the very best service they can with the facilities provided. I may say, also, that I did not realize at the time that the words which I used might be construed to mean that the postmaster was derelict in his duties in the distributing of the mail. I regret very much being wrongly informed upon the matter, and I cheerfully make the correction now. And I am glad the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is in his seat; it is my desire that no reflection should be cast upon the postmaster at Walkerville and his staff in respect of the information I gave to the House on that particular point.

MR. J. A. MACDONALD AND RECIPROCITY.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Last week it was my privilege to address an audience in St. Catharines, dealing, among other questions, with reciprocity between Canada and the United States. On that occasion I took the opportunity to state, what I have long believed, that the closer union of Great Britain and her colonies, followed, as I have always claimed, by closer union between Britain and her colonies on one side, and the United States on the other, would be for the benefit and upbuilding of mankind at large. I pointed out that anything that interfered with the drawing closer of Great Britain and her colonies would to that extent militate against the upbuilding of mankind. I pointed out also that a year or two ago, when this last phase of reciprocity between Canada and the United States was proposed, I had given considerable attention to investigate the causes at the root of it. We know the old plans: Commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity, continental free trade, annexation to the United States—all names familiar to hon. gentlemen in the House, and the battles royal that were fought up and down the country. We are now all aware that the basis of those movements was wrong. The agitators in those days appealed to merely sordid motives; cold dollars and cents were held before the people as an enticement to support such a policy. But a new plan was adopted. I pointed out that the plan had taken a different shape. We found that gentlemen were passing up and down the country explaining it from an entirely different view point. We found, as I showed, that the United States discovered a couple of years ago that they were in considerable difficulty from the maximum clauses of their tariff. We found that the United States press, and politicians on political platforms, were loud in denunciations of the cost of living in the United States. We found further the large centres of population such as Boston, Minneapolis and Chicago, were openly in favour of reciprocity with Canada as the only means of keeping those business centres intact. I pointed out that Canada's vast natural resources also offered a great field for exploitation to American capitalists and business men generally. They had their eye on our resources, and they wanted to get at them. I pointed out that another object was to encourage trade, not along the lines that both governments in Canada had hitherto adopted, that is, lines between the Canadian east and the Canadian west, and between Canada and the mother land, following parallels of latitude rather than meridians of longitude, but that this new movement was designed to encourage trade on lines running north and south rather than east and west. Another aspect of the movement was the advocacy of universal peace especially on the continent of America. I pointed these things out.

I went further, and pointed out that negotiations had been begun by the Rev. Mr. Macdonald, of the Toronto 'Globe.' Whether he was acting as the secret agent of some one else, or on his own personal responsibility, we have no means of knowing. But we do know, and the country knows, that Mr. Macdonald was at Washington, and brought about a condition of affairs, whether as the secret agent of this government or not, has never been officially announced—he brought about the condition of affairs which permits the Minister of Finance and the First Minister to stand on platforms in this country and speak of the 'friendly approaches' of the United States to Canada in matters affecting reciprocal trade between the two countries. I pointed out that soon after, if not during these reciprocal negotiations, the Rev. Mr. Macdonald, the editor of the 'Globe,' enlarged his sphere of action and usefulness by becoming the paid agent of Mr. Ginn, a well-known publisher of Boston, a well-known advocate of free trade, and a well-known advocate of peace throughout the length and breadth of the North American continent. Mr. Macdonald, I say, accepted a position in the pay of Mr. Ginn, of the old firm of Ginn, Heath & Company, of Boston. I went further, and I showed that while he had the offer of a salary from Mr. Ginn for his entire services, he had the option of taking a certain sum of money, two or three thousand dollars, for part of his time in the service of Mr. Ginn and he might give the balance of his time in the service of the Toronto 'Globe.' I stated that Mr. Macdonald had accepted the latter position, and that part of his time was given to Mr. Ginn and to the United States business, that he took his golden dollars from the Boston institution on the one hand, and his Canadian bills from the Toronto 'Globe' on the other hand for the balance of his services. So that in making his speeches to the country we do not know which paragraph is delivered for the Yankee dollars, and which one for the Canadian bank bills; one cannot well distinguish between them. I think in future this gentleman should label his speeches and say: This paragraph, or this sentence, of my speech, is under the auspices of the Peace Society, and this other one is under the auspices of the reciprocity in trade business. At all events, I pointed all these things out, I pointed out the position which Mr. Macdonald occupied and which he occupies to-day—unless he has abandoned that position. He departed from his biblical training, and attempted to serve two masters. I pointed out further that if I had brought this matter up in the House of Commons, the Toronto 'Globe,' that bedraggled old beldame of journalism, would come out and charge me with hiding myself behind the privileges of parliament; therefore I went out, and upon that platform I made the charge which I repeat here to-day. I went further than that, and added my own conviction, which I repeat here to-day with an extension, and I promise to prove it that the peace agitation carried on by this gentleman was nothing more than reciprocity, continental free trade, commercial union and the annexation of Canada to the United States. That was the ground I took that evening, and before I am through I will prove that that is the platform, or at least the course, taken by these advocates of white-winged peace throughout the country. In days gone by we have often seen the gold bricks of these gentlemen carried around, and therefore when this new gold brick was presented to us it did not excite us in the least, we knew there was something behind it. Accordingly we carried out an investigation. The public were surprised and shocked, liberal individuals and newspapers were shocked, and the 'Globe' came out, after having been taunted several days, with a denial which I shall read later on. I may say here that on Tuesday evening, several days after, I was approached by a representative of the Toronto 'Globe,' who furnished the editor with the exact statements which I have given here—I shall come to that in a short time. On Wednesday this prince of 'Holy Willies' in journalism gave out the following article under this heading:

A MALICIOUS SLANDER.

Under a St. Catharines date line on Monday evening the Toronto 'News' published the following statement:

Quite a sensation is being caused by a charge which was made by Colonel Sam. Hughes, M.P., against Editor Macdonald of the 'Globe,' before a Conservative smoker here on Friday evening. Colonel Hughes is credited with making the following statement:—Dr. James A. Macdonald was sent to Washington to open up the question of reciprocity. He is to-day in the pay of Mr. Ginn, a prominent Boston publisher, receiving $2,500 a year to preach reciprocity.

I may point out that what I did say was that Mr. Macdonald was the representative of the Peace Society, but that in my opinion the two things were synonymous, and I will prove it before I am through.

He was offered several thousand a year to give his whole time to this fad of union between Canada and the United States. He was offered $5,000 for his whole time, but preferred to receive part of his pay from the Toronto 'Globe' and part from a Boston syndicate. Reciprocity means annexation, and annexation the hauling down of the flag which graces these walls.

Now, I will quote from the 'Globe' editorial:

The Ottawa correspondent of the 'Globe' was asked to obtain from Colonel Hughes an acknowledgment or a denial of the authenticity of the report in the 'News.'

Colonel Hughes says that what he stated was that Dr. Macdonald, who was a former pupil of his in his school-teacher period, was offered $6,000 per year by Mr. Ginn, the well known ex-publisher of Boston, if he would devote his whole time to the advocacy in the press and on the platform of the cause of universal peace.

I do not know whether the fact about Mr. Macdonald's former relationship is an effort to make it appear that I had violated any confidential information that Mr. Macdonald had furnished to me. I have never learned directly or indirectly from Mr. Macdonald anything about these matters. Anything with reference to Mr. Macdonald other than the mere question of explaining that the word 'reciprocity' was put in the wrong place, and that the words 'peace association' should have been used instead, was never broached between the Toronto 'Globe' representative and myself, or put in the report. We did indulge in private conversation afterwards, but I shall not betray the confidence that that gentleman reposed in me concerning the editor of the 'Globe.'

Colonel Hughes drew the inference that the advocacy of universal peace was coupled in Mr. Ginn's offer with the advocacy of peace between the United States and Canada via closer trade relations through the medium of reciprocity, the campaign for which had been first started by Dr. Macdonald when the latter was in Washington last spring. Colonel Hughes said that Dr. Macdonald is now receiving $2,500 per year from Mr. Ginn for devoting part of his time to the advocacy of the above causes. Even in its modified form the statement of Colonel Hughes must be classed as a malicious slander.

I stand here to-day and I have the best reason for saying that there is not the slightest deviation from the truth between what I uttered then and what I am saying to-day, that Mr. Macdonald is, or was, unless he has thrown it up, or they have thrown him up, certainly in the pay of the peace society, and certainly drawing gold eagles from that Yankee society, while at the same time drawing Canadian dollars from the 'Globe' for his services.

Even in its modified form the statement of Colonel Hughes must be classed as a malicious slander.

Well, any one who knows the old hypocrite knows that of all the institutions from time immemorial that has graced or disgraced the public life of Canada the Toronto 'Globe' is par excellence the superior for its hypocrisy.

The editor of the 'Globe' is at present, as a result of ill health,——

I am sorry to hear it—

—travelling in southern California, beyond immediate reach of either wire or letter.

I did not know, until the representative of the 'Globe' told me that he was down in California. But, when we consider the gold bricks that these gentlemen hand out in that article in order to cover up rascality, the mere fact that this gentleman is in California, where he will be near the Leland Stanford University, the president of which is Dr. Starr Jordan, the great advocate of continental peace with the barriers removed between Canada and the United States, causes us to question very seriously the idea that Dr. Macdonald may not be so seriously ill as he is represented to be. Possibly he is down there recuperating his health, or it might be that having been sent out to preach the peace platform and not being a success, he is remaining there in order that he may receive more lessons in the art from the great master.

As soon as he can be located, Dr. Macdonald will deny over his own name the utterly base inference of Colonel Hughes that he is in any way under agreement with any person to advocate reciprocity with the United States.

Well, we will see about that later on.

The relations of Dr. Macdonald as an advocate of universal peace with Mr. Ginn of Boston have nothing to do with questions of trade of the internal affairs of any nation. It was publicly announced several months ago in the 'News' as well as in every other Toronto paper that Dr. Macdonald, while retaining the editorship of the 'Globe,' proposed to relieve himself of much of the detail work of the office that he might devote some part of his time to the advocacy of the cause of universal peace, which he has long had at heart.

So that the 'Globe' practically admits every word I am saying.

In that work he will be associated with some of the greatest educationists and publicists of America, men of the stamp of President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford University——

That is the place where every one is supposed to bow the head in solemn reverence.

—and John R. Mott.

Whoever he may be.

It is incredible that men of the type mentioned should receive from the peace foundation of Mr. Ginn any commission to advocate reciprocity or to deal in any way with trade relations.

They say it is incredible, but I shall prove it from Dr. Starr Jordan's own speeches delivered in this city, Montreal and Toronto, one of the slickest advocates of reciprocity under the auspicious guise of peace, that I have ever heard. Even the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in his palmy days, or the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), cannot begin to hold a candle to him.

Colonel Hughes' assertion even in its modified form is one that reflects very little credit on the man who made it, and still less on the papers that, knowing the facts, give it currency.

And what about the paper that, knowing the facts lies deliberately and maliciously about it? Never mind the papers that do not know about it, even if they do not tell a straight story, but the paper that knows the whole of the facts, is the one paper that, under the heading of 'A Malicious Slander' stands out from among the rest and tries to make it appear that I have been telling what is not true. So much for that. It is not necessary that I should go farther than to take from the 'Free Press' a journal which is particularly friendly to the government and the cause represented by it, published in Ottawa of date December 12, 1910, the following report of Dr. Starr Jordan's speech delivered in this city. He spoke on the following Monday in Toronto, and I think, he had spoken previously in Montreal:

The movement for peace must have its centre on the American side of the Atlantic ocean. It is recognized also that Canada holds the key to the whole situation.

I remember that the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), was present and he straightened himself up and said: What is going to become of the navy?

Reference was made to the 5,000 miles of boundary between Canada and the United States.

Those of us who were present will remember how beautifully Dr. Starr Jordan treated this matter, and I have to give him credit for being one of the slickest artists I have ever seen on a platform. These are his words:

We are impressed as the people of Europe are, with the fact that along this border there is not a warship——

And yet my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), was just asking for a return about warships a few minutes ago.

—not a soldier, not a gun, nothing——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He had forgotten about Col. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. I am only quoting this in order that any intelligent man may see the utter fallacy and absurdity of the remarks of this gentleman.

—nothing that looks towards any unfriendly suspicion, so far as violent acts are concerned. The only thing that is wanted to make this boundary ideal is the removal of the customs officers.

Yet the 'Globe' holds this man up as the prince of peace advocates, and says that there is nothing connecting this man with the advocacy of reciprocal trade relations between Canada and the United States. You should know that Dr. Starr Jordan did not speak of the removal of the customs house officers along the outer border, but only the removal of those officers between Canada and the United States which means that the Yankee flag would fly from the north pole to the sandy plains of Popocatepetl. Then, Dr. Starr Jordan on making that remark—and I remember how beautifully he did it—noticed three gentlemen who applauded him and he said:

I only expected half a group of cheers for that and it is mighty good to get that.

Not content with impressing the business men, and the rising generation in the city of Ottawa, after showing us the horrors of war and the blessings of peace, he insidiously donned the garb of the Meek and Lowly one, and on a Sunday, occupying a pulpit, this advocate of white winged peace could not keep his fingers out of the reciprocity pie. And, here is what we find reported as his sermon on page 2 of the 'Free Press,' column 3, delivered in a Unitarian church in the city of Ottawa by Dr. Starr Jordan:

'The establishment of international peace rested with the United States and Canada,' he said; 'Canada particularly was in a very unique position because of her relation in politics and common thought to the two greatest nations in the world.'

You will notice that he always slicks us down a little before he rubs us up. I watched him very carefully, and he is without exception one of the greatest artists I ever saw to captivate an audience ; why, he had the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ready to sell the 'Rainbow' and the 'Niobe.' Then, after meeting the people in this reverential mood, in a sermon that was well advertised he was catching the spiritual end of the town, he said :

If we can only do away with the custom house officers.

And this in a sermon mark you.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That makes it worse.

Mr. HUGHES. He says :

If we could only do away with the customs officers it would be an ideal frontier, said the speaker, in referring to the fact that in 100 years not a gun has been fired between Canada and the United States.

I need not say anything more. I have at least proven to my own satisfaction that the Rev. Dr. Jordan, and the Rev. J. A. Macdonald, and the whole outfit of them were taking Mr. Ginn's money under false pretenses when they would get on a plat form or in a pulpit to preach the removal of the customs officers between Canada and the United States, for every child in the Dominion knows that means the annexation of Canada, and the dissolution of the British Empire.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Montreal new barracks, $100,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This item stood over in order that I might be able to give information to my hon. friend from St. Anne's (Mr. Doherty) with regard to the new barracks at Longueuil. This is the information in my possession:

St. Helen's island has been handed over to the city of Montreal with the exception of three reserves containing the ordnance store buildings and magazines. These are to be reserved for use of the Department of Militia and Defence until buildings are erected for that department to contain the stores, &c., now accommodated there.

Longueuil site was purchased from various individuals in 1846-7 by the Honourable Board of Ordnance for the purpose of a Tête-du-Pont on the east side of Hochelaga bay, below St. Helen's island for the defence of Montreal. It was recently transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Militia and Defence for the purpose of a barrack site.

The area of St. Helen's island is approximately 123·8 acres and the areas of the three reservations are:—A., 2·735; B., 8·637; C., 9·62 acres.

The Montreal barracks are intended for the accommodation of the permanent troops at the headquarters of the Quebec command, comprising nearly all branches with departmental details and a large number of attached who will be attending for instruction. They will provide a proper school of instruction for the Montreal garrison and the commands and districts. The actual details of the various establishments have not yet been determined, but the totals will probably be about 450 or 500 all ranks, and from 275 to 300 horses.

As regards buildings, there will be approximately 25.

Mr. DOHERTY. Are these buildings to be used for a militarv school?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DOHERTY. Was it considered whether Longueuil was a suitable and convenient place for a military school for the different corps in the Montreal district. It would seem to me that the Longueuil site is a very great distance away from the places of residence of the officers and men, and the headquarters of the different militia corps in the city. If the agreement were that we should have a military school in Montreal it is hardly fulfilling that agreement to establish a military school at Longueuil which I should think must be six or seven miles away, generally speaking, from the residences of the officers and men of the militia who would use the school

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is an electric railway.

Mr. DOHERTY. You could hardly cross the river on an electric railway.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is steamboat connection too.

Mr. DOHERTY. There is an electric railway to the foot of the current and a ferry across the river to Longueuil, but nevertheless Longueuil is a very long distance away from the centre of the city. Taking into consideration the transportation facilities I would be inclined to believe that a school at St. Johns is practically just as accessible as a school at Longueuil would be. When you agree to establish a military school in Montreal and you then establish a military school at Longueuil it seems to me you are far away from fulfilling the spirit of that agreement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Accommodation for 300 horses would be needed and it is very desirable to have a large area of land which could not be got right in the city of Montreal. Montreal is growing rapidly and the means of communication with the suburbs are increasing.

Mr. DOHERTY. Have the militia officers in the Montreal district been consulted about this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no doubt whatever that in accordance with the usual custom the local militia officers have been consulted, but as to that I have no personal knowledge. I do know that the matter has been under serious consideration for a considerable period, and this is the sober judgment of the Militia Department.

Mr. DOHERTY. Of course, if the minister is not in a position to tell us positively that the militia officers were consulted it will not help us any for him to make a guess at it. It does seem to me that it would be a highly proper thing that they should have been consulted, and before we can form a judgment on ths vote we ought to be in possession of the opinions expressed by those interested in military affairs in the Montreal district. Until we have that, we are lacking in information essential to enable us to pronounce upon the desirability of locating these new barracks at Longueuil. Of course, so far as I am concerned, I have no idea of objecting to the erection of a military school and to providing the money for it, but we certainly should have some responsible minister here who could furnish us with the information necessary to enable us to form a judgment as to whether Longueuil is the proper place to spend the money for the purpose. It is another instance that impresses the very unfortunate results of the system under which the minister whose department is really in question, and who in the last resort decides these matters, is not here to give us the information on which to arrive at a conclusion. We have no information as to whether in the judgment of the persons to meet whose wants the school is being provided this is a suitable place in which to put it.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought this was one of the items that was to stand in the absence of the Minister of Militia?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it stood in order that I might get some information.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Militia should be here to give us the information instead of being down in Nova Scotia running elections. He was not elected for that purpose and is not paid $7,000 a year to do that. It is here he ought to be, and we should not be asked to vote this money without this essential information.

Mr. HUGHES. The troops who are to occupy these barracks, are very much dissatisfied with the place. I am told it is very unhealthy, it is low and at certain seasons, damp, and very inaccessible. There is no reason why it would not be better to have it out at Back Mountain so that the boys from Montreal could attend the military school at night, reaching the place by cars. It is impossible to do this at Longueuil.

Mr. M. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a few remarks in reply to what the hon. member for St. Anne's division (Mr. Doherty) has just stated. When the question of building that military school on Lafontaine park came up, I deemed it my duty, in my capacity of representative of that division, to oppose that proposal, as such a building would disfigure that park. Everybody knows that Lafontaine park is the most beautiful park in the city, next to Mount Royal park.

The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) told us that the Longueuil site was unhealthy, but in my opinion the sanitary condition of the place is better than in any other place in the city of Montreal. Moreover, I am informed by the hon. the Minister of Public Works that this Longueuil site was recently given or transferred to the Militia Department. Now, if the government were to buy a site on the island of Montreal, no matter where, they would have to pay for an area of about forty acres, from $100,000 to $150,000 in the least, and that site would necessary be at a very great distance away from the centre of the city. I have no hesitation in saying that so far as distance is concerned, the Longueuil location would be nearer and more accessible than any other place available on the island of Montreal.

The island of St. Helene has been sold to the government for $200,000, as also that portion of land owned by the government on the edge of Lafontaine park.

For my own part I am entirely opposed to that school being built in the vicinity of Lafontaine park.

Mr. DOHERTY (Translation). I should like to ask my hon. friend whether he considers that there is not to be found on the island of Montreal any land on which these barracks could be built, without disfiguring as he says, or infringing on Lafontaine park.

I think my hon. friend is aware that it would be much more convenient for the young men who shall take the course of that institution to reach those barracks, if they are built on the island of Montreal itself. It is true one may cross the river at the foot of the current. But the greater number of the interested parties live at too great a distance from the foot of the current where there is a ferry across the river to Longueuil. In the winter time, I suppose they would have to cross over the ice, or pass by the Victoria bridge, which would oblige them to take a very considerable roundabout way.

I am surprised that my hon. friend, who is one of the representatives of the city of Montreal, should not realize the inconveniences that would result from building that military school at Longueuil rather than in Montreal, as this means a very considerable difference.

Mr. DOHERTY. I submit that we have not the requisite information even with the additional light which the hon. member for St. Mary's division is able to throw on the subject. We have the additional information that this establishment is to be used as a military school, but we have no information as to how the conclusion was arrived at that Longueuil was the best place for a military school. As one who has had some military experience in the past, my strong impression is that you are putting a school in a place which will be highly inconvenient for the service to which it is to be devoted. For a considerable time there has been a very strong desire among those who interest themselves in military matters in Montreal that we should have a school there, and the reason why is that many young men who would be glad to take the course if the school were in the city, find it impossible to get away to St. Johns and follow the course there. You can go to St. Johns from Montreal by rail in three-quarters of an hour and the service is most excellent, so that, so far as convenience is concerned, I would just as soon go from my residence in the city to St. Johns and back as to some point in Longueuil. Nor have we any light as to the particular point in Longueuil at which these barracks are to be built, and the parish is a pretty large one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend know where the Tête du Pont is? It is about 190 acres in extent and belongs to the government, and that is the place where it is proposed to build these barracks.

Mr. DOHERTY. This is the first time I have heard that place mentioned, and I do not know in what part of Longueuil it is. This is a matter of considerable importance, concerning which we ought to have some one here able to tell us all the circumstances and what are the reasons in favour of this location. At first glance it is rather surprising to find that a school which we were to have in the city of Montreal is to be located, instead, at Longueuil, and the only reason given us for that location is that the land can be procured there without being paid for, besides the further reason that if you were to build the school in Montreal you would have to disfigure the Lafontaine park. Well, the Island of Montreal is large, and there is a great deal of vacant space in the city on which to build these barracks without at all infringing on Lafontaine park. I sympathize with the hon. member from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) in his desire that Lafontaine park, which is very beautiful, should not have any portion of it devoted to this particular purpose, but, after all, we are not reduced to a choice between Lafontaine park and Longueuil. There is a good deal of other space in the city available, and we ought to know whether the men interested, those who are going to use the school, have been consulted. If they have been, we should have the result of that consultation. If they have not, they should be consulted before this matter is finally decided.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the use of wasting time? If the minister wants to get his items through, he need not spend any time on this. The Minister of Militia should be here to answer these questions, which cannot be answered without him, and, as far as I am concerned, none of these items should go through until he is present.

Mr. HUGHES. There is another point of importance. My hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) has pointed out the drawbacks in having this school outside the city. These are well known to men of the permanent force, but they are in the regular service, and they dare not publicly and openly object, but they do object very seriously, and I can assure the hon. minister that they would much prefer remaining at St. Johns, or Quebec, or the other places where they now are rather than move to Longueuil. The minister might as well hold this item over until the return of the Minister of Militia, and until the officers and men concerned can be consulted. I am satisfied that fifty places can be found on Montreal island a short distance from the centre of the city where this institution could be located with much greater convenience to the men. Many of these men are in business, and the man who wants to retain his position in business cannot give the time required to go from his work and attend this military school if it be at Longueuil, and you might just as well have it at St. Johns as at Longueuil. But if it were situated in the city, or at Back River, or at fifty other places on the island, a business man could attend the course there without trouble, and if night schools were held they would be a tremendous advantage to the city. I would, therefore, ask that this item should stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will observe that the item is for Montreal new barracks, and I do not take it that, in passing this item, parliament binds itself to an approval of the Longueuil site. I have said that that is where it is proposed to erect the barracks. But everybody will agree that new barracks are necessary, and that it is absolutely essential in order to carry out the understanding that the $200,000 obtained from the city of Montreal for the sale of St. Helen's island should be used in the erection of new barracks, that this item should pass. If the Minister of Militia were here I think all he would say would be that because of this Longueuil land being owned by the government, and because of its situation, it was deemed the most desirable place.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister any report on the sanitary condition of this place? How high above the river is it and what is the fall? I am told that it is dead level and that at some seasons of the year it is unfit to be occupied. I am told also that the ground consists of clay and not sand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have great respect for the opinion of the hon. member for St. James, because he lives in Montreal.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have great respect for St. James, but, as every one knows St. Anne is the particular patron saint of our province, and I am particularly proud to represent a constituency honoured by her name.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I apologize to my hon. friend. From a military standpoint, I have more than respect for my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), and my respect grows to admiration of him with regard to military matters. I have great confidence in his judgment and will consider it my business to present to the Minister of Militia the views which he and the hon. member for St. Anne's have expressed. It may be that, instead of using the land which the department owns, it would be better to go to an expenditure of $100,000 or $200,000 or perhaps $400,000 or $500,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly, no matter what it is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In order to get land nearer the city of Montreal, I would say that by passing this vote it is not understood that parliament approves one site or another, but that all it does is approve the erection of a barracks.

Mr. DOHERTY. If the vote is passed in this way, we shall have voted the money and the barracks will be erected wherever the minister decides without consulting parliament. It is not inconceiveable that parliament might be willing to vote the money for barracks to be erected in a place that would suit the purpose and not in a locality that would not. But to ask us to vote the money and leave the department to decide where it will put the barracks is to give the department absolutely carte blanche. If we are to be judges as to whether this money is to be spent or not, it is an extraordinary position to say that it makes no difference whether the building is to be in one place or another. In other words, that we would be assumed to be as willing to vote the money to put the barracks in an absolutely unsuitable place, if that were shown to be the case, as in a suitable place. I do not wish any misapprehension of what I say. I am not in favour of preventing the construction of the barracks. All I ask is that we should be put in a positon to determine whether the money should be spent where it is proposed to spend it.

Mr. RIVET. May I ask if the hon. member (Mr. Doherty), has received any protest from any military men in Montreal regarding the contemplated site of the new barracks, and if, in speaking as he does, he is expressing the views of these gentlemen?

Mr. DOHERTY. I have not received any protest from the military men of Montreal. I have nothing to show me that they know at all that the military school of Montreal is going to be built in Longueuil. This item in the estimates does not convey that information, for it only says 'Montreal—New Barracks.' And, so far as I know, it is only in answer to questions from the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and myself, put the other evening, that the fact came out that this new building was to be erected at Longueuil. The minister (Mr. Pugsley) is not in a position to tell me that any communication has been had with these gentlemen or that they have been consulted in any way. Why does the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) assume that they know anything about it?

Mr. RIVET. I do not assume it.

Mr. DOHERTY. Then, how can he expect that they would have communicated with me? And that leads me to say that the main point I would like to bring before the minister is the one I have already mentioned—though he does not seem to pay attention to it—that the absence of consultation with these gentlemen seems to be a reason why this money should not be voted. It seems to me only proper that these gentlemen, who are in the best position to form a judgment as to the location of the military school from the point of view of meeting the needs for which this building is provided, should have been consulted before this vote was proposed. I am not saying that that has not been done, but the minister does not know whether it has been done or not, and neither do I. I may say, that, on my own responsibility, since I got the information that this building was to be at Longueuil, I have written to some of these gentlemen asking for information as to their views, and I hope to receive that information. The Militia Department may have that information already, but, if so, surely it should be at our disposal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This ought to be satisfactory to my hon. friend, and I hope it will, for he does not want to prevent the vote from passing, but only wants to have the local militia officers consulted : I give the assurance to my hon. friend on behalf of the Minister of Militia, and will acquaint him with that assurance, that, if these officers have not been consulted, they shall be consulted with regard to the location of the new barracks. I will also present the views of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) as to the question which he raised regarding the location. I think he will agree with me that not all the members of the committee, probably not even my hon. friend himself could form a judgment on this question. All he can ask is that before the minister decides upon a location, he should consult the officers to whom reference has been made.

Mr. BLAIN. The point is not whether the members of the opposition would be able to form an opinion as to where this college should be located ; the question, as I understand it, is whether the government has come to a decision as to where this building should be erected. If they have, the committee surely is entitled to receive that information. It is not enough for the Minister of Public Works to say : Vote the money and I will communicate with the Minister of Militia, and then we will do just what we wish. Surely, that is another new doctrine of the Minister of Public Works. He pays a great deal of respect to my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton—

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the military side.

Mr. BLAIN. I listened to his remarks, but it seems to me that if he wished to pay very much respect to my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) he might accept his suggestion that the item be allowed to stand over until the matter was settled. Surely, after having had so long a time to secure the information from the Militia Department, and to consider it, he should be in a position to do something more than come forward and say : 'We have not decided.' I would like to know who really did suggest that this building should be erected at this point ; was it the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Militia, or the sitting member for the district?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The deputy Minister of Militia has informed me that it is proposed to erect these barracks at Longueuil, on property owned by the government and, which, of course, will cost the government nothing. It is a large area, something over 190 acres. What I said to my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty), was that I would represent the views of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton who says there is some question about the sanitary conditions there and also the views of the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty), that this is not as convenient a place as some others that might be chosen, to the Minister of Militia, and I have given the assurance that, before finally deciding upon the site, which, as at present advised, is Longueuil, the matter will be looked into further, and the local officers in Montreal consulted. That, I think, is all that can reasonably be asked.

Mr. DOHERTY. The promise was merely that the local officers shall be consulted. That having been done, there will be nothing to prevent the department, overriding their views and going on, with the money we have voted, to build the barracks in some place where these officers do not want it. But we would like to know what they think, for this would influence our judgment as to whether the money should be voted to build this barracks on the site proposed. While I do not doubt that these officers will be consulted according to the minister's promise, that does not secure to us the advantage of their opinion, and it does not leave it to us in any way to influence the decision as to whether their opinion should have weight or not. However, I have urged all that I can urge in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. The position of the minister is much the same as that of the farmer who consulted his neighbours about the location for his proposed new barn. He invited them to tea, and afterwards showed them over the place and pointed out localities any one of which might be selected. Then he said: 'I have drawn your attention to the facts, and, while I want the benefit of your advice, yet, to economize time I may tell you that I am going to build the barn on that knoll, facing the south.' That is about what would be the result of this proposed consultation. The consultation might not influence the government against putting the building in a place which this House, if it had the information it ought to have, would consider an unsuitable place. But, outside of all that, this House, in my judgment, is doing wrong when we allow estimates to go through in the absence of ministers who ought to be here to give us the information we are entitled to in order to be able to form a reasonable judgment in the question before us. I think the government, when they submit these items, should see that a minister is present who can give the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman who is now leading the opposition, and who has just spoken, take the ground that there will be an objection to any military items going through until the Minister of Militia returns? If so, we might as well understand it, because I know that they can delay, and even prevent the estimates going through. If the hon. gentleman takes that view, I will agree to let this and all other militia items stand until the minister returns.

Mr. SPROULE. To many of the items there would be no objection. But this is one of so much importance, involving a large expenditure for a public building, that I think the Minister of Militia ought to be here to give us information.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not objecting to this item in itself, and I do not care whether the minister is here or not. But I want it understood that the site is regarded by military men—and I have correspondence galore from them about it—as an unsuitable site. In the first place, in order to reach there by land, one has to go across the bridge and then follow the road down the river side. In order to reach it by water, you have to go down below the rapids to cross over. Every one will admit that it is an awkward place to reach, and I am satisfied that every member representing a Montreal constituency will so advise the minister. We can name twenty places on the island more suitable than this is. I am free to say that I believe the reason Longueuil is selected is that the government have, unfortunately, in their possession a little swamp over there, a few hundred acres of land flat, boggy, heavy clay, in the rainy season, practically impassable—I am giving merely the data that I have received. Now the House will freely vote the necessary money for an important institution like this if it is on a proper and convenient site for the officers and men in Montreal to reach. Therefore, in all kindness I ask the minister to postpone the item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In view of the representations made by my hon. friend I will consent to let the item stand until the Minister of Militia and Defence returns.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). With regard to the St. Lambert building the minister promised to furnish us with the options that were procurred in connection with the purchase of the site, the dates and the names.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have that information. I find there is only one option on file, that is from Mr. Noel Marcil, dated February 11, 1910, for four months, covering lots Nos. 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116, for $4,140. I have a copy of a resolution of the town council of St. Lambert adopted at a meeting held March 5, 1909, as it is here. I think that must be a mistake, and that it should be 1910. There was a letter from the Department of the Secretary of State, dated May 2, 1910, inclosing the resolution purporting to be dated March 5, 1909, therefore, my deputy concludes that there was a clerical error, and that 1910 was the date intended. The site was reported on by Mr. G. S. Gingras, clerk of works at Montreal, on the 21st of May, 1910, recommending the purchase.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The hon. gentleman evidently spoke under a misapprehension of the facts when he stated before that there were several options taken. He will recollect what was said by the representative of the constituency (Mr. Geoffrion).

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was only one written option, apparently. Some times the official of the department visits the different owners and gets their prices, but I would not call that an option.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Were there any other sites in St. Lambert suggested to the government for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the only one that was considered by the government, the only one which the town was in favour of. The lot is situated right opposite the academy.

Mr. BLAIN. The other evening my hon. friend laid on the table some information in respect to a clock furnished his department at Lunenburg. I noticed, in the correspondence of the minister's department, that he asked the clock dealer to write the specification himself, and he accepted the price offered under that specification. Is that the policy of the government? I thought it rather strange that the minister should ask a gentleman to supply the clock and at the same time ask him to write the specification.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see why it would not be proper to ask a dealer in a special line of clocks to do so. This was not an ordinary clock; it was a clock to be put in the tower of a building. We asked him to send us a specification of the clock he proposed to furnish, along with the price. We did not accept his price. The chief architect fixed the price that was paid, asking him to take a lower price than the one he had fixed. The chief architect knew from his knowedge, and the information he had got from other clock dealers, what would be a fair and reasonable price, and this gentleman accepted the price offered by the chief architect. Now, with regard to asking for specifications, that was done in case of the Quebec bridge; the tenderers were requested to submit their specifications, I mean the proposed new bridge.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister say that $1,600 is a reasonable price for a clock of this kind?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says that it is, according to his judgment.

Mr. BLAIN. I would direct attention to the fact that the general price of these clocks supplied in his department heretofore was $700 instead of $1,600. If the gentleman supplying the clock was a manufacturer, and this was a special kind, the hon. gentleman's explanation might have some basis. But was it fair that he should have asked tenders from other people supplying clocks, rather than assisting this gentleman to procure the order, and giving him liberty to write the specification himself, finally paying him $1,600 for the clock. Where did this clock come from?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It came from Germany.

Mr. BLAIN. Why did not my hon. friend purchase it direct from the manufacturer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What item is the hon. gentleman speaking on now?

Mr. BLAIN. I am speaking about some information that was delayed and laid on the table for the information of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion is scarcely relevant to the item in the present resolution.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like, by your consent, Mr. Chairman, to give my hon. friend the explanation, so that we may get this disposed of once and for all. There is just as much difference between clocks as there is between watches. If my hon. friend wanted to get a watch would he go around the city and ask people to tender and name the price at which they were willing to deliver watches to him? There are hundreds of kinds of watches and hundreds of different prices. There is a great difference between a striking clock and a non-striking clock, which you can get for about $700.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is a striking clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, a striking clock of the very best description, and the chief architect tells me that he got it at the lowest price at which such a clock could be obtained. A small amount was paid to the dealer.

Mr. BLAIN. What was that amount?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The installing of the clock was included in the $1,600, and there was considerable work about it. It meant repairing the place in the building and all that sort of thing.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend cannot have correct information, because there is a payment for making the place and doing what my hon. friend said had been done, to a Mr. Pyke.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was for arranging the platform upon which the clock stands, putting in the floor and making cuttings in the tower. My hon. friend got all this information in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is a clock to be supplied for the Lunenburg public building. Looking over the list of clocks supplied for public buildings in Ontario and other provinces, I find the price to be about $700. I asked why $1,600 was paid for Lunenburg and my hon. friend answered by saying that this is a very rare clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is a striking clock.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend tells us something, I suppose, that nobody ever knew before, that there are clocks that strike and clocks that do not strike. My hon. friend asks if I would go around the city asking for tenders for a watch. I do not know what my hon. friend would do himself but I know what I would do if I were administering a department as my hon. friend is; I would keep the middlemen out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was kept out here.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend decides how much they will give for the clock. Information is supplied to the chief architect saying that it should cost $1,600. The chief architect and my hon. friend know full well that this clock is not manufactured in Canada. They know where it could be purchased. Why does the hon. gentleman select an individual supporter in Halifax without asking for public competition when he had decided upon the kind of clock that he wanted, and allow this gentleman to supply it? What is a middleman? A middleman is one who stands between the government and the manufacturer, in this case, when the government want to buy a clock. My hon. friend could have sent for this clock himself, if it was not manufactured in Canada, but instead of that he decides that there is to be a middleman in it and he selects the one who shall supply the clock. When we are discussing these items the hon. gentleman says that we always have public competition No competition in this at all. What would my hon. friend call this Mr. Shultze who purchased this clock in Germany and supplied it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not call a dealer or merchant a middleman.

Mr. BLAIN. I would call a person like this who charges such a price a middleman and a dealer too. The truth is that money could have been saved to the department if my hon. friend had been a good administrator, and if he had not been in the hands of the middleman or the dealer, he can call him whichever he wants. If my hon. friend wanted to carry out the policy in connection with all these important matters of having public competition why did he not ask other people to give prices upon this clock? There were other dealers in Halifax carrying on business in a larger way than this gentleman. This gentleman did not have such a clock in his store. No one else in Halifax had such a clock in his store. Why should my hon. friend select this individual, a political supporter, and say: Put in a clock, and write your own specification when he knew the price at which it could be bought for? My hon. friend comes here and says that there is no middleman in his department. I would like to ask my hon. friend how he draws a distinction between the dealer and the middleman in this case?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I understand it, a man who deals in any particular article and who buys of the manufacturer gets the article at the wholesale price. I could not go individually and buy direct from the manufacturer, and my hon. friend could not. I do not imagine that the government could, and what I understand is that dealers would get whatever discount there would be from the manufacturer, and that it would be deducted from their price. The wholesale dealer always gets that. Suppose we required to make some arrangements about bath tubs; we would buy them from the man who deals in bath tubs. We would not buy from the manufacturer, and I doubt if the manufacturer would sell to us. In this particular case this gentleman was a dealer in clocks. He would get this clock from the manufacturer at the same price, included in which would be his dealer's reasonable profit, as that at which the government or my hon. friend could get it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did the hon. gentleman try to get a price from the manufacturer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says that he knew that was the usual price for a clock of that character.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did the department obtain a price from the manufacturers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. When this gentleman asked a price the chief architect made a counter offer of what he believed the clock was worth. This price of $1,600 includes all the work of installing the clock and the manufacturer would not send a man from Germany to install it. The chief architect tells me that such a clock as this could not be purchased for a smaller sum than was paid.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). What policy does the department follow in erecting a clock in one public building, and not in another? Does it depend on the wishes of the municipality, or the political influence of the representative of the constituency?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We endeavour to meet the reasonable requests of the different places, and in a new building we sometimes provide for a clock, but if there is already a public clock in the town we do not install one as a rule. My attention has been called to a number of buildings erected 15 or 20 years ago by the Conservative government and they were so scarce of money that they left holes in the towers where clocks ought to be.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). They were not so extravagant.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They should not have left the holes there because that was a temptation to the people to ask for clocks.

Mr. LANCASTER. How would you ever get in if they did not leave holes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For instance, in the constituency represented by my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Chisholm) we are putting a clock in the public building at Wingham.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Costing $1,600?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no doubt it will cost fully that. I mentioned that to show the fairness with which I endeavour to act.

Ottawa Printing Bureau, new boilers, &c., $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect estimates the total cost at $8,630, and contingencies $1,370, making $10,000. A report from the engineer of the Printing Bureau stated that the boilers had been in continuous use since 1888 and they have been constantly under pressure during all that time. He recommended that these boilers should be renewed, and the chief architect is of opinion that for the safety of property, and perhaps life new boilers should be installed.

Ottawa departmental buildings, fittings, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a vote which it is found necessary to take practically every year for the purpose of fitting up steel file cases, book shelves, steel drawers, &c.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this done by tender after public competition ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By tenders in each case. There are two companies manufacturing the steel fittings, the Eclipse Manufacturing Company and the Office Specialty Company.

Ottawa departmental buildings, improvements in lavatories, plumbing, &c., $10,000.

Mr. HUGHES. I would again point out that the sanitary accommodation in this building is in a prehistoric condition, some of the accommodation is not up to the standard of a modern railway closet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I remember a conversation with my hon. friend and I gave direction to the chief architect to have the improvements made. He reported to me that he had them made as far as the premises would permit.

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing was done at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret that it was not possible to make the improvements as complete as they should be made.

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing was done at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall have to ask the chief architect to see my hon. friend because he says that considerable work was done.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think that even a drop of paint was put on the bathrooms and barber shop.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A shower bath was put in.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not seen it. The bathroom should be taken out of the barber shop as any one coming from a bathroom is liable to strike the arm of the barber while he is shaving a customer.

Another matter of importance is that the water of Ottawa is certainly impregnated with typhoid. I believe there are a couple of places in the building where we can get water which is supposed to be purified. If it is a good system, why not put it through all the different departmental buildings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made a statement last night of what has been done. We have one supply of purified water on each floor.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not have it all over the offices ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are providing for that. We have communicated with the Finance Department with a view of putting that system in each of the blocks.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me there is an obligation resting on others as well as on the government. We pay a consideration to the city of Ottawa for the provision they have made to give us water for these buildings. It is natural to assume that that means healthy and pure water, and if nothing is dished up but what is mixed with sewage we are throwing away our money and are very careless with regard to the health of those who come from every part of the country to spend four to six months of the year attending parliament. I thought that the First Minister the other evening spoke about this in a very trifling and flippant manner. It is too serious to be dealt with in this way. There is an obligation on the city to furnish pure water in proper quantity and if they do not do that, we should revise our contract with them. There is an obligation resting on the health officer to see that the health of the people is properly loked after in regard to the water supplied for drinking, It was said as an excuse for the failure to analyse the water from month to month, that the health officer had not bottles to send it in. What a trivial excuse, what supreme carelessness it is. What is the city council doing ? What kind of a health officer have we ? Are these conditions to be allowed to continue with the imminent danger which exists ? Already immense trouble, expense, suffering and death have been brought to many people in this city on account of the impure water they are obliged to use. This condition of things has been going on for weeks and it is time the department should wake up and realize the importance of forcing the city to take prompt action. If the city have not an efficient health officer they should call on him to resign and put some competent man in his place, and not allow the health of the people to suffer through so apparent a dereliction of duty in the management of the health department.

Mr. HUGHES. When the officers of the council have been going around indulging in pyrotechnical displays and using their energies in kow-towing to the powers that be, you cannot expect them to attend to the business of the city, and I am astonished that my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) should expect anything of the kind. The attention of the city council has been drawn for years to the danger. A certain medical officer has frequently pointed out to the council and to the health officer the fact that this city is at the mercy of the towns along the river and that steps should be taken to provide a remedy. It would be well to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Grey and stir the city council up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not appoint the health officer. He is appointed by the Ontario government.

Mr. HUGHES. No, by the city council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events we have no control over him. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is so accustomed to fault finding that he naturally pitches right in to the city council and its health officer, but we ought to have some little consideration for them. I believe they are doing the best they can in the serious conditions with which they are confronted. Either some other source must be obtained from which the supply of water can be got or else something should be done to sterilize and purify the water contaminated by the sewage which is emptied into the Ottawa river from towns such as Aylmer, Arnprior, Pembroke and Renfrew and others along its banks. The city of Ottawa is doing the best it can. It has engineers endeavouring to find some other source from which water can be obtained. The only thing we can do, in the discharge of our duty, is to sterilize the water and make it as palatable as we can. Our officials are giving their utmost attention to that; and if hon. members will be careful to drink only the sterilized water, they need not fear any danger.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says that I am so accustomed to fault finding that I cannot allow an opportunity like this to pass.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Does he say that there is not just ground for fault finding?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not against the health officer.

Mr. SPROULE. Parliament is asked to vote a large sum to the city of Ottawa for the supply of water, and we must presume that the city is bound to supply pure and healthy water. If water of that kind is not supplied we ought to stop the pay. The only parties which parliament can hold responsible are the ministers of the Crown. All the minister can say is that he supposes the health officer is doing what he should, but I remember distinctly that instructions were given the health officer to have the water analysed every week or every month but, in reply to a question as to when the last analysis was made, we are told that it was made away back in the month of November. Then the question was asked why did the health officer not attend to this, and the reply was that the city council would see that this was done. When the health officer was asked why he had not had an analysis made, his excuse was that he had not proper bottles in which to send the water to be analysed. Such an excuse should not be tolerated. It is true we can get our water sterilized by distillation, but it may be found that in our private rooms and in places where we take our meals, no such water is provided.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why should not private individuals boil the water and so sterilize it just as is being done here?

Mr. SPROULE. Why should not private individuals look to the health officer whose duty it is to see that we are furnished with pure water? Why should they be obliged to drink sewage water because of the dilatoriness of the health inspector? When there were practically but few cases of typhoid fever in the city, the prediction was made that unless proper precautions were taken these cases would increase, and so they did. According to the newspapers there are 210 cases reported at present and how many more not reported we do not know. In this matter the government are just as lax as the city council and its health officer, because they do not bring their influence to compel the city authorities to do their duty.

Mr. BRADBURY. The government has a large number of employees directly under the control of the Department of Public Works. I do not know that there is any provision for furnishing pure water to the different departments of the government. I do know that there are a very large number of typhoid cases in this city? I understand that the epidemic has become so bad that the citizens have had to secure the old geological survey building as an emergency hospital. I do not know that the government can be held responsible altogether for the water of the city of Ottawa—

Mr. PUGSLEY. How can they be held responsible at all?

Mr. BRADBURY. I do say that the government are responsible for the water their employees are consuming. And I say that, if there is any virtue in the sterilizing apparatus we have in the House of Commons, it is the duty of the government to furnish them to every department immediately. But, outside of this, there is the greater question. I believe the government exercises considerable influence on the city of Ottawa to-day. The government has a contract with the city to furnish water for these buildings. The government has a right, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says, to expect that pure water should be furnished. There is no doubt that, if the government had taken this matter in hand and had told the city plainly that if pure water was not furnished, the supply would be cut off and we would put in our own plant and the buildings supplied—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where from?

Mr. BRADBURY. That would be a question to be decided. We might take it from the same source, and do what the city of Ottawa should have done years ago—purify the water. I understand the city is making arrangements now for water purification. But those in charge of the government of the city of Ottawa have been derelict in their duty to the citizens. Many precious lives have been sacrificed; many people are on sick beds who should not be there. I appeal to the Minister of Public Works, not so much as far as the city is concerned, but for the employees who, in this matter, are directly under his charge, and who cannot come to this House of Commons and raise their voices in protest against the water supplied to them. Every department is running the same danger that the citizens are running of drinking water from the Ottawa river, which is little better than sewage. The minister asks why the citizens do not boil the water. I am not a scientist, but I venture to say that boiling the water is not a sure preventive of danger. If you boil a pail of sewage, how much better is it than it was before? By boiling you kill anything alive that is there, but I have grave doubts whether you remove all danger.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The best physicians say the microbes will be killed.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not agree with the Minister of Public Works. A few days ago I was laid up, and feared an attack of typhoid. I told my physician who attended me that we were taking the precaution of boiling the water, and he said: 'If you boil a pail of sewage, does it make it any purer? You kill anything that is alive, but you do not purify it.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Microbes have life; surely if you kill them you get rid—

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to see the government have a little life on this question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have been trying to kill the microbes.

Mr. BRADBURY. I say, in conclusion, that this is no laughing matter, but a very serious one. If the cost is $10,000 or $500,000, to provide pure water for the employees of this government, the honour of the country is at stake, and it ought to be done and done immediately.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Public Works asks how the government can do anything. The government has a contract with the city for a supply of water. If the city persists in supplying sewage, the minister can indict the council for maintaining a common nuisance. This would call the attention of these gentlemen to the fact that they have something to do besides self-advertising. I did not intend to speak on this point; I rose, in the first place, to help the minister out on the question of supplying pure water. But, when he asks what he can do, I tell him he can indict these people for maintaining a common nuisance.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Mr. McGIVERIN. I have listened with interest to the discussion, and am glad to hear the expressions of sympathy from hon. members with the sufferers in this typhoid epidemic. The question, to my mind, is one for the mayor and corporation of the city of Ottawa. I regret that, for the past three or four months, there has been such a difference of opinion among the experts as to leave one at present quite at a loss as to avoidance of the danger. It has arisen only within the last two or three weeks, owing, no doubt, to the exceedingly low water in the Ottawa river from which the supply is drawn. It would have been quite impossible for the government or any one else to advise the city council when, apparently, the experts were at odds themselves as to the best course to be followed. But, since this very serious outbreak, every precaution, as I understand it, has been taken to do away with the poisonous condition of the water——

Mr. HUGHES. By whom?

Mr. McGIVERIN. I am not a technical man in this matter, but I understand that some chemical preparation is to be mixed with the water which will purify it.

So far as holding the government responsible is concerned, the responsibility seems to me to rest entirely on the shoulders of the corporation of the city of Ottawa. The fact has already been mentioned that the government has given the use of the geological survey building as a temporary hospital. I may explain that, the moment we learned there was need of more room, the chairman of the board of health, the medical health officer and I went to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) on this matter. That hon. gentleman at once gave his consent to the use of the building, and hastened matters in every way to place it at the city's disposal. And the same was true of the Militia Department in trying to help out. I can only say—in common, I am sure, with all members of this House—how deeply I regret that this outbreak has occurred in this city which has always tried to carry out any obligations into which it has entered with the government.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not find fault with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. McGiverin) in seeking to whitewash the government. I was not blaming the government until the minister asked what he could do. I think he could do a good deal. For years, we have been reading how gentlemen in this city have protested again and again against the threatened contamination of the city water. But the mayor and corporation declared that the water was the finest in the world—everything around Ottawa was the finest in the world. As a matter of fact, Ottawa has been drinking the sewage of Pembroke, Almonte, Arnprior, Alymer and all these other towns on the river. How the people of Ottawa have escaped trouble so long I cannot tell. However, the main thing is that the minister should notify the city that we want pure water, he has a contract with the city. Let him notify the mayor that the city must supply these buildings with pure water. Let him for once put down his foot firmly, while at the same time maintaining his genial countenance.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest that the minister tell the city that he will not ask this item to be carried because the city is not fulfilling their contract. When they are giving us poisonous water to drink they are not giving us what their contract was supposed to call for. When the minister notifies the city that he will not carry this item of $115,000 otherwise, he will be doing something to get pure water. I do not believe for one minute that the city of Ottawa cannot get pure water, and the minister can help the city get pure water if he refuses to pay them this $115,000 until it is supplied us.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the minister could bring a little pressure to bear on the city by letting this item stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY . This item has nothing to do with pure water.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister want to drive us to drink something else?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be awfully sorry.

Mr. CROTHERS. On behalf of the members of this House I would suggest that the minister has the remedy in his hands by having an emergency consultation with Hiram Walker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman be the chief executive officer at the conference?

Mr. BLAIN. I see that the firm of A. K. Mills & Son, Ottawa, have received $5,866 for plumbing, &c., last year. Was any of this work done after public competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was for the supply and installation of marble lavatories.

Mr. BLAIN. That is only one item in a total of $25,866.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was jobbing work, there were no tenders invited. It could not be done very well by tender. If you take an old building and tear out the old lavatories and put in new ones, it is something that you cannot do satisfactorily by tender. If I were doing it for myself I would not think of calling for tenders, but would try and get good reliable men. Any one doing it by tender would be sure to exact a large margin for unexpected difficulties.

Ottawa Departmental Buildings—Langevin Block—new boilers and alterations in heating apparatus, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. $5,000 of this is a revote. It is to make provision for replacing four boilers in the Langevin block on the east side, also to complete necessary changes in connection with the heating apparatus. It was done by public competition, after advertisement in the newspapers of Ottawa.

Mr. BLAIN. In how many newspapers was this advertisement inserted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It could not have been in a great many, because it only cost $35 for advertising. I presume it was in one of the Ottawa papers.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the chief architect could tell in which one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He does not remember in what paper it was advertised. It is done through the secretary of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Was this put in two or three papers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can safely say there would only be one.

Mr. BLAIN. Which one?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If in only one, it would be the 'Free Press.' But if it was in any of the others, I cannot tell which. I will give my hon. friend a list of the papers in which it was published.

Ottawa Parliament Buildings—improvements, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to make provision for general improvements to the interior of the parliament buildings and the library. I can tell what was done last year : Tiling the library, $4,025 ; partitions, $1,450 ; ventilation, $800 ; plumbing, $453 ; furniture, $653 ; painting and gilding tower and roof, $600.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will that have to be done every year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Practically the same amount is expended every year.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it spent simply because the money is voted every year or simply because it is necessary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is actually necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. It seems strange that the gilding and painting in the library that the hon. gentleman has mentioned have to be done every year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, this is to the interior of the building and the library.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do the interior of the building and the library require to be painted every year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. but there are painting, gilding and other improvements necessary to keep the buildings in repair.

Mr. SPROULE. What is proposed to be done with regard to providing more suitable accommodation for the library than we have at present? The library is so crowded both in the basement and on the general floor that it is very inconvenient both to the members and to those engaged in it. In fact, I find it very difficult to get much satisfaction in the library because three times out of four, you cannot get anything you want. There is a general complaint that everything is bundled together and there seems to be no possibility of any system or order being evolved out of it, so that one can go and get anything he wants. There is a number of people in the library, but if you send in a hurry or go in yourself you cannot get what you want sometimes in three or four days and sometimes cannot get it at all. For years it has been apparent that there was urgent need for increased accommodation and the government state year after year that they intend to take it up, but we have not yet any distinct information from them as to what is contemplated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad that my hon. friend has mentioned this question which certainly is one of a good deal of importance, owing to the very crowded condition of the library. The matter was mentioned last year and certain suggestions were made to me. One was that an additional story should be put on to cover a portion of the building that is now occupied by the reading room and that we should also extend the library so as to take in the room which is occupied by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), and also the members' smoking room. In that way additional accommodation might be given. Another idea is to erect an additional wing to the eastward in connection with the Senate part of the building. The question of the relative expense of the two modes of affording accommodation has been talked of. Another idea which has been suggested is to erect another building towards the edge of the cliff which would be used as a stack room and have a tunnel connecting the present library with that building. All these are under consideration, and it is expected that the Speaker of the Senate and the other members of the Library Committee will very soon have a meeting at which the chief architect and myself shall be present to go quite fully into the whole matter. I have an idea myself, which is entirely my personal idea, that it is worthy of consideration whether we should not carry out a wing, say, from the western side of the building for the purpose of affording a new chamber for the members of the House where there would be perfect ventilation on each side and which would be open to the pure air of heaven and then utilize this chamber for purposes in connection with the library and reading room. I have that idea; I do not know whether it is worthy of consideration or not, but I do not like the idea of having a couple of hundred people who are constantly in attendance in this chamber in addition to the spectators in the galleries, shut off from direct ventilation and from the open, free air. I do not know whether it is worthy of seriously considering or not.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope you will develop it.

Mr. LANCASTER. That would be a much better arrangement than we have now.

Mr. BLAIN. I never could understand why files of newspapers ten or twelve years old, are kept piled up in the library from year to year. Why could they not be put in some room? They are not wanted very often and they are taking up the best space in that building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is for the Library Committee to decide.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I take it that I am correct in saying that nothing has been done up to the present except talk. This talk has been going on for years. It seems to me that it is time that somebody got busy, and did a little more than talk. The process of evolution has been so slow that I think we will all be dead before there is a new library if we do not do more than has been done lately.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no control over the Library Committee, but I certainly do think that they ought to have these files of old papers removed. I do not see any necessity for them. I quite agree with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) that there is no reason why they should be kept there taking up room in the library. I do not know whether they are kept there to emphasize the necessity of additional accommodation or not—I do not suggest that—but that is the effect of it because everybody feels upon going in there that something ought to be done. I think the first thing that ought to be done is for the Library Committee to order these files of old newspapers to be removed because there is no need of keeping them there.

Ottawa parliament buildings, driveway pavement, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have put down pavement on the driveways all around the parliament grounds.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not an enormous price? It must have been paved with silver dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BRADBURY. What was the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the 1st April, 1910, to 30th November, 1910, we paid to the Ottawa Construction Company $5,000, to T. S. Kirby for broken stone, $2,439.03, for stone, sand and cement $3,436, and for labour $5,904.03. The appropriation was $21,000 and that left an unexpended balance of $4,220.81 on the 30th November.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is about $17,000. How many yards, or miles, of surface did that cover?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was applied in laying pavements around the east and west blocks, square facing on Wellington street, and covering the roadway in front of the House of Commons. There were 8,000 superficial yards of pavement altogether. It is a very nice pavement.

Mr. LANCASTER. It ought to be a very nice pavement at the price of $2 a yard. Does the hon. gentleman not seriously think this is an exorbitant price to pay for putting a roadway in condition? If the hon. gentleman would take that before any ordinary road builders in any province he would have difficulty in explaining such an expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They had to go down to a considerable depth to make a permanent and reasonably good pavement.

Mr. LANCASTER. How deep did they dig?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was about eight inches of solid concrete put down and it was covered over with asphalt.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has the hon. gentleman ever compared this with any work done by municipalities or other institutions that are constructing these roads in every province? I think that is a most extravagant price to pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was done by day work under a competent foreman.

Mr. LANCASTER. The different counties of Ontario do similar work to this, and I do not believe they pay any such prices. Has inquiry been made to ascertain what prices are paid for similar work by other public bodies?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About five years ago we invited tenders for the work on Wellington street, and it cost us $2.49 per yard.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it the same class of work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About the same. There is a great variation in the character of this work, and I understand it runs from $1.80 in some localities up to $2.50. When you come to a permanent pavement for a driveway, which is on a slope, and you have to put eight inches of solid concrete I do not think the cost is too great.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was this done by day work instead of by contract, as formerly?

Mr. LANCASTER. Who was the foreman?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Baxter, an employee of the department, and an experienced man.

Mr. BLAIN. I should think it would be a great relief to the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. McGiverin) if this were done by contract, because it must be a great deal of trouble to him to supply the workmen for day labour. I wonder if it was the influence of the hon. member (Mr. McGiverin) who caused the minister to change the system from contract to day labour. I should think that the city of Ottawa would be a dangerous place to experiment in doing work for day labour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work was done by the permanent staff, with the addition of a few extra men. We had a competent foreman, and I believe the work was done as economically as possible, and it is well done.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this not what is commonly known as tar macadam?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; it is an asphalt composition.

Mr. BLAIN. There is not very heavy traffic around these grounds, and I should think it would not be necessary to do the work as it has been done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a great deal of driving, and I suppose the chief architect thought it was better to make a good job of it at once.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

LACHINE, JACQUES CARTIER AND MAISONNEUVE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 44) respecting the Lachine, Jacques Cartier and Maisonneuve Railway.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 4,

Mr. RIVET. I have an amendment to offer to section 4 of the Bill. The amendment is not important, and I understand the committee have power to accept it, waiving the rule. The effect of the amendment is to give the company power to connect its line with the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway. The amendment provides:

Subject to the approval of the Commission the company may connect its line of railway with the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. SPROULE. We have usually followed the course in the Railway Committee of giving the company power to amalgamate with such lines as are set out in the Bill. This was not done in this case, and, therefore, following the usual custom, it should not be done in the House. It is an important amendment and no notice has been given.

Mr. RIVET. If there is an objection, of course I shall have to give notice of the amendment, and will ask the committee to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to be informed of the route of this railway. Section 1 declares that a railway authorized by the legislature of Quebec, which would therefore be regarded as provincial in its character, shall now be declared a railway for the general advantage of Canada. Personally, I am opposed to putting in that declaration unless there is some evidence before the committee that the road is of rather a national character and not simply local.

Mr. SPROULE. In the committee I objected to the principle of taking over these provincial lines and bringing them under federal jurisdiction without some strong reason, because there are often provisions in the provincial Bill that we destroy by making the railway a federal line, thus bringing it under another authority and jurisdiction. We had the same thing last year in connection with Ontario railways. By taking them under our jurisdiction we removed them from the control of the Railway Commission of Ontario. That occurred in connection with telegraph and telephone lines. Then there was the other objection which the Minister of Public Works has raised. We have of late years made it a rule to compel the party who desired to have a provincial railway declared to be for the general advantage of Canada to give some specific and justifiable ground for making the declaration which transfers the road from the control of the one to the other. But in this case even the local Act was not looked up. The discussion was hurried through and little time was given to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was not present when the Bill was before the committee. We generally discuss those features to which my hon. friend refers pretty thoroughly, but he was present and says they were not thoroughly discussed. I plead guilty to being quite partial to putting all the railways possible under Dominion jurisdiction, on account of the control we thus get over the traffic, which is conceded to be very complete under our Board of Railway Commissioners. The point has been raised during the past year, in fact a case is now in progress, in which it is contended that even where a provincial line connects with a Dominion line the Dominion Railway Commission has no power to even regulate the through rates on that part of the line which has a provincial charter. This makes it all the more necessary, even to control through rates, that we should have jurisdiction. If my hon. friend will give notice that he is going to move this amendment and let that stand until the next meeting of the committee, the promoter will be here.

Mr. NESBITT. There was a discussion about that in the committee and the provincial statute was turned up to see where it differed and I understand an amendment was added in sections 3 and 4.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was under the impression that instructions were given to have the names of those other railways with which this one is connected inserted in the Bill. The committee will remember that Mr. Wainwright came before the Railway Committee, and said that they were extremely anxious the Bill should go through in order to give them a connecting link between the Grand Trunk railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific. So urgent was the demand that there was no opposition, and his request was granted.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that was in connection with another Bill entirely.

Progress reported.

SECURITY TRUSTS CORPORATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. NESBITT. This Bill was considered by the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no knowledge of the Bill, but if it has received the consideration of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I shall not object. If there be any objection, I shall be glad to look into it. No doubt the committee gave it very careful consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. The consideration of the committee was largely along the same lines as that of a Bill we passed the year before last, about which there was a good deal of controversy. I think it was the Bill of the Prudential Loan and Trust Company. There is one amendment that, in my opinion, should be made that does not appear in the Bill. It should be a part of all Bills to incorporate trust or loan companies, insurance companies—though it does not apply so much to these—as banking companies. It should be provided that whenever such a company becomes possessed of money or valuable consideration which does not belong to the company, but for which there are no claimants and no heirs, that property should be transferred to the state. At present these companies treat such moneys practically as their own. It was urged by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) that this provision should be in a general Bill. I think it would be natural to have it in a general Bill, but, in the meantime, I think we should make it a part of every special Bill of this kind. Of course, I am not going to try to stop the Bill for the purpose of making this amendment, but I draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the matter. No individual is allowed to do what these corporations do—appropriate money which does not belong to them because they happen to become possessed of it and no heir or claimant is found. If the property were real estate, it would pass, under the law of escheat, to the province.

Mr. FIELDING. Does not that apply to personal property?

Mr. SPROULE. In connection with real estate the province of Ontario has asserted its claim in some such cases. And, in the case of personal property held by individuals, it passes to the state, but I am not aware of instances in which this rule was applied to these companies.

Mr. FIELDING. I find that the law clerk has made a memorandum that one of these sections is not so carefully drawn as it should be. I suggest that we allow this Bill to stand, and the points raised can be inquired into before it comes up for consideration again.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance to subsection 3 of section 6 which reads:

> 3. The company may, by by-law, provide that a resolution in writing signed by all the directors shall be valid as if it had been passed at a meeting of the directors.

That practically does away with the holding of directors' meetings and I do not think this sort of thing should be encouraged. The business is supposed to be directed by the joint action of directors, after consultation. But, if the matter be left in this shape, each director practically becomes a rubber stamp for the manager. And we find that that is the origin of trouble in many of these cases. I think that such a provision should not be in any of these Bills.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that similar provision is to be found in other Bills. I cannot recall the particular case, but I recollect the question being before the committee, and the argument was put forward that, in matters of no very great concern, it was found inconvenient to get the Board of Directors together, and the convenient way was to send a memorandum round and have each director sign the resolution. And I have known that to be done in graver bodies in cases of emergency. Of course, it might be difficult to draw the line between matters requiring conference and matters more of routine requiring merely the formal approval of the board. I will bear in mind the suggestion, which is in the direction of safety and prudence, and will call the attention of the law officers who advise us in such matters to the observations of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart).

Mr. SPROULE. I drew attention to this matter in the committee, and thought that the provision had been struck out. I thought and still think, that the provision is a bad one. The reason urged in its favour is the difficulty of getting the board together. But this is a trust company belonging to one province so that its directors are not scattered so far that they could not be got together for the companies business. I have seen the working of this law in one or two instances where, had it not been checked in proper time, it would have been likely to do great harm. When it is proposed that the board should take certain action, a paper is prepared and sent to each director with all the reasons that can be advanced why the resolution should be signed at once and sent on. There is usually some plea of urgency and some intimation of pending loss if the action proposed be not taken. The memorandum does not bring out all the facts that would be brought out in a discussion at a board meeting. But the individual director dislikes to burk or check the proposed action, and so, instead of directing, as a director is supposed to do, he signs and sends the resolution on. The effect is to give power into the hands of a small executive. I think it is a bad provision, and should not be allowed in these Bills.

Mr. HENDERSON. The objections to this provision were not overlooked in the committee. The section was fully considered before being adopted. We thought there was a sufficient safeguard in the fact that all the directors—not a majority only —have to sign in these cases. If the same question were brought before the board, it might be brought before a bare quorum a majority of whom would carry. We thought that the proviso that every director's name should be signed would be an equal safeguard. We came to the conclusion that we would allow the clause to go through, because it had gone through if I am not mistaken, in the case of the Prudential, a Bill that as I understood the matter, had received very careful consideration in the committee and had been made something of a model Bill. But having adopted that Bill only a year or two ago, it was thought well to allow this clause to go through.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman's arguments are neither strong nor sound. I do not think you will analyse any question that is presented before a board as well by sending it to one individual with all the arguments on one side and more on the other, no board is doing its duty which does this. In the first case you are more likely to make the directors figure-heads than intelligent and useful officials. Take the Farmers' Bank, how easy it would have been to pass something around like that. The manager, who seemed to dominate everything, could get it signed.

Mr. NESBITT. How much good would it do to have a meeting?

Mr. SPROULE. That a certain number of men there did not attend to their duties was not on account of the fact that they did not meet but because they didn't do their duty when they did meet. But if they desired to pass around something, would it not be more easy to do it if there had been only a few sharp men on the board? I know one party that had to make two trips to New York to safeguard the interest of himself and friends on account of a provision such as that, made foolishly or maliciously by the manager and one or two of the members of the board who were acting in concert with him, and who stood to benefit if it was carried through. The result was that he was endangering the financial interests of all the members of that board and of that company. If it had not been burked they would have suffered a serious loss.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not sure but that I may say that the hon. gentleman's arguments are neither strong nor sound, as he characterized mine. Now, I still submit that with a board of four, which you could have with this company, because that would be a majority of the seven, the smallest number of directors, you might have on that board a very strong minded man who was sufficiently persuasive to induce the other members of the board to come to his opinion. If you sent the motion around to the various directors, and let them sit down in their quiet and reflective moments, and consider the whole question for themselves, I am not sure but that you would get a much better judgment than you could where you had one strong minded man dominating the rest. I still hold that the opinion expressed by the committee was wise and sound.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. NESBITT. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) expresses my views completely.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the committee rises, I want to ask an explanation of section 15. There is a section in this Bill which provides that this company may do business throughout Canada, but subject to the laws of the province, and if there is any conflict, the laws of the province shall prevail. Now, I do not think we are doing our duty in this parliament to incorporate a company and then say that its powers shall not be exercised if they happen to conflict with the law of any province. That is not good legislation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that is a good clause. You would not want to enact anything in one province that was in conflict with the laws of that province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But let not the province enact a provincial law which is in conflict with a Dominion statute.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Act respecting the Observance of the Lord's Day is based upon that principle exactly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think perhaps that was a law of an exceptional character. But here we are claiming jurisdiction to incorporate this company for Dominion purposes, with power to do business throughout Canada, and yet the effect of this would be that in one province they could do certain things, and in another province they would not have the same power ; their power might be different in each of the provinces of Canada. If we have authority to incorporate this company with power to do business throughout Canada, then we should not make it subject to the laws of each particular province in which it might happen to be carrying on business.

Mr. SPROULE. What would happen if, when your Bill became law, a province should make a law of their own saying that you should not do business in that province unless you complied with certain provisions of their law?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should say that their law was void unless there was a question of taxation. They might impose a tax on the company, as they do. But any statute which attempted to interfere with the larger rights which this parliament gave to a company, would, I think, be ultra vires of the provincial legislature. But here we assume to pass an Act, and then we say that it may be picked to pieces in any province.

Mr. SPROULE. We have done the same thing to-day with an insurance company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been a case under consideration as to the powers of a provincial legislature to incorporate a company to do business throughout Canada. But here there is no question of our authority to incorporate this company. But we are saying that although we give you such rights, these rights must be exercised subject to any law of any province, and if there is any conflict with that, the provincial law shall prevail.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understand there is a stated case being sent to the Privy Council to determine the respective rights of a province and the Dominion in case of conflict. There may be concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. FIELDING. That the Bill might involve possible conflict between the province and the Dominion is something that I have not had before me. It strikes me, as it is read by the Minister of Public Works, that the earlier part of the clause as to doing business subject to the laws of the province, might mean that inasmuch as trustee laws are under the jurisdiction of a province as dealing with property and civil rights, in the exercise of their functions as a trust corporation they have to bear in mind that trusts are regulated by the province and not by the Dominion. The law of trusteeship is a provincial law, and I think the intention must be that they should carry out the provincial law. They would become a corporate company for trustee business, but they would have to do their business subject to the law of the province as respects trusteeships. I think that is what it is intended to mean. The latter part of the clause respecting possible conflict, is more serious.

Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Empire Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Niagara, Welland and Lake Erie Railway Company. —Mr. German.

Bill (No. 100) respecting the Orford Mountain Railway Company.—Mr. Hunt.

SUPPLY.

The order for private Bills being exhausted, House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just before six o'clock we had considered the amount for the driveway pavement—$20,000. I rather think the discussion was concluded. If no other hon. gentleman has anything to say it might be carried.

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is that the minister said that $17,000 had been expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the 30th November, $16,779.19.

Mr. CROTHERS. What was the number of yards?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 8,000.

Mr. CROTHERS. There is $3,000 or $4,000 to be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would lapse on the 31st March.

Mr. CROTHERS. I also understood the minister to say that a number of men in the permanent employment of the government were utilized in making this pavement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS. I did not understand if their salary was included in this $16,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, although they are permanently employed we pay them out of the vote for each particular work.

Mr. CROTHERS. That would be the total expenditure including the salary of the men employed on the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS. If the concrete is eight inches thick, and well laid I do not think the price is an exorbitant one. I have had some experience in laying pavements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is exceedingly well laid. I noticed it before the snow came and I was much pleased with it.

Peterborough post office building, addition to, $9,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision towards the erection of a one story brick adjunct on a stone basement 36 feet frontage by 50 feet, the full depth of the building, extending the frontage to North lane. This is an addition to the ground floor of the building and to the working space of the post office. There has been some little money expended. The total probable cost will reach $12,999.70. The whole amount is a revote.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is $1,000 of this not a revote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have expended up to the 31st of December $386.70 and we assume that by the 31st of March we will have expended about $1,000.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is this an addition to the present post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is it the intention to proceed at once with the construction of this addition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is under contract now.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I understand that theis building is only one story?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). It would seem to any one looking at that post office that it is altogether too small for a city the size of Peterborough. Now that you are making an addition to it you should at least make a two story building of it. I think you will be cramped for room if you do not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All they are asking for is the enlargement of what is called the working part of the office, and the Post Office Department is satisfied.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The minister should deal as generously with Peterborough as he does with other places in the matter of public buildings. Peterborough is an important city, one of the most important in the province of Ontario, and I surely think the minister ought to build a post office that would do credit to the place as well as accommodate the public. Peterborough is not like some of the villages of 700 or 800 inhabitants where you erect a $30,000 building. It is a rapidly growing city, and should have more generous treatment from the government.

Mr. CROTHERS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is already a very good post office there with which the people and the Post Office Department are well satisfied. We are now building an addition which will give ample accommodation for some years to come. I trust my hon. friend will not urge me unnecessarily to expend public money on this building. Of course if you were to believe hon. gentlemen opposite one would suppose that I would be very glad to have an opportunity of expending money.

Mr. LANCASTER. In some places.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not want to be unduly pressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sexsmith) because I think very much of him. There is also a public building in Peterborough for a customs house and it really is not necessary to expend any more money on this post office than we now propose.

Mr. SEXSMITH. As the minister is going about the job it would be cheaper for him now to make the building a two story one than to do it later. The building would have a much better appearance if he did.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be no advantage at present, and I would not wish to put up a two story building just for appearance sake.

Mr. LANCASTER. You could put another story on that building for the $1,600 you spent on a clock where it was not necessary.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Does the addition front on a street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it extends through to the north lane.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the government own the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the building is on our own land.

Mr. SEXSMITH. If it is necessary to increase this item to make a complete job of improving the post office in Peterborough so as to accommodate the people for some years to come, I would urge on the minister that now is the time to do it. I think the people of Peterborough should be generously dealt with.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Peterborough has an excellent post office building now.

Mr. SEXSMITH. It is quite a small building for such an important city as that. Does the minister intend to make changes in the interior of the post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we propose putting up additional fittings.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of a roof is there to be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A flat roof covered with gravel and felt.

Port Perry public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to erect a public building at Port Perry in the county of Ontario, for post office purposes, &c.

Mr. BLAIN. North Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, South Ontario. Out of last year's appropriation of $5,000 we have paid $1,800 for the site, and we assume that by the 31st of March we will have expended $1,195 more, making $3,200, leaving $1,800 as a revote and we ask for $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The population of Port Perry nine years ago was very close to 1,500. The postal revenue last year was $3,223, money orders issued $15,200, money orders paid $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom did you purchase the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Miss Elizabeth Sinclair for $1,800. The property consisted of two lots, one of them being 40 feet 6 inches by 89 feet. Port Perry is a thriving town, there are 30 stores, 2 banks, a sawmill, a flour mill, a machinery shop, &c.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I have been observing the different towns in which post offices are to be built and am convinced that one town has been forgotten by the Minister of Public Works, that is the town of Meaford. It has a larger population and a greater revenue than any of the towns with which we have been dealing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it in my hon. friend's constituency ?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Yes. I find that the population and postal revenue of the towns in which buildings are to be erected are as follows:

Town.	Postal Revenue.	Population.	Cost of Building.
Elora	3,500	1,200	14,000
Fergus	4,300	1,296	14,000
Listowel	6,000	2,693	18,000
Mitchell	4,097	1,945	18,000
Mount Forest	4,924	2,019	18,000
Port Perry	3,223	1,500	15,000
Meaford	6,300

I have not the exact population of Meaford, but it is nearly 4,000. If all of these other places are entitled to postal buildings, I cannot see how, in the light of the minister's announcement, that it is the postal revenue, the number of industries and the population that determines the erection of buildings, Meaford is not more entitled to a building than these other towns.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have they not good accommodation there now ?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No, just a small building, the rental of which is three hundred and some odd dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. $300 ought to rent a very good building in a town of that size. Where the postal revenue is larger a greater allowance is given to the postmaster and he can rent better accommodation. As an illustration, my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Wilcox), referred to the necessity of better accommodation at Walkerville. He corrected his statement to-day and I also got a letter from a gentleman in Walkerville who said the hon. gentleman's statements were entirely without foundation because there was very excellent accommodation at Walkerville; the postmaster had rented very suitable premises and there was not that urgent need for a building that the hon. gentleman sought to make the House believe there was. So it might be in Meaford; with a rental of $300 there might be quite good accommodation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. To follow that to its logical conclusion, if the minister would get better premises in all these towns he would get better postal revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, if we had better postal revenue we could have better premises.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That is why I want better premises, because we have a greater postal revenue than any of the towns the minister has mentioned, and a customs revenue as well. I am prepared to say there is twice as much revenue, postal and customs, as in any of the towns the hon. gentleman has mentioned. I really do think the town of Meaford is entitled to a public building. We do not want anything elaborate, but just need a comfortable, respectable building in which to do public business. I ask the minister for this in all earnestness. I am not pleading for anything, but I want to stand up for my rights. I lay claim before the minister on these grounds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Meaford is an important place, a place which, I am glad to know, is doing considerable business. I had the pleasure of visiting Meaford last summer. It is to be borne in mind that the Department of Public Works is spending a very considerable amount of money for the improvement of the harbour of Meaford. That makes a considerable difference.

Some towns which are inland, where they have no public moneys expended, may have a stronger claim for the immediate construction of public buildings to meet public necessities than towns where a large amount is being expended for the improvement of the harbour and so for the development of business. My hon. friend knows that Meaford is a town of something over 2,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Nearer 4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know it is a very good and thriving town. I had not the opportunity of going all over the town. But I think we are spending money to a very good public advantage in Meaford in improving the harbour. My hon. friend's representation as to the need of public buildings will, I can assure him, have my careful consideration. If I remember rightly, this is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am obliged to the minister for his consideration. I would point out that in the case of Owen Sound which is also a lively town of about 14,000 the same arguments for its not receiving a public building might have been advanced, but the government gave a public building costing $10,000. If it was proper to do it in Owen Sound, where we receive considerable harbour assistance, the same thing might apply to Meaford.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Both towns are in the same constituency ?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That should not make a difference, every town should stand on its own merits.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not the hon. gentleman see that having just erected a very handsome and expensive public building in Owen Sound in the same constituency as Meaford and that as we are spending a good deal of money in the harbour at Meaford we might well consider the claims of other places where no public money is being expended and where there is need of public buildings, especially where there is no public building at present in the constituency. However I shall be very glad to give consideration to the claim.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. minister intends to discuss it from that point of view, that will lead to considerable difficulty, for the reason that he has been expending a very large amount of money in South Ontario at different places.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it should happen in the not far distant future that I should put in an amount for Meaford, will the hon. gentleman object to it?

Mr. BLAIN. So long as the minister spends the money wisely, every item of expenditure will receive fair consideration from this side. But the difficulty is we do not know what is his policy, and he does not seem to know it himself. Therefore, we are not able to apply a fair test to his expenditures.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose we may take it for granted that the hon. gentleman would approve of expenditure upon buildings in towns of a reasonable size and which are in need of public buildings, always providing, as is actually the case, that the money is wisely expended?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Perhaps if the minister would answer a question of mine, it might be of some assistance to the electors before the next election. Would it make any difference in his own attitude towards the erection of a public building in Meaford, if the electors there should see fit at the next election to return a supporter of the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have always been very careful not to make any promises with regard to the erection of public buildings.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that the minister is very anxious to establish post offices in small villages which are in the party fold. For instance, he puts up a $25,000 building in a village which has but a population of 700. In Napierville, a village with 900 population, he puts up a $15,000 post office. But Meaford, with a population of 4,000, has no attention given it. Port Perry, with a small population, gets a $15,000 building, whereas Milton, with 1,800 people, with no other public building in that district, and which is an inland town and a shire town, has no attention paid to it whatever. Neither has Parry Sound, with 4,000 people, or Uxbridge, with 2,000 people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the trouble with Uxbridge?

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL. It has a Tory representative.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is an amount in the estimates for Uxbridge.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The trouble is you will not spend it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we will.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Come to western Ontario—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had a very delightful trip through there last summer.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, but you only went through a certain section represented by members of your own party, and did not go through the other ridings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was at Meaford, Owen Sound, Goderich and Windsor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is only a very small portion of western Ontario. The minister knows well that his policy is merely to grant post offices to constituencies on his own side, which return supporters to this government.

Mr. TOLMIE. What about Port Stanley?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No doubt the minister made the promise before the last election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. TOLMIE. What about Chesley?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I merely rose to enter my protest against the manner in which public moneys are being expended on these buildings.

Mr. SINCLAIR. On looking over the list of public buildings, I am greatly surprised to find hon. gentlemen making the statement that all the money is spent in Liberal constituencies. Such is not the case in many instances. For example take the province of Nova Scotia where there are eight items for public buildings The first is Halifax citadel, new quarters for single men. Then Halifax Dominion building—post office. Then Halifax quarantine station, and again Halifax Dominion buildings. These are all in the constituency represented by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When were these buildings started, and were they not promised previous to the last election?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am not able to say when they were started.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What is your point?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am talking now about the expenditure in my province. Then we come to the item of the Lunenburg public building, which county is represented by a Liberal. Then to Parrsboro', which is in the county of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes).

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the money being spent on this, or is it simply in the estimates?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How long has it been in the estimates?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the money being spent or is it simply remaining in the estimates to be spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The moneys are ready to be spent when required.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that we are voting the money for the purpose of spending it.

Mr. BLAIN. Voting it for political purposes.

Mr. SINCLAIR. In the province of Nova Scotia there are five items of expenditure in constituencies represented by Conservatives, as I have shown, and only three in counties represented by supporters of the government. I am not so well acquainted with Ontario, but look at the items in that province for a moment. The very first is in the town of Athens, which, I understand, is in the constituency of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It was not in the estimates of 1908.

Mr. BLAIN. Take the next one.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There is a vote for Chesley which is a town in a Conservative constituency.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That was put in the estimates immediately before the last election for party purposes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I may tell you also that there has not been a dollar spent there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the site is bought and the contract is about ready.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There has not been a cent spent on the building, as the minister knows.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). And I venture the opinion that there will not be a dollar spent there until the eve of the next election.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Take Gananoque in the constituency of my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When was that put in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is an irrelevant question.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The dates of these items are not so important as the fact that we find many of them in Conservative constituencies. Passing on down, we have four considerable items in the constituency of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. MEIGHEN. Were they put in?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that some of these are new items. There is another item for Sudbury, in the constituency of Nipissing. I am just blundering through these Ontario towns, because I am not so well acquainted with the geography as I would like to be. The next that I notice is Toronto—no less than four items one of them for $100,000 which is more than is voted for the whole province of Nova Scotia in which we have twelve Liberal members. Then we come to Uxbridge, in the constituency of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe).

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the date?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That vote was promised on the eve of an election. Not a dollar of it has been spent, and I prophesy that not a dollar will be spent until the eve of the next election.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is very appropriate and honourable that the promise should be carried out. Now, I do not know how many votes there are in Quebec and other provinces. But there is a considerable list. My criticism of the present administration is that it is too liberal to hon. gentlemen opposite. Under the old administration, for fourteen years the county of Guysborough which I have the honour to represent, did not appear in the estimates of the Dominion at all.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it doing now?

Mr. SINCLAIR. For fourteen years out of eighteen under that administration, the county did not appear in the estimates. For four years it was represented by a Conservative, and during that period some small votes were given. I question if you will find a record like that under the present administration in any county in Canada. The Minister of Public Works in the old administration came down to the capital of my constituency and made the bald statement that if we wanted to get public works we must vote for the Conservative party. That is the doctrine hon. gentlemen opposite have been taught and that they practised when in power. I think that they are rather surprised to find us voting so many public buildings in constituencies represented on their side of the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I needed anything to confirm the statement I made, the remarks of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) would furnish it. He has not shown a single case of a public building in any Ontario constituency represented by a member of the opposition which was not promised on the eve of the last election. He says that the government are carrying out their promises. But, why do they make these promises and then, year after year, vote this money but never spend a dollar of it? What right has the government to monopolize the expenditure of public money for constituencies represented on their side of the House, and to make promises to constituencies represented on this side in the hope of changing their representation. He tells us of statements made in years gone by in his own county. But his own followers from Nova Scotia, speaking at Lethbridge, held out to the people there a definite statement that, unless the present government had a representative from the district, the people need not expect a post office building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) will withdraw that statement. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), when a similar statement was made on a previous occasion, rose in his place and denied that he had made any such statement. The hon member (Mr. Armstrong) is bound to accept that denial, and I have no doubt he will accept it cheerfully.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I presume I shall be forced to accept the statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) made. But the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) remembers that the Prime Minister, on that very occasion, distinctly gave the people to understand that he would grant them a post office, and repudiated the position taken by the hon. member for Pictou. Be that as it may, the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) has simply emphasized the position I took in this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the Prime Minister was at Lethbridge, his attention was most emphatically called by the people to the urgent need of a public building. Lethbridge is a place of about 14,000 and is increasing at the rate of from fifty to one hundred per cent a year. The post office accommodation there was utterly inadequate. The matter had been under the consideration of the government for some months, and we had made up our minds to erect a public building. What was wrong in the Prime Minister, at a time when no election was pending, and every reason to suppose that the appropriation would be made long before an election, telling the people that he was impressed with the necessity of a post office, and would ask the Minister of Public Works to provide for one? That is all he did.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not quite all. At the same meeting, when the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said whatever he did say, the Prime Minister corrected him, and put the—

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is denied.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have said it in the presence of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and he did not deny it, and will not dare to deny it, and I do not propose to take a denial at second-hand from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley).

Mr. PUGSLEY. The member for Pictou denied it.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the Prime Minister has never denied it. He corrected the matter going to the public press, and said that if they got only what they deserved they would not get a public building, but he would be more generous, and deal with them better than they deserved.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the Prime Minister took the trouble to deny every false statement made with regard to himself he would be kept busy. I do not think the matter has been seriously brought to his attention. If the hon. gentleman would draw it to his attention I am sure the Prime Minister would feel it of sufficient importance to refer to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Of course, we are bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). But a reference to the newspaper files will show that the newspapers of that city do not accept the denial, and neither do the people. As to the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) that this government was not influenced by the political complexion of the members for a constituency, it may appear merciless to make any reference to it, because his claim so completely fell down while he was speaking, and his absolute refusal to answer the questions put to him showed the weakness of his position. But if he goes through the whole Ontario list of public buildings he will not find an item for a new public building that has been inserted since the election of 1908 in any constituency represented by a member of the opposition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And the hon. gentleman will find no new items in any constituency represented by a Liberal.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I repeat what I said. Now let him go through the list, and he will find no less than eight items of new public buildings inserted since 1908, in constituencies represented by members supporting the government. Now does that teach any lesson to the hon. gentleman? If not, he must be obtuse politically. Now let us come to Nova Scotia. He says that in some building in Toronto, there is an appropriation greater than for the public buildings of Nova Scotia. I believe that appropriation is $100,000, and that the public buildings in Nova Scotia he refers to amount to about $90,000. But let him turn to rivers and harbours in Nova Scotia and he gets, not $90,000, but $847,000. And if he goes back to the supplementary estimates prior to the election of 1908, he gets appropriations of $448,000 in Nova Scotia for public buildings, or about eight for every constituency in the province, and all made in the month of July just on the eve of a general election. Now the principal of bribing constituencies could not be placed on a lower level than the Minister of Public Works has placed it, and he only adds to the general demoralization of politics by protesting that he is not following that principle. It would do less harm to the country if he frankly admitted that he was governed by the political complexion of the member of the constituency. I asked him a few moments ago whether he would say that if the people of the riding of North Grey, at the next election, returned a supporter of the government, his attitude would be at all altered with respect to a public building in Meaford, and he answered that he always avoided giving promises. Now will he assure this House that his attitude towards that constituency will not change if it sends to parliament a representative of a different complexion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman should not ask me for an assurance. I would hesitate very much to give him an assurance.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). There is an item in the estimates this year for the constituency of North Grey, there is also an item for the constituency of East Grey.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They were in before 1908.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). The member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), last week made a considerable comment on what North Wellington was getting. The constituency I represent has never had a dollar spent in it until this last year or two, and it was always represented by a Liberal. East Grey and North Grey have items, but South Grey has no item. I think the item for East Grey has been put in the estimates since the election of 1908. The minister would know if I am correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the estimates for the previous years here. I may say that I sometimes have a feeling that I am doing even more for constituencies represented by our friends opposite, than I ought to do; and a good deal of fault is found with me by some of our friends because they do not get the public buildings to which they think they are entitled and they blame me for erecting public buildings in constituencies represented by our opponents. Sometimes it makes it more difficult for me to give grants in constituencies represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, when I find them so lacking in appreciation. In an election which took place a short time ago down in Nova Scotia, one hon. member sitting on the other side of the House went there and claimed credit for every item of public expenditure which had been made in the county, he said he was entitled to credit for it——

An hon. MEMBER. Who was it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson). He claimed the entire credit for grants which had been made, grants to wharfs and other improvements. I have that upon authority so strong that I must give all credit to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When did that take place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Six or eight weeks ago. That hon. gentleman went upon the platform and denied to the government, denied to me, denied to our supporters any credit for these improvements, and claimed that he was entitled to the entire credit for them all. It is conduct such as this by our friends opposite that makes it a little harder for me sometimes to grant them all the improvements they ask for.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In the absence of the hon. member for Digby, I think I would be safe in denying that he made any such assertion, or claimed all the credit.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my information.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. As the hon. member for Digby is not here it seems to me that this is an assertion that the minister is not entitled to make.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will come to the Nova Scotia items for wharfs and the hon. member for Digby will have the fullest opportunity of speaking on the question.

Mr. BLAIN. We have just sent for him now.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Are all the expenditures which have been made in the riding since the hon. member for Digby was elected, proper expenditures?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, every one.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Were these expenditures asked for by the hon. member for Digby?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A number were asked for by our own friends as well.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. gentleman would be perfectly justified in asking for the expenditures which have been made in that riding?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then, what fault has the hon. minister to find with the hon. member for Digby?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell the hon gentleman. Instead of the hon. member for Digby getting up on the platform and saying that the Minister of Public Works has expended public money wisely and properly in his constituency and in the public interest, the hon. gentleman got up and told the people that the government was not entitled to the slightest credit. I see that the hon. member for Digby is now in his place and I will repeat the statement that I made. I was saying a short time ago that it made it a little more difficult than it would otherwise be because hon. gentlemen opposite are in the habit of going through their constituencies and claiming the sole credit for public expenditures made by the government, and I had in my mind more especially the hon. member for Digby, who, I was informed, went upon different platforms in the last local election in Digby, claimed for himself the entire credit of the expenditures which had been made by the government in the county of Digby and contended that the government and the friends of the government were not entitled to any credit at all but that he and he alone had succeeded in getting these moneys expended in the county. That was the statement I was making, and what I said in the absence of the hon. gentleman was that I did not think that that was a course that hon. members opposite ought to take. If the expenditure is wise the government ought to be given the credit for it.

Mr. CROCKET. I suppose it was public money that was expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Clearly public money that was expended. In my own judgment it is entirely a misconception on the part of an hon. member of the opposition to say, that because he makes a representation to the minister, the minister considers the representations along with the representations of others, and an amount is put in the estimates, he is entitled to claim all the credit of it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). If a constituency is represented by one of the minister's own political friends and public money is expended in that constituency, is the representative entitled to the credit, or is the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government is entitled to the credit of it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Not the representative?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The representative, as a supporter of the government, when he goes to the people, claims credit for the government and claims that the public ought to support the government. But the hon. gentleman in one breath stated: I am entitled to the credit for these expenditures, but the government is not entitled to any credit.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then the minister acknowledges that it is the proper principle for his candidates to go to a constituency and say: You should support the government because they have spent a certain amount of money in your constituency?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is fair to say that.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That is what I call bribery in the different constituencies.

Mr. JAMESON. Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) has referred to me personally in the House, it is only right that under the circumstances

I should make some remarks on the subject. With regard to these expenditures which are being made in Digby and with regard to the appropriations placed in the estimates for that purpose, the minister very well knows that I drew his attention on several occasions, personally and by correspondence, to the necessity of these works. I had the pleasure of several interviews with the minister and I also had considerable correspondence with him on the subject. I do not think that I ever asked for an expenditure that was not perfectly warranted by the facts and necessities of the case. I furthermore think there were many instances to which I might refer in which the minister did not comply with the requests that were made in that behalf. But the minister has gone further and has said that upon public platforms I have claimed the entire credit for these votes. The minister is labouring under a misconception. On the contrary, it was the gentlemen who were opposed to me and to the Conservative candidate in Digby who thus claimed the entire credit. It was my duty to myself, it was my duty to the constituency which I have the honour to represent, to, in so far as I could, rectify that misconception and counteract those influences. I did not begin it, nor did I begin the discussion with regard to these public works in Digby or the votes made therefor. I did not do so because I did not think it was a question which should enter into a local election, but when I noticed that gentlemen who were opposed to the Conservative candidate were going about the county of Digby and asserting that they and not I had made the representations upon the strength of which these votes were made and these public works were going to be undertaken, I felt it was my duty, to set the matter right. I also understand that these gentlemen were exhibiting letters from the Minister of Public Works himself, stating that it was upon their representations that these votes were placed in the estimates. I thereupon took the correspondence which I had had with the hon. minister, and I also took the different issues of 'Hansard' which referred to these matters when they were brought up in the House, and I read them, as I considered it was my duty to read them before the electors of Digby. It was not I who projected this question into the local election. I did not think it was altogether proper, I thought it was entirely out of place, but when the question was raised by gentlemen on the other side and when they sought to detract in every way possible from the efforts of myself as a Conservative sitting in this House and representing the county of Digby, I thought it was only right and proper to set the matter right. The minister seems if I gauge properly the state of mind in which he was when I entered the House, to have been a little irritated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. JAMESON. I am glad to know that ——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a bit.

Mr. JAMESON. Because I do not think the minister has any reason whatever to object to a statement of bald facts and facts, which are borne out by the records, on the part of any man who has the honour to represent a constituency in this parliament. The statement which I made upon every occasion was simply that these were the facts as disclosed by the records, that in so far as I was personally concerned I was perfectly satisfied that any gentleman who had assisted should have the credit to which he was entitled, but that I also, as the one who had brought these matters to the attention of the minister and the House, felt that I was entitled to credit, in so far as the records disclosed my efforts in that particular regard. I do not think that the minister, when he hears this explanation from me, will question the propriety of what I did. If this question, which came up on that occasion should arise again, I should do exactly the same thing under similar circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rather was given to understand that the hon. gentleman had denied credit to anybody else, but that he had claimed the whole credit for himself. Did the hon. gentleman give due credit to the Minister of Public Works for these useful public works that he was having done in the county?

Mr. JAMESON. The minister has stated what he understood to be a fact, namely, that I had denied credit to any person else, and he also has asked me whether or not I gave credit to the Minister of Public Works. I do not know that I said in so many words that the Minister of Public Works was entitled to any particular credit for this expenditure of public moneys in Digby, or for the votes made for that purpose, but I certainly read the correspondence between the minister and myself, my own letters to the minister and the minister's reply to me. I also quoted from 'Hansard,' in which my statements were reported, and the statements of the minister in reply, and I allowed the electors of the county of Digby and others present to draw their own conclusions. I merely did that because it had been put up to me that I had done nothing whatever in the way of assisting to get these works, or urging their necessity on the minister. I did not begin it; it was begun by my political opponents, and I only displayed the records in self-defence, so that the people might understand how matters really stood.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman from Wellington (Mr. Martin) said there had been a considerable expenditure of public money in East Grey, and he instanced the expenditure of $1,000 in Thornbury to repair a wharf. I would remind him that that is the only appropriation in these estimates for East Grey. I think the work is needed; I am not complaining about it, and even though the amount is small, the people will be grateful for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No one suggests the hon. gentleman would complain of an expenditure there.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but in the county of Wellington no less than four of these public buildings have been erected or are under way in small villages, some of them within two or three miles of each other when there are large counties in which there is no expenditure on public buildings at all. It would seem to me that is due to the fact that the county of Wellington is represented in this House by three Reformers and that the other counties happen to be represented by Conservatives. I think the comparison I make is a fair one. Further, I do not think that the amount proposed to be expended in East Grey, in Thornbury, $1,000, is likely to influence the electors one way or the other.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I was not finding fault with the expenditure of public money in East Grey or in Wellington, but I cited it to show that the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite that money was being promised to influence voters on the eve of an election, was not correct. I do not think any man could imagine that the money expended in Thornbury could carry the election against the hon. member for East Grey, and I do not think that item was in the estimates until after the election of 1908.

Mr. PERLEY. It strikes me very forcibly that the Minister of Public Works has shown us very clearly to-night what his idea is in trying to administer this department. I was very much astonished at some of the remarks he made, not because we did not know that was the way he looked at things, but because we did not expect him to acknowledge it. He sets to work and he asks the hon. member for Digby if he gave the Minister of Public Works credit for making improvements in the county of Digby, and he also gets up in this House and states that he thinks the government of the country ought to have the credit for these improvements in that constituency. Surely the Minister of Public Works knows that the people of this country think that he is spending their money and not the Grit money of this country. And when the minister erects public buildings in any constituency he is supposed to erect them on some principle and in the public interest, but to-night he has acknowledged to us right here that he is using the machinery of the Public Works Department practically for the purpose of trying to bribe the various constituencies in this country. We have felt all along that that is the principle on which he decides where he will carry on public works in this country. We see, before the elections, hundreds of appropriations brought down for public works that are left over from year to year, and we find such items in the appropriations for Ontario, which are now before us. We have items here revoted every year since 1908, which were put in by the government as the minister himself says, in order that the government might have credit for building the works in these constituencies, and so that the government might be able to get the people to vote for their candidates. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is an extraordinary thing for a minister of the Crown in this country to get up and claim that he and the government should have credit for building public works in any constituency, and should appeal to the voters of the country to vote for his party because he has done so. I would like to ask you, Mr. Chairman, if any one could possibly make a balder statement as to the attempt to bribe the constituencies of this country by means of public works erected by the expenditure of the money belonging to all the people of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is all very well for my hon. friend to talk that way. Suppose there is a public work that he thinks is needed in a constituency and the government does not build it, surely he would blame the government, and on the other hand surely it is not an unreasonable recognition of what the government does, if in any constituency it has met the public requirements so as to encourage trade by the improvement of harbours or the building of wharfs; surely it is not unreasonable to suppose that a member of the opposition going on the public platform who claims credit for getting that work done, should say: So far as this constituency is concerned I recognize that the government has met the reasonable demands of the public and has done in this respect what ought to be done for the advancement of the interests of the people, and in meeting their just and reasonable demands. What I object to is that a member of the opposition should claim credit to himself when certain things are done, while at the same time he condemns the government for things that do not happen to be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who did that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had that story and we do not want it over again.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was denied.

Mr. PERLEY. I object to the principle laid down by the Minister of Public Works in this regard. If the Minister of Public Works would adopt some principle in expending the money under his control with regard to distributing it throughout the country in places most needing it, according to their size and the revenues they contribute, irrespective of who represents these constituencies, there would be no objection. If the minister should go to the people after the election and say: I have administered my department fairly and honestly for the benefit of all the people of Canada, then he could take credit to himself for administering his department wisely. But, it is neither right nor just that the minister should go into a particular constituency and say: You are a community of 700 or 800 people, I have given you a building to which you were not entitled in fair play, and therefore you should vote for this government. That is not proper.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would never say they were not entitled to it.

Mr CONMEE. I take exception to the views expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley), and I do not know that he realizes himself what he did say. He made the statement that the Minister of Public Works had come here to-night, that he had put these items on the estimates for the very purpose——

Mr. PERLEY. I did not say that.

Mr. CONMEE. I took your words down.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read them; you haven't got them there at all.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman stated that these items were put in the estimates for the purpose of getting the support of the people for the government candidates. If the hon. gentleman did not make that statement, and if he denies that he did, I will have to take his word.

Mr. PERLEY. I know the hon. gentleman does not want to be unfair. What I said was that the Minister of Public Works said that when he erected buildings in a community he and the government should have credit for so doing, and what his statement practically meant was that when the elections came on the people should vote for him on that account.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I said was if the government with respect to my constituency had done justice by that constituency, had acted fairly by it, had done what was reasonable and proper for the development of the place by the improvement of harbours, &c., it was only fair that the government should get reasonable credit for that.

Mr. CONMEE. I have to accept my hon. friend's explanation, but I fear that when some gentlemen speak, they perhaps go further than they intended to go. But hon. gentlemen know that they go on the platforms of this country and condemn the government for not having expended money in certain cases. I have never met one of them on the stump who did not take that ground. In the House every day attacks are made on the government for extravagant expenditure, for wasting money in building public works, wharfs, &c., which hon. gentlemen allege are not prudent expenditures; but when it comes to their own constituencies, every one of them has his hand out, every one is on his feet pleading for some expenditure in his own riding. I do not think that is consistent. We have resolution after resolution submitted, condemning the expenditures of the government. Hon. gentlemen do not as a rule condemn any particular expenditure. I have been watching the proceedings of the House for some years but I have not seen hon. gentlemen moving to strike out this item or that item very often, they are very careful about that, they are afraid to put themselves on record as against this or that public undertaking, for which the government are spending money.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was the hon. gentleman present the last time we were in supply, when we moved to strike out an item ?

Mr. CONMEE. I say there are few cases where hon. gentlemen do more to strike at a particular item.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentlemen said never.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say any such thing. There are a few cases where hon. gentlemen are very careful not to strike at any particular item and seldom if ever, condemn an item of expenditure in the constituency of a Conservative member.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In the very nature of things such items would not be likely to be subject to attack.

Mr. CONMEE. It is legitimate for hon. gentlemen to condemn the government for not having made any expenditure they think should have been made that has been voted, but it is just as fair for a government supporter to take credit to the government because the government did make expenditures which he and the electors think meritorious.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are obliged for this lecture, but as a business man, would not the hon. member not condemn a manager of his, who would spend $25,000 on a building where a $5,000 building would do ?

Mr. CONMEE. If a superintendent of works represented that a foreman or manager in another department had expended $20,000 on a building that should have been erected for $5,000 and on investigation, I found that he had misrepresented and drawn on his imagination that he had no foundation in fact for his statement, I would dismiss the superintendent—and that is what the ridings of the hon. gentleman should do with them.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman would condemn a man who, in building for him a building that should cost $5,000 or $6,000 placed a cupola on it and lined it with diamonds and gold and clocks, the hon. gentleman knows that our objection to the heavy expenditure has never been proved unfounded. Last session I pointed out that if they took $100,000 and built ten post offices they would be doing more service to the country than by building only four post offices at $25,000 each.

Mr. CONMEE. A superintendent who in building a warehouse would add a cupola and line it with gold should be dismissed. My hon. friend knows that there has been no such case as that, that he was drawing on his imagination, that it is a mere fiction in the mind of my hon. friend.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. CONMEE. It might be economy to build substantial buildings as far as the money goes as otherwise they might have to be renewed.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that as a rule, a town of 600 or 700 inhabitants needs a $10,000 post office? Why you would see such a post office long before you saw the rest of the village. At the same time there are places in the country going without buildings, producing ten times the revenue and progressing ten times as rapidly. The hon. gentleman talks about drawing on the imagination, can he find in his imagination any justification for a $10,000 or $12,000 edifice in a village of 600 inhabitants ? He knows quite well that a $5,000 building would be all that place would need for the next two or three decades.

Mr. BLAIN. This is all due to the partisanship which hon. gentlemen opposite introduced into the Public Works Department many years ago. Prior to the election of 1900, one of the ministers then in office sent out a private circular addressed to the Reform candidates all over Canada. I have a copy of that circular in my hands but shall not read it as it has been put on ' Hansard ' in former discussions. The first question it contains is this : Does your constituency require any public works? If so, would you recommend that it be done by public competition or day labour? Thus inviting the Reform candidates all over Canada to take this circular into the election and tell the voters to say whether they required a public work, and also whether that work should be put up to public competition or be done by day labour. That circular, signed by a cabinet minister, was sent out to the Reform candidates all over Canada. No doubt many hon. gentlemen behind the Minister of Public Works received that circular.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was a long time ago.

Mr. BLAIN. It was just prior to the election of 1900. I read it at the time in the presence of hon. gentlemen opposite, and not one dared rise in his place and contradict me. Therefore, if there is flagrant partisanship in the Public Works Department—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which there is not.

Mr. BLAIN. It was introduced into the department by this government. Talk about partisanship, why up in Wellington, when the government were selecting a site for a public building, an advertisement was put in the papers calling all the Reformers of the village together for the purpose of selecting a site.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I deny that.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman deny that there appeared in a newspaper in that village—

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). What newspaper?

Mr. BLAIN. I will give the name. Does he deny that there was an advertisement calling the Reformers together in order to decide what site should be selected for a public building?

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I utterly deny that statement. There never was such a thing done in North Wellington.

Mr. BLAIN. When the hon. gentleman was in his seat the other day it was stated in answer to that charge: ' Oh, but the government did not select the site which the Reformers named.'

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I never said a word about it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. BLAIN. No, there is no tree I could bark up in which my hon. friend would not be found in connection with such matters.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). What paper do you refer to?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman knows that this was a case which occurred in Wellington county. Did it happen to be in the county of South Wellington?

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I represent the north riding.

Mr. BLAIN. Did it happen in the other riding?

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I cannot tell you.

Mr. BLAIN. I made the statement the other night and it may be that the public building was in the other riding of Wellington, but the statement is all right.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). It is not all right. You connected my name with it as the representative of North Wellington, and I certainly deny it and you ought to apologize.

Mr. BLAIN. If I am incorrect as regards the riding my hon. friend represents, I still make the statement that an advertisement such as I have described was published in a newspaper in that county, and that may have been in the south riding.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend does not suggest that the Public Works Department had anything to do with any public meeting either in South or North Wellington.

Mr. BLAIN. The Public Works Department had to do with the circular to which I referred in the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all—not the slightest thing to do with the circular.

Mr. BLAIN. Why, the document was signed by the acting Minister of Public Works, who was a member of the government at the time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has just been referring to a public meeting of the Liberal electors in the riding of South Wellington, and I understood him to say that the Public Works Department was responsible for that. The department had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BLAIN. I was not saying anything of the kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. BLAIN. I was pointing out that at the very root of this partisanship was this circular to which I have alluded and which no minister of the Crown has ever cared to deny.

Seaforth public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot has been purchased and the building is to be used for post office and customs purposes, also for armoury accommodation for a company of the 33rd Huron regiment. It is expected to cost about $20,000 without the site. The postal revenue is $6,050, customs duties $14,615, money orders issued $25,610, money orders paid $31,359. Nine years ago Seaforth had a population of 2,300.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). When was the first vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1908-9.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Has the work started?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans are being prepared, and the lots have been purchased. We paid to one gentleman $1,300, and to the other $2,700. The two lots cost $4,000. The land is quite large. The frontage is 91 feet, and the depth 132 feet.

Mr. BLAIN. In what riding is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. South Huron. Seaforth is a good town. Its postal revenue is about $6,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Was the old building burned down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no building there now.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who selected this site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An expert of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the expert send in a report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister that report here?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not here.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost for this Seaforth building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will cost $20,000 exclusive of the land.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the fittings? And what will be the total cost of the building ready to occupy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect informs me that the fittings will bring the cost up to something like $25,000—not exceeding that.

Sudbury public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in the constituency of my genial friend from Nipissing (Mr. Gordon). He will agree with me that Sudbury is an important town and well entitled to this public building.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This was in the estimates prior to 1908?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Have the plans been prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not yet ready.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Is it the intention to commence building this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the present intention.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The building now in use there is far from being large enough. I hope work on the new building will be started soon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I assure my hon. friend we expect to start this year.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the estimate for this building first put in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1907-8.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And the minister states it is the intention to spend the money this year. I presume that the necessary corollary is that there is to be an election next year?

Tilbury public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot for this has been bought. Tilbury and Tilbury east together had a population in 1901 of 4,200.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is this a new vote, or is it one of the election votes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Leave out the alternative and I will answer. We calculate to get this building for about $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. In what constituency is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In West Kent.

Mr. CROTHERS. No, in South Essex.

Mr. PUGSLEY. However, it is needed in whatever constituency it is. We have a fine lot with 108 feet frontage, and a depth of 99 feet.

Mr. LANCASTER. What did the site cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It cost $1,975.

Tillsonburg public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tillsonburg is in South Oxford. The postal revenue last year was $7,500; customs revenue $25,000; money orders issued $26,000 ; money orders paid $23,000. Hon. members will see that it is an important place. The population, in 1908, according to Lovell's 'Gazetteer' was 3,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the building to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to cost $25,000 in addition to the site.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are you renting there now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. At what rental?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the post office, $375 ; for customs house, $160.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). When was the first vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1907-8.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Is it the intention of the minister to bring down a supplementary estimate for a public building at Sturgeon Falls. He is aware that two years ago a lot was purchased there for that purpose. And less than a year ago the post office there was burned down. At present, the postal business is being carried on in a building which probably did not cost more than $300. It is simply a disgrace to allow the post office to be carried on any longer in such a building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give an assurance that an amount will be put in the estimates this year for the purpose referred to. Of course, that is a matter I cannot speak of until the estimates are brought down. But the outlook for Sturgeon Falls is not sufficiently good just now to warrant us in undertaking the expenditure for a public building.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. minister mean the political outlook?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The sulphite mill there has not been running since 1906, and I believe that the mill and the timber limits are now in the courts, and are about being sold, if they have not been sold already. Until prospects improve, we should hardly be justified in the expenditure for such a building as we contemplated at Sturgeon Falls. However, the matter is under consideration, and I cannot say at present what will be done in regard to the estimates of this year.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The mills the Minister of Public Works has referred to will be sold in April, and after that the business will be much larger than it is at present. If something is not put in the estimates now and a building started within a short time, matters will go from bad to worse. Even now it is simply a disgrace to allow any government business to be done in such a building as we have there. The revenue at present is $3,611; postal orders issued, $22,300 last year. In view of the fact that in other places with seven or eight hundred population and a revenue about the same, buildings worth $15,000 or $20,000 are being erected, I think I have a right to complain. Unlike some other members here, I realize that we who are in opposition cannot expect much in the way of getting public buildings. I would have no complaint to make if these buildings which are being put up in towns represented by supporters of the government were put up in places where the revenue justified the expenditure. But when they are being put up in these little obscure places where there is very little revenue, I think we have some reasonable cause for complaint. In this instance particularly, I think the Postmaster General would be justified in seeing that something was done forthwith. I hope he will take the matter up. Now, I am not asking for any other building in the constituency I represent, although I may mention that so far as the revenue is concerned, we could present strong claims. Take for instance, Cobalt. Last year the revenue was $25,756; postal orders issued, $486,000, Cobalt ranking with many of the lesser cities of the Dominion. Yet the business there is being carried on in a very poor building not at all fit for the business. I believe something should be done immediately to relieve the situation in these two places particularly. I may say that I am prepared to give the Minister of Public Works all due credit for everything that he does.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure the hon. gentleman will feel that I am endeavouring as far as I can to treat the important constituency which he represents with justice. We are spending a good deal of money in that constituency. We are providing a wharf at Haileybury and another at New Liskeard, we are dredging the river and Lake Temiskaming, we are building a dam at Latchford for the purpose of improving navigation, we have provided for the interprovincial bridge over the North Temiskaming, and we are providing now for a public building at Sudbury. I regret that I do not see my way clear to put in an item for a building at Sturgeon Falls. I do not want to discourage my hon. friend, or his constituency, but the paper mill there has not been operated by the receiver, and business has greatly fallen off. The postal revenue there has decreased a good deal. It is $600 less than it was four years ago, the customs duties are only about one-fourth what they were four years ago. Money orders paid have increased, but money orders issued are $11,000 less than they were four years ago. However, I hope these industries will be started again, and I can assure my hon. friend that the claims of Sturgeon Falls will have my careful consideration.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). What about Cobalt ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The difficulty we found at Cobalt was to buy a lot. The prices were away up beyond what we thought was reasonable. I think it has been arranged to rent temporarily suitable accommodation at Cobalt. I hope before long to be able to visit Cobalt, with my hon. friend the Postmaster General, when the matter of a new post office will have our best consideration.

Uxbridge public building, $15,000.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). This is a very deserving expenditure. Would the minister inform the House who recommended the purchase of the lot ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Uxbridge stands in the same category as most of the buildings in the smaller towns. The population in 1901 was 1,657. The postal revenue is $4,111; money orders issued, $27,068; money orders paid, $17,854. We have purchased a lot, and propse erecting a building to cost $15,000, exclusive of the site and exclusive of armoury accommodation. My hon. friend asks on whose recommendation the site was bought. In the first place, a strong recommendation was made in the shape of a letter from Mr. Grant, the then member of parliament, and from Mr. Alexander Graham.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister read that letter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the substance of it: The erection of a public building at Uxbridge was recommended by G. D. Grant, Esq., and Alexander Graham, Esq., December 31, 1907. Their letter gives the population of the town, its industries, speaks of it as being the centre of an excellent agricultural country, drawing its trade from a large section, gives the postal revenue, and presents very strong reasons for the erection of a public building. With regard to the site, I sent an expert from the department who recommended the site which was chosen, and which seemed to meet with general approval at the time.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did any public bodies, such as the council or board of trade, pass resolutions favouring this site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no record of any.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Had there been any communications from any public bodies to the minister adverse to this site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there was one that, according to my information, has met with the favour of my hon. friend. I do not know whether my hon. friend promoted the action of the council or not, but I understand that the action of the council met with the approval of my hon. friend. The O'Neil site recommended by the council after we had made the purchase of the other will cost $1,500 more, it is very uneven, being about 20 feet higher than the street level, and would necessitate heavy excavation and the erection of a retaining wall. The Hutchinson site which we had purchased before getting this resolution from the council only cost $1,200, and is an infinitely better site. It is on the opposite corner of the same street, and only 40 or 50 feet from the present post office, which situation it has occupied for a quarter of a century. It has a frontage of 60 feet against a frontage of 32 feet for the O'Neil property, and the town council—I hope I have been misinformed when I say that it has been represented that they were prompted by the hon. gentleman—have asked us to pay $2,700, or more than double the amount, for another property that has little more than half the frontage, and which, according to my information, is situated some 20 feet above the level of the street, a very uneven lot, and one which would be absolutely undesirable in so far as the public interest is concerned.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I desire to inform the House and the minister that in so far as I am personally concerned I have not expressed any opinion or indicated any preference with regard to this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad of it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I was not instrumental in securing the council's action in passing a resolution in favour of that particular site ; in fact, I very discreetly kept out of the dispute. The O'Neil lot which is recommended by the town council is central. It is one that could have been purchased infinitely cheaper than the price which the minister mentioned. But the chief Liberal worker in Uxbridge went to Mr. O'Neil and told him to keep up a good, stiff price, that the government were going to purchase it, or secure an option, and that no doubt he would secure his price. He stiffened up his price, but the other man sold his lot simply because a few Liberals living in the vicinity were supporting that lot which is situated at their end of the town. I understand that the Minister of Public Works has received a resolution from the town council advocating the purchase of the central lot, which would admittedly serve the municipality much more advantageously than the lot at the other end of the town.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By no means admittedly because the lot we bought is right opposite the present post office which is in the central part of the town.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Because the central post office has been situated in one end of the town for a generation is no reason why the new post office which will last several generations should be situated in one end of the town. There is no reason why because it has been in an inconvenient place to a great many citizens who go to the post office it should be located in the same end of the town, and still continue to be an inconvenience. The following resolution was sent to the Minister of Public Works :

To the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, M.P.,
Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

Whereas the government has decided to erect a post office in the town of Uxbridge.

And whereas the government has purchased the Hutchinson site, which is situated in the west end.

And whereas two-thirds of the population of the said town of Uxbridge reside east of the said Hutchinson site.

And whereas the O'Neil site, which is more centrally located, can be purchased at a reasonable price for the erection of a post office.

And whereas the public library and market buildings are situated on opposite corners to the O'Neil site.

Therefore, the municipal council of the corporation of the town of Uxbridge do strongly recommend the honourable Minister of Public Works to purchase the O'Neil site, believing that the erection of a post office on the said O'Neil site would be in the interest of the great majority of the residents of the said corporation.

Dated at Uxbridge the 26th day of November, 1910.

(Sgd.) W. R. BEAL, Mayor.
W. H. CROSBY,
Clerk.

I would suggest that the Minister of Public Works should in future communicate with public bodies representing the municipalities and not with his own private supporters in these various towns. I think he would find that it would work far more satisfactorily, would serve the public much better, and that he would secure better advice. It would not be partisan, biased advice, but the advice of the municipality as represented in the municipal council. I would like to ask if it is the purpose of the minister to erect an adjoining armoury in connection with the post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is intended to provide armoury accommodation.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The options were obtained some time in 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was voted in the session of 1907-8.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Will the minister kindly tell us the reason of the delay? This is 1911. The people are clamouring for the accommodation and it is very badly needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were several reasons, and not the least was the delay caused by the inquiry which had to be made about the sites in consequence of the action of the council in urging us to secure a different site. That caused a very considerable delay. Then, there was the delay of a year which took place in common with almost all of the other public buildings owing to the decline of the revenues when it had to stand over. Outside of this I do not know that there has been any undue delay, certainly not more than has been caused in connection with many other buildings. I may repeat what I have already said that we have a great many public buildings for which parliament has made appropriations and the chief architect is working upon the plans one after another as his staff is able to follow up the work.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The resolution passed by council is dated November, 1910, so that there was a delay of two years in the erection of this building before the council took action at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the hon. gentleman approved and made representations in parliament in regard to the unsuitability of the site.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I did not object to the site at all; I was simply urging the erection of a building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that the hon. gentleman made representations with regard to the site as well.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Are the plans prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans have been prepared and now are in the Post Office Department for approval.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Will the work be done by contract or day labour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By public tender and contract. All public buildings are done by public tender and contract.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). When may we expect the advertisement to appear?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell until we get the plans back from the Post Office Department.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). In the course of a month or two?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the course of a couple of months or so; I cannot tell exactly.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Not longer than two or three months?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not like to say because I do not exactly know.

Wallaceburg public building, $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. We want a little information about this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of erecting a public building in Wallaceburg. We have purchased a good site at the corner of Nelson and James streets 60 x 90. The postal revenue is $6,603, customs revenue $235,410, money orders issued $18,038, money orders paid $16,124, imports $1,279,308. We propose that this building shall be for post office and customs purposes. We have bought the site for $3,000.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This has been urged by Mr. Gordon.

Mr. BLAIN. What constituency?

Mr. PUGSLEY. East Kent. Wallaceburg is a very important and growing town.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the cost of the building complete and ready to occupy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,000 estimated, outside of the land.

Waterloo public building, $41,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Waterloo is a very important place. We have a contract already let for the erection of the building. We have bought the land for $5,000; we have let the contract for $36,975, fittings, lock boxes, &c., $5,000; sidewalks, &c., $1,000; contingencies and superintendence, $2,669; total probable cost, inclusive of the site, heating apparatus, wiring, fittings, furnishing, &c., $51,072.69. The building is for post office, custom house and accommodation of G Company, Waterloo regiment. Postal revenue last year, $11,423; mail orders issued, $17,922; mail orders paid, $66,414. In revenue, $509,941; estimated customs revenue, $60,666. It is in the constituency of Waterloo North.

Mr. BLAIN. The constituency of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When were the plans approved by the departments concerned?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Contract entered into on 3rd October. This was voted in 1907 and 1908.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Just before the election. When were the plans approved by the departments concerned?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In June or July.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what the deputy minister tells me, to the best of his recollection.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then there is no necessity for waiting longer to let the contract than three or four months after the approval of the plans.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the ordinary course I would think not.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What would be the extraordinary course that would entail longer delay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there were a considerable number of plans approved at the one time the specifications would have to be printed and take their turn at the Printing Bureau, and then the working plans have to be prepared after the approval. How long it will take depends on the quantity of work on hand; my hon. friend can see that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I can see that. If that is the outside time required in one constituency it should be the outside time required in another.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I suppose the preparing of the specifications is done in order of the approval of the plans.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not follow.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why should you change the order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect is allowed to use his judgment as to that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the minister think it not dangerous to leave that to the chief architect? Surely the minister is responsible for seeing that justice is done in the several constituencies.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend would not expect me to look after these details.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have a strong suspicion that the minister does look into them carefully. Does he state that there is absolutely no interference from himself after the plans are approved.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not like to say that, because sometimes if there is a strong complaint made to me as to the delay I may send a memo or telephone the chief architect asking for the cause, and he gives me what I always thought was a reasonable explanation of the delay. To that extent I do interfere. He might think that I thought it desirable to proceed with that particular building and probably he would look into it. I cannot recall any particular case in which it has hurried him up, but that is what I sometimes do.

Mr. MEIGHEN. So that the member for the constituency can do nothing once the plans are approved.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I remember in the case of the Portage la Prairie building, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen), wrote me about it, and I sent a memo at once to the chief architect asking what caused the delay, and I was informed the plans had been sent to the Militia Department for approval. I followed that up in order to see what was the delay there. I can assure my hon. friend that I gave no instructions which would cause or justify any delay. I made the usual inquiries with regard to the building at Portage la Prairie that I do in respect to those in constituencies represented by our friends.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Have the working plans and specifications been prepared in that case?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have not been fully prepared, but are pretty nearly prepared.

Wiarton public building, $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is Wiarton?

Mr. PUGSLEY. North Bruce. I had the pleasure of visiting Wiarton last summer and I was very much impressed with the necessity of a public building there. Wiarton is situated upon the lake and they have a little bit of a building, which is totally inadequate for the accommodation of the people. We had a splendid public gathering and I looked at the Mayor's office, which was no better than the post office, and I told him that if he would undertake to erect a new building which would be a credit to the street, I would consider the question of a post-office.

Mr. BLAIN. Did you go any further than that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the minister sure he spoke to the mayor, because there is no mayor. This is a village with a reeve.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes, there is a mayor, and a fine looking mayor too.

Mr. LANCASTER. He is a fine looking man, but he is not a mayor, unless the village became a town last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not yet purchased the site, but we propose putting up a building at a reasonable cost of perhaps $15,000 or $20,000. Wiarton has an excellent harbour, which is being improved, and it is not only a good town at present, but it has an excellent future.

Mr. BLAIN. Who urged this public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Tolmie.

Mr. RHODES. It would be interesting to know if his worship the mayor has kept his part of the bargain?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is quite certain he would.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a sugar refinery there a few years ago that was closed up. That seems to be an objection in the Sturgeon Falls item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has not affected this town because the revenue here shows an increase.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend was up there in the summer and rather suggested he might do something for them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was very much impressed with the necessity of doing something.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any correspondence about the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet, I thought there would be no difficulty in getting a site at a moderate price.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). What is the population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nine years ago it was 2,423.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I thought the minister intended to keep the cost of buildings in such towns below $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is larger than usual. I was speaking rather of places under 2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the mayor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. German, a very excellent man indeed; he is a Conservative.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is why you were so much impressed by him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was impressed, there is no question about that. I think Mr. Tolmie, the hon. member for the constituency was able to point out the advantages of the town.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is it the minister's intention to put the officers at work on this plan and start this building before other buildings for which votes have been standing for two or three years are commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no present intention of doing so.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is it the rule of the department to have the buildings taken in turn?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not an inflexible rule.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). In fact a very flexible rule. In the county of Ontario there are two votes: one in Whitby, which was taken in the fall of 1908 when the elections were on, and one in my town of Uxbridge. To-day, South Ontario being represented by a Liberal, the Whitby building is completed, but for the Uxbridge building the working plans have not been commenced. That is not a fair way to treat the members of the House. The minister has put a vote in the estimates this year for a public building in Port Perry. Will he allow the Port Perry building to be erected before the Uxbridge building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention to provide a public building in Port Perry will not prevent the building at Uxbridge going on with reasonable speed.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Will you proceed with the Port Perry building before the Uxbridge building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no present intention of doing so.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Would that not be a great hardship on the Uxbridge people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would depend on the circumstances.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Monday being private members' day I suppose will be entirely taken up by private members?

Mr. FIELDING. As usual, yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, January 30, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RECIPROCITY—DUTIES ON PULP AND PAPER.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I would like an explanation from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), or the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in regard to a very important question of construction of the tariff arrangement recently made. The construction put upon it in some quarters seems to be quite different from that conveyed to this House. In the New York 'Herald' of Saturday last appears a despatch from Washington, from which I read a few sentences in order to explain what I desire to know:—

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association insists that paper and wood pulp will be free as soon as the agreement becomes law. The official announcement issued by the State Department yesterday said regarding this matter: 'Printing paper is to become free on the removal of all restrictions of the exportation of pulpwood.'

This would mean that unless the restrictions in the way of the provincial charge were removed paper would continue to come in at the Payne rate of $3.75 a ton, plus $2 a ton countervailing duty.

The agreement made by Mr. Knox and Messrs. Fielding and Paterson makes paper, paper board and pulp free with a provision which, stripped of all verbiage, says free paper and pulp provided no export tax of any form or device should be imposed by Canada on paper or wood pulp or the wood used in the manufacture of 'such paper.'

It is felt here that if this means wood used in the manufacture of 'such paper' for export it does mean free paper, because no tax is imposed by any of the Canadian provinces on pulp wood cut from Crown lands which enters into the manufacture of paper made in Canada, whether for home consumption or for exportation to the United States. Should this be true, then the real issue has been waived and the purpose attained by the use of an ambiguous expression deliberately framed.

There is the statement, in effect, that a proposition deliberately framed—and with the implication to deceive—will allow free paper under the agreement. I would like to hear from the Minister of Customs an interpretation of that clause of the agreement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not here. I have only to say that the agreement is exactly as set forth in the correspondence between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs and Mr. Knox, and already laid on the table of the House.

PRIVILEGE—MR. KNOWLES.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw). I wish to make reference to a few lines in an article in the press. I refer to the 'News,' a paper published in my own city—

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) wish to put a question?

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to speak to a question of privilege—is it not in order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) did not say what he was going to do, and I wished to know.

Mr. KNOWLES. I quote a few lines from this newspaper, the 'Morning News,' of Moosejaw, dated 27th inst.:—

For four years a Liberal member, Knowles of Moosejaw, has set himself down for practically the same resolution, but never proceeded further than having it printed again and again in the programme.

And the closing paragraph contains these words:—

That Mr. Knowles had used his annual low tariff resolution as a means for blocking the real discussion of the matter in the House of Commons is now pretty well known.

I would not take up even the minute or two of the time of the House I wish to occupy were it not that I find that it seems to be taken for granted in this House, and even more so outside the House, that I had such a motion and that such a motion was used for the purpose of blocking the discussion with regard to the matter of lowering the tariff duties. I find that such papers as the Montreal 'Gazette,' the Ottawa 'Citizen,' the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' the Toronto 'News,' and even the Toronto 'Globe,' which is supposed to be an organ friendly to Liberal members, take more or less this view of it. This motion of mine was on the Order Paper for two sessions. It was first placed on the Order Paper on the 15th of February, 1909. Newspapers, or persons, who say that this notice of motion has been before the House for four years are absolutely in error. As the date when it was first given notice of was comparatively near the close of the session, the last private members' day being the last Monday in March, the motion was never called during that session. So that, for the purpose of criticism, there is eliminated entirely the session before last, because my motion was never reached that session, and there remains for me to account to the public, to my constituents and to hon. members of this House, only that notice on the Order Paper last session. It was placed by me on the Order Paper with the full intention of bringing it before the House. Even taking the very worst view of the matter, that worst view would be that I had the notice upon the Order Paper for one session, and it was not gone on with. That is by no means unusual. I dare to make the statement that every session dozens of motions go by the board on the taking away of the last day for the discussion of private members' business in the same way as my motion was taken away last session.

With regard to this motion, I had intended to proceed with it. I was asked by different hon. members on the other side who wished to be advised as to the day when I intended to proceed with the motion. I told them of a certain day when I had made up my mind to proceed. I recall having told my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) of the date and also my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner). Upon my telling the hon. member for Souris, as he had asked me as a matter of courtesy when I intended to bring on the discussion, he, for the first time, informed me that he understood an arrangement had been made between the chief whip of the other side, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that a motion of the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) in connection with the Georgian Bay canal should be taken up. I went to see the hon. member for North Renfrew, and he said he had been informed by his chief whip that it was so. Though my motion had priority, yet, as a matter of courtesy—as, I think, the hon. member will bear me out in saying—I decided to defer bringing on my motion. It turned out that this was the last private members' day. Of this, so far as I know, notice had not been given, and I was not aware of it. Had I been aware of it, I would have hesitated to give up the place of priority which I held. The hon. member for North Renfrew took the day and afterwards the House resolved that no more motions from private members should be heard that session. Therefore, I wish to say this motion never was used to block discussion. During the first session, when it was on the Order Paper, I could not discuss it, even though I wished to do so, because it was never called, and last session, after I had decided to proceed with it on a certain day, it was because of my desire to show courtesy to an hon. gentleman on the other side that the matter was not brought up for discussion on that day.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Since the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) has referred to me, I think it is but right that I should make a statement to the House. Last session I well remember that when I had a motion on the Order Paper, I spoke to the hon. member, who had a motion in precedence of mine, and he was good enough at that time to give way to me. The facts as stated by him with reference to me are perfectly correct.

SPRINGHILL STRIKE.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). I desire to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) as to the present position of the strike at Springhill, N.S., which was commenced, I think, in 1909. And may I ask him, also, if any of the Canadian militia are in attendance to keep order there?

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). I understand that at the present time about 600 men are employed in Springhill. The men who went out on strike about a year and a half ago are still out—or a large number of them are; some of them have left for other places. I am not aware as to there being any Canadian militia at Springhill at the present time, though I could not speak definitely on that point.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend answer that at some other time?

Mr. KING. Yes, I will find out.

RECIPROCITY ANNOUNCEMENT AND THE PRESS.

Mr. RHODES. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to put a question to the government based upon an editorial which I see in the Manitoba 'Free Press,' of Saturday, January 28, which paper is I believe the government organ in the province of Manitoba. It reads as follows:

SHABBY TREATMENT.

The Minister of Finance in connection with his announcement of the tariff arrangement with the United States, treated the newspapers and the public very shabbily in failing to see to it that the moment he rose in his place in the House at Ottawa to make his statement, there were furnished to the representatives of the newspapers of Canada in the press gallery copies of the new schedules, and a summary resumé of the whole arrangement.

In making his statement, the minister was speaking not only to the House, but to the country. In listening to that important statement, the men in the press gallery were the representatives of the people of Canada—decidedly more so, in that special sense, than the members of the House. The people of the whole Dominion were keenly expectant in regard to that statement. At Washington the government was guilty of no such failure to discharge the duty, it in like manner owed to the eagerly waiting public of the United States.

At the time agreed upon between the two governments for the announcement of the tariff arrangement, the new schedules were handed to the press correspondents at the capital of the United States, together with a comprehensive summary, containing about a thousand words setting forth the substance and meaning of the arrangement. The afternoon papers throughout the United States were thus able to lay before the public the main facts in regard to the tariff arrangement, its scope, and its bearings. It was from Washington that the first comprehensive news of the tariff arrangement came to Canadian papers, hours before a word of information came from Ottawa.

At Ottawa it was not until after Mr. Fielding had come to the end of his speech, about six o'clock, that there was furnished to the press correspondents one copy of the undigested schedules—a great mass of figures, requiring to be studied carefully, before it could be dealt with. There was no summary available, such as at Washington was furnished before four o'clock in the afternoon to the press correspondents.

I would like to ask if the grievance complained of in this editorial is justified, and if so, why it was that the newspaper press of Canada had to get its first information from Washington. I would ask also if that was the practice followed one year ago when the Minister of Finance was at Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend wants us to follow the American method we will have to adopt the American constitution. The methods of procedure in regard to these matters are so different in the United States from those which have been established in Canada that it is rather difficult to make comparisons. Answering the latter part of my hon. friend's question first; a year ago, at the last session of the House when a certain arrangement was made at Washington, the understanding was that this should be made public at or after a certain hour. Our American friends have a practice of issuing these things in advance under seal, to be released at a given hour. That did not form the subject of any discussion then, but what happened was that when, soon after three o'clock, I rose in the House to present the result of the negotiations, at that very hour there was I believe in the telegraph offices in Ottawa a full report of the whole matter, having been kept, as they say, under seal from Washington, and having been given out in advance according to the American method. In the present instance, it was distinctly understood that no communication should be made of the agreement itself, or of any part thereof, until after four o'clock in the afternoon. Now the American method is that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State of the United States, having no seats in the Congressional bodies, either in the Senate or House of Representatives, their method is to send a message to these bodies, and the moment the message is delivered, it is available to the public. Our method of dealing with such things is different. The practice is that in all matters of tariff changes the House of Commons is first informed; therefore, I did not feel at liberty to give out the details of this arrangement until I had informed the House of Commons thereof, and this necessarily occupied a little time. It is the different method of procedure in the two countries that accounts for the delay my hon. friend has complained of.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman says. But if, when he were at the finish of his speech he had had several copies, or a summary of the agreement, to hand to the press, it would have been a great convenience, and would have helped the newspaper men in making up their report that evening, instead of having to depend upon the only one copy that was given out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot understand how the Canadian constitution, or the British constitution, or anything else that we value, would have been greatly violated if the Minister of Finance had handed out these schedules when he began his speech. We on this side of the House would very much have appreciated a copy at the commencement of his speech instead of at the end of it, and I think it would have been perhaps no more than ordinary courtesy to have given it to us then instead of at the conclusion of his speech. He will realize, as every hon. gentleman will realize, that it is very difficult to pick out the substance of comprehensive proposals such as these were, only having them under one's hand just as he rises to speak. The same is true of the men in the press gallery. When the Minister of Finance was about to announce the proposals, and had actually stood upon his feet, then it seems to me some summary of these schedules, or something of that kind, could have been given out without violating any principle of the constitution; and it would have been a great convenience, and would have saved a great amount of labour, not only to the men in the press gallery but to others.

Mr. FOSTER. Besides that, it doesn't seem to me that any rule or practice would have been violated. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to say that these schedules which he laid on the table giving the duties for certain articles, are to-day in effect, and that entries are being made on them?

Mr. FIELDING. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no reason in the world for this secrecy, except in a case where you are bringing down tariff duties where the very moment the Finance Minister lays these changes on the table of the House they become actually operative, and duties are paid in accordance therewith. No duties are paid in accordance with these schedules, and no practice or any rule of this House, so long as I have known anything about it, would have been violated if, forty hours before the Finance Minister got up to speak, he had given those schedules to the members of parliament, and to the members of the press. There was nothing binding upon him except, as I understand it, his pact with the administration of the United States, and that would have been satisfied if, at the time he rose this information had been put into the hands of the House, and the public. What I mean to protest against is that the Finance Minister tries to shelter himself behind a rule or practice of this House regarding tariff changes going into effect instantly, and that therefore, there must be no knowledge given of them until they have been announced in the House. These did not fall under the category, they were simply possible things that may come into operation, and may not; and if they do come into operation, it will not be at the present time, but upon proclamation and certain things being previously done by the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry that our method of procedure in this matter has not met with the favour of our hon. friends opposite. But I cannot see that there is any ground for complaint. It is a fact that in the United States the moment a document dealing with a matter of this kind is delivered to congress it becomes accessible to the public. Our method is different. Whenever anything of that nature is to be propounded it is explained in the House of Commons first by the Minister of Finance, and until he has done that, the document is not delivered to anybody. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition suggests that it would have been courteous if he had been furnished with a copy in advance. I cannot agree with him at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say when the minister began his statement.

Mr. FIELDING. That was in advance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not call that in advance.

Mr. FIELDING. I would call that in advance of every other member in the House. In this case I sent my hon. friend in advance of all others a copy of the documents because I did not want him to have to wait until they were printed, and to that extent the usual courtesy was extended. I do not think it is the practice to give even to the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition advance copies of these documents before the House is made familiar with them. I can understand the natural grievance of the press and that they were very anxious to get the information. I do not blame them for that; I can appreciate that, because I was long enough in journalism to know all about it, but I really cannot see that there is any grievance. My hon. friend from Toronto says that there should have been several copies. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there were several copies of nearly every document—

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Does the hon. Minister of Finance say that there were several copies of the schedule available?

Mr. FIELDING. There were several copies of every document that I brought down. There may not have been enough to give one to each member of the press, but these were our busy days, and we could not prepare a large number of copies for distribution. Although I am not as communicative sometimes as the gentlemen of the press would like me to be, I think they cannot dispute the fact that whenever there is any information that I can give to them in the way of printed or any other documents I am always willing to oblige them. I think that really in the time at our disposal every effort was made to satisfy the gentlemen of the press, and I do not think that there is any general complaint from them in that regard.

RECIPROCITY—INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to renew a request that I made in the absence of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Perhaps the Finance Minister has been made acquainted with it. It is that just as soon as possible the statistics of trade bearing upon the arrangement which the Finance Minister laid before the House on Thursday should be put into the possession of members of the House. That statement would include not only the trade between ourselves and the United States, but also a list of any articles of common trade between us and the countries with whom we do that common trade; that is, Great Britain, the most favoured nation treaty nations and the overseas dominions. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, of course, has that all made up, because he gave the result of it, and he could not have done so if the information had not been available. It is well that we should have that before the House goes on with the discussion of the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall endeavour, as far as possible, to comply with the hon gentleman's request.

RECIPROCITY—DUTIES ON PULP AND PAPER.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Now that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is in his place, I would like to press for an answer to the question that I put before he came in. The New York Publishers' Association say, in a report issued from Washington, that the arrangement, as it now stands, will be interpreted to mean the admission of free paper in the United States. I would like to ask if that is the minister's view of it?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid we will have to leave to our American friends the interpretation of their own item. What we are clear about is the interpretation on our own side. They make a condition respecting the terms upon which they will admit free paper. There may be some room for dispute as to their own interpretation of this condition; we must leave that to them. But on our side of the line we have a clear and distinct understanding that until they admit paper of the kind specified from all parts of Canada we will not give them the reciprocal advantage of free paper in Canada.

ADDITIONAL LETTER CARRIERS FOR MONTREAL.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN (St. Mary, Montreal). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are taken I wish to inquire from the Postmaster General, if he cannot see his way clear to give an additional number of letter carriers for the city of Montreal. For a long time I have had occasion to observe that the letter carriers are overloaded with postal matters of all description. Even this morning, in going down town, I met at least a dozen letter carriers getting out of the street cars, on their way to the streets where the distribution is to be done. They had to carry on one arm such a load of newspapers and other postal matters, that they could not see in front of themselves, and besides, they had to carry a mail bag for letters in their other hand. If, under such conditions, it happens that a letter is lost, no blame can attach to the letter carriers. I hope that before long an additional number of letter carriers will be appointed for the city of Montreal.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). (Translation.) In answer to my hon. friend I may say that I will get information as to these facts from the post office secretary, at Montreal, and if there is any necessity to put on a greater number of letter carriers, I shall make my hon. friend aware of it.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—HALIFAX TERMINALS.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), in my absence the other day, made an inquiry of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) concerning dock accommodation at Halifax. The situation is this: Some few months ago the Board of Management of the Intercolonial railway visited Halifax and decided that some improvements in the way of additional accommodation should be made there. The department authorized the engagement of Mr. Kennedy, of Montreal, who is an expert in harbour matters to go to Halifax, make an investigation and report as to what was needed. His report has not come in yet and it is too late to do anything this season. In the meantime some temporary arrangements were made to handle the traffic as well as possible this year. We hope in a few days to receive Mr. Kennedy's report and to take into consideration the much needed improvements with regard to wharf accommodation at Halifax during the coming year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to press upon the minister somewhat strongly the feeling of the board of trade and citizens generally that there will be more or less congestion in Halifax this year on account of the very marked increase of shipping business that is expected.

Mr. MARTIN (Montreal). I know nothing of this matter personally.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is some reason for that belief.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know nothing of it personally but an increase in the business is very confidently expected this year and there will be a great congestion of traffic. I would like to suggest that whatever temporary arrangements are to be made should be made as promptly and effectively as possible.

Mr. GRAHAM. The work, I think has been completed; whatever it is, I am not in a position to say.

BRITISH FLAG ON GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. THOBURN. I would like to bring the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to an item that I read in the Almonte 'Gazette' copied from the Brockville 'Recorder' and which is as follows:

> An order was received at the post office today from the Public Works Department at Ottawa saying that the Union Jack must be hoisted over the post office every day in the week from sunrise and remain in that position until sunset. The order is general throughout the Dominion.

I wish to say to the minister that I am not referring to this matter from any desire to find fault, but the very reverse, for if I had my way I would like to see the Union Jack fly over every public building in the Dominion of Canada. The only reason I refer to it is to know from the Minister of Public Works if the statement is correct and if it is to be general. If so I hope it will be thoroughly enforced, for up to the present time I have not seen the Union Jack flying over the post office in Almonte except on public holidays.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Thoburn) that the matter has been under consideration, but no such general order has been given as is stated in the paper. I will make further inquiry and see what foundation there is for the statement contained in the paper, but I feel quite sure that the order is not so general in its character as has been intimated there.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there any flag other than the British flag ordered to be flown on public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, none but the British and Canadian flags.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECURITY TRUSTS CORPORATION.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Security Trust Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

On section 5,

5. The company shall not commence business until at least one hundred thousand dollars of stock have been subscribed and thirty-five thousand dollars paid thereon in cash into the funds of the company to be appropriated only for the purposes of the company under this Act.

Mr. FOSTER. It would not be a bad idea to insert the word 'bona fide' before the word 'subscribed' in this section. It cannot militate against the Bill, and it may serve a useful purpose.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have no particular objection to that, but I do not see why it should be inserted in this Bill when it is not in any other similar Bill to my knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. Certain recent developments show that the insertion of these words may serve a very useful purpose. I suppose the promoters of a company of this kind would have no other object in view than that it should be bona fide, and therefore there can be no objection. I would advocate the same for every like Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it makes any difference whether the words are in or not; I have no objection to them.

Mr. NESBITT. If you insert the words 'bona fide' it will suggest that there is something wrong and I do not think there is any necessity for them any way.

Mr. FOSTER. These words serve a very useful purpose in the Bank Act, if proper care is taken.

Mr. NESBITT. I do not see that they serve any useful purpose in the Bank Act according to the hon. gentleman's own statement the other evening. If there are any subscriptions at all why should they not be bona fide?

Mr. FOSTER. Even although the Bank Act calls for bona fide subscriptions, the subscriptions in a certain case were not bona fide. If the words bona fide be inserted here, and if there should be any doubt, it makes it very easy for the minister to ask for adidtional proof.

Mr. SPROULE. What occurred in the Farmers' Bank was that the subscriptions were made by the notes of the subscribers which were discounted and these were called bona fide subscriptions, which, of course they were not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There having been objection raised, then under rule 112 no important amendment can be proposed without notice.

Mr. SPROULE. It is admitted that the intention of the Bill is that the subscriptions should be bona fide, and I would ask you, Sir, do you rule that the insertion of words to better carry out the intention of the Act is an important amendment.

Mr. NESBITT. The insertion of the words is a superfluity. The minister has just as much right to inquire into the nature of the subscriptions if these words are not in as he has if they are in the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be all true, but if you insert these words it advertises to those who are getting up the concern and to those who are subscribing that there are not to be any fake subscriptions. The hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) could have made the same argument before the Farmers' Bank got its incorporation, but there is not the slightest shadow of a doubt that in that case there were both fake subscriptions and fake payments on subscriptions, and if I mistake not the excuse for the action of the government was that they did not suppose it was necessary to go back of the usual form of subscription and the affidavit thereto. That incident ought at least, make this House not unwilling to insert words which cannot in any way be detrimental to the institution, which are undoubtedly significant in calling attention to the fact, and which would also afford a good standing ground for the minister to make inquiry.

Mr. LENNOX. It is important we should have these words inserted in the Bill even if only to call attention to the matter. Recent developments have shown that subscriptions are not always bona fide. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) complains that their insertion suggests a possible impropriety, but we have good reason to think that there have been improprieties and there may be improprieties again. It is quite common in legislation to use words of this character, and it is perfectly right and exceedingly important at this time, when we have had such startling evidence of attempts to get around the clear provision of the law, that parties in cases of this kind shall be given clearly to understand that the subscription must not be a sham or nominal one, but a bona fide subscription. This is so important that if objection is taken, I think the matter ought to stand over until the notice can be given of this necessary amendment. All along the line of our banking institutions it will be necessary for us to take stock of the situation exactly as it is to-day, and make very careful and important amendments to the legislation governing banking. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FOSTER. I give notice, then, that when the Bill comes up again I will move that as an amendment.

Mr. FIELDING. If the chairman rules that it is an important amendment, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to take too technical a view of the matter; but the mover of the Bill himself is entitled to notice of any amendment. The actual debate seems to lend force to the view that it is of some consequence, and for that reason I think my wisest course is to stand by the rule and to state that such an amendment should have one day's notice.

Mr. FIELDING. In that case, may I suggest that we be permitted to take up the other sections of the Bill, so that if it stands over it will stand only with reference to this one point.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I presume that as the mover of the Bill, I would be at liberty to waive any objection as to notice of the amendment. I do not consider the proposed amendment such as I would ask a day's notice of, because I am perfectly willing that the words 'bona fide' should be inserted; and, taking that position, I do not think it necessary that the Bill should stand over. It seems to me, however, that in the section the public is fully protected, for $200,000 of stock must be subscribed and $70,000 paid in cash, and that being the case, surely the subscriptions must be bona fide.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that that was agreed to by the hon. gentleman who had the Bill in charge; but the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) seemed to have such a strong and vital objection, and his objection was urged with such force, that it brought the House up standing, and here we are.

Mr. LENNOX. I am willing to withdraw my motion in order that we may consider the other provisions of the Bill, after which I will renew the motion.

Mr. FOSTER. If the mover of the Bill thinks he can mollify his colleague from Oxford, we might put in the words 'bona fide' and go on.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. I am willing to let this section stand if any member of the committee wishes that to be done.

Mr. NESBITT. If the mover of the Bill does not object, I am sure I do not.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 6—directors.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the hon. gentleman's object in raising the number of directors to 21?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. MILLER. I may say that when this Bill was before the Banking and Commerce Committee, that question was raised, and it was pointed out that charters had been granted to other companies doing a similar business, and having 25 directors.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I have any knowledge of companies, a large directorate is not conducive to good business management. It is impossible to get the directors together.

Mr. MILLER. It was argued that it is a good thing for a company obtaining business to have a pretty fair representation on its directorate, and this company is to have power to do business in several provinces.

On section 6: resolutions may be signed by all directors without calling meeting.

Mr. FIELDING. This is one of the points to which attention was drawn when the Bill was brought before the House. I find that this provision has been inserted in several Bills, the argument for it being that which was so forcibly presented by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) the other night, that is to say that a memorandum signed by all the directors would be much more likely to represent the wish of the body, than a resolution passed by a board quorum at a formal meeting. If a quorum were allowed to sign the memorandum there would be more objection, but as all must sign the memorandum it was thought by the committee that that was sufficient protection. I confess I do not like the method of legislation, but it is found in several other Bills; I have no very strong opinion about it, there is a precedent for it and we try, as far as possible, to have uniformity of legislation in these matters.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the effect of the resolution that they need not call a meeting of directors, but if they get a memorandum signed by all the directors that will be equivalent to a resolution of the board of directors?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is a very bad thing. You have no consultation, and the man who is very intelligent and experienced is in no better position than the man who has little intelligence and no experience. The document is put before each one separately and there is no chance for that consultation which is really the object for which a board of directors exists. And if there is anything that will tend to laxity in business and bad results, if actually carried out, I think it will be that system by which some one having an interest in the subject could go around and button-hole each director separately, put his own views before the director and get his signature. In that way you might get resolutions passed which, if a meeting was called, would never be considered.

Mr. SPROULE. I objected to this in the committee for very much the same reasons as have been advanced. I did so because I had seen and actually knew the baneful effects of such a system. When a paper of that kind is sent around it is accompanied by all the arguments in favour of doing it and doing it quickly and the directors are urged that unless they do it, some danger or loss will arise. All the arguments in favour of it are presented but none of the arguments against the proposition, whereas if the board were called together they might take a directly opposite view after consultation and hearing officials of the company. I move that section 6 be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the mover of the Bill if he persists in this end and if so what his reasons for doing so are?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). One of the main reasons for asking this power is the distances that prevail in our province, which are much greater, for instance, than in Ontario. A trust company may be formed in Ontario and possibly all the directors will reside in Toronto so that you can get them together very easily but in our province it is difficult to get together say twenty-one members of the board of directors of a company. As to the argument of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) if we have twenty-one directors a quorum will consist of eleven members, and eleven directors could pass any resolution they liked providing they agreed on it at any particular meeting of the board. The section says :

> The company may, by by-law, provide that a resolution in writing signed by all the directors.

The whole twenty-one. It seems to me that the shareholders or people interested in the company are better protected by a resolution signed by twenty-one directors than they would be at a meeting where possibly only eleven were present.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. member not rather have the reasoned opinion and decision of eleven men meeting and canvassing the whole thing than the unreasoned decision of twenty-one or twenty-two scattered all over? I have seen a board of directors come together with a proposition before them unanimously in favour of the proposition at the beginning of the discussion but after questioning the officials and discussing the matter the board absolutely changed its mind. You always have at a meeting of the board of directors, some one who is like a permanent head and understands the history of the company and the matter under discussion much better than any individual director and it is by having an opportunity to avail themselves of the knowledge, experience and information of that person that the directors form their best decisions. To make this board nondeliberative would be equivalent to electing members to this parliament and then saying to them that they need not come and sit in parliament, that a memoranda would be sent to them on each piece of legislation, and that if the majority agreed to it, it would become law. You take away the really valuable thing, deliberation.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman takes it for granted that if any resolution is put before a director at any particular place for his signature, he will not consider it, but will sign it. It must be remembered that he may have the advice of the very man who is the head of the company and knows about its business and he has before him the reasons why the resolution should be signed. I am not sure whether this power has been granted to all companies I am about to mention, but I was informed in the Banking and Commerce Committee that it had been granted to the Northwestern Trust Company, Chapter 113, Dominion Statutes, 1907 ; the Western Trust Company, chapter 180, Dominion Statutes, 1906; Prairie Provinces Trust Company, chapter 121, Dominion Statutes, 1909, and the Prudential Trust Company, chapter 124 of the Acts of 1909, on which the Bill we are now considering is exactly modelled, and as I said a few moments ago the very strongest argument I can advance for the written resolution signed by the directors—all the directors and not a part of them—is the great distances we have in the western provinces. Some of these directors will be in the province of Saskatchewan, but some will probably be in Alberta, or Manitoba, or perhaps British Columbia. It may be impossible to get all these directors together. This is not like a trust company confined to the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). There is a wider reason for this change. What is this company doing? It is administering trust funds. If we are to insist upon the law of trusteeship, if we are to recognize the importance of trusteeship, how can we say that a man can discharge his duty as trustee by signing a document presented to him as director and with no opportunity for full consultation with his fellow directors? If we are to uphold the idea of trusteeship, it is imperative that trust funds controlled by a board of directors should be administered by that board in consultation. And, while I am on my feet, I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that it is time we should have a uniform law in the formation of trust companies as for the banks. Also, it is high time that the returns of the trust companies should be published, as the returns of the banks, more or less, are published. The government gets returns from the trust companies, but, they are not published so far as I know. As to the point immediately before the committee, I think that the administering of trust funds by signing documents received by the directors individually through the post or otherwise is a violation of the first principle of trusteeship.

Subsection 3 agreed to—Yeas 35, Nays 29.

On section 8, business of the company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Subsection (j) of this section provides as to the real estate to be held by the company. It says:

—but the company shall sell any real estate acquired in satisfaction of any debt due to itself, other than as trustee or in an official capacity, within seven years after such acquisition, unless such time is extended by order of the Governor in Council, otherwise such real estate shall revert to His Majesty for the use of Canada.

I am not quite sure what is meant by 'shall revert to His Majesty.' It would rather imply that some time or other the property had belonged to His Majesty, and after having been vested in a company, was now to revert to His Majesty for the use of Canada. I call attention to that. I do not see why real estate in provinces which were provinces before confederation, and which was Crown property, should revert to His Majesty in right of the Dominion of Canada. It might be all very well in the western provinces, but certainly in the old provinces it should go to the provincial government.

On section 15,

Mr. FIELDING. A question arose on this clause the other day in apprehension of a conflict between the federal and provincial authorities. I find the clause is in a number of charters, and the explanation is that which I gave at a venture the other evening, that inasmuch as the laws of the provinces deal with trusteeships, and as all we do is to create a company for the management of the business, what is really contemplated by these words is that the company incorporated by the Dominion in the management of trustee business must operate under the laws of the province, and not do anything in conflict therewith. That I think is all that is intended. I find it has been in a number of Acts. I do not know whether the Minister of Public Works will regard that as a sufficient explanation ; but at all events, that is the theory upon which this clause has been put into a number of Bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think the fact of there being similar provisions in charters of a number of other companies, carries so much weight, because the custom is for the draftsman to copy the charters which have been previously obtained. No doubt that has been the case in the third subsection of section 6. I would have no objection to section 15 reading as follows :

The powers and authority hereby granted to the company shall be exercised in any province subject to the laws of such province in that behalf, so far as they are not inconsistent herewith.

But it does seem to me that to make a statute of this parliament entirely subject to the laws of the provincial legislature, and then to go further and declare that whatever may be enacted in this chapter should have no force or effect if it is inconsistent with the laws of the province, not only laws which now exist but laws that may be passed in future, is I think to subordinate the powers of this parliament to the powers of the provincial legislatures, and I do not think that is proper legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. But suppose provincial laws were inconsistent with this Act, if the provincial legislature were within their own jurisdiction, their laws would prevail.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because when parliament incorporates a company with power to do business throughout Canada, then the authority of parliament is supreme.

Mr. FIELDING. Only within certain limits.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not like to differ with my hon. friend, but it has always been my view that the moment parliament gives authority to incorporate a company for purposes which are of a general character, Canadian in their character, giving a company power to do business throughout Canada, then parliament must be the judge of what power should be vested in the company, parliament is the sole judge of that. For instance, when parliament creates a railway company with power to build railways throughout Canada, parliament can give powers of expropriation. No provincial legislature could alter this charter because parliament is supreme, and so, if it is a fact that this parliament has power to incorporate the company at all it has authority to vest it with the powers deemed necessary to enable it to carry on its business. It seems to me that the section ought to be read that it should be subject to the laws of the provinces in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that already the provinces have intervened in cases like this and even if the Bill were drawn as suggested by the Minister of Public Works they would still claim the right. In the case of insurance companies some of the provinces have refused to allow them to do business in the province unless they complied with certain provincial statutes, one of which was the payment of a fee, and the other registration in the province. I know that such is the case at the present time. British Columbia has, I understand, challenged the authority of corporations doing business under federal charters, so has Manitoba, and in both cases these companies were obliged to comply with the requirements of the law or otherwise refrain from doing business in these provinces though they had their charter from the federal parliament. That is the way I think this would work ; if you said that they might exercise such powers in so far as they were not inconsistent with the Act that would not cover it all.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether the question has much sense in it at all, but there is an authority granted to a company to be exercised in any province subject to the laws of that province. It is situated, we will say, in Regina under the laws of Saskatchewan. A trust has been put into the hands of the company by the province of Alberta. The Alberta laws are different from those of Saskatchewan. Does the trust make it necessary that the laws in accordance with that trust should follow the origin of the trust? They may be greatly different. Would this company have to carry out each trust according to the laws of the province from which it originated? What do the solons of the House say about that not including the Minister of Finance because he is not a solon.

Mr. FIELDING. He does not claim to be a solon.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Minister of the Interior were here I would appeal to him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says, but if you pass this section as it is, each province could legislate as to this particular trust company. Alberta could legislate in one way, Saskatchewan in another, Ontario in another, Quebec in another, and each province might have different provisions which this company would be bound to obey because parliament has said : It is true, we give you certain powers, it is true we state what you shall do, it is true we make provision for the holding of the meetings of the board of directors, and the way in which you shall handle trust moneys, but in every province you must comply with the laws that the provincial legislature may pass, and any Act at all which is inconsistent with this would override this statute. I think this parliament ought not to declare that any charter which it gives to a company may be overridden by the legislature of any province. The hon. member for East Grey spoke of provincial legislatures claiming the right to prevent a company incorporated by this parliament from doing business without paying a tax and taking out a license. I admit that, and I think that the Privy Council held that they had that power in the case of Parsons v. Citizens Insurance Company, that power being based on the right of the provincial legislature to impose taxation for the purpose of raising a provincial revenue. That is under a clause of the British North America Act. Therefore, I am not prepared to dispute that if this company is incorporated by parliament it may be required to pay a tax or a fee and to take out a license. But that is altogether a different provision. In this case parliament is abdicating its functions, and saying that whatever the provincial legislature shall do with regard to this company shall be the paramount law, and shall override whatever this parliament has done with regard to this company. That is why I object to it.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) thinks this point important I would rather he should draft an amendment, and let the Bill stand because on a question of a possible conflict between the provinces, and the Dominion, even if it affects only this one particular charter, I should like to have the advice of the Department of Justice. It is really a very important question, and it has an effect upon other things. I know the purpose of the clause, and it is a good purpose. It is important to draw a distinction between the powers of a company created as a man with authority to do business, and the nature of the business which is governed not by the Dominion but by the provinces. That is what those who drafted the clause had in mind. Whether it is adequately expressed in this clause is a matter for our legal friends to determine, and I would like to have the advice of the Minister of Justice with regard to it.

Mr. CARVELL. I would suggest that if the promoter would simply drop out the latter half of the section because the laws of the different provinces have to prevail whether we want them to or not it would meet the case. I could give an illustration. This company is authorized to loan money on mortgages and it becomes a matter of civil contract. The legislature of each province has a perfect right to pass any laws it chooses regarding these contracts. For instance, we had the matter discussed only a few days ago on the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) being an amendment to the Interest Act. We held, and I believe rightly, that this parliament has no right to say to a company: You must cancel the mortgage. All we can say is: You must not charge any more interest after a certain time. The legislature of the province, however, can say that the company, after the payment of a certain amount of money, must discharge the mortgage from the records. It is the law of the province which has to prevail. I think that if all after the word 'behalf' were omitted we will have accomplished all we can accomplish and there will be no conflict between the federal and provincial authorities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would meet my views.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that what the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) says would accomplish what was suggested, but I entirely concur with the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that this is a matter of sufficient importance to justify us in getting the advice of the Minister of Justice so that we will be absolutely sure about what we are doing in this matter. The different provinces have the right to regulate contracts. By this Bill we are creating a body corporate to do business, but the provinces have asserted their right to regulate the manner of carrying on business in their various jurisdictions. It would be unfortunate if there should be any conflict as to the proper exercise of that jurisdiction. The provinces, more than we, are concerned with the manner in which this business shall be carried on. I entirely agree with what the Minister of Finance says. I do not feel that I have given this matter sufficient attention to be able to say what shall ultimately appear to be the right thing to do, but I think this is a matter that should receive the consideration suggested by the Minister of Finance, and that it should stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 16, annual statement to be given to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. Just as a matter of information, may I ask the Minister of Finance if in carrying out similar legislation in regard to other companies, he could tell me what is required other than the four things that are set out? I would ask the minister how the operation of that clause has worked with regard to other companies?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to answer the hon. gentleman offhand, but so far as I know returns have been sent in and if they appear to conform with the Act I do not think any question would be raised. I would like to look up the returns of these companies before I could answer more definitely.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). That emphasizes my point that it is high time that trust companies doing business in Canada should send their returns in on a standardized form just as in the case of railways. These returns should be published, and in that way we will get some idea of what business they are doing. There are a large number of trust companies now doing business in every province and they are getting to have an enormous influence in connection with financial affairs in this country. At present these returns are sent to the department and they are, as I understand, examined in but a perfunctory way. The time has come when there should be uniform legislation in regard to trust companies, as there is in regard to banks and railways.

Mr. FOSTER. The point gets additional force in the fact that trust companies incorporated in the provinces have to give very much fuller returns than trust companies incorporated by the Dominion parliament. We may have trust companies come seeking legislation here for the very purpose, in their view, that they would not have to submit to so much publicity as if they were incorporated in a province. Publicity is not a bad feature, and we should demand from the trust companies incorporated by us no less information than is demanded by the provincial governments from trust companies incorporated by the provinces. Are joint stock companies, incorporated by the Dominion, obliged to give any return?

Mr. FIELDING. Companies incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Act do not make returns, but those incorporated by special charter are, in most cases, required to and do make returns.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this matter is worthy the attention of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. It is.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance will, I think, agree with me that we should demand from the companies incorporated by us no less in the way of publicity than is demanded from companies which are incorporated by the provincial legislatures.

Mr. FIELDING. That seems reasonable. We have had banks, and insurance companies, and loan companies, for a very long time, and in the light of experience we have found it expedient to have general legislation in regard to them. Trust companies are a more modern invention, but they are becoming somewhat numerous, and there is force in the suggestion, which I think has been offered before, that we should have, if not some general legislation, at all events some standard returns and some publicity. The whole subject, in view of recent events, is well worthy of careful consideration, and I will see that it is not overlooked.

Mr. SPROULE. And further, loan companies and insurance companies should send in a return as to how much unclaimed money remains in their hands. My own view is that that money should be transferred to the state after the expiry of a certain period.

Mr. FIELDING. A colleague of the hon. gentleman has a Bill before the House for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. And there should also be legislation to compel companies incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Act to forward returns. There should be such a proviso in all such special Acts as that before us, and I had intended to move to that effect before the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. We cannot do better than give this matter a moment's consideration. The trust companies touch the people's interest very closely, and they have originated out of the fact that in some instances in the past the estates of deceased persons have been squandered. One of the most important functions of these trust companies is to act as executors in administering estates. We have had no scandals so far as I am aware of in connection with trust companies, but it would not be a very hazardous prediction to say that if we are not careful in our legislation we may have them some time in the future. The trust companies exercise a most important function in that they handle the money of people of limited means. They are very desirable institutions, but it is the duty of this parliament to see that they are hedged about with every possible safeguard in any legislation we pass regarding them. I emphasize the necessity for full, accurate, and published returns. As the years go by the necessity for this is growing inasmuch as to a large extent the same men are connected with a number of these public financial institutions. The people who are connected with banks are very often connected with trust companies, mortgage companies and insurance companies, and it is not easy to trace the money from one transaction to another or from one company to another. Therefore it is necessary that in this matter the government should exercise the most careful supervision. In saying that I have no reason to believe that any existing company has done anything that is not absolutely fair or that this company will not follow the same honourable course that has been followed by other companies. But this is a company which will have the custody of the moneys of a large class of people. We institute these trust companies to discharge duties which used to be discharged by private executors and we should be very careful to see that they are so instituted as not to have the disastrous results which have often followed from the appointment of private executives.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any provision giving this company power to take money on deposit?

Mr. FIELDING. Subsection (g) of section 8 provides that it may receive moneys for investment and allow interest thereon for a reasonable time until invested.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the shareholders of these trust companies subject to any double liability?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Why should they not be the same as banks in that respect, seeing that they receive trust moneys?

Mr. FIELDING. The fact that during all these years the wisdom of parliament has not imposed any such double liability suggests that there are probably good reasons. There is certainly a broad distinction between a trust company and a bank. A trust company's powers are large, but those of a bank are larger, and the double liability might be right in the one case and not in the other.

Mr. BLAIN. That same argument might be urged against the revision of any law. These large corporations open their doors to receive the savings of the people of this country just as banks do. It is true, their line of business is different; but their responsibility to the wage-earner is the same, and I cannot understand why the shareholders of a bank doing a very much smaller business in some parts of Canada should be subject to the double liability, while the shareholders of a large corporation doing ten times as much business are not subject to the same liability. It seems to me that this is a matter that ought to receive some consideration from the Minister of Finance. I suppose that the failure of the Farmers' Bank causes legislation of this kind to be more closely criticised than it would be otherwise, and it seems to me that a good time to surround institutions of this kind with every precaution in the interest of depositors is before we have any great disaster among them. When this whole matter is up for consideration, I think it would be in the interest of the people of Canada and would be appreciated by them, if my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would give some attention to this matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a disputed opinion. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) is against a double liability.

Mr. BLAIN. I differ with the hon. member for South York on that point.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I believe the protection of the public in the case of banks is public inspection, and not double liability. If we had public inspection, the chances are that we would not need the double liability; or we might have the security of both. Certainly I do not see the sense of the government which charters a bank evading the responsibility of its inspection and putting that on the shoulders of the shareholders by involving them in a double liability. A wise system of public inspection would protect both the public and the shareholders.

Mr. MILLER. I think there is another reason besides the one given by the Minister of Finance why it may be right to impose the double liability on the shareholders of a bank and not on those of a trust company. My hon. friend from Peel might argue just as well and reasonably that the shareholders of a loan company should be subject to a double liability, because they handle a very large amount of the people's funds which they take on deposit.

Mr. BLAIN. Why should they not?

Mr. MILLER. The reason is that the government gives to a bank a great and very valuable monopoly, in the right to issue notes and in unusual methods and privileges by way of securing advances made by them. No such monopoly is given either to trust companies or loan companies. The business of a trust company is carried on by private parties all over the Dominion; so also is all the business done by a loan company. Why should not the shareholders of a manufacturing company have a double liability as well as those of a loan company?

Mr. LENNOX. They do not take deposits.

Mr. MILLER. But they have many small stockholders who entrust their money to the chief stockholders who are looking after the business, and sometimes they do take deposits.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister not think this matter should receive the attention of the government and the Finance Department? The arguments of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) are altogether insufficient. I could not see the force of the argument that because we ask that shareholders of a trust company should be held for double liability, therefore the stockholders in a manufacturing establishment should be so held. There is a very great difference, as my hon. friend understands very well. I urge it for this reason, that they are both banking concerns. The trust corporation is a banking concern in the eyes of the depositor, just as a bank is. We have had some great disasters in Ontario in financial corporations, such as the York Loan, in Toronto, and the Atlas, in St. Thomas.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). These were not trust companies.

Mr. BLAIN. These bring great disasters to depositors, and wherever a set of men, whether in connection with a trust company or a bank, receive powers from this parliament to accept the wages and savings of the people of Canada, we should put every possible restriction around them, so that their interests should be protected. I can see no force in any argument advanced this afternoon in favour of the contention that the shareholders of a bank should be called upon for a double liability while the shareholders in a trust company should not. Banks, as in the case of the Farmers' Bank, sometimes hold small amounts of money compared with the amounts held in trust by these other corporations, and I cannot see why one should be held for double liability and the other escape altogether. The Minister of Finance may say that because England has never had any government banking restrictions and has not now, after all her experience in financial matters, therefore we should not have government inspection in Canada. If we accepted arguments of that kind we could find proofs on every hand to sustain any argument.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Finance is not in any different position from my hon. friend in respect to this matter. We have both been sitting in this House and voting for charters for trust companies without any such provision. We must have seen some distinction between them and a bank, or else we would not have helped to put their charters through. However, we live and learn, and, without discussing the Farmers' Bank, or the question of bank inspection, both of which will no doubt be discussed in due course, and confining myself entirely to trust companies, I would say that we must at all times be careful in the incorporation of financial institutions to surround them with reasonable checks and guides, and if the experience of either the Dominion or the provinces is calculated to suggest any additional checks and restrictions, I certainly agree that we should profit by them. I do not think that we should come to the conclusion that we should impose a double liability on trust companies as on banks. The difference is very material. However, on every question of that nature I quite agree with hon. gentlemen opposite that we should exercise the utmost care and what my hon. friend and others have said along the same line to-day will receive our very careful consideration.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MR. ROBERT KELLY.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Is one Robert Kelly in the employ of the government at Vancouver, British Columbia?
2. If so, in what capacity and what are his duties?
3. Is the government aware that the following Canadian Press despatch appeared in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of January 26, 1911:—

'Vancouver, B.C., January 25.—At the Chinese investigation to-day, Joseph Martin, M.P. for St. Pancras, Eng., renewed his charges of graft against the Liberal organization in Vancouver, couching his remarks in general terms. He stated that he knew nothing of his own personal knowledge of fraud in connection with the Chinese investigation. He added that Sir Wilfrid Laurier could remedy matters in five minutes by refusing to accept Robert Kelly's appointments. "If I had charge of an investigation," added Mr. Martin, "I could prove it to the hilt without any question. I would not give any evidence myself, but I would call a lot of people who would have knowledge. I have been told there is graft in every department in which Mr. Kelly saw a dollar to be made. Nobody could get an order or a contract from the government in the last nine years except through Mr. Kelly."

'Mr. Martin, when asked for names by Mr. McCrossins, said he would suggest Mr. Kelly as a witness, also Mr. Templeman and R. Smith, M.P. "As it is," he added, "the Liberal party has disappeared in a cloud of smoke." '

4. Is it the intention of the government to appoint a commission to investigate the serious charge made by Joseph Martin, M.P.?
5. Is Joseph Martin, M.P., a member of the British parliament?
6. Was the said Joseph Martin, M.P., formerly a member of this parliament and a supporter of the present government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1 and 2. Robert Kelly is not in the employ of the government.

3. Yes; members of the government have read the testimony given by Mr. Martin, and reported in the Ottawa 'Citizen'. All I have to say personally is that during the nearly fifteen years that the present government has been in office I have only received one communication from Mr. Robert Kelly.

4. There is an investigation now going on.

5. Mr. Joseph Martin is now a member of the Imperial House of Commons.

6. Mr. Martin was a member of this parliament, but not since the present government came into office.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DEVELOPING COMPANY.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar):

1. Has the government or any department of the government bought any land from the Grand Trunk Pacific Developing Company? If so, how much land was bought and what price was paid for it?
2. For what purpose or purposes was each parcel bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Answering for my own department, I may say that the department has not bought any land from the Grand Trunk Pacific Developing Company, but the company has offered a free site for a public building in Prince Rupert.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there any other department that can answer anything about it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not. We have made inquiry.

Mr. LENNOX. The matter is probably rather in the jurisdiction of the Railway Department. I think it had better stand for the present.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. AMES:

Is it the intention of the government during the present session to bring in a measure affecting the naturalization of aliens?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

THE FARMERS' BANK FAILURE.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. Did the Finance Department or any of its officials, the Finance Minister or any other member of the government, receive any communications, verbal or written, previous to the issue of the certificate of the Treasury Board to the Farmers' Bank, cautioning, warning or suggesting inquiry as to the standing or character of the promoters, or the proceedings by which the deposit was procured?
2. If so, did the government make any inquiry or investigation with the view of satisfying itself as to the bona fides and sufficiency of the undertaking?

Mr. FIELDING. The government did not receive in any form any information which afforded ground for the refusal of the certificate. At one stage of the transaction, some shareholders, through their solicitor, applied to have proceedings delayed until he might be heard. The solicitor afterwards withdrew this request. After the certificate issued, a communication from the Canadian Bankers' Association, bearing same date as that of the issue of the certificate, reached the department next day, stating that there was some question as to the regularity of the subscription. The procedure in respect to the issue of the certificate to enable the Farmers' Bank to do business was substantially the same as in other cases of similar character.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

* Mr. BORDEN:

1. At what date is it expected that the Quebec bridge will be completed?
2. What has been the total cost to date, respectively, of the remains of the structure and the portion which fell?
3. What has been the total cost of the bridge to the country up to the present time?
4. What is the estimated actual value of the ruins or remains of the structure?
5. What is the estimated total cost of the bridge when completed?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Various tenderers name dates from June, 1914, to December, 1916, all contingent upon the masonry being completed by November, 1911.

2. The following is the only one of this nature, in regard to which the Board has any information:

Removal of debris, contract price.	$45,000
Amount paid to date	31,995
Removal of old false work, contract price	22,750
Amount paid to date	13,644

3. $7,154,987.49.

4. The steel remaining the property of the government as follows:

	Lbs.
South side yards	2,369,891
North side yards	18,070,703
Two approach spans	2,200,000
	22,640,594

It is very difficult to determine the value of this material, taking into consideration the expense of handling, loading, transporting and having no knowledge of the use to which it will be put. For the present all that can be figured on is what it would be worth as scrap, which has a value of about $10 per ton. This would make this material worth about $113,000. It is difficult to estimate the value of the material in the present piers, in regard to the new structure, but a safe estimate would be $300,000.

5. As the tenders are still under consideration, it would not be in the public interest to make public the amounts.

Mr. FIELDING.

MR. FREDERICK J. NASH.

Mr. STANFIELD:

1. Who are the employees of the government in the inland revenue service in Charlottetown?
2. Is Frederick J. Nash, of Charlottetown, an employee of the Dominion government? If so, what are his duties, what is his salary per month, how long has he been employed, and what are his office hours?
3. What is the total amount he has received as salary from the time of his first employment to 1st January, 1911?
4. What is the number of hours the said Frederick J. Nash has been on duty each day since his first employment up to 1st January, 1911, as per time-book in the office where he has been employed?
5. Has the said Frederick J. Nash ever qualified for a civil service position?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN:

1. In the excise branch: Samuel C. Nash, Theophilus Moore and Frederick J. Nash. In the Weights and Measures Branch: E. Davy, H. Hughes. In the Gas Inspection Branch, J. H. Bell.

2. Frederick J. Nash is an employee in said office at Charlottetown. His duties are to supervise such licensed establishments and do such other work, as may be assigned him by the collector of the division. His salary per month is $58.33.

He has been employed since May 26, 1908. His office hours as an excise officer are from 8 a.m., to 5 p.m.

3. $1,819.52.

4. The collector advises me as follows: 'F. J. Nash has had full charge of Messrs. T. B. and D. J. Riley's Tobacco Factory since his appointment, has performed his own and deputy collector Moore's duties during three months of 1909 when the latter was on sick leave, and has assisted in office.

5. Yes.

CARILLON CANAL WATER-POWERS.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Who is now the lessee of the hydraulic powers of Carillon and Pointe Fortune?
2. On what date did this lease come into force, and how long has it existed?
3. Was the lessee bound to carry out certain obligations before the end of the first year, and did he do so in the terms of the lease? If not, is the lease therefore cancelled?
4. If the government has not cancelled this lease, does it intend to do so shortly?
5. What is the rental and how much has the government received from this source since the leasing to the last person?
6. Does the lessee still owe any arrears?
7. Who have been the lessees for the last twenty years, and how much has the government received each year from the different lessees?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Lease granted to the General Manufacturing Company of Canada, dated July 26, 1898, and to Crawford Ross, of the City of Ottawa, dated 12th December, 1908.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Yes. The lease is not cancelled.

4. It has been represented to the government that a strong company is being formed fully competent to develop this water-power under the present lease. A reasonable time will be given them to perfect their plans and begin operations.

5. $2 per horse-power per year, and $100 land rent from Crawford Ross. The government received $100 from Crawford Ross; see answer to No. 7.

6. Yes, $150, payable March 15, 1911, in advance.

7. The only other leases for water-power besides those mentioned above were: A lease to William R. Hibbert, of St. Andrews, P.Q., dated 18th May, 1897, cancelled 6th June, 1899; lease to John P. Mullarkey, dated June 3, 1901, and cancelled on 16th May, 1906. Paid by John P. Mullarkey $500 in 1901, and by Crawford Ross $50 in 1909, and $50 in 1910.

NETHERLAND LOAN COMPANY.

*Mr. MONK:

1. Has the government officially notified Mr. Preston, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Amsterdam, Holland, that his statement about Sir Charles Fitzpatrick being the source of the information that led to the withdrawal of Dutch financiers from a proposed investment in western Canadian farm securities, is contradicted by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court? If so, what is the nature of Mr. Preston's reply?

2. If the government has not notified Mr. Preston about Sir Charles Fitzpatrick's denial, is it the intention to do so, and also obtain from Mr. Preston full explanation in regard to the matter?

3. Has the government had any further correspondence with the Commissioner of Trade in Holland on this question since the adoption of the resolution by this House for the production of the correspondence bearing on the Netherlands Loan Mortgage Company?

4. Will the said correspondence be laid upon the table of the House?

5. What steps does the government intend to take in order to remove the impression created by the alleged depreciation of the west as a suitable field for the investment of European capital?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. and 2. No, for the reason that communications were immediately received from Mr. Preston containing the information that Sir Charles Fitzpatrick had publicly denied having given any depreciatory information respecting western Canada.

3. Yes.

4. Yes, if the correspondence be moved for.

5. The department has already issued an official statement respecting the high regard in which western farm lands are held by some of the principal loan and investment companies.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. BOYCE:

1. At what date was the present Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia appointed?

2. Was there any correspondence with the government or any minister of the government in reference to the continuance of the lieutenant governor as a director of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company?

3. Was there any verbal communication with or between members of the government on the subject matter of question?

4. Was there any consent by the government or any member of the government, or understanding on its or their part, that the lieutenant governor might continue to act as such director?

5. Is the lieutenant governor still a director of said company?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

Mr. McGregor was appointed Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia on October 18, 1910.

Neither in the case of Mr. McGregor nor any other lieutenant governor was there any correspondence with the view of imposing any conditions in relation to any Lieutenant Governor's business. In all cases matters of that kind are left to the Governor's judgment. The government does not know whether the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia is or is not a director of the Nova Scotia Steel Company.

BANK FAILURES IN CANADA.

*Mr. FOSTER:

Has the Finance Department obtained the reports of the several curators appointed for the banks that have failed during the last five years?

Mr. FIELDING:

The Department of Finance has asked for and obtained from the several curators or liquidators reports upon the financial condition of the several banks referred to.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Is the government aware that Mr. H. C. McLeod, late general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, is alleged to have publicly stated that since 1865 over $40,000,000 have been lost by the shareholders of insolvent Canadian banks? If so, is such statement correct?

2. Is the government aware that it is asserted by the same gentleman that there are fully eight times as great a percentage of failures among Canadian banks as is to be found of insolvent United States National banks? If so, is such statement correct?

3. Is the government aware that the same gentleman has asserted that there is a greater percentage of failures among Canadian banks than among banks of any other country? If so, is such assertion correct?

4. Is the government aware that the same eminent Canadian banker, Mr. McLeod, publicly stated that the Bankers' Association of Canada was aware that a number of Canadian banks were submitting false reports to the government? If so, did the government take any steps to verify such assertion?

Mr. FIELDING:

1, 2 and 3. The government are aware that Mr. McLeod has from time to time expressed his views as to the operation of the Canadian Bank Act. Whether such views were correct or otherwise the government have not felt called upon to say. Mr. McLeod's statements and views were summed up in a pamphlet which was widely circulated in December, 1909, which pamphlet does not contain the allegations referred to in the hon. gentleman's question. The chief purpose of Mr. McLeod's pamphlet was the advocating, in connection with the pending revision of the Bank Act, of some form of external bank inspection. From the arguments used by him in this pamphlet, the government are of opinion that he would quite approve of the method of external inspection provided in the Bill now before the House.

4. Mr. McLeod's statements respecting falsification of returns have not been understood to refer to any intentional falsification, but to a practice of long standing, but now discontinued, concerning the method in which many of the banks have kept their circulation accounts.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Is it true, as publicly stated by Mr. H. C. McLeod, late general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, that since 1865 over $40,000,000 have been lost by the shareholders of insolvent Canadian banks?

2. Is it true, as claimed by the same gentleman, that there are fully eight times as great a percentage of failures among Canadian banks as is to be found of insolvent American National banks?

3. Is Mr. McLeod's statement that there is a greater percentage of failures among Canadian banks than there is among the banks of any other country, a correct one?

4. Is the government aware that about a year ago an eminent Canadian banker, Mr. McLeod, publicly stated that the Bankers' Association were aware that at that time a number of different Canadian banks were submitting false reports to the government?

5. Were any steps taken to verify that assertion?

Mr. FIELDING:

Answer to previous question applies.

DAIRY INDUSTRY.

Mr. BRODER:

1. What was the nature of the memorials presented to the government on the 19th January, 1911, with respect to the dairy industry of Canada?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario).

2. Has the government yet taken into consideration the requests contained within the said memorials?

3. What action does the government propose to take in connection therewith, and when?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. The government was asked to appoint an official weigher of butter and cheese at Montreal, and also that cheese buyers should be licensed and required to give bonds.

2. Yes.

3. The matter is still under consideration.

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY COMPANY.

Mr. NORTHRUP:

1. Is the honourable the Minister of Labour aware that an application has been made before a judge of the Superior Court sitting in and for the district of Quebec under and in virtue of the Combines Investigation Act for an investigation concerning the affairs of the United Shoe Machinery Company of Canada?

2. If so, has the minister instructed anybody to appear for him or for his department or to speak for him on the said application?

3. Has the Minister of Labour or any officials of the Department of Labour or anybody on behalf of the government assisted or aided in the preparation or organization of the committee who are applying for said investigation, or otherwise assisted in bringing the matter before the courts?

Mr. KING:

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. No.

PRINTING BUREAU INVESTIGATION.

Mr. NORTHRUP:

1. Is all the evidence that was taken in the investigation into the Printing Bureau affairs by the honourable the Secretary of State printed in the blue-book laid on the table by him?

2. Was the evidence taken under oath?

3. For what cause was Mr. R. E. Cook dismissed from the service?

4. On what particular facts was the charge against him based?

5. On whose representations was such action taken?

6. Who is the present superintendent of stationery, if any?

7. If none, who is discharging the duties of the office, and at what salary?

8. Who is the present accountant of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, and how long has he filled the office?

9. Is he duly qualified under the Act?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. The Blue-book contains all the evidence of which any written record was made. In addition to the witnesses examined at the Printing Bureau, many other persons were interrogated at different times and places, but no record was made of their statements. Information was also obtained through an examination of the files of several departments, and of a large number of papers and documents all of which were returned to the places whence they were obtained, without any minute or their contents being made.

2. No person was examined under oath as the investigation was a departmental inquiry, and it was not deemed necessary to issue a commission authorizing the taking of evidence under oath.

3. For disobeying instructions, wasting public moneys, placing orders outside the Bureau without securing competitive prices, and for untruthfulness and incompetence.

4. His dismissal was not due to any charge being made against him, but to the facts elicited in the course of the investigation.

5. Action was taken by the Secretary of State as the result of his investigation.

6. The office is vacant.

7. The former assistant superintendent of stationery who has been promoted to the position of superintendent of stores and distribution at the salary of the late superintendent of stationery, namely $2,500.

8. J. A. Frigon, since the 4th March, 1907, when he was promoted after serving 13 years in the Printing Bureau.

9. Dr. S. E. Dawson, the late King's Printer, recommended that Mr. Frigon be promoted, and certified that he had passed all the necessary examinations for promotion, and was fitted in every respect for the position. The examinations embraced the requirements set forth in the Act.

Mr. CROCKET :

1. Has the Department of Public Works paid rent for any office in connection with the survey of the St. John river channel between Fredericton and Woodstock?

2. If so, where is said office situated, and what was the monthly rent paid therefor?

Mr. PUGSLEY :

1. Yes.

2 (a) In Fredericton.

(b) Ten dollars per month.

MR. ALPHONSE GERVAIS.

Mr. PAQUET :

1. How long has Alphonse Gervais been employed by the government, and what yearly salary has been paid him since his appointment?

2. What is the nature of his employment and where performed?

3. Is the government aware that the said Alphonse Gervais is said to have been condemned to pay a fine for electoral corruption?

4. If so, does the government intend to notify him of his discharge?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN :

1. Mr. Alphonse Gervais has been employed in the inland revenue service at St. Hyacinthe since April 1, 1901. His salary has been as follows : 1900-1, $300 ; 1901-2, 1902-3, 1903-4, $500 ; 1904-5, 10 months at $500 ; 2 months at $600 ; 1905-6, 1906-7, 1907-8, 1908-9, 1909-10, $600.

2. He is attached to the bonded factory survey at St. Hyacinthe, Que.

3. The department has no knowledge respecting this matter.

4. In view of answer 3, no reply to this question is necessary.

PULP WOOD EXPORTS.

4. Who is the caretaker of the Military Riding School of St. Hyacinthe, and what annual salary does he receive?

5. Who is supposed to do the heating of the Riding School, and what yearly salary does he receive for his work?

5. N. Langlier, $400 per annum.

6. There is at present, in addition to the caretaker, a fireman. There is no immediate intention of making any change.

7. In 1908-9, $997.80; in 1909-10, $976.32, exclusive of salaries of caretaker and furnaceman.

BOOT CONTRACT FOR NAVAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PERLEY:

1. Did the Department of Naval Service call for tenders for 600 pairs of half boots for the use of seamen of the naval service, during October or November, 1910?

2. If so, what standard pattern and specifications were adopted by the department, and upon what were they based?

3. What opportunities for tendering were offered to Canadian manufacturers?

4. What tenders were received and at what prices?

5. To whom was the contract awarded, and at what figure?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. On October 25, 1910, the Department of the Naval Service called for tenders for all articles of kit and clothing to be issued to the men of the naval service under the order in council on the subject, dated 6th June, 1910. Seamen's boots are included in this list.

2 and 3. Some time before calling for these tenders the department communicated with the secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association with a view to obtaining the names of all the Canadian manufacturers of the articles required by the department. The association recommended the use of the 'Canadian Trade Index,' a book published by the Manufacturers' Association, and which is presumed to contain the names of the manufacturers in Canada, whether members of the Manufacturers' Association or not. The list of manufacturers of boots in this book contains about 100 names. Circulars were sent to all these manufacturers inclosing a copy of the specification of the boot used in the imperial navy, and stating that the Department of the Naval Service would in the near future call for tenders for 600 pairs of boots of this type; that the specification was sent as a guide to the type of boot required, but that, as Canadian methods of manufacture were different to British methods, the exact detail of specification would not be adhered to. The circular stated that a standard specification and pattern would be adopted, based on the experience of the department after a thorough trial of Canadian made boots.

The specification on the tender form read as follows:—

'Boots to be supplied under this contract shall be similar in quality to the samples exhibited at the time of tendering, and shall be made of an equal quality in all respects of Canadian or British tanned leather. The sample boot accompanying the accepted tender shall be used as a sealed pattern, and all subsequent deliveries shall conform in all respects of manufacture, material, workmanship and finish to that sample, otherwise the officers of the department shall be at liberty to reject the same.'

The advertisement calling for tenders was published in the press of all industrial centres in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A duplicate slip of the advertisement was forwarded to each manufacturer on the list published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Samples of the British boots were exhibited at Halifax, Quebec, Ottawa and Victoria, and were also forwarded to firms in other localities for their inspection. The proceedings adopted in this case are, in a general way, the same as those which were followed in obtaining tenders for other articles required by the Naval Service Department.

4 and 5. The following tenders were received: Ames-Holden, $3.50; Jas. McCready Company, $3.75, $3.50; Slater Shoe Company, $3.50, $3.65, $3.85, $3.45, $3.25, $3.25, $3.10, $3.00, $3.40, $2.95, $3.75, $2.25; John Lennox, $3.25, $3.25; Sovereign Shoe Company, $3.50; Robert Taylor, $3.50; George A. Slater, $4.00. The samples received were examined by three naval officers, who chose three boots as being the most suitable received. A further and independent examination was made by experts on boots from the Militia Department, who chose one boot as being, in their opinion, the most suitable for our needs. This boot was one of the three chosen at the first inspection. These inspections were made without knowledge of either the makers' names or the prices of the boots. This decision was accepted by the department and the contract was placed with the Slater Shoe Company, Ltd., of Montreal, the makers of the accepted sample at the price quoted in their tender, $3.45 per pair. This boot is considered a most suitable boot, and in many respects superior to the British boot.

3. What was the price paid for the lot purchased, and when was the option exercised?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1 and 2. One option taken, dated 11th February, 1910. from Mr. Noel Marcille at $4,140 for four months.
3. 10th June, 1910.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WINTER SERVICE.

1. What sort of coal has been used during the last ten years and up to the present time, in the ice breaking steamers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland?
2. From what mine or mines has this coal been procured?
3. Has this coal proved satisfactory as a steam producing coal?
4. Have any complaints as to the quality of this coal been received from the officers or engineers of these steamers, or from any of them?
5. Have any reports been received from the officers or engineers of these steamers, or from any of them, as to the quality of the coal used?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. Bituminous screened coal.
2. Mines of the Intercolonial Coal Mining Company.
3. Fairly satisfactory.
4. Yes.
5. Yes.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. ROBB:

1. In what year was the Soulanges canal opened for navigation, and the Beauharnois canal abandoned for general navigation?
2. From the opening of the Soulanges canal until leased to McIntyre and Robert, what were the annual expenses to the government for maintenance and repairs to the Beauharnois canal?
3. Under the lease to McIntyre and Robert, what amount does the government save in repairs and maintenance?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Soulanges canal opened for navigation on May 1, 1900. Beauharnois canal abandoned for general navigation January 1, 1908.
2. Annual expense for Beauharnois canal, maintenance and repairs from opening of Soulanges canal until leased to McIntyre and Robert, average $20,160.
3. Saved in maintenance and repairs, $23,160.

INDIAN RESERVES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY BELT.

Mr. PERLEY:

1. With reference to the Indian reservations in the province of British Columbia outside of the twenty mile belt, has the Dominion or the province control of these lands?
2. Can an intending settler purchase these lands and obtain a patent for the same? If so, should he apply to the Dominion or the province?
3. If there is a dispute between the Dominion and the province as to jurisdiction over these lands, are there any proceedings pending either in the court or otherwise to settle the same, and how soon may a decision be expected?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Indian reserves in British Columbia, outside the railway belt, are under the control of the Department of Indian Affairs.
2. No land on an Indian reserve can be sold until after surrender by the Indians, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Act. The right of the government of Canada to grant the lands upon such surrender is disputed by the province of British Columbia.
3. No judicial proceedings are pending, but there has been correspondence upon the subject, and the matter is under consideration.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPH STATIONS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. How many wireless telegraph stations are owned by the government of Canada, where are they located, what was the cost of each, and when were they erected?
2. How many wireless telegraph stations are operated by the Canadian government, where are they located and what is the cost of operating each?
3. How many of said stations are leased, to whom leased, the rental paid each year, and where are they located?

Mr. BRODEUR:

On motion of the hon. member for East Lambton on the 14th December, 1910, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries presented a return on the 18th January, showing how many wireless telegraph stations are owned by the government, where located, the cost of each, and the revenue derived from each; and stating that there are no stations leased.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say a word with reference to an answer to a question. The question was this:

Did the Finance Department, or any of its officials, the Finance Minister or any other member of the government, receive any communication, verbal or written, previous to the issue of the certificate of the Treasury Board to the Farmers' Bank, cautioning warning or suggesting an inquiry as to the standing or character of the promoters, or the proceedings by which the deposit was procured.

The answer I received is this:

The government did not receive in any form any information which afforded ground for a refusal of the deposit.

I beg leave to point out to the House that the answer given is not an answer to my question. I think I have a right to an answer to my question, then the House, as well as myself would form its own opinion as to whether it afforded ground for any interference.

Mr. FIELDING. There was some gossip in banking circles concerning the Farmers' Bank, of which we became aware. I do not see how we can take cognizance of that. There is an answer as to any representation that was made in the proper way. There was gossip abroad concerning the Farmers' Bank, I was well aware of it.

Mr. FOSTER. There must be some other way of getting an answer.

Mr. FIELDING. If I knew what the hon. gentleman wanted, I would be happy to give it to him.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN EACH PROVINCE OF CANADA.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for a return setting forth:

1. The number of births and deaths in each province of Canada in each calendar year from 1901 to 1910 both inclusive.
2. The excess or surplus of births over deaths in each such province during each of the said years.
3. The number of immigrants who located or settled or became domiciled in each such province during each such year?
4. The number of persons who emigrated from each such province during each such year?
5. The number of persons who removed from each province of Canada and settled or became domiciled in some other province in Canada in any such year, giving the number so removing from and the number so settling or becoming domiciled in each such province in each such year.
6. The like information with respect to the Yukon Territory and other territories and unorganized districts of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. These returns are not under the control of this parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only way we can get them is to make application to the provinces. We have no power of our own to get them. We can only ask them as a matter of grace.

Mr. SPROULE. This is an order of the House generally with reference to something where you have to apply to the provinces, or to the Lieutenant Governor. I think there should be an address.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The address would be to His Excellency to procure the information. But I think there is no fault to find with the form of the motion.

Motion agreed to.

ABOLITION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved:

That a humble address be presented to His Most Gracious Majesty the King as follows:—

Most Gracious Majesty:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave most respectfully to represent—

That in the year 1867 by Act of your imperial parliament commonly known as the British North America Act, the then existing provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were federally united and formed into one Dominion under the name of Canada, and the constitution of the legislative authority of such Dominion provided for and the nature of its executive government declared, and since the said Act other provinces in British North America have also been federally united to the said Dominion and now form part thereof, with representation in this House of Commons, pursuant to the provisions providing therefor in the said British North America Act and amending, and other, Acts subsequently enacted;

That by the said British North America Act the executive government and authority of and over Canada is declared to continue and be vested in Your Majesty and your heirs and successors, kings and queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and Your Majesty is represented in Canada by a governor general;

That by the said British North America Act there is also a council to aid and advise Your Majesty, styled the King's Privy Council for Canada, the members of which council are from time to time chosen and summoned by Your Majesty's said governor general and may be from time to time removed by the said governor general;

That by the said British North America Act the parliament of Canada consists of Your Majesty, an upper House styled the Senate and the House of Commons, but with powers not to exceed those at the passing of the said Act held and exercised by the Commons

House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;

That by the said British North America Act it is also provided that Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Commons and that no such Bill or vote, resolution or address for such appropriation or tax or impost shall be adopted or passed that has not been first recommended to that House by message of Your Majesty's said governor general in the session in which such Bill, vote, resolution or address is proposed;

That by the said British North America Act it is also provided that where any Bill passed by the House of Parliament is presented to Your Majesty's said governor general for Your Majesty's assent, he shall declare according to his discretion but subject to the provisions of the said Act and to Your Majesty's instructions, either that he assents thereto in Your Majesty's name, or that he withholds Your Majesty's assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the signification of Your Majesty's pleasure, and that where he assents to a Bill in Your Majesty's name if Your Majesty in Council within two years after receipt thereof by the Secretary of State thinks fit to disallow the Act such disallowance shall annul the Act, and that a Bill reserved for the signification of Your Majesty's pleasure shall not have any force unless and until within two years from the day on which it was presented to Your Majesty's said governor general for Your Majesty's assent he signifies to the Houses of Parliament or by proclamation that he has received the assent of Your Majesty in council;

That by the said British North America Act legislatures for the various provinces constituting the said Dominion of Canada are also established, each governed by a lieutenant governor appointed by Your Majesty's said Governor General in Council for five years, and whose salaries are required to be fixed and provided by the parliament of the Dominion of Canada and such provincial legislatures are empowered exclusively to make laws in relation to a large number of matters and subjects of great importance, subject to disallowance by Your Majesty's said Governor General in Council within one year, but not in any way subject to consent also by the said Senate;

That in regard to all matters and subjects not within the said exclusive power of the said provincial legislatures it is provided by the said British North America Act that all laws to be made by the said parliament of Canada must be consented to and passed by both the Senate and the House of Commons before being presented to Your Majesty's said Governor General for assent and the members constituting the said Senate are appointed for life and not subject to election or rejection by the people, and the members of the House of Commons are elected by the people every five years or at any less period at which Your Majesty's said Governor General may dissolve the parliament;

That during the forty years since the said British North America Act has been in force much dissatisfaction has been caused from time to time to Your Majesty's loyal subjects in Canada by the actions of the Senate in regard to matters dealt with by the House of Commons and the rejection of laws sought to be made by the people through their representatives in the House of Commons and passed by the House, and by reason of the heavy expense and burden of taxation placed upon the people to provide for the maintenance of that two-fold system of dealing with the making of laws by the parliament of Canada;

That in view of the many other provisions heretofore referred to for guarding against and disallowing any ill-advised or improper legislation which might by any possibility pass the said House of Commons, and of the aforesaid dissatisfaction of the people and heavy burden of expense involved and of the great advance made in education by the whole people of Canada since the passing of the said British North America Act, this House is of the opinion that the Senate is no longer required or advisable for the properly carrying on of responsible government in Canada, or safeguarding of Your Majesty's full rights and prerogatives; and that the abolition of the said Senate would greatly conduce to the welfare of the Dominion of Canada and promote the interests of the British Empire.

We therefore respectfully pray that the said British North America Act be so amended as to provide for the abolition of the said Senate.

He said: In rising again this session to discuss the question of a second chamber, and to move a resolution for a petition to His Majesty the King praying for the abolition of that chamber, I desire to say that although the motion is in exactly the same language as the one which I presented to the House last session, I think it is well to discuss it again at this session, principally because in the interim I have had so many communications from every province of Canada urging me to proceed with it until something substantial is done either by way of reform or abolition. The parties writing to me have almost invariably stated that they preferred abolition. Last session the vote upon my resolution was almost unanimously against it, I think only twenty three or four voted for it, principally because I think, of what some have seen fit to call the radical nature of the resolution. We have a history in regard to this matter ever since confederation, if any solution had been brought forward by the brightest and ablest minds that have been in parliament since confederation the probability is that I should not have felt it my duty to bring forward this resolution again and to move for the abolition of that chamber. But no solution has been found for what every one admits is an unsatisfactory state of things, except possibly the senators themselves for the time being.

Now, at the risk of wearying the House, I desire to go over the matter again, and show the exact position we are in. At the time of confederation a second chamber was established. No one at this day knows exactly why, but we are led to believe from what we have read that the principal reason was because a second chamber had been established in other legislative bodies such as was being established for the government of Canada. In the state of civilization at that time there was a great deal more reason for a second chamber than there is to-day. Education was meagre comparatively to what it is to-day. The knowledge of how laws were made, how other countries were progressing, or retrograding, of what goes to make up prosperity or the adverse of prosperity, was possessed by a comparatively small percentage of the people. So much was that so that for some years after confederation it was a common thing that constituencies could not find within their borders a person fit to represent them in the House of Commons, and for years we had non-resident representation simply and mainly because there were not within the limits of constituencies people whom the voters in those constituencies thought sufficiently well educated and informed to represent them on the floor of the House of Commons. We had for many years non-resident representation, if I may use that expression, the House understanding that I mean by that a member representing a constituency wherein he did not reside, wherein perhaps he had no interest. That has almost entirely gone. I do not know that there is any one in this House at the present time, except perhaps the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King), who represents a constituency in which he does not reside. There may be others, but if there are I do not know. I do not think that in the last parliament we had one, except perhaps the Prime Minister, who, I think the House will concede, may be an exceptional case. That illustrates what I mean by the position with regard to education. A second chamber, in my humble opinion was thought necessary at that time, probably more than for any other reason, because of the want of education, and ability in the people to intelligently and successfully deal with the important matters that parliament has to deal with. That being the position, I wish to say that I do not concede at all that because we had a second chamber at the time of confederation there is any reason for continuing it. I wish to emphasize the fact that at the time of confederation the conditions in this country were entirely different from what they are now. I do not concede in any way that anything is to be said against this resolution from the mere fact that the second chamber was established forty years ago. I do not believe that if our ancesters had realized at the time confederation was brought about that in a few years this country would have attained to the state of education at which it has arrived to-day they would have concluded that there should be a permanent second chamber. Then, the condition of things is entirely different. Having regard to the condition at that time they felt it was necessary to safeguard the constitution by having a second chamber not elected directly by the people. I suppose their reason was that they thought that the comparative ignorance of the ordinary voter might result in the creation of a sentiment in the country which would intimidate or frighten members of parliament into doing something that was altogether too radical, and not in the true interest of the country, un-British and ill-advised. Therefore, they sought to provide the check which the British constitution gives in the home land in the form of cooling chamber, so as to speak. Their object no doubt was, looking at the matter from the standpoint of the people of Canada, to prevent, by any popular or sudden declaration of public opinion, the adoption of a course that might bring about disaster to the country. The reason for having a second chamber in Great Britain is very different from what it is in this country. People who say there is the same necessity for a Senate in Canada as there is for a House of Lords in England are speaking without realizing what they are talking about. The House of Lords in England is the only safeguard between the Commons and the King, and if the House of Lords were not there the Commons would be able to force the King to abdicate if he did not give way whenever the elective chamber choose to ask his assent to any particular line of policy. There is no other safeguard, or bulwark, or cooling basin to put a check upon hasty legislation in Great Britain but the House of Lords. But, in this country, if the House of Commons, notwithstanding all that I have hinted at with regard to education to-day as compared with the state of education in the days when confederation was brought about, were to pass hasty legislation under which certain interests were injured, under which the rights of minorities were interfered with unfairly or unconstitutionally, or was tending in that direction, or if even without unconstitutional legislation the rights of minorities were interfered with, for the checking of which the second chamber is supposed to exist, I say, and I wish to emphasise this point, that the second chamber would be useless. By the constitution under which we live any Bill passed by this parliament is subject to disallowance whether there be a Senate or not. Whether the Senate exists or whether it does not exist, every Bill adopted by this parliament has to be passed upon under the constitution by the home authorities within two years and it can be, without any wrench to the constitution, abrogated, set aside, and, annulled as if it were just so much waste paper. There are a great many gentlemen both in this House and out of the House—more out of the House—who do not appear to be well informed upon this point who are not aware of this fact, and as 'Hansard' is a public document that every person can obtain I think it is well that I should put upon 'Hansard' the sections of the British North America Act which I referred to in a previous debate on this subject last session, and which every one, who chooses to obtain a copy of 'Hansard,' can read for himself. Section 55 of the British North America Act under which we exist to-day as a parliament says this :

Where a Bill passed by the Houses of the parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's assent, he shall declare according to his discretion, but subject to the provisions of this Act and to Her Majesty's instructions, either that he assents thereto in the Queen's name, or that he withholds the Queen's assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the signification of the Queen's pleasure.

Section 56,

Where the Governor General assents to a Bill in the Queen's name, he shall by the first convenient opportunity send an authentic copy of the Act to one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and if the Queen in Council within two years after receipt thereof by the Secretary of State thinks fit to disallow the Act, such disallowance (with a certificate of the Secretary of State of the day on which the Act was received by him) being justified by the Governor General, by speech or message to each of the Houses of the parliament or by proclamation, shall annul the Act from and after the day of such signification.

Then section 57,

A Bill reserved for the signification of the Queen's pleasure shall not have any force unless and until within two years from the day on which it was presented to the Governor General for the Queen's assent, the Governor General signifies, by speech or message to each of the Houses of the parliament or by proclamation, that it has received the assent of the Queen in Council.

Then it says:

An entry of every such speech, message or proclamation shall be made in the Journal of the House.

I need not read that as it does not affect the sense. Under these sections, and more particularly under section 56, after a Bill has been passed by both Houses of this parliament as at present constituted, and notwithstanding that the Senate has approved of the Bill the assent of His Excellency to that Bill has no permanent effect, because the King in council in Great Britain, can within two years, if they see fit, disallow that Bill. Of course that would not often happen and if it did I would not be petitioning the King to abolish the Senate, because I would feel that there might be some need indirectly for the existence of that body. What I point out is that whatever action the Senate may take on a Bill, whether it rejects our Bill or whether it amends it or whether it forces us to concur in their amendments, after all, that Bill may be refused by the home government and the constitution of this country is in no way wrenched. It would be no reflection upon His Excellency—because his very appointment is a limited power of attorney in such matters if I may be pardoned for using the expression—if after he assented to that Bill it should be rejected by the home government. Now, supposing we had no Senate, is not what I have just indicated all the protection that is required for the various interests the Senate is supposed to protect. No Bill has ever been discussed in this House that has not found men here to point out that it infringes on vested interests, if that be the case. The members returned to this House have to recognize vested interests, and every other interest and if any of us were to advocate in this House an attack on these interests which the second chamber is supposed to guard, the chances are that we would not be re-elected. If any interests be disastrously affected by our legislation, these interests have in a sense control over members of parliament, and if a member of parliament be extreme or unreasonable on any point the chances are that he would not again be returned to the House. A man may come to this House of Commons biassed, but he hears the debates and discussions, and he gradually becomes more reasonable. He may fight for principles and point out why they should be put into practice, but the tendency is that the men who come here are educated by their fellow members, and the result is that the Commons does not pass legislation against any interests that may require protection from the second chamber. The need for a second chamber to-day is in an entirely different position from what it was in 1867. If a Bill of an extremely radical character were passed by this House—one of the kind the Senate is supposed to protect the country against—and if the Senate assented to it, would any one say that if that legislation were calculated to work havoc in this country, that the interests affected could not go to Great Britain and seek its disallowance. Surely, if it were not important and weighty enough to pursue with regard to it such a course as that provided in section 56, the interests affected could not be very much hurt. Let me give an instance of how the Senate as at present constituted may be a barrier to carrying into legislation the wishes of the people. I regret I have to refer to a personal matter and to speak of a Bill which I had a great deal to do with. For seven years I sought in this House to have legislation passed providing for the better protection of human life at railway level crossings. In two sessions of one parliament that Bill was sent up to the Senate with the unanimous approval of the House, and at the first session of the succeeding parliament it was for the third time sent to the Senate. It had been discussed in the House and before committees for six years, champions on both sides of the question were heard, and at last this House of Commons unanimously, from the Prime Minister down to the last elected back-bencher on either side, approved of the Bill and sent it to the upper chamber. For the first two years the Senate refused to pass the Bill; in the third year they sent it back to us amended so that it did not mean what the Commons intended it should mean, the Senate providing that certain expenses should be borne by the municipalities in the discretion of the railway commission, instead of being paid by the railway companies as the House of Commons thought they should. After seven years consideration in this House and four years unanimous approval by the House, and the Senate having sent it back to us twice, the Prime Minister was obliged to stand up in this House and say: We cannot get what we want from the Senate and we shall have to take what they give us.

Is that a state of affairs which the fathers of confederation anticipated? Thirty members of the Senate voting one way overrode 16 members of the Senate plus 221 members of the House of Commons, with the result that the municipalities of the country, which might be fairly classed with the minorities, have since been obliged, in the discretion of the Railway Commission, to pay a part of the expense of protecting the level crossings against dangers which have been created by the railways by the fast running of their trains, and by their want of care in other respects. The 221 members of this House of Commons for three years voted unanimously for a certain measure as the only right way of meeting the evil, and were backed up by 16 senators, making 237 in all, representing the will of the people in this matter, and their action was nullified by the vote of 30 senators. That is not a state of affairs that ought to exist, or that it was ever expected would exist by the fathers of confederation when the Senate was created. With that illustration, I think I can leave it to the House to say that something ought to be done to make it impossible for that condition of affairs ever to happen again.

It is often said that the second chamber is required for the protection of minorities. Last session, in debating this question, I pointed out that the Senate had never, in the whole 40 odd years of its existence, been known to do the first thing to protect minorities; and if in those 40 odd years it has gone on without any attempt to do that, it is fair to say that it was not required for that purpose. The Prime Minister, in answering that part of my argument, though I do not think he really answered the integral and important part of my motion, said—I read from page 2056 of the unrevised 'Hansard' of last session:

> So one of the reasons, one of the inducements given to the smaller provinces, to lower Canada, and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, was that there should be an upper chamber as well as equality of representation, and this was for the protection of minorities. My hon. friend asked with some pertinence: What have the Senate done during the forty years that it has existed for the protection of the minorities? He answered, nothing. Sir, I am glad that my hon. friend from Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) can say that the Senate has done nothing in the forty years of its existence for the protection of minorities. But this is not to the discredit of the Senate, it is rather to the credit of the House of Commons. It means simply that the House of Commons has done nothing to endanger minorities.

Using the same sort of argument, I would say, with all deference to the Prime Minister, is it not equally plain that, if the House of Commons has so acted as not to require the Senate to protect minorities, that is a reason why no Senate was needed to protect minorities? If with so many diversities of opinion in this House, and with so many sections and callings represented in the cabinet, not once in the whole 40 years has any minority required to be protected, is that not a good reason why the Senate is not required at all?

Going on with the history of what public men have done about the Senate, let me point out that this constitution was not in existence 20 years before murmurings began to arise concerning the Senate. This murmuring increased to such an extent that 17 years ago one of the great political parties of the country, at a convention held in Ottawa in 1893, passed the following resolution in regard to it:

> The present constitution of the Senate is inconsistent with the federal principle in our system of government, and is in other respects defective, as it makes the Senate independent of the people, and uncontrolled by public opinion of the country, and should be so amended as to bring it into harmony with the principles of popular government.

Now, two things stand out prominently in that resolution. That great political party declared that the Senate was inconsistent with federal principles and that it was in other respects defective, and it pledged itself, on going into power, to remedy those defects. From that time to this there have been various agitations on this subject in the country, but the government has not since it attained power, made any proposition which would be acceptable to any large proportion of public men towards remedying those defects.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I was pointing out what seemed to me to be instances of the lack of usefulness of the Senate in making legislation in this country during the last ten years. In this connection I would point out that nearly every public man of standing in the Liberal party has, at one time or another, some of them many times, during the last ten or fifteen years, stated many objections to our present system of legislation, owing to the inefficiency or worse of the Senate. For instance two years ago Senator Sir Richard Scott, almost immediately after he had ceased to be a member of the present cabinet—and I do not know whether that fact has any significance—made one of the most emphatic utterances in condemnation of the present system of appointment to the Senate, and introduced in that chamber a motion seeking to reform it. His motion was to this effect:

That in the opinion of the Senate the time has arrived for so amending the constitution of this branch of parliament as to bring the mode of selection of senators more into harmony with public opinion.

This is a clear and distinct statement by a senator of many years' standing that he recognizes that the Senate is not at all in harmony with public opinion, and reading between the lines it is easy to understand from his language that he believed the constitution must be so amended as to make the Senate of more use to the country. Sir Richard Scott supported this motion earnestly. He suggested as a mode of appointment the election of two-thirds of the members of the Senate by the people and the appointment of one-third by the Crown, for seven years in each case. His suggestion did not meet with very much favour, in fact no suggestion for the reform of the Senate has ever met with strong support from any large number of people. One gentleman will propose one reform, another a different reform, some newspaper a third, but, practically speaking, no plan receives the support of any person except the proposer of the reform. In fact, although the large majority of the people and of the members of parliament believe that, as Sir Richard Scott says, the Senate must be reformed, no two people will agree as to what reform should be made. The Prime Minister will remember that three years ago, speaking on the motion of the present deputy Speaker (Mr. McIntyre) for the reform of the Senate, the right hon. gentleman pointed out just what I have said. He discussed seriatim all the reforms that have been suggested and decided that not one of them was acceptable. The Prime Minister has not himself suggested any method of reform. By the Liberal platform of 1893 he and his party were pledged to the reform of the Senate. The Prime Minister is a man of great ability and ingenuity who is never without means to accomplish what he thinks ought to be accomplished in the interests of this country, yet since 1896, for nearly fifteen years, the Prime Minister has had it within his power as Prime Minister to introduce some of the reforms to which he pledged himself in 1893 and on which he attained office in 1896. If the Prime Minister, holding office under that pledge, with all his ability, his vast resources of mind, and his great power, has not been able to effect a reform, it is fair and reasonable to take the position that the Senate is not working properly and in the interests of the country, that it cannot be reformed, and that it should be abolished. Therefore, I believe the concrete motion I have brought forward, which takes the form of an humble petition to His Gracious Majesty to so amend the British North America Act as to provide for the abolition of the Senate, is the only sensible, practical, reasonable action for this House to take under the circumstances. To assume otherwise is to assume that while the Prime Minister with the vast majority he has had since 1896, with all his power, with all his ability having been unable to effect a reform, some of us can do what he cannot do, an assumption which is ridiculous.

In view of all these circumstances one must come to the conclusion that the only sensible, practical and reasonable thing to do is to petition the imperial parliament to provide for the abolition of the Senate as an entirely unnecessary body.

Other prominent members of the Liberal party vigorously followed up the pledge contained in the platform of 1895. Sir Richard Cartwright, another member of the Senate, was one of the most emphatic speakers on this question. He has been, from the beginning, a member of the present administration. He was one of the leading Liberals of the country in 1893, and was present at that convention. When this plank was made in the party platform, he expected—and, as it turned out, rightly expected—to be a member of the cabinet if his party attained power. He sat for years in this House as a member of the government and deskmate of the Prime Minister, and it is only a few years ago that he was translated to the upper chamber, where he sits still as a member of the government. This hon. gentleman, in 1896, following up what he understood to be the opinion of the Liberal party—and you cannot blame me if I think the same as he did—that the Senate should be abolished, and speaking in Massey Hall, Toronto, dealt with this question of the Senate. Remember, he had had three years since 1893 in which to thoroughly consider and understand what the platform of 1893 meant. And I have his words before me. I put them on 'Hansard' last year, but it will do no harm to refresh the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite on this subject. He said:—

> The Senate was a millstone around the neck of the Canadian people which he prayed that Providence would soon remove.

If he is still praying, the locality from which he offers his prayers, I should think, would prevent them from doing much good. I doubt if his prayers go through the roof, for he occupies a place in the very institution for the abolition of which he was praying in 1896. Speaking seriously to the people on the eve of a general election, speaking as right-hand man and prospective colleague of the leader whom he wished to see placed in power, trying to convince the people that his party should be put in power, he declared the Senate to be a millstone around the neck of the Canadian people, which he prayed that Providence would soon remove. How he was ever able to take a seat in the Senate after that I do not know, but since he has been in the Senate I have not heard of him offering up that prayer. If there was cause in 1896, why this august body, the Senate, should be removed, in the opinion of Sir Richard Cartwright and of the present Prime Minister, what has happened since then to justify a change of their opinion?

Now, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) may not have intended to say quite what he did say in answer to me when I spoke on this subject last session. What he said will be found at page 2054 of 'Hansard.' He spoke in part as follows:—

> It may be that the present action of the Senate is not satisfactory to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster). I can remember when the action of the Senate as it existed twenty years ago was not very satisfactory to me, for instance. My scruples are not the same to-day as they were then, and it may be that the time will come when my hon. friend will change his views on this point, and, the composition of the Senate being different, his objection may be removed. But he says that, as no satisfactory reform of the Senate is suggested, there is a general opinion that the condition of the Senate at the present time is not satisfactory and that all heartily desire a change. I agree that there has been a strong suggestion made at different times and in different quarters that we should have a reform of the Senate.

What does that mean? I can only take one meaning from it, and that is that when the majority of members of the Senate were of a different stripe from the right hon. gentleman it was a bad Senate, but since, by the effluxion of time and other causes, a majority of the Senate is now made up of his friends, and largely of his own appointees, his objection is removed. I hope that was not his meaning, because it would be no answer to my argument. It is such an argument as no independent-minded man would consider for a moment. But there has been no change in the Senate except in the political complexion of the majority. I regret if I have taken the wrong meaning from what the right hon. gentleman said; if I am wrong, I hope he will put me right. But I am forced to the conclusion that the reason why the opinion of the right hon. gentleman has changed in the last twenty years is that the political complexion of the Senate to-day is different from what it was twenty years ago. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that my grievance against the Senate is not merely that the political complexion of the Senate does not please me. My objection to them is that very often they do nothing to help the country to secure good legislation, and when they do wake up, they wake up at the wrong time, obstruct good legislation passed by this House, and so do mischief.

There was another hon. gentleman who, in his lifetime was very highly respected, now gone to his reward—Sir Oliver Mowat. He was everywhere respected for his ability as a public man. He also joined the cabinet of the right hon. Prime Minister, becoming his Minister of Justice. In 1896 he was active in trying to get the present Prime Minister placed in power, and he, like others, spoke on the subject of the Senate. I placed one of his remarks on 'Hansard' last year, but it will do no harm to repeat it and so remind hon. members of what was said. It will be found at page 2042 of 'Hansard' of last year:

> We are agreed as to the necessity of a fundamental reform of the Senate, if, for any reason, it must or should be retained.

The pith of that sentence—yes, and its sting—are in the last clause, 'if, for any reason, it must or should be retained.' It is quite clear that Sir Oliver Mowat thought that there was no need of it at all. Sir Oliver Mowat thought there was no need of it at all, at most he would compromise on a reform of the Senate, and he took care to say: We are all agreed. That is, all the leading members of his party who were going to form a cabinet after they got into power, as they did in 1896, were agreed that something must be done. Now we must assume in all fairness to this government that they have tried their best since 1896 to carry out that pledge and to reform the Senate. We have a right to assume that they have striven night and day to devise some way by which they could reform that Senate. Now this government must be intending to carry out those pledges, and in all fairness to them we must assume that they have ever since been endeavouring to find some solution to this problem. They have been unable to do so. Then in the name of common sense, in the name of everything that is reasonable, is it not time that a petition was sent to His Gracious Majesty asking him either to remove the Senate, or to reform it in the interest of this country?

Now, some people say there are large matters dealt with in the Senate, and we never know that one of these large matters might come up in regard to which the Senate might act as a cooling basin, to allow parliament and the country to give further consideration to the matter, in short to act as a check on hasty legislation that might be indulged in by this chamber. But look at the province of Ontario—no Senate, no second chamber, no trouble, but dealing with a great many important matters that come right home to the people, matters like direct taxation which the people feel instantly. Now, the province of Ontario has not had a second chamber for years and years, it was abolished almost directly after confederation, and no one ever said that the legislature of Ontario passes hasty legislation, or that the people are not satisfied with it. I believe the only provinces in the Dominion that still technically continue their second chambers are Quebec and Nova Scotia, but so little work have they ever done that scarcely any one realizes that there is a second chamber in those provinces. So I say that in view of all the important matters that are dealt with by the provincial legislatures with a single chamber, we are justified in concluding that if those legislatures do not need a second chamber neither does this parliament. Why? If it were a matter of sufficient importance, as I have already pointed out, any Bill could be delayed by the home government, and there would not need to be any wrench to the constitution.

There has been another suggestion for reform which the Prime Minister says he does not approve and that is appointments by the provincial legislatures. I do not think a Senate appointed by the provincial legislatures would work satisfactorily. and I will tell you why. Senators thus appointed would be swayed by purely local influences, they would be provincial in their ideas, and partial to the provinces that appointed them. If any legislation bore rather harder on one province than upon another, you would find the senators from that particular province obstructing that legislation, believing that in so doing they were carrying out the will of the province that appointed them. We would find no independence in a body thus appointed. Let me give you another illustration to show how this so-called independent Senate is a broken reed upon which we cannot rely. Here is a case that might happen any day. The government might bring down a Bill which was unpopular. Supposing, for instance, that last session the Canadian Senate had seen fit to oppose the government Bill creating a Canadian Navy on the ground that it was unconstitutional. Supposing after the government's majority in this House had voted the Bill through, the Senate had rejected it, and sent that Bill back here. This government has power to appoint senators by its own inherent power, and we all know that whatever government is in power their tendency is to appoint senators of that particular stripe. Does any one suppose that that institution, appointed by the party in power for purely political reasons, is going to resist their masters who appointed them, and would declare their independence of the government that placed any Bill before them? Where would be your responsible government under such circumstances?

Now, I can well understand that any one who was determined on separation from Great Britain might desire that the Senate should continue to exist. But I could not understand an imperialist holding such an idea, because if a man is an imperialist he feels absolutely safe in the fact that the home government would, in any case where vested interests were interfered with, or injustice was being done, interpose its veto within the two years' prescribed by the constitution. But I could understand that a man having in view separation from Great Britain would not wish to see the Senate abolished, because if the country is going to separate from Great Britain then he would want a second chamber here to keep us right instead of the very thing which the imperialist would desire, a right to appeal to the home government under the circumstances I have mentioned. But any one who does not wish a separation from Great Britain might suppose there was no need of a second chamber.

Now, I wish to put a quotation or two on the 'Hansard' to show what the newspapers are saying about this matter. Take, for instance, the Toronto 'Star,' a paper that is not looking for opportunities to find fault with the present administration. In fact, I think I can go further and say that it is a very faithful supporter of the government to-day. On January 4, 1909, the Toronto 'Star' said:—

As the matter now stands the Senate is simply an addition to the patronage of the government.

That is the statement of a paper supporting this government.

Patronage in the Civil Service we have learned to endure through custom, but surely it is unwise to extend the system of patronage to the appointment of those who make the laws of the land. Responsible government means the responsibility of the government to parliament, but who can speak seriously of the responsibility of a government to a portion of parliament appointed by the government itself?

Exactly, if I may interpolate, this is the very point that I was endeavouring to make to-night of a Bill going to the Senate sent up by a majority of this House, and the Senate rejecting it to help out the government. The 'Star' goes on:—

The plan laid before the Senate by the Hon. Sir R. W. Scott is good in so far as it proposes to substitute election for appointment. An elected Senate, dealing independently with the measures sent up by the House of Commons, including government measures, might occasionally serve a good purpose. It is doubtful whether such a body could work in harmony with a system which requires that the government of the day shall have a parliamentary majority for the support of its measures, but if it were found unworkable it would probably be a half-way house on the road to abolition, which to many seems to be the logical solution of the problem.

I may not be in very good company with the 'Star' but I call it as a witness. We find the 'Star' supporting this government strenuously since it came into power. I do not know whether this paper was in existence before the government came into power, but I see that it has been thriving very well since the government has been in power. It says that practical abolition is the logical solution, but that until you get abolition you had better have an elected body, a half way house to the final consummation so devoutly wished for. The 'Star' on November 16, 1909, said this:—

Against the Senate we wish to register several objections. The least of these is that it is a feeble echo of the party in power in the Commons. When the Senate does nothing but ratify the will of the Commons, we see it at its best, for we are then having representative government. The will of the elected parliament is not being frustrated by another body, whose members are chosen for reasons the people know nothing about, and which no amount of study can enable them to understand. At such a time the Senate is only unnecessary, and nothing worse.

Yet we must qualify the statement, for in that case it is even worse than unnecessary and worse than being a profitless expense, because no member of parliament knows just how soon a vacancy in the Senate may occur, and it is not uncommon to find representatives of the people forfeiting their popularity at the polls confident of reaching that upper chamber where no poll is long enough to reach them.

At another time the Senate is not the feeble echo of the Commons. We submit that it is seen at its worst when it resists the will of the Commons, or undertakes to originate legislation. In that case it weakens popular government, impedes, and frustates it. Why should the people support an appointed House to resist and baffle the purposes of an elected one?

Then I will refer once more to the 'Star,' bringing it down to November 30, 1909. At the end of a long article, all of which I need not trouble the House by reading, we find this conclusion:—

But the fact that the Canadian Senate does not go to such lengths as the British House of Lords does not make it a desirable part of our constitution. If birth ought not to make a legislator, neither should a legislator be appointed by the government, which ought to be checked and controlled by the legislative body. It is the tendency of all bodies not elected by the people to become reactionary. The Senate of the United States is in this respect not much better than the British House of Lords. All appointed bodies, freed from the wholesome influence of public control, tend to lose touch with the people, and to voice the opinions and sentiments of privileged classes.

I will give a quotation in rather terse language from a paper for which, if I may be pardoned for saying so, I have more respect, and that is the Toronto 'Mail and Empire.' The Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' writing about this matter on the 5th January, 1910, said this:—

Canadians are being incited by several papers to indignation against the House of Lords as a political institution. Like other human works, the House of Lords is full of imperfections, but candour compels us to admit that it is both an abler and a more conscientious legislative body than the Senate of Canada or the Senate of the United States. In practice, also, it is more democratic than either of these chambers.

Then, a very short quotation from the Goderich 'Signal,' and a comment from the Hamilton 'Spectator' upon it:—

The Goderich 'Signal' shouts 'No quarter for the Canadian Senate,' but would'nt 'no quarters' be a quicker way of getting rid of that body?

These are terse, and, it may be, somewhat flippant comments upon the Senate, but you may see what they illustrate. Here is the Goderich 'Signal' saying that there should be 'no quarter for the Canadian Senate.' It means that the Senate is absolutely no use in the opinion of the Goderich 'Signal.' Then the Hamilton 'Spectator' quotes that on January 24, 1910, and says—and I agree with the 'Spectator—that 'no quarters' would be a quicker way of getting rid of that body; that is to say, furnish no place for them to meet, do not summon them to attend, and let them have their appointments for life. What the 'Spectator' means is to leave them so that they do not meddle with the popular chamber by interfering with legislation and by obstructing the progress of the country as they are apt to do and have done in the past. The 'Spectator' means to say: Do not summon them to Ottawa, do not place before them something to enable them to make pretense that they are legislating; let them live out their lives; let them live as long as they possibly can. We hope that they may live for ever, and I do not think that the country would object to continuing their indemnity but let them not meddle and let them work themselves out, so that, without waiting very long for it, we would have the consummation that is here desired and there would be no more trouble about it. The Toronto 'Globe,' with all its loyal support of this government, says this about the Senate, writing on January 10, 1911:—

It is to be hoped there is no basis of truth for the statement in the opposition press that the total membership of the Senate is to be 'largely' increased. The Senate is too large already. Reform in the direction of abolishing life senatorships and reducing the membership is long overdue.

There are many such suggestions in favour of the abolition of the Senate. Going through newspapers of different kinds and on different sides of politics you find many arguments and these arguments are well known to the Prime Minister, to the cabinet and to those who could, with the force they have behind them, and even without forcing their views through, but by argument and reasoning, find some solution if there is any solution to be found with regard to the Senate. They could find some means of reforming it. But, the time having gone by for any suggested reformation, I have come to the conclusion that the only successful and practical thing to do is to appeal to His Most Gracious Majesty the King to grant us some means for the abolition of it. Before concluding I ought to put on record some citations from a book which I have had the opportunity of perusing since I spoke upon this question last year. This is a new work upon the subject published last year in England, written by Prof. Harold W. V. Temperley, in London, and entitled 'Senates and upper chambers':—

I read this book with a good deal of care and I think it my duty to put on record certain of the opinions it contains, written by a British subject and a friendly critic of Canada. At page 43 the author says:

Practical experience of the difficulty of constituting upper chambers in the Australasian colonies even induced Earl Grey himself to modify his bicameral views (?). He declared their danger to lie in the fact that the division of the legislature into two branches withdrew some of the most able and intelligent men from the lower chamber 'in a community not numerous enough to furnish more than a few persons qualified for such duties.' Even if it did not do this the upper chamber might be composed of mere party men without ability, in which case it must become discredited and weak. He was therefore led into a practical advocacy of single chambers for the colonies (8).

I now consider it to be very doubtful, at least, whether the single legislature (chamber) ought not under any circumstances to be preferred.

This is written in 1910. I quote from page 46:

Since the granting of responsible government the Canadian colonies have never shown much enthusiasm for their upper chambers, which have been abolished in four of the provinces. In the beginning the Australasian colonies adopted two chambers with unanimity, but subsequent experience qualified their enthusiasm. In our third group, the South African colonies, the attachment to the bicameral system has, from the first, been singularly lukewarm. Cape Colony adopted two chambers in the early fifties, and appears to have retained them without much protest after the introduction of responsible government (1872). But the Cape upper chamber, being elective, threatened to challenge the supremacy of the lower house. Its example and claims were not encouraging, and they seem to have impressed the other colonies in South Africa. When Natal petitioned for responsible government she made a determined effort to get rid of an upper chamber altogether, and only yielded to the strong opinion of the Home government in the matter (1893). It is quite clear that the upper chambers in the Transvaal and Orange River colony are only temporary ones in their present character, and it is by no means certain that it was not intended that they should be abolished altogether in the future. As for the federal Senate of South Africa the constitution gives it no special protection after ten years; and 'furthermore (this is an open secret) there was a strong party in the convention in favour of doing without it altogether.' The feeling here shown is more significant than any of the other instances adduced. Whatever may have been thought of single-chamber government in a unitary state, it had always been previously considered that an upper chamber was indispensable for a federal state. If the collective wisdom of South Africa could for a moment seriously contemplate doing without one in the federal constitution, it is quite evident that it absolutely condemns the bicameral system for unitary states, and in this judgment we see the severest criticism that the two-chamber system has hitherto received.

But in any case the general testimony of our other colonies to the worth of the bicameral system must be regarded as a somewhat ungracious one. Nowhere is the upper chamber really imposing in the unitary colonies, in few is it actually powerful, in many it is regarded as a rather tedious relic of a by-gone age. In Canada and South Africa, certainly, it is looked upon as an ancestral relative, whose death would not cause any particular grief to the colonies in question, though they do not care to terminate his existence by speedier means. The Home government stands by acting the part of the family doctor, bidding the eager heirs to have patience, and meanwhile doing its best to keep the aged patient alive by cordials and by encouragement.

Again at page 141 this learned author says:

Whatever the theory, which gave birth to the bicameral system, the working out of that theory has been almost directly contrary to the ideals of its founders. The old idea certainly was that the Upper Chamber should be a 'checking' Chamber, and should in certain cases possess an absolute veto on the will of the people. The progress of democracy has transformed all that, and this idea now prevails only in the state legislatures of America. There it must indeed be admitted that the Upper Chamber may still be a real checking Chamber, but it is only powerful because democracy has rivetted fetters in itself. The election of state senators and popular representatives on the same tenure, the presence of corruption in the Upper Chamber and of lethargy among the electors has tended in practice to a maintenance of old conditions of which nobody in America really approves. But wherever democracy is progressive, wherever the people become more united and better educated, there the idea of a checking Chamber disappears.

Again at page 224 the author says:

In theory, the Senate of Canada possesses equal powers of legislation with those of the Lower House, except that it cannot originate money Bills. It has, however, full power either to amend or to reject them. In practice, its nominee Senate has not proved very important or effective, largely because it has always been the tool of a party. By 1873 it had been filled with the nominees of the Conservative party, and since then it has been refilled according to the views of the party installed in office. A Liberal member was once appointed by the Conservative premier, Sir John Macdonald, but the present Liberal premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has never departed from the strict party rule. Since it is so obviously the creature of party, such a body cannot evidently have much claim on the reverence of the country. The fact that its members are appointed for life might tend to produce some difficulty when the opposing party gets into office, but the balance is gradually redressed as vacancies appear. None the less, if the present Liberal party had only had a short spell of office, their legislation might have been interfered with. In 1873, when the Liberal party was in power for two years, the Conservative Senate vetoed several measures and provoked considerable complaint at the time from the ministry, though McKenzie subsequently acknowledged that the Senate had used its power to suspend rash and hasty legislation, rather than to check genuinely popular or national measures. Since then their opposition has been more guarded, but a popular agitation against the Senate has been growing, and a desire for its abolition is frequently expressed. No methods of adjustment between the two chambers, other than those by conference or committee, have yet been used. By the constitution, however, it is provided that 'if at any time, on the recommendation of the Governor in Council, the King thinks fit to direct that three or six members be added to the Senate, the Governor in Council may, by summons to three or six qualified persons, as the case may be, representing the three divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.' In other words, a limited creation of life members for the purpose of 'swamping' can be made. A 'swamping' procedure, when exercised, has everywhere tended to reduce the nominee Senate to impotence, and in Canada this actual result has been attained without this stretch of prerogative. It is difficult to resist Goldwin Smith's conclusion that the Canadian Senate is as nearly a cipher as it is possible for an assembly legally invested with large powers to be. At any rate, the prestige attaching to its federal character has been unable to save the Canadian Senate from that curse of impotence and sterility which seems to settle over all nominee upper chambers in purely unitary states.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am about to conclude; in view of these opinions expressed by a not unfriendly critic writing last year in London, England, and in view again of the fact that for 14 years this government has made no effort to reform what has been an unsatisfactory state of affairs with regard to the Senate of this country, I have the temerity to move an humble address to His Majesty in the form of the motion placed in your hands.

Mr. A. McCALL (Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a few remarks on the question before the House, but I am not vain enough to think that I can suggest a remedy for the condition of things which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has placed before us. In his address the hon. gentleman stated that the Prime Minister was unable to find a scheme for the reform of the Senate which met with his approval, out of the many that had been proposed. If I should have the good fortune to offer a means of reform that will meet with the approval of the right hon. gentleman then I shall have spoken to some purpose; at all events I shall make the attempt. I must say that among business men, thoughtful men who are anxious for the progress and development of this country, I have not found any strong sentiment in favour of the total abolition of the Senate. The constitutional difficulties in the way of such a proposal are of course great. The question of how far a second chamber can steady legislation and can shape it in a proper course to the advantage of the country, is a large one. I think, Sir, that for the purpose of this discussion we must assume that the Senate will continue and that therefore we may direct our attention to some practical plan of reform which will bring the second chamber more in touch with our people and allot to it a more active participation in our legislation. I believe that I voice the opinion of this House when I say that it is desirable that both legislative bodies be kept well in front with the march of thought in the country, and should fairly express and give effect to the best views of the people of Canada. It may be said as an objection to a second chamber that it may at some period be composed entirely of members of one political school of thought. We on this side of the House trust that that will not happen; but our best hopes may be blasted, and we may see the Senate composed of gentlemen only in sympathy with the dominant party. I believe it is a theory that when a gentleman enters the second chamber he leaves partisanship aside; but I can scarcely hope, from my limited knowledge of those gentlemen, that that will ever be realized. I will even say that should the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. George Taylor) be appointed to the Senate, as we all trust he will be in due time, I doubt if he would wholly forget the battles he fought in the country and in this House, and would not occasionally, when the party spirit ran high, be out for a little blood. It may be, as the hon. member for Lincoln has said, that the fact that the senators are appointed for life makes them indifferent to the questions which affect the people who are out in the struggle. I believe that is the case.

Summing up the various objections to the Senate, perhaps the strongest that can be urged against it is the life appointment. Old age and bodily weakness comes to all of us; but I think it strikes the average man that there is something peculiarly grotesque in a body of men perhaps one-fourth or more of whom are wholly unfit to discharge legislative duties. It is a condition that I believe the country would rather not have. Understand, I am saying nothing by way of disrespect of the very able gentlemen who form the Senate. However, it is hardly in line with our democratic thought that there should be placemen, men appointed to draw emoluments when they have become unable to discharge the duties of the positions to which they are appointed. I believe that is after all the strongest objection that exists in the minds of public men. If a plan could be devised that would bring the Senate into more activity, that would secure the appointment of men, not because they have been unsuccessful politicians or because they have contested constituencies and lost, or because they have helped the party in its hour of need, but because they possessed special knowledge of some of the great problems that confront this Canada of ours, we would have a better Senate. We have great problems. Our public affairs become more complex every year. I remember when the tariff question was simply a question of high tariff or low tariff, of 17½ per cent or 28 per cent. Now we have every possible shade of tariff—the minimum, the maximum, the preferential, and the favoured nation, and all that sort of thing. A member of this House may come here honestly desirous of studying tariff questions so that he can speak intelligently upon them, and he will spend one or two sessions before he gets the technical knowledge necessary. The same is true of the transportation question, the question of the conservation of our natural resources, and even the greater question of how we shall secure the proper diffusion of wealth and opportunity among all our people and the proper development of our country. All these questions call for men of big brain and big heart, and we ought to have them in one or the other of the governing bodies of this country. In saying this I am not reflecting on the ability of the members of this House; but I make the appeal to hon. gentlemen if it is not possible that men with a larger outlook, a greater viewpoint, could be added to the debating and legislative ability of the Senate. I assume that the average legislative life of a member of the Senate is eighteen years; I think it will be fully that, though I have not made the exact computation. If gentlemen were appointed to the Senate for six years instead of for life, there would be three appointments where there is now one. Six years is a fairly long term, and it would be a sufficient reward to a gentleman appointed for party services. That would give three times the number of appointments. I am dismissing from this discussion the question of electing senators by the provincial legislatures. The recent events in the election of senators in the United States have been, I am sure, an object lesson which should satisfy the people of this country for all time to come. I also dismiss the plan of electing senators by large districts. The burden of discussion and the expense necessary for such elections make that plan unworkable, and under it we would not perhaps secure any better men. The only plan, then, that can be considered is the present one, of appointment, with the change I propose of having three appointments where now there is one. The first appointment might be made, as it has been in the past, by the ministry of the day to reward a faithful supporter who has done good work in this House and in the country; but to preserve somewhat the balance of power, to prevent the Senate becoming wholly partisan, and to enable the minority to become represented, the next appointment might be made by the hon. leader of the opposition. That makes two of the three appointments. The third appointment then is in the hands of the Prime Minister. Would it be possible that there could be an understanding, a convention or unwritten agreement between the parties, and the great papers representing the parties should agree, that in making the third appointment the Prime Minister should select men who are bulking large in the public service of the country, prominent bankers, prominent newspaper writers, or teachers in our great colleges or railway managers. This country has produced a great many such men, we are bringing them forward all the time, and I believe that men could be got who have been successful in their careers, who would take such an appointment for the honour, not for the emolument. Such men would be of great service to the country and their appointment would have the effect of making the Senate a continuing body of men of ability. Then the problems that are troubling us now, and we must always have such problems, could be dealt with by that body with plenty of time, without partisanship, and in that way we could get the best solution of such questions that could possibly be obtained. There may be some difficulty in working out the plan I have suggested, but I believe that it is worthy of some thought. Such men can be obtained and they would bring to the service of the country the special qualities that are needed.

I have expressed my thought on this matter with some hesitation because I realize how great are the questions with which we have to deal. The only solution that could be accepted would be one that could be brought without disturbing the constitution and without taking an appeal to the King as is proposed in the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford). Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) should persist in his resolution as he does. I know that my hon. friend is very persistent in his views, but it seems to me that three times hand running in three different sessions is rather overdoing it. My hon. friend from Lincoln is generally a strong supporter or defender of established rights, but in this case he is trying to upset entirely not only established rights, but a solemn agreement. As I understand it, the Senate of Canada was established at the time of confederation. It was established largely with a view of protecting as much as possible the interests of the smaller provinces. You know that there is a tendency throughout the world to legislate on the principle that might is right. Therefore, I do not blame the smaller provinces for putting in the agreement of confederation some clauses by which their rights might be protected. When my hon. friend moves a resolution that this House should appeal to the King in Council or to the imperial parliament to abolish the Senate he apparently does not take into consideration that he could not possibly do that without the consent of these smaller provinces, and of the Senate itself, unless he absolutely overpowers them, and goes over their heads. I am quite sure that even my hon. friend would not ask us to break a solemn pledge even if we have the power. Therefore, the only way that the Senate can be either abolished or reformed, so far as I can understand, is to get the consent of the Senate itself and of all the provinces before we do anything in the matter, unless we adopt the theory that might is right and override them by appealing to the Crown. The smaller provinces, as I understand it, will insist on the protection that has been provided in the constitution of our country, in the Act of Confederation. My hon. friend says that in Ontario they have but a single House. That is quite true. He also says that no wrong or hurried legislation could be passed through this House without being objected to by some members. I quite believe that might be true, but at the same time the majority would govern. I had the honour of replying to my hon. friend on this question once before, and I then said that so far as I knew the Senate or a second chamber was of advantage to this country and was absolutely necessary to prevent hasty legislation. No matter how that second chamber may be established, I still think a second chamber is absolutely necessary to prevent hasty or undigested legislation or legislation that has not been sufficiently considered before being passed. I have no brief to defend the present Senate, but I believe, as I said once before, that if it is going to be appointed just as capable men can be appointed from the ranks of the party in power as from the ranks of the party in opposition. If there was a vacancy in the Senate now, I am free to confess that I think the party in power should have the right to pick out, and that they can select as good men from their own ranks as they possibly could from the ranks of the opposition, and I am perfectly willing that the nomination should be made in that way. I have no particular fault to find with the present Senate. I have been here but a short time, but I know that a number of very useful Bills have been originated in the Senate, and that some very capable amendments have been made to Bills that went up from this House. These amendments were perfectly right, and no fault was found with them by this House, which adopted them in most cases without discussion. That shows that the Senate are capable. I do not believe that even my hon. friend would venture to say that the individual members of the Senate are not absolutely capable.

I was much taken with the speech of the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. McCall) because I think he spoke earnestly and spoke his mind. He made some very excellent suggestions. I do not agree that the senators should be appointed for only six years; if you are going to continue to nominate, I think the term should certainly be longer than that. I think the term should certainly be longer than six years. As to the suggestion of my hon. friend from Lincoln that the Senate should be abolished, I think, with all due deference to the hon. gentleman, that if he really wishes to write his name upon the pages of history he should apply the time and patience he used in preparing speeches in support of Senate abolition to the discovery of means of reforming the Senate if it needs reform. Personally, I do not say that the present form of the Senate should be particularly changed. If that body is to be reformed, it certainly should be, in my judgment, on democratic lines, by election in some form. My suggestion would be that a certain number of senators be elected at large for each province, or, if not elected at large, that the senatorial districts be larger—perhaps twice or three times more extensive—than the constituency of a member of the House of Commons.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) says that he introduced a railway measure that was voted for by 220 members of this House and by 16 members of the Senate, but that 20 members of the Senate threw out that Bill. I remember the Bill he speaks of, but, unfortunately for me, I was so green that I did not know it was going through the House until it was passed. Personally, I was opposed to the Bill, and would have voted against it if I had had sense enough to know that it was going through the House. I do not know that any other members were in the same position, but I know that there were many who were not in favour of the Bill. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that, perhaps, the Senate did not do so badly in that case.

Mr. LANCASTER. What I said was that the House passed the Bill unanimously three times. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) was in his seat and did not raise his voice against it.

Mr. NESBITT. And I have told the hon. gentleman why, and I am quite frank in my acknowledgment. The hon. gentleman said also something to the effect that those who were in favour of abolishing the Senate were imperialists, or that the imperialists need not be afraid to abolish the Senate because Great Britain would look after our interests, but that those who were in favour of separation from Great Britain—I think that was the way he put it—would oppose the abolition of the Senate.

Mr. LANCASTER. I said they might be in favour of it possibly.

Mr. NESBITT. I consider that a very wonderful thought on the part of the hon. gentleman. I think it was a great draught on his powers of imagination; I confess that it was too much for me; I could not follow it. As to the usefulness of the Senate and our need to have our legislation checked, let me once more say that I am aware that the present Senate has introduced and sent to this chamber valuable legislation and that they have made useful amendments in the Bills sent to them from this House. As to the present personnel of the Senate, so far as I know, the Senators are as capable, man for man, as members of this House. In one thing I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), and that is that some of the Senators have attained too great an age to take a useful part in the work of legislation. But it is extremely difficult to fix an age limit, because some men at seventy are better than they were at fifty, some men of seventy-five, with matured minds and wide experience, are better for the work of legislation than other men at sixty-five or less. Therefore, I could not advocate the age limit for the Senate.

I do not think my hon. friend can expect many members of this House to vote for his resolution. Certainly the idea of abolishing the Senate is repugnant to me. I would assist in any way I could a reasonable measure of reform of the Senate, and I believe that the best reform would be by a system of election.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon). My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has spoken very strongly in favour of the abolition of the Senate. Perhaps, as a younger man, I would have agreed with him; but I must say that my experience in Ottawa has led me to see that a second chamber is a very useful body. I think that any person who has had experience with our Railway Committee, for instance, would come to the conclusion that he would rather have a measure for which he wished deliberate thought considered in the Senate than in our own House. We know, too, that measures which are very useful indeed are introduced in the Senate, and, after mature consideration, are brought before this House, and that the work of this House is relieved to a very great degree. The reason why we have not had any considerable agitation concerning the Senate, either for its abolition or reform, lies, I think, in the fact that there has been no conflict between the two Houses.

My hon. friend from Lincoln referred to the resolution which was passed by the Liberal convention of 1893. There had been two events which brought to the mind of the Liberal party, at any rate, the advisability of a change in the Senate. Questions had arisen in the House of Commons involving the rights of minorities. In 1882 a monstrous gerrymander Bill was passed by the government of the day, under which the rights of the Liberal minority were taken away, and if ever there was a time calling for the action of the Senate on behalf of a minority it was then, but that opportunity they ignored. On a later occasion, in 1885, the Conservative government introduced a Franchise Act which was framed with the idea of disfranchising a great portion of the Liberal electorate, and it was only by the strenuous fighting of the very able opposition of that day that the designs of the Conservative government were frustrated. I think it was these two instances in which the Senate had not shown themselves to be the protectors of minorities, that led the Liberal party of that day to declare in favour of Senate reform. There has been no agitation in the Conservative party for a reform of the Senate. I am very glad indeed to be able to congratulate the Conservative party that there is a government in power which has never endeavoured to pass measures in this House which would deprive the Conservative party of their rights, and they have never had occasion to complain of the Senate that that body was not according them full protection. I think in the two instances I have given, you find the reasons why the Liberal party of 1893 were strongly in favour of Senate reform. I have said that the reason there is no agitation to-day is because there is no conflict. It lies further in the fact that this is a democratic body. My hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) spoke of making the Senate an elective body, that is to say, a democratic body, by giving it co-equal power with this House of Commons. I think, Sir, that would be a mistake. I think it would be a mistake to create another body with co-equal authority from the people with this House of Commons, because to that degree it would diminish the power and authority of the House of Commons. The security which we have in Canada to-day for sound legislation lies in the fact that the Senate agrees with the House of Commons. For that reason I think it is desirable that the power of appointment should continue to continue to reside in the government of the day.

I agree with my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. McCall) in his suggestion that the change be made in the direction of term appointments, and he suggested a period of six years. For myself I would prefer a longer period, but that is a matter of detail which could be settled later on. I think there are many reasons why term appointments would be preferable to life appointments as they now exist. My hon. friend from Norfolk referred to one fact that should be borne in mind, namely, that those who go into the Senate and remain there for a long time are not at their best in attending to whatever duties are laid upon them. After their term of appointment has expired the government of the day would be justified in telling them that there were younger men who could take their places. In many instances no doubt that would not be necessary, because their friends would advise them not to seek their seats again. My hon. friend from Norfolk suggested a way in which the Senate should be appointed in future; he suggested that the leader of the opposition should be called into council, and that representatives of the press should also be consulted. Those are matters which I need not enter into, those are things which could be worked out by the Premier himself if he thought such a plan desirable. I do think however that it is altogether desirable in the interest of this country that the present life term of senators should be abolished for the future. When a new government come into power the Senate would be brought into correspondence with this chamber in a short time by the method of term appointments. This suggestion which has been made by my hon. friend from Norfolk has exceptional merit in the fact that it is one which would secure, not only the approval of this House, but of the Senate itself. There are many schemes proposed, some of which are impracticable and fanciful, and very few of which would carry in this House. There are a number on both sides of the House who look forward to a seat in the Senate at some time in the future. Fortunately in this country we have government by the government, and I think if the government took hold of this question and asked this House to carry through such a measure, ensuring the present senators the tenure of their seats during their lifetime, there would be no difficulty in passing such a measure in both the House of Commons and the Senate. Some might say that the suggestion does not go far enough. I say let us go that far at least. I hope the government will bring in a Bill to carry out the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Norfolk.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the third time and the third year that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has introduced a resolution to abolish the Senate. This is the third time that he has endeavoured to convince the House that it would be advisable, in the public interest, that we should depart from the principle laid down in the constitutional Act, and lay aside altogether one of the pillars of the state, which were erected by those whom he properly describes as the fathers of confederation. The persistency of my hon. friend in face of adverse results shows that his motives are sincere, and the earnestness with which he has pursued his design commands our respect. At the same time, I may be permitted to observe to my hon. friend that he has approached this question, not from the point of view of any principle, but on the ground that the Senate as at present constituted has not reached that standard of excellence which we had a right to expect from it. That is a view which may be controverted, but I do not here and now enter into any controversy with him upon the point. The question which he has presented to the House and the manner in which he has presented it resolve themselves simply into this proposition: Is it, or is it not, advisable that the whole legislative authority and power of the country should be reposed in one single chamber, as he suggests; or rather shall continue to be divided under the bicameral system which we have had since confederation? If, in answer to that question, we look to the experience of the world at large, there can be but one conclusion, and that conclusion must be adverse to the policy laid down by my hon. friend. I believe that in this he will agree with me—I speak under correction—but I think that what I am going to say is absolutely correct, that I do not know of any country at the present time blessed with sovereign and constitutional power in which is not to be found the bicameral system. I do not know of any civilized country at this moment where they have the legislative powers concentrated in one single body. So far as my information goes, and I think my information is absolutely correct, there is no country that I can think of, at all events, in which they have not the legislative power divided between two bodies. Let me go further, and ask my hon. friend what he understands to be at present the issue in England. Not, perhaps, in the absolute form in which my hon. friend has presented it, but at all events the question is not at present one between two different sets of views—that is to say, the retention or total abolition of the second chamber. I am not aware, nor do I believe that at this moment the total abolition of the second chamber, as the hon. gentleman proposes, is the issue, but what has been proposed is that they shall so check the veto power of the second chamber as to make it of no use and to put an end to it. That is the proposition which is now before the British people, and unless I mistake my hon. friend altogether, I believe that if he were an English elector he would not propose that Great Britain should put an end to the second chamber.

Mr. LANCASTER. I certainly would not. I understand the distinction. There they have no other cooling basin than the House of Lords. Here we have the Imperial parliament, to which we can appeal, and we do not need a Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand my hon. friend then to say that it is advisable that the legislative power should have a check. He is not proposing that we should have a legislative body altogether without any check. I agree with him in that. So far as we can see it would not be wise that we should have a legislative body absolutely without any check at all. But, he thinks we have a check in this country under our constitution by the power of disallowance. May I be permitted to suggest to my hon. friend that the remedy which he proposes would be far worse than no check at all. The remedy which he proposes of disallowance, if it were exercised at all, would lead to confusion, and even worse than confusion, and to very serious results indeed. I doubt very much that, if the power of disallowance which is now, under our constitution, vested in the British parliament, had been exercised in the way which my hon. friend suggests, the relations between the mother country and this country would have been as cordial as they are at the present time. We in this government also have the power of disallowance over the province of Ontario where they do not have a second chamber. Is my hon. friend prepared to take the stand that he would advise, as a check upon the province of Ontario, disallowance by this government of the legislation of the province of Ontario? Why, Sir, if we were to apply that remedy, which my hon. friend says ought to be applied to Canada by Great Britain, if we were to apply that check over the legislature of Ontario, my hon. friend would be the first man to protest against the superior power of this government being exercised to set aside the will of the people of Ontario as expressed in their legislature. A few years ago the legislature of Ontario passed an Act which, in my judgment, was very unsound legislation, in the judgment of many others not only on this side but, I believe, on the other side of the House was very unsound legislation. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) when urged to disallow such legislation, would not do so. Why? Because he agreed with the legislation? Far from it; he disagreed with it altogether. He stated that it was a most infamous Act, that it was a direct violation of the rights of private ownership, but he said: I will not advise this government to exercise the power with which they are vested under the constitution to substitute our own wisdom for the will of the people of Ontario as expressed by their legislature. He went further and said that if it pleases the people of Ontario in their legislature to confiscate private property, if they are prepared to do so by their legislation, the remedy is in the people of Ontario and not in this government. If the Minister of Justice had advised the government to take the course which my hon. friend has suggested in his speech and to disallow that legislation of the province of Ontario I am much mistaken if my hon. friend the member for Lincoln would not have been one of the first, if not the very first, to rise and protest against the tyranny of the government in thus interfering with the sovereign power of one of the provinces constituting this confederation. Let me apply this same reasoning to the will of the people of Canada as expressed in this House. Suppose we pass a Bill in this House by a narrow majority, if you will, or by a large majority, one of those Bills upon some of those questions which in this country unfortunately at times have aroused a great deal of popular passion and prejudice, and if there were no Senate to check the legislation of this House, and the imperial government were to try to disallow this legislation and substitute their own view of what was right for our own view of what was right, does my hon. friend believe that this would be conducive to the good-will which we expect to endure for ever between the people of Canada and the people of Great Britain? If my hon. friend wanted to plant seeds of discord, and to bring about the dissolution of the ties which bind us to Great Britain, the remedy which he suggests would be the very remedy that would produce that result.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the right hon. gentleman tell me the reason for placing that section in the constitution? It is not there for waste paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not there for waste paper, but I do not believe it has been placed there for any such purpose as my hon. friend has suggested. It was not placed there in order to review our legislation, but simply for extreme cases where this parliament might do something which, in the view of Great Britain, would be injurious to the relations existing between this country and Great Britain. We have exercised our power only occasionally. Since we have been in office we have never disallowed any legislation except that which we thought interfered with the policy of this government, and the interests of the empire at large. The only legislation which we have disallowed, except in some instances where some legislature had clearly gone beyond the sphere of its jurisdiction, has been the immigration legislation of British Columbia. We did that, because we thought that the legislation of British Columbia in respect to Japanese immigrants would entangle us in difficulties from an imperial point of view. That was the only reason why we did it, and it is for some such purpose that the Sovereign power of Great Britain has been maintained in the constitution. But, Sir, was it ever contemplated by Sir John Macdonald, or Sir George Brown or any of the fathers of confederation, that the parliament of Great Britain should have the right in matters of legislation to substitute their wisdom for ours and that they should be able to say: The parliament of Canada has passed legislation on this or that subject which we think to be wrong, and therefore, we shall disallow it. If anything of that kind were attempted long e'er this there would have been strong protest. However, the government of Great Britain have never attempted anything of the kind except on one or two occasions, when the disallowance of our legislation was immediately followed by strong protest from the government and the people of Canada. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), who I am sure is in earnest in this matter will consider it carefully, I believe he will come to the conclusion that what he proposes would not only be no remedy at all, but that it would prove an element of discord in the happy relations which now exist between us and Great Britain. If there is one thing more certain than another it is that when we obtained responsible government it was with the view that the legislature of this country should be responsible to the people of this country and to nobody else. It was never intended that with respect to the subjects which were entrusted to us by the Act of confederation the Canadian parliament should be responsible to the people of Great Britain and not to the people of Canada. Any departure from that principle would be a thing to be deprecated. Now, Sir, if the considerations which I have presented to my hon. friend be correct, he will I think agree with me that his remedy cannot be accepted. If we must have a check over the legislation passed by the House of Commons, this check is not to be found in Great Britain, but within the purview of our constitution, and consequently in a second chamber. I am rather sorry that the hon. gentleman (Mr.

Lancaster) instead of moving such a drastic resolution, did not follow the example of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. McCall), and give us the benefit of some suggestions as to reform of the Senate. I think we are all, on both sides of the House agreed, at the present time, that the constitution of the Senate is susceptible of amendment. Nobody pretends that it is not. But, there was a time when the views of gentlemen supporting the Conservative party were not so decided on the question as they appear to be at this moment. There was a time when they thought the Senate was perfect. Not long after the present government came into office, I remember that Sir Charles Tupper sitting opposite me said: Thank God we have a Senate. That was the occasion when the Senate rejected our proposed railway to the Yukon, and which had it been adopted would I believe have been one of the most useful pieces of legislation ever put on the statute-books.

Mr. FOSTER. And on that occasion, many of your own friends, if not yourself, also thanked God there was a Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It certainly was not on that occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes it was.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On that occasion it was Sir Charles Tupper who thanked God there was a Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a very good story and fairly well authenticated which said, that a very good friend of the Prime Minister, on the night of the passage of that Bill through the commons or on the eve of the vote which was to take place in the Senate went home and it is said spent many hours at his bedside praying God to put into the minds of the senators the will to defeat that iniquitous Bill which he himself had voted for in the Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a legend, and cannot have foundation in fact. If ever there was a mistake committed by the Senate of Canada it was when they rejected that Bill, which had it been passed would have afforded Canada access to the Yukon which we have not now except by passing through American territory. In all earnestness I repeat, that if ever there was a mistake committed by the Canadian Senate it was on that occasion. And what did they reject the Bill for? They rejected it because it was supposed at that time that the Yukon was covered with gold, and that we were paying an enormous price for the railway ; whereas it has turned out that had the bargain been made the railway would have been built on the best terms obtainable, and better terms than ever again will be obtained. Had my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) suggested some plan to reform the Senate I would have thanked him. The hon. gentleman told us that in 1896 he was in favour of the Senate, but that he has changed his mind. Well, he is not the only man on the opposite side of the House who has changed his mind, because many of these gentlemen opposite who were against the reform of the Senate before 1896 are in favour of that idea now. However, the difficulty has always been to discover a proper method of reform. It is a question which is open to argument, and speaking for myself personally I am open to conviction upon this point. I am ready to receive any valuable, practical suggestion which may come from either side of the House, but we must all admit that for the last 14 years we have not received any suggestion, which in our opinion leads to a proper reform of the Senate. And, what should be a proper reform of the Senate. First of all, objection was taken to life appointment, and there is a good deal in that objection. For my part, I would rather favour an appointment for a limited time, not six years as was suggested by my hon. friend from Norfolk, because I think that term would be altogether too short, but for 12 or 15 years. That would suit me, and if any such suggestion were made I would be ready to consider it. Now, by whom should the appointments to the Senate be made ; should they be nominative or elective? So far as I can see there is no one within the reach of my voice who would favour an elective Senate. We think we have elections enough at the present time, and I have not heard any one to suggest that the senators should be elected by the people. That being so what is the next plan? It has been suggested that the senators should be elected by the local legislatures, and I am free to confess that in my earlier days when my hair was not so white as now, I would have favoured that reform myself. It must be admitted that in the early years of the American republic the Senate of the United States reached a point of excellence which has hardly ever been surpassed in any other country in the world. But, it must be admitted that of late years especially, the appointment of senators by the different states has not worked so satisfactorily as it did in the earlier years of the republic. I would not be prepared to say for all that, that I would be against the appointment by the local legislatures although my enthusiasm in that respect is not as great as it was in my younger days. But, if it were proposed to elect a certain proportion of the Senate by the local legislatures and that we should retain the appointment of another portion in our own hands, perhaps we might find there a proper measure of reform. At all events, the one thing to be kept in mind in any reform of the Senate is, that the different sections of public opinion should be represented on the floor of the Senate. It may be said, and I have heard it said : Why does not the government itself select senators from the different political parties. Well, I have only to say that the government is composed of men who are very human, and I do not know that whether the appointments were made by a Conservative or a Liberal government they differed very much in degree as to the mode of selection. It will, of course, always be very difficult to have the different classes of the community properly represented if the nominating power is not centered in one body, but in different bodies. We would have that if a part of the electors of the Senate were to be appointed by the local legislatures or some such body. In saying this I am not expressing convictions which are deliberate and final ; but I say that these are all matters for consideration. My hon. friend from Lincoln seemed to be strongly in favour of that point of view ; and when he favours us next year with the same subject, he may possibly present us with a scheme of reform, rather than a proposal for the total abolition of the Senate. As my hon. friend knows in advance what will be the result if he presses his motion now, and as he has elicited the opinion of the House, perhaps he will agree to withdraw it. If not, we shall have to divide the House upon it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, as I understand, there is to be a vote taken on this question. I give that as my reason for making a few observations upon it. Ever since my entrance into this chamber I have watched somewhat closely the history of our own Senate, and have read something of the history of second chambers in other countries. From time to time there has been agitation amongst the electors, in my riding as well as in others, for the abolition of the Senate—by some on the ground that it was too expensive, by others on the ground that it was unnecessary to have a chamber corrective of the House of Commons, and by others upon the ground that the senators, instead of acting as non-partisan, have been in the habit of acting as partisans, and that this would be found to be the case no matter which political party was in power. Therefore, taking an interest in the question, I have watched the career and history of the Senate very closely, and have also read the history of second chambers in other countries, and I agree with the right hon. the Prime Minister that there is no civilized country that I am aware of which has constitutional government that has not a second chamber. If we are to learn from history and experience—and I respectfully submit that these are the most reliable educative sources that we can possibly have—there is only one conclusion with regard to this question that we can reach, that is, that it would not be wise to be without a second chamber. I think that applies just as strongly to Canada, where we profess to have typical constitutional government, as it does to England, the mother of parliaments, or to Germany, or to the United States, or to other countries.

The hon. member for Lincoln said that at confederation, when we established the second chamber, the conditions were different from what they are now, and the people did not know as much about government and governments, and that was the reason we had a second chamber. Well, I do not think so. At that time men were elected to the Senate just as members of the House of Commons are elected to-day, only they represented larger constituencies. In my own district, one of the first elections I ever took part in was that in which one of the candidates for the Senate, Sir David L. Macpherson, ran for the Brock and Saugeen division, which included three counties. But what did we find? For the county of Grey there were three members in this House, for the county of Bruce three members, and for the county of Simcoe two or three members. Yet we found that the senator who represented the larger district composed of these three counties was deliberately antagonized in legislation by the members elected to the Commons for the same counties by the same class of people. It seemed to me that that was not a healthy system, and I think so still. While it might be admissible to elect a limited number to the Senate, I do not think it is a sound principle to have the same electorate elect men to the Senate and also to the Commons, and have them antagonizing each other just as the two political parties do in this House. Then it occurred to me that a limited number of senators ought to be appointed by the provincial legislatures, and I still hold to that idea. Perhaps I was influenced in it by the system that prevails in the United States. I agree with the right hon. the First Minister that in the early history of the United States it was generally conceded that the Senate was a very useful and important body, but it seems to me, as it does to a great many others in this country, that their system has rather degenerated of late years, and might, in the interest of the country, be reformed in some direction as well as our own.

Now, the first question we should settle in our own minds is this: Is or is not a second chamber desirable? I think most readers of the history of constitutional government in other countries will agree with me that it is desirable. If that be so, what should we do if ours is not fulfilling the indications of what a second chamber should be? We should apply ourselves to the task of bringing that chamber into harmony with the needs of constitutional government. Do we pretend to say it is an impossible task? The man who admits that acknowledges weakness on his part, no man should lie down and say that anything is impossible that can be accomplished in any other part of the world. Most things that at first sight look to us impossible have been solved in different ages of the world by intelligent men who have sincerely and honestly applied themselves to the task with continuity of purpose, with patience, pluck and perseverance. If we thus apply ourselves to the task of reforming the Senate, that problem will be solved. The present government promised reform, there is no doubt about that, they do not deny it.

Mr. LANCASTER. How far have they got in 14 years?

Mr. SPROULE. They have not succeeded and even if they stayed here for 50 years without succeeding that would not be an argument that others could not accomplish a reform. Many governments have failed in the attempt to do things which their successors have succeeded in doing. We should apply ourselves to the task of reforming the Senate and bringing it into harmony with the needs of the country rather than abolish it.

The hon. member defends his argument for its abolition by citing the fact that Ontario has only one chamber, and he asks who is dissatisfied with the legislation in Ontario. I say that during the 33 years that the Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat and his friends were in power, had there been a second chamber very much of the pernicious legislation that was put on the statute-books of that province, to its detriment and destruction, and to the injury of its people, would not have been in operation to-day. There is no doubt of it whatever in my mind. Because it is going on smoothly now and seems to fulfil the indications of the situation——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE—according to our honest judgment, whether it be right or wrong. That is not saying that we should always have a second chamber, because for a few years, we think they have done right——

Mr. McCRANEY. Does the hon. gentleman think there should be a second chamber now in Ontario?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not debating that because I would have to travel into a wider field, I am only answering the argument of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) which, to my mind, was very weak. That hon. gentleman says we have a corrective power in the veto, and there is no need of a second chamber. As the First Minister said, what Bills do we veto that come up from the provinces? We veto, with one exception, and even that is not exclusive, such Bills as are passed by provincial parliaments outside or partially outside of their jurisdiction. That is the only legislation the federal parliament dare veto. Would they dare to veto a provincial Bill wholly within the rights of the province? I do not think so, because if they did, the result would be that they might raise such a storm as would cause almost an insurrection or something equally as bad. It was said that we vetoed the British Columbia Bill regarding immigration. It must be remembered that immigration is one of the subjects with which we have to deal, and although there was another question involved in that subject, outside of the fact that Japan is a friendly ally with England, and we could not afford to shut out the Japanese from Canada as a matter of policy, we could have vetoed that Bill on the ground that this parliament had the right to deal with immigration. It would not be wise to depend on the veto power, for if it were exercised we would very soon be in conflict with England, we would soon find cause to blame England for interfering with what we regarded as our proper and legitimate rights. For these reasons I am opposed to this resolution. I have always been in favour of a second chamber, and unless conditions in the future are very different from what has transpired in the past in the parliament of this country I shall continue to hold that view. I think that one of the defects in the second chamber has been that too many appointments have been made from certain classes. For instance, there are a great many men in that chamber connected with banks, with loan companies, with financial corporations, and great institutions of that kind, and some with manufacturing corporations. I have not objected to that with regard to the latter because I do not think their proportion is too numerous. I have said that when we send up Bills containing very proper and wise provisions either to restrain or control these corporations, we never succeed in getting them through the second chamber. Why? Because too many presidents of banks, too many men connected with loan companies, insurance companies or other financial corporations or railway corporations, are in the Senate, and they can always influence the Senate to the extent of preventing our Bills from passing. But that can all be remedied by a proper selection. It is not at all an impossible task, in fact to my mind it would be a very easy task. Therefore we need not urge that as a reason for the abolition of the Senate.

For these reasons I am prepared to vote against the motion. For friendly reasons, I would like to support my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), because we agree in nearly everything with which we are associated in parliamentary life, we seem to think very much alike on many lines; but this is one of the things on which I disagree with him, and I do so because of my honest conviction that the day has not come when this government could or when we should wisely dispense with the second chamber in the parliament of Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). The question of second chamber reform is up for discussion in the mother country of Great Britain. It is also up in the adjoining republic of the United States. It is up even here in Canada in a way because the Senate of the parliament of Canada has recently been discussing how it could become a more useful body. I think that a case has been made out here to-night not for the abolition of the Senate, but for its reform. I believe that if something is not done in the way of reform of the Senate there will be a wider agitation in the country for its abolition, because to my mind a Senate appointment for life is an anomaly and will not meet with the approval of the people. A Senate that is constituted almost entirely of one party is an anomaly and is contrary to democratic ideas. Therefore, after the confession the Prime Minister has made to-night, I think it is incumbent upon him to deal with this question. And certainly there have been suggested in the House to-night at least two valuable reforms. One is that the life term for senators should cease immediately, or, at least, as soon as we could get sanction for it, probably with the consent of the Senate. And the second is that the senatorial term should be limited,—I would suggest that the limit be six years with, perhaps, eligibility for re-election. I think also that some senators should be elected by the legislatures and some appointed by the government. But the thing is to deal with the matter. We have been promised this for years. The government have assumed the responsibility of supplying the leadership necessary to put into law what seems to be public opinion, and it can hardly be doubted that public opinion is in favour of some kind of reform of the Senate. The Senate has confessed that they themselves would like to see improvement. The second chamber in England is ready for extensive reform, and that question is now being threshed out there. And, in view of the fact that the government will probably propose, within the next year or two a large increase in the Senate by the addition of new members to represent the West, it is clear that that proposal when made should be accompanied by some proposal for Senate reform. The address of the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. McCall) I think commended itself to every member of the House. The change he proposes is not a sweeping change but is in the direction of making the Senate more representative, taking away its one-sided character and fitting it to do better work. The Senate say they wish to do more and better work. And the quantity of legislation now presented in parliament is so vast and the subjects considered so numerous that there should be a better division of labour between the two Houses. My contention is that reform of the Senate is long past due, and some kind of reform should come almost immediately, and certainly in connection with the increase in the Senate of which we hear rumours, rumours that, I believe, have good foundation.

As to the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the interests have too large a representation in the Senate, I quite agree with that opinion. When did this democratic government ever propose, for instance, to put a representative of labour in the Senate? In England, there is representation of the labour interests. And I should say that the farming interest is not sufficiently represented in the Senate.

Mr. SPROULE. And where are our universities?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I do not claim super-excellence for the universities, or that they should be represented over other portions of the community, but the working interest and the farming interests should be better represented in the Senate. In the old days we heard a good deal more about representation of the farmers in the Senate than we do to-day. The only men who seem to be considered as candidates for the Senate are those who have served in this House and those identified with the interests. I do not believe in members of this House going to the upper chamber. Reasons may be given for the occasional exception. Or, perhaps, there might be something in the idea that members who have served in certain capacities in this House should ex officio become members of the Senate. But the wholesale appointment of members of this House to the Senate as now carried on does not tend to promote the independence of this House, and it involves a wrong exercise of political patronage which has often been condemned by hon. members opposite. I have been reading an English review which says that, if the upper chamber is not representative and is not equal quality with the other, a gramophone would do for the other House. And that is what people will be saying—that a gramophone or a rubber stamp would do for a Senate. But the Senate can be made a useful body. The best men in the country should be in it. They should frame Bills and make necessary investigations. The House of Lords in England is a useful body in that respect, and has, time and again, justified its existence by what it has accomplished in this way. I would like to see a reformed second chamber in Canada, taking a larger share of the work of legislation. And the Prime Minister, as I have said, should take this matter up. He said last year in answer to the arguments that I brought forward: What would you do? My answer is: if the Prime Minister is not prepared to assume responsibility, let him make way for those who are. I believe he blocks the way. He says he has a mandate—and so he has—to carry on the government. But he has given a pledge to do this work, for his party pledged themselves to reform the Senate. When is the fruit of that promise to appear? It seems further away than ever.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps that fig tree is barren.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Perhaps it is. But I will not go so far as to say that, for while there is life there is hope. If the Prime Minister will assume his proper responsibility and propose reform at least in connection with the proposal for an increase of the Senate membership, if that is to come, I think he will have the commendation of the country.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). One word by way of explanation; I think I was the first member of this House to introduce a resolution in favour of the abolition of the Senate. If the present resolution comes to a vote, I shall vote with the mover of the resolution, although I do not agree with all the arguments he has advanced. While I introduced such a resolution some years ago, I am quite ready to say to-day that I do not believe there is that popular and widespread demand in the country for the abolition of the Senate that I had supposed existed. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said that a movement for the abolition of the Senate would carry to-day by popular vote. It is probable that such would be the pronouncement of the Canadian people, but I believe that would be largely because of the appeal to the public on the ground of dollars and cents, the money cost of maintaining the Senate. I would not like to see the Senate abolished for such a reason; I do not think at all that it would be a sufficient reason for doing away with the upper chamber. One of the great reasons why I would like to see the upper House done away with would be that there are among the senators to-day men who are quite capable of representing constituencies in this House and who would be in this House were they not in the Senate. I believe that men of ability and of business and legislative experience would be of more value to the country in the House of Commons than they are or can be in the Senate. Further, I think there is at least a danger that an upper House composed as it must sometimes be under the present system of men, a very large majority of whom are upon one side of the political line, may prove an obstruction to legislation. A third reason why I would like to see the upper chamber done away with, and that is by all means the least of the three reasons, is the money cost of maintaining the Senate. As to reforming the Senate, it has always seemed to me, and I have paid a great deal of attention to every method of reform, or any suggestion of reform which I have heard advanced by any person, either in this House, or in books that I have read, that no method I have heard suggested, yet seems to me likely to afford any improvement. I believe the Senate as we have it to-day is better than it would be under any system of suggested reform. However, what we have before us now is not a suggestion of reform, but simply a resolution to abolish.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not suppose I can throw any bright light on this matter. But as an old parliamentarian, and now for some time in public life, I have my views with reference to the matter. Two things seem apparent in this recurring discussion year after year. One is that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), whose spirit of combat always rises as difficulties present themselves, will never be wanting in an incentive for his attacks upon the Senate in the line of abolition. The task will always be there, and my hon. friend will always have an obstacle quite sufficient to call forth all his better powers in his attempt to abolish the Senate. The other fact equally apparent is that it gives a yearly opportunity for the leader of the government to express how open he is to conviction—open at both sides, it seems to me, open for any conviction or any suggestion to come in, and equally open to let it fly out into the air. Now, my right hon. friend commenced with saying that the Senate was one of the great pillars of the state. I agree with him in that respect that the Senate theoretically is one of the great pillars of the state. But these pillars of state may become pretty dilapidated, and on the other hand so strong in sustaining power as to arouse our admiration and enthusiasm when one contemplates them. As an architect looking from his point of view upon these great pillars of state, one, two or three of them, as may be, I wonder that the feeling does not grow strong within him to repair the damages occasionally and keep these pillars of state up to at least their former greatness, and if possible to idealize them a little, and make them more worthy of the times. He is urged to do that.

My right hon. friend had some fun with members on this side because of their change of views. A number of years ago, he informs the House, the Tories had every confidence in the Senate, but at present they seem to have had a change of view. My right hon. friend is open to the same sort of rejoinder. It is not more than fifteen or sixteen years ago that my right hon. friend had very strong views with reference to the Senate. At that time he believed that it ought to be either ended or mended, and he inclined to the idea of immediate emendation. But fourteen years have passed by, and my right hon. friend has yet to make his first motion towards carrying out that pledge of the Liberal party, which was well understood in this country to be a pledge to reform the Senate so as to bring it more into accord with the conditions of the present time.

There is no need of speaking about that matter of the Yukon railway, but it might be as well to remind my right hon. friend that although the scheme was thrown out in the Senate there came a time not long after when my right hon. friend, if he had thought this measure was so necessary to the development of this country and the opening up of the Yukon, could have carried that proposition with the Senate in his own favour. But my right hon. friend says now that is too late. Why? Because then it was believed that all the country was filled with gold, afterwards it turned out there was no gold there at all. Surely my right hon. friend would not be guided by a number of men who wanted to build a railway and give him a gold brick. So I do not think my right hon. friend was very happy in that allusion.

For my own part I am not able, I am sorry to say, to support my hon. friend from Lincoln in his motion for the abolition of the Senate. For the present at least I think a second chamber is here to stay, provided it be fairly constituted. I agree a good deal with my hon. friend from York, who said that unless something is done to make the Senate more effective and to bring it more in accord with the conditions of the time, the sentiment for abolition will grow, and it may grow very speedily. I think it is a pity that that conviction should be allowed to spread amongst the people, and I am not sure but that my right hon. friend is responsible therefore in not carrying out his pledges so far as we can see by one single effort to reform the Senate. He has contributed to the adverse feeling that is growing in this country against the continuation of the Senate on the present conditions. Each year that passes the confidence and respect of the public in the Senate does not grow stronger, but on the other hand I think becomes weaker and the problem therefore will become more difficult to solve. I do not believe on the other hand that the patronage system is the proper system upon which to base the second great pillar of state. It is not only absurd but absolutely demoralizing to public life to have the 87 or 88 appointments to the Senate of the country absolutely in the hands of one man, the leader of the government, or of the party for the time being. The principle involved is this, that you simply make the Senate a clearing house for party exigencies, you simply make the Senate an extension of the patronage system. It enables you to say to a recalcitrant member; to the man whom you want to do something for you in political life, or for your party or to any one of these men in a hundred different exigencies that come up: There is a place in the Senate for you, if you do thus and so. Gentlemen like the leader of the present government would not approach a man in that blunt way, but there are methods by which this intimation can be made which are just as effective as if it were made in the language I have just used. But, is it not a tremendous absurdity to put into the hands of one man in the working of the concurrent branch of the legislature that appointive power? It is absurd. It is not only absurd but it is demoralizing from the very root up. It is demoralizing to the most straight and honest hearted politician that comes into the leadership of a party, the temptation is too great to be withstood. A man absolutely bends to it sooner or later and ends up by using it to its greatest possibilities. There never was a period in this country when it was being used to its greatest possibilities more than to-day. But my position is exactly the same whether it be used by one party in power or by the other. It is an absurd, unconstitutional business to take a great trust like that and to make it simply a piece of machinery and enginery for party warfare, and I do not care by whom or by what party it is being carried on. That it is demoralizing does not need any argument from me.

Well, now, are there no methods by which the present condition of things could be altered and made better? What are they? I think that rather than face the question of abolition or otherwise, the drift of opinion in this House is as to what methods may be adopted towards bettering the present situation. That was a very good argument, a very fine argument, that the Prime Minister used against our looking to Great Britain, to the prerogative of the Crown, as a check on the legislation of this House. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) that it is either desirable or sufficient or that it ever could be practically carried out. Two things are against its being carried out. The self-governing responsible parliament here would not put up with it. But there is an equally good reason that the King, or the users of the prerogative, would be very shy indeed in using it, so that on one side or the other it would fail in having its effect. Yet, I believe we ought to have a check, and it seems to me the only check we can have is one constituted for ourselves and by ourselves. But, I do not look upon the Senate as being simply a body which is to check and revise legislation, for that is largely clerks' work. It is work which can be done with discrimination or otherwise, but it is not a work which requires the highest powers of men and it is not the only or the best work by any means that a Senate could engage in. They are not only to be a check and a supervision upon hasty legislation coming from this House, but we should look forward to a Senate, and we should have a Senate which should become a vital, concurrent part of the legislative machinery of this country, and be able in many respects to give points to the House of Commons, and to do a work in the legislative work of the country which the House of Commons cannot do. Are we deteriorating in the House of Commons, or are we not? It is not for me to judge of that, each will have his impressions who has had an experience of a longer or shorter time in this House. But, whether we are deteriorating or not this fact seems to me to be true that we spend an enormous deal of time in the House of Commons doing work which is not the best work that we might do. That arises from the fact that party passion and party spirit are at their strongest in the House of Commons that they consequently impose upon us or they seemed to impose upon us the using of a vast deal of time in what does not result in very much good or very much in the way of actual legislation. Now, my idea is that in the Senate you could have a body out of which would be taken the strongly combative partisan and party spirit, which would cultivate a more reasonable frame of mind, which would breathe an atmosphere which was not surcharged with party rancours and party strifes, which would rise above these more petty things, for in reality they are petty, and trivial, and which could devote its time, in that higher, broader and more reasonable atmosphere, to the weightier matters of legislation, of examination, and to the hundred and one lines upon which legislative initiative and afterwards enactment could be made to run. I think that could be brought about. I do not see in the Senate to-day, nor have I seen in any day, the same spirit of partisanship as is developed in this House. Whether they be appointed by Tory or Grit the party passions are cooled in the upper House, and they never go to the extent of the wasting of time, and the bickering that they do in the popular branch in the House of Commons. How are you to get that Senate? I have stated that in so far as I am concerned I would absolutely cut out the appointive power for patronage purposes. It is a vicious principle, it cannot be defended on constitutional grounds, and I would cut that out entirely. How then would you get your Senate? The Prime Minister said that he did not know of any person who believed in an elective Senate. He sits every day in Council alongside of a very noted and distinguished colleague of his who is absolutely in favour of an elective Senate—the right hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce. The idea that something ought to be done is fully recognized in the Senate itself, and within the last four years they have had very exhaustive and very instructive discussions as to how the Senate could be made better. This discussion was contributed to by Sir Richard Cartwright, and I am free to say that with many of his views I agree in so far as my experience goes. I am in favour then of cutting out the appointive power for patronage purposes. That does not say that I would cut out the appointive power entirely. I would keep the appointive power, and in looking around I cannot find any source for the application of that power other than the government of the country for the time being.

But, I would restrict the appointive power by two things: The number to be appointed should be small and the basis of appointment should be such as would make the Prime Minister ashamed to make it for considerations of party patronage. Under the conditions he would be bound to the country and bound to his own respect, and honour to make these appointments on the basis which had been assigned. I would give the government of the country the appointment of twelve or fifteen of the senators, but these appointments should be for distinguished service, not patronage appointments at all. Much has been said to-night about the interests being represented in the upper House. There are interests and interests to be represented. You may have bankers in the upper House, and you may have no acknowledged banking authority or expert. A recognized banking authority and expert known in our own country, and better still known the broad world over and distinguished in that way, would be an acquisition to the upper House which would give it not only dignity, but would give it working power as well. The agricultural interest, it is said, should be represented. So it should, but the agricultural interest which I would have represented would be that expert knowledge of agriculture which makes a man an acknowledged authority in the country. The same with reference to forestry, the same with reference to the fisheries, the same with reference to science, and the same with reference to our universities.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Marys). How about labour?

Mr. FOSTER. There are labour men and labour men. If I were the appointing power I would be the last man to appoint one who was always prating about how much of a labour man he was. I would hunt through this country for the most distinguished and ablest representative of labour ideas in their broader and better forms, and I would put him in the upper House as the representative of labour. So in all these great lines, I would make the appointive power restricted by and based upon representation of distinguished services in these great interests. I will tell you one reason why I would do it. Such men cannot get into the legislature and cannot get into the Senate along the general line of election from the primaries up. They would not attempt it in the first place, and in 99 cases out of 100 they would be defeated if they did attempt it. Their whole training and conception of life makes them revolt against the processes by which it seems, almost alone, a man can work his way up into the legislature of modern countries. For that reason they might be all the more useful, but for that reason I would make their accession to our parliament, through appointment. I have in my mind's eye today, and so has my right hon. friend, men in all these great walks of life who would be an honour to the Senate of Canada, and who would be of vital help to us. Every once in a while we want expert help. We need it in this House, and we get it sometimes. But to have men such as I could name, in all these different spheres, in our legislative halls in the upper House, at the command of the country—and they would willingly give their services—would be a great thing for Canada; to my mind it would be an inestimable blessing. As for the rest of the Senate I would make it all absolutely elective. We talk of our trust of the democracy, and that we are democrats; then let us trust the democracy. The democracy may not always go right, but in 99 cases out of 100 they are as apt to go right as the Prime Minister of Canada; they would not make many more mistakes than he makes. But in order to elect them I would not go to the legislative assemblies. I would not like to bedevil the legislative assemblies by putting that strife and contention in their midst. They have had a long experience of that in the United States, and human nature is human nature on both sides of the line, and we know in what extremes human nature has shown its bad features in the election of senators in the United States. To-day the revulsion of feeling is absolute against that method of election; to-day the majority of the states of the union have travelled so far that it is only required to get a few more states in line when they will have their convention, and when they will substitute the election of senators by the people for election by the legislatures. That is a bitter experience which we may very well profit from. It is no use arguing the question why the prize of a senatorship thrown into a legislative assembly may lead to demoralization, and to consequences which we would all deplore. I did at one time think that was the best way; I do not now. I would trust the people to do it, and I would have the senators elected by larger constituencies, and I would have it so arranged that there should be proportionate representation. What in the world is the reason why—and taking the two great political parties in this country the whole country is about evenly divided—what in the world is the reason why we should come to the condition that one political party has nearly all the representatives in the Senate. And, if the bad judgment of the people keeps this government in power very much longer, and if nature makes its demands in the future as in the past, it will not be very long before under the policy pursued conscientiously—no, but pursued continuously—by the Prime Minister, there will not be a single representative of the Liberal Conservative party in the Senate. That alone, Sir, will disgust people; that alone serves to make the unfairness of the thing so apparent that it takes away from the influence of the Senate, and inclines men's minds to a desire to get rid of it if it cannot be reformed. So that, in the scheme for election by methods which are well known and easily tried, I would put into that Senate on the elective basis—representing very large constituencies so as to prevent to the utmost any fear of wrong means being employed, and very large constituencies would counteract that to a large extent—I would put into that Senate always a possible majority in favour of the government in power while at the same time guarding against these great disparities which discourage one-half of our people, and keep from its proper outlet and influence the energies of nearly one-half of our people in the legislative work of the upper House. Just as it would be to my mind a calamity to keep any one great party too long out of power, because it stunts legislation, and at the same time prevents new recuperative power having its full effect in legislation to the benefit of the country, just so it is deplorable that in the upper House you should have the condition of things I have described. We would in this way I think, have a House in which the parties shall be proportionately represented, in a calmer atmosphere, coming up fresh from the people at least every seven or ten years, and I would not make the period more than ten years or less than seven years.

That would give constant rejuvenation to the Senate. In a country where changes take place with enormous rapidity, where conditions at a given time are totally different in many respects from the conditions five years previous, it would bring into touch with those changing conditions and the newer currents of life, the body in the upper House, and make it vital and strong. These are in part my views. They are not original in any respect. I listened with delight to my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. McCall), in the short, terse, clear presentation of just sensible ideas for this House, and I think they might well be taken into consideration by virtue of their own wisdom and their spirit as well. I do not want to move an amendment against my hon. friend from Lincoln. I want him to have that vote squarely, to see how many will stand by him here. But if I had the power of moving an amendment, I would move one like this, and I hand it out as a suggestion to my right hon. friend. It is a business arrangement. Here is the upper House talking about methods of improving the Senate, and ministers of the Crown there say it must be improved or dire consequences will follow—men in perfect unity with my right hon. friend. Out in the country the strongest organs of public opinion on the side of my right hon. friend are almost daily calling for something to be done. Here is one. The 'Free Press' said not long ago:

> The recent deaths of Sir George Drummond and Hon. G. B. Baker reduce the Conservative strength in the Senate to twenty members out of eighty-seven.
> Since the Liberals came to power, not quite fourteen years ago, fifty Conservative senators have died and have been replaced by Liberal successors.
>
> The Conservative minority, attenuated though it is, is larger than the Liberal representation in the Senate in 1896, when the Liberals came into office.
> There were then only seven Liberal members of the Senate, and of these there were three whose Liberalism was nominal.
>
> The Conservative twenty will doubtless diminish; and if the death rate of the past few years keeps up, it will not take many years to wipe out the minority.
> That would reduce our method of selecting a second chamber to an absurdity, and might result in an attempt to bring about reform.
> A second chamber is without doubt a necessity in any country made up as Canada is, of a federation of the provinces; but there are good grounds for thinking that our system of determining and maintaining a second chamber is about the worst known, at least to the Anglo-Saxon world.

I could quote others equally strong from equally strong organs of public opinion representing the political faith of my right hon. friend; but there is no use in taking up the time. Then, it seems to me that something ought to be done. My right hon. friend acknowledges that something ought to be done. In a letter sent by him to the Hon. James Young not long ago, in which he asked that gentleman, who was pressing upon him the necessity of carrying out the pledge that was made so strongly and so definitely by the Liberal party in 1893, to give him his opinion, these are the words used by my right hon. friend:

> Would you be kind enough to send me a synopsis of the Senate reform which you think should be adopted?
>
> Two aspects of the question have to be considered.
>
> First, the mode of appointment. Should it be an election directly by the people, or by any other body, or by some other mode of appointment other than the one now existing?
> Second, should the appointment be for life or for a term of years?

The whole difficulty rests in these two questions; are they insoluble? They do not appear to me to be so; but the Prime Minister for fourteen years has not attempted to solve them. For about half of that time he was declaring that that was a pledge and that it would be fulfilled, all others have been fulfilled—which might admit of some argument. But for the last seven years he has not gone even that far; he has only said, I am open to conviction, I want suggestions, but I do not see any way. When are we to see a way? My suggestion would be this, that a joint committee be apointed from both Houses of parliament—12 good men from this House and 12 good from the other and that they be asked to take into consideration the constitution of the Senate, the methods of appointment and the distribution of the work, and, after a thorough examination and consideration, to report to the government and to both Houses their plan. We would get the wisdom of the two Houses after examination of all the different systems, with a knowledge of the conditions of our own country thoroughly canvassed. We would then get their reasoned opinion upon the subject. We might not agree with their plan, but there at least would have a basis on which we might work. As I say, I do not propose to offer this as an amendment, but I offer it as a suggestion that may be worthy of consideration.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, as I understand there is going to be a vote. I would like to state why I intend to support the motion. I believe in the bicameral system, particularly under our constitution. But I believe there was a distinct pledge, made by the Liberal party when it was in opposition, to reform the Senate, but this pledge, like others, has not been carried out. What is the mode of constitution of our second chamber? In two words, it is a reward for party services rendered. That is the mildest expression one can apply to the mode of recruiting the second or revising chamber. Is there any better method of organizing that chamber? I do not intend to discuss the many plans that are spoken of, or that are treated in books, but the worst of all is certainly the one that we have in this country. I do not intend to make any reflection on those who sit in that chamber. But I say that to-day the revising chamber to check hasty legislation, as we imagine the upper chamber ought to be, is constituted in that way; uniformly it is a reward for party service. The reform promised has not been carried out. If it is not carried out I am inclined to support this motion. My right hon. friend is in the position that history has assigned to a pope who was called upon to abolish a great religious order. He set out to reform it, and as history informs us he was told by the members of that order that it should remain as it was or cease to be. For my own part, whatever truth there may be in that story, I believe that the Senate, continued as it is under our institutions, is a useless appendage. It is not properly fulfilling its mission. I do not believe in making it elective; I believe it might be recruited under certain rules and principles which would give it the constitution which is desirable as a second and revising chamber, and since it seems impossible to have recourse to, or carry out, that reform, I am inclined to think the proper course to follow is to support the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. F. T. CONGDON (Yukon Territory). Mr. Speaker, one phase of this subject has not been dwelt on during this discussion to the extent it deserves. A federal government is always, of necessity, in the nature of a compromise. It is a compromise between, on the one hand, a single large independent state and on the other a large number of small independent states. That compromise is always effected by an agreement. The agreement in this case has been embodied in our constitution, and all the discussion practically which has taken place to date, all the various suggestions as to the mode of constitution of the Senate and the mode of appointing to the Senate were undoubtedly discussed in the Quebec conference, and the result so adopted is the basis upon which the constitution of the Senate now rests. Reading the resolutions as reported, one finds innumerable amendments, innumerable suggestions put to the vote and all rejected after due consideration. Undoubtedly at that time there was one feature in connection with the Senate that probably obtained undue prominence; that was the idea of strengthening the central government. The Senate of the United States was especially constituted as a limitation and restraint upon the presidential powers, and as representative of the sovereignty of the States, and no doubt the condition of conflict which existed in the United States at the time of the framing of our constitution led, to some extent, to the framing of the constitution as relating to the Senate in a way to secure the strengthening of the central power at the expense of the separate powers. But this Senate, as it exists, is a result of the compromise and agreement by which the various provinces now constituting the Dominion of Canada entered into that confederation, and it seems to me it would be a very wise thing for this House and for the people of this country to hesitate a very considerable time before in the least they attempt to invalidate, alter or amend that original agreement.

There has been a number of motions before this House tending in that direction. They have all been voted down for the simple reason, in my judgment, that the most overwhelming case must be made of the necessity for such a change before this House should contemplate it or endeavour to undertake it.

The existence of the Senate is, in a measure, the existence in our constitution of that which represents the sovereignty of the different provinces. To my mind, the only reform of the Senate which would render it more effective to-day for the discharge of that duty would be making it possibly more representative of the provinces than it is at present. It does preserve the sovereignty of the provinces to this extent that it gives to the various districts equal representation in the Senate and requires the members to come from these different parts. It seems to me that the framers of the constitution were wise in adopting this bi-cameral system. It has been mentioned that in all large constitutional governments since the world began there has been a second chamber, and if there is a necessity of a second chamber in a single state, there is a double necessity in a confederation such as we have in Canada. There is the necessity of having some power that can, in a measure, prevent any infringement on the sovereign rights of the provinces, which under the confederation agreement have been inserted in this British North America Act. I think further that this House does not sufficiently examine the work of the Senate, in order to find justification for it. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke of the demoralizing influences of the appointments to the Senate. I do not think any one can visit that body without finding that they are an extremely moral and respectable body.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to ask my hon. friend if he thinks that is fair tactics. He surely did not understand me as saying that the men who constitute the Senate were immoral and demoralized? I would be verry sorry if he would allow that idea to go out on 'Hansard.'

Mr. CONGDON. The hon. gentleman said the appointments were made in a demoralizing mode, that it was practically a purchase of them.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave my hon. friend a chance to set himself right.

Mr. CONGDON. And one was that the Senate was appointed in such a manner as to demoralize the gentlemen going into the Senate. If that does not make the men immoral I do not know what does. He also spoke of it as a place filled with rancor or strife. If he visited it he would find neither rancor nor strife, it is the calmest atmosphere to be found in the world and one might almost think it the place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest, because it is as calm and sober as it can be; I really believe that if members of this House before framing these attacks on the Senate would examine a little more carefully the work done by the Senate, they would not make so many charges. I think that before charges of that kind are made there should be an investigation into the Senate, and it would be found that in many respects it exercises a revising and a critical influence upon this body, which is for good.

The existence of a second body is to my mind an absolute necessity in our constitution. If it had no other purpose it would serve the purpose well defined and aptly described in the very name of the Norwegian second chamber, which is called the Lagthing. It is necessary in a country becoming so democratic as this country that we should put some checks upon ourselves in order not to rush too rapidly into hasty legislation. There is great danger in this country of every one with a little fad starting up some movement which may get on the statute-book and in that way practically frittering away the liberty of the subject. I believe that many of these things are saved from being placed on the statute-book of this country by the opportunity which is afforded for their consideration in a second chamber. Occasions may arise in the future, where the senatorial body will have an opportunity more largely and in a more important manner to fulfil its functions than it has had in the past. I think the fathers of confederation must have been influenced by the fact that going through the constitutions from the earliest confederation of which we have any knowledge, from the Achaean League down to the American constitution, they found all the best intellects who had ever been engaged in framing a constitution determined and insistent on having a second chamber. I do not think we should too hastily rush away from the precedents supported by such eminent authorities as the great constitution makers of other countries as well as the able gentleman who made a Senate part of the compromise upon which our own constitution is founded.

Mr. LANCASTER. I regret that I cannot see my way, as a matter of principle, to adopting the suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to withdraw this motion. And, not only as a matter of principle do I feel unable to comply, but also because I have heard nothing to-night to give me an excuse, if I were looking for one, to withdraw this motion. We have heard the Prime Minister, in a somewhat instructive address, tell us some of the history of the matter, and some of the ideas with regard to the constitution of the Senate that have been from time to time put forward. But we have not heard a suggestion from him that even now he intends to take hold of this matter which ought to have been dealt with, certainly, some time within the last fourteen years? It is idle to suppose that gentleman on the left of Mr. Speaker in this House can produce any concrete result or give effect to their suggestions unless the Prime Minister will, with his strength in this House, and in the country, take up these suggestions and undertake to give them effect. And, until somebody else—I would prefer the Prime Minister—makes a concrete motion, I am going to stick to my concrete motion to abolish the Senate. For it seems to me there is no reason for its continued existence ; and, I think that this is pretty clearly shown even by the speeches of the gentlemen who support the existence of the Senate. For, to be frank about it, these gentlemen have only tried to apologize for the Senate; they are driven by the stress of the argument to try to find excuses for the Senate's existence. After fourteen years there is a complete failure to bring about a reform which the gentlemen now in power undertook to then bring about at once. And the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Congdon) asks us, in all seriousness, to go to the Senate chamber and examine their work. Why, it would take a microscope and telescope to find it. It would need two or three people to go there and ring the bells to bring about any movement in the Senate preliminary to having any work done at all. It is because I have examined the work of the Senate that I realize that some reformation should be brought about. But, as I have not found any two of the bright minds of this chamber agreeing upon any particular measure of reform, it seems to me that abolition is the only thing that can reasonably be proposed. It seems to have been assumed that if this resolution passes this House, the Senate will be at once abolished. Of course, that is not the case. But, if the resolution is carried, the petition proposed would go to the King, and it would be acted upon in some way. It does not follow that the prayer of the petition would be granted, but it does follow that some step would be made toward changing the present condition of affairs, whether in the direction of reform or in the direction of abolition. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laughs. He doesn't want anything done apparently. But he knows that what I say is correct—that a motion passed in this House cannot alter the constitution of the country. Some hon. gentlemen, the Prime Minister among them, speak as if we could do something that the home government, imperial parliament could not do—that we could reform while they can only abolish. We cannot amend even in the most infinitesimal way the constitution ; that is the work of the imperial parliament.

In view of the fact that, though the whole evening has been taken up in discussing the subject no one from the Prime Minister down has said that the government intends to take a step toward a reformation that was promised before the present government came into office, I should be derelict in my duty if I consented to withdraw the motion.

Motion (Mr. Lancaster) negatived on division.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Prime Minister intend to go on with Supply after the preliminaries are finished to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take up first the third readings of two Bills, those first on the list—the Bill to amend the Immigration Act and the Bill to prohibit the importation and use of opium and other drugs. After that, Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. And the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows that the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) intends to propose an amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I give notice that on the first opportunity afforded on going into Supply I will move:

That the recent mergers of heretofore competing industries and the issue of securities resulting therefrom should be the subject of public investigation, with a view of ascertaining how far such mergers or the methods of carrying them out affect the public interest, either as causing continuing high prices for the commodities produced, as damaging the reputation of Canadian securities abroad or further as restricting the banking facilities of the country.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, January 31, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 104) to amend paragraph (1) of section 2 and paragraphs (n) and (o) of section 9 of the Post Office Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to introduce in the larger post offices of the country a new device called the self stamp selling box. It is a box by which any man, by putting in it a cent or a penny, can get his stamp of that denomination. At the same time, the use of this box saves to the department a large amount of money, as no commission has to be paid to any vendor of stamps. The box has been tried in two or three large post offices in Canada, and is found to be a great advantage to the public, especially in the rush season at Christmas time. It is used in Australia, where the invention was first taken out, and is also largely used in Europe. On the second reading of the Bill I will give fuller explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the same kind of box that has been used in the Ottawa post office for some time ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think there is one in the Ottawa post office.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister, in his peregrinations, may not have heard of the incident that took place down at the Ottawa post office. A young lady wanted a cent stamp, she put in her cent and the one cent stamp came out. But the blamed thing kept on turning out stamps one after the other, without additional money. It frightened the young lady, and she took to her heels and ran away. She made complaint, and I believe either the police or the engineering department was called in, and in due time they stopped the thing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The use of the box at first was an experiment, and there may have been something wrong with it. The hon. gentleman, I know, will be pleased to learn that one great advantage of this box is that it rejects all kinds of false coins.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RECIPROCITY—TRADE STATISTICS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a document which has been received from the United States by various members of parliament, a document issued, I suppose, by one of the departments of the administration at Washington. It is a most complete document; all the proceedings, all the data and a complete set of statistical tables are appended under one cover. It is a most important thing that full statistics should be in the hands of the members of parliament and available at as early a period as possible. I cannot think that the Minister of Finance has been a fortnight at these negotiations with efficient help with him, and that he has not had that basis or data for his negotiations that evidently, the United States Commissioners had very skillfully prepared and very full and comprehensive in all its parts. If the Minister of Finance had that, what reason in the world is there that the House has not been put in possession long before this of an equally comprehensive statement, The Minister of Finance seemed yesterday very unwilling to adopt a practice of the United States for fear that it might be unconstitutional here. I think the House would forgive him in that respect if he would give us something on a par or an equality with what the United States administration have given to their people.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has overlooked the fact that at the moment of presenting the matter to this House I laid on the table or made accessible to 'Hansard' a somewhat elaborate statement containing comparisons which at the moment I thought probably covered all that any hon. member might desire. We had two most capable officials with us in Washington, a most efficient staff, but high as is my regard and esteem for these gentlemen, I would not say they were equal to the large army of officials which was available to our friends of the United States government. Day after day as incidents occurred in the negotiations they were able to turn the matter over to their army of officials, and they could have statistics prepared very much more elaborately than we could possibly expect to have within the same time. I quite agree, however, that it is desirable that the fullest possible information, and practically along the same lines should be given to this House ; our officers are now engaged in preparing it, and I will promise to expedite the return and see that it is laid before the House within a reasonable time before the discussion is resumed.

Mr. FOSTER. Meanwhile, as it seems to be so difficult to have that done here, perhaps, through the kindly offices of the administration, we might be able to get a supply from Washington.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend thinks it desirable to have some extra copies of the statement prepared at Washington I would be happy to ask them to favour us in that respect, but I would think that the House would prefer to have the information prepared by our own people. I think the House will agree that we are not to be blamed if we were not able to have more statistical information when we were so far away from home. We did have all the information which we thought necessary for an intelligent study of the subject but it could scarcely be expected that after the negotiations were completed we could go to work and prepare the statistics while we were on our way back to Ottawa. There is no comparison between the two conditions. I will adopt my hon. friend's suggestion, and ask our friends in Washington to give us some extra copies containing this information, but I think the House would like also the information prepared by our own officials.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if his attention has been directed to a statement made by Mr. McInnes before a commission at Vancouver to the effect that he discussed with the Prime Minister the desirability of taking the head tax off Chinese immigrants, and I would also like to ask the Prime Minister if there is any truth in the evidence of Mr. McInnes?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My attention was called to an article in the Victoria 'Colonist' from which I read this paragraph :

Mr. T. R. E. McInnes says that Sir Wilfrid Laurier told him that he contemplated the possibility of doing away with the present restrictions on Chinese immigration.

I have no recollection at this moment of having discussed the matter with Mr. McInnes, but I have no doubt that if he says so it is true because I discussed this matter not only with Mr. McInnes, if I did so, but with several parties when I was in British Columbia last summer, and since I came home also with different friends who take an interest in this question, not with the view, however, as stated by Mr. McInnes of withdrawing the present restriction on Chinese immigration so as to make immigration from China absolutely free as it is from Europe, but I probably discussed with Mr. McInnes. and certainly with numerous parties, the advisability of abolishing our present legislation with regard to Chinese immigration, and if possible obtaining from the Chinese government such an arrangement as we have at the present time with the Japanese government which has worked admirably. The House is aware that we have at the present time an arrangement with the Japanese government whereby they undertook, some three or four years ago, themselves to restrict their own immigration to Canada to a certain figure. This arrangement has been faithfully carried out by the Japanese government and Japanese immigration has been kept, under the arrangement, constantly in check. At the present time, we have, and we have had for some twenty years on our statute-book, a law which imposes a capitation tax upon every Chinaman coming into Canada. Last year the immigration suddenly went up to a pretty high figure, to something like 1,400 or 1,500. It is said that this was the result of frauds which had been committed, and the capitation tax is now the subject of an investigation in Vancouver. Whether there has been fraud or not I am still of the opinion that if it were possible to obtain from the Chinese government such an arrangement as we have had with the Japanese government it would be far preferable. But, at the present moment, I have no recollection of discussing the matter with Mr. McInnes although it is quite possible I did so. I certainly discussed it with many other persons.

Mr. SPROULE. As I see the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) in his place I would like to ask if his attention was drawn to an intimation which appeared in the press of this morning regarding a mill which is said to have taken place under the Marquis of Queensberry rules between one Jardine and the Minister of Inland Revenue, and to inquire how the encounter ended, whether the account of it which we have received is absolutely correct or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, as so many hon. members in the House seem to be interested in the subject, I may say that the account, as it appears in the Morning 'Citizen', is very highly coloured.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the correct version?

SPRINGHILL COAL STRIKE.

Mr. KING. I would like to further answer my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) who asked me a question yesterday with reference to the Springhill strike. On inquiry I find that there are still at Springhill some 30 members of the Canadian militia, but the manager of the Springhill mines informs me that he does not think it likely that they will remain there much longer. They have been kept there at the request of the local authorities to assist in maintaining order. I might just say to my hon. friend that a short time ago the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) moved for a return of the papers respecting the strike at Springhill and they were brought down immediately. He intimated to me that it was his intention to ask some questions on this subject when the House went into Committee of Supply on the estimates of the Department of Labour. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) had intimated to me when he was asking the question yesterday that it was his intention to bring the matter up I should have been prepared to give him a definite answer at the moment.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 47) to amend the Immigration Act.—Mr. Oliver.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM AND OTHER DRUGS.

Mr. KING moved the third reading of Bill (No. 97) to prohibit the improper use of opium and other drugs.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). When this Bill was being considered in Committee of the Whole on Thursday evening last, some question was raised by my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) as to the propriety of the twelfth clause which provides that no conviction, judgment or order in respect of an offence against this Act shall be removed by certiorari, and the hon. gentleman said that he could not understand the Department of Justice giving the advice that such a provision should be inserted in the Bill. In view of what then took place, I wish to make an explanation that it was, I think, at my suggestion that this clause was inserted in the Bill by the Minister of Labour when the Bill was in preparation. Such a provision used to be of very considerable importance thirty years ago before the courts possessed the power that has since been conferred upon them to amend technical defects in summary convictions. Hundreds and hundreds of convictions were quashed by the courts upon technicalities where no question whatever existed but that the offence had been committed, and that the defendant had been justly convicted. The courts, however, at that time, possessed no power to make even the slightest correction or amendment in a conviction, which had to be dealt with, on its being removed by certiorari, in exactly the condition in which it came before the court; and, for that reason, I have no doubt, a provision of this character was very frequently inserted in Acts both of the imperial parliament, and of this parliament with a view to preventing justice being defeated by objections which had no merit, but which took advantage of some slip on the part of the convicting magistrate or of the person who had prepared the record of the conviction. The courts held, however, both in England and in this country, that notwithstanding such a clause in any statute, which, apparently, prohibits a court from issuing a certiorari to bring up a conviction, the courts still might do it if it could be seen that there was an absence of jurisdiction on the part of the convicting magistrates to have entertained the complaint. The courts took the view that, in the absence of words clearly indicating the intention of parliament to take away this remedy which might be of the greatest use, the legislature could not have been supposed to have intended that the courts could not give relief if magistrates had acted in total absence of jurisdiction. So that the presence of such a clause never was an absolute prohibition against the courts reviewing the proceedings upon certiorari. Since the amendments which I have referred to have been made in our statutes, under which the most liberal power is now conferred upon the superior courts to correct technical mistakes in convictions which may be brought before them on certiorari, there is probably not very much value in a clause of this sort. But still it would have the legal effect of restricting the cases in which a convicted defendant would have the right to obtain certiorari to cases in which there was absence of jurisdiction on the part of the convicting magistrates. And, for that reason, when considering this measure, it seemed to me that it might be of use in furthering the purpose of the statute that such a provision should be inserted. And that was my reason for suggesting it to my hon. colleague the Minister of Labour. It is a provision which appears in the Canada Temperance Act, and which has been of effect in the history of the Canada Temperance Act to save from destruction a very great number of convictions where the defendant had no real merit in his effort to get rid of his fine or other punishment, but where, but for the existence of such a clause as this, the courts would have been compelled to quash the proceedings. This legislation is of very much the same character as the Canada Temperance Act, and it seemed to me that just in that view such a clause should be inserted in this Bill. But I wish to disclaim altogether the idea that I favour the presence of such a clause as a general thing in statutes which may be passed by this parliament creating criminal offences. I agree entirely in the views which were expressed by my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) when this Bill was in committee, that such a clause ought to be very sparingly used; and it was only because it seemed to me that the purpose of this Bill was of rather exceptional character that I recommended the insertion of the clause. There was another point in the committee which was more discussed. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) pointed out the objections which, undoubtedly, ordinarily would exist to delegating to the Governor in Council the right to make new offences, new crimes, by adding to the schedule of the statute. That objection was possibly cured in this case by an amendment of the clause which delegates this power to the Governor in Council, an amendment made in the committee which limits the authority of the Governor in Council to add to the schedule the names of substances which may be derivatives or preparations of the drugs which by the Bill are prohibited, and, that amendment being made, I understood the objections to this particular clause or feature of the Bill were very much minimized, if not quite removed.

The hon. member for East Grey expressed a desire that, upon the third reading of the Bill, I should state my opinion with regard to that feature of the statute. And, while I do not think it is any question of law, I am willing to say, speaking simply as a member of this House, that I think such a course, while perfectly within the power of parliament, is one that ought to be very seldom and very sparingly taken.

Mr. DOHERTY. The hon. gentleman (Sir Allen Aylesworth) referred to the question raised about the desirability of the provision under section 14, that the Governor in Council shall have power to add to the number of substances, the possession, sale, or handling of which would, under such legislation, constitute a crime. I desire to say—and I think I made that clear the other evening—that there was no suggestion on my part that there was no legal power to do this; but I did point out, what I am glad to see the minister finally recognizes, that it was very undesirable that a power in as wide terms as were set forth in the section originally, should be conferred on the Governor in Council to create a crime. The terms of the section, as originally introduced, were wide enough to make it possible for the government, without any intervention of the legislature whatever, to add any substance whatever to the schedule, and to make the possession or the handling of that substance a crime; and I think that before we got through, we were all pretty well agreed that that was not a desirable kind of legislation. But I never suggested, or wished to be understood as suggesting, that there was any question of the power of parliament to do this if it chose to do it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—MR. J. A. MACDONALD AND RECIPROCITY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I am pleased to state that I observe by yesterday's 'Globe' that the editor of that journal has been fully restored to his wonted vigour. On the front page of that paper there is a long telegram from him which shows that whatever rumours may have been around the country to the contrary, he is in possession of his usual mental faculties. However, I regret that I am called upon again to dispute some of the positions that gentleman has taken. I would not refer to the matter but that this is the first occasion on which he has appeared in the arena directly. The 'Globe' editorial, referring to the public says:

To them it may be necessary to say that the editor of the 'Globe' has not at any time or under any circumstances made an arrangement with any person under which he agreed to advocate any fiscal policy as lending itself specially to the cause of universal peace.

I never said that he did 'agree' to it, Sir. What I did say was that Dr. Starr-Jordan and Mr. Macdonald and those other gentlemen, whether they agreed to it or not, are actually doing it, and I proved it the other day by reference to Dr. Starr-Jordan's own speeches here—that while preaching peace, they were at the same time preaching reciprocity between Canada and the United States along lines which could only have one termination, that is, the annexation of this country to the United States. Mr. Macdonald's telegram, after a long newspaper extract, in which is used the term 'reciprocity' instead of the term 'peace society,' is as follows:

San Diego, Cal., Jan. 29.—The statement published as having been made at St. Catharines by Col. Sam Hughes is absolutely false in every essential particular.

I will prove before I am through that it is true in every particular.

I neither was sent nor did I go to Washington in connection with the reciprocity question.

I will show further on that he is quibbling and equivocating on the word 'reciprocity.'

If Col. Hughes cares to know, salaries double the amount he mentions have been offered to me for regular professional services, but never a dollar for any purpose he named.

I am very much surprised, knowing Mr. Macdonald's character, that he has not taken advantage of these large salaries.

In association with President David Starr-Jordan of Leland Stanford University, John R. Mott and others, I am a member of the board of directors of the 'World's Peace Foundation,' established by Mr. Ginn for promoting in every civilized country the settlement of all international disputes by judicial arbitration and not by war. Necessary expenses are paid, but no director is under salary or makes gain financially.'

We will discuss that later on.

Reciprocity is not on the programme.

Then, why did they put it on?

Tariffs are a matter of no concern.

Then why is the discussion of tariffs foisted on this country by Dr. Starr-Jordan and others?

The task is much more serious. It is to direct the national systematic awakening and organizing of public opinion in every civilized nation on the question of the demoralizing curse of war, and the intolerable folly of increased armaments. We advocate the substitution of independent arbitration as at The Hague.

Neither the founder nor any of the directors favours the political union of Canada and the United States. Personally and in the interests of world peace, I oppose any change in Canada's imperial relations. As a free nation in the empire, Canada can exercise greater influence than is possible through independence. Col. Sam Hughes' statement is a 'wholecloth' falsehood. Only a slanderer and a coward will repeat it after this.

Well, Sir, I am here to prove that I have not mis-stated a single word, and that I am neither a slanderer nor a coward. Mr. Macdonald has attained to that mental condition wherein the spirit of selfishness, insane ambition and tyranny bordering on a sense of divine right, has become domination, a mental condition which is never found in any of the great men who, like him, profess to be followers of 'the Meek and Lowly One', nor in any of the great editors of the great journals of the country; but it is common among the inferior class of clergymen in all churches, and among the inferior editors generally. I need not again repeat my assertions, Sir, further than to put them in consecutive order, to show that neither Mr. Macdonald nor the 'Globe' has directly or indirectly attempted to meet my charges.

I stated, first, that Mr. Macdonald went to Washington either on his own personal account or as the confidential agent of this government to conduct reciprocity negotiations. This Mr. Macdonald technically denies. I re-affirm it, however, and will prove him to be a deceiver and equivocator.

My next charge was that Mr. Macdonald is not now paid a full salary or for full time as editor of that great oracle of truth, righteousness and fair dealing, the Toronto 'Globe', but is paid for only part of his time by the 'Globe'.

My third charge was that for part of his time Mr. Macdonald is in receipt of salary, or expenses, or rake-off, or income, or solatium, or indemnity, or consolation, or alleviation, or balm, or any other word that would fill the bill, from the fund largely provided by Mr. Ginn, of Boston, named the 'Peace Society Fund', such 'balm' being in the form of golden Yankee eagles, or their equivalent. These three statements were made by me first in St. Catharines on an open public platform. I knew that there would be some coward garbed as a 'Globe' editor, or some despicable colleague of Mr. Macdonald, imbued with the same spirit of persecution and hypocrisy, shielding himself behind a five cent white necktie and attaining notice not by his personal worth or godliness or ability, but by the atmosphere of superstition and tolerance surrounding him—one of that fry that bring the sacred name of religion into disrepute; one failing to follow the maxim and practice of the Master as aptly put by Chaucer:

> Christ's lore and His apostles twelve he preached,
> But first he followed it himself.

—one despised by every capable godly minister of the gospel, as well as by every honest citizen and newspaper editor;—I knew that some such ignorant person would charge me with shielding myself behind the privileges of parliament. Therefore I made the charge first openly on the public platform at St. Catharines, and subsequently in the House. Yet I have been told that one of this tribe, no longer ago than Sunday in the city of Ottawa, in the pulpit of one of the churches here, charged me with shielding myself behind the privileges of parliament in this matter. I am informed that this is the same gentleman who, when an election was being held in the city of Ottawa, a few years ago, went with his five cent necktie on, and pledged himself to a member of the Conservative party that he was sick and tired of the 'rascally Ross government' in Toronto and would do his utmost to turn it out: yet when the leader of this same 'rascally government', the Hon. George W. Ross, appeared in Ottawa, the foremost heeler in the gang who paid honour to him was this same individual.

And he would do his utmost to turn them out. Inside of a very few days this same leader of that 'rascally government in Toronto,' the Hon. G. W. Ross, appeared on the public platform in Ottawa, and the foremost heeler in the gang which surrounded him, was this same individual. On another occasion in that same election, in order to still better carry out the plans of the Grit party, this individual—I shall not disgrace the sacred calling of the ministry by calling him a clergyman—attempted to bring this man Macdonald, the editor of the 'Globe' from Toronto to preach in his pulpit on the Sunday before the election, so that he might try and convince the congregation of the aggregation of virtue of which that good government was composed; but to the credit of the congregation, they refused to allow Mr. Macdonald into the pulpit. Not content with that, this same parson took a list of the members of his congregation and marked—I do not know in what colour—how they might be influenced to vote or how they might be disposed to vote, and he did this for the Grit heelers of the party in Ottawa so that they might use it for election purposes. This is the gentleman who is backing up Mr. Macdonald.

In his lecture before the Canadian Club on Saturday, and in his sermon on Sunday, Prof. Starr-Jordan said that if we could only do away with the custom house officers, that would be an ideal condition between the two countries. Yet Mr. Macdonald will claim that these peace society speakers are not meddling in reciprocity. Mr. Macdonald's next statement was that he never was sent, nor did he go to Washington in connection with the reciprocity question. But he is quibbling with the word 'reciprocity.' What is the meaning of reciprocity? He will not deny that he went to Washington in order to bring about negotiations for a change in the United States tariff which would do away with the maximum clause trouble. We wanted to induce the United States not to enforce that maximum clause and Canada humiliated itself by making certain changes. That was the kind of reciprocity that Mr. Macdonald wanted to bring about. The meaning of reciprocity is: 1st. Mutual action and reaction; 2nd. Reciprocal advantages, obligations or rights. His next statement was that he was associated with Prof. Starr-Jordan—rather an unfortunate admission after the speech of Prof. Jordan, deliberately advocating reciprocity—and that only his expenses were paid by the peace society, I have it on good authority that he gets a pretty large sum from this society every year and he dare not deny it.

Mr. Macdonald says that reciprocity is not on the programme of the society. Why is it not? It certainly looms out largely in the speeches of the oracles of that society. He speaks also of the demoralizing curse of war, but inasmuch as my hon. friend from Algoma is anxious to take the floor, I shall not touch that aspect of the case now, but defer dealing with it until another occasion. In speaking of war, Mr. Macdonald reminds me of the small boy who said to his father: You had better give up cussing or leave the church. In like manner, Mr. Macdonald, had better show a little more Christian spirit if he intends continuing in that great cause, the promotion of peace among nations. In this connection, I cannot refrain from quoting the words of Eliza Cook:—

> Never trust the soft breathing that preaches of peace
> With a smile on the lips and a tear in the eye—
> Hear it all with good will but be provident still,
> With men that are earnest and powder that is dry.

In Dante's Inferno, we are told that in one of the nethermost regions below there are a tremendous number of gentlemen who parade clothed in pure and spotless white—I do not know whether they are members of the peace society or not—but they wear a rueful aspect, the lining of their garments is the heaviest lead and the road they have to travel is rough, rocky and jagged. These are the hypocrites who once defaced human society. I sincerely hope that so great an evil will not befall this editor of the 'Globe.' Might I be allowed as a layman, to express the wish that he may not be found in this company in this nethermost region in the future. Therefore I would respectfully suggest that some steps be taken to reclaim him—and in that connection, I would do my best to bring him back to what he should be—namely, an open, square man, and have him give up equivocating to the extent he has been practising that art for some considerable time.

TESTIMONIALS TO MINISTERS OF THE CROWN.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, for the House to go into Committee of Supply, I desire to refer as briefly as possible to a matter respecting which I gave notice last Monday, and which was discussed during the latter part of last session. At the close of my remarks I shall offer a resolution on the subject, which, I feel satisfied, from the manner in which it will be offered, and the principle it emphasizes, cannot fail to meet with the approval of both sides from the right hon. gentleman down. At the outset let me say that this is not a motion of want of confidence so that hon. gentlemen opposite need have no qualms of conscience about accepting it if they feel so disposed. All I desire is to intercept the House, on the motion to go into Supply, for the short time necessary to consider the principle involved in the resolution I am about to offer. This resolution lays down the principle advocated by the Liberal party some twenty years ago, and which, in the public interest, it is necessary should now again be discussed. This necessity arises from recent occurrences which call for the application of that principle. I refer to the principle involved in the accepting by cabinet ministers of testimonials in the shape of gifts of money.

In whatever I have to say, I desire this to be distinctly understood, that in bringing this matter to the attention of the House I have no intention of injuring any public man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOYCE. Hon. gentlemen opposite jeer, but I have learned, in my eight years experience of parliamentary life, that the best encouragement I can receive is the dissent and opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite. I repeat in all sincerity that in the observations I am out to make, I have no desire to injure any public man; no desire to arouse public opinion against any public man, and no desire to make political capital out of whatever discussion may ensue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, I expected that jeer, but I do desire to emphasize this fact that the necessity for what observations I have now to offer to this House, the necessity for the resolution I propose shortly to place in your hands, emphasizing that position, is laid at the doors and attributable to the right hon. the Prime Minister of this government; to him and to him alone, because, Sir, nine months ago in this House, as was my privilege, and my duty as a public man, I moderately and temperately, and I think in no objectionable manner, drew to his attention certain facts and certain principles applicable to those facts, and what did I get from the right hon. gentleman, but sneers and contumely? I desire now to emphasize those principles and to draw this matter to the attention of the House for the second time, in the manner in which a great principle affirmed unanimously by this House in 1891 should be again repeated and emphasized. The principle announced, struggled for, claimed as a great victory by the Liberal party in 1891 has been departed from in 1910, and is in danger of being departed from again in 1911; to emphasize further my desire as to the need of a rigid adherence to these principles by asking the House to accept the resolution which I will move at the conclusion of my remarks, a copy of which has already been placed in the hands of the Prime Minister. Sir, the resolution which I shall place in your hands is based upon one of twenty years ago. On August 13, 1891, the right hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, then a prominent member of the opposition of this House moved the following resolution on going into Supply and not as a vote of want of confidence:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved: That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

I shall ask the House to reiterate and reaffirm these words in the light of recent events, and I cannot help noticing that at the time that resolution was passed, lodged as it was against the late Sir John A. Macdonald as well as others, lodged against members of the family of that right hon. gentleman by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald had hardly been two months in his grave. Yet my right hon. friend on the 3rd of May last, and his friends now, can jeer and treat me with contumely because I endeavoured, as is my public duty, to refer moderately to that resolution and to express my desire not to go beyond the limits of what would be proper in dealing with a subject inviting such delicate and proper treatment. I have no desire to injure any public man; I am not here for that purpose and I say no one can truthfully say that there is any attempt in referring to this matter to detract from any prestige which the friends of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance are of opinion he has gained by recent events, meaning the negotiations at Washington. I brought this matter to the attention of the House on May 3 last, and gave notice of my intention to discuss this matter before the return of the Finance Minister from Washington, and when on the day I expected my hon. friend to be in the House I found he was not, I postponed the discussion until he should return. In all that I say about my friend, the Minister of Finance, I speak after due notice, and I am glad to say in his presence. I say it when his friends laud him, and I am not going to say improperly—think, he is erect in public opinion, when he is in the eyes of the whole commercial world, when his followers believe him to be strong in the confidence of the people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOYCE. The full disclosure now by the Minister of Finance or by the right hon. the Prime Minister of facts and circumstances long withheld from this House and this country can form the only justification of this transaction, and further withholding of information which it is of the utmost importance that this House and this country should have, can only avoid one unfortunate circumstance and that is that grave suspicion must hang over a minister of the Crown of this country.

Let us discuss for a moment the manner in which the resolution of Sir Richard Cartwright was supported. The right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this government, then a prominent member of the opposition, spoke to the resolution as follows: at page 3829 of the 'Hansard' of 1891:

You cannot by possibility—and every man knows that I speak the truth—you cannot by possibility allow a minister of the state to accept gifts of any kind, without, if the practice becomes known, demoralizing in a very high degree the whole society over which he presides.

Those are not my words, those are the words of a minister high in the confidence of this government, of an hon. minister presiding over a very important part of this government, the Department of Trade and Commerce.

At page 3831 of the same 'Hansard,' Sir Richard Cartwright said:

I have observed, Sir, that some of the hon. gentleman's apologists have undertaken to mitigate the error, or the crime, call it what you will, which was committed by the reception of that testimonial under the circumstances, by the plea, which I think was also advanced in the other case, that the hon. gentleman did not know who had subscribed to his testimonial. Such a plea, in my judgment, is a direct aggravation of the offence. A public minister has no right whatever to allow any gift to be made to him unless it is done publicly, and unless he knows from what sources it proceeds; and, Sir, I would say this, that if a minister of the Crown tells me that he has accepted a gift, not knowing and not choosing to know from whom it proceeded, so far from regarding such a plea as a mitigation, I say that such a plea raises a presumption of guilt. It was his duty to know it; it was his duty to find out; it was his duty to see that not one penny went into his pockets or into his coffers unless it came from such sources that he could honourably and fairly receive it.

Now, Sir, the leader of the opposition of that day, who is now the Prime Minister of this country, in the same debate, made use of these words which I quote from page 3840.

The Minister of Justice said a moment ago in reference to the testimonial offered to the honourable Minister of Public Works, the member for Three Rivers, that that hon. gentleman did not know who were the subscribers. Sir, if he did not know, why did he not look at the list? If the hon. gentleman did not know, it was because he choose to remain ignorant of who were the names on the list, and if he chose to be ignorant of the names which are on the list, is it not because his moral sense told him that he might there find names of persons giving contributions which could not be accepted at all? Is it not simply because his conscience told him that if he were to look at that list he would find there the names of men who were every day supplicants in his office for favours? That is the reason why the honourable Minister of Public Works did not choose to have a look at that list. If that is not the reason why did he choose to be blind on that matter? Then, I call upon hon. gentlemen opposite to tell what is the reason, if there could be any good reason for it. Certainly there could be nothing wrong in the admirers of a man in public life coming to his help and rescuing him; but it seems to me that the recipient of such favours would be naturally too glad to know who are the persons to whom he owes gratitude, and if he does not choose to know who are those to whom he owes gratitude, it must be because his moral sense tells him that he would find there names which would be a condemnation of his accepting such a testimonial.

Sir, these are not my words, they are not the words of any gentleman on this side of the House, they are the words of the present Prime Minister of Canada who is sitting at the right hand of the Minister of Finance. But in conjunction with a testimonial involving the gift of a large sum of money, said to be as much as $120,000, presented last April or May to the Finance Minister, let us see what was said by the party organs with regard to it, and let us see how much it is in line with what my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said on that occasion. The Ottawa 'Free Press,' the government organ in this city, published the day after the testimonial was presented, made this remark :

The list of donors is anonymous, and Mr. Fielding is made aware only of the fact that the future of himself and his family is provided for.

My right hon. friend says there is only one justification, namely, that there is a list, and that the list is made public ; that if a public man chooses to accept a testimonial in the shape of a gift of money, and chooses not to look at the list, it must be because his moral sense tells him that he would find on it the names of the men who ought not to be there. That is the position. In view, therefore, of the fact that the Minister of Finance did, early in the spring of 1910, receive a large testimonial in the shape of a sum of money amounting to a fortune, without knowing who contributed it, the case falls directly under the condemnation of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House. The testimonial, if we are to understand aright what the right hon. gentleman said on the 3rd day of May last in this House, was accepted ; it was accepted in the presence of the right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister of this country who was himself present, agreed to, approved of, and applauded the giving of that testimonial, entirely in contravention of the words and the principles which he had laid down in 1891. Yet there has been no list of the donors made public, and there was a statement, not denied by my right hon. friend, that the Minister of Finance did not know who the donors were. I do not say, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be understood as saying, that under all circumstances and conditions the friends of a cabinet minister may not, in his hour of need, come to his rescue, and in their enthusiasm and admiration for the services he has rendered in a public capacity, make that provision for him which his devotion to the pressing cares of state has made it impossible for him to provide for himself. This principle was laid down by the present Prime Minister when speaking to the resolution of the 13th of August, 1891, and I will again run the risk of wearying the House with a short quotation from page 3840 of the 'Hansard':

Of course, in the matter of this testimonial, it is an act absolutely indifferent in itself. It may be wrong or it may be good, according to circumstances, but if such an act is done in the open light of day, then, Sir, it is the best prohibition that there can be against any wrong taking place.

I have the utmost sympathy, Mr. Speaker, for any public man who, having devoted the best years of his earning power to the service of his country, finds himself, when the years are crowding upon him, in a state of embarrassed circumstances, which contribute their bitterness to the weight of his care. But I say that public men, especially ministers of the Crown, must realize that gifts of money to releive their embarrassment must only be accepted under the most stringent safeguards of public honour and national integrity, the most important of which, as has been said, is absolute publicity to the light of day, letting the people know who furnished the funds constituting that testimonial, letting them see that nothing is concealed, that there was nothing wrong, that everything is open to the broad light of day, before all men. Sir, those were the facts before the public of this country prior to the 3rd day of May, 1910, facts which, as I have stated, were banded about in the public newspapers of this country prior to that date—except of course the facts which have taken place since. And how was I then not justified, on the third day of May, 1910, in referring to that matter in this House, with an idea of doing what? Of criticising the Finance Minister? No, Sir, I defy any hon. gentleman opposite to say that the remarks I made on the 3rd of May, 1910, were not offered in a fair and reasonable spirit, that they were not moderate and temperate remarks, and I say they called for a more dignified reception than that accorded them by the right hon. the Prime Minister. I asked the right hon. gentleman if there was a list, I asked the right hon. gentleman whether he would produce that list, I asked him to name the services for which the testimonial was granted; and the right hon. gentleman scornfully and satirically characterized my inquiry as 'curiosity,' curiosity which he emphasized by repeating the word twice. Now, Sir, the Prime Minister's reply, on the 3rd May last, is worthy of some consideration by this House, in view of the circumstances in bygone years when, as leader of the opposition, he was declaiming against the Conservative party. The right hon. gentleman commenced by emphasizing the manifest and undoubted integrity of the Minister of Finance. Who doubted the integrity of the Minister of Finance? I certainly never did. There was no remark made by me which would cast any aspersion on the Minister of Finance. I have no desire now to cast any aspersion upon the integrity of the Minister of Finance further than the right hon. gentleman cast upon him himself by attempting to derogate from his honour by placing a shield where the rays of the sunlight of day ought ever to be falling on a public man. The right hon. gentleman said on that occasion that the friends of Mr. Fielding came to him and that the reply that he gave them was that 'There is nothing too good for Fielding,' to use his own words.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TALBOT. We think so still.

Mr. BOYCE. I have no doubt. The right hon. the Prime Minister, under certain other circumstances said of another minister of the Crown that he was prouder of him than ever. The Prime Minister did not stipulate that there should be a public list, he did not lay down any of the precautions that his resolution and his remarks in support of his resolution of the 13th of August, 1891, called for. He did not provide that there should be a list, that that list should be open to the light of day, and to the public and that it should be approved of by the Minister of Finance himself. The Prime Minister made a statement on his own responsibility that no one had subscribed to that list whose name ought not to be there. On page 8791 of 'Hansard' of last session, the right hon. gentleman says that:

> The money came from private sources.

Of course it did. It did not come from the public treasury—it was not as bad as that.

> The money came from private sources; that I assert on my honour as a man, on my responsibility as the Prime Minister of Canada.

The right hon. gentleman, having pledged his responsibility as the Prime Minister of Canada, that this money came from private sources, is unable to tell me, in referring to the newspaper report that the Dominion Steel Company had contributed, where the money came from because he says that he does not know whether the company contributed or not. There is a remarkable contrast, the remarkable state of things with regard to a very important subject in which a very large principle is involved. May I ask the right hon. gentleman what he meant when he said that upon his honour as a man and upon his responsibility as the Prime Minister of this country he could assert that this money came from private sources, that not one dollar was subscribed by any person who ought not to have subscribed and why he should also say in the same speech and almost in the same breath when asked if the Dominion Steel Company had subscribed, that he had no personal knowledge? With regard to the Dominion Steel Company, he said :

> I do not believe there is a word of truth in it. At all events, if such an institution as that had been allowed to subscribe, it would be a gross breach of the understanding which was arrived at when Mr. Fielding's testimonial was started.

How does the right hon. gentleman square one statement with the other? How can he pledge his honour as a man and his responsibility as Prime Minister in answering a very important question upon a very important principle, pledging himself and committing himself to a certain statement, while, with regard to another subscription, saying that he does not know whether it is so or not and that if it is so it should not be allowed? Therefore, I say in criticism further of the hon. gentleman's attitude on May 3 last, that he did not deal fairly, with me or with this House, or with this country with regard to this question, and I leave it to the judgment of the House in view of what I have just quoted as to whether the right hon. gentleman did or did not. Why should the right hon. gentleman side-track the information in that way? Why should he pledge his responsibility and a moment afterwards confess that he had not personal knowledge upon which to base the responsibility that he pledged before the House on this important matter? On May 3, 1910, I asked for the production of the list and I will just quote from page 8789 of 'Hansard' of that date the concluding words of the remarks that I then offered to the House:

I shall not attempt to dwell upon the principles involved nor to moralize upon the dangers of the situation, but I feel safe in assuming that my right hon. friend, realizing that he spoke upon this resolution in 1891, and that he congratulated his party upon the signal victory obtained, will see that the grand victory of which he speaks, and which was attained as he would argue through blood and tears, be not besmirched now in 1910 by a derogation from the principles then enunciated. The only way, as I submit, in which my hon. friend can put himself square with the resolution, the only way in which I submit he can discharge the duty he owes to this country as Prime Minister and leader of the government, is to make full disclosure, and publish the names and lay the list on the table.

The Prime Minister, in effect, declined to do that, did absolutely nothing, took no action, made no statement to the effect that the list should be published, although the list was in existence, absolutely departed from the resolution of 1891 and from all the principles which he enunciated in support of that resolution. Why has there not been a statement since that time? A testimonial of so large a sum of money as $120,000, a fortune, presented to a minister of the Crown in secrecy, subscribed by persons whose names are absolutely withheld on the demand of this House—why is there this secrecy? Can the right hon. gentleman now offer to this House or the country any excuse whatever for withholding the names of those who subscribed to that testimonial, for withholding since that time the testimonial which was given and will the right hon. gentleman now offer to the House any reasonable excuse why the list has not been made public which was demanded on the 3rd May, 1910. I would be very glad indeed to have an answer from the right hon. gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I have offered to take my seat and give the right hon. gentleman the floor in order that he might reply to a question which, when he was in opposition, he thundered at the then government, and, Sir, he is speechless. Then, Sir, I hurl my right hon. friend's words back in his teeth, though twenty long years have rolled by since he uttered them. There being a list —and he has admitted that there is a list —and the Minister of Finance not knowing the names of those on the list, then I say to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the words I have just quoted from his speech with regard to moral sense, rectitude and public integrity are borne out, and he, and he alone, under these circumstances, must bear the onus and the odium. What condition of things has he brought about? What do we find the newspapers saying regarding our public men? How have the newspapers been reviling the Minister of Finance in a way that no man in private life would tolerate for one half hour. Here I extract from the St. John 'Standard' of the 20th of January——

Mr. CARVELL. A bad authority.

Mr. BOYCE. I am not saying what kind of newspapers these are, but that any kind of newspapers——

Mr. CARVELL. That is in a class by itself.

Mr. BOYCE. And you are in a class by yourself. In the front page of this newspaper, the St. John 'Standard,' is a flaring headline with these words: 'Mr. Fielding got stolen money.' A nice statement for the right hon. Prime Minister to make it possible to publish in any newspaper! Will the Prime Minister suggest that any newspaper in this broad Dominion would have the audacity to make such a statement concerning a public man had the Prime Minister given to this country the list of contributors to this fund? Or will he suggest that the editor who made such a statement could have remained outside a jail? Why, it would have been a criminal libel of the most outrageous character, and the newspaper would have been utterly without defence to it, if the Prime Minister had been true to his pledges and to these great principles that he enunciated. This article and others, published in the press throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, declare that it is reported upon high authority that Wm. R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank —now under sentence of six years' imprisonment for stealing money from the bank, falsifying government returns, which led to a terrible financial catastrophe in the shape of a bank failure—had contributed to this testimonial the sum of $2,500. And who, I ask, is responsible for that statement? Who but the Prime Minister of Canada is responsible for the fact that it is possible for anybody to say that Travers, or Sheldon of Montreal, or any other person has contributed a dollar to this testimonial? I give my right hon. friend this warning for what it may be worth—that he has gone a step too far. In departing from his principles, in his hysterical effort to cloak and cover up this transaction in which his Minister of Finance is concerned, he has brought down upon his colleague very severe criticism and very grave suspicion under which, unless this list be published, I fear the Minister of Finance —by reason of the action of the Prime Minister—will suffer for some time. Here is the evening 'Capital' of Saskatoon. I do not know what kind of a paper it is—

Mr. McCRANEY. It is a Tory paper.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not take responsibility for the statements of these papers; I merely indicate what is printed in them to let the public know that the Prime Minister and he alone is responsible for what they say. This is one of the few instances in which one can saddle the Prime Minister with full responsibility for what is published in a Conservative newspaper. In the evening 'Capital' of Saskatoon, of January 20, instant, appears this heading, 'Convicted bank manager said to have contributed to Fielding testimonial.' Now, I ask the Prime Minister, in all sincerity and earnestness, and realizing the gravity of what that means—and no one knows how intense is the gravity of a personal character for the hon. gentleman about whom it is said—why does not he relieve his friend the Minister of Finance from his lying under an imputation so gross, so awful so criminal as this, when to do so he has only to stick to his principles and publish this list?

It has been suggested that all sorts of people have contributed to that testimonial. My right hon. friend has seen, as I have, the names of different persons given as contributors to this testimonial, persons occupying high positions in this country, many of whom have pecuniary relations with the government in one department or another, but especially with the department of the Finance Minister, almost every day of their commercial lives. Is it fair, is it just, is it in accord with the principle that my right hon. friend laid down, that it should be possible that such a statement as that should go out to the public, yet not be brought into this House and denied when by that statement a minister of the Crown is laid under grave suspicion?

I need not mention names of those who, it is said, contributed. It is advisable not to do so in the absence of their verification. I do not know the number of them, although I might give him greater evidence than possibly he thinks I may be able to give with regard to these names. But I say it is not my intention in this debate to indulge in personalities, or to implicate one person more than another. I desire merely to emphasize those grand and noble principles, which my right hon. friend on the 13th of August, 1891, hailed with delight as the achievement of a magnificent principle, a principle long fought for by the Liberal party in this House, and long denied by the then Conservative government, which principle at last, owing to the arguments brought forward and the tactics employed by my right hon. friend as leader of the opposition, they were forced to concede in the interests of purity of government. If that testimonial, in the shape of the gift of a fortune, were given and accepted in the manner and under the circumstances set out in the newspapers of the day, and in the newspapers which have been publishing accounts of it in the last nine months, I say that the giving of it and the acceptance of it would be a brazen defiance of the first principles of parliamentary government, of the resolution of this House, of the pronounced views of the present ministry, including the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and of all decent and honest practice which should characterize public men.

That a public man occupying so high a position should be allowed, and should be led into—because that is the way I prefer to put it, as I fancy my hon. friend engineered the whole deal—led into the position in which he now finds his minister, an absolutely inextricable position, from which there is no outlet except that which he provided for himself in 1891, the publication of the list, is a most startling fact to put before this House, and the country, and I say that if he persists in that position, it is a disgrace to our public men and a blot on this administration, a blot possibly darker and more flagrant than any of the dark blots which have characterized it. Sir, we have charged in this House since 1896 different scandals against this government. We have charged that under this government there is the reign of the middleman, and the grafter, dishonesty in public affairs, and wantoness in the expenditure of public money. If the Prime Minister clouds this thing with a cloak of secrecy in defiance of his own principles enunciated in this House, it is a fitting climax to the carnival of graft and corruption that has characterized his administration. I ask my right hon. friend now, where did the money come from? I do not ask it lightly ; I ask it in all seriousness ; because he repeated that question himself in this House in May, 1910, and then gave an answer on his responsibility as Prime Minister of Canada which, if a six-year-old boy had given at school, he would have been whipped. He first said that the money had come from private sources, and then he said he did not know where it had come from except one subscription which was charged, but if it had come from that source, it was wrong. I am entitled to know, every member of this House is entitled to know, every taxpayer in this country, man, woman and child, is entitled to know, where that money came from. I am here to know—I am here to demand—I believe this House is entitled to demand—where that money came from ; and if the Prime Minister will awake to a realization of the position in which he has placed this country, and one of his ministers, he will see that it is of the utmost importance to this House and this country, for him now to tell where that money came from. I ask my right hon. friend another question here and now : Can a minister of state accept gifts of money privately subscribed, withholding the list of subscribers, and uphold the dignity of the Crown which he serves as a minister? I ask my right hon. friend to answer ; if he will, I will be glad to give place to him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. BOYCE. Sir, my right hon. friend is great at quotations. Sometimes he likes to quote the blunt and rugged honesty of the words of the late Hon. George Brown. My right hon. friend is quite an admirer of the writings, and the position taken by that late hon. gentleman on certain great questions. I want now, for the benefit of my right hon. friend particularly, and for the benefit of this House, to quote to him words of the late Hon. George Brown with which I have no doubt he is very familiar :

If, Sir, a public man avows certain principles, agitates those principles and seeks to overthrow the government of the day and establishes those principles, and if when he attains power he laughs at his principles and casts his professions to the winds, he is aiming a blow at public morality.

Shades of George Brown, Mr. Speaker! When the right hon. gentleman cannot rise in his place in this House and affirm a principle which he adhered to so strongly in 1891, when he was struggling to attain the confidence of the Canadian people. I say my right hon. friend occupies a very invidious position in the light of the words which I have just quoted, when he declines or is unable to answer a question so pointedly put to him, a question so near the heart of this great question which affects so deeply the honour of this great Dominion. Along that line I might ask the right hon. gentleman another question: will he deny that in 1891 he affirmed that if a minister accepted gifts of money without ascertaining himself and then making public the list of the subscribers thereto, he was aiming a blow at public morality? Can my right hon. friend answer that question? Will my right hon. friend deny that if the act of giving testimonials to ministers was done in the open light of day, it would be the best safeguard that there could possibly be against any wrong taking place? I must confess that I never saw the right hon. gentleman so reluctant to answer questions in this House as he is to-day. I would ask him whether he did not affirm in this House in 1891 that the receiving of such testimonials without publicity was causing the name of Canada to become a byword and a reproach? The Prime Minister stated in May, 1910, that there was a list. An hon. friend near me suggests that I should go further and ask the right hon. gentleman whether he saw the list of subscribers to that testimonial? Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in all seriousness. My right hon. friend evaded my moderate question in this House on the 3rd of May, 1910, by saying that there was no name on the list which ought not properly to be read, and he pledged his responsibility as Prime Minister of this country to that effect. I ask him here and now whether he saw the list of names of persons who subscribed to that testimonial, and with the utmost pleasure I will take my seat to give my right hon. friend an opportunity to reply to that most potent question—Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that I gave place to my right hon. friend, he still elects to maintain a silence which in my humble judgment is anything but dignified. I will ask him one more question on this most important matter: Was he not present and did he not see the testimonial presented to the hon. Minister of Finance, and did he not approve of it, applaud it, and at the time he approved of it had he seen the list of persons who subscribed to it? I ask the right hon. gentleman again whether he was not present when that testimonial was presented to the Finance Minister, whether he did not approve of it and applaud it, and whether he had not at the time a list of those who subscribed to it? Will he answer that question? He is silent, but if any significance is to be attached to the stand he took in 1891 and the charges he made against the Conservative party of that day in that connection, it is of the utmost importance now that we should have from him a full disclosure of all the facts. And I say that he is not upholding the dignity of the country when he refuses to answer a question of such pith and moment. It is a question, in the asking of which I am within my rights and privileges in this free parliament, and it is a question, in refusing to answer which, the right hon. gentleman shows his autocratic contempt for the people and their representatives. In view of the right hon. gentleman's silence, may I again ask him now whether he is prepared to affirm that a cabinet minister may properly receive money from any source and refuse to make public the subscribers of that money, so as to satisfy public opinion that there is no wrong? I see the hopelessness of trying to get from the right hon. gentleman further information and must simply draw the only conclusion which can be drawn from his continued silence.

What is the position in which the right hon. gentleman and the subscribers to this fund have placed the Minister of Finance? In what position is the Minister of Finance after accepting, upon the assurance, no doubt, given him by the Prime Minister that it was all right, that nothing was too good for Fielding—what is the position in which the Finance Minister finds himself after accepting this gift, without seeing the list of those who gave it? What a commentary on the conduct of the Finance Minister must be the declaration of the right hon. gentleman made in 1891 as to what was right and proper in this connection? Can any one urge any good reason why the Prime Minister, in flat defiance of the principles laid down by himself, should now refuse to publish the list? I am asking him in 1911 the very question which he himself hurled across the floor in 1891. My right hon. friend knew who subscribed to that testimonial to the Finance Minister and he must have pledged his responsibility, not only as a private citizen but as Prime Minister, that there was nothing improper in connection with it. Then, in the name of all that is fair and reasonable, why does he not make the list of subscribers public? How long is he going to allow this condition of things to continue? How long is it going to be possible for newspapers all through the country, without fear of libel suits, to make statements reflecting on the honour and credit of ministers of the Crown? Why does he not remove the aspersions that are being cast on himself and his colleagues? If there be no improper subscription, let him publish the list and raise even at this late hour the cloud which rests on the Minister of Finance and which must continue to rest on him so long as this information is withheld. The very evil at which the resolution of the right hon. the Prime Minister in 1891 was aimed is the one which is now being perpetrated by him. I am of the opinion that public men who serve in the capacity of ministers of the Crown should be adequately rewarded. They sacrifice a great deal, they sacrifice their personal means and health, they give to their country all their ability, all their time and all their strength; and I say that when the Minister of Finance in 1905 introduced a measure to provide life pensions for Privy Councillors, he did the right thing. And I know of no valid reason which warranted the hon. gentleman repealing in 1906 the measure which he put through the House in 1905 and in thus subjecting cabinet ministers to embarrassements such as are now being experienced by the Minister of Finance. On the 17th April, 1905, the Finance Minister moved a Bill which went through its three readings based upon this resolution:

That it is expedient that every member of the Privy Council, who has served as cabinet ministers and head of a department for a period of five consecutive years shall, upon retirement from the cabinet, be entitled to receive out of the consolidated revenue of Canada——

Not out of personal subscriptions——

—an annuity equal to one-half the salary attached to his office.

Out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, an annuity equal to one-half the salary attached to his office, or position at the time of his retirement.

2. If any person receiving an annuity hereunder becomes entitled to any salary in respect of any public office under the government of Canada, or to the additional sessional allowance provided for the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, such salary or allowance shall be reduced by the amount of such annuity.

Sir, what was that Bill for? My hon. friend in moving that said that cabinet ministers were in the same position as judges, they had similar duties to perform, they were in the same dignified position and should be provided for to the same extent. That is a very rational and logical argument and one that calls for this question which I will address to all hon. gentlemen sitting on the government benches: What would they think of a judge occupying a seat on the bench receiving a testimonial from erstwhile clients or suiters, from litigious or non-litigious persons who might at any date have suits before him? Would my hon. friend think it decent or proper that a judge of the High Court should receive such a testimonial of large sums of money? It would have been far better if the Minister of Finance had stuck to his bill of 1905 instead of receding from it in 1906 and saying that he was in favour of it, that he thought the principle was a sound one but was afraid of public opinion. I wonder if he is less afraid of public opinion now. This is what the Prime Minister said on that question on July 10, 1906:

I am quite prepared to have the matter considered by the country generally, by the press, and I would always hold myself ready to consider any scheme that would be suggested to us in favour of providing for the case of those who, having given the best of their lives to the service of the country, find themselves in a position in which they cannot, with any decency, maintain the high position which they have reached.

The Prime Minister then suggested that the matter be left over until the next session for the consideration of a new scheme to meet general conditions. No new scheme was proposed by the Prime Minister to meet the case of a minister of the crown, nothing was done; but the scheme by which the Prime Minister is now allowing himself to be connected is a scheme by which certain unknown persons have subscribed to a testimonial which has been received by the Minister of Finance, both contribution and reception being contrary to the resolution of 1901, to the form of my hon. friend's speech, to the principles enunciated by him and to all principles of decent and honest government. I am curious to know—and I use the word 'curious' again, hoping my right hon. friend will spare me the satire on that word to which he treated me in May last—I am curious to know what the right hon. gentleman proposes to do. I am here, as I said before, asking that my right hon. friend's profession be made good and that he will publish this list. I hope the right hon. gentleman will see his way clear to acceding to what I am asking. I propose asking the right hon. gentleman for this list in order that the principle which he laid down may be maintained, that the sources of the contributions to that gift shall forthwith be made public. I ask him to accede to that principle and I ask the House to accede to it, because it is a right principle, a just principle, an honourable principle, a principle which will add to the dignity of this country and will make for the removal of that stain on the fair name of Canada which lies there in consequence of the failure so far to give the publicity to this list which is required. Are there hon. gentlemen opposite who will vote for such a resolution as that? Are there hon. gentlemen sitting behind the Prime Minister who have so much regard for their personal honour and for the honour of this country that they will not tolerate the swallowing of principles in this wholesale manner by that right hon. gentleman time after time? If in the resolution I offer I quote back to my right hon. friend the very resolution he gave to this House in 1891, the words and the very principles which he loudly claimed as a signal victory for the Liberal party of that day, will any hon. gentleman behind him stand up and vote for it? In another House, illustrating possibly a similar position, and a similar spectacle, speaking of the subserviency of a following something like this, to a leader of a government, this statement was made: 'He cries white and they say it is good, he cries black and they say it is better, it is ever the voice of a god; never has there been heard such since the time of Herod, never has there been seen such slavish adulation.' The right hon. gentleman in 1891 cried 'white'. He cried 'white' by writing in the records of this House that this thing should not be done unless it was done in the sight of all men and before the sun. He said it should not be done and could not be done except under certain conditions and restrictions and bound and hedged about by precautions both for the honour of the recipent of the gift and the honour of the country which he was serving as a cabinet minister. That was the time when the right hon. gentleman was crying 'white.' Will he cry 'black' now? Will he take that resolution and gulp it down or will he adopt it, lay it down as a principle of this country, stand by it and produce that list which he says contains no name that could not be properly made known.

I offer this resolution in the same spirit exactly in which my right hon. friend's colleague, Sir Richard Cartwright, offered it in 1891. I offer it from the same motives, I accompany it not by my own professions, I know that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House do not think that they count for anything, but by the affirmation of the principles laid down by my right hon. friend, and I will ask him now if, having supported the resolution in that way, he will not rise to the occasion and feel that it is his bounden duty, in order to maintain the honour of the position which he now holds, to accept the resolution which I now have the honour to place in your hands and which reads as follows:

That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out and the following be inserted instead thereof:

That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families, from contractors, government officials, or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

That in order to maintain this principle the source of any gifts of money to ministers of the Crown ought not to be surrounded with secrecy, and that an authentic statement of the names of the donors should forthwith be made public.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped it would not be necessary for me to address the House on a matter so largely personal to myself. But lest my silence should be misunderstood, I desire to make a brief statement, not to enter into any matter of controversy, but simply to state the facts as I know them, and then to withdraw from the House and leave the matter to be dealt with as my fellow members may deem best. Some years ago, at an earlier stage of my public career, I was approached by a gentleman, a warm personal friend, who told me that he represented a group of gentlemen who were pleased to entertain a favourable view of my public work, and he told me that they desired to present me with a testimonial in the form of what might be a considerable sum of money. I at once told my friend that while I appreciated his generosity, and that of my other friends, I saw good reasons why I should not permit the movement to go on; therefore, I requested that it be dropped. He referred to the matter once or twice again; I told him that I adhered to my judgment, and the matter was dropped. The friend to whom I refer has since passed away. Years afterwards, quite a number of years afterwards, a year or more ago, at all events, some months before the last session of this parliament, the subject was revived by another gentleman, a man of the very highest character in this country, a man whose motives were beyond the possibility of suspicion, a friend of many years standing, who came to me with a similar proposal. I had several conversations with him concerning it. My first decision was that which I had expressed in earlier years, I refused it. I told him the difficulties in my mind; I told him one of the difficulties was that I had understood that in an earlier case that had occurred in this House, I am not sure, but there were one or more cases, it had been alleged that testimonials had been presented of which a certain part at least had emanated from contractors, or from men seeking favours from the government, and that I saw great difficulty in a public man accepting any testimonial with the possibility of its coming from such a source. He replied that while I might have been justified in earlier years in refusing to allow my friends to take this step, he thought that at this stage of my life the conditions perhaps were not the same, and that my friends wished me to consider the matter further. I gave the matter further consideration, and I again discussed with him the difficulty which I had in my mind as to accepting a testimonial which might possibly come from sources which would be open to suspicion. He informed me that that matter had been fully considered, and that he was authorized by his associates, whose names he did not tell me at the time—nor do I even know yet who they all were—he told me he was authorized by them to say that they would guarantee to me that not one penny would, be accepted from any government contractor, from any person who was then seeking or was at any time likely to be seeking, any office, favour or patronage of any kind from the government. That assurance was given me by a gentleman on whose word I could rely. Let me say that he added further, in order that I might not at any time have any sense of personal obligation to anybody, that he was authorized to inform me that the list of contributors should not be made known. It has been suggested this afternoon that in that secrecy there was some harm. I know that the object of secrecy was not harm, the object was good, because my friend stated, 'since you will never know who the men are that gave you this testimonial, you will never feel under any personal obligation to any of them, they are not likely to come to you at all; but if they ever do come to you, you will have no means of knowing them, because the names will neither be made public, nor will they be communicated even to yourself.' I said to him there would probably come a time in later years when I might no longer be in public life, when I might desire to know the names of the friends who had manifested so much kindness towards myself. He replied, 'I do not believe even then you will know, because those who are promoting this movement are determined the list shall not be made public.' With that assurance, with the assurance that not one penny would be accepted from any government contractor, from any person who was likely to be an applicant for any office, patronage or favour from the government, with the assurance that I would not even know the names, and with the further assurance that the matter had been mentioned to my good friend the Prime Minister, and that he had given his approval to the movement, on those conditions, with those assurances, I agreed to accept the testimonial.

After the testimonial had been announced to the public, but before the transaction had really been consummated, some comment, ungenerous, I thought, was made in this House, and other comment more ungenerous in the press. I went at once to the gentleman who was chiefly instrumental in promoting the matter, and called his attention to this comment. I said: You have given me your guarantee that not one dollar would be accepted from any source except in the way we have arranged, that not a dollar would be accepted from government contractors or people who were likely to be seeking favour from the government; I suppose I can rely upon your having kept faith with me. As it is not too late to retrace your steps, before you go further with this transaction, I want you and others concerned in it, to examine that list, and if you find that inadvertently any man has been permitted to make the smallest contribution to that list, who does not come within the category of those who were to be permitted to subscribe, I insist that you shall send him back his money, and do it instantly. That was the understanding I have had. I have no doubt that that gentleman with whom I was dealing, acted in good faith, I know that he wanted to do what was right in the matter; I know that he and his associates were moved only by what they were pleased to regard as an appreciation, perhaps too great an appreciation, of my services—they were moved by personal regard and friendship for me. They gave me the assurance that they would not permit a dollar to be accepted from sources that would be open to objection. Having received that assurance, and feeling satisfied that they were acting in good faith, and that not one dollar was accepted which would come within the terms of the discussion of former years, I felt, Sir, that I was justified in receiving the testimonial. I confess that, while the testimonial itself was one that a public man would value, and I did value it, I valued still more the expression of good will, confidence and regard which it brought to me from different parts of Canada, from men of all parties, from Conservatives as well as Liberals and, aye, from men who sit on your left to-day, Mr. Speaker, and for whose congratulations I was deeply grateful.

I do not desire to enter into any of the matters, which may be matters of controversy, referred to by the hon. member for Algoma. My purpose is simply to state the facts as they are known to me, the conditions under which this proposal came to me, the conditions under which I accepted it, and, whatever others may think, I feel that those who know me, whether they be my political friends or my political foes, will believe that the statement I present to-day is an exact statement of the facts, and I question whether anybody can say that a testimonial accepted under such conditions, is anything that would reflect upon my honour, or the honour of my colleagues, or upon my independent action as a member of this legislature.

Mr. MILLER (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. I am very glad——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. MILLER. If, Mr. Speaker, I supplied the word 'gentlemen' to those sitting on the other side of the House, or to any of them, and if, in saying that, I said anything that was unparliamentary I beg to take it back. Mr. Speaker, I am glad, I am delighted to think that there is but one man in this House of Commons upon either side who could be induced to make the attack which has been made this afternoon. The hon. member who made the attack used these words: 'I have no desire to injure any public man.' House flies are said to carry typhoid fever germs, mosquitoes are supposed to scatter yellow fever, there are even said to be in the water we drink millions of little bacilli that are able to conceal themselves in a drop of water, and yet are able to do much harm and scatter disease. I do not think that the hon. member (Mr. Boyce) who has addressed the House this afternoon bids fair ever to become large enough or great enough to do the slightest injury to any public man by anything which he might say or do. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I was not surprised when the hon. member rose to his feet, nor was I surprised by anything he said. I was surprised that some hon. gentlemen, to whom I have been very willing to apply the word 'gentleman,' applauded him as they did, but I was gratified indeed to notice that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) gave no sign of approval by any applause or any look of pleasure or satisfaction. I was glad to observe that the most prominent, the most influential, the most respected men on the other side of the House did not give any measure of applause. I think, Sir, that the leader of the opposition would have restrained the young man had he reasonably been able to do so, and I shall be astonished if he votes for the resolution which has been propounded. I noticed that some of the most respected members of the other side of the House were wrapped in slumber while the hon. gentleman spoke as he did. The hon. member quoted all the newspapers without asking the names of these papers. He said: 'any newspaper,' and he appeared willing to make his attack from any report, or any newspaper or any other source from which a report could be found or discovered.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MILLER—from any source—

Mr. BOYCE. I am speaking to a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has paid me many compliments, but I object to his mis-stating what I said. I mentioned the name of every newspaper from which I quoted, or from which I extracted the headlines.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. member distinctly said 'any newspaper' and his whole address showed a willingness to use whatever story would help him in his attack.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Miller) must accept the hon. gentleman's version of his own statement, or his version of what he intended to say.

Mr. MILLER. I willingly do.

Mr. BOYCE. I ask my hon. friend then to withdraw the expression 'any newspaper.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Mr. MILLER—Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the hon. member (Mr. Miller) to say that he is willing to obey the ruling of the Chair. The custom is to accept the statement of an hon. member.
