Mr. MILLER. I have not the slightest idea of not observing your ruling in any matter, Mr. Speaker. I do not clearly understand the point of order. I quoted the hon. gentleman's words. If I quoted them incorrectly I am quite willing, of course, to accept his statement. I am speaking on this occasion because I was a member of the committee which assisted in collecting the Fielding fund. I might repeat that the understanding from the beginning to the end of the whole transaction, was, as has been stated that not a dollar should be accepted from any government contractor, from any government official, or any person having anything whatever to do with the Finance Department or with the government. It is urged that there ought to have been publicity, that the list of donors ought to have been published. Let me say, Sir, that there is no one who has the power to compel the publishing of such a list. The members of the committee determined from the very beginning that the names of the donors should not be revealed to Mr. Fielding or be made public in any way. The list is not the property even of the Prime Minister. It is the property of the committee by whom the funds were collected. It is not within the power of any man to say that the list shall be made public because it would be contrary to the understanding from the very beginning by the committee who collected the money.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is the policy laid down by the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. member for Leeds speaks of the policy laid down by the hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself. The whole volume of the attack of the hon. member for Algoma was based upon a resolution supported by the Prime Minister in this House in 1891. But as was distinctly stated by the hon. member for Algoma, that resolution was adopted because of gifts from contractors, government officials, and a number of persons having to do with the government. That was one thing. The matter before us now is entirely another thing, is as distinct and different as can be. It has been said repeatedly, it has been said correctly, that it was the understanding from the beginning that not a dollar should be accepted from any such person, and that understanding has been faithfully adhered to. Sir, I have collected moneys before, and for different objects, and for different persons, but I have never taken——

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the hon. member a question. He has told the House that he was the promoter of this great undertaking——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. STAPLES. Then, one of the committee—if you cannot understand, I will be more explicit and quote the hon. gentleman's words; he was one of the committee. Then, I ask the hon. gentleman where is the list?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I have never undertaken any task that afforded me greater pleasure than did the gathering of that part of the money that I did gather as a testimonal to Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance. Never were requests more cheerfully responded to, never did men seem more willing to contribute. And, Sir, these contributions came from all classes of men, men of all professions and belonging to both political parties; and not one of them within the classes condemned by the resolution supported by the Prime Minister in 1891. Many of the subscriptions were voluntary; many came from persons who were not asked to subscribe. And many who subscribed gave the heartiest expressions of appreciation of the value of Hon. Mr. Fielding's services to this country.

Mr. EDWARDS. I desire——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has the floor. If he consents——

Mr. EDWARDS. The hon. gentleman has said——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for South Grey has the floor and cannot be interrupted.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. There must be an understanding, The hon. member for South Grey has the floor——

Mr. EDWARDS. I want to know if he will permit me to ask a question?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman does not wish to give that permission.

Mr. MILLER. Never before has there been a greater example on the part of any Canadian citizen of devotion to duty than the example shown for fourteen years while Minister of Finance by Hon. Mr. Fielding. During that fourteen years, he has served this country as well as any public man ever served any country. And, let me add, expressions of kindliness, of appreciation, of confidence, were just as common from Conservatives as they were from members of the Liberal party. And it may not be generally known to members of this House or to the people of Canada that, time and again, on more than one occasion, Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, has been offered, and has refused, from private business institutions salaries far in advance of any he has ever received or any indemnity ever given him as Finance Minister of this Dominion.

As chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee, during last session and the session before, when the committee was very busily engaged with the general insurance Act, in which members of both sides of the House took a deep interest, day after day, I noticed that Mr. Fielding, who was at my side while I presided over that committee, would call a messenger as the hour of adjournment approached, and send him for a lunch to be taken to Mr. Fielding's room. And, in place of spending an hour or an hour and a half as business men are in the habit of doing, in club or lunch-room, Mr. Fielding partook of his lunch while dictating letters or reading correspondence. It is a fact well known to every member of this House and to a great many business men of Canada at least, that Hon. Mr. Fielding has so devoted his time and thought and energy to the duties of his position and the interests of Canada, that he has paid not the slightest regard to his own business affairs, his own fortune, or the accumulation of any provision for himself or his family. I have heard members on both sides speak in the highest terms of Mr. Courtney, who was, until a few years ago, Deputy Finance Minister. Mr. Courtney is a man of experience, and a man of undoubted integrity, and, so far as he has any political leanings those leanings are to the Conservative party; he was appointed by a Conservative government. I happened to be walking one afternoon with Mr. Courtney some time after he had resigned his position as Deputy Minister of Finance. He spoke of Mr. Fielding. He said that Hon. Mr. Fielding came from Nova Scotia to accept the position of Finance Minister of Canada, a fresh vigorous, hearty young man, with hair as black as raven's wings; but, he said, that with these years of devotion to duty and to his country, his hair had become whitened. And he said: 'There is not a man in Canada, whatever may be his politics, who would dare to point a finger of suspicion at Hon. Mr. Fielding, Sir, we are all proud to know that that is true. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), speaking last night, speaking, perhaps, jocosely,—said: 'If the people of Canada were foolish enough to continue in power much longer the government that now controls the affairs of the country.' Sir, if the Liberal party have been in power for fourteen years, and if, as I anticipate, they will be in power for fourteen years yet to come, it is largely because of two reasons, and of two personages. The first is the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The people of this Dominion, the business men, the thinking men, of Canada, for fourteen years, have believed, as they believe today, that there is no other Canadian so well fitted to fill the position of Prime Minister as is the gentleman who now fills and adorns that position. And no less truly do the business men of Canada, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives, believe, as they have believed for the last fourteen years, that Canada has never had a Finance Minister equal in his devotion, in his integrity, in his ability, to Hon. W. S. Fielding. Sir, business men in Canada, even Conservatives, men whose every vote has been cast for the Conservative party, have hesitated to mark their ballots against this government, for the very fear that some man other than Hon. W. S. Fielding might control the financial affairs of this country. And one of the strongest cards it has been possible to play for the Liberal government in any part of this country is to ask, 'If you vote Hon. W. S. Fielding out of office as Finance Minister in Canada, whom do you think you are voting in ?'

It would not have been right, it would not have been fair, it would scarcely have been honourable or honest, for Hon. W. S. Fielding, when men who had no connection whatever with this government, not government officials, not government contractors, not men who had alliances in any way with the government, chose to present him with a magnificent sum of money as an evidence of their esteem, of their confidence, of their approval of his long-time work for Canada—I say that when men of that class chose to present a money token to Hon. W. S. Fielding, it would not have been right or honourable, having his family in view, for him to have refused that gift. Neither would it have been a nice thing for the gentlemen who proffered the gift to have had it refused in that way. The Hon. W. S. Fielding has given his whole life and has sacrificed his health in the service of this country ; he has refused financial positions yielding much greater revenue; and this he has done out of love for the country quite as much as any military general who has lost his life on his country's battlefields. And, Sir, when a man who has been of such great value to the country of which he is proud to be a citizen, is asked to accept a gift which has been proffered to him by his friends, I say it is not to the credit of this House that even one of its members should have been willing to make the charge which has been made to-day. Sir, I take up the morning 'Citizen' of this city, a Conservative newspaper, and I read in it the following expression of opinion spoken by one of the clergymen of the city in his pulpit last Sunday morning:

Right of Parliament—Rev. J. W. H. Milne Condemns Actions of some Members.

Rev. J. W. H. Milne, in his sermon Sunday in Glebe Presbyterian church, in referring to men being able to differ and yet remain friends, said:

Some men in politics can agree to differ. Some men can contend openly and honourably, yet withal retain no unkindly feeling. But even now and then there are men, even members of parliament, who are so venomous in their opposition to those who differ from them that they are ready to suggest or say anything that will leave a stain on the character of an opponent. There is something essentially villainous in the makeup of a man who, in order to gain his ends politically, will accept any story floating about and then ask a question, because privileged, with the object of destroying another who may be opposed to him. But worse still is it for any member of parliament, because shielded by four walls, to bring before the public the name of any man against whom he may have a grudge, on mere pretext of suspicion. Any man may have his name brought before the House by any member. He may be maligned by innuendos. He may, although innocent, have suspicion cast on his character, yet have no means of redress.

This may be called the right of parliament but it is not in harmony with the spirit of Christian civilization. No civilized community would tolerate the highwayman who would jump from an ambush and steal the purse of a respectable citizen and yet we permit political highwaymen to stand up in the House and rob sincere, earnest citizens of their character. There must eventually be some means provided which will prevent such public outrages.

Sir, if I should make the application of that article which I should like, you would at once rule out my language as unparliamentary. I am glad to believe that there is in this country perhaps only one representative of the press who would so demean himself as to have spread that garbled and false report through the length and breadth of Canada as to the contribution from W. R. Travers to the Fielding fund. And I think the hon. member who spoke this afternoon when he knew that a proper denial had been made of the story, ought at least to have been sufficiently manly to have made some reference to that denial. I hope, Sir, that, with more years of parliamentary experience, if by any chance or by any foolishness of the electorate the hon. gentleman is permitted to continue in this House, he will some day regret the action he has taken to-day, and will apologize, as I believe an apology is due, to the House, to his constituents, and to the particular member who was the object of his attack.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I regard it as a subject of regret that any hon. member of this House should be ready to take up a false statement, started by some evil-minded person, and give it so much publicity. I am aware that it is the right of every hon. member to do so; but with that right there is a corresponding responsibility. In my judgment the man who circulates a false story is only a degree less guilty than the man who starts it originally. If an hon. member is to deal seriously and not flippantly with a question of this kind, he ought to be able to produce some proof; he ought to be brave enough to make a charge and put behind it some kind of proof before he brings the matter before the House. My hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) has not had the courage to do anything of the kind.

As I acted as a humble member of the committee in charge of the testimonial question, I think it is due to the House and to the hon. Minister of Finance that I should say a few words. I will not discuss the general subject of donations to cabinet ministers. My opinion is that this discussion is brought on, not for the purpose of settling any general principle, but for the mere purpose of making an unprovoked attack upon the character of the Minister of Finance. This is clearly understood on both sides of the House, and it is very well understood in the country. Now, Sir, I wish to assure the House as a member of that committee that the statement made in the press and repeated in this House by the hon. member for West Algoma on the 23rd day of this month, that Mr. W. R. Travers, the late manager of the Farmers' Bank, contributed $2,500 to the Fielding memorial, is false. Not one dollar of that memorial was contributed by Mr. Travers; not one dollar of the memorial was contributed by the Farmers' Bank, or I may say by any other bank in Canada. I wish also to assure the House that the committee was scrupulously careful that no money should be accepted from contractors, from corporations, from banks or from any party having any dealings with the government. That was the understanding on which the memorial was started, and that understanding was very carefully carried out by every member of the committee. Every dollar of that memorial was clean money contributed by the personal friends and admirers of the Minister of Finance; and I am glad to repeat, what has already been said in the House, that some of those are to be found in the ranks of the Conservative party. I also desire to assure the House that the utmost secrecy was maintained by the committee, and that the names of the contributors were not given to the Minister of Finance. I question if he knows to-day the name of a single man who contributed to the memorial.

The fact that after 30 years of faithful service devoted to his country, his closest friends felt that something of that kind was necessary is of itself sufficient proof of the integrity and honesty of the Minister of Finance. I cannot think that the Conservative party as a whole—and I feel sure that the Conservative party in this House—are not behind the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) in the attack he has made this afternoon upon the Minister of Finance. It is quite clear that the applause which met his remarks did not come from the front benches of the opposition. My hon. friend quoted some newspapers of the baser sort speaking for the Conservative party. Let me quote in my turn from the press, and I shall not now quote from the Liberal, but from the Conservative press. I want to be permitted to read an editorial which appeared in the Kingston 'Standard,' which, I am told, is one of the old time Conservative papers of Ontario. At one time, I believe it was the organ of the late Sir John Macdonald, and is one of the decent and respectable Tory papers in this country—and I am glad to say there are a number of them. It is not a scurrilous newspaper like the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' and others I could mention. It is one of the good old fashioned, simon pure Tory papers which believes in British fair play, and I wish to be permitted to read the editorial. This is what the Kingston 'Standard' says.

> We cannot see how any political advantage is to be gained out of the statement put in circulation by sundry people and newspapers that W. R. Travers contributed $2,500 to the fund which made up the purse to the Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance. In the first place, there seems no warrant or foundation for the statement; and in the second place, it is one of those petty, miserable, nasty charges that usually do their originators more harm than good—and per contra, usually do more good than harm to the person or persons at whom they are directed. Fair play in politics is, it seems to us, as necessary as fair play in business—but this charge is not fair; it is merely contemptible, for we all know, and it was announced at the time, that Mr. Fielding has never been told, has not known and does not want to know who were the contributors to his fund.
> For our own part we have felt that in respect to this gift to Mr. Fielding that it could not possibly make any difference to him in his official capacity or conduct. If he is honest—and we think he is—the gift would not make him dishonest. If he is dishonest the gift would not make him more so. But, however this be, one thing is certain, and that is that no harm will come to him through innuendos and sneers that are not worthy any decent newspaper or any decent man.
> It's a great thing to know how to play a game—even a political game—fairly.

That is the opinion of one of the respectable newspapers supporting the party of my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce). It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that in these days the good name of no public man is altogether safe, especially if he takes an active part in political warfare. The late Alexander Mackenzie is now universally regarded as having been a disinterested pure-minded statesman. Honesty and integrity are admitted to have been his chief characteristics. If any one should happen to mention Mr. Mackenzie he would say of him: Well, there is an honest man. In the history of this country, Mr. Mackenzie is considered as the Sir Galahad of Canadian public life. Yet one has only to turn back to the newspapers and to 'Hansard' of that day to find that the scavengers were busy trying to blacken his character. But, thank God, they failed, and the character of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie stands to-day as an example and inspiration to young men of Canada. This attack of my hon. friend on the Minister of Finance, I regard as an analogous case. The Finance Minister had just returned from a successful mission to a foreign government. Everybody was glad, hon. gentlemen in this House generally on both sides were glad, to welcome him back and to see that his health was improved. The people of Canada, from Cape Breton to Victoria, were listening with interest to the message he brought back from Washington, and he brought back a proposed treaty which ought to earn for him the gratitude of every patriotic Canadian; but scarcely had he taken his seat in this House when he discovered that an hon. member of this House had been spending his time during his absence gathering up mud to throw at him. I want to say in closing to the scavengers outside this House—I am quite well aware that if I were to call a member of this House a scavenger, I would be called to order—I want to say to the scavengers that their attempt to besmirch or blacken the character of the Hon. Mr. Fielding will fail. Mr. Fielding is too well known in Canada, and wherever he is known, he is respected, honoured and loved. His 15 years of faithful public service in his own native province have not been forgotten, and the 14 years during which he acted as the lieutenant of our great leader, and helped to shape the course and guide the destiny of this country in the larger arena will always be one of the brightest chapters in the history of Canada. Let me tell you, Sir, that the reputation and the good faith of the Minister of Finance is one of the most precious possessions of the Canadian people. Any one who attempts to besmirch or blacken that good fame will earn the contempt from all decent Canadians that his conduct deserves. Let the scavengers throw mud if they will, it will not stick. It did not stick to Mr. Mackenzie, and it will not stick to Mr. Fielding.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I shall slightly vary the trend of my remarks this evening owing to the attitude assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I had intended to speak, as far as possible, in a purely judicial way. I shall endeavour to do so still, but I shall bring into discussion several matters that I would have been disposed to leave out had not supporters of the government assumed such an extraordinary attitude in reference to this motion. We have reached a very unfortunate pass in Canadian affairs if a member of this House, feeling it to be his duty to do so, as it would have been the duty of many other members of this House, may not venture to bring to your attention and to the attention of the House and of the country the extraordinary circumstances that present themselves in connection with the gift of about $120,000 to a minister of the Crown. I am quite prepared to join with any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House in paying tribute where it is necessary, not a pecuniary tribute, but a meed of praise to any minister of the Crown who honourably and faithfully discharges his duties. I am not prepared to join with the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) who imagine that they should seize a circumstance that certainly reflects no credit upon the government or the Finance Minister as the occasion for fulsome and undeserved laudations such as we have had this afternoon. I have not understood that this side of the House launched any attack upon the Minister of Finance. I did not understand until the hon. member for Guysborough spoke that there was any mud-slinging. I have understood that the member for West Algoma thought it necessary, in view of circumstances that have transpired, to refer again in this House to the language which was so enthusiastically lauded by the First Minister in 1891, and from which unfortunately the ministers have signally and purposely departed. But in referring to that principle no attack has been made upon the Minister of Finance. Circumstances have arisen in connection with a gift to the Finance Minister, which having regard to the declarations of all parties in 1891, call upon the government at the earliest possible moment to make a full and fair disclosure of the persons who contributed to that testimonial. If there is an attack at all it is an attack upon the First Minister, certainly there is none upon the Minister of Finance. But I am prepared to say from my place in the House that I distinctly attack the position taken by the First Minister, for when I find an hon. gentleman like the First Minister declaring so emphatically in 1891 the principle and the only principle upon which a public testimonial can be made to a minister of the Crown and then find him in 1909 and 1910 distinctly going back on every statement he made on that occasion, I think it is time to call the attention of the House and of the public to the attitude of the First Minister. It is sometimes said among lawyers that in a certain class of cases the most unwise thing to do is to put your own client in the box and there has been no exception to that rule this afternoon, for whereas until I heard the Minister of Finance, I was prepared to believe that should the list be brought down it might establish that there were no improper contributions, I am not now prepared to take that attitude. I thought that we were vindicating the honour of the House by asking for the production of this document. I hoped it would show that the people had not been deceived and that contributions had not been made which ought not to have been made. I had hoped that the government would have vindicated their position by bringing down a statement of the names of the contributors and have shown that there was not one improper contribution upon that list. Why don't they do it as the right hon. gentleman said in 1891? Why don't they do it? Because they dare not do it. I challenge the First Minister now, after all that has been hurled from that side of the House, I challenge him again to get up in the House and implement the statements he made in 1891, and say that for once he will redeem a pledge and a promise, and lay upon the table of the House the statement that we are entitled to; and I will then join with him, or any other member of the House, in paying any reasonable measure of tribute to the Minister of Finance.

But the Finance Minister made a peculiar statement. He says, I was approached on one occasion many years ago, a gentleman proposed to make me a testimonial, and I absolutely refused. He was not tempted on that occasion. But they came again. Who were they? It would be very interesting to the people of this country to know. On that occasion the hon. gentleman parleyed, he hesitated, and to hesitate in a case of that kind is to be lost. He parleyed; his better judgment told him, as he said this afternoon, that the thing could not consistently be done. He says he felt that the probability was that if that subscription list was put in vogue, names would occur on it which ought not to be there, and there would be a political scandal. Therefore, tempted as he was—and I do not blame him for being tempted—he resisted their blandishments and their suggestions, and they went away. But the tempter came again, in, I think, a more unholy guise than before, came in the person of a gentleman that I will mention presently. I am no seer, but I think I can put my hand upon that gentleman—not in this chamber; but I think I can point him out, and I will point him out through the 'Globe' newspaper presently. This gentleman came in a more tempting guise and said: We want to get up a testimonial—thoroughly disinterested, not one of the subscribers should derive any benefit from the government, purely voluntary. Even if we are not disinterested, it is no matter, because we will never never tell who we are. And the minister listened to the voice of the tempter, and he fell; and Mr. Speaker, it was a great fall in the public life of Canada, it was a very unfortunate circumstance in the history of this country, it is something that will take us some time to wipe away. What does the minister tell us? He tells us that he made a bargain. Did you ever hear Mr. Speaker, the like before? He says: We made a hard and fast bargain, then and there, that this would be an absolute and inviolate secret for all time to come; we made a bargain behind the backs of the people whose servants we are. That is what the Minister of Finance tells us. He says: This gentleman bound himself that these names would never be divulged, and I bound myself that I would put my head in the sand like an ostrich, and that I would never look to find out who these men were; and that in the meantime I would go on as before, as if it had never happened, and administer the affairs of the Dominion of Canada, conscious though I might be, he says, that perhaps a lot of that money came from an unholy source, but I would not know it. So, he says, I made the bargain. I say, Mr. Speaker, that a more infamous bargain than that by which the Finance Minister pledged himself, to use the language of the First Minister, to be 'deaf and dumb, and blind' for all time, was never made in the Dominion of Canada.

And was the minister perfectly innocent in the matter? I came here this afternoon prepared to say that in the career of the Minister of Finance, he had never put his hands into the treasury to enrich himself, that I would be in complete sympathy with him if he received private contributions from private friends, publicly made, in the face of day, before the people of Canada, and I would be glad if he got it, because I recognize that through no fault of his, perhaps, he needed it, and it was no reproach to him that he needed it. But to-day I have heard hon. gentlemen going out of their way to sling mud at this side of the House, and to laud the Minister of Finance as if, not only was he personally honest up to that time, but as if he were a paragon of political honesty, and an example to the people. I am not quite prepared to go that far, I recollect that in the history of this broad Dominion, where rampant extravagance has prevailed for the last twelve or fourteen years, where worse than extravagance has been witnessed in every part of the Dominion, there has been no member of parliament who has been less careful as to the manner in which he would hold his party in power, no member of this House who has been more reckless as to how the public money was being expended for the purpose of bringing grist to their own mill, than the Finance Minister of Canada. Whilst I am prepared to certify to his personal honesty up to this time, I am not able to close my eyes to the fact—which I would not have mentioned, but for the line the debate has taken that there has been no instance in the history of Canada, black as it is as regards the debauching of constituencies, so black as the case of the very constituency which is represented by the Minister of Finance.

Now was the Minister of Finance perfectly innocent in this infamous bargain? The fact that it was a secret bargain is a bad feature, the fact that it is kept secret is a presumption of guilt, and a very strong one, when persisted in as we find here. But I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have here the most cogent evidence that this bargain, made by the Minister of Finance, as he tells us, with those gentlemen in the guise of friends, was not a fair and bona fide bargain. In other words—the Minister of Finance did not act in perfect good faith when he made that bargain, because he tells us, this mysterious gentleman told me that 'I would never be told who the contributors were.' So far so good. I agree to that, but, he says, before I let him go from me, I asked him for one concession. I said: I may retire from public life, and I might like to know before I die as to who they were who benefited me; will you grant this request that whilst it shall be inviolably concealed so long as it may be a source of temptation to me to do wrong, it will be divulged to me after I retire from public life? Will the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House, if it was a perfectly legitimate transaction on the part of the Finance Minister and if it was bona fide intended that no gentleman was to contribute to this testimonial who could, in any way come in contact with the minister in his public office, how could there be any difference in the situation after he had retired from office from his situation while he remained in office? So, in moderate language, I hope, but impelled by a sense of duty as a public man, I charge that the Finance Minister in the statement he made this afternoon, proved conclusively and incontestably that he had an inkling into that transaction and into the nature of it before he parted from the mysterious friend who beguiled him on that occasion.

Well, who was this truly benevolent personage, this truly good man, who came to him and made this bargain? It was not the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), it was not the chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee. It was not he because he is not a big enough man for the position. It was a bigger man than that. If I have said that the gentleman of racecourse fame was not big enough for that situation I need not say that the member for Guysborough would not fill the bill. It was not he who came. Well then, who was it? Was it a gentleman by the name of Jaffray? I think we have pretty strong and conclusive evidence that it was. Let me recall to the House the description by the Minister of Finance of the gentleman who came here and you will see at once that it will not apply to the hon. member for South Grey or the hon. member for Guysborough. He says that he was a man occupying a very important position, a very distinguished gentleman, a man high up in social circles and so on in Canada, a man of irreproachable character and a man of the highest sense of honour. I wish we had him on file here just to examine him. When I got that picture I said to myself that I did not think there was anybody who could fill the bill except Jaffray, that gentleman of immaculate purity, that white-robed angel, slightly sprinkled with coal dust, who had performed certain injudicious, but very profitable pilgrimages into the Crowsnest Pass. But why did I think that it was Senator Jaffray?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). He was one of them.

Mr. LENNOX. He was one of them and a gentleman by the name of P. C. Larkin was another, and another of the beautiful quartette as far as is disclosed, was the hon. member for South Grey, the Under Secretary, if I may call him that, of the Minister of Finance, the chairman of the Banking Committee and a gentleman who can always whisper into the ear of the Minister of Finance, and tell him what he will; this man ought to go; this man ought to stay, and you can imagine what a valuable character he will be when the great Banking Act comes up for investigation at a very early date. I will have a word to say about the hon. member for South Grey, not because of his position, but because of his connection with this matter, later on.

Mr. BOYCE. And Larkin.

Mr. LENNOX. Larkin is a gentleman who is—oh, he is a man of means—a man of ways and means. Well now, a certain newspaper that can sling mud almost as well as we can on this side of the House, as described by the hon. member for Guysborough, was attacking the member who introduced this resolution in its editorial columns on the 25th of January last. This is the 'Globe' and it speaks of 'The detractors of Mr. Fielding.' As soon as it is asked to have a resolution passed affirming the attitude of these gentlemen, trying to re-establish them in their faith of 1891, the 'Globe' takes up the cudgels and attacks us as 'the detractors of Mr. Fielding.' In referring to what the hon. member for Algoma had given notice of, it says:

> The whole fantastic fabric is founded on falsehood from beginning to end. Had Travers contributed $2,500 or any other sum to the testimonial, Mr. Fielding would never have known of it,——

Mr. Fielding never would have known of it. That is rather a significant statement. We have this fact set out by the organ of the Grit party, the first organ of the Grit party in this country, that even Travers or any other criminal, had contributed to the testimonial Mr. Fielding would never have known of it and innocently would have been enjoying the secret fruits of dishonesty.

> —for to this day he has not seen or in any other way been informed of the names of the contributors so careful were those who arranged the testimonial to make sure that no contributions would be given because of a lively sense of favours to come.

These gentlemen appreciate the situation, at all events.

Senator Jaffray——

That is the gentleman in disguise who came to the Finance Minister—— —and Mr. P. C. Larkin, who obtained the Toronto subscriptions,——

And this with Montreal is the big end of it, with the smaller fry here in the House of Commons.

—desire it to be known that neither directly nor indirectly from Mr. Travers or any one on his behalf or on behalf of the Farmers' Bank was any subscription received nor was any subscription asked for or tendered.

Am I not right in assuming that the chief engineers of this whole affair were Jaffray and Larkin? Who is Mr. Jaffray and does he come within the limits of the definition laid down by the Liberals in 1891, by that great and good man, Sir Richard Cartwright, and by that almost equally immaculate gentleman, the right hon. First Minister who leads this House? Is Jaffray a contractor with the government or not?

An hon. MEMBER. Is Larkin?

Mr. LENNOX. Is Larkin a contractor with the government or not? We know of Jaffray's connection with the 'Globe' and we know that the 'Globe' has a better thing than this testimonial. Why not, when the 'Globe' is annually in receipt of a tidy little sum from this government, part of it earned and a great deal of it not earned except by fulsome laudations and dishonest statements, of about $8,000 on the average So that this thing is coming fairly well home.

Before I go on, let me say, I am reminded that P. C. Larkin is not the contractor, but a tea man. And the tea men are getting a pretty nice tea party in connection with the transcontinental at the present time.

Now let me call attention to the attitude which should be assumed by the government of Canada to contributions such as those under discussion, an attitude much loftier than is called for by the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce). Hon. gentlemen will recall the incident in the life of Mr. Pitt. In 1789, when King George III. was found to be incapable of carrying on affairs of state, it was necessary to appoint a regent. I will read from Mr. Stanhope's work a short quotation which will show how this affected Mr. Pitt's fortunes. On three several occasions parties approached Mr. Pitt—his circumstances being of extreme difficulty—to give him the means of living—very like the Finance Minister in that particular, but very much unlike the Finance Minister, in that Mr. Pitt declined on all three occasions; and different in this respect also, that while, when the first offer was made to him Mr. Pitt was about to retire from public life, when the second proposal was made he had actually retired from public life, but yet, having regard to the fact that he might at some future time re-enter public life (though it was pointed out to him that the funds collected would be paid into a bank and he would never know the name of any contributor) he answered that he would never be able to meet any body without feeling that it might be one to whom he was indebted and declined. This is Mr. Stanhope's account of the situation:

By these votes of the Commons and the Lords the ground was cleared for Pitt's proposal with respect to the Regency Bill, a proposal hitherto kept secret, and indeed not yet fully matured. But during the interval he received a most signal token of the public esteem and approbation.

It was well known by the public that Pitt would not be continued one hour in office by the Regent. It was known that he had already taken measures for returning to his first profession. It was also known, perhaps, that his neglect of his private affairs had involved him in some debts, which he trusted to discharge by an industrious application of his talents at the bar. At this very time, however, there was held, by public advertisement, a meeting—— —of the principal bankers and moneyed men of London anxious to tender him on his retirement from office a substantial mark of their esteem. The sum of £50,000 was first proposed, but so great was the enthusiasm that in the space of forty-eight hours this sum was doubled, and Mr. George Rose, as his Secretary of the Treasury, was requested to press upon him, in the manner most likely to be acceptable, a free gift of £100,000. But Mr. Pitt answered his friend as follows: 'No consideration upon earth shall ever induce me to accept it.'

That is not a secret meeting.

Years passed and Mr. Pitt was out of office. It was realized that his difficulties, instead of passing away, had been increasing. His creditors, who had been prepared to wait while he was in office, became pressing when he retired; in fact, executions were threatened to be put upon his property. In this state of things, a renewal of the former offer was made. This was in 1801, and concerning these events Mr. Stanhope says:

Pitt was too proud to utter a word of complaint even to his nearest friends. But they, and even, though in less degree, the public at large, soon became aware of the extremities to which he was reduced. There was a most earnest desire on their part, so far as he would allow them, to succour and relieve him. For this object three plans were at different times proposed. In the first place, some gentlemen intended to bring forward a motion in the House of Commons for a public grant to him. But when Mr. Rose told Mr. Pitt of that design, 'he assured me in the most solemn manner,' so Mr. Rose continues, 'of his fixed resolve on no consideration whatever to accept anything from the public.'

It is not worse to accept it directly from the public than indirectly from the public of course. Further on in his account of these events, Mr. Stanhope says:

> Next there was a renewal of the generous offer which the merchants of London had made Mr. Pitt in 1789. A deputation from them waited on him to state that they had ready subscribed for his use a sum of one hundred thousand pounds which should be paid into any banking house which he chose, and so that he should never know the name of any one of the subscribers. This noble gift was, however, as nobly declined. If, said Mr. Pitt, he were ever again in office he should always feel abashed and constrained when any request was addressed to him from the city, lest by non-compliance he should be thwarting the wishes of some among his unknown benefactors.

This indicates the recognized standing of public morality in England. And, though I can hardly hope, from what I have seen as to the public life of Canada during the last ten years or more, to expect quite so high a standard of morality in Canada—and I speak this with shame—I would expect that the First Minister would not be ready to swallow himself, to take back every statement he made in 1891 and to tell the people: You are up against a barred door; call me despot or tyrant, or what you will, but the people of Canada shall not look in upon the transactions of the government and the Finance Minister in reference to this gift of $120,000.

Coming to the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), and I must be very brief with him—he says that only one man dared make this charge. Well, of course, I did not expect a great deal from the hon. member for South Grey, but I should have thought, as he has been sitting in this House for some time, that he would know that only one man can speak in this House at a time and that only one man can move any given resolution. And when he whines about this, it shows to what straits he is driven. He will find, as time goes on, in this debate, that there are a good many who will, if not by their word, by their action, sustain every word of the resolution of the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce). It will be to their credit when they do so. They would be stultifying themselves as a party, having reference to 1891, if they took any other course; and hon. gentlemen opposite, including the First Minister, will be stultifying themselves when they vote down this resolution to-night.

Now, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) was as candid and indiscrete as the Minister of Finance. He tells us that he was conducting and handling this subscription list, while he was or he is now, the right hand man of the Minister of Finance; and, if degrees can be drawn, we realize that no hon. gentleman on this side of the House who is not a cabinet minister will have the ear of the Finance Minister more completely than the chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee, and we realize that although he is not a cabinet minister, there is no one making a more persistent still-hunt after a portfolio than the member for South Grey—I do not say whether effectually or not. Well, he has got the chairmanship; but it is the member for South Grey not a contractor? Why, he is the gentleman who boasts all over the country, particularly in his own riding, that no man has the ear of the government as he has, that no man has secured the number of appointments that he has secured for people in his riding or to come from his riding, and take up their residence in Ottawa as civil servants, &c., &c. In fact, so numerous have his benefactions at the hands of this government been that when the hon. member for Peel the other day asked some questions as to the number of appointments which had been made through the instrumentality of the hon. member for South Grey, the government, after taking the matter into their serious consideration, came down to the House and announced that the information asked for was so voluminous and weighty that he would have to move for a return. This hon. gentleman, who is to occupy an independent position, who is to represent the people and not the government, who is to vote for the people and not at the beck of the government, will, I hope, have the decency, when this question is put to the vote, not to vote upon it. I am sorry the hon. member for South Grey is not here. I would like to ask him, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, do you imagine for one moment that this distinguished person, Mr. Jaffray, when he toted around that subscription list in the city of Toronto, was a small enough man not to himself subscribe? If he subscribed, then he came within the category. And, coming to the great divide that there is between Mr. Jaffray and the member for South Grey, does any one imagine that when the member for South Grey was trotting around that subscription list, he also did not subscribe? And coming to the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) would he or would he not be in the same happy category, not letting his left hand know what his right hand was doing, and never give a whisper to the Minister of Finance when he wanted recognition as a senator later on? The hon. member for Guysborough is peculiar too. He asks why the hon. member for West Algoma had not the courage to move a resolution? Where has the hon. gentleman been sleeping? Why the hon. member for West Algoma did move a resolution, and he did exactly what the friends of the hon. member for Guysborough did in 1891. It is in really trying to reinstate them in the faith they proclaimed then that we are moving this afternoon. But they will not be reinstated; they have had a bad career in the meantime. Then he speaks of scavengers. He appears to be sensitive as to that, and I suppose it is hard, for he has been omitted from the list.

Now, what does this all mean? Mr. Jaffray and Mr. Larkin in Toronto, and the right hand man of the Minister of Finance, and the aspirant for a senatorship in the House of Commons—this combination of four handling this list, which is to be known to anybody they like to tell it to, but is not to be known to the people of Canada. It means this, that we, forsooth, are to take the statement of these gentlemen as to who was not on the list, but we are not to get a whisper as to who were on the list. It is not who was not on the list that we are after, and that the people are asking, and that they have a right to know, but who was on the list ; and they can judge for themselves whether they are proper contributors or not. It looks to me as if it were a general concerted scheme—the hon. member for Guysborough to represent the maritime provinces, the hon. member for South Grey to represent the province of Ontario, Jaffray and company to represent the big financial city of Toronto, somebody not yet divulged—and he will not be divulged after what I have said—to represent Montreal, and somebody from the west—a general levy from God knows whom, because they will not tell us.

Now, I will refer briefly to the attitude of the present First Minister, and the Liberal party in 1891, and I will try to make it clear to the House and the country that the right hon. gentleman, in putting up these gentlemen to oppose this resolution, is taking back every statement he made in 1891 as to the proper conduct of members of the Crown in a situation of the kind. First, we have his first lieutenant, Sir Richard Cartwright, that gentleman whose soul was plunged in misery if anything crooked was done unless he had a hand in it himself. That gentleman, actuated by a sincere and holy desire in 1891, just after the death of Sir John Macdonald, the man who gave him so many and so well deserved thrashings in his lifetime, moved this resolution in an effort to throw mud upon the memory of that great statesman. Although I do not believe all that Sir Richard Cartwright said at all times, I think it quite fair to take him at his word on this occasion. Referring to Sir John Macdonald's need—and he made a few complimentary remarks to make it a little more stinging as he went along. He said:

> Under these circumstances, if ever, it was quite justifiable for the hon. gentleman's personal friends and admirers to have contributed for the purpose of relieving his family from any danger of want, and had two or three very obvious and very reasonable precautions been taken, no blame could have been attached to the parties who were concerned in getting up the testimonial.

That is not as high a code of morality as they have in Britain. According to the British code, a gentleman in public life, or likely to be again connected with public life should not take gifts at all; and I am prepared myself to subscribe to that doctrine although that is not the gist of the resolution this afternoon. But the hon. gentleman proceeded:

> Unfortunately these precautions were not taken, unfortunately publicity was not given, as I have always said publicity should be given, to the names of those who subscribed.

What was the gist of this statement of Sir Richard Cartwright in 1891: It was that the only thing which could make the transaction defensible, was publicity, not merely publicity of the fact that there was a testimonial, but of the names of those who subscribed. And the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who sits here and would not speak this afternoon, was the gentleman who congratulated Sir Richard Cartwright very warmly on the excellent speech he had made, and who subsequently was elated over the signal victory the opposition then won in having had this resolution, which we again propose this afternoon, voted unanimously by the Conservatives. Then Sir Richard goes on:

> Still more unfortunately precautions were not taken to see that subscriptions to that fund were not accepted, save from sources from which they could honourably be accepted.

The hon. gentleman proceeds to make further observations which are still more pertinent. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to pay particular heed to these expressions and apply them to the facts now under discussion.

> I have observed, Sir, that some of the hon. gentleman's apologists have undertaken to mitigate the error or the crime, call it what you will, which was committed by the reception of that testimonial, under the circumstances, by the plea, which I think was also advanced in the other case, that the hon.

gentleman did not know who had subscribed to his testimonial. Such a plea——

And that is the plea advanced by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, and which the Prime Minister advanced a few months ago.

—such a plea, in my judgment, is a direct aggravation of the offence. A public minister has no right whatever to allow any gift to be made to him unless it is done publicly and unless he knows from what source it proceeds; and, Sir, I would say this, that if a minister of the Crown tells me that he has accepted a gift, not knowing and not choosing to know from whom it proceeded, so far from regarding such a plea as a mitigation, I say that such a plea raises a presumption of guilt.

How does that meet the case to-night?

It was his duty to find out; it was his duty to see that not one penny went into his pockets or into his coffers unless it came from such sources that he could honourably and fairly receive it.

Did the right hon. the Prime Minister adopt that view when he congratulated Sir Richard Cartwright some 20 years ago on the speech he then made in this House? If he did, and he did, how can he justify to the people, how can he justify to his own conscience, his own conduct in swallowing himself as he is doing on this occasion. Well, Mr. Speaker, Sir Richard Cartwright is now a kind of back number, and we will take the utterances of the Prime Minister himself, and ask him to apply them to the circumstances of to-day. Then if he can get up and tell us that he can honourably discharge his duties and act consistently with the statement he then made, and yet say that the public are not entitled to know who were the subscribers to this fund, he is performing an acrobatic feat in morals and politics, which I did not think even he was capable of. The right hon. gentleman then said:—

The Minister of Justice said a moment ago, in referring to the testimonial offered to the honourable Minister of Public Works, the member for Three Rivers, that that hon. gentleman did not know who were the subscribers. Sir,——

You can imagine the dramatic attitude and pose of the right hon. gentleman as he said these words:—

—Sir, if he did not know, why did he not look at the list

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. I ask the right hon. gentleman why the Finance Minister, if he did not know who were the subscribers, 'why he did not look at the list'? If the Finance Minister does not know, why does he not? It is because, before one dollar was subscribed to that fund, he entered into this utterly indefensible bargain as he has said this afternoon, that the whole thing should be done in a hole and corner behind the backs of the people of Canada and that the people should never know, because it might happen that there were subscribers to that testimonial whose names it would not be safe to make public or to disclose to the hon. gentleman himself even after he had retired from public life. But let me go on to quote what the right hon. gentleman then said:—

If the hon. gentleman did not know, it was because he chose to remain ignorant of the names on the list, and if he chose to be ignorant, is it not because his moral sense told him that he might there find names of persons giving contributions which should not be accepted at all. Is it not simply because his conscience told him that if he were to look at that list he would find there the names of men who every day were suppliants in his office for favours.

Has the right hon. gentleman's moral sense completely died out? Where is it to-night? Will the moral sense of the government permit them to longer continue this infamy, because it is an infamy to hide from the people of Canada these transactions in which they are most vitally interested. I ask the First Minister if it is not simply because his conscience told him that if he were to look at that list he would find there the names of men who are every day suppliants in his office for favours. How is it to-night? Is it not true and does the First Minister not know it that if they were to look at that list they would find there hordes of men, the majority of them men who, in a political sense, are from day to day suppliants in the office of the Minister of Finance for favours at the hands of the government? The hon. gentleman pronounced judgment upon it himself and I think we will leave it with that judgment. The right hon. gentleman says, summing it all up, that is the reason, the sense of conscience, the knowledge that they would be condemned in 1891 was the reason that they would not look at the list, and he says of the dead minister, that greatest statesman Canada has ever had, Sir John A. Macdonald, that was the reason that they would not look at the list. That is the reason why the Minister of Public Works did not choose to look at that list. And now that is not the reason why do they choose to be blind in the matter? I call upon hon. gentlemen opposite to tell what is the reason if there can be any good reason for it. The right hon. gentleman has for the time being the matter in his hands. He can refuse to give us this list. If it is a list such as they want us to understand it is, it will redound to the glory and to the honour of the Minister of Finance. If it is an honest list, if it is a list of persons who have the right to contribute, then the fair name of the Minister of Finance will be vindicated above all question. Is that not a matter of some importance in the interests of Canada? Is that not a matter that ought to commend itself to the First Minister? Is that not a matter which he should grasp with eagerness? Is it not a reasonable request on behalf of the people of Canada which the opposition are making to-night? If it is not, will the First Minister tell us why it is not? I tell the First Minister that when he calls on his followers to vote down this resolution, as he is evidently prepared to do, he is putting a blacker mark upon his record than he has ever put there before, that there is no more complete and utter denial of a former attitude taken by any political party in this country that the right-about-face of the government and their supporters if they vote down this resolution. Politically speaking I care not at all which it done, Nationally speaking I would be glad indeed if that list were produced. and if it appeared that there was not one name upon it that ought not to be there, but I despair, after what I heard this afternoon, that this would be the case, for surely there could be no good reason, there can be and there is no honest reason for refusing it unless it be that the right hon. gentleman and his followers know that they dare not produce it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just taken his seat opened his remarks by stating that it had been his intention to approach this subject in a purely judicial spirit, but that owing to the taunts of this side of the House and the manner in which the speech and the resolution of the hon. member who moved it were received, he would not follow his first inclination and would no longer approach the question in a judicial spirit. He has just given us an evidence that he was as good as his word and that he forgets the judicial in order to look after the vituperative spirit. When he reads his remarks to-morrow in cold blood I believe that he will come to the conclusion that he would have been better inspired if he had adhered to his first deliberate judgment and approached this question in a purely judicial spirit as it ought to be approached, and in no other spirit. I shall try if I can, and I hope I can, to discuss this question in the very spirit my hon. friend first intended to approach it, simply from the point of view of what is due to parliament, to the country, to the government, and to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, upon the present occasion. There is no use disguising the fact that this is an attack made upon the Minister of Finance. If this question had been approached on the broad line only of what should be the parliamentary law, the motion would have been brought up in a very different manner from that in which it has been brought up. My hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) stated in his opening remarks that he was not bringing this motion as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply, he disclaimed any intention of making it a non-confidence motion. If this was indeed the intention of my hon. friend not to make his motion a non-confidence motion, a motion which could be debated and disposed of on its merits, he had a very simple way of doing it. It was open to him to bring it forward as an ordinary motion after giving notice of it. If we were in the last days of the session, if we had reached a period when the government business has priority over the business of private members, there might have been some excuse for the hon. gentleman in bringing his motion as he does to-day. But we are in the early days of the session when private members on each side of the House have two days in the week on which to bring their matters to the attention of the country, Mondays and Wednesdays, and therefore it was quite open to my hon. friend to bring in a motion on any of these days. The hon. gentleman says that it was not his intention to bring this forward as a want of confidence motion, but he knows that by the rule of this House this motion cannot be separated, that it must either be accepted as a whole or denied as a whole. It must be accepted as a whole, even if there were in it, parts to which the House would not agree. It must be rejected as a whole, even if there were in it parts to which the House would be disposed to agree. Therefore, if the hon. gentleman was simply seeking to give us a lesson of morality in public life, he chose a very unfortunate manner of doing it. Then the hon. gentleman stated in his opening remarks that he had not brought forward this motion with any intention of injuring anybody. If such was the intention of the hon. gentleman, I must say that he has a very unfortunate manner of expressing his intention. I have only to quote his language. My hon. friend said he did not bring up this question for the first time to-day, he brought it up a week ago yesterday. On the House proceeding to the orders of the day, my hon. friend rose in his seat, and with great solemnity spoke as follows:

I beg to give notice that to-morrow I will move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, to wit, the receipt by ministers of the Crown of gifts of money in the form of testimonials and of the reported contribution to such testimonials or testimonial of a sum of money by one William R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, now in liquidation, said Travers having been convicted and being now under sentence of six years imprisonment for having falsified returns to the government, and for theft of the moneys of the bank.

This was giving notice of a motion which was not intended to do injury to any one. If there was no intention of doing injury to any one, why was the name of W. R. Travers brought into the notice? Why was it stated that W. R. Travers was under sentence for having falsified returns to the government, and for theft of the moneys of the bank? Therefore I think I am justified in saying to my hon. friend that, whilst I must accept his statement that he had no intention of injuring anybody, he was most unfortunate in giving expression to his intentions.

Then the hon. gentleman referred to a motion passed in this House in 1891, and which he said was directed against the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald, who had been only three years in his grave. We have only to look at the record to learn, and the hon. gentleman must have known that that motion was never directed against the memory of Sir John Macdonald ; that motion was directed against a then living member of the House, the late Sir Hector Langevin, then member for Three Rivers. Sir John A. Macdonald was not mentioned at all, except incidentally. I do not remember that anybody on that occasion found fault with Sir John A. Macdonald for having accepted a gift from his friends when he was in dire circumstances. A moment ago my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), with a view of drawing a contrast between my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and William Pitt, read from the life of Pitt where he had refused a testimonial from his friends at a time when Pitt, like so many other public men, was in poverty, and even unable to meet his liabilities. Now, if the object of my hon. friend was to draw a contrast between the attitude of Wm. Pitt on that occasion, and the attitude of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance on the present occasion, have I not just as much right, and even more right, to draw a comparison between the attitude of the Minister of Finance and another eminent man in this country, a man in some respects as great as Wm. Pitt, I mean Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir John A. Macdonald was not blessed with the goods of this world. He had heavy liabilities which he could not meet, and his friends came to his rescue. There is, however, a little difference which I may mention. If Sir John A. Macdonald had been like Wm. Pitt, a bachelor, with no wife and children to look after, he might have done like Wm. Pitt, and have said, I will stand by myself, I will accept no gift from anybody. And, perhaps to-day, if the Minister of Finance, whose conscience is as tender as the conscience of any man in this House, were in the same condition as Wm. Pitt, if he had not a wife and children dependent upon him, if he had not known that he was advancing in life he might have done like Wm. Pitt, and said, I can shift for myself, I will accept a gift from nobody. But it is the good fortune of the Minister of Finance that he has a wife and children dependent upon him, a blessing which was denied to Wm. Pitt, and, therefore, who will blame the Minister of Finance if he thought of his wife and children when an occasion was offered him to make provision for them? Did anybody ever find fault with Sir John A. Macdonald for having thought of his wife and children? I have been sitting in this House for nearly forty years, for many years I sat in front of Sir John A. Macdonald, and I never heard a case mentioned, except one, where he had received a gift from his friends. I think if I remember correctly that in 1870, or thereabouts, when this testimonial was given to Sir John A. Macdonald it was not the object of such a motion as that made in 1891, or the object of such a motion as is made to-day. Now, if there was a motion made in 1891, the conditions were very different from the conditions that we have to deal with on the present occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Ha, ha.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do these gentlemen who laugh know the circumstances under which that motion of 1891 was made? When Sir Richard Cartwright made his motion in 1891, a Conservative paper in the city of Montreal, a paper which generally supported the administration, had been writing a series of articles appearing day after day, week after week, and month after month, which were republished afterwards in pamphlet form, and in which a charge was made against Sir Hector Langevin, that he had accepted a gift to which public contractors had contributed. Sir, that was the case in 1891. I stated last year when this matter came before the House that I did not care to speak of the dead, I did not care to repeat what I said in 1891 in the presence of Sir Hector Langevin, I did not care to read before the House what I then read in the House in the presence of Sir Hector Langevin.

But, Sir, I stated then, and I have to repeat again, that the occasion of the motion made by Sir Richard Cartwright was the fact that it was publicly stated, not in the press of the opponents of Sir Hector Langevin, but in the press of himself and his own friends, that public contractors had contributed to the fund which he had accepted. That was the reason why Sir Richard Cartwright moved the motion which he did, and which I shall quote at the present time. Sir Richard Cartwright in the face of that statement which was current, which was repeated day after day, that contributions had been made by contractors, moved this resolution:—

That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any members of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt; and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

Nobody will take exception to this. Everybody will admit that it would be disruptive of all public morals if contractors, government officials, or persons having pecuniary relations with the government should contribute to a fund for a minister. That was affirmed, it was not denied by anybody, it was an obvious truth. That motion was accepted and has ever since been the law of this parliament. It is recorded in our journals that such should be the law which should govern all men having anything to do with the public affairs of this country. I went further upon that occasion, and I stated that, in view of the circumstances, in my humble judgment, all such contributions should be made public.

Now, Sir, were those views accepted on that occasion by the over-scrupulous gentlemen who now compose the Conservative party? When I stated that in my humble judgment the motion merely was not sufficient but that there should be another one to implement the first and to say that in order to make doubly sure in this case, especially in the case of Sir Hector Langevin, there should be publicity given to these proceedings, was the resolution adopted? Was it made the law of parliament as it was decided that the other motion should be the law of parliament? Not at all. My views, I was told this afternoon, were then thundered forth on the other side of the House, but if they were thundered forth they met with no response at all from the other side of the House and it has taken them twenty years to find out that there was some merit in them. But, if the motion and my views which I uttered and which I gave in all sincerity on that occasion had been received by the then government of the day they would have been made the law of parliament, as the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright was, and everybody would have been guided by that law. Now that has been the history of this question in so far as the previous proceedings of the House are concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was approached a year ago, and everybody knows that the Minister of Finance is not a wealthy man. His friends knew that he was a poor man. His friends knew that he was in the condition of Wm. Pitt, that he was still more in the condition of Sir John Macdonald, having a wife and children dependent upon him. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance was approached and he stated that he would agree to such a testimonial provided it was well understood that the lines laid down by the resolution of this House were strictly adhered to and that nobody would be permitted to contribute to the fund who was a public contractor, who was a government official, or any other person having pecuniary relations with the government. To anybody who knows the Minister of Finance, nay, I would say, is anybody on that side of the House who knows the Minister of Finance, not convinced that no matter how extremely dire might be the necessity of my friend and colleague he would not accept a dollar or a cent from that class of people who are mentioned in the motion? Is there a man on this side of the House, is there a man in this country, is there a man who has ever had anything to do with the man who is known as W. S. Fielding, who is not fully aware that his conscience would not permit him under such circumstances to do anything which would be at all contrary to his sense of honour. Sir, I believe I can say that even on that side of the House, there is not a man who would not be ready to say, and to say now, that the Minister of Finance is incapable of any mean action of whatever kind it may be. The Minister of Finance stipulated first that he would accept this testimonial if it were well understood that the men who would be at the head of the committee would not accept a dollar from any man who was a public contractor, a government official or who had any pecuniary transactions with the government. Every man has his own sense of honour, every man is the guardian of his own honour and if my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is characterized by any qualities—and he has many qualities to characterize him—he is mainly characterized by his sense of honesty, by his most delicate sense of honour. My hon. friend said he would not want to know those who had contributed to him so that, walking about, whether it was in public or private life, he wanted to be absolutely unaware of the unknown friends who had come to his rescue under the circumstances in which he was.

Now, Sir, I was sorry to hear my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) a moment ago, deprecating this attitude of the Minister of Finance. I may say again to my hon. friend what I told him a moment ago, that in his calmer moments, when, to-morrow, having forgotten the sense of excitement under which he was provoked to speak, he reads his own words, he will be sorry for one of the aspersions, the insinuation, which he made against the character of the Minister of Finance. The minister was blamed by my hon. friend because he did not want to know the names of those who had contributed to that fund. He relied upon the honour of the men who had been charged by that committee to levy this fund to ask no government contractor, no government official, no man having any pecuniary relations with the government to contribute anything to it. He relied that they would comply with that condition, and he stipulated that even the names of those unknown friends who were to assist him should not then be made known to him. My hon. friend blamed the Minister of Finance for this. Well, Sir, I leave it to him whether the Minister of Finance is not right. Perhaps another man would have said: No, I prefer to have them known. But, after all, if the Minister of Finance preferred under such circumstances, that he should not even know those to whom he might be grateful, he consulted his conscience, he consulted his honour; and the man does not live who can find fault with him for the decision he came to. Men there may be on the other side of the House, men there may be on this side of the House, who, putting aside all political proclivities and consulting only their higher sense of public honour and public morality, may differ upon that point with the Minister of Finance and may say that that hon. gentleman would have done better had he scrutinized that list himself. But he preferred to take the course he did; and I say that this is a question which, whether solved one way or whether solved another way, can reflect no dishonour upon the Minister of Finance. For my part, I said, speaking under different circumstances it is true——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER—very different circumstances—that there should be publicity. Publicity, after all, is always the safeguard in matters of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My words are cheered by hon. gentlemen opposite, in this year 1911; but similar words of mine gained no such response when I uttered them in 1891. But I have to say, the Minister of Finance did not violate the law of parliament as laid down in 1891; he did not violate any code of honour, nor any principle of honesty. He acted frankly and above board. And to-day he gave his version of the matter like a man. If any conclusion is to be drawn from the words of the Minister of Finance, uttered under great provocation to-day on the floor of this House, it is not the conclusion urged by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox); but to-morrow the name of W. S. Fielding will be dearer to the people than it is at the present time. Say what you will, do what you may, the man is not living who can breathe suspicion upon the character of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, Hon. W. S. Fielding.

I have stated that upon these matters a difference of judgment is always possible. But I am asked: How are we going to judge? In 1891, there was not only a suspicion against Sir Hector Langevin, there was an open charge, as I said a moment ago, day after day, and week after week these charges appeared in the press and they were published in pamphlet form under the title 'Le Metier de Ministre.' It was openly charged against Sir Hector Langevin that he had accepted contributions from contractors, that at the very moment when he was sitting in the House he had the money of contractors in his pocket. Is there to-day a suspicion that Mr. Fielding has a cent of public money in his pocket? No, Sir, in this country public men are liable to find charges made against them;—I do not complain of that, it is part of the game. We are liable to be accused, to be traduced; every man who takes his seat in this House, must be prepared for that. But there are, after all, certain things, however we may differ, which, in our heart of hearts, we know to be true. And there is not a man on that side of the House, as there is not a man on this side, but knows that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is absolutely incapable of a dishonest, a low, a mean action, word or thought.

I do not find fault with the hon. member for West Algoma for bringing this question forward again; the only fault I have to find with him is, because of the manner in which he has brought it forward. He brings it forward in such a form that an amendment would be out of order, forcing us on this side of the House either to adopt it entire, or vote it down entire. In his speech, my hon. friend took me to task again and again. He wanted me to speak when I did not feel inclined to speak; he wanted me to do his bidding, when I had no intention of doing his bidding. He must not find fault if I did not respond as he wished me to do; it is my privilege as a man, to speak and act as and when I wish. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman's speech, but I repeat, that I do find fault with the manner in which he introduced the resolution.

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. Does he find fault with the manner in which the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright was introduced in 1891? This resolution is introduced in precisely the same manner and is stated not to be a motion of want of confidence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have answered that already. When Sir Richard Cartwright moved his motion, if I remember well, it was in the month of July or August, and at a time when parliament had been in session for five months or so. At that time every day was a government day, and Sir Richard Cartwright had no other method of bringing the question forward than that which he adopted. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyce), is not in that position. He could have moved his motion on Monday, on Wednesday, and could have moved it at a time when we might have amended it. But I will go further with my hon. friend. When I came into this House to-day, I was disposed to say that to the first part of the resolution there was no objection whatever; we have voted it before, and would be ready to vote it again; but as to the second part of the resolution, I would have been prepared to ask the hon. gentleman to modify it so as to make it more acceptable than it is. For the hon. gentleman must realize, as the House will realize, that it is couched in offensive language. The first part of the resolution reads as follows:—

That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any members of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

I may say to my hon. friend that there was no necessity for his introducing this part of the resolution at all, for it is part of the law of this parliament already. It has been on our Journals for 20 years. Therefore there is no necessity for affirming it now. My hon. friend is not so clever that we cannot see through him: he introduces this part in order to take the other part, which I shall now read:

That in order to maintain this principle the source of any gifts of money to ministers of the Crown ought not to be surrounded with secrecy, and that an authentic statement of the donors should be made public.

Mr. BOYCE. The right hon. gentleman's own words.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I said, in the speech to which my hon. friend has alluded, that the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin was surrounded with secrecy, certainly there was secrecy on that occasion; but would any one say that there was secrecy in this testimonal that was given to Mr. Fielding? Was it not done in open day? Was there not a public banquet at which the testimonial was offered to him? What secrecy was there about it? But, Sir, these words are put into this motion in an offensive way. To me, Sir, as they are put there, they are most offensive, and they have been received with a cheer which shows me that they were only intended to be offensive. If this question had been approached in a judicial and fair spirit, I would have felt called upon to ask the hon. gentleman to modify his resolution and to convey the same idea in different words. But in view of the manner in which it has been introduced, with the evident intention of being offensive, there is nothing for this House to do, while affirming the principle and the truth there is in it, but to accept the fact that this is a vote of want of confidence, put forward in an offensive manner, and to be treated as such and voted down by this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax) Mr. Speaker, I have seen the right hon. gentleman in pretty tight places on many occasions, but I have never seen him struggle so hard and accomplish so little as he has done to-night, I am perfectly confident that that is his own sensation and conviction at this moment. I will come a little later on to some of the arguments—I suppose it is necessary, in a parliamentary point of view, to dignify them by that name—and deal with them in detail. For the moment I want to point out to the House that the two strong points which the right hon. gentleman has made are these: first, that Sir Richard Cartwright's motion in 1891 was made about four months after the session opened, while this is made about two months after the session opened. That is convincing argument number one. Now, let us come to convincing argument number two—that in 1891 certain offensive allegations were made in a paper supporting the government of that day, while certain equally injurious statements have been made on this occasion in the press opposed to the government. Why, Mr. Speaker, as I understood my hon. friend from Algoma, his point was that in respect of all such matters there should be such perfect and absolute publicity that no paper in this country, Grit or Tory, would dare to utter even the breath of suspicion. It was only in that way that my hon. friend from Algoma alluded to the rumours in the press to-day, which have been contradicted, and I am willing and happy to accept the contradictions. But my right hon. friend was not ingenuous in dealing with the position in 1891, because he forgot to mention to this House that the injurious statemeint, which he quoted in 1891, appeared in a certain newspaper in Montreal at a time when that journal was attacking the government, and when on one point at least it was actually opposed to the government and was trying to drive it out of power. When we make that qualification in the remarks of my right hon. friend, we shall see that there is really no distinction; and even if he had made his point, what has it to do, in the name of all that is reasonable and sensible, with the question before this House?

Now, I want to advert to some of the criticisms which have been made on the other side of the House upon the speech with which my hon. friend from Algoma introduced this resolution. There was evidently a pretty concerted arrangement to cast discredit and odium upon my hon. friend. One hon. gentleman referred to scavengers. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman. who were the scavengers in 1891? Because I am within the judgment of any hon. gentleman in this House who cares to examine carefully, as I have done more than once, the debate which took place in 1891, and who has listened to the speech of the hon. member for Algoma, as to whether that speech was not a more temperate and reasonable speech than that which was delivered by Sir Richard Cartwright in 1891; and there are rumours—I do not know whether they may be true or not—that Sir Richard Cartwright is not much more satisfied with the condition of affairs in 1911 than he was in 1891. My hon. friend from Algoma quoted copiously from the speeches of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and I leave it to the judgment of any one within hearing of my voice whether the quotations he gave from those speeches were not the severest portion of the remarks which he addressed to the House this afternoon. In my judgement they were. No other man, said the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), could have been found to introduce this resolution than the hon. member for Algoma. Well, I will tell the hon. member for South Grey something about that. If it had been a Conservative Finance Minister who had received this gift of $120,000 without any publication of the names of the contributors, I will tell my right hon. friend that two gentlemen, if they were in this House, would have been prepared to take that matter up. One of them is the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the other is the Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the Minister of Finance. I did not see any reason why he should not have taken part in this debate in the ordinary sense, as his name was introduced only by reason of the incident to which I have referred. This resolution does not name him, and is not particularly concerned with him except with regard to the incident to which I have alluded, and because of the desire that parliament should establish a reasonable and salutary rule in this connection. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, made his statement. I accept absolutely, and not merely in a parliamentary sense, every word he said. I have been in pretty active opposition to him, in political life especially, during the past ten years, but I am perfectly willing to accord to him the tribute of having worked hard and earnestly in the administration of his department, and I desire to cast no personal reflection upon him. But taking his statement to-day—if I may venture to pass an opinion upon his conduqt, which he has exposed to the House in a very frank way—I feel inclined to say that when he stipulated, or assented to the stipulation, that everything connected with the source of that fund should be shrouded in secrecy, he took a wrong course. The stipulation he should have made was that everything connected with the source of that fund should be, exposed to the utmost possible publicity. In other words, the better—the only proper course—for him was to say: if you bring me a list of names which I can conscientiously accept, I will be willing to accept the testimonial these gentlemen offer, but only upon the condition that the name of every one of the contributors shall be published in the press from one end of Canada to the other. That is the standard which the right hon. gentleman himself laid down in 1891. I am bound to say I could not quite understand why my hon. friend the Finance Minister should have desired these names to be kept secret, although I have carefully considered and analysed his statement and I desire to do him no injustice. He was willing, even desirous that the names should be made known to him later on, after his official career had terminated. Well, if the source of this fund was of the character demanded by the resolution of 1891, why should not the Finance Minister know the names now? As a matter of fact, every one of us knows, because we all have common sense, that ignorance with regard to the source of the contributions would in the future be absolutely impossible. In the case of the Finance Minister, holding the position he did, it would be idle for any of us to attempt to keep up the pretense that these contributions could be made and that the Finance Minister would not know who made them. The very idea seems on the face of it utterly out of the question. He was told that this money was to come from friends and admirers. Well, he would have a pretty shrewd idea as to who were his warmest friends and admirers, and it would be utterly preposterous to assume for one moment that he would not in the end have a pretty shrewd idea who these gentlemen were. So there could not be very much secrecy about it even if secrecy were desirable; and from the point of view taken in 1891 by the right hon. gentleman, secrecy was the last thing to be desired.

My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) says that this list was a clean list. I have no knowledge, and therefore I do not for one moment gainsay his statement; but if it is a clean list, then it is a list that ought to be published. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said that this money was clean money. Neither do I gainsay that statement, but if it was, why should not the names of the donors be published in the press and laid upon the table of parliament? For what possible reason will it be proper for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to know all these names ten years hence after he had passed out of official life, and yet not be proper for him to know them to-day, when he is holding an important position in the government, if this list be of the kind described?

Let us come to the debate of 1891 and the terms of the resolution now before the House. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) thought it would be difficult to find any one in this House prepared to vote for this resolution. Well, I would be surprised indeed if there were anything in this resolution that did not commend itself to every member of this House. Why, it is precisely on the same terms as the resolution of 1891, with this one addition. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has characterized that addition as being couched in offensive terms. I fail to find any offence or even suspicion of offence in it; and in order to make my point good in that regard I shall read it to the House:

> That in order to maintain this principle, the source of any gifts of money to any minister of the Crown ought not to be surrounded with secrecy, and that an authentic statement of the donors should be made public.

If there be anything offensive in that, it is my right hon. friend the Prime Minister who is the author of it. He gave the offence in 1891, and Sir Richard Cartwright gave it before 1891. It is all very well for my right hon. friend to deprecate passion and attack but he was not so scrupulous in the old days. Inside of a couple of minutes I could bring to this House a volume of 'Hansard' in which he declared that judges of the highest court in the province of Quebec had bought their places and that these men were making political contributions to the Conservative party. Respect for the judiciary has usually been inculcated in parliament and these men were not here to defend themselves. My right hon. friend was quite capable of hitting hard and quite willing to hit hard in the old days and he must not be too sensitive if some blows should pass across the floor of the House now, particularly when the severest of those blows comes in the very words which he used himself in 1891. He regards the speech of the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) as offensive. What did he think of his colleague Sir Richard Cartwright in 1891? He thought that he had made a splendid speech and had attained a notable triumph. What occupied more than one half of Sir Richard Cartwright's speech? An attack on Sir John Macdonald, then only two months in his grave, in respect of a testimonial presented to him 15 or 18 years before. I have the report of some speeches made by ministers of the Crown as far back as 1877 and I find that even at that date the same colleague of my right hon. friend was raising questions about this matter. Here is what he then said in a speech delivered in the town of Simcoe on September 21, 1877, published by the Globe Printing and Publishing Company and used in the campaign of 1878, no doubt quoted by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister in the campaign he made in that year. He said:

> Moreover, and it is a point of the very gravest importance as bearing on the conduct of all public men, I hold that it was Sir John Macdonald's duty not to have accepted, he being a public man, any testimonial unless everything connected with it was clear and above board, and capable of being published to all the world. That was his clear duty, and that he should have insisted on from the first. Sir, I will not tolerate the poor pretence that he did not know who had subscribed to his testimonial. Before he took that money he should have taken care to prove that it came from 'clean hands,' and that he could take it without a smirch on his. One hundred thousand dollars is no small gift, and Sir John knew—no man better—that the very first principle of all agency is that no agent of any kind or degree has the smallest right to receive a present from any of his principal's customers or clients without the full knowledge of that principal. Sir John Macdonald was the agent of the people of Canada; he was a public man; he ought to have known better, and he did know better than to allow any testimonial to be presented to him without the fullest publicity attending it. Does this seem a harsh rule to impose on a public man's conduct? One moment's reflection will show you not only that it is most just, but most necessary and inexorable. Do away with this, and you throw wide the door for every kind and shape of bribery in disguise. Do away with this and you may at once and forever blot out every law against tampering with the independence of parliament. (Hear, hear). Such testimonials, unless they are made publicly are, I repeat, a most dangerous precedent, one which no man is justified in accepting, and one which should not be permitted to be given by any people having a regard to their own interests. Well, Sir John Macdonald shut his eyes, and knowing only too well what sort of money would be taken to get up this testimonial, declined to investigate the matter, though he did not decline to receive the money.

I would point out to the Prime Minister that that was the tone of Sir Richard Cartwright's remarks and his own remarks all through the debate of 1891. If I might analyse what was said in that debate it amounts to this: In the first place Sir Richard Cartwright took the ground, he did not insist on it in the motion, but he did distinctly take the ground that no man in office ought to take gifts at all. I do not think that portion of his remarks has been quoted. He spoke at Ingersoll on November 14, 1889, and he regarded his remarks as so impressive and important that he repeated them in his speech in the House in 1891. He said:

Ministers should not take gifts. Now surely if there is any one maxim in political ethics better established than another, if there is any one thing which ought to commend itself to every honest man of every party in Canada, it is this: that under no circumstance should a minister of state permit himself to accept gifts, either directly or indirectly, while he continues in office.

And further on he said in the same speech:

If a man's political supporters do really desire to testify their administration by making him a gift of money let them wait till he is out of office, and then subscribe to their heart's content.

The same position was taken by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce in 1891. I am free to admit that it was not included in the resolution and that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister did not subscribe to it because in his speech he said that there might be circumstances under which the gift of a sum of money to a minister of the Crown would be a matter of credit not only to the men who presented it, but to the man who accepted it. There are two ideals, the higher and the lower. We have not attempted to put the higher ideal in our motion to-day. Sir Richard Cartwright did not attempt to put it in his motion in 1891. We have been satisfied with putting in this motion the lower ideal but we have accompanied it with a clear statement of the necessity of publicity, which was insisted on by both Sir Richard Cartwright and the Prime Minister in the debate of 1891. That was the first standard which Sir Richard Cartwright set up but which he did not attempt to enforce by resolution. The second standard which Sir Richard Cartwright set up was that gifts ought not to be accepted from contractors or officials or any persons having pecuniary relations with the government. That was embodied in the resolution of 1891. It is also embodied in the resolution of to-day. Then the third principle which was put forward both by Sir Richard Cartwright and the right hon. the Prime Minister was not embodied in the resolution of 1891, but is embodied in the resolution of to-day. It is this ; that absolute and perfect publicity should attend all gifts of money or testimonials to ministers of the Crown. It does not seem to me to require very much argument to show that that position is absolutely good. How are the public of Canada to know, (and they have the right to know) that contractors, that officials, that persons having pecuniary relations with the government are not subscribers to this fund, unless you publish in the light of day, in the press of Canada, so that every man may know, the names of every man who has contributed to any such fund. It is absolutely impossible to work out the resolution of 1891, unless you adopt that principle which was a good principle in the judgment of the right hon. gentleman in 1891. Is it not a good principle in his judgment to-day ? If it is, why is it that he asks this House to vote it down? Further than that, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has defended himself against any suspicion in this matter by pleading that very ignorance and secrecy which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister denounced and which the Minister of Trade and Commerce denounced in 1891. The thing that these hon. gentlemen denounced in 1891 is the defence of the Minister of Finance to-day, yet my hon. friend the Prime Minister says that the defence of the Minister of Finance is an admirable one, is a defence to which no hon. gentleman in this House can take the slightest exception. Let me repeat at the risk of wearying the House one or two of the strongest statements of opinion on this point taken from Sir Richard Cartwright's speech.

Unfortunately these precautions were not taken, unfortunately publicity was not given, as I have always said publicity should be given, to the names of persons who subscribed; and still more unfortunately precautions were not taken to see that subscriptions to that fund were not accepted save from sources from which they honourably could be accepted.

So right on through the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, couched in the strongest possible terms, and directed with great force against the principle for which the right hon. gentleman stands to-day. The Prime Minister says that publicity is not necessary to-day. What did he say in 1891?

The only thing, however, with which my hon. friend found fault in regard to what was done on that occasion by the friends of Sir John Macdonald was that instead of it being done publicly, as it should have been done, it was done in secret.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance stood up before parliament and before the country to-day and stated that he stipulated, in connection with his testimonial, that there should be absolute and perfect secrecy with regard to it. I do not see how you can reconcile that statement of the Minister of Finance to-day with the statement in direct contradiction thereto made by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House when he spoke on that subject in 1891. But that is not all.

It may be wrong or it may be good, according to circumstances, but if such an act is done in the open light of day, then, Sir, it is the best prohibition that there can be against any wrong taking place.

What does that mean? That means that if there is absolute, perfect publicity, you have an absolute safeguard that no contractor, no official, no person having pecuniary interest with the government, is a subscriber to that fund. That is what the right hon. gentleman meant by that statement. Yet the Minister of Finance has told us that one of the main stipulations with regard to this fund was that the names of the subscribers should be kept an absolute secret. Then the Prime Minister went on :

If the hon. gentleman did not know, it was because he chose to remain ignorant of who were the names on the list, and if he chose to be ignorant of the names which were on that list, is it not because his moral sense told him that he might there find names of persons giving contributions which should not be accepted at all?

I hardly like to read the strictures of the right hon. gentleman in 1891, because they come home with so much force to us to-day in view of the statement that was made this afternoon by his colleague whose name has been brought up in connection with these matters. Further on :

Certainly there could be nothing wrong in the admirers of a man in public life coming to his help and rescuing him; but it seems to me that the recipient of such favours would naturally be too glad to know who are the persons to whom he owes gratitude, and if he does not chose to know who are those to whom he owes gratitude, it must be because his moral sense tells him that he would find there names which would be a condemnation of his accepting such a testimonial.

Is there anything in the remarks of my hon. friend from Algoma to-day approaching in severity the quotation I have just read from the Prime Minister in addressing this House in 1891? Mr. Speaker, were these principles sincerely held by the Prime Minister in 1891 or not? Does he withdraw from them to-day, or say that they are not as good now as he deemed them to be in 1891? He has not told us so to-night. This list is a clean list, according to the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). Is there any reason that the Prime Minister can assign, that any hon. gentleman can assign, why it should not be published? I have heard none from any gentleman on the other side of the House, from any gentleman who has spoken to-day. I have heard no reason whatever why this list should not be published. The people have the right to read it and to form their own conclusions. Assuming, as I do, the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to be an absolutely true and frank statement with regard to this whole transaction, I say that it affords the best possible reason why that list should be published to the people of Canada without one hour's delay.

Now just one word in conclusion. My right hon. friend has struggled manfully, but in vain, to find some reason why the government would be justified in refusing to accept this amendment. My hon. friend from Algoma has stated that he does not present it as a vote of want of confidence. He follows in that respect the course which was adopted by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce in 1891. The resolution contains no charge against any Minister of the Crown, it contains no reflection upon any Minister of the Crown, it is purely and simply a recital, a renewed declaration of a principle agreed on by both sides of the House in 1891. It contains further a statement of principle, of public importance, and even necessity which was put forward in 1891 as an absolutely necessary accompaniment to the resolution passed in that year. My right hon. friend considers this amendment as a resolution of want of confidence. The hon. member for Algoma says that he does not present it in that view. The government call upon their followers to vote it down. They have accepted within the past ten years at least ten motions proposed in amendment to Committee of Supply, which were quite as much motions of want of confidence as the one now proposed. The government are asked to accept the principle of 1891, together with a further principle which is an absolutely necessary accompaniment and corollary thereto, without which the principle affirmed in the resolution of 1891 becomes easy of evasion and cannot be carried out. Two standards were set up by the then Minister of Trade and Commerce. He set up the standard that no gifts of any kind should be made to Ministers of the Crown. We are not going that far to-day. He set up a second standard, that no gifts from contractors, no gifts from officials, no gifts from persons having pecuniary relations with the government, should be accepted. He laid down a third principle, strongly affirmed also by the Prime Minister, that no gifts should be accepted, although they came from absolutely untainted sources, unless those gifts were accompanied by the utmost possible publicity in respect of the sources from which the contributions came. A regard for the proper standards of public life demands that the resolution of 1891 should be reaffirmed to-day, not only in the form which it took then, which was agreed to by both sides of the House, but in the form now presented by my hon. friend from Algoma, namely, that any such contributions if made to ministers of the Crown must in the first place come from absolutely clean and untainted sources, and in the second place, those sources should be disclosed fully, and without the slightest attempt at concealment or evasion, to the parliament of Canada, and to the people of this country.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I do not know that I can add much to this debate, but some remarks have fallen from the lips of the leader of the opposition with which I have to take direct issue. The hon. member seems to think that because the mover of this resolution said that he did not introduce it as a motion of want of confidence we must absolutely ignore the linking up with it of the name of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the well known facts with regard to the subscription to a testimonial to that minister, and the methods, manner and language in which this motion was moved. I may say frankly at once that as far as the substance of this motion is concerned I have no quarrel with it. I would not oppose in any way a substantive resolution which should propose to advance this House farther than it went in 1891. But, when a resolution comes as an attack upon the honour and integrity of a member of the government whose reputation and character are far above attack in this country and beyond the confines of this country I cannot recognize this motion as anything but a deliberate motion of want of confidence in the government, because it undertakes to asperse the character and integrity of one of the most important members of the government. Mere words to say that that is not the meaning of it are ineffective and useless in face of the tone and character of the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Boyce) who introduced the resolution. If he had desired to make this a simple declaration of the parliament of Canada involving what is included in the words of this resolution why did he make the motion as a result of his inquiries and his statements of a few days ago in parliament as to the subscription of Mr. Travers to the Fielding fund? Why was this the result of that? Why was it introduced at a time when the Minister of Finance himself should be present if it were not aimed at the Minister of Finance? It is not a motion enunciating a general principle, but it is a direct and violent attack upon the honour of a member of the government, upon the honour of the leader of the Liberal party, and I think that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the leader of this House was well within his rights in calling upon those who have confidence in Mr. Fielding to vote down this resolution. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) quotes deliberately and at considerable length from the excellent speech of the gentleman who introduced the resolution in 1891, and he undertakes to say that the Liberal party has gone back on its principles then enunciated and has changed its stand. He does not say anything about a change of stand by his friends of the Conservative party. I suppose he is so accustomed to such changes that he does not think them wonderful, but if the Liberals do change their front in any way it is open to objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that meant to be sarcastic?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is only the plain truth without any sarcasm in it. I will just point out what was the origin of the debate in 1891, and I shall quote the few words with which Sir Richard Cartwright introduced the motion. I shall not read the resolution because it has been read already several times, but this is what Sir Richard Cartwright said distinctly and clearly:

> This motion declares, Sir—and let this be carefully remembered—this motion does not object to and does not censure the acceptance of gifts or testimonials by ministers of the Crown from their political or personal admirers, unless, indeed, these parties should belong to classes having direct pecuniary relations with the government at the time. Such a proposition, it appears to me, ought to commend itself to every right-feeling and right-thinking man from one end of this Dominion to the other, and I go further; it ought to commend itself to every honest man and to every right-thinking man under every constitutional government. There could be, in my judgment, no proposition clearer or plainer than this. There could be no one thing which tends more to the interest of good government, and which is more vital to the proper management of the public service than laying down once and for all the declaration on the part of this parliament: That it is not expedient that ministers of the Crown should accept from persons who may appear before them in the guise of suitors, from persons in regard to whom they stand in position of judges, any gifts or presents of testimonials of any kind or description. I repeat again, Sir, that I am not raising the vexed question as to whether a minister of the Crown should or should not accept gifts during his term of office from political admirers. That, I have always held, is a matter of opinion, and it must be determined by the peculiar circumstances in each case.

Mr. LENNOX. Go on.

Mr. FISHER. It goes on, but there is no need of reading further.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read on.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friends may laugh and interrupt and they are welcome to read on if they desire to do so. But, I want to point out that the declaration which is contained in the first part of this motion and the declaration of Sir Richard Cartwright when he moved it was a distinct declaration that it was aimed at the acceptance of gifts from contractors, from those who were receiving favours from the minister and from the government and not in regard to gifts of those who were political or personal friends. That is the difference between the situation then and the situation to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. Hon. members laugh and say, what is the difference? The difference is this, that at that time Sir Richard Cartwright was aiming at a testimonial which had been given to Sir Hector Langevin at a time when everybody, as well as the public press, including the Conservative press, had declared that Sir Hector Langevin was receiving gifts from the contractors in his own department, and when Sir Hector Langevin had been obliged to leave the Conservative government because of mal-administration in his office had been proved against him, mal-administration which shortly afterwards drove him out of public life. The conditions and the circumstances are entirely different from the position of to-day.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What about the principles—are they different?

Mr. FISHER. The principles are the same but the circumstances and the facts are not the same, and principles should apply when the facts are the same and only then. Nobody declares or for a moment suggests that Mr. Fielding has received a favour or a gift from any man whom he has favoured in his public administration of the affairs of this country.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman state that to his knowledge the names of no contractors or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government appear on the list of contributors to this testimonial?

Mr. FISHER. I do not state it from my personal knowledge, but I have no hesitation in stating it because I know that the committee that had charge of the testimonial was composed of honourable men, that they accepted the trust which they undertook at the request of Hon. Mr. Fielding on that distinct understanding and only on that understanding would he allow them to proceed with the work and allow them to give him a testimonial. Hon. gentlemen opposite shrug their shoulders.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, my hon. friend opposite says 'hear, hear.' I regret to think that there are men who have such a low opinion of the honour and integrity of their fellow citizens and of those who stand high in commercial, banking and other positions in Canada, who stand high in the life of this country, and who have declared solemnly and absolutely that there is no man who has that relation with the government who has made a subscription to this testimonial. I am prepared for one to accept that declaration and, I am prepared for one to believe that the friends of Mr. Fielding who surrounded him were sufficiently imbued with his own high honour and integrity to know that if they did that, notwithstanding the conditions which had been laid down by Mr. Fielding, they would be guilty of the basest betrayal of the friendship and confidence of a public man. I do not believe that the committee have said a word that is untruthful or that they would be so unfaithful to the trust that they had accepted. I am sorry for my hon. friend opposite that he cannot have that faith in human nature.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), kindly explain what that has to do with the principle declared in that resolution ?

Mr. FISHER. It has a good deal to do with the facts; it has a good deal to do with comparisons between the conditions in 1891 and the conditions in 1910. And the whole circumstances, as Sir Richard Cartwright said, when he introduced that resolution, are left to the opinion and judgment of the minister who receives the gift from his personal friends and admirers. And so it is in this case with Mr. Fielding. Mr. Fielding is reproached because he stipulated for secrecy, and his words and his position are contrasted with those of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who, in 1891, expressed the opinion that secrecy was inadvisable. There is a difference of opinion. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), said a few minutes ago that if he were to make a criticism of Mr. Fielding at all it would be because his judgment had allowed him to stipulate for secrecy. There is a difference of opinion and of conduct between two men. I confess that I sympathize a great deal with Mr. Fielding's desire not to know the names of the men who were contributing to this present, so that, if, in future, any of these men happen to have relations with him, he might not be hampered in dealing with them by the fact that in a day gone by, they had contributed to a testimonial for his benefit. But that does not in any way acknowledge or pretend, nor should anybody think, that, at the moment that testimonial was made, they had or expected to have any relations with the government. When this testimonial was arranged for, what was the declaration of parliament? It was only the first part of this resolution. This Mr. Fielding knew, and he stipulated that it should be fulfilled to the letter. Mr. Fielding's friends accepted and acted upon and within, not the law of the land, I grant you, but the resolution and opinion of parliament which has the right to give its opinion upon such questions. Let me remind hon. gentlemen opposite that if the right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), expressed an opinion in 1891 that secrecy was inadvisable, and if Sir Richard Cartwright said the same, the House of Commons at that time, did not accept that view, did not insert that in the resolution, but simply passed the first part of the present resolution and left it there, thus dealing only with the question of those having relations with the government subscribing to testimonials.

Now, I wish to say a word with regard to another phase of this question. Mr. Fielding's name has been forced into this discussion, and none of us can in any way look upon this motion except in regard to Mr. Fielding. I say that frankly, and I say that that is the reason why I, personally, feel bound to vote down the resolution, because it is a direct attack and aspersion upon a man who as my colleague, I have known intimately, whom I know to be absolutely above reproach and whose character is such, that I am ashamed of the men who dare to make insinuations of this kind against him.

Mr. BOYCE. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), referring to me?

Mr. FISHER. I am referring to anybody who has dragged Mr. Fielding's name into this motion and seeks to point the finger of scorn at him in this connection.

Mr. BEST. There are thousands of them in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I do not believe that that is a correct statement of public opinion in this country.

Mr. BEST. I think it is.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member (Mr. Best) represents a certain class of public opinion, but it is not the class, I believe, that is in the majority.

Mr. BOYCE. I rise to a point of order. I do not think it is in accordance with the rules of this House that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) should be allowed to state that he is ashamed of any statement made by a member of this House. I covered that by asking if he referred to me, and he replied that he referred to any one who dragged Mr. Fielding's name into the resolution. As mover of the resolution, I referred to Mr. Fielding. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his remark and withdraw it immediately.

Mr. FISHER. I will submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but, until you rule that my words are out of order, I will not withdraw them.

Mr. SPEAKER. At first sight, any statement made reflecting upon the honour of a member is out of order, but in this case, I understand, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) refers more to the argument than to the person. To qualify an argument is different from qualifying a person.

Mr. FISHER. I was proceeding to another aspect of this question, upon which I would like to say a few words. Mr. Fielding has received a testimonial from friends and admirers of a large sum of money. There is no doubt that the reason for this testimonial is that Mr. Fielding, through a long period of public service, has given activities and mental qualities to the public service to an extent which has prevented him from laying up proper provision for his own old age and for the proper provision for his family. He has done this, as we all know, through more than twenty-five years of public service. I make the deliberate statement that he has done this for twenty-five years of public service of the highest character which, in the salaries he has received in the whole of these twenty-five years, have been absolutely inadequately rewarded or paid for. Mr. Fielding was for twelve years—speaking from memory—the Prime Minister of the province of Nova Scotia. I do not know exactly what he received through all that administration, but I think that during part of it he received $5,000 a year, I have no hesitation in saying that having to perform the duties of the Prime Minister's position in a province of Canada and having to fulfil the social obligations of that position and to live in accordance with the position ; having a family depending upon him and being obliged to bring up that family in a way commensurate with the associates of that family while he occupied that position, and being called upon to meet the immense number of calls upon his charity and upon his public spirit which always go with a position of that kind—it was positively and absolutely impossible for Mr. Fielding to have made any savings or any provision for the future of himself or his family.

For the last fourteen years and more Mr. Fielding has been Finance Minister for the Dominion of Canada. We all know what salary he has received—$7,000 a year. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak with a certain freedom, because being a bachelor my salary is sufficient for my needs. I speak advisedly, and I speak in all seriousness, when I say that for my needs the salary I have received during the last fourteen years has been sufficient—I will go further and say, with no surplus left at the end of the year. But I venture to say—and I say it so that it may be heard through all this House, and I hope it will be remarked throughout the Dominion of Canada that the salary which a minister of the Crown receives in Ottawa, if he lives according to the position he occupies, if he spends money in the way in which those with whom he has to associate spend their money, is not adequate to the demands upon his purse if he has a family and if he is expected to lay by a provision for his old age and to make provision for his family. When Canada undertakes to so pay her ministers of the Crown that they cannot make such provision, there is only one other way in which those men can be honourably helped if they have sacrificed their lives and their health in the public service, and that way is, if they have no fortune of their own, no resources to fall back upon, for friends and admirers to come to their assistance and relieve them from the anxieties and worries necessarily attendant upon the life of any man who has a family dependent upon him, and who has not made provision for them in case of accident to himself. I say further, that Mr. Fielding's devotion to his public duties, as we know only too sadly, has to a large extent broken down his health, we trust and believe only temporarily; but, at the same time, when a man reaches the age which he has reached, and has not made the proper provision for an older age and for his family's future, it is a cause of worry and anxiety. This in most cases, in any man not so devoted to the public service as Mr. Fielding, would render it very difficult indeed for him to perform the full measure of his public duty, and I say that a public service to the Dominion of Canada has been rendered by those who subscribed to this Fielding testimonial if by reason of that fact Mr. Fielding is able the better and for a longer time to continue that splendid service for his country which he has performed for the past twenty-five years. That is a debt of gratitude which the people of Canada owe to the subscribers to that testimonial, and I am satisfied that the people throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion will acknowledge that debt of gratitude, and will repudiate the accusations which have been made against those subscribers just as much as against the recipient of that testimonial.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Did not that apply as well to Sir Hector Langevin, who died poor?

Mr. TALBOT. How do you know?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I know.

Mr. TALBOT. You do not know.

Mr. FISHER. I will not dispute it, but I do not wish to resuscitate the accusations or discuss the conditions which were in existence at the time of that former debate. I dealt with that matter a few minutes ago, and I have nothing to add to what I then said and nothing to take back. Sir, there was one part only of the speech of the mover of this resolution with which I had some sympathy. It was that in which he spoke of the government having at one time passed an Act to provide pensions for ministers of the Crown who had administered a department for a certain length of time, and he believed that the government had made a mistake in repealing that Act. Sir, I believe that that Act on the part of the present government was justified, and I believe that its repeal was justified only for this reason, that cavil and criticism on the part of a number of people in this country was raised against that Act to such an extent as to make the ministers of the Crown who might be entitled to such a pension refuse to accept it. Only by reason of that agitation do I consider that the repeal of that Act was a wise act or justified.

Mr. BOYCE. Too sensitive.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps too sensitive. I can appreciate that my hon. friend cannot sympathize with that at all; but I thank God that we have some men in public life in Canada who are sensitive. I appreciate the fact that there are men—and I am glad to be able to say that they are not confined to one party, but that there are a large number of Conservatives—who are sensitive in regard to their public reputation and their record in public affairs, and are therefore careful of their utterances and their actions, and for that reason are the better men—the better Conservatives if you like, but certainly the better citizens and the better Canadians.

I have said these few things, Sir, to show not only to those within the sound of my voice, but to others, that there is a reason and in many cases a necessity, for friends and admirers to step in and do something for public men who have not wealth at their command; and that is only one of the reasons why a resolution such as this should not go very much further and say that it should be impossible in Canada for men in office to receive anything in the way of gift, testimonial or anything else. But in the condition of affairs which I have briefly described, I conceive that there are conditions and circumstances in individual cases where that is the only recourse to save for the country the continued work and effort of those great men who are thus circumstanced, and the only way in which they can be relieved of the anxiety and the worry which is natural to the father of a family and the husband of a wife. I regret that this motion has been brought forward in the way in which it has been. If hon. gentlemen opposite had wanted to lay down a principle in regard to the future of the public life of Canada, they should have done what the right hon. the leader of the House suggested—brought forward a substantive motion, and at a time when it would have no personal application, without dragging the name of either subscriber or recipient into the discussion. And then I believe that we might have been able to put upon the records of this House a resolution which would have been advantageous to the public credit of the country and be accepted unanimously and thereby, and only thereby, have that force which must be behind any resolution put or carried.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not propose to detain the House very long in the few remarks I am about to make on this question. Neither do I propose to argue it in a personal manner at all. I think there is a great principle involved in the resolution before the House, and just at this moment I am a little in trouble as to the fate of that principle if the determination of the Prime Minister is carried out, and the House votes it down. The right hon. gentleman says that we have to-day a rule or law of parliament in existence, that rule and law being the resolution which was passed in 1891, and which forbids gifts to ministers of the Crown by contractors or persons interested. Well, if that be a rule and law of parliament and a good one, established by the assent of both parties in 1891, and one which the Prime Minister himself then most vehemently supported, what are we going to have in its place after a vote on this resolution is taken and the right hon. the Prime Minister, through his majority in this House, abrogates that rule and law, negatives it, and leaves nothing in its place? I think that is rather a serious condition especially in view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman's colleague (Mr. Fisher) who has just sat down has elucidated and given governmental sanction to an absolutely untenable and vicious principle. I would ask my right hon. friend the leader of the House, if he will subscribe to that. What is that principle? It is that whenever a man who is a minister of the Crown is unable to take care of his wife and children and bring them up according to the conditions of the life in which he moves, whenever he is unable to do this and meet his other expenses, his friends and admirers are in duty bound to come to his rescue and make him a gift of $100,000 or so. That is a direct invitation to gift making and establishes a vicious principle—a vicious principle which I do not believe the right hon. the Prime Minister himself will stand for. It is a direct invitation to every minister in the present cabinet to come along with a statement of his finances, and show that he is not able to meet the demands upon him, that he has to spend so much on his family, that he has to give out so much to charity, and that he has to meet besides certain other furbelows and functions, and finds his salary insufficient; and then, on this appeal, two or three or more of his friends get together and start a foraging expedition and find subscriptions enough from his supporters to deposit the comfortable sum of $100,000 or so to his credit in the bank for his personal use and gratification. If there is anything in that statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), that is the principle involved in it. Does the right hon. gentleman stand by that? Oh, but it is urged, Mr. Fielding is poor and he is honest. Well, what about the other members of the cabinet Are any of them poor? I do not know. Will the Prime Minister draw a distinction between the Finance Minister and the other members of his cabinet? The Finance Minister is honest, but are any of the others dishonest? By what rule, now that you have started and given sanction to the principle as stated by the Minister of Agriculture, can you treat the others differently? Take the case of any other minister, whose friends want to stand well with him, what is to prevent them taking the same course with regard to him? Oh, but the Prime Minister was fine tonight when he was saying that publicity was the very groundwork and guarantee of ministerial honesty in this matter. Publicity, he said, was the modern requirement and the principal requirement, and in this connection everything was done in public. There was a banquet, there were speeches and a presentation—the elements of publicity were absolutely complied with and there was a guarantee of the greatest amount of honesty underlying the whole business. It was fine—no doubt about it—almost as fine as that other flight of his in this direction. In 1891, it was all right to bring in—not a motion in condemnation of Sir Hector Langevin for no such motion was brought in by the right hon. gentleman at that time—but a general motion affirming a general principle. The argument of the right hon. gentleman then went to show that the resolution was not specially directed against Sir Hector Langevin, but a general one affirming a general principle which became the law, and rule of this House. In what manner was that resolution introduced? It was introduced on a motion to go into Supply, made by myself who was then Finance Minister, and it affirmed a general principle. In the discussion which took place, language was used by the right hon. gentleman himself and his colleagues which was not all honey and balm, and which would compare favourably for strength and vigour with the statment of my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce), but the resolution was the affirmation of a general principle, and in that sense it was adopted. Sir John Thompson, who was then leader of the government said: This is introduced on the motion to go into Supply, but it is the affirmation of a general principle in which we agree and therefore we shall assent to it, and join in passing it. But Sir John Thompson reminded the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues that while he assented to that resolution as being the affirmation of a general principle, he did not at all endorse the very strong and emphatic language used by Sir Richard Cartwright, and my right hon. friend. But he did not make such a childish plea as to say that because the man who introduced that general resolution wore a gray coat instead of a black one, he therefore would oppose it and treat it as a want of confidence motion.

But the right hon. gentleman and his worthy colleague (Mr. Fisher) who has just taken his seat go a little further. The right hon. gentleman says : I agree with the first part of the resolution, I am willing to affirm it, I will not affirm the latter part. I am not sure whether he agreed with it or not but it is his own language, the very identical words that he used in 1891, not on a special matter but on a general principle. But the right hon. gentleman has so often disagreed with himself that he would feel out of common atmosphere, and some way leading off from the general tendency of his life if he agreed just once with the language of which he was formerly the father and the sponsor. But he says this is the reason why he treats it as a motion of want of confidence. If my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) had waited two months more and then brought it in in the very same way, he would not have treated it as a motion of want of confidence, it makes a difference as to the date of the month on which a general principle is affirmed as to whether it is right for him to support it. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture goes a step further. He not only agrees with the first part but he agrees with the second part. The whole resolution is absolutely right in the eyes of the Minister of Agriculture. But he has to vote against it. He ranges around the back part of his head to find out what strong reasons can be got up which will fortify him in his statement that although he agrees with it he will not vote for it. What are the reasons that he brings in? Because he believes Mr. Fielding is an honest man, and that this is an attack on Mr. Fielding. Is it any more an attack on Mr. Fielding than the very wording of the original resolution in 1891 was an attack upon Sir Hector Langevin? To-night, Mr. Fielding has not been attacked, he has been used, I think, with great magnanimity, and with great courtesy by the members on this side of the House, a magnanimity and courtesy which were absolutely wanting in 1891 with reference to both Sir Hector Langevin and Sir John A. Macdonald. But the minister, astute reasoner, logician from the early days, has to-night made the unparalleled record, reached the apex of all logical reasoning, and declares that he agrees with every word and line in the whole resolution, which is a general resolution, and the affirmation of a general principle, but will vote against it because he conceives that it might be construed into an attack on the Finance Minister. There are two able gentlemen, one the leader of the party, and the other his able and astute lieutenant. There are their statements as to the resolution, and there are the reasons why they must vote against it. Might I invite my right hon. friend to take that resolution and show in the second part of it one single offensive word. I shall read it, and shall leave it to Mr. Speaker to point out to this House the offensive word.

That in order to maintain this principle the sources of any gifts of money to ministers of the Crown ought not to be surrounded with secrecy, and that an authentic statement of the names of the donors should forthwith be made public.

Mr. Speaker, where is the offensive word? Might I ask my right hon. friend to point out the offensive word or line. Will he do it? That is the only objection the right hon. gentleman has to that part of it. Although it is made as an amendment to go into Supply he is willing to go so far as to adopt the first part and let it run in as a motion of want of confidence, but he will not adopt the second, his own identical words, because he says it is offensive, and he will not point out to the House a single offensive word or phrase in that resolution. I commend these two hon. gentlemen, not to the tender mercies of this House, they always have them, but to the tender consideration of the public which will wake up to-morrow morning and at its breakfast table read these two weighty arguments and reasons of these two weighty men. I remember very well 1891, I remember the whole debate and I remember the occasion. At that time, the Liberal-Conservatives met these gentlemen in spite of their strictures and their partisan attacks and said yes, looking at the past, knowing what has been done, we agree now with you on that side of the House, we all agree to a general rule and law of action which shall bind us in the future. Who has broken this contract? This side of the House has never broken it, this side of the House stands by it to-day, and to-day, when that law is violated, we ask hon. gentlemen opposite to join with us and reaffirm the general law and rule, we ask them for the sake of the public life of Canada not to remove the salutary law which is at the present the law of parliament, as they say they intend to do, and leave this whole thing wide open, more especially with that wicked principle enunciated by the Minister of Agriculture, a call to the faithful, to contractors that are and contractors that are to be, lookers for favours for the present and for the future, to come to the assistance of every minister whose salary is not sufficient to keep his house running and his expenses paid. With respect to this $120,000 given with all the guarantees of publicity that have been so eloquently described by the right hon. gentleman to-night, the Prime Minister has sung as the refrain of his argument to the House and to the country: Will any one say that a word can be brought against the honour of William Fielding? The Minister of Agriculture beat out another and a little different refrain, but for the same reason, that he has given long and faithful services, and is poor. If they have thrown that before the House, it is not my fault if I comment upon it. My comment is simply this, that of all public men in Canada, I do not think you can pick out another whose position in a monetary point of view, in payment for services to the state, compares with that of the Finance Minister of this day. I make that statement, why do I make it? Mr. Fielding had not stepped out of private life into public life until he had a government position with its salary assured to him. Mr. Fielding has not passed one hour of his life from that time up to the present that he has not been a member of a government in receipt of a government salary. My right hon. friend has not had an experience like that. He fought some time before he got into the House. He got in, and he stayed in but a little while, and again he fought for many a long year in the cold shades of opposition. When he came in again in 1896 he did the work, but he enjoyed the emoluments of the office, the emoluments that this country has said is all that a man should receive from the master to the servant. But, Sir, there is not another example in the history of politics in this country showing so favourable a position as that of the hon. gentleman who is Finance Minister to-day.

Now I will tell you exactly the feeling that ran through me this afternoon when my hon. friend was making his statement; it was a feeling of pity, of absolute pity that any country as rich as Canada is, and any parliament as sensible as this parliament is, would run the risk of throwing its public servants to the tender mercies of contractors and seekers from the government for a provision which they refused to pay them. It is pitiable, Sir, and it no credit to this government nor to this country. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, plainly that if the proposition had been made, and the circumstances set out, and the government had come down to this House last year with this proposition or an alternative: Vote to the Hon. Wm. Fielding $100,000, or turn him over in his old age to the mercy of contractors—I would have voted, cheerfully voted, to pay him the $100,000. What are the circumstances, even in this case? The Finance Minister did not want to know and he does not know, the Minister of Agriculture, whether he wants to know or not, does not know, the right hon. gentleman who leads this House does not know whether the stipulations made by Mr. Fielding have been carried out or not. The stipulations were right in their way. Where is the evidence that the stipulations have been carried out as they were made? You will never satisfy public opinion, and you will never clear the Minister of Finance or the government, until you place in the possession of the people the evidence of that which you declare is true. The people of this country are not fools, they are sensible, and the man upon the street, and the man in the club, and the man everywhere will say: What in the world is all the trouble about? If the subscriptions are all right, who is ashamed of them? Are the donors ashamed that they have done so philanthropic an act as the Minister of Agriculture has described to us to-night? I do not think so. Are the donors ashamed that they should be known as public spirited citizens who had come to the aid of a government which is too miserly to make a living provision to its own working Finance Minister? I do not think so. Who would be harmed, if that list is all right and the stipulations have been carried out, if the list were placed before the people of this country whose servants you and we are?

My view of it is this, and I challenge the Prime Minister to say that it is not the British view and the right view, that no minister of the Crown whilst he is in office, or when he is out of office with an expectation of coming back again in to office, ought to put himself into the position of taking gifts of any kind. That has to be modified only by some great emergent conditions, where a man has met with some disaster, where he has been borne down by hard luck, calamity, sickness and the like of that. I can conceive that a circumstance might arise when his friends might come to his aid. But I am speaking on general principles. Sir, to-day in Great Britain—though I think it may be that in some respects the grade is not quite so high there as it used to be, I will not say that dogmatically—but I say that no British minister could stand for a single hour in parliament with a gift of $120,000 in his pocket, nor with a gift of $10,000 in his pocket. He could not do it, it is un-British, and it is un-British for the best of reasons, that it is unsound as a maxim of public political life that such a thing should be allowed. Sir Richard Cartwright, with all his bitterness of invective and all his strength of expression, is pretty sound upon those constitutional points, and the statement that was read by the leader of the opposition to-night made by Sir Richard was concise, and true, and sane, and healthy, that no minister of the Crown should take gifts while he is in office.

Now I ask again the question which the common people will ask: If this thing is all right, why not let everybody know it. But one thing seems to have escaped the discussion to-night. There are some men that the Minister of Finance does know were interested in it. There are some men whose names are out in the open light of day; we have four of them mentioned to-night, two of them self-confessed, the other two given by the organ of the party—the 'Globe.' No one doubts that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), Mr. Jaffray, the senator, and Mr. Larkin, the party leader and the party supplier of large campaign funds, were the head and front of it. The Finance Minister knows that. Some of those men are before him every day for favours. The hon. member for Grey is before him every day for favours. The hon. member for Guysborough is before him every day for favours and the minister knows that they engineered the funds and that without that engineering he never would have had it. There is an instance, patent to everybody of the violation of the principle, if there ever was any principle at all, in the resolution which the right hon. leader of the government in 1891 was so ardent an advocate of.

Now, I will say this in conclusion. I find that the little notes I have taken are all gone over with the exception of one—I have not prepared a speech, but I have just taken up some points that occurred to me. But, there is one that I think it would hardly be fair for me to let go entirely by. There was a remark made by the Minister of Agriculture, who declared that he was a sensitive politician. Then he thought that he said a wonderful thing when he said that there were sensitive politicians on that side of the House and he must thank God for it. So he was a sensitive politician, he said, and he thanked God that there were some sensitive politicians. The Minister of Agriculture is a sensitive politician when he is asked to vote for a resolution which he acknowledges to be right, but when he wants to vote against it he is not so sensitive then. There might be some shadow of a shade of an implication against the Minister of Finance and his sensitive soul will not allow him to envisage such possibilities and contingencies as that. Oh, would to God that same sensitiveness would suffuse the soul of the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues in the case of the multitudinous mal-administration which has been exposed in this House by the opposition and sustained by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. What I pray for, if my prayers go any distance at all——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER—and I will invite the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), who looks serious enough just at this moment, to join with me in those prayers, is that a little more sensitiveness of conscience may be imparted to the members of the administration from the Prime Minister down to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) when those awful things are exposed to the House and when that publicity which is the guardian and the guarantee of private and public life so eulogized by the Prime Minister to-night is fought for by this side and the door is banged and bolted on the other side of the House.

But, I am not going to leave this discussion without bringing forward just one further thought, and it is this: Outside of this particular instance as it affects the office and as it affects the man in the office and the canons of public and private life, there is a very grave consideration which none of us, I am sure, will leave out of account. It is the power of example. Of all men in the whole public service, that man who ought to be the most careful, that man who ought to be the most circumspect, that man who ought to avoid the least suspicion or comment is the minister of the department and the minister of the government who is to set an example to the whole public service and to the public life of this country. What would we think to-morrow morning if the customs collector in the port of Montreal, were to have had a meeting of his friends and admirers in the city of Montreal, and they had subscribed a testimonial of $50,000, had had a banquet and had all this beautiful publicity, but had failed to give the names of the subscribers and it went out through the length and breadth of this country that the collector of customs in the port of Montreal had received gifts from his friends and admirers ? What would the public opinion say ? Is it not proper for me, knowing the collector of customs in Montreal, to say, that, in my opinion, he is not rich and that he is honest? If, because a man is poor and honest in the case of a minister of the Crown is a reason why the sound canons of political morality should be violated, what reason is there that the collector of customs, a sub-officer under the Crown, should not take from his friends and admirers, on the ground that he is poor and honest, a testimonial, because this is the same reason as that which is given why ministers should accept it ? If the Minister of Finance may take $120,000 from his friends and admirers, why cannot the Minister of Public Works take $120,000 from his friends and admirers ? But I will venture this that if to-morrow morning the news went out through this country that the friends and admirers of the Minister of Public Works had given him a secret donation of $100,000 there would be ructions in this country. When the example is set, when the principle is formed and the practise is laid down in the case of one minister of the Crown, how are you going to prevent other ministers of the Crown from following it, and in exactly the same way the pernicious influence goes through the whole service and permeates the whole country. Your sub-officer or under officer, if you may speak of him as such, says: Well, the high muck-a-mucks take these gifts from their friends and admirers because they are poor and honest; I am poor—mighty poor—and I am just as honest as they are; why cannot I take a little gift on the side too, without any unnecessary publicity ?

I have not the least doubt in the world that demoralization, swift and sure, along the whole line follows this unfortunate movement in the wrong direction. To-night we find the Prime Minister with his party behind him, and this latest advocate closing the debate on that side, declaring that it is perfectly right for ministers of the Crown to take gifts if only they are poor and honest. Have any other members of the government taken gifts?—(Don't all speak at once!)—Is the Prime Minister a sinner in that respect? Would that make his feelings kind towards the Minister of Finance? Are any other ministers in similar positions for lesser sums? How soon this will spread, how far it will go, now that the supreme sanction of the Prime Minister and the Liberal party is given to the reversal of the law and rule of parliament which has existed for twenty years against it and which to-night they propose to abolish, leaving this matter wide, wide open.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Boyce).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 12.07 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the All Red Steamship Company.—Mr. McKenzie.

Mr. FOSTER.

Bill (No. 106) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

ONTARIO AND MINNESOTA POWER COMPANY.

Mr. CONMEE moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend chapter 139, 4 and 5, Edward VII., intituled an Act respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Ltd. He said: The object of the Bill is to amend the Act of 1905, chapter 139, relating to the Rainy river at Fort Francis, which is a navigable river, and also an international stream; hence the necessity of federal legislation dealing with it. Works have been carried out upon the river which interfere with the navigation of the stream, and which have changed the conditions in connection with the Canadian canal that was constructed some years ago at that point. They also interfere with the water necessary for the navigation of the river, not only below the works, but also of Rainy lake, situated above the works. The question is considerably involved. It will be necessary, as I consider, to give some of the history of the conditions and circumstances leading up to the present situation to do That would involve a reference to agreements, to Acts of the provincial legislature, and to Acts of the federal parliament of Canada. These works were proceeded with a good deal in the manner in which such works are ordinarily undertaken. The first permission, as far as the federal authorities are concerned, to go on with the works was obtained by an order in council on the submission and approval of plans. The works have not been carried on according to those plans, but quite different plans have been adopted. After the works were constructed the company desired to have the changed plans ratified, but they have not been ratified by the Minister of Public Works of the Dominion, and, therefore, the work stands in that position. Hence the importance of making some regulation by enactment by which the public interest in the navigable stream and the chain of navigation both above and below should be dealt with. I assume that the Bill would have to go to a committee. Although it is a public Bill, I think the practice has been, where there are questions which might affect the private interests of individuals, or of a company, to refer it to a committee of the House. I may say that it is not the intention of the amendment to take away from that company any rights they now have under existing legislation, or to impose upon them new or more onerous conditions. The object is to clear away doubts that have arisen and to enact such legislation as will enable the proper protection of the public interest in the matters involved. As it would take me a long time to go through these various documents with the necessity, here and there of short explanations of what has led up to the present condition, I would ask, instead of taking up the time of the House for some considerable time, as the question is involved and I take it that the Bill will get its first reading and be referred to the Private Bills, or the Railway Committee, that, in the meantime, I be permitted to put this record on 'Hansard.' Hon. members will then have before them the information which is necessary to an intelligent understanding of the question. When the Bill comes up, either in committee or in this House, for its second reading, or in Committee of the Whole House, hon. members will be able to discuss it very much more to advantage than can be done to-day under the circumstances. If I am permitted to hand these papers to 'Hansard' and allow the Bill to go through its first reading I will not take up any more of the time of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am unable to give permission as far as 'Hansard' is concerned.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not quite understand you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that only tables of figures are allowed to be put in 'Hansard,' and that nothing else can be put in 'Hansard' unless it is spoken in the House.

Mr. CONMEE. Then I shall have to make reference to these various documents. I may say that the development of this power, which affects the public interest in the manner I have shortly outlined was entered into as a joint undertaking, an international work, upon the strength of an agreement that was entered into at the request of the town of Fort Francis, and, on their behalf, by the government of Ontario, in 1904. I conceive it to be necessary to make reference to the agreement, as it is the foundation of the whole transaction, and, perhaps, I may be permitted, instead of reading this document, which is somewhat lengthy, to hand it in to 'Hansard.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is against the rules and cannot be done.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, unfortunately, I feel bound, then, under these circumstances, to read the document:—

Memorandum of agreement made in triplicate this 17th day of February, 1904, between His Majesty represented by the Hon. the Commissioner of Crown Lands of the province of Ontario, hereinafter called the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Could not my hon. friend use this document to the same advantage before the committee? I do not wish to interfere with my hon. friend, because this is his right, but I was only making that suggestion, and it will likely have to be gone over again when the committee meets to discuss the Bill. I cannot just see how the reading will help the hon. gentleman in his case.

Mr. CONMEE. I feel disposed to accept that suggestion if I understand it aright. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) to suggest that instead of going into this matter in detail to-day, the Bill be read the first time, and that this information be used before the committee to which it may be referred.

Mr. BLAIN. I was expressing my individual opinion of it. I suppose that the question as to whether the Bill should be read a first time is a matter for the House to deal with. I was only directing my attention to the very large volume of records which the hon. gentleman has and suggesting that they might be presented to the committee which deals with the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that if my hon. friend would do that it would result in better economy of the time of the House. It has been the practice in this House to have very little discussion upon the first reading and especially not to introduce documents or the like of that. It all has to be gone over again on the second reading, and it duplicates time and expense. I think the Speaker has been very generally in accord with that idea, and has always suggested that the first reading be limited to a mere explanation of the Bill without the introduction of arguments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Every Bill presented to this House is accepted for the first reading as a matter of course unless there is on the face of the Bill a paramount objection. There can be no objection to the Bill of my hon. friend being introduced; but, if I am correctly informed, he is attempting to amend a private Act, and there is a regular procedure to be followed in such a case. If it is a public Bill, there is no objection at all to the first reading.

Mr. CONMEE. The Bill is to amend a private Act, but it deals with a public question. The whole object of chapter 139 of 4 and 5 Edward VII. is to regulate certain works and the public rights in regard to those works. The Interpretation Act provides that all Bills, whether private or otherwise, are considered public Bills. Section 18 of that Act reads in this way:

Every Act shall be so construed as to reserve to parliament the power of repealing or amending it, and of revoking, restricting or modifying any power, privilege or advantage thereby vested in or granted to any person, whenever such repeal, amendment, revocation, restriction or modification is deemed by parliament to be required for the public good.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House, and if the Bill can be read the first time and be sent to the committee, I am quite willing to accept that situation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I have been able to follow my hon. friend, he is attempting to amend a private Act, and in that case there are certain rules which have to be followed. The parties concerned may desire to be heard. It is for the Speaker to decide whether the Bill is in order or not in order, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that he present his case so as to obtain the ruling of the Speaker on that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend should address himself to the point just mentioned. It seems to be absolutely impossible that any gentleman, desiring that a private Act shall be amended, can get rid of all the requirements of this House with respect to notice and advertisement by introducing his proposed amendment as a public Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. I am quite willing to discuss that point if it is necessary to raise it at this time; but I did not think that would be necessary. This is not the first public Bill that has amended a private Act. I submit that the practice of parliament and the authorities sustain the position I take. I find the following in Bourinot, at page 688:

As a rule it may be stated that when Bills treat of matters of general policy, such as sanitary, or police, or commercial, or fiscal regulations, they may be considered as public measures. In fact, all Bills affecting the general interests of the community and involving considerations of public policy, are out of the category of Private Bills dealing with the special interests of corporations or associations.

I submit that this is a Bill of that character, not dealing with the private interests of anybody, but with matters of public interest and public policy. Further on Bourinot says:

Whenever public Bills involve private interests, which should be carefully guarded they are subjected to the same examination provided for private Bills.

He goes on to show that such Bills are referred to the committee. I find that several Bills of that character have passed the parliament of Canada, and I have no objection to this Bill going to the committee. Perhaps this case, referred to by Bourinot, might be cited as fully warranting the course I am taking:

Mr. CONMEE.

In the session of 1875, the Premier (Mr. Mackenzie) moved for leave to introduce a public Bill to rearrange the 'capital of the Northern Railway of Canada, to enable the said company to change the gauge of its railway, and to provide for the release of the government lien on the road on certain conditions.' Objection having been taken that some of the provisions affected private interests and altered the powers of the company in very material points, the Speaker decided that the Bill ought to be withdrawn. Separate Bills were subsequently passed by the House—one relating to the government lien, was treated as a public Bill, and the other, relating to the gauge and capital, as a private Bill.

This Bill may require treatment of that kind. If anything in it required to be cut out as not being within the legitimate scope of a public Bill, that could be done by the committee. According to Bourinot, all local and private Acts passed in Canada previous to and for some years after 1840 contained a clause declaring that it should be deemed a public Act and should be judiciously taken notice of as such by the judges, justices of the peace, and other people, without being specially pleaded. From 1850 to 1860 the clause was shortened and it was simply enacted that it shall be deemed a public Act. Bourinot says further, that in the first session of the Dominion parliament it was enacted that every Act shall, except by express provision it is declared a private Act, be deemed a public Act and shall be judicially noted; and he says that consequently the public clause has been ever since omitted. The law and practice seems to be that unless there is a declaration in a private Act that it is such, then ever since confederation it is held to be a public measure. Under these circumstances, I would submit that this Bill might very well go to the committee, where it can be looked into, and if it is found to contain provisions that ought not be in a public Bill of this character, why of course the Bill can be dropped. I will be glad to have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the Bill can be permitted to be introduced or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no doubt that my hon. friend is attempting to amend a private Act, and he may be right in his contention that it is possible to amend a private Act by a public Act, and to dispense with the notices, advertisements, &c. But, of course it is impossible for Mr. Speaker or the House to know whether this private Act can be amended by a public Act unless the hon. gentleman places his Bill before us. He will therefore, I think, be serving his own case if he told us what is the nature and object of his Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. I desired before taking up the amending Bill to give the House information as to the circumstances and conditions which make this amendment necessary, if the public interest is to be protected. There was a joint arrangement for the development of the power by a dam from side to side of the Rainy river at Fort Frances, which is an international stream, and the works were commenced by order in council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A joint arrangement between whom?

Mr. CONMEE. A joint bargain between Mr. Backus, of Minneapolis, and the corporation of the town of Fort Frances, which was under an agreement bearing date 17th February, 1904, made at their request by the provincial government. I regret to have to take up the time of the House, but I feel it necessary in the public interest that I should do so. The community of Fort Frances have in my opinion and in their opinion been placed in a very unfortunate position. Rights which they had as natural rights, rights which they had by contract, rights which are vital to their future prosperity are attempted to be taken from them, and to deprive them of the use of the water power at the present time, and not only of the utilization of the power from this joint development but also of the navigation of the river. Several lines of steamers ply on that stream across the Lake of the Woods, and in a stretch of 100 miles of navigation on the river there are what is known as the Long Sault rapids, over which vessels cannot be navigated in low water. The goods are transferred from below the rapids to above the rapids and the people living along the stream are accommodated in that way. On two occasions since these works were erected that traffic has been cut off, in one case for nearly ten days. A vessel could not navigate the river for the reason that the gates were shut down and while the water was rising in the Rainy lake there was no navigation at all below the works. The same thing occurred on another occasion but not for the same length of time. At Fort Frances there is a lock which was built by this government many years ago at considerable cost. That lock is not now in operation. Goods are brought below the falls and transferred to vessels above the falls and carried on up to Rainy lake. That traffic has been entirely checked for weeks at a time because of the lack of construction of slides although such construction was imposed upon this company by the order in council authorizing it to go on with the work, and by statute of this parliament, chap. 139. Still there is no redress. What Fort Frances is asking for is not that the privileges which the company enjoys be taken away, but that the conditions under which the company obtained its franchise, the obligations that were placed upon it by order in council, and the plans which the company submitted, be complied with. I have referred to the plans. It was my intention to bring them here and lay them on the table, but I have not got them at present. I shall however, lay them on the table later so that hon. gentlemen may see that the first plan showed an equal number of units of water to be vented on each side of the International boundary, assuming that boundary to be in the centre of the stream. Hon. gentlemen will likewise see by the second plan that there is not an equal number of units on each side, but that there are more on the American than on the Canadian side. They will see by the first plan that this lock, which was previously constructed, was to have a gate at its upper entrance so that at any time the public could use the lock for navigation without difficulty. But what happened? As will be seen by the second plan, which the minister refused to approve, the whole entrance to the lock has been blasted away. There have been three or four inlets made into it, the south wall of the lock has been entirely blasted away, and possession taken of that public property in such a way as to make it very expensive indeed to open it for navigation. I am not going to argue that it is not in the power of the government to force this company to remove the works I speak of, but what I do say is, that these people have gone on in a high handed manner, without authority and constructed works designed for the very purpose of forestalling the operation of that canal. They planned their works, they planned their power-house in such a way that it is evident to any one —and I am sure the engineers of the department must know it—that these works were planned deliberately for the very purpose of forestalling the use either of the canal or the power on the Canadian side. The agreement to which I refer, provided that there should be a power-house on each side of the international line and the development of an equal quantity of power—one half the flow of the stream to be delivered on the Canadian side for use in Canada. The Act which was passed in 1905 by this parliament contains the same principle because it provides that the power shall be used concurrently on both sides and that there shall not be more power available for use on the American than on the Canadian side at any time. Now, if good faith had been kept, the conditions which exist today at that point could not exist. What are these conditions? To-day there is 18,000 horse-power from that development being used for the purpose of operating pulp wood grinder for the manufacture of paper on the American side, while there is not a single horse-power used on the Canadian side for any industrial purpose. I submit that that is not a concurrent development or use of the power such as parliament intended. I do not believe that parliament ever intended to give this company the right to permanently take a greater portion of the power to the American side than the half to which they are entitled. I am aware that under Sec. 16—I refer to the electrical exportation Act—there is power given to the Governor in Council to impose conditions and regulations and to stipulate not only with regard to the quantity of power that may be taken away for use in a foreign country but with regard to the power that shall be reserved for use in Canada. But I want to point out that that Act was passed three years after the agreement to which I have referred was entered into. I do not think it was the intention of parliament, in passing that Act to make it retroactive or take away the contractual rights of persons who had such rights previous to 1907. I refer to the order in council upon which this company got the right to proceed with its work, and I must say that this order in council is a very extraordinary document. It compels me to make a little further explanation. In 1905 when the company applied for incorporation to this parliament, the Bill that was introduced as Bill (No. 86); and if I may be permitted, I wish to read the Bill as introduced by the company, for I think that is necessary to a proper understanding of the present position:—

Whereas, the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, has by its petition represented that it was incorporated by letters patent under the general seal of the province of Ontario, dated 13th January, 1905, under the Ontario Companies Act, being chapter 191 of the revised statutes of Ontario, 1897.

Whereas the said company has prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth and it is expedient to grant the prayers of the said petition, therefore His Majesty by the authority and advice of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada enacts as follows:—

The works of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, hereinafter called the company, are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Section 2 refers to the capital stock of the company. The head office of the company is located in the city of Toronto. The provisional directors are to be the gentlemen named in section 4, as follow:

4. The provisional directors of the company shall be Edward Wellington Backus, of the city of Minneapolis, in the state of Minnesota, one of the United States, Robert Alexander Grant, and Alexander McKenzie, of the city of Toronto, and William Johnston and Thomas Bremner Rankin, of the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CONMEE.

Then the company is given powers as follow:

5. The company may construct, develop, acquire, own, use and operate water-powers on the Rainy river at or near the town of Fort Francis, in the district of Rainy River, in the province of Ontario, and construct, develop, operate and maintain works, canals, raceways, water-courses, dams, piers, booms, dykes, sluices, conduits and buildings, in connection with the said powers: provided that no work authorized by this section shall be commenced until the plans thereof have first been submitted to and approved of by the Governor in Council.

I have already referred to the fact that the works were carried out quite irrespective of the plans that were approved.

6. The company may—

(a) acquire by lease, purchase or otherwise and maintain, utilize and develop water-powers and other powers for the production of electricity and of electric, pneumatic, hydraulic and other power or force for any purpose for which electricity or power can be used;

(b) construct or acquire by lease, purchase or otherwise and maintain and operate works and appliances for the production of electricity and of electric, pneumatic, hydraulic or other power or force, and lines of wire, poles, tunnels, conduits, conductors, motors, devices, works and appliances for the sale, distribution, delivery and transmission under or above ground of electricity and electric, pneumatic, hydraulic or other power or force, and therewith convey, conduct, furnish or receive such electricity, current, power or force to or from any place through, over or under any lands or waters;

(c) acquire by lease, purchase or otherwise electricity, electric, pneumatic, hydraulic or other current, power or force, and store, use, supply, furnish, distribute, sell, lease or otherwise dispose thereof, as well as electricity, power or force produced by the company;

(d) construct or acquire by lease, purchase or otherwise, and operate in connection with the works, lines and business of the company and for the purposes thereof, lines of telegraph or telephone or other works and means of communication;

(e) carry on the business of manufacturing pulp-wood, pulp and paper, and other businesses incident thereto, and also the business of general merchants and manufacturers;

(f) erect, acquire and operate, saw mills, factories, elevators, flour mills, woollen mills and pulp and paper mills, and buy, deal in and dispose of the products of the said mills and factories, and acquire materials of all kinds for the manufacture of such products;

(g) aid by way of bonus, loan, guarantee or otherwise any industry or enterprise using or agreeing to use power supplied by the company or supplying or agreeing to supply to the company, and acquire stock, securities or obligations of any corporation carrying on or having power to carry on any such industry or enterprise, and act as agent or manager of any such industry, enterprise or corporation;

(h) make agreements with any power company having powers similar to those of the company, for the purchase of the rights, powers, franchises, assets, property, business and undertakings of such other company, and for the assumption and payment by the company of the whole or parts of the contracts, obligations and liabilities of such other company; provided that such agreement shall not be entered into unless it has been first approved of by the votes of two-thirds of the shareholders of the company present or represented by proxy at a special general meeting of the company called for considering such agreement, and provided that the rights of creditors of such other company and of all persons having any claims or demands against such company, or any lien, charge, or security upon any of its properties or assets shall not be prejudiced by the said agreement;

(i) issue as paid-up and non-assessable stock shares in the company as consideration for any such purchase, or in payment of any contract, franchise, property, undertaking, privilege, right or power which may be assigned or transferred to it or which it may acquire, or to be engineers or contractors, or for rights of way, material, plant, buildings or lands or the construction or equipment of the works or any part thereof, or for services rendered in placing or assisting to place or guaranteeing the placing of any of the shares or other securities of the company, or in or about the promotion of the company or the conduct of its business;

(j) acquire and hold all the rights, powers, privileges, franchises, benefits, water-powers, contracts or other property under a certain agreement dated the ninth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and five, between His Majesty the King, represented by the Honourable the Commissioner of Crown Lands for the province of Ontario, of the one part, and the said Edward Wellington Backus and his associates of the other part, and may assume the obligations, liabilities, conditions and undertakings by the said agreement assumed by the said Edward Wellington Backus.

7. The directors may enter into an agreement for amalgamation and for the consolidation of the capital stock, franchises and powers of the company with any other company having like objects and powers and incorporated under the laws of the state of Minnesota, or under the laws of the United States on such terms and conditions in such manner, under such name, with such capital, and with such powers, not inconsistent with the laws of Canada, and with such board of directors as shall be provided in the agreement for such amalgamation:

Provided, however, that no such agreement shall be valid or binding unless and until it has been submitted to and approved of by two-thirds in value of the shareholders of the company present or represented by proxy at a special general meeting called for the purpose of considering such agreement, and of which meeting, and the purpose for which it is called, one month's notice shall be given in the 'Canada Gazette' and in one newspaper published in the city of Toronto, and in one newspaper published in the city of Minneapolis, in the state of Minnesota, in the United States.

8. Upon the said agreement being so approved of, a copy thereof under the seals of the companies, parties thereto, shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State for Canada, and a copy so sealed shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Minnesota, and notice of the said deposit shall be given by the secretary of the company in the 'Canada Gazette,' and the amalgamation shall thereupon become complete, and the amalgamated companies shall have, possess and enjoy all the powers, rights and franchises which, before said amalgamation, were held, possessed and enjoyed by each of the said companies, including the powers herein granted.

9. If authorized by a by-law sanctioned by a vote of not less than two-thirds in value of the subscribed stock of the company represented at a general meeting duly called for considering such by-law, the directors may from time to time:

(a) borrow money on the credit of the company.

(b) limit or increase the amount to be borrowed.

(c) issue bonds, debentures or other securities of the company, and pledge or sell them for such sums as are deemed expedient, but no such bonds, debentures or other securities shall be for a less sum than one hundred dollars each.

10. Lands actually required for the construction, maintenance or operation of the works mentioned in section 2 hereof may be taken and acquired as soon as the plans of such works and lands have been approved of by the Governor in Council, and all the provisions of The Railway Act, 1903, which are applicable to the taking and using of lands shall, so far as they are applicable thereto, apply as if such provisions were included in this Act, and all the provisions of The Railway Act, 1903, which are applicable shall, in like manner, apply to the valuation and payment of the compensation for, or damages to, lands arising out of such acquisition, or the construction, maintenance or operation of the works and undertaking of the company or the exercise of any of the powers of the company.

11. If the construction of the works hereby authorized are not commenced within two years and completed within six years after the date when the said plans are approved of by the Governor in Council and the proper authorities of the state of Minnesota or of the United States, then all the powers conferred upon the company by this Act shall cease and determine.

12. Section 195 of The Railway Act, 1903, shall apply to the works and undertaking of the company.

This Bill was sought to be obtained by this company, and it will be observed that it provides complete machinery for relieving the company from every obligation into which it had entered in its agreement with the provincial authorities and the municipalities. Having obtained an agreement with the consent of the corporation of Fort Francis, which corporation closed certain streets and conveyed certain lands and water rights for the purpose of facilitating this development, having got all it could get from the corporation, all it could get from the provincial authorities, then it comes down here and asks for these sweeping clauses to enable it to amalgamate with any company incorporated in the United States, and after the amalgamation was carried out to exercise not the powers imposed upon it by the parliament of Canada or by the agreements into which it had entered, but the powers of the company with which it had amalgamated. I do not wish to dwell upon the ridiculous character of these clauses. To make doubly sure of its position and to shut out the provincial authorities the works were to be declared works for the general advantage of Canada.

Strange to say this Bill passed the House of Commons for the reason that it was introduced in the name of a member who knew nothing of the local conditions or of the hardships and wrongs that the enactment of such a measure would have imposed upon the community at Fort Frances. That occurred because of the deception that was used in connection with the Bill. I have read a clause purporting to legalize in this Bill the agreement of the 9th of January, 1905. That agreement was obtained by misrepresentation, I shall not use any stronger language just now, but it was obtained behind the back of Fort Frances and without their knowledge. In the advertisement which they published in the Fort Frances paper asking for this Bill they did not mention that agreement. They made reference to an agreement without giving its date. Fort Frances having the year previously made an agreement, having no knowledge of any second agreement made behind their back, were not on their guard and were not alarmed. While this Bill was in the Senate, after Fort Frances became aware of its existence and of the existence of the agreement secretly obtained, the council of Fort Frances entered a strong protest and the question of the legalization of that agreement and of the company obtaining the sweeping powers asked for, came before a committee of the Senate. This Bill which I have just read, was refused to the company and instead chapter 139 was worked out and came back to this House for ratification. In the order in council reference is made to that agreement of the 9th of January, 1905 Notwithstanding that parliament had refused the company the ratification of that agreement because of the exposure made of the clandestine manner in which it was obtained, the order in council which is a most extraordinary document revamps it.

I do not know that this gives it any force but it is, to my mind, a very strange proceeding ; all the more so because I took the precaution to interview the then Minister of Public Works, not only to interview him, but to hand to him a written memorandum with regard to the position of Fort Frances, the manner in which that agreement was obtained, and the necessity of embodying in any order in council that might be granted for the development of this power, conditions that would protect the community at Fort Frances. Notwithstanding that the order in council was issued, and, in my humble judgment, the minister did not take the view that I think he should have taken with regard to it. This is a report quoting portions of the order in council :

The minister further states that on the 9th of January, 1905, the said Edward Wellington Backus made with the government of the province of Ontario a certain agreement whereby the applicants obtained from the government of the said province a grant in fee of lands and power on the Canadian side of the international Boundary for the purpose of developing the water-power there and utilizing storage facilities with a view of creating a large amount of power for the operation of mills and other manufacturing establishments, the consideration of such acquisition being stated in the agreement at $5,000; the agreement in question containing several conditions as regards the character and dimensions of the works, the raising and maintaining of the waters of Rainy lake; the use or non-use of flash-boards, the construction of power houses, the expenditure of $50,000 on the works within nine months from the date of the agreement, the delivery of power to the town of Fort Frances after the 1st January, 1907, for municipal purposes and for public utilities; the operation and delivery of said power; the rate at which it shall be furnished; the intervention of the Lieutenant Governor in Council concerning the price of the power or energy to be created, and several other agreements of different kinds always bearing upon the delivery and price of the energy to be manufactured out of the works approved by the agreement. That the agreement also in clause 14 thereby reserves and excepts all the rights of the Dominion of Canada in navigation and in the improvement thereof by the construction of locks, dams, canals and otherwise. The government of the Dominion or the province of Ontario to have the power to enter upon the premises and maintain and repair such canals, locks, dams, or other works for the improvement of navigation without compensation. It is also agreed that no sawdust, chemical or other refuse of any kind shall be placed or deposited in the river.

The order in council is a lengthy document, and I do not wish to read it, but it contains this clause :

No work so authorized shall be commenced until plans thereof shall have been submitted to and approved by the Governor General in Council. The Act in question contains several clauses——

This has reference to chapter 139 ·

——referring to the production of power or electrical energy, the delivery thereof, the construction of power-houses, &c.

So that, while I do not wish to weary the House with too long quotations from this document it will be seen that permission to go on with the work was granted subject to certain conditions.

That the permission be granted subject to the conditions inserted in the agreement between the government of the province of Ontario and the applicants and also subject to all the conditions and reservations expressed in the Act of parliament passed at its last session respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited.

That no work will be done under the permission to be given to the company which will in any way interfere with the lock, canal, or other works of a public nature already executed at Fort Frances by the government of Canada, nor will any bridge or any other erection or construction of any nature whatsoever on, over or across the said lock, canal, or other works, be built, nor generally shall any use be made thereof except by permission in writing to that effect by the Minister of Public Works.

Now, I submit that this work has gone on quite irrespective of this provision. No such permission for the works to be erected has ever been obtained, and I have already pointed out the very damaging nature of the work. The reason for the application for this public Bill on behalf of Fort Frances may be given in this way. First, the town obtained an agreement to which they consented, and which was made on their behalf. Perhaps I may be permitted just to read the preamble of the agreement in order to show that my statement is fully borne out by the document itself.

Whereas the Rainy river is the district of Rainy river forms an International boundary between the province of Ontario in the Dominion of Canada and the state of Minnesota, one of the United States of America, which said river in the neighbourhood of the town of Fort Frances forms a valuable and extensive water-power;

And whereas the municipal council of the town of Fort Frances and the municipal council of the township of McIrvine and the residents of the said town and township have at various times petitioned the government to develop or procure the development of the said water-power, so that the same might be utilized for municipal purposes and for manufacturing and milling in the said municipalities thereby assisting in the development of the said municipalities and of the surrounding districts;

And whereas application has been made by the purchasers for a grant in fee of such lands adjacent to the said river, and of such lands covered by the said river, and of such privileges as are necessary to enable the purchasers to develop the said water-power, and to render the same available for municipal manufacturing and milling purposes;

And whereas the said water-power can be more advantageously developed, and more power produced, by works embracing the entire width of the river, and dealing with it as a whole, than by an independent development on the Canadian side of the International boundary, and it is therefore in the public interest to adopt such plans of development;

And whereas the purchasers are the owners in fee simple of the lands and water-power on the Minnesota side of the International boundary opposite the said town of Fort Frances, and are desirous of obtaining from the government of the province of Ontario a grant in fee of the lands and power on the Canadian side of the International boundary, for the purpose of developing the water-power to the full capacity of the stream from side to side at high water mark, and of utilizing such storage facilities as may be available for maintaining the river at such high water mark, thereby rendering available a large amount of power on the Canadian side of the river, for municipal purposes and for the operation of pulp and paper mills, flour or grist mills and other manufacturing establishments;

And whereas it is necessary in order to carry out such a scheme of development, that the purchasers should be permitted to construct a storage dam at the outlet of Lake Namekan, at or near Kettle Falls, on the international boundary and to set apart sufficient lands for the construction and maintenance of the said dam, and that they should also, if necessary, be in a position to create storage reservoirs on upper and lower Manitou lake and big Turtle lake under conditions satisfactory to the government by the construction of the necessary dams for that purpose, with the view of maintaining a more regular and uniform flow of water over the falls at Fort Frances, by reinforcing the waters of Rainy lake;

And whereas the construction of the said dams and the maintenance of the waters of Rainy lake at a higher level during the low water period will be of great advantage to navigation;

And whereas it is expedient and desirable, in the interests of the town of Fort Frances, of the said township of McIrvine and of the public generally, that the said water-power be speedily developed to its full capacity and that an agreement be entered into to that end, upon the terms and subject to the conditions and stipulations herein contained;

And whereas the purchasers propose to form a joint stock company under the provisions of the Ontario Companies Act, for the purpose of acquiring this agreement and all the benefits and advantages appertaining thereto, and of assuming the obligations hereby incurred by the purchaser, and of carrying on the development and operation of the said water-power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is abundantly clear that at the request of, and on behalf of Fort Frances this agreement was entered into, and for the very purpose of creating water-power to be used in Canada for the operation of pulp and paper mills. I may now be permitted to state what has happened. I hold in my hand a series of questions that were asked of the company by the Department of Inland Revenue which has the administration of the expropriation of electricity. Before granting the request of the company for a license, that department, as was quite proper, desired to know from the company how much power they would deliver on the Canadian side, when they would deliver it, and at what price, and on what conditions the Canadian consumer could get it. It was a well known fact that the company had refused to give to any Canadian either mechanical or hydraulic power which could be used for the manufacture of pulp, and the following question was put to the company.

5. As one of the main natural products on the Canadian side of the river is pulp-wood, state whether the company or those associated with the company in the manufacture of paper purpose manufacturing pulp-wood into pulp or pulp into paper on the Ontario side of the river as well as on the Minnesota side of the river, and if so, when?

The answer to that was :

The company propose to install a pulp mill on the Canadian side as soon as a pulp-wood concession is granted by the provincial government, which was promised to the company by the late Ross government. The company also propose to erect paper mills on the Canadian side as soon as a pulp concession is secured of sufficient capacity to supply the western Canadian demand.

The impertinence of that answer must be quite apparent to everybody. The Department of Inland Revenue asked the very plain question, if they intended to erect such works in Ontario, and the answer of the company is : We do if the Ontario government—a government over which this federal government has no control—will give us a pulp concession such as we ask, and we think sufficient to supply the Canadian demand. Now, it was well known at that time that the present government of Ontario had refused to give them or anybody else a pulpwood concession. The policy of the present government in Ontario was, not to give these pulp concessions subject to certain works being erected as had formerly been done but to put them up at public auction, and those who wanted them could bid on them. The writer of that answer knew perfectly well that there was no possibility of him getting that concession, and I, therefore, say that the answer was extremely impertinent under the circumstances. With regard to concessions, I can speak with knowledge of these early conditions because at that time I represented the community at Fort Frances in the local legislature, and I know the facts. It is true the Ross government did offer this gentleman a concession in 1882 or 1883, but it is also true that he refused to take it. Why? It is very easy to explain why. In the first place, he at that time regarded himself, and his associates as the possessors of the only available water-power on the watershed of Rainy Lake, and his words to me were : What advantages would a concession be ; we are obligated to do certain things if we accept, we control the price of wood, nobody else can enter into it, we have the only water-power in the district. But, Sir, we all live to learn, and this gentleman learned something later on because it transpired later on that the government of Canada proposed to build a lock at what is known as the Long Sault rapids of the Rainy river in order to improve navigation there. The construction of that lock would involve the building of a dam which would create a considerable water-power, and that might enter into competition with this company. Therefore, we had a revival of the application to get the pulp concession, and other difficulties interposed to prevent the use of the power on the Canadian side. Now, I will just refer to one more question, question 6 :

If question 5 is answered in the negative, please state whether the use of the grinding room in the Canadian power-house for grinding pulp direct, so as to make the manufacture of pulp by an independent Canadian concern feasible, could be obtained by any Canadian manufacturer desirous of embarking in such an industry, and under what terms and conditions?

Now, that is a very plain question. Here is the answer:

This would not be practicable, as the company would not allow outsiders to use its power-house. Therefore, in that case the grinders would have to be driven electrically.

That means simply a refusal, because there is no such thing, in a situation such as exists at Fort Frances, of operating pulpwood grinders by electricity. You have to transform the mechanical power into electric current, then it has to be stepped down, and motors have to be applied, so that the machinery is doubled and the cost is practically doubled. Every manufacturer will understand, without any argument, that that means shutting out any competition whatever with the American company.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman not think that he is discussing the merits of the Bill rather than following the custom on the first reading, of simply explaining the provisions of the Bill?

Mr. CONMEE. I will endeavour to comply with the views just expressed. I considered it necessary to make some preliminary remarks as to the conditions that justified the introduction of this as a public Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not the time to give those reasons. They may be given on the second reading, but not at this time.

Mr. CONMEE. If I had a guarantee that the Bill would reach the second reading, I would be satisfied. Well, to come to the Bill, it proposes to amend chapter 139 of the statutes of 1905, as follow:

Chapter 139 of the Statutes of 1905 is amended by adding after the word 'council' in the last line of section 1 thereof the following: Provided further that the company shall from time to time, if directed by any authority having jurisdiction herein, provide further plans and execute any additional works, alterations or changes, and carry out any new work or works required; or if, upon any application of the town of Fort Frances or otherwise, it shall appear that the company has heretofore constructed, or that the company does at any time hereafter construct or erect any work not approved, the company shall, if directed by any order or ruling, provide plans showing such alterations, changes, additions and new works as may be required by any order or ruling made in pursuance of any such application, and, if so directed by any such order or ruling, execute, perform and carry out all works necessary or required, including the removal of any unauthorized works, if ordered to be removed, and shall, in the execution of such alterations, changes, removals, additions and new works, give full effect to any such approved plans, and also to the provision of any such order or ruling, not only in regard to the execution of the works or any of them, or other matter incidental thereto, but also in regard to the flow of water for navigation over or through the works of the company, and for the passage of logs and timber, and for the operation of the canal on the Canadian side, the supply of hydraulic power and electrical energy and the regulation of the methods and conditions under which such power and electrical energy shall be furnished to Canadian users, as well as the prices which the company may charge such users for such units of power or electrical energy provided for in the said order or ruling.

There are a number of amendments similar to this, none of which change the position of the company under chapter 139, These I submit are matters of public concern and not of a private character. It is not necessarily the duty of a private member to have to undertake an amendment of this kind, but I have introduced it at the request of the community of Fort Frances, who feel that their interests are vitally involved, and who feel that they ought to get protection at the hands of parliament—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will confine himself to an explanation of the main provisions of the Bill. The merits are discussed on the second reading.

Mr. CONMEE. I cannot do that unless I make reference to the laws which it is proposed to amend.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is easy for the hon. gentleman to explain exactly the chief provisions of the Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. I have read some of the sections which cover the purport of the Bill as to the regulation and protection of the public interests in regard to the navigation of the river and as to the works of this company in so far as they affect the public interests. There is another section of the Bill which provides, along the lines of the existing statute, that one-half the total power of the stream created by the works shall be delivered for use on the Canadian side, and that the conditions and prices under which such power may be used shall be regulated either by the Governor in Council or the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. Either would be acceptable, and that the power shall be supplied either in the form of mechanical power or electrical energy. I submit that parliament never intended to permit these gentlemen to dictate to Canadian users of power in what form they should use it, the Canadian interests are as great in this matter as are the interests of these American gentlemen. The Ontario and Minnesota company immediately transferred all its rights and interests to an American company incorporated under the laws of the state of Maine, which company is not registered in Canada and has no place of business in Canada. It is that company which is to-day in possession of, and operating these works, and while that company takes all the benefits of the Canadian company, and use the latter as a sort of conduit pipe through which to get favours, it refuses to carry out the obligations imposed by this parliament upon the Canadian company. The object of my amendment is to make it clear that the law may be invoked to compel these gentlemen to carry out their obligation in good faith.

There is another section of the Bill to which I might refer. Every one will admit that I have adduced sufficient evidence to show that there was to be an equal division of this power. While the town of Fort Francis finds no fault with this company getting its full half of the power of the stream or even more until the power is needed on the Canadian side, what we do say is that we want our position defined and have it definitely decided whether we are entitled to an equal portion of the power. This company says the Canadians are only entitled to one-quarter.

Mr. BRODER. How many horse-power are involved?

Mr. CONMEE. About 36,000 horse-power. That is the estimate of this company, but in my humble opinion there can be developed there and utilized 50,000 horse-power. Another clause of this Bill simply provides that the Act of parliament passed by this House in 1905, in which it was said there should be concurrent development and use of the power, be made as was the evident intention to provide for an equal division of the total power of the stream—and not a division of the Canadian portion of it—and that that principle be carried out and that there shall be a clear declaration that Canadian interests are entitled to one-half of the total power of the stream and entitled to use it under conditions which will admit of its practical use, and that they are not to be denied the right to use mechanical or hydraulic power if it be their interest to do so. They are not to be shut out of the only industry which is natural to their position and for which they have the raw material, namely, the manufacture of pulp and paper.

I submit that these are all matters of a public nature. Although the Bill is said to be a Bill relating to the Ontario and Minneapolis Power Company—I refer now to chapter 139—I submit it is a public Bill. I have read the Bill that company introduced, hon. gentleman can look at it, it will appear in 'Hansard', and then look at chapter 139 and see that it is a very different Bill. Parliament imposed conditions for the purpose of safeguarding Canadian interests in this water-power, and therefore, whatever may be the title of the Bill, it is in every sense of the word a public Bill, and I submit that this amendment ought to go at least to a committee so that the community at Fort Frances, which has now for ten years been subjected to the very great hardship of sending lawyers and deputations a thousand miles from time to time to protect its interests, may have justice done it by this parliament. If by any technical ruling this measure might be shut out, I hope that there is no member in this House who would take, under these circumstances, a technical objection, and I ask that the measure be allowed its first reading and sent to a committee where it can be threshed out. If any of the provisions of the Bill affect injuriously the private rights of the company, the committee will not tolerate it, and no such measure can pass; but I submit it is a fair measure for removing doubts and difficulties which are due to hasty legislation passed in the manner I have described. One of the clauses of the Act, chapter 139, provides that the Railway Board of Canada may fix prices and conditions and that application may be made to that board by any applicant for power or by the town of Fort Frances. I submit that every layman would understand by that language that the town of Fort Frances was given the statutory right to make application to the Railway Board to have the prices and the conditions fixed in order that the town might be able to say to manufacturers: Here is the power which you can have at such prices and under such conditions. But I am told that the town of Fort Francis has been advised that, notwithstanding that language, it is doubtful if it could succeed on such an application. The reason given is that under the municipal law it could not apply for power for general purposes. As a town it could apply for power for municipal purposes, but when they go outside of that they might be met with difficulty. That is the difficulty raised by the lawyers. I do not know if it be good law or not, but I do know there is sufficient in it to put that small community against this powerful company in a contest in the courts, that it would take six or seven years to determine their rights and they have not the financial ability to do this. Under all the circumstances it seems to me there should be conscience enough in the House of Commons to grant this community some relief from the very perilous condition in which their interests have been placed.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not hear the objection to the first reading of the Bill, but it seems to me that the gravamen of it must be that this is a Bill proposing to amend a private Act. Now, private Bills, including Bills to amend private legislation, require certain notice to be given to the public. Such a Bill must be introduced by petition, but a public Bill may be introduced simply on two days notice in this House. In this case, the public have no notice of what this Bill purports to do, nor have the holders of rights under this private legislation any such notice as is provided for by the rules of this House. It seems to me that this is wrong. I say nothing at present about the desirability of amending the law referred to, or securing the rights of Rainy river; it is simply a question of observing the rules of the House in giving notice of legislation of this kind. There must be, I take it, vested rights grown up under the Act of incorporation, and this proposed Bill would affect such rights.

Mr. CONMEE. If I may be permitted to answer the hon. member: I do not think he was in his place at the opening of my remarks.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not.

Mr. CONMEE. I showed that, under sec. 18 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, of 1906, all Bills are public Bills,—that section states so in so many words; I do not need to read it again. And I showed by quotations from Bourinot what the practice of this House has been. A number of public Bills amending private Acts have been passed in this House. I do not know that I have prepared myself fully for an argument on the rules of parliament in that respect, but, so far as I have been able to examine—and I have consulted some of the gentlemen who are in charge of the committees, and who have had a good deal of experience—the opinion seems to be that the procedure is quite regular. And, so far as notice is concerned, I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), that notice of this question has been before the public for years. The newspapers of Fort Frances are full of it; the company has had written notice,—I saw to it myself that they should know exactly what was done. And there is lots of time for anything of that kind. This Bill will have to go to committee, and it will be some time before it reaches the House again. No one will be taken by surprise, and no interest can possibly be prejudiced for want of all the notice necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), has quite appreciated the objection made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). If he has, I think that I personally should interpose here. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), if there is any merit in his Bill, is seeking to amend a private Act. The hon. gentleman cannot evade the rules of the House, and introduce what is, in fact, a private Bill, of which notice should be given, by merely declaring it a public Bill. If this were introduced as a private Bill, notice in the form which is well known, would have to be given to the public so that those interested would have a chance to be heard. These rules are made for a purpose, and are always carried out, for our procedure in relation to private Bills is different from that in relation to public Bills.

Mr. SPROULE. And there are fees to be paid.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, there are fees to be paid and all sorts of things to be done in the case of a private Bill. It seems to me that the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), is trifling with the intelligence of this House in taking up time with this matter. I think the whole thing is out of order, because it must be apparent to you, Mr. Speaker, as to every member of the House, that the hon. gentleman is introducing what is really private legislation, and ought to be introduced in accordance with the rules applying to legislation of that kind. He had no right to introduce it as he did and call it a public Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I pointed out to my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee), that the purpose disclosed by the notice which he gave, and which appears on the order paper is to introduce 'an Act to amend chapter 139, 4 and 5, Edward VII., intituled an Act respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited.' The Act to be amended is undoubtedly a private Act. It is quite true that all Acts passed by this parliament are public Acts; but it is equally true also that there are two categories of public Acts, one known as private Acts, to be introduced in this House in accordance with certain rules, and not to be amended except in the same manner. My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee), has quoted some authorities which go to show that private Acts may be amended by public Bills in some matters which are not essential, which are not part of the parliamentary contract,—for a private Act is a parliamentary contract and is to be amended only under the rules which have been provided by parliament for the security of private parties. My own impression, at first blush, is that the Bill proposed by my hon. friend certainly interferes with the corporate powers of a private company and is, therefore, to be introduced only in accordance with the rules relating to private legislation. But, if I may be permitted, I would suggest that the Bill be read the first time, and the question whether it is a private Bill or not, should be settled by you, Mr. Speaker, before the next reading.

Mr. LANCASTER. If I am in order: I would point out that it would, I fear, be trifling with the rules of the House to let the Bill go in that way. I think that the first reading should stand for the consideration which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), proposes. We should be stultifying ourselves to let the first reading go through when the rules declare that it should not go through. I think the point ought to be decided.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is for Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am prepared to say now that my impression is, after hearing the explanation of the hon. gentleman and reading the provisions concerning the company, that this is purely a private Bill, and so comes under Rules 88, 89 and so on and must be introduced by petition, the fees paid and the other formalities that are provided for, observed. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), wishes a more elaborate opinion, I will be able to give it tomorrow, setting forth the definition of private Bills, the precedents and so on. In the meantime, I may briefly quote Bourinot:

> Private Bills are distinguished from public Bills in that they directly relate to the affairs of private individuals or of corporate bodies, and not to matters of public policy or to the community in general. They must pass through the same stages as public Bills, but, at the same time, must originate by petition and be subject to certain special standing orders in both Houses of parliament.

There can be no doubt that this Bill merely relates to the community residing in Fort Frances and its immediate vicinity, and not to the community generally. In another place, Bourinot describes this class of Bill:

Bills from the corporation of towns and municipal bodies, generally, are always treated as private Bills when they desire special legislation affecting their proper interests.

This is such a case, I submit, and therefore I cannot allow the Bill to be introduced. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), will have to comply with the rule of the House. I will give a more elaborate opinion to-morrow if necessary.

Motion ruled out of order.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. OLIVER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 107) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: This Bill is a very short amendment. It relates to the disposition of schools lands. As these sections stand in the Act at present they provide only for the sale of school lands. In practice it is frequently found desirable that school lands should be leased for various purposes, such as grazing rights, mineral rights, or timber rights. There is no specific authority in the Act now to permit leasing and while in practice we have granted leases it is thought it would be right and proper that the practice should be sanctioned by an amendment to the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. PAQUET:

1. What advances have been made since the 1st of July, 1905, to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners?
2. What rate of interest has been imposed on these loans?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. $543,748.16.
2. 4 per cent, but no amount of interest has been received on account thereof.

MR. FERDINAND ROY.

Mr. MONK:

1. Is Mr. Ferdinand Roy, of St. Lazare, county of Bellechasse, employed by the government or by the Transcontinental Company?
2. If so, what is the date of his appointment, what is his monthly or yearly salary, and what is the nature of the services he renders to the government?
3. Has he made any reports to the government or to the company since his appointment? If so, how many reports has he made, and are they in writing?
4. What amounts has he received from the government since his appointment?

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Mr. Ferdinand Roy is not employed by the Department of Railways and Canals, nor the Transcontinental Railway Commission.

2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

OTTLECOCK DAM.

Mr. CROCKET:

1. Did the Department of Public Works authorize the construction during the year 1910 of a dam and wing on the Ottlecock stream in the county of Victoria, New Brunswick?
2. If so, at whose request was said work undertaken, what was the object thereof, and what was the cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1 and 2. No.

COTEAU LANDING BREAKWATER.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Has the government decided to construct a breakwater at Coteau Landing? If so, what amount is appropriated for this purpose?
2. Will the work be done by contract or by the department? If by contract, is it granted at the present time, and what is the name of the contractor?
3. Has the government considered whether the construction of a new sluice would not be preferable and less expensive?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes. An amount has been placed in the parliamentary estimates for the present session of 1910-11 for that purpose.
2. (a) Tenders will be called for in the usual way for the principal part of the work, which will be let by contract. (b) No. (c) None.
3. The engineers have considered all the circumstances, and have decided that the construction of a breakwater will be the most satisfactory solution of the problem.

Mr. BOYER:

Since when has the project of constructing a breakwater at Coteau Landing been under consideration?

Mr. GRAHAM. For several years past.

SOULANGES CANAL DAMAGES.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Is there a claim before the Department of Railways and Canals on the part of Mr. Denis Martin and others residing near the Soulanges canal for damages sustained?
2. In what years are these claims dated?
3. Does the government intend to reply to them shortly in one way or another?

4. What are the causes, which have up till now, delayed the solution of this matter?

5. The government having already replied to one of those interested that it could do nothing before having a report of the engineers charged to make a hydrographical or topographical plan, is this work finished and when did it commence?

6. Could not the department have a partial report of the plan relating to the persons claiming damages in order to take more speedy action in one way or another?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes.
2. 1905.
3. Yes; as soon as the necessary reports from the engineers can be obtained.
4. The necessity of making certain surveys, &c., in connection with the water sheds.
5. The report of the engineers have not as yet been received by the department. This work commenced in 1908.
6. It is necessary that certain observations be made during the spring freshet before any action can be taken.

SARDINE CANNERIES.

Mr. JAMESON:

1. How many canneries are there in Canada in which sardines preserved in oil are put up, where are they located, and how many persons are employed in each?

2. How many cans of sardines, preserved in oil, were put up by each of said canneries during the last year, and what was the value of the pack of each cannery?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. Four. Black Harbour, Charlotte county, employs 100 persons. Letang, Charlotte county, employs 80 persons. Fair Haven, Charlotte county, employs 40 persons. Leonardville, Charlotte county, employs 25 persons.

2. Black Harbour, 3,000,000 cans, value, $97,500; Letang, 950,000 cans, value $30,875; Fair Haven, 550,000 cans, value $17,875; Leonardville, 250,000 cans, value $8,125.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TELEGRAPHERS CONCILIATION BOARD.

Mr. MACDONALD:

Under what statute and what section of statute was the Board of Conciliation granted to the telegraphers on the Intercolonial railway which is now sitting?

Mr. KING:

Under section 6 of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, the Crown consenting to take advantage of the Act, though not specially named in it.

TRADE WITH NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. MACDONALD.

1. What is the total value of exports to Newfoundland from 1900 to 1910, inclusive, in each year?

2. What is the total value of imports from Newfoundland during each year of said period inclusive?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. The total value of exports from Canada to Newfoundland during the fiscal years from 1900 to 1910, inclusive, was as follows:

HOMESTEAD REGULATIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster) moved:

For a return showing all applications for homestead or pre-emption in the railway belt in the district of New Westminster, with names of applicants, and description of proposed locations pending at the time of the recent suspension of the regulations governing the disposal of these lands; also any order or orders in council by virtue of which these regulations have stood suspended during 1910.

He said: While this motion as offered refers only to the riding of New Westminster, the conditions there indicated are common throughout the whole railway belt in British Columbia and have constituted during the past year a very serious grievance to persons who have approached British Columbia with a view to taking up residence there. I may say that in no other year since confederation have there been so many persons looking towards British Columbia as a place of future residence, and yet we find that in this year, the year of all others when the Department of the Interior and its officers should have been alert in guiding applicants for location in British Columbia towards the land there, the railway belt has been completely locked up without any warrant whatever in law, as I say, after diligent inquiry made of the Department of the Interior. We find the origin of the trouble to be in a new set of regulations sprung upon the public early in the spring without any notification whatever even to the agents of the department in British Columbia that anything of the kind was in contemplation. The result of these new regulations if they had gone into effect would have been to kill every one of the hundreds of applications sent into the department for locations in that province. However, at the time set for these regulations to go into effect an order in council was passed suspending their operation until a time to be stated in the future, a time which has not yet been stated, so that during the whole of the active season of 1910 we have been in British Columbia without any regulations whatever applicable to the land in the railway belt. I say without any regulations applicable but the fact that the administration is paralyzed appears to be due to the personal act of the Minister of the Interior, because when the new regulations were suspended it is quite plain to any one who studies the situation that the old regulations in the absence of any interference with them by law by any other agency than the proposed new regulations must continue in effect. Still while by law they are in effect we find that by the personal order of the Minister of the Interior, I presume, because it is in his department, by some order not communicated by order in council or in any other public manner, the land agents throughout British Columbia were instructed not to receive any applications whatever, not to deal with a bit of land in any way, not to give any satisfaction to any one of the hundreds of persons who have applications pending before those agents for homesteads, on many of which they have been living but who find themselves now without any warrant that they will at any time secure the patents to these lands. The subject is not one which calls for any lengthy remarks, but I do submit that it calls for the attention of the House in view of the extraordinary condition revealed that by the arbitrary act of one minister the settlement of a whole province can be retarded for a season, and a most active season at that.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the motion passes, I would like to draw the attention of the mover (Mr. Taylor, New Westminster) to a difficulty in meeting the request contained in the motion. The motion asks for a return showing all applications for homestead or pre-emption in the railway belt in the district of New Westminster, with names of applicants and description of proposed locations, &c. There may be record in the departments of applications which have been made, but my hon. friend will be aware that there is a great possibility of very many applications having been made of which we have no record, and, therefore, we are not able to give him the information. In the ordinary course of the transaction of business at the land offices an application would be made verbally and there would be no record of its having been made ; so that, while we are willing and anxious to give the hon. member all information in this connection, I desire to point out the difficulty that there is in giving him a large amount of information on the point that he particularly asks about.

In regard to his remarks on the subject in general, I would like to point out that he has rather misunderstood the question when he says that there has been no dealing with homestead entries in the railway belt for the past year. There has been no suspension of the regulations, and no suspension of activity in dealing with homestead lands in that part of the railway belt known as the dry section, that is to say, in the section of which Kamloops is the centre. In that area there has been a continuous movement in the way of dealing in homestead rights and my hon. friend, I think has been certainly quite misinformed when he gave us to understand that there had been no issuing of homestead rights during the year.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). May I ask the minister whether these dealings were under the old regulations or under the new regulations?

Mr. OLIVER. Under the old regulations. To explain to the House fully, if I may take the time, the reason for the condition of which my hon. friend complains in other sections of the railway belt, the difficulties that have to be met in the administration are these : In the district of New Westminster, as well as in the district eastward of the dry belt, owing to the activity of investors in lumber, not absolutely all, but practically all the land that is suitable for homesteading in those sections of the railway belt has been covered by licenses to cut timber. The general condition in those sections of the railway belt is that in order to give a homestead entry the land has to be withdrawn from the timber berth. There are exceptions to the rule, but my hon. friend is well aware that the exceptions are only exceptions, and do not cover any important section of the conditions existing. As the House is aware, the timber in the railway belt is of very great value, partly because of the great size of the trees, and partly because of the nearness to transportation facilities by reason of the existence of the railway, and for other reasons. When we have to deal with the question of settlers' rights in that way we have to deal with it very cautiously and carefully. While we are anxious that the lumberman shall not hold his license for lands that are proper to be settled upon, at the same time we desire to be careful not to withdraw from him, or to aid anybody else in any action that would result in causing to be withdrawn from him, those rights to the timber for which he has paid, and thereby cause the undue destruction of timber which is a most valuable asset of this country. The difficulties of the situation are such that they have been engaging the attention of the Department of the Interior for several years and, as the result of this consideration, some time in the early part of last summer, certain regulations were issued for the information of the public looking to the adjustment of these difficulties between settlers and limit holders that, it was hoped, would be at any rate, moderately satisfactory, and would tend to the further development of the country without undue trespass upon the rights of any one. These regulations were issued early in the summer time, and were to go into effect, I think, on the 1st July, so that there should be ample notice to everybody before they would come into effect as to what their character was. Not at all unexpectedly, objections were offered to these regulations, and in view of the objections that were made and of the very complicated and difficult character of the question that had to be dealt with it was thought advisable to give the matter further consideration, and to suspend the regulations until that still further consideration had been given and until all interests concerned had been further consulted. That is the matter as it stands up to the present time. It is not correct to say that the suspension of these regulations has been any serious deterrent to settlement in the railway belt because there cannot in the nature of things be any serious accession to settlement in the railway belt until the question of timber rights, the respective rights of the lumber holders, and of the prospective homesteaders, have been properly adjusted. As long as the limits stay as they are there cannot be any serious amount of homesteading in the sections of the railway belt which have been held under reservation. It may be said that entries might have been given in the small portions of those sections which are not covered by timber berths. It seemed to the government that it was advisable—for it seemed to be necessary to make a radical change in the method of the disposition of rights to settlers—that there should be no distinction drawn between the small area outside of the timber berths, and the large area inside the timber berths ; that is to say if it was sound public policy to enter upon a new system in dealing with homesteads in the railway belt it was right and proper that all should be put upon the same basis. So the matter has had to await further consideration with reference to all the interests affected. My hon. friend is aware, I presume, that we expect to have the opportunity of consulting a very representative delegation of one of those interests in a short time, and we hope after that consultation to be able to take such action as will relieve the present situation of which my hon. friend complains.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). If the new regulations were to be proclaimed to-morrow what would be the fate of the persons whose applications for homesteads are now pending? Would they be dealt with under the old regulations or under the new regulations?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter that is the subject of consideration at the present time. If the regulations which were promulgated in the early part of last summer to take effect on the 1st July as they stand were to go into effect to-morrow all applications not already dealt with would be dealt with under those new regulations.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, if nobody else wishes to discuss the motion I would like to point out to the minister one or two defects in his answer. In the first place, what he has said just now in reply to my question touches the crux of the whole situation, that there are in the district of New Westminster alone a great many applications for homesteads pending, and they have been pending for not a few months, but for many years, through no fault of the applicants, but simply because of the dilatoriness which characterizes the conduct of business in the Department of the Interior so far as the Canadian Pacific railway is concerned. Some of these applicants for homesteads have been pushing their claims for from 10 to 15 years to my knowledge. The minister's files are stacked with correspondence from me during the last few months, calling his attention to case after case of this nature, where men have been trying for years to get their papers, where they know of no obstacle except the dilatoriness of the department, and where they are left in this state of uncertainty now; that if the regulations are proclaimed their last chance of securing these homesteads disappears, according to the statement just made by the minister, a statement which confirms the worse fears of these homesteaders and their apprehensions which have been the basis of the many protests delivered to the minister during the last few months. I would like to point out to the minister also that he misjudges the quantity of land available for settlement in the railway belt in the district of New Westminster. In one breath he tells us that the applications are so numerous that he cannot bring down a complete return because there are so many made by word of mouth as well as in writing. I think he will admit that when a man goes into the land office in New Westminster and makes an application for land, that he applies for a definite piece of land. I know of any number of cases where men have gone in with a definite application for a piece of land only to be told that there is nothing doing at all, that the agent will not receive the application for that or for any other land, and that the agent will not give any idea as to when the applicant may come back. I know also that the minister, only last year, gave away by private treaty to a quartette of favourites in Vancouver no less than 6,800 acres in one block in the district of New Westminster; gave away these 6,800 acres available for settlement upon which applicants for homesteads would gladly have gone; gave them away at the ridiculous price of $1.50 per acre, land which could be sold at an instant's notice to-day for $150 an acre or more; and gave those lands away on the sole promise that there was some great dyking scheme in connection with it. I do not know what information the minister had upon which to base that transaction. I made some inquiries last year and was told that the department had no information at all as to the value of land in that vicinity. A short time before that a small parcel of land in the same neighbourhood was handed out to a political favourite at a price much below the market value and inquiry was made in this House as to whether or not there were any more lands available in that district at less than the schedule price named by the department. The answer was that there was no other land available at any reduced price, which was a warning to all persons concerned to make no application for snaps of that kind. And yet, hard on the heels of that statement that no other land was available at anything less than the regular price, we find this transaction (at a still lower price) with an organization in Vancouver closely identified with the famous Bob Kelly whose name as the head of the British Columbia Tammany is now being heralded in the press of the continent. Now, I ask why the minister tells us today that there is no considerable quantity of land available in the railway belt for settlement for the small man who wants 160 acres, or, the 20 acres or 40 acres to be allowed under the new regulations, when only a year ago he was handing it out in 6,800 acre blocks to the associates of Bob Kelly.

An hon. MEMBER. At how much per acre?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I have already told the House at $1.50 per acre, subject to conditions of dyking, conditions similar to those observed without any order in council or any Act of parliament by every farmer on the delta land in British Columbia; conditions which will bring to this aggregation of favourites from Vancouver a profit which may be moderately estimated at $1,000,000. One million dollars, Mr. Speaker, to be handed out without notice, without competition to a few favourites from Vancouver, speculators in land; while the department does not know of any more lands available there as to which it is worth while to give their attention to satisfy the demands of men who wish to become bona fide settlers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the date of the grant?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The date of the information about no other land being available would be about 1907, the date of the grant was in 1909, barely two years afterwards, and the lands in question are almost adjoining although the answer given to this House was that there was no other land in the vicinity to be obtained at anything less than the price laid down by the department. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the minister should revise his answers and should find some other reason for tieing up settlement in the district of New Westminster; I submit that he should take the House into his confidence and tell who are these fortunate people in the dry belt in British Columbia who had influence enough to cause the suspension of these regulations that were proclaimed early in 1910. He might give us some shadow of reason why conspicious friends of the government in the dry belt should be able to have regulations suspended while their special cases are being dealt with, while at the same time people in the lower mainland of British Columbia, who have no other claim than that they are honest citizens and intending homesteaders, are turned away from his land offices with the statement that this government will not give any attention to their requests.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend asks how it is that, having said to the House that we had no land to sell in the lower railway belt, we afterwards sold some.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Not quite that. The question asked in the House was whether there was any other land in the vicinity of this land on Pitt Meadows, for sale at less than the prices laid down by law or by regulation of the department. The answer was, no, but hard upon the heels of that answer came a sale of 6,800 acres to the quartette of political favourites.

Mr. OLIVER. The question of my hon. friend sounds like an echo of the celebrated Robins Irrigation debate that occurred in this House. My hon. friend asks in regard to the sale of certain marsh lands at a price. We are not selling marsh lands at a price any more than we are selling irrigation lands at a price. It is true that an amount is paid, but that is not the price that we sell the land at. The price is the money that is paid plus the cost of the reclamation of the land. We sold some at the price my hon. friend mentions plus the cost of reclamation. We were asked if we had any more to sell. We had not any more to sell; we have no land to sell for money in the lower railway belt. But we had land to sell for reclamation, and we sold it for reclamation. It is being reclaimed, I believe, and my hon. friend will not deny that the reclamation of that land means a very great increase in the value of the land in his constituency, and is for the benefit of the country as well. If my hon. friend is horrified at the idea of our selling marsh lands at $1.50 an acre plus the cost of reclamation, I will tell him that there is still other marsh land in his constituency, of which he knows very well, a very large area of it, which four years ago we offered for sale—if he likes to put it that way, although I do not put it that way—not at $1.50 an acre, but several thousand acres for one dollar plus the cost of reclamation.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Not to political favourites. That was towards a public undertaking.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely. It was an offer to constituents of my hon. friend or of his colleague for purposes of reclamation; and if he finds fault with us for having sold this other land at $1.50 an acre, in what position must we stand in his estimation for having offered several thousand acres at the price of a single dollar plus the cost of reclamation? And the land has not yet been sold nor the reclamation made.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The conditions were entirely different.

Mr. OLIVER. I will admit that the conditions were somewhat different, but not entirely different. In the one case the land was marsh, in the other case it was partly marsh and partly lake. In both cases it was not land capable of cultivation without reclamation; in both cases large expenditures to secure reclamation were necessary. Because a less cost would be incurred in reclaiming the land in the one case than in the other, we charged $1.50 an acre, in the one case and only one dollar for several thousand acres in the other case. The reclamation in the one case is going forward, and I believe will be successful, while in the other case, although the land was offered practically for nothing, it appears not to be worth the cost of reclamation.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). My information about a month ago on the spot was that the reclamation was going forward.

Mr. OLIVER. The bargain was made four years ago, and the last I heard of it was that the reclamation was not going forward. If the hon. gentleman has knowledge that it is, no one will be more pleased than I.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister refers to Sumas lake?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister must know that he renewed that last year.

Mr. OLIVER. Under such an arrangement as I speak of the land was for a time in the hands of the strongest financial company in British Columbia, unless the Canadian Pacific railway itself, and yet it has not been reclaimed unless it has been done recently.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The minister knows why that company gave it up?

Mr. OLIVER. I only know they gave it up. But if the company fulfil the conditions required and reclaim that land, I am prepared to defend the transaction in this House or anywhere else, and I am satisfied the House would uphold the action I took.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN FARMERS DELEGATION.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask what progress has been made in the printing of the proceedings of the farmers delegation which met here on the 16th of December last.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take a note of my hon. friends request and ask the Secretary of State.

HOURS OF LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. VERVILLE moved third reading of Bill (No. 3), respecting the hours of labour on public works.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I had not the privilege of being present when the amended Bill was discussed a couple of weeks ago, not having returned from the Pacific coast after our adjournment; but on reading the report of the debate on that occasion, I saw some remarks which I think ought not to pass unchallenged. I read for instance, the statement by the hon. gentleman in whose name this Bill stands (Mr. Verville), that he had received from several labour organizations, particularly in Montreal, petitions or memorials or other documentary evidence in favour of the Bill in its present form. At the outset I wish to say, in order to remove any apprehension, that I am not opposing this Bill; because the very smallest movement in the direction of recognizing an eight hour day, is better than no progress at all; but I noticed that the hon. gentleman did not specify what labour organizations had petitioned in favour of his amended Bill and what workmen there were who preferred this amended measure to the sturdy effort made by him in the first place. A great many members in this House have received petitions in connection with this Bill, but, so far as I am aware, these petitions relate solely to the Bill introduced last fall and not to its substitute. I do think that it would have been only just to this House for any representative of labour, who had a mandate from any labour organization to accept this substituted Bill, to have given us the address of the people for whom he spoke. I do not think that it is right that an hon. member should come here speaking as a representative of labour and leave us in any doubt as to the position of the great labour organizations in this country with respect to legislation of this kind; and you must realize that the bare statement by any hon. gentleman that he had received petitions from labour organizations does not carry nearly so much weight as if he stood up here with the documents in his hand and read them to the House, spread them on the pages of 'Hansard', and allowed us to see by whom they were signed and what class of labouring men were content with so small a measure of justice. I have a number of petitions with respect to this Bill which I shall not present to the House in an anonymous way, but will either read or give the addresses of the organizations which have sent them. In the case of a very few, I shall read the petitions themselves because they are rather important in their nature. I have first one, from the Trades and Labour Council at Vancouver, dated the 2nd of January, which reads as follows:

J. D. Taylor, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir:—I am instructed by the Vancouver Trades and Labour Council to again draw your attention to the fact that this central labour union has repeatedly placed itself upon record as being unequivocally in favor of the enactment of a federal eight-hour day, along the lines of the Bill introduced by Alphonse Verville, M.P. Having this in mind, we will not burden you with further resolutions upon the subject, but desire to impress upon your mind that wage workers of western Canada are deeply concerned in the passage of such a measure. We heartily endorse the expressions and position taken by the members of the executive committee of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada who appeared before this special committee dealing with the subject some months ago. We further believe that the tendency of this day and age is towards a shorter work day; this, because the workers rightly feel that they should participate in some of the benefits accruing from the introduction of modern machinery. In fact, there are so few arguments against the enactment of such a measure that it seems needless for us to go any further into the question at this time. Trusting that we may have the pleasure of a hearing from you at the earliest possible date, with regard to your attitude on this question.

(Signed) R. P. PETTIPIECE,
Secretary.

I have a similar petition from Local Union No. 16, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of British America, dated Vancouver. I have also one from Lethbridge, Alberta, dated December 30th., from the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators and Paper Hangers of America; also one from Labroquerie, Manitoba, dated December 19th. I have others from Toronto Typographical Union No. 91; the Journeymen Tailors Union of America, dated from Toronto; the Hamilton District Trades and Labour Council; the Hamilton Branch of the Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local Union No. 18; the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, Niagara Falls, Ont.; the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paper Hangers, of America. This last is as follows:

Montreal, Dec. 24, 1910.

Mr. J. D. Taylor, M.P.

Dear Sir,—Through a unanimous vote of my local, I have been instructed to ask for your moral support on the eight-hour Bill presented by Mr. A. Verville, M.P. Hoping you will condescend to back this most needed legislation.

J. CORDOVA,
Secretary.

Here is another from the Montreal Union of Carpenters and Joiners of America, No. 178; and still another from the Montreal International Association of Machinists, as follows:

Labour Temple, 303 St. Dominique St.

Hon. Member.

Dear Sir,—The Bill No. 3 entitled 'An Act concerning the hours of labour on public works,' presented by Mr. Alphonse Verville, will soon come before the House for discussion.

We wish to inform you that our union, after carefully studying this Bill, has decided to support it and respectfully ask you to approve of it by giving it your vote.

You probably know that for a number of years the labour movement, not only in the province of Quebec but in the whole Dominion, has demanded this humanitarian and indispensable measure under the existing situation.

The investigation made by your special committee on this important question has proved without a doubt that the objections raised affected principally the contracts for transportation by land or water, on the other hand the evidence given in favour of the Bill were well founded.

Hoping you will accede to our request and we may count you amongst the supporters of the Bill No. 3.

We remain yours,

J. FOSTER.

I have here another from the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America, Local 137, Montreal. The Montreal Trades and Labour Council—speaking, I presume, for the body of labour generally in the city of Montreal—sends the following:

Montreal, January 3, 1911.

To Hon. Members of Parliament,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—At the last meeting of the Trades and Labour Council held on Thursday, December 15, 1910, a resolution was adopted asking your support on behalf of the 8-hour Bill presented by Mr. Alphonse Verville, M.P.

As this measure is of great interest for the public in general, we hope you will give it your hearty support.

Thanking you in advance for your help.

I remain,

G. R. BRUNET,
Sec. Trades Council.

The communication from the Journeyman Stonecutters' Association of North America, Montreal branch, is as follows:

Montreal, Dec. 24, 1910.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the Montreal Branch of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Association of North America, held at Montreal, December 21, the 8-hours Bill introduced in the House of Commons by Alphonse Verville, M.P., was read. By unanimous vote, the branch adopted a resolution approving every clause of said Bill and wishing for its enactment.

Respectfully submitted,
The Montreal Branch of the J. S. C. A. of N.A.
GEO. DURANTAYE,
Secretary.

There is another from the International Union of Working Barbers, Montreal Local. The National Trades and Labour Council of Quebec writes as follows:

Quebec, January 21, 1911.

To J. D. Taylor, Esq.,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that all the delegates of the National Trades and Labour Council, of Quebec, at their meeting held on the 17th instant, have passed a resolution, approving the Bill (No. 3) presented by Mr. Verville, concerning the law regarding the hours of labour in public works.

The eight thousand labour men of Quebec should be happy to have your hearty support to this Bill, which would be of a great advantage to the working class.

Hoping that you will give this request your most serious consideration.

We have the honour to be,
Your most obedient servants,
National Trades and Labour Council of Quebec, by J. ALFRED MERCIER,
Secretary.

There is another from the Machinists Union of Quebec.

Now, I have one a little more up-to-date, as showing the attitude of labour organizations towards the most magnificent backdown on the part of the hon. member for Maisonneuve. This is from the Victoria Trades and Labour Council, of Victoria, B.C., and is as follows:

Victoria, B.C., January 10, 1911.

Whereas Bill (No. 3) intituled 'An Act respecting the hours of labour on public works,' introduced in the House of Commons by A. Verville, member for Maisonneuve, and read a first time on November 23, 1910, was endorsed by Victoria Trades and Labour Council, and

Whereas, on December 15, 1910, as set forth on page 1470 of 'Hansard,' amendments by the author of the Bill are proposed which utterly destroy the effectiveness of the measure:

Therefore, be it resolved by Victoria Trades and Labour Council in regular session assembled that it hereby expresses its unqualified disapproval of the changes to the measure as proposed by the said member from Maisonneuve; and be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Premier of Canada, the Minister of Labour, A. Verville and to each representative in both Houses of parliament from British Columbia, as well as to the secretary of the Trades and Labour Congress, and to each of the central bodies in British Columbia, urging that their influence be used in securing the withdrawal of the proposed amendments or to wage a vigorous campaign against the adoption of same by either or both Houses.

Several of these communications refer to the evidence taken last winter by the special committee organized by the hon. member for Maisonneuve in conjunction with the Minister of Labour. This committee was appointed, as the House will remember, with the idea that it would bring in a perfect Bill, a Bill free from the defects said to characterize the measure of last year. The desire, at the time of the appointment of this committee, was not only to perfect the wording of the Bill so that it might mean what it was intended to mean, but, according to the minister, it was most desirable that we should learn from the experience of other countries and should know how far they had gone in this direction, that we might be guided by their example and also avoid faults in legislation which ran along channels new to us in Canada. It seems a remarkable thing to me that, although this evidence was obtained by that committee, at very considerable cost, and although, as the hon. member for Halton has pointed out, several cords of that evidence have been printed and are stacked up in the lobbies of this House, yet the evidence has never been distributed to the workingmen of Canada to let them know just what they had a right to expect from any government and from any Minister of Labour, who takes a position entailing upon him the duty of doing his best in the interest of labour. One would think that the Minister of Labour, as chairman of the committee procuring this evidence, would have been exceedingly diligent in this matter and would have seen to it that the evidence was spread to the four corners of Canada, so that every person concerned in this movement might be posted as to how far it would be safe for us to go in following the example of the United States, New Zealand, Great Britain and other civilized nations.

However, this information remains stacked by the cord in the lobbies of the House. It has not been referred to except in the most casual way by any of the hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House who have dealt with this Bill; it has not been analysed by the Minister of Labour in his address to the House; it has been treated, in fact, with a contempt which I submit it does not deserve, because to me this information seems exceedingly valuable. We undertook, last year, to find out what they did in other countries, so that we might be guided by their experience and go as far as experience had shown it was safe to go. We found no person connected with the Department of Labour, after its five years' study of this question, competent to advise the committee, no person to tell them what other countries had done. So great had been the attention given by this overworked department during five years that when at last, on the minister's own motion, the Bill was brought before the committee the department was found entirely unprepared to give it any information which would have been of value. So they called in a gentleman from a university at Kingston, who seems to be a very wise man indeed, who seemed to have a marvellous grasp of the situation, to have a genius so extraordinary for dealing with legislation of this kind that the question arises more than ever whether the First Minister, when he was seeking for a gentleman to put at the head of a department of this kind, being established in Canada as a separate department for the first time, did not make a grave mistake in making the choice he did when there was available a man who could do in three weeks what our Minister of Labour seems to have been unable to accomplish in five years. Be that as it may, we find Mr. Skelton submitted, in very concise form, the examples of other countries. I find at page 33 of the book:—

Professor Skelton. It was requested at the last hearing that a more detailed statement be given of the scope of the existing United States federal law. It will be recalled that this law passed in 1892, as extended by later declarations, applies to the following main classes:

And you will notice that this is very different from the small category of labourers on public contracts. Here are the classes to whom it applies in the United States:—

1. Labourers and mechanics in the direct employment of the United States or of the District of Columbia; now including men employed in navy yards, arsenals, ordnance factories, in printing bureaus, on construction of buildings, breakwaters, piers, fortifications, on irrigation works, and on Panama canal (except unskilled aliens). For letter-carriers an eight-hour day or 56-hour week is prescribed. It has been ruled that messengers and janitors are not included. 26 Op. Atty. Gen. p. 623.

I have got ahead of my story. I should first have quoted from page 23 of the evidence where Professor Skelton is asked by the Minister of Labour as to the American federal act of 1892. Professor Skelton replies:

I shall read the whole of it; it is quite brief:—

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the service and employment of all labourers and mechanics who are now, or may be hereafter employed, by the government of the United States, by the District of Columbia or by any contractor or sub-contractor, upon any of the public works of the United States or of said District of Columbia is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day; and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States government or of the District of Columbia, or any contractor or sub-contractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct or control the services of such labourer and mechanic, to require or permit any such labourer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day, except in cases of extraordinary emergency.

I would call the attention of the Minister of Labour and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) to the language of this section, where it says: 'It shall be unlawful to require or permit any such labourer.' In the United States, in their experience of 18 years, since the passage of this, they have not found the danger apprehended by our new Minister of Labour in the use of these words 'or permit.'

Mr. KING. Would the hon. member tell the House what has been the effect in practice of having those words in that legislation, and to what extent the courts have found it possible to enforce the Act owing to those words?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am sorry if the minister, having such valuable information in his possession, has neglected the many opportunities he has had of presenting it to me and to this House, so as to enlighten our ignorance on this most important subject.

Mr. KING. The hon. member is trying to evade my question. The information is there, and if he has read the report he will see that the effect of those words has been practically to nullify the legislation. The courts found it so, and I call upon him to deny it, if it is not true.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am making an address now on Mr. Skelton's evidence before a special committee of this House; I am not denying or affirming any proposition put forward by the Minister of Labour, but I do say he has been distinctly derelict in his duty if, having information of this kind in his possession, he has been so careless, so indifferent and so absolutely sure that he can get a majority of this House to do whatever any ministers of the Crown tell them they are to do, that it is not necessary for him to give any reasonable excuse for any course he suggests to them. Section 2 reads:—

That any officer or agent of the government of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any contractor, or sub-contractor, whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control any labourer or mechanic employed upon any of the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia who shall intentionally violate any provision of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour and for each and every offence, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not to exceed one thousand dollars or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both, such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court having jurisdiction thereof.

The third section provides that the Act does not apply to pending contracts. Mr. Macdonell, a member of the committee, then asks:—

Is there any other exception than the emergency exception.

Professor Skelton—No exception.

The United States, having had experience for some time with this Act, and not having recognized the calamity that the use of the words 'or permit' had brought upon them, according to the Minister of Labour to-day, proceeded to pass supplementary legislation nine years afterwards. But these Americans are slow; it takes them a long time to recognize that this is a misfortune to them. Prof. Skelton, at page 24, reports:

Letter carriers may be required to work as nearly as practicable only eight hours on each working day, but not in any event exceeding forty-eight hours during the six working days of each week; and such number of hours on Sunday, not exceeding eight, as may be required by the needs of the service; and if a legal holiday shall occur on any working day the service performed on such day, if less than eight hours, shall be counted as eight hours without regard to the time actually employed.

This Act was passed in 1901. The following year, that is in the session of 1901-2, the eight-hour law was explicitly declared to apply to all irrigation works undertaken by the secretary of the Interior.

So well satisfied was the congress of the United States with the operation of this Act after it had been in force nine years that instead of weakening it, instead of withdrawing it, instead of whittling it down until it meant nothing whatever it deliberately proceeded to extend it. The report proceeds :

In 1905-1906 when the Panama canal was being planned it was enacted that the provisions of the Act of 1892, the long one which I read, should not apply to unskilled alien labourers and to the foremen and superintendents of such labourers employed in the construction of the Isthmian canal. . . To summarize, the federal government has provided that eight hours shall constitute the limit that may be required or permitted of any workman, mechanic or labourer in its own immediate employment whether engaged in erecting public buildings or fortifications—public works in the ordinary sense—constructing the vast irrigation works which are now being undertaken in the semi-arid west, or if they are citizens or skilled aliens, employed on the Panama canal; they are all in direct government employ. If they are employed in the government navy yards, arsenals or ordnance factories, or in the public printing bureau or engaged as letter carriers—I should omit letter carriers, that is a special provision—they all have the obligatory eight-hour day.

The proceedings of this special committee were carried on during very many weeks and such a mass of evidence was presented by persons for or against the Bill that it was suggested that the committee should call upon Professor Skelton again to help them to come to a conclusion. Mr. Skelton was examined as to the result of the studies which he had carried on independently during the period of the committee's activities. He was examined by a former labour member in this House in the person of Mr. Smith. He was asked about a specific law in Australia, and he said that :

The nearest approach in New Zealand to the legislation contemplated by the Bill before us is the Public Contracts Act of 1900, which provides that in all contracts above 20 pounds in value, for the construction or repair of public works or for any public service in which manual labour is needed, current fair wages shall be paid and an eight-hour day observed. The discussion in the House when this Act was passed showed that it was designed to force on all contractors, particularly in outlying districts, where roads, bridges and culverts were being built, the hours customary in better organized districts. The eight-hour specified was, in view of the prevalence of the eight-hour standard, practically a fair hours provision. Overtime, moreover is allowed.

If it is felt desirable that the Dominion should use the means at its disposal——

I would call the attention of the Minister of Labour to this. This is his own witness.

Mr. KING. I think the hon. member is utterly mistaken when he speaks of Professor Skelton as my own witness. Professor Skelton was brought before the committee at the request of the committee itself. The committee was composed of gentlemen opposite as well as gentlemen on this side of the House. He was not in any way the witness of any one particular member of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). That opens another subject upon which I willingly would not have entered. That opens the subject of the procuring of Professor Skelton, and what I claim to be double dealing in this House in connection with the procuring. I have the evidence in this book in my hand, and if I wanted to take up the time of the House I could read it, that Professor Skelton was retained three weeks before the Minister of Labour came into this House to ask permission to retain an expert from outside to assist the committee. I have the statement in this book that he was retained in consequence, and as a result of a conference between the Minister of Labour and the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and that the clerk of the House was consulted, presumably by the Minister of Labour, as to whether or not the committee had authority to engage this professor without referring to the House. I have the professor's own statement that he was communicated with by telephone. I would ask whether the members of the committee had a specially arranged telephone with one horn to the ear of each member of the committee, one speaking piece for each member, or whether they jointly spoke to this professor two days before he was engaged, or whether it was some responsible minister, some person with some show of authority, who engaged the professor, who talked with him over the 'phone two days before he was actually engaged, and told him to get busy and prepare for a formal call from this committee. I say it is trifling with the intelligence of this House, it is presuming too much upon the carelessness of the members of this House, this action having been taken in the hope of members not having read the contents of this book for the minister to attempt to lead us to believe that he was not personally concerned in the retaining of Professor Skelton.

Mr. KING. I am sure the hon. member does not intend to be other than fair or that he would not like to have the House feel that he did not intend to be fair. Every statement which he has made may be quite correct, but the implication which he has tried to make, is not an accurate one. I can state the facts to the hon. member, and if I am in error hon. gentlemen who were members of this committee can correct me. Some of them are present and are sitting opposite. It was suggested in the committee before the Christmas recess, that some one should be engaged to compile the legislation of different countries, and advise us as to how this legislation had worked out in practice. An officer of the Department of Labour was not called in, not because there were not men in the department, officers who could do the work, but because it was thought that it might be considered that evidence given by an officer of the department was ex parte evidence in favour of one class. That the subject was one affecting all classes and that exception might be taken by manufacturers or farmers to evidence from such a source. The committee thought, and rightly, I think, that there should be an impartial third person engaged, and a university professor who was interested neither one way nor the other, and who was well qualified for the work, was selected. The situation when the House adjourned for the Xmas recess was that we had either to delay until the House resumed after the recess, or retain his services forthwith so that he might have an opportunity during the recess of parliament, which was also his recess, of dealing with the matter. It was impossible for me as a member of the committee to, on my own responsibility, appoint this gentleman or on behalf of the committee without making sure that his appointment would be confirmed later on. When the committee suggested, so that there might be no delay in a full and complete investigation, that I should try and arrange to have Professor Skelton do that work during the Christmas vacation, I consulted the Prime Minister and the clerk of the House to ascertain whether such would be a proper course, and whether if I acceded to the wishes of the committee I might feel sure that the House would support me. Having consulted the Prime Minister, that right hon. gentleman said, that if anything could be done to expedite the work, and carry out the wishes of the committee it should be done. With that authority I told Professor Skelton that I had assurances which I considered satisfactory to guarantee he would be retained, and that it would meet the wishes of the committee if he would agree to undertake the work forthwith. If the hon. gentleman can find anything not in accordance with the facts in that statement I challenge him to do so. But, the hon. gentleman is acting unfairly when he makes insinuation after insinuation, with the view of misleading every member in this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Labour had better withdraw that statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. The last statement made by the minister should be modified.

Mr. KING. If I used language I should not have used I certainly withdraw it immediately.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). To avoid misunderstanding I wish to repeat inferentially everything I have said in this House, and to challenge the Minister of Labour to point to one sentence which I cannot make absolutely good from the records. I have listened patiently to the oration from the Minister of Labour, and I am not surprised that he shows heat; if I were in his position I think I would show even more heat. But I would like to ask him why he took up so much time to combat the statement I hazarded, that Professor Skelton was his witness, while the result of his effort was only to corroborate that statement in every detail. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Minister of Labour was the member of that committee who named Professor Skelton. I think I am entitled to assume that Professor Skelton was his witness, and the Minister of Labour has no right to refer to that as an insinuation. I say it is a fair assumption from all the circumstances. I have no direct knowledge as to whether Professor Skelton was his witness or the witness of the Prime Minister, but I think a fair assumption from this report is that he was the choice of the Minister of Labour, and the Minister of Labour having called him to offer his advice has a right to take that advice. However, this is what Professor Skelton says:

If it is felt desirable that the Dominion should use the means at its disposal, however limited, to set the pace, the path of least resistance it is generally recognized lies along the adoption of the eight-hour day in government employment——

Not mark you only on public buildings under contract, but in government employment.

—and the insertion of an eight-hour clause for contracts on public works. Possibly the adoption of a fair hour's supplement to the fair wages clause might be discussed in that connection.

To that extent, the professor bears out the contention put forward from this side of the House, that if the government really desired to secure an eight-hour day for government employment they could have done it themselves without any of this meaningless parade. Now, then, this witness called by the Minister of Labour proceeds:

If the committee decide to make the application of this Bill——

He was stopped short there. This professor having studied the question, having thoroughly mastered 400 pages of information, being under the impression that he was called in to enable the committee to do something, proceeded to give his advice whatever it might be worth, as to what they might most advantageously do, when he was stopped by the Minister of Labour, the very man who asked this House to submit the Bill to the committee so that the committee might perfect the Bill, and remove the disadvantages which would have arisen. I challenged the Minister of Labour to say whether he would cause that committee to report back the Bill or whether he would not, and he answered me at that time in the most arrogant way that it was an improper assumption on my part that he or any other member of the committee had any other idea than to report back the Bill to the House; and yet, this very man, being offered by his own witness a suggestion as to the kind of Bill he should report, stops him with this remark:

The Chairman. The committee has'nt any decision to make on that point.

Prof. Skelton. You mean as to the interpretation of the term 'public works'?

The professor could not believe his ears; he could not believe he was in the presence of the assassin of the Bill. The Minister of Labour said:

The committee, of course, is simply concerned with this Bill of Mr. Verville's; we have nothing to do with the framing of the law itself, but if you are dealing with anything other than what is included in that Bill——

The meaning of the Minister of Labour was: For goodness sake, Mr. Professor, we are getting along very nicely now, we have got this thing so beclouded that nobody but yourself can make such a summary of all this evidence as you are making; if you present this summary to us, and tell us all what it means it will be incumbent upon us to report this Bill this session, so for goodness sake don't do it, and he did not do it. Mr. Speaker, he was not permitted to do it. Then Professor Skelton said:

'Well, would it be——

He only got this far when he was stopped again by the Minister of Labour so anxious was he that this professor should not give that committee too much enlightenment. Of course the shorthand reporter did not get down the whole dramatic scene; you would need a moving picture machine to do that in detail, but something happened between the pauses, and so the Minister of Labour said:

The Chairman.—I beg your pardon, I interrupted you, perhaps I may have misunderstood what you were going to say.

A. I was going to make some suggestions in the event of the Bill applying to public works, but perhaps that is not needed at this stage.

The Chairman.—That is quite proper; if your observations have led you to believe there are certain features which should be considered in connection with our public works, you certainly should give them.

This professor had been invited to make a recommendation. Not spontaneously invited. This thing did not occur all of itself. The committee were very coy about receiving advice from the professor; but finally they prevailed upon themselves to receive some information from him, and this is what they got:

A. Well, quite aside from the question whether it is feasible to adopt an eight-hour day even on public works, I would like to say, if it were adopted there are some considerations which a study particularly of the American conditions have suggested. So that without prejudice to the question of the advisability of any such law at all I think it is clear that it would be better in framing such a measure to make a positive enumeration of the trades to which it should apply rather than to make a sweeping statement and then to insert exception after exception as to the trades to which it should apply. Again, if it were applied to public buildings I think some such provision should be inserted as that embodied in the Wisconsin law which provides that the provisions of the Act should be confined to work done on the spot, not to the preparation of materials necessary. It would have to be considered, too, whether an eight-hour day meant a 48-hour week or a 44-hour week, that is, the question of the short hours on Saturday might come in. The question of overtime is also a difficult matter. It might be possible to penalize overtime by requiring higher pay for extra hours, but the danger of this, of course, is that with such a provision in the Bill, it becomes not an Act to enforce shorter hours, but an Act to enforce higher wages by beginning the overtime sooner. Possibly the prohibition of overtime except in emergencies would meet the necessity of the case from the viewpoint of its advocates. However, I am taking a very hypothetical case at present, and perhaps there is no need of going further into what might be done if the committee took certain action.

As it turned out, the perhaps was fully justified. There was no need of going further as to what might be done, because the committee made no decision at all, and did not report any Bill last session. At this stage, however, the committee were very well satisfied with themselves. Perhaps I should have said the chairman rather than the committee, because the committee as a whole, do not speak here. However, there are some members other than the chairman who do speak. There is one member whom I used to know as a most enthusiastic advocate of the rights of labour in the part of Canada where I live. At one time he was simply a splendid fellow as a labour advocate. No trouble was too great for him to take, no distance was too far for him to go. So it was only natural on this occasion, when all this mass of evidence, so entirely favourable to the principle of shorter hours of labour had been presented, that the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), should have been the first to express his appreciation of it. This is what I read on page 380:

Mr. Smith.—I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the splendid address which Professor Skelton has given us this morning has been of the utmost assistance to the committee.

The Chairman.—Yes, indeed.

Mr. Smith.—His address to-day was simply splendid, and I know from experience that his conclusions about England are absolutely correct. We can rely upon his address, and it will assist the committee very materially.

The Chairman.—Professor Skelton, I think that the members of the committee are very much indebted to you for the thorough and systematic way in which you have investigated the legislation of the different countries on the subject of hours of labour, and given us the benefit of your researches.

Professor Skelton.—It is very good of you to say so. I have enjoyed my brief experience of parliamentary life behind the scenes. It has been indeed a great pleasure for me to assist in the committee's investigations.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was all that printed at the expense of the country?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Surely—a cord of it. Parliamenary life behind the scenes! Why, Mr. Speaker, he was not behind the scenes. He was only behind the first curtain. He had no idea of the operations which the scene shifters would set vigorously in motion the moment they got him off the premises. This recital would not be complete if we did not bring in the testimonial to Prof. Skelton, given by the father of the Bill:

Mr. Verville.—I must say that I consider Professor Skelton's report to be one of the best of the kind I ever heard in my life.

Although these explanations were the best which he, as an advocate of the cause of labour, had ever heard in his life, he asks us to adopt, not the magnificent programme which I have read to you, but something which he knows himself, is utterly meaningless, except as an affirmation of the principle, which has its sole value as an academic affirmation. Here is the valedictory of the chairman:

The Chairman.—I think you will see, Professor Skelton, that the members of the committee are unanimous in their appreciation of your work.

Now, it seems to me that the Minister of Labour has another think coming, because I am satisfied that Prof. Skelton must now realize that the committee have no proper appreciation of his work, or, if they have, that these three gentlemen who heaped this deserved praise upon his last utterance there, would be standing up here vying with each other in urging upon the House that we too should show our appreciation of Prof. Skelton's services by enacting legislation which the experience of all other countries who have dealt with this subject shows to be wise legislation to adopt.

I am sorry to have taken up so much time, but I thought it due to myself, as a supporter of the Bill, to make some answer to the slighting remarks directed against me in my absence, impugning my conduct in common with that of other members on this side of the House as not being sincere. I think that, even at this late stage of the proceedings, we ought to have from the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) some reason why he has thought fit to entirely ignore the recommendation of this professor who was called in by himself as an expert witness. When the hon. Minister of Labour and the hon. gentleman who has moved this Bill admitted that the conclusions of this professor were well founded and wise, and were a proper deduction from the experience of other countries, we ought to have some explanation why these conclusions and recommendations were dismissed so ignominiously as they were by the failure of both these hon. gentlemen to even refer to them in this House, and we ought to have some explanation why we are asked to read for a third time a Bill which falls so far short of the recommendations of that committee to which we referred the original measure.

Mr. BARNARD. I am sorry to say that I was away on the last two occasions when this Bill came up for discussion; and while I do not wish to detain the House at any length, I desire to take this opportunity of saying that I was in favour of the Bill as originally introduced. I have followed with very considerable interest, as a new member, the checkered career of this measure. I saw it on the Order Paper the first session I was here and found it quietly shelved; and I saw it again on the Order Paper last year and had a lesson in parliamentary juggling on the part of the government by referring it to an expert, whose opinion they evidently had not the slightest intention of following, and in this manner they succeeded in shelving it another year. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) has quoted the resolution of the Trades and Labour Council of the city of Victoria, in which they declare that the present mutilated measure is wholly ineffective and that the amendments introduced by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) on compulsion—because I leave it to the judgment of any fair member of this House if those amendments were not the price given for the support of the government—utterly destroyed whatever merits the Bill in its original form possessed. I noticed an article in the Victoria 'Daily Times' a few days ago to the effect that the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), when this Bill was in committee, said that he was perfectly willing to withdraw his amendments, and that thereupon those members of the Conservative party, who said they supported the Bill in its original form, became immediately frightened and receded from the position they had taken.

I would like now to ask the Minister of Labour if he would allow the Bill to go through the House in its original form, if the hon. member for Maisonneuve will withdraw his amendments? I have no reply but the answer is obvious. There was no doubt a bargain between the hon. member for Maisonneuve and the government. The hon. gentleman took his Bill to the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), and I have not much doubt, although it does not appear in evidence, that the Minister of Labour drew up the amendments, and that the hon. member for Maisonneuve accepted them. I have nothing further to add except that I regret the Bill has been so mutilated and should be quite ready to support the measure as originally introduced.

Mr. THOBURN. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion; and the question which has puzzled me is why there should be the discrimination we see in the Bill as it is now before the House. Why should the government allow a man working upon a government building have shorter hours of work than upon a canal or railway? Is one man not as good as the other? By this Bill, in its amended form, he is not. But if one man be as good as another, why not give the man working on the government canal or railway the same hours of labour as when working on a government building. I have never yet heard a good reason why the Bill was amended. Has the originator of this Bill received any communications from the workingmen of Canada to the effect that they were not in favour of the Bill in its original form? If he has not, why has he attempted to amend it? Is there any opposition to the Bill? Why was the Bill not presented in its original form? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman to what extent does his amended Bill benefit the workingman? In its present shape would it benefit say 5 per cent of the workingmen of Canada? Would it benefit 2 per cent of our workingmen, or even 1 per cent? I would like the hon. gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. VERVILLE. If the Bill be accepted as it is and the principle adopted, probably my hon. friend will have reason to change his mind in five or six years.

Mr. THOBURN. That is not the answer I expected to get. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman still another question. As the hon. member has introduced this Bill in its present emasculated form, I would like to ask if he has received protests from any workingmen's organizations in Canada——

Mr. VERVILLE. Yes—from two cities out of the whole Dominion.

Mr. BOYCE. What cities?

Mr. VERVILLE. Victoria and Vancouver.

Mr. THOBURN. My question to the hon. member who has introduced this Bill in its present emasculated form is : Has he received any protest from any of the labour organizations of Canada? If he has, why does he persist in bringing forward such a Bill in this House.

Mr. VERVILLE. When the hon. member (Mr. Thoburn) has finished speaking, I will answer him if there is time. But I am not going to answer questions as he chooses to put them.

Mr. THOBURN. Will the Minister of Labour please answer that question? For, I can tell both these gentlemen that if they have not received such petitions, there are plenty of them in circulation. In addition to the petitions presented by the hon. member for New Westminster, I would like to present some that have been sent me from the labour organizations of the county I have the honour to represent and others. The first to be called to my attention was the decision by the executive of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada in session in Montreal. The following is the account of the matter given in the public press :

That it cannot give its approval to the proposed amendments in the eight-hour Bill to be introduced in parliament by Alphonse Verville, M.P., is the gist of a statement made public at 1.30 to-day by the executive of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada after a session at the Windsor hotel last evening, which was attended by the Minister of Labour, and another this morning.

The statement is in part as follows:

'With reference to the eight-hour Bill and the proposed amendments now before parliament, the executive of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, after full and very serious consideration of the whole matter, has determined that it cannot give its approval to the proposed amendments. The amendments, it is true, mean the recognition of the principle of the eight-hour day, but they are but a shadow of what the workers of this country are asking for. The proposed amendments give some benefit to the building trades, but will leave neglected most of those whom we represent. The principle of the eight-hour day has already been recognized by the government in numerous schedules enforced by it. That, impliedly, is a recognition of the principle by parliament which has never protested or objected to those schedules.

'The executive feel that the proposed amendments do not fairly meet the enlightened sentiment of progressive Canada and are but a hesitating and faltering step towards the goal so generally sought in this country. Without further detail at the moment, the Trades and Labour Congress, through its executive, cannot, therefore, approve of the proposed amendments and must stand by the Bill first introduced this session by Mr. Verville.'

I have received a petition from the Trades and Labour Council of the county which I have the honour to represent which reads as follows :

Carleton Place, Ont., Jan. 30, 1911.

At a joint meeting of the trades unions held in Carleton Place on Thursday evening last, comprising representatives of the metal trades council, machinists, boilermakers, carmen, moulders, stove-mounters, polishers, blacksmiths and trackmen's locals, a committee was struck off to draw up this letter to you defining our views on the eight-hour Bill and the amendments thereto.

We ask you as our representative to use your every effort to have Mr. Verville's Bill in it's original form. We consider that the manner in which this Bill has been mutilated by the Minister of Labour, who is supposed to be working in the interests of the workers of Canada, is a direct insult to us as a whole, and to Mr. Verville in particular as our representative labour member of parliament.

It appears to us as if the government wanted to get their caricature of a Bill through the House, in Mr. Verville's name, to be handed down as a specimen of labour legislature by a labour member.

Such legislation as the amended Bill promises to be is disgusting the workers here, and if there is a three-cornered fight at the next election we can thank the politicians who persist in ignoring the rights of the workers, who are beginning fast to realize they are the majority.

Committee, D. A. Bain, Wm. Simpson, John McPhail, George Humphrey.

(Sgd.) W. J. HAMMOND.

Mr. KING. Will the hon. member say who drafted that communication?

Mr. THOBURN. It is drafted by the Trades and Labour Council of Carleton Place.

Mr. KING. I understand that they passed it, but can the hon. gentleman say who wrote out the resolution?

Mr. THOBURN. The names of the committee appear upon the resolution as I have read it. Now, in the face of such evidence as this, I can only say that if the hon. member for Maisonneuve will introduce his original Bill, I shall have great pleasure in voting for it ; but I am bound to vote against the Bill in its present emasculated form.

Mr. COWAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE BILLS—QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

Mr. SPEAKER. Upon the motion, yesterday, by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River for leave to introduce a Bill intituled an Act to amend chapter 139, 4 and 5, Edward VII., intituled 'An Act respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited,' I stated that I would to-day give a more extensive opinion upon his right to introduce the Bill as a public measure.

Upon a careful perusal of the proposed Bill I find that it is composed entirely of amendments to sections of the Act incorporating the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, the main provisions being as follows :

To compel the company to provide further plans and execute additional work and carry out any new works required by such authority as may have jurisdiction on the Rainy river at or near Fort Frances, and that if, upon the application of the town or otherwise, it appears that the company has executed any work not approved by the Governor in Council the company shall, if directed, carry out any work or make any change required, and also with regard to the flow of water through the works of the company, the supply of power and energy, and the regulation of the methods and conditions under which the same shall be furnished and the prices therefor. And, further, that the company shall deliver, in Canada, a stated proportion of the total power delivered by them, and that the town of Fort Frances may, if a resolution of its council represents that the determination of the quantity of power, prices, conditions and manner of service of electrical power and energy is important in the interests of the town, apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners, which shall determine such application.

As to whether certain portions of the Bill are, or are not, properly the subject of a public Act is not necessary for me to determine, but upon the extracts from the Bill which I have just given I would state the following opinions from authorities. It is stated by Bourinot, 3rd edition, page 706, that:

Private Bills are distinguished from public Bills in that they directly relate to the affairs of private individuals or of corporate bodies, and not to matters of public policy or to the community in general.

And at page 728:

'Bills from the corporations of towns and municipal bodies, generally, are always treated as private Bills when they desire special legislation affecting their property or interests.

And on page 729, Bourinot states as follows:

As a rule, it may be stated that when Bills treat of matters of general policy, such as sanitary, or police, or commercial, or fiscal regulations, they may be considered as public measures. In fact, all Bills affecting the general interests of the community, and involving considerations of public policy, are out of the category of private Bills dealing with the special interests of corporations or associations.

May 6th edition, page 626, says:

Every Bill for the particular interest or benefit of any person or persons, is treated as a private Bill. Whether it be for the interest of an individual, a public company or corporation, a parish, a city, a county, or other locality, it is equally distinguished from a measure of public policy, in which the whole community are interested.

Even in England the most extreme case in which a Bill affecting local interests has been admitted as a public Bill is in the case of the metropolis of London, where such Bills have frequently been held to be public Bills by reason of the large area and vast population and the variety of interests concerned, thus constituting them measures of public policy rather than of local interest.

This cannot be said to be the present case.

Ilbert's Legislative Methods and Forms (1901), at page 28 says:

A private Bill is a measure for the interest of some person or class of persons, whether an individual, a corporation, or the inhabitants of a county, town, parish or other locality, and originates on the petition of the person or persons interested. A public Bill is introduced as a measure of public policy in which the whole community is interested, and originates on the motion of some member of the House in which the Bill is introduced.

And on page 30:

Bills relating to particular localities only are, as a rule, treated as private Bills.

In view of the nature of the Bill proposed by the hon. member, and of the precedents (among which are those which I have already quoted) I must hold that the Bill is a private Bill, and must be introduced as such and must comply with the rules of the House respecting private Bills.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

BRIDGE ACROSS HUMBER RIVER, TORONTO.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Has the Grand Trunk Railway Company submited to the government or to the Minister of Railways and Canals plans for the erection of a new bridge across the mouth of the Humber river at Toronto?

2. If so, is it true that such bridge is only about 19 feet above the water, and contains abutments encroaching upon the river banks, and at least one pier in the middle of the stream, 15 feet wide by 80 feet long, which is said to be more in the nature of a dam than a pier?

3. Is the government aware that such a structure would practically dam up the river and cause water and ice to back up and ruin the banks and trees, &c., thereon?

4. Is the government aware that the Humber river is now a navigable stream from Lake Ontario to Bloor street, a distance of something over 2 miles, and the valley is about to become the site of a system of parks and driveways for the city of Toronto?

5. Has the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries been called to the fact that the erection of such a structure would be placing an obstruction in a navigable stream?

*Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not a written answer to this question, but I think I can give all the information which the hon. gentleman desires. The Grand Trunk Railway Company has applied to my department for the approval of the plans of a bridge across the Humber river, and they have also applied to the Board of Railway Commissioners for approval. From the fact that the company has applied to my department for approval, the application being made under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, I would assume that they are of opinion that the river is navigable. I have a communication from the city of Toronto to its solicitors and also from the solicitors of certain gentlemen who are interested in property along the banks of the Humber river, desiring to be heard. I have an application also from the company asking me to name an early date for the hearing, and I propose to do so and then to notify the city of Toronto and the solicitors for the gentlemen interested, so that all parties can have an opportunity of being heard.

'CANADA'S FARTHEST SOUTH,' PRINTING OF PAMPHLET.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. What was the cost of printing and preparing the pamphlet entitled 'Canada's Farthest South,' as published by the Minister of the Interior?

2. What amount of money was paid to H. A. Kennedy, of the London 'Times' staff for preparing same?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Cost of printing, $974.57. Cost of preparation answered by No. 2.

2. $255.50.

TARIFF ON FISH.

Mr. JAMESON:

1. On tariff schedule A, of January 26, 1911, articles free of duty, item 14, which reads: 'Fish of all kinds, fresh, frozen, packed in ice, salted or preserved in any form, except sardines and other fish preserved in oil; and shell fish of all kinds, including oysters, lobsters and clams in any state, fresh or packed, and coverings of the foregoing,' does the expression 'coverings of the foregoing' apply to and include the cans, packages, cases and coverings in which all classes of fish mentioned are contained?

2. Under item 15 of said schedule, which reads 'seal, herring, whale and other fish oil, including cod oil,' are the containers in which said oils are shipped, free of duty?

3. In a former tariff treaty, made with the United States, affecting Canada, were Canadian fish allowed free admission in the United States, and the cans, packages, cases and coverings, or any of them, containing same, held to be dutiable?

4. Were fish oils allowed free admission to the United States, and the containers thereof held to be liable to duty?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. There was some difficulty in former years as to the taxation of packages when the contents thereof were free.

4. I have not been able to ascertain whether the difficulty of former years applied to fish oil.

KINGSTON MILITARY FEED CONTRACTS.

Mr. EDWARDS:

To whom was the contract awarded for the supplying hay, straw and oats for the batteries at Kingston, and at what prices?

Mr. MURPHY. To Charles Donoghue at: $10 per ton for hay, $6.50 per ton for straw, 45 cents per bushel for oats.

PRINTING DONE BY 'GLOBE' NEWSPAPER

Mr. GRAHAM. I have been asked by the Toronto 'Globe' to make a correction in a matter which somewhat relates to my department, and the briefest way to do so is to read this despatch:—

The 'Globe' has received from the Dominion government, including the Intercolonial railway, during the past three years an average of $8,500 per annum. Three papers here report Mr. Lennox as stating in the House that we receive $80,000 per annum.

(Sgd.) JOHN F. MACKAY.

APPOINTMENT OF CENSUS OFFICIALS.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to ask the government whether they are now appointing the census commissioners?

Mr. FIELDING. I am aware, from communications which I have had with the Minister of Agriculture, that he is receiving applications for appointment as census commissioners. I do not know whether any have been officially appointed or not, but I know that he is collecting names for that purpose.

SUPPLY—DAMMING THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I would like to call the attention of the government to proceedings which are now pending before the United States Congress for conferring powers upon a company which proposes to construct a dam across the River St. Lawrence near what is known as the Long Sault. We have in Canada what may be fairly described as the greatest system of inland waterways in the world, and every one of us, I think, realizes that the River St. Lawrence is not only an important, but a vital portion of that system of waterways. The Prime Minister is no doubt thoroughly aware that under the treaty between Great Britain and the United States which was negotiated and ratified in 1842, it was provided by article VII. as follows:

It is further agreed that the channels in the River St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault islands and of Barnhart island, the channels in the River Detroit, on both sides of the Island Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the Canadian and American shores, and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the River St. Clair with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of both parties.

So that the channels of the River St. Lawrence, from shore to shore, at the particular point which I have mentioned, are, under the terms of this treaty, to remain forever open to both nations. The country was rather disturbed by a proposal which was brought before this House during the last session of parliament, to grant to certain gentlemen authority to construct that portion of the dam across the River St Lawrence which would lie in Canadian waters.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was no such proposal as that before parliament last session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I have an entirely different recollection in that regard from that of my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has not read the Bill, I am afraid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I read the Bill and debated it. The hon. gentleman is very ready to rise and interrupt and contradict. He is no more correct on this occasion than he has been on several occasions in the immediate past. The proposal that was laid before parliament last session involved the damming of the River St. Lawrence, according to my opinion of what that proposal really meant. I shall not go over that argument again. I stated my apprehension of what the proposal was at the time. The mere fact that the hon. gentleman entertains a different view of the proposal does not justify him in making the flat contradiction which he did a moment ago.

The legislature of the state of New York passed an Act, I do not know just at what date, which confers certain powers upon a company that had been organized in the United States. I believe that the real promoter of that measure is a very wealthy and powerful company in the United States called the Aluminium Company. The state of New York was not able to give to the promoters the complete powers which they desired, and there is now a Bill before the Congress of the United States which is designed to round out and complete the powers, so that this company may have absolute authority, so far as the state of New York and the Congress of the United States can give it, to dam the River St. Lawrence. I appreciate thoroughly, of course, the fact that we retain jurisdiction over our own portion of the bed of the River St. Lawrence, notwithstanding anything that the Congress of the United States may enact. This company proposes to develop about 500,000 horse-power. That is to be developed for purely manufacturing purposes, and I find in the measure a reasonable enough provision, if it were to go through, that at least half of this power shall be for use in the United States, and that no more than half of the total power generated by the complete works shall be employed or used in Canada. The Bill now before Congress has been opposed by a great many Canadian interests, as I am informed. I find, from a brief which has been filed in opposition to this Bill, that memorials have been filed before the Committee of Congress by the International Waterways Commission, the board of trade of the city of Toronto, the Dominion Marine Association, the Montreal board of trade, La Chambre de Commerce du District of Montreal, the Commission for Conservation of Canada, the Ontario government by its attorney I. Hillard, K.C., and Geo. C. Bolt, for the New York Board of Trade, all in opposition to the Bill. The Bill proposes, as I understand from this brief—because I have not been able to secure an authentic copy of the Bill except so far as it has been published in the press of the country—in the first place, a channel and a lock on the American side, and, in the next place, a complete dam across both channels. Of course, it is realized that authority to construct that portion of the dam across the Canadian portion of the channel must come from this parliament. The project includes all that, and this company has obtained from the state of New York and is in process of obtaining from the Congress of the United States the authority that will enable it by and by to come to this parliament and say, we now invite you to give us authority to make this connecting link for the purpose of developing this enormous power. I was rather struck by one sentence in the report of the Committee of Congress which had this Bill under consideration. That committee has favourably reported upon the Bill, and it now stands in Congress upon that favourable report. One sentence in that report I may quote as informing this House and this country of one powerful reason why that Bill has commended itself to the Committee of Congress. That sentence is this; the proposal of the company to furnish a suitable channel for commerce entirely in American territory. The dam will go completely across the river, from shore to shore, and the proposal is that the channel shall be entirely in American territory, the suggestion being that this will be a very much more advantageous situation for the people of the United States than that which exists at the present time.

Now this company undertakes to do very wonderful things. In the preamble of this Bill now before Congress it is said that, among other things, it is for the purpose of improving the navigaton of the St. Lawrence; and in the first section of the Bill there is the declaration that the purposes of the corporation include the permanent improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence at above or below such place. The government of Canada up to the present has followed the policy, and I hope will persevere in it, that the navigation of the St. Lawrence is of such paramount importance that it ought not to be confided to private interests, but should be kept absolutely under the control of the people as represented by parliament. But it appears that the navigation of that river shall be confided in a certain measure at least, to the great and powerful company which is behind those proposals. I do not propose to go at any length into the dangers of the Bill now before the American Congress; but I may say, quoting from the brief which has been filed in opposition to that Bill, that Mr. John Kennedy, of Montreal, a very skilful and experenced engineer, appeared as a witness on behalf of the Montreal Board of Harbour Commissioners. Mr. Kennedy is an engineer of very well known ability, character and experience. He lives upon the St. Lawrence and has made it a life study, more particularly as regards its navigation, and he did not hesitate to express the opinion that the project, upon the facts disclosed, would result in an impairment of navigation instead of an improvement. Two captains and pilots, who have been engaged for years in the navigation of the St. Lawrence, both upon freight and passenger vessels, joined in expressing the same opinion. The brief goes on further to state that the experience of the Canadian government in an energetic effort to improve navigation at the Galop rapids, is conclusive demonstration of the fact that it is impossible to tell in advance what effect an obstruction of this kind would have on the navigation of that river:

> The Canadian government, under the advice of its best engineers, expended $1,100,000 in an attempt to improve navigation at the Galop rapids for the last few years.

And I am merely quoting the brief when I say that the experiment has not proved a very great success and has not justified the anticipations which were formed with regard to it. Now it is stated further in this brief, and I commend this to the House as an opinion to which some weight might be attached:

> It is impossible for either engineers or pilots to state precisely what the result of the project would be as to navigation. The probabilities only can be suggested. The project once authorized, the investment once made, if the result is disastrous to navigation, the public will have to bear it, except on the condition of reimbursing the company for its investments.

Further than that, this proposal is said by the report of this commission to be probably subject—in all probability subject—to the sanction of the International Waterways Commission. It is perfectly true that one clause of the Bill does expressly state, according to the press report, that the said Long Sault Development Company, its successors and assignees shall be subject to the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relative to the boundary waters between the United States and Canada, proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 13th July, 1910. But is not made expressly subject to the provision of the Ashburton treaty, and the provisions of that treaty are much more vitally important to the people in that regard than are the provisions of the treaty to which allusion is made in the Bill now before Congress. The danger of ice dams is also pointed out in this brief, but as that was discussed last year, I shall not go into it to-day except to say that it is one which ought not to be lost sight of by the government.

I have spoken so far altogether of the danger which may result to our great system of inland waterways, but it seems to me there is possibly another aspect which should not be lost sight of. We know the importance of our water-powers to-day in Canada, and we shall realize more thoroughly in years to come their exceeding great value. They are not like supplies of coal and iron and other natural resources of this country, which are dissipated in the user. Our water-powers are permanent and enduring, and their value is likely to be much greater in the future. What are we to do with them? Should we preserve them for the benefit of the whole people of Canada or hand them over to the control of a great private corporation and an alien corporation at that? I think it would be madness for this country to consent to the latter alternative. I go further. When a project of this kind has been put forward on the other side of the line and has already received the sanction of the state of New York and is now asking the sanction of Congress, this government, not only on account of the danger of the impairment of the navigation of the St. Lawrence and our system of inland waterways, but for the purpose of protecting the great water-powers of this country and seeing that they are developed in the interests of the whole people, ought to take energetic measures to make known their views in this regard. The development of these water-powers, if ever undertaken, should only be undertaken subject to the paramount importance of our system of inland waterways. If it can be undertaken without the slightest danger of impairment to that great system, it ought to be undertaken by or under the control of this government so that these natural resources of immense value now, and of infinitely greater value in the future, should be conserved for the benefit of the whole people of Canada. Therefore I thought it right to bring these facts to the notice of parliament, even in this very brief and somewhat fragmentary way, and to ask the government whether in the first place they have taken any steps, or propose to take any, to safeguard the interests of navigation, and in the second place to make it perfectly plain that this country does not intend to commit itself to any scheme by which these enormously valuable natural resources shall be handed over to a private corporation?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Every one is aware that this is a subject regarding which, ever since it has been called to the attention of the country, there is quite a serious nervousness in public opinion as to the consequences which might flow from the intended works to which my hon. friend has just alluded. In fact I believe that the nervousness existing has been beyond the cause—natural and legitimate as it was—and what should have been the effect of such a cause. I believe that in many instances it has prejudged the opinion even of members of the House. And in this I would not exclude even my hon. friend, because, if I understood him aright, he has just expressed again the opinion which he expressed last session, that the Bill had the effect of authorizing the damming of the St. Lawrence. My opinion is different from that expressed by my hon. friend. Reading the Bill in cold blood, whatever may have been intended afterwards, it seems clear that the effect of the Bill of last session was simply to authorize a transmission line and nothing else.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am speaking of the Bill as introduced.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Even the Bill as introduced, I think I am right in saying, related to a transmission line only. But my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and many other members of the House saw in this transmission line Bill something nefarious, they saw a scheme to block the St. Lawrence. And even in the observations my hon. friend has just addressed to the House, he shows that he still looks upon this measure as implying the damming of the St. Lawrence from shore to shore. Speaking for myself, at all events, before the government of the day would agree to such a proposal there would be very ample discussion in this House and a good deal more information than we have upon the matter at the present time. I understand that the men, especially in the city of Montreal, who are primarily interested in this question, seek to block this measure at every step because they fear that the ultimate object is to throw a bar across the St. Lawrence from shore to shore.

The Bill to which my hon. friend referred a moment ago was first introduced in the legislature of the state of New York and passed. It was afterwards introduced in the federal legislature at Washington and has, I understand, taken its preliminary stages. So far as I am aware—and, at present, my information concerning it is simply from the public prints—it deals only with the southern channel—

Mr. REID (Grenville). The South Sault.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That channel is undoubtedly in American territory. Now, let us take the first step in this matter.

The channel is in American territory; my understanding of international law is that a sovereign power has the right, in the case of an international stream such as this, to place upon its own shore of that stream all works which it deems for its own advantage, being limited alone by the necessity, as in this case particularly, of not doing anything which would affect navigation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would not the damming of the South Sault impair navigation?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not the question at the present time; I am considering only the principle of international law. The Americans, as I understand it, have the right to use that stream in any way they please, but they are not to do anything to impair navigation.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Under treaty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. That is the general principle of international law, but is still more true in this case because of the treaty of 1842. But, Sir, if a nation under such circumstances, does anything which, in the opinion of the nation on the other side of the stream, impairs navigation, who is to decide? Under international law there is no tribunal to settle the point whether it is or is not an impairment of navigation; and the only remedy under such circumstances would be for the party who thinks that the work does impair navigation to appeal to the honour and honesty of the other side.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The Ashburton treaty covers that point fairly. It states there must be 'free navigation,' so the sovereign right of the United States is given up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I said. But I was pointing out that if the United States puts up a work on its side of the stream which in our opinion, impairs navigation but in their opinion does not impair navigation, who is to decide? If it were a provincial or national stream in our own territory, the matter would go before the courts. But the hon. gentleman knows that, while we have principles of international law well known and generally recognized by the nations, there is, up to this moment, no tribunal to see to the observance of these principles. The only arbitrament we have is that of war. But we can do this,—we can protest and appeal to the other side and represent that this is an interference with our treaty rights.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would not the Ashburton treaty cover that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is not the Ashburton treaty the last arbitration treaty—yes ; I was just coming, or had just come to that. While nations generally have no arbitrament in such matters we have constituted a tribunal to cover these points. So, this law of Congress, if it passes, would be passed over our protest, and the matter must be submitted to the court we have constituted under the Waterways treaty.

I may say that we on our side of the St. Lawrence have erected works, which, to some extent may interfere with navigation, but not to such an extent as to cause remonstrance on the other side?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where are these?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that the dam at Sheik island is one. I do not know to what extent it may interfere with navigation, but in some respects, it is beneficial. No protest has been made. I put this by way of illustration. We have taken it upon ourselves to disturb the channel as nature made it.

When we heard of this Bill being introduced at Washington, we put ourselves into communication with the British ambassador to remonstrate; and correspondence is going on now upon the subject. I expect that we shall have an official copy of the Bill at a very early day. I may say that I was informed that the Bill reported from the committee in charge of the same is considerably different from the Bill as introduced. However that may be, we have taken steps to have the whole correspondence laid before us, and as soon as we receive it it will be our duty at once to lay it before the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have the government consulted in this matter with the government of Ontario or the Hydro-Electric Commission?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, we have not come to the point of consulting anybody. We have not the measure before us.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the intention to consult——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will decide that when we have the Bill.

Mr. BRODER. Apparently, the International Waterways Commission, under the treaty, will have a great deal of power in deciding this matter. If they decide it, will that put it beyond the power of this House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am afraid that the question of works to be constructed in the United States is beyond the jurisdiction of this House.

Mr. BRODER. But they know that under the treaty they cannot affect the height of the water on the other side without having the approval of both countries. So if they dammed the Sault, and it had the effect of raising the height of water on the Canadian side, we would have something to say about it What I wanted to know is if this commission took the matter up and decided that a dam there was permissible, would this parliament cease to have any control over the subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a question of law. I would not be prepared to say.

Mr. BRODER. A very important question. There is one thing we must consider. There is no American interest that would suffer at all if this approval was granted. The only interests to suffer on either side are Canadian interests. You cannot put your finger on a single solitary American interest but that would gain by damming the river there. Now, look at the condition of things in the New England states. The large manufacturing centres that have been using water-power, and where they have denuded the country of timber, now find that a continuous water supply is failing them. There exists now a great deal of apprehension in the eastern states in manufacturing districts on this very point. The whole object of this undertaking is, if possible, to get control of that river for the development of electrical power, and to transmit that power to all that eastern section of the country, where the larger manufacturing centres of the United States exist. Now, we know that if they get control of that power and transmit it to these centres to build up their manufactories, it will be impossible for Canada ever to get back their share of that power, if they once let it go. Now these are questions certainly of vital interest to the Canadian people. I speak from a local knowledge of the circumstances. We know that engineers, with all their intelligence, sometimes make great mistakes; they have made great mistakes in this country within a short time. No one can tell what effect that dam might have upon the general interest of navigation in this country; we do not know anything about it. It seems to me that if a commission is to be allowed to deal with this matter, they should have at least the most thorough knowledge of the local conditions before they do anything. I live in a locality that will be seriously affected by this dam, at least that is the apprehension, and for that reason I did not wish to allow this matter to pass without saying something.

Mr. TURRIFF. There is one phase of this question that has not been touched on. When it was up for discussion a year ago, it was pointed out that in 1901 this House gave the St. Lawrence Power Company authority to dam the St. Lawrence river at this particular point. That company was partly Canadian and partly American, but afterwards the charter was assigned to a totally American company. All that company require at the present time is the approval of the Minister of Public Works to the plans that they may submit to this government, in order to enable them to build a dam across the St. Lawrence river at this point. It was stated by one of the men interested in the Bill that was before the House last year, that they were going to get the authority, they were going to build a dam, and they would give Canada 90 days in which to take up one-half the power, and if it was not taken up within that period, the whole power would be sent to New York, the idea being to send it to New York city. What I would like to be sure about is that this company cannot get the right to dam the St. Lawrence by getting the approval and authority of the present Waterways Commission. I would like to have the assurance of the Prime Minister that was given last year, that before anything is done on that line to enable this company, or any other company, to dam the St. Lawrence, before any plans are approved, or authority is given, there shall be an opportunity for ample discussion of the whole matter in the House of Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Perhaps we had better get a clear understanding of the position we are in. What are our legal rights in reference to this matter? The hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Turriff) says that in 1901 power was given by this parliament to some company to dam the river. My contention is that under the Ashburton treaty no government in this country can give power to a private company to do anything of the kind; that power must come directly from the parliament of Canada. Have we the right to delegate all our powers to this International Waterways Commission? I saw it stated when the Bill was introduced in the United States that this legislation must be subject to the approval of the International Commission. Have we given our powers to that commission that we exercise under the Ashburton treaty? If we have, then that commission have the power of approval of a project to erect the construction provided for by that Bill. As I understand the agreement between the two governments, they have both given to this International Commission the approval of works of this kind. I need not dwell upon the necessity of this work, I spoke upon it before in the House. I have a strong view that this spot is perhaps one of the most beautiful in Canada, and it ought to be preserved to the people of Canada for all generations. Its value to Canadians from an aesthetic point of view will be greater than its value as a source of electrical power. How much the proposition will interfere with navigation, we know not. I think perhaps improvements could be made on that stream of such a character that they would not interfere with the use of the river for navigation. But I protest as a Canadian against the damming of the river at that beautiful spot, and using it solely as a purpose of acquiring wealth. My ideas may be perhaps not sufficiently utilitarian, not up to the ideals of the present day, but such as they are I gave them to the House. I did not know that the Act passed by this House in 1901 had the wide power the hon. gentleman says it had. I do not remember any such Bill passing the House, I doubt very much if it gave such power. It may be a Bill empowering them to do some kind of work, but I do not think there is anything on our statute-book transferring this property absolutely to them. The control of that is entirely in our hands. We have not interfered with the navigation in any way on our side. We have improved the navigation. The erection of the Sheik's island dam for the purpose of improving navigation has interfered in no way with any right that the Americans had under the Ashburton treaty. It was improving and utilizing the river for the purpose of navigation and not for the purpose of interfering with it at all. That is a right which we have exercised from time immemorial and can. Finally, let us keep that, one of the beauty spots of the country, for the benefit of the whole people of Canada, not devoting it to the utilitarian purpose of generating 500,000 or 600,000 horse-power, but keeping it to look upon, if for nothing else.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did I understand the Prime Minister to say that he had already protested to British Ambassador Bryce against the passage of this Bill in Washington?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We made representations—yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). With reference to the understanding of the Prime Minister that this is simply to dam what is called the South Sault, I have before me the Bill which was passed in New York state, and which is being confirmed in Washington, and they are asking for power.

To construct, maintain and operate for water-power and other purposes a dam or dams across the St. Lawrence river between points on the United States and Canadian shores of said river near Long Sault island, or Barnhart's island or Sheik's island.

Mr. LENNOX. And to the international boundary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). To the international boundary line. So, it is not through what is known as the South Sault. The Prime Minister also stated that we had practically violated the Ashburton treaty when we had built what is known as the Sheik's island dam.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that. I said that we had interfered with nature.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Sheik's island dam is below the head of the canal, so that there was no waterway. There might have been a little water running through but there was no navigation of any kind. The Ashburton treaty says that neither government must interfere with navigation between Sheik's island, and the American shore, and Sheik's island is on the Canadian side. If there had been navigation between Sheik's island and the Canadian shore we would have been interfering with the Ashburton treaty.

Mr. GRAHAM. What are the words of the Ashburton treaty?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). They are not just exactly as they are construed in this discussion. The words are as follows :

It is further agreed that the channels in the River St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault islands and of Barnhart island; the channels in the River Detroit on both sides of the Island Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the American and Canadian shores; and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the River St. Clair with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of both parties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is to say that in the Canadian channel the Americans have the right of navigation, and in the American channel the Canadians have the right of navigation.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Ashburton treaty says that the channels in the St. Lawrence river are free to both parties. There is not any channel on the other side of Sheik's island. The whole channel is at Long Sault and at Barnhart's island. This South Sault channel that they propose to dam is a navigable stream, and is used every day. It is the channel that freight boats are going down every day ; not very large freight boats, but steamers 100 feet long and 20 feet wide run down through there. They carry probably 100 tons. Then, the rafts all go down through the South Sault, and they have been running down there for fifty or one hundred years. The smaller pleasure steamers go down there. If they dam that channel, I understand the right hon. Prime Minister believes that the north side would then be all right for those large steamers like the Richelieu Navigation Company's steamers. But the damming of the South Sault is sure to raise the water many feet. I suppose the effect will be to raise it 40 feet. Thus, it will throw the water into the North Sault and spoil that channel. That is the impression of marine men. They have led the Prime Minister to believe that all they propose to do is to erect this dam but, once that channel is spoiled, you might as well let them go on and do as they like.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) understands the local conditions, and I would like him to explain. I understand that the Bill provides that this company shall have the right to extend dams as far northward as the international boundary line?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. That would cross over from the shore to Barnhart's island, and then to Long Sault island.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And then from Long Sault to Shiek's island.

Mr. LENNOX. And the international boundary is north of Sheik's island.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No Sheik's island is on the Canadian side.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, that would extend their dam as far north as Long Sault island before they would come to the international boundary?

Mr. REID (Grenville). It would extend it to Sheik's island dam which would be the international boundary.

Mr. LENNOX. The international boundary is south of Sheik's island.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. In doing that would they not be cutting off the only available channel there is now?

Mr. REID (Grenville). We would only have a small part of the stream. At that particular point where they want to construct the dam practically the whole of the river is on the American side. The South Sault is entirely on the American side.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is a question for the engineers as to what would be the effect of this work. The Bill which is now under consideration at Washington does not, as the hon. gentleman has stated quite incorrectly, provide for the creation of a dam from shore to shore, but only provides for a dam for the South Sault.

Mr. REID (Grenville).

Mr. LENNOX. A dam to the international boundary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps it would be to the international boundary.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I think the right hon. gentleman is mistaken. The Bill provides for a dam all the way across.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill as introduced in the state of New York provided for a dam from shore to shore, but we will know only when we have the Bill before us. My impression is that the present Bill which has been reported from the committee, and which has taken its first stage at Washington is for the building of a dam across the South Sault.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It also enables them to build from shore to shore. Here is the original Bill which was passed in New York state.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend is wrong, but we are interested in knowing what would be the effect of the damming of the South Sault, and that alone is quite sufficient to raise a discussion in order to know where we are with reference to it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Exactly, but this proposition to dam the South Sault is certainly a violation of the Ashburton treaty If we do not object to the damming of the South Sault we will certainly be allowing them to violate the Ashburton treaty without protest. I do not think that the United States Congress would pass a Bill which violates the Ashburton treaty if we notify them to that effect, and I think the Prime Minister in the name of Canada should enter his objection at once. If the Canadian government is silent our silence may be taken for consent. The Prime Minister knows that prominent Canadian lawyers have been engaged by this company to appear before Congress and I understand they have represented that this is satisfactory to the Canadian government, so that we should take measures not to leave them under any wrong impression about that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As reported in the press this company is authorized

To construct, maintain and operate for navigation, water-power and other purposes for 99 years a dam or dams in so much of the St. Lawrence river as lies south of the international boundary line between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, near Long Sault, Barnhart, and Sheik islands either independently or in connection with like works now erected or to be erected in so much of said river as lies north of said international boundary line, with a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto and a lock or locks, a canal or canals, and other structures appurtenant thereto.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, if that be true it is plain that the Prime Minister misunderstands the nature of the Bill before Congress. I shall send a copy of this over to the Prime Minister and I trust a protest will be entered by him. I am quite satisfied that the right hon. gentleman is as anxious as I am to protect our great waterway system, and if he has been misled as to the intentions of these people he should at once communicate with the authorities at Washington so as to stop this Bill going through Congress.

Mr. C. A. MAGRATH (Medicine Hat). I wish to say a few words in connection with this matter, not from any sentimental reason as expressed by the hon. member for South Lanark, but because it appears to me there is a principle involved in this question which should be settled by the Canadian parliament. I am opposed to the damming of the St. Lawrence river and I believe it to be in the interests of the Canadian people that we should oppose it. Last year we had a discussion extending over several hours on this matter, and it was then stated to the House that certain interests had applied to the government to be permitted to dam the river; that they had submitted certain plans, that the government sent three engineers to the place to examine the situation, and, that these engineers reported against the project. I understand the idea was to build a dam some 50 feet high so as to create about 600,000 horse-power. Then those interests came back to the government about a year afterwards with amended plans and the same engineers were sent to report upon the amended scheme and they reported it to be satisfactory. What struck me in examining the reports of those engineers is that they looked at the matter purely from the standpoint of the feasibility of erecting a dam and creating that quantity of horse-power without doing damage to the immediate neighbourhood, but, what I should like to have seen brought out by the engineers was the economic value of the project to the people of Canada. That point was not touched upon as it should be. I do hope that our engineers when acting for the people of Canada would in dealing with such questions take into consideration the economic side of the question. The question arises: Do we need the development of 300,000 horse-power on the St. Lawrence near the city of Montreal. I say we do not. I believe there is sufficient water-power in the immediate neighbourhood of this city to supply the needs of the people of eastern Canada for many years to come. If we had a proper inventory of our water-powers and if we had any authority who could tell us the needs of this country at the end of the next 100 years, and should it be discovered that we have sufficient power for our own purposes and some to spare, I would be willing to join in obliging our neighbours. But, when we have private interests coming here asking for the right to dam the St. Lawrence river, insistent applicants who will return year after year, it is high time for the government to lay down the policy that the St. Lawrence river is not to be touched so far as the Canadian side is concerned. I should like to hear the government announce that they will not join in any movement to dam that great waterway from the American to the Canadian side. The St. Lawrence river is one of the scenic routes of the world; its scenery to-day is one of the assets of the country, and it will become a more valuable asset as time rolls on. The scenic beauty of the St. Lawrence is now a valuable asset to the cities of Montreal, Quebec, and Toronto, and we should not lose sight of the fact that apparently it is of no corresponding value to cities on the other side of the line. However, that may be, I have never yet heard it stated that the people of Canada need the power which it is proposed to secure by damming the St. Lawrence river at this place. Last year the Minister of Public Works announced that if the river should be dammed he would see that Canada received one-half the power. I go further than the minister; I do not lose sight of the fact that we have 7,000,000 people in Canada as compared with 90,000,000 in the United States, and my doctrine is: Equal division yielding equal benefits. That is the doctrine we should insist upon, and so far as I am concerned, if these very persistent private interests have got the government committed in any way to the damming of the St. Lawrence; then, we should take care that for every 500 horse-power taken out on the American side the same amount should be taken out in Canada and put to beneficial uses here. That is the doctrine I believe in. I submit, however, in the interest of the country that the St. Lawrence river should be left alone so far as Canada is concerned.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I speak with a good deal of hesitation on this question as I cannot attempt to deal with anything that has been said on either side to-day, but I have followed with the closest possible attention everything which, up to the present time, has been said in this House either last year or this year referring to this matter. It is inevitable, I suppose that I should look at this subject very largely from the lawyer's standpoint, but while I know that is so, I am consoled by the reflection that it is very seldom indeed that good law is not good sense; and in whatever I have to say in the matter, I hope hon. gentlemen will do me the justice to believe that I am not trying to lay down the law at all, but that I want merely such views as I have on the subject to be treated by my fellow members just according to the amount of sense that they think there is behind them. The question here properly concerns our international relations with the United States, and in that sense is one, I take it, of international law. But while we use the phrase 'international law,' understanding very well what we mean by it, I think we ought always to remember that, after all, there is no one competent to say with any authority, what international law is, or what it requires. There are no statutes, no enactments of parliament, defining what is the law of nations; there is no court, no judge, who can authoritatively declare this or that or the other principle to be one which nations must regard; and we are driven, in endeavouring to see what are the rights of peoples as a matter of international law, back to the relations which exist between individuals in the same community and governed by the same law. Now, if you think of the situation of this river, apart from any international agreements, but simply as a matter of what this country could do about it if the United States saw fit to place any obstruction in a channel of the river which is wholly within their territory, I think it is manifest that we should be practically helpless, exactly as, if the facts were reversed and Canada were proposing to erect any dam or obstruction in a channel of the river which was wholly Canadian, the United States would be practically helpless to prevent it. The most that could be done by either nation would be in the way of expostulation to the other —representations that you ought not to do this, that it is not fair or right that you should. As a matter of fact, we have international agreements to which we can refer and appeal, if we can satisfy either ourselves or our neighbours that any transgression of these agreements is being contemplated. But in the absence of such agreements, there would be no security even to what we regard as the paramount right of navigation, much less any means practically existing by which, if a proposed work in the United States were going to damage property in Canada, or a proposed work in Canada were going to damage property in the United States, the country which feared the damage, could prevent that damage being done. But it is always founded upon the circumstance that there will be damage. Suppose this stream were all in one country; suppose that the International boundary had been fixed on the 44th parallel instead of the 45th, so that all the territory in question would be in Canada; and, to avoid any complication, let us assume it all to lie in the one province of Ontario. Now, what would be the right even in law or in equity, of a man who owned property on the north shore of the river as against the people on the south shore, who might be wanting to do the very thing which is proposed to be done in this instance? That right would simply be—in the sense of the thing surely—would be that if the proposed work were going to damage the man on the north shore, the courts would stop it. He has a right to have the natural level of the water preserved as it passes his land. If he is going to be flooded by the proposed work, or if the level is going to be lowered to his damage, he can prevent it if he goes to the court and takes proper steps to do so. So that at the basis of the whole right, in honesty or sense, to make any objection, there lies the hypothesis that damage is going to be done, that the level of the water is going to be changed to some man's detriment. And that is equally the basis of any reasonable ground of expostulation by one country to another, if conditions exist such as are said to be found in this case. If it is reasonably manifest that the effect of putting this proposed obstruction in the United States channel of the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault will raise the level or lower the level on the Canadian side, to the detriment of Canadian property owners, there is a reasonable ground for expostulation; and, happily in this instance, by reason of treaty arrangements, there is more than that. There is a basis upon which objection can be taken on our part that would certainly be effective. But unless there is plainly going to be such damage, there is no ground to object. Nobody is hurt, and there would be no foundation for an objection or expostulation, if we made it.

Now, let me ask hon. gentlemen to think of the situation on the ground at this place. We all know more or less about it, from our general knowledge of the geography of the country. I happen to have the advantage of personal knowledge by having been all over Sheik's island on foot and having examined this very locality. We have the main channel of the St. Lawrence and two islands in the channel—Sheik's island, wholly Canadian, the Long Sault island, wholly in the United States; the boundary running in the main channel between the two islands; the United States island up-stream, but the two islands overlapping each other, for a considerable portion of their length, a channel between the United States island and the mainland of New York state, and a channel, when things were in a state of nature, between the north side of Sheik's island and the mainland of the county of Stormont. Canada has interfered with the natural condition of things at this point. It has not left the natural channel between Sheik's island and the mainland of Ontario open, as it was in a state of nature. Canada, for its own purposes, has had a dam built at the upper end of Sheik's island, which prevents the inflow into the natural channel of any water from the Long Sault rapids. Canada has appropriated that natural channel between Sheik's island and the mainland of Ontario as a part of its Cornwall canal for the purposes of navigation and incidentally for the creating of water-power, because at the lower end of Sheik's island is another dam and the surplus water forms a mill-pond which is used for the purpose of creating power. I have never heard that Canada consulted the United States before interfering in that way with the natural condition of things at that point. Any one in Canada would have said to such a proposition: What have the United States to do about it? We are not proposing to alter the level on their side, we are not going to do them any harm, we are simply utilizing our own property, and we think we can make better use of it than by leaving it in its natural state.

Have we any more right to protest or expostulate with the United States if they propose to use the channel on their side for their own purposes and in the manner which to them may seem best? I cannot see how, either as a matter of international law, or private law, or reason, or common sense we could do so. Some company, I understand, proposes to build a dam at the foot of the channel on the American side between their island and their mainland in New York state. What is going to be the effect? Of course it will interfere with navigation at once unless, as I understand is intended by the scheme, the interests of navigation are to be protected by the construction in the dam of a lock, making the dam in that way not an impediment, but actually an advantage to navigation. The effect then will be to create a mill pond above the dam between the United States island and the main shore of New York state. If the dam is not constructed so high that it will back the water around the upper end of the United States island, but will still, notwithstanding its presence at the foot of that channel, leave the level in the mill pond not as high as the water at the head of the island, it is surely manifest there can be no effect on the level on the Canadian side. I fully concede that the moment a dam at the foot of this island is made higher than the level of water at the head of the island, it will flood the channel and interfere with the level on the Canadian side. There would be ground for expostulation, for more than expostulation, under existing treaties, if that dam were built high enough to raise the level higher than the upper end of the United States island and thus affect the level on the Canadian side. But are we to assume that this dam will be of such a height? I cannot assume it. On what ground would we have the right to do so? The interest of the parties desiring to build the dam, according to their statement, can be perfectly well served by the building of a dam which is not high enough to back the water around the upper end of the island, and if they are limited by their charter to the construction of a dam which will not back the water above the head of the island, they cannot affect the Canadian shore, and the interests of navigation are the only things to be considered.

That is exactly the situation under the existing treaties. The right of navigation is paramount and that right is secured. That right exists in this United States channel which it is proposed to dam, just as it exists in the old channel between Sheik's island and the mainland of Ontario which is to-day utilized as part of our Cornwall canal. The right of navigation is secured by treaty and is not proposed to be interfered with. On the contrary, it is proposed to be helped according to the plans of the promoters, and unless the right of navigation is interfered with, or the level altered on our own side, we have, under existing treaties, no cause to object.

I do not think much is to be gained by going back to the terms of the Ashburton treaty because we have a new treaty on this very subject which goes further, which governs this very situation, and which has been ratified by both countries and is in force to-day. Under the provisions of that treaty while it prohibits the construction of any obstructions in boundary waters except under certain circumstances, it impliedly gives permission to obstruct boundary waters. The provision of article three of the new Waterways treaty is to the effect that in addition to existing obstructions, no further obstructions, whether temporary or permanent, of boundary waters on either side of the line—and the whole river is a boundary water from main shore to main shore—no new obstruction on either side affecting the natural level or flow of the boundary waters on the other side of the line shall be made except by the authority of the United States or the Dominion of Canada, within their respective jurisdictions and with the approval of the International Joint Commission. Now the wording of that exception plainly implies that each country, within its own jurisdiction, has the right to authorize obstructions in waters such as these. No new obstructions, it says, shall be made affecting the natural level on the other side of the line except by the authority of the United States or the Dominion within their respective jurisdictions.

Mr. LENNOX. Does my hon. friend think that that provision which deals with the question of the height of water only, supersedes article seven of the Ashburton treaty? Does that provision, just read, supersede article seven of the Ashburton treaty? It does not seem to me that they refer to exactly the same thing.

Mr. GRAHAM. What is article 7?

Mr. LENNOX. The article my hon. friend has read, which provides that the channels of the St. Lawrence shall be equally free to the ships, boats and vessels of both parties.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I have no doubt that, whatever I say, I shall see tomorrow that I have not dealt, as I should like to deal, with what has been said by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox). But, dealing with it as far as I am able to do at the moment, I would by no means say that the provisions of the recent Waterways treaty supersede those of the Ashburton treaty. Surely both can well stand together, the Ashburton treaty securing equal freedom for purposes of navigation—that is, freedom equally to the inhabitants of one country and those of the other country—in the river which constitutes the boundary, and the recent treaty providing that no new obstruction shall be put anywhere along that river on either side of the line which will have the effect of raising the level on the other side of the line, except: First, with the authority of the government of the country in which the obstruction is to be placed, and, second, with the approval of the International Joint Commission. Now, that language, I say, implies that the government of each country has the right to authorize, if it sees fit, such an obstruction as will alter the level on the other side of the line, and that obstruction, when it has been authorized by the proper government, must also receive the approval of the International Joint Commission before it can be permitted—the two things must concur. The language implies that there is a right, without any infraction of treaty obligations, on the part of either Canada or the United States, to authorize such obstruction as may affect the level on the other side of the boundary if, in the judgment of the legislature of Canada or the United States, such obstruction is desirable. Now, we have a proposition in the Congress of the United States to authorize such an obstruction. It is entirely within their legal right; they are not infringing upon any treaty obligation by entertaining that proposition. But, if they see fit to authorize it, then, if it will affect the level on the Canadian side of the boundary, it must receive the approval of the International Joint Commission before it can be permitted. That is an additional safeguard which we have secured by entering into this recent treaty. But, without it, if we had no treaty at all, we should simply be in a position where, without anything to rely upon except the natural sense of justice which should be common to all people, we were seeking to protest or expostulate with the United States in what they were proposing to do. In the circumstances which exist, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be difficult for us to frame any line of diplomatic objection or remonstrance which would have any effective foundation. It could at once be answered by the United States that, under the terms of our treaty, we have the right to consider the advisability of doing this, and you are perfectly protected by the creation of this International Joint Commission upon which you are equally represented.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) stated that, under the Act of 1901, we had given the country the right to erect dams and utilize this power. Will the Minister of Justice please say whether he has seen this Act, and whether that statement is correct?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I do not know that I apprehend correctly the point the hon. gentleman from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has presented. There is a statute of 1901 to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Co. I have not examined it with any care, but, glancing over it as it has been handed to me, it appears to give power to the company to dam the St. Lawrence river—to what extent I am not able to say upon such cursory examination. I think it would be perfectly competent for the United States Congress on the one part and the Canadian parliament on the other, to authorize the construction of a dam in the St. Lawrence, each on its own side of the boundary, and joining at the boundary, if the two legislatures saw fit to do so. But such a structure would at once be obnoxious to the recent treaty, even if it would not be entirely opposed to the provisions of the Ashburton treaty, and such a structure could not have, under the recent treaty, the approval of the International Joint Commission, because not only would it be an obstruction to navigation, but it would have the effect of raising the level of the water on both sides of the boundary line.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What I wanted to know was whether this is merely an empowering Act, granting the company the power to build these works if they secured the right to do so, or whether it does give them the right to build the works and use the power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to call attention to the provision of the Act of 1901, which authorizes the erection of certain dams, but provides that before the work shall be commenced the plans must be submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). My question goes further than that. Has the country passed over to the company the right to utilize that power, or is this merely an Act enabling the company, when they get that power, to construct these works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is correct in the latter statement ; it authorizes the company to construct these works, provided they get the necessary approval of their plans by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are two distinct things. One is the conferring of corporate power upon the company to undertake this work, in other words, to declare that the undertaking of this work would be within their corporate powers. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) wants to know whether it is merely that, or whether it does not further actually invest this company with the authority of the parliament of Canada to do that work in the River St. Lawrence as far south as the boundary line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the latter statement would give the authority of the charter correctly. There is no doubt that parliament authorized the company to construct these works in the St. Lawrence ; but it provided that before they commenced any work they must have the approval of the Governor in Council of their plans. I understand, pursuant to that authority, the company did do certain work between Sheik's island and the mainland. I think I may take this opportunity of recalling to the memory of my hon. friend, as well as of other hon. gentlemen, that at the last session of parliament, when a Bill was introduced by my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee), a Bill not proposing, as my hon. friend from Halifax seemed to think, to give to the company which was then being incorporated any authority to dam the St. Lawrence, but merely creating a power transmission company, there was some anxiety upon the part of hon. members of this House with reference to the works, which the company incorporated some nine or ten years ago was authorized to carry on. The Prime Minister then gave the assurance to parliament that the government would not approve of any plans for further obstructing the St. Lawrence until the whole matter had first been submitted to parliament, and until the approval of parliament had been obtained. And further, a little later, when the Bill was under consideration, I myself drew an amendment ; I am not sure whether it was moved by the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill or not ; but at all events, it was moved and carried, and forms a part of the statute, and it is in these words:

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the chapter 111 of the statutes of 1901, intituled 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise; nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

There is a further provision contained in section 12, as if the assurance of the Prime Minister and the section which I have just read were not sufficient, and that further provision sets forth :

The Governor in Council shall not give his approval to the construction of any further canals, water courses, raceways, dams, wing dams, sluices or other works on the River St. Lawrence by the St. Lawrence Power Company, under the provisions of chapter 111 of the statutes of 1901, or otherwise, nor agree to or approve of any terms or conditions respecting the diversion of water or power from Canada, the consideration and rate to be paid therefor, the location of all dams and generating plant, the reservation of power for use in Canada, the safeguarding of Canadian canals, adjacent lands and navigation, the procuring of consent thereto from the British government under the Ashburton treaty or any other treaty, unless and until the plans, specifications and all terms and conditions shall have been first submitted to and approved by parliament.

I think it is, therefore, abundantly clear, both from the assurance of the Prime Minister as to what will be the action of the government, and also by the terms of these two sections which I have read, that no approval of any works upon the Canadian side of the St. Lawrence would be given, or could be given, until the matter had first been submitted to, and approved by parliament. Now, I desire, Mr. Speaker, just to add a few words in reference to the observation of the leader of the opposition with regard to the Bill which was introduced at the last session, and which I have now in my hands. The hon. gentleman stated that the design of that Bill was to authorize the company to erect a dam across the St. Lawrence river. From my seat I ventured to deny that, and the hon. gentleman, departing from that courtesy one would expect from a gentleman who, I think, is desirous of always being considered courteous, the hon. gentleman said it was contradicting him, as I was in the habit of contradicting, without reason and without knowledge of the facts. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to say that outside of this House certain newspapers, and certain gentlemen have sought wrongfully, most improperly, and I say wilfully, and with a view to injure certain persons to convey the impression that the design of this Bill, as introduced by my hon. friend from West Lambton, that the design of myself, and of certain other members of this House who supported that Bill, was to authorize the damming of the St. Lawrence. I say that you cannot find from beginning to end of that Bill as it was first introduced, any provision, any clause, any word, which would give authority to dam the River St. Lawrence. I desire to make this public statement, and to assert now—this is perhaps the first opportunity I have had during this session—that a gross wrong has been attempted in certain newspapers of this country in seeking to create the impression that the Bill as first introduced at the last session of parliament had as its object to grant authority to dam the St. Lawrence river. I say it was, at the beginning when it was first introduced, it was during all its stages while passing through this House, it was when finally passed out of this House with the amendment, it was simply a Bill authorizing the transmission of electricity. When passed through the House it was neither less nor more than that, simply a Bill authorizing the transmission of electrical power. And, Sir, it is a curious fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, in speaking on this Bill last session, referred to a water-power which either had been developed or was being developed at Waddington, upon the American side of the St. Lawrence, and said that if power could not be obtained from any other source that power might be utilized for the distribution of electricity to the various points of eastern Ontario where people were very anxious to get electrical energy, and, that in certain remarks which were made by Mr. Beck, of the Ontario government, a leading member of the Hydro-Electric Commission, he was reported to have made the statement that the commission were at that very moment negotiating for obtaining water-power from a plant generating electricity at Waddington, upon the United States side of the St. Lawrence, they were in negotiation with the owners of that power for the purpose of obtaining electrical energy, to bring it across the St. Lawrence, and to transmit it to various sections in the province of Ontario. I felt, Mr. Speaker, that in justice to myself, and in justice to the gentlemen who supported the Bill which was introduced by my hon. friend from West Lambton, I should take an opportunity of referring to misstatements which had been made outside this House, and of correcting the error which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, forgetting, as he must have forgotten, the contents of the Bill as introduced, fell into with regard to the provisions of the Bill as first introduced last session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The statement I made was absolutely and entirely correct, and I will take a later opportunity of showing that it was so.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a question which affects the people that I represent directly, perhaps as much as any people in the province. I think I know the local conditions surrounding this question as well, if not better, than any man in the House, outside of the hon. member for Stormont county (Mr. Smith), this region having been my stamping ground as a young man, and I have been on these islands, the Long Sault, North Sault, South Sault, the waters contiguous to them and the land as well. As to the question which came up in the House last session, I was very anxious to have a Bill passed authorizing the construction of a transmission line. I then thought that I would be able, and I am in hopes yet that I will be able, to get power for the town of Brockville and the surrounding districts by a transmission line of some sort. I said then, and I repeat now, that I expected to get it independently of any new development at the Long Sault. There are two powers, as my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), has said, in the same condition, except that one is capable of much greater development than the other, on the St. Lawrence. One is at Waddington, opposite the village of Morrisburg in the county of Dundas. The main river runs to the head of Ogden's island about three and three-quarters miles west of Morrisburg. Then it divides at the head of Rapide Plats. The main channel goes on the north side of Odgen's island ; what is known as Little river, goes on the south side between Ogden's island and the state of New York, or the town of Waddington. Many years ago authority was given in the state of New York to construct a dam there, and it was constructed without any reference to Canada, as I understand, it being altogether in United States territory and the entire stream of Little river being contiguous to the state of New York. For some years that water-power was used and then allowed to go into disuse on account of lack of transportation facilities by rail largely, the dam has been destroyed, or nearly so, and there is really no water-power to-day. It is undeveloped and any person who proposes to supply power from Waddington, must remember that there is no power there to supply until it is developed by somebody with cash coming from somewhere. Now, we go down the river and we find Long Sault island. At what is known as Dickinson's Landing, or in the vicinity of it, the main channel of the Sault goes to the north and, just as in the case of Ogden's island, this island separates the St. Lawrence into the North Sault and the South Sault. The North Sault is the main channel. Hon. gentlemen forget, in discussing this question that no steamer goes down through the North Sault or the South Sault carrying any appreciable amount of freight. Large steamers use neither channel. They have to take the Canadian canal, so that, any interference with either of these channels would not interfere one iota in so far as navigation is concerned, with the carrying a large amount of the products of the west to the east, as these products, in the large vessels, have to go through the Canadian canal. Now, we find the South Sault all in American territory. At that particular point at least seventy per cent of the North Sault is altogether in United States territory as well. We perhaps forget in discussing it, that while we have a joint share in it we must not presume at all that at this particular point Canada owns the St. Lawrence river as most of it is in the United States, especially at the point where they propose to construct this dam. All of the South Sault is in the United States just as the Little river is in the United States at Waddington. Opposite Waddington on the Canadian side we have constructed a canal running from the head of Rapide Plats to the village of Morrisburg without the consent of anybody and the government are supplying water-power from the St. Lawrence river to several industries in the village of Morrisburg and also power for the running of the waterworks at Morrisburg. When we get to Cornwall we find the same condition. Those who have not lived along the St. Lawrence cannot have the same feeling. But I have not been able to bring myself to the point where I would care to see a dam stretching across the St. Lawrence from shore to shore at the Long Sault. It strikes me as something in regard to which I would need a lot of convincing before I would consent. I want hon. gentlemen to bear that in mind because I have been criticised for the attitude that I have taken. I took this attitude, thinking that I would be able to help the people I represent to get something that they are very anxious to possess. I have said that the interests of navigation must be kept paramount. No matter what else happens the great navigation and transportation interests of the Dominion must be the first thing that the people of Canada must look to and any power that may be developed, must be subsidiary to the greater interest of transportation. Now, Sir, having that in view, I come down to Cornwall. I find that Sheik's island is in something the same position as regards the Canadian shore as Ogden's island is at Waddington. The small stream between Sheik island and the Canadian shore probably was never navigated except by very small craft, but there was a stream running on the Canadian side.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). You are labouring under the same error that the hon. Minister of Justice was labouring under. There was a dam across. Mr. Snetsinger owned a mill there, and it was expropriated from him before the Sheik's island dam was constructed.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Snetsinger owned a small mill of some kind and he owned a small dam, but it was expropriated as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), has said. That bears out what I am saying that the government permitted that to be done by a private company which is even worse than the government doing it themselves.

Mr. LENNOX. Was it part of the St. Lawrence ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Part of the channel of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). It was erected before the canal was there at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, the river was there anyway, and the dam was erected by the consent of some person, showing clearly that it had been always conceded, at Waddington on the American side where the Little river was dammed by a private company and on the Canadian side at Sheik's island, where a dam was erected by a private company, that in Canadian territory, where no interests of navigation were affected, the United States had no rights and that in the United States, where navigation was not affected, the Canadian government had no rights. That has always been conceded.

Mr. LENNOX. The new treaty says that that shall not be done any more.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have made an improvement in that respect I admit. Now, I come to the Ashburton treaty. Just allow me to look at the legal side of the question for a moment. One provision of our agreement with the United States is, that our canals shall be as free to the vessels of the United States as they are to our own vessels. That does not mean that we cannot charge both fees if we like. According to the contention of some hon. gentlemen, we must at all times, allow their vessels to go through our canals free. It does not mean anything of the kind; it says that they shall be equally free, and if we see fit to reimpose a fee on vessels going through the Canadian canals, United States vessels could be charged the same fee without any infraction of the agreement with the United States. The Ashburton treaty says that Canadian vessels on the one side and American vessels on the other shall be equally free to pass up and down.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). That was extended by the Washington treaty which made all waters of the United States free to Canadian subjects.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, that is what the Ashburton treaty meant. As I have intimated, I had not any idea directly or indirectly of giving any person the right to dam the North Sault by the Bill that was introduced last year. It was merely to get a transmission line by which power that already exists could be transmitted to some of the towns that need it so very badly. Now, the South Sault is altogether on the American side and, reiterating what I have said about the North Sault, I want to say frankly that if the South Sault, which is altogether in United States territory, can be utilized to produce power for the people along the St. Lawrence and for others, without doing damage to property owners on either side of the river unless they are fully compensated or, without injuring navigation, I am in favour of acquiescing in the project to make the proposed improvements at the South Sault.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Could we get a guarantee that we would get half of that power?

Mr. GRAHAM. If we had any right under the law to have it I would insist on getting it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do we give them half the power of the Cornwall canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, we do not give them any of the Cornwall canal power.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the power developed were used on the other side of the line I do not see where our advantage would be.

Mr. GRAHAM. My position would be this: I believe that we would get a good deal of that power on the Canadian side. I am not sure, because it is a matter of law, what rights we would have, but I certainly would use to the utmost any rights we might have to get for Canada some share of the power developed on even the South Sault. And if that can be done, then instead of giving away some of our natural resources we would be getting the people of the United States, to give us some of theirs. If any scheme would injure property or interfere with navigation, mark you, I would vote first, last and all the time against it. But, if it can be done otherwise, then I believe I am working in the interests of the people of the Dominion of Canada, and in the interests of my own constituents, if I could be a party to an arrangement by which it was provided that some of the power developed from the part of the river in the United States should come to Canada. I know the local conditions very well, I know every foot of the ground, and if as has been said power can be developed on the south side without injuring our interests then, if we could get part of that power it would be to the benefit of Canada, to allow that Bill to go through the United States Congress without any remonstrance from us, even if we have the right to remonstrate. What I want in my riding is to get power, I don't care from whom or from where if I get it at a reasonable price, and without doing injury to any interest.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What about the scenery?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have never been able to convince myself that I would allow the beautiful scenery on the north side to be touched; that is the way I feel about it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have taken a great deal of interest in the matter, and I thought that perhaps it might interfere with our canals, because mark you we have a canal on our side and the United States propose to build one on their side. I have a new man on the engineering staff of the department, who is said to be very competent, and two or three months ago I asked him to examine the situation in the vicinity of Waddington and Morrisburg, and also the Little river and the South Sault, and to report to me his candid conviction as to what effect it might have on our canals. I expected to have that report before now, and when I get it I shall lay it on the table of the House. I do not know what this engineer's opinions are or what his report may be, but whatever it is it will be interesting to the House, and I shall submit it as soon as I get it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe). In the English House of Commons whenever an international question is discussed the practice is to forget party, and to think only of the welfare of the country, and I am glad to say that this debate so far has followed that practice. As nearly as a layman can interpret the proposition which the Minister of Justice laid down in a somewhat involved way, it is that every country has the right to do as it pleases in its own territory. In this instance the United States and Canada have under the Ashburton treaty surrendered their sovereign rights to permit neither nation navigating in the territorial waters of each and the same privilege is applied to another part of the international waters below Detroit. So far as the consideration of this question is concerned the maintenance of unobstructed navigation should be paramount for the two countries, but when we examine the navigation routes along the Great Lakes we find that wherever there is a strategic point the United States government has endeavoured to short-cut it, create a deeper channel than we have, and so lead the business to their territory. At the Sault on the St. Mary's river the Americans have short-cut a channel through what is known as Mud or Hay lake, and thus diverted the traffic through their territory. All that traffic of ours from Lake Superior comes down through territory over which they have sovereign rights, and which they can close against us whenever it suits them. We cannot bring a vessel drawing more than twelve feet of water from Lake Superior to Lake Huron unless through their territorial waters. On the Detroit river we find that the American government has seized another strategic point, and they have within the last few years proceeded to clear a very large canal at what they call the Lime Kiln Crossing. They have erected large dams there and they have virtually ruined the navigation of the Detroit river in Canadian waters. There is at the present time before the Canadian government an application—which has not been laid on the table of the House, and which I think we should have laid on the table of the House—asking for the right to dam the Canadian side of the river which would stop navigation entirely on the Canadian side, so that all navigation would be in American waters. I ask the senior minister present if that is not so?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not so.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Has not the American government asked this government for permission to dam the waters of the Detroit river at a point called by the sailors Bobalong island?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I said that it was not so, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that they had asked for authority to completely shut off the navigation on the Canadian side of the river.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The hon. gentleman is a beautiful juggler of words.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has no right to make such a remark. What they had applied for was authority to carry a dam from a point in the middle of the stream down to Bois Blanc island.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). That is exactly what I said. The hon. Minister of Public Works is an adept at making statements to this House which, while we must accept them in the fullest sense, we must accept with a mental reservation. There is no doubt that they did not apply for power to put in a dam which would totally destroy navigation in Canadian waters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As the hon. gentleman said they had.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I have no doubt that motor boats and canoes could still go down the river, but so far as large vessels are concerned, the work would entirely destroy the channel. No protest was made by this government against that work, which is a work under the War Department of the United States. The greatest danger to this country lies in this, that that channel is entirely in American waters, and they could close it completely to us at that point, just as they could close the channel in Mud lake. Now, what is that sovereign right of ours at the Long Sault which they are attacking? They are attempting to establish a work which will divert traffic from our canal. They intend to put in a dam and a canal with 20 or 25 feet of water, according to the plans which were laid on the table of this House last session by the Minister of Public Works, which plans showed the damming of the river, although the hon. gentleman denies that to-day. His own words at that date also showed that that was the intention of the company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I must correct the hon. gentleman. He is making an erroneous statement. He says that I denied that the plans which had been submitted by the company showed a proposal to dam the St. Lawrence river. I never gave any such denial. On the contrary, at the last session of parliament, I stated that the plans submitted by the company did show a proposal to dam the river, but that the government had not approved of those plans.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I am glad that I am getting the hon. gentleman down to earth in this matter. I will bring him further down to earth, and will quote from 'Hansard' his very words in this House, stating that the intention of the company was to dam the river, although he denies that he said so last session. This is what appears in 'Hansard':

Mr. Emmerson. Were these plans which were submitted by the St. Lawrence Power Company to your department for approval, plans for the construction of a work to connect with another work that would come out from the American shore?

Mr. Pugsley. Yes, the plans were for damming the river across from the Canadian side to the American side, and also for the building of a lock for the purpose of improving navigation, the idea being to give an additional lock to the one that is already there, and which was constructed and is owned by the Canadian government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman permit me?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). If the hon. minister will wait till I get through, he can answer all I say. When this question of damming the river now comes before this House, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister state that the first authority was the Ashburton treaty—that was the primary rule with reference to this channel. The Minister of Railways and Canals endorsed that. The inference from the involved sentences of the Minister of Justice was that the new treaty was supplementary to the old treaty—that while the old treaty dealt with the right of navigation, the new treaty dealt with the right of developing power, and that anything done either by this parliament or by the Congress of the United States must be approved by the Waterways Commission. I will ask the House if that impression was not left on the House? But, strange to say, we had that great constitutional authority, the Minister of Public Works, saying last year something different, in answer to Mr. Sharpe:

Mr. S. Sharpe. What power has the International Waterways Commission to deal with this matter?

Mr. Pugsley. They simply advise.

Now, what protection has this country or the United States from the Waterways Commission in this matter, if we are to accept the word of the hon. Minister of Public Works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is speaking of a different commission altogether. The Minister of Justice referred to the new commission under the treaty which was ratified last session—the International Boundaries Commission.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Then perhaps the Minister of Public Works will tell us what authority the Boundary Commission will have in this matter. Will they have a veto on these plans or on the work if it is authorized by this parliament or by the United States Congress? Now, Sir, with reference to this matter, let us be practical and have a little common sense about it. I always like to hear the Minister of Railways talk, because he always takes a broad view, and it took a good deal of worming and twisting to satisfy his conscience that this work would be in the interest of the public or any one else, except the company that made aluminum. If it is necessary to have that work done to develop power at that point, I think the parliament of Canada and the government of New York state or the United States Congress should cause one of their various commissions to consider the matter seriously, and to see that if the power were developed, the rights of the public would be conserved, and we would not be turning over to some corporation a valuable franchise which it would immediately proceed to capitalize for $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. If there be anything to be got out of this, if it be necessary to have this water-power developed, let both countries jointly agree upon a plan upon which the development shall take place and decide the quantity of power each country shall have and the price to be paid. The whole trouble is simply this: Every one knows that an attempt has been made here to rob the public treasury in some way. The whole fight over this question has been due to the fact that a corporation in the United States—one of the most powerful there—which has a monopoly of a certain metal now of very great use in the electrical art, has been endeavouring to seize all the cheap water-powers of both countries for its own use. Let me tell the Minister of Justice that with the increasing use of that metal which that company produces, there will be no hope, should they develop that power, of his having any spare power for Brockville, because the company will use it all for their own purposes in the turning out of aluminum. Would it not be better to keep before the House and country the rights of navigation. The Minister of Public Works has been up to the shoulders fighting for the company which desires to get this water-power. He has resented the imputation that he has been endeavouring to boost this company, and to-day he denied that he ever wished to dam the river or do anything of that kind. Well, I think I could satisfy the House, from his own remarks, that he did, last year, try to have the river dammed, and the company which intended doing this is the same company which is seeking their charter in Washington.

Mr. C. J. DOHERTY (St. Anne, Montreal). The announcement made by the right hon. the Prime Minister early in this debate that the government had taken means to communicate with the American authorities with the view of remonstrating against the adoption of the measure now going through Congress, would justify us in assuming that the government had taken the position that our rights were being infringed upon, or were in danger of being infringed upon by the proposed legislation. But according to the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) we have no rights in connection with this channel, and no ground upon which to remonstrate or expostulate. That seems to me rather a surprising statement. If the government take the position that even if the channels mentioned in the Ashburton treaty are being closed we have no grounds upon which to remonstrate, I do not think we can expect much advantage from the intervention which the right hon. the Prime Minister told us he was seeking to bring about, through the British ambassador, in this matter now pending before the American Congress. I understand the Minister of Justice to argue that there was no need for us to go back to the Ashburton treaty in order to ascertain our rights, because these were to be found in the later boundary water treaty. Subsequently, however, I understood him to say, in answer to a question, that the latter treaty did not supersede the former, and that the provisions of both are to be taken as equally standing. I submit that in order to ascertain what our rights are with regard to these particular channels, we must go to the Ashburton treaty and we will not find them anywhere else. It is perfectly true that after the Ashburton treaty had provided that the channels in the St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault and Barnhart's island shall be equally free and open to the vessels and commerce of both countries, our later treaty provides in a general way that the navigation of the boundary waters shall remain free for the purposes of commerce and navigation to the inhabitants of both countries. But that general provision in the later treaty does not in any way supersede or affect the clear and express provision of the Ashburton treaty with regard to these two particular channels. If I am not greatly mistaken it is an elementary principle in the interpretation of laws and contracts that general dispositions do not derogate from special provisions made to regulate and govern and determine specific cases. I take it, therefore, that notwithstanding the general enactment contained in our last boundary treaty, that treaty does not in any way modify the provision of the Ashburton treaty with regard to these particular channels. In the face of that provision, I must confess that I heard with considerable astonishment the Minister of Justice lay down the principle that we were not concerned in and would have no right to interfere in what was being done on the American side of the river unless there was a question of raising the level of the water on our side. It is true, he added, that these gentlemen on the other side, who are asking for this power, had declared that they were going to provide in some other way for navigation. They do not deny that these channels, which the treaty says shall be open, are to be barred, but they say they are going to provide for navigation in some other way, and the Minister of Justice, therefore, concludes that we have no ground to expostulate.

Well, in the first place, it seems perfectly clear that what is being done is in violation of the express terms of the treaty. The channels are being barred. I do not suppose that it would be argued that to be equally closed to the people of both countries would mean the same as to be equally open to the people of both countries. I quite agree with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) that the fact that the canals are to be equally free to both parties does not prevent tolls being charged, so long as those tolls do not discriminate against the people of one country. But, on the other hand, I do not suppose that he would carry the argument so far as to conclude that, provided the channels are equally closed to both parties, the provision of the treaty would be complied with.

Mr. GRAHAM. That loses me in the law.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman mind if I asked him a question? Because, this is a very interesting point.

Mr. DOHERTY. Certainly not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose that, on the Canadian side of the St. Lawrence, there were no Cornwall canal. Suppose we said: We are going to improve the navigation, for there are only rapids there with a depth of six or seven feet of water; so we will make a lock and give a depth of twenty feet, and that lock will be equally open to both countries; would the United States have a right to complain of that? Per contra, suppose the government of the United States says that the South Sault has a depth of only eight or ten feet—my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals says it is not so much as that—and they decide to build a lock that will afford a depth of twenty feet and will leave it equally open to both countries; could we complain of that?

Mr. DOHERTY. Now, with regard to the first question, it seems to me that before there is any occasion to answer that question, one would want to know whether there was a channel, properly speaking on our side. Because that which is dealt with by the treaty is not, in general terms, the right to navigate the waters anywhere. We have particular channels which are indicated as existing, and it is said that these channels shall remain open to the ships of both parties. That is not a general declaration that the parties shall be free to navigate in any part. Now, I am willing to take the statement as to the fact of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) or the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) as to whether there was any channel on our side which could come within that description. The channels mentioned there, the channels on both sides of Long Sault islands and of Barnhart island, if I understand rightly, are on the American side. The treaty is dealing expressly with channels that are on the American side, actually existing channels, and it provides that they are to be open to us. Now, somebody goes to the American Congress and says: We want leave to close up all these channels, but we will give you something as good. Now—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pardon me. What the Minister of Justice was referring to particularly was the closing of one channel—not of both—between the South Sault and the mainland. That, as I understand it, is not the main channel for navigation purpose.

Mr. DOHERTY. But I understand that it is one of the channels mentioned. And I am told that the legislation authorizing the making of a dam from the mainland on the American side to the boundary takes in both of these channels mentioned in the treaty.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Minister of Justice did not deal with that feature.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, he did.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he said the channel was between Long Sault island and Barnhart's island.

Mr. LENNOX. And also one to the north.

Mr. DOHERTY. At one stage, if I understood him, he was proceeding to show that the barring was to be done only in the south channel, and argued that unless it was shown that the water would be dammed back so as to raise the level on the Canadian side, we had no standing ground for remonstrance or expostulation. In other words, here it is publicly and openly proposed to close the channels which, under the treaty, are always to be open to us, and the minister tells us that the matter does not concern us, and we have no standing ground if we desire to remonstrate. The Minister of Public Works asks: Suppose they were going to alter one of these channels and improve navigation, should we have the interest to object? Certainly we should not have the interest to object,—whatever our right might be—if it were absolutely established that the change was going to improve navigation.

Mr. DOHERTY.

But that is precisely the matter that the Congress of the United States is undertaking to determine. And we are not concerned—I understand the Minister of Justice to say—if the Bill provides that a channel shall be made for navigation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was dealing in my question, wholly with the South Sault, which, I understand, is not the main channel and not a good channel.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is a splendid channel.

Mr. DOHERTY. Whether good or bad, here is our contract. It deals with the south channel, whatever it may be, and it declares that it shall be equally open to both countries.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Equally free.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not think I made a mistake. No, the treaty says 'shall be equally free and open'. If that is not clear, and if it is not clearly applicable to the south channel, then, of course, I do not understand English. But all this is being done ex parte; and when we ask if the government is doing anything about it, we are first given to understand that the government is doing something about it, and this is followed by a statement of the Minister of Justice that, for his part, he does not see that we have any ground to remonstrate or expostulate. And I ask, what good results can we expect from intervention if the government is going into court with a feeling, and that publicly announced, that it has not a leg to stand upon? I do not think the country will gain benefit from the intervention. But, I say that, far from not having ground to stand upon, we have the prima facie ground that our agreement is being violated. It may be true that these gentlemen, or the American government, are in the position to supply something that will be a remedy of the wrong. But it will only be a remedy of the wrong; they first create the wrong by violating the agreement. And I do not understand that, as between parties making an agreement that a thing shall be done in a particular way, it remains open for one to say: I will not do what we agreed to do, but, without consulting you I will do something contrary to our agreement, but I will provide something just as good. At this stage we are vitally interested in having our rights put before the American authorities in the strongest possible way. And with all respect—and it is with great respect—and with all deference to the opinion of the Minister of Justice on a question of law or a question of common sense (if it can be said that there is any difference between these two) I submit that we have a very strong case indeed to put before that Congress. I would like to point out something further. The Minister of Public Works asked me a question a few moments ago as to whether, if we did certain things on our side of the water, the American authorities could object. Now, I think I could not answer him better than in his own words. The same question came up last year as to the extent of our rights on our side of this water and the Minister of Public Works said then:

I recognized that this parliament could not pass any legislation which would authorize a dam to be constructed in the river without putting in the condition that it should be subject to the approval of the executive government of the United States.

Now, either under this agreement we do not stand on a footing of equality ; or, if the executive government of the United States has a word to say as to our erecting a dam on our side of the river, clearly we must have a word to say about their erecting a dam on their side of the river. There is another consideration. I gathered from what the First Minister said that in this matter we were afforded some protection under the Boundary Waters Commission by reason of the fact that whatever the American Congress did with regard to authorizing works on its own side, it could not be carried out without approval of the Boundary Waters Commission. In that respect I am quite in agreement with the Minister of Justice ; we are afforded, as I understood him to say, absolutely no protection in this matter under the boundaries treaty unless the work that is being done there throws the waters back so as to raise the level of our side. So far as it may be an absolute block to navigation, the Boundary Waters Commission wont have a word to say about it; their powers wont come into play unless the work not only stops navigation, but throws the water back so as to raise the level on our side. I understand that I am not differing at all from the Minister of Justice in that regard. That I think is manifestly clear, from looking at the clause which provides for the intervention of the Boundary Waters Commission, that is clause 3. It is as clear as anything can be, and if it were susceptible of being made more clear than it is, I think the Minister of Justice, in expounding it with that clearness which is habitual to him, has made it so:

It is agreed that in addition to the uses, constructions and diversions heretofore permitted or hereafter provided for by special agreement between the parties hereto, no further or other uses or obstructions or diversions, whether temporary or permanent, of boundary waters on either side of the line——

This is the important part :

—affecting the natural level or flow of boundary waters on the other side of the line, shall be made except by authority of the United States or the Dominion of Canada within their respective jurisdictions, and with the approval as hereinafter provided of a joint committee to be known as the International Joint Commission.

So that the power of this International Joint Commission comes into play only as far as an obstruction may affect the level of the water or the flow of water on our side. But so long as our objection rests upon a complaint that what has been done already, or may be done under this legislation of congress, is an obstruction of navigation, the Boundary Waters Commission will not have a word to say about it and we are entirely without protection save in so far as we may be protected by expostulation or remonstrance, either before or subsequent to the passing of this legislation. It seems to me, assuming the only injury to be done is to navigation, that this much vaunted treaty with this additional protection, will give us absolutely no protection at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does my hon friend think of article 9? Would not that cover the ground?

Mr. DOHERTY (reading) :

The high contracting parties further agree that any other questions or matters of difference arising between them involving the rights, obligations or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along the common frontier between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, shall be referred from time to time to the International Joint Commission for examination and report whenever either the government of the United States or the government of the Dominion of Canada shall request that such questions or matters of difference be so referred.

I thought the Minister of Justice had only cited article 3 as applicable, and I still think it is the only article that gives us any recourse in this matter. The general provision here is for submitting all other questions that may arise, ' any other questions or matters of difference.' But article 3 has determined how you will submit questions that have regard to obstructions to navigation, and as the Minister of Justice very correctly said, article 3 necessarily implies that so long as such obstruction does not affect the flow of water, there is nothing to submit to the Boundary Commission. As I said, article 3 settles how and when all matters regarding obstructions in navigable rivers shall be submitted to the Boundary Commission. The other article makes provision that other matters not dealt with in that particular section, may be submitted, but does not affect the express limitation with regard to obstructions in navigable waters. So I think we are more than justified, on this side of the House, in being exceedingly anxious with regard to the fate of that legislation which is now before the American congress. I do not need to insist upon the immense importance of this matter to Canada as a whole, and particularly its immense importance to Montreal. And after all, what is important to the city of Montreal is important to the whole of Canada, as Montreal stands at the head of ocean navigation, and at the foot of what we have heretofore called inland navigation, which inland navigation, it does seem to me, may be most seriously affected by any interference with the flow of the St. Lawrence at this or at any other point. I would earnestly urge that the government reconsider their view about the helplessness of our position, and that they do give to Canada the benefit of their best endeavours to impress upon the American congress that we have rights, and that they are entitled to be respected.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—INDUSTRIAL MERGERS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved, in amendment to the motion for supply:

That the recent mergers of heretofore competing industries and the issue of securities resulting therefrom should be the subject of public investigation, with a view of ascertaining how far such mergers or the methods of carrying them out affect the public interest, either as causing continuing high prices for the commodities produced, as damaging the reputation of Canadian securities abroad or further as restricting the banking facilities of the country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you left the chair at six o'clock I rose to present an amendment to the motion now before the House for the House to go into Committee of Supply. I did not expect to have to present this motion to-day, but as I was informed yesterday that it suited the convenience of the government to proceed with it at once, I preferred to avail myself of this opportunity rather than to wait and fortify myself with further information upon a question as important as the one which I think this motion presents. Mr. Speaker, there has always been, at least for some time, a very great interest manifested in mergers, in concentrations into one company of various industries hitherto operating independently. What is the reason of that interest? In the first place, stock markets, as a rule, are affected by all movements which lead up to the merger of companies, to concentrations which are generally preceded by variations in the stocks of the companies interested. In the second place, the merging of companies adds new securities to the exchanges and transactions, indeed, are, as a rule, very numerous and extremely animated. Finally, a merger raises always the important question of whether the commodities produced by the merging industries will either increase or lower in price. In fact, as a general rule, as the House is aware, mergers give rise to a very considerable quantity of speculation, and that is one feature of these mergers which I think it is necessary for the House and the country to be informed about. As a rule, they are productive of very considerable profits to the promoters. How are these profits obtained? Generally by the appropriation, under favourable circumstances, by the promoters of what is called watered stock, or shares in the merging company, resulting from over-capitalization, representing in reality no actual value, but, after the merger, indistinguishable from the rest of the shares and consequently having, it may be, a very considerable market value, though behind this watered stock there is no actual value. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, this merging of companies is quite a modern feature in our industrial life. The tendency of rival industries to-day is to join their interests and to thus unite in the management and marketing of their products, and this tendency, manifested very intensely in the United States, has now become very general in our own country. In the United States some members of this House have, no doubt, followed the circumstances attending the organization of the great oil merger and of the iron industry, and know what very serious objections have been raised in that country to the operations which attended these gigantic mergers. In our own country, for about ten years, we have been the witnesses of the merging of a number of industrial companies, leading up to the unification, or concentration, of these companies into one single company. I do not wish to detain the House at any great length upon this feature of the motion, because I think that every hon. member must have some knowledge of the extent and magnitude of these merging operations during the last decade. Nevertheless, I would like to give a few facts to the House, a few figures, to justify the proposition made by me that these operations have now reached an extent and a magnitude, irrespective of the consequent good or bad that may attend them, that justify entirely my drawing the attention of the House to their nature and to their possible results. I wish to quote, Mr. Speaker, from the Canadian Annual Finance Review of April 10 a few figures, and in doing so I would scarcely feel justified in fatiguing the House by citing textually all the figures which I have here, and which go to make up a partial statement showing the immense capitalization of these companies. I will, therefore, with your permission, and, I hope with the approval of the House, give only the leading figures and hand this statement immediately to 'Hansard,' for the reading of the entirety of it would take, I think, too much of the time of the House. The statement is as follows:—

* Outstanding. † Issued.

Thus we have for these twenty companies or so an authorized capital of $214,750,000, of which there has been issued over $168,000,000. This shows the extent of the interest involved; and had I pursued this inquiry further, I have no doubt that I would have been able to extend the list and bring up the capitalization of these special companies to about $300,000,000. Indeed, in an exhaustive and very interesting speech which the hon. Minister of Labour delivered on the 10th of April last, when he moved this House into committee on his Combines Bill, he himself enumerated a considerable number of companies which are not mentioned in this list. So that it is proper, I think, to say that the interest involved in these mergers amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars, and therefore it is very interesting to the public, and particularly to us in this House, to become cognizant of some of the details connected with the organization of such immensely capitalized companies. When an industrial enterprise is in the hands of a firm, and the capital of the firm has been partly lost, it is written off. On the other hand, if the capital is increased, it is because the partners in the firm have left their earnings in the business. The claim of such businesses to special protection, as a rule is, or ought to be, founded on the actual cost of the production of their product. The loss of capital on the part of firms doing business is never admitted to the consideration of parliament when parliament fixes the protective duties. The case of a joint stock company, however, is manifestly a different matter. It is the opening of the capital account which settles the amount on which dividends are expected. As the actual capital in the business goes up or goes down, it does not as a rule bear a relation to the real capital in the business. And the balancing of the books of such companies is in a sense false. By that I mean that the nominal capital of the company as a liability has to be balanced by its assets, and these often include the good-will of the business and other fictitious items. Consequently while these companies claim protection upon the cost of production, this cost is always made to include interest on the capital, though this has sometimes in part been lost or has been issued for good-will, and very often also for tangible considerations and at a very large discount.

Having drawn this distinction between firms entering industrial life, and joint stock companies, let us view for a moment how new enterprises enter into the industrial field. Is it not a fact that, as a rule, on account of the risks involved in a new enterprise, it is often necessary that those who run these risks should get their interest in the enterprise at somewhat less than the nominal value. In some way or other it is arranged to issue stock at a discount. This is frequently done. In some cases there seems some justification for such a proceeding. It may be a proper proceeding on account of the risks involved, or the temporary condition of the money market, and the difficulty of procuring the funds necessary to start the enterprise. There is therefore some justification in the apparent values being in reality greater than the real material assets of the company at the time of the starting of the enterprise.

The case of mergers of existing enterprises is somewhat different. There can be no objection to a fair conversion into capital of the value of trade-marks and patents, which is often the object of the merging of different companies. But when you come to consider the fixing of a protective or customs tariff, it would seem that we should adopt as a measure the percentage which is necessary to insure the maintenance in activity of only the real actual capital involved in the enterprise and also the maintenance of the labour necessary to carry it on, which has been created by the industry. In fixing that protective or customs tariff, you are surely not to consider in any way the payment of dividends or returns upon a fictitious capital which has not been at any time really invested in the business.

Now, what happens at the time of the creation of an industry in our country, and of the willingness on the part of parliament to give it some encouragement by a protective tariff? This happens, that a protection is given slightly in excess of what is absolutely necessary—why? On account of the risks involved in the starting of a new enterprise, in order to induce people to go in, and, instead of provision being made for a gradual reduction of the protective duties necessitated by the starting of the enterprise, the duty is kept up. Then, what happens?

Earnings are considerable; the industry becomes prosperous and generally affords ample dividends. In the face of these earnings, as a rule, competition is provoked. But the capital is increased, and so there is a reduction of the rate of dividend from ten or eight to five or four, and it is expected in that way to avoid competitions. Nevertheless, competitors will enter the field if they are aware that conditions are such that with keen attention money may be made. If, in cases of that kind, protection diminished by degrees, this probably would not happen, or else these competitors would, under the necessities of the case, either drop out or diminish their output. But the maintenance of the protective duties tends to increase and intensify the conditions I have described. The next stage is that arrangements are made for fixing prices. But, as you are aware, under legislation passed last session, to do this directly has become difficult if not impossible, and certainly exposes those who enter into such arrangements to prosecution under the law. Other devices are resorted to. You have a common sales agent, which diminishes the expense of placing the products upon the market. Or you have division of districts. But in spite of these methods to protect profits, competition goes on, new competitors crowd into the market; and then the temptation to merge becomes very great. Mergers in themselves, per se, are not to be condemned. They give good results in many respects. They give to the industries concerned one management; they concentrate; they enable the companies that are brought together to secure the best officers by spending very considerable in that direction and the best experts to work the industry; they simplify the marketing; they result in many other economies which in themselves are not to be condemned. It is to be noted also that not a single company is exposed to the operation of the law passed last year by this parliament. There can be no charge of combination amongst traders to fix prices where there is only one company. In such cases the operation of that law becomes impossible. And, indeed, I would, at this stage, call this to the attention of the House, that, in these very considerable mergers that have lately taken place, you do not find anything upon which you can base a suit or prosecution under the Act against combines. They have evidently carefully guarded against that. But there would be no necessity for it, since a merger is not a combination of companies for the fixing of prices. Now, the necessity or utility of a merger having become apparent, what is the next proceeding? As a rule in these operations—I am speaking of the facts as we learn them from the public prints and from what we hear on the street—those who are engaged in the industries themselves are the first to see in the transactions which will tend to a merger the opportunity for very profitable speculation. Mergers, under the conditions under which they are affected cannot be efficiently carried out without the assistance of institutions that command large capital. It is found necessary in many cases, by the promotors of these mergers, in order to overcome the objections of those who are interested in these different industries who are unwilling to see the combination effected, to operate upon the market and depress the securities of existing companies. It is also necessary, sometimes, in order to overcome opposition for the promoters to win over, with some generosity, those opponents who threaten to impede the evolution of the companies into one company. In spite of these obstacles, there remains still opportunity of very large profit. In what? In the issuing of common stock. Let me give an example illustrative of what I have been describing. Take, for instance, a group of concerns worth, let us assume, exactly $1,000,000, irrespective of protective duties, the existence of which might enhance the value of a concern as their reduction would diminish it. These concerns are in the condition to which I referred a few moments ago. They have been organized; they have lived; competition has come along. But the profits are considerable. They would be capitalized, on the institution of a merger, at, say, $3,000,000; you would have $1,000,000 of bonds secured by mortgage; $1,000,000 of preferred stock, and $1,000,000 of common stock. These securities being provided, how would they be handled? As a general rule—I speak subject to correction by those who know more, perhaps, about these operations than I have been able to learn—to settle with the holders of the existing concerns you would have to provide cash or its equivalent, a first mortgage, bonds, or preferred stock. It is necessary to carry on considerable dealings with the individuals who are holders of the original concern, and with groups in order to get control, for without control it is impossible to finally carry out the merger. It is here that the large financial institutions come in. They underwrite the bonds, we will not say at par, but, in this instance, let us say at 95.

If the bonds are not disposed of otherwise, they are placed with the bank which underwrites them to say at 95. But there are sub-underwriters, men behind who are the promoters, who sub-underwrite the issue at a slight advance over the bank's figures, and it is this slight advance which constitutes the bank's profit. In many instances, the directors of these banks and the directors of the companies that are about to be merged, form themselves into a group or syndicate, and it is this syndicate which sub-underwrites the bonds. Common stock is offered to the bank in order to induce it to underwrite the bonds. The bank, therefore, in return for 95 per cent which it pays for the bonds, gets $100 bonds and say 75 per cent of common stock. What becomes of these securities? The sub-underwriters take over the bonds and common stock at a slight advance and endeavour to dispose of the bonds and naturally keep as much as possible of the common stock. Then how will the vendors, the original holders, be settled with? How will you provide the working capital? That is provided out of the preference shares which are not wanted for the vendors. Out of the money produced by the bonds you pay the vendors, you pay then with preference shares, and out of what is left you provide working capital. Take the illustrative case just referred to. We will take $250,000 of preference stock for the vendor which will leave $750,000 preference stock for the immediate needs of the new company and which will leave $250,000 of common stock. This common stock is gradually disposed of by the underwriters and mostly by the sub-underwriters. It is hawked about and given as a bonus. Three shares of preference stock and one of common stock are given for $300. Let us look at the result. Out of an issue of securities of $3,000,000 there is realized from the bonds $750,000, from the preference stock $250,000 for the vendor and $750,000 for working capital, and the common stock is given as a bonus for distribution among the promoters. I am not here to offer any opinion upon the moral aspect of a transaction of that kind. Indeed most of those who carry on these operations are looked upon as men of strong moral views in business matters. They are generally philanthropists, interested in good works and are pillars of their churches; but I must say I do not see anything particularly wrong in the operation if you leave out of consideration the duties that must be kept up. I see no particular harm except that it results in a number of people acquiring, under the auspices of powerful institutions that lend their aid to these transactions, securities behind which there is no real value. From the point of view of public interest, which is the one I desire to urge here, there are two serious objections. One of the results of this system of carrying on a business is the creation at once of a strong interest for the maintenance of duties in such a way that dividends will be insured upon all this watered stock which represents in reality no real value. There is a strong interest created among people of powerful influence to see that the duties should not be reduced to the absolute real value and need of those industries, but to keep them at such a figure as will insure dividends being paid upon merely apparent values. Another public interest is this? Our banks, which are engaged in these large operations, are obliged necessarily to tie up a considerable share of their funds. Why? In order to furnish these advances which are always large, and is it not apparent that they necessarily are obliged to tie up these large advances over a period of time necessary to get rid of these securities so as to insure a profit upon the transactions and make sure for the promoters of these mergers whoever they may be—the directors of the merging companies and banks or other promoters—as large a profit as possible. These will require to distribute the stock to sell the bonds at a good figure and distribute as little of the common or bonus stock as possible. Is it not evident that these funds of these large financial institutions tied up in this way are kept away from the usual channels where they might benefit trade and fulfil the object of legitimate banking?

I have endeavoured as briefly as possible to describe how these operations are carried on. One word respecting the company law as we have it in this country. Does that law tend to encourage or discourage these operations, whatever may be good or evil in them. Our present law is to be found in chapter 79 of the revised statutes.

That section reads:

'The company shall not under any circumstances use any of its funds in the purchase of stock in any other corporation, unless nor until the directors have been expressly authorized by a by-law passed by them for the purpose and sanctioned by a vote of not less than two-thirds in value of the capital stock represented at a general meeting of the company duly called for considering the subject of the by-law. Provided that if the letters patent authorize such purchase it shall not be necessary to pass such by-law.'

That provision in the existing law seems to favour the operations I have referred to. In no other statute previous to that was there any such provision as we find in section 44. It is new law; I have not been able to find any section of the old company law expressly authorizing, as this does, the purchase by a new company of stock in other companies. I have not been able to cover completely the field of investigation with regard to the English law, but so far as I have been able to find such acquisitions are absolutely prohibited under the company law there. In view of the magnitude of these operations in this country it is for parliament to consider whether that provision introduced into our law is a wise one, and whether it would not be proper for us to follow the law in England and to return to our former legislation. I shall allude briefly to some litigation we have had in this connection in the province of Quebec. I had intended to make a resumé of that litigation in order to uphold my view that these merging operations are sometimes carried on under circumstances approximate to fraud, but while these reports are most interesting, I have not had time to make a digest of them, and I shall merely submit the references. In the case of Amyot versus the Dominion Cotton Mills Company, the judgment of the Superior Court is reported in 36 S.C. (Quebec), p. 35, and the judgment of the Court of Review, confirming that judgment is reported in 38 S.C., p. 457. There is another very interesting case of Angers versus the Dominion Textile Company, which is one of the recent mergers in the cotton industry. The judgment of the first court is to be found in 30 S.C., p. 56, and the judgment confirming the original judgment in appeal in 18 K.B., p. 63. The case of Amyot, after going through the court of appeals is now before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In the case of Angers the judgment of the Superior Court, confirmed in review, was upheld in the Supreme Court, and is found reported in 41 S.C.R., p. 285. I give these references because I do not wish to go into any analysis of the cases. They were decided principally on questions of law involving the legality of the formalities and proceedings under which the mergers were effected, but there is considerable evidence, and it is interesting to read the remarks of the judges upon that evidence, which show that in many cases it is the directors of the merging companies who, by representation, reports, actions of different kinds that are not of a commendable character, succeeded in forcing the shareholders into the merger. The evidence of the witnesses in these cases is severely commented upon by some of the judges, and from these comments it is conclusive that there is urgent need for the government to inquire more closely into the particular circumstances occupying these mergers, and which tend to interfere considerably with the proper carrying on of our industrial life. One word as to present legislation. It might be supposed that we have laws enough to meet the object which is aimed at by this motion, but I wish to say at once that there is no doubt whatever that the existing laws have no application to what is sought by the very general terms of the motion I have the honour to present to the House. The object of this motion is to obtain a very general inquiry in the public interest into all the circumstances under which these mergers are put through. We have some legislation bearing upon this subject but it is not pertinent. We have the Customs Tariff Act, assented to June 20, 1887, as amended by the Act respecting the Duties of Customs, assented to in April, 1907. There is an Act of a similar character to amend the Inland Revenue Act, assented to August 10, 1904. All these enactments are intended to enable the government to handle the customs duties in the interests of the public, and in special cases under peculiar circumstances, without the authority of parliament, but they have no reference, even in the most distant manner possible, to a general inquiry into mergers. There is nothing in existing legislation which would give any relief in the condition of affairs I have brought to the attention of the House. Then, there are articles 496, 497 and 498 of the Criminal Code against combines, but I can give no better appreciation of this legislation than by quoting the remarks of the Minister of Labour with regard to these criminal enactments. I quote from his speech of the 10th of April last:

> In regard to this measure, it is to be noted that in reality it enacted nothing new, but was merely declaratory of the law as it stood, and had stood for years before the question had ever been one of concern to the administration.

Then the Minister of Labour goes on to point out that according to the judgment of the Hon. David Mills when this criminal law was enacted against combines (a judgment in which concurred the then Minister of Justice and Prime Minister, Sir John Thompson) very far from having a deterrent character the very nature of this enactment was rather a shield to those who entered into these combines. At any rate, no results have been produced which have an application to the demand for a general investigation which is made here.

I will not refer at length to the third source of legislation upon this subject. It is to be found in the Combines Investigation Act, brought about by the efforts of my hon. friend, in 9 and 10 Edward VII., chap. 9, section 5. It is no doubt, familiar to the House, and I will not read it. It is clearly not applicable to the object of this motion, nor do the circumstances under which these great mergers have been effected disclose any intention to combine in regard to prices. The object of that legislation was to bear down upon individuals or companies who enter into a combination with the object of fixing or raising prices. There is no trace of that here. You must have a clear, concrete case. You make complaint before a judge of the Superior Court in the manner indicated in the Act, and this brings about an investigation into the individual cases brought up. Therefore, the House must see that that particular relief is of no use whatever in the circumstances under which this motion is presented. Now I think I have established that these operations are carried on in the commercial and industrial world on a very large scale, that they are carried on in a way which would certainly justify the government in making an investigation to ascertain, not what we hear on the street or read in the newspapers, but to ascertain in an authentic way the exact facts connected with these mergers.

We are soon to legislate for a long period of time respecting banking. Surely if the circumstances and facts I have disclosed to the House have any foundation, we are not in a position to make that legislation unless we know exactly what share our great financial institutions take in those mergers, and whether it is necessary to amend in some important particulars the statute which refers to that. I express this in a tentative manner, and as having reference to possible remedies, to a state of things which I think invites urgently the attention of the government. It seems to me that with regard to directors in these companies, if we are to protect the weak against the strong, and if we are to prevent abuses, it would be necessary to alter the law and to place these directors in the position of trustees towards the shareholders, with all the consequent responsibilities which attach to that position. That, I think, would prevent the abuses which have come to light, and which have been pointed out in the cases I referred to a few moments ago.

As regards banking, the question is perhaps even more serious. A remedy has been suggested in the inspection of banks by an independent authority. For my part, it seems to me a very difficult matter in our country to establish that inspection because of the multiplicity of branches belonging to the banks. It is evidently impossible for the government itself to inspect all the branches. Inspection is an easy thing, for instance, in a country like the United States, where there are a large number of banks, but where there are no branches. But here, where there is a multiplicity of branches, it is difficult to inspect them. With respect to operations of an objectionable character it is easily conceivable, if they are either illegal, or it is desired to take them out of the purview of an inspector, they may be put through at the branches, it seems to me, rather than at the head office, which alone can be inspected. It might be possible, I suppose, for the bank to name its own inspector, and to have also to make of the Bank inspector himself an official inspector charged with all the responsibilities which would attach to his position, to inspect the principal offices. However that may be, it seems to me that some change in that direction is necessary. Possibly also it would be a wise provision to oblige the directors, the officers of the bank, in their returns to the government, to point out the loans carried on under the circumstances of the underwriting of bonds which I detailed a few months ago. In that way the government and the public would know what amount of the bank's capital has gone into these special merger operations. As I view it, these operations are not in harmony with the operations generally contemplated for banks. Banks that are forbidden by the banking law to loan or advance on mortgages, by the interposition of trust companies that hold these bonds, in reality make advances which are secured by a mortgage, an operation which is forbidden by their charter. It is a singular thing that money has been easy in all the countries of the world this year, but in Canada the market has been tight. Has this been caused by the amount of capital involved in these operations? Some people who know, are inclined to think so. Money has been tighter here than elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for the time I have taken in exposing this matter, which I consider very important. From words which have fallen from my right hon. friend the Prime Minister upon another occasion, one would suppose that a motion of this kind is a want of confidence motion. But surely that interpretation, with all respect, is not a proper one. The term 'want of confidence motion' is not properly applicable to a motion made on going into committee of supply; that is to say, it does not apply, in my estimation, more to such a motion than to any other motion. Want of confidence attaches to any motion the result of which is to prove that the government has lost the confidence of the House. It may occur on a private Bill, it may occur on any government measure, it may occur on a motion apparently indifferent, but the result of which is to express to the government that the House has no more confidence in them. It may result without the expression of any vote at all. Motions made at this stage of the proceedings are always made for a redress of grievances, and it is quite open to the government either to accept these motions and to redress the grievance, or to express its own opinion that a grievance has been made out, and that it will entertain the demand without their being such fatal results attached to the motion. Upon one occasion in England, if my memory serves me right, Mr. Gladstone, when Prime Minister, resigned upon an insignificant vote in Supply, where the committee refused to grant a small sum of two hundred pounds in the army estimates. Why? Because Mr. Gladstone considered that it was, on the part of the House, an expression of want of confidence in the army reforms which his government had undertaken. In 1896 the government of that day resigned without the House meeting. I insist upon this, because I did not present the motion as a motion of want of confidence. I present it at the proper time for the redress of grievances before we go into Supply, and I would be very glad if the government, in view of the importance of the matter, would state its willingness to entertain the proposal and to make the investigation which is called for by a large number of people—not perhaps influential and powerful people, but people who have been affected by these operations and who think that an investigation is necessary. Upon that assurance from the government I would willingly withdraw the motion. I insist upon this, because I do not wish to be reproached with having presented this motion at this stage, taking the view of our parliamentary practice which I do.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, before attempting to reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) I would like to ask him just what form of investigation he has in mind when he speaks of the desirability of the subject of recent mergers being publicly inquired into.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that a Royal Commission composed of competent men would be the proper way to make a public investigation.

Mr. KING. In proposing to the House the appointment of a Royal Commission, or the appointment of any body, to conduct an investigation into such a large question as that of mergers, it is rather important that the reasons which are given in support of a suggestion of this kind should be made apparent. I have carefully listened to my hon. friend during the course of his remarks and it seems to me that he has succeeded admirably in disclosing to the House the intricate and complicated methods by which mergers are brought into being, by which they are financed and by which their operations are carried on. But the admirable speech which the hon. gentleman has made, it appears to me, has given us the best of reasons why it is not necessary to hold a public inquiry in order to disclose these complicated methods. He has taken one of the most difficult of modern problems and he has shown, I think clearly to everybody, that it is a many sided question and that there are many considerations which have to be taken into account in dealing with a subject of that kind. He has done this so well that I think his own speech is sufficient to obviate the necessity of conducting an inquiry to discover these methods and to ascertain the possible effects upon all concerned. However, in the motion which has been put forward the hon. member has given three reasons in particular why he thinks a public investigation of this kind should take place. He suggests that it should take place, first, in order that the government or the country may ascertain to what extent these mergers are responsible for causing continuing high prices for the commodities produced; second, to what extent they are responsible for damaging the reputation of Canadian securities abroad and, third, restricting the banking facilities of this country. In asking the government to appoint a royal commission of this kind it seems to me that the hon. member should have presented some grounds on which the House would have reason for believing that to some extent mergers had been responsible for injuring the reputation of Canadian securities abroad, for restricting the banking facilities of the country and for the continuation of high prices. While he has spoken at length with regard to the methods of the organization of these mergers, I fail to gather from his remarks anything in the way of what one would regard as prima facie grounds affording justification for a public inquiry. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that during the course of his remarks my hon. friend made a single reference to the reputation of Canadian securities abroad. I may have failed to hear all he said, but I followed him very closely and a perusal of his remarks in 'Hansard' to-morrow will show whether I am right in that or not, but I did not hear a single reference to the reputation of Canadian securities abroad, and yet, that is one of the grounds which he gives why the government should appoint a royal commission to inquire into the effect of mergers in this particular. But, although my hon. friend has not put forward any reason in support of this clause in his motion I cannot help feeling that he has not done so because of the difficulty he would have had in making out a case in that connection. I think my hon. friend will be the first to admit that there never was a time in the history of the Dominion when Canadian securities stood so well or so high as at the present time. If the existence of mergers is one of the factors entering into the reputation of Canadian securities abroad then, judging by the position at the present time, we would be led to conclude that mergers were a good thing rather than a harmful thing in that particular. One of the most prominent of modern financiers is Sir Edgar Speyer. He will, I think, be acknowledged in this House as being one of the foremost financiers in the British Empire. Giving to one of the leading papers of this country an estimate at the close of last year of the financial situation, Sir Edgar Speyer used the following words:

Just as Canada suffered in the nineties through no fault of her own, in common with the rest of the world, through the series of economic misfortunes which affected so many countries at that time, so the good credit which the world at large now enjoys is shared by Canada in an exceptional degree. It is, indeed, of vital importance to Canada to know that the condition of credit generally has been rarely higher than it is to-day, and that Great Britain may be expected to lend freely in 1911. The indications are that trade will be more active than it has been ever before, and that Great Britain will continue to supply capital to Canada with a generous hand for the development of the great natural resources with which she is endowed so abundantly.

So, we have the testimony of this leading financial expert in London to the effect that during the past year, during the time when these recent mergers have been formed, the credit of Canada stood higher in Britain than it has ever stood before. And yet the hon. gentleman suggests that because of the alleged damage done to Canadian securities by mergers, this House should appoint a royal commission of inquiry.

Mr. MONK. I did not allege such damage ; I asked for a commission to ascertain how far these mergers might have an effect upon the reputation of our securities.

Mr. KING. In answer to that I might quote the very words of the motion given notice of by the hon. gentleman :

That the recent mergers of heretofore competing industries and the issue of securities resulting therefrom should be the subject of public investigation, with a view of ascertaining how far such mergers or the methods of carrying them out affect the public interest, either as causing continuing high prices for the commodities produced, as damaging the reputation of Canadian securities abroad.

I would submit that neither the remarks of the hon. gentleman or the situation as it is known to be in the financial world, afford a reason why on this ground at least the government should appoint a royal commission. My hon. friend further suggests that a commission should be appointed to inquire into the effect of these mergers as restricting the banking facilities of the country. Again, I fail to find that my hon. friend was able to show that the banking facilities of our country had been restricted in consequence of mergers. He did say that it was possible that because of these large financial transactions the banks would possibly be prevented from loaning money in other directions, but such evidence as there is does not appear to support his contention. At the close of the last commercial year loans were made by the banks in Canada amounting to approximately $677,617,000 which was almost $20,000,000 more than the commercial loans by the banks a year previously. During the same time the banking capital increased by about $14,000,000 as an indication of greater activity in trade, and it may be remarked that in that period when the greatest volume of business was being done, namely, the month of September, the note circulation of the banks was $99,400,-

000. So, in the case of banking facilities as in the case of securities abroad, my hon. friend has failed to give any evidence to this House in support of his motion for a royal commission of inquiry. Far from finding any restricting of banking facilities we have the strongest evidence of the greatest expansion yet known in the banking history of Canada.

The last reason given by my hon. friend for the appointment of this commission is that the commission should inquire into the effect of the mergers in causing or continuing high prices for commodities produced. That brings us to the question of prices. If the hon. gentleman would refer to a resolution passed in this House last session he will find there almost the very words he has put into his motion. On the 12th of April last year this resolution was adopted by the House :

Resolved, that it is expedient, in connection with Bill (No. 101) now before this House respecting the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers, which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers, to provide for the appointment of Boards of Investigation for the purpose of inquiring into alleged combines causing enhanced prices or restricted competition, for the appointment of counsel to conduct investigations before such boards, and for the payment of the members of such boards and of counsel, and of witnesses appearing before the boards, and of all expenses of boards, including transportation expenses incurred by the members thereof, or by persons under orders of such boards, in making investigations under the Act, and salaries of employees and agents and the payment of clerical and other assistance.

Mr. MONK. Does the Minister of Labour find that that resolution would authorize the carrying on of such an investigation?

Mr. KING. Certainly, and what I want to point out at the moment is that to the extent to which my hon. friend asks this government to appoint a commission to ascertain the effect of mergers on prices, the very object aimed at by him was obtained by parliament last year, and on the strength of the resolution then passed, was founded legislation which now exists. Let us see for a moment how the legislation of last year is likely as respects effectiveness to compare with what is now suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk). His motion comes down to a request that the government should appoint a royal commission to investigate these various mergers in order to ascertain their effect upon prices. In 1897 the Minister of Finance introduced a Bill giving the government power to conduct an inquiry where there was reason to believe a combine existed for the purpose of enhancing prices, and, notwithstanding that the government were willing to concede that such an investigation should take place before a judge, hon. gentlemen opposite entered the strongest objection against it. They claimed that to put in the hands of the government the power to appoint men to investigate any merger or combine was to give the Governor in Council a power that was well nigh inquisitorial, that would enable them to harass individual concerns, and for political or other purposes to promote their own ends. I imagine that if my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) were to press his motion he would meet to-night amongst his political friends precisely the same objections as were then advanced by them. For example, the hon. member for East Grey as reported in ' Hansard ' said :

It puts in the hands of a few men the power to harrass or annoy or interfere with the operations of business men in the country . . . to put the traders and manufacturers of the country under the control of the government to such an extent as to keep them in perpetual dread of being attacked under this law. It might be used as a means of levying on men political contributions or blackmail to any possible extent.

That is the view of one of my hon. friend's best friends on the other side of the House, and when my hon. friend's suggestion is met with that kind of argument on his own side of the House, he can expect but slight support for his motion.

Now, I differ with my hon. friend altogether when he says that the existing legislation is not sufficient for the purpose he has in view. I doubt if it is possible for more effective legislation to be devised than that on the statute-book at the present time, known as the Combines Investigation Act. Who knows better than the consumer whether or not he is being affected adversely by a combination? Who under my hon. friend's proposal is to be the judge as to what industries are to be singled out for investigation? Does he propose that this royal commission shall investigate every merger in the Dominion? If he does, the work of that commission is going to be very large and extensive. If he does not, who is to determine which merger is to be the subject of investigation in the first instance? Under the legislation on the statute-book, if any body of consumers have reason to believe that trade is being to some degree restricted by a combination, they have power, if they can make out a prima facie case, to secure an investigation; they have also power to put on the board of investigation one of their own number; and, in order that the investigation may be carried out in as fair a manner as possible, opportunity is given to the other side, namely, to those interested in the merger, also to name a member of the board. These two, agreeing together if they can, upon a judge, name him as chairman. They failing to agree, it is left to the government to appoint the third; and these three gentlemen are given all the powers of a court—the power to compel the production of documents, the power to summon witnesses, the power to take evidence under oath. In other words, all the powers a royal commission can possibly have, are given by the legislation we already have, to deal with this very question which my hon. friend suggests should be dealt with by a royal commission. So I say there does not appear to be any reason for appointing this commission on the grounds he has named in his motion, while legislation which is more effective than what he proposes already exists, and exists in a form which is likely to be of greater service to those who are being adversely affected by any of these alleged combinations.

My hon. friend and some of his friends on the other side may say: we know of the existence of these mergers, but what investigations have taken place? And I suppose that because there have been no investigations under that law up to the present time, they will say that the law has been ineffective. If my hon. friend has that thought in his mind, I would ask him how he tests the effectiveness of other legislation. To take a very obvious case, we do not estimate the effect of the death penalty by the number of death sentences passed or the number of hangings in a year. If the number is few, we believe the legislation is effective. If there are none we regard it as a most effective deterrent. The strength of life-saving apparatus is not measured by the number of drownings that take place, but rather by the lack of number. So it is with legislation of this sort. The knowledge that the power exists on the part of any six men who can make out a prima facie case, to obtain a commission of inquiry, has a tendency to make men careful in their actions; and one of the most forceful illustrations of the effect of the legislation passed last session is the very circumstance that since that legislation has been put on the statute-book we have not had the outcries against mergers and combinations that we heard before, and that it has not been found necessary up to the present time, except in one or two cases, to endeavour to start proceedings under this statute.

But, Sir, even if my hon. friend had made out a case as to why the government should appoint a royal commission for the purpose suggested, I would contend that he has chosen an inopportune time for his proposal. At this moment this country is engaged in a consideration of one of the largest commercial transactions which it has ever had to consider. Any proposed change in tariff arrangements is always viewed with a good deal of anxiety by all classes in the community. At the present moment the United States and Canada are each considering what legislation they shall pass in respect to a number of commodities, some of which are being produced by these very mergers to which my hon. friend refers. Now, I ask him, as a man of wide public experience, whether he thinks that at such a time it would be a wise thing for the government of this country to announce to the public that it proposed to appoint a royal commission for the purpose of making an inquiry into various business interests in this country. I am afraid that the effect of adopting the course which my hon. friend suggests would be to bring about a condition of affairs diametrically opposite to that which he himself desires. What could more affect the securities of some of the large business concerns in Canada than an announcement to the public to-morrow, or the day after, that the government of this country, for reasons which had been disclosed in this parliament, had found it necessary to appoint a royal commission to investigate some of these large industrial establishments? Would it not have a baneful effect upon the securities of this country abroad? I think that when my hon. friend considers the matter carefully, he will come to the conclusion that it would; and if he looks more carefully at the effect of the legislation which is at present on the statute-book. I think he will see that that legislation is one of the strongest safeguards this nation has for the reputation of its securities. The fact that it is known throughout the world that if our large industrial concerns seek to do what is not proper, seek to take an unfair advantage of the consumers, seek to unduly enhance prices or restrict competition, any six persons may start the machinery of government at work and secure a full and complete investigation into the business of such concerns the knowledge of the existence of such legislation has an influence abroad which tends to give the securities of these companies a value they otherwise would not have. In the reasons my hon. friend has urged, he has failed to make out a satisfactory case why in the public interests the course he has suggested should be taken; and I am convinced that on further reflection he will agree that it would be very much against the public interest to adopt that course.

In conclusion let me say that I hope none of the remarks I have ventured to make will be construed as in any way minimizing the importance of publicity in the work of these large organizations. I feel that in the public interest too great facilities for reasonable investigation at any moment cannot be afforded, I agree entirely with my hon. friend as to the importance of public investigation of mergers, and it was in that view that we put on our statutes last year the Combines Investigation Act; but where I disagree with him is with regard to the case he has made out as affording reasons why a public investigation should take place, and as to the opportuneness of such an investigation at this particular time. My hon. friend referred to the number of combines or mergers which have taken place recently. Well, this is an age of combinations. Not only do we see large combinations in matters commercial, but also in other directions. Even the churches have begun to combine.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. gentleman think it is very proper for him to designate the movement for church union as a combine?

Mr. KING. It was with no invidious intention that I used the word 'combine,' and certainly I did not use it in the sense the hon. gentleman indicates. I certainly would regard the proposed union of the churches as a consolidation, and I was pointing out that this was an age of great consolidations in all lines, and in that connection I alluded to the church union movement as one that might possibly be more remote from the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite than the others I have named. We have large organizations of capital and large organizations of labour.

Speaking with regard to the merging of capital, we have to recognize that this being an age of competition, consolidation is in some respects very desirable. As my hon. friend has said, mergers in themselves are not necessarily a bad thing, and I think he will agree with me when I say that large consolidations in this age of competition are sometimes necessary, because the competition is not merely between one industry and another, but frequently between the industries of one nation and those of another, even the industries of one continent and those of another. The fact is that economic conditions have so developed that these large consolidations are becoming essential to the industrial expansion of a nation, and just because large consolidations are becoming more numerous inevitable for this very reason there should be a means of investigation at hand all the time, as afforded by the legislation enacted and not investigations for a special occasion only, as is suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the hon. gentleman's opinion that these mergers and combines tend to reduce prices or increase them to the consumer.

Mr. KING. That is a very debatable point. It ought to be possible under these large organizations, for prices to be reduced. These large organizations should make possible certain economies of which the consumers should be able to get the benefit. I must confess, however, that I fear that has not always been the case, and that sometimes the economies thus effected have accrued rather to the advantage of one particular group than to the general public. But one of the effects of the publicity or investigation provided by the legislation which we put upon our statutes last year will be to disclose to the general public the nature of the economies effected and secure to the public some of the advantages that flow from them.

I would like to say in conclusion if I do not mistake the purpose of my hon. friend's remarks when he closed, that I hope he will not think it necessary to press this motion to a division. I think he was desirous of laying before the House some of the phases of this most important question which he thought should receive consideration, and I think he has rendered the House and the country good service in so doing, because he has brought out points which unquestionably will receive consideration by the government. But I think he should be content with this, and not ask the House to pass this resolution, and to pass it for the reasons assigned by him. I do not think the House would be justified in voting for it in the form in which it is put. In the first place my hon. friend has not shown that the reputation of Canadian securities abroad is suffering. On the contrary the facts go to show that they were never held in better esteem than at present. Nor has he shown that our banking facilities have been restricted. As far as we can judge by the banks statements, these facilities have been greater in the past year than before. And as regards investigation from the point of view of the effect of these mergers on prices, I think the House will admit that legislation effective for achieving the object he has in view exists on our statutes at present. In view too of the nature of the important transactions before this country and parliament at present, I hope my hon. friend will see also the advisability at this moment of not pressing upon the government the appointment of a commission for the purpose he has named.

Mr. SPROULE. Have there been any investigations under this Act to which my hon. friend refers or applications for investigations?

Mr. KING. I might say that at present there is an application pending before Mr. Justice Cannon in Quebec for the appointment of a board to inquire into an alleged combine in the case of the United Shoe Machinery Company. That application, I believe, is under consideration, and we are likely to hear any day whether it has been granted or not. There have been a large number of inquiries as to proceedings under the Act. But I am a little afraid that many persons have not as yet come to know the full significance of that measure, or to understand its completeness. It may be that some of the representations made by gentlemen opposite while the measure was under discussion in the House, as to its possible limitations has had an influence on the minds of some. But I think it is quite true that, once the measure is tested, it will be found effective. And, as I have already said, the absence of cases under this Act does not by any means prove that it has not been of efficient service in restraining large organizations from taking a course that otherwise they might have been tempted to take.

Mr. SPROULE. Was a registrar appointed under the Act, and if so, who is he?

Mr. KING. Yes, Mr. Acland, the Deputy Minister of Labour, was appointed registrar.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (York). Had I not known that it was the Minister of Labour who was speaking I would have thought it was the minister of combines. Practically, his speech is a defence of these mergers. I would also make the criticism that he has evaded the question presented here to-night, the question of regulating the capitalization of public companies, which is one of the pressing questions of the day. I had intended to take up that question this afternoon in connection with the railways, and I will take it up at the first opportunity. The disorganized condition of affairs in the United States to-day is largely due to faults in connection with the securities issued in that country. But a commission, exactly equal to a royal commission, has been appointed by President Taft to ascertain how the capitalization of railways is to be regulated. That commission is made up of most eminent men, headed by Prof. Hadley. If our securities to-day are good in the markets of the old country, and they are, and if the securities of the United States are not marketable in Europe, as is the case, what is the reason? It is that Americans have overworked the market; they have issued so much watered stock, they have capitalized their great trusts and railways to such an extent, that they can no longer market the securities. And if we pursue a similar method our securities will be in disrepute in Europe in a short time. You cannot have the flotation of securities referred to by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), you cannot have 'high finance' without damaging the credit of the country. See what the late Mr. Harriman did in connection with the railways in which he was interested. He suddenly became the greatest railway man in the country. And he attained that position by manipulating the securities of the railways. One of the great grievances of the state of California is that a wholly unnecessary $10,000,000 a year has been added to the freight rates of that country in order to pay dividends on watered securities issued by Mr. Harriman. When a Minister of Labour says that the Anti-Combines Bill meets the case he himself does not meet the case, for the Anti-Combines Bill has nothing to do with regulating the issue of securities. When I come to discuss that, in connection with the railways I think I shall be able to make out my case.

Referring to the banking system, which was mentioned by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I will deal with that more fully when we take up the banking law. But it is evident that some of our banks have become what may be called flotation banks—they devote their resources more to the flotation of companies than to giving accommodation to the public. One of the dangers of our banking system is in the flotation of these securities. But that subject will come up in connection with the banking law. It is a fact, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said in introducing his motion, that the rate of interest has gone up because of these new methods of finance. You cannot get anybody now to entertain an ordinary mortgage as security. The investor is looking for bonds or preferred stock accompanied by these free gifts of common stock as a bonus. And all this new trade of promoter and promotions is based on the idea of the over-issue of securities to be loaded on the public, the interest on which is transferred to the consumer, whether a customer of the railway or a user of the goods produced by combines. And it is a fact that combines to-day are responsible for the increased cost of living now complained of in the United States. I think nobody will deny that. And reciprocity, or anything else, will not reduce prices unless you control and regulate the capitalization of mergers. This will have to be done by some public law, and such a law can be drafted only after investigation. The Minister of Labour told us that our trade was increasing and the banks had more deposits than ever. But that increase is no greater than our increase of population. The need of the country is more capital. When the Minister of Labour says that the law to regulate combines is a cure for the great public grievance of over-capitalization of companies that exists he evades the issue that must be faced. Canada, if she would avoid the evils of high finance and the condition of affairs in the United States, must regulate the issue of securities by all public companies. Promoters will—as I have known in some cases—take a concern of $500,000 and capitalize it at $3,000,000, and put the stock on the market, making a large profit out of it, though, eventually, those who buy the securities may not get their interest. In the meantime, the public is loaded with the stock, and there is a tendency toward combination in order to increase prices. We boast of our Companies' Act, but nearly all the iniquities in connection with financial affairs, whether in America or Europe, grow out of the Companies' Act and the right it confers to issue shares. And, unless there is the strictest regulation by law of the issue of securities, the same kind of injury to the public and to the credit of the country is bound to follow. Therefore, I would like to see in this country the same kind of commission appointed as in the United States to investigate and bring out the facts. I am awaiting with great interest that report, which will be made some time next summer by Prof. Hadley and his associates in connection with the capitalization of railways in the United States. In a little while it is probable that the United States will take up the question in a wider aspect, and will devise some way to bring out the facts and secure regulation. When Governor Woodrow Wilson made his inaugural speech the other day in New Jersey he said one of the principal objects of his administration would be the regulation of the issue of securities, and that he intended, if possible, to put a stop to the discredit that had come upon that state by the result of the issue of powers of incorporation of all kinds, which he declared was a crying evil, not only in the state, but in the whole nation. So the question is before us, it must be dealt with, and it cannot be handled by a law that is merely directed against combinations.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It has long seemed to me that one of the greatest problems with which this parliament has to deal is this very question. Whether we will ever reach the day when parliament will be able to devise laws to control these combinations, I am not prepared to say. At any rate, there is great need for some other legislation on the subject, it cannot come an hour too soon, and in my judgment we have already delayed too long in finding a solution. We see the evil in the financial world, we see it amongst manufacturing corporations, we find it in these large trusts. Other countries appear to be troubled with it as well as Canada and the United States, and they have endeavoured, but very ineffectively so far, to provide a remedy for the evil. At one time I had great hopes that President Roosevelt would break up many of these combinations. He started an action against the Sugar Trust, and he certainly woke them up pretty well. The publicity which he gave to their nefarious transactions, partially at least restrained that trust in its operations. The Oil Trust was another combination of a similar kind. He attempted to attack them, but unfortunately, owing to his presidential term expiring, he was unable to do the good work which he would undoubtedly have done if he had remained longer in office. I felt sure from his conduct that he would not be re-elected, because I believed that the trusts and combines, and mergers, and railway corporations he was attacking would be too powerful in their opposition to allow him to be re-elected. I regret to notice that his successor, President Taft, is not following in the lines of President Roosevelt, although he declared that he intended to pursue his policy. I am afraid he has already been restrained, and I do not expect henceforth to hear of him accomplishing much.

Now, the hon. the Minister of Labour praises his combines law. At first glance it seems to be very well designed. But I think our experience since it was enacted proves the correctness of the predictions that were made at the time the Bill was discussed, namely, that there would be very few applications for investigation under it. Why? Because, as the old saying is, what is everybody's business is nobody's business. If you leave it to six independent citizens of this country to put the law in motion, knowing as they must know, the trouble they will bring upon themselves by becoming practically the prosecutors, knowing as they must the risk, the danger and the abuse they will bring upon themselves in attempting to prosecute a combination, there is probably not one case in a hundred where the men can be found to undertake the task. I believe that has been the trouble. The minister said no investigations have taken place. There is one pending somewhere down in Quebec, he said, but he did not tell us where it was, or what it was about.

Mr. KING. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I said it was against the United Shoe Machinery Company, and the application had been made in the city of Quebec. The application was presented at the close of last year, there was an appeal, and judgment was reserved on the 1st of February, and may be given out any day now.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not hear the name of the case. But the Minister of Labour said that this government had been striving to stop the nefarious operations of these combines. He said other methods that had been adopted up to the present time were not successful, therefore they were obliged to devise some other means to battle with these evils, and that was the combines law. He mentioned first that the Criminal Code was amended so that they might be attacked, but that was not effective. I would like to ask him why it is not effective? Because, after the Bill was put through in this House it was amended in the Senate until it was of no use. It was introduced a second time in this House and amended so as to make it valuable, but it dropped out because there was not time to put it through that session. It was introduced again and passed as amended so that would make it useful and so that it could be enforced.

Mr. KING. What year was that?

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was about 1900. The law then could be put in force, and under it convictions could be secured against parties who were violating it. But what does the government do? They amended it the next session, by reenacting the words struck out which left it as it originally was, and thereby made it worthless. That was the opinion of the late Sir Oliver Mowat, and he was regarded as a very able lawyer; he gave that as a reason why the law was of no avail. For what purpose? I honestly believe and I always did believe that it was at the instigation of these people who are carrying on their improper dealings that the then Minister of Justice when amending the Criminal Code put it back again. Now the Minister of Labour says that it was of no use. They made it of no use. They made it so that practically it is impossible for it to be of any value.

Mr. KING. Did the Minister of Justice of that day—I think it was Sir John Thompson—express the opinion in regard to the legislation to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) now refers that parliament was not enacting anything new or anything which was not already law, that they were not providing any penalty that did not already exist in the common law; in other words, that the whole legislation that they proposed really amounted to nothing? Was not that opinion then expressed?

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. He said that he did not think it went much further than the general law went at that time.

Mr. KING. What was the object of introducing this legislation at all?

Mr. SPROULE. It was to focus public attention on these particular Acts and to provide a remedy and a punishment. It was because an attack was made upon this law that Sir John Thompson gave the opinion that under the law of the time you might institute a prosecution and probably carry it on as effectually to the end as you could under this amendment but owing to the fact that nobody ever pretended to put the criminal law in motion for that purpose. This law was specifically providing a penalty for certain offences which were enumerated. I would further say that what always attracted my attention was the fact that the law was amended so as to make it of no value because the government immediately amended it, put it back again, left it absolutely useless and it has remained so from that day to this.

The Minister of Labour said: We have another provision; we have a provision in the Customs Act, and the present government put it there in order to show their desire to control these nefarious combinations and trusts. That was to the effect that with regard to any article that was the subject of a combine or a trust to the detriment of the consumer or producer, and it might appear so to the government, they could take the customs duty off that article, let it come in free and thus punish the parties in that way. I have several times in this House heard members of the government eulogize that law and say what a wonderful thing they had done in that they had made it so simple, so easy for the government to set the law in motion in order to punish parties who committed this offence, and in order that the consumer might get his goods at the least possible price. Although their attention was drawn over and over again to certain articles that were the subject of such combines, and an appeal was made to them to take these cases up, they absolutely refused, year after year, to move. Judge Garrow prepared a case and presented it to the government before he was put on the bench, and afterwards placed it in the hands of others who presented it in this House, and although their attention was drawn to it not once or twice but many times and many respectable firms in this country were being injuriously affected and the government were asked to apply this provision of the customs law and punish the parties they absolutely refused to put the Act in motion and it remained a dead letter. They did it in one instance with regard to paper and that is the only time they ever put it into motion. Had it not been for the fact that this happened to be something that was pinching the press, and they were afraid of the power of the press I believe they never would have touched it. So, that law has remained a dead letter up to the present time except in that one instance. Then, the Minister of Labour introduces his Combines Act, and he eulogizes that to a certain extent. The minister referred to a speech that I made away back in 1898 with regard to the danger of putting it in the power of the government to send out a commission in these cases. I always thought there was a great deal of merit in it but that there was a good deal of danger also, and when I came to see what the present government did in other lines I frankly confess that I felt it would not be a safe thing to do in the interest of the people because I would be very much afraid that they might throw out threats, if they wanted to control certain great corporations in their own interests, or that there would be some intimations given that they might look out or there would be danger ahead for them. If it should turn out that they would take the law up and enforce it honestly and properly, I think it would be valuable, but from what we have seen with regard to their conduct in other lines in my judgment the public of this country would have no confidence in their desire to put that law into force honestly and properly.

Mr. KING. Does not the hon. gentleman approve of the suggestion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that a commission should be appointed?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking about the proposal of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier at all. I am talking about the quotation which the hon. Minister of Labour made from what I said in 1898.

Mr. KING. The proposition we are considering is as to whether the same course suggested then should be adopted now.

Mr. SPROULE. I am giving my reasons why the people distrust the government. I have given the various powers that they have had in their hands, and which they have never used, and I have said that I would be afraid that they would use the one I referred to either not at all or for blackmailing purposes or probably for the purpose of raising subscriptions to run elections.

Mr. KING. Does the hon. gentleman approve of the appointing of a royal commission for this purpose?

Mr. SPROULE. I have not said whether I do or do not.

Mr. KING. Will you please say?

Mr. SPROULE. The minister may or he may not be a lawyer. Lawyers always want one to say 'yes,' or 'no.' I could put a great many questions to the hon. gentleman. For instance, I might ask him if it is true that he has stopped beating his wife.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately, I have no wife.

Mr. SPROULE. I was attempting, in answer to the comment of the hon. gentleman, to give the reasons for the position I took on this question. I am not dealing with the motion before the House so much as referring to the quotation which the minister made from a former speech of mine, and I am saying that the government have not honestly, in my judgment, taken any action for the purpose of punishing these individuals or stopping those combines. That is the reason I am referring to the quotation which the minister made from my remarks in 1898.

Mr. KING. Apart altogether from the past, would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him one question? Does he approve at the present moment of the government appointing a royal commission for the purpose of inquiring into mergers as moved for by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk)?

Mr. SPROULE. I have not read the motion close enough. I read it very cursorily, but it does not commend itself strongly to my mind because I do not think that it goes far enough in its scope. But, I would like to see some independent commission to take up these subjects with authority to deal with them, and not leave it to a private citizen to do it at great trouble and expense to himself for which he is not indemnified. If I were to talk about my views on a royal commission it would require a much more lengthy explanation than I desire to enter upon with reference to this motion to-night. I have always thought that the government were not serious with regard to this matter. I think still that they are not serious about it. It is like their eight-hour labour day, it is a gold brick handed out to the people to deceive them. I said so about that Bill when it was enacted, I think so about it yet, and until the government show some desire to put the law in motion I shall continue to think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). It is apparent to every one who has considered the subject that there may be combinations for business purposes which are entirely legitimate and which are not attended with any improper or injurious consequences to the community as a whole. Of that we can see examples around us every day in Canada. On the other hand there is not only in Canada, but in other countries, a tendency to combinations of a character which are not for the advantage of the community or of the country. These combinations may be roughly divided into two classes: those which are created for the purpose of excluding competition and raising prices, and those the capitalization of which is very exaggerated. We know of cases where a great deal of the capitalization does not represent any actual investment or anything in the nature of tangible value, but merely what might be called potential future profits. When a country is carrying on its affairs under a protective system, it is easy to see there may be evil in that because when stock representing no actual investment reaches the hands of bona fide holders for value, there may be a demand more or less insistent that the people who paid money for this stock—which originally represented no money at all—should have some claim on those in charge of the fiscal system of the country, so that dividends may be earned upon this stock. On a recent occasion outside of this House, I stated that I believed a good deal of injury had been done to the industrial development of Canada by some transactions of that character, and, gentlemen who are interested in manufactures afterwards said to me that they realized that there was a good deal of truth in my statement, because, as I said then and as I repeat now, when retribution comes for practices of that kind the punishment is apt to fall upon the just and the unjust alike. Combinations, even of the character to which I first referred, do not always have the absolute result of raising prices. One of the world's greatest combinations, the Standard Oil Company, did I understand reduce prices. I am not justifying the existence of that great combine; I am merely citing it as an illustration of the possibility of having perhaps an improper combine and at the same time a reduction instead of an increase in price. It is abundantly evident, not only in Canada but the United States, that combinations created for the purpose of doing away with competition do increase the price of commodities beyond what it should be. These two evils; the attempt to shut out competition and the capitalization of future possible profits are evils to which the attention of parliament may very well be directed. The Minister of Labour is perfectly satisfied with the existing legislation, but I am not sure that it meets the case at all. To be perfectly frank I do not think it does. In the first place, even if it were effective there is no provision which imposes upon any particular authority the duty of enforcing it. In the words of the homely adage quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) what is everybody's business is nobody's business and, a private person in this country will not take upon himself the odium and responsibility, not to speak of the expense, of enforcing such a law. It is idle for the government to place such a measure upon the statute-book and not to provide for its enforcement. I would dismiss altogether from consideration the operation of that statute, because I am of the present opinion that it would never result in coping with the two evils I have pointed out.

There is another thing that should not be lost sight of—we have absolute power in this parliament, if we exercise it, to enact legislation which will make the continued existence of these two evils impossible, so far of course, as that can be attained in view of the infinite resourcefulness of the men who are creating them, and in view also of the enormous complexity of business transactions in these later days. We may not be able to provide an absolutely perfect remedy but this parliament can at least provide a reasonable remedy. We are face to face also with the existence of these great combines in the United States upon a scale much larger than has been attempted in Canada. The combination of business interests in the United States at the present day, was undreamed of 15 years ago, or even 10 years ago, and their influence is making itself felt in Canada. There are in Canada at the present time several branches of industry the output of which, and the prices at which the output shall be sold in Canada, are absolutely regulated by direct and positive orders from great corporations in the United States. I am not speaking from personal knowledge now, but from what has been conveyed to me by men who ought to be in a thoroughly good position to know what they are speaking of, and as to whose absolute truthfulness I have not the slightest shadow of a doubt.

My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee), says the same thing is true of combinations in Canada. I was not aware of that, because my attention has been directed to the remarkable circumstance that there were combines in the United States regulating, by direct and positive orders, the amount of output of Canadian factories, and the price at which that output should be sold. If that is the case, it seems to me that that subject, although it may be a very difficult one to deal with, and one that possibly can only be dealt with by means of the tariff, is a subject that requires the consideration of this parliament, and that ought to be taken up in connection with the evils resulting from combinations having their origin in this country. I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has done no more than his duty in bringing this subject to the attention of the House. Whether or not we agree with the remedy he proposes, whether or not we agree with the terms in which he has couched his resolution, I think we all must admit that he has done a public service in bringing the subject to the attention of parliament. For my part, I am inclined to think that instead of investigation we want some legislation. I am inclined to think that parliament is at the present time possessed of about all the information necessary to enable us to put some legislation on the Statute Book of Canada.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton), Mr. Speaker, from listening to the various opinions that have been expressed regarding the Combines Investigation Act, it becomes apparent what a difficult subject this is to deal with. Nobody will deny that under existing conditions in many lines the combines are an absolute menace to the people, having the effect of enhancing prices. The prime object, therefore, of any measure that may be brought into force should be to remedy that evil. The hon. leader of the Opposition has said that there is now sufficient machinery, irrespective of the Act at present under discussion, to get at the basis of the evil. If that is the case, I am bound to say that I am quite ignorant of it. I have given considerable attention to this matter, having taken some interest in the passing of that Act, and up to the time that Act was passed, I did not see any remedy for the evil complained of. It is true, the Act is not perfect, but what I would like to know, is how it can be made more perfect. It has been said that there is no way of enforcing the penalties that may be incurred under this Act. The ordinary way I understand, is simply by suit. In what other way can it be done?

Mr. KING. I might call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that the Act makes provision that the Governor in Council may enforce the penalties.

Mr. PARDEE. I did not know that that was provided in the Act. The hon. leader of the Opposition speaks of the expense required to put the Act in motion; but one of the strongest points in favour of the Act is that the expense is borne entirely by the government.

Mr. MONK. I think the initial expense must be borne by the complainant until the case goes from the hands of the judge into the hands of the Commission.

Mr. PARDEE. That is merely the making of the motion. If the motion is successful, the costs are borne entirely by the government. The fault found by the farmers with the old procedure was this: It is very well to say that there is at present a provision in the statute whereby we may attack combines, and if certain things are shown certain remedies will be given, but how is it possible for us to get together and put up the whole cost of what may be a very expensive investigation, as was shown by the paper combine investigation. That is almost an impossibility for us. Therefore, it was that section 41 of the Combines Investigation Act was adopted, which provided that all the expense connected with the investigation should be paid by the government, and not a single dollar is to come out of the complainant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. MONK. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If the judge orders proof or inquiry on the first motion, the expense of it has to be borne by the complainant, and it may be quite costly.

Mr. PARDEE. Only for the prima facie case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If this is a public evil, why should any responsibility of that kind be imposed upon private individuals? If this is a good law why should not public provision be made for its enforcement?

Mr. PARDEE. That question was brought up at the time this Act was under investigation. It appears to me to be self-evident why. I think it would not be wise for this House to put into the hands of any one, perhaps an irresponsible person, and without the slightest ground of complaint, the means of coming day after day and setting all the machinery of this Act in motion on an ex parte motion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But all that is not necessary. If there is a great evil of this kind, surely you can appoint an officer or form a tribunal, who will not be called upon to act upon the initiative of any person, but who will be bound and responsible to take the initiative and deal with this evil wherever reasonable evidence exists that an inquiry ought to be made.

Mr. PARDEE. Practically we are agreed upon that. That is practically the same thing as now exists. Their complaint and evidence before any commission that might be appointed. Surely the commission could not investigate holus bolus without having some evidence on which to base its action.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Railway Commission of Canada can, upon its own initiative, make any investigation it sees fit, wherever in its opinion, an evil exists, and I see no reason whatever why the same principle might not be applied to such a case as this.

Mr. PARDEE. I can hardly agree with my hon. friend as to that. It would be giving a commission too great power to allow it, on its own initiative, to walk into the office of any business concern and examine its books and go into all the details of its transactions. To grant such a power to any body of men, which they might put into effect whatever they chose without even any demand being made upon them, could not fail to work injustice in some cases. As concerns the argument of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), what he desires is an independent commission and not have the onus put upon private individuals, because these individuals who would lay a complaint might be made to suffer in many ways. But surely no commission could be more independent than the one intended to be created by the Act now on our statutes. Those who complain appoint a representative, those who are complained against appoint a second, and a third is appointed by the courts. Surely no commission could be more independent than that. Each side is entitled to employ its own counsel. I fail to see why any six farmers should have any reason to bear persecution in any way because they happen to lay a complaint, and I do not think there could be any doubt about their readiness to prosecute their complaint if they thought they could make out a prima facie case. Therefore I do not see how we could create any commission more independent than the one contemplated by the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman were one of the six farmers he would think differently.

Mr. PARDEE. I do not see why I should. I have talked to a good many of the farmers on this matter and my information from them differs from that of my hon. friend. But so far as my hon. friend's remarks go, he is distinctly not in favour of the resolution of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) because he said very frankly—and I admire him for his frankness—that he does not think this government could appoint any commission which would not in some way do something wrong, and consequently could not be depended upon to act justly.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that as far as my recollection goes, and I certainly did not intend to say it. What I intended to say was that if any commission were directly under the control of the government, the government could make that commission act or refrain from acting, and I would have very grave suspicion that the evil would not be effectively dealt with.

Mr. PARDEE. Well, I take it that the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, if it means anything, means that the commission should be appointed by the government. I cannot see any other way in which the commission he recommends could be appointed. I am not here in any way to defend combines. To my mind they are a menace. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has pointed out in his resolution that very frequently they raise the prices. That no one can doubt. But the sole point to my mind is this What is the best way to get at the evil and stamp it out? This resolution, to my mind, is certainly not sufficient, and I have failed to hear any one propose anything that would provide a more effective remedy than the one we have on our statutes. But should a better remedy be found than is on our statutes, I am prepared to support it. As I have said however, the opinions expressed to-night as to the regulation of capitalization and various other things only go to show that so far nothing more effective has been proposed than we already have. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) has himself said that the legislation he evidently had in his mind might not be perfect because of the many devious ways of these combines which might render it unworkable. That is only another argument to show that in any new legislation such as now proposed, the House will not get at the root of the evil, and the only thing to do is to put in operation the legislation we have. What is there to prevent, under the existing statute, an application being made and a commission or board of arbitration being appointed? Under that statute the various parties to the dispute can have their own counsel and thresh the matter out. The Act goes so far as to say that the books of the corporation may be examined into by the board of arbitration, and this board of arbitration may be started practically without a single dollar of expense to the parties complaining. The chief objection I have to the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is this, that having spent the time we did on the Combines Investigation Act last session and that, in so far as we can judge at present, that legislation is better than any yet proposed, I can see no reason why we should devise some new tribunal and appoint another commission to examine into the very thing covered by the present Act. If any legislation can be shown which will more effectively reach the object which it is intended to reach I shall be only too glad to support it, but I do not think that any has been proposed so far. As the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said these combines can be waked up just as well by our present Act as by any other legislation and therefore the resolution of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is simply a surplusage; and before deciding any other remedy, we ought to give fair opportunity to test the one we have.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). The speech of my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) is a confirmation of the general opinion that the government is unable to reach these combines. I am sure nobody in Canada will think for a moment that we have not sufficient legislation on our statutes.

Mr. KING. The hon. leader of the opposition did.

Mr. BLAIN. The complaint about the country is that the Minister of Labour is devoting altogether too much time in the preparation of legislation and fails to enforce the legislation already on the statutes.

The reason there is so much talk in the country about combines is because of the introduction of the national policy many years ago and the attacks my hon. friends opposite made on that policy. My hon. friends opposite taught the people of Canada that combines were introduced by the policy of the Liberal-Conservative government. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was one of those who went about telling the people what a wicked policy the Conservative party had created, and that it was the prolific parent of combines, and that these combines had unduly enhanced prices to the consumer, and when the Liberals came into power of course these combines would be immediately got rid of. The people are to-day asking how is it that this government does not enforce the legislation it has and break up the combines which are unduly enhancing prices. It looks as if my hon. friends opposite, by their tariff reform and by sitting in their offices preparing legislation, were trying to reach this great question when they are well aware that all that is wanted is some activity on the part of some officer who should be appointed for that purpose, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition suggested when this matter was up for discussion last year. The Minister of Labour had a year of trial of his new legislation, and he acknowledges to-night that it has done nothing except create one case.

Mr. KING. If I may interrupt my hon. friend, I did not acknowledge that the legislation has done nothing; on the contrary, I say it has done everything. The very fact that there are no investigations under it shows that these companies are held under restraint by it.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman seems to say that because the legislation has done nothing, therefore, it has done everything. Because there is only one case under the law, the hon. gentleman tells us that peace is abroad, and there are no combines.

Mr. KING. I would remind my hon. friend of the illustration I used: He would not estimate the effect of the death penalty by the number of hangings, but by the fewness of them.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to hear the hon. gentleman explain how this law has kept down combines. Only in one case has any action been taken under it. And the hon. gentleman admits that he and his department, and the government have taken no action at all. If inactivity will reach difficulties of this kind, it is the only case in which difficulties are to be dealt with in that way. The people will not be satisfied, and are not satisfied. The defence of existing legislation by my hon. friend is practically a plea for combines. Take, for instance, the situation in relation to beef. This session, and more particularly last session, complaint was made from this side of the House that in western Canada there is a great evil that is hindering the agricultural interests there, and that in sections of Manitoba, and the other provinces where, years ago, a large number of cattle were raised by the farmers, these people have gone out of the cattle business for the reason that there are low prices for their beef because of the operations of a combine. And it is proven that in the province of Ontario the price paid for beef to the farmers is not an excessive price; no one can accuse the agricultural interest of charging too much for the beef produced upon our farms. The difficulty arises after the beef has been sold by the farmer and before it reaches the consumer. There are combines in that business; the Minister of Labour himself understands that. There has been discussion in the public press, and, no doubt, the Department of Labour has received considerable complaint from the people of the country that this legislation does not cure the evil. There has been legislation on the statute-book for a long time. There is a law that was placed on the statute-book at the instance of the late Hon. Clarke Wallace. I am not saying that it was well enforced; it is not necessary that I should discuss or defend it. But when the present government came into power they promised that better legislation would be passed and enforced. But the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) of course, sits quietly by and you do not get a word against combines from him. All that he does is to reform tariffs——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. And he could not reform tariffs if he had not supporters like hon. gentlemen opposite at his back. He does not have to consult them ; they will vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL. Perfectly satisfied.

Mr. BLAIN. I have listened for some years to my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) talk about the importance of stability of tariffs in this country. Yet when all interests are doing very well, the government take up the question of tariffs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was in the National Policy too.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will endorse it, because it contains a sort of balm of Gilead for every part of the country. However, we are not discussing the tariff question just now. I point out that there is a strong feeling in this country against combines, that enhance prices of staple commodities to the consumer. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), has pointed out that there are great combines already in existence in Canada, combines that are provincial and combines that are national also. And there are combines from the old country, huge combines such as this country never heard of. There would be no need of the resolution of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) if this government had been doing their duty to the people on this line. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) would support the government, and this side of the House has supported the government, in legislation proposed for the purpose of preventing the formation of these combines. The Minister of Labour in his Bill of last session had the united support of both sides of the House. I pointed out at the time that I did not think this legislation would reach the case. I do not think the Minister of Labour himself thought it would reach the case.

Mr. KING. Certainly, I did. Why did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) support it if he thought it would not reach the case?

Mr BLAIN. I pointed out that it would not reach the case.

Mr. KING. Why did my hon. friend support it if he thought it would not reach the case?

Mr. BLAIN. I take the ground that the government in power are responsible to the people for the legislation of this parliament. Whenever there is anything good, my hon. friend says: See what we have been doing for Canada! But whenever there is anything going wrong he says: Oh the opposition are as much responsible as we are, Sir, I do not think the people will be satisfied with that kind of argument. I want to point out that this question is one that should receive the energetic attention of the government; it is their duty to look into it seriously. It is not enough for the Minister of Labour to say, as the hon. member for West Lambton did, that five or six farmers could join together and make a complaint, and that if the machinery of this law was put in force under this complaint these combines could be reached and the government would pay all the costs. That is not sufficient. If the government believe that this law is able to reach these combines, it is their duty to appoint somebody whose business it will be to enforce the law, otherwise the legislation is a dead letter. Why does not the hon. gentleman accept the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, and appoint an officer in his department to enforce the law?

Mr. KING. The reason why I think such a course would hardly commend itself to the House is that when a similar line of action was recommended once before it was pointed out that the government would use such an officer for its own purposes; they would send him as an agent to further political ends. To follow the argument used by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), this officer would oppose those interests which the government might think it desirable to oppose, and refrain from opposing favourable interests. The legislation which has been put upon the statute-book removes the possibility of anything of that kind, and leaves the initiative in the operation of the law to those who are likely to be affected adversely.

Mr. BLAIN. If my hon. friend's suggestion has anything in it, it is that there cannot be found in his department any one to enforce this legislation because there is too much politics in it. That is a strange condition of things. That rather suggests that my hon. friend knows that he is possibly surrounding himself in his department with politicians rather than with men who will enforce the labour law. I am not saying that is the case, because I accept his statement. He says it would not do to accept the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, for the reason that if such an officer was appointed he would be charged with enforcing legislation against one class of people, and leaving another class go free. Does the hon. gentleman think that is a sufficient answer to the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition?

Mr. PATERSON. Would you not be rather apt to make that charge yourself.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has been guilty so long, in his early days, of looking after the interest of his party rather than the interest of his country, that I fear his vision is not very clear on a question of this kind. I want to point out that there is a feeling abroad in Canada that combines are in active existence. That feeling disturbs commercial conditions, and agricultural interests as well. If the people could be convinced that where combines are proved to exist this government would scatter them; that where it was proved that prices were enhanced unduly in consequence of these combines the government would suppress them; then the people would be satisfied and content, instead of being suspicious and discontented as at present. When people are paying too much for their goods at any time they want a government in power who will break down the combines, and who will see to it that the manufacturers shall not be permitted to charge more than a fair and reasonable price for their goods. But so long as the government allow these combines to continue their operations, with the effect of unduly enhancing prices to the consumer, there will always continue to be these discussions, and these unsettled relations between the manufacturer and the consumer. That is a point that ought to receive some attention at the hands of the Minister of Labour, and that is what I had understood his department was for. When I open the 'Gazette,' published by the Department of Labour, and look over the difficulties that occur between capital and labour I find that they are mainly settled by themselves, not by the agency of the minister's department. My hon. friend seems to think that when he has put a law upon the statute-book his work is done, and that somebody else must enforce it. A law of that kind will not be satisfactory. I am in accord with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when he directs attention to the condition of things that exists in this country at the present time. I say that if the Minister of Labour hopes to reach these difficulties that exist in Canada he must be more active, not in putting legislation upon the statute-book, but in enforcing the legislation that is already upon the statute-book.

Mr. MONK. I confess I had expected that a question of this importance would have received more attention from the government. I am very much disappointed with my hon. and young friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), because he does not seem to have accomplished the results in his department that we had a right to expect. No doubt the hon. gentleman is very busy in his department, and I can understand that possibly questions of this kind do not absorb so much of his attention as they do outside the House. But, really, some of the motives given by him for not accepting the prayer of this motion seem to be trivial. He suggests that it would be most untimely for us to investigate mergers at this moment, because negotiations are going on with the United States for a reciprocity treaty. Surely my hon. friend is not serious. What possible relation is there between a proposal to investigate our economic conditions in Canada and the negotiations for a modification of our tariff with the United States?

In order to give some color to my hon. friends suggestion, he says that we would have to investigate the businesses of these companies. My hon. friend is not serious as to that. This motion calls for the investigation of the circumstances attending the merger, the influence that it has in connection with prices and the influence in our standing in foreign markets and banking necessities. We have nothing to do with the details of the businesses of these companies. Not at all, but a Royal Commission, formed under the terms of this motion, if it were passed, would not be called upon to look into the details of any business whatever, or I much misunderstand the purport of the motion. My hon. friend seems to think that the object of this motion is to complain of the price of certain commodities, such as is contemplated by the Combines Act, to complain of the increase in the price of say, butter, or any other such necessities of life. There is nothing of that kind in the motion, and I think it would be sufficient for me to mention that any lawyer would see that the combine Act does not apply to an object of this kind. In order to be able to assume that that is proven it is sufficient to read section 5 of the Act passed last year under the leadership of my hon. friend, because you will see that it merely applies to certain specific cases of arrangements between producers as to the prices of their products, There is nothing of that in this motion. While I am speaking of that, I may say that I was amused to hear the minister say that the passing of this Act had stopped combines.

Mr. KING. No, I beg your pardon.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, the hon. gentleman compared it with the death penalty.

Mr. KING. No, my hon. friend is mistaken. I spoke of its adverse effect on combinations. I did not say that they had at all ceased because I believe that combines will continue to increase during the coming years. But, I did say that it had had a restraining effect upon combines using their power in a manner detrimental to the public.

Mr. MONK. Surely my hon. friend knows that these combines have been continuing during the whole year, that regularly, manufacturers and wholesale and retail dealers have been meeting as usual, fixing prices and violating the terms of the Act. There is no doubt that the Act applies a remedy, but as the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), said, it is a useless remedy, because nobody will employ it. In truth, no government, as my hon. friend from Grey says, will take up this question seriously and directly. Why ? Because it affects great interests and governments are afraid to touch these interests. There is no doubt about that. Why, if the minister instituted the inquiry that is suggested in this motion great, powerful men would be affected, there is no doubt, but we would have an immediate cessation of the operations which lead to these mergers where these men make enormous sums of money and less powerful men and groups of poor people lose their all. That is what I find in connection with this. My hon. friend stated that there had been no proof made in support of this motion that the banking facilities of the country had been injuriously affected.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), knows that he has no right to reply without the consent of the House, as this is an amendment to go into Committee of Supply. I have no objection if the House consents.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. King), knows that it would not be proper to state certain particular cases here, but surely my hon. friend is aware of the details of most of these mergers, where they were engineered, what banks carried them through, and who were the individuals interested. The members of the government are supposed to know all that, the public generally know it, and it is a matter of notoriety. I think I have said enough to establish the fact that the creation of this commission would be a very useful thing.

Amendment (Mr. Monk) negatived on division and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had finished, when the House was last in Committee of Supply——

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), is not suggesting that we take up estimates to-night ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we are going on with the Manitoba items—public buildings.

Mr. STAPLES. These items largely concern the city of Winnipeg and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart), has gone home. It is now a quarter past eleven. and I think it is about time to discontinue work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is one item for Winnipeg, a military item, which I propose to allow to stand. That only leaves one item of $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The government are proposing an eight hour Bill and they should not ask us to work twelve hours a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend will not press the objection because we can get in an hour's work. The first item is.

Dominion public buildings—renewals, improvements, repairs &c., $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister would be well advised to let us adjourn.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAPLES. I have been in this House for many years, and I have noticed that the Manitoba items usually come up almost at midnight with the result that they are rushed through and do not get the criticism they deserve. I do not think we should be called upon to sit around here till this hour of the night waiting to have a right to protest against any of the estimates dealing with Manitoba. It is true that there are only a few items, it is true that Manitoba gets very little consideraion from this government and the least consideration the Minister of Public Works might give to Manitoba, is to take up the items earlier in the day.

Mr. SPROULE. On days when we have set questions to be disposed of and where notice is given in advance that one of these days is intended to be used for the purpose of discussing a question, it is not the usual custom nor is it part of wisdom to start to do a day's work when we have reached a quarter past eleven at night. We commenced this morning at eleven o'clock with the committees and we have put in over 12 hours' work to-day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. member for Macdonald desires to have the Manitoba items stand over I will be willing to take the items for Saskatchewan and Alberta. The hour is quite early. I am surprised at my hon. youthful friend from East Grey wanting to go home so early.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister is getting along with his estimates much more rapidly than are the public buildings in Manitoba.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The sooner we get through with the estimates the more rapidly we can do the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is not my experience, the rush with the estimates is in inverse ratio to the hurry with the public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will let the Manitoba items stand and take up Saskatchewan and Alberta. The hon. member for Macleod is here and he will be delighted to see the Macleod item go through.

Mr. HERRON. Personally I do not object, but I do not think it fair to proceed in the absence of the other members from my province.

Battleford public building, $33,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased for $3,000 and the contract let. The building is for post office, &c. The contract, exclusive of heating and electric wiring, is for $26,785, and the estimated expense, including everything, is $41,-310.40. Battleford, formerly the capital of the Northwest Territories, is in a fine section of country which is growing rapidly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is this new Battleford or old Battleford?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Old Battleford.

Mr. LAKE. What is the population of North Battleford, and why is old Battleford chosen in preference?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Old Battleford is a considerable distance from North Battleford, and a branch line of the railway has been constructed from the main line to it. Of course a public building in North Battleford would not suit Old Battleford, and vice versa.

Mr. LAKE. Old Battleford is an important place but New Battleford has also claims for a public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At some no distant date in the future, my hon. friend may be able to so press the claims of New Battleford that it may have a public building.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the 29th of October last.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When were the plans approved?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me over a year ago.

Mr. SPROULE. How many tenders were received?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders were called for by public advertisement. One tender was received, that of M. H. Piggott & Son, of Hamilton, for $26,735, which was nearly $12,000 below the chief architect's estimate of the bare cost of the building. That is for the whole contract, outside of heating, lighting, fittings, lock boxes, &c.

Mr. STANFIELD. When did this item first appear in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1907-8.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was that before a general election or since?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My recollection is that it was before the general election.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Had it anything to do with the result?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is the representative in this House?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Champagne.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it not be a good thing to have the representative of the district here when such an important matter as this is being discussed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think it is essential.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Has the minister received petitions from the city council of Battleford or other public bodies urging the speedy construction of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only record I have is that application was made by Mr. McCraney as long ago as January, 1907, requesting the erection of a public building in Battleford. He made out a very strong case as to the inadequacy of the present accommodation. One strong point he made was that for the offices for the different departments, the Dominion lands office, the telegrah office, the immigration hall, and the post office we were paying rents amounting to $1,536 a year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister explain how it is, then, that without any particular urgency, except what is represented by the member for the constituency, he has given this building, while he postpones many others which were in the estimates of the same year, but which are represented by members of the opposition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One strong reason was that the accommodation for the various offices was wholly inadequate.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The case I have in mind has no accommodation at all.

Mr. SPROULE. If the accommodation was so inadequate in 1907, how is it that the work remains undone until 1911? There was urgency for the building in 1907, but there was no urgency for the next three years, and now it is getting to be urgent again.

Mr. BLAIN. Is my hon. friend paying the same rents now that he did in 1907?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume the same.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the population of Battleford at the time Mr. McCraney first made the suggestion?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1,800 or thereabouts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the minister read to the committee the letter of recommendation he received from Mr. McCraney?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the letter, but only an epitome of it. It is dated January 19, 1907. It sets forth the rents paid for the various government offices, the amount of revenue received, money orders, &c. He states that Battleford stands tenth in the province of Saskatchewan for gross revenue, and third for money orders paid, that each of the buildings now occupied is inadequate for the requirements of the public service, that a considerable saving in fuel and caretaking could be effected by having all the offices in one building. He also points out that Battleford is the oldest established town in Saskatchewan, that it is a post of the Northwest Mounted Police, that it has a land office and an Indian agency, that it is destined to be a town of considerable importance, and is the centre of a fine farming country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there a branch line running into old Battleford now?

Mr. GRAHAM. You can go into both old Battleford and new Battleford by train.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the minister send any representatives of his department to visit these places and advise whether or not a building should be erected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we sent a representative to chose the site.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Was he instructed to ascertain whether Liberals or Conservatives were to be served?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does he know, as a matter of fact, that his representative makes a practice of so inquiring?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have never heard it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then I will give the minister an instance. Not longer ago than this summer there were certain residents of a locality not far from the city where I live who came to me with respect to certain difficulties they were in caused by floods in the Assiniboia. I am not referring now to the improvements made by the government during the month of the last election, to improvements of a similar kind undertaken by this government about 28 days before the election; but I refer to a point further east where some difficulties occurred by reason of the flooding which could be remedied. At the request of these gentlemen I wrote the department and urged that a representative should be sent to the locality to ascertain whether or not it was the duty of the government to make similar operations in the bed of the river and thus avoid the disasters they were subject to. A petition, I believe, was also sent in. The department did send out a representative. The petition was headed by the name of a gentleman who turned out to be a staunch Liberal. The representative notified the man whose name was at the head of the petition and was met by him at the railway station and they drove together to the scene. On arriving there the representative of this government inquired what were the political complexions of those who would be benefited by the proposed alterations. He was informed by this gentleman that when they called on the representative for the constituency he made no such inquiries, but did seem to consider that the public were entitled to equal justice, no matter of what political complexion. That, however, made no impression on the representative of the Public Works Department; and having ascertained that mostly Conservatives would be benefited, he recommended, so far as my information comes from the department, that the undertaking was not such a one as should be contemplated by the department at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Might I ask the name of the representative of the government?

Mr. MEIGHEN. His name was Stevens, and if the hon. gentleman or the gentleman himself disputes my statement, I am prepared to give evidence in support of it at any time. I have no doubt whatever that the same practice is very rigidly adhered to in the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In what papers were the tenders advertised?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very sorry I have not got the list, but would be glad to get it, and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think this item should stand. We have not got the information we are asking for, or the population of the district in which this building is to be erected. It is now a quarter to midnight, and I think that after the effort of the ministry with regard to the eight hour Bill some attention should be paid to the comfort of the committee.

Mr. CROTHERS. Was a contract entered into and at what price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, at $26,735.

Mr. CROTHERS. But we only voted $10,000, so that the department has entered into a contract $16,000 in excess of the vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Subject to the vote of parliament.

Mr. CROTHERS. Is there a provision of that kind in the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS. It seems to me that the best reason this item should be allowed to stand is the absence of the member representing the constituency. The minister has not told us the grounds upon which he proposes to put up a building there at all. I assume he has never visited the little old village himself, and does not deign to tell us what information he has from any public official or whether he has any at all as to the necessity for this building. From the information we have, all that the minister knows in this matter he got from the gentleman who at one time represented this constituency in this House and not from the hon. member who represents it now. Hon. members on this side have the right to have the gentleman who represents the constituency here so that he might be subjected to cross examination regarding the statements contained in the letter which the minister says he received from the gentleman who represented the constituency at some day long past. The minister knows nothing about it himself, and the hon. member who represents the constituency now (Mr. Champagne) is not here. If the minister has no report from the officials of his department as to the necessity for a building there or as to the character of the building, he ought not to press this item.

It seems to me that in all these cases the minister should afford members of the House information of the grounds on which he is proposing to erect a public building. In this case, the only ground the hon. gentleman gives us is a letter from a supporter and that letter is four years old. The minister has told us that circumstances change very rapidly in that new country, that cities spring up in a few hours. Four years ago there may have been need to put up a building of this kind in the place proposed, but that does not show that it may not be expedient now to expend twice as much as was then proposed. We on this side have a right to have some one here who knows the circumstances of these places, and I know no one better qualified than the gentleman who represents the constituency. But he is not here. The minister does not even tell us that he consulted the gentleman who represents the constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crothers) now, if it will satisfy him, that on many occasions the hon. member urged upon me the need for this building.

Mr. CROTHERS. I have no hesitation in accepting the statement of the Minister of Public Works. But the fact that the representative of the constituency urged the construction of this building is the very reason why that representative should be here. The minister is not prepared to answer questions on cross-examination, for he has never been there, and knows nothing about it at first hand, but all his information is at second hand from the representative of the district. But this is not the first time when the minister has asked a large sum to be spent on public buildings or on harbours and rivers when the gentleman who instigated the expenditure was not here. The minister comes forward knowing nothing about it, and the member who does know about it keeps out of the chamber and gives us no opportunity to cross-examine him. I submit that this item should be allowed to stand until some one is here who is prepared to answer our questions.

This expenditure was first proposed in these estimates in 1907-8. It appears to be another of the innumerable cases provided for shortly before the last general election. I have been looking up some of the old estimates, and I find that in Nova Scotia we have had very rank illustration of that sort of thing. In the main estimates of the session before the election, the vote for harbours and rivers for Nova Scotia was about $373,000. A few months after that, it was determined to have an election; and on the 9th of July, 1908, supplementary estimates were brought down for no less a sum than $448,000 for the same purposes. Taking the two together, we find that, three months before the general election, they were giving an average of about $45,000 for each constituency of Nova Scotia. That is a nice way to endeavour to purchase a proportion of the electors in the different constituencies of that province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is an item for Battleford.

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes, and I am asking whether or not the same motive induced the putting in of this item just before the election as induced the other. And I am illustrating the evils of that system, or want of system, and would like to ascertain, as I started out by saying, from the member who represents the constituency, whether or not similar conditions exist there to those that existed in Nova Scotia, but we have not the advantage of that information, for the member for that district is not present. It is a very nice thing for the government to say, in substance, to the people of a province: We propose to spend $800,000 on harbours and rivers in your province before 31st March next. We are putting our candidates in a position to say to the electors of each constituency: Here is an estimate in print. The government have promised to expend, during the year ending 31st March next, in the improvement of harbours and rivers in Nova Scotia, no less a sum than $813,000. Now the election is coming on next October. If the government is sustained, these sums will be expended, if the government is not sustained, well, you take your chances of getting this money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I admit that there are hundreds of thousands of voters in every province of this country who are not influenced by anything of that kind. I understand the answer that hon. gentlemen opposite will sometimes make: You are accusing the whole people of that province of being purchasable. Nothing of the kind. Thousands of men in the province of Nova Scotia, as in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, are uninfluenced by any such improper motives. But I am sorry to say that in almost every constituency, whether it be in Nova Scotia or any other province, there is a sufficient number of voters who are influenced by such improper motives to change the result of elections in that constituency. Now I would like to know from some one capable of telling us, the conditions out at Battleford. There is no one here, and we are asked to vote away $33,000 without having all the information, without being in a position to cross-examine the informant. Just fancy a minister of the Crown coming before this committee with a letter written by some one who is not here, with the person representing the constituency out of the chamber, nobody who knows anything about the conditions to answer our questions, and he asks us to vote away $33,000 for the construction of a building up in that part of the country. I do not know whether the hon. members sitting behind the minister would vote for it if it came to a vote. We have often been asked the question: If it were proposed to erect this building in a constituency represented by the gentlemen on this side of the House, would you oppose it? And they seem to think that there is no answer to that question. Well, Sir, if you will pardon me for referring to a personal matter, I will tell the minister that during this very session I have been requested by a number of influential electors in my constituency to try to induce the Minister of Public Works to erect a public building in a certain village. I wrote back very emphatically to them and said, I shall do nothing of the kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the name of the village?

Mr. CROTHERS. I am not giving any names just now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman wants to keep that dark too.

Mr. CROTHERS. I distinctly told those gentlemen that I would not be a party to asking the government to expend public money in that place, because there are many other places throughout the country very much larger and much more entitled to an expenditure of money in the public interest. I have no doubt that there are dozens of other gentlemen on this side of the House who have refused to ask the government to expend money on public buildings at places where they think it should not be expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not found many of them.

Mr. CROTHERS. Well, I have told you the fact in regard to myself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman wont favour me even with the name of the place

Mr. CROTHERS. No, you are not entitled to the name just now. When my hon. friend comes to vote away public money he will then be entitled to the particulars; and if he comes to vote away any public money for the construction of a building anywhere in my constituency, and I am in the House, he will have a right to cross-examine me as to that town, just as I have a right now to cross-examine anybody who lives at Battleford. We do not know, for instance, whether this public building is intended for post office accommodation, or whether it is intended for a custom house.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must have been out when I stated what it was for. I said it was for Dominion lands office, telegraph office and post office.

Mr. CROTHERS. The minister has told us on other occasions the exact reason why he did not put a public building in a certain town with 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants—the post office there is now being carried on in a very commodious building, convenient to the public, for $5 a month, or $7 a month, at a much lower expenditur to the government than there would be if we were to expend $15,000 or $20,000 in putting up a public building. But we have no information touching that matter here. We do not know where the post office is in the old town of Battleford, we do not know how much rent is being paid for it, we do not know whether it is in a convenient position, we do not know, in a word, the very facts we ought to know, according to the minister himself, before we vote away this public money. According to his statement made on other occasions, if they have a commodious building there now, if that they are able to get at a reasonable rental in a convenient locality, then this money should not be expended. Now we have no one here to tell us the facts of the case. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that as we have already put in three quarters of an hour, and that it is past midnight, the minister ought now to accept the suggestion we made an hour ago, and not attempt to proceed with any of these items until he has some one here qualified to answer proper and legitimate questions submitted by hon. members on this side of the House.

Mr. RHODES. I must submit with the utmost deference, that I do not think the minister has given us reasons why we should vote this sum of money. I find in examining the report of the Postmaster General of last year some rather interesting facts. For example, I find that the postal revenue for the town of Battleford was the sum of $4,246.81. Upon looking at the return for the town of North Battleford, which I believe is at a distance of some seven miles away, the postal revenue was $5,226.97, or something like one-fifth more. Then of money orders issued in the town of Battleford, the return is $3,078; in the town of North Battleford, $5,604. In the next column I find that the total amount of money orders issued was for the town of Battleford, $33,900.36; the total amount of money orders issued to the town of North Battleford comprised the sum of $71,351.80, or in round numbers more than double. Again, the total commission received from the public in the town of Battleford was $213.08, and for the town of North Battleford, $425.85. Again, in the next column the number of money orders paid shows a slight increase in the case of North Battleford. The same with the total amount of postal notes paid. Again, the compensation paid to the postmaster in the town of Battleford was $137.69, that is, I believe, his percentage in addition to the salary; in North Battleford it was $238.81. Now all these instances go to show that in North Battleford you have a larger and more flourishing town, but you give the public building to Battleford. Take, for instance, the volume of the money orders in Battleford, $33,000; in North Battleford, $71,000. It would be only fair for the Minister of Public Works to take us into his confidence and tell us why it is that old Battleford has been chosen for the site of this post office, rather than North Battleford. It would be doing simple justice to the citizens of North Battleford to let them know why old Battleford is chosen in preference.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should be very glad indeed to give my hon. friend that information, but if we had to let items stand because the member for the constituency did not happen to be present, we would not be able to get on with the business. It does not make any more difference to me than hon. gentlemen opposite whether they talk against time or whether they do not, but I think it makes a little difference to the people of the country. I want to congratulate my hon. friend in my eye on talking against time while apparently conveying the impression to many who listened to him that he was not doing so. I have heard a great many public men in my day in the legislature where I attended for a number of years doing the same thing, but I have never heard one who does it more admirably than my hon. friend who is just in front of me. But he ought to remember that it costs a little, that every half hour that we take up unnecessarily here costs something to the country and I do not believe my hon. friend will approve of it. The question is simply whether we shall vote an item to enable the department to pay the contractors for this building to which parliament has already committed itself. Is it worth while to waste time simply for the sake of wasting time? With regard to the reason asked for, very courteously, by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), with whom I have no fault to find, because he did not follow the example of the hon. gentleman who preceded him, the reason why we selected Battleford is, that this is an old town and it is growing, not rapidly, but it is growing very well indeed. While the main line of the Canadian Northern railway passed it by, it has now been connected up with a branch line and I believe both the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific railway have Old Battleford in view and are seeking approval of routes by which they propose to reach that town. Battleford, according to my own observation, is in the centre of a magnificent, a beautiful farming country, first class settlers have gone in there and it happens that in old Battleford we have several departments of the government. We have the Immigration Department, the Mounted Police, a telegraph office, a Dominion Lands office, and for all these we are paying a pretty heavy rental. The accommodation is not what it ought to be and it will be very much better to have these different departments housed in one building.

Mr. DANIEL. What rental does the minister pay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are paying $1,536. Surely it is better to pass this item, and I will only ask for two or three more, including Macleod. Then, we will be able to go home to our comfortable beds and have the consciousness that we have done some actual work.

Mr. CROTHERS. I desire to say one word in reply to the minister. If I had not sat here for two sessions and listened to his persuasive and comforting voice I would be amazed at the courage he has displayed on this occasion in charging me with talking at this hour of the night and wasting time. I want to resent that statement with all the seriousness and indignation of which I am capable. Members of the House know very well that I very seldom take up any time in addressing the House. I think I may fairly claim credit for that. I never take up any time unless I feel that I have something to say. Every hon. member present I think, will admit that while I have had the honour of a seat in this House I have taken up comparatively little time in discussing public matters. But, it does not become the hon. minister as a member of this House to accuse any other member of talking against time. I desire anything I have to say in this House to be adjudged upon its merits, and in my judgment hon. members who heard what I said a few minutes ago will agree with what I say.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The majority would be against you now.

Mr. CROTHERS. When the minister was requested at half-past eleven to adjourn he refused to do so and now talks about hon. members wasting time. He ill-estimates the opinion of the people of this country when he does not know that the universal opinion is that we are putting in too much time after twelve o'clock, that honest and virtuous men ought to be in their beds before twelve o'clock and that the business of this country would be better performed if we concluded at ten o'clock at night, if we should go to bed at that hour and come back next day and work in daylight and not at night. It has been said by members of this House and by hundreds of people outside of this House, that the sittings of the House are too protracted during the night. They are surprised at the hour at which these estimates are going through and especially on Friday night, when a great many members are away. The general opinion is that these estimates go through at these late hours with the deliberate intention of putting them through the House when hon. members, exhausted by the long hours, have gone home. That is the opinion of the public outside of this House and yet the minister has the courage to get up at a quarter-past twelve and accuse an hon. member of wasting the time of the country by talking about these expenditures and insisting upon the committee adjourning that we may go home and go to bed like the honest, virtuous politicians we all claim to be. The minister would stand higher in the estimation of the electors of the country if he came before this House in daylight and asked for these estimates then instead of coming to the House at twelve o'clock at night, or one, two or three in the morning, and getting estimates through after the members of this House, by reason of these long hours, have become exhausted and gone home to recuperate in order that they may be enabled to fight next day. The attack which the hon. gentleman made on me was entirely uncalled for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was congratulating you.

Mr. CROTHERS. You cannot—I was going to say—humbug me, as the minister attempts to humbug others by any such sweet words as those. I submit that at this hour the committee had better adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was surprised to hear the minister state in one breath that from personal observation he could assure the House of the character of the country around Battleford when in the next breath he told us he had never been there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said I had passed through North Battleford, and that I saw there one of the most beautiful sections of country my eyes ever rested on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then his eyes deceived him. The soil there is so sandy that when portions of the Moosomin reserve within a few miles of the town were put up at auction they could not get a bid at any price, and yet the minister tells us from personal observation it is the finest country his eyes ever rested on.

Mr. BLAIN. I submit that the sitting member of the county should be present when an important item as this is being discussed. I make that submission because on one occasion I remember a supporter of the government condemning the government for uselessly voting public money in his constituency, and perhaps the member for this constituency would do the same thing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend need have no fear of that.

Mr. BLAIN. You never can tell. The sitting member for the county on that occasion condemned the government for the expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who was the member?

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. McEwan who represented Huron some years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been no such member since I have been here.

Mr. GRAHAM. And there is no such disposition now.

Mr. BLAIN. I have no doubt that such a thing would surprise the Minister of Public Works because he has educated his followers in a different method. But the fact is that Mr. McEwen denounced an expenditure on a wharf at St. Joseph in his county, and refused to be held responsible for it, and $15,000 were wasted there, and all you can see to-day is a few posts sticking out of the water, and no sign of a wharf. In view of such an incident as that surely the sitting member for the constituency ought to be here. I would like to know whether there has been any correspondence between the sitting member and the minister with respect to putting this item in the estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have given a summary of that correspondence.

Mr. BLAIN. My complaint is that my hon. friend, instead of bringing down to the committee the letters recommending this building, leaves them in the department. I take the ground that all the correspondence respecting an item of this kind ought to be forthcoming. My hon. friend refused to bring down original documents. If he brought them down, I am quite sure there would be less criticism, and he would be able to get his items passed through the committee much more quickly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am so much impressed with the forcible argument of my hon. friend, and his thirst for information that I feel disposed to accede to the very strong desire he has expressed that the item stand over till to-morrow ; and when that thirst is satisfied by the production of the letters, I understand that he will assist me in getting this item through.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.32 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited.—Mr. Conmee.

Bill (No. 110) respecting the Peoples' Railway Company.—Mr. Nesbitt.

Bill (No. 111) to incorporate the Saskatoon and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Carvell.

STORAGE OF FOOD SUPPLIES.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 112) respecting the storage of food. He said: The Bill which I desire to introduce to the House, in amendment to the Cold Storage Act, has reference to the greatest question now before the people of this country, the cost of living. The need of something of this kind has been brought forward with great prominence in the last few days in connection with the question of the right to destroy $100,000 worth of eggs which have been in cold storage in the vicinity of Montreal. In the United States there has been so much interest in this matter that one of their most prominent men, Henry Cabot Lodge, has introduced into the Senate of the United States a Bill dealing with it. Mr. Sulzer has also introduced in the House of Representatives a Bill to prevent the sale or transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of articles of food held in cold storage for more than one year, and Mr. Moore, of Pennsylvania, has introduced a Bill to regulate the storage of food supplies in the District of Columbia. The Bill which I introduce differs somewhat from these Bills. Section 11 of the Bill, amending the Cold Storage Act, provides:

11. That from and after the passing of this Act it shall be unlawful in Canada to keep in storage in any warehouse or other place of deposit for a longer period than one year any meat, fish, poultry, game, butter, eggs, oysters or other food products intended for sale or distribution.

Section 12 provides:

12. That whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Dominion medical health officer or food inspector that any meat, fish, poultry, game, butter, eggs, oysters or other food products kept in storage for a period under one year, may not be sold or distributed without prejudice to the public health, the said medical health officer or food inspector shall cause such products to be seized and destroyed.

As hon. gentlemen are well aware, there is a prejudice against the cold storage system, but that is a mistake. There is no doubt that, as Mr. Wilson, the secretary of the Department of Agriculture of the United States, says, that system is one of the greatest blessings to mankind. It started in the cold spring house or the cold cellar of the farm and the refrigerator or ice box of the home. In old days the storage of food products in the time of plenty for use in the time of need was practised. The object of cold storage is to lay up food in time of production for human consumption when the time of production is over. While that system may be used to the public disadvantage, it will, if properly regulated, tend to the balance of prices. It enables poor people, or people of moderate means to procure the ordinary necessaries of life at a time when they are not being produced. But the storage system should be guarded. In inquiries made by our neighbours to the south it has been proved that certain articles kept for six months deteriorated. Butter can be kept much longer than eggs. Eggs kept for three months or more will deteriorate, while poultry taken out of cold storage at the end of three months can hardly be distinguished from fresh-killed poultry. After three months, however, there is a gradual change for the worse. I consider, from the information which I have obtained, that the keeping of food products after the time of the year when they can be reproduced is deleterious. Dr. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, gives a list of different foods which can be kept without deterioration for different periods, according to the nature of the food. I do not claim that this Bill, which I desire to introduce, will cover the whole case. I merely wish to introduce it, as I think it is the duty of an opposition member to bring to the notice of the government any desirable legislation along this line, and I ask the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Inland Revenue to take up this matter either by introducing legislation of their own or by having this Bill sent to a committee.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). I think that the hon. gentleman perhaps is mistaken somewhat in speaking of the time in which food is left in cold storage. The time has not so much to do with the deterioration of the food as the regularity or otherwise of the temperature of the cold storage in which it is kept. Cold storage being carried on under the supervision of private individuals is frequently badly managed and the temperature allowed to vary. Therefore, if we had a law compelling cold storage companies to keep the food under proper temperature that might be better than to enact a time limit. Different products require different temperatures, and when all are kept in the same temperature, some are bound to deteriorate and be spoiled. I do not object to this Bill going to a committee, but I would object to a time limit being fixed altogether irrespective of consideration of temperature, and accommodation. Much also depends on the condition in which the food is when placed in cold storage. To destroy food on a certain day irrespective of its condition just because it had been kept a year would be not only unjust but foolish and useless.

RECIPROCITY ARRANGEMENT.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when we may expect the tabulated information which was referred to the other day in connection with the reciprocity proposals now before the House? I think that should include all the information furnished congress to which allusion has already been made, and also contain any definite information as to the extent to which the proposals would affect other countries. That subject was alluded to in the speech of my hon. friend. I would also suggest the desirability of having this in printed form as nearly as possible because it would be only proper and fair that we should have it in our hands for, say, a week before the debate.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with my hon. friend that he should have this information in his hands a week before the debate, but I do agree that we should have it at the earliest possible moment. I hope by the beginning of Monday's session, at the latest, that we may have it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want any unreasonable delay in entering on the debate but the information required will involve a good many considerations which cannot be digested in an hour or two, as the proposals are exceedingly comprehensive and the information afforded in the documents submitted to congress is rather voluminous.

Mr. FIELDING. I hope to-day or perhaps to-morrow to receive some additional copies of the American information, but I thought it well also that we should have information from our own officials, and I hope to have that in the hands of hon. gentlemen with very little delay.

Mr. FOSTER. So that we may avoid having insufficient information when it does come down, through any mistake in our not understanding one another, let me again point out what we would like to have. I presume the Minister of Finance knows pretty well what we do want, and as I explained the other day we want everything concerning which there may be interests affected by this proposition. It would be very convenient to have a table of the varies duties on one sheet such as was furnished by the minister when he made his statement. This would give the different duties on the same sheet, and we would not have to turn from one sheet to another in order to make comparisons. It would be much better to have them on the one sheet so that we could see exactly the differences in the schedule. The other information required is what my hon. friend spoke about, regarding the British preference, whether it applies to Great Britain or the overseas dominions, also to the articles to which reductions apply as between ourselves and Australia, with which country we are in communication for a preferential arrangement also a list of the articles affected by this agreement in which all favoured nation exchanges should be given. That is the kind of information we want, and no doubt the hon. minister knows exactly what it is.

Mr. FIELDING. I gave instructions to my officials to read my hon. friend's observations and endeavour as far as possible to cover the ground he presented. The statement brought down, and which is in 'Hansard,' I have given instructions to include in the printed form so that it may be accessible. Whether it will be in one form or another I cannot tell, but no doubt it will be in the most convenient form. I hope to have that down to-day or Monday at the latest, and it will cover all the points raised.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another point I wish to mention. I asked for a return of the correspondence with reference to the reciprocity negotiations—correspondence with the government or any member of it in favour of reciprocity, documents, petitions and the like. Also correspondence, petitions, and other documents opposed to reciprocity. It would be important as well to include any correspondence between the government and any member of the government, and outside parties either in favour of or against reciprocity.

Mr. FIELDING. Has my hon. friend examined the return brought down to-day—a supplementary return.

Mr. FOSTER. No, but I will examine it.

Mr. FIELDING. With regard to correspondence respecting reciprocity with the government there is practically none. Many people made representations to the government but beyond a polite acknowledgment of their letters, there is no correspondence. In some cases these representations, although not marked confidential, are such as I would hardly feel free to bring down because they relate to particular interests that might be, or thought they might be affected by the negotiations, and I could not without their consent publish these. So far as the government is concerned, we have no correspondence on the subject. I have had correspondence with individual members of the House in which they have given their views. My hon. friend would not expect me to bring this correspondence down. And, of course I would not, anyhow.

Mr. FOSTER. It is evident that this arrangement deals with sectional interests and what you might call private interests, that is, in fact, one of its great characteristics. And what I wanted to get at as far as possible, was what these interests felt on the subject, and what information they had given to the government with respect to it. It seems to me that you could easily stretch the view expressed by the Minister of Finance so as to cover the arbitrary exclusion of most essential information. I do not concur in the idea that it is private correspondence that goes on, for instance, between a man interested in fruit growing or dairying, and the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance on these subjects, if it is not marked 'private.' I think the minister takes a great deal upon himself when he undertakes, in effect, to put the mark 'confidential' upon it. This is information that ought to be made known in the interest of the country, it seems to me.

Mr. REID (Grenville). May I ask the Minister of Finance if he had correspondence with every member of the House or only with a few?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Reid, Grenville), was good enough to write to me on the subject; but if he did so, and his letter was not marked 'private,' I would feel free to bring it down.

Mr. LENNOX. I would suggest that what the hon. member for North Toronto has said in regard to other correspondence applies with still greater force to correspondence from members of the House addressed to the Minister of Finance. Each member of the House is a servant of the people, he does not act in a private capacity when he writes to the Minister of Finance, and every scrap of correspondence of that character is essentially of a class of correspondence which we have the right to get. I hope the Minister of Finance will reconsider his statement concerning correspondence with members of the House, namely: that he certainly will not bring it down even if it is not marked 'private,' or 'confidential.' I submit that when a member of this House writes to the Minister of Finance, he is discharging a public duty, and acting in a public way, and the people have a right to know what their representatives are saying to the Finance Minister, and what the Finance Minister is saying to them.

Mr. FIELDING. I regret that I am not able to revise my judgment on that point.

Mr. LENNOX. We will have something to say about it later on.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am surprised that the Minister of Finance should say that he has no public correspondence on the subject——

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I understood the Minister of Finance to say so.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). While I am on my feet, I may say that that was my understanding. Having that understanding, I rose to remind the Minister of Finance that he had a formal protest from the fruit interests of British Columbia against any proposition which would reduce or interfere with the duties on fruit. That, I think, is most important to produce to this House, together with any reply made by the Minister of Finance to these people who foresaw what would come upon their industry if this proposal were carried into effect.

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any such document—and I am not saying there is not, for I have received many papers on the subject—and if it is covered by the return, I have no objection to bringing it down.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understood the Minister of Finance to say, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) that, had there been any communication from him in reference to this matter, and not marked 'private,' he would bring it down.

Mr. FIELDING. I would be free to.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. And I understood him to say that if there were communications from hon. members on the other side he would not bring them down even though they were not marked 'private.'

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I have listened to the hon. gentleman carefully——

Mr. FIELDING. What I said was that business men had written to me on matters relating to the negotiations and covering matters connected with their own business. Even though these letters were not marked 'private,' yet, if I thought the gentlemen did not intend them to be made public I would consider I had not the right to bring them down. If the tenor of the letter indicated that the writer would not want it to be made public, even though it were not marked 'private' I would not bring it down without consulting him. As to members of parliament, if any hon. member on the other side wrote to me and did not mark his letter 'private,' he would no doubt, expect me to bring that letter down. As to gentlemen on this side of the House, surely we should exercise our own—

Mr. FOSTER. The rule is that when a letter is not marked 'private' it should be brought down.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If there are letters from representatives on either side of the House which do not relate to their particular industry or business, but refer generally to the question of reciprocity, does not the Minister of Finance think that these should be brought down, that the House generally may receive the benefit of the advice?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not consider it within the privilege of my hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) to inquire as to any letter passing between a member of this government, and a member supporting the government in this House, unless the member in question desired to have the letter made public.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the Finance Minister think that a letter received from a member on this side, not referring to his own industry, but referring to the general question of reciprocity should be produced under these circumstances?

Mr. FIELDING. Everything would depend on the contents of the letter. If it contained anything which I thought the hon. gentleman wrote it would not wish brought down, I would not bring it down without consulting him.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It seems to me that we are entirely in the hands of the Minister of Finance to say whether it was confidential or not.

Mr. FIELDING. In the matter of bringing down public documents, things are always in the hands of the government of the day, who must be permitted to exercise discretion whether or not, in the public interest, any papers should be brought down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not heard, and do not now recognize such a rule as that put forward by the Minister of Finance. I venture to say that no such rule can be found—I mean to say, a rule which discriminates between gentlemen on the other side of the House and gentlemen on this side. It seems to me utterly absurd and preposterous to propose that one rule is to apply to correspondence from gentlemen on that side and a different rule to the correspondence of gentlemen on this side.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry to differ with my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) as I very often do—to my very great misfortune I suppose—but this question is to be judged by the tenor of the letter, whether it comes from one side of the House or the other side. If I had a letter from my hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) which seemed to me to be private or confidential, whether it were so marked or not, I would treat it as confidential. Every minister has done that from time immemorial. If a letter were written to me which I thought from its tenor was of sufficient importance to be placed on file, I would bring it down in response to an order of parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that any letter written by an hon. member on his side of the House he would bring down at once, but as to a letter written by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, he would exercise his discretion. If I misunderstood him, I am willing to accept his statement that he did not intend to say so.

Mr. FIELDING. What I did say was that, whether the letter came from one side of the House or the other, I would judge by the tenor of the letter as to whether it was intended to have publicity, and that would apply to one side or the other.

Mr. FOSTER. I might ask what would be the opinion of the Finance Minister if it were marked private, would he then be justified in bringing it down in answer to a return for information, or by a member of parliament?

Mr. FIELDING. I think in no instance did I ever bring down a letter so marked.

Mr. FOSTER. The government stands in a very different position from my hon. friend. One of his former colleagues, Mr. Mulock, not only brought down what was not marked private, but he rummaged the files of his department and brought down every letter he could find, relating to a certain subject, and published it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Did my hon. friend approve?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not asked for private correspondence. I protest against any minister being the judge of what should be considered as private when written on public business, and what should not be so considered if not marked private.

CANADA MEDICAL COUNCIL.

Mr. BLACK. With your permission I wish to draw the attention of the House to an article which appeared in yesterday's 'Globe' having reference to the evidence of a special committee of which I was chairman. It says:

> There will be no free trade in doctoring between the Canadian provinces for some time. A Bill by Dr. Black to give effect to the Dr. Roddick plan of having a physician licensed to practice in any province, giving liberty to practice in any other, was severely amended by a special committee of the Commons this morning. It was supposed that the medical men of all the provinces had been brought to agree to the plan, but this morning Dr. Neely, M.P. of Humboldt, filed a protest from the Saskatchewan doctors, and the universal practice provision had to go.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no truth in that paragraph. Not only the 'universal practice provision' did not have to go, but it was approved of without a dissenting voice. Every paragraph, every clause of that Bill was approved of without a dissenting voice, except a paragraph relating to the representation on the council from a university. In that case the member for Saskatchewan expressed an opinion that there were too many representatives from the universities. I thought it desirable to make this correction, because the paragraph, as it is headed, was likely to cause disappointment to several thousand medical men in Canada who were looking anxiously for the passage of this Bill. It was also likely to prejudice this House in considering the Bill when it is reported. I want to say that the utmost unanimity prevailed in that committee among the members from every province of Canada with regard to this Bill. There were no dissenting voices in it whatever.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LAND GRANT TAXATION.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to ask the government whether they have any information regarding a decision by the Privy Council on an appeal regarding the matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway and unsettled lands in Manitoba and the Northwest. I have a wire from Manitoba informing me that they understand there has been a decision in favour of the Canadian Pacific railway to the effect that unsettled lands are not taxable. Have the government any information on that question?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. The matter to which the hon. gentleman has referred, while of great interest of course to this House, and to all parts of Canada, arises in a litigation between the company and the local municipalities or the provinces concerned. I had not been aware, not having seen the telegram which the hon. gentleman has received, that a decision on the subject had been given by the Judicial Committee. I presume it is only to-day, upon the opening of the February sitting, that such a decision has been announced. The matter has not been in any way considered in the Department of Justice, nor has the department been directly interested in the litigation in question.

RECIPROCITY—CANADIAN FRUIT GROWERS.

Mr. SCHELL. I rise on a question of privilege to draw attention to an article that appeared in the 'Mail and Empire' of yesterday. It is headed 'Champion of Reciprocity. Simcoe man testifies before Agricultural Committee. Objections raised to method of spreading the propaganda'. The article is somewhat lengthy, and I will only read the concluding paragraphs:

> By this time the members of the committee began to inquire why it was that Mr. Johnston had journeyed from his home to preach reciprocity in Ottawa. It finally transpired that Mr. Schell, the Liberal member for Oxford and chairman of the committee, had arranged for his appearance before the committee. Several of the opposition members protested vigorously against what they thought was an effort on the part of the government to promote its reciprocity propaganda at the expense of the public. The matter may yet be brought to the attention of the House.

I wish to say that this article is entirely misleading, to say the least. Knowing Mr. Johnston as I did, knowing him to be possessed of expert knowledge in the matter of growing fruit, and knowing that he had a very large practical experience in connection with a successful co-operative association in the county of Norfolk, an experience in these lines perhaps not equalled by that of any other man in Ontario, I thought he would be able to give valuable information to the Agricultural Committee. I spoke to the hon. member for Norfolk county (Mr. McCall), who occupies a seat on the opposite side of the House, and asked him if he thought Mr. Johnston would consent to come before the committee, and whether he thought it would be wise to have him come. He concurred heartily in the proposition, and said he would see Mr. Johnston and find out whether he would be willing to appear. This was before the holidays. Mr. Johnston consented to come. This article implies that I brought him here to preach the propaganda of reciprocity, an absolutely incorrect imputation. The discussion of reciprocity in the committee was started by a question asked by an opposition member, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). I do not, however, take the full responsibility of bringing Mr. Johnston here. I told the committee about him and his qualifications to appear before them a week ago last Wednesday, and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Thornton), an opposition member, moved that he be invited to appear before the committee. Mr. Johnston was instructed by me by letter as well as in person not to touch upon any question that could be construed as a political question or that would be liable to promote a political discussion. What I said can be confirmed by the hon. member for Norfolk.

As there seems to be a desire to cast a reflection on me as a Liberal member for Oxford, that I had some motive other than the country at heart in bringing Mr. Johnston to appear before the committee, I wish to say that Mr. Johnston is a Conservative in politics. Thus the article throughout seeks to convey an impression on these several points that is entirely misleading.

Mr. McCALL. I wish to corroborate the statement of the hon. member that Mr. Johnston came here at my invitation. He is a townsman of mine, he occupies a high position in the county and in the province of Ontario. He made no reference to the question of reciprocity, but was drawn into a discussion of it by questions asked him by members of the committee. He has strong feelings on reciprocity, which he expressed, but he did not come here for the purpose of discussing that question, as was alleged by this newspaper correspondent. I say this in justice to the hon. member for South Oxford and also to Mr. Johnston, who is doing a great work for the country in building up the fruit industry.

SUPPLY—ORDER IN WHICH ESTIMATES ARE DISCUSSED.

Mr. PUGSLEY moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to speak of the manner in which the government has brought on the estimates for consideration during the present session. Formerly the custom was to consider a part of the estimates of each department at the commencement of the session, so that members had an opportunity to discuss before the House matters connected with each department. We have now been in session nearly three months and we all expect to be here at least two months more. We have had no estimates before us for discussion except those of the Public Works Department. We would like to discuss every item of this and every other department as it is brought before us, but under the present arrangement that is an impossibility. There are other departments in connection with which very important matters in the interests of the country should be discussed before the House. The Departments of Agriculture, Interior, Marine and Fisheries, Railways and Canals, are very important; many members from the west would like to discuss subjects connected with northwest lands, members from the coast provinces desire to discuss fishery questions, while the farmers in the House have many subjects of great importance connected with the administration of the Department of Agriculture which they wish to bring to the attention of the House. If we continue the present system, at the end of two months, when the close of the session is approaching, we will have to rush all the estimates of all the other ministers through after a discussion of perhaps one or two days. I protest against the manner in which these estimates are being taken up, which I think is unjust to the members on both sides of the House and to the people of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am endeavouring to meet the views of my hon. friend by hurrying through my estimates as rapidly as possible, consistent with proper care. Last night I was very anxious to proceed with the work but hon. gentlemen opposite seemed to be sleepy and wanted to adjourn at a comparatively early hour. The sooner I get through with these estimates of course the sooner we will take up the estimates of the other departments. I assure hon. gentlemen that no time will be lost in disposing of these estimates.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I claim that not one item has been discussed any longer than was necessary. I also wish to state that the items remaining will require just as much discussion as those that have been passed, but there are other items in the other departments that require discussion, and my claim is that if any items are to be left and not discussed until later in the session, some of the Public Works items might be left, so that we can discuss items of other departments.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no need of any estimates being rushed through.

Mr. SPROULE. As to what occurred last night the minister started his estimates at 11 o'clock. The House was very thin, most of the members had gone home, thinking there would be no Supply, after we had disposed of the question that had engaged the House most of the evening. We thought that from eleven o'clock in the morning until a quarter past eleven at night was a sufficiently long working day and that it would be only justice to the members representing localities where the appropriations were to be expended, that they should have an opportunity to be present. The Minister of Public Works in keeping with his usual courteous disposition refused to allown an adjournment and he continued until 12.30 a.m., when he was obliged to reconsider his decision. There is not another minister except the Minister of Public Works who would have refused the reasonable request made from this side of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I protest against the statement of the Minister of Public Works that the Opposition is sleeping. I object to be called sleepy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a harsh word to apply to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I accept the apology.

Mr. CROSBY. It is apparently the custom to bring down the estimates for Marine and Fisheries within eight days of prorogation and have them rushed through, generally between midnight and three o'clock in the morning. That occurred one session when most of the members were having a good time at some ball that was going on in the city. The Minister of Public Works says that the sooner we pass his estimates the sooner we will get to other estimates, but I would remind him that the convenience of the members on this side should be suited as well as the convenience of members on his own side. The estimates have a perfect right to go through when they are proper and after we have passed fair criticism upon them, but it would not be out of place for the Minister of Public Works to take an evening off sometimes and let some other one of his colleagues have the floor. I am interested in the Marine and Fisheries estimates, but I say it is unfair to rush them through in the last days of the session when some of the members have got tired or have other engagements to fill. I do say that unless the suggestion of the hon. member for Grenville is adopted, the Minister of Public Works will not get along very well.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would be delighted to have my estimates discussed early in the session, but there seems to be an unwritten rule that the Minister of Railways should make a general statement as to the year's work of his department before he is allowed to go into Supply. That cannot conveniently be done until the returns are obtained up to September 31, both from the state owned railways and the Transcontinental Commission. I expect to have these returns completed in a few days and then I shall be happy to get into Supply and get some money to keep the transportation facilities of the country going.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SPECIAL TRAINS.

Mr. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Last fall there was a demonstration in Montreal for the Prime Minister and in connection therewith a special excursion rate from Levis or Quebec to Montreal and return was granted by the Intercolonial. On December 15 last the Minister of Railways, replying to my question, stated that the excursion rate granted by the government on that occasion was $1.50 between Levis and Montreal and return, which is a distance altogether of 326 miles. The minister also stated that no excursion rate equally as low, had ever before been granted, but he justified the rate, by saying it was a paying one. Now, the average cost per passenger per mile on the Intercolonial railway for the year ending March 31, 1910 was slightly under but practically two cents a mile. We have an Intercolonial Railway Commission which was brought into being with a great flourish of trumpets as giving a business administration to the Intercolonial railway, and I was curious to know how this rate of $1.50 compared with the rates given by other railways for similar distances. I may say that the $1.50 rate, Levis to Montreal and return, is less than half a cent per person per mile. I have here a copy of the excursion rates registered with the Railway Commission by the Eastern Canadian Passenger Association, and they are based partly on the single fare rate which from Levis to Montreal is $4.90. The excursion rate that would be granted for that run by the other railways would be $3.35. The association or club which gets up an excursion would get that rate of $3.35, but out of that the society or club would keep 65 cents which would leave the rate $2.70 net to other railways for a journey for which the Intercolonial railway received a rate of $1.50 on this special occasion of the great celebration for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I understand perfectly well that the Intercolonial railway is not bound by the rates of other railways, but I submit that the Intercolonial railway is not run any better than the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk, and that taking into consideration the cost of the service the Intercolonial railway is not in a position to grant better, or even as good rates as the Canadian Pacific railway would. It seems very strange to me that this rate could have been granted by the Intercolonial Railway Commission. I cannot imagine that it could have been granted on any business basis. It seems very evident that either the government or the Minister of Railways himself must have instructed the Intercolonial Railway Commission, either directly or indirectly, to make this extraordinary rate for this wonderful special occasion, and I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways to tell the House, if he thinks it is reasonable that the railway which he has control of, should make a rate of this kind even for the celebration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want, first, to correct my hon. friend's use of a word. I was careful, in making some readjustment of the management of the Intercolonial railway, not to appoint a commission, for reasons given by me at that time, but a board of management. In the second place, my hon. friend has not stated the whole situation when he states that the excursion rate given by all private roads from Levis to Montreal and return is $2.70. The excursion rate on the private roads is $2.70, with a guarantee of 100 passengers, which makes some difference. That amounts to $270. On the occasion referred to the Intercolonial, on a guarantee of 200 passengers, gave an excursion rate of $1.50, and for running a special train, instead of the ordinary guarantee of $270, it got a guarantee of $300 on a guarantee of 100 passengers.

Mr. PERLEY. From whom did the hon. gentleman receive that guarantee?

Mr. GRAHAM. The board of management had that guarantee from some person, I do not know from whom, but I shall be glad to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Would the hon. minister carry that principle to its logical conclusion, and carry 1,000 passengers for nothing?

Mr. GRAHAM. We will discuss that when we come to the 5,000 period. I am discussing what really did happen, not what might happen. Now, the Intercolonial has an arrangement with the other railways, and it could not without violating that arrangement offer this rate unless the other roads consented. I am given to understand that under the circumstances the other roads did consent to this rate, and they were at liberty to carry passengers on their lines at the same rate. But let us see what was the practical result of this excursion. My hon. friend has referred to the average rate per passenger per mile, but that does not mean the lowest rate. Railroads in different parts of Canada give very low excursion rates at times, and they give to commercial travellers and other special classes the rate of 2 cents a mile. These rates reduce the average receipts per passenger per mile down to 1·93 cents. My hon. friend thinks we ought to run the Intercolonial to make money. We want to give a good service and come out even, and when I tell him that this was the best paying train we have had on the Intercolonial for the past 5 years, I think he will agree with me that we did a very good thing in getting it. It costs, I think, $1.30 per train mile. The train ran 326 miles at a cost of $423.80. The receipts from that train were $903.75, or a profit of $479.95 on an expenditure of $423.80, or over 100 per cent profit. Now, I think that was good business, and the only point my hon. friend made was that the companies in the association could not do that. Well, we had a long speech yesterday condemning combines, and I think the people of Canada as a whole will agree with me that, no matter on what occasion I can run a train and make over 100 per cent, I am doing a good thing for the Intercolonial railway. And I will say, further, that if there should be occasion to give a demonstration to the hon. leader of the opposition in any part of Canada where the Intercolonial runs, if the hon. gentleman will give me the same guarantee, he can have the same train.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. minister stated that he had consulted with the other railways interested, and they were satisfied, and that they were at liberty to quote the same rate. I may tell the hon. minister that it is utterly impossible for any society or any one else to obtain from the other railways any better rate than the rate quoted in this list.

Mr. GRAHAM. Except by consent.

Mr. PERLEY. I have had occasion myself to ask for a special rate on a larger guarantee, and I have been told officially that it could not be given—that these rates were the lowest excursion rates that could be obtained for any number of people. They called for a guarantee, but whether the number was 500 or 1,000, the rate would be the same. The hon. minister makes a point as to the total amount received for this train. He knows perfectly well that we cannot obtain a flat rate for a special train, the only thing we can obtain is so much per passenger.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a state-owned railway, and it may be does some things which other railways could not do and it does them for the benefit of the people of Canada. The reason my hon. friend cannot get any lower rate from any of the other railways is on account of their agreement with each other, but if each would agree to waive that agreement under certain conditions who would complain?

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). No, the Railway Act prohibits it.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, the reason they cannot do it is on account of the arrangement between them. But, leaving that aside, this is a state-owned railway, and the same arrangement would be made in the event of a demonstration to the leader of the opposition. We would not be compelled to, but under our arrangement we could do it quite easily. We did it in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I suggest that the hon. gentleman should get up excursions the whole year round, and in that way make the Intercolonial railway pay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. People are not always wanting to demonstrate.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The investment turned out not to be quite a good one as anticipated because it defeated the government candidate in the Drummond and Arthabaska election.

Mr. STANFIELD. With reference to the political demonstration, the Minister of Railways has said that the leader of the opposition could have the same privilege extended to him. In that connection let me call attention to what occurred in connection with a gathering which we had last August in Truro. We asked the Intercolonial for rates and they gave us one fare from all points to Truro and return. On August the 9th some of our friends found they could not buy these tickets as orders have not been issued to the ticket sellers to furnish them at these rates. On August the 10th in the morning some of our friends again went to purchase tickets and were informed that they could not get them at these rates unless they paid 50 cents extra on each ticket for a circus, which was going on at that time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were two.

Mr. STANFIELD. Let me draw attention to the correspondence from Moncton. The first letter from the management there reads as follows:

> Your favour dated 23rd inst. For this event we shall be pleased to instruct our ticket agents at Amherst, Halifax, New Glasgow, and stations inclusive, to sell excursion return tickets to Truro for p.m. trains August 9th, all trains August 10th, good to return till August 11th at first class one way fare.

On the evening of August the 9th when we found that we could not get these tickets we sent a telegram to Mr. Lyons, general passenger agent in Moncton, and he replied as follows:

> Your wire 9th. All agents interested were advised to sell excursion tickets to Truro for political picnic at single fare, p.m. train, August 9th, all trains August 10th, good to return till August 11th. Agent Truro advises Shubenacadie and Stewiacke did not receive instructions and am wiring these agents.

We also wired Mr. Brady and he replied that the agents had been instructed over a week ago and that duplicate instructions had been telegraphed that morning. That telegram was dated August the 10th. This matter was taken up by one of our people with Mr. Lyons direct, and on August the 20th, Mr. Lyons sent the following letter:

> Dear Sir,—Re political meeting, Truro, August 10th, and agents not advised.
> Referring to the above and your visit to my office yesterday. As explained verbally, the advice to agents outlining the arrangements of reduced fare named for your convention was prepared on July 27th and handed to one of the staff here to send to agents. On receipt of your telegram it was dealt with as quickly as possible in re duplicate advice by wire to agents, and I think we are safe in assuming that the original advices to agents never left the office, for which an apology is certainly due to your association, and the same is respectfully tendered with our sincere regrets. The person in fault will be properly dealt with.

Has that person been properly dealt with? Or has he been promoted for this good work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad my hon. friend has called attention to this, and if he will let me have the particulars I shall inquire into it. There is a regular standard, as the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has said, for excursions, and there is no reason why that should not have been followed in this case.

Mr. STANFIELD. What I complain of is that the instructions of the passenger agents were not carried out, and what I want to know is what treatment was given to the man in fault.

Mr. GRAHAM. If I can get his name I shall be able to reply.

Mr. STANFIELD. His name is not given.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister will see that his suggestion that the Intercolonial is at the service of both political parties, under similar conditions, is hardly borne out by the illustration just given.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was an error or bungling of some kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We do not know. At all events that is the situation. Excursion rates were asked for in the ordinary course for a political demonstration to be held in Truro. Assurance was given that the ordinary course would be pursued; but when the people went to buy these tickets, they found that they could only purchase them on paying 50 cents extra for a circus ticket. The only explanation given so far is that some one, whose duty it was to send out instructions to the agents, did not do so, and the assurance was given that the one who was in fault would be officially dealt with. If the minister is perfectly sincere in his statement that the railway is to be at the service of both political parties on the same terms in connection with transportation to political gatherings, it is only due to himself and the House that he should investigate that matter, find out who made the mistake and have the guilty party reprimanded or punished.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall do that immediately.

SUPPLY.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Battleford public building, $33,000.

Mr. RHODES. The minister will recollect that when we adjourned early this morning it was the understanding that the correspondence between the former member for the constituency and the Public Works Department would be produced.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood that if there was any correspondence, that objection would not be pressed to-day. I was asked for it by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) who is not now in his place. If he should desire it, I will see that he gets the correspondence, if there be any.

Mr. RHODES. The understanding was that the item should stand until we got that correspondence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not take the request of the hon. member for Peel as one which would be pressed to-day if the correspondence were not here. It would take some time to get it if there be any. I propose giving it to the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend did promise to bring down the correspondence as a condition of getting the item through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Am I not right in saying that the promise was made to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) ? Carried.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), has no right to interrupt me. I did not suggest that the promise was made to any member in particular of this House. The promise was made to you, Mr. Chairman, as a condition of getting that item through, that the correspondence was to be produced. The minister said he hoped that hon. members on this side, because of that promise, would help them to get the item through. And, if now he pretends to say that, with that correspondence or without it, he can get that item through, I say it is a direct breach of faith.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may be misinformed, but I understood that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), was not further to press the point as to the correspondence. If I have been misinformed on that point, I will ask the committee to wait a few minutes until the deputy minister is here.

Mr. RHODES. A moment before, the hon. gentleman cried 'Carried.' I understand that he says now that the item stands until the correspondence is produced.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman desires it. But I was informed to-day, whether rightly or wrongly, as I have no means of knowing, that the request for correspondence would not be urged by the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. REID (Grenville). By the hon. member for Peel, because he could not be present.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so. Do other hon. gentlemen urge it ?

Mr. CROSBY. If there is one reason more than another why the correspondence should be brought down, it is that the minister (Mr. Pugsley), does not want to bring it down. For my part, I might have thought that this was all right, but now that I find that the minister does not wish to bring down these papers, I think we should insist upon having them for it seems evident there is a reason for holding them back. No member of this House can pledge others. We are glad to follow the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), because he takes the right path; still, when he is not here, there are others to see to it that necessary information is secured.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crosby), is right. If he desires the correspondence, and there is any correspondence—I do not know that there is any—when the deputy minister comes I shall be able to give the information to the committee.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the minister have the member from the constituency here also ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood that the hon. member had a very important engagement this afternoon and was not able to be present.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Cannot you let the item stand until he is here ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can do anything to oblige hon. gentlemen opposite,—I do not think there is any limit to my ability in that respect. I observe that my hon. friend for Macleod (Mr. Herron), is here. We might take up the item for Macleod and get that through to oblige my hon. friend.

Macleod public building, $10,000

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the purchase of a site and towards the erection of a public building at Macleod, Alberta, for post office and customs purposes. Macleod is a place of a good deal of importance. The postal revenue last year was estimated at $10,584—I have not the exact figures for the year. We have not yet purchased the site, but propose to make the purchase out of this vote. The estimate of the population in 1906 was 1,144, but the town has grown very considerably since that time. It is a place in which, I think, it is necessary in the public interest that a building should be erected for the post office and customs house.

Mr. CROSBY. What is the population now ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is in the vicinity of between 2,000 or 3,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What will the building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure as to the amount; we propose to put up a nice building, but the plans have not been prepared

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister expect to go on with the building this summer ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not unlikely.

Mr. DANIEL. But the minister should know whether he is going on with it or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The most I can say is that if the money is voted we will endeavour, in the ordinary course, to purchase the site. That done, we will have the plans prepared, and I trust the building will be undertaken within the coming year.

Mr. LAKE. How long does it generally take to get the building started after the money is voted ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends on whether we are held up by the people wanting too high a price for the site.

Mr. HERRON. I am glad to see how ardently the minister presses this item for Macleod. He made several attempts to get at it last evening, and is evidently going out of his way now to take up this item. I am pleased that he recognizes the importance of the place and the need for the building. I hope that he will show as great energy in proceeding with the erection of the building as he has shown in the passing of the estimate. I notice the sum to be voted is only $10,000. Would the minister be kind enough to say whether any site has been offered to him or whether the department has taken any steps toward securing a site ? Will he appeal to the board of trade or the town council ?—or what steps will be taken to secure a site that will be agreeable to all the people of Macleod ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No steps have yet been taken toward the purchase of a site, and no location has been determined upon. Of course, nothing can be done until after the appropriation Bill passes placing the amount at the disposal of the department.

Mr. HERRON. The fact that only $10,000 is to be voted means that the minister is only preparing to buy the site, not to go on with the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That depends on the cost of the site.

Mr. HERRON. That would not leave much of a balance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We might get a site at $2,000 or $3,000, in which case we could let a contract for the erection of a building, coming to parliament, of course, next fall, with a supplementary estimate for the current year.

Mr. HERRON. I have several letters from people owning property in the town, wishing me to bring to the attention of the minister their wish to sell certain lots. Of these lots, I know little or nothing. The owners put prices upon them the reasonableness of which I am not able to judge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron), might say at about what figure these are offered ?

Mr. HERRON. Say two business lots with buildings in the centre of the town, $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the ordinary course, after the appropriation Bill passes, we would send an expert of the department to examine the different sites, and then take the necessary steps to purchase the property.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). What are the qualifications of this expert?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Thorough knowledge of the value of real estate, and thorough reliability.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). How would he get that thorough knowledge in the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has had experience in examining properties all over the country.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to urge upon the minister the great importance of this building. The post office in the town of Macleod is certainly not a credit to the government of Canada, it is a disgrace to the government. The building is not a fit and proper place for a post office in a town of the importance of Macleod. Macleod has probably 3,000 inhabitants, it is a railway centre, a judicial centre, and the centre of business in all that locality. The present post office is not even fit to accommodate a town of 300 people. I hope after the item goes through that the minister will lose no time in hastening the erection of that building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad my hon. friend agrees with me that this building is necessary. In that respect it is not an exception to the general rule.

Mr. CROSBY. The minister has asked the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron) for some information with regard to the site of this building. I would suggest to the minister that he get his information from the hon. member who represents that constituency, and who possesses the confidence of the people who elected him. Certainly he must know something about the values of property in that town. The minister would secure a much greater confidence from the public, and from members on both sides of this House, if he would select the hon. member for Macleod and delegate him to report on the values of these various sites.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask the committee to reconsider the item for a public building for Battleford. I have here the whole file which contains the correspondence. There is a letter from Mr. McCraney, who was then the member for the district, which I will read. It is dated the 19th of January, 1907, and is addressed to the then acting Minister of Public Works :

Dear Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 20th ult. regarding my communication to Mr. Oliver as to the establishment of a government building at Old Battleford, I am herewith inclosing you a letter received by me from Mr. A. Champagne, M.P.P., from whom I asked the particulars which you required.

I sincerely trust that the government may see its way clear to granting my request, and would ask that the sum of at least $25,000 be placed in the estimates for that purpose.

Yours very truly,
G. E. McCRANEY.

Accompanying that letter was a letter from Mr. Champagne, the present member for the district, dated Battleford, January 2, 1907 :

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of yours inclosing letter from Hon. Sydney Fisher re Dominion public buildings for Battleford, and asking for further information. In reply, I beg to state that the Dominion government has the following offices here: Dominion Land office, telegraph office, immigration office and temporary hall, post office.

The rent being paid at present is as follows: Dominion Land office, $50 per month; telegraph office, $25 per month; immigration office and hall, $35; post office, allowed by the department, $18, actually paid by postmaster, $25. The revenue of the Dominion Lands office for the year was $54,610.14, and in 1906, $87,363.71. The volume of business transacted in the telegraph office in 1905 was $5,750, and in 1906, $6,107. The post office receipts for the year ending June 30, 1906, was $3,908.40, and the money order business for the same period was issued, $29,359.03, paid $54,325.03, standing tenth in the province of Saskatchewan for gross revenue, and third for money orders paid.

It need hardly be pointed out to you that each of the buildings in which the government offices are now located are inadequate to the service rendered, and that a considerable saving in fuel, light and caretaking could be effected by having all the offices in one building.

Battleford is the oldest established town in western Saskatchewan, and has a population of about 1,100, being the largest town in the province west of the Prince Albert branch railway, and is centrally located in the district, being about 80 miles from the west boundary of the province, and has a force of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, a land titles office, an Indian agency, and is destined with the development of the surrounding a country to be a town of cosiderable importance.

I trust that with the above information, you will have no difficulty in securing a grant for the desired public buildings.

I am, yours truly,
A. CHAMPAGNE.

Mr. Champagne informs me, as I think I told the committee last evening, that the population is at present about 2,000. There is also a letter from the hon. Mr. Oliver addressed to the acting Minister of Public Works, which I would read if any hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. RHODES. It would facilitate the progress of the work of the committee if the minister would kindly send over that file of papers, and let us examine it while he takes up another item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to sending the file over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As one of the committee of this House who last night disputed this item and was called names, I may say, by the Minister of Public Works—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope my hon. friend did not think I called him any but good names.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentleman applied an adjective to me, and to other members of this committee 'sleepy,' to which I take objection. I want to point out that the information we asked for at 11.20 last night has just been handed to us. We did not object to this item by any means, all we wanted to get was the information which has just been handed to us. I withdraw my objection I offered. At the same time, I wish to say that North Battleford is being neglected perhaps more than it should be.

Mr. RHODES. I do not wish to obstruct the progress of the committee, but I propose to look carefully into this correspondence, and would suggest that the committee take up another item, and let this one stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I propose leaving a military item and upon that my hon. friend can speak to this as well.

Calgary immigration building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for a new immigration building at Calgary. The quarters at present occupied are reported by the Minister of the Interior to be altogether inadequate for the requirements of the city. Calgary is growing rapidly and the surrounding country is settling up very fast.

Humboldt public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to make provision towards the erection of a public building at Humboldt. The site has been purchased for $3,000. It is 75 feet on the main street with a depth of 132 feet. This building will serve as a post office, customs house and land office.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the revenue of the post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The post office revenue is $3,700, the customs duties over $7,000, the money orders issued over $36,000, and the money orders paid over $24,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the population?

Mr. NEELY. The population of the incorporated town is from 1,200 to 1,300. As the minister has said, this will house the post office, customs and land office services. The post office now occupies the third location since its establishment, the postmaster having been obliged to move as the rented premises became more valuable for private purposes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the rent now paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the post office $280. In addition to that I understand that this has been made a port of customs entry, an outport of Regina.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has it actually been made a port of entry?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Minister of Customs authorizes me to say he is positive that Humboldt was made an outport of Regina about three years ago.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the Minister of Customs say whether it is intended to make it a port of entry? This is very important in these western towns because the people are put to great inconvenience where the town is not a port of customs entry.

Mr. PATERSON. My recollection is that Humboldt is already a port of entry, an outport of Regina. The outport affords all the facilities to the public for the transaction of business that are afforded by the port. The outports collect their own revenues, but they are transmitted through the ports to which they are attached simply to save expense and in order that their returns may be supervised by the officials at the main ports who have possibly had more experience. When the outport becomes sufficiently important it is made a port, and makes its returns direct to the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there a paid official of the government in charge?

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly, with all the responsibilities and duties that pertain to a port.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the salary?

Mr. PATERSON. That depends on the revenue, we have no uniform standard. As a rule, in the new provinces, where the cost of living is greater, we start them at a somewhat higher figure than in the older provinces. Humboldt was made an outport two or three years ago when the Canadian Northern was opened up.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Who asked for this expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was urged by the late member Mr. Adamson, in 1907, when there was an item put in the estimates, and also very strongly urged by the present member.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any correspondence in the matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There apparently were letters from Mr. Adamson, dated February 25, and March 1, 1907, stating there was pressing necessity for a public building at Humboldt.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the letters be presented to the committee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, if any gentleman moves for them. Of course it would require three or four horses and a number of carts to bring over from the department all the letters concerning all these public works.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Judging by the number of horses and carts paid for by the government you might engage one of them in that work, but it would be satisfactory to this side if we could even get the information that a boy with a wheelbarrow could bring over. If the minister does not get through with his estimates faster than he did last night I do not think it will require many horses to bring over the information. A page boy could carry all the information we asked for then, but we could not get it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be impossible for the minister to tell in advance what information might be desired, and if the records concerning all the buildings for which votes were taken were brought, it would mean immense labour and possibly after all hon. gentlemen would not look at them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want all the correspondence before this item is put through. I want the letters from the boards of trade and other bodies and from the gentlemen who have asked for this building in Humboldt.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad on Monday, before this item finally passes to bring any correspondence there is.

Lethbridge public building, $75,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) who represents the district knows this vote is to erect a building which is very much needed. Lethbridge is growing rapidly, and the post office accommodation for the public is very limited indeed. There has been a very strong demand by the people for a building and that demand has been supported very frequently and very persistently by my hon. friend from Medicine Hat.

Mr. MAGRATH. Is this building to be used for other than post office purposes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For customs as well.

Lloydminster public building, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased. The proposed building is for post office, government telegraph office, and land office. The present accommodation is not what ought to be provided in a town of the importance of Lloydminster.

Melfort public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told that Melfort has a population of about 1,500, and it is growing rapidly.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). What rent do you pay at present?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $219.

Moosejaw, new public building, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry we have to expend money for the erection of a new public building in Moosejaw, but our experts advised us that the existing public building is absolutely unsuitable for the requirements of the city and so we have to provide a new one. Moosejaw is growing very rapidly. It has a population to-day of about 15,000, and the business there is very large. What we propose to do is to start the new building on the additional land which we purchased adjoining the old building, and when we get that part finished sufficiently to accommodate the public in it, we shall tear down the old building, and fill up the space by extending the new building to the street line.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Will this $50,000 cover the cost of the whole thing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. Of course a building in the west costs somewhat more than a building in the east. The building at Regina, which is a little larger than Moosejaw has cost in the vicinity of $180,000. We want to give it a building as near like the one at Regina as we reasonably can, to afford needed accommodation and at the same time be a credit to the city. We have to build, of course, looking to the future, and there is every reason to look forward to Moosejaw having a population in the near future of 30,000 or 40,000. As evidence of its growth, I may give the revenues for 1908-9: post office, $25,601; customs, $47,220; inland revenue, $13,925; making a total revenue of $86,727. At present, even with the existing post office building, we are paying the following rentals: Crown lands office, $2,280; inland revenue, $360; customs, $240; making a total of $2,880. We hope to be able to accommodate all these departments in the new building, thus saving that rent, as well as affording very much better accommodation.

Saskatoon, purchase of land for public building, $35,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision, looking to the future, for the purchase of land either in the town or in its immediate vicinity, for the erection of public buildings, the idea being to provide accommodation for mounted police and other military forces and other departments. The matter has been pressed upon our attention not only by the hon. gentleman who represents the constituency, but by Mr. White, the controller of the North-west Mounted Police. Saskatoon is growing pretty rapidly, and even if we do not utilize the whole of the land for a number of years, we shall make no mistake in buying a considerable area.

Strathcona public building, $40,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hon. gentlemen know that Strathcona is a growing city across the Saskatchewan river from the city of Edmonton. We have purchased the land, 66 feet by 132 feet. The building is to be for customs and post office purposes. The population of Strathcona four years ago was close to 3,000. My information is that to-day it is 5,000 or 6,000. The hon. member for Strathcona is here, and would perhaps favour the committee with a few observations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I might inform the committee that Strathcona is a very important city. It has over 6,000 population, is the university centre of Alberta, and is also the seat of learning for theological colleges. We are looking for great advancement in the near future, and we do not think we are getting too much for this building.

Vegreville public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps the hon. member for the district will tell us what he knows about Vegreville.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria, Alberta). As everybody who knows anything about the west knows, the town of Vegreville is the largest town between Battleford and Edmonton, and is the centre of the best agricultural country in northern Alberta. It has a population at the present time of about 1,200. Four years ago there were only two or three settlers there. The reason I ask for this public building is not to provide work for the people there, because there is no doubt that in order to start the building we shall have to import the labour. The post office is now in a small store, and the postmaster has not the accommodation he should have. There is a large amount of parcel post business done in that country. I have seen no less than three double teams going out with the mail.

Wetaskiwin public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The population is about 1,700; postal revenue last year, $7,474; money orders issued, $63,000; money orders paid, $36,000.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). When was that item first put in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1907-08.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Just before the last election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we have bought the land and are making preparations to go on with the work.

Weyburn public building, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a very important centre.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the population?

Mr. TURRIFF. About 2,500. It is the largest and most important town south of the Canadian Pacific railway, on its main line, in Saskatchewan. It is a large railway centre. It is about the second or third largest wheat shipping point in the three prairie provinces. The postal revenue from the sale of stamps is over $8,000. I do not know what the customs revenue is, but in the first six months after the office opened it was over $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The money orders issued last year amounted to $140,000.

Mr. TURRIFF. There is a very large business done there. It has a half dozen of our principal banks and a local bank, which does the largest business. This building is required for a land office, post office and a customs house.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What rent are we paying now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $500. The site has been purchased.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). When did this first appear in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the session of 1910.

Chilliwack public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The land has been purchased and the plans are being prepared. My hon. friend who represents New Westminster will agree that this building is a public necessity.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Have tenders been called for yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet, but the plans are being prepared.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I ask that because I have heard that an official communication was sent to Chilliwack last June saying that tenders would be called immediately. Was that warranted by the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What date?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Early in June last.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell. The order was passed for the purchase of the land on the 3rd of June. If my hon. friend will write me a letter I will give him the information.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). It is not sufficiently important to trouble the minister with, but I would like to say that possibly there is no place where there is more urgency for a post office than at Chilliwack. That district is growing very rapidly. Even the word painting which we are accustomed to have from the minister in presenting his items would fail to do justice to the position of Chilliwack. It has made very rapid growth because of the introduction of railways and is now an incorporated city of sufficient importance to furnish business to five banks. The post office at present presents for the use of the public a room only some 12 feet square. If the minister will realize the conditions there with the population of that size trying to despatch and receive their mails in a room 12 feet square he will see there is need for urgency, and if he could take any steps to hasten the calling for tenders he would be doing a great service to the people. I would like to ask, also, whether the amount now provided for will complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but it will carry us over the next fiscal year.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). What was the $6,000 spent for?

Crankbrook public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in the constituency of Kootenay. The site has been purchased and the plans are now being prepared. The postal revenue is $11,517; customs duties, $33,550; money orders issued, $178,917; money orders paid, $47,164. The population in 1908 was 3,500, and it has grown considerably since. If the hon. member who represents Kootenay were here he would endorse my statement that a public building in Cranbrooke is very much needed.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). When was this first voted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1906-07.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Why the delay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We did not purchase the site until 1908, on the 18th January. Then we had the one lean year, when our revenue fell off, and we were trying to economize.

Mr. GOODEVE. I desire to ask for some information on this item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased and plans for the building are in course of preparation. We hope to call for tenders before long.

Mr. GOODEVE. Is it the intention to go on with the work this summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Has the hon. minister received from Mission City a largely signed petition asking for a building there, and what prospect can he hold out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure the hon. gentleman would feel that it would be quite improper for me to say anything in advance of the estimates which might be brought down beyond saying that the representations of the people of Mission City will have my careful consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I would like to point out that Mission City needs a public building very badly for at least two departments—the post office and the immigration departments. It is a point on the Canadian Pacific railway which immigrants pass through going to Seattle, and where they are very commonly detained, and where, also, immigrants from Seattle are usually detained. At present they have no other accommodation than the station house of the Canadian Pacific railway. The presence of large bodies of these immigrants there is not only very unpleasant for the general passengers, but it is also rather cruel to the immigrants, and gives them a very poor impression of the country. I do not expect the minister to act on impressions only, or on merely sentimental grounds, but I think that if he would seek the advice of the Immigration Department that advice would be in line with the request of the people of Mission City for the erection of a public building at that point for post office and immigration purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the population of Mission?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I should say about 1,500. That is the population of the village itself, but that figure does not indicate the importance of the place. It is the trade centre for quite a large district.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have it looked into.

Duncan public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to purchase a site and to go towards the construction of a building for post office purposes. We pay now a rental of $250. The postal revenue last year was $3,305; money orders issued $26,393, money orders paid $14,929. I have not a statement of the population, but I believe it is a good town.

Fernie public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to finish the payments on this building. We had a building nearly finished when the disastrous fire occurred which destroyed so large a part of Fernie. We had to practically begin over again. This is to complete the work.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). What is to be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure to December 20 last, was $27,964.89.

Grand Forks public building, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site purchased for this building covers a whole block, having frontages on four streets. We have called for tenders for the building. The contract has not yet been let because it seemed to the department that the only tender received was pretty high and required careful consideration before awarding the contract. We are having the matter looked into by the chief architect.

Mr. BURRELL. Is the idea to advertise again?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, in the hope that we shall have wider competition.

Mr. BURRELL. I suppose the minister has no wish to delay this work. He understands the importance of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. But the tender was $18,000 higher than the chief architect's estimate; we did not feel that we could properly award the contract, but that it was better to call for new tenders.

Mr. BURRELL. I presume that due allowance was made for the necessary greater expense of construction in the west?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the chief architect allowed for that.

Greenwood public building, $30,000.

Mr. BURRELL. In what position is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have bought the site and the plans are in course of preparation.

Mr. BURRELL. What site was bought and what was the price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site was bought from Mr. Nelson and consisted of lots 20, 21 and 22, block 5, having a frontage of 75 feet on Greenwood street, and 115 feet on Government street. The price paid was $3,000.

Mr. BURRELL. Is it the intention of the government to go on with this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURRELL. Are the plans prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are in course of preparation, and we hope to be able to go on during the coming summer.

Nanaimo public building, extension, $22,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is under contract. It is a very important work, because Nanaimo is a city of a good deal of importance and the accommodation there is utterly insufficient.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the population of Nanaimo?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Eight thousand within the city.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Will this complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is estimated at $29,900. This will leave an additional amount of $2,900 to complete the work.

Nelson public building, addition, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hon. gentlemen are aware how important a city Nelson is. It is a large distributing centre for postal business, and the accommodation there is wholly inadequate. The work is a much needed extension of the present building.

Prince Rupert public building, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site for this building, which is quite conveniently situated, is to be donated to the government by the Grand Trunk Pacific interests.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is the position a good one? Is it central?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is the very best we could get. We considered two locations, and, with the very best consideration we could give it, we concluded that this was the best. It is not far from the public wharfs and not far from the railway station. It is close to the business centre—right on the public square.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the Grand Trunk Pacific own the land adjacent to it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They did own it, but I think they sold all the lots, and reserved this for public purposes.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the population now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand it is five or six thousand.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). The other day I asked the minister whether the government had bought any land from the Grand Trunk Development Company. He answered that his department had not. He said he had inquired to see whether other departments had bought any, and had found that the other departments had not bought any land from the development company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I said my information was that no other department had bought.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). What other departments did he ask for that information?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I tried to think what departments would be likely to buy, and I inquired from the Minister of Interior, and from the Minister of Railways. I could not think of any other department that would be likely to make purchases.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I asked that the question should be allowed to stand, but I see that it has been taken off the orders of the day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman has any idea that any department has made a purchase, and would intimate what department, and where the land is, it would facilitate matters.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). The Agricultural Department, this side of Prince Albert. I would like to have that question answered.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will see the Minister of Agriculture about it to-morrow.

Revelstoke public building, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Revelstoke is a very important station on the Canadian Pacific railway, being the point at which that railway branches off going down into the district of southern British Columbia. A demand for a public building here has been pressed upon our attention for a considerable time. We have purchased a lot 75 feet by 100, for which we paid some $5,000. We only purchased it after very careful examination and comparison with other lots, and believe we have got it at a reasonable figure. The population of Revelstoke a few years ago was 3,000, it must be considerably more now. The revenue last year was $8,437 ; customs duty, $103,000 ; imports, $367,350. We are paying a rental of $834 for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. GOODEVE. How far is the building advanced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not entered into a contract yet, we are having the plans prepared.

Mr. GOODEVE. Can the minister assure me that the work is likely to be carried on this summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that the plans are pretty well advanced. Very likely the building will go on this summer.

Mr. GOODEVE. I can agree with the minister as to the importance of this town of Revelstoke, which is not only on the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, but one of the chief branches of that whole western system starts there going down through the Arrow lakes. It has a very large traffic, and a good deal of tourist trade, besides a growing population.

Vancouver old post office building, alterations and fittings, furniture, &c., $35,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of renovating the old post office building for the accommodation of the inland revenue and the Dominion assay office. The total probable cost, including fittings, furniture, &c., will run to about $54,000.

Mr. DANIEL. We have given them already a fine new post office in Vancouver.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Vancouver is a rapidly growing city, and has now a population of nearly 150,000.

Vancouver examining warehouse, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have bought the land, and this is to enable us to call for tenders for the building. We called for tenders once, and we are going to call for new tenders.

Vernon public building, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend who represents the district of Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) knows that Vernon is quite an important town in the midst of a very excellent fruit growing country. It is proposed to provide for a post office, for customs purposes, and also accommodation for the commanding officer, and an armoury for A and B squadrons. The building is under contract. The total estimated cost will be in the vicinity of $55,000.

Mr. BURRELL. Is it actually commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me it is actually commenced.

Mr. BURRELL. Will these quarters be amply sufficient for the military purposes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand so from the militia authorities. The material is to be brick, with stone dressings, and with a stone faced concrete basement, a two-story building, forty feet in depth, and sixty feet frontage.

Manitoba—Dominion public buildings—Renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $15,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What public buildings in the city of Winnipeg are being repaired?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the whole province.

Mr. STAPLES. I understand the old post office in Winnipeg is being repaired to some extent. To what purpose will it be utilized after it is fixed over?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have had it repaired and renovated for the purpose of giving accommodation to the Customs Department, and also for a branch of the Finance Department. Work was done last year upon the immigration building to the extent of $2,590.

Mr. STAPLES. Are the repairs to the old post office completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not quite.

Portage la Prairie public building, $18,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to construct a public building in Portage la Prairie. The site has been acquired. The proposed building is to provide offices for the Inland Revenue and Indian Affairs Departments, and also to provide armour accommodation for squadron 'C' of the 18th Mounted Rifles and D and E companies of the 9th regiment. The site consists of two lots on Garry street, with a total frontage of 153 feet, purchased from the Housser-Armstrong Company.

Mr. STAPLES. Is it a corner lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say, but I think it is because it runs apparently on two streets, Garry and Campbell.

Mr. STAPLES. Have the plans been drawn?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are now completed and have been submitted to the department concerned, for approval. The tenders will be called for right away.

Mr. STAPLES. There is no doubt that the building will be gone on with this summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. None whatever.

Souris public building, $22,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to erect a public building in Souris. The work is now in progress.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In what year was this put in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the session of 1907-8.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Just before the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That seems like the burning of Rome or the great fire in St. John, or the flood.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It was a very famous burning, it saved the life of the late Minister of the Interior. However, they need a building there.

Mr. STAPLES. I regret to be here another session and to find the promise the minister gave me—hardly a direct promise, but almost—that there would appear in the estimates of this session an appropriation for a public building in Carman in the constituency that I have the honour of representing. Each session since I have been here I have appealed to the Minister of Public Works for an appropriation for the erection of a building there. I might inform the minister that it is a growing town, it has a population of over 2,000 people, it has three banks, it is a railway centre, three railways running into it, it is a municipal centre, the post office revenue is over $4,000 a year, much greater than in other towns for which provision is made, every denomination is represented there with good churches, the town is equipped with very good conveniences, with electric light a water system, and everything required to make its citizens, who are very progressive, comfortable. It possesses every qualification that the minister has laid down as guiding him in the appropriation of moneys for the construction of buildings in towns throughout the country. I do not believe that either the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Finance can advance a single good reason why it should not have a public building. Petitions have been presented to the government asking for a building. I again appeal to the minister to erect a building there. I can see no reason why there should not have been an appropriation for this town long ago. It is the oldest town south of the Assiniboine river in Manitoba, a pioneer town, and I now hope to get an answer from the minister that in his supplementary estimates he will make the desired appropriation towards erecting a building in the town of Carman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman puts the case so very nicely, and gives such strong evidence that he approves of my course in making provision for public buildings in different sections of the country where they are needed that it would afford me great pleasure if, at this moment, I could make the announcement that a public building would be erected at Carman immediately. I say that in all sincerity. But my hon. friend knows that when I make up my estimates they have to run the gauntlet of my colleagues, particularly of the Minister of Finance, and that I cannot accomplish all I would like even to please my hon. friend.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not know on what argument the minister can refuse a building to Carman. He erects buildings in towns like Humboldt, and other towns of that kind, only a year or two old. Carman is 35 or 40 years of age, and I do not know why the minister cannot give me a more definite answer than that. I would ask whether the Minister of Public Works has asked the Minister of Finance to endorse an appropriation for the town of Carman. I believe that if he has done so, the Finance Minister has told him: Yes, that is a deserving town, a growing town, and it should be supplied with a building.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

LACHINE, JACQUES CARTIER AND MAISONNEUVE RAILWAY.

Further consideration in committee of Bill (No. 44), respecting the Lachine, Jacques Cartier & Maisonneuve Railway.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 4.

Mr. GEOFFRION. In accordance with the notice given, I move that the following words be added to the section:

'And may, subject to the provisions of The Railway Act, connect each line of railway with the railway of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company or either of them.'

Amendment agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SECURITY TRUST CORPORATION.

Further consideration in committee on whole of Bill (No. 32), to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I wish to say with reference to this Bill——

Mr. FIELDING. I believe, apart from the question which has already engaged the attention of the committee, attention has been drawn to the fact that there is a company of a similar name in Manitoba, and I have discussed the matter with the hon. member for Regina and he agreed the Bill should stand until inquiry be made as to a possible change of name.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). That will be all right.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 73), respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Mr. SPROULE. Some of the branches mentioned in this Bill were provided for in the committee without any notice having been given of them in the 'Gazette.' It seems to me that it is establishing a very bad precedent to let these go into the Bill. I think there was another Bill in which the committee did the same thing. The advertisement in the 'Gazette' is for a good purpose—to give notice to the public where it is proposed to ask for the right to build a railroad. After such notice is given, to insert in a Bill provision for a number of branches for which no notice has been given, is an interference with rules which we have been in the habit of adhering to pretty closely.

Mr. TURRIFF. While recognizing the force of the remarks made by the hon. member, I may say that two at least of these branches were asked for by the settlers in the vicinity of where it is proposed to build them, so that if it can be arranged that these can go through, I do not think anybody will suffer, while it will be of great advantage to the people in those districts.

Mr. SPROULE. One of these branches appears to be 60 miles long. I am not objecting because I think there is any special danger, but just because it has been our disposition always to observe our rules carefully. After watching the granting of charters, especially of late years, I have come to the conclusion that we would be just as safe and would avoid a good deal of work if we granted charters just as they do in the United States—giving power to any company that wanted to build a railway, upon submitting its plans and having them examined and registered, to go on and build the railway. If we go on granting charters at the present rate, it will become a mere matter of form before very long. What has the Minister of Railways to say about it?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a good deal of force in what my hon. friend says. But these notices and rules are for the protection of the public, and I suppose for the railways as well. But when a section of the committee, representing the people in a certain district, after having been made fully aware of the rule as to advertising urged very strongly, so strongly that they convinced the committee, that we ought to waive that rule, and allow them to put in these branches, I think a fairly strong case is made out. In all these cases where a rule is waived, it is reported by the committee to the House, and I suppose that was done in this case. If we adhered strictly to the rule, these branches could not go in. Speaking practically, what benefit could be derived by anybody if we did that, and what injury can be done to anybody in this case? If I thought any one was going to be injured, I would say stand by the rule, but the committee, after consideration, thought it better in this c[illegible] and one or two others not to insist on the rule.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think, from our late experience in granting railway charters, that any harm will come from allowing these Bills to pass because one of the strong reasons for the rule, heretofore, was that we should not charter parallel lines or give charters which would interfere with the rights of chartered lines through the same sections. Of late, however, we take very little concern of this objection but grant charters to almost all who ask them. I do not think any serious injury will arise in this case, but I am only speaking of a disposition to contract a loose habit, and these very cases may be used as precedents by some designing individuals with regard to other Bills. If by any possible means we could avoid these being used as precedents, there would be less danger from the innovation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would feel like going this far, that where there is any real objection to a rule being waived in committee, we ought to insist on its being observed. As to what some call free trade in charters, it is difficult to know what is the better method to adopt. Charters have been obtained, particularly in the newer portions of the country, by companies which have no apparent intention of building. They get these charters renewed from time to time but do not build ; and if we were to stick to the practice which existed formerly of protecting companies that had acquired charters, we might never get railways in some particular sections. I have almost come to the conclusion that where three or four people are after a charter in the same territory, we should give a charter to each and let the man who first builds, get the railway. The same thing comes up in approving route maps. One company will get a charter, and a route map, and will sit down on that, and not build the road. Another comes along and it is told to keep off the right of way because the other company has a route map approved. I think we should change the method of approving route maps by approving them only for a limited period.

Mr. HUGHES. What about a pass?

Mr. GRAHAM. When there is only one pass, my idea is to give the other railways a right to run over the one which has the charter, and the route map. That is provided in the Railway Act, and I would feel like putting that in the route map approved.

On section 4,

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to call attention to another feature, and that is with reference to the rule we laid down for compelling railway companies to make their capital stock bear some proportion to their length of road. Where you increase the length of a road by several hundred miles, it would seem to me that the capital stock would have to be increased also. I do not know whether the branches proposed in this instance would cost sufficient money to require us to reconsider the question of the capital stock or not.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a railway that put its capital stock very high in the beginning, up to $50,000,000 to start with. I think they put it very high in order to cover lines they might construct. The other was that line running from Vancouver north to Yukon, which we raised from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The committee boost the amount of capital stock, helping on watering and over-capitalization. Then, when you come down to this House in the afternoon, you find the House criticising the very thing the committee has been doing in the morning.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE McCLARY MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 75) respecting the McClary Manufacturing Company.—Mr. Beattie.

Mr. SPROULE. This is reported by the Private Bills Committee. I do not know what consideration was given to it. I confess it has a rather suspicious look to me when an industrial concern like this asks power to purchase the stock of other concerns of the same nature. It looks as if it were intended to put several concerns into one combine.

Mr. GRAHAM. In our Railway Committee, when a company asks power to amalgamate with, or purchase, the stock of any other company, it must name the company, or companies. In a case of this kind it may not be possible to do this, perhaps.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The hon. member (Mr. Beattie) in charge of the Bill is not here, but I may say that, under the Companies' Act, every company chartered has this clause.

Mr. NESBITT. Is it not a rather wide clause?

Mr. SPROULE. This company is not chartered under the Companies' Act, but has a special charter, which, evidently, had not this clause, or the company would not be seeking to insert it.

Mr. NESBITT. I think the Bill had better stand.

Progress reported.

ALBERTA RAILWAY AND IRRIGATION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 51) respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Mr. Crothers.

Mr. HERRON. I gave notice of amendment of subsection (c) of section 1 of this Bill. The notice is wrongly worded, but I feel sure that the committee will accept it notwithstanding this error.

Mr. GRAHAM. What is the amendment?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The notice is given that clause 1 of section (c) be amended by striking out the words 'Spring Coulee' and inserting the words 'Cardston,' and after the word 'westerly' the words 'to the town of Pincher Creek.'

Mr. HERRON Instead of reading subsection (1) of clause (c), it should read subsection (c) of clause 1.

Mr. NESBITT. That was not accepted by the committee.

Mr. HERRON I will explain why it was not accepted in committee. When this Bill was before the committee on Tuesday last I moved the same amendments that I am offering here. At the request of the lawyer in charge of the company's interest, I did not press the matter to a decision, but allowed it to stand over until he should hear from his company. For some reason there was a meeting of the Railway Committee on Thursday last, I believe, the first held on a Thursday this session. I was, unfortunately, sick and confined to my room by the doctor's orders. The committee, I think, did not treat me fairly in passing this Bill in its original form without my consent. When I heard of it I gave notice of the amendment. This is an old charter, one of eleven or twelve years' standing. It gave very broad powers. The country was a cattle country when these people obtained the charter, but to-day it is a farming country. There were only a few settlers in there then, and to-day there is a thickly settled country from one end to the other. In the olden days the people did not expect railways, they knew they were not going to get them, therefore, there was little interest taken in the charters. But to-day some company is going to build over this identical ground, in fact this summer the same company will build over the proposed line and they are asking for their old powers under a renewed charter, the powers that they had eleven or twelve years ago. They are asking now for this charter from Cardston to Pincher Creek, a distance of 55 or 60 miles; they are asking for a spread at the starting point between Spring Coulee and Mountain View for a distance of about 30 miles, that is at the southwest end of the proposed road, going a distance of 55 or 60 miles north. When they land at the north end they ask for another spread of five townships again, where they strike the railway at the north, that is 30 miles more. We know the company could not come to this parliament to-day and ask for a new charter granting them these powers and they are trying to revive an old charter with all the powers which they got twelve or fifteen years ago. That is what I object to, and I dont think it is right to grant an extension to the company with such conditions. I have had protests from people along the line, and from Cardston in particular, against the granting of the extension altogether. The minister has frankly stated this evening his reasons for granting free trade in charters, and I agree with the minister that when they are not getting any exclusive rights, no harm would be done by renewing an old charter. But I think when the old company is getting the old charter revived, they should comply with the conditions such as they would have to do when they are asking for a new charter. That is all I am asking. I am asking that at the point of starting they be confined to a distance of 15 miles instead of 30 miles and from Cardston to Mountain View. I presume they will strike the Crowsnest branch near the Pincher Station, and if they do they will have to pass close by the town of Pincher Creek. The present Canadian Pacific railway station is the centre of the spread where they join the Crowsnest road at the north, I therefore ask that they be compelled to go through the town of Pincher Creek. Pincher Creek will not put them out of their way. The Crowsnest Pass branch has left our town nearly three miles to the north, and now the same company are proposing to run another line two or three miles to the east of us for they have already made the preliminary surveys. I can assure the House that there is no engineering obstacle in the way. There has been a survey made over the same ground by another company within the last three months, and there is not a one per cent grade on the line from Cardston to Pincher Station. For these reasons I ask the committee to accept the two amendments I have offered.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Herron), has taken a reasonable stand, and I do not see why we should be expected to revive a charter which was granted ten or twelve years ago, giving them the very extensive powers which they had then, and which we would not give them if they were applying for a new charter.

Mr. NESBITT. I did not suggest that the Bill stand over for the purpose of blocking it, but for the purpose of allowing the hon. member for Macleod and the railway company to get together.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not want to do anything against the wishes of my hon. friend from Macleod. By this Bill, the company have power given them, before they even do any work on the railway, to sell out their charter. It looks to me like a scheme of certain promoters to get a charter and sell it out to somebody else. If my hon. friend from Macleod wishes to push his amendment, I am prepared to stay here and fight it out.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers), has charge of the Bill. The circumstances are a good deal as outlined by my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Herron). The regular days for our committee to meet are Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Mr. HERRON. Did they meet this year on Thursday ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure, but I think we have met on Thursday. But that is immaterial. I want to assure him that we were not trying to take any advantage of him in the committee. He made a strong protest the day before, and the Bill was left over to allow the representatives of the company to communicate with the head office. He told the committee the last time that the company could not see its way clear to comply with his request to build into Pincher Creek, and the hon. member not being present, the committee took it for granted he had reconsidered his objection. The hon. member for West Elgin will say whether he thinks we ought to go on with it.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am not particularly anxious to proceed with the Bill to-night. In fact, I believe, as stated by the Minister of Railways, that when the Bill came before the committee my hon. friend from Macleod proposed the amendment he has proposed this evening. It was then allowed to stand to enable communication to be had with the president of the Canadian Pacific railway company, which recently acquired the rights of this company in the old charter, and only recently. The reply came from the head of the company that they would be very glad if they could comply with my hon. friend's request, but that owing to engineering difficulties in the construction of the road as he suggests, they regretted they would not be able to accept his suggestion. This Bill deals with four branches, only one of which is affected by the proposed amendment. I understand it is the intention of the Canadian Pacific railway company to proceed with the construction of these branches in the near future if the charter be renewed as requested now. But they say they would let the whole project drop rather than undertake to carry it out as suggested by my hon. friend from Macleod. If my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), thinks there is a possibility of the company and the hon. member for Macleod agreeing on any compromise, I have no objection to its standing over.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Herron) is quite right. I do not think that this House should allow an old charter like this to be revived when the company now owning it, or the same company object to carry out such a reasonable proposition as to run their line through a town when they propose to run right close beside it.

A good deal of that sort of thing has been done in the past to the great detriment and loss of men who may have from $5,000 to $20,000 invested in one of these towns. A railway comes along and runs two or three or one mile outside of the town limits with the result that a new town has to be built up which deteriorates property in the old town very materially. A little while ago I had occasion to have a matter of this kind attended to in fixing the route map by the Grand Trunk Pacific, and they readily agreed to go through a town instead of a mile to one side as first intended. The other day in the committee we compelled the Grand Trunk Pacific to go through Hanley as shown here to-night instead of going a mile or two north or south, and I think on this occasion we ought to compel this company if they build, and I would not tolerate any such threat as they have made that if they do not get all their own way they will not build at all. I would say let them build through Pincher Creek or not build at all.

Mr. CONMEE. I happen to know the ground over which this railway is projected. I agree with the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron). There are no engineering difficulties. The line is coming from the southern boundary of Alberta on a gradual rise until it connects with the Crowsnest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway at Pincher. There are two towns of Pincher. Pincher on the Crowsnest is about three miles from the town of Pincher Creek, and while I think if proper representations had been made to the Minister of Railways and Canals when they built that branch line, it could have been built through that town, I do not see any reason, having regard to the alignment that the road must take to reach the point at which they are aiming, which is within three miles of the town, why they should not pass through it, and no hardship would be imposed upon them by compelling them to do so. Only justice would be done to the town of Pincher Creek.

SUPPLY.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Winnipeg public buildings, improvements, repairs, &c., $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the same vote as last year to make repairs to the public buildings in Winnipeg.

Mr. RHODES. If the minister has no objection I would like now to say a few words in connection with the Battleford public building in order that I may return to the minister the file which he sent to me. I find upon looking at the file that on February 21, 1908, the acting Deputy Minister of Public Works wrote to the chief architect as follows :

Kindly send Clerk of Works Mollard to Battleford to report on suitable site for proposed new public building there. Instruct him to confer with Mr. Champagne, M.P.P., in regard to it.

On March 30, a little more than one month later, the following letter was sent to the chief architect by the Deputy Minister of Public Works :

Have you the report of the Clerk of Works Mollard regarding site for Battleford public building referred to in my memo of 21st ult. If not, please ask him to hasten his report?'

Then, written at the bottom of the letter was this reply, dated April 1, 1908:

Mr. Mollard's report has not yet reached me. Have wired him to-day to hurry his report.

D. EWART,
Chief Architect.

On March 30, we have the following letter addressed to the chief architect:

Re Battleford site for public building.
Sir,—As directed by your letter of February 22, 1908, I went to Battleford re site for public building, and beg to report as follows: I saw Mr. Champagne, M.P.P., who pointed out the site which I have reported upon, and which he said was the popular site. I believe the site is a good one. I have attached an offer of sale from the owners.

Yours respectfully,
W. T. MOLLARD,
Clerk of Works.

Concerning these three communications I have this to say: That although Mr. Mollard was appointed inspector on February 21, we have a letter from the deputy minister on March 30, or nearly five weeks later calling upon the chief architect to hasten this man in making his report on the site for the Battleford post office. That is rather interesting in view of the impression the Minister of Public Works left on my mind when, a few evenings ago, I was referring to the delay in the preparation of the plans for the post office at Parrsboro', Nova Scotia. The minister then rather intimated to me that these various works were allowed to take their own course, and that no special instruction was given to the chief architect, but in this case we find that specific instructions were given to him, and that he has a peremptory letter from the deputy minister to have the agent of the department hasten sending his report from Battleford. We find the agent of the department at Battleford conferring with the member for the county and selecting the site, which the member for the county indicated should be the site to be chosen. I shall not say anything further on that point; I think these facts are clear enough. But, I would like to address this question to the minister: In view of the fact that Mr. Champagne was the man to whom the agent of the department went to select a site, who is the Esther Champagne referred to in the letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice addressed to the secretary of the Department of Public Works, dated Ottawa, January 20, 1909, and reading:

BATTLEFORD PUBLIC BUILDING.

Sir,—I have the honour herewith to inclose assignment from Esther Champagne and Robert Henry Speers of the former's interest in the lands in question, also our agent's account certified for $35.39. Kindly send me a cheque in his favour for this amount.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

Has the minister any knowledge who the Esther Champagne referred to in this letter is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have no idea at all. Will the hon. gentleman send me over the file?

Mr. RHODES. Has the Minister of Public Works any intimation as to the relationship of Esther Champagne to the sitting member for the county?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no knowledge whatever. I have not the slightest information of who Esther Champagne is. The question of the title would be in the Justice Department, and my department would have nothing to do with it. Now, it does not seem to me that in the citation from these letters my hon. friend has shown that I have been inconsistent in my statement. The hon. gentleman has called attention to the fact that Mr. Mollard having been asked in February, 1908, to make a report, and not having made it on the 30th of March, the deputy minister instructed the chief architect to see why the report had not come in. That is an entirely different thing from the preparation of plans which rests with the chief architect. I think it was a very proper course for the deputy minister to take in the discharge of his duties. As to Mr. Mollard conferring with Mr. Champagne I think that is entirely proper. Mr. Champagne was a prominent resident of Battleford, and was at that time a member of the legislative assembly, not of this parliament. He had urged most strongly the erection of this public building, and I think it entirely right that Mr. Mollard should go there and confer with Mr. Champagne. But, it was Mr. Mollard's duty in pursuance of the general instructions given to him and to others, to examine other properties as well, to make inquiry as to the values and to report so that the department could judge whether the price put upon the property recommended was a fair price. I do not know what report Mr. Mollard sent in, but I take it he reported on the value of the property. Yes, I see his report here: He gives the size of the lot, where it is situated, the name of the owners, the price $3,000, a sketch of the property, a short description of surrounding property; he certifies that in his opinion the price is a reasonable one, he gives the assessment which was $2,100 in 1906, two years before, and I presume property values advanced in the meantime.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why did he not give the assessment in the year the sale was made instead of two years before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know. He gives the price paid at a previous sale of this property, the price paid for neighbouring properties, and he says he doesn't think a better site could be found for a public building, and that the present post office stood on this very lot. So that the lot he recommended was the very lot on which the rented building then occupied as a post office stood. I think there was nothing else of importance that my hon. friend spoke of except the fact of the deputy minister urging that a report should be got from Mr. Mollard as to the site of the building, and there is nothing to interfere with the chief architect preparing the plans of the different buildings according to his own judgment from day to day.

Mr. RHODES. I quite agree with the hon. minister. It is entirely commendable in the deputy minister to hurry the chief architect to get a report from the agent of the department. I have no fault to find with that. I simply made reference to this matter for the purpose of contrasting the actions of the agents of the department in a case in which they were starting a post office a few months prior to a general election in a constituency which was represented by an hon. gentleman sitting to the right of the Speaker with the case of my own constituency which for the moment happens to be represented by a member sitting on this side of the House. I do not propose to deal with that any further. But the other thing that struck me was that the name of Champagne is an unusual name, and it is rather singular that the man to whom the agent of the department was referred to select the site was a Mr. Champagne, and that the title should come from Esther Champagne and one other. Has the minister any idea of whether Esther Champagne is related to Mr. Champagne?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make inquiry, and give my hon. friend the information later on.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I understand that the hon. minister, when he was in the west last summer, promised to put in a fish ladder in connection with the St. Andrew's locks. I would like to know whether he has fully decided to go on with that work next summer, and if so, why there is not an item in the estimates for it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have given a good deal of attention to the matter of a fishway in the dam at St. Andrew's rapids, and personally I am in favour of it being put in. We were requested to put that fishway in, not only by residents of Manitoba, but also on behalf of residents of the neighbouring state of Minnesota by the American consul at Winnipeg. In conference with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries I learned that upon the American side of the boundary, in the Pembina river, which is a branch of the Red river, there is a dam which was erected by American citizens, and which prevents the fish going up the river and coming around again into the province of Manitoba. We are trying to induce the state of North Dakota to put a fish-way in the Pembina river, and we hope it will be done concurrently with our putting one in the Red river at St. Andrew's rapids, so that fish might ascend both the Pembina and Red rivers.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I am very much pleased to hear what the minister says. I may say that this dam in the Pembina river is at Walhalla, and for 30 years we have not been able to get fish in that river because the Americans who own the dam have absolutely refused to put in a fish ladder. I hope the minister will give his word that he will not put in a fish ladder at St. Andrew's rapids until the other is put in.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would all our friends in Manitoba be satisfied with that?

Mr. BRADBURY. They would not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If our friends in Manitoba would be satisfied with that, and we could use the dam at St. Andrew's rapids as a leverage to induce our American friends to put in a fish-way on the Pembina river, I would be pleased so to use it. However, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has the matter under his consideration, and has been for some time in communication, through his officials with the authorities of the state of North Dakota.

Mr. BRADBURY. I had this matter before the department on three or four occasions, and I understood that last session the fish-way in the St. Andrew's dam was provided for. I referred to it again in the early part of this session, and had the assurance of the Minister of Public Works and afterwards the assurance of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the work would be done. I concur in the idea that it would be good policy to use the St. Andrew's dam as a leverage to induce the Americans to put a fish-way in the Pembina river as well. At the same time, I hope it will not be long before we have a fish-way at St. Andrew's dam. There is no doubt that both of these dams should have fish-ways.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This matter shows the benefit that is likely to result from the treaty that has recently been agreed to. I am inclined to think, as at present advised, that this is a matter that could be referred to the International Joint Commission, because both of these rivers cross the boundary between the United States and Canada, and that they could take action by way of advice or otherwise which would be of great benefit.

Mr. BRADBURY. As far as I am personally concerned, I feel like leaving the matter in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has given me his word that it will be attended to.

Mr. DANIEL. Has that commission authority over the state of Minnesota?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, if they have any authority at all, it is within the scope of the treaty, and a treaty is the paramount law. It over-rides all state law, provincial law or Canadian law. Under the American constitution treaties become the supreme law of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. What power have they to enforce their decisions?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government of the United States is a very strong one.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I might say a word with regard to the fishways on the Pembina river and the Red river. The question of the Pembina river has been before the department for some time, and we have, in different circumstances, taken some steps to induce the state authorities to remove that dam on the Pembina river. Unfortunately, we have not so far been very successful. However, the commission which was appointed some time ago to investigate the fisheries in Manitoba were instructed by the department to visit that dam and see what steps could be taken to remove it. We are expecting their report very shortly, and shall be prepared to act on their recommendations. In the meantime, it would be, perhaps, advisable that nothing should be done with regard to the dam on the Red river. I do not think that much time will be lost, or that any one will suffer by the delay, and I hope, with the good relations which seem to exist now between the two countries, that better arrangements will be brought about with regard to the fisheries. This Pembina river is not one of those included in the boundaries waters treaty, but it is one which I intend bringing to the attention of the commissioners when the fisheries treaty is accepted by the American authorities. Both governments have the right to extend the provisions of that treaty to some waters which are not included in it. I am now referring to the fish treaty. I hope that the commissioners will agree with me that this river is one of those which should be included in that treaty, and, perhaps, that will be one of the ways in which the matter would be more easily settled; if, in the meantime, we do not succeed in getting it settled in some other way.

Mr. BRADBURY. While discussing these two fishways, I might remind the minister of another fishway of which I spoke last year, that on the Whitemouth river, entering the Winnipeg river, and which I think he promised to refer to the commission. The Winnipeg river enters just below the Lac du Bonnet, which abounds in fish, and the Whitemouth river extends a distance of some 75 to 80 miles north and south, and there are numbers of settlers all along its shores, and the fish cannot get up. It will cost very little to put a fishway there.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am under the impression that this is one of the questions referred to the commission. The report of that commission has not yet been handed to me, but I expect to have it soon, and shall not fail to bear in mind the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I am very much pleased with the stand taken by the government in connection with this matter. The people along the Red river have had fish there a great many years, and we allowed the fish to go right down to the United States. The Americans have had all kinds of fish from Canada, and I think it was a very mean piece of business on the part of the United States people to build this dam on the Pembina river and absolutely refuse to put in a fish ladder. I think this government is perfectly justified in standing pat in connection with the fishway on St. Andrew's locks, because in the early days, when the first settlers went into southern Manitoba, they could get all the fish they wanted, but as soon as the dam was put there the fish ceased coming up. I think we would be justified in using that to bring these people to time. They are in the same box as we on account of there being no fish ladder in St. Andrew's lock, so that fish cannot get through to North Dakota. I think that the government are taking a justifiable course.

Mr. BRADBURY. While speaking on the subject of the locks east of the dam at St. Andrew's locks, as I may not be here when the harbours and rivers are up, I wish to refer to a matter in that connection. The hon. minister will recollect that last year, in the early part of the session, I drew his attention to the necessity of building approaches to the bridge at that dam. In the early part of this session I asked him whether he had provided a sum in the estimates this year for that purpose. Here is the question I asked:

THE ST. ANDREW'S DAM.

Mr. Bradbury. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works whether it is his intention to place a sum in the estimates this year for the completion of the bridge at St. Andrew's dam. I understood the hon. gentleman to state distinctly last year that the work was to be proceeded with immediately; but since then nothing has been done, the approaches have not been built, and the bridge is standing there useless, so far as the public on either side of the river are concerned. It is a very important matter to that part of the province of Manitoba.

To this the minister replied:

I would say to my hon. friend that the work at St. Andrew's rapids was not undertaken for the purpose of affording a bridge across the river, but for the purpose of improving the navigation by the building of a lock and a dam so as to increase the depth of the water between that point and the city of Winnipeg; but it was found, as incidental to the construction of the dam and lock, that provision might be made for the erection of a highway bridge, which would add somewhat to the cost, although the cost would not be nearly so great as it would be if the bridge were undertaken by itself. The work has cost a good deal of money, and up to the present moment the government has not seen its way clear to ask parliament for a vote for the purpose of providing the approaches to what would be the highway bridge. I may say to my hon. friend that there has been no decision arrived at against doing this work. All I can say is that up to the present it has not been decided to ask parliament for an appropriation during the present session.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he reconciles that statement with the statement which he made most distinctly on the floor of this House last year, that a sum was going to be placed in the estimates for the building of these approaches.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not recall exactly what was said, but I am inclined to think that any statement which I made was simply an expression of my own opinion; but, of course, in addition to any opinion I might have as to the desirability of going ahead with the work, would be the question of providing the money, a matter which would rest with my colleagues, and more especially the Minister of Finance.

Now I wish to point out what occurred last session. The minister gave me, as I understood, a distinct promise across the floor of this House, that this work should be undertaken. This is a very important work. About $1,500,000 if I understand correctly, has been spent there already. The bridge stands there to-day about twenty-five or thirty feet up in the air and fully 200 feet away from the highway;—there it stands, a monument to the foolish policy of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend tell me how it could have been used as a service bridge for the purposes indicated, except it had been just at the height it is?

Mr. BRADBURY. When the plans were prepared, no provision was made for a highway bridge. There was provision made for the construction that has taken place of a service bridge for the purpose of moving the curtains. But to provide the highway bridge I am informed by the minister's own engineers would entail an extra cost of about $200,000 to strengthen the steel work in connection with that bridge. But whether it did so or not, the question is not whether the work could have been constructed without this bridge or not, but the bridge is there, and the minister promised me that the approaches would be completed, so that the settlers on each side could use it for the purpose for which it was constructed. Now, I wish to refer to what I stated. When the minister was going into Supply last year, I rose to draw attention to this matter, but as soon as he saw me he understood what I was going to say. I began:

With reference to the bridge over the St. Andrews dam——

I got no further, because the minister at once said:

We are going to build that bridge.

I understood what he meant, and he what I meant, and I did not pursue the matter further.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is just what I want to know.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRADBURY. Then I will not discuss it. I am very glad that the minister has seen the necessity of doing that work.

But my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples), did not catch the drift of the conversation between us, and did not understand the position as well as the minister and I did. He interjected a question:

Mr. STAPLES. Does the minister mean that he is going to build the approaches?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The approaches to the bridge.

Mr. STAPLES. The intention is to build the approaches?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention is to complete this work by building the approaches. The bridge is designed as a service bridge in connection with the dam and also for a highway bridge.

Later, when an item was under discussion in my absence from the House—as will be seen on reference to page 6103 of 'Hansard' of last year, an item of $55,000 for improvements at St. Andrew's rapids, this matter came up again. The following discussion took place:

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government has been engaged for some time in building a lock and dam at St. Andrew's rapids for the purpose of affording navigation from Lake Winnipeg to the city of Winnipeg. The work is now practically completed, and we expect that in a few days it will be open for navigation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister purpose completing the roadway across this superstructure, which I understand is intended to be used as a municipal road? Does he propose making connections with the banks on either side?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What my hon. friend, I suppose, means is, shall we build the approaches so as to enable the people to avail themselves of the bridge, which was built primarily as a service bridge for the lock and dam, as a highway bridge. I may say that we intend to do so.

My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), in requesting the minister to hold that item over, as the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart) and I were not present, said:

Perhaps we are not warranted in asking the minister to withhold the item, but the members for the two constituencies directly interested are not here. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart) has not yet returned from his Easter holidays, but I understand he will be here on Saturday. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) from Selkirk is in the city, but I have been unable to get in touch with him to have him here while this vote is under consideration. I would like if the minister would permit either of these gentlemen at a later stage to speak on the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be very glad to. Both of these hon. gentlemen have already spoken on the question, and I am sure that they would regret that there should be any delay in the passing of the item. The hon. member for Selkirk, a short time ago, spoke in very strong terms of the importance of finishing up these approaches and of the very great importance of the work.

Now, if language means anything, surely I am justified in saying that I had a distinct promise from the Minister of Public Works for the completion of this work. He not only tells me across the floor that he intends to complete the work, but when an item was under discusion two weeks after, for that particular work, he left on the minds of hon. members an impression that if that item went through, it was to provide for the very work that he had promised.

Now, it will be almost an outrage if this matter is allowed to go over this summer without this work being completed. A magnificent bridge has been constructed there, and all that is needed in order to complete it, is the two approaches, one on either side of the river. The absence of these approaches means that about 2,000 people are denied the means of using that bridge, which has been built by the people of this country and which stands there, as I have said, a monument to the foolishness of the policy enunciated by the minister. If he maintains the position that he took in the early part of the session and practically says that the government have not decided what they are going to do in this matter, after giving me a distinct promise across the floor of the House, what reliance are we to place upon the promises of ministers? I have never doubted, and I hope the minister will not give me reason to doubt, that a distinct pledge coming from a minister of the Crown would be openly violated. I do not believe he intends to do so. I do not believe that he recollected that he had made this promise across the floor. I ask him now to redeem that promise, in the interest of the people along that river, and in the interest of the people of this country, who have to furnish this large amount of money already spent. I ask him to go on and construct this work. There must have been some change of policy, because when I was at the locks myself after the session, the engineers led me to believe that tenders had been called for a cantilever bridge to span the lock. So there must have been a change of policy. Whatever it is, I hope the minister will see his way clear to provide the money in the estimates this session, and proceed with that work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I had the pleasure of visiting St. Andrews locks a year ago last summer, I was impressed with the desirability of building the approaches, although I must say that the question as to whether the government should build them or leave the work to the provincial authorities was not entirely free from doubt. It is not so easy as my hon. friend might think to get my colleagues to agree, after building a lock and a dam, and providing that portion of the bridge across a navigable water, to go to the further expenditure of building the approaches to the bridge, which I may say many provincial and municipal authorities would be extremely glad to construct at their own expense in order to give the needed accommodation to the public. However, after a good deal of hesitation, I decided to recommend to my colleagues to strain a point and to build the approaches for the accommodation of these people living in the municipalities on each side of the river, without calling upon them to bear any portion of the burden. Perhaps I was a little over sanguine as to the time when my colleagues would authorize me to undertake the work. They have not so far given me the requisite money to enable me to do this work. I may say that my hon. friend himself and some of his associates are not altogether blameless for certain difficulties which have been thrown in my way. I call to mind that at the session before last the hon. member for North Toronto, a leading member of this House, speaking in the presence of the hon. member for Selkirk, charged that that whole work was simply a shameless waste of public money. He used this language:

> The Prime Minister is head trustee for the people of Canada. Will he now justify his conduct as head trustee for the people of Canada in sinking——

'Sinking' is the word the hon. member for North Toronto used.

> —sinking a million and a quarter of money in the St. Andrew's locks? Of that amount, $200,000 is for a highway bridge, for which no vote was ever taken, and that bridge lies there in its naked steel splendour, thirty-five or forty feet up in the air from the road on either side. I want to ask the Prime Minister, as head trustee for the people of Canada, to tell me to-night if he can get any three businessmen in the city of Winnipeg to put within his hand any justification, in the traffic that exists at present or in the business which may be expected in the near future, for the expenditure of a million and a quarter of money on that work. It is one of the finest pieces of concrete masonry and steel that I ever saw; but where is the business to come from? It is an absolute waste of public money at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when a prominent member of this House, occupying the leading position in the opposition of the hon. member for North Toronto, makes the statement that this whole work is simply a waste of public money, and when those hon. gentlemen representing the community especially interested, sit silent and allow that statement to go through this country, it makes the position of the Minister of Public Works much more difficult than it would be if the gentlemen interested had risen in their places and protested against a statement of that kind. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not withdraw one moment from the expression of opinion that I gave that it is desirable for the accommodation of these people, who are poor and unable apparently to build these approaches, that this government should build them. But I have not stated when it should be done. I intend to urge upon my colleagues to grant authority to build these approaches; whether I can get that authority this session, I am not prepared to say. But I shall continue to ask for that authority and I think that is as far as my hon. friend can ask me to go.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. minister has endeavoured, by using the words of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), to let himself down from a very nasty position. There is no question that the member for North Toronto did make the speech the minister refers to, and that speech was referred to by myself in the House later. I had talked the matter over with the member for North Toronto. What he meant, I think, is this, that there was no justification for the large expenditure that had been made at St. Andrews dam. He did not mean that a dam was not required, he did not mean that a lock was not required. The position taken by the member for North Toronto and by myself was that this work could have been done for about one-half the money the present government is spending upon it. But aside from all this, is the fact that the minister, knowing the conditions, having visited the work himself, knowing that it stands there twenty to thirty feet in the air from either side of the roadway, knowing that there has already been spent in constructing that bridge nearly $200,000, still allows the work to stand out in the middle of the stream quite useless to the people on either side of the river. Now the minister states that he is only one member of the cabinet, and that he cannot obtain this money that he is desirous of obtaining. How does he reconcile this with the fact that when asking a vote of $55,000 in connection with this work he left the inference plainly to be drawn from his language that that $55,000 included a sum to start that work. He stated distinctly when the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) asked him to allow the vote to stand over until I or the member for Winnipeg returned to the House:

I would be very glad to. Both of these hon. gentlemen have already spoken on the question, and I am sure that they would regret that there should be any delay in the passing of the item. The member for Selkirk a short time ago spoke in very strong terms of the importance of finishing up these approaches and of the very great importance of the work.

What other inference could be drawn from that language than that the minister was providing for that work in the estimate before the House? That was my understanding of the question when I was informed of what had taken place. I presumed the work would cost more than $55,000. When a minister asks for public moneys to carry on public works and makes promises, and then his colleagues practically turn him down and refuse to carry out the pledge given by him, that minister is placed in a very awkward position and one which I am sure the Minister of Public Works would not tolerate. The minister, on this occasion, pledged his word. I do not think his colleagues would compel him to violate his word given across the floor of the House, and I hope he will see his way clear to go on with the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret very much, indeed, that my hon. friend should have sought to misrepresent the representations which I made to this House in 1910, when the item of $55,000 was being obtained. He says I gave the committee to understand that the vote I was then asking would enable me to go on with the building of the approaches of the bridge. I would ask him to look at page 6103 of the 'Hansard' of 1910, where he will find:

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a difference, a very great difference. In this case the character of the river at that point is being changed. The ordinary mode of crossing by boat is necessarily being considerably affected, and I felt that the government, having been obliged to spend a considerable amount of money in building a service bridge for the operation of the lock and lifting curtains, it would not be unreasonable to go a little further and, instead of compelling the municipality to build the approaches, do that work ourselves.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish the minister to think for a moment that I am objecting. I think it is a very good idea to provide this service bridge for the people, because the municipalities contiguous to this portion of the river would certainly be put to a very large expense to erect a bridge. But I am rather amused at the reason the hon. minister has given, that the erection of this dam is going to interfere with the crossing of the river by a ferry. However, I do not wish to make any objection. I think the idea is a very good one.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the increased cost to make the provision for the municipality?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $63,000 is the estimate.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand the minister to say that the present vote of $55,000 will complete the opening of the river for all the purposes of navigation, but will not complete the bridge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will complete the payments under the existing contracts, but will not complete the approaches to the bridge or the sodding.

So the amount I was then asking the committee for was the amount required to complete the payments on the bridge. I said as plainly as any words could say it that if we were to go on with the approaches and to complete the sodding we would have to get a further vote.

Mr. BRADBURY. Will the minister read the other portion, which is marked, and say what inference he would draw from it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall read all the passages that are marked:

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government has been engaged for some time in building a lock and dam at St. Andrew's rapids for the purpose of affording navigation from Lake Winnipeg to the city of Winnipeg. The work is now practically completed, and we expect that in a few days it will be open for navigation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister purpose completing the roadway across this superstructure, which I understand is intended to be used as a municipal road? Does he propose making connections with the banks on either side?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What my hon. friend, I suppose, means is, shall we build the approaches so as to enable the people to avail themselves of the bridge which was built primarily as a service bridge for the lock and dam, as a highway bridge. I may say that we intend to do so.

I was not asking for a vote then for that purpose. I did not say that we were going to do it now. It was intimated as clearly as words could intimate that the vote for which we were then asking would not enable us to do it, and clearly the hon. gentleman who heard me must have understood that we would have to come back again to parliament for a vote which would enable us to build the approaches and to do the sodding if we so decided. Afterwards, if I remember rightly, we did come for authority to do the sodding.

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to emphasize what I said. The minister read a portion of the 'Hansard,' which I admit I did not notice, but it would not have made any difference in the construction I placed on the portion of his remarks which I read. I was not in the House and my attention was drawn to it, and I submit that no other inference could be drawn by any fair-minded man than the inference I drew. After the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) had asked to have the matter stand, the minister said:

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be very glad to. Both of these hon. gentlemen have already spoken on the question, and I am sure that they would regret that there should be any delay in the passing of the item. The member for Selkirk a short time ago spoke in very strong terms of the importance of finishing up these approaches and of the very great importance of the work.

I would like to know if it is not fair for me to infer that the minister meant us to understand, and I am sure the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and the other members must have felt that the minister was providing some part of the money necessary to complete the approaches to that great work. The Dominion of Canada has expended large amounts there. I understand it has already cost $1,500,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was for purposes of navigation.

Mr. BRADBURY. The bridge is there, concreted, all ready for use; all it wants is the two approaches, which I understand will cost $60,000 or $70,000. Is it possible that the minister is going to allow that magnificent structure to stand there without those approaches, which will enable this work to be used, and allow it to rust year after year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Allow me to correct any error into which my hon. friend has inadvertently fallen. He said the highway bridge cost $200,000 ; but my information from the engineering branch of the department is that such is not the case. We have constructed a service bridge for the purpose of operating the curtains and that service bridge cost $200,000, but the extra cost of preparing it as a highway bridge only represents $50,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. I will not argue that point, but as I have already stated I myself investigated the matter when the work was under construction, and one of the resident engineers informed me that the providing of the highway bridge involved an extra cost of something like $200,000, and he figured it that while the service bridge was an absolute necessity for raising the curtains, the steel work in connection with it had to be made so much stronger for a highway bridge that it occasioned the extra cost. However, that is aside from the question ; the bridge is there. Is the minister going to allow it to stand there idle? I appeal to him now to complete that work. It is of absolute necessity to the welfare of that district. The country has spent one and a half million dollars constructing the work and surely the people should not be denied the advantages which would accrue by the completion of this bridge at an extra expenditure of $50,000 or $60,000. As it stands at present it is a disgrace to this government. Does the minister intend to provide a sum in the estimates to implement the pledge in regard to this matter which he gave across the floor of the House last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimates must speak for themselves when they are brought down. I regret I am not able to give the information ; I have no authority to say what council will do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seems to me that the term 'service bridge' is a bit of a joke when applied to a bridge that is of no service to anybody. I notice that in these estimates there is $174,000 all told allocated to poor little Manitoba, and I feel that it is necessary for some one from that province to draw the attention of the government to the fact that Manitoba is not getting its just due in the matter of public expenditure. For instance, in Nova Scotia these estimates provide for an expenditure of $938,230, and in New Brunswick for an expenditure of $1,323,950, while at the present moment Manitoba has a greater population than either of the other two. But, New Brunswick represented by the Minister of Public Works gets $1,323,950 expended within its boundaries while poor little Manitoba is only to get $174,000. It is the most scandalous thing which has ever been shown up in this House. What is the reason of it. Is it bribery, is it corruption, or is it reward? It is a most scandalous piece of what I call parliamentary corruption, and jobbery. I want to know from the Minister of Public Works why Manitoba is treated in that way. Is it because Manitoba sent eight Conservative members here, and only two to support the government? Let me tell the minister if he does'nt know it—and he never knows anything that is pertinent to the question before the House unless it suits him—let me tell him that in 1901 the population of Manitoba was about 500,000, the population of Nova Scotia 459,000, and the population of New Brunswick 331,120. I hope it is not my remarks that make the minister yawn. I want some accounting from the minister for this. Is Manitoba being punished, is New Brunswick being rewarded? I want a fair, square answer if it is possible to get it from the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is so unconscious of the meaning of some observations that he makes, that I will not take offence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think you could.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If these remarks were made by some hon. gentlemen I would take offence, but we have to give to the hon. and picturesque member from one of the Manitoba constituencies a good deal of latitude.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not want any privilege in this House except the privilege of any honourable, decent member. I have made a proposition to the minister, and I ask him to answer it, as one man to another man on honourable grounds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The committee tolerates a good deal from the hon. gentleman, and I will not depart from what has been the custom of the committee and this House in regard to him. Therefore, I will endeavour to make a courteous answer. He asks in regard to the expenses in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick compared with those in Manitoba. As far as New Brunswick is concerned, there are no expenses being made which are not in my judgment absolutely necessary in the public interest. We are making provision at the port of St. John for accommodating the national traffic which is coming to that port. The city of St. John began some 14 years ago to make improvements. The people taxed themselves to the extent of a million and a quarter dollars, to provide terminal facilities. The business has increased enormously, and last year the exports at that port reached $25,000,000. Then, it has been necessary to build wharfs at various places throughout the province for the accommodation of shipping. Public buildings we are only putting up where they are necessary. So far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, while the appropriations for this year are not large, we completed only recently, at a cost of a million and a quarter dollars, a work at St. Andrew's rapids which I believe, is going to be of paramount importance to the city of Winnipeg and to the province of Manitoba generally. We have erected in the city of Winnipeg a magnificent post office building, a magnificent customs warehouse and an immigration building. We have erected a public building at Brandon, and we are proceeding to erect one at Portage la Prairie. We are also putting up public buildings at Souris. We have erected public buildings at Emerson, Dauphin and other places. There are no great harbours to dredge in Manitoba, but we are doing dredging on Lake Winnipeg, on Lake Manitoba and in the Red river. Then we have in prospect the building in the near future of the Hudson Bay railway, which, if the boundaries of the province of Manitoba are extended, as we expect they will be to Hudson Bay, will be built wholly in the province of Manitoba. There will be an expenditure on that railway reaching upwards of $20,000,000, made wholly in the province of Manitoba, and when the railway reaches either Fort Churchill or Fort Nelson, I expect that we shall be called upon to expend, not hundreds of thousands, but probably millions of dollars in the improvement of the harbour, giving facilities for, I hope, an enormous traffic that will flow from Manitoba and the other western provinces, by way of this short line, to the markets of the old world. We have made surveys of the Saskatchewan river, and if we carry out the works which those surveys seem to warrant, we shall have to build dams at various points along the route in order to bring Winnipeg into water communication with Prince Albert and Edmonton and right on to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. I trust that the hon. gentleman will not be sectional in this matter, for we hope to make improvements in that province even beyond his most sanguine anticipations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know that I can take much exception to the opening words of the minister, in which he referred to me as a picturesque member. I think I would rather be called a picturesque member than an unctuous member. Beyond those few personal words, I do not see the bearing of what he has said. He refers to what he expects to do on the Saskatchewan river. What has that to do with Manitoba? He refers to the expenditure he proposes to make in Portage la Prairie that does not help us, because the expenditure has not been made. He refers to the possibilities of Fort Churchill. What has that to do with Manitoba as at present constituted? Perhaps the minister will tell us that the efforts of the provincial ministers who have come down here have resulted favourably, and that Fort Churchill is going to be in Manitoba. If that is the case, I will welcome any expenditures that he makes in that direction. I only opened this subject because as a Manitoban I object to my province being so neglected by the minister as the blue-books show.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What works does the hon. gentleman ask for?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for a fair per capita expenditure of public money. We find that the government of Canada is spending 34 cents per head in Manitoba, while it is spending $2 per head in Nova Scotia and $4 per head in the province of the Minister of Public Works. Where is the justice of that? All I ask is justice and fair play all around.

Mr. ROCHE. Before this item passes, and in view of the remarks which the Minister of Public Works dropped a moment ago, I am sure he will pardon me if I say a few words on behalf of the constituency I represent, more particularly as he certainly cannot accuse me of imposing my views on him too frequently or of urging him to undertake unnecessary public expenditure within the borders of my constituency. Since he has seen fit to refer to some works he has had built within the borders of the province of Manitoba, let me refer him to a few more which he has omitted. When we rise to protest against an expenditure or to urge a request for a fair appropriation, we are open to one of two charges. When we ask for so much needed expenditure within the confines of our own constituency, we are accused of desiring to increase the expenditure of the country. But should we fail to do so, and later on bring to the attention of the minister some much needed improvement, we are twitted with the fact that this is the first time he heard of it, and are made to appear as if we had been lacking in our duty in not having brought this matter to his attention before. I desire to say a word or two with reference to the treatment given the constituency I have the honour to represent. Last night I heard the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) say that there was not a constituency in the Dominion which had met with the same treatment as had been accorded to his during fourteen years when the Conservatives were in office. During all that time not a single dollar, he said, had been expended in the way of constructing a public building in that constituency. Well, this is the fifteenth session I have been in this parliament, and I have not yet had in all those years a dollar expended within the confines of my constituency on any public building. That caps the experience of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). And that is not due to any remissness on my part. On several occasions I have drawn the attention of the hon. minister and of his predecessor to the town of Minnedosa. His predecessor went to the extent of promising to put an item in the estimates for the purchasing of a lot for the erection of a public building in that town, but for some reason or another he failed to keep his promise. I have not pressed this matter session after session on the minister, because I knew there were many important towns requiring large expenditures; but when I see towns with a few hundred population and a postal revenue of some six or eight hundred dollars, given public buildings while more important towns are passed by, I cannot help drawing attention to this unequal distribution of the public money and this unfair discrimination. The Minister of Public Works has referred to the fact that he has just completed a splendid building in Brandon. That is very true. But who represents that city? It is represented by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, and the building put up exceeded the estimate and cost something between $50,000 and $75,000. I am not raising any objection because Brandon is a thriving city, and deserves a public building. But when in that same constituency we see another town less important than Minnedosa—the town of Souris, with less population and less postal revenue and which is besides the second town in the same constituency presented with a public building, whereas there is no town at all in the constituency of Marquette similarly treated, it is high time to enter a protest. And when you come to another town in that same constituency with a third public building, in the town of Virden, I think I have still greater ground for complaint. In the constituency of Brandon represented by a government supporter, there is a large expenditure in three towns, whereas during fifteen years not a single dollar has been expended in Marquette.

True there is a public building in the constituency represented by my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), but that building was given it when it was represented, not by a Conservative, but by a friend of this government. The minister has also pointed out that there is a public building in Emerson, but that was also erected, not when that constituency was represented by a Conservative, but when it was represented by a Liberal. St. Boniface also was given a public building when it was represented by a Liberal, and Selkirk was equally favoured when a Liberal, Mr. Jackson, represented it. In Neepawa also when it elected a Liberal, there was a considerable expenditure on a public building, and in that connection there was a good deal of protest on the part of the people, because the building was placed in a most inconvenient place in order to benefit a supporter of the party in power and who was fortunate enough to own the site. I might go on and cite other places in which public buildings have been erected by this government, but not a dollar has been expended in any of these since they have been represented by Conservatives.

There are only three items in the estimates this year for public buildings in the whole province of Manitoba, whereas in Saskatchewan and Alberta there are 22, of which only three are for renewals and repairs. Minnedosa has a population of about 1,700. The money orders issued last year amounted $57,228. When asked to give a reason for the construction of a public building in any particular locality, the minister is always ready with a stereotyped set of replies. Either the town has a certain population, or if the population be not sufficient to offer as a reason, it is a shire town, and when that will not suit, he tells us it has a certain postal revenue. But the real reason, which is his desire to help political friends, he never under any circumstances will admit. If he would frankly say, we have so much money to spend which we must distribute among our own friends, and if anything be left over some of the hon. gentlemen opposite will get a share of it, we would at least honour him for his frankness.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that Manitoba is pretty fairly served in public buildings, judging by the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche).

Mr. ROCHE. What does the minister think about Marquette? Has that been fairly served?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is only one, and, of course, the hon. gentleman's own friends would oppose any expenditure there, because they condemn expenditures in towns of 1,700 of population.

Mr. ROCHE. But there are towns under 1,700 to which the hon. minister has given public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But hon. gentlemen opposite have protested most indignantly against this.

Mr. ROCHE. Some of the items went through with very little criticism, indeed, and for towns with less population. Therefore, I think that Minnedosa, which is a railway centre, and is developing a large water-power, and which is becoming a summer resort, and is likewise a judicial centre, or shire town, in which the provincial government have erected a $40,000 court house and jail, certainly deserves the attention of the minister far more than some of those other insignificant places which he has favoured. I would urge the Minister of Public Works to carefully consider my representations and see that justice is done the town of Minnedosa in the future, and not pass it over in favour of towns much less important, more especially in view of the record his government has had in connection with the constituency of Marquette since I have had the honour of representing it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the request of my hon. friend very reasonable, and if I had the money available it would give me great pleasure to accede to it, more particularly as the hon. gentleman is very reasonable at all times in the representations he makes to the House. I think he has made out a strong case. He has pointed out that Minnedosa is a shire town, that it is a thriving place, and that there is no public building in the constituency. So that certainly I shall take his remarks carefully into consideration with a view of seeing whether or not it is possible to meet his request.

Mr MEIGHEN. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) must feel his hopes raised to the very zenith by these remarks of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The member for Marquette seems to be quite able to take care of himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am sorry that the minister fails to understand what I am saying. When the hon. minister tells my hon. friend that he will take this into his consideration, it may, in the course of a year, get into his estimates. Then when the hon. member is returned again, if the minister follows his record in other constituencies, in about four years more he may possibly start the building. So it is the duty of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) to communicate the good news to his constituents that within five years there is a possibility of a start being made on a post office at Minnedosa. What I complain of is, not only what has been pointed out by the hon. member for Dauphin, that there are in the estimates only 34 cents per man in Manitoba, while there are $2 for Nova Scotia, and $4 for New Brunswick ; but also that the items in the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia estimates, so far as they cover constituencies represented by friends of the government, are live estimates, and are being actually spent; while the Manitoba estimates are dead estimates, waiting for the elections. For every dollar that is spent per man in the province of Manitoba there are $6 spent in Nova Scotia and $12 spent in New Brunswick. If we leave out the class of expenditures the minister refers to, namely, those that in some sense serve the whole of Canada and are chargeable to capital, the fact still remains that for $1 spent in Manitoba there are $8 spent in Nova Scotia and $8 in New Brunswick. Leaving out that class, it would not be unfair for us to ask the minister to observe some due proportion between these three provinces. The minister knows enough about the duty of a member to his constituency to know that he cannot expect members on this side of the House to sit quietly in their seats while he performs a gross injustice to the province he represents. In the constituency of Portage la Prairie the hon. gentleman did, during the time it was represented by a friend of the government, build a post office at Neepawa. The post office was erected in a location to suit the party rather than to suit the town. Now the other estimate that was put in for Portage la Prairie was also a pre-election estimate. The minister placed the item in the estimates in 1907-8, he dropped it immediately the elections were over. Subsequently he was prevailed upon to reinstate it, on the general principle which he then laid down that all the estimates of 1907-8 had a prior claim on the attention of his department. The site was purchased, and it still stands I believe in the name of the government; but there the whole matter rests. I have communicated with the minister, petitions have been urging the matter, but somehow they land in the vermiform appendix of the government and never seem to get through. I do not need to call the attention of the minister to the necessities there. The minister has acknowledged them years ago, they have grown in importance since the number of regiments has been increased by one, making two now. The building that they are trying to use at present would be discreditable to a Chinaman. One is in grave danger of breaking his leg if he tries to enter it. It is an eyesore on the street, it would not be looked upon with credit in the most dilapidated and forsaken spot in the universe. Now there is a considerable interest being taken in military matters in that city, it has grown by leaps and bounds. Indeed, one of the chief promoters, and one of those most thoroughly imbued with the military spirit, is the representative in the local House on the opposition side for that constituency. I am sure that gentleman will use his influence with the minister, and I will assist him all I can to urge the minister to forward that work. I have brought to bear upon the minister every influence of a legitimate character that I could think of to urge forward this building. It is at present in an embryo state, the working plans I believe are under way. But I want to ask the minister if he can suggest anything further I can do as a representative of that constituency to hurry on the completion of this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman a typesetter?

Mr. MEIGHEN. No, I am not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the hon. gentleman cannot help the matter at all, because the specifications are now being printed. They will be ready in about a fortnight, when tenders will be called for by public advertisement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to put in another word for Manitoba. Manitoba wants a great deal. Now, when so much money is being voted, only $170,000 for Manitoba and over $1,300,000 for the province the Minister of Public Works comes from, with only two-thirds of the population of Manitoba, surely Manitoba is not being treated justly. We are asking for all kinds of things of Manitoba not in a partisan way, but for the benefit of the province; we are asking for $2,500,000 for an exposition in Winnipeg. This is not a political matter, it is a plan for the benefit of the province, for the benefit of all Canada, as we believe. Can we not get some assurance from the minister that he will further our desires in that regard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter of aid to the exhibition is under consideration. My hon. friend would not expect me to inform him in advance as to whether the decision of the government will be favourable or otherwise. I regret I am not able to give him any information on the subject.

Winnipeg military buildings, hospital, $13,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart, Winnipeg) want that to stand?

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). No. I think this would be a proper time to bring up the question as to the Winnipeg armoury. No doubt it has been brought to the attention of the minister many times and strongly urged upon him. We have, I think, during the past year, two new regiments, and they have not facilities for even storing their regimental equipment. I had fully expected to see an item in the estimates in connection with this. While answering that question, the minister might also make a statement that, I am sure, will be received with interest by the people of Winnipeg. He is aware of the situation of the parliament buildings there. They are old, out-of-date, unsanitary. They occupy a part of one block, the other part of which is occupied by the barracks and drill shed. I believe it has been the desire of the local government to acquire the portion occupied by the Dominion government with the barracks and drill shed in order to have an area upon which to put up proper parliamentary buildings for the province. We would then have what could be made a modest but very nice little park, bounded by Broadway, Osborne and Kennedy streets, and, upon the south, by the Assinboine river. I would like to know from the minister if there is an intention on the part of the government to act in that way?

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to the drill shed, I think I am right in saying that the proposed exchange of properties would not affect the site of the drill shed—I take it that it could be built on the same property. The question of building a new drill shed has not been recently brought to my attention. I am not aware whether complaints have been made as to the accommodation afforded by the drill shed. I will have it looked into, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart, Winnipeg) will mention it when the Minister of Militia is here—for there are items for military buildings that have been left over—I can assure my hon. friend that he will not be held down to technical rules, but, if Mr. Chairman and the members of the committee are willing, he will be afforded facilities for getting the information he desires. As to the proposed exchange, I understood that the communications between the provincial government and this government took place, so far as our side is concerned, with the Militia Department. They have not been brought to my notice, and I have no further information than what I have seen in the newspapers. It is not unlikely that the Minister of Militia will bring this matter to my attention shortly. I will ask my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart, Winnipeg) to be good enough, when some of these buildings are under consideration, to mention this matter as well. I have no doubt the Minister of Militia will give as full information as he is able to do with regard to the negotiations.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). With regard to the item under discussion, I suppose we are to understand that this hospital, wherever it is to be built, will not be built on the present military property in the city of Winnipeg?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will not be built in such a way as to interfere at all with the negotiations. That will be very important, of course.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). A very important matter has been brought to the attention of the minister with regard to the way Manitoba is treated by this government. Looking through the estimates, we find item 141, which shows that Manitoba is getting the paltry sum of $73,000 for public buildings for the whole province. A few years ago, when we had quite a number of gentlemen from that province occupying seats on the other side of the House, we saw that Manitoba was a good deal better treated than it is to-day. If we look at the next item, No. 142, we find that Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories receive $584,000. These items should, to a certain extent, take into consideration the amount of revenue collected in the several provinces. If you look at the figures you find that Manitoba pays into the Dominion treasury between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 a year, which is a good deal more than double what is paid in by both these provinces put together. And when you analyse the amount that is being spent in these two provinces you see that almost every man occupying a seat on the other side of the House is being taken care of in splendid shape. I do not think it is right that we should be treated in that way. In my own constituency we have several towns a good deal better than the town of Humboldt, for instance, yet we see that Humboldt gets a new building worth about $25,000 or $30,000. They are renting a building there at the present time for $280 a year that fulfils the conditions necessary for that town, or, at least, has fulfilled them in the past. Under this expenditure in Humboldt we shall be paying—taking the money at six per cent—instead of $280 a year, about $1,500 a year. We have not a single public building in my whole constituency, and we have several towns there a good deal more entitled to it, I think—and I believe the minister would acknowledge that if he would look into the case—than even this town of Humboldt. I think these public buildings should be more fairly distributed among the different provinces and among the various constituencies.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we have made exceedingly good progress to-day. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, the House adjourned at 10.57 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 6, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WESTERN FARMERS' DELEGATION.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move that the proceedings of the meeting between the farmers' delegation and the Prime Minister, and other members of the government in the House of Commons chamber on the 16th December last, be printed for the use of members and that rule 74 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How soon may we expect that report?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Right away.

TRAFFIC AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to an article which appears in the February issue of the 'Review of Reviews,' with reference to an agreement said to have been reached between the Railway Commission of Canada and the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States. The article is as follows:

It is expected that with the reciprocity treaty there will also be submitted to Congress the text of some sort of traffic agreement with Canada to regulate railroad business over the border. . . . The report of Chairman Knapp, concurred in by Chairman Mabee, and presented to the Secretary of State on the last day of December, contains recommendations of such importance to those of our citizens who are interested in trade and travel across the border that we herewith summarize its most important points.

Then the article goes on:

The proposed treaty provides for a tribunal to enforce and administer its provisions to be known as the International Commerce Commission and which shall consist of four members, namely, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada for the time being, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to be appointed by the President of the United States, and a member of the Railway Commissioners of Canada to be appointed by the Governor General of Canada in Council. The powers conferred upon and the authority given to this commission in respect of international carriers would correspond to those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect of interstate carriers within the United States.

The provisions of such a treaty should apply to telegraph, telephone and express companies and such companies should be subject as respect to international business to the authority of the International Commerce Commission.

I would like to point to a paragraph taken from the message of President Taft with reference to reciprocity, which he sent to Congress on the 26th January last. After reciting a few of the matters which had been settled, and which, he says, enabled them to make a reciprocity agreement, he proceeds thus:

An equitable arrangement has recently been reached between our Interstate Commerce Commission and the similar body in Canada in regard to through rates on the transportation lines between the two countries. The path having been thus opened for the improvement of commercial relations, a reciprocal trade agreement is the logical sequence of all that has been accomplished in disposing of matters of a diplomatic and controversial character.

I would like to know if that be true, and if such an agreement has been reached between our Board of Railway Commissioners, and the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States. If so, by whom was the initiative taken; and if such an agreement has been made, will it be submitted to this House before the conclusion of the discussion on reciprocity, as is proposed to be done apparently on the other side of the line. Have our Railway Commissioners the authority to make any such agreement without subjecting it to ratification by this House? The whole trend of such an agreement, I presume, is to facilitate traffic north and south instead of east and west.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I have already stated on several occasions in this House, the question of control of rates on lines running from Canada into the United States, and from the United States into Canada has been under consideration, I think, more than a year. I am not prepared to say just who originated the idea of solving the problem by the appointment of an international tribunal. It was first brought to my attention by Judge Mabee, the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. The difficulties experienced by shippers on traffic between the two countries are quite apparent at times. For instance, the rate is a point, say from New York to Toronto. It is possible, I presume to get a through rate by the boards acting separately. But what results often is this, that the railway companies on each side charge a local tariff, particularly if there be no competition, and as a result the purchaser of the goods in Toronto is obliged to pay two local rates instead of one through rate. The object of the agreement, if one could be arrived at, was to form some tribunal that could quickly make a through rate that would apply from any point in Canada to any point in the United States and vice versa, so that, so far as control of rates was concerned, there would be a tribunal that as completely controlled the traffic originating in either country going to the other as if the traffic were all in one country. Judge Mabee and Mr. Knapp, head of the Interstate Commerce Commission, had several conferences and they did arrive at a basis that to them seemed satisfactory for the solution of the difficulty, and in a manner to protect both shippers and producers on either side of the line having business on the other side. The report of each of these gentlemen is now in the hands of his government. If approved it will take the form of a treaty. As to the details, so far as I am concerned, they have not been given to the public. But the information which my hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) finds in the magazine referred to approximates the truth as to outlining the details. All I can say is, that so far as the Canadian government is concerned, this matter is still under consideration, and no action has yet been taken. But the report of Judge Mabee was made to this government as the report of Mr. Knapp was made to the United States government.

Mr. FOSTER. Did Mr. Mabee take the initiative in this matter without any consultation with or authorization from the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, that is not what I said. I said I was not in a position to say who originally took the initiative; the first I heard of it, Judge Mabee discussed it with me, and he had full authority to discuss it with Mr. Knapp and make a report embodying their views.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. This report, apparently, states that an agreement will be submitted to the United States Congress when the treaty is discussed. Will it be discussed here when we discuss reciprocity?

Mr. GRAHAM. It will be premature, I imagine, to say much about it, as it is entirely under negotiation at the present time. And, as it will be in the form of a treaty, the usual custom and practice as to treaties will be followed in both countries.

RECIPROCITY—INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the returns brought down of the petitions and representations for and against the proposed arrangement with the American government. I notice that the petition from Manitoba in favour of admitting vegetables free into Canada is among the papers brought down, but the petitions against admitting them free are not included. Last year I had the honour to present to this House a petition from the Kildonan Association protesting against the admission of vegetables into this country free of duty. I think there was a petition sent to the hon. minister in addition to that. And I understand that a similar petition was sent in the early part of the present session. Does the minister intend to bring these down? I may also mention a petition from the stonecutters along the same line.

Mr. FIELDING. If any petitions have been received at my department which are not included in the return, they should certainly be brought down. It is quite accidental if they have not been.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the minister if, since our conversation across the floor the other day, he has yet brought himself into a state of mind to obey the order of the House and bring down the correspondence of parties either with himself or the Minister of Customs, or any other member of the government, not any of which has yet been brought down?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not had the opportunity of looking over the returns, but I may say that I gave directions in a general way that anything covered by the order of the House should be brought down. I was informed that there were letters, which, it was thought by my officials, were not intended to be made public, and I stated that, in that case, they should not be brought down. I will give my personal attention to the matter. But I am not able to change the judgment I gave as to the rule governing cases of this kind. If there is anything not brought down which falls within the rule—and not necessarily the written rule, but the ordinary rule and custom of the House—I will bring it down.

Mr. PATERSON. In that connection I have a telegram, received late Saturday night from Vernon, stating: 'Associated Boards of Trade here are forwarding resolution that duty be not taken off fruit.' I have received similar intimations from others, but my impression is that copies of what I have received have gone to the Minister of Finance as well. If there is anything of that kind, copies of which have not been sent to the Minister of Finance, I will try and look them up.

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have them complete. The order included all minutes.

Mr. PATERSON. It has not been brought to my notice.

Mr. BLAIN. I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether or not serious consideration will be given to any special interest in Canada that may be affected by the proposed reciprocity arrangement should it become law? In the county I have the honour to represent there is a very strong feeling in respect to these matters. Throughout the western part of Ontario, at the present moment, large sums of money are being subscribed to send delegations to the government to explain the position of specific interests that will be affected if these tariff changes become law. Will the government give serious consideration to the representations of these interests if they are made? I may anticipate by saying that a general answer that the government will listen to all complaints of everybody will not be quite sufficient. I want to know if the government will give serious consideration to these matters, or whether it will be better for these gentlemen to stay at home on the ground that this proposal will not be changed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will give most serious consideration to all the interests represented, reserving our judgment.

Mr. BLAIN. I anticipated that.

DAMMING THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether or not any further communication has been sent with respect to the proposed dam across the St. Lawrence river. I ask this question because, as I understand it, action taken by the government at the present juncture might have considerable effect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know about that. The last move we made was to ask for all information on the subject. I received, a few moments ago, a report of the committee which had charge of the Bill. It will be brought down to-morrow.

Mr. HUGHES. In the same connection, has the Prime Minister, or any member of the government, information as to any proposal on the American side for the diversion of the waters of the St. Lawrence by means of a dam between Long Sault island and the mainland, and the cutting of a canal to connect the St. Lawrence river with Lake Champlain waters?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have received no intimation of that kind.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the government when I may expect a return to an order of the House of January 16, relative to the large number of appointments made from South Grey during the last few years?

Mr. MURPHY. The material for that order has been sought in all the department. Several of them have responded, and I hope to bring down complete returns soon.

Mr. BLAIN. And with respect to Wentworth?

Mr. MURPHY. Wentworth as well.

Mr. BLAIN. May we expect it within the near future?

Mr. MURPHY. Within a couple of days.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION, OTTAWA.

Mr. MILLER. Before the orders of the day are called, perhaps the House will not object to listening to a resolution passed in this city at a meeting of the Ministerial Association. I do this in defence of a man who is not able to be here to defend himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. How is the hon. member bringing that matter up at this stage?

Mr. MILLER. With the consent of the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I respectfully request that the hon. member be allowed to proceed, and read his resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot allow that now, under the rules.

RECIPROCITY—STATISTICAL TABLES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance as to whether the statistical tables, to which reference was made a day or two ago, are about ready?

Mr. FIELDING. I have just had word that they are. I think they are within the precincts of the House, and I expect to lay them on the table within a few moments.

Mr. HUGHES.

PRIVATE BILLS.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 60) respecting the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the charter was first given in 1898.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Long before that. Is there a provision that the government may at any time complete this work if they choose to do so?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is no such provision in the Act.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is the terminus?

Mr. GRAHAM. The starting point is opposite the city of Montreal, and the terminus is at St. Johns, Que.

Mr. HUGHES. I suppose the minister has heard that there is a proposition to run a power canal, not a navigation canal, from the St. Lawrence river, between the Long Sault island and the American shore, to Lake Champlain. Has the minister heard anything about that?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. There is a canal on the south side of the Sault now, that supplies power to Massena, N. Y.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the probable cost of a work of this kind?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a company affair, I do not know what it will cost. It starts from Montreal and goes to St. Johns, a distance of about thirty miles.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). This canal covers the line of a canal projected by the late Hon. John Young from Montreal or Caughnawaga to Lake Champlain. It was one of the great schemes that was advocated by Hon. John Young, and has been before the country for the last sixty years. I do not know how it has got into private hands.

Mr. GRAHAM. Going into the matter lately in my department, I found an Act was passed in 1898. From St. Johns it follows the river down to Lake Champlain. I think the idea was to facilitate transportation by making a canal and river stretch, via Lake Champlain, from Montreal to the city of New York.

Mr. BLAIN. Should not this be constructed by the government instead of by a private company?

Mr. GRAHAM. The government has not seen its way clear to take up the proposition yet. Like some other propositions, the company wishes to have its powers renewed ; and the committee thought, after hearing the discussion, that there was no objection to renewing their powers. The government has not thought proper to take up the project.

Mr. PERLEY. Has the minister, in giving his consent to this renewal, considered the government control of rates over the canal? Has he looked at the statute to see whether there is anything in it that ought to be altered, so as to give the government control of rates over this canal when it is completed?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is merely a renewal of the powers the company had before. I do not think myself there is any immediate danger of anybody constructing the canal. But as no new powers are given them, no restrictions are placed on them that were not in the original Act of 1898. When looking over the old statute a couple of years ago, I found nothing in it about the control of rates.

Mr. HUGHES. Is this going to be something like the Quebec bridge, that a corporation may get control of it, and after a while, ask the government to take it over from them?

Mr. GRAHAM. As the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says a project of that kind has been in existence for sixty years, I do not think, judging from past experience, that it will be hurriedly built.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister keeping it on on the basis of vested rights which have accrued and which he does not like to disturb? He does not vouch for the necessity or practicability of the work or the possibility of its being completed. We may have some British bank taking up this blamed old thing, taking stock and bonds and people may be victimized to a large extent as was the case in Gaspè and other Quebec counties. There is a lesson in that mad riot of ill conditioned speculation, consequent upon the subsidies given to those roads down there, that is that this parliament should be a little careful of how it places public franchises in the hands of private individuals who show no prospect of action and who are probably holding for speculative purposes what belongs or should belong to the country in the shape of franchises. I do not want to be hard on an old thing that has been living for 60 years, but surely it will die of old age if of nothing else.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not my child and I am not particular. I am simply pointing out in the absence of the member in whose name it stands, just about the situation. The House is at liberty to do as it likes with the Bill. The committee, after hearing the whole matter threshed out, thought there would be no serious harm in renewing a charter that has stood for years, but if the Committee of the Whole should think better to let it stand I am not concerned.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not think we should grant a renewal of one of these old charters in exactly the same terms as the original charter, merely as a matter of form; such charters should be altered to suit present day conditions. Parliament was much freer in granting powers and authorities for works of this kind at the time this was granted than it is to-day, and I suggest to the minister that in renewing this charter after so many years, when nothing has been done, conditions as to control of rates, &c., should be inserted as if it were a new charter.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend says, conditions have changed greatly and we think more, for instance, of water-powers now than they did then. We might let it stand until the hon. member in whose name it stands is in the House.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. In this very Act the company is given power to acquire and utilize water-power for the purpose of compressing air or generating electricity for lighting, heating and motor purposes in connection with the canal, and power to sell surplus power generated, and not required for operating its canal, &c. They have an absolute power and a monopoly apparently to generate electricity from the water-powers there and there is no restriction as to the rates.

Mr. NESBITT. I understood the Bill was amended in the committee to comply with the suggestions that have been made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A number of new sections have been added, but we have not reached them.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be a good thing to let it stand in the meantime.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 70) respecting the Canadian Western Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

On section 1,

Mr. HERRON. This company has a local charter covering almost identically the same ground and the condition has been imposed that they must build thirty miles of the road within one year. Would the Minister of Railways and Canals think it proper to restrict the Dominion charter in the same manner as it might have a tendency to expedite the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. How long has the provincial charter been in existence?

Mr. HERRON. About three years.

Mr. GRAHAM. Have they built any of the thirty miles?

Mr. HERRON. They have had the charter renewed once.

Mr. GRAHAM. The difficulty about a clause of that kind is that it does not have any effect in making them build. You say that they must build a certain number of miles within a limited time, but the only result has been that they come back and ask for a renewal just the same as if there had not been any condition of the kind. It is a difficult question to determine how to induce the railway companies to build a little more rapidly than they are doing. My own private opinion is that no clause of this kind will make them build a mile of railway any quicker. When the railway company want to build they will do it. The only alternative is not to renew their charter if such a renewal is interfering with the construction of a railway. The fact that this company came back for a renewal of the local charter instead of building thirty miles of road within a year, proves that the imposition of that condition did not result in expediting the railway. I suggested once or twice to railway companies that we would have to impose some such condition and they said: All right, do not renew the charter for we will only have to come back for another renewal; we cannot build the road in the time stipulated. If my hon. friend wants to do something practical in order to get the railway constructed I am afraid such a clause as he suggests will not accomplish the object.

Mr. LENNOX. As long as the minister recognizes that a clause such as this will have no effect and that we will grant renewals just the same he cannot expect such a clause to have any different effect from that which he speaks of. When people come to ask for a renewal of their charter, if we would require them to show reason for their default and grant the renewal only if they were able to show a satisfactory reason and we give them a reasonable time within which to build the railway there would be some sense in putting in this condition. But, if we are going to concur in this practice in every instance and they are going to continue ignoring and defying parliament we had better drop it altogether. My idea is that when a company come for a renewal of their charter they should be asked within what time they can commence to build the road, and having stated that, it would be for the committee to consider whether it was a reasonable time or not. If it appeared to be reasonable and in the interest of the public then grant a renewal and insist in every case when they get their renewal they build the road or come back with some legitimate excuse for asking for another renewal. It is getting to be a perfect humbug to put in conditions which are never observed and which the companies do not intend to observe at the time they accept a renewal, and largely the members of the committee, I believe as a rule, and the Minister of Railways, judging from the result, do not intend to hold the company to the condition at the time. It is getting to be more or less of a scandal. Year after year we are granting these renewals and it is thoroughly well known that railway companies snap their fingers at us and that we have no way of enforcing the conditions imposed by us. If we cancelled a few of the charters, or if we refused to renew them, we would have a different condition of things altogether.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 61) respecting the Pontiac Central Railway Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the British Columbia and Dawson Railway Company. —Mr. Burrell.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 105), to incorporate the All Red Steamship Company.—Mr. McKenzie.

Bill No. 106), to incorporate the Lake Erie and Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—EASTERN DIVISION.

* Mr. BORDEN:

What was the total cost up to the 31st day of December, 1910, of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. $89,553,740.32.

OFFENSIVE WEAPONS.

Mr. LEWIS:

1. During the past six years how many requests have been made to the government or to the Minister of Justice for more legislation re offensive weapons or offences against the person, respectively, by grand juries, corporations, public or private, municipalities, or other persons?

2. What was the nature of such applications?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH:

1. From Grand Juries, 9; from various associations, 9; from other persons, 20.

2. As regards offensive weapons, the correspondence includes recommendations that foreign immigrants and labourers should be searched for weapons, that sentences for carrying weapons should be increased, that no weapons should be sold except under license, that sale of noiseless guns should be prohibited, that an officer should be appointed to instruct immigrants in the Canadian law on the subject, that sale of air guns to minors should be prohibited, and that posters advertising the sale of firearms should not be allowed. Some representations were also received opposing the proposal to restrict the sale of weapons.

As regards offences against the person—the correspondence includes recommendations that the lash should be inflicted for all offences against women, on highway robbers, wifebeaters, and habitual criminals, and for all crimes of brutal violence; that cruelty to children and kidnapping should be more severely punished; that young girls should be better protected; that the definition of incest should be enlarged; that the procedure in cases of manslaughter should be altered, &c., &c.

ST. JOHN RIVER SURVEY.

Mr. CROCKET:

1. From whom does the Public Works Department rent the premises at Fredericton which are used as an office in connection with the survey of the St. John river channel between Fredericton and Woodstock?
2. On what street are said premises situated?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. When in use for departmental purposes, these premises were rented from A. E. Hanson.
3. On Queen street.

WAGES AND COST OF LIVING.

Mr. ECREMENT:

1. What is the increase in the wages of workingmen since 1891?
2. What is the mean increase in the cost of living during the same period?

Mr. KING. The increase varies so considerably as respects different trades and localities that the information cannot be given in the form of an answer to a question. Much of the information desired will be found in a special Report on Wholesale Prices 1890-1909 inclusive, issued by the Department of Labour, 1910.

THE MONARCH BANK.

* Mr. FOSTER:

1. When was the Monarch Bank incorporated, and who were its provisional directors?
2. Were the preliminary conditions required by the Bank Act complied with, and a certificate applied for or granted by the Treasury Board?
3. If not, did the government take any steps to ascertain, or does it know if the requirements of section 17 of the Bank Act were carried out, and the amounts paid in by subscribers duly returned to them?
4. Has the government in its possession the list of subscribers and subscriptions to the stock of the Monarch Bank?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. July 20, 1905. The provisional directors were: William Samuel Cochrane, of the city of Montreal, Thomas Henry Graham, David William Livingston, Edward James Lennox, Thomas Marshall Ostrom, and Alfred Harshaw Perfect, all of the city of Toronto. (Cap. 125, Acts of 1905; extension one year, Cap. 127 Acts of 1906).
2. No. No money was paid to the Minister of Finance, and no certificate was granted.
3. In view of the answer to the preceding question there were no requirements of section 17 of the Bank Act to be carried out. The provisions of section 17 had no application to the return to the subscribers to the stock of the Monarch Bank of the amounts paid by them to the provisional directors.
4. No.

THE VANCOUVER BANK.

* Mr. FOSTER:

1. When was the Vancouver Bank incorporated, and who were its provisional directors?
2. What evidence was given that the preliminary conditions required by the Bank Act were complied with, and when was the certificate issued by the Treasury Board?
3. Has the government in its possession the list of subscribers and subscriptions to the stock of the Vancouver Bank?
4. Will the government lay on the table of the House a list of the subscribers and subscriptions to both these banks?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. April 3, 1908, Thomas Wilson Paterson, James Alexander Mitchell, and Frederic William Jones, of Victoria; James A. Harvey, of Cranbrook; William Harold Malkin, Robert Purves McLennan and Henry Tracy Caperley, Vancouver, were the provisional directors. (Cap. 166, Acts of 1908; extension one year, Cap. 144, Acts of 1909.)
2. The Treasury Board had under consideration in connection with the application for the certificate a statutory declaration as to the requisite notices in the 'Canada Gazette' and newspapers, with exhibits of such notices; original stock subscription contracts; a list of the subscriptions and allotments made up by Messrs. Clarkson, Cross, and Helliwell, chartered accountants, certifying to $569,500 stock subscribed and $274,815 paid in thereon, exclusive of $40,590 paid in on account of premium on stock; copy of minutes of organization meeting of subscribers verified by statutory declaration of the secretary of the meeting; certificate of audit of balance sheet of bank at time of organization confirmatory of the figures given above by the same chartered accountants; original minutes of directors subsequent to organization; statutory declaration by the general manager as to amount of stock bona fide subscribed; the amount paid on account thereof in cash to the provisional directors by the subscribers; and the payment to the Minister of Finance of $250,000 under section 13 of the Bank Act. The certificate was issued March 16, 1910.

3. Yes.

4. A copy of the list of the subscribers and subscriptions to the Bank of Vancouver will be laid on the table of the House.

RIGAUD POST OFFICE.

Mr. NANTEL:

1. Has the contract for building a post office at Rigaud been made? If so, what is its date?

2. At what price was it made and with whom?

3. Were tenders asked for this building If so, what is the amount of each tender and the name of each of the parties tendering?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. No.

2 and 3. Inadvisable to make public such information until after the contract has been signed.

PRATT'S SIDING POST OFFICE.

Mr. STAPLES:

1. Has the government been requested to establish a post office at Pratt's Siding on the Canadian Northern railway, Manitoba? If so, what requests have been made?

2. Is it the intention of the government to open a post office at Pratt's Siding immediately? If not, why not?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

A recommendation was made by Mr. H. E. Hamilton, of Sydney, Manitoba, through Mr. John Crawford, ex-M.P., on the 28th April, 1909, that a post office be established at Pratt's Siding. The matter was referred to the inspector at Winnipeg, who in his report stated that he had communicated with Mr. Frank Evans, who was represented to him as a leading resident in the district. Mr. Evans stated that:

We expected a store to be built at once, but it will not be built until fall when we will make another application as we cannot get any one to carry the mail at present.

No petition, or renewed application, has since been received by the department in the matter.

Mr. FIELDING.

SUBURBAN HOPE TOWNSITE.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. Under what circumstances did the Dominion land agent at New Westminster accept payment from James Wardle for lot 3a, and lot 8, block 3, Suburban Hope townsite?

2. What was the date of the payment, and has the money since been returned? If so, at what date?

3. Has any compensation been paid or offered for improvements made by Mr. Wardle between these dates?

4. What disposition has since been made or is intended to be made of these lots?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. The Dominion land agent at New Westminster accepted payment from James Wardle for lot 3a and lot 8, block 3, Suburban Hope townsite as money tendered or offered in connection with an application to purchase lands not yet priced or placed on the market and not available for sale.

2. $66 paid on lot 3a, 27th May, 1909, $25 on lot 8, 3rd August, 1906 and $20, 27th May, 1909. $111 refunded to James Wardle 14th June, 1910, returned by Wardle and again refunded to him 23rd August, 1910.

3. No compensation has been paid or offered for improvements if any made by Mr. Wardle.

4. The department has under consideration the placing of suburban block 3 on the market for sale at public auction later on when deemed advisable. It is intended to investigate Mr. Wardle's improvements, and claim before the land is placed on the market.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FIELDING presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1911, which, on motion, was referred to the Committee of Supply.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to lay on the table correspondence with reference to tariff relations between Canada and the United States. In addition to having our own blue-book on the subject, I have sent to the distribution office a number of copies of the American printed agreement with their own statistics, which any hon. gentleman may obtain on application to the distribution office.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. LENNOX moved:

For a copy of the last advertisement for tenders, and the specification and contract or proposed contract for the erection of the Quebec bridge.

He said: This has been standing a long time, and I would like to call attention to the fact that it does not appear to me to involve the divulging of anything which would be prejudicial to the public interest in any way. The matters referred to will all have to be made public. Owing to statements which have appeared in the public press, it would be very desirable that the House should have further information as to the exact situation at present. I understand that the minister has some difficulty in ascertaining just what kind of bridge should be built. I do not want to press this motion if the minister thinks that it would be contrary to public interest to do so, but I think we ought to have some explanation from him.

Mr. GRAHAM. I see no reason why I should not take up a few minutes in making the explanation my hon. friend suggests. I can see no reason just now why this order should not pass. The situation is this. When the government took over the work of reconstructing the Quebec bridge, it appointed a board composed of three eminent bridge engineers who were to prepare the plans, and be responsible for the construction on those plans. Three eminent engineers were named by order in council: Mr. Vautelet, of Montreal, Mr. Fitzmaurice, of London, England, and Mr. Modjeska, of Chicago. In the order in council there was a provision that if these engineers did not agree on any point, two other eminent engineers should be called in to advise with them, and the board, composed of the three original members and the two additional ones, should decide the points of difference. On several occasions differences arose and two other eminent engineers were appointed to the board for the time being, and the points of difference settled. But when it came to the time for advertising for tenders, two members of the board were not in perfect unison with the chief engineer and chairman as to the design. It might be said that there had been a difference of opinion as between the principle of double intersections, and single intersections.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What does that mean?

Mr. GRAHAM. That will come out later. The two members of the board who did not agree entirely with the chairman, and chief engineer, as to the design which had been prepared, agreed that tenders should be called on this condition, and a resolution was passed by the board. The resolution provided that tenders should be called on the official design prepared by the chairman, and chief engineer, and that each tenderer would be asked to submit a plan of his own for the erection of a bridge, and if a better design than the official design were submitted it should be adopted.

Mr. LENNOX. That would be the plan of the proposed contractor?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, each tenderer would submit a plan of his own. On that condition tenders were called for. Some 35 different propositions were submitted—not 35 plans. These were all submitted by four different tenderers—and by the board. The board's design, called the official design, contained a design with several modifications—numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, I think, with little variations. From the St. Lawrence Bridge Company there were five or six modifications of the one design. A German Company submitted a design of their own as well as a tender on the official design. The Pennsylvania Steel Company submitted a design for a suspension bridge in addition to tendering on the board's design.

Previous to this, during the summer Mr. Fitzmaurice, who had been ill some time, resigned. And his resignation was accepted. Mr. Charles E. Macdonald, once president of the Engineers' Association of New York, a native of Leeds county, now living in the town of Gananoque again, was appointed in the place of Mr. Fitzmaurice. These three gentlemen met and looked over the tenders, and the various propositions. They reduced the number which ought to be considered to the tenders on number 5 of the official design and propositions (a) (b) and (c), if I remember correctly of the St. Lawrence Bridge Company. That company is composed of two companies, the Canadian, in the western part of Ontario, and the Dominion of Montreal, and these two formed a third company for the purposes of this work. There then remained tenders to be considered from the British Empire Company of England, from the German Company, from the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and the St. Lawrence Bridge Company on the official design. And the other propositions, (a) (b) and (c), on their own designs from the St. Lawrence Bridge Company. They tendered on both. No company sent in a tender on its own design without tendering also on the official design.

The question to be decided was as between the tenders on the official design, the lowest of which I have no hesitation in saying was the British Empire Company, and the counter propositions of the St. Lawrence Bridge Company on its own designs. The board recommended to me that a substantial bridge could be erected on either of these propositions. I replied asking them to perform their whole duty, and tell me which one was the better, if there were a better. Two members of the board reported in favour of the St. Lawrence plans.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the board as originally constituted of three members?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Modjeska favoured one of the designs of the St. Lawrence Bridge Company, while the chief engineer and chairman, Mr. Vautelet, could not coincide with this, as he thought the official design was fully as good, or better, and was considerably cheaper. After waiting for some time and consulting with the board as then constituted to see if they would not make an unanimous recommendation, I came to the conclusion that they would not, and so proceeded—a week or perhaps ten days ago, I have forgotten the date—to act under the order in council, adding two other eminent engineers to the board for the purpose named in the order in council. The chief engineer and the chairman was ill at his home in Montreal, and at his suggestion I sent for Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Modjeska, and they came to Ottawa. Mr. Hodge, a prominent engineer and Mr. M. J. Butler, my former deputy, are named as the two additional members. They are sitting in Montreal to-day working at the question, and I hope shortly to have a decision on which the government can act one way or the other in reference to awarding the contract. I see no reason why the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) should not pass; and, as he says, if there should be anything in the documents that should not be brought down, I will consult with him. But I think there is nothing.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister mentioned that he had no hesitation in saying which company was the lowest tenderer and that the British Empire Company was lower than the St. Lawrence. Are the tenders now known to the proposed contractors? I presume they are.

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, I would ask the minister whether there is any increased width of the bridge? Was the bridge proposed by the St. Lawrence Company not wider than the bridge according to the official design. And also, I would ask the minister—although I will not ask him to go into the matter in detail—if the government has had before it the question of a tunnel in place of a bridge? I know that subject has been brought to the attention of the minister. But whether it has been regarded as a matter worthy of serious consideration I do not know. Nor do I profess to have any definite opinion on the subject myself.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sure my hon. friend will not expect me to go into details. The contract has not been let, and I think I have gone fully as far as I should go in discussing the matter. I might say that the bridge is to be 88 feet wide, and, as I understand it, both designs conform to that measurement. As to the question of a tunnel that has not been seriously considered. I discussed it some time ago with one or two gentlemen who ought to be pretty well informed on the subject. The conclusion I formed, after conversation with these gentlemen was that, the banks of the river being very high, a tunnel would have to be started a very long distance from the river on either side. My own conclusion was that, even if we were beginning de novo as the lawyers say, a tunnel was not as practicable as a bridge.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to ask the minister a question. A few years ago I placed before the House the facts with reference to the height of the bridge. About that time the Board of Trade of Montreal sent in a petition showing the need of raising the bridge, owing to the traffic likely to come up to the harbour of Montreal. If the minister will look into the matter he will find that, unless he decides to raise the bridge a considerable height, the smokestacks of the larger steamers built to-day, some that have actually been completed, will not pass under the bridge. The proposition was placed before the House and while the idea of raising the bridge was ridiculed by some, the vessels that are built seem to be larger year by year. The adjustment of masts after the manner followed in the harbours of some of the larger cities of the old country and on the navigable rivers, could not be carried out very satisfactorily. It was thought by a number of prominent men throughout the Dominion, including many able engineers, that it would be absolutely necessary to considerably increase the height of the bridge. Was this taken into consideration in asking for tenders, or is it the intention of the government to look into the matter? ,

Mr. GRAHAM. I am afraid this will have to be my last appearance in discussing this matter; we might get into something that would be embarrassing if we discussed too many details of a tender that is still under consideration. After full discussion and consideration, it was decided that the distance between high water and the bridge should be 150 feet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With permission, I desire to say that is the old contract, and I understand that the government were taking into consideration the raising of the level of the bridge. I would ask the minister whether he has taken that into consideration at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can only repeat that it was fully considered before tenders were called for.

Mr. MONK I desire to affer a word with respect to this matter. I am afraid—

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to inform the House that under rule 38 this motion is not one open to discussion. I thought it was the sense of the House that a question might be asked and the minister answer it. Of course, if the House desires to have the matter debated, I have no objection.

Mr. MONK. If it is not debatable, I do not wish to violate the rule.

Mr. SPEAKER. I allow the question, and, if it is the wish of the House I have no objection to further discussion.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid that this is an ill-fated enterprise. The House will remember under what circumstances the bridge broke down. There was a plan prepared by the building company, and that—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point being raised, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) cannot debate the motion, but can put a question. Under rule 38, this is one of the notices that cannot be debated. If it is to be debated, it must be turned over to another order.

Mr. MONK. If I may only ask a question, I will put this: Has the state of anarchy that has existed for months among members of the commission as originally constituted been finally put an end to? There has been an importation of new engineers, consultation, additions to the board for the purpose of deciding points, but I understand that there are still radical and important differences between the members of the board as originally constituted. Have they now come to an agreement?

Mr. GRAHAM. As I explained a few moments ago, differences existed until this morning, and perhaps until now, but under the order in council two other members have been appointed to act with the members of the board to settle these differences, and I am in hopes that they will settle them.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL NAVAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. MONK moved:

For a copy of the final protocol of agreement entered into at the International Naval Conference held in London, December, 1908, February, 1909, and of the general report presented to the said naval conference on behalf of its drafting committee, and of all correspondence exchanged between the Imperial government and the government of Canada in regard to the same.

He said: I may give a word of explanation on this motion. At the time of the second Peace Conference at the Hague, a convention was entered into providing for the establishment of an international court of appeal in matters of prizes (annex 12 to the final act of the second Peace Conference). By article 7 of this convention, it is agreed that this new court, in the absence of treaty stipulations, would decide appeals in accordance with rules of international law; or, if there were no such recognized rules, then according to justice and equity. On the invitation of Great Britain, a conference of the great maritime powers took place afterwards in London in order to define certain principles respecting maritime war. The conference agreed upon a certain number of rules. The result of this meeting is said to have been communicated to the colonial government. That is the reason why I move that that protocol be laid before the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that there is any such correspondence; but if there is, there is no objection to bringing it down, provided it is not confidential.

Motion agreed to.

STEAM TRAWLING FISHING.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough), moved:

That in the opinion of this House, as the mode of fishing known as steam trawling, prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside Canadian waters, is destructive to fish life, it is expedient, in order to conserve the deep sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened with the view of securing an international agreement prohibiting this mode of fishing in such spawning grounds for deep sea fish, as the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the North Atlantic adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland.

He said: My purpose in moving this resolution is to press upon parliament, and especially upon the government, the importance of dealing with this question. I bring it forward with a good deal of confidence, knowing that in the past the government have not given any encouragement or assistance to this mode of fishing. When this matter was first discussed on the coast of Nova Scotia some few years ago, the fishery committee of the Halifax Board of Trade pressed upon the government the importance, in their view, of doing something in the way of introducing this mode of fishing in Canadian waters. The request they made on that occasion was met with prompt refusal from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at that time, the late Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, as will be seen by reference to the papers that were brought down the other day and laid on the table of the House. Time passed along, and about two years ago, a private company was organized in the city of Halifax for the purpose of introducing the method of fishing known as steam trawling in Canadian waters. I had the honour on that occasion of bringing the matter to the notice of the government, and I was much pleased with the fact that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave the matter such prompt attention; and within two or three weeks of the date when steam trawling first commenced on the coast of Nova Scotia, an order in council was passed prohibiting fishing by steam trawling in the bays and harbours, and within three marine miles, of the coast, that is to say, in all the waters controlled by the government. The following is the regulation then adopted:

The use or operation of vessels known as steam trawlers, operating beam otter or other trawls for the purpose of catching fish, is prohibited within the three mile limit and in the bays and harbours of Canada.

Now there is a good deal of doubt as to whether this parliament has power to do any more than has already been done in regard to this matter. It is well known that we have not power to deal with trawling in the open sea. The open sea, as everybody knows, is common to all nations. My proposal is not that we should attempt to make regulations that we have not jurisdiction to make, but that we should endeavour to obtain some international regulations by which this mode of fishing shall be prohibited on the spawning grounds, and I regard the banks and bays adjacent to Nova Scotia, including the Gulf of St. Lawrence as spawning ground, or as the chief spawning ground. The steam trawler that is referred to in my resolution, is an immense net, from 70 feet to 100 feet in length, drawn along the bottom of the sea by a hawser attached to a steamboat, with a mouth wide enough to take in everything that comes in its way, both small and great. The only difficulty of dealing with this question, has been the lack of information. We have not had the steam trawler very long operating on our coasts, and consequently we are not able at this stage to give to the House much exact information from the experience of Canadian fishermen in this method of fishing. We have to inquire in quarters where steam trawling has been operated for a number of years, in order to get exact information. I am informed that this mode of fishing had its origin in Great Britain, in the North Sea, which is the home of steam trawling, where it has been going on for a great many years. It has been largely developed in recent years. I am informed that at present there are about 3,000 trawlers operating from ports in Great Britain; about one-half of these are driven by steam and the other half by sailing ships. A fleet of steam trawlers assemble in the waters of the North Sea, they start out and operate in other waters along the coast of Europe, as far south as the coast of Africa. Most of the fish caught by these steamers are landed on the coast of Great Britain, and chiefly at the large towns on the eastern coast, such as Grimsby, Hull, Yarmouth and Aberdeen. The Imperial government has imposed certain restrictions on this mode of fishing; for example, the Moray Firth is closed sea. On the whole this mode of fishing is regarded as legitimate on the coast of Great Britain. About two years ago the first trawler arrived in our waters and two of them were operating last year from Canso in the province of Nova Scotia. But, there are a number of French ships of this description operating on the banks south of Newfoundland and east of Canada. The French British consul at Bologne has given the following figures regarding the number of French trawlers that are working in our waters:

Now, Sir, I may be asked why I object to this mode of fishing in Canadian waters, and I am going to try to answer that question. I object to it for the same reason that I object to purse, seigning and other destructive modes of fishing. The indictment against the steam trawler is as follows: First, it is injurious to the net and line fisherman; second, it disturbs the fishing grounds and makes it impossible for the net and line fisherman to carry on business in the same water; third, the trawler destroys the fisherman's gear; fourth, it destroys large quantities of young, undersized fish and depletes the waters. If that indictment can be proven, I presume the House will agree to my resolution.

In the first place, it is injurious to the net and line fisherman. Of course, at the present time, with only a few of the trawlers working on our waters, the injury is not very apparent. I am referring to the time when they will increase to large numbers. This business being carried on extensively, it is quite apparent that it will ultimately put an end to net and line fishing in the same waters. It has done that to some degree already on the British coast, because, as the trawlers increase, the net and line fishermen will decrease. And if you will examine the reports of the fishing industry in the case of Great Britain, you will see that what I say is borne out by the evidence. Permit me to quote the following table, showing the gradual lessening in the quantity of fish taken by the net and line fishermen from the Scotch waters during the period from 1896 to 1907. These figures are taken from the report of the North Sea Fisheries Investigation Committee, page 350:—

	Quantity caught. Cwt.	Value. £
1896..	1,589,204	581,746
1897..	1,416,237	570,031
1898..	1,058,993	470,113
1899..	939,362	439,851
1900..	754,416	371,173
1901..	696,019	341,892
1902..	608,750	318,308
1903..	602,603	315,955
1904..	753,740	361,185
1905..	619,194	274,954
1906..	601,033	282,144
1907..	529,962	262,817

Now, Sir, you will see that this table shows a steady decrease in the quantity of fish taken by the net and line fishermen on the coast of Scotland during these years, while another table shows that fish taken by all methods has very largely increased in quantity. Permit me, also, to quote an extract from a recent report of the German Scientific Commission for International Sea Investigation, page 139. This report says:—

In consequence of the very great increase in the trawl fisheries in the North Sea, none of the fishery methods that flourished in earlier times has been subjected to greater vicissitudes than line fishing for haddock and cod. The German line fisheries of Heligoland, Norderney, and other islands, as well as that of the East Friesland coast have almost completely disappeared, and of the fishing fleets that were so numerous in earlier times a mere scanty remnant is to be seen.

It may be said that this change is inevitable, and that we have not the power to stop it. That may be true, but my position is that we should endeavour to obtain such international regulations as will prevent the destruction of undersized fish in the spawning waters of Canada. The next point I make is that the trawler is destructive to the fisherman's gear. You can readily understand that with a large number of these trawling vessels driven at a high rate of speed or working in the same waters with the net and line fisherman injury is inevitable, and it is difficult to carry on the business in the same waters. That has already been shown to be the case in Scotland. Some instances of it in our own waters with regard to French trawlers have appeared in the newspapers. Recently a Nova Scotia captain who was in charge of a Gloucester ship had to use a shot gun to defend his property on the banks from injury by one of these French trawlers. On this side of the Atlantic, inshore, or in the gulf, where these two trawlers have been operating, I have not heard any particular complaint of damage to gear with regard to them, but there are a great number of cases on the coast of of Scotland where fines have been imposed upon these trawlers for destroying the nets and lines of the fishermen. They have a fishery board to deal with these cases. Last year sixty-three cases were brought before this board, sixty-one convictions were obtained, and fines were levied to the amount of £4,478. In looking over the reports I find that in Scotland, between 1886 and 1909, six hundred prosecutions for illegal trawling have taken place, that in 537 cases convictions were obtained, and that the fines imposed amounted to the sum of £27,990. Our Canadian bank fishermen are not so fortunate as their Scotch contemporaries in this respect, as there is no general court to which they can go and lay their complaints, each man has to depend on his own efforts to protect his rights, and these trawlers destroy his gear sometimes at night, when he is not there himself.

Now, the next point is that they destroy small, undersized fish. There has been a conflict of evidence in so far as the destruction of undersized fish is concerned, but the local fisherman's union of Canso put in information here which you will find on file, stating that very large quantities of small, undersized fish are caught in these nets, that they are thrown overboard, and that that will result in depleting the waters. In order to ascertain the facts with regard to that question the department last year sent an officer by the name of Mr. Andrew Halkett to Canso to go on board one of these trawlers, make an examination, and report to the government. Mr. Halkett, it appears, went on one trip on board the trawler 'Wren,' and his report, which is on file among the papers which have been brought down, bears date the 29th of October last. As I intend to criticise the report of Mr. Halkett, I think it is only right that I should read the instructions he received from the department. They were as follow:—

In order that the department may be in possession of irrefutable information as to the operation of these trawlers it has been arranged with the Maritime Fish Corporation to have an officer sent on board who would carefully follow the operations and ascertain the most exact information possible as to the kinds and quantities of fish being taken, the quantities of each kind and the proportion of each kind thrown back into the water.

Mr. Halkett was authorized to go to Canso, go on board the trawlers, find out the facts, and make a report to the government. The following is Mr. Halkett's report:

Having carefully followed the fishing operations carried on by steam trawlers on board the trawler 'Wren,' I have to report that the complaints made against such operations are entirely without just reason. On the contrary, instead of being exceedingly destructive and wasteful, practically everything drawn up in the great net, excepting the dogfish which are entangled in considerable numbers, is utilized and turned to account, and the very destruction of the dogfish is a benefit, whilst the men are entitled to save their livers on their own behalf. I understand that until recently the flat fishes, such as the rough-dab, were thrown away; but since the establishment of the glue factory at Canso such are now sold to that institution. There is really nothing drawn up in the net which any economical fishing corporation would ever think of wasting, and certainly the captain of the 'Wren' is awake to the interests of the Maritime Fish Corporation in this respect. The bulk of the fish caught is haddock, and it is for them that the trawling is carried on. The weight of the catch of haddock was 27,580 pounds, exclusive of 3,300 pounds of assorted small ones. This numerically, judging by the respective sizes, approximately represents some 6,895 and 1,650 fish. The weight of flat fishes was 325 pounds, of the cod, 150 pounds, and of the hake, 1,550 pounds, or numerically, 100 flat fishes, 25 cod and 100 hake. True, I was dependent on the corporation for these figures after landing at Canso; but based on my own observations on board the 'Wren,' I can vouch for the figures being approximately correct. The total weight of these was 32,905 pounds, and the number approximately 8,770. Besides them, leaving out the dogfish, there were a few silver hake, pollock, skate and gaspereau, and a shad, an angler, and an eel. It is difficult to form an estimate of the number of dogfish caught, but the number was very considerable. Sometimes there would be only two or three, and at other times the net seemed to have swept through a regular school of them; and they are immediately destroyed, their livers cut out and thrown overboard. Besides the true fishes there were a very limited number of squid, saved like other odds and ends, like the angler, skates, &c., for making glue, and there were hardly any other invertebrates except a few worthless star fishes, &c. I will work the matter out in a more detailed way later, but meanwhile give some broad outlines in a summary way. Occasionally, but very rarely, I saw an insignificant gaspereau or other very small fish thrown overboard; but there is virtually no waste whatsoever. The operations were carried on not closer to the land than four miles, and besides the 'Coquette' no other fishing craft was to be seen.

(Sgd.) ANDREW HALKETT,
Naturalist, Dept. Marine and Fisheries.

St. John, N.B., October 29, 1910.

Now, I do not credit this report; it does not appear to me to be an impartial statement.

Mr. FRASER. Can the hon. gentleman state what period of time is covered by the observations of that officer?

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I cannot give that information; the report itself does not give it. The officer appears to have been out on only one trip. Now, this officer was not asked to give any decision on this question. He was asked to go on board these ships, ascertain the facts, and report to the government. But one of the very first things he says in his report is that the complaints made against such operations are entirely without just reason. It was not his duty to express that opinion. It was his duty simply to ascertain how many small and undersized fish were thrown overboard or destroyed, and he ought to have been content with that. He says he was dependent on the corporation for his figures. He should not have been dependent on the corporation for anything. He ought to have found out the facts for himself, without reference to the corporation. He tells us there were no small fish taken. He reported that there were 1,650 assorted small fish weighing 3,300 pounds, which is an average weight of two pounds, and every one knows that a fish of two pounds weight is not an undersized fish, of no use commercially. I want to suggest to the minister that further investigations be made on this matter—that a thorough and searching investigation be made regarding the number of small, undersized fish which are destroyed by these trawlers, and it might be necessary to have an officer or representative of the Fishermen's Union present in order that credit might be given to the report of such an investigation.

This is not a new question. It has been discussed and dealt with many times during many years past on the coasts of Great Britain. Complaints were made by the Scotch and English fishermen of this destructive mode of fishing, and the imperial government spent large sums of money in ascertaining the facts. They themselves employed commercial trawlers, which went out into the North Sea, caught the fish, turned them out on deck, and counted the large ones and the small ones, and made tabulated reports to the government. These experiments proved beyond question that this mode of fishing as carried on in Scotland destroyed very large numbers of small, undersized fish, unfit for the market. I find that these investigations were carried on during recent years chiefly by Dr. T. W. Fulton, F.R.S.E., Superintendent of Scientific Investigation. In order to get a fair idea of the destructiveness of an engine of this kind, it would be necessary perhaps to make a great maney experiments.

Let me quote a table showing the results of trawling investigations made by Dr. Fulton as will appear by reference to table 1, attached to his report :

So that the whole time during which these operations were carried on, there is a summary attached to Dr. Fulton's report. I find the following:

In the course of the year 1905 the results of 91 hauls of the large otter trawl in the closed waters were recorded, of which 75 were taken in the Moray Firth, fourteen in Aberdeen Bay and two in Sandside bay. The aggregate number of fishes of all kinds caught in the recorded hauls was 63,525, and of these 44,538 or 70 per cent were marketable. The other 18,987 or 30 per cent being thrown overboard as unmarketable.

You will see that, in these experiments made with great care, the superintendent of scientific investigation in Scotland, Mr. Fulton, discovered that 30 per cent of the fish taken had been thrown away as too small.

Permit me now to quote a resolution sent from the Fishermens' Union in Canso, which deals with the question:

At a regular meeting of Station No. 27 F. U., of Canso, N.S., the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

In view of the fact that the beam or otter trawler is still a menace to our fisheries, two of these ships at present continuously operating within a short distance of our port in one of the great spawning grounds for the North Atlantic, namely, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and that when though they observe the three-mile limit, this affords very little protection to the cod, haddock, lobsters and numerous other fish in the shallow waters of the gulf and adjacent bays, and we are of the firm opinion that if this method of fishing develops here, and it seems to be doing so, that in a comparatively short time the gulf and inshore fisheries will be depleted. In support of this we have only to look to the coast of Britain where trawling has been extensively carried on, and it has, we are told, not only destroyed the inshore fisheries, but has also been the cause of depopulating the towns and villages along the coast.

We are aware that it is beyond the power of any government to control fishing on the high seas, and in answer to a former appeal your government has gone the limit, but we are of opinion that the government of Canada can deal with this for Canada, by making it illegal to engage in this method of fishing, a method which, to our minds, is more destructive than explosives.

Therefore resolved, that as our Dominion representative, you use your utmost influence to have such legislation passed as will prevent beam or otter trawling in Canada.

(Signed) JAMES LUKEMAN,
President.
ALEXANDER KEATING,
Secretary.

Canso, N.S., Sept. 10, 1910.

The fourth point I make is that trawling depletes the fishing grounds. It follows that if large quantities of undersized fish are taken that will naturally deplete the grounds. I am quite aware that this is also disputed. For example the Fish Traders' 'Gazette,' of London, which is looked upon as one of the most influential papers in the trade in the world, published a few days ago a statement referring to the fishing industry in the past year, from which I shall quote one paragraph :

It is not expected that the weight of the fish caught will show any appreciable change either way or the other when the official figures are available, but it is noted with satisfaction that many of the North Sea grounds have produced improved supplies; while several new though restricted areas for trawling have been discovered by local fishermen.

Mr. John J. Cowie, in the report of the Fisheries Department for the year 1910, says that steam trawling has not had the effect of depleting the North Sea. I wish to say a few words on that statement, but let me read what he did say so as to avoid any misunderstanding. Here is Mr. Cowie's statement :

I have always maintained in the press and otherwise, that trawling within limited sea areas is most destructive, and, apart from the fact that the many line fishermen, who depend for a living entirely on what the baited line captures, have some rights, held that the compelling of the steam trawler to keep to the open sea and the offshore grounds is a wise and necessary measure for the protection and insurance of the fish supply, from inshore grounds.

At the same time, I cannot agree with those who assert that trawling, if long continued offshore, as well as inshore, is destined to deplete the sea of food fishes.

Notwithstanding the alarming prognostications of a sea denuded of fish life, and ruined and idle line-fishing fleets, put forth at the recent international conference at Washington, United States of America, as the results expected to attend the use of the otter trawl on the Atlantic 'banks', the facts and figures concerning trawling in the comparatively narrow North Sea, where the method is so old, and the fleets so large, do not at all lend themselves to such alarmist views.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

The absolutely reliable figures of the Scottish Fishery Board in relation to trawling in Scotland, tell quite a different story and prove that the total quantity of fish landed by trawlers each year keeps pace with the increase in the fleet. I take the Scottish Board's figures as they are more readily got at, but the figures of the English Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and those of the Irish Fishery Board, show the same results.

Then Mr. Cowie quotes figures to show that in 1898, 778,731 hundredweight of fish were caught off the coast of Scotland, and in 1906, the quantity had increased to 1,807,517 hundredweight. Then he goes on to say :

There need be no fear of trawl fishing ever depleting the sea here. The conditions on this side of the Atlantic are altogether different from those on the other.

In European waters—in the comparatively narrow North Sea—excessive fishing goes on from January to December by an immense fleet of trawling and other vessels, and in spite of this, the total landings, as has been seen, are actually increasing rather than diminishing.

I do not agree with Mr. Cowie in his conclusion. The flaw I find in his argument is that he takes no note of the fact that the grounds upon which these fish are caught have been enormously extended during the late years, so that there is a very large increase of area over which the trawlers work. He argues that because the total catch has increased, the North Sea has not been depleted by trawlers. But he forgets that the operations of the trawlers have extended from the coast of Africa as far south as Morocco, and to the farthest point north where they can work through the ice. No statistics are given by him to show how many hundredweight have been caught in the North Sea alone. Most of the trawlers land their catch on the coast of Great Britain, and it is impossible to say whether the quantity of fish caught in the North Sea is increasing or decreasing.

In order that there may be no question about this point I desire to quote further from the official fishery reports of Great Britain, showing the area in square miles of all the various waters where the British trawlers operate, and which shows that the North Sea is only a very small part of the total area. The table is as follows :

Name of Region.	Approximate area in square miles (nautical.)
White Sea..	701,569
Coast of Norway..	29,648
Baltic Sea..	134,891
North Sea..	152,473
North of Scotland (Orkney and Shetland)..	18,096
Westward of Scotland..	32,099
Iceland..	36,608
Faroe..	4,949
Rockall..	3,430

Name of Region.	Approximate area in square miles (nautical.)
West of Ireland..	9,066
Irish Sea..	15,743
Southward of Ireland..	50,416
Bristol Channel..	8,613
English Channel..	25,238
West of France..	25,422
North of Spain..	5,464
Coast of Portugal..	9,997
Coast of Morocco..	10,499
Total..	701,569

This table shows that British trawlers are trawling over that vast area while the North Sea embraces an area of only 152,473 square miles. I have already told you that no separate statistics are kept and Mr. Cowie takes the catch of all these various waters comprising that 701,000 square miles, bunches them together and credits them all to the North Sea in order to prove that the extensive trawling that has been carried on in the North Sea has not depleted the waters.

I could call some witnesses who ought to know something in regard to this question. For example, I wish to call Sir George Doughty, who was elected a few days ago as Unionist representative of the town of Grimsby in England. Sir George Doughty visited Canada last summer and made some investigations into the Pacific coast fisheries. On his return to Grimsby he received a very cordial welcome from his townsfolk and an address was presented to him. In his speech, speaking of his trip to Canada and of the prolific fisheries of the Pacific Coast, he referred to the state of the fisheries in the North Sea and incidentally spoke of the fact that the waters of the North Sea had been depleted. He ought to know a good deal about this question because he lives in Grimsby and is himself a trawl owner and has always taken, in parliament and elsewhere, a very lively interest in this question.

Take the evidence of Dr. T. W. Fulton, Superintendent of Scientific Investigation for Scotland. Dr. Fulton lectured before the students of Aberdeen University on July 2, 1908. Let me quote an extract from his lecture.

As you are probably aware, the old fishing grounds in the North Sea, especially in the southern part, are now generally regarded as being much less productive than they were formerly. We now get little more than one-half of our supply of bottom fishes from the North Sea, and about 30 per cent of the bottom fishes landed come from foreign coasts outside the North Sea altogether.

Later on there is another passage in which he shows where the trawlers have had to extend their operations of late years to keep up the catch of fish. He says:

'All those coasts and grounds extending for some thousands of miles from Africa to the polar region, from about 30 to 71 degrees of north latitude, are now frequented by our trawlers. The only exception is the coast of Norway, and the exception is probably temporary, though the bottom there is mostly rocky. Iceland, as I told you, was opened up in 1891; operations began in the Bay of Biscay and on the Spanish coast in 1892; in the same or next year Portugal and Morocco were included, and only a year or two ago, in 1904 or 1905, English trawlers began fishing in Barents sea, practically at the edge of the ice, among the polar bears.'

Take the statement of W. J. Saunders, representing the district of Devonshire, before the British Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, at a meeting held in the House of Lords on June 22, 1909. He said:

'Although there is an abundant supply of fish to-day, I think every one will acknowledge that that supply is not coming from anything like the old grounds. That supply is coming from new grounds.'

Then again at the same meeting Mr. P. C. Moss, representing the North Eastern Division bordering on the North Sea, says:

'What I should like to see, gentlemen, and I am sure it would be most interesting to every person who is interested in fishing, is a reform of our methods of keeping statistics so that there can be an analysis made of the fish that comes from outside waters and the fish that is caught in the North Sea. I submit that when the figures are published they will stagger people with regard to the diminution of fish in the North Sea. I will not venture on a percentage, but I will say that the great percentage of the fish in this country now is coming from Iceland, Faroe and the White Sea.'

Here is the statement of a man whose duty it is to represent the very area of which Mr. Cowie is talking. He made his statement in the presence of the assistant secretary of the Board of Fisheries and Agriculture, Mr. Archer. It is not too much to say that when Mr. Cowie stated that the catch of fish in the North Sea was increased rather than diminished by the use of the trawlers, he was not sure of his facts; he was, in my opinion, misinformed.

I have pointed out that in 1908 trawling was prohibited in the inshore waters of Canada, in bays and harbours and in the waters over which we have direct control. This to some extent protects the inshore fishermen, but it affords no protection whatever to the banking fleet. The Bankers, as some hon. gentlemen know, are the deep sea fishermen who carry on their operations on those shallow grounds far out to sea, known as the Banks. These banks are situated in the North Atlantic, adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland. If you could imagine them all grouped together they would form an area of 360 miles east and west, by 300 miles north and south. These banks have been for centuries the home and the nursing grounds of cod and haddock. They have been for generations the special preserves of the line fishermen of Nova Scotia, New England, Newfoundland and France, and it is not to be expected that these fishermen would be willing to give them up without a struggle. The fishermen do not come here as suppliants, they do not ask for any special favour, all they ask is that they will get a square deal for themselves and for the business by which they make a living. The fishermen of Canada have been accustomed to look after themselves. The method that has been adopted in this country in regard to this industry for generations by which the fisherman is captain of his own vessel and master and owner of his own business has tended to produce a virile and robust type of men. If you, Mr. Speaker, and other hon. members of this House, could see, as I have seen, the fishermen engaged in winter fishing on the coasts of my own constituency, on a winter morning, when the thermometer is around zero and the whitecaps are on the water, steering in open boats for the open sea to spend the day in the prosecution of their calling, regardless of the cold, regardless of the sudden gales prevailing in those stormy waters, you would understand the force of my statement that this line of business tends to produce a virile and robust type of men. During the last few years a good deal of oratory has been indulged in in regard to the importance of maintaining the naval supremacy of the British Empire. Let me say that the best contribution we can make here in Canada to the naval supremacy of the empire is to stand by our fishermen. I venture to say that no other part of the British Empire, or, I think I could say no other part of the world, can produce a finer or more robust body of seamen than the men who tramp the decks of our fishing vessels. These men are hardy and adventurous ; nor are they lacking in courage. Every year adds to the list of brave deeds done by these men who frequent our coast waters engaged in the fishing industry. Permit me to give an example recently published in the Boston 'Post' :

Every now and then a splendid deed is done that makes the sun seem very bright and life well worth living in this throat-throttling era of competition.

Every athletic profession has its opportunities for heroic daring, but possibly none greater than those who go down to the sea in little vessels. Here the Gloucester fishermen have an enviable record.

The other day, a sailor on the fishing schooner 'Athlete' was swept into the sea while trying to secure a sail in a howling gale. To breast the waves in a dory seemed the madness of suicide, but in a minute the crew was engaged in a desperate struggle to see who should man the rescuing dory. Two sturdy fishermen won out and managed to launch the shell. The man they tried to save was found dead, killed by floating wreckage. With the greatest difficulty the heroes regained their schooner.

Such a defiance to danger and death makes the blood of all men run redder and beat quicker. There is no need of pessimism when we breed such men.

Similar incidents of bravery of this kind can be told in connection with a blizzard that took place on the coast of Nova Scotia on the 6th of January last year when the little haddock fleet at Dover and Whitehead was driven to sea in a wintry gale, and when tossed by the storm, the sails frozen and the vessels accumulating ice until they were almost ready to sink, brave men risked their lives to save their comrades. Here is another item that I clipped from a local paper published a few days ago:

CANSO MAN TO GET MEDAL FOR BRAVERY.

Wm. Sullivan, of Canso, N.S., is to receive from the French government by way of the United States government and its consular service, a reward for his heroism in the saving of the crew of the French vessel 'L. A. B.' in July, 1909. Mr. Sullivan will receive the bronze medal, which is emblematic of the highest honour for bravery which the French government bestows upon a civilian. This medal was forwarded from Washington to John E. Kehl, United States consul at Sydney.

I do not know why this medal came through the United States government, but probably this man was working on board an American ship at the time. Stories like the foregoing are told around the firesides in Nova Scotia every year on the return of the Banking fleet. The record of many of these vessels carrying on this hazardous business has been handed down from father to son for generations. Year after year the hungry sea claims its toll. Every spring the sailors leave with high hopes, and the best of good cheer, but when the storms and the fog have done their work some of the ships are sure to return with flags at half-mast. Our people have paid dearly for their proprietary rights in these Bank fisheries, and the families are very few on the coast of Nova Scotia who have not lost relatives in these waters. Not even the miners follow a more hazardous calling. It has been said that it costs a life for every 100,000 tons of coal mined, and the fish we eat must be won at an equally dreadful price.

Now, we are deeply interested in this matter in the maritime provinces, because we not only man our own fleet but, to a large extent, that of New England as well, and it would be a calamity to the maritime provinces if anything should happen to drive the bank fishermen off the sea. No nation ever yet became a great maritime power without first building up its fisheries. The fishing fleet of Great Britain is to-day the greatest fishing fleet in the world, and it is the basis of Britain's naval power and her commercial sea-power as well. Canada owns to-day the greatest fisheries to be found in the world, and the question is whether we can preserve and hand them down to those who come after us. I am stating it mildly when I say that our fishermen are alarmed at the influence this mode of fishing is likely to have on their business—not only the deep sea fishermen but the inshore fishermen as well. I had the honour, last year, to present petitions signed by 1,800 fishermen on the coast of my county who are in sympathy with the deep sea fishermen on this question. Resolutions have come from fishermen's unions and associations all along the coast asking that some action be taken in regard to this matter. I do not regard this as unnecessary or needless alarm. The depletion of the fisheries is, of course, the most important thing. I know that it will be contended that it is necessary to prosecute this mode of fishing in order to keep up the constant supply in the market. It is also contended that the sea is large, and that no method of fishing that we can adopt will destroy the fish. It is true, the Atlantic ocean embraces a very large area, but it must not be forgotten that those portions of it frequented by fish, and where the fish shed their spawn embrace a comparatively small area, and so it is quite possible, by improvident methods of fishing to destroy the fishery. International conventions have taken place for the purpose of conserving the forests and our other natural resources of this continent. International arrangements are now in force to protect the sealing industry of the coast of Alaska. I submit that the best breeding ground of cod-fish and haddock in the world is important enough to call for international negotiations to settle this question of steam trawling. I submit, that we should, without delay, endeavour to obtain some arrangement by which we can secure an international agreement prohibiting trawling in the spawning grounds, which, I take to be the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Banks. I have no way of saying how these regulations could be secured, but I think that it could be done. The United States, I understand, is in the same position as ourselves, and the sympathy of the government at Washington ought to be with the Canadian government in respect to this matter, they having a large fishing fleet on the sea which is disturbed as ours is, by this method of fishing. It is not for me to dictate to the governments of Canada and the United States, but, as they are equally concerned, if they will act together, they should be able to secure such international arrangements as will preserve this great industry, and do justice to the men who are engaged in it.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Mr. Speaker, coming from the maritime provinces as I do, and representing a county with 90 miles of coast line or so off which is one of the best fishing grounds in Canada, I need not apologize to the House for taking up a little of the time devoted to this discussion. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has gone so ably and exhaustively into the discussion of this matter that it might be supposed that it should be content with simply expressing my acquiescence in what he has said. But when I tell you that this trawler, the 'Wren,' has been operating off the coast of Antigonish for a portion of each season for three years past, which operations have been much to the dissatisfaction and injury of local fishermen, I make bold to hope you will excuse me if I presume to discuss this matter at a little greater length, and even though, in discussing it I should find it necessary to go over again some of the ground covered by my hon. friend.

The importance of the fisheries is generally recognized. We are spending hundreds and thousands of dollars every year in endeavours to conserve our natural resources. We spend large sums in the protection of our fisheries, in the establishment of hatcheries, and a dozen of ways to promote our fisheries. In the city of Quebec a meeting was held a few days ago of eminent Canadians and others to advocate the conservation of our natural resources. They are doing a great work. I claim that in the fisheries of Canada we have the greatest heritage that any country ever possessed ; and it is the duty of this government and of the Canadian people to see that that heritage is handed down to posterity without any serious diminution. There is an idea prevalent among the fishermen, and indeed among us all, that we are justified in taking present advantage of every opportunity to utilize the natural resources in which our country abounds, and without having any consideration for the future. That sentiment I submit is an unfair and a dishonest one. The idea prevails that we have a right to get all we can out of our fisheries, irrespective of future results. We hear it sometimes said : What has posterity done for us? We will make all we can out of our present resources. As I have said, I think that is an unworthy and unpatriotic sentiment. I claim it is the duty of the government to take steps to conserve these valuable fisheries, and that we should transmit them unimpaired as we received them.

My hon. and learned friend (Mr. Sinclair), has gone over the history of trawling pretty well. He has informed the House that there are over 3,000 of these trawlers operating in the North Sea. We hear the argument made sometimes that since these trawlers have been operating on the coast of Great Britain for a period of 125 years, there cannot be any very serious or harmful results from trawling. I propose to trace the history of trawling in the old country, and to call your attention to some investigations that have been held by the authorities, and to show the evolution of opinion that has been going on in the old country with respect to trawling. I should also quote the findings of royal commissions, appointed to investigate this matter, and show how opinion has changed with regard to the matter. I do not quote these resolutions, because I endorse the views therein contained so far as they may be an apology for, or defence of trawling. At the same time they were expressed, there was a strong approval of the custom ; but as time rolled on, and as the number of trawlers increased, that opinion seems to have changed in the old country. At that time trawling was pronounced to be 'the source of the greatest and most progressive supply of fish other than herring to the principal markets of the country.' To-day it is generally recognized that the practice of trawling has been injurious to the fishing industry, injurious both to the fisheries themselves and to the line fishermen. I may say that the shore fishermen have been practically driven out of business altogether. In the city of London, the proportion of fish caught by trawlers to that caught by hand lines, is something like 10 or 12 to one. The result of trawling has been that the line fishermen practically abandoned the field to their enemy, the trawler. Latterly, they have been making efforts to recover their ground in certain waters along the east coast of Scotland, and other parts of the United Kingdom, and the result is, that the line fishermen are now beginning to regain a part of what they have lost and are hopeful that in a short time they will be able to prosecute with advantage the industry that seemed once to have about disappeared. The history of trawling in the old country is the history of a prolonged fight between the line fishermen and the men engaged in this destructive method of fishing. The hostility of the line fishermen has been so great that it was scarcely safe for any prominent man to express any sympathy with the trawlers. There have been demonstrations against these trawlers in Aberdeen and other towns on the east coast of Scotland, and the way they took to show their hostility was to conclude their demonstrations with that irrefutable argument of burning in effigy any person to be in sympathy with the trawlers. Now I wish first to refer to a report of a royal commission that was published in 1863. It was appointed to investigate certain complaints of the fishermen who asserted that their industry was being destroyed, that the spawning grounds were injured, and that a large number of immature fish were caught, with the result that the fisheries were becoming exhausted and threatened with extinction. This commission was composed of such eminent men as the Rt. Hon. G. Shaw-Lefevbre, Sir James Caird and Prof. Huxley. Here is what they say regarding the waste by destruction:

> Waste by the destruction of young fish takes place in the course of the practice of all modes of fishing, and is to a certain extent inseparable from them. The waste which occurs in the course of beam trawling in the open sea and in all kinds of sweep net fishing has certainly not affected the supply of fish in many localities, and is not proved to have affected it in any. With respect to inshore fishing, although the evidence so far as it is conclusive, appears to prove that the taking of small and immature fish, has not as yet produced any serious effect upon the fisheries, it is undoubtedly possible that by improved engines the destruction of fry might reach such a pitch as to show a large, instead of as at present, an insignificant ratio to the destruction effected by the natural enemies and by conditions unfavourable to their existence.

That report was made in 1863, when trawling was not carried on to the same extent that it has been in later years. But even then you will observe that report states that, whilst it was denied that destruction was taking place, to any very appreciable extent, yet there is an admission that there is a great deal of waste; and a further admission that whilst the taking of small and immature fish has not as yet produced any serious effect upon the fishery, it is possible that such will be the result ultimately. Subsequent to 1863 other commissions reported, but I will only call attention to that which was appointed in 1883, the president of which was Lord Dalhousie. In this report the Royal Commission go on to say :

> We are unable to come to the conclusion that trawling is the sole cause of the decrease of fish in inshore waters. In so far as it may contribute to any decrease, we think it can only be as part of a system of overfishing and not because of the wasteful destruction of spawn, fish food or immature fish.

There is an admission of injury; they admit that trawling produces a decrease in the quantity of fish, but they are unable to come to the conclusion that trawling is the sole cause of the decrease in the inshore fisheries. You will observe that the commission admit that there is a decrease in the inshore waters, that the decrease is noticeable, and that they attribute it to the system of over-fishing. I do not care what it is attributed to; what we are after is the result, and the result is that there has been a diminution in the quantity of fish. Blackwood's Magazine for May, 1885, has an article on this subject, and the very fact that it is in Blackwood's Magazine justifies me in quoting it. It refers to the report of the Trawling Commission of 1883 on the fish supply. There is a reference to the destruction of immature fish, but before I come to that I might refer to the destruction of spawn. One of the arguments used against the trawlers is the injury to the spawning ground and the destruction of spawn. According to the finding of the Royal Commission, that is not the case. The opinion that such is the case is based upon misapprehension, for it is a fact, that the spawn of fish generally is found, not upon the bottom, but floating on or very near the surface. The ripe uninjured ova of cod, halibut and most of fish is not found on the bottom. The principal exception to this is in the case of herring, the spawn of which goes to the bottom, so that the operations of the trawlers would not seriously affect the spawn. One would think they might, perhaps, affect the spawning ground, but the finding of the commission is that they do not seriously do so. There is a slight disturbance of the ground, but this is very temporary, and normal conditions are soon restored. Now, to come to the question of the destruction of immature fish, I find in this article in Blackwood's to which I have already referred, the following:

If evidence of reputation were to be trusted, the trawlers would come off badly on the charge of destroying immature fish. The bad name that they have incurred in this respect is perhaps due to the work of the small trawlers alluded to in the beginning of this paper, who on many parts of the coast work close inshore, and probably do destroy a large amount of fry. Although, throughout the evidence taken by the commission, it is clearly the belief of the fishermen that this evil prevails to a very large extent, they do not seem to have produced any really conclusive proofs of its existence. In the experiments of Professor McIntosh——

Prof. McIntosh is a professor of St. Andrews university, one of the greatest scientists of Scotland. He conducted a series of investigations from 1885 to 1895, in a trawler placed at his disposal for the purpose, called the 'Garland,' and wrote some works on the subject, one of them 'Resources of the Sea.' He is quite an authority on fish and the operations of trawlers.

—in the experiments of Professor McIntosh, the immature fish registered as caught in the trawl were mostly of the less valuable kinds. The quantity of young haddock and whiting taken was inconsiderable, the immature specimens of these fishes being generally found in the mouths of the larger kinds—a state of things that makes the trawlers their avengers rather than their murderers. It seems likely that below a certain size the fry escape altogether through the meshes of the trawl-net, as Professor McIntosh states that it was rare to capture dabs under 5½ inches in length, and that in using the small trawl close inshore in St. Andrew's bay, none of the smaller flat fishes with which that region abounds were taken. This absence of immature fish in large quantities from the trawl-net was fully borne out by the trawlers themselves; and it seems clear that, at any rate in the districts visited by the commission, there is no wasteful or unnecessary destruction of food-fishes committed in this way.

This refers to the commission of 1883, and it would appear from reading it that the charge against the trawlers was very much exaggerated. As I said before, I do not agree that the charge that is made to-day against the trawlers is very much exaggerated, but if these assertions were made at that time I would think that they would be much exaggerated, because conditions have changed since then. The number of trawlers then was comparatively limited. There was not the same intensity of fishing if I may so describe it, then as there is now. I am quoting this for the purpose of showing the change which has been going on with respect to trawling. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) referred to the report of Mr. Halkett to the effect that there has been no great destruction at all of fish in the operation of the 'Wren.' In that report it is claimed there is no real waste or destruction of fish except dog fish. I quite agree with the remarks of my hon friend from Guysborough, and I cannot understand how Mr. Halkett could arrive at such a conclusion. It does seem almost incredible that no small fish were found in the trawler on the occasion of Prof. Halkett's visit. It strikes me that Prof. Halkett must have started out, well fortified by his instructions from the department, feeling as strong as Samson, but when he got on board the trawler he must have met some Delilah, before whom he gave way. I do not think that the report of Prof. Halkett should be given very much credit now. He may, when he works the thing out, as he promises in his interim report to do, be able to explain some of the seeming inconsistencies of the report. But he is not alone in his praise of trawlers. He has company in the person of Mr. Alexander Milliken, General Inspector of Fisheries for Scotland, who does not agree that trawling is a bad thing. With the case that has been made against the trawler, it is surprising that anybody can be got to defend it, but here is a man who not only defends it, but commends it. He says, in his report to the board in 1907:

Having in view the fact that these fish (referring to catfish, marks and other fishes) were rarely caught by lines, and their destructive powers amongst other fish such as herrings and haddocks, it can be seen what an immense benefit it is to the general prosperity of the fisheries to have such large quantities of these destructive fish captured annually which were formally allowed to roam at sea until they die of old age.

Thus Mr. Milliken seems to think that trawling is a good thing because it destroys some of those fish that roam the sea and kill fish that are of merchantable value. I am sure none of our fishermen in Nova Scotia will adopt this view. This recalls to my mind the story of the Scotchman and the bagpipes that was told in this House at the earlier part of the session by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). A Scotchman was sick unto death, in the hospital and the doctor was called in. The doctor examined the pharmacopoea, but he could not find anything to suit the case. He decided upon a novel remedy and suggested that a Highlander be brought to play the bagpipes, walking up and down the hall in the ward beside the patient's room. Next morning the doctor returned to the house and met the nurse who looked very serious, and he said: 'How is Sandy?' The answer was: 'Oh, Sandy is all right, but all the rest of the patients are dead.' This is very similar. Prof. Milliken would allow the trawlers to operate in order that they may destroy those voracious fish that roam the sea, but he forgets that the other fish are being interfered with and destroyed at the same time. In a word the trawler kills the hen that lays the golden egg. Now, I have read to you the report of the Royal Commission of 1863, and that of the Royal Commission of 1883. To summarize these reports: In the report of 1883 it was alleged that there had been a destruction of spawn. The finding was that such was not the case, that that allegation was based upon a false assumption, that false assumption not taking into account the fact that spawn, as a rule, float near the surface. Then there was the allegation of the destruction of immature fish. The finding was that there was no evidence of the wasteful destruction of immature food fishes. There was the allegation that there was a disturbance and exhaustion of fishing grounds. By disturbance I mean that the fish are frightened away from the fishing grounds or the fish go away for a shorter or longer period, but that they may return later on. Exhaustion means that the grounds are fished out. As to disturbance and exhaustion, this report of the commission of 1883 finds that the number of fish in inshore and narrow seas may be seriously diminished by the use of trawlers. If in the narrower seas there is exhaustion because of the operations of trawlers, it naturally follows that in the broader seas, in the high seas, where you have a large number of trawlers operating, the same result is inevitable. It is only a question of degree. Then there is the allegation that the injury done by the trawlers to the food of fish is insignificant.

A select committee on Sea Fisheries was appointed in 1893. It was appointed 'to consider the expediency of adopting measures for the preservation and improvement of the sea fisheries in the seas off the British Isles including the prohibition of the capture, landing or sale of undersized sea fish * * * and other like regulations, international or otherwise.'

Evidently an impression was beginning to prevail among the fishermen and others that something was required for the preservation of the fisheries, that the fish were in danger. This committee proceeded with its investigation, and there seems to be great contradiction in the testimony of the witnesses who came before them. The evidence of those in the trade, those engaged in fishing with trawlers, conflicted with that of the professional and scientific witnesses in regard to the decrease in the quantity and size of fish caught in the North Sea. The naturalists of the Marine Biological Association, Messrs Holt and Calderwood, and other witnesses whose testimony was of a technical character maintained that there was a decided depletion in the North Sea fisheries. The evidence of those in the trade was to the effect that there was virtually no destruction, and no serious diminution in the quantity of fish. The finding of this committee was:

There is no indication of a falling off in the number of herrings to be found off our coasts.

There is no evidence of important diminution in cod and haddock.

A considerable diminution in flat fishes, as soles and plaice, which must be attributed to over fishing by trawlers in certain localities.

I cannot understand why there should be a finding with respect to herring, because they are not ground fish at all, and are not affected by trawling unless it might be that a decrease in the quantity of herring might follow an undue disturbance of the grounds where the bait was found.

In 1900 a select committee was appointed on the Fisheries Bill. They found:

That it is proved beyond doubt that there is a very serious diminution in the supply of certain kinds of flat fish, particularly in the North Sea.

That in default of a remedy, the consequence to the flat-fish industry will be disastrous.

That one of the causes of this diminution of supply is undoubtedly the destruction of inshore fish.

The committee in the conclusion of their report urged:

That the subject of the diminution of the fish supply is a very pressing one. That no efforts should be spared to arrange for international treatment of the subject generally.

Whilst in these reports it is denied that trawling particularly destroys spawn or wastes immature fish, or injures the spawning ground to any great extent so far as the outer waters are concerned, yet it is admitted on all sides that in the inshore fisheries there has been a decrease both in quantity and quality.

I wish to call your attention to a finding in one of these reports with reference to the falling off in the bays and harbours where trawling has been largely carried on.

Continuous fishing with such an effective implement as the steam trawler within a limited area may sensibly diminish the number of fish.

Now, what occurs in the limited area is bound to happen in the broader area if you increase the number of those effective implements.

At the beginning of investigation made in 1883, a series of questions put to Coast Guard officers of the United Kingdom elicited answers that in 52 districts out of 85 there was a falling off in the quantity of fish taken and in 45 of these where there was falling off trawling in some shape carried on.

At Scarborough, Aberdeen and St. Andrews' catches fell off greatly pointing to danger of exhaustion if continued.

James Farquharson, fishery officer for Banff, in a report dated January 5, 1907, after stating that line fishing returns for that year compared favourably with those of previous year, adds that cod and haddock show a considerable increase in quantity and concludes:

Fishermen are of opinion that the increase is partly due to the absence of trawlers in the Firth.

James Ritchie, Findhorn, district, in a report dated January 3, 1907, says:

There was little cod fishing done in the Moray Firth by line fishermen as that species of fish was very scarce. Fishermen, however, are hopeful that the fishing may improve if trawling is prohibited in the Firth.

Inquiries in Denmark, Holland and Germany elicited the reply that they had like conditions.

I have before me extracts from the evidence taken before a special committee to inquire into the conditions of the fishing industry of the United Kingdom, under date of April 1, 1908. I find that Mr. G. Alward, connected with the fishing trade all his life, gave evidence. He lived at Grimsby since 1856. He was the owner of several fishing vessels, and was connected with National Sea Fisheries Protection Association for twenty years and member of the executive thereof the greater part of that time—an expert.

Q. Is it your opinion that the fact that you do find these small fish on the grounds where you previously got large fish is due to what we might call the intensity of fishing, the big fish having been killed?—A. That has something to do with it. Of course, in the North Sea, as you have probably had placed before you, the theory put forward—and I think there is a great deal of truth in it, is that the reason why we get so many small fish on the east side is that the larvae float into it, driven by the currents, and find a suitable location, and live on, whilst in the middle of the North Sea, the probability is that a large portion never get into that side of the tide and die.

Q. (To Sir Reginald McLeod). Is it your impression there is a decrease in the quantity of fish obtainable on the banks in the North Sea?—A. I think that is well established, and that it extends over many years—going back say thirty years.

Q. Would the fact that you have been able to maintain the fish supply be due to the circumstance that you are now fishing over a wider area, and with more elaborate and effective engines?—A. That is so.

Q. So you think some steps should be taken shortly—the sooner the better—to avoid intensity of fishing?—A. Well, some step—I do not know exactly what step you could take unless you resort to those farther grounds, and that I think is what we are doing. Personally we are doing that now; we are drawing off from the old grounds a number of those big ships and going to far-off grounds, so that we are giving the North Sea somewhat of a rest.

Q. And that rest, coupled with the checks which you have suggested of the destruction of immature fish, may effect the purpose in your opinion?—A. Yes, it may.

We lamented the fact that we were landing so much of that small fish and I think that induced us to be more severe on the question of stopping the catch.

These reports show clearly that during the past 25 years there has been a gradual change of opinion going on in the old country on this matter until a stage has now been reached when both the fishermen and the people generally are asking for measures to be taken for the protection of the fisheries. As the hon. member for Guysborough has pointed out, the government has shown its sympathy with the shore fishermen in various ways. In the first place, when the Halifax Board of Trade asked that the government should assist in bringing out some of these trawlers from Scotland, the government promptly refused to do so. This is shown by the following letter from the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Hon. R. Préfontaine, to Mr. C. H. Mitchell, the chairman of the Fisheries Committee of the Halifax Board of Trade, in reference to that proposal:

June 5, 1905.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the matter of the introduction of steam trawling in Atlantic waters of Canada, I have an official report before me, and I do not see that any encouragement could be held out to steam trawl firms to operate in our waters. You are no doubt aware that to that destructive method of fishing has been attributed the destruction of valuable fisheries off the shores of Great Britain, and prohibitory laws have been enforced in inshore areas.

Outside the three-mile limit trawling cannot be prevented, but I am not disposed to favour it in territorial waters or grant assistance to firms adopting that mode of fishing.

Yours faithfully,
R. PREFONTAINE.

C. H. Mitchell, Esq.,
Wood's Wharf, Halifax, N.S.

This letter shows that the government, instead of encouraging the use of steam trawlers, has taken strong ground against them; and I am quite sure that if the Marine and Fisheries Department can go further than they have gone in restricting this method of fishing, it will do so. If the department has exhausted its jurisdiction in Canadian waters and trawling can still go on beyond the three-mile limit—and this is a matter that every constitutional lawyer must admit—then the only thing that remains is the adoption of some international regulations.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Before six o'clock, I was referring to the work of some of the Royal Commissions appointed to investigate this question of the destruction of fisheries by trawlers and drew attention to the change of public opinion in the old country regarding the destructive effects of steam trawling. I pointed out that, in the earlier days of the prosecution of the fishing industry by trawling there did not appear to be the same alarm as developed itself later. At present it is generally conceded that the system of steam trawling is a destructive one. It is admitted on all sides that the inshore fisheries have suffered considerably by reason of this method of fishing, and it is only a question of degree and to what extent it shall be allowed to go on until you have the same conditions in the outer waters as now exists in the inshore waters. In the old country, it is recognized to-day that there has been a great falling off in the inshore fishing, more than any one anticipated in the earlier days of steam trawling.

Objection may be made that the natural enemy of fish is the fish themselves and not men. It is quite true that we know comparatively little of the laws which govern the relations between the different species of fish and of the causes which produce the migration of fish at certain times and the gathering of them together in large shoals at other times, and which leads to the dispersion of these shoals at other periods. Nor do we know much of what becomes of the spawn, or what becomes of the fry, but it is admitted on all sides that the quantity of fish usually taken by man is infinitesimally small as compared with the destruction in the sea caused by the fish themselves preying on one another. There is a continual warfare going on amongst the various species and descriptions of fish the one against the other. The moment the spawn is shed it is attacked by numerous small fish, then when it is hatched it is attacked by larger fish. Herring is attacked by the dog-fish and sharks. These are again attacked in turn by the various larger fish, and it is a case all around of the great feeding on the little. Still there is a proper proportion maintained and nature does provide for the maintenance of a proper equilibrium between the different classes; but when you go beyond the line and by artificial means interfere too much with nature, the result is bound to be destructive. We have found that frequently on our rivers, streams and lakes. Where there is over-fishing in any of these the time will come when nature will not be able to keep up the supply, and there is great difficulty in supplementing the loss by restocking. The time to lock the stable is before the steed is stolen, and the time to protect our fisheries is now. True there is at present very little danger from steam trawling, and I hope there will be very little danger so far as depletion goes on this side of the Atlantic. Our natural conditions are different and, as pointed out by Mr. Cowie, the season on this side in which this steam trawling can be carried on, is comparatively short and there is time for nature to replenish herself. Still there is danger, and the question is what is the remedy. Some argue this method of fishing should be absolutely forbidden. The Dominion government has power to prohibit any Canadian engaging in it. That may be very true, but will that help out the situation? There are some 30 or 40 French trawlers operating off the Grand Banks and a couple of trawlers operating in the United States. Are you going to deny to Canadians the rights which other people enjoy? If the passing of legislation forbidding Canadians from engaging in the business could prevent steam trawling altogether, that would be satisfactory, but it would be very ineffective when other countries are allowed to engage in this business. It is argued that the evil can be prevented by prohibiting the landing in Canada of fish caught in trawlers. That is a pretty strong argument, but I do not know how it would work out when practically tested. It would certainly lead to great complications with other countries. It might lead to reprisals on the part of these other countries, and I fear might not be productive of the good result desired. The only effect such prohibition would have would be that the fish would be landed, say in St. Pierre or Newfoundland or the United States, and the trawling would go on just the same. Of course the fishermen on the Canadian side would not see the fish landing and that might relieve their minds to some extent, but the trawling would go on just the same. To forbid Canadians from engaging in that business while others were allowed the right would be of no effect. The same thing was tried in the old country. The Moray Firth was there closed to British trawlers, but the result was that in a short time the English ships went to Norway, floated the Norwegian flag, and came to the Moray Firth, fished outside the three mile limit and landed their fish, so that the only persons affected were the Scotch trawlers. The evil of trawling went on just the same. Prevent our Canadians from trawling and they will do what was done in the Moray Firth cases. They will register their trawlers in some foreign port and then fish with impunity outside the three-mile limit. So the evil cannot be remedied by prohibiting our own citizens from engaging in the business.

As regards forbiding the landing of Canadian fish caught in Canadian waters, I do not think, as I said before, that remedy would be very effective. Notwithstanding the strong feeling in the old country at present against trawling, they have not gone so far as to say that fish caught by steam trawling shall not be permitted to be landed. In 1908, the British parliament passed legislation entitled, 'The Prohibited Areas Extension Act'. Section 1 of that Act provides:

> From and after the passing of this Act it shall not be lawful to sell or land in the United Kingdom any fish caught by the method of fishing known as steam trawling, or other trawling within the areas in which such methods of fishing are prohibited by the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889, and by laws made thereunder.

It will be observed that this Act did not prohibit the landing of fish caught by steam trawlers generally, but only fish caught in these prohibited waters, the idea being to conserve these prohibited waters. But they did not deem it wise to pass such legislation as would totally prohibit the landing of fish caught in trawlers, and I do not know that it would be opportune or wise to pass such legislation here.

What then is the remedy? The order in council of the 9th of September, 1908, prohibits fishing by means of trawling within the three-mile limit, and in the bays and harbours of Canada, but unfortunately that does not help our inshore fisheries. Off the shores our fishermen set their trawls from two to six miles, but as soon as a steam trawler appears off the coast our local fishermen are obliged to withdraw their trawls because they do not want to take any chances of having their gear worth a couple of hundred dollars or more, destroyed. True, there are not many instances of a steam trawler destroying the hook and line trawl, but the reason is that the local fishermen take the precaution of not setting these when the steam trawler is at work. They are, however, prevented from pursuing their honourable avocation, and I say a great hardship and injustice is done to them.

The remedy suggested by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) seems to be one that will go very far towards alleviating the situation so far as the shore fishermen are concerned. They are a body of men far too important to be treated with indifference and are well worthy of the eulogies paid them by my hon. friend. They have a right to exist just as well as the steam trawler.

While the shore fishermen have no objection to the trawlers prosecuting their industry, if it is carried on in such a way that there is no danger of destroying the inshore fishermen's gear or injuring the fisheries generally, at the same time, they ask, and ask reasonably, that they also should be allowed to live. This is a case of live and let live. They do not object to the steam trawler offering to take fish to be supplied fresh to the Montreal market, at all seasons of the year, which is the argument put forward by the Maritime Fish Corporation, the owners of the 'Wren,' yet they say: Let us live also. A regulation ought to be passed whereby the shore fishermen can carry on his avocation, the avocation of his fathers, an honest and honourable one, while the steam trawler carries on its work if it wants to and provided there is no danger of permanent injury to the fisheries by the trawlers doing so. That, of course, as pointed out by the hon. member for Guysborough can only be accomplished by international regulations. And there is every reason to hope that this state of things will be brought about. Trawling is not popular. It is not popular in the old country, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Guysborough. Not only Great Britain, but the continental countries as well, are passing severe legislation against it. In the United States it is equally unpopular. It can easily be shown that it involves danger to the fisheries of the country. I have every hope therefore that the other nations would join Canada in an effort to pass regulations to restrict the operations of the trawler. I understand there is an agitation on this subject in Newfoundland and that the government there has taken up the matter. So, it would appear quite feasible to bring about international regulations respecting the manner of conducting this industry. There is a precedent for it. In 1839, there was a convention between France and Great Britain and that convention passed regulations for the control of the fisheries. It is true, we have no jurisdiction beyond the three-mile limit, but there is no reason why the several nations interested should not make an international arrangement, by which the deep-sea fisheries could be preserved and the local fishermen protected. This convention of 1839 defines territorial waters as being within the three-mile limit. But it made regulations regarding the conduct of the fisheries. It permitted trawl fishing within the limits of the two countries. It forbade trawl fishing in certain waters, while herring and mackerel fishing are going on. It provided that trawlers should keep three miles away from boats engaged in fishing with drift nets for herring or mackerel, and went so far as to provide that where trawling was going on, and herring or mackerel boats commenced fishing there, the trawlers should leave and get away three miles from them. Now, if some such regulations could be adopted by this country, the evils complained of by our shore fishermen would at once to a very large extent vanish. And surely, it is not too much to ask that the steam trawler should keep far enough away from the shore fishermen to enable the shore fishermen to carry on their work without danger of their gear being destroyed.

The fisheries of our shores, as the hon. member for Guysborough pointed out, are the richest in the world. The steam trawlers of the old country have to drag the net for a period of four or five hours, but on our shore they can only drag it, I understand, for 45 minutes,—Dr. Cowie says one hour, but I believe that 45 minutes is really the time before it is filled and has to be hauled up. That shows how much richer the Canadian fisheries are than the fisheries of the old country We have a heritage in our fisheries which we should make every effort to conserve and we have in our fishermen as fine a class of men as can be found anywhere. A class of men who are deserving of the best attention of the government. And I have every confidence that the government will endeavour to have international regulations adopted that will preserve the shore fishery. For, as I have already said, this government has shown every sympathy with the shore fishermen. When an application was made by several firms in Scotland for assistance to carry on this industry of steam trawling, that assistance was promptly refused, because the government believed that the effect on this industry was to devastate the industry. Later on, the board of trade of Halifax asked that assistance be given to the trawler that was to come out from the old country, sent by the Ross Trawling Company. I read before six o'clock the letter from the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries to Mr. Mitchell, in which the government promptly refused to render assistance. I have had to do with the department since 1908 in connection with this trawling. For, as I said before six o'clock the 'Wren' has been operating every season for the past three years off the shore of Antigonish, and I have heard many complaints on the part of the fishermen and have had many remonstrances from them, to make to the government. I have invariably found the Department of Marine and Fisheries at all times desirous of seeing that the order in council, the law prohibiting trawling within the three-mile limit should be enforced. In 1908 it was represented to me that the trawler was operating within the three-mile limit. I wired to the department, and promptly there was a telegram sent to the commander of the government steamer 'Petrel' at Georgetown, as follows:

Ottawa, October 12, 1908.

C. G. S. 'Petrel,' Georgetown, P.E.I.

You are to watch the imported trawler 'Wren' and to see that she does not infringe the law against in-trawling within the three-mile limit. Report all possible information for the benefit of the department. You will remain in commission until further orders. Acknowledge.

C. E. KINGSMILL,
Rear Admiral.

Later, in 1909, it was again alleged that the trawler was operating within the three-mile limit. It is all very well to say we have an order forbidding trawlers operating within three miles of the shore, and that anybody can enforce the law, but the difficulty is, in proving the case. But let me say right here the only effective way of guarding against encroachment is to have a government cruiser constantly on the watch of the trawlers. Prevention is better than cure in such cases. The fishermen along our shore were persistent in maintaining that the trawler was operating within the three-mile limit. From what I could gather I believe that this was the fact. A prosecution was instituted against the Captain of the 'Wren', and he was convicted of violation of the law and was put in jail. That goes to show the disposition of the department. On the 23rd of September, 1909, I wrote to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries calling his attention to the fact that it was alleged that the trawler 'Wren' was operating within the three-mile limit. On 28th September, Rear Admiral Kingsmill wired the captain of the 'Constance' to proceed to the Antigonish shore, and on the 8th of October, 1909, he writes confirming his telegram and adds:

You are therefore to keep as close a watch as possible upon her movements and do this in an unnoticeable way and with as little publicity as possible.

And last year complaint was made by the fishermen. And, I find here, among the papers brought down a letter dated August 25, 1910, from the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Johnstone, to the deputy minister of the naval service:

This department would therefore be exceedingly obliged if you would be good enough to arrange to have the fisheries protection cruiser on that portion of the coast carefully follow the operations of the 'Wren' and see that no invasion of the law is permitted by her.

It has been alleged in certain quarters that the government has been encouraging and subsidizing trawlers. I read these letters to show how unfair that charge is. Instead of assisting them, the department has shown every possible desire to protect the interests of the fishermen. They have exhausted their jurisdiction to the extent of prohibiting by order in council, this method of fishing in our territorial waters over which alone we have jurisdiction, and I feel quite confident that if any international arrangement can be brought about for the protection of the shore fishermen, it will be done.

That such international arrangement can be brought about, I have no doubt. That the interest of the local or shore fishermen will be duly safeguarded in the making of such arrangements. I have every confidence in. It is, therefore, with very much pleasure I support the resolution of the hon. member for Guysborough.

Mr. A. L. FRASER (Kings, P. E. I.). I rise mainly to give my endorsement to the views of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). The importance of this question has been pretty well set out by that hon. gentleman and by the last speaker (Mr. Chisholm), of Antigonish, and I do not think that anything I can say can add much to its weight. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and a great many of the officers of his department, I think, are pretty well alive to the importance of the maritime provinces fisheries. We hear much of the conservation of natural resources, and we wish that the fisheries, the great natural resource of the maritime provinces should also be conserved. And while I must say there is room for improvement, I trust the department will see to it that this great menace to the fishermen of the maritime provinces which has been mentioned here, the steam trawling business, now in its inception, will be dealt with at once and effectively. It is without doubt destructive, and is a serious matter to the fishermen. I have my information from the fishermen themselves, with a great many of whom I come into contact, and they unanimously express great objection to this method of fishing. They say that it is ruinous. Now, I do not know whether the department is fully alive to the disastrous effects of this method of fishing; but from the report that was read here this evening I think they cannot be well informed. It would appear that this officer of the department who was sent down there condemned his own report, because he says he takes his information from the corporation that has been referred to. He was sent down there with certain authority to examine the question and report upon it, but instead of doing so, he finds a judgment, and says that he takes his information from the captain, or the corporation of a certain fishing concern in Nova Scotia. Now such a report must be entirely valueless to the department. I did not catch the name of the officer. But I would ask the minister to weigh that report and if, as I understood the hon. member for Guysborough to say, this officer got his information entirely from the corporation that was engaged in the steam fishing, then the report must be valueless. But I can assure the minister that my information comes direct from the fishermen, and I know that when this method of fishing came into operation they were alarmed, and they have been alarmed ever since, because they consider that method destructive. The hon. member for Guysborough also read a report from a British commission on these matters, which I think is conclusive as to the destructive nature of this method of fishing. Now there was a man whose name was mentioned here, I think it was Cowie, and if I am not mistaken he was himself engaged in the steam trawling business. He reports apparently that steam trawling was not destructive. His report would be of the same value as that of the corporation who reported to the official of the department. I think Mr. Cowie was engaged in steam trawling, and if my memory serves me right, this is the same Mr. Cowie who received certain sums of money from this government for making certain investigations—the minister will correct me if I am mistaken. But according to my memory, Mr. Cowie received large sums of money for performing certain services for this government some years ago in relation to the fisheries in the maritime provinces. I would strongly urge upon the minister to take direct evidence from those engaged in the fishing, and I think he will find that this method of fishing is fraught with a great deal of harm. As to the mode of regulation I am unable to make any suggestion to the government. Another matter I would like to mention is the recent regulations made at Washington, by which American fishermen are allowed to come within the three-mile limit, or within 1,000 yards of the shore, and set cod and herring traps. As I understood the Minister of Justice the other day, he said that any one, whether coming from the United States or from any other part of the world, could come within a thousand yards of our shores and set cod or herring traps. Now if that is the case, I believe that our fisheries will suffer a great deal of harm, and our fishermen also will be injured.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Minister of Justice explained clearly that this regulation to which my hon. friend refers has reference only to the treaty waters, to waters on the north side of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and I think the Magdalen Islands and part of Labrador. But it has nothing whatever to do with the waters of the maritime provinces.

Mr. FRASER. I was not quite sure about it. Then this regulation only affects the treaty coasts.

Mr. BRODEUR. There should be no misunderstanding in regard to so important a question. The agreement made with the United States the other day covers only the treaty coasts, namely, part of Labrador, from Mont Joly to Blanc Sablon, and the Magdalen Islands, that is to say, coasts which are part of Canada, and which were subject to the treaty of 1818. In virtue of that treaty American fishermen have the right to come and fish only in those parts of Canada. But so far as other parts of Canada are concerned, they have no right at all to come and fish in them.

Mr. FRASER. Another thing is that under the new regulation, as I understand it, American fishermen can come in here and fish within the three-mile limit the same as Canadian fishermen, on paying a license of a dollar a year.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend is referring to the reciprocity arrangement, it does not touch the fishing privileges at all, it deals with the exchange of commodities. In the particular matter to which the hon. gentleman refers, the effect is that the modus vivendi which has been in operation now for some time, is continued, with the payment of a nominal fee. In the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty it was proposed that if free fish could be obtained the conditions of the modus vivendi should be granted to them free of charge. We have provided, not to grant them free, but to charge a nominal license fee of one dollar per annum.

Mr. FRASER. I would urge upon the government to take into serious consideration this whole question of steam trawling, and to obtain their information from reliable sources. I think our fisheries deserve to be protected as well as any other of our natural resources such as timber and coal. The member for Guysborough stated that the largest number of steam trawlers on the coast was twenty. Since then I think the number has been increasing, and the situation now demands the immediate attention of the government.

Mr. A. B. CROSBY (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I had no intimation that this resolution would be brought up to-day. Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair), who introduced this resolution is the chairman of the Fisheries Committee, he did not do the members of the committee the kindness to inform them that he was going to bring up this resolution, and the only intimation we had on the subject was the fact that it was on the Order Paper. It would have been nothing but fair and courteous for the hon. gentleman to have intimated to the members of his committee that he was about to discuss this matter this afternoon, so as to give members from the province of Nova Scotia and other maritime provinces an opportunity of being present to hear what he had to say with regard to the matter, and also giving them an opportunity of discussing it and giving their opinions upon it. But it evidently did not suit that hon. gentleman to do it in that way. Therefore, we had to have it sprung upon us this afternoon, and we know very little about it other than what we find on the Order Paper. The resolution, as I find it on the Order Paper, is in these words:—

That in the opinion of this House, as the mode of fishing known as steam trawling, prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside Canadian waters, is destructive to fish life, it is expedient, in order to conserve the deep-sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened with the view of securing an international agreement prohibiting this mode of fishing in such spawning grounds for deep-sea fish, as the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the North Atlantic adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland.

I can endorse everything that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) put before us this afternoon with regard to the resolution. He left nothing wanting in his arguments as to whether negotiations should be entered upon immediately by Canada with the other nations, particularly with the nation to the south of us, and perhaps France, whose fishermen resort to the bank fisheries in order to arrive at a definite understanding in regard to the operations of trawlers upon these fishing grounds. But, when we came to listen to the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm), who spoke for something over an hour, quoted a great deal of statistical information, read a great many authorities and gave us the opinions of boards of trade from every place but Canada, we found that he seemed to argue in favour of the shore fisheries and he seemed to think that a limitation on steam trawl fishing on the banks was going to help the shore fishing. If this government could satisfy the hon. member for Guysborough and the hon. member for Antigonish by simply passing a minute of council to say that they were not going to allow any steam trawlers to fish inside the three-mile limit they certainly could not satisfy the fishermen I represent by any such limitation. Nor could they satisfy the fishermen of Guysborough, or of Antigonish, or of any county in the maritime provinces. When my hon. friends get up and try to cover their tracks in this manner they must not forget that the fishermen in the maritime provinces know something about fish if they do not know very much about parliamentary affairs, and when the time comes for them to pronounce upon the position taken by these hon. gentlemen in regard to this question they will express themselves in no uncertain way. The hon. member for Antigonish expressed the belief that the steam trawler 'Wren' was not fishing within the three-mile limit. I venture the assertion that not once, but a hundred times, he has been told that the 'Wren' was fishing within the three-mile limit. Every fisherman in Antigonish and in Nova Scotia knows that she has been fishing within the three-mile limit, taking the fish and destroying the spawning ground. If these hon. gentlemen had been sincere, if they had meant to protect the shore fisheries, what would they do? Would they be satisfied with a minute of council of this government saying that we are going to allow no steam trawler within the three-mile limit, or even within the four-mile limit? No, but if they desired to protect the fishermen of Nova Scotia they would have insisted that the government should adopt a minute of council declaring that they would allow no trawler to fish in any of the waters of Canada. The hon. gentleman did not seem to know anything about the fishery question, because he said that the trawlers would not sell the fish in the maritime provinces, but that they would sell them in St. Pierre-Miquelon. The hon. gentleman showed that he did not know much about the fishery question, and the fishermen will realize that when they read the speech which he has delivered to-night. I am sure they will, because the fishermen of the maritime provinces may not be parliamentarians, but they send a good many men here to represent them, and they are very particular what kind they send. They try them once, and if they do not do what is right they will not send them back.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Are you prophesying for yourself?

Mr. CROSBY. No, but I can prophesy for the hon. gentleman, because of the speech which he made to-night. I need not fear the fishermen very much. Now, the hon. gentleman said that the government passed a minute of council. He had very great sympathy with the government, but he did not seem to have very much sympathy for the fishermen. If he can get the government out of trouble the poor fishermen may look out for themselves. He did not seem to care anything about the fishermen. But he said that they had passed an order in council forbidding beam trawling. What else did they do? They permitted trawling up and down the straits anywhere provided it was outside the three-mile limit. But the hon. gentleman knows that they could not operate their trawls four or five miles out without interfering with the shore fisheries of Antigonish or Guysborough. Does not this hon. gentleman know that these fishermen fish outside of the three-mile limit, and that it is there that they find their best fishing grounds? Sometimes the fish come close into the shore, and at other times they are outside of the three-mile limit. These steam trawlers may go up and down the coast and destroy the shore fisheries. My hon. friend read a lot from reviews and quoted a lot of resolutions passed by everybody but the people of Canada, but the people of the maritime provinces, whose opinions he should have presented to the House. I challenge him here to-night, I defy him to contradict the statement, as I challenge the hon. member for Guysborough, that there is not a fisherman in the maritime provinces who is not against this. They are unanimous, not a single fisherman favours it, and I challenge either of these gentlemen to get up and say that I am mistaken in that view.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Who says to the contrary?

Mr. CROSBY. The hon. gentleman dare not say to the contrary, but he argues very much against that view, as I will be able to show. That being the case, was it not up to this government, in the interest of the people engaged in the fishing industry, that there should be no such thing as a steam trawler permitted in the maritime provinces? Was it not up to this government not to pass this minute of council, not to allow them to fish outside of the three-mile limit, but to prevent them from fishing in Canada at all? If they had done that would they not have saved the fishermen of the maritime provinces? The hon. member for Antigonish and the hon. member for Guysborough know something about the men who control this steam trawler 'Wren.'

Mr. SINCLAIR. No.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). No, you are mistaken.

Mr. CROSBY. Never mind, then; we will let that go for what it is worth.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It would be interesting to know who control the 'Wren.'

Mr. CROSBY. I know that the Whitmans who support my hon. friend very strongly are the most interested, they buy the fish.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I confess I did not know that.

Mr. CROSBY. I am quite satisfied my hon. friend knows very little. I know that the Whitmans who are great supporters of my hon. friend buy the fish, whether they are interested in the steamer or not. My hon. friend from Antigonish seemed to have an idea that there was a scarcity of fish and indicated that it was necessary to have steam trawlers to supply that deficiency. I would ask any hon. member if with fish, netting the fishermen from one half cent to two cents per pound, there is anything in the cost of fish that would necessitate new methods of catching them? I do not think that any fisherman in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, or Quebec will say there was any necessity for steam trawlers because we have to pay too much for our fish. The hon. members who have spoken must admit that the introduction of steam trawlers would destroy the livelihood of the fishermen of the maritime provinces. They would destroy an industry carried on by a class of men as brave as any in Canada. These men, in order to gain a livelihood, take greater risks than men in any other industry in the world unless perhaps the mining industry.

Hon. members have given at great length statistics relating to fishing in England, Ireland, Scotland and Norway, but we are here to govern our own people, to govern Canadians, and if we can do that well we are discharging our duty because these are the people most interested. The hon. members did not give us anything that was stated by the fishermen of Antigonish or Guysborough, you would think there was no one there to speak to them. The fishermen of our maritime provinces are unanimous in believing that no steam trawlers should be allowed. Therefore, I think these hon. members should make some special effort to satisfy, and do justice to these men. The only way you can do justice to them is by a minute of council or by a vote of this parliament preventing the use of any steam trawler in the maritime provinces.

As to the preservation of the fisheries on the Great Banks we have a splendid class of men who perhaps do greater fishing on these banks than any other class. We want them to be protected, and of course, it would be impossible for us to pass any legislation here that would be effective without concurrent legislation of other nations interested, particularly the United States and France, except in the ways proposed by the hon. member for Guysborough.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

But the hon. member for Guysborough might go further and make his resolution, prevent the purchase of fish caught by steam trawlers whether inside or outside the three-mile limit. We know as a matter of fact, all the fishermen in the maritime provinces know, that these fish are caught within the three-mile limit. My hon. friend can talk about a telegram from this admiral to the next one, but it is only waste of money, and we have to pay the bills ; the steam trawler goes on and brings the fish in just the same.

A word with reference to the fishing industry of the maritime provinces. On the coast of Nova Scotia our fishermen fish the whole winter through without any protection whatever. I would suggest to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he should have a few of the ships under control of his department parole the Bay of Fundy and the coast of Nova Scotia, in order to succour fishing vessels that may be overtaken by sudden gales. In the United States during the last few years they have employed their revenue cutters in patrolling the coasts in this way. This year they have had ten patrolling the coast from Cape Hatteras north. They published statistics last year showing that these vessels had saved hundreds of lives and millions of dollars worth of property. I can see no reason why the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should not have some of his steamers patrolling east from Halifax and others west from Halifax, particularly in stormy weather so that there may be some encouragement to the fishermen, and some hope that they may be brought safely to shore in case they are overtaken by storm. I am quite in accord with the resolution moved by the hon. member for Guysborough, and with all that he has said in supporting it. Nothing can be said to augment his argument. My only objection to the resolution is that it does not go far enough, and I would appeal to the hon. member for Guysborough and to the hon. member for Antigonish to use all their influence to induce the government to stop the sale in Canada of fish caught by steam trawlers. Then we shall have what our fishermen desire and must have if they are to have justice.

Mr. STANFIELD. In justice to the hon. member for Guysborough, I feel it my duty to state that he communicated to me on Saturday that he intended to bring this resolution up; so that if there is any fault it is my own.

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a few observations on the subject before the House, which is one of unlimited importance to the maritime provinces and to Canada as a whole. I take a great interest in this subject, and that interest is intensified by the fact that 40 per cent of the people of the county which I have the honour to represent are directly or indirectly interested in fishing. I therefore desire to call the attention of the House to the importance of the industry to this country. We find that the number of men engaged in the fishing industry in Canada is something like 69,000, that the value of the fish and fish products of last year in Canada was in the vicinity of $30,000,000, and that about $17,000,000 of capital is invested in the industry. These figures show the very great importance of the fishing industry in Canada, and therefore, it is the duty of every member of this House to do what he can to preserve that industry in every respect. I understood the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby), to find fault with the government for not having done more to prevent the operation of beam trawlers within the three-mile limit. As I understand, the government passed an order in council in 1908 prohibiting the use of the beam trawl within the three-mile limit, and in doing this, they exhausted their jurisdiction. I think it is conceded by members on both sides of this House, that they could not do more than that. The hon. gentleman says that beam trawlers have not been prevented from operating within the three-mile limit. I may say that I have had some experience in that regard. I was notified by the fishermen that beam trawlers were operating off the coast of Inverness. I at once telegraphed to the department, and in reply to my request one of the boats of the Government Protective Service was sent there and could very quickly redressed that grievance had they followed up those trawlers in their operations. I am informed they did not do this as they might. With regard to the effect of the operation of steam trawlers on our fishing grounds, from all the information I can gather, it is destined to have the most destructive consequences so far as our fisheries are concerned. To show the great interest that is taken in this subject in the province of Nova Scotia, I may state that the local government of Nova Scotia then passed a resolution in April, 1908, asking this government to use all its power to prevent these trawlers from operating around the coast of that province; and every fishermen's union and several maritime councils in the province passed resolutions to the same effect. This shows the great interest taken in the question by the people of Nova Scotia generally. The operation of the beam trawler is particularly injurious to the inshore fishermen. These men, who engage in hand-line fishing, trawl fishing and net fishing, set their gear anywhere from three to ten miles from the shore. We can imagine long lines of trawls set along the shore, nets of varying lengths set at various distances from the shore, and lobster traps set three or four miles from the shore would fare when in the course of beam trawlers in operation. Even if the beam trawler never comes within the three-mile limit, a large portion of this gear extends beyond that limit, and when the beam trawler sets out shortly before dark and steams along these fishing grounds, we can imagine the result. It would be the same as it has been in the old country. The inevitable result is the destruction of all the fishermen's gear set in the ground where the beam trawler operates. It is in anticipation of this destruction that the fishermen suffer most. When they know that a beam trawler is going to visit their fishing grounds, they are obliged to remove their gear to the shore. This means that their avocation, at least for the time, is gone. They are thus discouraged and will in many cases abandon fishing for all time. I have had strong representations on this subject from the fishermen of my own county. I do not intend to heap any encomiums on the fishermen as was done by other speakers to-night. It is not necessary to do so. The world knows their many deeds of bravery, their trials and hardships. If I did, I might be charged with throwing boquets at them in anticipation of something that may occur within the next couple of years. I may say, however, that I was met by a delegation of fishermen from along the coast of Inverness a few days before I came to this House, after Christmas, and they represented to me that the conditions there were such that if the beam trawler is allowed to continue to operate along that coast, the 40 per cent of our people who are dependent on fishing must turn to something else to eke out a livelihood. With regard to the effect of the beam trawler upon the feeding grounds and the spawning ground, I know that there are reports on file to the effect that they cannot cause very great evils in this respect, but I attach a great deal of importance to the opinions of the fishermen, I have great confidence in their powers of observation, because they are people who devote their whole time to the fishing industry, which to them is their only means of livelihood, and consequently they cannot fail, possessing as they do at least an average amount of intelligence, to have the most accurate knowledge regarding the fishing and spawning grounds I am bound then to accept the honest representations of these people. When I tell you that these engines of destruction are capable of gathering even the large anchors of ships, as they have done in the last year. (and carried them to the port of North Sydney), you can imagine how the bottom over which these monsters operate must be torn up. Assuming for a moment that this takes place and I think there is no doubt about it.

what must we conclude? We cannot come to any other conclusion than that the ground travelled over by these engines must be so disturbed that the fish will no longer be found there. That at any rate is the opinion of the fishermen, and I am bound to respect their views, as the views of men who have watched the movements of the fish in such cases, and I am bound to accept their opinions on questions of nature. It may be said that a large number of steam trawlers have operated in the North Sea for a great number of years without any noticeable depletion taking place there; but, as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) pointed out a little while ago, in order to keep up the average supply of fish it was necessary for these trawlers to go away down to the coast of Africa, and as far north as the ice will allow them to operate. It was only by these means that they could keep up the average supply of fish. They operated, not only in the North sea, but practically from the Arctic to the southern coast of Africa. I have pointed out that the result of the operation of these steam trawlers is to root up and harrow the bottom. In reply we are told that where this is done by a large number of trawlers, there has been no depletion. Well, we cannot compare our small fishing grounds with those large areas in the old country but from the Arctic to the coast of Africa. Take 15 or 20 trawlers and operate them on one of those banks on our coasts and imagine them travelling over these banks four or five months in the year, it will not take them long to cover quite an area, in fact a large fraction of our small inshore boats will be gone over, and you may take it for granted that the area they cover is going to be destroyed for quite a while. That is the opinion of fishermen, and I will accept that opinion against the reports of any scientist or anybody else with regard to this phase of the question.

Let me refer now to the destruction of small fish. We are told by one of the officers sent down to our coast that there is absolutely no destruction of the small fish by beam trawling. But this officer, Mr. Halkett, I understand, made only one visit to the fishing grounds. It is known to men who know anything at all about fishing, that there are certain sections of fishing grounds frequented by the large fish and certain other sections frequented by the small fish. Would it be a very great stretch of the imagination to think that the owner of one of these boats would steer clear of the ground generally frequented by small fish, and go to those grounds where large fish were generally found, and thus give this government inspector the opportunity to say that no small fish were destroyed. In any event I do not see that Mr. Halkett could have obtained a very thorough grasp of his subject by merely going out on one trip, and then making his report. I have often gone out in a fishing boat myself, and I invariably found that a considerable fraction of the boats' catch was small unmarketable fish. This being the case, surely it is not reasonable to suppose that beam trawlers do not catch quantities of this kind of fish when they are found by all other means of fishing. When on this question of small fish, let me say that I do not see why we should not have a reasonable proportion of small fish just as they have in the old country. But the trouble is we have not any statistics to show what proportion of small fish are caught whereas in the old country they have. In the evidence given by Mr. G. L. Alwart before the committee on the fishery investigation appointed by the British government in 1907, to look into this question of steam trawlers, he said that in January, 1902, 19,230 cwt., of immature fish were brought into the port of Grimsby; in March, following 23,770 cwt., were brought into the same port; in April, 34,000 cwt., and in May, 32,000 cwt., or in all 109,000 cwt., brought into Grimsby in these four months. It is most unreasonable to suppose that we in Canada do not have at least a reasonable proportion of small fish, and if we have the same proportion as in the old country, we can easily see the destruction wrought by steam trawling.

I have just a word or two to say with regard to the operations of steam trawlers within the three-mile limit. I am of the opinion that the steam trawlers do operate within that limit. On more occasions than one that famous beam trawler the 'Wren,' and another whose name I do not remember, operated off the coast of Inverness last year. This steam trawler would come about dark, move along aimlessly, and just as soon as night fell would drop their nets, and steam on. That I have from the fishermen of Inverness, who have watched their movements. From their statements I am satisfied that their steam trawler did operate within the three-mile limit. I have strong representation from the fishermen asking the government to send one of their cruisers down there to follow the operations of this steam trawler. That is what the fishermen want more than anything else. They recognize that this government has exhausted its jurisdiction so far as preventing the operations of steam trawlers is concerned, and what they ask the government to do now is to send down one of their cruisers to prevent that steam trawler from operating within the three-mile limit.

As far as the area outside the three-mile limit is concerned, I am in accord with the hon. gentleman who preceded me. The only remedy we can hope for is of an international character. I am satisfied there are no other means we can use, and I am in great hopes that international regulations can be secured and that soon. As I have on several occasions said, the fishing industry of Canada depends upon some regulations of an international character by which the steam trawler will be kept away from the coast, and I trust and believe that the government will exhaust every means within its power to have such international regulations as will for all time settle this burning question, and thus save our fishing industry for our own fishermen rather than for steam trawl corporations.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, as the representative of a constituency comprising within its limits a large number of fishermen, I beg leave to say a few words in support of the resolution submitted to the House by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair).

The fishing gear and engines to which he referred were brought to my attention within the last two years by fishermen in my constituency, several of whom have not the means to secure them. These fishing engines are surely harmful and their use is likely to deprive fishermen of their means of livlihood. Apart from those trawlers which have just been mentioned, there are also what is called trap nets, used largely by fishermen from the United States. These people engage in the waters of the St. Lawrence provided with such immense traps, and often times prevent those fishing by hand from getting a living for themselves and their families out of these same waters.

Representations have been forthcoming to me that I should approach the Minister of Marine and the government in this connection and voice the well grounded grievances of the people of the north shore of the St. Lawrence from Natashquan eastwards.

I am not in a position to express an opinion as to the actually mischievous nature of the fishing engines mentioned; I have no personal experience in this connection. But if any credence is to be given to the unanimous reports of the fishing community settled over a distance of five hundred miles along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, I think I am warranted in calling on the Minister of Marine to inquire into the question, with a view to amending the regulations in regard to licenses, in such a way that the poor man may be in a position to earn a living side by side with those in more affluent circumstances.

It is stated that fast American schooners, provided with trap nets, have been observed operating along the coast, within forty feet from shore, directly opposite the fishermen's houses. Such enormous quantities were being caught, that the boats could not hold them; nevertheless they would throw any surplus overboard, rather than let these poor fishermen have any for charity's sake.

Considering these hardships, I deem it incumbent on me to request that the Minister of Marine should inquire through his officers as to what is going on in those parts, so as to find out some means of protecting the people living along that shore. After all they are Canadians. They are not all electors for the time being, but I trust they will be before long. They are Canadians of all origins, who have been settled in those quarters for hundreds of years and have developed a considerable trade in fish. On account of recent developments in carrying on the industry, these good people are liable to lose their only means of subsistence, as they are unable to compete with such powerful engines of destruction as those referred to. An attempt is made to justify the use of such engines on the ground of the needs of the general fish market. There is something in that; however, consumers would not feel the inconvenience of dispensing now and then with fish to the same degree as the poor fisherman would that of dispensing with bread.

Complaints are being forwarded from the maritime provinces. People in that part of the country which I represent have requested that I should voice their grievances before the government. That is what I have done. I have apprised the government of their views by means of records which I have in person laid before the Minister of Marine. If such representations are worthy of attention, regulations should be enacted at once with a view to protecting the poorer class against the richer, and especially against outsiders, mostly Newfoundlanders and Americans who come and fish in our waters, while Canadians are made to suffer therefrom. Under the circumstances the government should see to it as soon as possible, and find some means of protecting our people against outsiders, while at the same time keeping aloof from any international entanglements.

Mr. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Guysborough for having brought to the attention of the House this important question of steam trawling in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence and on the banks of Newfoundland. This question has attracted the attention of the department ever since the first steam trawler came to our shores. It was in the month of June, 1908, if I remember well, that the first steam trawler appeared on the coast of Canada. Only a few months elapsed when the department, on representations which were made especially by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr.

Sinclair), found it advisable to take action in the matter. I recommended to my colleagues to pass regulations prohibiting the use of steam trawlers within the three-mile limit. That regulation provides:

That His Excellency the Governor General in Council in virtue of section 54 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 45 Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, is pleased to make and does hereby make the following fishery regulation:

The use or operation of vessels known as steam trawlers, operating beam, otter or other trawls for the purpose of catching fish is prohibited within the three-mile limit and in the bays and harbours of Canada.

This regulation was immediately put into force and we have taken the necessary steps to provide that it should be absolutely observed. Some violations of the regulations did occur on the part of the steam trawler which was then operating on the coast of Canada. Instructions were immediately given to the commanders of our fishery protection service that the vessels of the service should follow this steam trawler in order to see that the regulations were rigidly observed. As there were violations of the regulation, we took these people before the court, and, if I remember rightly the captain of the vessel was convicted and even sent to jail. That shows that the department was anxious to prevent these steam trawlers from operating in the bays on the coasts of our territory.

That shows what is the policy of the government. I may say further that the policy of the government has always been to obtain some international regulation under which these steam trawlers could be prohibited from operating to the detriment of our shore fishermen. When I was in England in 1909, I had occasion to take up this question with the imperial authorities. It was on the occasion of the Imperial Defence Conference, and Newfoundland's representative was Sir Edward Morris, the Prime Minister. Sir Edward Morris and myself discussed this question with the authorities of the Colonial Office, and we pressed on His Majesty's government the desirability of obtaining an international arrangement for the regulation of the fisheries on the banks. Our object was to obtain an international arrangement with France and the United States, because those were the only two countries who were engaged to any extent in fishing on the great banks. At that time France already had a certain number of steam trawlers operating on the banks, and the number was increasing. According to statistics I have in my hand in 1907 there were 9 French steam trawlers on the banks, and in 1908 this number had increased to 29: so in one year there was an increase of 20 steam trawlers sent from France to fish on the great banks. I had occasion also, when in Europe, to meet some people in France who were interested in steam trawling, and I found that public opinion was divided in regard to it. In the northern part of France, by which I mean that region including the ports of Dunquerque and Boulogne, the fishermen were mostly in favour of the steam trawlers. But in the southern part of France, south of Finisterre, all the fishermen, if I may judge of the views I heard expressed by a member of the Chambre des Deputès, were absolutely opposed to the steam trawlers. The other country we had to deal with was the United States. Up to the present year, I think the United States have sent no steam trawlers on the great banks or into the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, but I am now informed that during the present year a couple of steam trawlers have been despatched from Gloucester or Boston, and more are likely to visit our banks. That shows, Mr. Speaker, that the steps which were taken by Sir Edward Morris and myself in 1909 to induce the imperial government to take up the question with these two countries, was a step in the right direction, was a step which, if I may judge from the discussion we have had to-day, commends itself to the good opinion of both sides of the House. I may add that since then some communications of a confidential nature have been exchanged between this government and the imperial government on that question, and it is now engaging the serious consideration of the imperial government. Therefore, when my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) states in his resolution that steps should be taken, he is stating what has already been done by the Canadian government.

Now there are some objections which occur in considering the question of prohibition, or of regulation of steam trawlers outside the territorial limit. The first objection we met with was as to how far the territorial jurisdiction of Canada extended. There is no doubt that within the three-mile limit our jurisdiction is unquestioned; but outside the three-mile limit we have no jurisdiction. But how far have we jurisdiction in the bays? You are aware that for some years the question has been agitated in Canada and in the United States as to the extent of our territorial jurisdiction in the bays. In the case of a bay only six miles wide there is no doubt about our jurisdiction; but in bays wider than that, the question arose whether foreign fishermen could come in and fish outside the three-mile limit on each side of the bay. However, that question has been settled so far as the United States is concerned, and in a way which I am sure is satisfactory to the Canadian people. The Hague award stated that certain bays were absolutely within our jurisdiction and our territory; as respects others, a recommendation was made that some regulation should be passed not including those bays as part of Canadian territory; and as respects others also some boundaries were fixed. So this first objection which was met in discussing the question is now decided in our favour by the Hague award. It has been said that the method of steam trawling is a great improvement upon the old mode of fishing. I do not propose to discuss that question now at any length. I may say, however, that it is considered advisable that in all matters with regard to the fisheries we should adopt absolutely the same principle. For example, we have to make regulations in some cases to limit the catch of fish. Take the regulations we have passed with regard to purse seines, with regard to traps, with regard to pound nets. In many cases we have adopted regulations to prohibit the use of certain fishing methods because they were too destructive, in order to preserve our fisheries, and in order the more effectively to regulate them. We have been adopting all sorts of restrictions in order to preserve the fisheries. Take the issue of licenses, the close seasons, the size of mesh, and the gears, which I have just mentioned and which gears have been prohibited in order to prevent a too active catch of fish. Then, take steam trawling; although this is an improvement on the old system, I should say that if this improvement is still of such a nature that it could be considered as exposing our fisheries to depletion, we should take the necessary steps to prevent the use of such engines. That is what we have done in the regulation that I have just mentioned, and that is what we have done in the representations which have been made to the imperial authorities in order to bring about a conference between the different countries interested. We have to consider three main points, first, the conservation of the fisheries; second, the interests of the fishermen, and third, the requirements of the fish trade. The conservation of the fisheries is certainly a thing which appeals to most people interested in the preservation of our natural resources generally speaking. We spend large sums of money in order to protect our natural resources, and we, at the same time, take all the necessary steps in order to preserve those natural resources. The fisheries are certainly one of the best natural resources that we have, and I think it would be a pity if all the steps necessary were not taken to preserve those fisheries.

Nothing too good can be said in favour of the hardy fishermen who daily expose their lives in order to get their livelihood. A very beautiful and interesting picture of the work and devotion of these men has been presented by my hon. friend from Guysborough, and I do not intend to say very much upon this point because he has done it in so excellent a way. But, I may say that we should always keep in our minds in the framing of our regulations and the making of our laws, the interests of those fishermen, and that is the reason which induced me to recommend to my colleagues, as I did in 1908, the prohibition of steam trawling, which I described a few minutes ago. I must admit that the requirements of the fisheries should equally not be lost sight of. The requirements of the fisheries are very important and it is acknowledged that the government, in framing these regulations, should also look to the preservation of that interest. In connection with that, I think it is only a matter of justice to read to the House a letter which was addressed to me by the manager of a company which owns the steam trawler the 'Wren.' This letter is dated about a month ago, and it reads as follows:

Maritime Fish Corporation, Limited,
St. Nicholas Building,
Montreal, December 12, 1910.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Re steam trawlers. My attention has been called to a resolution proposed by Mr. Sinclair, member for Guysborough county, Nova Scotia, which is to be brought before the House of Commons, and I have been directed by the board of directors of this company to place some information before you relating to the advantages attached to this mode of fishing, with a view to developing the fisheries of the Atlantic coast.

This company purchased from the Pioneer Steam Trawling Company in May last the steam trawler 'Wren,' and prior to the time we took over this trawler, very little had been done, and the steamer was not operated for commercial purposes.

To develop a steady and uniform supply of sea fish to the inland cities, this company decided it was absolutely necessary to improve upon the methods of fishing pursued in Guysborough county, realizing the Department of Marine and Fisheries were doing their share towards the development of this industry. Prior to this time the fish dealers in the larger centres of Montreal and Toronto were dependent upon Portland and Boston for their supplies of fresh haddock and codfish, which was purely through lack of organization on the part of any company to give the dealers a steady supply. In previous years for many weeks the dealers were without fish, and at times had to pay exorbitant prices from the United States markets. We are glad to state that from May 1, 1910, the trade have been largely supplied with fresh fish from the Atlantic coast, taken by the steam trawlers operating out of Canso. This was owing to severe storms along the coast for several weeks in the month of September, and for one week at the latter part of September the Canadian markets were absolutely and wholly supplied by steam trawler fish at from three and one-half to four cents per pound delivered in Montreal, whereas the quotations from Boston and Portland during the same period were seven and one-half to eight cents per pound.

Steam trawlers are being operated out of Grimsby and Aberdeen, Scotland, to a very large extent, and at the present time clubs of fishermen realizing the advantage this mode of fishing has, are now owning and operating these steamers. I inclose copy of a clipping taken from the Gloucester 'Times,' dated November 29, in which it refers to the third steam trawler of a proposed fleet of vessels launched in the United States. Since that time I am informed another steamer has been ordered, and if we in Canada are to compete with our friends on the other side of the border, we must have modern and up-to-date appliances.

Furthermore, from information I have been given, some thirty-five French steam trawlers operated last season on the Atlantic coast, and I cannot see that it is fair to propose legislation prohibiting Canadians from being on an equal footing with other nations.

To further illustrate to you the advantages afforded to fish merchants and fishermen operating along the coast, this company has paid to the fishermen one-half cent per pound more for their fresh haddock landed than in any previous year during the same months, and the product instead of being dried or salted as it has been in the other years, was largely disposed of in the fresh and smoked state, and the fishermen through this means have received cash for all the product offered immediately landed, whereas in other years where they were dependent upon foreign markets, the product has been held awaiting favourable market conditions.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) ALFRED H. BRITTAIN,
Director and General Sales Manager.

This letter is certainly of some importance and I thought that for the benefit of the discussion, I should read it to the House. Of course, I do not agree with everything that is included in it because I think that we could very easily get a supply of fish at all times. Of course, we must give some consideration to the representations which are made in that letter. My correspondent has alluded to what the department has been doing in order to encourage the sale of fresh fish on the markets of Ontario and Quebec. We thought that it was a very serious handicap for our fish trade that in former years the markets of Montreal and Toronto were almost entirely supplied with fish coming from the United States.

The information I had, however, was that while this fish was virtually caught in Canadian waters, most of the business on the coast was carried on by American fishermen, who were taking our fish to the American markets, Gloucester and Boston, and from there were distributing it to different parts of the United States and Canada; and it is a remarkable thing that during many years we were obliged to pay duty on our own fish, that is to say, fish caught in Canadian waters, transported to Boston and Gloucester, and then shipped from there to the Canadian markets of Montreal and Toronto. It was thought that some steps should be taken to put an end to this state of affairs. My colleagues appropriated a certain sum of money which was devoted to facilitating the transportation of fresh fish from the maritime provinces, or from the Pacific coast to the interior of Canada. I am glad to be able to state that this policy has produced very good results. I find that in 1906 there were imported into Ontario and Quebec from the United States 1,968,572 pounds of fish. In 1908 this amount was reduced to 1,180,543 pounds, and in 1910, in the last fiscal year, the amount imported was only 751,569. That shows that in spite of the increase in our population, in spite of our large consumption of fish, because the consumption has increased largely in the last few years, there has been a large reduction in imports. Why? Because we have paid to the express companies and the railway companies a part of the cost of transportation of fresh fish in cold storage and paid one-third of the cost of the transportation of fresh fish by express. Now, all the fish which is consumed in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa, in fact in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, comes from the Atlantic provinces of Canada, being transported in the way I have just described. This policy has been very beneficial, and I hope that within a short time it will not be necessary for the government to continue to subsidize the transportation of fresh fish, because people will have become accustomed to eating fish and to receiving it direct from the maritime provinces. This shows the result of the policy adopted by the government. I do not believe that this result is due to the use of steam trawlers, but simply to the improved facilities which have been given for the transportation of fresh fish.

How shall this question of international agreement be considered? Perhaps it would be advisable for me to refer for a minute or two to the arrangements or agreements which exist in Europe upon that question. Since 1839 there has been an agreement between France and England as to the fisheries on a certain section of the Channel waters bordering those two countries. This agreement provided for the regulation of the length of beam, and the size of the mesh, and prevented any trawler fishing near a herring or net fishing boat in such a way that the objection made to-day to the use of steam trawlers on the ground that they were destroying the fishing gear of herring fishermen or fishermen using set trawls, are entirely overcome. The regulations under the agreement are framed in such a way that it is absolutely impossible for any steam trawler to interfere in any way with the ordinary fisherman, and to destroy his gear. In 1882 the North Sea Convention was made. To this convention Great Britain, Germany, Holland, France, Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden were parties. This agreement defines, first, what are territorial waters, adopting the head line theory for which we have fought so many years with the United States, and which was at last recognized by the award of The Hague tribunal. It states, also, that within such territorial waters no boat can fish except with the authority of the country adjoining these waters. It also provides that the trawl fishermen are not permitted near drift net or long line fishermen, and even that when fishermen come to fish with nets the steam trawlers must leave the bank and go and fish elsewhere. This was the agreement embodied in the North sea convention, which certainly should form the basis of any agreement which may be reached between Great Britain, the United States and France. Under this North Sea Convention and in virtue of the powers which England possessed, laws were passed in 1885 empowering the Board of Fisheries of Scotland to prohibit the use of steam trawls in territorial waters; to-day, with the exception of one place, steam trawling is absolutely prohibited in the territorial waters of Scotland. Later a regulation was passed prohibiting the landing in Scotland of fish caught by steam trawlers. But, unfortunately, and I call the attention of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) to this point, instead of helping to preserve the fisheries, this regulation has worked detrimentally to the interests of the other fishermen. In fact, the foreign fishermen who took their fish outside of the three-mile limit were prevented from landing them at any port in Scotland, and they had to go to Grimsby or some other port in England where the regulations did not apply.

The hon. member for Halifax suggested that we might have some law or regulation prohibiting the landing in Canada of fish caught by steam trawlers. I am afraid that such a regulation would work detrimentally to our own fishermen. At present they have the advantage of sending fish from the maritime provinces to the inland cities of Canada ; but the effect of prohibiting the landing of fish caught by steam trawlers, especially at seasons when they could not be caught by the other fishermen, would be that the New England fishermen would catch the fish off our coasts, carry it to the United States, and then sell it to us as American fish, and we would have to pay the duty on it. The Americans would have all the benefit of that situation to the detriment of our own fishermen. Therefore, I think we had better try to reach an agreement with the United States and with France upon some such regulation as that which exists in Europe by virtue of the North Sea Convention. If the total prohibition of steam trawlers could be agreed upon by these countries, it would be the best thing that could happen to us. But if it should be impossible to reach such an agreement, I think the next best thing for us would be to try to get an agreement such as I have just mentioned.

My hon. friend from Guysborough and other speakers have referred to the report made by Mr. Halkett, the naturalist of the department. Perhaps it is only just to Mr. Halkett, who is certainly a very good officer, in whom I have always had full confidence, that I should read his report. It is not a definite report, but only a summary of his observations. He is going to prepare a report, which will give concisely and precisely all his observations in connection with his trip on the ' Wren.' Unfortunately, Mr. Halkett has not been well for some time, he is now absent on sick leave, and his complete report has not yet been prepared. But as soon as he returns, he will be asked to prepare that report, and I shall be glad to bring it down with the other papers. In his summary report, he says :

Having carefully followed the fishing operations carried on by steam trawlers on board the trawler 'Wren,' I have to report that the complaints made against such operations are entirely without just reason. On the contrary, instead of being exceedingly destructive and wasteful, practically everything drawn up in the great net, excepting the dogfish which are entangled in considerable numbers, is utilized and turned to account, and the very destruction of the dogfish is a benefit, whilst the men are entitled to save their livers on their own behalf. I understand that until recently the flat fishes, such as the rough-dab, were thrown away; but since the establishment of the glue factory at Canso such are now sold to that institution. There is really nothing drawn up in the net which any economical fishing corporation would ever think of wasting, and certainly the captain of the 'Wren' is awake to the interests of the Maritime Fish Corporation in this respect. The bulk of the fish caught is haddock, and it is for them that the trawling is carried on. The weight of the catch of haddock was 27,580 pounds, exclusive of 3,300 pounds of assorted small ones. This numerically, judging by the respective sizes, approximately represents some 6,895 and 1,650 fish. The weight of flat fishes was 325 pounds, of the cod 150 pounds, and of the hake 1,550 pounds, or numerically 100 flat fishes, 25 cod and 100 hake. True, I was dependent on the corporation for these figures after landing at Canso; but based on my own observations on board the 'Wren,' I can vouch for the figures being approximately correct. The total weight of these was 32,905 pounds, and the number approximately 8,770. Besides leaving out the dogfish there were a few silver hake, pollock, skate and gaspereau and a shad, and angler and an eel. It is difficult to form an estimate of the number of dogfish caught, but the number was very considerable. Sometimes there would be only two or three, and at other times the net seemed to have swept through a regular school of them; their livers are cut out and they are immediately destroyed and thrown overboard. Besides the true fishes there were a very limited number of squid, saved and other odds and ends like the angler, skates, &c., for making glue; and there were hardly any other invertebrates except a few worthless star fishes, &c. I will work the matter all out in a more detailed way later, but meanwhile give some broad outlines in a summary way. Occasionally, but very rarely, I saw an insignificant gaspereau or other very small fish thrown overboard, but there is virtually no waste whatsoever. The operations were carried on not closer to the land than four miles, and besides the 'Coquette' no other fishing craft was to be seen.

(Sgd.) ANDREW HALKETT,
Naturalist, Dept. Marine and Fisheries.
St. John, N.B., Oct. 29, 1910.

This report, as we see, was sent direct from the maritime provinces, and I think that before condemning it, we had better wait until we have Mr. Halkett's full report, which no doubt will give the reasons for these figures, and the circumstances which attended his visit on the 'Wren.' It is urged that the department should make some further experiments of the same kind in order to corroborate this report of Mr. Halkett. I am glad to accept the suggestion, and I shall be glad to give instructions to Mr. Halkett or to some other officer of the department to make further observations on the subject.

I wish to say a word with regard to the report made by Mr. Cowie some years ago and which was published as an appendix to the report of the Marine and Fisheries Department for 1908-9. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has referred to some figures which are given at page 378 by Mr. Cowie in order to show what has been the catch of fish in Scotland, and in the North Sea, and surrounding districts during a number of years. I think it only just to Mr. Cowie that I should refer to his valuable report. We may not agree entirely with what he says, but no doubt his services have brought a great deal of information which we all welcome. Mr. Cowie gives the following figures as to the catch, and the number of trawlers from 1898 to 1906:

	Trawlers.	Cwt.
1898..	149	778,731
1899..	207	980,326
1900..	232	1,078,164
1901..	256	1,325,072
1902..	275	1,465,017
1903..	250	1,566,870
1904..	270	1,705,633
1905..	266	1,745,481
1906..	274	1,870,517

Mr. BRODEUR.

My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said that those figures do not show whether they represent only the catch in the North Sea or whether they cover also more distant territories. Those figures show the catch, not only in the North Sea, but also in Iceland, Faroe, and some other places. The observation has been made that those figures are not conclusive because they do not show whether the fish were caught in home waters or far away. I may say, however, that I have these figures before me, and they show that in 1904 from the home waters there were brought into Scotland 1,150,440 cwt.; in 1905, 1,066,306 cwt.; in 1908, 1,385,978 cwt.; in 1909, 1,390,833 cwt. As to the other places such as Iceland and Faroe, the quantities were as follows:

	Faroe.	Iceland.
1904..	77,151	23,209
1905..	173,311	96,261
1908..	23,438	279,035
1909..	67,073	164,749

But those last figures do not contravert the fact, which was stated by Mr. Cowie also in the same report, that the quantity of fish caught in the home waters has not been decreased, but has increased from 1,150,441 cwt., in 1904 to 1,390,833 cwt., in 1909. I think it only fair to Mr. Cowie that I should put those figures before the House in order to show that he is not at all prejudiced or biased in favour of steam trawlers.

Mr. JAMESON. When was the report made?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the 2nd of February this year.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is it a fact that separate statistics are kept for the North Sea and outside waters? I read this afternoon a statement made by one of the representatives at a meeting in London in which he said it would be very desirable to make a change in the keeping of the statistics so that we could tell what fish were caught in the North Sea, and what in other waters.

Mr. BRODEUR. Lately the Scottish board in Scotland have been keeping separate statistics as to these different fishing grounds. I have a map here showing exactly for 1907-8 what have been the increases and decreases in those different years. I might perhaps quote some of the information given. The fishing grounds are divided in this map into different districts which are called by letter (a1), (a2), &c. down to (f2). In the southern part of the North Sea which covers from Calais to Harlingen, on the one side, and from Calais to Grimsby on the other side—there has been over that whole area a slight decrease in both 1907 and 1908. In the district called (b4), which is near the Dogger Bank, there has been an increase in 1907, and a decrease in 1908. On the Dogger Bank, opposite Newcastle, there was a large decrease of 41 per cent in 1907 and 37 per cent in 1908. In the district called (c2), there is a decrease of 18 per cent in 1907, and of 20 per cent in 1908. There has been an increase all through. Take the district opposite Edinburgh, there has been an increase in the inshore area of 90 per cent in 1907, and a decrease of 20 per cent in 1908. In the district next to that called 'E,' there has been an increase of 80 per cent in 1907, and an increase of 88 per cent in 1908. And in district (d2), the middle ground there has been an increase of 119 per cent in 1907, and 9 per cent in 1908. I do not wish to trouble the House with further details. These figures, included in the report of Mr. Cowie show that there has not been a decrease in the North Sea, but an increase.

It has been suggested by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) that we should keep in commission some vessels to protect the fishermen. I agree with that view and have already given instructions that a vessel should be kept in commission at Canso, that the men who go out on the banks may know that they have a vessel at their disposal to protect them should necessity arise. My hon. friend from Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Girard) called my attention to the necessity of protecting by agreement our fishermen of the north shore. I do not see how it would come under the scope of the agreement which is contemplated as likely to be made between Canada and the United States and France in regard to steam trawling, but I will try to get more information on the subject from my hon. friend and from the records of the department, and if the features suggested can be embodied in the agreement when we get into conference to discuss the question I shall be glad to keep in mind the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

There is no objection to this motion being adopted, because already steps have been taken to bring into effect what the mover (Mr. Sinclair) has had in mind.

Mr. C. JAMESON (Digby). I fully concur in the remarks of hon. members who have spoken on this resolution, that the subject is one which calls for prompt and vigorous action on the part of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I further agree with them when they say that the result of steam or beam trawling is likely to be most serious and to have a very detrimental effect upon the future value of the fishery of Canada. I must say that when I saw this resolution on the Order Paper, I was impressed with the idea—perhaps an erroneous one—that the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) who had given the notice was censuring, in some very slight degree it might be, the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Since nearing the minister (Mr. Brodeur) on the subject I am inclined to think that perhaps I was not very far out of the way. At all events, while the hon. member who moved the resolution evidently does not think that, up to date, all has been done that could or might have been done, the minister himself is perfectly satisfied that he has done all that reasonably could be expected of him. The resolution of the hon. member for Guysborough was as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, as the mode of fishing known as steam trawling, prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside Canadian waters, is destructive to fish life, it is expedient, in order to conserve the deep sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened with the view of securing an international agreement prohibiting this mode of fishing in such spawning grounds for deep sea fish, as the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the North Atlantic adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland.

My own impression is that the resolution might well have gone a little further, and besides condemning the prosecution of the trawling in spawning grounds for deep sea fish, it might have covered all those grounds in which the fisheries are prosecuted. Because, not only is the 'beam' or steam trawling of serious injury to the fishing ground as such and to the spawning grounds as such, but, as has been amply shown this evening, it is most detrimental to the interests of those carrying on the ordinary methods of fishing in the different fishing grounds within Canadian waters and outside Canadian waters. Now, I am absolutely in favour of the abolition of this steam or 'beam' trawling. I think there is no room for half-way measures in this matter, but that such measures will be merely trifling with a very serious situation. Canada to-day stands in the unique position of having in respect to some—not all—the only unspoiled fisheries yet existing in the Atlantic. We desire to do all we can to conserve these fisheries. We do not wish merely to get out of them what can be got to-day regardless of the interest of the generations to come. Conservation of the fisheries is one of the most important things that the department should work for, and it is one subject to which, I think, they have not bestowed as much attention in the past as was advisable. I may say, in this connection that, in the year 1909, the convention of the Conservative party in the province of Nova Scotia, held at Truro, passed a resolution in relation to this very subject, as follows:

We sympathize most profoundly with our fishermen in regard to the menace to our shore fisheries arising from the use of steam trawlers. The Dominion government has failed to take action in this regard and we condemn the local government for failure to effectually urge the protection of our fishermen and express the opinion that an international treaty should be promoted and such other steps taken as may effectually deal with the question.

I read this merely to show that this subject has been a very live one for a considerable time. As far back as 1909 representations had been made from different sections of the province of Nova Scotia urging that steps should be taken to combat this danger as a menace to the fisheries, and on the occasion referred to, these representations found expression in the resolution I have just read.

Now, the damage which these beam trawls do, consists not only, as I have said, in destroying the spawning ground by tearing up the bottom, but also in the injury done to the fishermen who use what are known as trawls, consisting of long lines of fishing gear, to which at intervals shorter lines are fastened. These trawls are quite expensive, and have to be kept in suitable condition for operation. Anything which tangles or breaks them involves considerable loss to the fishermen in straightening out the trawl and repairing it. This means loss of fishing, and consequent loss of profit to the fishermen. The subject is one which calls for prompt and vigorous action on the part of the government, as a result of this steam trawling, an intolerable condition has developed in certain waters in and about the maritime provinces. I am informed that recently one of these trawlers has entered the Bay of Fundy, and has been, or is about to prosecute its operations there. I am confident that the people who have been fishing in the Bay of Fundy will be very much opposed to this invasion. I cannot urge too strongly on the department the necessity of early and energetic steps to cope with this threatened evil. Now the department has known of this condition for some time, and we cannot help asking ourselves what the department has been doing. It seems that as far back as 1909, from the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries this evening, this matter came under his personal observation, and he went so far as to discuss it with the Prime Minister of Newfoundland at the imperial conference in 1909. But thereafter, apparently, nothing has been done, the matter has been allowed to drift. To-day we find ourselves actually in the same condition as we were in 1908, so far as regards any steps taken by the department. I may say that I observe in the report of the department for the year 1908-9 some reference to the subject of steam trawling. There is a casual reference on the part of the deputy minister in his report to the minister, appearing at page XXI, where he says:

The invasion of steam trawling off Canadian shores has been introduced this season, 1908-9, by an imported trawler named the 'Wren,' which vessel was brought to this country by a Halifax company.

Immediately urgent representations were made to the department on behalf of the shore fishermen strongly remonstrating against the operations of the vessel, the objections advanced being that large quantities of small unmarketable fish were taken and wasted, and that she was destructive to the gear of the hand liner, as well as of the grounds resorted to by them for fishing purposes.

So serious were the complaints against steam trawling immediately following its introduction, that the department procured an order in council dated September 9, 1908, a copy of which is quoted. Then follows the order in council which reads:

His Excellency the Governor in Council, in virtue of the provisions of section 54 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 45, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, is pleased to make, and doth hereby make the following fishery regulation:

The use or operation of vessels known as steam trawlers operating beam, otter or other trawls for the purpose of catching fish, is prohibited within the three-mile limit and in the bays and harbours of Canada.

The report then goes on to say:

The action of the department in procuring the order in council which prohibited this method of fishing within the three-mile limit and the bays and harbours of Canada did away with any question of encroachment on the territorial waters.

Now although this statement was made in the report of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, we learn from the member for Inverness (Mr. Chisholm), tonight, that such had not been the case, that even within the three-mile limit, these trawlers are still at times prosecuting their work, and that serious injury to the fishing interests had resulted therefrom. But the main thing which we note here is that as far back as 1908, the government had actual knowledge of the conditions existing in this respect, and apparently knew that some steps were necessary in order to mitigate injury or to prevent damage, and they took the course which has been stated in the report I have read. But in the same volume, issued by the minister for the year 1908-9, we find another interesting report, which was evidently considered of sufficient importance to take a place in the volume. This report is made by John J. Cowie, an officer, if not an adviser, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, as appendix No. 20, page 373, in the report of the minister. On page 384 he makes a statement which I will read to the House, because taken in conjunction with the action of the department and with the statement of the deputy minister, it seems a little startling, not to say inconsistent. He says:

With regard to the framing of laws for the restriction and regulation of beam and otter trawling in Canadian waters, I may be allowed to say that, in my opinion, all that is really necessary is the keeping of trawlers outside the three-mile limit along the coast, and outside of the ten-mile limit in bays, with rules providing that no trawler shall fish within at least three miles of any boat or vessel which is in the act of fishing for herring or mackerel, or within three miles of any vessel anchored for the purpose of line fishing, so that line fishermen shall not live in constant fear of having their fishing gear swept away and destroyed.

Those rules, dealing with extra territorial waters, would, of course, have to be mutually agreed to by the countries interested to be of any use. There need be no fear of trawl fishing ever depleting the sea here.

I draw particular attention to that last statement.

The conditions on this side of the Atlantic are altogether different from those on the other. In European waters, in the comparatively narrow North Sea, excessive fishing goes on from January to December by an immense fleet of trawling and other vessels, and in spite of this, the total landings, as has been seen, are actually increasing rather than diminishing. In Canadian waters, on the other hand, and even on the Grand Banks —and this should be kept in view when placing restrictions on trawling here. Owing to climatic conditions there is an enforced close time of at least three months in each year, during which little or no fishing of any kind takes place, and during which even the operations of steam trawlers would be practically stopped. Indeed the Gulf of St. Lawrence, that immense fish breeding area, is practically closed to fishing from December to May, so that the fishing grounds, even if excessively worked on during the open season, would, owing to the long rest, soon become replenished. It is, therefore, inconceivable that trawling can develop to such a degree on this side of the Atlantic as ever appreciably to diminish the extraordinary abundance of certain classes of fish such as cod and haddock in the waters of Canada, and I think we may rest assured that its fisheries will remain a splendid heritage for all time.

I think it is now beyond a doubt that trawling has come to stay here, and although its development will, of necessity, be slow, nevertheless, looking to the time when Canada will have many more millions of people within her borders than she now has, when railway rates have been reduced, and the distributing facilities will have been increased to keep pace with the expanding trade, I believe there will be seen a fleet of Canadian steam trawlers running in from the Atlantic grounds with daily supplies of wholesome fresh food fish.

Mr. Cowie is evidently reconciled to the continuance of steam trawling. He is an officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and as such his words carry weight and may be said to reflect the views of the heads of that department, for they have not been repudiated by the minister.

I must say that, taking into consideration this statement of the expert of the department—I do not know whether he is merely an expert or whether he is something akin to a prophet because he seems to be usurping the functions of a prophet when he says that the fisheries upon the Atlantic coast are not going to diminish—together with what I might call the remissness of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in not taking more active steps towards devising some means for the protection of the fishermen, and the fisheries, I cannot do otherwise than come to the conclusion that the minister himself is not very much impressed with the necessity for taking any such step as that. The minister, in referring to this said in effect that unless total prohibition could be obtained the best thing to do would be to arrive at an agreement based on the North Sea Convention. I think that was the statement that the minister made. He is not in his place so I cannot ask him whether it is or not. I do not understand what he means by that except it be that unless the different countries, France and the United States, for example, are willing to unite with Canada and agree to certain regulations which will prevent the operation of these steam trawlers outside the three-mile limit, he does not know that Canada can go any further than to prevent the operation of them within the three-mile limit. In other words, nothing further can be done than that which has already been done. The minister seems to me to take an erroneous view of the matter when he says that it would place Canadian fishermen and the fishing interests at a disadvantage to take a step, with regard to the framing of the regulations, which would actually prevent the landing of fish caught by these trawlers at Canadian ports. He says that it would work out in this way, that while Canadians would be debarred from the privilege of operating these steam trawlers, Americans, under the new regulations with respect to the charge for the modus vivendi licenses, if the agreement now under consideration should pass, would come to our ports, take these fish outside the three-mile limit, carry them to the American markets and Canadians would be debarred from sharing in that profitable business. I am led to say in reply to this that, if my memory serves, a somewhat similar condition confronted the administration of the department of Marine and Fisheries a number of years ago prior to 1896. The question was whether or not purse seining should be permitted. I believe that the fishery branch of the Canadian government, made several attempts at a conference with the United States with respect to this, and while the government of Canada contend that purse seining should be prohibited the government of the United States was not prepared to go as far as that, the result being that they could reach no agreement. Canada decided that in so far as Canada was concerned purse seining was to be disallowed. Regulations were passed which did prohibit the use of purse seines by Canadian fishermen. The United States have since agreed to this in the treaty waters. I think that to-day the question is : Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries doing all that he should do? It is no use for us to go to others and say 'we want you to agree to certain stringent regulations' unless we are able to say that we ourselves have set our house in order. It is not worth while to ask the United States government to agree to something that we have not done ourselves. I object altogether to the United States having anything to do with the policy of the Canadian government with respect to the fisheries. It seems to me that there is too much of this deferring to the United States when it comes to dealing with our own fisheries. We are having too many joint agreements with them, too many international commissions with respect not only to our fisheries but to our waterways. Now, it is our railways. Practically we have come to the point where it is a question of the United States arranging our tariff for us. All these things should be worked out on Canadian lines, and I think the government of Canada should set a high standard if they want others to follow. I do not believe that the Canadian fishermen would find any fault with the government for saying that steam trawling should not be permitted, and I think the Canadian government should take every means it possibly can to prevent the operation of steam trawling in Canadian waters and outside of Canadian waters, and to do that by preventing the ships from landing their fares at Canadian ports.

The minister referred to a question which is a somewhat interesting one, when he stated that in the year 1907 the department had arranged to give certain assistance to the transportation of Canadian-caught fish in order to bring the fish into the upper Canadian market. Prior to that, he stated, the Americans practically controlled the fish market in central Canada. He quoted the following figures: In 1906, Canada imported from the United States 1,968,000 pounds of fresh fish; in 1908, under this new arrangement whereby Canadian fish got into the Canadian market, its import had fallen to 1,180,000 pounds; in the year 1910 this had fallen to 761,569 pounds. This statement gave the minister a good deal of satisfaction and I think there is every reason for satisfaction in that regard. But the minister omitted to state one very important thing which had led up to this condition. He should have gone a little further and explained that in the year 1907 the government of Canada increased the duty on fish from half a cent to one cent a pound, making it the same as that charged by the United States. It was that very measure, together with the assistance in the payment of the transportation charges which gave the Canadian fishermen on the Atlantic coast, entrance into the Canadian market as far as western Ontario. I remember that in the year 1906, when the commission known as the tariff commission, consisting of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) visited Nova Scotia, I had the honour of appearing before them at the town of Middleton representing the fishing interests of the county that I have now the honour to represent in this House. I then pointed out to the Tariff Commission that the fact of the United States having a duty of one cent a pound on fish as against our half cent a pound gave them control of our upper Canadian market, and that it was largely supplied from Portland, Gloucester and Boston ; also that the transportation rates were very high and that the chance of getting Canadian-caught fish in the upper Canadian market under the then existing conditions was practically nil.

I was pleased at a later date to see that the government had taken the steps to which I have alluded, and I wish to point out the results in the way of increased shipments from the maritime provinces to our Canadian markets. At page LXXVI of the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for 1909-10, I find the following figures showing the shipments of fresh cod and fresh and smoked haddock in the last ten years:—

Year.	Cod, Fresh or Green.	Haddock, Fresh and Smoked.
	Lbs.	Lbs.
1900	Nil.	7,560,625
1901	Nil.	8,691,669
1902	Nil.	7,751,883
1903	504,500	10,060,283
1904	1,238,985	9,875,700
1905	1,876,000	14,216,384
1906	2,170,695	18,246,866
1907-08	6,895,900	15,259,535
1908-09	5,432,100	11,845,619
1909-10	4,354,871	13,557,442

Within the last three years, although there has seemingly been a reduced catch (to judge from these figures) there has been a tremendous increase in the quantity of green and partly cured fish, which has come into the upper Canadian market from the maritime provinces, a trade which has been of very considerable advantage to those on the Atlantic coast, who have secured that market.

I wish, in closing, to give to the House a description of one of these steam trawlers and its methods of operation. I shall quote an extract from the New York 'Syren,' quoted by Mr. M. H. Nickerson, M.P.P. for Shelburne in the local legislature in 1909. The extract reads:

The second largest trawler built this year by Messrs. Cochrane & Sons, of Bologne, was launched recently from their ship-building yard at Selby, the 'Canada' by name. She is described as the largest trawler afloat, and, in fact, is five feet longer than the 'Notre Dame des Dunes.' Her principle dimensions are 156 feet long, 26 feet broad, 15 feet deep moulded, and she will be fitted with powerful triple expansion engines by Messrs. Amos & Smith, of Hull, having cylinders fifteen inches, 25 inches and 42 inches by 27 inches, with a large boiler 15 by 10, and 180 pounds pressure. She has been specially constructed for the Newfoundland fishery, having large trawl winches to contain 1,000 fathoms of warp on each drum. She has also steam windlass, electric light throughout, isolated fish rooms, and in every respect has been fitted up in the most up-to-date manner for deep-sea fishing. Messrs. Wales, Dove and Company's well known bitumastic enamel has been applied to the bottom fore and aft ballast tanks, cabin, engine and boiler spacongs, bunkers, fish room, feed tank, forecastle, store rooms and plates. We understand that Messrs. Cochrane & Sons have in hand a similar vessel for Portuguese owners. Mons. J. Huret is probably the owner of the 'Canada.' He has a number of trawlers engaged in the bank fishery.

The operation of the trawl is thus described:

This trawl was an immense bag of netting, say 100 feet in length and perhaps longer in some of the latter devices, with a very wide mouth or opening on each side of which there was a board, a short wooden wall, resting on the bottom, and between them were stretched two strong ropes forming the upper and the under edge of the mouth, to which the twine was attached. There was a rope from each of these boards to a drum, to the bow and to the stern of the ship. The whole apparatus is dragged slowly along over the bottom while the ship is under headway. The same action caused the mouth to open wide, while the netting took in the fish. It could easily be seen that this device would enclose a multitude of ground fish, such as cod and haddock, and like varieties wherever found. When it bagged them it was hauled up by a powerful steam winch and the contents taken on board. When the catch was large the weight of the huge mass killed the fish and often coral and sharp stones were mixed with the fish, which only helped to bruise them more. The worst feature about it was that it destroyed a large number of small fish, which, on account of their size, were not saleable, but if allowed to grow would be saleable. It was like cropping the field before the harvest was ripe, something which would be deprecated on land was looked upon as a great stroke of business at sea.

That was in the spring of 1909, and I understand from the minister that since 1908 the number of French trawlers around Newfoundland has increased from 8 to 29, so it will be seen that this method of fishing is in vogue to an alarming extent; that wealthy interests are building up this business, that it is working to the detriment of the small individual fishermen, that the fisheries are being injured by it, that the spawning grounds are being disturbed and damaged, that the fishermen are having their gear destroyed, with consequent loss of time, that in every respect this trawl fishing must be a constant source of embarrassment to the fisherman and of injury to the fisheries.

I cannot use words stronger than those used by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) in urging on the government the necessity of taking some steps which will effectually prohibit the operation of these vessels in Canadian waters and the landing in Canadian ports of fish caught by them. If we take that stand we will meet with the approval of fishermen throughout the maritime provinces. It may be that a large interest here and there will be prejudicially affected, but I believe that on the whole the end will justify the means; that the fisheries will be conserved and that the interests of the fishermen, which are worthy of the best consideration which can be bestowed on them by this House, will be benefited. The government should protect the poor and hard-working fishermen; the men who are rich enough to build expensive steam trawlers can always protect themselves. I urge on the minister and the House that some steps be taken to protect the Atlantic fisheries of Canada by preventing the landing of fish caught in the trawls at Canadian ports and prohibiting within the three-mile limit the operation of these steam trawlers. The minister has the fisheries protection service fleet at his disposal for that purpose, and under the order in council of 1908 he has power to prohibit their operations. We have the statement of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Chisholm) that these vessels have been operating within the three-mile limit and altogether we have a position that calls for prompt and energetic action on the part of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I trust that such action will be taken.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am greatly pleased with the way my resolution has been received by the minister and by the hon. members who have spoken. I was sorry my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) should feel that I had not treated him courteously.

Mr. CROSBY. I beg to apologize. I did not know at the time I made that statement that notice had been given to the Conservative whips, and I am quite willing to apologize. I thought we had a right to know in advance that this was coming on, and was not aware that notice had been given.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am quite satisfied with my hon. friend's explanation. This resolution was placed on the Order Paper on the 22nd of November, and it was, of course, open to every member to find out on what day it would be discussed; and, as a matter of fact, the whip of the party asked me if I intended going on with the discussion, and I said I did. I supposed that hon. gentlemen who were interested in the resolution would keep themselves posted in this respect. Permit me for a moment to make reference to the remarks of my hon. friend from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Fraser), about the new regulation under which American vessels are allowed to obtain a license for $1 in place of the old rate. My hon. friend seemed to infer that that meant that the American vessels have obtained some fishing privileges which they had not before in Canadian waters. As I understand the regulation, that is not the case. They have exactly the same privileges that they had formerly under the old license, the only difference being that whereas under the old regulation they paid $1.50 a ton in order to get a license, now they will pay the nominal sum of $1 in order to get a license. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) was somewhat excited in his speech, and showed himself anxious, or at least willing, to make this a political question. I would be sorry if we had any politics in a question of this kind. I think we ought to be able to agree on some regulation that would meet the circumstances, and I will gladly join in any reasonable proposal which my hon. friend can make that I would consider effective. I regret, however, that my hon. friend finds it necessary to blame the government in this matter, because really the government is not to blame. It has done everything that we could have asked it to do so far. It has prohibited absolutely the use of the trawler in Canadian waters. It has exhausted its jurisdiction so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CROSBY. Did not my hon. friend hear the hon. member for Inverness state that the trawlers were operating within the three-mile limit along the coasts of his county? And is he not in favour of the absolute exclusion of steam trawlers by not permitting them to sell their fish in the maritime provinces?

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have not had any such complaint from my constituents. I keep myself very well posted with what is going on in connection with the fisheries of my county, and I can state that the order in council prohibiting the use of trawlers within the inshore waters has been fairly well kept on the coast of my county. Not later than last September I had a meeting at which nearly all the fishermen of Canso were present, and we discussed this matter, but no one made the statement that the trawler had been working within the three-mile limit, and there is no such complaint in any of the petitions from my county that are on file.

Mr. CROSBY. Are the fishermen of the county of Guysborough perfectly satisfied with the condition of things at the present time?

Mr. SINCLAIR. No, they are not satisfied. They would like to drive the trawlers off the shore altogether, and I sympathize with them in that desire, and if my hon. friend can show me any practical way in which we can control this matter better than we have been doing I shall be glad to assist him.

Mr. CROSBY. I have suggested a way in which it can be controlled—by the government prohibiting the sale of fish from these steam trawlers in the maritime provinces.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is a proposal that may be worth considering, but the hon. gentleman has not answered the minister's objection to it, that it would simply drive the business to the United States. By doing that you cannot stop the fishing; you can only stop the sale on the coasts of Canada, and the consequence would be that these trawlers would catch the fish outside the three-mile limit, take them to Boston, and from there ship them to Canada. What we want is not to stop the sale of fish in Nova Scotia—that is a very poor proposal—but to stop that method of catching fish. We do not want to drive the fish past our own coast and build up the markets of some foreign nation.

Mr. CROSBY. I will answer the Minister of Marine and Fisheries now. I believe the fishermen of the maritime provinces know more about their business than either the hon. member for Guysborough or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and therefore I take their unanimous decision in favour of absolutely excluding from the maritime provinces the steam trawler, or the beam trawler, and I ask my hon. friend if the people of his county do not desire to prevent the steam trawler selling a pound of fish in the maritime provinces.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, you have heard the answer the hon. member has made to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and if you are satisfied with his logic I suppose you will be convinced. The hon. member also made a proposal which I suppose will be regarded by the Halifax 'Herald' of to-morrow as a brand-new proposal coming from himself; that is, that a patrol boat be put on the coast in order to protect the fishermen from the sudden storms that come in the winter season. My hon. friend is not very well posted as to what is going on along the coasts of Canada, or he would know that some weeks ago a patrol boat was placed at the point where most of the winter fishing is going on. I refer to the steamer '33,' which has been doing patrol work at Canso. My hon. friend comes to-day with his proposal, after this boat has been put on the patrol grounds by the government, and has done certain work, and he brings in this proposal as if it were now made for the first time.

The hon. minister said that some further investigation should be made, and some officer should be sent on board these vessels to make an investigation. I do not think that will be effective. We shall have to do something more. We would require to adopt the same system as is adopted in Great Britain, and do some experimental work ourselves. The government should take steps to find out for themselves how many of these fish are undersized and whether this trawling system is really a destructive method or not. I question if they could get at the correct facts by sending an officer on board one of these ships. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) seems to want to improve my resolution by saying that these trawlers should be prohibited from all the grounds on which fishing is carried on. I would be quite willing to agree if I thought a resolution would be effective; but the reason why I confine myself to what is described as spawning grounds, is that I wish to have a resolution adopted which will be acceptable, not only to the Canadian government, but to the governments of the United States, and Great Britain and France. If we can point out to all these that it is important in the international interests that the fish should be preserved by protecting the spawning grounds, we might get their consent to regulations for that purpose. My idea is that, in confining the resolution to the spawning grounds, it is more likely to be accepted by foreign governments than the one suggested by my hon. friend. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be more cheerful, and give credit to the present government for what it has done for the fishermen. I shall not take time just now to go into that matter, because that would be a very long story, but both my hon. friend and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) are well aware what a splendid record this government has had in the last fourteen years with regard to the fishermen. All my hon. friends have to do is to travel along the coast, and see the large number of breakwaters built to protect the fishermens' boats, expenditures, I may say, which were very severely criticised by some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Let them consider again the large number of lighthouses erected, and the large number of buoys placed in the different harbours and bays, and the number of wharfs built and steamship subsidies to carry the fish to market. The fact that a freight train has been put on the road between Nova Scotia and Montreal to carry fish at low rate and high speed is something my hon. friends ought to bear in mind. All these things have been of the greatest benefit to the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

I regret that my hon. friends should look at this from a political standpoint, but I am glad to know that they will unite with me to-night in the vote, and I hope that something material will result. I trust that we may succeed in obtaining international regulations which will prohibit steam trawlers from operating in the gulf of St. Lawrence and on the banks.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. ROCHE. I beg to move that resolution (No. 12) which stands in the name of the hon. member for St. Antoine's division, Montreal, (Mr. Ames) be discharged, as my hon. friend would prefer to discuss the question raised in this motion, in the reciprocity debate.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the slightest objection.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence between any department of the government and Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Trade Commissioner in Holland regarding the Netherlands Land Company, since the date of the last resolution adopted by this House, calling for the same at the present session; also a copy of the official document issued by the government respecting the high regard in which western farm lands are held by some of the principal loan and investment companies.—Mr. Monk.

For a copy of the curators' reports in the cases of all banks for which curators have been appointed.—Mr. Foster.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.12 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 7, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 113) to incorporate the Dominion Development Railway Company.—Mr. Smith (Nanaimo).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That from this date to the end of the session, government orders, on Wednesdays, shall have precedence immediately after questions to be put by members.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are, of course, a good many items of considerable importance still standing under the head of public Bills and orders. I am afraid that, if Wednesday is taken, these will be consigned to the scrap heap. Has the Prime Minister thought of that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am afraid there is not much help for that circumstance. As my hon. friend is aware, all the notices of motion remaining on the list have been gone over at least eight or ten times, and many of the items under public Bills and orders have been called twice. Looking over the notices of motion, I believe that not many of them are very contentious, and I still believe and hope we can get through public Bills and orders on Monday evening.

Mr. LENNOX. I would urge upon the Prime Minister not to cut these gentlemen off without notice. I do not know that I am right in reading this motion as taking effect forthwith?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. To-morrow will be Wednesday. If the Prime Minister would agree that this should not go into effect until a week from to-morrow, I should have nothing to say against it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well. At the request of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) I will agree that this shall commence with Wednesday the 15th of February.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We had intended to go on to-day with the reciprocity debate, but I arranged with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), that we shall take this up on Thursday instead of to-day.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CORRECTION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION.

Mr. GRAHAM. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to make correction of an answer given to a question put by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), with reference to the cost of the Transcontinental railway to December 31, 1910. The figures furnished to me yesterday represented the amount of money paid out to the end of last year, but did not include certain sums that have been paid in January, or that will be paid, but which belong to last year. The corrected figures give the total cost of the Transcontinental railway to December 31, 1910, as $93,920,956.16.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is now present, I would invite my hon. friend from St. Anne Division, Montreal (Mr. Doherty) to repeat in his presence the objections which he voiced on a previous occasion to the selection of the site for the new Montreal barracks, the particulars of which I was not able to give.

Montreal, new barracks, $100,000.

Mr. DOHERTY. When this item came up on the two previous occasions we understood from the Minister of Public Works that the barracks were to be constructed at Longueuil, and that one of the important purposes of this barracks was to place a unit of the permanent force there, and to provide a military school for the benefit of the Montreal district. I inquired then whether the officers who take an active interest in militia matters in Montreal had been consulted, and had approved of the location of these barracks at Montreal, or what their judgment had been. For myself, while I do not undertake to pronounce a judgment on that matter, I did venture to point out that a military school situated so far away from the residences of the majority of the young men who would in all probability attend this school, was open to some objection, that it was a place difficult of access, and would hardly meet the want that has been felt in Montreal. If I am not mistaken, it has been found that the military school situated at St. Johns does not afford the oportunity that was expected for the young men, who I am sure we would all be glad to see taking an active part in the operations of our militia, and who we want to see afforded every opportunity of qualifying themselves to perform their duties effectively. The situation of the school at St. Johns was found to be such as to prevent a large number of young men taking advantage of it, inasmuch as they are all engaged in business activities, and it is impossible for them, without great inconvenience and considerable loss, to absent themselves from the city. Now to overcome that objection it was suggested that we should have a military school in Montreal, but a military school at Longueuil can hardly be called a military school in Montreal. Individually, I am not familiar with the precise site on which it is proposed to erect these barracks, but I do know that the access from different portions of Montreal, I think I may say from those portions where the majority of those who want to use the school would come from, is not convenient or easy. If this school is to be available for the class of young men who are to attend it, I think it would be important that its courses should take the form of evening instruction, and if they do take that form, it will be exceedingly difficult, in many cases impossible for young men to go over to Longueuil early enough in the evening to have any reasonable time to devote to their lessons and get back home again at a reasonable hour. I do not oppose the erection of the barracks, but I am pointing out what I think is desirable, namely, that the minister should take the judgment of those officers in the Montreal district who know the needs and requirements of the class of young men who are to attend this school.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I think the points of view presented by my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) are entitled to the greatest possible consideration, and they have not escaped the consideration of the department. I can say that the officers of the garrison of Montreal, or perhaps more important still, the military district of Montreal, have been consulted, some of them at any rate, about this matter. As a matter of fact, they are interested in the establishment of a military school at Montreal, and have been for a long time. I have had an opportunity of discussing the matter with a good many of the more prominent men, and I will say at once that while they do not all approve of the location at this point—there is no one place perhaps in the city of Montreal on which they would all agree—I think, however, I can safely say that in a general way the officers of the city of Montreal, and of the military district of Montreal, will be satisfied with this location. The difficulty of accessibility that my hon. friend has referred to is an important one. But the same difficulty would exist if, for instance, the school had been located at Pointe aux Trembles, which was one of the places talked of. We own a large rifle range at Pointe aux Trembles, a few miles below the city of Montreal, although it may now be within the city limits.

That was talked of, and the present proposal is more agreeable to the officers generally, as far as I know, than the location at Pointe Aux Trembles would be. Then there was a suggestion as to Lachine, another point some distance to the westward of the centre of the city, quite as far away as the present proposed location. That proposal would have been as good as the present proposal but no better. So, upon the whole, even from the point of view of accessibility I think the present location is fairly satisfactory. Accessibility will be measured by time. How long does it take from a given point, the post office, or some central point in the city of Montreal to get to a given place? I understand that by way of the Victoria bridge at all times of the year, and by crossing the river by ferry in certain seasons of the year, the time occupied in going from the centre of Montreal to Longueuil is only a few minutes, and that the tendency is towards improvement in that regard. There is the Southern Counties railway, and there is the street railway giving direct accommodation with the centre of Montreal—better communication than there is with our rifle ranges at Pointe Aux Trembles. I think there is no serious difficulty on that ground. As far as officers outside of the city are concerned, it cannot make any difference to them and these military depots are of quite as much importance to the country militia as to the city militia.

As to evening schools and that sort of thing, I do not know what the course of instruction would be, but it would always be easy for us to arrange a course of instruction at hours which would suit professional and business men in the city, and an effort will be made to do that wherever the location may be. We had also to consider, Mr. Chairman, another matter of importance, and that is the question of expense. The government own this land. It was owned by the British war office, and it was handed over to the Canadian government at the time of confederation. It is a block of land between 100 and 200 acres in extent and, as a matter of fact, it is costing Canada not one single dollar as against the problem we had before us of purchasing between 100 and 200 acres of land in the city of Montreal, or near Montreal at a cost of $300,000 or $400,000, and perhaps $1,000,000. It seemed to me that that was a point that could not be disregarded. It is a matter of very considerable consequence, and I felt that a very difficult problem had been solved when I found this land practically waiting for us, and I thought I was acting in the public interest as well as in the interest of the militia, to have adopted it as a site for our barracks at Montreal.

I may say that in addition to my own judgment I consulted the best military authorities we had. I consulted General Sir Percy Lake, who was here at that time, and he entirely approved, and I think I may say that it is the unanimous opinion of the Militia Council, and of the best authorities here and in Montreal that we should have pursued the course we have.

I think that perhaps covers the points raised, but I understand my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) to raise a question as to the overflow of certain portions of this land at certain times when the river is high, and as to the unsanitary conditions which might arise therefrom. It is a most important question, and it has received and is receiving the careful consideration of the department. I believe that with a very slight expenditure of money in erecting a dyke all these difficulties of overflow can be met. There is only a small portion of the land which has ever overflowed at any time, and that can be protected by a proper dyke as is done at many points on the other side of the river about Montreal itself. As to the sanitary conditions, I am informed that the greatest difficulty is with regard to the water, but, of course that is a problem which can be solved and must be solved. As to the question of getting rid of sewage there is a difficulty, but we are able to solve that difficulty, and it will be done in accordance with the most up to date principles governing matters of hygiene.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I desire, to correct a mistake which has been made by several hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question. They speak of the site of the barracks as being in Longueuil. For instance, I heard my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) referring to it in that way. It should have been referred to as Montreal South. Montreal South is a distinct municipality, and I have received two or three letters from gentlemen protesting against it being confused with Longueuil. They do not want it to be called Longueuil, they want it to be called Montreal South because it is a distinct and a very active municipality. As regards the transportation question, as the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) has just said, access to it is easy enough now by any of the three routes available—the steam railway, the electric railway, and the ferry boat. Unless you located the site in the very city of Montreal you could not get a better place or one more quickly accessible than the site of Montreal South. If you desired to locate at Pointe Aux Trembles or any other place outside of Montreal you would have to go a long distance out before you could get as large a space as you get at Montreal South. You cannot get a more healthy place than Montreal South. It is on a higher level than the city of Montreal unless you get up on the mountain, it is higher than Longueuil, and it has a magnificent water-power to get water from. I do not think there is a place in the province of Quebec healthier than Longueuil and Montreal South. The water which flows on the south side of the St. Lawrence is freer from impurity than the water in the other portions of the St. Lawrence in the vicinity of Montreal. The minister has said truly that the question of expense is a very important one. The government own 180 acres of land there which they can get for nothing, which has been there doing nothing and giving no revenue at all. If they bought the same quantity of land somewhere around the city of Montreal I do not think they could get it for less than $300,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $500,000.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Yes, and that is a very important consideration. I would point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), that the men who will use that school do not all come from the city of Montreal, but live in the military district. I do not think the government could have made a better choice.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it of convenient access for the officers and men living in the city of Montreal ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. Certainly. There are four ways to get there: an electric railway service every 15 minutes, a steam railway, a ferry boat, and in winter the ice bridge.

Mr. DOHERTY. I must apologize most profoundly and most humbly to the outraged inhabitants of Montreal South, that I should have been guilty of describing them as citizens of Longueuil, I had thought that Longueuil was a fairly good, an eminent name in this country, but as a good Montrealer, I can sympathize with the desire of all Canadians to connect themselves with the name of that great city. I trust my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion), will convey to his outraged constituents my humble apology. I would plead by way of mitigation that the Minister of Public Works told me the barracks was to be built in Longueuil.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said the barrracks was to be built at Tête du Pont, and my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), should know where that is.

Mr. DOHERTY. Well, perhaps the residents of the city of Montreal South would rather be described as living at Tête du Pont than at Longueuil. Be that as it may, I would not venture to put my judgment against that of the high military authorities who are said to have pronounced in favour of this location. I do not want to make any invidious comparison, but I think it will have to be conceded that the greater number of those who will use the school, live in the city of Montreal, and from that point of view, it is not unreasonable to urge that the convenience of the greater number should be a major consideration in this matter. After all, there is not much object in having a school if you do not have the scholars, and if our militia is to be what we desire, then we should endeavour to put at the disposal of these patriotic young men who devote their time and energy to the service of their country, every facility for qualifying themselves in the best manner. There is no doubt that the question of economy is also important, and it has been pointed out that this land now belongs to the Crown, and that it would cost a great deal of money to purchase property in Montreal. But, Montreal is fairly large even without going to Pointe aux Trembles or Lachine, and within its municipal area there are to be found properties of very varying value. If the purpose to be served can only be properly served by putting the school in the city of Montreal, then the country ought to be willing to spend the money. To build an establishment of this sort in a place where it will not serve its purpose, simply because you can build it cheaply, is like going to a bargain counter to buy things you don't want, simply because you get them under the regular price. Certainly if we cannot get the school to serve its purpose then we had better save our money.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Does the hon. gentleman want the school to be built within the limits of the city of Montreal?

Mr. DOHERTY. My desire is that the school should be built in a place sufficiently accessible to the majority of those who will use it so as to produce the best possible results. I do not say that it is absolutely necessary that it should be within the limits of the city, but you can get outside the city limits without going across the St. Lawrence river. True, as we have been told, there is a railway, a ferry boat, and a tramway running to the south shore, but the ferry boat starts from the extreme end of the city which makes it quite a long journey for the residents of St. Anne, or St. Antoine, or the North End, and, the ferry boat only runs at certain intervals. Then, the ferry runs from Montreal to the very much despised Longueuil, and after you get to Longueuil, you are still quite a distance from Montreal South. I doubt very much if a large number of the officers and men could get from their residences to the ferry and across the river in less than an hour or an hour and a quarter. As to the steam railway, I would suppose that the trains are not run at hours which would enable those attending the night school to get from the city to the school and return the same evening. I am informed by those who use the tramway, that at certain hours of the day, (in the evening particularly), the tramway runs once every 40 minutes, and if one car is missed, you have to wait 40 minutes for another, which of course, would be an obstacle to attending the evening school by that means of access. On the whole, it appears to me that the location of the school would be highly inconvenient for a large number of the young men, unless they should be prepared to sacrifice their time at the occupations by which they earn their livelihod. I understand the minister to say that the officers of the district, so far as he consulted them, were not agreed on any one site in Montreal, and I would be glad to know if they did not at least agree that it would be desirable to have some site in Montreal or in the immediate vicinity of the city. Is the minister aware that the public press in Montreal has spoken upon this subject and that 'La Presse,' a newspaper which certainly is not unfriendly to the present administration, but which has given them a very consistent support, had an article on this subject since the matter came up in this House, in which it pointed out briefly, but with great force, the objections I had been making. Furthermore, that newspaper takes the responsibility of saying that the place is in a most doubtful condition from the point of view of health and the further responsibility, which I would not take, of saying that the officers or men connected with the permanent force, condemn the site as being in most doubtful sanitary condition. This responsible journal, I presume after inquiry, has felt justified in making these statements, and I need not say that they have not been inspired by me. The fact that this paper takes the responsibility of making these statements, should furnish ground for the minister to at least, promise that the grounds for these assertions shall be looked into, and that it shall be made quite certain that from the point of view of health, there is no objection to the site chosen.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will repeat what I have said in regard to the latter point: all questions relating to water supply and sanitation have received, are receiving and will receive most careful consideration. I do not think there is any difficulty with reference to these particular points. As to the question of accessibility and the view which officers in Montreal take of the site, several of the prominent senior officers of Montreal have told me that they prefer this site to some sites within the city of Montreal which have been mentioned. As to the means of getting to the place and the statement that there is only one car in 40 minutes, these are growing times, and I am rather inclined to think that when the military barracks and school are situated at Montreal South there may be a car once in every 20 minutes, or perhaps once in every 10 minutes. So I do not think that is a very serious difficulty.

As to the relative numbers of officers and non-commissioned officers who require facilities for teaching or training living in the city of Montreal and in the country, I think a very much larger number live in the country and therefore if we satisfy the outside portion of the militia we are accomplishing a good deal. The fullest steps will be taken to consult the convenience of officers and non-commissioned officers residing in Montreal. I cannot see why evening classes might not be held at the new school at Montreal South; there will be no difficulty in getting there before 8 o'clock or 7.30, and in getting home after 10, probably 25 or 30 minutes would be all that would be necessary to get from Montreal to school. Then it is quite common to hold classes in the great central drill hall in Montreal, and there is no reason why a detachment of instructors should not to be sent into the city at any time to suit the convenience of any officers who find it inconvenient to go to the barracks. So, taking it for all in all, I think this will be found to be an entirely satisfactory solution of a very difficult problem, one of the most difficult I have had to contend with since I became Minister of Militia. We have been talking about establishing this school at Montreal for over 14 years, and I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the day when my hon. friend will have these buildings constructed and this school and barracks successfully established.

Mr. HUGHES. Last year two or three officers wrote me concerning this proposed site. Their objections were first the inaccessibility of the site, and second, the condition of the ground. It was pointed out by these gentlemen that part of the ground is very low and that part of it is a sticky clay, so that on dewy mornings, unless it were well drained, it would be a rather unfavourable ground on which to drill. I have made inquiries from some of the gentlemen representing that part of the country and they tell me that that condition extends only a short distance along the river bank and that the ground is higher and more sandy further back.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is true, it is very high ground, most of it.

Mr. MONK. I happen to be acquainted with the topography of that place, and I think there is some misunderstanding. Montreal South is a thriving suburb and the land just near the St. Lawrence is a rather favourable site, but it gets lower as you go back, and if the property in question is somewhat remote from the river there will be considerable expense in draining it. Why has the site been changed? Because at one time the government had decided practically upon a different and to my mind a very much more convenient site. Why the department should have left that site aside in order to take one much less convenient, one would like to know.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend say there was a site selected by the government before this one?

Mr. MONK. The government at one time selected a site on the western slope of the mountain, and it is absurd to talk of a price of $400,000 or $500,000 for that site, because that property was sold lately for $150,000 and could have been bought for less when the government had it in view. If you calculate what it will cost to build at Montreal South on account of the sanitary condition of the ground there, you will find that this government, however desirous it may be to economize, might have spent $150,000 in buying the site on the slope of the mountain and still have saved money. It is a matter of almost public notoriety that the military officers in Montreal highly approved of that site. I understood that the minister himself (Sir Frederick Borden) had visited it and pronounced it unequalled.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What place?

Mr. MONK. The site chosen at Northmount, not very far from the Hunt Club.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never chose it.

Mr. MONK. Well, we thought it was a sure thing because we heard that the order in council had been passed.

Mr. BRODEUR. There never was such an order in council passed

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend deny that there was a question of this site?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was question of several sites, but there never was any order in council passed selecting that site.

Mr. MONK. That may be, but it was rumoured in Montreal that the matter had been put through with the approval of the Governor General. The site I refer to is situated within a few minutes of every part of the city. Every car leaves there and you can get there for 4 cents at any hour of the day or night.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So every car leaves there with a transfer.

Mr. MONK. When you embark on this new railway, the Montreal and Southern railway, and get to the other side, my hon. friend knows there is still a great distance to go before you reach this place.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The electric road runs right alongside this property.

Mr. MONK. At any rate, it is quite a distance to reach from the ferry, or the starting point of this new electric road.

Mr. GEOFFRION. You can start from McGill street, in the centre of the city.

Mr. MONK. How often does my hon. friend go there?

Mr. GEOFFRION. I go there every week and I take the cars on McGill street.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that you have to get over there before you can take the railway, and you do not get a transfer. You have to go to the foot of McGill street and there take the car, and it takes you 40 minutes to get to Longueuil. I am not aware what the fare is.

Mr. GEOFFRION. It is 5 cents right to the grounds, and there is a car every 3 minutes, not every 40 minutes.

Mr. MONK. Is my hon. friend quite sure the fare is only 5 cents?

Mr. GEOFFRION. Quite sure.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me impossible to compare the two places. For the people of the city—and those who will avail themselves of the school will mostly come from the city—and for students from the country it would be vastly more convenient to have the site within the limits of the city than on the outside. I am not versed in strategy, but perhaps my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) could give us some pointers on that; but I should think that in the case of war it would be better to have the school on the top of a mountain than on low ground on the other side of the river and close to the United States. Of course, I am not talking from a naval point of view.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would have this advantage, that a navy could get there.

Mr. MONK. By the time we shall have done the sanitary work required there and other necessary expenditures, we shall have expended more than one-half of what we could have bought this place for on the slope of the mountain. We understood at the time that experts from the department, high up in the military organization, had visited that site at Northmount and had unanimously recommended it. The department has largely increased its expenditure. We are spending over $7,000,000 this year and our expenditure will soon be up to $10,000,000, as compared with the $1,200,000 which we expended some years ago.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). In what riding is Northmount?

Mr. MONK. It is just alongside the riding of my hon. friend.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). There are many ridings alongside of mine. It is alongside the riding of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is altogether too cunning. He knows very well where it is, and must not imagine that in a matter of this kind it is anxiety to have the military school in the county of Jacques Cartier which leads me to make these observations. I am very much interested in Montreal South, as I am a land owner there, and also very much interested in the progress of Montreal, and I certainly did not dream it was in the interests of the county of Jacques Cartier that I supported the very reasonable view taken by the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty).

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There never was any lot of land chosen by the department as a location for a military school in Montreal. There was a lot at Lachine, and I do not know whether it is this one to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. MONK. No, to Northmount, which is on the western slope of the mountain.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There was a lot, part of the way up the mountain which I visited myself at one time, but which the general officer then, General Lake, told me was altogether too small and would not suit the purpose at all. I went and visited the lot myself, and it seemed to me not large enough. It was some 50 to 60 acres at the most, and would have cost over $200,000.

Mr. MONK. It has just been sold to a religious order for $150,000, and property has considerably advanced.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am speaking of the price put upon it at that time. It seemed to me altogether beyond a reasonable price—I do not mean for the land, but to be paid by this department for that quantity of land. I wish to emphasize the point that there never was a lot of land in Montreal or anywhere else selected for this purpose until we had decided upon this.

Mr. HUGHES. How is this property situated for rifle ranges?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is exactly opposite the Pointe aux Trembles rifle range which point is accessible by ferry, and the rifle ranges will answer the purposes of the permanent force there perfectly well.

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot refrain from expressing my gratification at finding that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is showing himself more and more in favour of military and naval expenditure —provided that the expenditure be made in his own county. He did not so express it, but the lot of land he had in mind when he spoke a few minutes ago is situated in his county, and he was willing to have military expenditure made there. Perhaps my hon. friend's attitude in opposition to military expenditure might be pleaded as justifying our refusal to select the site to which he refers—it might frighten him to see military works in his county. I should have been rather afraid that my hon. friend would take umbrage at such a thing being done. I am glad he is coming back to the idea that we might establish that school in his county, and I congratulate him on his conversion. Now, there is no doubt that the place selected is a suitable place for such a military school. The school that we have had, that at St. Johns, is situated at some distance from Montreal. It has been, and is to-day, rendering great service. Still, it was certainly desirable that we should have a military school near Montreal. For some years the question has been discussed and military authorities have been considering the question. I am glad that my hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) has been able to select so good a site for this purpose. A number of sites were suggested to the government. The Minister of Militia has given his best consideration to these, and has come to the conclusion that the site on the other side of the river, at Montreal South, near Longueuil, is the best available. There is a special reason which, I think, should commend it to the House, and that is the land already belongs to the government. It had been advertised for sale, if I remember well, some years ago, but we could not get the price we expected.

Mr. MONK. You can get $100,000 for it now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a very suitable site, and one easy of access to the people of Montreal, more so than almost any place that could be selected on the Island of Montreal. At one time, there was not much communication with Longueuil from the city of Montreal. But there is now constant communication by vehicles crossing the reconstructed Victoria bridge. And the property of the government is just opposite the ferry boat landing, the ferry giving a 15-minute service during the summer. There is also railway communication. I think that, in all respects, it is the most suitable place that could be chosen. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier says that the government will have to incur large expense in drainage works and other improvements. But if we were to purchase the property the hon. gentleman has in mind there would be the same expense.

Mr. MONK. Everything is there now.

Mr. BRODEUR. Besides, it is not near the river as is the site which has been selected.

Mr. MONK. Has the government sold any part of its property in Montreal South?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not since I have known anything about it. I think there are one or two schools situated on it that have been there for many years. But nothing has been sold of late, and nothing will be sold.

Mr. MONK. Has anything been sold in the last two years?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. MONK. Has the government purchased any other property in Montreal South?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that covers all the items under vote No. 139. Perhaps we might take up No. 140 under which there are two or three military items for Ontario that stood over.

Kingston Royal Military College, additional dormitory accommodation for cadets, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does any hon. gentleman desire information as to this item? If not, it might be considered carried.

Mr. CROTHERS. We should have more information from the Minister of Militia before this is carried.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have a memorandum on the subject from the commandant of the college; but I have not it here, because I understood the reciprocity debate was coming on to-day, and so did not bring it. I am not prepared, therefore, to go on with this item; so it would be better to let it stand. I will be prepared, when it comes up again, to give all information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better let all the military items stand.

Public Works—Chargeable to Income—Generally—Construction of immigration buildings, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to construct buildings of a smaller class required to meet the necessities of localities, which necessities arise very often without long warning. Hon. members can understand that, as the western country is filling up very rapidly, cases of this character arise.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was spent out of this vote last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We erected a building at Unity, Saskatchewan, did some work in the Halifax detention hospital, constructed a building at North Portal, on the international boundary, put up small buildings at Wilkie, Battleford and Saskatoon, leaving unexpended of last year's vote $7,707.40.

Mr. BLAIN. Where may we expect this to be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect to spend $3,100 in Edson, Alberta, that being now the point of departure for a considerable portion of the Peace River district. A road has been built from Edson, which is near the foothills of the Rocky mountains, and people are travelling from there through to the Grand Prairie, in the Peace River district. We propose expending $3,100 there, and at Entwistle, $3,100. That is all that is actually engaged.

Experimental Farms—New buildings and improvements, renewals and repairs, &c., in connection with existing buildings, fences, &c., $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a general vote for experimental farms all over the Dominion.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the minister should give us a statement of the places where these expenditures will be made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not do that, but I can say where the expenditures were made last year. We expended last year at Nappan, $343; Rossland, $39; Brandon, $864; Indian Head, $515; Lethbridge, $15; Agassiz, British Columbia, $780; Ottawa experimental farm, $11,251; additional office building, $7.517.

Mr. BLAIN. I asked the minister how he proposed to expend the amount we are now voting.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the details, for the reason that it has been customary each year to take a vote for $25,000, and those expenditures are made upon the request of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could give us an explanation?

Mr. FISHER. This item is larger than it was last year, because of the fact that the number of farms has increased. We have added to the number of farms by purchasing a new property. The first year while that property is being equipped it is paid for out of another vote, which appears in the estimates under the heading of Agriculture, Arts and Statistics. But when the farms are established, then any additional buildings or repairs that are required are paid for out of the vote in the Public Works Department which is now under discussion. I have not with me at the moment the details how it is expected to expend this amount of money in the next year, but I will be able to give them when the Agricultural estimates are down. The buildings at the Central Experimental farm here require considerable additions and repairs, which will have to be made. Some of the houses here have got into a bad condition, and must be attended to.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that mean that my hon. friend was neglecting his duty?

Mr. FISHER. No, it means that we have been carrying them along as far as we reasonably could without making extensive repairs. But the time has been reached when an overhauling has to be done. We have expended a little from time to time. For instance, the house of the director at the Central Experimental farm will require next year a complete overhauling. Dr. Saunders has been careful not to expend anything that was not absolutely necessary, but something must now be done. This item applies, not only to the Central farm, but to all the branch farms. There was a time a few years ago when this item was only $10,000 a year; last year it was $20,000, and now we ask for $25,000. I may mention another item of expenditure. Some years ago we undertook to lay down cement walks around the buildings of the Central farm, for the reason that such walks would last practically forever. Formerly we used to lay down wooden sidewalks, which had to be repaired frequently.

Mr. THORNTON. Is it customary, after an experimental farm has been established and equipped, to charge necessary repairs to the Department of Public Works?

Mr. FISHER. We have a vote in the estimates under Arts, Agriculture and Statistics for additional branch farms that we may buy; we make the purchase of those farms out of that vote. Then as soon as the farm gets into working order, we cease to take the necessary expenses out of that vote, and this vote would apply to it as to the older farms.

Mr. THORNTON. How many farms have been established this year?

Mr. FISHER. This last year we have only established one new farm at Scott, in the province of Saskatchewan. I hope before winter is over to get one or two more. I have also purchased two farms in the province of Quebec within the last few months. One of these is completely equipped as it was purchased, the other will require considerable to be laid out upon it, but this vote will not be applicable to that. But as soon as the farms are purchased and the necessary buildings are erected, then this vote would be applicable for repairs.

Mr. BEST. Does the minister get an estimate of the cost of the new buildings and improvements on buildings, or does he ask for a lump sum?

Mr. FISHER. The sum is based upon the estimate of the farm staff as to what will be required in the ensuing year.

Mr. BEST. Then it is only what you expect to need?

Mr. FISHER. This is an estimate of what we want to provide for.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Can the minister tell us whether this vote includes any provision for a dairy building at Agassiz, or if that has been otherwise provided for?

Mr. FISHER. The changes at Agassiz which my hon. friend refers to will be taken out of this vote.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Is it the intention to erect a dairy building there and pay some attention to dairying in connection with the Agassiz farm?

Mr. FISHER. It is intended to so rearrange and reorganize the buildings there as to establish a good dairy farm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before you take up the next sub-item, I would like to say that the other day the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe) asked whether any of the departments had purchased land from the Grand Trunk Pacific Development Company, and I told him that I was not aware of it, and said that nothing had been purchased by my department. In answer to a question, he told me that he had the Department of Agriculture in mind. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture being present, I would be very glad if he would be good enough to make a statement, so that it may go on 'Hansard' for the information of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FISHER. A little over a year ago I entered into negotiations for the purchase of a piece of land near the station of Scott, on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway between Saskatoon and Edmonton. I am speaking now from memory, but I think there are 223 acres of land which I purchased from the Grand Trunk Pacific Development Company. This area was part of the land which the company had acquired from the government under the arrangement with them for town sites along their line. I secured it from them at exactly the same price as they paid to the government, plus the interest between the time that they purchased from the government and the time at which I purchased from them, so that it was practically just taking back the land which had been granted to them under the arrangement for town sites. The land is immediately adjacent to the town site of Scott. It comprises a quarter-section, and the portion of another quarter-section, which lies between that quarter-section and the railway track. The railway track is the northern boundary, the main road out of Scott to the south is the eastern boundary, and it comprises, I think I am correct in saying, 223 acres, all of it absolutely virgin soil. None of it had been ploughed or touched until we did work on it last summer, and it is of the highest character and quality as prairie soil. I hope to be able to establish a station there, which will be of great value to the communities subservient to it. I am giving this explanation in answer to the question that was asked.

Fire escapes for Dominion public buildings, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to meet the demands for fire escapes upon public buildings throughout the Dominion. Sometimes there is a demand from the people occupying the buildings that fire escapes should be placed upon them, and sometimes the local by-laws require it. We did not spend the whole amount last year; in fact, only $478, but the chief architect tells me that it is desirable to obtain a vote for this amount so as to make provision for fire escapes as they may be required.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any public competition in the supplying of these?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sometimes, when the work is considerable, but ordinarily the work on each building costs only $100, or $150, or $200.

Mr. BLAIN. What system of fire escapes does the minister adopt? There is a considerable number of these in vogue in Canada, and I presume that the minister has arrived at some decisions with regard to them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are all of iron, and they are all of the usual character. At Longueuil public building the work was done by the Capital Scale, Brass & Foundry Iron Company; they made the fire escape of iron and erected it at a cost of $195. At Clinton there was a balcony fire escape erected at a cost of $107, and at Cornwall there was a fire escape erected at a cost of $348. I have not the particulars of that, but it was the ordinary class of iron fire escape.

Public buildings, generally, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for public buildings throughout the Dominion. It is an item which has been voted from year to year, and it is for demands that are made with respect to matters which are not otherwise provided for. Last year, up to the 27th of December, out of this vote there were paid the following amounts:—

Travelling expenses, clerks of works and officials	$ 3,593 18
Photographic supplies	303 70
King's Printer, printing and stationery	2,323 03
Telegrams	1,007 43
Sundries	367 05
Total	$ 7,594 39

Leaving unexpended on the 28th December, 1910, a balance of $2,405.61. This is used for travelling expenses, stationery and printing, telegraphy and other miscellaneous items.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister explain what the stationery and printing are required for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are required for the chief architect's office and the clerk of works offices.

Tobacco curing, experimental stations, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. We obtained $5,000 last year, but it was not expended. The Department of Agriculture are again asking for it this year. The idea is to use it for the establishment of tobacco experimental stations.

Mr. CROTHERS. Are there any such stations now, and if so, where are they situated?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might give my hon. friend the details of the expenditure in connection with this service made during the fiscal year 1909-10. At St. Cesaire, Quebec, there was erected a drying room, with two metallic ventilators, and a curing room, at a cost of $610. At St. Jacques de L'Achigan, Quebec, there was a curing barn erected, also a drying room and ventilators at a total expenditure of $586. At Colchester, Ontario, there was a curing barn erected, with a basement, two drying kilns, a rack of two arches for heating, cement floors, excavation, costing $2,636.30. At Ottawa there was some work done at a cost of $310, all out of this vote.

Ottawa public buildings, elevator attendance, $26,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Do not the owners of the leased buildings provide the elevator attendance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends on the lease. We occupy the whole of the Regal building and the Imperial buildings and the government operates the elevators, whereas we occupy only a part of the Trafalgar building, and the owner runs the elevator.

Mr. CROTHERS. I understood the minister to say that the foundation of the driveway was solid concrete. I have been told that it was gravel and crushed stone rolled. Which is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Solid concrete.

Mr. CROTHERS. There is a new iron fence on the parliament grounds for which I cannot find an appropriation in the estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad to have an opportunity of explaining. The old fence upon Mackenzie avenue was no longer necessary, and we moved it together with the stone foundation to the parliament grounds; using the services of our own men, and doing the job at comparatively little expense.

Heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $133,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Have increases of salaries been given?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In quite a number of cases.

Mr. BLAIN. How are they given?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We give such increases as we think are justifiable upon the report of the foremen of the heads of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Have any been refused increases?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. We try to reward merit, and give fair compensation for service rendered.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are judges of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We obtain reports from the chief architect and the foremen or superintendents, and the recommendation comes to the deputy minister and finally to the minister.

Mr. BLAIN. On what grounds were increases refused last year? Can the minister give a list of the applications for increases made, the number granted, the number refused, and the grounds for refusal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get the information as far as possible, but of course, an application may be refused without the grounds being stated.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Last year the total amount paid for this service was $118,000, and this year you are asking $133,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was for the year ending 31st March, 1910, and the present estimates are for the year ending 31st March, 1912, and there are additional men and increases of salaries which would account for the difference.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was the $125,000 asked for last year expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is anticipated that it will all be expended by March 31, next.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How does it come that there is this large increase of $8,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can give the estimate. Coal is estimated to cost $62,655.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is coal higher?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Anthracite coal $6.90, slack bituminous $4.70, cannel $8.75, and blacksmith $7.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You are paying higher prices?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Those are the prices of the lowest tenderer, Messrs. Heney & Son. Then there is the heating of the Canadian militia building and wages.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What additional buildings are you going to heat, and employ officials in, this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Regal building, the Naval building, the new Museum, and the building which has been erected as a peat testing depot. Wages of the heating staff including coal men, wood men, &c., $46,556. Then there are contingencies which cover things for which it is impossible to provide with absolute certainty, $7,585, the total being $133,000 which it is assumed by the chief architect we will require for the year ending March 31, 1912.

Repairs, including ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $225,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). An enormous amount is paid each year for new furniture for these buildings, and a large staff of men is employed under this item. I have been informed that about two-thirds of them do nothing at all, they simply draw their pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman give the names of any in regard to whom he is so informed?

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman is not sincere in saying that, it is ridiculous.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am perfectly sincere for this reason that if he has reliable information of any men on the staff of the department lying around not earning wages, I would have it looked into, and if the charge were substantiated have the men dismissed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not believe the minister is sincere when he says he would have them dismissed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. member must not doubt the sincerity of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I forgive the hon. gentleman.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not want to break the rules of the House, but I wish to say what I think.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will not give me the names anyway?

Mr. REID (Grenville). At all events there are several hundred men employed under this item, and, as I am informed, one-half or two-thirds of these men are simply there drawing their pay. The minister asks me to give their names. In the first place it would take up two or three pages of 'Hansard' to give the names of all the men I believe are not employed. But in addition to that look at the enormous amounts paid out every year for furniture in this building. In the last five years over $1,000,000 have been paid out simply for repairs and furniture, for the buildings here in Ottawa. Is this expenditure of about a quarter of a million dollars a year to continue forever, or is there likely to be a reduction of this vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will see that this vote is not entirely for furniture. It is for repairs for furniture and also for ventilation and lighting, and different items of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. It does not include the supply of any electric current or gas?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The buildings are very large, they contain many rooms which are all lighted and regarding which there must necessarily be a great deal of work to be done. There is necessarily a great deal of furniture requiring repairs, and new furniture must be bought from time to time. It would be impossible for me to go into all the details. That is a matter for the committee on public accounts. If my hon. friend wishes to inquire into any particular expenditure, he can have that inquired into in the Committee on Public Accounts, where the vouchers will be produced and the officials examined and the fullest information given. As regards the employees of the department, I cannot speak as to each individual, but I do know that we have a very reliable superintendent in whom my chief officers and myself have every confidence, and I would not believe, unless my hon. friend could vouch for it personally, that there are any number of men on the staff who simply lie around and do not earn their wages. I can give the committee a statement of how this money will be disposed of. To the clerk of the works staff for the men engaged under the clerk of works, $96,252.61; to the mechanical engineering staff, $38,688; for the purchase of lumber, paints, oil, glass, &c., and such ready-made furniture as cannot be constructed in the government workshop, $90,000, making a total of $225,000. This also covers general repairs and maintenance in connection with gas, water, boilers, machinery, lavatories, &c.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I must disagree with the hon. minister when he says that the proper place in which to bring up this matter is the Public Accounts Committee. We all know that in that committee we can only bring up item by item, and the hon. minister knows that he, when he is there, and two or three of his assistants, do all they can to block investigations.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend made that remark so often that he does not seem to realize its offensive nature. I have never observed, whenever I have been before the committee, any indication of any desire to block investigations. I am sure the hon. gentleman can have there every opportunity of investigating every one of these items if he so desires.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am sure there are many members on both sides who will agree with me that facilities have not been given by the minister and those associated with him to get at the bottom of facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must know that I have only been myself in attendance on the committee at one of its sittings during this session. How, therefore, could I have assisted in blocking investigations?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There have only been one or two items in his department brought before that committee this session, which explains why the hon. minister was not there. I am speaking however, of past sessions. He knows quite well, that when we on this side were endeavouring to find out if there were not unnecessary expenditures in his department, there were always difficulties thrown in our way. We asked for a special committee to investigate the department, as was given in the case of the Marine and Fisheries Department, but we were refused. If a similar committee were appointed, my own impression is, that it would show that the Public Works Department is in even a worse condition than was the Department of Marine and Fisheries. My hon. friend must know that there were good grounds for an investigation. He must have felt that in the case of certain expenditures in his department, there was no doubt robbery and rascality.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nobody observed that but the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Men on both sides admit it, and the press as well. From the Atlantic to the Pacific the newspapers have been showing up these things in the Public Works Department. There was therefore, ample ground for an investigation into that department, but of course, that investigation was never given. If the hon. minister would agree to give such a commission as was appointed to investigate into the Marine and Fisheries Department, we could let all these items go through without discussion. Will he now, should we propose to have an investigation of that kind, consent to give it and thus save all these discussions on his estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the proper time arrives to consider a suggestion of that kind it will be carefully considered, but this is not the time to do so; and I may say to the hon. gentleman that before he would be entitled to ask for such a commission, he must support his reason by something more substantial than mere statements in the press or mere imagination on his own part. With regard to the press, I saw myself the other day in one of the papers published in Toronto, which displays a very partisan character, a reference to certain expenditures at Dalhousie, in the way of dredging. The article had alarming headlines of the very biggest character, stating that there had been an expenditure of $315,000 in that place. But the next day, away down in an obscure column, where scarcely any one would notice it, there were about four lines pointing out that there was an error, either typographical or telegraphic, and that the expenditure had been exaggerated ten times. That is a fair example of what is often done by some of the newspapers. I should have expected a newspaper, under such circumstances, to state, under the same big headlines, that it had made a great mistake, and that a grievous wrong had been done the department, instead of putting the correction in an obscure corner where not one in five hundred of its readers would discover it. I am sincere in my statement that I think the Public Accounts Committee a most admirable committee to investigate the accounts of the deparments. Like others, my hon. friend professes to want an investigation in some different way from that provided under the usages of parliament, but I fancy, with the hope that he will not get what he professes to want, for then he will have a grievance. He would not for worlds, take up these accounts before the Public Accounts Committee, he would not for worlds have these vouchers presented——

Mr. BLAIN. Why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because he would have convincing evidence under oath that there could be no objection to these accounts, and that would cause him grave disappointment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No one would be better pleased than I if it could be known that all the accounts in the Auditor General's Report represented payments honestly made in the public interest. But the minister knows that it is impossible for any person to judge whether these accounts are right or not. All we can do is to look over them, and if we see an item that looks suspicious bring it before the Public Accounts Committee. And the minister knows that seventy-five out of a hundred cases brought before the Public Accounts Committee have certainly looked very bad under investigation. He knows also that the facts discovered by the Public Accounts Committee would justify a general investigation into the department. Take this Bathurst dredging of which the minister was speaking. He knows that it was admitted in the Public Accounts Committee that through a mistake, $30,000 or $31,000 was spent that would not have been spent but for that mistake.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That all appeared before the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit that. It was shown that a wrong——

Mr. PUGSLEY. A wrong on the part of whom?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Some one in the Public Works Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it was a mistake on the part of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company. If the hon. gentleman will call the manager of that company, that can be established.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There were other cases. For instance, the St. John dredging —the Mayes matter. There was a commission paid there that went to the middleman wrongfully.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not wrongfully.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am giving these items to show that we were justified, and are justified now, in asking a commission of investigation. There was the case of the saw-dust wharf where the middleman again appeared. The minister could not conscientiously state that that was a fair bargain in the interest of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then I believe that the minister is the only man on either side of this House that believes it. Then, we have the Gaspereau dredging, where the minister had the report of his own engineer, stating 20c a fair price and gave it out at 90 cents a yard. These are just a few instances. Now, here is an expenditure of $225,000 a year. How are we going to investigate that before the Public Accounts Committee? Why it would take the whole session. The first thing, some one will want to know—what I have been trying to find out—what becomes of the old furniture. We are constantly putting in new furniture; what becomes of the old:

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is sold at public auction.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is there a statement of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly, a full statement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That part of it may be all right. Then we hear reports of there being more men than are necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must not believe all he hears.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But I believe what I hear repeated under oath in the Public Accounts Committee. If the minister would give us this investigation by Judge Cassels, or some man of that character, all this would be cleared up, and, if it were proved to be as the minister represents it, it would be to his credit and it would save a lot of discussion on these items. I, for one, do not believe that this large expenditure is necessary. It did not cost that much years ago, and it has been increasing year after year since this government came into power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be the easiest thing in the world for my hon. friend, if he has any reason to suspect that the accounts included in this vote of $225,000 are not correct, that more men are employed than are needed, that higher wages are paid than ought to be paid, to call the proper officials before the Public Accounts Committee and learn the exact facts. The difficulty with my hon. friend is that he does not seem to wish to avail himself of the Public Accounts Committee to investigate these matters. He has referred to two or three cases which he gives as evidence of the great need of investigating thoroughly the Department of Public Works. He cites the dredging at Gaspereau, also what is known as the Mayes matter, and the dredging at Dalhousie. Is that all?

Mr. REID (Grenville). It would take me all the afternoon to give all the cases.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). These are only samples.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When you consider that there has been an expenditure of from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year by the Public Works Department, I think I ought to be well satisfied that the hon. gentleman, with all his industry, with all his digging and delving into the accounts, has only been able to call attention to three items.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I could easily give more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the hon. gentleman names these three off-hand, he, of course, gives the three that are of the most striking character. And what are they? Take the Mayes contract. It is said that a gentleman associated with him received a certain amount from the contractor, Mr. Mayes. In order that there should be any wrong-doing in connection with that which reflected on the department when it was presided over by the late minister——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order has been raised of the relevancy of this discussion. The item before the committee is——

Repairs, including ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $225,000.

Any arguments used should be made to apply to that subject as closely as possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think probably you are right. I was attempting to follow my hon. friend; however, I am content to let the matter rest as it is. It is desirable that we should all promptly obey your honour's ruling.

Telephone service, $19,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Last year I raised the question about the prices of telephones, because in some places we were paying much higher for them than in other places.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman stated, if I remember rightly, that we were paying more for telephones in the government offices than private individuals were paying in the city of Ottawa; but I was able to show him that, taking all the services together, we paid less proportionately than was paid by the private citizens of Ottawa.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I notice, for instance, that we are paying $35 for a telephone in the office of the secretary of the Governor General, in the East block; we are paying $40 for the telephone of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, $40 per telephone in the House of Commons, $65 a year for the telephone in the office of the Speaker. Now, it strikes me that the government should have a regular annual rate for all telephones, the same as private citizens in the city of Ottawa. It may average a lower price, as the minister says, but I do not understand why the charges should be made in this way. For instance, in this building, for the Speaker we pay $65, for the leader of the opposition, $55; messengers, $35; Committee on Agriculture, $40; distribution office, $40; sergeant at arms, $35, and so on. Then you go over to the Justice Department, and you pay $40.

Mr. CROSBY. How many telephones are there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Altogether, 453. Desk phones, for instance, are subject to an extra charge.

Mr. CROSBY. It would be interesting to know how it comes that you have 453 telephones.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can give the details. In the Department of Agriculture there are 18; Auditor General's office, 11; Census Department, 2; Customs Department, 11; Dominion police, 13; Exchequer Court, 2; Finance Department, 11; Governor General, 11; Geological Survey, 10; House of Commons, 20, including those for the opposition as well as for the government side; Indian Affairs, 8; Inland Revenue, 14; Interior Department, 56; Justice, 18; Labour Department, 6; Mounted Police, 4; Minister of Finance, 32; Militia and Defence, 46; Parliamentary Library, 3; Post Office Department, 16; Privy Council, 12; Public Works, 58; Railways and Canals, 23; Secretary of State, 15; Printing and Stationery, 16; Trade and Commerce, 9; Senate, 7. I have all the details here, but it would take me till midnight to read them.

Mr. CROSBY. 58 for the Public Works Department; that seems to be a great number.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These telephones are used in all the chief branches of the Department of Public Works, including, for instance, the shipyard and the workshop.

Rideau Hall, including grounds, improvements, furniture and maintenance, $35,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is the department thinking of erecting a new building for the Governor General in the place of the present Rideau Hall?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend may remember that previously to my becoming minister there had been a proposition to put a new façade upon Rideau Hall, and to undertake considerable improvements, and a vote had been taken, I think, of $100,000 for that purpose. Tenders had been called for, and shortly after I became minister the tenders were opened, and I think the proposed cost reached the sum of nearly $300,000. I was of the opinion that, while extensive improvements are needed, and while Rideau Hall, as it is at present, is not creditable to this country—I say that advisedly—it is not creditable to this great and wealthy country; yet I did not feel that we could justify an expenditure of $300,000 in making additions and improvements to the present building. I am not speaking now for the government, because the government have not considered this matter; I am merely giving my own opinion. I think probably it would be better to sell the present property, which, at a reasonable estimate, if cut up into city building lots, would easily bring $700,000. That is the opinion which the Ottawa Improvement Commission have expressed to me, and they have made, at my request, an estimate which I think is moderate. I would erect a new government house upon some commanding site in the vicinity of Ottawa, and I would erect a building which would be a credit to this country, which would be fitting for the future Governors General who come here, and satisfactory to the people of this country for the next hundred years. However, this is only my own opinion. I mention it to the hon. gentleman as a partial answer to his question, and also as an explanation why we did not go on with the proposed improvement at Rideau Hall pursuant to the vote of parliament. As I have said, that amount seemed to me more than I would be justified in placing in the estimates under the circumstances.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may frankly say that when I go down to Rideau Hall and look at the buildings, I think they are a disgrace to this country, and not befitting the high office of Governor General. But what I object to is that every year the government comes forward with large sums for repairs and improvements to Rideau Hall. I think the amount the minister is paying annually for repairs would pay the interest on the cost of a fine new residence such as he mentions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This money is not all being expended on the building; it is also for renewals, repairs to furniture, &c.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It may be this year, but I think the minister will agree with me that there have been in the past and probably will be in the future amounts expended on that building for repairs. Instead of repairing that old building I think it is time for the minister to consider the question of providing new quarters and getting rid of these premises, probably in the way he says. If he can get $700,000 out of that property I cannot see why he should have to ask parliament for any appropriation to provide a new building. Does the minister think that amount would not be sufficient to erect a new building on another site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It ought to give a very fine building.

Dominion buildings, furniture, $15,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. Has it been definitely decided to erect a new building on Sussex street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the definite decision.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think it is a serious mistake for the government of this country to erect a magnificent building back on Sussex street. You have already started building on the park by erecting a hotel there, which, I think, was a great mistake, but now that it is there, I would suggest that it is only proper that this new block be built along the face of the park right from the hotel, and facing west. I think then we would get the benefit of the building, and as you have already purchased the property on Sussex street, you could do away with Mackenzie avenue, and continue the park out to Sussex street. You would then have a magnificent park with the buildings now there removed, the new building would be seen by everybody if it were placed along the face of the park. This would be a very great improvement upon the present policy of the department. I think it would be a serious mistake to spend $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 in erecting a great building back on Sussex street, and I hope the department will never agree to a policy of that kind. I believe they could erect this building along the face of the hill and it would be a very great improvement on what they contemplate doing, and it certainly would be a magnificent site for offices. Then we would have the parliament buildings all within view of the bridge. As you have started to build on that park I do not see why you should not continue as I suggest it would be very much better than what you propose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is the last contributor to the new ideas as to the proper location for the departmental buildings. I have had a great many suggestions, but I have felt that as parliament, before I became minister, made an appropriation for the payment for the ground between Mackenzie avenue and Sussex street, and as a very extensive area of land has been bought, it was my duty to go ahead and provide for the construction of the building upon this ground. I might suggest other places in the city which, in the judgment of some people, perhaps in the judgment of myself, might possess advantages which that site does not present, but that is the site which has been approved of, it is the site which has been bought and paid for, and it is now owned by the government. Perhaps it is inaccurate for my hon. friend to say that the buildings are to be erected on Sussex street. They are also to have a frontage upon Mackenzie avenue, and upon this park, and run through to Sussex street so that there will be a frontage on both streets. I am afraid I cannot hold out any hope to my hon. friend that the site will be changed. The present plan is to go ahead, and build upon the site which we have bought and paid for.

Mr. BRADBURY. I can only say that I think it is a serious mistake on the part of the government.

Dominion buildings, lighting, $140,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is an increase of $5,000 owing to the increase in the number of buildings.

Mr. JAMESON. I suppose that under the head of lighting one might refer to the electric wiring of this building, and particularly to that in the library. I am not sufficiently skilled to say whether it is defective or whether there is any danger of fire from it. It appears that in certain places at least it has a very exposed look, and we know that a few days ago there was a fire in the corridor leading to the library. It occurred during a time when there was a number of people about to see that it was extinguished. I do not know whether it was due to any defect in the wiring of the building, but it is a matter worthy of consideration. Perhaps the minister could assure the committee that in the condition of the wiring there is no risk to the valuable collection of books in the library.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that his attention was called to an incipient fire which might be regarded more as smoke than blaze and the best judgment he has been able to form is that probably there has been a little waste paper and somebody has thrown a match down while lighting his pipe or cigar. He does not think that it came from any defect in the electrical wiring. However, the suggestion is one that is worthy of careful attention. It is of importance that the wiring should receive careful attention. We have an expert staff whose duty it is to look after these matters, and I shall see that the hon. gentleman's remarks are brought to their notice so that if there is anything that requires attention it will be looked into.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister had a fire in his own office. Was not that from electric wires crossing one another or something of that kind?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought it was.

Mr. DANIEL. Well there must have been some looseness about the wiring in that case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there is a danger always.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I think there is more danger of spontaneous combustion than from defective electric wiring. I was downstairs at the long distance telephone when an hon. gentleman who sits close to the minister asked me to look into the room which is just beyond the long distance telephone. I looked in, and I am sure that if there is not spontaneous combustion in the building pretty soon it will be a miracle. This gentleman told me that the same condition is to be found all over the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What room is that?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Just back of the telephone.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose there was a lot of waste material in it?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It was not fit for a pig pen. That is the care that is taken of the building, and yet my hon. friend says that there are experts looking after it. All he has to do is to appeal for confirmation to an hon. gentleman who sits near him, and who knows the condition to which I refer because he spoke to me himself about it. The care which is taken of this building is the same as that which is taken of the grounds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there be any fault it would be with the staff of the House of Commons, and not with the staff of the Public Works Department. I will have the matter brought to the notice of the superintendent of the House of Commons building.

Mr. RHODES. I am not an electric light expert, but I can see that wires are strung in the various rooms of this building in a haphazard manner and not in accordance with the requirements of the underwriters. Of course, this building was erected years ago when fireproof construction had not reached its present development, and I believe it worthy of the attention of the minister to see that an electric wiring expert should go carefully over all the wiring in the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have an electric expert constantly engaged in that work. So long as the wires are properly insulated there is no danger, but nevertheless the remarks of my hon. friend will be noted by the chief architect, and if possible, greater precaution will be taken.

Mr. RHODES. In room 68 there are from 10 to 15 electric lights hanging by long cords which are all intertwined, and it would seem to me to be dangerous.

Mr. JAMESON. I have been told by those who seem to know that the wiring of the building at present is not up to the underwriters requirements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not insure our buildings, and therefore, the underwriters' experts do not examine them. The chief architect tells me that the electrician reports it is up to the standard of the underwriters.

Mr. STANFIELD. To my knowledge there is wiring in the new wing that will not pass the underwriters' inspection.

Mr. CROSBY. In the Public Accounts Committee last year the hon. member for North Ontario discovered, notwithstanding all the obstacles that were thrown in his way, that $5,000 or $6,000 of the money of the people was wrongfully paid for electric lighting of the Woods and the Canadian buildings. When this discovery was made we were promised that not only would the contract be cancelled, but that suit would be entered against the Imperial Realty Company to make them refund to the public treasury the overcharges they made. Has that money been refunded?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Two years before I became minister the agreement was entered into, and I understand that then the chief architect thought it was better to pay by the meter so that the department would be charged for the electrical energy actually used. I believe that for a while the meter would be less than the flat rate. On principle I am entirely opposed to a flat rate but so long as there is a flat rate and a meter rate I suppose it is the duty of the department to get the cheaper rate. In the case of a public utility such as electric lighting—and I wish to say this publicly for the information of the city of Ottawa and the electric lighting company—it is in my judgment a gross injustice that the ordinary householder should be obliged to pay a meter rate which is higher than the flat rate which a large consumer of electricity such as the government can get. I believe there should be one rate, and one rate only in the case of public utilities of that kind just the same as in the case of the railways, which cannot give a cheap rate to the large dealer.

Mr. STANFIELD. The railways make a carload rate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but they must give the same rate for ten carloads as for one. However, that may be, when I became minister there was rendered to my department by the Imperial Realty Company, bills upon a meter basis and those bills were accompanied by bills, on their regular account forms rendered by the electric light department of the city of Ottawa, presided over by the city treasurer, Mr. Ellis, showing the indebtedness of the Imperial Realty Company or James W. Woods as the case might be, to the city, for the amount of current consumed, based upon the meter rate. These bills were marked 'settled' by the electric department of the city; they were receipted as vouchers and they accompanied the bills which the Imperial Realty Company rendered to my department. Thus the city of Ottawa furnished those bills as being the vouchers based upon the meter rate of the amounts which the Imperial Realty Company asked my department to pay. After I became minister, the deputy minister was changed, the present deputy minister became the principal official of the department. If it had come to my notice or to the notice of the principal officers of my department that we were being charged by the Imperial Realty Company not the identical amounts which the Imperial Realty Company was paying to the electrical department of the city of Ottawa—

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). What would be the object in making out the cheques to the Imperial Realty Company, why not direct to the city of Ottawa?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Would not that arouse suspicion?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because I would never dream that the treasurer of the city of Ottawa would issue a false voucher.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). It is only fair to the city treasurer to state that the president of the Imperial Realty Company went to him and personally asked him to furnish the amount of electricity that was consumed on a meter basis. He said he did not know what purpose it was to be used for, he had been personally requested by the president of the company to furnish the amount on a meter basis. He did not get paid for it, and did not do it with intent to deceive the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So also the Imperial Realty Company say they did not do it to deceive the department.

Mr. CROSBY. But they did deceive the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the fact is that Mr. Ellis, the treasurer of Ottawa, furnished these vouchers not simply as the amount consumed, on a meter basis, but as accounts showing the indebtedness of the Imperial Realty Company to the city of Ottawa for these amounts.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). On an ordinary form.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the account forms they always send out showing the indebtedness of the Imperial Realty Company to the city of Ottawa for the electric current consumed at the meter rate and upon a meter basis. It may be true, as my hon. friend says, that the treasurer of Ottawa did not intend that this should be used to deceive the department.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). He says he did not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am bound to believe him. I would be sorry to suspect people of dishonesty in face of their statements and without knowledge to the contrary, but the Imperial Realty Company say the same thing, that they did not intend to deceive the department. As a matter of fact they got the money and got it upon vouchers signed by the city of Ottawa upon the quantity of electric current consumed and charged upon the meter rate. And this is the important thing, that ever since I became minister and ever since the present deputy became deputy minister, these vouchers were rendered, and my department paid to the Imperial Realty Company the identical amount of these vouchers rendered by the electrical department of the city to the Imperial Realty Company as proofs to show that that was being paid to the city of Ottawa, the whole charge being based upon a meter rate. When the matter came on for investigation, as my hon. friend says, before the Committee on Public Accounts, evidently my hon. friend from North Ontario was furnished, and I am glad he was furnished, with the information which the proper officials of the city of Ottawa had withheld from my department.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). It was not until I saw the suspicious looking documents in your file.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman had access to all the files, we glady furnished them. When towards the latter part of the investigation it came to my knowledge that there was a difference between what these vouchers showed and what it was alleged had actually been paid to the city, and that these vouchers had been rendered to my department from time to time as being evidence of what the Imperial Realty Company was paying to the city, I asked the deputy minister to inform the committee that I would proceed to cancel the contract and to recover whatever amount had been paid by the department to the Imperial Realty Company in excess of what the Imperial Realty Company had paid to the city. In due course, after parliament rose, I had a request made to the city of Ottawa to furnish a statement of what amounts had actually been paid by the Imperial Realty Company. That statement was not furnished. I then directed the deputy minister to hand the matter over to the Department of Justice to look into the whole question, and if the department was of opinion that there was a cause of action against the Imperial Realty Company, either individually or jointly with the city of Ottawa, to take proceedings for the purpose of recovering the difference.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Have you had a report yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No report has come to my knowledge as to what action has been taken by the Justice Department, but I understood some time ago that they had been requested to allow the matter to stand until counsel for the Imperial Realty Company, then absent, returned to Ottawa. I have not recently heard what further action has been taken by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The minister was going to lay on the table the two letters that constituted a contract between the Imperial Realty Company and the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will see that they are brought here.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). We would like to see them so as to form our own opinion as to the liability of the Imperial Realty Company. Speaking of the electric light and these accounts, the minister attempts to shift the responsibility on the shoulders of the city treasurer. In my humble opinion the Minister of Public Works or his department is a party to any fraud that has been committed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not said there was any fraud, I did not use the word fraud.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That was the inference from your remarks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend as a lawyer knows that there may be such a thing as a legal fraud which would give the right to recover money without actual intentional fraud.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The mere fact that these alleged statements were rendered by the city to the Imperial Realty Company and be the Imperial Realty Company to the government would alone excite suspicion in any person's mind. Why the necessity of keeping two sets of books and why pay the cheques to the Imperial Realty Company and have them transfer them over to the city of Ottawa? A person viewing that transaction would at once have his suspicions excited that there was something radically wrong, that a middleman must be getting a rake-off somewhere, and consequently if any one in the department had the slightest conception of the method of conducting business properly and economically he would have investigated the matter. Why were not the cheques made payable direct to the city of Ottawa? If there was any fraud or wrong committed on the department the department itself is partly guilty. What is the cost of lighting all the public buildings here in Ottawa?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are in the public buildings lamps to which the current is supplied by the Ottawa Electric Company to the number of 15,929. Under the contract, the first 3,000 are charged at the rate of $2.25 per annum, making $6,750.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That is yearly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was originally a 10 years' contract. It has now expired, and has not yet been renewed. Then there are 12,929 lamps at $2, making $25,858. That is in addition to the lighting in the buildings, owned by the Imperial Realty Company. We have made a change through having cancelled the contracts under which we pay to the city a flat rate of $2 per lamp, that is for the Canadian building and the Railway Commission building. That includes all the electric lighting.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is there any meter basis or is it all flat rates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All on a flat basis.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is the contract let by tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Does the minister not think that since the city has a municipal plant as well as the Ottawa Electric Light Company, we might get a more advantageous rate by inviting competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are just two rates in Ottawa, one flat and the other meter, and the two plants charge the same rates. When we made this change from meter to flat rate, we asked the city for the lowest rate and they gave it at $2.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The government contract is worth nearly half a million dollars. If they let that by tender, could they not get a more advantageous rate? Is it the intention to renew the contract for ten years?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are continuing under the expired contract at present. There are some questions pending for consideration which will have to be decided before we renew the contract.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is it the intention to ask for tenders before renewing the contract?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario).

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. There are two rates, a flat rate and a meter rate. I do not think it would be right for my department to go to these companies and say: True, you have your flat rate and your meter rate, but this government is too poor or too mean to pay the same rate that other people pay, and we want you to reduce it. I would not be a party to doing that.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That objection might hold to any contracts the government might make.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. This is a public utility.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECURITY TRUSTS CORPORATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. NESBITT. I have a letter from the hon. member for Regina, who introduced this Bill, and who is not present, suggesting the name 'The Security Loan and Trust Corporation.' I do not know whether that will be satisfactory to my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart) or not.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). The hon. member for Regina, when he was here, mentioned that suggestion of his clients. But the only change is the introduction of the word 'Loan.' I think the policy of this House is to confine the trust business to trust companies, and the mortgage and loan business to the mortgage and loan companies——

Mr. NESBITT. I have no desire to press the Bill if the hon. member for Winnipeg does not wish it pressed.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I think it had better stand over. No doubt, the hon. member for Regina and myself will be able to agree.

Progress reported.

MONTREAL PARK AND ISLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 45) respecting the Montreal Park and Island Railway Company.—Mr. Ecrément.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. As the promoter of the Bill is not present, perhaps it would be better that it should stand over, as it is suggested that some amendments be made to the Bill.

Progress reported.

McCLARY MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 75) respecting the McClary Manufacturing Company.—Mr. Beattie.

On section 1,

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to discuss this Bill before it passes, but the hon. member who introduced it is not here. I suggest we report progress.

Progress reported.

ALBERTA RAILWAY AND IRRIGATION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 51) respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Mr. Crothers.

On section 1,

Mr. HERRON. I object to this clause in its original form and move the amendment of which notice has been given:

That subsection (c) of clause 1 be amended by striking out the word 'Spring Coulee' in the first line and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'Cardston.'

Mr. BLAIN. If there is to be an amendment to the Bill, I would suggest that it be allowed to stand over until the promoter is present, I am not objecting to the amendment, but, as the amendment may not meet the wishes of the promoter of the Bill, and as that hon. gentleman is not present, I think that, in fairness to him, the Bill should be allowed to stand.

Mr. HERRON. The Bill stood over for consultation between the promoters and myself. They have not done anything. I have told them I was here to go on with the Bill. Apparently, they have not made any arrangement to have it stand over. If there is anybody interested in the Bill, I am prepared to go on with it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think the Bill should stand in the absence of the promoter. When the matter came up in the committee this amendment was moved. I think the Bill is a Canadian Pacific Railway Bill, and the representative of the company said they had considered the change proposed in the amendment of my hon. friend, but there were very serious engineering difficulties in the way, and they did not desire to have a change made. I think that, as the promoter is not here, it would be well that the Bill should stand over. If my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has not already moved it, I move that we report progress.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 60) respecting the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 3,

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the Minister of Railways approved that section? It seems a very important one?

Mr. NESBITT. Yes, it was approved in the committee the other morning.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This is an old charter. In former years, before there was any development required for electrical purposes, this clause was not inserted in such a Bill as this, but, during the past four or five years, they have been inserting this clause, and this Bill stood over that it might be inserted.

On section 4, consent of municipality.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the regular clause was to be inserted in this Bill. Under that clause, not only must the consent of the municipality to the works referred to be expressed by by-law, but this was to be 'upon such terms as may be agreed upon.' I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) said.

Mr. SPROULE. When we discussed this Bill in committee it was decided to add to it the usual clauses attached to all Bills of this kind; that is, that the company could only enter a municipality upon receiving authority by by-law of the municipality, and upon such terms as might be agreed upon between the company and the municipality. This provides for the bylaw, but it says nothing about terms with the municipality. That is not according to the clause we have been in the habit of putting in such Bills for the last couple of years, and which were carefully considered and decided upon by the committee.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I do not exactly remember what was agreed upon; my hon. friend says something was agreed upon. I think it was only discussed in committee, and the promoters of the Bill consented to all the amendments which were proposed. Now we come before this committee, and the hon. gentleman says it was agreed that some other amendment should be made. I do not remember any such promise on the part of anybody. I think the clause the chairman has just read is sufficient. I do not see why we should drop the Bill at this stage, after all the consideration we have given it.

Mr. SPROULE. The committee discussed this Bill, and it was left to the chairman to put in the two clauses that we usually put in these Bills ; and what I complain of is that they have not been put in.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The statement of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in regard to the Bill originally is quite accurate. The Bill as drafted did not meet the views of the committee, and it was decided that the two clauses which we have adopted as a model clause should be added to this Bill. The clerk added those clauses, and the Bill did come back to the committee, and was subsequently passed by the committee, and so far as my recollection goes the clauses are the model clause.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.

Mr. NESBITT. The other evening the Minister of Railways asked that this Bill stand. I have not seen him since, and I would not like to go on with it without seeing him.

Mr. HENDERSON. On what grounds did he ask it to stand?

Mr. NESBITT. It was proposed to add an amendment, and the amendment has not been added.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought the amendment was agreed to in the Railway Committee.

Mr. NESBITT. No, it was not brought up. The amendment proposed was as follows :

The company shall not construct or operate its railway along any highway, street or other public place without first obtaining the consent expressed by by-law of the municipality having jurisdiction over said highway, street or other public place, and upon terms to be agreed upon with such municipality.

This is going through Ontario largely, and the amendment may not be necessary. It is subject to the Railway Act, and the Railway Act refers all these questions to the railway board.

Progress reported.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. GEOFFRION.

ONTARIO AND MINNESOTA POWER COMPANY.

On the motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 109) respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company.—Mr. Conmee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Unfortunately, I am not able to read this Bill. It is printed in French, and I would like to be permitted to peruse it. It is only printed in French, and I think we should have it printed in English before we take the second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed by the clerk that it is printed in English, that the Order Paper contains a typographical error.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is too late, almost now, to get a copy of the Bill. I wanted to get a copy of it, but I could not get it. It was not on my file, so that I could get hold of it. It is rather late now to have the Bill handed to me at the last minute. I think we might almost say that it has not been printed.

Mr. SPEAKER. The objection is that it is not printed in English?

Mr. HENDERSON. According to the notice paper it is printed in French, but not in English.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is a typographical error. It should be English instead of French.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not printed in French?

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, then, I take the exception that it is not printed in French.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

SASKATOON AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 111) to incorporate the Saskatoon and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Carvell.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to oppose the second reading of this Bill, but I should like it to receive its second reading only upon the understanding that before passing this House the spelling of the word 'Hudson' would be changed to 'Hudson's.' I do not want to take up the time of the House talking about trifles, but I cannot understand what object there is, especially in an official proceeding such as the passing of a Bill through this House, in changing the good old, well-established spelling of the name Hudson's Bay. It is nearly fifty years ago since I was taught, as a schoolboy, that our word Hudson's Bay was always spelled with the 's,' whereas the United States river Hudson was spelled without the 's'. I think that is a very good reason, if no other existed, why we should adhere to the English method of spelling this word. It is a different word, and, however much we may admire modern improvements in spelling, we cannot change the name of the great company which had its charter now nearly 250 years ago, and which has made famous the world over the name Hudson's Bay. I think the very circumstance that we have our own expression, while the United States have theirs, that it is the English language we speak, and, therefore, that we ought to look to England for our standards of orthography and geography, affords in itself reason enough why, in an official proceeding of this character, we ought to adhere to the expression Hudson's Bay, whatever newspapers and whatever other people may do about it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

The order for private Bills having been exhausted, House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr CURRIE (Simcoe). Before going on with these items, I observe that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is spending a great deal of time on the estimates of his department. The Minister of Public Works, we know, is a very hard-working man; he is active, he gets his estimates down here, he attends to them every night, and endeavours to get them through. There are other ministers of the Crown who are in charge of departments just as important as the Department of Public Works. I am sure that the House would be very much pleased to see the estimates of some of the other ministers brought down here and discussed openly and freely, and it would be largely to the benefit of the country if such were the case. For instance, I think we should have a few nights on the estimates of the department of the Minister of Finance, so as to relieve the burden from the Minister of Public Works. Then there is also the hon. gentleman (Sir Frederick Borden) in charge of the Department of Militia and Defence, and I know that the House is desirous of discussing his estimates for three or four nights. We never have the pleasure of having him with us at all, and I am sure I am voicing the sentiments of members on this side of the House when I say that the estimates of some other department should be taken up as well as those of the Department of Public Works. The estimates of the Public Works Department pall on the taste, and I think it would be well, the next night when estimates are taken up, if we had, say, the Department of Militia and Defence under fire. Then, again, as I have said before, we would like the estimates of the department of the Minister of Finance, and we should have a few nights with the Department of Agriculture, which deals with the largest interest and industry of the country. We like to discuss these items with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), as he is always willing to discuss them ad libitum and to give us a great deal of information. I feel convinced that the country is yearning and panting to hear from the Minister of Agriculture, and there are a great many members in the House on this side who are interested in farming matters, and who would like to have the estimates of the Department of Agriculture under review for some time. I cannot hope that the government will bring forward any estimates except those which they please, but I am sorry that they are placing the Minister of Public Works in the limelight every night and putting him to the front, so that we may smash him and do all kinds of things to him, when the other ministers ought to carry their end of the log just the same as he is carrying it. I hope that we may have a chance of discussing estimates other than those of the Department of Public Works.

Ottawa public buildings, lighting, $140,000.

Mr. GOODEVE. When the committee rose at six o'clock the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had made a very carefully worded statement in which he endeavoured to place the responsibility for the rake-off that had been made by the Imperial Realty Company on the city of Ottawa and the Imperial Realty Company rather than on the Department of Public Works. If that statement, as made by the minister, were borne out by the evidence in the Public Accounts Committee I do not think there would be any doubt in the minds of members of this House that both the city of Ottawa and the Imperial Realty Company were in collusion to defraud this government out of a large sum of money and as such should be prosecuted. Indeed, when the minister said he had placed the matter in the Justice Department he left the inference that such was his idea. While not attempting to defend the Imperial Realty Company I must say that my conception of the evidence before the committee was that the responsibility rested solely with the Public Works Department and not with them. The evidence showed —although we could not get the correspondence bearing on it—that there evidently had been a contract of some kind by which the Imperial Realty Company was to furnish the light to these particular buildings at a fixed rate, based on the rate paid by other consumers in the city. They were justly entitled to get whatever rate they could from the original supplier of the power, and in the result they got a much cheaper rate than they charged the government and they had a rake-off of a very large sum of money. If it is the belief of the minister that there was wrongdoing then he should have taken more active steps than to merely place the matter in the hands of the Justice Department, where it rests. We had a very similar transaction where the department installed an elevator in one of the public buildings when the lease stipulated that it should be installed by the proprietor of the building, and that case we were also told had been sent to the Department of Justice. We have to-night seen the Minister of Public Works with a remarkably tender conscience and with a remarkable idea of fair play and justice, holding up his hands in holy horror at the thought of asking a rich corporation to send in a tender for the supply of electric power. He told us that he would not for one moment be mean enough—I think that was the word he used—to ask for tenders for supplying all the power necessary for lighting all the public buildings and running the elevators in these buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend misunderstood me. What I said was that the companies had two rates: a meter rate and flat rate, and I did not think I would be justified in asking them to reduce the rate so as to bring it below what was charged to other people.

Mr. GOODEVE. We are therefore to understand that the Minister of Public Works, having full charge of the people's money would not endeavour by asking for tenders, to get the best possible price for a service which costs a very large sum annually. The minister is very solicitous about an electric light company, the stock of which is selling at $163, or 63 over par, and which is paying very large dividends to its shareholders. The minister in his tender solicitude for this company refuses even to ask for tenders as an ordinary business transaction. I happen to have some knowledge of how this matter is dealt with in my part of the country where they develop a large amount of electricity and sell the power to mining companies and others. The power companies sell at both flat and meter rates, and yet there is not a single one of these large power consuming companies in the whole of my province which is paying the ordinary flat or meter rate. They all buy it at a fixed rate per horse-power per annum and they get their supply by tender at the lowest price. There is absolutely no reason as an ordinary business transaction why the Minister of Public Works should not follow the every day business custom and endeavour to buy the power which the government requires for these services at the lowest possible rate. There is absolutely no reason why tenders should not be asked for. It is very remarkable that the minister should all at once display such an extremely tender conscience lest he should offend these people by asking them to tender for power supply at a reasonable rate to a large consumer like the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no tender feeling towards the company or the electrical department of the city. I would be quite willing to get from them the lowest possible rate that can be obtained, but what I said was that I did not think it right that the government should take advantage of its position to try and get a lower rate than other customers in the city have to pay. Some get a meter rate and some a flat rate, and if we ask for a flat rate, or a meter rate we are entitled to get the same rate as other large consumers of electricity. But we have no right as a government to get our electricity, whether by flat rate or meter rate, at one cent less than the ordinary consumer pays. My regard is for the consumers and every dollar which the government may take out of the companies is so much money charged against the ordinary consumer. There should, in my judgment be the same rate to the poor man as to the rich, to the private individual as to the government. That would be the ideal system, but if there is to be a flat rate and a meter rate then I believe these rates should be under the control of the Railway Commission and the government should not get a lower rate than any other consumer of electricity.

Mr. BLAIN. How many companies can supply power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Two, the electrical department of the city and the Ottawa Electric Company.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister ask prices from both?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and the flat rate is the same for both. The Ottawa Company supply this building at $2.25 for the first 3,000 lamps and $2 for all the lamps above that. The city of Ottawa supplies the other buildings at a flat rate of $2, so that the rates of the two companies are practically the same.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the Minister ask the price at which these two companies would supply the current?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were conferred with.

Mr. BLAIN. Public competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Simply because there are only the two companies and we asked them for the best rate they could give and we got it. We have done exactly what I would do if I owned a large building in the city that required lighting. They should have one price for all, whether a meter or a flat rate price.

Mr. GOODEVE. Does the minister mean seriously to tell me that if this company was asked to give a special wholesale rate for a large consumer it would affect in the slightest degree the rate that they make to the ordinary consumer? In this very transaction we find that the Imperial Realty Company, whilst charging the government the regular meter rate, was getting a very much lower rate so that they had a rake-off of $3,000 or $4,000 a year on this building alone. Surely he does not expect this House to believe that the mere asking for a tender for a large supply of power at a low rate would affect the rate charged the ordinary customer. I am amazed that the minister should advance such an absurd argument.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case it is alleged that the Imperial Realty Company had a flat rate, and that the bills which were rendered by the city to the Realty Company and again by the Realty Company to the government were based upon a meter rate. I do not understand that there are two flat rates or two meter rates, but that there are two rates, one a meter and one a flat. If this company, as I think it should be, is subject to the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners or the board of the province of Ontario, which I think has also jurisdiction over electrical matters, the board would allow the company a fair and reasonable profit upon its investments, and therefore, the cheaper the rate at which the government could get its electricity the higher the rate which would have to be charged the ordinary consumer in order to enable the company to make a reasonable and fair profit. The government ought not to be able to get and ought not to seek to get electric lighting or gas lighting, whether by flat rate or by meter rate, at a lower cost than the ordinary consumer pays, whether by flat rate or by meter. That is my position and that is why I have not called for tenders, but have asked the electric company and the city to give us the lowest flat rate.

Mr. BLAIN. Were they both the same?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Then why was the selection made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Ottawa Electric Company is supplying this building with light. The city already had their wires in the other building, and we thought as they were giving as low a rate as the Ottawa company we ought to continue with them.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) must not be surprised at the position taken by the minister because his policy and that of his government is entirely in opposition to public tenders. Therefore, we must expect that when my hon. friend is dealing with a matter of this kind he will not ask for public competition. We tested the House upon that question, and my hon. friend the minister is on record. I have a motion here which was moved and voted on in the House:

That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract, under the direction of a competent purchasing commission, and with regard primarily to quality and price.

I suppose supplies would mean electrical current the same as other purchases. That is the policy the opposition laid down on the floor of the House on many occasions. The minister voted against this motion, and having voted against a policy of public competition he is very fearful lest two companies in the city of Ottawa might get in competition with one another and forsooth the government might get a cheaper price than some poor individual in the city. Did any one ever hear of such a policy? Why does not my hon. friend be frank in dealing with a matter of this kind, and put the transaction beyond suspicion by asking these two companies to give tenders? He had a splendid opportunity to have public competition, he had one company competing with another in the capital city right at his hand, yet he says: Oh, no, we must not do that, we might get something cheaper than we ought to. That part of it is a brand new doctrine; the other part is an old story, the policy of the hon. gentleman and his government is in opposition to public competition, and here is a splendid exemplification of the policy; indeed it will point out to the country the difference between the policy of this government and of the opposition. My hon. friend need not be at all concerned about the citizens of Ottawa.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I venture to say that during all the years the Conservative party was in power they never asked for tenders for electric lighting, and my hon. friend cannot find a single case in any part of the Dominion where they called for tenders for lighting by electricity or gas. They took it for granted that the ordinary charge to the public was the fair and reasonable charge to pay, and he cannot say we are paying one cent more than the large consumers in Ottawa are paying.

Mr. BLAIN. When my hon. friend's party were in opposition they constantly condemned the Conservative government, because we did not ask for public competition, that was one of the chief planks in the platform of the party.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in electricity and gas. I think I am safe in saying that in 1896 the government owned the plant. When my hon. friend asked why, when there are two plants in this city, we did not invite competition, the only excuse he has to offer is that if he did, the department might possibly have got its lighting done cheaper than some individuals would. Might I ask him if he proposes to continue that kind of policy.

Mr. GOODEVE. This is no new policy of the Department of Public Works, because when discussing an item regarding the museum in the city, the minister said that the contractor had tendered too low and that the departments, in order to make up the loss, gave him extras without calling for tenders, and that contractor is still going on supplying extras on that building from year to year. With regard to the particular item under discussion, the Realty Company had a meter rate with the electric light company while charging the government a flat rate, and were making a large profit. It would appear to me, that a company, in fixing a flat rate, would base it on the maximum quantity of light that could be used and would consequently, charge more than if they charged only for the actual light consumed. If for no other reason, it would be advisable for the government to see if they could not get tenders to supply the light by ampere or horsepower for government purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is very difficult to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite. We have been condemned because we did not get a flat rate and now we are being condemned because we did insist on a flat rate. In reply to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), I may say that, as at present advised, I shall continue to do what we have done, namely, find out what is the best flat rate and then give the contract to the company which charges the cheapest. In this particular case, both companies have the same flat rate, and so we divided the contract between them.

Mr. BLAIN. The two companies will know just how to handle the hon. minister in the future.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just as they know how to handle all other consumers of electricity.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What has become of our own electric apparatus which we had for manufacturing light in the building here ? It gave us good light, and gave it to us cheap.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that was in operation about 20 years ago, and was done away with when the Conservatives were in office.

Mr. CROSBY. Before recess, I asked the minister about the contract for the Woods building and the Canadian building, and he answered everything I did not ask him about. He talked about flat rates and meter rates. I remember that when the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), was trying to find out what the Realty Company paid the city of Ottawa for lights in order to compare that with the very high price they were charging this government, the minister and everybody else in his department did everything possible to prevent our getting that information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I deny that most positively. That question came up some time ago, and the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), said I was in the committee room when objection was taken to the production of the written contracts between the city and the Imperial Realty Company. I replied that I was not at that meeting. Through the kindness of the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), I was enabled to see the appendix 3 of the proceedings of that committee, and in looking over the proceedings of the 22nd of April, —that being the day when that contract was asked for, and the Chairman ruled it out—I find I was not present. At a later meeting of the committee an attempt was made by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), to give hearsay evidence of that contract which had been ruled out, and I objected. Any law student of a month's standing will say that I was absolutely correct.

Mr. CROSBY. I was present, and I have pretty good eyesight, and I am prepared to state that the minister was present. But that has nothing to do with the argument. Whether he was present or not, he is responsible for the Public Works Department, and the department did everything they could to prevent the Public Accounts Committee from getting any idea what the Realty Company were paying the city of Ottawa for the light they are furnishing this government. But the department, instead of acting in the public interest, and giving us an opportunity of ascertaining what we were paying in overcharge for light, did everything they could to prevent us from getting the information. We all remember that after it had been fully discussed in the House, the Deputy Minister of Public Works came into the committee the next morning and went on the stand, and the first thing he said was : We have decided, not only to cancel the contract, but to bring an action against the Realty Company to compel them to return the money. Now, the Minister of Public Works stated just before recess that no doubt they had paid more than they ought to have paid ; but he said there was a document furnished by the treasurer of the city of Ottawa which was handed him by the secretary of the Realty Company regarding the price of light ; they discovered that this document was a false document, and yet it was upon this document that the Department of Public Works issued their cheque. Consequently somebody was obtaining money under false pretenses. Then the Minister of Public Works tells us that he has handed that matter over to the Justice Department. I say it was the duty of the Public Works Department to take up this question themselves and find out who is to blame, and compel a return of the money to the public coffers. He says now he has turned it over to the Justice Department, and he really doesn't know whether they are going to do anything or not. The department has paid over this money on the strength of a false document ; I do not care whether it was issued by the treasurer of the city of Ottawa, or at the instance of the secretary of the Realty Company ; the fact is that the cheque was issued on the strength of that false document. It is not flattering to the Public Works Department that they should have issued a cheque on a false document. Now, I want to know from the Minister of Public Works whether they intend to go after the Realty Company, or the city treasurer of Ottawa, I do not care which, whichever one is guilty of making this false document. I want the minister to tell us whether any effort is being made to punish those who were guilty, as shown by that investigation. We were never able to discover in the Public Accounts Committee what price the Realty Company were paying the Ottawa Electric Light Company for the light they were furnishing to the government. I say that the Public Accounts Committee is not a place where the government should stand on fine legal points, when we are endeavouring to get at facts vital to the public interest. There should be no objections raised in the Public Accounts Committee, particularly by a minister of the Crown, whose duty it is to guard the public interest. But our experience has been that, no matter what minister is before the committee, he acts as if he had received a large retainer in order to protect the witness who is there for the purpose of giving information. I want to know where this is going to end. I want to know whether the minister is going to continue the farce, or whether he intends to take any steps to force these parties to return the money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I only repeat to my hon. friend that the papers in the case have been handed over to the Justice Department, with the request that they will look into the case, and take such action as they may think proper to take. The Justice Department is the proper tribunal to which to send cases of this kind.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I think the minister is in error when he stated that the Conservatives were in power twenty years ago when this change was made about the electric lighting. I was here twenty years ago, and my hon. friend was not ; and I know that at that time the government generated the light in this building, and then the plant was moved down below the hill on the edge of the river. The power was at work when the change of government took place, and it was the late Mr. Tarte who made the change, and put in these lights we have now. Those are the facts, and the minister was trying to mislead the House when he stated that the change was made twenty years ago.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The expression 'trying to mislead the House' is not in order.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If the expression 'misleading the House' is not in accordance with the rules of the House, I withdraw it. I say the minister misinformed the House when he made that statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It was not the expression 'misleading' that was out of order, but the expression 'trying to mislead.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information I gave was furnished to me by the chief architect. I could have no personal knowledge of the matter myself.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The change was made in 1897, according to the records, and that is not twenty years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect can remember that they had an electric light power in 1891, which would be about twenty years ago, but he is not able to state when it was changed.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The change was made in 1897, and the architect will find it in his books.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is important, the chief architect will look into it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Let the minister ask his chief architect if the late Mr. Tarte did not put in the present lights.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ewart says he cannot remember when the government ceased to develop electric light. But if it is important, I will have him look up the records.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Let the minister ask his chief architect if it was not the late Mr. Tarte, the then Minister of Public Works, who put in these lights we have here now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes, but it does not follow that the doing away with the electric power station took place then.

Mr. RHODES. The Minister of Public Works has taken the ground that large users of public utilities should be placed upon the same footing and pay the same prices as the smaller ones, and that the government should be placed upon the same footing as a private individual. Now I do not think the great majority of business people in this country would consent to that proposition, but whether it is sound or not, I would like to commend the Minister of Public Works to the Minister of Railways, who, during the deliverance of his budget speech on the Intercolonial railway last year, and the year before, complained to the House that the government was compelled to purchase its supplies for the Intercolonial at the same price as everybody else, although it was a large purchaser of supplies, and if it were not compelled to publish the price at which they were purchased in the Auditor General's Report, they would be able to obtain goods at a lower rate than the general public. He advanced the argument that the accounts of the Intercolonial railway should not be published in that report, because the company would then be able to purchase its supplies cheaper. Only three days ago, in this House, the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) brought up the case of an excursion train being taken from Lévis to Montreal and return, a distance of some 326 miles, and that tickets were sold on that train for $1.50 each, or less than one-half cent a mile return, whereas the rate confirmed by the Railway Commission, and the minimum rate to be charged by other lines of railway was $2.70 for the same service. There was a case of a public utility, but the Minister of Railways justified the smaller charge on the ground that he was serving a larger number, that a larger number of tickets was sold, and that the government was making money out of the transaction. So on these two points the Minister of Railways is diametrically opposed to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement made by the Minister of Railways was an extraordinary one. He said it was not his place to try to beat any one down, or get them to lower their figures under what they were charging others in a contract like this. The principle has been recognized by this government that it is their duty not to expend public moneys, where the expenditure exceeds a certain sum, without asking for tenders. Both sides of the House have put themselves on record in a resolution to that effect. Therefore it is not for the Minister of Public Works to say, I am not going to ask this company or any other company to furnish us with light at a lower rate than they are furnishing it to other customers. His duty is to ask for tenders, and if the company is prepared to tender at a lower rate than they are selling to others, on account of the larger contract, then it is for that company to say what they will tender for, and if they tender to serve the government lower than other parties, it is the duty of the minister to accept that tender.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I would ask the Minister of Public Works to furnish the House with the date when the late Mr. Tarte made the change, and installed the lights we have now. I would also like him to say what was done with the plant the government then owned. Was it handed over to the parties who are now furnishing the light? We had a good plant and wiring, what became of them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get the details for my hon. friend.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In 1896 when this government came into power these buildings were lighted with gas. At that time the government were paying more for gas than they should, as the price of gas has gone down since. At that time the cost of lighting all the public buildings in the city of Ottawa, according to the Auditor General's Report, was $23,483, in 1896, when the Conservative party went out of power. At the present time, under the Liberal party, it is costing this country $53,000 per year to do exactly the same service as was done in 1896. In addition to that we have now electric power, should we not get that electric power much cheaper than gas?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has not been my experience.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then the minister must have been dealing an awful lot in gas and very little in electricity.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have used a good deal of both.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the minister mean to tell this committee that gas is cheaper than electric power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then why is so much electric power being developed? There is not a man in this Dominion but who believes that gas is dearer than electric power; otherwise it would be used.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in the city of St. John, I used gas before I had my house wired for electricity. I am satisfied that electric light cost me twice what gas had formerly cost.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We are speaking of Ottawa, and not St. John. I do not know anything about St. John, but I know that power in Ottawa is sold at probably $15 per horse-power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, others can get it if the minister can not. Any manufacturing industry in Ottawa that wants power, can get it for that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You may get it undeveloped at the dam for $15.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is what it is any place. In Ottawa it is only $15 or $20 per horse-power. I would like the minister to explain how it is that he is now spending $53,000 for lighting these buildings, when it only cost $24,000 when gas was used. If that goes on each year, where are we going to end? I would like the minister to tell the committee one single item in regard to which he has decreased the expenditure or effected economies since he became minister. Can he name one single instance? If he does, I will guarantee to name several where he has increased the expenditure a good deal more, and in connection with these increases, I believe that there has been grafting, robbery and that kind of thing going on. Will the minister name one?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are just at the present time discussing the lighting of the buildings throughout Canada.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am speaking of Ottawa.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Neither in respect of these buildings nor in respect of the lighting of the buildings in the city of Ottawa, can I show a decrease for the reason that every year the number of rooms which is being occupied for the different departments of the government is increasing. Since 1896 there have been a great many hands, possibly a thousand, of clerks added to the different departments for the purpose of attending to the expanding business of the country. My hon. friend has been asleep during the past fourteen years, he does not know that the country has been growing with marvellous rapidity, that its business has doubled, almost trebled in that period of time. The hon. gentleman forgets all that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The clerks have, but the business has not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Beyond the buildings which were occupied in 1896, we have two large buildings on Slater street, the large building on Bank street, the building on O'Connor street, the building on Queen street, and the Corry building, near the railway station. All these buildings are occupied in addition to those which were occupied in 1896. They have to be lighted and that adds to the expense. We have additional charges for gas and electricity. But let my hon. friend go any day to the committee on Public Accounts, when experts are there who know these things, and find out whether we are spending for them one single dollar more than we ought to spend.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). We have had that in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to these expenditures, my hon. friend cannot expect me to decrease the cost of lighting, heating, elevator men or messengers, as all these services are increasing so rapidly. But, if my hon. friend chooses on some proper occasion, to ask as to economies, I could tell him of a great many economies which have been introduced since I became Minister of Public Works. We are making some very large savings in connection with some very important works throughout Canada.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister tells us now, that we should go to the Public Accounts Committee, and see whether there is anything wrong with regard to these items. On this very item, when it came up last year, he asked us to go to the Public Accounts Committee. We went to the Public Accounts Committee on this one item. The minister himself, admits that the item was investigated in the Public Accounts Committee. A gentleman he had there practically acting on behalf of the person who had charged the rates, was willing to second the motion——

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is absolutely in error.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to know if it is not a fact.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had nobody acting there, and there was nobody acting there, as far as I know, for the Realty Company.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister knows well enough that in these investigations he has the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell), practically fighting like a tiger to try to prevent us from investigating anything.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is absurd.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is no doubt about that. Every hon. gentleman knows it. He is there fighting in order not to get out the facts. As far as I am concerned, I believe he is there to uphold the rascality that is going on——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that language is wholly unjustified, and unjustifiable, and that the hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed of it himself.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am not ashamed to make the statement, because I know it to be a fact.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman ought not to use language of that kind with regard to a member of this House. I will call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the hon. gentleman has charged that the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell), goes there. according to his belief, for the purpose of preventing the truth from coming out in the committee.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have no hesitation in saying——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman ought to withdraw that expression, which is entirely unjustifiable.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I said that my belief was that he goes there deliberately and tries to block investigation into these cases. I believe that and as long as I believe it, I do not see that there is anything unparliamentary about it. In so far as saying that it is unjustifiable——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A point of order has been raised. The hon. gentleman is at liberty to explain his words, but until the point is decided, he may not be permitted to continue his remarks.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know what the point is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will ask the Minister of Public Works to re-state his point of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The point of order is that the hon. gentleman was making a most improper reflection upon the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, one that he ought not to make, and one which he ought to withdraw.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because it is an exceedingly improper remark.

Mr. SPROULE. The same remarks have been made over and over again in this House, and, if I understand the rules of order correctly, any member of the House may make them without violating any rules of order. He did not say positively that he does go there, but he said: That is my impression, that is my belief.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is what I do believe too.

Mr. SPROULE. I think such a remark permissible. He may be wrong in his judgment, but he cannot be hanged for his belief.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Objection has been taken to an expression made with regard to the member for Carleton, New Brunswick, going to the committee. When an hon. gentleman's words run over a long sentence and no specific word is objected to, it is not easy to rule. Any expression conveying the meaning or idea that the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, was doing dishonourable or improper work, in the committee, would be out of order. If the hon. gentleman's words conveyed that impresion, they would be out of order.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You know, Mr. Chairman, what I said, and you know what I meant.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman did use the expression that the hon. member for Carleton went to the committee with the intention of covering up rascality, it would be wrong.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not say that. What I said was——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to state what he said, and whatever he says he said will be accepted as his statement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What I said was that when the hon. member for Carleton was in the committee he was at least not assisting us to get at the facts in the way he should. I am not reflecting on the hon. member for Carleton personally because every person knows that any lawyer could be employed, without reflecting on his reputation, to defend a murderer or anything else.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to state what he said, but until the point is finally decided he has not the right to proceed with an argument. As the hon. gentleman put it, I do not think his statement now is out of order.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Thank you.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the hon. member (Mr. Reid) makes a still worse reflection on the hon. member for Carleton, because he now asserts he went there as a lawyer.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, no.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not so understand him.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). He said any lawyer could defend a criminal.

Mr. BARKER. The Minister of Public Works declared that the hon. member (Mr. Reid) ought to be ashamed of himself, and I submit there can be no doubt as to the impropriety of that expression.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood the hon. member (Mr. Reid) to say that the hon. member for Carleton went to the committee for the purpose among other things of covering up rascality, and if he said that I thought he ought to be ashamed of himself. The hon. member (Mr. Reid) says now he did not say that, but he intimated that the hon. member for Carleton is employed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not say that.

Mr. COWAN. You have already ruled Mr. Speaker that the hon. member for Grenville has not made an improper reflection on the hon. member for Carleton and therefore the Minister of Public Works is not justified in making such a statement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not say the hon. member for Carleton was employed to go to the committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the expression that the hon. member ought to be ashamed of himself was intended to convey the idea that he had been guilty of dishonourable conduct, then it would be out of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I will withdraw, but wait a moment. If the hon. gentleman from Grenville solemnly assures this committee that he did not say that the member for Carleton went to the committee to hide rascality, then I feel I should not have used that expression towards the hon. member for Grenville and I withdraw it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the minister deny that when this fraud was exposed in the Public Accounts Committee last year the committee practically unanimously agreed that it should be condemned and the minister cancelled the contract and admitted he had not made a good bargain. How would it be possible for the Public Accounts Committee to investigate every item of the expenditure of $100,000,000. I appeal now to the Minister of Finance because I believe he wants to help these items through and desires to see honest expenditure. The Minister of Finance must know that there was rascality shown up in the Public Accounts Committee, and I would ask him, as I asked the Minister of Public Works this afternoon, to appoint Judge Cassels a commissioner to investigate the Public Works Department, just as he investigated the Marine and Fisheries Department. Judge Cassels' report would satisfy not only the members on this side but the public of Canada generally. Of course when I preferred this request to the Minister of Public Works he raised the objection that everything had been straight and that we had not shown any wrong-doing. The Deputy Minister of Finance is present at every meeting of the Public Accounts Committee watching the proceedings, and I am satisfied the Minister of Finance will not stand up here to-night and declare that everything has been found straight and right in the Public Works Department. I think the Minister of Finance will admit that we have proven that rascality and graft has been going on in that department. Would it not be in the interest of the public to have the Minister of Finance grant a commission of inquiry? Should he do so, speaking for myself, I am satisfied the members of this side would cheerfully let the items go through, if we were promised an investigation by Judge Cassels, an upright and honourable man who is in no way connected with the members on this side of the House. Cannot the Minister of Finance grant that simple and reasonable request and let us see how it will work out? I appeal to him to do so.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not present when my hon. friend made that request to the Minister of Public Works, and I did not hear the minister's reply, but I think it was probably a wise and proper one.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But the Minister of Public Works said there was nothing wrong in the Public Works Department.

Mr. FIELDING. That was a good reply.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, and the same reply was made as to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

That was the defence always given by the government, that there was nothing the matter with the government; everything was all right. But when a commission investigated the department it found that there was no conscience in that department at all. It is useless for us to go over the condemnation meted out to the government by gentlemen appointed by themselves to investigate one department. My hon. friend has the same excuse now. The Minister of Public Works said there was nothing wrong, that no investigation was required, and the Minister of Finance states: Whatever the Minister of Public Works said this afternoon I will endorse. That shows the great faith the Minister of Finance has in the Minister of Public Works. It is well known that the people of Canada are not satisfied with the various departments. Something went wrong with the department of the Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy). I am not charging him, because I suppose most of the wrong-doing occurred before he assumed that position, but that hon. gentleman said that the investigation in the Printing Bureau proved the country had lost $70,000 by irregularities in the department. These are the things that have aroused suspicions in the country. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has asked for a general investigation into the Public Works Department. If there is nothing wrong in that department my hon. friend will not suffer. One department had to bring bookkeepers from New York at a cost of $50 and $75 a day per man and expenses to look into the bookkeeping of the department. I thought that Canada was as well versed in bookkeeping as the United States, but the minister was careful not to allow any Canadian to look into that department. He said in effect that there was nobody in Canada equal to the occasion. They found all this wrong-doing. The opposition now want an investigation into my hon. friend's department. The hon. minister states there is nothing wrong, but we are very suspicious that there is. If there is nothing wrong my hon. friend will not suffer. Why not have a general investigation, which will avoid all this detailed criticism? In the Public Accounts Committee it was found that a man who had been supplying goods to this government without public competition bought an article for $325 and sold it to the government for $960. Before we secured the cost price we had a discussion in the committee and hon. gentlemen opposite said: Do not allow this gentleman to tell how much this article cost him, that would be prying into his private business, and a resolution was put to the committee to that effect. The Finance Minister, whose duty it is to take care of the finances of Canada, voted against allowing that man to tell how much it cost when he was making a profit of 187 per cent. I would think the Minister of Finance would be glad to shift some of the responsibility on the Minister of Public Works, who bears it so gently.

These are some of the wrong-doings that have been found by the investigations made by this side of the House and by gentlemen appointed by this government. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) is asking for the appointment of a public commission to investigate this department generally, avoiding these detailed investigations here, a commission which will be able to lift the lid when the government are not there to hold it down. I thought the minister was going to accede to that request, but I misjudged him, as I have done before. I hope now, that having heard this statement of willingness from this side to assist him in satisfying the public, who are rather suspicious of my hon. friend's department, perhaps not suspicious of himself, he will grant the commission. To-night we asked to have public competition in the supply of light. He says: Oh, no, that is against the policy of my government; we do not want public competition. We want to ask people to give prices, and he says he is a little fearful lest we shall get a lower price than the private individual. If the minister grants an investigation and it is found that there is nothing wrong he will have support in the future from this side that he cannot have now, when his department is surrounded by suspicion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am surprised the minister did not state whether he believed there had been anything wrong in the Public Works Department. He must have got information from his deputy minister, and these facts must have been brought to his attention. The very item we are on was before the Public Accounts Committee last year, and I would ask whether the minister heard the result of that investigation? At the same time last year there was another investigation about a firm in Montreal, the Lymburner firm. The minister must admit that that firm was getting about 200 per cent profit. Every one on this side expected that when it was shown that that firm was charging such prices the Public Works Department would cease doing business with them, but to our surprise we again find the name in the accounts of this year. On finding the high prices charged by this firm we got the accounts and we found that the goods were bought from Lymburner, and certified by a man named Lymburner. We brought him here and found that he was a shareholder and director of the company from whom the department were buying these goods, receiving money as dividends from the firm from which he was buying goods as agent of the department—and he must have been receiving good big dividends, judging by the prices the government paid. He was appointed at $1,300 a year by the Public Works Department as inspector to certify that goods he was purchasing from his own company were correct and the prices fair and just. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, who is leading the House to-night, and should answer, if he considers—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Were not tenders and prices asked for from two or three different firms, and was not the tender of Lymburner, Limited, the lowest?

Mr. REID (Grenville). The way in which these tenders were asked for——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Please answer my question.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As far as my memory serves me, the Lymburner, Limited, were not the lowest tenderers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman's memory does not serve him rightly because they were.

Mr. RHODES. In the matter referred to, public tenders were not called for. There was a letter purporting to contain a tender sent by the firm of Millen & Thom, for the sum of $520 for repairs to be done a certain elevator in the old examining warehouse in Montreal, the exact date of which letter I have forgotten. But ten days later another letter came from the firm of Lymburner, Limited, tendering for the same work for the sum of $506.50, which was immediately accepted. These were the only tenders received; but according to the evidence of both the Lymburners there were 20 firms in Montreal capable of performing the same kind of work. Under those circumstances it is perfectly just and right to say that no tenders were called. Even if it could be said that tenders were called, the evidence on the face of it would go to show there was collusion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). After a statement of this kind, does the Minister of Finance think it unreasonable that we should ask for an investigation? Is he willing that irregularities of this kind should be allowed to continue in any public department and the finances of this country wasted in this manner? This is only one sample, we have named others, and if the Minister of Finance wants more we can give them. I would like him to say if, from the investigations which have taken place in the Public Accounts Committee and from what he has heard in this House, he thinks that everything has been going on right in the Department of Public Works. If not will he give us this one chance to show the real condition of affairs; and if the Public Works Department can show a clean sheet after such an investigation, we shall be quite willing to let the Department of the Secretary of State and the others go scot free. If the hon. the Minister of Finance is not afraid to speak, he ought to have no hesitation in giving a reply.

Mr. KYTE. With respect to the transaction referred to by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) I beg to remind the committee that the circumstances were not all disclosed in my hon. friend's statement. Mr. Lymburner, the inspector, said that he sent out four different notices to parties engaged in that kind of work, that he received only two tenders, and that the contract was awarded to the lowest. And Mr. Lymburner has stated that he had ceased to be a director of the company the moment he became an employee of the department.

Mr. RHODES. On the contrary, the evidence on oath of that gentleman was that he is still a director and has been since the incorporation of the company.

Mr. GERVAIS. A shareholder.

Mr. RHODES. And a director.

Mr. KYTE. He had been at one time the managing director.

Mr. RHODES. And is still a director.

Mr. KYTE. And is still a stockholder of the company.

Mr. RHODES. And a director.

Mr. KYTE. Furthermore it was disclosed that the work was done at the lowest cost at which such work could be done in Montreal. Nor was there any attempt made by the hon. member for Cumberland, who was conducting the investigation, to prove any overcharge. I am confident that the evidence when reported to the House, will disclose that the work was done at the lowest price obtainable and that Mr. Lymburner had certified that he had no other interests in that company than that of a stockholder.

Mr. NORTHRUP. This incident is an illustration of the old saying that the unexpected generally happens. The result of this discussion has been, in my judgment, to give us in the last fifteen minutes the most important announcement made on the floor of parliament in the last 15 years. Ever since 1896, we have been taught to look on the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) as the watchdog of the treasury, the one man in the cabinet whose honesty was to be depended upon to prevent the squandering of public money in the departments of colleagues less scrupulous than himself. To-night, however, the Minister of Finance repudiated the idea that at any time he was ever the guardian of the treasury and states that he is merely the receptacle of the opinions of his colleagues. If any one of his colleagues says: 'Everything is right in my department' then, according to the Minister of Finance, his sole duty is to accept it. Now, I have either correctly or incorrectly given the statement made by my hon. friend. There is no member of this House who would be less willing than myself to misrepresent him in any way: and if I have in any degree misunderstood and consequently misrepresented his statement,

I shall with pleasure give way and allow him to correct the understanding I took from the statement he made on the floor of this House.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not quarrelling with the hon. gentleman's version of what I said. My statement will appear in 'Hansard' and will speak for itself and I am willing to be judged by it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Unfortunately it is impossible for us to have the 'Hansard' report at this moment, but every hon. gentleman present who heard the statement made will judge the Finance Minister by it, no matter what 'Hansard' may say. I say that the statement he made when appealed to by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) to consent to an investigation into certain departments on the grounds alleged by my hon. friend, namely, that the conditions, the transactions and the figures of these departments justified investigation—when that appeal was made, the Minister of Finance had but one answer. That answer was this: I have been told by my colleagues that these figures are correct. Am I right or wrong in that statement?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman says he does not care what 'Hansard' may say. I do. 'Hansard' will report what happened, and I am content to be judged by it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I agree with every word that 'Hansard' says to-morrow; but I am speaking of the present, of to-night, and I am speaking in the presence of hon. members who heard the statement made by the Minister of Finance. And what do we in this House care for what 'Hansard' may say to-morrow? Does the hon. gentleman expect that the unrevised version of 'Hansard' will give a different statement from that which rang in the ears of every hon. member of this House a few moments ago? What about this reference to 'Hansard'? Either 'Hansard' will be correct or it will not. If it be correct, it will bear out the statement I have made. If it does not, I say it will be incorrect, and I speak in the hearing of those who heard the hon. gentleman. I say that the hon. gentleman, when appealed to as 'the watchdog of the treasury,' repudiated responsibility as watchdog—he is not even an alarm clock; it is for him merely to accept the accounts handed in by his colleagues. 'Hansard,' I hope, will report my words as well as those of the Minister of Finance. But the crucial matter is that this House has, for the first time in its history, heard a Minister of Finance deliberately state on this floor that he practically has no responsibility whatever for the accounts of his colleagues so long as they tell him those accounts are correct. And think of a minister of Finance who is the only man out of two hundred and twenty members of this House who does not know that the accounts have not been correct for years gone by! Can any man possibly have attended the meetings of the Public Accounts Committee, year after year—and I have seen the Minister of Finance there—when accounts were investigated and not know that accounts were brought before this House that were not correct? Yet the Minister of Finance, knowing that these accounts are not correct, is prepared, in the face of this House and before Heaven, to say that he has no further responsibility to this House and to the people of Canada than to accept any statement made to him by any of his colleagues. The question before the House is a comparatively small matter, a mere question of expenditure. But I think the House is to be congratulated that, in the discussion of this comparatively small matter, we have had enunciated by the Minister of Finance a principle which the people of this country will understand and remember—that, since the year 1896, there has not been anybody in charge of the Department of Finance, and that the minister had no responsibility to anybody in this country except his colleagues. We understand now why the Farmers Bank was chartered.

Mr. BLAIN. There are other people in Canada who made the request of this government to have further investigation of these departments, including the Department of Public Works.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) wishes to continue the argument on that line, I have to remind him that the item before us is that of lighting the Dominion buildings at Ottawa. Unless the arguments can be made somewhat applicable to that subject, I cannot allow the discussion to take a wider range.

Mr. BLAIN. I obey your decision, Mr. Chairman. We are discussing the question whether there should be an investigation of this lighting or not, and whether an investigation should be by this House spending hour after hour upon it, or whether it should be by commission. And I was pointing out that other people have suggested that a thorough and public investigation should be made, and this I substantiate by reading a statement of the commissioners who investigated the Marine Department:

> Your commissioners regret having been unable to investigate the condition of things in some of the other departments. But to do the work with any pretensions to thoroughness would take much more time than would probably be agreeable to the government.

That is the statement of gentlemen appointed by the government to investigate one department. If they had reached the department having this lighting in charge, I suppose they would have said they regretted they had not an opportunity to go into still other departments. To have matters of this kind cleared up and to allay public suspicion, this side of the House moved a resolution asking for an investigation into all large spending departments which would include the lighting contracts. I need not put this resolution again on 'Hansard;' the Minister of Finance remembers it well, and so does the Minister of Public Works. In the face of that statement by gentlemen appointed by themselves, that other departments required investigation, we on this side put ourselves on record as asking for a thorough investigation of the Public Works Department and others. This was moved in 1909. And what did the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works do? Why, they recorded their votes against the resolution, declaring that, no matter what the commissioners said, they found no wrong-doing in the Marine and Fisheries Department and suggested in their report that there is wrong-doing in other departments and regret very much that they had not the opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They did not say, I think, that there was wrong-doing in other departments.

Mr. BLAIN. That is what they said :

Your commissioners regret having been unable to investigate the condition of things in some of the other departments.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman said that they reported that there was wrong-doing in the other departments.

Mr. BLAIN. What else would he take out of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not take out of it what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) stated.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. minister feels that everything is right in his department, why refuse the investigation?

Mr. PARDEE. No necessity for it.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) said, before the investigation, that there was nothing wrong in the Marine Department. But his friends the commissioners said there was something wrong and that the department had no conscience. But the point is that we are asking that in such matters as this lighting contract there should be an investigation. A year ago we asked for a commission of investigation, and I was much surprised that the Minister of Finance should vote against it. I had a great deal more confidence in him, and I thought he had more confidence in the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) than there would seem to have been at that time.

Mr. LALOR. They got into trouble with one commission, and they did not want any more.

Mr. BLAIN. Exactly. Suppose the opposition were to move for an investigation into my hon. friend's (Mr. Pugsley's) department, where would he stand? Has he the same policy now? He has learned some new things, I am sure. We have had him before the Public Accounts Committee, for instance, on the sawdust wharf. He knows the weak points of that wharf as well as the strong ones. And the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) knows it too. That wharf is in the eastern part of Canada, and he is always anxious to protect the eastern part.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's (Mr. Blain) friends in eastern Canada never give me that credit.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not know what credit the minister has, but I know what he does; when we ask for investigation he refuses not only by speech but by vote. I suppose we are to go on without public competition for lighting for my hon. friend is opposed to investigation, and to public competition. Therefore, the friends of this government must be fed with contracts. When the Minister of Public Works is asked as to competition, he says: We have a list, and we ask those upon the list to tender. One hon. gentleman has shown that there were twenty people ready to tender. Why did not the minister put the whole twenty on the list, or, better still, advertise publicly, thus brushing away all suspicion with regard to his department that the public interest is not maintained?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no list, I think, but Mr. Lymburner said his authority was to buy from anybody at the cheapest possible rate, and he thought he had secured sufficient competition by these circulars.

Power for running elevators, stamp-cancelling machines, &c., $32,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is an increase of $7,000 owing to the increase in the number of buildings throughout the country.

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to have some information as to where these are.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the cost of electric power for running elevators and other machines in the public buildings throughout the Dominion. It is estimated that the power for elevators now installed will cost $25,820, and for those being installed $4,320. I cannot give further details, because these are simply buildings throughout the whole Dominion.

Mr. BLAIN. What course does the minister pursue in towns where there are two lighting plants, as, for instance, in the city of Brantford?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure that what we do is to get the lowest price from the companies, but we do not advertise for tenders.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not? Are you afraid you will get it too cheap?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We could not possibly get it cheaper than we do. My hon. friend knows that these companies have just two rates, a flat rate, and a meter rate, and whichever of these rates is applied it is the same to everybody.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not call for tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We could not get a reduced rate.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has not tried.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know perfectly well we could not do it. I have here a list of these buildings throughout the Dominion for which this $32,000 is estimated. It takes in the parliament buildings and many other buildings in Ottawa, and the public buildings in many cities throughout the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the fixed rate for power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The average rate is about $30 per annum per horse-power.

Mr. SPROULE. A pretty high rate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at retail, I think.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister speaks of there being only the flat rate, and the meter rate. And, if I understood him correctly, he gave the flat rate as $2.25 a lamp.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The company rate here in Ottawa is $2.25 per lamp for the first three thousand lamps, and $2 after that. From the city we get a straight rate of $2.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said that is as low a rate as he could expect. How does he account for the fact that in the town of Orillia they sell at $2 per lamp even if a man takes only four or five necessary to light a small house? Speaking with the mayor of Orillia, he told me that they were paying expenses and making a good profit besides; they did not require that the consumer should take 2,000 or 3,000 lamps before getting the benefit of this rate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do I understand that a man can get enough to light a small house for $8 a year—four lights at $2 apiece?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes. And I have known it to be as low as $1 a year. But I think that that is below the rate at which it can be furnished to-day. But the point in this case is the point of public competition. There are many places where competition is not possible, but there are other towns and cities that have two or three plants, and, in such cases, I regard it as the duty of the Minister of Public Works to ask for tenders. If that were done, no one could reasonably find fault; but, so long as he does otherwise, there is a suspicion that he has not done his whole duty.

Rents, &c., $260,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for payment of rents during the next fiscal year of buildings leased for the public departments in all parts of the Dominion. This takes in the whole of the Dominion including the city of Ottawa. Perhaps I might give the list to the committee: Nova Scotia, Halifax, examining warehouse $1,000; penitentiary 24 cents—I do not know what that means; North Sydney, engineer's office $120; Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, engineer's office, $200; Grand Falls, post office, $120; St. John, customs house, water lots, $22; immigration detention building, $2,105.37; Quebec, $15,861; Ontario, $184,847; Manitoba $4,304; Saskatchewan, $7,487; Alberta, $11,760; British Columbia, $2,700; Peace River district $300. That makes a total of $233,099.11. Then, for phones the total is $1,737.65.

Mr. GOODEVE. I would like to ask the minister if the same generous rental is paid in outside places throughout the Dominion that is shown to be paid in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps I might better answer that question in another way, by saying that the same economy is observed in the city of Ottawa as is observed throughout the Dominion, and if my hon. friend will take the rentals we are paying throughout the Dominion for accommodation for custom houses and post offices I think he will see that we are very prudent and economical; in fact, some people may say that we are too much so.

Dominion buildings, salaries of engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., $235,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of paying salaries in Ottawa and throughout the Dominion. I have a list for the different provinces of the engineers and caretakers and their salaries. I will not read it to the committee, because it would take several hours, but if any hon. gentleman wishes to inquire as to any particular matter I will be very glad to give him the information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to hear about Manitoba.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give the information to my hon. friend with pleasure. In Manitoba we have 32 engineers, firemen and caretakers to whom we pay $23,366, or that is the estimate of their salaries for the coming year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are these engineers employed entirely in public buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In public buildings.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not on dredges?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. About what figure do you pay your caretakers in these buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Amherst we pay $400; Annapolis, $400; Antigonish, $400; Arichat, $150; Baddeck, $250; Bridgewater, $400; Glace Bay, $600; Halifax, $750. I think we pay a little more when we get west of Lake Superior. At Winnipeg we pay the engineer at the old post office $960; firemen, $720; elevator man, $650; electrician, $1,080, and so on.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these certificated engineers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The engineers are all certificated, but the caretakers are not.

Dominion cattle quarantine stations, renewals, repairs, &c., $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That amount is required by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we ought to have the Department of Agriculture here to explain it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote is required to make provision for the construction of corrals and dipping vats along the boundary line between Canada and the United States, and the maintenance of cattle quarantine stations generally throughout the Dominion in a proper state of repair and efficiency during the fiscal year ending March 30, 1912. The whole is in accordance with a request made by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. He has written a letter in which he urges that this amount should be placed in the estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these dipping stations does he propose to build along the boundary?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has not given the information as to those. Perhaps my hon. friend will be good enough to allow me to get the Minister of Agriculture to give him the information when his estimates are under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to the item, but we would like to know what they are doing in other lines, because some people think there is a good deal of danger of importing disease.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have these stations in a number of places in the different provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. What do each of these stations cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From $500 to $600 each. We may have to erect one on an emergency and a vote has to be available. I will get the particulars for my hon. friend when the agricultural items are under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. We are running business without a quorum, and I am afraid I will have to draw the attention of the chairman to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There are 20 members present.

Mr. SPROULE. It will be distinctly understood that when the agricultural estimates are up, we will get all the information about this vote ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is clearly understood.

Yukon public buildings, $75,000.

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to have some information about this. The population is constantly decreasing and the expenses are about the same.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the details here as to the cost for each building. We have been paying Mr. Bertrand, agent for the department, a salary of $4,000. He is clerk of works or superintendent of buildings, but he is leaving the Yukon and I think he intends resigning his position. If so, one of the other officials will discharge the duties of the office and it will not be necessary to fill Mr. Bertrand's place. There is a reduction of $5,000 on this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you providing for a salary of $4,000 for that office next year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total vote is reduced by $5,000. We will not have Mr. Bertrand's salary to pay, although we may have to pay some other official a slight increase for looking after the work.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not what I asked. Are you providing for a salary of $4,000 for the man who fills this office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to tell my hon. friend without going into details. The result is a total of $5,000 less than last year. One official, Mr. Bertrand, has resigned, and we expect to have his duties performed by another official, possibly at some increase in salary.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not give the slightest information in regard to his salary. Does it account for the reduction of $5,000?

Mr. BLAIN. What is the population now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know exactly. It has declined from the boom days, but there is considerable permanent mining, hydraulic mining, and, I think, in some parts of the district, quartz mining.

Mr. BLAIN. The department is expending a good deal there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but we are making reductions. The services of quite a number of officials in the Interior Department have been dispensed with, and we are dispensing with the services of one of our most heavily salaried men.

Mr. GOODEVE. Is the post office building for which there is a vote of $13,000 a government owned building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GOODEVE. How many employees are there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a caretaker at $160 a month, a night caretaker at $160, a charwoman, and then this vote includes the lighting service, fuel, water and scavenger service, &c.

Mr. GOODEVE. Would the postmaster live in the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memorandum on that point, but I assume not, because I presume the caretaker lives there.

Mr. SPROULE. A very commonplace man who is reliable will do quite well as a caretaker, and here you are paying two men at the rate of $1,920 each per annum. In many post offices in the east the caretakers live in the building and receive very small salaries. Formerly, we paid very high salaries in the Yukon and were told it was owing to the high cost of living, but that the expenses were coming down. I should think that you could get good, useful, reliable men to do the work there for one-half the money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not think so; that would be about what we pay in Winnipeg. In the Yukon the conditions are not pleasant and wages and expenses are very high, so that for these positions we have to pay good salaries. I do not think we could get reliable caretakers in the Yukon for less than we are paying. In the east we get them in many cases for $400 or $250, but in the west we have to pay more and in the Yukon we have found it impossible to get reliable caretakers for less than we pay.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they reside in the building or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can obtain a memorandum of that from the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard it stated recently that the population of the Yukon is now between 2,000 and 3,000 people. Some years ago we were told the population was 20,000 people from all over the world, and that it was necessary to keep a large staff there at high salaries, because of the unsettled condition of things there and the danger of the turbulent element. We are told that we have to pay them very high figures because everything is very dear there, but the population has been growing less and the revenues have been diminishing, and there is no reason why the numbers of this force should not be diminished. Yet we keep up the same number from year to year, and every year we are given the same reasons, namely, that it is necessary in the interests of peace and safety to keep up the number. Yet we are told by men from Dawson that that city is just as peaceful as Toronto or Montreal. Why there should not be a greater reduction I do not understand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The country is very remote, and it is difficult to get into it and out of it. In the winter you have to take a journey of a good many miles until you strike the railway at Whitehorse. It is a part of the country where people do not like to live, unless attracted by mining and work incidental to that industry. I do not think it would be possible to get caretakers for less than we are paying these. The suggestion of my hon. friend that we should reduce the number of employees is however, worthy of consideration. The department of the Interior has made considerable deductions. We are dispensing with the services of one of our highest priced men, who has resigned, because he got tired of living out there.

Mr. BLAIN. Have you given him any other office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not so far as my department is concerned.

Mr. BLAIN. In any other department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not that I am aware of. That will make a saving of $4,000 very nearly. He was clerk of works and superintendent of buildings and general agent of the government in connection with expenditures.

Mr. GOODEVE. I have no objection to paying good salaries and I quite understand that the conditions out there are peculiar, but it would be well for the minister to look into this question and see how it is this building requires so many employees. $13,000 seems a pretty large amount apart from the other salaries paid.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I had the privilege the summer before last of spending 10 days in Dawson City. The public building contains the post office, customs house and Inland revenue office, and quite a number of officials are housed there. Dawson is one of the most important post offices in the Dominion, from the fact that large quantities of gold are sent through it.

Mr. SPROULE. But what have the caretakers to do with that ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. These caretakers probably also act as night and day watchmen. I think they do not live in the building, as there did not appear to be room there for them, and their salaries, when we consider the enormous cost of living out there, are not large. Half of that salary in the city of Ottawa, would be very high, compared with the full amount out in the Yukon. Of course the population of Dawson has been decreasing, but I think it has arrived at the point now where the decrease will cease, especially as hydraulic mining is increasing and large companies are in operation there. In my department there, the inspector of weights and measures gets a salary of $2,500 and he may possibly resign because he claims he cannot live there on that figure.

Mr. SPROULE. I can quite understand a man like that requiring to be extra well paid, but I do not see that a caretaker is at all in the same category.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. These may not be ordinary caretakers, but watchmen and very capable men.

Mr. SPROULE. A caretaker is simply there to look after the building. Even though he cannot write his name, he may be more reliable than many a B.A. You can often find a man working as a road-maker, or drain-digger, who is as reliable as the most highly educated man you could choose. It is not fair to compare the inspector of weights and measures with the caretaker of a building. We get little information from the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) when we ask whether this man lives in the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the minister to say he does not.

Mr. SPROULE. No, he does not state that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think he does.

Mr. SPROULE. I must accept the evidence of my own ears rather than the recollection of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I said that from my inspection of the building my impression was that he did not live in the building—there was no room.

Mr. SPROULE. We have heard it stated here that a rent of $40 a month for living quarters in any ordinary public building would be a reasonable figure. If a man were living there and had a family he would have his rent free, and, even counting this at $20, it would be a considerable sum which should be taken into account. And there is also his fuel, light and other things which add a good deal. We have not known whether these caretakers get these perquisites or not. Comparing with what is paid for this class of men throughout the country generally, it would seem that we pay a high figure. I know that for years we have been paying high salaries out there. The minister says they are trying to reduce them as well as they can. In 1909-10 the expenditure was $80,000, in 1910-11 it was the same, and in 1911-12 the estimate is $75,000, a reduction of $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister, on a future day, give us the total expenditure and total revenue of the Yukon?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That covers more than my department, and I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should move for a return.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman is unwilling—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am willing to give anything in my own department.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman give the total revenue and expenditure of the Yukon in his own department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make a note of that.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PROTECTION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 114) to provide for the protection of railway employees. He said: The object of this Bill is to provide protection and accommodation for the carpenters who are employed on the different railway systems of this country. They have complained to me that, though they are permanently employed on the various railways, proper accommodation and protection are not provided for them. The object of this Bill is to compel the companies to provide such accommodation and protection. I understand they are negotiating with the companies at the present time; and though I informed them that it was impossible for this legislation to pass the House this session, they requested that the Bill be presented and printed.

Mr. MACDONELL. Does the Bill apply only to carpenters employed on the railway?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Yes, those engaged in repair work.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterik].

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS AND THE MILITIA.

*Mr. HUGHES:

1. Is the government aware, as alleged, that a body of the Canadian militia from the 10th Hussars, in uniform and armed, as well as a corps authorized and armed under the Militia Act, the Papal Zouaves of Quebec, both turned out and received the Papal Legate with a salute, and acted as a guard of honour to the ecclesiastic on the occasion of his visit to Quebec during the past summer?
2. If so, were these corps authorized by the government to so turn out?
3. Will the government ascertain by whose authority such corps were turned out?
4. Is it in accordance with the Militia Act and the King's regulations and orders, for troops to turn out on such occasions?
5. Is there any objection to regiments or other bodies of troops in uniform and fully armed, turning out and doing honours to the Grand Masters of the Loyal Orange Association or other good and true men, as well as forming guards of honour, and marching on the 12th of July, in the processions of the Loyal Orange Association, an association whose object is the perpetuation of the principles of civil and religious liberty?
6. Why was there no guard of honour to meet and act as escort to the Right Honourable and Right Rev. Bishop Ingram, who came to Canada as the accredited representative of His Majesty, King George V., during the past summer?
7. Is it the intention of the government to inquire into the irregularities which occurred during the past summer in the use of troops in connection with sectarian demonstrations, and discipline those who have transgressed the law?
8. Is it the purpose of the government to require that no bodies of troops shall be permitted to take part, armed and in uniform, in any procession or demonstration not under the auspices of the state, without special authority from the government?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. The corps turned out for a voluntary church service.
4. The service was performed as a voluntary church parade, and not officially recognized or approved.
5. Answered by No. 4.
6. The matter was never brought up.
7. There was no transgression of the law, therefore, no inquiry is needed.
8. All necessary instructions are contained in the Militia Act and King's Regulations and Orders.

CANADIAN CONTINGENT TO THE CORONATION.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. What rule or principle will the government adopt in selecting the officers and men of the Canadian contingent to the Coronation?
2. What will be the probable number of officers and men of said contingent?
3. What other persons will be selected to represent the Canadian government?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My deputy informs me that the answer was sent in last week in the regular way.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I inquired of the clerk, and he cannot find it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will make further inquiry.

GUNS AT ESQUIMALT.

*Mr. BARNARD:

1 Has the government removed from Esquimalt either or both the large guns left there by the imperial authorities, and which were intended to be mounted at Signal Hill?
2. If not, has the government any intention of moving either or both of said guns?
3. What is the reason of such removal or intention to remove, and where is or are such gun or guns to be removed to?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Matters relating to the defence of the country are not made public. These are among the most powerful guns in the Dominion of Canada. While I have to say this publicly, I would be very glad to acquaint my hon. friend privately what the intention of the government is with reference to these guns.

Mr. BARNARD. Is the minister of the opinion that he can move one of these very heavy guns without the country knowing anything about it, particularly through a considerable section of the population?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I stated to the House last year in answer to my hon. friend, the matter has been considered by the department in connection with the War Office, and a final decision has been reached as to what shall be done with the guns. I am prepared to tell my hon. friend exactly how the matter stands, and to show him the papers and all the correspondence; but I do not think it is desirable to publish them.

DOMINION LANDS IN PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN.

*Mr. LAKE:

1. What were approximately the gross receipts, cash and scrip, on account of Dominion lands revenue for the province of Saskatchewan for the twelve months ending 31st December, 1910?
2. What was approximately the cost of administration in respect of the same for the said province?
3. What was approximately the cost of surveys in the province for the said period?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. $1,163,597.18.
2. $264,600.
3. $195,692. This expenditure does not include anything for administration expenses at Ottawa which during the year ended the 31st December, 1910, amounted to $883,427.24.

IMPORTATION OF CANNED PEAS.

*Mr. MARSHALL:

How many cases of canned peas were imported into Canada in the fiscal years 1908 and 1909, giving the countries from which they come, and the amount received from each?

Mr. PATERSON:

Canned peas are not separately enumerated in the classification of imports. They are included in the item 'Vegetables, and baked beans in cans or other air-tight packages, n.o.p.' and it is impracticable to segregate the peas from the many other articles in the item.

APPLICATION FOR HOMESTEAD BY GEO. BELLEROSE.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. Upon what date did Mr. George Bellerose make application for homestead on which he has since resided in Chilliwack district?
2. If existence of timber lease is the reason for delay, to what extent does timber under lease encroach on homestead applied for?
3. If not dealt with before proclamation of proposed new regulations, in what position will this application be?
4. Is it the intention of the minister to deal with this application before the new regulations are proclaimed?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. According to the records here, George Bellerose first wrote on the 8th January, 1900, asking for entry for the south half of section 19-22 E.C.M. There is no record here of his having made a formal application for entry for any portion of this land outside of the timber berth in the manner provided, nor does it appear why he has not made a formal application.
2. Timber berth 55 covers 10 acres in the south-east corner of the said land, and has not been open to entry.
3. An informal application or an application not granted has no standing.
4. The case of George Bellerose and a number of other settlers along the edge of timber berth 55 are now under consideration.

TIMBER LICENSES IN NEW WESTMINSTER DISTRICT.

*Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. Have any petitions been received against renewal of timber licenses for berths Big A, Little A, and B. 61, in township 29, New Westminster district? If so, by whom signed, and what are the grounds stated?
2. What reply if any has been made to the petitioners?
3. Has any official of the government made a report recently on these timber berths? If so, to what effect?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. A petition was received dated April 2, 1910, signed by W. R. Barge and 166 others, residents of Rosedale and Chilliwack, citing that it had been heard that an application for extension of time on certain licenses covering timber berths known and described as big 'A' and little 'A' and 'B. 61' was being considered by the department, and asking that no extensions be granted on the said licenses on the ground that the land covered by said licenses is very valuable for agricultural purposes, that the best timber was taken off several years ago, and that the development of the surrounding district is retarded through the fact that this particular land is withheld from the privileges of settlement.
2. The petition was replied to 18th April, 1910, setting forth that while the department has full appreciation of the position of the settlers in question, and every desire to meet their wishes, at the same time the department is equally charged with the administration of the timber as well as that of the land, and that arrangements were in course to have inspections made of these, and other berths similarly placed, with a view to giving special consideration to the relative claims and necessities of conflicting land owners and limit holders.
3. Timber berths 61, 'A' and 'A' (6) were examined by H. C. Wallin an official of the department, who reported September 15, 1910, concerning the timber thereon that there could be cut of fir, 7,551,200 feet board measure; cedar 2,304,440 feet board measure; hemlock 440,320; total 10,295,960.

INDIAN MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

Mr. JAMESON:

1. Upon what basis or principle are medical men who attend to the Indians paid, is it per capita, by salary or number of visits and attendance, and distance necessary travelled?

2. Do such physicians furnish their own medicines, or are such furnished at the expense of the department?

3. How many Indians are in the reserve at Bear river, Nova Scotia?

4. Who is the medical officer attending the Indians on the reserve, when was he first appointed, upon whose recommendation, how is he paid, how much was he paid last year, and how much has he been paid since his first appointment?

5. How far does he have to travel from his home to visit the reserve, and how many visits did he make last year?

6. Are all the Bear river reserve Indians located on Bear river reserve? If not, how many are located elsewhere and where?

7. Do they have the services of another medical officer? If so, who is he, when was he first appointed, by whose recommendation, what was he paid last year, and how much has he been paid since he was first appointed?

8. What other medical officers are employed by the government to attend Indians in Nova Scotia, what is the date of the appointment of each, the number of Indians under the professional care of each, the distance in each case from the home of the medical officer to the reserve and the salary or yearly allowance to each for such medical services?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. The principle governing the payments to doctors attending Indians depends very largely upon the conditions and circumstances of each case as to whether they shall be paid by salary or by fees.

2. Physicians who are paid a salary supply the medicines prescribed for Indians. In other cases the medicines are paid for by the department.

3. Eighty.

4. Dr. L. J. Lovett; in 1887. His appointment was made at the request of the agent. He is paid salary; $250; $3,336.02.

5. From one to three and a half miles to visit the Indians at their different residences. He reported 248 visits, as well as considerable office attendance.

6. No; eighteen reside at Weymouth.

7. Yes. Dr. E. J. Elderkin is the medical officer for about 35 Indians residing at Weymouth and vicinity; in 1890; his appointment was made at the request of the agent; $100; $1,725.93.

8. The other medical men are as follows:

EXPORT OF PLOUGHS.

Mr. NEELY:

How many ploughs manufactured in Canada were exported to the United States in the years 1909 and 1910 respectively, and what was the value of these exports?

Mr. PATERSON:

The number and value of ploughs (Canadian produce) exported from Canada to the United States during the fiscal years ended March 31, 1909 and 1910 respectively was as follows:—

	No.	Value.
1909	213	$3,936
1910	389	40,539

WOOD ISLAND LIFE BOAT.

Mr. DANIEL:

1. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries recently installed a new motor life boat at Wood island, Bay of Fundy?

2. If so, what are the dimensions and the description of the new boat, and of what material is the hull constructed?

3. How many persons will she be able to accommodate?

4. How many compose her crew?
5. Where was she constructed, and what was the total cost of the boat?
6. What speed is she expected to develop, loaded, under moderate sea conditions?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. Yes.
2. Length, 26 feet; breadth, 7 feet; depth amidships, 2 feet 9 inches. Motor surf boat. Wood.
3. About 20.
4 and 5. Government shipyard, Sorel, P.Q. $2,571.10.
6. Nine miles per hour.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar):

What amount is still owing by the farmers of the west for seed wheat, oats, barley and flax supplied them by the government?

Mr. OLIVER. On the 31st December, 1910, $195,444.49.

OSHAWA CUSTOMS COLLECTOR.

Mr. HUGHES:

1. Has Mr. G. F. Blamey, collector of customs at Oshawa, been retired? If so, why?
2. Does the government consider a classical poet a suitable appointee to succeed Mr. Blamey?
3. Who has been appointed?
4. What salary had Mr. Blamey?
5. What salary has the new appointee now, and is he promised an increase? If so, to what sum?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. Mr. Blamey has been granted leave of absence for six months from December 1, 1910. He will be placed on the retired list at the expiration of such leave. Mr. Blamey is 77 years old, and is being retired on account of age.
2 and 3. Mr. L. C. Smith is now employed as acting collector of customs at Oshawa, and is considered to be suitable for the position.
4. $1,300 a year.
5. Salary $1,300 a year now. The question of an increase in the salary has not been considered.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing the full names of the permanent or temporary employees appointed at Montreal since the 1st of January, 1904, in the Post Office Department, the Customs, Inland Revenue and Public Works; the age and place of residence of these employees at the time of their appointments, the dates and nature of changes, promotions or increases of salary granted these employees since their appointment.—Mr. Gervais.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and correspondence between the Department of the Interior or any of its officials and Mr. J. Krenzer, or their solicitor, or one Mr. Wolf, and of all reports of the officials of the said department respecting the south half section 28, township 27, range 18, west of the 2nd principal meridian, and also all correspondence, letters and telegrams between the department and one Thomas Greenway or his brother, respecting the said lands, and all corresponrence between the department and its officials respecting the said lands; and all papers, reports, correspondence and documents put in the files of the department since the 1st of April in relation to the dispute between said Krenzer and said Greenway.—Mr. Staples.

SALE OF FLOUR AND MEAL.

Mr. STANFIELD moved:

That it is expedient to provide that when flour or meal is sold or offered for sale by the bag, there shall be plainly stamped or marked on the bag the name of the manufacturer or packer and his address, and the weight of the contents and of the tare of the bag.

He said: Mr. Speaker, chapter 85, section 163, of the Revised Statutes provides that every barrel of flour or meal shall contain 196 pounds, and every half barrel 98 pounds, but there is no provision for selling flour or meal by the bag. In my own county, as well as in other counties, I have heard complaints made that millers put up flour, and more particularly corn meal, in bags of different weights. They are supposed to put 98 pounds in a bag, but farmers have told me that when they weighed these bags they found as little as 91 pounds. The House can readily see that the consumer is losing considerable by this method. The amendment I propose to make in the Bill which I shall introduce, if this motion is adopted, is that every manufacturer or packer shall stamp plainly on the bag his name and address, and the weight contained in the bag. The reason that I did not think it would be wise to make a standard weight is that flour, particularly, is sold in half bags, quarter bags, and, I believe, in eighths, and it would be pretty hard to amend any statute so as to provide for conditions of that kind. If the House will allow a Bill for this purpose to be introduced, when it reaches the committee stage, we will discuss the question more thoroughly.

Mr. FISHER. I see no objection to this resolution, as I understand from the hon. member (Mr. Stanfield)) that it is introduced with the purpose of founding a Bill upon it, and, of course, we will have full opportunity of discussing the details of that Bill. I take it that the hon. member is proceeding in this way because it is a subject that has reference to trade and commerce, and consequently a Bill has to be founded upon a resolution. With that understanding, and leaving the House full opportunity to discuss the principles of the Bill, as well as its details when it comes before us, I see no objection to passing this resolution.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that apply to a great deal of the flour that is shipped in from Manitoba and elsewhere in bags? Flour comes in by the carload in that way. Would it apply to all that, because it would make a very great difference to the manufacturer of flour?

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend had better address his question to the mover of the resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that if this resolution were passed a Bill founded on it would come under the purview of some department of the government, and the minister at the head of that department would be the one, from whom we would expect to get information and advice. I do not know whether the hon. member (Mr. Stanfield) has considered that or not. But it would entail a considerable amount of work, in my judgment, if this Bill became law. While it is the usual practice that flour is sold by the hundredweight in bags and there is an amount allowed for the bag itself neither the weight nor name is marked on the bag. They sell the flour bag and all, and new bags are coming into use all the time, and I take it they would all have to be stamped. I do not know whether it applies to anything else except flour and oatmeal ; I suppose it would not apply to bran or shorts?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What about corn and what they call cream of wheat which is sometimes sold by the hundredweight. I am not saying the principle is not right but if it applies to all these things it would cause a good deal more trouble to the miller.

Mr. STANFIELD. The object of this amendment is to protect the consumer and not the miller who is quite able to take care of himself.

Mr. FISHER. This legislation is an amendment to the Inspection and Sales Act which comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the details would have to be considered by that department. The general principle that everything sold must be what it is represented to be is a good one ; and is embodied in our present legislation. The practice of selling flour and meal in barrels has changed of late years so that it is now generally sold in sacks ; and I understand the hon. member (Mr. Stanfield) wishes to apply the rule to the sack, which is to-day the law in regard to the barrel. If it does not unduly interfere with the course of trade it might be well to extend this good principle in the manner proposed.

Mr FISHER.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a great deal of flour sold in paper bags running from 20 to 100 pounds.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know whether the hon. member (Mr. Stanfield) intends to apply it to paper bags or not.

Mr. STANFIELD. Bags of flour generally have the weight marked on them and the complaints made to me refer more particularly to cornmeal.

Motion agreed to.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION.

Mr. MONK moved :

That the Select Committee of this House, named during its last session to investigate the different systems of proportional representation, adopted or suggested elsewhere, as an improvement upon our present methods of election, with power to extend said inquiry to all the various forms of the proportional representation laws proposed or in force, and with power to send for persons or papers and to employ a shorthand writer and to report from time to time, be reappointed, and that the said committee be composed as heretofore of the Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, Messrs. Burrell, Kyte, Magrath, Turcotte (Quebec), Wilson (Laval), and the mover.

He said : The object of this resolution is merely to reconstitute the committee on proportional representation which was appointed last year but had not time to finish its labours before the end of the session. Some evidence was taken then but there are still witnesses to be examined and important evidence to be adduced. The same members as last year will compose the committee.

Motion agreed to.

DAMMING THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) moved :

For a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, reports, memorials, plans, orders in council, treaties, conventions, agreements, documents and papers of every kind, touching any proposal or Bill to erect dams or other similar works across the River St. Lawrence, or part of the said river, at or near the Long Sault, or in the vicinity thereof; including all statutes of the state of New York and of the United States of America relating thereto, and all Bills now before the congress of the United States of America touching the same, and all the proceedings upon all such statutes and Bills.

He said : It is reported in the press that the Bill to which this motion has relevance or some similar Bill has been defeated in the Senate of the United States, but I am not clear as to what the exact situation there is. However that may be, it is desirable that we should have all these papers before the House in order that the country may be in a position thoroughly to comprehend the whole situation as it has developed in the United States if ever a similar proposal should be renewed there or in this parliament. I would not care to associate myself with the view which was presented in this House a few days ago. That if the United States did not decrease the level of the water in the River St. Lawrence we have no standing whatever to make a protest against the creation by any corporation formed in that country, of obstructions across the river. I rather regret that the Minister of Justice seemed to adopt that view. The channel which has been alluded to is one which, under the terms of the Ashburton Treaty, must be free and open forever to the people of both countries. As I understand the argument which was made in this House on the occasion in question, it amounted to this, that if the level of the water is not raised beyond a certain height, the United States can do anything they like in that channel, provided they afford us another channel; if they establish a private canal, and close the channel up altogether, they are at perfect liberty to do so, and we have absolutely no right, and no standing under international law or otherwise, to make any remonstrance whatever. I would not be inclined to regard the situation in that way. I would consider that we would have a right and a duty to protest if that channel were interfered with by a corporation or by the United States government. They could not possibly be the sole judges as to whether navigation was interfered with or not. They could not possibly arrogate to themselves the sole right to determine whether navigation had been interfered with by the substitution of another channel. Such a statement of the case appears to me an unreasonable one, and I am bound to say that it is not one that I would have expected the government of this country to make through the mouth of the Minister of Justice or through the mouth of any other member of the cabinet. However, that may be, I would think it desirable that the documents alluded to in this motion should be brought down and laid upon the table of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no objection whatever to the granting of the motion of my hon. friend. On the contrary, I rather welcome it, and the government will spare no effort to have as complete a record as can be made, so that we shall have before us in due form the exact situation, commencing with the Ashburton Treaty, so that we may ascertain, as far as we can, what our rights in the matter are, and how far they have been complicated or helped by subsequent legislation. Of course, the preparation of such a return will take some time. As to our rights under the Ashburton Treaty, I would not care to express an opinion at this moment. The Minister of Justice, who is an eminent authority on questions of this kind, apart from his official position, has given his opinion. My hon. friend, who is also a high authority in his profession, has given another interpretation of the law; but, happily for us, whatever opinion we may entertain, I have reason to believe that the Bill which has been the cause of all this excitement, has met a reverse at one stage of the proceedings.

Mr. FOSTER. What may be thrown out at one time by a branch of the United States legislature may pass at another time, so that a temporary relief should hardly be looked upon as a shelving of the whole question, and I can conceive of no stronger argument, on the part of the promoters of the same company, or of a similar company, before a committee or before Congress, than the statement which has been made by the Minister of Justice here. I am not a lawyer, and I do not like to interfere between two lawyers when they disagree; but, even as a matter of law, the Minister of Justice thought that he was absolutely correct. It seems to me that there was nothing to call forth that expression. If it happens not to be correct, and I hope it does not, and it does not seem to be common sense that it should be, we have put a little piece of machinery into the hands of those who are in favour of interfering with the rights of navigation beyond certain limits which we may find it very difficult to meet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not admit that at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not the policy of my right. hon. friend to admit anything.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is the policy of my hon. friend to suggest anything.

Mr. SPROULE. I rather imagine that that Bill was thrown out at Washington because of the discussion which took place here the other night and the strong pronouncement then made against the principle of allowing such corporations the rights which that Bill contemplated this corporation should have. When we were discussing the fact the other night, if I understood the gist of the argument, it was contended by some parties that because it was proposed to generate power on a branch of the river that was on the American side, and passing through American territory, neither the International Waterways Commission, nor this House, had any right to interfere. Provided that the level of the water was not raised in the main stream or any branch of it in which navigation was being carried on or could be carried on. But there were many in this House who held that one branch of the St. Lawrence river was the same as another, and that if we put an obstruction across one branch, it was equivalent to putting an obstruction across the whole stream. I drew attention to this point in the Railway Committee in connection with a Bill giving power to erect a bridge across the Niagara river, which is a navigable stream. It was contended that Canadians did not navigate it, but that Americans did, and that because the plans of the bridge were submitted to the Minister of Public Works, that was sufficient to safeguard the rights of both countries. I contended that it was not, and I contend so still. Since we have an International Waterways Commission, in my opinion, before we pass any legislation affecting those rights, it should be brought to the attention of that commission, so that we may have their views upon it. In this case the approval of the committee was given to the proposed legislation notwithstanding the fact that the Niagara river is a navigable stream. I think that was wrong and out of harmony with the principle discussed here, and I believe generally accepted the other night. If we can get any additional information on this subject from the papers to be brought down, it is very desirable that the House should have it, because we cannot too soon have some international understanding as to the extent to which those rights can be interfered with under corporate powers given by this House or by legislative authority in the United States.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The other evening I think the Prime Minister stated that he understood that the Bill which was then before Congress was intended to dam only a part of the Sault, that is the South Sault. Now, I have before me the Bill, which I see by the newspapers has been thrown out, and it is as follows:

S. 10558.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

January 30, 1911.

Mr. Oliver introduced the following Bill, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Commerce:—

A BILL

To provide for the improvement of navigation in the St. Lawrence river and for the construction of dams, locks, canals, and other appurtenant structures therein at and near Long Sault, Barnhart, and Sheek islands.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the Long Sault Development Company, a corporation organized under a law of the state of New York, entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Long Sault Development Company, and to authorize said company to construct and maintain dams, canals, power-houses, and locks at or near Long Sault island, for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Saint Lawrence river and developing power from the waters thereof, and to construct and maintain a bridge, and carry on the manufacture of commodities,' which became effective May twenty-third, nineteen hundred and seven, its successors and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate for navigation, water-power, and other purposes for a period of ninety-nine years a dam or dams in so much of the Saint Lawrence river as lies south of the international boundary line between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, near Long Sault, Barnhart, and Sheek islands, either independently or in connection with like works now erected or to be erected in so much of said river as lies north of said international boundary line, with a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto, and a lock or locks, a canal or canals, and other structures appurtenant thereto; provided, that such dam or dams, lock or locks, canal or canals, and other structures appurtenant thereto, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be constructed, maintained, operated, modified, or removed in all respects subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to amend an Act entitled "An Act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,"' approved June twenty-third, nineteen hundred and ten: provided further, that such bridge or bridges and approaches thereto, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be constructed, maintained, operated, modified, or removed in all respects subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March twenty-third, nineteen hundred and six: and provided further, that the Secretary of War shall cause a survey of that portion of the Saint Lawrence river to be affected by said improvements to be made with a view to securing a navigable channel, suitable for commerce up and down said river, from a point opposite the western end of Croil island to a point opposite the eastern end of Barnhart island, together with plans and specifications therefor, and all rights herein granted to the Long Sault Development Company shall be conditional on its improvement of said channel at its own expense, in accordance with said plans and specifications, said channel to be completed simultaneously with the other works herein authorized, all expenses connected with such survey and the preparation of such plans and specifications to be paid by the said company, its successors, or assigns.

Section 2. That said Long Sault Development Company, its successors and assigns, shall be subject to the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relative to the boundary waters between the United States and Canada, proclaimed by the President of the United States on the thirteenth day of May, nineteen hundred and ten.

Section 3. That the actual construction of the works hereby authorized shall be commenced within two years and shall be completed within fifteen years from the date of the passage of this Act; otherwise this Act shall be void, and the rights hereby conferred shall cease and be determined.

Section 4. That if said Long Sault Development Company, or any other company or companies acting with it in such development, shall develop power by the construction of works, a part of which shall be located north of the international boundary line, at least one-half of the power generated shall be delivered in the United States. Provided, that when in the opinion of the Secretary of War and the chief of engineers use cannot be found in the United States for the full share thus assigned to this country the surplus may be temporarily diverted to Canada, but shall be returned to the United States when in the opinion of said officers it is needed. Provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the importation from Canada of the whole or any part of the power generated from any of the said works in the St. Lawrence river.

Section 5. That should the works hereby authorized be or become at any time, in the opinion of the Secretary of War and the chief of engineers, inadequate to accommodate, or an interference with, the navigation of that portion of the St. Lawrence river affected thereby, said company, its successors or assigns, shall, under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the chief of engineers, make adequate provision for the accommodation of navigation; and should said company, its successors or assigns, fail so to do, the United States government shall, under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the chief of engineers, do anything required to make such provision for navigation, and the expense thereof shall constitute a debt of said company, its successors or assigns, and a lien upon all its property.

Section 6. That the Long Sault Development Company shall execute a bond obligatory on itself, its successors and assigns, with good and solvent sureties in the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, payable to the United States, for the use and benefit of the riparian and other landowners in and along the St. Lawrence river conditioned to pay all damages that may accrue to them, or any of them, by reason of overflow, ice jams and other causes produced by the erection or maintenance of said dam or dams, and the work of construction shall not commence until said bond is executed and approved by the Secretary of War and deposited in the War Department.

Section 7. That the right to alter, amend or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved, and the United States shall incur no liability because of the alteration, amendment or repeal thereof.

That is the Bill which is now before the Senate in Washington, and I understand the one that Congress has thrown out. There are one or two points in connection with it to which I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister. It refers to the treaty proclaimed by the President, May 13th, 1910. They make no reference whatever to the Ashburton Treaty. As I remember the International Waterways Commission Treaty was dated January 11th, 1910.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was put in force by the President on May 11.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Prime Minister will notice that this Bill gives them power to improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence river and to develop power from the waters thereof. It also says they are authorized to construct, maintain and operate for navigation, water-power and other purposes, &c. I mentioned to the Prime Minister last year that the intention of this same company was not only to develop power, that of course is the main thing they have in view, but as I had heard privately from those behind this Bill, to build a canal from the point where they are erecting this dam down to Lake Champlain. This place, Massena, is the last American point on the river, from there down, Canada has both sides of the river, and if they were allowed to let so much water run down and build a canal from Lake Champlain they would make that the foot of navigation for the Americans, bringing grain from Chicago and the west. The minister will remember that discussion, and I do not think any one in the House gave us the impression that there was any truth in that report. The other evening, I happened to be on the train, and, meeting the secretary of the International Waterways Commission, I asked him if any such thing had ever been brought out before their commission. He told me that it had been, that plans and all were submitted to this International Waterways Commission, and that our side of the commission had reported against it, and that that report was in the Public Works Department. Should that be the case it is a very serious thing, I think, for our great St. Lawrence route; for, if they get that dam and get the canal through such as I mentioned last year, then grain coming from Chicago, Duluth, Port Arthur or any of the upper lake ports can be taken right down to Massena. I asked the secretary how long the canal was. I have forgotten the figures he gave me, but it is not by any means a long canal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. From Oswego?

Mr. REID (Grenville). No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not heard of any thing but Oswego.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not hear of it until the other evening. The secretary gave me the name. The words 'Lake Champlain' form a part of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who is the secretary from whom the hon. gentleman got his information?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think his name is Coté.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No such report has come to my notice.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It may be that he is wrong.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is mistaken.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It may be so.

Mr. BRODEUR. Can my hon. friend be referring to the canal which has been chartered between Montreal and St. Johns, which has the words 'Lake Champlain' in its name? But it has no reference to the subject of this motion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No. But this same company applied for a charter last year, and I believe, at the time, it was proposed to give them power to dam the St. Lawrence river; but I heard at the time that their whole scheme was to run a canal from where this dam would be, down to Lake Champlain, thus diverting the traffic that now goes to Montreal. If this were true, it would be a very serious thing, and if it were brought to the Prime Minister's attention, the obvious result of such a scheme would surely weigh with him to prevent it being carried out. I mention this to-day so that when the matter comes up again, these points may be considered, for these men are sure to come here again and want a charter, and, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), has said, they are not going to stop with this year's results at Washington. I draw to the attention of the Prime Minister the statements that have been made to me. I did not ask Mr. Coté to give me any private information; it was a public matter so far as I knew; I was simply discussing this question and asking what the commission had done. I certainly do not wish to reflect upon Mr. Coté.

As to this whole question, we on the St. Lawrence front, feel very strongly. It does not make any difference to me personally, because I am quite a distance from it; but we feel that the great St. Lawrence route should be kept as it is. The steamers stop at Prescott, which is the terminal point from Toronto. Passengers all change there, and it is the very fact of these rapids being there, that brings thousands and thousands of people down that river every year. To give the whole channel into the control of a private corporation, is something about which the people there feel very keenly. In fact, they feel that the Prime Minister will not agree to any such proposition. The damming of the South Sault, which the Prime Minister mentioned the other evening, is also very important. I have talked with engineers of repute on the subject, and they claim that if you raise the river the fifty feet or whatever may be necessary, it is going to throw the water round into the North Sault, and you cannot tell what the effect may be. Has the Prime Minister ever seen the plan showing the exact location of the islands? A glance at the map would show that if you dam the South Sault, the water must go by some other way. And we are not going to get any benefit from it. We cannot get the power, for the power is on the American side. The whole St. Lawrence at that particular point is on the American side. Even the North Sault, the rapids down which the Richelieu boats go, is on the American side. If we allow the river to be dammed at that point, we are simply under their control. At the time of the Ashburton Treaty, the parties who framed that treaty certainly went into the matter very carefully and protected our interests at that time. The only reason I can see that has been advanced either to this House or to the country why that charter should be granted is, that power is wanted at Cornwall, Morrisburg, Iroquois, Prescott, Brockville and Kingston. If you go east of the easternmost of these places, you have the Beauharnois canal, and all the powers developed about Lachine. So, I think they have plenty of power there for many years. So far as Cornwall is concerned, I understand that there is no great cry there for more power. I understand that in Cornwall there are some who would like to see the dam go on for the local benefit that might arise in the way of more manufactures or something of that kind. But I do not think the town is suffering for want of power. As to Morrisburg, they are absolutely against this proposition. Even if there were a power line run in there, they could not use more than a few horse-power. The Hydro-Electric Commission is trying to arrange power for these places. In Prescott, in which town I live, we are anxious to get power, there is no doubt about that. But to-day you could not sell 500 horse-power in Prescott. While they are very anxious for power, yet they are down on this proposition to dam the St. Lawrence. Speaking from what I have heard, Brockville, while anxious for power, is not willing to contract for more than 1,500 horse-power with the Hydro-Electric Commission. Kingston, I understand, wants several thousand horse-power. If we have a little patience, I believe that within the next year or two we shall have all the power we want in these places, and much sooner than we could get it by the project of damming the St. Lawrence. They tell me, and I think it is true, that they are developing some power here at Ottawa. The distance from Ottawa to Prescott is 52 miles. From Prescott to where this dam on the St. Lawrence would be built, is at least as far as that. They are not any nearer to Prescott than we would be from Ottawa. This power will go all over the country. Then there is another power that is being developed; they are getting things in shape, and expect within twelve months, to have from 8,000 to 10,000 horse-power developed north of Kingston. They are trying to make arrangements with the Hydro-Electric Commission to run a line to Kingston, and down to Brockville and Prescott. These powers we have in our own country, they have not been taken up before, and I am quite satisfied that if this matter is held back for two or three years, the towns from Prescott to Kingston will not have any trouble. Kingston is the largest place that wants power, I suppose Kingston might take from 6,000 to 8,000 horse-power. I believe that Kingston is to-day in a position to get that power delivered—the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty), will correct me if I am wrong.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Where from?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is a company that runs a line from Trenton, they have 100,000 horse-power. Now, I will tell the Prime Minister why I make that statement. A short time ago representatives from Kingston, Gananoque, Brockville and Prescott, and I think the reeves, met a representative of the Hydro-Electric Commission, and the object, I understood, was to find out how much power each municipality would take so he could give them a rate. I saw these gentlemen when they were returning from Toronto; I met one of them with whom I am well acquainted the solicitor for this company, who was there in behalf of this company to oppose the Hydro-Electric scheme, and he told me that his company were prepared to furnish Kingston with all the power they wanted, provided Kingston would give them the absolute franchise, for $25 per horse-power. He gave me the impression that the Kingston people did not want to go into that scheme because they thought the power from the Hydro-Electric would be cheaper. If that is the position of things, it will work out all right in the end for Kingston. Now since these powers are close enough to be developed, and to be brought into these places, and will be brought in within the next year or two, I think we in this House need not pass any legislation of this kind. It may be that in twenty years from now the position of this country will be changed. But unless there is some strong reason why that Bill should be passed in this House other than those I have mentioned, I think this government and every member of this House should strongly oppose it, and leave our rights to that river just as they are at the present time. Therefore, I hope the Prime Minister will do everything he can to leave us exactly in the same position we are. Perhaps he has already done it, I do not want to ask him to reveal any state secret, but I hope he has wired Ambassador Bryce to ask the President not to allow that Bill to go through at all, but that the rights we have under the Ashburton Treaty may be preserved to us intact. I am satisfied if the Premier does that, the Bill will never go through the American Congress, and I do not think these people would trouble this House again at any future time. The men who are promoting this scheme are very persistent. They were in my county, and they didn't hesitate to say that they had a million dollars, or two million dollars if necessary, with which to put this Bill through. They were up along the whole country, talking to the people, trying to raise an agitation, and to force the members from that region to put this Bill through. I think the means they took were as unfair as were ever resorted to by the promoters of any Bill.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). I am glad of the opportunity of saying a few words for the purpose of affirming the position I took when this question was discussed the other night in the House. I was then opposed both by the Minister of Public Works and by the head of the government. I was proceeding with an argument when I was interrupted, and was told that this power on the Long Sault had already been conveyed to a corporation. I began to argue that under the Ashburton Treaty the Crown had not the power of conveying that property without the consent of the legislature, and I was told by the Minister of Public Works and by the Prime Minister that the legislature had already consented to a conveyance. I was astounded at the time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). The Minister of Public Works said it, and I thought the right hon. gentleman assented. I took the opportunity of looking up the case, and I found that no such power had been given to any company in the world for the use of the Long Sault canal. My position then was perfectly right. Under the Ashburton Treaty, navigation and what is essential to navigation, is reserved to the people of this country, and the Crown cannot convey it. What the Crown did convey in reference to that work near Sheik island, is the right of user to the surplus water, the discharge of the by-wash that is used for the purpose of keeping the level of Sheik island. There is a certain by-wash passing down there, a surplus of water. That water, so far as it did not interfere with navigation, was leased to an individual or to a corporation. The Act of parliament was simply an empowering one, giving to the corporation the right of doing what the individual, or the party to whom that property was conveyed, had the right of doing.

There is that further right because the parties who leased that particular property from the Crown had in mind the contingency that perhaps they might not have water enough. The original idea of building the canal there was to utilize what is called Hoople's creek. The idea was to deepen and dredge Hoople's creek so as to utilize it for the purposes of navigation instead of building an outside embankment. Under the contract with this corporation the government have given them the right to deepen that creek to any extent they like and the use of whatever water may be diverted from the St. Lawrence. That power is given to this corporation but it does not interfere at all with any of the rights which we have under the Ashburton Treaty. Every one knows that the particular part of the St. Lawrence between Sheik island and the north shore was utilized for the operation of a little mill owned by Mr. Snetsinger. That mill was expropriated when the canal was being built and taken over by the government. It was to a certain extent utilizing that power, or the power which has been developed by the erection of a dam. The ownership of that power rests with the people of Canada and the people of the United States, and it cannot be taken either by Crown-gift, or in any other way, unless with the consent of the legislature of this country. It is true that under the treaty we have given to the International Commission the right of deciding what shall be done with these particular waterways, how they shall be utilized, and to what extent we have a right in them. My hon. friend who spoke before me referred to those powers as being situated in the United States, and he said that if the water was dammed the power would be of great benefit to the United States for the simple reason that the body was situated on the United States side. That question arose in connection with the power question at Niagara Falls. It came before the Waterways Commission, and I think they arrived at a perfectly proper and right conclusion when they determined that no matter whether international waterways diverged in their course to the south or the north, or whether the large body of water was situated on one side or the other a moiety of the power should belong to each country, and that each would have a common interest in it. So that, if any dam be erected on the south side for the purpose of utilizing that power, a moiety, or half, would belong to each country, and they would not be allowed to utilize it by the Waterways Commission in the first instance unless they had received the assent of this parliament and of the Congress of the United States. So, I think it is perfectly secure. The possibilities of the future are very vague and uncertain as to its ever being utilized as a power. The United States Senate has thrown out the Bill but it is quite true that it may be introduced again. No power can be given to that company unless with the consent of this legislature and especially unless with the consent of the government and the consent of the Waterways Commission. I think the day is far distant when such a consent could be shown to be advisable. If we want power in this country, as my hon. friend says, there are hundreds of other places which can be utilized, the development of which will not interfere with the scenic grandeur such as that which characterizes the St. Lawrence. There are other places where power can be as cheaply developed and at the same time without spoiling the natural beauty of the place. This is an heirloom that ought to be kept for the people of this country. With reference to navigation, this is one of the wonders of the trip down the St. Lawrence that annually attracts more passengers than anything else, and unless the gravest and most serious reasons are shown from an economic point of view that it is in the interests of the country that this dam should be erected, I think the unanimous opinion of the country from one end to the other will be that we should leave this place in its present state of nature.

Mr. R. SMITH (Stormont). Mr. Speaker, I happen to represent the constituency in which it is proposed to construct these works. I have observed that in the discussions which have taken place in this House, and other places a very great deal of misapprehension often occurs as to the actual situation, and as to what is actually proposed to be done. In the first place, if I caught correctly the purport of the Bill which has been introduced at Washington and which has been read by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), the proposition there is to dam the whole St. Lawrence. If that is the proposition I do not think that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) would argue for a moment that that could be done at the instance of the United States authorities without consulting the parliament of Canada. As I understood the remarks of the Minister of Justice the other evening, he contended that it would not be impossible for the American government to give the necessary authority for the damming of the South Sault alone without consulting the government of this country. Now, in giving that opinion I observed that the Minister of Justice compared the South Sault with the channel of the river that had already been dammed by this government in the construction of the Cornwall canal, and he apparently drew the inference that because that had been done without consulting the American government the same rule should apply to damming the South Sault under the authority of the American government. I do not know how familiar the Minister of Justice may be with the facts as they exist at that point, but I certainly know that there is no comparison at all between the two streams. The channel of the river which was dammed by the Canadian government is an entirely different stream from the channel of the South Sault. The South Sault is a channel that has always been navigated by steamers on the down trip. It is navigated to-day by ships of our own country as well as by ships of the United States ; in fact, I think, although I will not be positive in the statement, that any boat that navigates the big Sault on the Canadian side can navigate the small Sault on the American side of the river. So, the situation is entirely different with regard to the channel of the river that was dammed for the purpose of the Cornwall canal. That is a channel that has never been navigated by any class of vessels except by the flat bottomed scows which in early days, before any canal was built there at all, were towed along the banks of the river by horses. No steamer ever ran up or down that channel that has been dammed by the Canadian government. I think that possibly that circumstance was not called to the attention of the Minister of Justice, and that if it had been he might have drawn a distinction between the damming of one channel and the damming of the other. There was a great deal of alarm on the American side of the river at the time the Canadian government proposed to dam that channel. I cannot remember that there was any official opposition, but I do know that there was a very strong agitation on the American side of the river, that the American government was appealed to, and I understand that in some way or other the American government took the necessary steps to investigate and satisfy themselves that no possible damage to navigation could occur from the blocking of the Canadian channel that was dammed for the purpose of the Cornwall canal.

Mr. HUGHES. At what point did this blocking occur that the hon. gentleman speaks of?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I refer to the Sheik island dams which block one of the channels of the river on the Canadian side. That is a very small stream. It was navigated at one time by those flat-bottomed scows that were towed by horses but steamers never navigated that channel.

Mr. LENNOX. At what time did this agitation take place? Is it of recent date?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). The agitation took place at the time it was proposed to construct the Sheik island dams. I do not know that it ever went to the extent of an official inquiry on behalf of the American government, to the authorities here, but the hon. gentleman from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) would know that, because, when the dam was commenced, I think he was Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. member for South Lanark has stated that the Act incorporating the St. Lawrence Power Company did not give authority to create any of these dams, and in that opinion I entirely concur. I do not think there ever was such a dam in contemplation then, and I do not think the wording of the Act in any way authorizes the damming of the St. Lawrence at that point. What was in contemplation was a different scheme altogether, and the dams that were referred to were the wing dams which were to be thrown out into the stream for the purpose of diverting the water. What I think is very clear is that there is no authority from the Canadian parliament whatever to create those dams that have for their object the complete damming of the St. Lawrence river. As I understand the Ashburton Treaty, we have the same rights of navigation on all these waters as the Americans themselves have, regardless of whether the channel happens to be in American or Canadian waters. A great many people talk of these channels being entirely in American waters, but as a matter of fact every vessel that navigates the Big Sault has first to go through entirely Canadian waters, and after it goes through the rapids it crosses into American waters. There is no such thing as navigating the Big Sault without being at one time in Canadian territory and at another time in American territory. In the Big Sault channel of the rapids themselves is entirely in Canadian territory.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman means that they are on the Canadian side of the open channel between Long Sault island and the Canadian shore?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Yes. The channel at that point on the Big Sault is entirely in Canadian waters, and, of course, the South Sault is entirely in American waters from start to finish.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). There are no American waters, or Canadian waters, under the Ashburton Treaty ; both countries have an equal right to navigate.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I am referring to the boundary line

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman understands the situation, and I would ask him if it is not a fact that on account of the winding of the river there is a point in the rapids where the whole of the channel is wholly in American territory?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Yes. After you pass through the rapids proper you cross at the head of Barnhart island, which is an American island, and from there down the channel is between Barnhart island and the American shore, entirely in American territory. There is a small channel called the Little River, which is not navigable even for canoes, and which goes between Barnhart island and the Canadian island called Sheik island. I think, therefore, it is quite clear that before any complete damming of the St. Lawrence river can be accomplished there must be authority given by the government of this country. The question has been raised as to whether that authority can be given by the Governor in Council without submitting it to parliament, or whether parliament has to be consulted, and that is a question I shall not deal with on this occasion. The Minister of Justice, as I understood him the other evening, confined his remarks to the damming of the South Sault alone. If what he set out on that occasion is good constitutional law, namely, that the Americans can do that without consulting us at all, then it is rather an unfortunate position for us. If they can dam it without consulting us at all they probably will not be under the necessity of dividing the power with us. I hope the Minister of Justice is not right in that respect, because it is possible to develop very considerable power by the damming of the South Sault alone, and if we have the right in common with the Americans to the navigation of these waters we probably would have the right to say they could only dam them upon the terms of giving us one-half of the power. Representing as I do the constituency in which this development is supposed to take place, I am exceedingly anxious to know that if there is any development of any kind on either channel we should have one-half of that power available in my part of the country. I am in hopes that in view of the difference between that channel and the channel that was dammed by the Canadian government, to which I have alluded, the Minister of Justice will be able to form a different opinion from that which he expressed in the House the other evening. Now, it has been represented by the engineers that some 500,000 horse-power can be developed at that point by the damming of the whole channel, and they tell us that about 60,000 of that 500,000 can be developed in the South Sault and the remainder in the Big, or North Sault. I am not here to-day to say that I desire the Bill before the authorities at Washington to go through, or that I desire any scheme to go through, because, first and foremost, I want to know the terms. If, without injuring navigation, we could develop 400,000, or 500,000 horse-power in the St. Lawrence river at that point and could secure one-half of that for Canada, and could secure at the same time the absolute control of that power for all time, so that Canadian consumers could have it upon proper terms, then I say I am in favour of any scheme of that kind. But I am not in favour of any scheme that will hand over to an American corporation all this power; to do what they like with it, to take it to the American side, or to control and monopolize it for all time. A scheme of that kind I would think it my duty to condemn. But if power can be developed upon the terms of securing one-half of it for the Canadian people for all time, so that there can be no monopoly, then I am in favour of such development. If 60,000 horse-power can be developed in the South Sault it follows that 440,000 horse-power can be developed on the North Sault. If we leave the South Sault out, and if there is development on the Big Sault, the South Sault will supply all the needs of navigation, just as they have it to-day; it will accommodate every vessel that navigates the Big Sault, and will leave an open channel to prevent all this flooding that some people are so much afraid of. In that way they could develop 440,000 horse-power without interrupting navigation at all, or closing the natural channel of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman's remarks are very interesting and very instructive. Would he specify from what point to what point the dam would be built?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Just where the promoters suggest: across the Large Sault from the foot of Long Sault island to the head of Barnhart's. That would dam the Big Sault. Then if you dam from the foot of Barnhart's to the Canadian shore you have a dam across the whole northern channel, and you leave the southern channel, that is the South Sault, entirely open for navigation without obstructing the Richelieu boats, or any boats that would navigate that river. Then you would have an open channel which would absolutely prevent any such flooding as has been feared by the people of Morrisburg and by the people in the county of Grenville. Now, that is a scheme which I would like to see carried out, provided it could be carried out on the terms I mention, that is, that absolute security would be given that one-half of the power would be available for all time in Canada, with proper authority given to this government to enforce that, and proper regulation of the rates by our Railway Commission or some other competent authority. We would then have the opportunity of controlling for all time one-half of the water-power in case the promoters refused to carry out that part of the bargain. In fact, I think the only permanent security we can have that one-half of the water-power developed would be available for Canadians would be that we would have the opportunity, without calling upon the owners, of tapping that channel ourselves and creating one-half of the water-power. If that power were vested in the government, there would be an absolute security that our right to one-half of the power would be conserved.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Suppose the power were developed, where is the present demand for power, and is it not a fact that there is a lot of power in the St. Lawrence within 30 or 40 miles of Cornwall?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I will answer my hon. friend by citing the case of Messina, which, before the creation of its water-power, was not any larger than the town my hon. friend represents, Prescott. There was not a single industry there. Some English capitalists started to construct a power canal right opposite Massena, and everybody wanted to know what they intended to do, as nobody within many miles of Massena wanted power. The company went on and built the canal, and to-day the very agitation which we hear so much about is due to the fact that 60,000 horse-power is not half enough for the village of Massena.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then the hon. gentleman is asking for this power in order that it will build up Cornwall?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I do not know whether it would build up Cornwall any more that it would build up Prescott, because all that would be necessary to carry the power to Prescott would be to run two wires along the shore.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The power would be cheaper at Cornwall?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). There would be just the difference between transmitting it five or six miles to Cornwall and about 50 miles to Prescott. In fact, there would be power enough developed to supply every town in eastern Ontario, and at a price that no power which my hon. friend has in mind could compare with at all. The development of the whole of eastern Ontario depends on how cheaply the power could be had.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to state what the effect would be on the river above the Long Sault island? How far up would the dam affect the stream, and what would be the effect of it in the flooding season in the spring?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). As a matter of fact, we do not have a flood season in the spring along the St. Lawrence river. That is one of its peculiarities. The difference in the height of Lake Ontario and Lake St. Francis varies only three or four feet from one season to another. The only season of flood on the St. Lawrence is in the middle of the winter, caused by the ice jamming for a time in the narrow channel of the river, and thus causing the water above it to rise.

Mr. HUGHES. It occurs when the ice is breaking up.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Not when the ice is breaking up. The ice jams occur usually in the month of February. The hon. gentleman asked me how high we proposed to raise the water. The stipulation that was made by the Department of Railways and Canals was that under no circumstances should the water be raised high enough to interfere with the Cornwall canal, which is supplied above the rapids. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton last year discussed the possibility of the water of the St. Lawrence rising so high as to cross to the Ottawa river.

Mr. HUGHES. No, flowing into the Raisin above Lancaster.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). The absurdity of that will be readily understood when we remember that under the conditions imposed by the Department of Railways and Canals the level of the water in no case is to be as high as the level of the Cornwall canal. At all events, if the South Sault were not dammed, there could not be any danger of flooding at all, because it is an open channel of the river.

Mr. HUGHES. There is now considerable water flowing down the present channel. If the South Sault is dammed, will there be certainty that the current in passing down between the Long Sault and the Canadian shore would deflect off towards the American shore between Barnhart island and the Long Sault, and thence between Barnhart's island and the American shore. Would there be left a sufficient stream between Barnhart island and the American shore for purposes of navigation? Would not the tendency be to send a large portion of that water down between Barnhart island and Sheik island and thus make it impossible to navigate between Barnhart island and the American shore?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). The engineers state and the charts show that at present, there is 40 feet of water down that channel. It is not proposed to stop the flow of water down that channel. These are submerged dams and the head above will send a large supply of water over the head of the dams. It is not supposed to be a dam that will stop the river, it is a dam put at the foot of the rapids raising the water a certain height and allowing it to flow as before.

Mr. HUGHES. It would only raise the water to the head of Long Sault island.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Yes, I think two feet lower than the head of the Cornwall canal. There is a possibility of generating an enormous amount of power at that point without even interrupting the running of vessels down the Long Sault rapids. I believe there is a possibility of devising a scheme by which that can be done, so as to ensure to Canada for all time her full share of one half that power, and so regulating it that there can be no monopoly and that the power will be available to all the people of eastern Ontario upon terms so advantageous as to induce the establishment of the largest kind of manufacturing industries in eastern Ontario.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand part of the proposition is to dam the channel between Barnhart island and the American shore and drive the stream down between Barnhart island and Sheik island. I understood that was part of another proposition.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). That is slightly wrong, there is no proposition to dam between Barnhart island and the American shore.

Mr. HUGHES. Between Barnhart island and Long Sault island. We must use the channel between Barnhart and Sheik island as a navigable channel. It is now the International channel, although there is very little water in it.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). No.

Mr. HUGHES. If the proposition is to dam between Sheik and Long Sault islands and between the foot of Long Sault and the mainland, where is the water to go ?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). My hon. friend is wrong. My statement is that the present scheme, if carried out in its entirety, is to dam from the American shore to the foot of Long Sault from the foot of Long Sault to Barnhart and from the foot of Barnhart to the Canadian shore. That would be a complete dam of the whole St. Lawrence. If the company were to leave out the first of these links, you would leave one channel absolutely free and only lessen the amount of development by 60,000 horse-power.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman proposes to leave the American channel open all the way down ?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). That is what I would like to see.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont).

Mr. HUGHES. Leave the American channel the navigable channel ?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Exactly. My hon. friend may say that is objectionable, because it makes the channel an American channel, but my hon. friend will remember that at present the only channel we have is partly an American channel, one portion of it is American and the only change in that respect would be to make the American part of our channel a couple of miles longer than it is to-day, and of course that would be nothing one way or the other. I am afraid that my ideas are not the ideas that would meet with the approval of the promoters, because I am sure that from the point of view of their own interest, they would desire first and foremost, to dam the South Sault because damming the South Sault would immensely improve the power they already have at Massena. They have had difficulty there. They cut quite a long canal across country from the head of the Long Sault rapids to the power plant at Massena, where they discharge into the Grass river, the Grass river again discharging into the St. Lawrence, some little distance below. By damming the South Sault, they would raise the water at the entrance of that canal, and they expect, I believe, to stop the difficulty in connection with ice jamming into the head of that canal. They expect to somewhat curb the flow of ice there. Thus they have the double object of developing another 60,000 horse-power in the South Sault, and also increasing the head and increasing the facilities for getting more power in the power-house they have already constructed.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the hon. gentleman's opinion that the Americans have authority and power to-day to dam from Long Sault island to the American shore ?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). No, I said I understood the Minister of Justice had said so. I am in hopes that the Minister of Justice is in error on that point. I do not intend to set my opinion up against that of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. HUGHES. They would then have the same power to dam between Barnhart island and Long Sault island ?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I must leave that question to be argued by the Minister of Justice. I am in hopes that the Minister of Justice, upon examining the difference between the stream which has been dammed by the Canadian government and the South Sault, which it is now proposed to dam, will find that a distinction can be drawn and that the rule applicable to the stream dammed by the Canadian government would not necessarily be applicable to the South Sault. I am in hopes that on a careful examination, the Minister of Justice will find that the difference between those two streams is a justification for arriving at a different conclusion from the one he announced the other night. If we have absolutely no right to prevent the damming of that stream we can get no power; if we have, we can make it a condition that from whatever development is made of the South Sault, Canada will have her share of power.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I certainly think we are indebted to the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Smith), for the very lucid and interesting statement he has made with reference to this question, and I think we have also to congratulate the hon. member upon the candour with which he dealt with the question. It is not at all pleasing to us upon this side of the House, upon any occasion to differ, as to a matter of law, with a gentleman so eminent in his profession as the hon. Minister of Justice, but it is made clear by the statement of the hon. member for Stormont, (Mr. Smith), that there is absolutely a necessity of placing ourselves upon record upon the important question of the relative rights of Canada and the United States in connection with the St. Lawrence river. The hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Smith), has pointed out circumstances that I cannot say I noticed before, if I understood the hon. gentleman aright, namely that the Minister of Justice spoke of damming the whole St. Lawrence river.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I understood the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) to be referring only to the South Sault.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, as the hon. member for Stormont (Robert Smith) corrects me, I recognize that that is the way the Minister of Justice put it. He spoke of damming the South Sault alone. And the hon. member for Stormont points out that what was proposed by the company was to dam the whole way across the St. Lawrence river. The company that applied to the American Congress the other day of course only asked Congress for power to dam from the American shore northwards to the American boundary. But they have in contemplation, and it is provided for by their Bill, to extend the dam northward from the international boundary to the Canadian shore. The first clause of the Bill which has been before Congress reads:

That the Long Sault Development Corporation. . . . its successors and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain and operate for navigation, waterpower and other purposes for a period of ninety-nine years a dam or dams in so much of the Saint Lawrence river as lies south of the international boundary line between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada near Long Sault, Barnhart and Sheek islands, either independently or in connection with like works now erected or to be erected in so much of said river as lies north of said international boundary line, with a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto, and a lot or lots, a canal or canals, and other structures appurtenant thereto.

So, this company has in contemplation, finally if they achieve their ends, the complete damming of the St. Lawrence river. And that is the proposition we are up against yet, though the situation is somewhat relieved by the circumstance that Congress has thrown out the Bill for the time being. But I am not sanguine enough to believe that they will not come again. So long as they have such friends in the Canadian government as some of the ministers of the Crown showed themselves to be last session—and I see the hon. gentleman who was most conspicuous in that behalf is present this afternoon—so long as they have the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Pugsley) to advocate their claims as strongly as he did last year, and to fight for them against the interests of Canada, we may expect that these gentlemen will come again.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And the member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee).

Mr. LENNOX. The member for West Lambton was only a 'subsidiary company' in this matter. Of course, he did his best, but without the active, energetic and powerful influence of the Minister of Public Works, aided by the night sessions we had last year, when we endeavoured to protect the rights of the people in this great international boundary water—

Mr. PUGSLEY. In addition to the wilful misunderstanding as to the effect of the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know whether the minister is right in saying that he wilfully misunderstood the Bill or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was not referring to himself.

Mr. LENNOX. I would not have imputed that to the hon. gentleman. I know he is wily, astute and smooth—yes, and as an hon. gentleman near me suggests, oily—but we would not impute to him that he wilfully and intentionally misconstrued the effect and purport of the Bill. Now, we are indebted to our delivery for the present time, I regret to say, speaking from the national standpoint, not to any action of the government, but to the efforts of the opposition in this House, and the circumstance that the American Congress, realizing the enormity of the proposition, has seen fit, for the present, to reject it. The hon. member for Cornwall also pointed out the circumstance that hon. members supporting the government, if not members of the government—yes, I remember now, even a member of the government—tried to becloud the facts. He pointed out that this little trickling stream north of Sheik island, and that has been closed for the purpose of improving conditions on the Canadian side, never was a navigable part of the St. Lawrence river in the true sense in which we speak of navigation. The hon. member for Cornwall points out that scows could, with difficulty, pass up and down this channel, but vessels never followed it; and so the inference plainly is that you cannot draw any parallel between the important national works we have executed many years ago upon the Canadian side and the gigantic scheme for purely corporate and personal ends which is proposed to be launched on the American and Canadian sides at the present time. The hon. member for Cornwall also pointed out what I am indebted to him for knowing—it may have been known to many other members of the House, but I did not appreciate the point before—if I understood him correctly, the rapids of the Long Sault are entirely in Canadian territory. Was I right in so understanding?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Not exactly: but the rapids of the Big Sault. The South Sault is in American waters.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not exactly familiar with these terms. The rapids of the Big Sault are entirely in Canadian territory, and every vessel, whether Canadian or American, passing down the river, must pass through the rapids of the Big Sault before it comes into the American part of the channel.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). Provided they select the Big Sault. They may select the South Sault.

Mr. LENNOX. For the purposes of the greater needs of navigation, as I understand it, the Canadian part of the boundary waters must be used as well as the American part.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). If the hon. gentleman will allow me: I said I did not think there was much difference in the size of the vessels that can navigate one or the other. Practically the vessels that can navigate either can navigate the other. There might be a slight difference.

Mr. LENNOX. Speaking candidly, I am indebted to my hon. friend for puting me right on these matters, with which I do not profess to be familiar. It is not mere empty compliment for me to say that both by reason of his familiarity with the territory, and by reason of his facility of expression, the hon. gentleman has certainly added very much to the store of knowledge that we have upon this very important question. Now, the circumstance I have just pointed out is an additional reason why I propose to object to the line of argument taken by the Minister of Justice the other day, and in saying that we are—aside from conventions of recent date—practically at the mercy of the United States as to what should be done with the St. Lawrence river.

I listened with attention to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and who has evidently given this matter a good deal of consideration. His opinion is that it would probably be in the interest of both Canada and the United States that the scheme proposed at the present time should be carried out, but with this qualification, that he would leave open the channel which lies immediately alongside the American shore. He thinks it would be in the interest of Canada and of the United States to dam the St. Lawrence river from the Long Sault island across to Barnhart island, and then across to the Canadian shore. True, the hon. gentleman qualified his opinion by saying that such a scheme should be subject always to the paramount consideration of navigation; in other words, that provided we can still effectually navigate the river, both Canada and the United States would be benefited by the development of the enormous amount of power, some 460,000 horse-power, to be equally divided between the two countries. With that part of his argument I cannot agree. I am entirely opposed to damming the St. Lawrence river by any private or corporate scheme. I believe that, having regard to the great gift of providence in the possession of the St. Lawrence river, in view of the increasing interest and benefit it will be to the people of Canada as a navigable water, having regard to the fact which is being emphasized all the time that water navigation is beyond all comparison cheaper for bulky commodities than is transportation by rail, we never should consent, to the damming of that great river. Although we have for the moment escaped the assaults of this enormous company which stands behind the Long Sault Development Company, with its capital of $50,000,000, buttressed, fortified and encouraged by certain patriotic gentlemen on the Canadian side, endorsed as it is by the Minister of Public Works—although we have for the moment escaped from these people, it is unfortunate indeed that the Minister of Justice threw out the remarks he did the other night, telling the people of the United States for all time to come, by the voice of the Canadian Minister of Justice, that we are practically without remedy as regards the broadest and most important feature of this international question. The Minister of Justice started out by telling us that this was a matter of international law. That is all right. But he followed that by asking: What is international law? And he replied that international law was an indeterminate thing something that it is almost impossible to find out; in other words, that no one can say what international law is. Well, Sir, that is a new doctrine. It is true, as the Minister of Justice said, that international law is not contained in any statute, and it is equally true that many questions of international law may arise upon which there has been no decision, matters of new import may arise in reference to boundary waters which have to be construed and determined by analogy and upon principle. But to tell us in effect, as he did, that we are practically at sea as regards anything to guide us in this matter, I venture to say will be found upon investigation not to be correct. I venture to suggest to the Minister of Justice, that since many rivers are international boundaries in Europe and other countries, the question of what are the rights of the parties on each side of the river, is not a new question by any means, although it is new in this particular phase. A large and important volume of international law, and of views and decisions on similar questions, have been recognized by nations and will be found applicable to the question here under discussion. Be that as it may, whether the law laid down by the Minister of Justice is correct or not, I regret, speaking from a national point of view, that the Minister of Justice has declared to the people of the United States, as a rule which they will invoke in future, that we are practically at their mercy in reference to this matter. He says that aside from convention we are practically helpless, that the only remedy for us is expostulation, that as suppliants only can we endeavour to prevent whatever the United States may determine to do in reference to this matter. Well, I do not think so. If I say it outspokenly, I say it all the same with due deference to the great legal learning of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. But I venture still to say that we are not in the hands of the United States in that regard. The law of nations is as strong in support of justice now as it ever was. It has been many years since when a small community could not rely upon securing their rights at the hands of a larger community, if they could show that their cause was just.

Now the Minister of Justice proceeded to point out, by inference if not in words, that by reason of the fact that we had dammed the channel upon the north side of Sheik island, we were powerless, even as a matter of justice and fair-play, to protest against the damming of the waters south of the international boundary. I deny that proposition altogether. Why, what the Minister of Justice subsequently read put that question at rest. It showed that by the recent treaty, provision was made as to the future, that, although all cases that had already occurred were closed, as to the future neither party could interfere with the height of the water upon either side, recognizing by the treaty to which the Minister of Justice referred, that we were conceded, if we did not originally have it, the right to have matters remain in statu quo, and that, as far as our damming of that little trickling stream at Sheik island was concerned, it had nc bearing at all upon the question of the damming of those navigable channels which the development company seeks power to dam at this time. The Minister of Justice, in an elaborate and very carefully worded argument, referred to Article III. of the new Waterways Treaty, for the purpose of emphasizing and fortifying his position that we are absolutely at the mercy of the United States, except in so far as the matter can be regulated by section 3 of the Waterways Commission and that section 3 only applied to the question of the height of the water. The Minister of Justice sent forth to the United States—and it will be of record there for all time to come in their archives and will be invoked, as I would remind the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, against us either in reference to this river or other rivers when we come to appeal to the provisions of the Ashburton Treaty—the solemn declaration that we have practically no control over this great international waterway except such as is provided for by section 3 of the Waterways Treaty—a statement, as an hon. gentleman reminds me, that it is in the interests of the United States people, and not only that, Sir, but a statement that it was absolutely unnecessary to make, and which has almost the force and effect of a statute when you come to negociate with a foreign nation upon a matter of this kind in the future. By the sturdy opposition put up by His Majesty's loyal opposition we succeeded, first, in repelling the efforts of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) last year in support of this measure, which was absolutely against the interests of the people of Canada, and although we may have, by our timely note of warning the other day, done something to prevent this measure from being passed by the United States Senate, yet the evil remains, and in all future discussions between Canada and the United States in settling these boundary waterway questions, we, on this side of the House, when we are on the right of the Speaker, as well as hon. gentlemen who are now carrying on the affairs of the country, will be confronted by the utterance of the Minister of Justice made upon that occasion. Let me read just a line from what the Minister of Justice said:

The provision of article three of the new Waterways Treaty is to the effect that in addition to existing obstructions, no further obstructions, whether temporary or permanent, of boundary waters on either side of the line —and the whole river is a boundary water from main shore to main shore—no new obstruction on either side affecting the natural level or flow of the boundary waters on the other side of the line shall be made except by the authority of the United States or the Dominion of Canada, within their respective jurisdictions and with the approval of the International Joint Commission.

I wish to point out here that the wording of this section is that no new obstruction shall be made. The minister proceeds to say:

Now the wording of that exception plainly implies that each country, within its own jurisdiction, has the right to authorize obstructions in waters such as these.

That is the conclusion that the Minister of Justice laid down the other day, that is the statement that he sent forth to the United States. He says:

Now, the wording of that exception plainly implies that each country, within its own jurisdiction has the right to authorize obstructions in waters such as these. No new obstructions, it says, shall be made affecting the natural level on the other side of the line except by the authority of the United States or the Dominion within their respective jurisdictions.

So the argument of the Minister of Justice, as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, and as it has gone on record, was that we are practically at the mercy of the United States except as to whatever relief we can get out of the third section of the treaty referred to, and that section is confined solely and exclusively to the question of the height of the water. That, I venture to say with great deference, is not the law. I pointed out then to the Minister of Justice the provisions of section 7 of the Ashburton Treaty, and it is only fair to say that upon that being called to his attention, the minister, in a very faint way, it is true, suggested there might be some possible relief there. The hon. gentleman asked me to read the provision of the Ashburton Treaty, and I read it now as I read it the other day.

Mr. LENNOX. Does my hon. friend think that that provision which deals with the question of the height of water only, supersedes article seven of the Ashburton treaty? Does that provision, just read, supersede article seven of the Ashburton treaty? It does not seem to me that they refer to exactly the same thing.

Mr. GRAHAM. What is article 7?

Mr. LENNOX. The article my hon. friend has read, which provides that the channels of the St. Lawrence shall be equally free and open to the ships, boats and vessels of both parties.

I put in the words 'and open' because they appear in the Ashburton Treaty, but they were omitted from 'Hansard.' I am glad that my hon. friend from Stormont (Mr. Smith) very concisely, and in a manner which I could not hope to emulate, but of which I entirely approve, has called the attention of the Minister of Justice to the very important statement he made upon that occasion. I feel that, coming from the hon. member from Stormont (Mr. Smith), it will have, perhaps, more effect than if the criticism came from me. I sincerely trust that in order to mitigate as far as may be the difficulties that have arisen from the statements of the Minister of Justice, that, if he thinks the circumstances such as pointed out by the hon. member from Stormont (Mr. Smith) justify it, the minister will take an early opportunity of correcting what I venture to think is an erroneous impression as to the relative rights of the United States and Canada.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I think there is no practical utility in discussing at the present time the general merits or demerits of damming the St. Lawrence river at the Long Sault. There is no proposition, at any rate at present, before us, or any tribunal so far as I am aware of for the building of a dam in Canadian waters, or upon the Canadian side of the boundary. The only room at present which existed at all for discussing this scheme was in reference to the proposal to dam the south channel at a place which was solely within United States territory. If the morning newspapers are correct, that proposition has been defeated in the United States House of Representatives, and is at an end for the present at all events. But with regard to that proposal, in the discussion which took place in this House on Thursday last, I expressed the opinion which I entertained as to the legal rights of Canada to interfere, or to take exception to what was proposed. I was speaking altogether, of course speaking altogether, of the proposal to build a dam wholly upon United States soil and upon that side of the boundary, and speaking of that proposal without any reference to the continuation of that dam by the building of additional or subsidiary structures at some future time upon Canadian soil, I was looking at the matter as though it were an independent proposition to dam this southernmost channel of the St. Lawrence upon United States territory alone. Looking at it from that point of view from the standpoint of international rights, the position which I took was that in the absence of a treaty—supposing there was no treaty affecting the matter at all—there would be no ground upon which we could in any way interfere. But that is a purely academic situation. There are treaties, and, therefore, it was of interest to consider what our situation would have been had there been no treaties only with a view to showing what the foundation might be of any rights which we possessed. Taking the treaties as they stand—both the Ashburton Treaty and the treaty of last year with regard to international waterways—they make our rights in this matter, it seems to me, reasonably clear. I was somewhat astonished in looking over the 'Hansard' report of the debate which took place on this subject last Thursday to see the impression which my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) had derived from what I said, and I am afraid from what I have been able to gather of what has been said to-day, that my good friend from Stormont (Mr. Smith) has not comprehended as I would have wished him to have comprehended what I then said. I certainly meant to make it as distinct as words could be that the rights of navigation were supreme, and that if this proposal interfered with navigation there was an end of the matter. We then have undoubted right to object, and in everything which I said on Thursday last I was basing my remarks upon the supposition that the promoters were able to do what they wished to do without affecting navigation in any injurious way. I think I was clear upon that. At column 2969 of 'Hansard,' after discussing the question whether or not the level on the Canadian side would necessarily be raised by this work, and after stating that assuming the level on the Canadian side was not raised when the interests of navigation are the only things to be considered, I said:

That is exactly the situation under the existing treaties. The right of navigation is paramount and that right is secured. That right exists in this United States channel which it is proposed to dam, just as it exists in the old channel between Sheik's island and the mainland of Ontario which is to-day utilized as part of our Cornwall canal. The right of navigation is secured by treaty and is not proposed to be interfered with. On the contrary, it is proposed to be helped according to the plans of the promoters, and unless the right of navigation is interfered with, or the level altered on our own side, we have, under existing treaties, no cause to object.

Now, with regard to the paramount right of navigation, the language of the Ashburton Treaty as given to the House in the debate to which I refer by the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe, secures to us an equal right with the right of the United States. Some gentlemen who participated in the debate last week seemed to entertain the view that the terms of the Ashburton Treaty precluded the placing of any obstruction in navigable waters, and secured forever the free and open navigation of the whole of the waters of the St. Lawrence from main shore to main shore. I do not think that is the language of the treaty. The language is, speaking compendiously, that the channel from main shore to main shore shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of both parties. It might be paraphrased in this way: shall be as free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of one party as to those of the other party. So long as the equal right to the navigation of the channels on either side is afforded by the country in which those channels are, to the boats, vessels and ships of the other country, I see no infraction of the terms of the Ashburton Treaty. We did not consider, when we shut of the channel between Sheik's island and the county of Stormont, that we were encroaching upon the prohibition of the Ashburton Treaty. We turned that channel into a canal. We left it, as we found it, as free and open to the navigation of the United States vessels as it was to the navigation of Canadian vessels. It might have been argued that we were obstructing the navigation. True, we did build an embankment across the entrance to it, and in that sense we prevented any one coming from the main channel of the Long Sault with his boat into the Canadian channel to the north of Sheik's island.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Had we not a canal to the north of Sheik's island before the Ashburton Treaty?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Our canal was on the mainland to the north of the channel which in a state of nature lay between Sheik's island and the mainland. Our canal opposite Sheik's island was cut out of the mainland.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). Had we not a canal before the Ashburton Treaty?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think very likely. What I am pointing out is that long after the Ashburton Treaty we, for our own purposes, obstructed the upper entrance into the natural channel which lay between Sheik's island and the mainland, and, by a dam which we built from Sheik's island to the mainland, prevented any vessel coming into that natural channel from the main stream.

Mr. HUGHES. Was that act in contravention of any treaty between Canada and the United States?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think not. I think we had a perfect right to do it, because after it was done we left the navigation of that channel as free and open to the United States as it was to us; and, on exactly the same principle, so long as the United States leaves its southernmost channel as free and open to us as it is to them, I cannot see how the terms of the Ashburton Treaty are interfered with. We have, however, not only the Ashburton Treaty, but we have the recent Waterways Convention, under which this very stream, from main shore to main shore, is to be forever free and open and common to the ships of both nations for the purposes of navigation. Navigation is made the paramount consideration under the Waterways Treaty. The new International Commission is told by that agreement between the two nations that its first consideration, apart from the use of water for domestic or sanitary purposes, is to be the use of it for purposes of navigation. The use of it for purposes of manufacturing power is an after consideration altogether. Now, by that recent treaty we have additional rights. We have not only our former right in regard to navigation maintained and confirmed, but we have the additional engagement on the part of the United States that although their government or Congress may authorize such an obstruction as that which is proposed, that obstruction cannot be allowed to be built in the river if the effect of it will be to alter the level on our side, unless the assent of the International Commission is first obtained. That is an additional protection and safeguard, and, in what I said on Thursday last, I was not for a moment losing sight of the paramount interests of navigation. On the contrary, I thought I was putting them in the forefront in saying what I did, speaking throughout on the assumption that the interests of navigation would not be in the least degree impaired by this proposed work. With regard to the sharing between the two countries of power, if power is to be created at this place, this is not a matter which is dealt with by any existing convention between the two nations as far as I am aware. It is a matter for subsequent negotiations and if possible agreement; and if it ever becomes a question of building a dam on Canadian territory to supplement or improve the dam which has been suggested to be built on United States territory, there will certainly be the very best opportunity on our part to make terms and conditions. But until there is a practical proposition of that character before this House for consideration, it seems to me that the discussion of the matter is entirely of an academic or theoretical nature.

Mr. C. J. DOHERTY (Montreal, St. Anne). Mr. Speaker, I need not say that I very much regret if I misapprehended the effect which the hon. Minister of Justice intended to convey in his observations of the other day, when I understood him to lay down the absolute proposition that we were not entitled to complain of the obstruction of these channels, though he did make a proviso to the effect that that was so, so long as the navigation was not interfered with; and I think that I acknowledged that. But it seems to me that we on this side were not mistaken in taking it that the hon. Minister of Justice laid down the proposition that, in the existing circumstances of this matter pending before the American Congress, where authority was sought on the part of a private company to dam the channels on both sides of the Long Sault island, we have no ground, whatever, to intervene or even to expostulate. I understand the hon. Minister of Justice to-day to contend that in his observations of the other day he did not go so far as to say that if there was danger that there was a question of obstruction of navigation, we had absolutely no ground to stand on. He says at page 2971:

> In the circumstances which exist, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be difficult for us to frame any line of diplomatic objection or remonstrance which would have any effective foundation. It could at once be answered by the United States that, under the terms or our treaty, we have the right to consider the advisability of doing this, and you are perfectly protected by the creation of this International Joint Commission upon which you are equally represented.

So I think we were at least excusable for understanding that the Minister of Justice, with all the circumstances just as they stand before him, had committed himself to the proposition that we had absolutely no ground upon which we could stand to intervene to claim protection for any right of ours in connection with the proposed barring of these two channels. That seemed to me at the time, and I must confess it still seems to me, a rather extraordinary position to take on the part of the government that is charged with the protection of the interests of this country. Here was a proposition to bar or dam these channels. It is quite true, if I understood properly the reading of the Bill to-day, that the company that asked for this right to dam these channels, did say that they were going to make some other provision whereby, notwithstanding their damming the channel, a means would be afforded for navigating one of those channels; but surely Canada was interested, and is interested in that measure or would be still interested if that measure were still being proposed, and I think it is not going too far to say, we should be consulted as to whether this method which this company was saying it was going to provide in lieu of leaving us facilities for navigation, such as they would have been if the channels were left free and open, was, or was not sufficient to effect the purpose. That was a matter of very vital importance to Canada. I do not think it is necessary to go so far as to interpret the terms of the Ashburton Treaty as meaning that these two channels must remain absolutely in the condition in which they were at the time the treaty was made. I quite recognize that there might be some interference with those channels which would not affect their availability for purposes of navigation, and I would not be interested to contend on behalf of Canada that, assuming that what was going to be done, was going to leave those channels available for navigation, we would need to resist what was going to be done. But that is one thing, and it is another thing to say that when it is proposed to dam these channels, to take away from us the right given us under the terms of the treaty (and that is justified by the suggestion that something else is going to be provided, that would be just as good) that we have no interest in that proposition, that we have no locus standi before the body that was called upon to give those powers, that we have no right and no interest to be heard before that body before it decides upon the essential question of whether this damming of the channels, which prima facie, is an interference with navigation, is, or is not, in view of the particular remedies which this company says it proposes to give, going to produce an interference with navigation and an interference with our rights. While I still fail to see in the statement of the Minister of Justice to-day any withdrawal of that utterance, I do not think that our right to be heard upon this matter, to look into this matter, to point out, if we so ascertained that the proposition did involve an interference with navigation, is at all diminished or affected by what the Minister has just said. It might be that, upon our being heard, we might satisfy ourselves that there was no interference with navigation. That might happen, but assuredly, it was a matter in which we had a vital interest and in which I would think the government would have felt it incumbent upon them to see that those interests were protected and that we were heard before this matter was disposed of in the manner proposed.

In so far as the Minister of Justice bases the proposition that we have nothing to say with regard to obstructions to be made in these two southern channels on the ground that they are entirely upon American territory, and upon the fact that we constructed a canal which obstructed the channel between Sheik island and the mainland, it seems to be only necessary to point out that the provision of the Ashburton Treaty said absolutely nothing about the channel between Sheik island and the mainland to make it quite clear that what we did to that channel can afford no ground for arguing a similar right on the part of the United States to do the same thing in the other channels. Because it is a remarkable fact (presumably attributable to the reason suggested by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that the Cornwall canal existed before the Ashburton Treaty), that the Ashburton Treaty makes no reference whatever to that channel between Sheik island and the mainland. It is not a treaty for the purpose of establishing equal rights for both parties in the waters of both parties; it is a specific provision to secure to Canada equal rights of navigation with the United States in channels which are in the United States. It is not at all a mere reciprocal arrangement that the river shall be, from side to side, equally free to the navigation of both parties, it is a provision for Canada that the specified channels in the St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault island and of Barnhart island shall be equally free and open to navigation. So that what we did on the channel between Sheik island and the mainland could have no possible bearing on what the United States had the right to do on the two channels with regard to which they had bound themselves that they should remain equally free and open to navigation to the vessels of our country and of theirs. There is absolutely no parity in the situation. It might be so if we were governed solely by the recent Boundary Waters Commission Treaty.

As regards the argument that the words 'equally free and open,' do not give us a right to have these channels remain absolutely open just as they were, as I said a moment ago, I do not think it is necessary for the purpose of supporting the rights of Canada to go so far as to contend that the words mean that the two channels are to remain just as they were with no obstruction in any portion of them. On the other hand, do I understand the Minister of Justice seriously to contend that provided these channels are equally closed to both countries, this treaty has not been violated? Has the United States, which has agreed with us that these channels should be equally open to the navigation of the vessels belonging to citizens of both countries, a right to say to us: Well, if we do dam the channels they are just as open to you as to us. But they are not open to anybody at all. I hardly think that such an interpretation would be seriously contended for. I quite understand that it may be consistent with what is stipulated there that some modification, or obstruction if you will, in some portion of these channels might exist, and that we would be without ground of complaint, provided always that they remained open to navigation, and just as open to us as to the citizens of the United States. I must confess, though we have sometimes heard some criticism of the contentions which our American friends make upon diplomatic questions, I do not believe, so far as my knowledge goes, that they have ever resorted to what would seem to me to be such a manifest quibble as that, and I would be sorry to attribute to them the capability of seeking to encroach upon our clear rights by resorting to such an argument as that.

To sum it all up, this seems to me to be the clear situation. We are precisely with regard to the United States, and with regard to these channels, in the position of a man whose neighbour has undertaken with him that two roads running over the neighbour's property should be for all time as free and open to the party in whose favour the obligation was contracted as to the party who owned the land; and in that situation the neighbour who has consented to these roads running over his own land, proceeds to build barricades across them, and he couples that action with the statement: Well, I am making a gate there, and I will pass you around by some backway, you will get out of this in some way or other, and I will be just as much impeded by this as you will be. The man who has this right of passing under that state of affairs, sits back and says: Well, I have nothing to say, that is no affair of mine, I have no ground to stand upon. That individual in that position would consider he had no rights, no possible ground even of remonstrance or of expostulation, and that it was for him to sit there with his eyes blind to what was going on, trusting simply that when it was all done some sort of a passage would be given him. Now if we carry that out, if we were dealing with an individual, I am very much afraid that when the individual came later to complain, it would be said to him: You sat by and you saw all this done, and you made no complaint. True, you had a right, but you have acquiesced in all this, you have absolutely allowed the proprietor of these roads to go to great expense in making these obstructions, but you never said a word, you are too late now to complain. It seems to me that is precisely the position that is created by this government for Canada in connection with this matter. Now is the time, when these things are proposed, now is the time for us to come forward with the affirmation of our right to be consulted with regard to what is going to be done affecting navigation. When we are face to face with a prima facie obstruction affecting navigation, it is for us to insist that we have an opportunity of satisfying ourselves that navigation is not going to be interfered with. Fortunately for us the Congress of the United States appears to have been more careful of our interests, at all events, their action would indicate a greater carefulness for our interests than seems to have existed in the minds of the government.

What seems to me is the key of this whole thing is the fact that we are not dealing with any mere general disposition giving equal rights in these boundary waters to both countries; but we are dealing with specific legislation to create a right affecting navigation in waters almost exclusively if not exclusively within the territory of the United States. Of course, I do not argue that if the United States proceeds absolutely to obstruct these channels, if they say they won't abide by the treaty, that we have any very effective method of securing our rights short of the last resort. But I do not think we should assume as towards these people that they have any deliberate desire to violate our rights in the matter, that they are not willing to hear us when we have such a manifest interest in this matter, and that they are not prepared to respect our rights if we put them properly before them. To do so would not only be most offensive to them, but if that is our frame of mind on the subject, why, it is a matter for surprise that we should so recently have made another treaty with them; because if we assume that they will be untrue to their obligations under the Ashburton Treaty, what reason have we to believe they will be true to their obligations under the recent Waterways Treaty? There is another thing I want to add. I think the argument of the Minister of Justice to the effect that our right under the Boundaries Treaty to have the commission pass upon the question of obstructions to be created in the future, is limited to cases where those obstructions affect the level of the water upon our side, is an additional argument showing the urgency of our intervening in this particular matter before the thing is carried out at all. Of course, I am not in a position to say whether what is proposed will or will not affect the level of the waters on our side of the St. Lawrence; but, if they do, apparently we would have some right to have the matter submitted to the Boundary Commission. But if it merely interferes with navigation, then, as I read the recent treaty, and as I understand the Minister of Justice to read it, we will have no right to say that this matter must be submitted to the Boundary Waters Commission, because the section is perfectly clear that the consent of the Boundary Waters Commission is required only in cases where obstruction in the boundary water affects the level on the other side. That, as I understand it, is the argument of the Minister of Justice as to the effect of section 3, and it seems to be only an additional argument making it clear that now, before this thing is carried out, is the time for Canada to make her voice heard.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia). As to the legal phase of this subject, I do not wish to say a word, simply because I do not consider myself competent to deal with it after it has been dealt with by the two able legal gentlemen who have just spoken. I would like to say a word or two on the practical side of the question. I am sure it is a matter of considerable satisfaction to everybody in Canada who is opposed to the damming of the St. Lawrence under any circumstances that the United States Congress has thrown out the Bill. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) that this company will come forward again and endeavour to get authority both from the United States and from Canada to dam the St. Lawrence river. One reason why I am opposed to this damming of the St. Lawrence is that we could not now, or within the next five years, use our half of the power that would be generated. There is no question but that 500,000 horse-power could be generated there; in fact, some engineers put it as high as 800,000 horse-power. But, taking the smaller figure, if you had that power generated to-day you could not dispose of it in Canada at points near enough to the Long Sault for it to be used advantageously. A large amount of power is used in the city of Montreal. That power can be secured at points as close or closer than the Long Sault in streams not of an international character, and in places where it can be developed for far less money per horse-power than at the Long Sault.

Mr. HUGHES. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) is right—the St. Lawrence is not international below Cornwall.

Mr. TURRIFF. No, but it is at that particular point. As I have said, you could not use in Canada our share of the power when generated. How, then, could you prevent it being sent to New York? It could be sold in New York at a high price, and that is where it would go ; and once it went there, we would never get it back for use in Canada. We have had our experience at Niagara, we have had our experience at Fort Frances ; why should we take any chances? I venture the assertion that, if that power is left alone, and if, later, the people of Canada decide that it is valuable enough to justify the injury to navigation, in fifty years from this time, the power of the Long Sault would be worth the amount of Canada's national debt to-day. If that be the case, why should we part with our right to any company, whether Canadian or American?—but this company is practically altogether an American company.

Now, among the greatest objections raised to this scheme are those raised on behalf of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. I have it on what I consider the most absolute authority that this Aluminum Company of New York, who have been hoping to get the right to dam the St. Lawrence, have been and are—if the action of Congress in throwing out the Bill has not put an end to it—buying up the stock of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company in order to silence the objections that have been raised on behalf of that company. But I consider that this should not have any effect. What I would like to see would be something even more definite than the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has given the House, although I think that what he has said must be fairly satisfactory—that is that nothing will be done in the way of approving of the plans for the damming of the St. Lawrence without fully consulting the House of Commons first. That is very satisfactory so far as it goes, but I would prefer that the government should take the position that, for the present at all events—I suppose no government can decide what should be done in the future—absolutely nothing shall be done, and no company, Canadian, American, or any other, shall be allowed to dam the St. Lawrence for the purpose of producing power. I am satisfied that the power is not needed, or, if it be needed, it can be got elsewhere, and got as cheaply, leaving the navigation of the St. Lawrence unaffected. I am glad to hear the discussion that has taken place, because I am satisfied that all we want to do is to have this matter aired in the House of Commons, and let the people of the Dominion understand the exact position ; for if they understand the exact position they will not allow the St. Lawrence to be dammed, and no government will dare allow it to be dammed.

Mr. FOSTER. Or they will be damned themselves.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, as my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says, they would be damned themselves. I am glad the American Congress has taken the sensible view and refused to pass the legislation asked for by the Aluminum Company ; and I trust the government of Canada will do no less in the matter when the question is put up to them.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am sure the House and the country are under deep obligation to the leader of the opposition for having brought this matter to the attention of the House to have it thoroughly discussed as it has been to-day. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) brought up the question of transmitting the power—even if this Long Sault dam were constructed—to Prescott and other towns in eastern Ontario, and stated that power could be transmitted to Prescott just as easily from Ottawa as from Cornwall. He also spoke of other towns in eastern Ontario being supplied from powers developed on the Trent canal. The government, I understand, have disposed of the powers there, and the company that has taken them over is looking over the field to arrange for disposing of the power when it is developed. I wish the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) were in his place, but as he is not here, I would suggest to the Prime Minister to discuss with that hon. gentleman the question of this and other powers, and to have them examined by competent engineers. All the water that passes through the Long Sault passes down by the Thousand islands. On the Canadian side of the Thousand islands, at the Fiddler's elbow, owing to the islands there being so close together, we have a current of eight or ten miles an hour for some distance. My opinion is that, at far less expense, and without interfering with navigation, without raising the water at all, but merely by putting in a current wheel, an undershot wheel, as much power could be developed as at the Long Sault rapids. Such wheels could be put in some of the narrow channels which are not used for navigation. We have another power in eastern Ontario that could supply many points. The government own and control the Rideau canal. Between Newboro, at the north end of my constituency, and Kingston, there is a total fall of about 200 feet—at Kingston Mills about 50 feet ; at Upper and Lower Brewers, 20 feet ; Jones' Falls, 80 feet ; Fosters', 15 feet ; Chaffee's, 15 feet ; Bedford Mills, 20 feet. All these falls could be concentrated into one power. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Harty) understands the situation, and I am satisfied will say a word in support of this suggestion. The effect of this improvement would be not merely to develop power but also to improve navigation. The navigation of the Rideau canal is practically spoiled because the waters are allowed to run away in the spring freshets. If the government will control the Bedford mills, owned by the Tett brothers, where the whole flow of water from Frontenac comes out, including the water from Bobb's lake and other lakes, a large power could be developed, and the water could be prevented from running away in the spring. This could be reserved for navigation purposes, it would give the Rideau canal a full supply of water, and there would be a surplus with which to develop electrical power. I do not know how many hundreds of horse-power could be developed, but it would be a very large quantity. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) has gone into it more exhaustively than I have, but both of these powers could be developed, in the one case, without interfering with navigation and, in the other case, to the benefit of navigation. I would recommend to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he would have both of these systems looked into and reserved for the benefit of the people of the eastern part of Ontario. We need not then go either to the Trent for a supply of power, or to the Ontario Electrical Power Commission, or to the Sault. We have powers in quantity to-day that are going to waste.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). Before this motion is put, I wish to say a word about it. I am afraid, from the action of the government, as evidenced by the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), that we are going to continue the same bad habit that we have had here for a good many years, of sitting complacently by waiting until the mischief is done, then regretting it and trying to regain some of the ground which we have lost. This dealing with the waters on the boundary between the United States and Canada has a history and a history which is not very creditable to the ingenuity of Canadians. In 1901 the United States woke up, or had awakened before that—at all events, they began to act with regard to the necessity of looking out for their own interests with regard to the water-powers to be derived from international streams. Away back in 1901, ten years ago, the Congress of the United States appointed a committee to get all the evidence ready so as to be prepared to chloroform and bunco Canada, and in that they have succeeded pretty well. There is no use of talking about the Waterways Treaty being a good deal for Canada; it does not give to us a half, or a quarter, of what we ought to have had without any treaty or arrangement. The United States were awake and active ten years, ago, and the result was the appointment of a committee by Congress to take hold of the matter in the interests of the United States in order to quietly get the evidence, or at all events, to ascertain their rights and to strike at Canada for a treaty when they were ready and when Canada would not be. They succeeded—there is no use in pretending that they did not—in getting the better of us as they always do when they deal with us. It is about time that the Minister of Justice or somebody else woke up to the necessity of acting ahead of time and not afterwards with regard to these encroachments by the United States upon our rights. When I heard of that committee being appointed in 1901 I had the temerity to put a question upon the Order Paper—the first question that I ever asked in this House—as to whether this government had knowledge of the appointment of the committee by the Congress of the United States, and if so what they were going to do about getting their evidence ready to meet the arbitration that it was proposed to bring about. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) answered that he had heard nothing of it, that it was entirely unknown to him, that nothing to his knowledge had taken place in regard to it. Four or five years afterwards, and not until four or five years afterwards, the suggestion was made that these matters should be dealt with by what became known subsequently as the International Waterways Commission. I point this out because the officers of the United States had their evidence all ready when the inquiry came to be made. In the meantime they had had their surveyors through the county which I have the honour to represent and the adjoining county of Welland, making all sorts of surveys, ascertaining all the data they could, so that if they were confronted at the tribunal with any evidence from the Canadian standpoint that did not suit them they could contradict it, or, if it did suit them they could let it go. For four or five years their military surveyors were permitted to make surveys with regard to the Niagara river to ascertain how the power could be developed and where the boundary was, and they were ready to negotiate for the Waterways Treaty when the Waterways Commission was appointed and the treaty was made. I am not objecting to this having been done, but I am pointing out what was done. I say this because of what I think is the unfortunate carelessness, not to use the stronger word, of the Minister of Justice in talking about these matters. The other day he said that apparently there was no need of doing anything. To-day he practically says the same thing, but revises, not to say recants, the oponion he gave then as to the necessity the government are under of doing something. The Minister of Justice read us a lecture upon no proposition and no necessity. That is why I said what I did—no proposition and no necessity of doing anything just at present! There will always be a necessity in Canada of being ready to meet incursions from the United States in regard to these assets, rights and resources of this great country. The Minister of Justice does not seem to be quite clear as to what he ought to do in the interest of Canada, but he complacently says that because Congress has turned down the proposition as at present made, and since he made his speech last week—not before—there is no need of any alarm. Then the Minister of Justice took a great deal of time to say that he had not meant us to understand what he said, or meant to say, in his speech on February 2, as we did understand it. The hon. gentleman, in the course of his statement in justification of what he said he meant to say on February 2, read a paragraph from the middle of page 2969 of 'Hansard.' The middle paragraph that he read is on 'Hansard,' but perhaps, on reflection I should read it in order to get the connection with what I desire to say. He read:

> That is exactly the situation under the existing treaties. The right of navigation is paramount and that right is secured. That right exists in this United States channel which it is proposed to dam, just as it exists in the old Channel between Sheik island and the mainland of Ontario, which is to-day utilized as part of our Cornwall canal. The right of navigation is secured by treaty and is not proposed to be interfered with. On the contrary, it is proposed to be helped according to the plans of the promoters, and unless the right of navigation is interfered with, or the level altered on our own side, we have under existing treaties, no cause to object.

That is what the Minister of Justice read to-day as justifying his opinion that as long s navigation was not interfered with we in Canada could not object. But the hon. gentleman said something more immediately following that, and that is what I am going to read. He went on and said:

> I do not think much is to be gained by going back to the terms of the Ashburton Treaty because we have a new treaty on this very subject which goes further, which governs this very situation, and which has been ratified by both countries and is in force to-day. Under the provisions of that treaty while it prohibits the construction of any obstructions in boundary waters except under certain circumstances, it impliedly gives permission to obstruct boundary waters.

In view of that statement, how can any hon. gentlemen on this side of the House be blamed for believing that the Minister of Justice was justifying this obstruction? Why should the Minister of Justice mention and reiterate everything that it would be possible to reiterate and suggest on behalf of the United States in attempting to usurp or take away from us those privileges? It is exactly as if we on this side of the House were representing Canada and the other side of the House the United States, and as if the Minister of Justice were presenting the United States argument. No counsel for the United States could put it stronger if he were contending that Canada had no right to object. Why should our Minister of Justice seek for ways and means and arguments to sustain any claim the United States might make, that we could not assert our rights on the St. Lawrence. The Minister of Justice spoke about the absence of a treaty, but what is the waterways agreement if it is not a treaty? He told us that under Article 3 of the Waterways Treaty we could not prevent the Americans doing this if it did not affect the natural level or flow of boundary waters on either side of the line. But Article 3 must be consistently read with Articles 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the same treaty, and Article 4 reads:

The high contracting parties agree that, except in cases provided for by special agreement between them, they will not permit the construction or maintenance on their respective sides of the boundary of any remedial or protective works or any dams or other obstructions in waters flowing from boundary waters or in waters at a lower level than the boundary in rivers flowing across the boundary, the effect of which is to raise the natural level of waters on the other side of the boundary unless the construction or maintenance thereof is approved by the aforesaid International Joint Commission.

It is further agreed that the waters herein defined as boundary waters and waters flowing across the boundary shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property on the other side.

Mark you, that applies not to one country, but to both. Neither is to permit any remedial or protective works, or any dams or other constructions in waters flowing from boundary waters, or in waters flowing from a lower level. But the Minister of Justice undertakes to assume that article 3 is to be read as if article 4 was not there at all, and to construe it that it is only to apply if the level of the water is lowered. Then article 8 reads in part:

The high contracting parties shall have, each on its own side of the boundary, equal and similar rights in the use of the waters hereinbefore defined as boundary waters.

The following order of precedence shall be observed among the various uses enumerated hereinafter for these waters and no use shall be permitted which tends materially to conflict with or restrain any other use which is given preference over it in this order of precedence:

1. Uses for domestic and sanitary purposes.
2. Uses for navigation, including the service of canals for the purposes of navigation.
3. Uses for power and for irrigation purposes.

I pause there to interject that the Joint International Commission undertake to lay down principles which have been adopted in the treaty, and which are supposed to govern both countries in this matter. That is for the future; that is to apply to matters arising, such as this, after the treaty was signed. First, absolute precedence is given to the uses of these waters for domestic and sanitary purposes. Has the Minister of Justice inquired whether this work would have had a prejudicial effect in relation to sanitary or domestic purposes. He assumes it has not, but, if he is not counsel for the United States, then in the interests of Canada he should undertake such an inquiry. Then the second preference is given to uses for navigation, including the service of canals for the purpose of navigation, and, in the third place, to uses for power and irrigation purposes. The article goes on to say:

The foregoing provisions shall not apply to or disturb any existing uses of boundary waters on either side of the boundary.

The requirements for an equal division may in the discretion of the commission be suspended in cases of temporary diversions along boundary waters at points where such equal division cannot be made advantageously on account of local conditions, and where such diversion does not diminish elsewhere the amount available for use on the other side.

The commission in its discretion may make its approval in any case conditional upon the construction of remedial or protective works to compensate so far as possible for the particular use or diversion proposed, and in such cases may require that suitable and adequate provision, approved by the commission, be made for the protection and indemnity against injury of any interests on either side of the boundary.

Then comes article 9, which provides:

The high contracting parties further agree that any other question or matter of difference arising between them involving the rights, obligations or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along the common frontier between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, shall be referred from time to time to the International Joint Commission for examination and report, whenever either the government of the United States or the government of the Dominion of Canada shall request that such questions or matters of difference be so referred.

Does not the Minister of Justice think this is one of the matters of difference that ought to be so referred. Look at the responsibility which the treaty throws upon both governments; look at the language of it for the protection of both parties. I ask, should not the Minister of Justice have done more than used his energy and ability to discuss the dictionary meaning of 'equally free and open?' Should he not use all his ingenuity to protect the rights of Canada, instead of endeavouring to point out that certain language in the Ashburton Treaty is not what it was supposed by the rest of us to be? In view of the fact that certain United States citizens have actually gone to Congress for power to interfere with the rights of the people of Canada, why did not the Minister of Justice submit to the International Waterways Commission that there was a difference such as is provided for in the treaty, and prepare a case for Canada, and submit it to this tribunal, which is supposed to be independent, and then we on this side of the House would not, from day to day, be compelled to apply to the government to check these incursions by the United States upon the rights of our country. But what the Minister of Justice seemed to do was to throw out the hint to the United States that if they made the contention we were afraid they would make so far as he is concerned he would agree with them.

What greater invitation could there be to the United States to take everything they can get from us in this connection, than the knowledge that the first law officer of the Crown in the Dominion of Canada, ahead of time, has said that in his opinion they have these rights, and we cannot prevent them from exercising them if they choose to do so? The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), I think quite properly, complimented the United States Congress upon turning down this charter; but I could not help noticing that he did not say a word about the Minister of Justice. He evidently thought that the Minister of Justice belonged to the other side, and was entitled to be condemned, because, by his speech of last week, he practically invited Congress to take what they could. But Congress, perhaps out of sympathy for Canada, not wishing to take too much from her all at once, showed a good deal more desire to protect Canada than the Minister of Justice evidences. The hon. member for Assiniboia referred to our experience on the Niagara river, where we got the worst of it in all these matters. As I demonstrated years before this treaty was negotiated, they were entitled, according to the boundary line, to one-tenth of the power, while this commission gave them more than four-tenths. They woke up years before we did and began to help themselves, and when we woke up it was too late to get full justice. As the hon. member for Assiniboia said, it will be the same in this case: we shall get about one-half of what we should have, while the United States will get two or three times what it should have. There is a way provided by the treaty in which this matter can be dealt with, and in order to show what powers this government possess, if they like to use them, I want to read a few words of Article X.

Any question or matters of difference arising between the high contracting parties involving the rights, obligations, or interests of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada either in relation to each other or to their respective inhabitants, may be referred for decision to the International Joint Commission by the consent of the two parties.

This government could ask the United States government to consent to have this matter adjusted. Now, Sir, I would urge upon the Prime Minister that he ought to see that his Minister of Justice takes a different position to what he has done on these matters. The Minister of Justice ought all the time to hold a brief for Canada. He ought to be the keenest man in the whole country to suspect that these people are trying to make incursions upon us which they are not entitled to make. He does not seem to hold even a watching brief for Canada, but he stands up here and gives the United States to understand that we cannot stop them. The Prime Minister should direct his Minister of Justice to make his complaint, and see that the Waterways Commission takes hold of this matter and settles it properly, instead of trifling with the House, as he has done to-day, by taking the ground that equally free and open navigation does not mean that both parties are to have free and open navigation, but means that we are not to have it if the other party does not want it. I protest against the apathy of the government in these matters, and I hope they will turn over a new leaf and be more alert to protect us, and not wait again until the horse is stolen before they lock the stable door.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called, I see a reference in the papers to a telegram said to have been sent by the Minister of Finance to the High Commissioner in London with reference to the reciprocity arrangement made with the United States. I would like to ask the minister if he would be kind enough to lay a copy of that telegram on the table of the House before to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is given correctly in the evening paper; but if I find any inaccuracy in it, I will send a copy in correct form to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like also to suggest that the papers on the Farmers' Bank, No. 110B and 110C, which take in the curator's report and the correspondence brought down by the Minister of Finance, be printed, and that the rule of the House be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. FIELDING. They are largely such formalities that I hardly thought it necessary, but I have no objection to the hon. gentleman's motion.

Motion (Mr. Foster), agreed to.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The following item appears in the Toronto 'Mail' of Tuesday, February 7:

MAY RENEW STEEL BOUNTIES.

Montreal, Que., Feb. 6.—Much curiosity was aroused on the 'street' to-day when it became known that an important conference had taken place at the Windsor Hotel on Saturday, in which Finance Minister Fielding; Premier Murray, of Nova Scotia; Hon.

A. K. Maclean, Attorney-General of Nova Scotia; Mr. E. M. Macdonald, M.P., for Pictou; and President J. H. Plummer, of the Dominion Steel Corporation participated. The subject of the conference, which was a protracted one, is understood to have been in connection with the representations that have been made to the Dominion government by the Canadian steel interests looking to a renewal of the bounties.

The general feeling is that the government will meet the wishes of the delegation and that a renewal of the bounties will be accorded.

I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) these questions: Have the government changed the position they announced to the House some time ago in reference to the renewal of these bounties? Have the government not received in the last four or five years many protests and largely signed petitions against the renewal of these bounties? Are the government not aware that there is very decided and strong opposition throughout the country in regard to the renewal of steel bounties to enable the company to pay dividends upon its watered stock?

Mr. FIELDING. When the government have any change of view to announce on that subject it will be announced in parliament and not elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. After the arrangement is made?

Mr. FIELDING. What arrangement?

Mr. FOSTER. Any arrangement?

Mr. FIELDING. No arrangement has been made. To the second question, I cannot remember if petitions have been received. If my hon. friend will move for them in the usual way and there are such petitions I will be happy to expedite the bringing down of a return. To the third question, we are aware that there is a divided opinion upon nearly all the fiscal questions which engage the attention of the government and the House.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Have any negotiations taken place between the gentlemen named here and the Minister of Finance?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no such conference as that which formed the basis of the hon. gentleman's question. There have been applications from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company for a continuance of the bounty on steel rods.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has there been a meeting between the Minister of Finance and the gentlemen named with a view to the continuing of the bounties?

Mr. FIELDING. There was an interview between the president of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and myself for the purpose of enabling him to present his views. That interview took place in my office in Ottawa some days ago.

HOURS OF LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. VERVILLE moved the third reading of Bill (No. 3) respecting the hours of labour on public works.

Mr. MARSHALL. This Bill was discussed last week in my absence. I was a member of the committee to which it was referred. Everything was done to secure evidence, I have no fault to find on that score, but I am opposed to the Bill for the simple reason that it is discriminating. I do not know why we should provide for an eight hour day for men working on public buildings when men working on other buildings have to work ten hours. I believe the Bill, if it is made law, will cause trouble. I have had a great deal of experience with help for years. My experience extends over thirty years, and the complaint with us has been that we do not give them sufficient work. For that reason I wish to put myself on record as being opposed to the Bill, believing as I do, after hearing the evidence, that it will cause trouble.

Mr. STANFIELD. As a member of the special committee who heard the evidence last year, I desire to say a word. My objection to the Bill is not very strong as I am in favour of helping on the eight-hour movement and the labouring people, but I wish to place on record a communication which I have received from Moncton. It is as follows:

Moncton, N.B., December 28, 1910.

John Stanfield, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned, representing organized labour in the city of Moncton, hereby enter an emphatic protest against the proposed amendments to the Eight-Hour Bill (known as Bill No. 3), which amendments, if passed, will utterly eliminate from its benefits the thousands of employees of the government on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railways. We particularly object to the striking out of section 5 of the Bill.

We believe that in the matter of hours and wages and in ideal working conditions generally the government of the country should be the leader, not the follower. To this end we would urgently request your support to the Bill as originally proposed.

Thanking you in advance for any support you can render us at this time.

We remain, yours very truly,
Trades and Labour Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 9, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN CONTINGENT AT CORONATION.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. What rule or principle will the government adopt in selecting the officers and men of the Canadian contingent to the Coronation?
2. What will be the probable number of officers and men of said contingent?
3. What other persons will be selected to represent the Canadian government?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I would like to make an explanation with reference to what took place yesterday. I said to my hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) who put this question:

My deputy informs me that the answer was sent in last week in the regular way.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I inquired of the clerk, and he cannot find it.

That difficulty occurred in this way: My deputy supposed, and rightly, that the third part of the question did not refer to the Militia Department, and followed the rule of sending the answer of the two first parts to the Secretary of State so that the answer to the third might be got from the proper minister, and the whole answer sent in together. I found the answer, which was sent in on the 23rd January, in the Department of the Secretary of State today. The answer is as follows:

1. It is proposed to send representatives of every regiment or independent unit of the permanent force, and active militia, including departmental corps. The numbers to be furnished for the mounted and dismounted portions of the contingent have been arrived at, as far as possible, upon a percentage basis. Preference will be given to those who have not already partaken in former contingents on such great occasions, such as Jubilee of the late Queen Victoria, or the coronation of the late King. Preference will also be given to those who have served in the field. With regard to the selection of the more junior officers, it is proposed that their selection shall be made with due regard to efficiency. As regards the qualifications of non-commissioned officers and men, they will be required to fulfil the following conditions:

(a) To be at present included in the service roll of a corps of the active militia.

*(b) To have completed the full military training in 1908, 1909 and 1910.

(c) To be well set up, of suitable height and physique, thoroughly trained, and certified by their commanding officers to be of 'exemplary' character.

(d) To be examined and passed 'fit' by the medical officer, subject to confirmation by the principal medical officer before embarkation.

*This rule does not include corps organized since the above mentioned dates.

2. About 717.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. How much has the proposed bridge across the St. Lawrence river for the use of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway cost up to date?
2. What is the estimated additional cost to complete the bridge?
3. Did the government ever consider the advisability of tunnelling the river instead of constructing a bridge?
4. Did the government ever have engineers report upon the feasibility and cost of such a tunnel?

Mr. GRAHAM :

1. I presume my hon. friend refers to what is known as the Quebec bridge which has not been constructed for the sole use of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway.

2. As intimated to the leader of the opposition the other day this question cannot be answered at the present time as the tenders are under consideration.

3. The department does not consider the construction of a tunnel at that point in the realm of practicability.

4. No.

HOMESTEAD—R. F. RUDDOCK.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster) :

1. Has the attention of the Interior Department been called to an application by R. F. Ruddock for a homestead in Chilliwack district, said to have been made on or about 11th May, 1908?

2. Has the applicant been residing on and improving the land applied for?

3. Is it the intention to grant this application before proclamation of the new regulations?

Mr. OLIVER :

1. The first intimation of record here that R. F. Ruddock claimed to be squatting on south-east ¼ 22, 2, 29 west 6th meridian, was by letter dated 13th October, 1910, from Mr. J. D. Taylor, M.P., to this department.

2. The agent of Dominion lands at New Westminster was asked to report on the case. His report has not yet been received and the department does not know whether or not R. F. Ruddock has been residing on and improving the said land. The agent has been requested to expedite the report.

3. Until the agent's report is received, and the nature of the claim is before the department, a decision cannot be reached in reference to the case.

IMPORTATION OF IMPURE CANNED PEAS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG :

1. Is the government aware that canned peas are being imported into Canada containing colouring matter, contrary to the Pure Food Act? If so, what action has been taken to stop the importation of same?

2. How many cases of canned peas have been inspected at the ports of entry, and how many have been condemned as not complying with our food regulations?

Mr. MURPHY :

1. The government is not aware that canned peas containing colouring matter are being imported into Canada, contrary to the Adulteration Act.

2. There is no information available respecting canned peas at the ports of entry nor concerning the number of cases that may have been condemned.

GAS METERS IN TORONTO.

Mr. MACDONELL :

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue been called to what appears to be the excessive reading of the gas meters in use in the city of Toronto?

2. Is the minister aware that it is alleged by the users of gas in Toronto that the meters register from ¼ to ⅓ more gas than they did at the same period in any previous year?

3. Is the minister aware that such complaints have arisen since the new gas main was recently laid across the city?

4. If the minister is not cognizant of the position of matters as above indicated, will he ask for a report from the proper government officer or officers at Toronto, with special reference to the gas pressure prior to and since the new gas main was recently laid across the city?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN :

1. No complaint has been received at the Inland Revenue Department, from Toronto, since May, 1908, relative to the excessive reading of gas meters.

2. No.

3. No.

4. The department will send an expert official to Toronto to ascertain the exact condition of affairs.

HOURS OF LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster) :

1. How many copies were printed of the proceedings of the special committee on the hours of labour on public works?

2. How many copies have been distributed, and, in general terms, to whom have they been distributed?

3. What disposition is intended to be made of the volumes remaining on hand?

4. What was the total cost of this committee, under each head of expenditure, including the volume of proceedings?

Mr. KING :

1. 2,275 copies for general distribution, as per list at Printing Bureau ; 800 copies for journals of the House of Commons, and 5,000 for extra distribution.

2. 2,275 copies distributed from the Printing Bureau to (1) the High Commissioner in London, (2) senators, (3) members of parliament (4) members of the provincial legislatures (5) judges (6) boards of trade (7) public libraries (8) mechanics' institutes, and (9) newspapers.

The following copies have also been distributed by the clerk of the Eight Hour Bill Committee : To Department of Labour, 30 ; to members and senators, 731 ; Builders' Exchange, 15 ; the press, 40 ; 'Hansard,' 14 ; officials of departments, 12 ; to various persons on request, 22.

3. It is intended to distribute the balance to trades and labour unions, to farmers' institutes, to the Dominion Grange, and to boards of trade, also to manufacturers from whom the committee have received communications, and to such other persons or organizations as may make application therefor.

4. $3,042.76 for printing report; $503.70 for witnesses; and $517.56 for stenographic assistance, in addition to the services of members of the staff of the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT LOANS.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

What was the total cost in dollars and cents of the loan of 1909 at 3¾ per cent, under the heads, respectively, of commission to financial agents, commission to underwriters, commission for arranging for underwriting, brokerage, advertising, printing, and other charges?

Mr. FIELDING:

Commission to financial agents..	$ 73,000 00
Commission to underwriters.. ..	292,000 00
Commission for arranging for underwriting	73,000 00
Brokerage	67,119 16
Advertising, printing, freight and other such charges	12,567 99
Other charges	93,762 35
	$611,449 50

REGINA AND MOOSEJAW TOWN SITES.

Mr. McCRANEY:

1. Was the government jointly interested with the Canadian Pacific railway in certain lots in the townsites of Regina and Moosejaw?

2. If so, was a division of interests made and when?

3. How many of such lots became the sole property of the government in Regina, what disposal was made of same and on what terms?

4. How many of such lots became the sole property of the government in Moosejaw, what disposal was made of same, and on what terms?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Yes, the disposal of such lots being administered by joint trustees.

2. Yes, on March 27, 1902.

3. 4,863; patented as a free grant to the city of Regina under the authority of an order in council dated April 6, 1903. In addition to these lots 285·55 acres of the unsubdivided portion of the townsite of Regina was revested in the Crown and subsequently patented to the city of Regina, as follows: 89·60 acres for cemetery purposes and 195·95 acres for public park and recreation ground purposes.

4. 2,152; patented as a free grant to the city of Moosejaw under the authority of an order in council dated the 6th April, 1903.

TIMBER BERTHS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. Has the Minister of the Interior received any requests lately for the removal of timber cases from lands at Hall's Prairie, B.C., or reports upon such applications not yet granted or dealt with?

2. In how many years have applications been pending for removal of these cases?

3. What is the situation at present?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No requests have been received lately for the removal of timber leases from lands in timber berths B. L, Q, 176, 234, 293 and 450 near Hall's Prairie, B.C., but there are many illegal squatters in these berths who have from time to time communicated with the department for the purpose of getting the right to enter when the lands were made available.

2. The first request on file here from a squatter for the right of entry in these berths is dated March 5, 1902; one was received from another squatter, dated 23rd January, 1904; several were received in 1906 and others since then.

A petition signed by a number of residents in Surrey municipality was received dated at Hall's Prairie, April 18, 1908, asking withdrawal of lands in that municipality under timber lease to the British Columbia Mills Timber and Trading Company.

3. An inspection of these timber berths was made last summer by an officer of the department for the purpose of considering the question of possible withdrawals from timber license. Pursuant to the reports made, the licensees of timber berth B were notified to clear off part of the berth by the 1st May, 1911, and the balance by the 1st May, 1912. The licensees of timber berth Q were notified that part of that berth would be withdrawn 1st May, 1911, and the balance on the 1st May, 1912. In the case of the other timber berths above mentioned, the licensees were given till the 1st May, 1911, to clear off the remainder of the timber.

Protests have been received from the licensees in connection with these proposed withdrawals. The protest is now under consideration.

DAM ACROSS THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have to-day received word from Washington that the Bill to authorize the damming of the St. Lawrence is now before the United States Senate and they are changing it so as to give them power to dam the St. Lawrence south of the international boundary line which practically means damming the whole river. I am requested to ask the government that they should telegraph to Ambassador Bryce to protest against damming any part of the St. Lawrence without the consent of Canada, as asked for by the Bill. I wish the Prime Minister could see his way clear to inform Ambassador Bryce, if such legislation is being proceeded with in the United States Senate, that he should enter a protest on behalf of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Reid), without telling him the nature of the correspondence, that we are at this moment in correspondence with Ambassador Bryce.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to give the House information which was asked for by the member for Grenville yesterday. The hon gentleman stated that in a conversation which took place upon a train between him and Mr. Coté, the secretary of the International Waterways Commission, Mr. Coté had informed him that a plan for the construction of a canal from the Long Sault to Lake Champlain had been before the Waterways Commission, that the commission had made a report on it, and that that report was in the Department of Public Works. I stated then that I had received no notice of any such report and on inquiry from Mr. Coté, he tells me he did have a conversation with the hon. gentleman and that what he referred to in that conversation was the work of improving the navigable channel afforded by the Richelieu river and which connects the River St. Lawrence with Lake Champlain. Mr. Coté says he told the hon. gentleman that the report in regard to that had been made by the Waterways Commission, and if my hon. friend will turn to the report of the International Waterways Commission, page 239, he will find there the report which Mr. Coté referred to. Mr. Coté states he never heard of any report or any plan for the construction of a canal from the Long Sault to Lake Champlain, and he informs me that no such work was referred to in the conversation between him and the hon. gentleman.

THE DUTY ON FRUIT.

Mr. BURRELL. I wish to call the attention of the government to the following item which appears in this morning's 'Citizen':

South Haven, Mich., Feb. 8.—P. H. T. Carpenter, of Niagara, Ont., and H. H. Griffith, of Grimsby, Ont., representatives of the Agricultural Department of the Canadian government, here conferring with fruit growers concerning their stand on the fruit clause of the reciprocity treaty, both declared to-day that they favour the placing of fruit on the free list, and say that the prominent fruit growers of the Ontario district are in accord with the provision. Both men stated that the majority of the Canadian fruit growers with whom they have talked believe the treaty will be ratified by both governments provided the amendments are few.

In view of the fact that I regard that statement as absolutely unauthorized and unrepresentative I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) whether these are officials of his department.

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember these names as the names of any of my officials. I do not think they are, but I will look into it and see. If they are, they must be men who are just temporarily employed in some way as institute workers, but I do not think they belong to my department at all. I imagine they are officers of the Ontario government.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I desire, on behalf of a large number of interests concerned with the object which we are about to discuss, to lodge an earnest protest against the undue and unseemly haste with which the House is asked to consider this very important agreement. I am aware that the rules of international courtesy oblige us to speak with caution even upon the subject of delay, but at the same time it is proper that I should point out that what we seek here is merely the necessary time to become fully acquainted with the details of this very important agreement, and to enable us, as in duty bound, to take counsel with those we represent here. There is no desire, as the House will see by the motion expressive of regret which I intend placing in your hands, to avoid that discussion, nor unduly to delay, nor to put any obstacle in the way of a proper discussion of that agreement. But since it has become apparent that the decision of the government is to rush this matter through without members having proper time to consider it, it seems entirely within our right, and no violation of that community of nations to which I have alluded, that we should put on record, those of us who are of that opinion, the fact that we have not had the proper time to consider all the details which it is the business of this committee to look into immediately.

Just one word to accentuate the fact, which has been pointed out by many people outside of this House, that this agreement is absolutely new. We had expected some thing less considerable, but it is of the most sweeping character. In the first place, the Minister of Finance has admitted, in making his recent announcement to the House, that it covers the whole field of agriculture. That is at the present moment in this country a matter of supreme interest. It tends to invade our forest wealth and other natural resources. We have seen within a short time how backward we have been with respect to those resources. We have constituted a Commission of Conservation, we have spent a year in the study of those resources and of the means of conserving them, and we have just had a meeting at which it has been made apparent that we must change our course, and in the future bring to the conservation of those great natural resources all that care which has been found wanting in other countries and which is necessary, to prevent the waste of what constitutes the real strength of a nation.

Another motive for this demand for delay is the fact that the tendency of this agreement is admittedly to make our trade move north and south. I need not take up the time of the House in emphasizing, what everybody knows, that for years our efforts have been in an entirely different direction. Therefore, this question affects primarily the great question of transportation, and has to do with the immense sacrifices which we have made within the last 20 years to give to our trade that direction east and west which we deem absolutely necessary to the best interests of the country. This agreement, presented to us in this unexpected manner, which has not been discussed by us and our electors, comes to us with startling suddenness after 40 years of complete isolation from our great neighbour —40 years of separation, not surely attributable to us, since we all know that during those 40 years in the wilderness we, on our side, have time and again sought to obtain better relations with our neighbour. But, Sir, during that long period the circumstances have changed. That is a point which all people admit. We have federated our entire country—joined together all its parts from one end to the other, at the cost of many negotiations and at vast expense, an expense which would not, perhaps, have been so readily undergone had those obstacles for which I lay no blame upon our neighbour, but which they themselves maintained during that long period, not existed. We have, as a necessity, created new markets; we have had to find those markets. Our hon. friends on the other side of the House have time and again claimed the credit of having sought and found those markets for us. I do not wish to enter on that controversy. There is no doubt that we have been obliged to find new markets, and under a fiscal system established by us long ago, and maintained by this government, largely brought about by the isolation to which I have referred, we have created considerable industries, and upon the principles which lie at the basis of that fiscal policy those industries have grown, until large and practically vested interests have been created.

In support of this demand for delay, what do we find? It would be idle to take up the time of the House in indicating the circumstances under which this proposal has been brought about. We do not live on this continent without seeing and realizing what goes on around us, not only here, but all over the world. Members of this House know full well that there has been a very strong movement in the political life of our estimable neighbours for the lowering of their tariff. This has become their great party question, which they have discussed from each and every point of view during the last decade, and the upshot of that discussion, which has enabled them to familiarize themselves with the conditions of their own trade, is that those among them who are in favour of a reduction of the tariff have obtained the ascendency and will, in a few days, be in a position to deal effectively with the matter with which we are now concerned.

That is a condition which is far more favourable than our own. I speak in the judgment of the House when I say that the question of our tariff, the question of our fiscal policy, has not been a prominent one, and consequently has not been discussed in our country. In debating a proposal such as the one before the House, it is not for us to discuss the political situation in the United States, but we cannot help considering it. We cannot fail to realize that we do not stand here, with respect to the question of our trade relations, possessed of that information which our neighbours enjoy. When we see this strange and sudden change in the feelings of our neighbours towards us, which we welcome—for there is no man, I hope, in this country, who does not desire not only the most pleasant but the most favourable relations in business and otherwise with the neighbouring republic—in the face of that situation we may ask what position with respect to these negotiations has been taken by the imperial government? I think that is a fair question. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has assured us that during the negotiations he received the warmest support from His Majesty's ambassador at Washington. Did the British ambassador receive instructions in this regard from his government? Unquestionably he must have. There can be no doubt in the mind of any one who knows anything of diplomacy that in a matter of this importance, no ambassador would take up such a position unless under instructions. Well, if political considerations of paramount importance entered into the negotiations which have culminated in this agreement with our neighbours, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the British government, which has just come out of the throes of the warmest political contest known in that country for a long time, sees some advantage in the carrying through of this agreement. Do the despatches which have come to us from the other side cast any doubt upon that very reasonable supposition? I submit not. From the manner in which this question has been discussed on the other side, we see that it assumes there, as elsewhere, a political aspect, and that those who are in power in England at present expect considerable political advantage to accrue from the carrying through of this agreement. I appeal to the government and this House whether, if there be no doubt on the facts which I have just given, there is not great uncertainty as to the value of the different elements of this agreement upon which we are called upon to enter immediately. I speak of the schedules. Open the newspapers and you find in them interviews with competent men on matters which concern them and which are referred to in these schedules and you find contradictory opinions among them, but you also find this careful reserve invariably expressed that we will require to look further into this proposed arrangement in order to be able to appreciate and measure its consequences. Under these circumstances, is it not advisable that we, who are but mandatories, should not now go into the discussion of the details of this arrangement when we have absolutely not had the time to confer with our constituencies not even those of us whose constituencies are closest to the Capital. It is a principle admitted in the law of every nation that a mandatory cannot conclude important matters or matters other than routine without consulting his principal. Well, what are we here after all but mandatories of the people? I myself live quite near Ottawa. With some of the industries in my constituency, which is not far distant, I am quite well acquainted, with others much less so, but there is not one of them affected by this proposed treaty, on behalf of which I would venture to speak with absolute certainty unless I had further information from them. I believe we should meet this proposal in a proper spirit, give it the attention due to its importance, but not greet it with those shrieks of approval with which my hon. friends on the other side hailed the announcement of the hon. Minister of Finance after his return. These things are quoted abroad. The next day throughout the newspapers in the neighbouring republic it was stated—and stated certainly with some grounds of truth—that this whole House, after this long period of forty years waiting for reciprocity, had greeted with acclamation the whole arrangement. I believe that we should be ready to conclude treaties with all nations where our interests are concerned; but under the circumstances it must be apparent to every member of this House that, whatever may be the circumstances under which these proposals for a trade arrangement are made, we must first consider Canadian interests. They should be first of all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. Is not that the true test, the proper criterion? Must we not view this proposed arrangement from the standpoint of what interests the future of Canada? Let me remark to my hon. friends that it is unusual in the highest degree for a nation to assent with such brief delay to an arrangement of this kind with its far-reaching consequences upon commercial treaties with other nations. They are concluded every day amongst European countries. You will find the usual clause that ratifications may be exchanged in six months, after the parliaments, the deliberative assemblies of those nations, have had an opportunity to look into them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend says hear, hear. That is an approval, I suppose, of the statement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Quite the reverse.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend probably refers to the ratifications, to the ordinary sealing of the agreement, but will he show us a single case of an agreement of this kind, surrounded by the circumstances that surround this one, in which a parliament has been asked to approve with such a short delay. I do not think so. I defy my hon. friend to give us such an example.

Now, I conclude. The United States in making trade arrangements with other nations, consider only their own interests. I do not, in any sense, blame our neighbours for that. I approve of this course, but this trait has characterized their trade arrangements for all time. They awakened to the utility of this agreement at a moment when they realized that it was in their interest. That is right, that is proper. They have discussed those interests a long time, and they have come to the conclusion that while their rejection, time and again of our own approaches and proposals, was probably justified at the time, from their own point of view, the time has come to change their attitude and they come to us. We receive them in a proper spirit, and are considering their proposals but is there anything unfair in saying that we, the parliament which is going to lay its seal on, and give its approval to this agreement, wish to consider it, to think it over, to weigh it, because it requires to be weighed and considered, and that we wish to consult those who have sent us here, to know what their opinions are, to understand fully how their interests are affected. I can see that it is probable that the demand I have made on the government will not be acceded to by my hon. friends, but I think it is important that we should put it on record. I know the feeling in my province is that this requires to be looked into, and we should put on record an expression of our regret that the government has not given us a further opportunity for consideration. I therefore, beg to move:

To add to the main motion the following words:—

But the House regrets that, before considering, on its merits and in its details, the arrangement concluded between the government of Canada and the President of the United States, it has not been given the necessary time and occasion to ascertain the opinion of the people of Canada in that regard and to study more carefully the effect the new fiscal regime may have upon the various interests thereby affected.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this stage of the proceedings to enter into any discussion of the merits of the reciprocity agreement. I have already had the opportunity of addressing the House at some length concerning it, and possibly before the matter is finally disposed of, some other opportunity may properly arise at which, if I so desire, I can again express my views. I confine myself at the moment entirely to the position taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), as to a delay of proceedings. I am not able to agree with my hon. friend that there is any good reason why this House should not now proceed to deal, not hastily, not rashly, but soberly and in the ordinary way of public business, with the important matter which the government have submitted. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that there has been anything rash or anything unseemly in asking the House to deal with the matter in the manner I have suggested. The question of reciprocity is not a new one. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk), himself, has said that in one form or another, we have had this matter before us for 40 years, and now he says he is very much surprised. But first he is surprised that this government have been able to obtain an agreement upon that question between the United States and Canada, an agreement which gives hope and faith and confidence to the people in nearly every industry in this country, and gives assurance that the great prosperity that Canada has enjoyed now for many years, will continue and increase. There is nothing new of importance in this agreement. It is, to a large extent, the old reciprocity treaty of 1854 over again. In some respects it is different, there are some things here that are not in the old treaty, but speaking generally, there is nothing in this reciprocity agreement that any intelligent and thoughtful man cannot comprehend with a very short study. It has been in our hands for a fortnight. We are not proceeding hastily; the proceedings of parliament are a protection against hasty legislation. We first give notice of resolutions, and we invite the attention of the House in Committee of the Whole to these resolutions. There may be a debate, as there is now, at the first stage. There is a further debate in Committee of the Whole. After the resolutions have passed, if they shall pass through the Committee of the Whole, and after they are reported to the House, they are crystallized into the form of a Bill, and at every stage of that Bill there may be further consideration and further debate. There will be a first reading of the Bill, and we can talk on it as long as we like, and so with the second and third readings; and then, if it shall have passed through these various stages, it goes to another place and the same procedure largely happens there, and if it is capable of being discussed, and in some respects a measure of that kind may be discussed in another place, although it is a Bill that principally belongs to this House, there is an opportunity, in a general way, for discussion even there. So, Sir, there will be abundant opportunity for the members of this House and the people of this country to carefully consider the arrangement to which the government asks them to give their approval.

In times past we have endeavoured to make reciprocity arrangements with our friends to the south, but in most cases we have been unsuccessful; for one reason or another nothing has been accomplished. We are to-day in the happy position that we are about, as we believe, to accomplish this great thing for which our people have been seeking for the last forty years. And, Sir, with the prospect of that great boon to the people of Canada so near, it would be a grave mistake and a great wrong for this House to refuse to take advantage of the opportunity which is presented. It is not plain sailing on either side of the boundary line. My hon. friend rather conveyed the impression that there is an intense desire on the other side of the line to achieve this arrangement. We who read the public press know that my hon. friend hardly put that matter fairly. He knows that on the other side of the line, as on this side of the line, there are interests which will oppose this arrangement. He can turn to the Conservative press, and he will find their headlines announcing with triumph that this measure is to be defeated. Where? In the parliament of Canada? No, but in the Congress of the United States. It is to that body they are looking for hope and comfort. The effort that has been made on that side of the line to defeat this measure is exactly of the same nature as the efforts on this side. Perhaps the only thing in which we differ is that on the American side of the line they are fighting this thing bitterly because narrow and selfish interests, opposed to the good of the great multitude, feel that they may be affected. On this side of the line there has been no serious effort to discuss this question from an economic point of view. My hon. friend spoke of the shrieks that were made in support of this measure. I have heard of no shrieks in Canada in support of this measure; but I have heard and read the shrieks of the friends of the hon. gentleman in denouncing this measure, men in the press and men on the platform, who, unable to deal with this measure on its merits, are content to beat the big drum of imperialism. As the Ottawa 'Citizen' of this morning says, it is an insult to the intelligence of the people to claim that the acceptance of a trade arrangement with the United States interferes with the loyalty of the Canadian people.

Sir, we have come to an agreement with the United States government as to the manner in which this matter shall be dealt with. We are aware of the difficulties in the United States, we are aware that their Congress will cease on the 4th day of March, and we are aware that strenuous efforts are being made to defeat this measure on the other side of the line. If that shall happen, it is not our fault. We know it will give great joy to some hon. gentlemen opposite, who, in this matter, are looking to Washington, and not to Ottawa. We have agreed that the government of the United States and the government of Canada shall use their utmost efforts to recommend and carry this legislation through the Congress of the United States and the parliament of Canada. We believe there is a happy combination of events at Washington now which is likely to eventuate in success. We know the difficulties, we know there is a tremendous opposition there, as there is opposition here. I have strong hope that the president of the United States will be able to overcome that opposition in the United States, and that this measure will receive the approval of the United States Congress. But whether it shall receive the approval of Congress or not, one thing is clear, we will do our part; and if we pass this measure, and if the United States fail to pass corresponding legislation, then, in any future negotiations, our position will be stronger, we will be able to say: We have kept the faith, we did what we agreed to do, and if you did not do it, that is your fault.

Sir, I am not able to see any reason why we should delay. As I said a moment ago, there is a happy condition at Washington which has not prevailed in the past. We propose to proceed with this measure, not rashly, but in due order. Of course, we will have a suspending clause. Though we ask the parliament of Canada to assent to this measure, the Bill which will be founded on the resolutions now before the House, will contain a clause providing that this arrangement will not go into operation until we are assured that corresponding legislation has been passed by the United States. Therefore, there is no danger such as my hon. friend appears to apprehend. It would seem, from what we have heard in some quarters, that there is an idea abroad that we are going to pass this legislation, and put it into operation, and that our American friends will never do their part at all. That is not the situation. We shall ask parliament to pass the measure, and we shall ask parliament to adopt a suspending clause which will declare that this measure shall not go into operation until the government of Canada have obtained satisfactory information that the United States Congress have done their part as well. Believing that this is a good measure, good both for the Dominion of Canada and good for our neighbours to the south, believing that the conditions are particularly favourable for making this arrangement, I respectfully ask the House not to consent to delay, but to oppose the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

House divided on amendment of (Mr. Monk).

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to move the adoption of the resolution of the 26th January, which is on the Order Paper.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is it the desire of the committee to take up the resolution as a whole, or item by item?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). We would like to have, first, a general discussion upon the resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The whole resolution is before the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, the conditions under which I was called upon to speak on a previous occasion in this House, just two weeks ago, afforded little opportunity for grasping the full import of the proposals which have been submitted to parliament and to the country by the government. Those proposals are of too grave and serious a character to be considered from a purely partisan standpoint. I desire, therefore, to-day to make a reasonable and moderate presentation of the views which I entertain with regard to them without making any attack upon the government or upon any one else. In the first place, I shall direct your attention to the condition to which this country has attained after some forty or fifty years of effort and endeavour, and I shall undertake to demonstrate, in so far as it is within my humble ability, that these are not proposals that should be lightly entered into by the Dominion of Canada at the present time.

I do not agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he suggests that there has been ample time for the country to make itself acquainted with the nature of these proposals, and with their probable result, whether that result be considered from the economic standpoint alone, or whether it be considered from the distinct national standpoint which is involved in these proposals. The motion which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has moved to-day was presented to this parliament on the 26th January, just two weeks ago. On Tuesday last, twelve days afterwards, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance presented to parliament information which admittedly was necessary in order that parliament should have a real conception of what is involved in these proposals. That information was presented to this parliament about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, and it was proposed by the government to proceed with the discussion of these proposals on the following day at three o'clock in the afternoon. It is quite true that an arrangement was eventually made to postpone the discussion until to-day, but even so we have had in our possession for but forty-eight hours the information upon which these proposals must be considered by parliament and the country.

They are not proposals to be rushed through parliament. They are not proposals which ought to be forced upon the country without the most ample opportunity of consideration and of suggestion, whether to the government or to parliament. What do these proposals embody? They embody practically a new tariff for this country in so far as its tariff relations with the United States of America are concerned. They are of so sweeping an effect that probably no one man, inside or outside of parliament to-day, can accurately or properly estimate what their future result may be. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has referred to the reciprocity treaty of 1854. He has referred to that treaty as one which conferred great advantages upon this country. I do not propose this afternoon to enter into a consideration of the advantages which may have come to this country during some part of the operation of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, but I would like to point out that this is 1911, and not 1854, and that it is idle for us to attempt to discuss these proposals from the standpoint of 1854, or even from the standpoint of 1866. It is perfectly true that during the latter part of the reciprocity treaty, which lasted from 1854 to 1866, production was greatly stimulated in this country, and, I believe, we got very high prices for our products, but it is equally true that this resulted from causes which do not prevail to-day. During a portion of that period there was a great civil war raging in the United States, production was checked in the United States, production was stimulated in Canada, and the prices that we obtained for our produce during the last half dozen years of the existence of that treaty were very much higher than could reasonably be expected under other conditions.

I do not propose to waste your time by dealing with the reciprocity treaty of 1854, or with the conditions which prevailed at that time, except to contrast the condition of Canada as it is in 1911 with the condition which then confronted the scattered provinces, out of which this confederation was formed. What was the condition of this country in 1866? We had not yet formed confederation. There were simply four, or five, or six provinces in eastern Canada, four of which united to form this new, this great confederation. The task which they undertook at that time was, perhaps, as great a task as ever confronted any similar people under anything like the same conditions. What was the task? It was to convert these fringelike communities, scattered along the border land of the United States, into a great and powerful nation, which should maintain its place upon the northern half of this continent under the protecting ægis of the British flag.

The very first of our tasks was to add about 3,000,000 square miles to our territory; to take in the distant province of British Columbia, and all the great uninhabited territory between; to build lines of transportation, to develop and utilize our system of waterways; to bind together into one Dominion the scattered fragments of our country, and last but not least to conserve and to develop the natural resources of untold importance which had come as a priceless heritage to the two great races that had united for the development of this Dominion. Sir, there was something greater than even that: There was the task laid before the people of this country to allay jealousies and prejudices, to create a national spirit, and to bring about that harmony and mutual understanding among the people of these four provinces, and of the other provinces that should be added in the future, which would contribute to the building up of a united and powerful Canada as the greatest of the Dominions which own allegiance to the British Crown. The task before our people was to build up British institutions in this country, to develop them in the spirit in which they had been developed in the mother country, and to do all this under conditions that might well have daunted men of less stout heart, because, it was realized that these fringe-like communities were scattered for 4,000 miles along the territory of a great and powerful nation which must possess a far-reaching influence upon the commercial destiny of this country.

Well, what have we done in that interval of 40 years? Indeed, to mention what we have accomplished it is only necessary to re-echo the statements that have been made over and over again by the Minister of Finance in every budget speech for the last 14 years, and to add to it the record of the advancement in material prosperity of Canada during the past 40 or 50 years, not confining it to 14 years alone. I trust I may be pardoned that remark, because I do not desire to sound any partisan note in the remarks I shall address to the House. Here are the statistics of Canada's trade comparing 1868 with 1910 :

TRADE STATISTICS.

—	1868.	1910.	Increase.	Per cent.
Total trade	116,000,000	649,000,000	533,000,000	459
Exports	49,000,000	279,000,000	230,000,000	470
Imports	67,000,000	370,000,000	303,000,000	450

Between 1868 and 1910 our exports increased as follows :

	1868.	1910.
Produce of mine increased from	$ 1,225,000	to $40,000,000
Produce of fisheries	3,000,000	15,000,000
Produce of forest	19,000,000	47,000,000
Animals and their products	7,000,000	54,000,000
Agricultural products	13,000,000	90,000,000
Manufactures	2,000,000	31,000,000
Value total field crops last year		533,000,000
Value total manufactures (estimated) last year		1,000,000,000

It is therefore abundantly evident, looking at trade statistics alone, that we have made not only great but marvellous progress in the last 40 years along the path which the people of Canada have been treading, and from which path I trust they will not see fit lightly to depart. Let us look at some other statistics. Let us look at what these scattered provinces in 1867 had in the way of transportation facilities —and transportation in a great country like Canada with enormous area, with abundant resources and with a small population, is after all, the key of the situation. Look at these figures:

	1867.	1910.
Miles of railway	2,240	24,731
Railway earnings	$12,000,000	$174,000,000
	1879.
Tons of freight carried	8,000,000	74,000,000
Passengers carried	6,500,000	36,000,000

BANKS.

	1868.	1910.
Bank capital	$30,000,000	$184,000,000 Including reserve fund.
Bank deposits	33,000,000	925,000,000

POST OFFICE.

	1868.	1910.
Letters transmitted through the mails	41,000,000	414,000,000

AREA AND POPULATION.

	1868.	1910.
	Square miles.
Area	337,524	3,315,647
Population	3,371,594	*7,250,000

*Estimated.

Look at these evidences of vast progress and prosperity ; look at the advancement we have made in founding universities and schools, look at our progress in education. And, last but not least, look at the standard of comfort in life which prevails in Canada to-day compared with that which prevailed in 1868. I know, Sir, that in my own home in the province of Nova Scotia, when I was a boy 40 years ago the comforts of life as they are enjoyed at the present day were unknown to the people then. Observe the growth of our cities. In 1868 Montreal had a population of 100,000 ; I believe that to-day it has a population of over 500,000. Toronto had a population at that time of 50,000; to-day it is a city of over 400,000. Hamilton had a population of 22,000 ; now I suppose it has over 80,000. Ottawa then was a town which had hardly escaped the name of Bytown ; it had a population of 18,000 ; now it has a population of 85,000 or 90,000. Take the splendid cities of the west—Winnipeg, Calgary, Regina, Edmonton, Vancouver, Victoria. Some of them were mere wilderness in 1868, and for a long time afterwards. Vancouver, which dates from 1885, is to-day a city of 125,000 or 150,000. Will you tell me that we have not a right to be absolutely satisfied with the material progress, splendid, worldwide in its reputation, which has come to the people of Canada in the last 30 or 40 years?

What has been the line of development which we have undertaken ? We have undertaken to bind the provinces of Canada together. We have undertaken to create a great interprovincial trade. We have undertaken to do that by assuming burdens and making sacrifices, which, I venture to say, are as great as were ever undertaken by any people in the history of the world. What burdens have the people of Canada themselves assumed, that lines of transportation and trade and commerce might flow from east to west, and might bind together these scattered communities into one great nation under the British flag? I will tell you what we have done—and I did not realize the extent of the efforts of the people of Canada in that regard until I came to look over the record a little. The federal government has expended in actual cash on railways and canals up to 1910, according to the records of the Department of Railways and Canals, $427,000,000; the provincial governments, $36,000,000; the municipalities, $18,000,000; a total of actual cash expended out of the public treasury of this country upon railway development in Canada since 1868 of nearly $500,000,000. But, Sir, that is not all. The federal and provincial governments have guaranteed bonds for railway construction in Canada amounting to $127,000,000 more; and in addition to all that, the various governments of Canada have granted, in aid of railway construction, no less than 55,000,000 acres of the public domain. At the present time, to complete the Transcontinental railway, we are proposing a further expenditure of from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000. We are also proposing to build the Hudson Bay railway, at a cost of $30,000,000; and that is a work which ought immediately to be undertaken in the interest of our great western country. The Georgian Bay canal will cost probably in the vicinity of $100,000,000—a work intended for the further development of that splendid system of waterways which we possess in Canada, rivalling, if not exceeding in its importance and value, that which is possessed by any other country in the world. We are also proposing the enlargement of the Welland canal, at a cost, I suppose, of from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000. If, in the future, the trade of this country is to flow north and south, instead of east and west, what is the meaning of all these sacrifices that we have made, of all this treasure that we have poured out? What is the meaning of the Transcontinental railway, as it is being built to-day? What is the meaning of the Georgian Bay canal, as we propose it to-day? What is the meaning of the proposed enlargement of the Welland canal? Have these any real national meaning to the people of Canada if the lines of our trade and commerce are to be diverted so that in the future they will run north and south, instead of east and west as they have been doing?

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, has referred to the conditions as they were from 1854 to 1866. As I have said, the conditions are absolutely different to-day. Transportation and cold storage—and we want a better system of cold storage in this country—have brought the British market nearer to us to-day than the United States market was in 1854. In 1910, Great Britain took, of our animals and their products, $42,000,000 out of $54,000,000 which we exported, equal to 77 per cent. Of our agricultural products, she took $71,000,000 out of $90,000,000, equal to nearly 80 per cent. In the same year, the United States took of animals and their products only 20 per cent of our exports, and of agricultural products only 9 per cent. The United States last year took of our agricultural products only $70,000 more than she took 42 years ago. What does that mean? It means that, after the denunciation of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1866, the people of Canada were confronted with conditions which sorely tried their spirit; that they met those conditions manfully, with a high spirit and a firm purpose; that they have gone into the markets of the world and built up their trade there, and built it up under stable and sure conditions; and that it would not be wise for us to-day to depart from the path upon which we entered some 50 years ago.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance referred to the fact that there was a standing offer of reciprocity in this country from 1866 for 25 or 30 years. It is perfectly true; but I would like to remind my hon. friend and all hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, of this one circumstance, which is of some importance in this connection, that it was the policy of this government, by their Tariff Act of 1897, as amended by the Tariff Act of 1898, to take off that standing offer of reciprocity, and it has not been on the statute-book since that time—why? Because the people of Canada had entered on a certain path; because they had built up other markets among the nations of the world; because they had been excluded by high tariffs from the United States market; because they had met those conditions as they ought to be met, and they believed the time had come when that standing offer of reciprocity should be taken from the statute-book of Canada, and it was removed from the statute-book by this parliament without any dissent.

Well, we did ask for reciprocity for many years before that, and we asked for it on many an occasion. It is perfectly true that Sir John Macdonald, in making his argument for the National Policy in 1878, before conditions had changed as they have in the past 30 years—it is perfectly true that he made the argument alluded to by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. It is perfectly true that there was an issue in this country upon that question in 1891; and it is also perfectly true that in 1891 the people of Canada declared that they would continue in the path upon which they had entered in 1866, and upon which they had made a distinct advance through the National Policy which was adopted in 1879. The United States, during all these years, refused our proposals for reciprocity. Undoubtedly the treaty of 1854 was denounced for more than one reason or rather there was more than one cause which led to its denunciation in 1866. There was no doubt some feeling engendered in the minds of the people of the United States by certain events which had taken place during the war; but I have always thought that the American people ought perhaps to have borne in mind the fact that some 40,000 or 50,000 Canadians had fought under the United States flag in the civil war from 1860 to 1863 for the maintenance of the union. There were, of course, some annoying incidents; there was perhaps some lack of good feeling, but there had also been a good deal of friction about duties upon articles which were not embraced in the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, and possibly that was one of the causes which led to the denunciation of that treaty in 1866. The United States did not have very much regard for the Canadian market in those days. They were a great and powerful and a rapidly growing nation, and it was said on the other side of the line in 1854, and repeated in 1866 and afterwards, that the ultimate destiny of this country was not only commercial but political union with the United States. There were no doubt many in the United States who thought that the denunciation of this treaty of 1854 would oblige Canada to seek for commercial and political union with that country.

Let us for one moment consider why it is that the great nation to the south, having refused our suggestions of reciprocity for 25 or 30 years, has at last come to the conclusion that at present reciprocal trade with Canada is desirable. Let us consider for a moment on what that present desire is based. In the first place let me say, lest I should be misunderstood, that no one realizes more than I the absolute importance of our having the best and most friendly relations with that great nation, whose boundary adjoins ours for nearly 4,000 miles. That is eminently desirable, and no one will work or co-operate for that purpose more thoroughly and sincerely than I; but the United States have framed their policy at all times in their own interests, and the people and the statesmen of that country are too broad-minded and generous to think for one moment of denying to this country the equal right of framing its fiscal policy as may seem best to its people. I would say this further. I would say that the United States, in many respects, give us a lesson which we would do well to consider and often to follow; as for example in their policy for the conservation of their natural resources, in the earnest attempts by their public men and men of great eminence, not in public life, to elevate the standard and ideals of public life in that country and to make the people more thoroughly cognizant of their responsibility as citizens of one of the greatest countries in the world. In these respects, as well as in others, I believe we might well take an example and a lesson from the people of the United States to-day. But on what is the present desire of the United States for reciprocal relations founded? We know that fiscal changes in that country are impending. They have had an enormously high tariff as compared with ours. Their tariff is almost double what ours has been during the past 25 or 30 years, and during that period the United States have afforded the most wonderful example the world has ever known both of protection and of free trade. They have a great tariff wall around their country and free trade among 90,000,000 of people within their own borders. They are thus a most remarkable example of protection on the one hand and of absolute unrestricted free trade on the other. And they have made marvellous progress in many respects. The United States to-day is the greatest manufacturing country in the world. It is probably the greatest agricultural country. I do not know what the figures are to-dav, but I remember that some eight years ago I examined the statistics of the United States with regard to their manufacturing industries, and I found that the total manufactured product in that country amounted to $13,000,000,000 annually, and that of that amount they exported only 3½ per cent, so that out of that enormous manufactured product of $13,000,000,000 they consumed nearly 97 per cent within their own territory. But there has been and there still is a powerful demand and persistent outcry for substantial reductions in their very high tariff. May we not, therefore find in the impending fiscal changes in that country one reason why its government is disposed to make a treaty of reciprocity with Canada?

The high cost of living in the United States is put forward by the President in his message to Congress. The exhaustion of the natural resources of the United States is also dwelt upon by the President over and over again in his message to Congress, and I shall trespass for a moment on the patience of the House to quote four or five very strong utterances in that regard which may be found in his message. At page 5, Mr. Taft said :

> If we can enlarge our supply of natural resources and especially of food products and the necessities of life without substantial injury to any of our producing and manufacturing classes, we should take steps to do so now.

On page 6 he says:

> Should we not, therefore, before their policy has become too crystallized and fixed for change, meet them in a spirit of real concession, facilitate commerce between the two countries, and thus greatly increase the natural resources available to our people.

By giving our people access to Canadian forests we shall reduce the consumption of our own, which, in the hands of comparatively few owners, now have a value that requires the enlargement of our available timber resources.

And it is perfectly true that the timber resources of the United States at the present time are not only very considerably depleted, but have passed into the control of comparatively a very few men who are holding them not only for their value in the immediate present, but for that enormously increased value which will come in the early future as the price of timbe r rises and increases in the United States. I shall give some figures and statistics in regard to that a little later on. Then at page 8 :

The opening of the timber resources of the Dominion to our needs will be limited to no particular section.

I think then it is abundantly apparent to every hon. gentleman in this House that one of the impelling causes which have constrained the government of the United States to seek these reciprocal relations which they denied to us for so many years is the desire that they may have access to the abundant natural resources of Canada which ought to be kept and developed for the benefit of our own people.

Let us look for one moment at the condition of the United States to-day in respect of the natural resources which providence bestowed on them so freely. An authority in the United States, Mr. Gannett, says that the valuable and accessible coal in the United States will be exhausted in about 100 years. Mr. Van Hise, who has written a very exhaustive book upon the conservation of natural resources in the United States, thinks that estimate is perhaps too conservative and he believes that their coal will last for a longer period. The same gentleman whose work I cite because I believe him to be an author of repute and who seems to have examined the question very thoroughly, speaking of the wasteful use of coal in the United States, says :

In the last decade of the nineteenth century, more coal was mined in the United States than in all the previous decades of that century.

And further:

In the first decade of the 20th century more coal was mined in the United States than in all previous years in the history of that country.

They are already speaking in the United States of prohibiting the exportation of coal. The same authority says that the natural gas of the United States will be exhausted in twenty-five years.

Look at their iron supplies. In the first decade of the 20th century they mined 53 per cent of all the iron ore that has been extracted, they mined more in that decade than had been extracted from iron mines in the United States in all previous years. In thirty years more, according to this authority, the high grade ores of the United States, so far as they are known at present, will be exhausted.

Take their abundant supply of copper. In the first decade of the 20th century 57 per cent of all the ore extracted has been mined. The process of using up their natural resources is proceeding in that country at an enormous rate.

More than half of their timber is gone, they are using it according to this same authority, three times as fast as it is being reproduced.

Many hon. members in this House heard Mr. Gifford Pinchot address the Canadian Club of Ottawa upon the conservation of natural resources about a year or eighteen months ago. He has recently published a book from which I shall give an extract :

The five indispensably essential materials in our civilization are wood, water, coal, iron and agricultural products.

We have timber for less than thirty years at the present rate of cutting. The figures indicate that our demands upon the forest have increased twice as fast as our population.

We have anthracite coal for but fifty years, and bituminous coal for less than two hundred.

Our supplies of iron ore, mineral oil, and natural gas are being rapidly depleted, and many of the great fields are already exhausted. Mineral resources such as these when once gone are gone for ever.

The diversion of great areas of our public lands from the homemaker to the landlords and the speculator; the national neglect of great water-powers, which might well relieve, being perennially renewed, the drain upon our non-renewable coal; the fact that but half the coal has been taken from the mines which have already been abandoned as worked out and by caving-in have made the rest for ever inaccessible; the disuse of the cheaper transportation of our waterways, which involves comparatively slight demand upon our non-renewable supplies of iron ores, and the use of the rail instead—these are other items in the huge bill of particulars of national waste.

We undoubtedly have in Canada very great natural resources. The government of this country, with the hearty support of members on this side of the House, have taken steps along the line of the conservation of those resources. We know how immensely important forests are to this country, important not only in respect of their value as material, but in their relation to the great waterways system of this country, and to the preservation of our water-powers, important to the people of this country in every sense. Thus when we observe that the President of the United States, over and over again, directs the attention of Congress to the importance of giving to the people of the United States direct access to the forests of Canada, in order that their own may be preserved, surely that suggestion and that argument afford ample room for thought to the people of this country as to whether or not they should accept these proposals.

Why did Canada want reciprocity in 1866 and for many years afterwards and why ought we to hesitate before embarking upon any proposal of that kind to-day? In the first place, we are not helpless to-day as we were in 1866. We have built up a great interprovincial trade, we have found stable and sure markets in Great Britain where the producers of the United States are our competitors. Transportation and cold storage have changed the whole situation from what it was in 1866, from what it was in 1878, from what it was even in 1891. The British markets are nearer to-day than the United States markets were fifty years ago. These proposals, in short, change the whole current of our industries and are likely to dislocate our national development. Further than that the now proposed markets will, according to the proposals of the government, be so entirely unstable and insecure that after having had the benefit of them for five years or even less, we may be obliged at the end of that period to go back just where we were, twenty-five years ago, to build up our industries again, to make a reputation for our bacon, our cheese, our butter in the markets of the old country, and surely no one of us believes that these markets which we may abandon for the moment will be left unoccupied by the people of Argentina, and other countries which have been competing with us in the past in those very markets.

We want to conserve our natural resources as I have said. We do not desire that they should remain undeveloped, but we want to develop them ourselves, not for the benefit of the few, but for the benefit of the whole people of Canada, and to develop them in such a way that not only the national wealth, but the individual wealth of the entire people of Canada will be increased by these resources.

Now in view of the statistics which I have given, are we not moving along the line of material progress and development about as fast as we could expect to go, and about as fast as it is desirable to go? Are we not at the present time following a perfectly sure and safe path? Have we not markets on the stability of which we can depend at all times in the future, as we have been able to depend upon them at all times during the past thirty or forty years? Is there not reason to believe, with increasing facilities of transportation, with the cheaper rates, which I hope will be secured, with better cold storage, is there not every reason to believe that the markets of the British islands will in the future be even more open to the people of Canada, than they have been in the past? Are not these very good reasons why we should be satisfied with the position we now hold. To use a well-known expression, 'What we have we will hold,' in that regard. But the proposals of this government, if they mean anything at all, seem to me to mean a complete, an unnecessary, an unwise departure from that path which we have pursued with so much success.

Then there is another consideration, and that is the delicate character of the agreement which has been entered into by this government. It is not a treaty, says my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. In the letters which constitute the result of the negotiations it is alleged that both parties expect and hope that this arrangement will continue for a considerable time. What is our position in regard to those items of the tariff which we may desire to change? If we desire to put a duty on any article, that is upon the free list under these proposals, are we at liberty to do so? Yes, says the Minister of Finance, you will be at absolute liberty to do so, and the proposals say so in distinct terms. What will be the result of that? He told us the other day that it was everything or nothing. Will not that condition bind us after we have once assented to these proposals, and will not our tariff have to remain fixed? Will it not still be our everything or nothing then? I see no reason why that condition, with which the Minister of Finance says we are confronted to-day, will not continue at all times in the future. If we alter one single item in that tariff the United States will have the right to say : The whole arrangement is off ; in the words of your own Finance Minister, it is everything or nothing. Is that a desirble condition for this country to enter into for the purpose of finding a new market? Is it for this that we are to abandon the stable and sure markets we have at the present time? A treaty stating a definite period during which a certain condition shall continue, is one thing ; it must be interpreted according to the usage of nations. But this arrangement which will leave it entirely open to either side to make any alteration, but which penalizes the slightest alteration by a complete abrogation of the arrangement, creates a much more delicate and difficult situation, in my humble apprehension.

I do not propose this afternoon to deal at any length with the economic side of the situation. It is perfectly obvious that certain classes in the community may see in these proposals some immediate future advantage which will be of exceedingly doubtful permanence; it is perfectly obvious on the other side that very great disaster and ever ruin will be wrought to some industries in this country if these proposals are carried into effect. No one can doubt that they will produce a far-reaching effect on our trade as a whole. What their exact economic effect may be, I do not think any man in this House is wise enough to predict with accuracy. They do, however, seem to be a reversal of our policy as it has continued for more than forty years. Looking at them from a purely common sense standpoint, if the fruit men and the market gardeners of this country see their industry injured or ruined by the operation of these proposals, are they likely to assent to a policy which will give them absolutely no protection whatever in this country, while they pay duties and endure taxation for the benefit of other industries? It seems idle to imagine that any such result as that can obtain.

Then look at the effects on our trade with Great Britain. I take the past six years by way of illustration, and I find that we imported from the United States during that period $581,000,000 of dutiable goods, and $502,000,000 of free goods, or a total of $1,083,000,000. The rate of duty on dutiable goods was 24·26 per cent, and the rate on total importations was 13·4. We imported from Great Britain during the same period, of dutiable goods, $542,000,000, and of free goods, $113,000,000, or a total of $455,000,000. The rate on dutiable goods from Great Britain was 24·78 per cent, as compared with 24·26 per cent upon goods imported from the United States. The rate on the total imports from Great Britain was 18·64 per cent, as compared with 13·4 per cent upon total imports from the United States. Now we talk about a preference in our markets to the producers of Great Britain. As a matter of fact, taking the duitable goods alone, the British importer into Canada is paying higher duties to the revenues of this country than the United States importer. I remember well that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, in years gone by, declared when he was in opposition that a condition of that kind amounted virtually to a discrimination against Great Britain. What are the figures respecting exports? Our exports to the United States during the six years to which I have alluded, amounted to $506,000,000, and our exports to Great Britain during the same period amounted to $726,000,000. If you look through the returns of the Department of Trade and Commerce you will find staring you in the face the fact that dutiable goods from Great Britain are paying a higher rate of duty to the revenues of Canada than goods from the United States. What then becomes of the argument for a British preference? Can it be reasonably said that there is any real British preference? Then add to the conditions which have brought about that result, this free list which it is proposed to create between Canada and the United States, and the reduced list which is also provided for in these proposals, and what kind of trade conditions will you have in the future as between Canada and the United States on the one hand, and Canada and Great Britain on the other hand?

During the past six years Great Britain has bought from us nearly $300,000,000 worth more than we have bought from her. We have bought from the United States between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 worth more than the United States have bought from us. Well, if you alter these proposals along the lines suggested by the government to-day, what condition as between Canada and the United States on the one hand and as between Canada and Great Britain on the other are you to apprehend in the near future?

The Minister of Finance has spoken of the influence of the United States upon the destinies of this country. No one realizes that more fully than I do. A nation of 100,000,000, the greatest manufacturing nation in the world, the greatest agricultural nation in the world, with its boundaries extending along ours for 4,000 miles —why, of course, it must exercise a most profound influence upon the future commercial destiny of this country. I might characterize it even more strongly than I have done. It has been said that they can lower their tariff and change our trade routes. Perhaps they can accomplish something of that kind, but I want to ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether or not it is wise for us to combine with them for that purpose? Are we wise to make concessions to them for that purpose? Wider markets is the cry of the Minister of Finance. If the national issue is to be absolutely disregarded and you are to push the argument of wider markets to its logical, and, I believe, its inevitable conclusion, what will it lead you to? It will lead you to complete free trade and absolute commercial union with the United States. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) smiles at that suggestion. I do not know whether he smiles at the argument or in approval of the suggested ultimate destiny. But I would like to say to him that if it is good to seek wider markets, from which the rest of the empire is excluded, in the United States of America, why not have still wider and wider markets in the United States of America from which the rest of the empire will be excluded? That path has only one termination, and that is absolute commercial union with the United States of America. There cannot be much doubt, I think, about what that would mean. The President of the United States, in his message, on page 6, used very significant words. Speaking of the people of the Dominion, he said: 'They are at the parting of the ways.' They are at the parting of the ways! I think the people of Canada have indeed, come to the parting of the ways, and that the issue of infinite gravity which is presented to them at the present time is whether they will continue in the work of nation building, in which they have been engaged during the past forty years, whether they will maintain their own markets as they have maintained them during the past forty years, whether they will preserve the autonomy of this country as they have preserved it during the past forty years, or whether they will undo the work which the fathers of confederation began, and which their sons have been carrying out. Whether our provinces will continue to trade with each other and with the mother country as in the past; or whether we will impel British Columbia to trade with the state of Washington, the prairie provinces to trade with the middle west, Ontario to trade with Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania, and Quebec and the maritime provinces to trade with the New England states. If that issue is not presented to the parliament of Canada by these proposals then I certainly have utterly mistaken their purport and meaning. A book came into my hands only a few years ago. It is written by a gentleman who visited Canada about seven years ago—Mr. Geoffrey Drage. I quote the opinion of a German authority and publicist from page 68 of this book. Mr. Drage refers to the opinion of Professor von Schulze-Gaevernitz, contained in a work which he has written on British imperialism and English free trade, and the quotation from this German professor is in these words:

As Professor von Schulze-Gaevernitz has pointed out, a zollverein between the United States and Canada would be both commercially and politically the death of British dominion in North America. Political union must follow commercial union.

Then Mr. Drage goes on to speak of commercial union in these words:

Such a union would also be the political suicide of Canada, who would lose the political identity which she has developed and of which she is so jealously proud.

I could give very many extracts, indeed, from the opinions of men in the United States. Mr. Beveridge, a very notable public man in the west, has given utterance to ideas, which, I am sure, have come to the attention of every hon. member of this House. Perhaps it might be well that I should quote one or two words from his opinion in this connection:

There must be reciprocity with Canada. Our tariff with the rest of the world does not apply to our northern neighbour. That policy already has driven American manufacturers across the Candian borders, built vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workmen to supply trade. That capital should be kept at home to employ American workingmen to supply Canadian demand. We should admit Canadian wood pulp and Canadian paper free in return for Canada's admitting our agricultural implements, our engines, pumps and other machinery free. We should freely admit Canadian lumber to American planing mills in return for Canada freely admitting other American manufacturing products to Canadian markets.

And so on. The argument there is, and indeed, the scope of many of the schedules brought down to this parliament is, to hand Canadian natural products over to the United States producers with a minimum of labour employed upon them in Canada. Mr. Henry M. Whitney, of Boston, has written a notable article upon reciprocity with Canada, which was published in the Atlantic Monthly of October last. He says:

If we were to admit Canadian grain free of tariff charges, much of it would stay with us for home consumption; a portion would go through our ports to foreign lands.

Then, a little farther on:

New York and Boston and Portland are the natural outlets for the foreign trade of eastern Canada. St. John and Halifax are twice as far from Montreal as New York, or Boston or Portland. The Canadian Atlantic ports are not to be mentioned in competition with the American Atlantic ports for passenger business.

Further on:

The elevators for storing and handling Canadian grain should be located on this side of the line, and the steamers of the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific should, in the winter time at least, find their home port in New York, or Boston, or Portland. And if under a reciprocity arrangement or otherwise, the farm products of Canada were admitted free of duty, the Canadian government would be friendly, instead of hostile, to the use of American ports for Canadian business.

Then, in a previous part of the article he says:

What might ultimately be the political effect of the establishment of friendly trade and social relations between the United States and Canada, is a problem that had best be left to work itself out in the years to come. It is quite possible, indeed I think it quite likely, considering the number of questions of domestic and foreign policy which might arise under such a condition, that the two nations would in the end become politically one.

And he adds:

But that would be a long way in the future, if it ever came to pass at all.

Mr. FOSTER. He thought he was too strong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Now, what about the fiscal policy which we are to pursue in this country? We should have regard to Canadian interests in the framing of the tariff. If our tariff needs any revision to-day, let us sit down and get at it and revise it for ourselves, and let us do it without the assistance of the United States of America, much as we respect that great nation, and much as we desire to be on the most friendly and intimate terms with her. When we desired reciprocity, the United States did not spring into our arms, and there can be no offence surely in the assertion of Canada that she proposes to keep her commercial and fiscal freedom absolutely intact, and to proceed along the path on which she entered so many years ago. Sir, we should have a fiscal policy that aims at the development of our own country, at the employment of our own labour, at the increase of our own population, at the utilization of our resources. We ought to aim at giving the producers in Canada a reasonable opportunity of carrying on their business by equalizing the cost of production where they might suffer from competition under unfair conditions. We have natural resources in Canada which afford a foundation for many splendid industries. We have carried out such a policy as I have referred to for the last thirty years at least, and why should we abandon it now? Upon what should our policy be based? Should it be based upon an attempt to create millionaires in this country or to impose unfair conditions upon any portion of the community? Not by any means. I believe that we in Canada, in the future still more than in the past, should attempt to shape our tariff upon scientific consideration of known facts. I believe it would be well that we should have exact information as to these matters laid before parliament. I believe it would be well if we established a permanent tariff commission in Canada so that our tariff should not be made by rule of thumb. An agitation arises in some part of the country against a duty of 25 per cent, and it is said it should be reduced to 15 per cent. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs get together and conclude that it ought to be reduced to 15 per cent. Then the industries affected declare in strident tones that a reduction of 15 per cent would absolutely wipe them out and throw thousands of men out of employment. Thereupon the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance say: We will compromise, and we will make it 20 per cent. I do not think that is the manner in which our tariff should be framed; I think it should aim at equalization of cost of production so far as that can reasonably be accomplished. We ought to give the people of this country a fair opportunity to create industries and to give employment, but we ought not to give it under conditions which would impose unjust burdens upon a portion of our people. My idea of a tariff is one which would give the industries of this country a fair chance, and more than a fair chance perhaps, to stand up against competition of countries where, it may be, the standard of living among the labouring people is lower than in Canada, and lower than it ought to be any where. That I think is a reasonable proposition. A permanent tariff commission if established would be the most fitting authority to decide as to these points. I understand, of course, that there are complexities. I understand that the problem of transportation must come in; I understand that the problem of great combinations of capital in other countries must be considered; I understand that a great factory which has an annual output of $20,000,000 can sell its products at a much lower price than a factory the annual output of which is only $1,000,000, but I would insist that we should have reasonable and accurate information as to all this. We can guard against our own trusts and combines by appropriate legislation passed by the parliament of Canada, but we have no means, except our tariff, to guard against the trusts and combines of other countries. I would like to tell hon. gentlemen that there are some curious positions which we do not all appreciate, connected with tariff questions. I remember that some years ago I was talking to a big manufacturer and I said to him: There is an outcry from men in your industry for an increase in the tariff, and he said: I am not joining in it, I am opposed to it. I told him I was surprised at that, and he said: You will not be surprised when you learn the reason, and I will tell it to you: A great many factories in this industry have gone out of business during the past few years, there are only a few left now beside myself, I am strong enough to keep on under this tariff although I will not make any money at present, but my competitors in Canada are not as strong as I, and they are bound to go to the wall, and I want them to go to the wall. It is for that reason I am opposing any change in the tariff upon my line of industry at the present time. Remember that after all there is something in competition, under a reasonable tariff, which makes for reduction in the price of products. The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), presented a very forceful argument to this House with respect to the duties on agricultural implements, and I say that the government of Canada ought to be in a position now to lay before the House information which would either corroborate or displace the facts presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen). So far as agricultural implements are concerned the proposals submitted by the government are not along the line of the facts which my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) presented. They deal in exactly the same way with some articles upon which he admitted he could not base a very strong argument and with other articles upon which he made a very strong argument indeed. Before the end of the session the government should bring down, with regard to that particular industry, information absolutely accurate and definite with respect to the cost of production, and having that information it would be in order for parliament to deal with the question according to the light which would be shed by that information upon the very important subject which that hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) brought before this House. The statements of my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) have not up to the present date been controverted by any member of the government, and if not controverted I think all must admit that they call for some action by the government and by parliament.

Earlier in the session my hon. friend the Prime Minister has spoken, and I have spoken, of a certain feeling among the people in the western part of Canada that fiscal conditions in this country at the present time are not perfectly fair to them. I feel that after all the question of transportation is the question which, coupled with that of terminal elevators, most intimately affects the west. Some years ago when I was in western Canada a great many farmers spoke to me on matters directly affecting the people of that part of the country. One big farmer who sought an interview with me dwelt most vigorously upon the needs of the west in respect to transportation, and I was very much impressed by his observations. He said:

'There is a good deal of outcry in this part of the country about the duties on agricultural implements and the duties on other articles, but I am not very much disposed to join in that outcry. We deep-thinking men are more concerned with the question of cheap transportation of our products than we are with the question of paying $25 or $30 a year on our agricultural implements.' And, so I believe that the question of transportation is the most vital question with the people of the west. The government should deal promptly and effectively with that question, and with the grievances which have arisen in the west in that connection, and they would find the people of the west disposed to treat the fiscal question in a broad-minded and generous spirit; after all, the day will come when the people of western Canada will see tall smoke stacks, and great and important manufacturing industries in all our western cities.

The west is very much concerned at the present time about the building of the Hudson Bay railway. There is not absolute unanimity of opinion in this country as to the relief that will be brought to the people of the west by the construction of that road. I hope it may bring to them all the relief they expect, but beyond question, in justice to the west it ought to be pushed to completion without any delay. Further than that, I think the government ought to have regard to the wishes of the west as to the operation of that road. It should not be placed under the absolute and sole control of any one transportation line, but it ought to be operated by means of a commission so as to give to every one of the great railways of the west equal rights over it, and to give to the people of this country complete control of rates. If the government are prepared to deal with the construction of the Hudson Bay railway along these lines, they will find the members on this side of the House prepared to give their proposals a warm support.

Then, there was the question of terminal elevators which the right hon. gentleman found confronting him when he went west last year. I have spoken of that already during this session. I believe the government ought to take steps to operate these terminal elevators, and I see no reason why that could not be done by a commission. It may be said that is a great undertaking ; but is it a greater or more important undertaking than the establishment of the Railway Commission of Canada, with all the enormous powers devolving upon that body? Suppose we had a commission to take charge of these elevators, to lease them, and to operate them, so that there would be absolutely no question of the grading of the wheat that went through them, and no injustice done to western producers of grain, I venture to say that the people of eastern Canada would support the government in a proposal of that kind. I advocated in this House in 1903 the equipment of every one of our great ports in Canada as a national port. I believe that was a wise policy, and I believe it would be one step along that line for the government to take charge of these terminal elevators and operate them under such conditions as would satisfy the farmers of the west.

Then, Sir, as to cold storage and refrigeration and the establishment of abattoirs in the west, we on this side of the House have already stated our position. Considering that we have this great gap of 800 miles of uninhabited country between the east and west of Canada, I think it is worth while for the east to make every reasonable concession to the west in order that there may be no apparent divergence of interest between the east and the west, but that east and west, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, may join together in the upbuilding of our great federation.

I trust that the Prime Minister will not proceed hastily with these reciprocity proposals. The country has had very little time to consider them. As far as I am concerned, my opinion with respect to them has, I trust, been made fairly clear to this House this afternoon. I think the Prime Minister would do well to withdraw them from the consideration of the House at the present time, and to await some further developments. We have begun a great work in this country. Two great races whose mother tongues are spoken in this parliament came into the inheritance of this great country under the providence of God. Our fathers endured many hardships and made wonderful sacrifices in planting their homes in this then western wilderness. In times of peril both races have poured out their blood without stint in defence of their common country. In the work of upbuilding a strong nation and a great civilization under the British flag, on the northern half of this continent, they have laboured side by side with mutual sympathy and with high purpose. The heaviest burdens have been lifted, the greatest obstacles have been overcome, the most difficult part of the task has been accomplished. I trust that the Canadian people will not lightly relinquish the task to which their energies and the energies of their fathers have been consecrated for so many years. I trust that the standard will not be thrown aside and the retreat sounded when the battle is more than half won. The self-denials, the sacrifices, the patriotism, demanded of us today in order that this nation may maintain and carry out the ideals and the purposes for which it was called into existence are as nothing to those which were required of our fathers who founded this confederation. Loyalty to their memory and to the ideals which they consecrated demands that we should continue with firm heart and unabated hope upon the path on which we entered nearly fifty years ago.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). In rising to address you, Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I must say that I fail to quite understand the position he has taken on this question. That may be due wholly to my fault or partly, perhaps, to his. True, he said he did not wish to discuss the economical aspects of the question, and therefore postponed any remarks he might have to make on the several items in the agreement before us. My hon. friend contented himself with a review of the past history of this country and its progress. He did not intend, he said, to go back and discuss the old Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, because that would be ancient history; but he did go back to 1866 and spent a large portion of his time in depicting the progress which Canada has made from that day to this. That progress was, of course, very gratifying to every member of this House; but my hon. friend failed to observe—perhaps it was by mistake—that the most notable progress which this country has made, has been made during the last 15 years during which the Liberal party has administered its affairs. Any one who will look at the records of our trade cannot fail to be struck by that fact very forcibly. And no doubt the greatest factor in this progress, has been the carrying out by this government of a platform laid down by the Liberal convention in 1893.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. I repeat that the change of element in that progress, has been the policy of this government, in carrying out that convention and making trade freer with the whole world, more particularly with Great Britain and the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. The Liberal party, in convention, assembled in this city in 1893, promised that should the people elect it to office, it would carry out the platform then laid down. Shortly after assuming office, steps were taken in the direction of making trade freer between Canada and Great Britain. The British preference was granted which gave a strong impetus to the trade of this country. At one bound our trade exceeded what it had ever reached before, under previous administrations. Our exports to Britain were, of course, admitted free into the English market, but we made trade between the two countries freer still, by reducing the duties on British goods, thus inducing a greater flow of British goods into this country and augmenting very materially the total trade between the two. We also made an honest effort to promote freer trade with our friends to the south. My hon. colleague and leader, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and another member of the cabinet early took action to see if anything could be done in that direction. In this they were not successful. The minds of our friends to the south were not then inclined to freer commercial intercourse, and from that day until a very short time ago, although we were ready at any time to listen to any proposal that might be for the benefit of both countries, we were unable to accomplish anything. However, to-day our friends to the south, are viewing things in a somewhat different light and are showing a disposition to have freer trade relations with us, and did make overtures to us to that effect. We met their approaches in the spirit in which they were made, with the result that my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and myself have been able to effect an arrangement which we consider mutually advantageous, with reference to a large list of articles, under which these articles may enter each country absolutely free of duties, and with reference to another list of articles, on which the duties between the two countries have been made uniform. That arrangement was made, subject of course, to endorsation by this parliament. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, is now affording this House an opportunity of pronouncing upon this arrangement, and that is the question we are at present discussing.

The agreement arrived at is a mutual one, subject entirely to the approval of parliament, both as to its acceptance to-day and as to its continuance. The fiscal independence of Canada remains to-day with this parliament and will continue to remain with it, under this arrangement precisely as it has done during past years. The same condition obtains with our friends in the United States. Their fiscal independence remains unaltered as well, but an understanding has been arrived at, which will take effect upon concurrent legislation being adopted by the people's representatives in both countries. Steps are now being taken in the Congress of the United States to ratify that agreement, and that agreement is now before the Canadian parliament for its ratification.

We were told this afternoon that this thing should not be rushed. Well, there is no disposition on the part of the government at all to rush the matter. This parliament will have all the time to consider it that it deems necessary. But it is necessary that we should consider it. It is in the interests of that country that we should do so, and I propose now to give my views of the benefit that will accrue to Canada from this arrangement, and likewise to the United States. But in doing so, I propose to refer to the objections, in the first place, which have appeared throughout the press of the country that is hostile to this understanding. One of these objections made in the press, but which has not been made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, is that this House should not go into the matter at all until the people have been given an opportunity of pronouncing upon it. But how could you ever initiate any arrangement in such a manner as that?

The arrangement was made in the only way in which it was possible to make it, and made on the responsibility of the ministry. They are responsible to parliament who are free to reject this arrangement if they choose to do so. The arrangement was made with the full knowledge on the part of the government, as there should be on the part of every member of this House, that the people themselves will have an opportunity of pronouncing upon it, and that at a not very distant date; and I venture to say that when an election is held this will be a live question with the people of Canada, that they will pronounce their judgment upon it—and I expect that that judgment will be favourable. If it is not, and if the feeling should prevail that they want our friends on the opposition side who may be opposed to this to take the reins of government, these hon. gentlemen will have perfect freedom to submit a measure to this House to repeal this arrangement. I do not look for any such result as that.

We are said to be engaged in an entangling alliance. Nothing of the kind, there is no entanglement about it at all. It has been said that it will tend to do away with the British preference. There is nothing in these resolutions that points in that direction. The British preference remains; as my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told the people of this country, whatever changes might be effected or negotiations entered into there is one cardinal principle that will be maintained, the British preference, and it is maintained. The argument is made that by what we have done we will weaken the tie that binds us to the empire as one of its members. What force, I will not say what sense, is there in that statement? The British preference remains, goods will go to Great Britain as they have gone before, goods will come from Great Britain as they have come before, and they will come with a preference over the goods that come from the United States in so far as there are duties upon these goods coming into this country under the general tariff. Therefore, I dismiss it at once, without offence I would say the statement is not worthy of intelligent men.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Under the present arrangement, typesetting machines come in from the United States free. How does the minister propose to give Great Britain a preference in that respect?

Mr. PATERSON. There are a great many things that come in free, agricultural products, for instance, all come in free. I do not know that we can do any more in the way of a preference for our British friends than to give them a bounty if they want to send us some of these things, but certainly if they come in free from the United States they will come in free from Great Britain too, and that is about as low as we can go for any country. Not only does it seem to me to be a remark not freighted heavily with common sense, but rather freighted with an imputation that is an insult in its nature, that is that because we have entered into an arrangement of this kind with our American friends, the tie of loyalty between this people and the British people will be in any way weakened. The loyalty of the Canadian people lies not in that direction, at least it does not on this side of the House.

Another objection that has been argued, and it was argued at length by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), this afternoon, is that this change of mind on the part of our American brethren is due in a large measure to their desire to reach and secure some of the natural resources of Canada. I do not know that I am concerned to deny that if anybody wishes to affirm it, but what did he specify as the natural resources of Canada? In one of the passages which he read, food products was said to be one of the most vital. If the people of the United States want to get some of our food products, that is not an unnatural thing on their part, nor do I think it is a very great disaster to the people of this country. If we have wheat and other grains more than we consume ourselves we will have to sell them to some one else, and the man who produces them, I think, will not be very careful or anxious as to the nationality of the man who buys them, he will be more concerned about the man who will give him the highest price. But they say: You should conserve your natural resources, and keep them for the people of this country. All right, do not let us ship away any more of these breadstuffs, do not let us sell ourselves out so we will be in danger of want. But I can see no force in the argument that we should keep the whole of the crops of this Canada of ours stored up because, perchance, by and by, we will have great, great grandchildren enough to consume them all. They say the Americans want our natural resources that are buried in the hills, our ores. Well they do, I believe, in a measure, but we want to sell these ores. Do the men of Frontenac and Hastings want the iron ore that for centuries has lain in their hills undeveloped, giving no profit to the people of this country, to remain there because perhaps sometime in the future our great, great grandchildren may establish a smelting furnace? If they do there will be enough of those ores left there to establish all the furnaces they want. Meanwhile are you to keep them locked up there? The men of Frontenac will not tell you so. The Kingston Board of Trade asked my colleague and myself, instead of placing impediments in the way of the export of these ores, to endeavour to have the Americans take the duty off them, and we tried our best to get them to do it. They met us partially, but they could not, in their own interests as they saw it, place these ores absolutely on the free list. But iron ore is reduced from 15 cents as it was, to 10 cents. From conversation I have had with parties interested. I believe that as a result there will be a fine industry created in the county of Frontenac, giving employment to hundreds of men, and yet hon. members opposite say: Lock it up, lock it up, do not have these men employed.

Representations were made to us by the proprietors of talc mines in the county of Hastings. They said there was a duty of 25 per cent upon that article. They said to us: There is a duty of 35 per cent on that article, we have immense stores of it, there is no market for it here, there will be no market for it here for years and years to come. By a ruling they made it more than 25 per cent, they made it equal to from 50 to 60 per cent, and they have shut us out of their market. And that would suit my hon. friends opposite, the Americans shutting themselves out from getting this article. But it did not answer our purpose, at least we thought not, and what is the result? We prevailed upon the United States, not only to reduce it to the old rate of 20 or 25 per cent to which it had been raised by a ruling of a treasury board, but we got them to put it on the free list.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the article?

Mr. PATERSON. Talc.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that something used in place of soft soap?

Mr. PATERSON. No, it is not used for that, I think that in its finer preparation it is not used in particularly large quantities. It goes finally, I think, into the adornment of the person. Well, then, they say: You do not preserve our forests, you are going to allow them to be depleted. I have great sympathy with the preservation of our forests, I think reforestration and efforts in that direction are highly important. I am much pleased to know that a lively interest is being taken in that subject, and that steps will be taken towards reproducing the timber as it may be used. But let me point out to the leader of the opposition that these forests are not the possession of the Dominion government, they are the possession of the local legislature.

Mr. LENNOX. Not all of them.

Mr. PATERSON. Mainly that, and it is within the power as it is within the rights of the local legislatures—a right and a power that we have no desire to interfere with in the slightest degree— to make such regulations as they see fit with reference to cutting this timber, to withdrawing the limits, to raising the scale of duties, to do anything they like with their own property. But when that timber has been manufactured into a commercial article, it being then in the power of this government to get an added price to the article that is being produced, and that is seeking a market, we thought if we could get for the lumberman a dollar a thousand more in price than they were getting by the reduced American duty, we would secure something valuable for our lumbermen, and add to the wealth of this country; and that we did. Fish—they wanted our fish, and we wanted to sell our fish, they are not all gone. But we did want to sell our fish at a better price if we could, and we secured that better price by having fish put upon the free list by that nation that has always hitherto objected to it. Our friends opposite talk a good deal about our natural resources, about the necessity of conserving them. But what you cannot consume, what you cannot hope to make use of for years and years, to say that we shall not bring these latent resources into a position to contribute to the welfare of this country, seems to me an argument without foundation. Well, it has engaged the attention of both countries. We are favoured with the possession of large quantities of pulp wood. That pulp wood is controlled largely, not wholly, by the provincial governments; and as I said before, we do not want to interfere in the slightest degree with the rights and powers of the provinces, they are sovereign in that matter. But we did make this stipulation, that when conditions are such that the United States will feel willing to admit our pulp and our paper free—and we believe when that is accomplished our mills on this side of the line would be able to compete with the mills on the other side of the line if they had an open market—we said to them: When you have made pulp and paper free from all parts of Canada, not from particular portions of it, then we will admit your pulp and paper free into our country, but not before. That is the position we took on the pulp question.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I would like the hon. gentleman to explain to the House that one clause about pulp. Is pulp going to be admitted into the United States generally, or is it going to be admitted only from such provinces as do not put an export or stumpage duty upon it? That question is now engaging the attention of the people of the United States, and they do not seem to understand it. The hon. gentleman has not explained the question to the House at all. He says it is free or it is not free.

Mr. PATERSON. I explained it as it is in the resolutions. The hon. gentleman can read them for himself.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). There seems to be a difference of opinion in the United States, even in Congress, over the meaning of that clause. It is construed by some to mean that pulp and paper are to be admitted free forthwith; by others it is understood they will only be admitted from such provinces as do not put an export duty upon those articles in some form. Will the hon. gentleman explain that clause clearly to the House, and tell us what it means?

Mr. PATERSON. Well, I will leave the United States to settle their own matters.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I do not think that is right.

Mr. PATERSON. As far as we are concerned, that is the position we are in.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Evidently the hon. gentleman does not understand his own clause.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, yes, the hon. gentleman understands it himself, but it may be impossible for me to make the hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie, Simcoe) understand it.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I confess I do not.

Mr. FIELDING. The leader of the opposition was not once interrupted.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, well, that does not bother me at all. I was saying that the point which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) laboured most, and where you could judge, perhaps, better from his utterances than from any other that he was opposed to this agreement, for I frankly confess that I was not quite sure, when he got through, whether he would vote for this proposition, or whether he would not, but the argument that he seemed to lay most stress upon was that we had spent millions and millions of money in developing our transportation system, and that it was largely in a line from west to east. He wanted to know why we should disturb this and expressed a fear that has been expressed in stronger terms than he did it in the newspapers opposed to this agreement, that our transcontinental roads would be interfered with, that the money that we had spent would have been, in a measure, wasted, that we were going to divert the traffic and have our grain carried through the United States, and that, therefore, it would be a very serious matter for us. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the United States roads south of Canada carry a large quantity of Canada's wheat to Great Britain and Europe now, with a duty on?

Mr. FOSTER. Carried in bond.

Mr. PATERSON. Carried in bond, without any cost as far as the bond is concerned. The hon. gentleman knows that. Well, if that be the case when the duty is on, as it is on now, and if that has been going on for years and years, what harm has resulted from it in Canada? I read some remarks in a paper—I forget the gentleman's name, but I think he was the local member for Fort William, or Port Arthur, or something like that, and here is the wail that came from him. It was sad. He said: If you make wheat free it will go through American channels. Well, I had the curiosity to look up the figures in reference to that matter. He said: Our elevators that we have at Fort William and Port Arthur can be thrown into the bay if there is to be free wheat, because it will all go south. He seemed to be in blissful ignorance of the fact that out of that very Fort William elevator 12,292,771 bushels of grain went this year through the United States to England and Europe, and that out of the elevator at Port Arthur there went 7,186,142 bushels. This was wheat carried by our transcontinental railways, placed in the elevators there, carried from thence through American channels to Great Britain and Europe. That has been going on for years, and yet you talk nonsense about diverting the traffic and ruining the railways when wheat can go as freely through American channels with 20 cents a bushel against it in the United States for home consumption, as it will go under this arrangement. These are samples of the arguments that we hear from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). If he has the figures—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. An hon. member has the right to ask a question and to interrupt with the permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor, and until there is some intimation from the hon. gentleman who has the floor that he objects to the interruption I must allow the question to be asked.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, take it this time.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Will the hon. gentleman state what amount of western Canadian grain during the past year has passed through the Duluth and Superior elevators? He has the figures and he ought to know.

Mr. PATERSON. No, I have not got them. But I have my own figures here, which show that there was a total export of wheat through the United States of 25,950,728 bushels. Twenty-five million bushels have gone in that direction, 19,000,000 or 20,000,000 of it right through Fort William and Port Arthur, and yet, because wheat is free—and it goes just as free to-day in bond—these elevators are to be taken down and thrown into the bay, if you would listen to the jeremiad of the local member, who spoke in that way. What will prevent wheat moving over our transcontinental roads in the future? If Mr. Hill, as they claim, should try to hold up and frighten the people, if he is going to project roads into the northwest here and there and extend those which he has there, do hon. gentlemen propose to prohibit him from bringing in those roads? Is that their policy? If he brings his roads in there or creates new roads, if he carries western grain down over his roads and over to England, shipping it by American channels, he will have to do it as cheaply, if not cheaper, than our own roads, and if he does it cheaper, who gets the benefit but the men who grow the wheat? Sir, I say nothing against our great transportation roads, but I do hope that they will not take up a position antagonistic to this arrangement, which is vital in the interest of the country out of any selfish motive. We have aided these roads to the extent of millions and tens of millions. They have reached a sound financial position, and if they cannot get the grain at the present prices their self-interest will make them lower their rates rather than give up the carrying of the grain. It was said—I am sorry to say—by a member of the British Columbia government that Mr. Hill was so anxious for this free wheat that he financed the deputation of farmers which came here. I am not disposed at all to deny that Mr. Hill may have ideas in his mind of reaching the northwest by his present lines, or by more lines that he may propose. Mr. Hill is in the transportation business. The very papers that state that he finds himself cut off from his trade by other railways in the United States, and that he is casting longing eyes at our northwest in order to get our wheat. It would not be an unnatural thing for a railway man, a transportation man, to look for a source of supply, and Mr. Hill has no doubt come to the conclusion that I have come to, that you have come to, that every man has come to in this House, that there is going to be an enormous production of grain in our northwest, and if he does meditate coming in there to get a share of the carrying trade, and if he comes in there and gives rates to the people as good, if not better, than those that any other transportation road gives them, he will get that grain whether it goes through in bond or whether it be free, as it will be if this agreement passes.

Look at the report of the Department of the Interior and see the homestead entries for just one year, and then you may figure out what would be the effect upon transportation as regard railroads now in existence or which may hereafter be built. In the year 1910 there were 41,568 homestead entries made in the northwest, and of these, 13,566 were taken up by settlers from the United States representing 47 states and territories. From the older provinces of Canada there went 11,470 homesteaders and from the United Kingdom 7,331. These 41,568 homesteaders taken in one year comprise 6,650,880 acres, in addition to the 1,184,790 acres of land sold by the railway companies, the Hudson's Bay Company and other land owners. Just fancy that addition in one year to the land development of the west. The total area under crop, including wheat in 1909 was 11,960,000 acres and in wheat alone 6,778,000 acres and the total yield of wheat that year was 147,000,000 bushels and the average yield to the acre over 21 bushels. Have you figured out what this means ; have you considered what facilities will be required to transport that enormous quantity of grain from the wheat fields in the west. Put it at only 100,000,000 bushels and to transport it would require 17 trains daily for 300 days, each train having 20 cars with 1,000 bushels of wheat in each car. And, Sir, it is counted upon as a certainty by those who know that within the next five years that production of wheat will be doubled and there will be all the wheat that James J. Hill, the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk Pacific will be able to haul. Mr. Hill, may look forward better than some of you gentlemen opposite ; Mr. Hill may be more farseeing than most of you. To-night we have had the keynote of the Conservative attitude on this question, and it is : Don't rush, go slow, we are well enough now, let things alone.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear said my hon. friend but my motto is : When you are doing well let things alone unless you can do better. And we can do better. And, men like J. J. Hill can see in the future what hon. gentlemen opposite are blind to, namely, that there will be as great a change in this country and perhaps as great advancement in the next five years as there has been in the past ten. And so we will go on advancing and advancing, and yet, we have the leader of the opposition rising to frighten the people of this country from a trade agreement that will redound to the wealth and prosperity of our people, because perchance, as he says, it may interfere with the business of our freight transportation lines. Well, Sir, cheaper rates there may be for the man who grows the grain, and he will not be found grumbling very much at that, but more grain there will be for the railways to haul. I think I can say without egotism that I know a little about trade, and in my judgment the agreement now before you for ratification, if carried into effect, will give a stimulus to the prosperity of this country equal to if not greater than that which followed our inauguration of the British preference, against the protest of hon. gentlemen opposite. I should have liked had we unanimity on this question : I should have liked to see hon. members rise above partisan feeling and consider with unbiassed minds what it means to get an open market for our agriculturists, our fishermen, our lumbermen, and our mining interests. Perhaps it may not give us a greater market for our manufactured goods, but will not our manufacturers be in as good a position as they are now, plus the fact that the population of the wheat fields being increased and prosperity being abroad in the land, they will have to produce more manufactured goods to supply the demand within our own border. I regret, Sir, that there is opposition to this proposal ; I regret it for the sake of hon. gentlemen opposite. I should have liked to see them rise to the occasion but if they fail to do so I can tell them this : That in spite of their opposition, in spite of their cynicism and jeerings at measures which have been propounded by this government, they have had to admit that these measures were fruitful for the advancement of the happiness and prosperity of our country. Their whole argument is : Canada is more prosperous now than any country under the sun, and why meddle with things as they are, and, Sir, in arguing that way they are forced to confess that our measures for the promotion of immigration, the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, the British preference, and all these policies which the Liberal party carries into effect in spite of the opposition of gentlemen opposite, have made Canada to-day a prosperous and progressive country. Well, I am sorry to say they appear unwilling to join us in this last patriotic movement for the benefit of the people of the country. All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is this, that the Liberal party, having taken these other steps that produced this prosperity, are strong enough and willing enough, if it is left to them alone to have the glory of it, to see that this, like the other measures, is carried to a successful issue.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Chairman, I hope that my hon. friend, who has dispensed so much wisdom in the short time that he has spoken, and has done it with such extreme clearness and distinctness of voice, will pardon me if I do not follow the points one by one, which he has been endeavouring to make. I am not to-night concerned at all in an endeavour to get the best of a man in argument. I am looking rather to getting at the rights of a question, which I think is important enough to engage the attention of Canada, and will be thought by the people of this country important enough to call for calm, sound and deep thinking and reasoning rather than declamation. In the course of my remarks I shall probably touch the points which my hon. friend has made to-night; but what impresses me at the present time, is the situation in which we find ourselves—a position which, in the first place, is unique. Neither in Canada, nor do I think in any other country, has such important fiscal legislation been undertaken in quite the manner in which this has been undertaken by the present government. In the next place, the situation is one of extreme gravity. I may be wrong, but I have given a great deal of thought to trade matters in the course of my political life, and my conviction is that we have never had in Canada any question quite so important as this present one—any issue upon which hung more far-reaching consequences. The only one that, in my mind, approached it, was the struggle in 1891, when commercial union with the United States and discrimination against Great Britain was the slogan of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the cry around which centred one of the greatest political battles ever fought in Canada. I think it is a situation which involves in a large degree the fiscal freedom and political independence of Canada. In the fourth place, I think it is a question which is fraught with consequences greater than any of us can now see, but a sense of which comes to me and I believe to every thoughtful man in this country—fraught with grave consequences to the future of that empire, of which, up to the present time, Canada has been a shining and a noble part. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance appealed to history, going into a rather long disquisition upon the record of reciprocity negotiations. Whether he did that by way of apology or as a defence for the proposal which he has made to us, I do not know. If it was the first, it was as good as any other old thing; if it was intended for the second, it is a defence, which I think, is inadequate, and which will not stand examination. History is very valuable, Mr. Chairman. It is valuable for what it teaches us to imitate; it is equally valuable for what it teaches us to avoid; and, if my reading of the history of reciprocity negotiations with the United States of America is correct, it is one which may well teach us what to avoid in the present and for the future. But, Sir, there is history and history, and you, Mr. Chairman, were no doubt quick to perceive that my hon. friend traced the history of reciprocity negotiations up to the year 1891, and then and there dropped it. Then occurred a long hiatus of twenty years in which he could appeal to no history with relation to negotiations for reciprocity with the United States of America. What did that mean, Sir? It meant that the old volume was then completed, sealed, and laid away, and that at that time a new volume was begun and a new record and a new history was initiated in this country. Am I right or wrong in that? In 1891 the Liberal-Conservative party made its last endeavour for reciprocity with the United States of America, and after the negotiations were ended and we returned home to Canada, the Liberal-Conservative party declared itself as done with reciprocity from the United States, of America, and that henceforth its duty was to develop Canada on the lines of its own self-dependence, and to look to the British market as the great, steady, stable market for our products. The old heresy had not yet been quite purged from the Liberal party, which pursued the quest until 1897. They went to Washington; they tried their efforts; they failed. They came back, and they made declaration in this House of Commons and elsewhere, that as far as they, as a party, were concerned, they were done with reciprocity negotiations with the United States of America. Let us invoke the record. In 1898, the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, according to 'Hansard,' spoke as follows in this House of Commons, respecting the negotiations and their failure to result in anything:

Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with myself, would have given many things to obtain the American market, but, thank Heaven, these days are passed and over.

That is strong language; and it expresses what I suppose it was meant to say. But after ten years more during which neither Liberal nor Conservative party raised the issue of reciprocity with the United States, my right hon. friend stood in the Imperial Conference in London, and before the assembled delegates of the empire made this statement:

> There was a time when we were wanting reciprocity with the United States, but our efforts and our offers were put aside and negatived. We have said good bye to that trade and we now put all our hopes upon the British trade.

Could anything be more explicit as a repudiation, before the assembled delegates of the empire, of any desire for reciprocity, and a declaration that Canada had given up the quest and had put all her hopes in the British market? Later yet, in 1899, in this House of Commons, the same right hon. gentleman said:

> Canada has opened her doors to Great Britain in the hope that she would ultimately receive similar preferential treatment from the mother country.

This is my warrant for saying that from 1891 the Liberal-Conservative party and from 1897 the Liberal party—that is both parties in this country—had closed the door on reciprocal negotiations with the United States and had opened up a newer, broader and more promising highway for our commerce. But there is corroborative evidence. In a general election, if there be any live issue, it comes out on the hustings. After 1897 had passed and the right hon. gentleman had made his repudiations, we went through the elections of 1900, 1904 and 1908, and I challenge him to show that in any one of those three electoral contests, anywhere in this Dominion, he or any of his party advocated reciprocity with the United States as a policy. On the contrary, the ideas which he enunciated in the extracts I have read, were promulgated from platform to platform, and it is not too much to say that we came to the conclusion, and rightfully, that Canada, as a whole, endorsed the action of the two parties and took no stock in reciprocity. I need not elaborate that point any further.

It was significant that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance closed his history at 1891, since which time Canada has made great progress, signal progress, despite the burdensome load it has had to carry in the shape of a rather poor administration. We heard this afternoon what was done, what was begun, and what is contemplated by this government. Again I want to ask my right hon. friend, after this exposition of the situation, why this sudden change, and this renewed quest for reciprocity? Is not that a pertinent question? Why the change? You had buried reciprocity. You declared that you had buried it. The country attended its obsequies and did not mourn nor weep; and after it had been buried for 11 years, by yourselves and for a longer time by the Liberal-Conservative party, what has brought it to life again? Will some one answer that question. Where was the mandate of this government to take that question up, to go to these conferences, to make this agreement and to bring it to this parliament and demand that this parliament shall pass it as being the best policy for this country? That you did not get a mandate from the people is plain enough. You had a mandate from the people to let it alone, if ever a mandate was given, after the repudiations of hon. gentlemen opposite and the acquiescence in those repudiations by the people of this country at large. There were no compelling condition to force you on this question. Production was good. Never in the history of Canada has its production, in all its varied interests, been larger or richer. No blight had fallen on the productive powers of Canada, in any respect, owing to conditions which the government might remove. There was no lack of market for everything that Canada produced. There was quick sale, easy sale, no glut in the markets, no molding in our bins and cellars, no rotting in our fields. Everything that Canada produced, and she produced richly, found a market and a ready market. There was no lack of transport, everything ready for market had means of transport. The prices too were good, they were never better in Canada. I have just gone through a very important and useful volume which has been issued by the government itself, giving the round of prices for a series of years in this country, and the government themselves being the authority prices in the Dominion of Canada were never so high as they have been during this last five or six years. Where then were the compelling conditions in this country which cried for relief and for which relief could be got only by going to Washington and negotiating for a reciprocity treaty? There were some few causes of dissatisfaction; we may reduce them to three. There was the demand of the grain growers in the west for free agricultural implements, or a reduced duty upon them. There was the fitful cry of the ardent and conscientious free trader, who with all the power that was in him, cried for free trade, but supported the protectionist government of my right hon. friend, which rose here and there throughout the length and breadth of the country, and there was, in the third place, the wide spread dissatisfaction with the condition of things imposed upon us by the United States of America in accepting a $104,000,000 free list from us and giving us but a $33,000,000 one in return, in buying from us but $100,000,000 worth, while selling to us $223,000,000 worth; of meeting a Canadian tariff of 26 per cent by a United States tariff of 41½ per cent. There was a feeling in the country that that was not a neighbourly thing for them to do, not fair business treatment, not what we would expect from a great and rich and powerful neighbour. These were the three things that were mooted as grievances in the country.

I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, as a man of common sense, if the grain growers and farmers in Canada believed that agricultural implements were rated too high and that the government should either reduce the rate or make them free, I ask you, Sir, as a man of common sense what was the scientific, the common sense, the business thing to do? It was for them to lay their plaint before their own government and if they made good their case to get the grievance removed by tariff legislation in this House of parliament. That was the straightforward, the common sense, the business method of procedure. If their case was good, the government should have granted them relief; if their case was not good, the government, with equal strength and justice should have said to them: You are treated as well as others and we think you have no cause for complaint. The second one could have been met, was in process of being met, had this government simply remained at home and minded what the people had told them to do and avoided what the people had not given them any mandate for doing. In the United States of America what was the condition of things? A high tariff from time immemorial, growing higher through the Dingley Bill, the McKinley Bill and at last coming to a height of 42 per cent on an average on dutiable goods; against that a revolt broke out, a campaign was waged, and the slogan of the campaign in the Republican party was a downward revision of the tariff of the United States. The Republican party promised it; they were elected, they came into power, they brought down their measure and the Payne-Aldrich Bill ended not in any revision downward that was worth mentioning, but, in some things in a revision upwards. What happened? The people of the United States have a pretty sterling sense of what is due from them to men who make pledges and then break them and they rose in insurrection. When the Payne-Aldrich Bill was going through Congress some Republicans raised the banner of insurrection in the Congress and in the Senate. They fought the Bill there, they were defeated there, they carried the fight out into the constituencies and in the late elections they gained the support of the people and the punishment which ought always to come upon men who make pledges and then cynically break them came to the Republican party. They were defeated in the country and their day is just about over in the Congress of the United States and will soon be over in the Senate of the United States. What was the position? That insurgent force that swept the Republicans out of power was pledged to a diminution of the tariff especially on food stuffs. The Republican party in that position, the Democratic party were pledged to a revision downward of the tariff especially on food stuffs. It was known by all men that the new Congress soon to go into power would deal with that matter and it was known that it would deal with it in the line of taking off and diminishing duties especially upon natural resources and food stuffs. That was the moment when this government should have avoided any meddling in tariff negotiations with the United States of America, but that was the psychological moment, as my hon. friend said, when he took it into his head to butt in and pay the Republican party for what was due and acknowledged to be due to the people of the United States, and what that party would have to give at the coming session of Congress. That is the way that matter would have been settled and settled with better effect than by the present arrangement and without our having to foot the bills in any way.

That being the case what happened? Just at that psychological moment—I think that is a good word—two men started out of Ottawa, two very estimable men, but not in any way extraordinary. Apart from their being ministers of a government, members of a cabinet, just lay aside their titles, and their positions, and their power of dispensing patronage, and turn them out in the streets of Montreal or Toronto, and you would not find all the captains of industry, and the men of finance, and the great business men of the country, rushing out and falling down before them, sitting at their feet, and worshipping them ; not at all. They are estimable men. But does the Minister of Customs mean to tell us to-night in sober earnest that he knows more about the business of this country than the trained business men who have been in it, in one branch or another, from boyhood up, and are to-day the great captains of industry and men famous in their several spheres? Not at all. Neither would my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, though a very good newspaper man in his time, and though a very good man in business in a limited way—I do not know that he has had any specially large experience, himself sav here in the House to-night that he knows more about these things than the trained men of business who direct affairs in this Dominion of Canada. Now, Sir, what happened? These two estimable men, without any mandate from the people, without any call from any interest in this country—that is literally true—without any consultation with any interest from British Columbia to Cape Breton, these two men journeyed to Washington, consulting with nobody, except thirteen not more extraordinary men, with whom it is just possible they consulted, though I do not know—men of such eminence in business affairs as the hon. the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), men so versed in financial and high matters of banking and commerce as the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden), men so famous in business circles as the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy), men of such fine financial mind and business acumen as the right hon. gentleman himself who leads the government and the party (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Now, giving all credit to those men for all that they know—and they know a lot, a lot that they ought never to have known—but giving them credit for all they know, it was true that in the whole Dominion of Canada no one was consulted but these fifteen men, if even they were all consulted. What did the right hon. gentleman say himself? He passed through the west this year, he was asked for tariff reductions and tariff adjustments. What did he promise to the deputations? That he would take it into consideration, but there would be no adjustment of the tariff until a tariff comission had examined into the matter, and had heard from the various interests. Did my right hon. friend make that promise in the west? If he did not, will he deny it now? The right hon. gentleman did make that promise, he will not deny it now. Has he carried out his promise?

There is another thing the right hon. gentleman said: To one cardinal principle we adhere, that is that the British preference would not be interfered with. Did the right hon. gentleman make that promise? Did he mean it when he made it? Has he implemented that promise any more than the other? A solemn promise made by a leader of a government to men who came to him with a tariff grievance that he would not make any adjustment of the tariff until —common sense idea—a tariff commission had been issued, and had found out the facts of the case, and got information upon which to make an adjustment. And yet he has made the most important tariff revision that ever was made in this country. In the face of a promise that whatever was done the British preference would not be impaired, he comes back with an instrument which, in almost every line of it, impairs, diminishes or completely obliterates the preference which Great Britain has to-day in the markets of Canada.

These two men sit down with three or four other men in a secret chamber in Washington. The receiver is taken off the hook, the telegraph line is cut, and for two weeks those gentlemen are closeted in camera with gentlemen of the United States, and no interest in this Dominion can get a word to them or a word from them. There are rumours, there are grave stories of what is being done, there are fears everywhere, and dislocation and disturbance in every part of this country. The receiver is still off the hook, the line does not run into the room. No interest in Canada can get the ear of that conclave of four or five men who are dealing with the affairs of this nation. How do they deal with them? On the line of justice and fair play? No, Sir. It is a strong word, but I am going to use it, they dealt with these interests as gamblers deal. Now that I have used it, I will show you that I am not far out of the way. If an interest comes to a government which is independent, which rules in Canada, responsible only to parliament, and that interest says : We want more protection; or want less protection upon such and such a line of goods, there is only one way in which the grievance may be removed and justice may be done, that is, to look into each case, try it on its merits, giving to the one or taking from the other because of the intrinsic merits of that interest which has to be taken from or added to. Is there any man in this House, Grit or Tory, who can deny that this is the proper way to do it? Is that the way that these gentlemen in camera in Washington acted? Not at all, Sir. The United States player shoved up his pawn, free fish ; the Canadian player advanced his, free fruit. Before the Canadian player shoved up the pawn of free fruit, did he call before him the representatives of that great and growing industry in this country, and by a single word ask them what would be the effect of this change upon their great industry? He had to go one better, or one equal to the American player, but he did not do it on any ground of reason or of justice or examination. The American player put up free dairy products to the United States. The Canadian player shoved up his free dairy products to the Dominion of Canada. Did he say free dairy products because he had consulted the interests—the wide interests—of the dairymen of this country, and had advised that those interests would not be hurt, and might be advantaged by it? Not at all ; he was asked to play up in the game, he played and so it went from one interest to another until every pawn was moved and the game ended. All that time the interests that you were playing with were in dense ignorance of what you were doing, and you were in dense ignorance of how their interests would be affected by your play. That is absolutely the wrong way to deal with the interests of this or any other country in the matter of tariff legislation. Did I use too strong a word? I do not think so. I was not vicious in using the word ; I just meant it, that is all.

And now, Sir, after having played the game they take the receiver off the hook, they connect the telephone with the chamber, and they let this parliament know that they have signed a pact. What kind of a pact? Did you, in Winnipeg, know what it was? Did you in Wentworth, did you in Brantford, did you in Kent, did any of you members of parliament who represent mightly big interests many of you, large interests all of you, know one single thing of what had been done behind your back and behind the back of this country? No, Sir, you did not. Now, Sir, the crime —for it is not much less than that—might have been mitigated if one course had been taken. Having no mandate, having consulted nobody, taking it up off your own bat—the crime would have been mitigated or I could not have called it such if you had brought that pact back to Canada and stood up in parliament and said: This is what we have done; true, we had no mandate; true, we held no consultations, but this is what we have done, and, having done what we thought best for Canada, we present that pact to the electorate of this Dominion and invite them to consider it and to pass their opinion upon it. If they had done that they would have followed the constitutional practice, they would have honoured responsible government, they would have been true to the democracy about which they talk so much, they would have approved themselves as business men and as statesmen, who have confidence in the people and do things above board. But that pact is signed, is brought back to parliament when we are half through this session and parliament is told that it must be passed without the dotting of an 'i' or the crossing of a 't.' Take the whole of it or take none of it! The Minister of Finance has the colossal boldness to stand up in this parliament and fling before it that pact gotten up by two men without mandate, consultation, or authority from anybody, or any great interest, and then cooly says that parliament is absolutely free to take it or not, as parliament pleases. No wonder some of my friends opposite smile. The Minister of Finance knows that he was stating what theoretically may be true, but is practically absolutely false. This parliament is free! I invite my right hon. friend now to carry out the words, implemented the statement of the Minister of Finance and to-morrow take the free voice of your party in this parliament, let every man vote as he chooses and pleases, and so prove say that this parliament is free. Will he do it? Will he do it? Not for his life will he do it. This parliament is free, but the government has pledged itself as a government to use its utmost efforts to pass that measure through parliament. If the government does not pass it through the government dies. If the government dies the party dies, and, therefore, the party is bound to support the government if it fears and flies from death and dissolution. Death is repulsive in every form, none the less so in its political forms, and the amount of freedom we have in this parliament and in this country is measured by the fact that the government has pledged its existence to the passage of this measure, and that if it fails not the government alone, but the party in the House and in the country in all its ramifications goes out of power and another party comes in. When I was listening to the Finance Minister going so glibly over his story, and as the extent and gravity of the measure forced itself to my mind I wondered whether the Finance Minister himself knew in any adequate degree or measured the full import of the agreement. Giving him all credit for farseeing capability just as freely as I can give it to him, I have no hesitation in saying that he did not then know, he does not know now and I have not yet found a man in Canada who does know just where all this may end.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman had better sit down then.

Mr. FOSTER. I had better sit down?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If you do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. If the people ever perish it will be because of their lack of knowledge, and I have not the least doubt that if the situation in its entirety can be put before the people of this country my right hon. friend will find that he is in the great minority. My right hon. friend, in that contingency would have to sit down and with emphasis. Now, what does this measure do? In the first place it alters the fiscal conditions of interchange, not for a few unimportant articles, but a long list of most important products. It alters the fiscal conditions of interchange for all our dairy products, all our animals, all our grains, a large proportion of our lumber, all our natural food products, all our fish products except sardines, all our fresh vegetable products, our mineral products, our wood pulp and paper, by transferring them in one block from the dutiable to the free list. Do we know just what that means and can we sense just exactly how far that reaches? But it goes further than that: Our meat products, our grain products, our prepared vegetables and food products, a large slice of manufactures, are transferred to a lower reciprocal list, and another fairly large number of important products are transferred to a non-reciprocal but specified list in which the duties are lower. In gross, it takes $95,000,000 of products and at a stroke of the pen transfers them from dutiable to free or from a higher dutiable to a lower dutiable list. Every man knows that if you change the fiscal conditions of interchange of $95,000,000 worth of products in this country you affect in some degree every other of our products or nearly so. As I have shown $47,800,000 of our imports, and $47,300,000 of our exports are affected. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to labour these different points beyond what is necessary to get them under advisement and thought. Every man in this House must realize the importance of a measure which at one stroke of the pen lifts $95,000,000 of interchangeable products out from old established conditions and makes a different fiscal system for interchanging them. Such a measure must be of a far reaching and wide importance. How far it goes requires business men of the best calibre to figure out adequately. But, this arrangement does something even more important: It shifts the base and conditions of production. It is true that production is of greater importance than interchange or trade, because trade is founded upon production and without products you cannot have trade. You must have at least two different productions in order to have a trade; one man raises one thing, another man raises another thing and there you have the basis of interchange and that interchange you measure by your trade figures of the value of each. Therefore, though trade is important, the conditions and the base of production is more important still to be considered. And, this agreement if it goes into operation, shifts the base of production and not to the advantage of Canada in my opinion. For example, British Columbia is particularly adapted to the raising of fruits, and British Columbians have invested their capital and risked their future in the business and they have done well and aim to do better. They have accomplished their success so far through being fairly protected from the southern fruit growers who compete in their market. There you have the production of fruit that employs labour and capital and is of great importance to that province. East of the Rockies they produce grain and cattle; British Columbia has to get grain and the prairies have to get fruit, and there you have the basis of interchange between these two parts of our Dominion, and the products are both raised in Canada. Now, what does this measure do? It changes the base of production; it says to the prairie buyers: Men in the United States will raise fruits and will supply them to you and you need not deal any more with British Columbia: it says to the prairie provinces: You may still raise grain and cattle, but you will send them down to the United States. You have the same grain and cattle raised, you have the same fruit raised, but one of your products has been shifted from its base in Canada and transferred to the United States. That, Sir, is the defect of this instrument which is before us to-night. These gentlemen opposite say: We are in favour of reciprocity? Are you? What would be the best reciprocity?—Reciprocity between the different sections in Canada itself that raise different productions and have different capabilities. Why, if you favour reciprocity should you kill, or deteriorate, or diminish the reciprocity between British Columbia and the prairies? That is but a sample, but there are other instances. Take fish which is a great natural industry and a great business industry as well. Within the last 20 years a fish trade of large dimensions has been built up between the lower provinces and the rest of Canada running as far as the Rockies.

There is a production in Canada. The eastern Canadians want cattle, want grain, or want flour, which is raised in the western provinces. There are the elements of a reciprocity which builds up this country—both productions made in Canada and an interchange between the different sections of Canada. Now, what are you going to do? You are going to say to the fish industry in the eastern provinces: Go, seek your markets somewhere else. The fishermen of the lakes and the fishermen of the Atlantic shore, because they have shorter routes and cheaper routes, maybe, to the heart of the great west, will get and give the fish that are required in the west. It will no longer be reciprocity between two sections of our own country. It will be reciprocity between the United States in one production and the west in another production. Now, Sir, that runs through the whole of this reciprocity arrangement. You talk about your foreign trade, and you bellow about it as though it were the greatest thing in Canada. I was going to say that it was almost the least thing in Canada. What is the greatest thing in Canada? The interprovincial trade, which is founded upon the many productions in the east, and the wheat, grain and cattle productions in the west—the two complementing each other. What has made Canada so strong, and so great in her progress is this, that you have filled her veins with the rich blood of interprovincial trade, stimulating productions in various parts, and then interchanging these productions one part with the other part.

This instrument has for its object, can have no other, the shifting of the base of production, and giving as far as possible at least one-half to the United States of America, and taking it from Canada, with this proviso, which is important, that the kind of production you leave to Canada is the production so dearly loved by the Minister of Customs. To Canada, he says, dig out your ore; the United States will manufacture it up through a thousand processes until you get it at great value, and then send it back to us to buy. Frontenac, dig your talc, and employ a few hundreds of men; send over the product of your pick-men and your shovellers to the United States, and let them do the perfecting processes upon it, and get the employment, get the accrued wealth, and get the national development. That is what it means. The part you call for Canada to keep is that which employs the least labour; what you give to the United States as the result of that employment of the least labour in raw material—is what employs the greatest labour and runs up into the great figures of value which labour adds to the raw material in perfecting the product. The real reciprocity for Canada is the reciprocity between these different provinces. I put it to you, Sir, that if it were now 1867 and the provinces were asked to federate, with the alternative of free reciprocal trade with the United States of America, would we have any federation of these provinces? It would have been absolutely impossible, and if this measure is to have the effect that its promoters and sponsors in the United States hope for it, it will turn us backward, and lead us towards the pre-confederation days when our maritime provinces traded with New England, and our large central provinces with the states on the border—there was no prairie then—and when British Columbia traded with the border states on the Pacific. My count against this measure, stronger and deeper than any, is that it threatens the best and highest production in this country, that it threatens thereby the stream of interprovincial trade which is absolutely the life and essence of this country as a whole. It also vitally affects and changes the direction of the channels of trade and the great transport routes. Now, that does not need to be argued at all. Everybody admits that. The only thing that is said with reference to it is this: Granted that what we have gone to such expense for, what we have been for forty years building up, what we have now in the great trunk lines of communication east and west—granted that they will be affected—and if your reciprocity amounts to anything, they will be largely affected—there will be enough grown to keep them going and to keep the southern lines going too. Is that the sum and substance of our national aspirations to-day? Twenty years ago you could have said of one straggling line of railway in there, it can carry more than is produced, but in a little while production will overtake it, and surpass it, and the southern lines will have what they want, and that line will have all it can do. That was not the ambition of Canada. The ambition of Canada was to keep her transportation routes even and adequate for the increased production of the country. If this year it is thirty million bushels to be carried out, let the Canadian routes carry them out; if next year it is forty million bushels let the Canadian routes multiply themselves, and carry them; if afterwards it is a hundred million bushels, there is freight enough for all the railroads that can be built, and under stable conditions there is capital enough to build all that are needed. It is my ambition that, however, much the expansion and development of the productions of the western country may be, our seaport towns, our steamship lines, our canal routes, and our railway transportation systems shall keep pace with it, and do the work—why not? Did you ever take your pencil and sit down and calculate just what is meant by a great line of railway running from Vancouver to Sydney? It is not simply two rails, some engines and some cars. From the time it thinks of starting it gives employment to labour and subsidiary operations before it can get a locomotive or a car or anything of that kind; and from the time it starts to build its running road and its working gear, through every branch and hour of its operations, Canadians and Canadian work and Canadian machinery and Canadian employment are called upon, until it becomes a great invigorating stream of development and wealth-production from one end of the country to the other.

If you have one, there is so much, if you have two, that is double. If you have dozens, or scores, as you will have, in course of time, then it will be our ambition to have them Canadian and manned by Canadians. I think that is a far higher ideal than we can achieve by inviting Mr. Hill to enter that country on the ground that there will be plenty for both.

This agreement restricts freedom of legislation. I have a quarrel with the government because, without giving ear to the market gardeners or fruit men or any other interests, they have made a pact and rushed it through, and while they are rushing it through, these men come and complain that it cannot fail to do them damage. But the Minister of Customs, with loud voice, says to these people: You do not know anything about it; it will be the best gift God has ever given you. These people have to submit, because this government has contracted to push the thing through, they must get it through, and they are pledged to the United States administration to keep it there, after it is through. Two years pass and the market gardeners and other men come again to the government and say: our industry is absolutely gone; we can not subsist another year; you told us it would be all right, but it has not turned out all right; on the contrary, we shall be ruined unless you come to our relief. What does the government say to that ? All they can say is: We cannot help it. Why ? Because if we do, that will break up the whole compact, and that we cannot do. What then is this parliament asked to do ? It is asked to absolutely give away its independent power of redressing grievances. They come to the administrators of their own country, these men who pay taxes and build up homes in this country, and add to its accumulated wealth, they come to the government and they say: Here are our grievances, remedy them. But in reply the Prime Minister folds his arms and says: There is a different forum now; before this trade arrangement passed we could have given you a remedy, Canada could control her own, but to-day the forum in which you must plead is not Canada, with its eight millions, but the United States with its ninety-three millions, there is the judge to whom you must appeal and if that predominant partner does not agree to what you ask, we can do nothing. I say that is rank injustice. The men on the other side pay no taxes to this country, they build up no part of this country, they pay no Canadian labour, and yet, for the sake of the southern fruit labourers, you do this and your own people are ruined, and when they ask you for redress, you have to confess that you have bartered away your authority and can provide no remedy.

But, Sir, that this arrangement will virtually affect our transport system east and west, does not require any argument. We know that it will, and the only thing said in explanation is: Oh, well, we know it will, but we trust there will be enough for all, and if our people do not get their share, it will be their own fault. But do we also take this into consideration ? When I listened this afternoon to the presentation made of Canada's growth during the last 40 years, and of the mighty interests that have been built up, the question came to my mind: Why have we built those works ? Why have we spent that money ? Why have we made this great march of development ? For what purpose have we done all these things ? Was it in order that we might afterwards turn them over as joint assets in a partnership with a great, rich and dominant people ? No, we did those things to make Canada great and not to make the United States great. We did them to develop the resources of Canada, to work up our own raw material with our own capital and our own labour. Suppose that the iron ore does lie in the ground, some of it unused, for 20 or for 50 years, will the generations to come, find fault with us for having conserved that much of our raw materials, for their benefit ? Is Canada limited in its horizon to 30, 100 or 500 years ? All that we have the right to do to-day, is to take what is fair and reasonable for the user of the present generation and preserve the rest, as trustees, for the generations to come. Some time or other, and not very distant, this rank spirit of commercialism which would take the last salmon from our streams, the last stick from our forests, the last pound of ore from our mines, the last available ounce of fertility from our soil and turn it all into money for the present user—the time is not far distant when that commercialism will have to give way to a more healthy sentiment, in favour of the preservation of not only the nationality of to-day, but the nationality of the future.

I was surprised at the heretical doctrines of the Minister of Customs. In this hour when the conservation of our natural resources is engaging the best thoughts of the best men in the best countries of the world, what place can there be for such a doctrine as this, that because there is plenty of iron ore in our country now, exceeding what our small 7,000,000 of population can use, we must get rid of it as soon as possible, and lose sight altogether of the 50,000,000 or 100,000,000 of people who will be living in this country in the future, whose interests we are in conscience bound to protect, and who will be grateful to us for having preserved for them these essential natural resources.

I have one other point to make and it is this—that this measure vitally affects the labour interests of this country. I have made my argument in reality on that, all I have to do is to state the proposition. If the effect of this measure is to shift producing centres from this country to the United States, to give us half and the United States half, it means that half of the labour possibilities for the future are taken from this country, and shifted to the other side or kept upon the other side. If it is true, as I have stated, and I believe it is, that we are keeping the more raw processes for our country and leaving the more finished processes for the other country, and that the raw processes employ the least labour and at the smallest wage and the finishing processes the greatest amount of labour at the highest wage, we are cutting again into the great future of the labour men of this country. I do not need to carry that out a single step further.

I do not feel like finishing my speech to-night, and with the consent of the House, I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this go on to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, my hon. friend would have a slim audience to-morrow. We will resume the debate on Tuesday.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply. The Minister of Labour will take up his estimates to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY RATES.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, if I might be allowed, I would like to refer to a question asked me the other day by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), in reference to a complaint of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) in reference to an error made in the Intercolonial railway office at Moncton concerning cheap rates for a Conservative picnic that was held in Nova Scotia. The hon. leader of the opposition asked me to ascertain what happened to the junior clerk who had made the mistake—was he promoted for making it or was he reprimanded? As a matter of fact, the young man was fined and placed in a less responsible position, for the time at least, for the error he had made.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I notice in the Montreal 'Gazette,' in the account of the proceedings of this House yesterday, that I am put down as having voted with the government on the amendment. That is a mistake. I voted for the amendment, but I did not notice that my pair was absent. When that fact was brought to my notice I asked to have my name erased. At the same time, I said that had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment, because I was of the same opinion as the mover of the amendment, that we should have a little more time to talk this matter over with our constituents before being asked to vote upon it.

SUPPLY—INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to direct the attention of the government to an incomplete return laid on the table the other day. The return ordered by the House was as follows:

> How many appointments have been made by the government from the constituency of South Grey since 1904, what are the names, to what positions appointed, and the salary or remuneration in each case?

The government have brought down a return showing something like 26 appointments. It is fair to say that the most of them are very minor appointments, chiefly from the Post Office Department to country post offices worth a few dollars a year. The larger departments have not responded at all. There is no reply from the Public Works Department, none from the Interior Department, none from the Department of Railways and Canals, and none from the Marine and Fisheries Department, the four important spending departments of the government. I cannot understand how this could have been overlooked. One department says it keeps no record of that; another says something of the same kind. It seems to me that it would not be a very difficult task on the part of any department, by consultation with the sitting member for the county, to learn how many appointments had been made from the constituency from all departments of the government since 1904. That is a very reasonable request. I am not going to criticise particularly my hon. friend who represents the county, as he is not in his seat; but I am informed on very good authority that he makes it a pretty common plank of his platform for re-election that he has been so successful in representing the county having been able to get so many appointments for his county made in the different departments of the government. As these offices are in the gift of the government, and the salaries come out of the public treasury, the government should be able to say who have been appointed, and where they come from. I did not include the hon. Minister of Finance with the departments that have not been heard from. It may be that my hon. friend from South Grey has been influential with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING. He would be.

Mr. BLAIN. I would think so. My hon. friend is always ready to respond without much persuasion, particularly to requests coming from that side of the House. I would ask the government to obey their own order and to lay on the table of the House a list of these appointments from every department. I suppose my hon. friends will answer that this is an impossible proposition. Everybody in this House knows that it is not. If any department has not a record of the constituency from which each person appointed comes, surely that could be ascertained by consultation with the sitting member who in the main would recommend the persons for the different positions. Then they could lay a complete return on the table of the House, from which the public could understand whether or not my hon. friend was using the proper election method in stating that his constituency was honoured because he was so influential with the government being able to get so many of his electors on the Civil Service pay-roll of the country.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I should think that the Secretary of State would be able to collect from all the different departments the necessary matter for a complete return such as is asked for by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). Another matter which I wish to bring up is this. The other day, when the Prime Minister was absent, I appealed to the government, instead of taking the estimates of the Public Works Department day after day, to vary them with those of some of the other departments. Probably two-thirds of the session have now gone by, and the only department whose estimates we have yet considered in Supply is the Department of Public Works. There are a great many items for that department, and if we discussed each item fully it would probably take the whole session to deal with that department alone. There are important matters to be considered in the Marine and Fisheries Department, and in the Department of Agriculture which is one of the most important of the government as the Prime Minister will admit, judging by the deputation which was here to-day. In the past we have had different departments under consideration from time to time, but this rule is now violated, and I think when we appeal in person to the Prime Minister he will give our appeal attention.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand there have been no appointments made in the Department of Public Works from the constituency of South Grey since 1904?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend send me over the return?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The motion to adjourn was for the purpose of obtaining what information is actually on record in the department, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has received that I do not know that he can complain.

Mr. BLAIN. I assume that no man is appointed to office by this government unless the government have a record of that appointment?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The record of the appointment might not necessarily give the locality the appointee came from.

Mr. BLAIN. These appointments are not usually made at the request of the appointee, but at the request of the sitting member and the government can easily inquire from the sitting member where the man came from. The ministers or their officials can find out from the member for South Grey what persons from his constituency have been appointed since 1904.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think it is the duty of the officers of my department to go round to the different members and find out where in former years was the place of residence of certain officials. There is no record kept, as I understand, of the place whence an appointee originally came, and I take it for granted that the return gives all the information in the department.

Mr. BLAIN. If the minister states there have been no appointments to his department from the constituency of South Grey since 1904, I will accept his statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be dozens of officials in my department who originally came from South Grey, but we do not keep a record of where they came from.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think this a fair answer. The order of the House asks that the government shall lay on the table all the appointments that have been made from the important constituency of South Grey, and the minister answers saying there is nothing in the department to show whence the appointees came. Surely that answer will not be accepted by the House. If the information is not given we must assume that it is not given because they wish to keep this secret. If the Minister of Railways, or the Minister of Marine, or the Minister of Finance will stand up and say there has been no appointment made since 1904, I will accept the statement at once. I regret that my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) is not in his place, but I am informed on very good authority, that when the hon. gentleman goes back to South Grey from the House, each and every time he congratulates himself and his people upon the fact that he has been so powerful with this government that he has had so many men appointed to the different departments. That is using an unfair weapon in party politics by a supporter of the government. I am not suggesting that there is anything wrong, but it is quite easy for the government to clear the matter up.

Mr. LENNOX. I believe there is a duty upon the government to inform the House as to the matters which my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has moved for. All that the Minister of Public Works or any other minister has to do, is to go to the member for South Grey and get a list—and I understand it would be a long list—of the gentlemen who were appointed at his instance. I venture to say that the public will think it necessary that the government should know from what district an appointee comes, so that they may be able to ascertain something of the character of the person they are appointing. It is altogether too much a habit of the ministers of the Crown to keep back information which the people of the country have a right to get. Does the leader of the government forget that it was brought to the attention of the House the other day that the hon. member for South Grey is trading upon the influence he has with the government, that he is indeavouring to influence his constituency by the statement that he is able to control the government in the matter of appointments to the public service. In view of that, it comes with very bad grace from the Minister of Public Works and from the government to refuse to make a simple inquiry, which would result in a full disclosure of the names of these parties, so that we may know whether or not the hon. member for South Grey is justified in the boasts he is said to be making.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether there have been any appointments made in the Finance Department since 1904 from the constituency of South Grey?

Mr. FIELDING. If I had the information I would be very happy to give it, but I do not think there is a record kept in the department of the places from which the appointees come, but even of that I would not be quite positive. It may be possible that some of the parties appointed did come from South Grey, but I could not say from memory.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is a rather large draft on our credulity to ask us to believe that there is no record kept in any of the departments of the localities from which the appointees come. One would naturally suppose that whenever a person is appointed to an important position in any department, there would be, in the order of council appointing him, some addition to his name. I do not suppose that a motion is made and carried that John Brown, for instance, be appointed to a certain position in any department, without giving his residence and profession, as for instance John Brown of the city of St. Thomas or Toronto, merchant.

Mr. MILLER. I have just come into the House, and do not know exactly what has been said, but I understand that there has been a discussion as to the appointments made from the constituency of South Grey, and that the statement has been made that I have boasted of the number of these appointments. To this I give the most emphatic denial. I challenge any one to name any place or occasion in which I made such boast. No such boast has been made by me for three reasons. First, because I am not in the habit of boasting about such things at all ; second, because I have had no occasion to make any such boast, as the number of appointments from my constituency has been very small ; and third, I have no need to make any such boast to carry South Grey, and I expect to be able to carry it again without resorting to any such method. If my hon. friends opposite desire any information from me, as to appointments made from my constituency, I shall be glad to give them all the details.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask another question? Might I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if there have been any appointments made from the constituency of South Grey since, 1904 in his department?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is evident that my hon. friend is not really very keen to get the information because my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has just offered to give it to him and he did not accept that offer. Why, if it is the information he is after, there is the source from which he can get it, and from which he intimated a few minutes ago the government might get it. My hon. friend has as much right to ask the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) as he has to ask a member of the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that when an order of the House has been passed unanimously, that order would be complied with by the hon. member for South Grey giving the information?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend himself suggested that the information could be got from the hon. member for South Grey and got very easily, and the hon. member for South Grey is ready to give it, but my hon. friend refuses to take that information when it is offered to him. As far as the Railway Department is concerned, I have no recollection of any one having been appointed in my time from South Grey or of the hon. member for South Grey having importuned me for any appointment. But if I wanted to get a good official, there is no man in this House whose advice I would take more quickly than that of my hon. friend from South Grey.

Mr. BARKER. I think we are getting entirely away from the question. This House has ordered that certain information shall be given, and I would like to know why we have not got that information. It is no answer to say that we can get it from the hon. member for South Grey, or that the appointments were very few or that the minister has not the names or the residences. The minister can get these. When the government allow an order of this House to pass, they ought to have some regard for the decency of procedure, and see that it is complied with.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Railways has directed my attention from the government to the hon. member for South Grey.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman made that suggestion himself.

Mr. BLAIN. He said that if I wanted the information, I could get it from the hon. member for South Grey.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend himself said it could be got from that hon. gentleman, and that hon. gentleman offered to give it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does this document contain the full number of appointments from the constituency of South Grey since 1904?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think it does. I do not think any appointment was made in the Railway Department on my recommendation or that any appointment has been made in the Department of Agriculture. I think that there are two in the Department of the Interior, not mentioned in this list.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. gentleman give the names and salaries?

Mr. MILLER. I can give the names but not the salaries. One is Frank Wenger and the other is Daniel MacDougall. These are the only ones principally that do not appear in the return. The hon. member for Peel made the statement that I have been boasting of these appointments. I ask him to produce the evidence. It has been suggested that I should ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw, but I shall not do that. He may make, so far as I am concerned, any statement he chooses.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not make the statement myself. I said it was currently reported in the hon. gentleman's constituency—and I repeated that a number of times—and at another time I shall be very glad to give the information my hon. friend asks for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did my hon. friend not hear the member immediately in front of him follow up his remarks by the statement that the hon. member for South Grey had been boasting?

Mr. LENNOX. No, nor did the hon. Minister of Public Works hear me make any such statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We all heard it.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister prides himself upon his memory. I would as soon trust his memory as his statements on many occasions, but I would not want to be forced to trust either very much. I did not make the statement that the hon. member for South Grey boasted, but I said that it had been stated in this House that he had been in the habit of boasting of the appointments he had made. I referred simply to what had been said on a former occasion, and it does seem rather peculiar that it took so long for the hon. member for South Grey to summon up his courage to contradict that statement. Personally, I know nothing about it. I accept the statement of the hon. member for South Grey with regard to the matter. It took some time for him to tell us. But he does revise his statements occasionally, as I have some reason to recollect. I think he revised the statement he made to the returning officer of his election expenses if I remember rightly——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is speaking on a point of personal explanation, I understand.

Mr. LENNOX. I will not follow that up, Mr. Speaker, but I was only going to say, as the matter has become personal to some extent, that I am glad that the hon. member for South Grey has, after mature consideration, after thinking over it for some time, been able to come to the House and say that he has not boasted, and to tell us that he is not in the habit of boasting. I wish to pay my compliments more particularly to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). If, as a young member of this House—young in years as well as in my time in this House—I might presume to give that hon. gentleman advice it would be this: To be a little more particular about contradicting hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and to be a little more sure of his facts before he makes statements concerning hon. members on this side. It is not many weeks since I had occasion to call attention to a very significant—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would not like the debate to open up on that line. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is speaking of a matter concerning which he was misunderstood. Having already spoken, he is limited to that. Of course, if he proceeds on the line he is now taking the minister (Mr. Pugsley) will have to be allowed to answer.

Mr. LENNOX. I would very much like to hear him.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) has been misunderstood or misquoted he has the right to explain.

Mr. LENNOX. I was only going to say in reference to it—of course, I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker—that this is not the first time that the hon. gentleman has given us occasion to call attention to the fact that his memory is short and likely to be at fault.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will not ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) to do more than look at 'Hansard' to-morrow, and he will see what he stated, and I am sure he will then be satisfied that the remark I made is absolutely correct.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, it will be the first time.

Mr. MILLER. I would like, also, to make an explanation. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) I regard as a personal friend, with whom I have no quarrel, and do not expect to have any quarrel. The hon. gentleman says it has taken me a long time to get up my courage to deny the statement made in this House some time ago. I do not want the hon. gentleman, or any other hon. member on that side, to think that it is lack of courage that makes me ignore a good deal of what they have to say; it is rather lack of interest. It was also said a few days ago that I was, day after day, asking favours of certain ministers. I might have denied that and might have briefly stated that I have never, since I came to this House, made a request of any minister of the Crown for any personal favour to myself. The hon. gentleman has made reference to a supposed revision of my statement of election expenses. That is a matter I have never thought it worth while to meet before, but I can say without hesitation that I have never revised my statement of election expenses, and never made a statement of election expenses that was not absolutely correct. And I would remind the hon. gentleman that it would be better if he did revise his statements, particularly as to the amount the 'Globe' gets from this government year by year—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) cannot cover these points—

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. MILLER. I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I have reminded the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) of his duty in this matter.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. HUGHES.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, now that this episode has been cleared up, and we find that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) has not been getting so many appointments in his riding, I shall take up a matter, which, possibly, may be of very little concern to the House, but of considerable concern to myself and to others immediately affected. As I have pointed out before, for many long years I have been specially interested in the closer union of Great Britain and her colonies, and it has been my endeavour not only to encourage the closer union of Great Britain and her colonies, but also to place obstacles in the way of any movement that might tend in the direction of disintegrating the empire. Therefore, I looked with a great deal of suspicion on the movement made a year ago, initiated by Rev. Mr. Macdonald, then editor, now part editor, of the 'Globe,' in his peregrinations to Washington to bring about reciprocal arrangements in regard to the maximum tariff of the United States of America and some changes that we made in our tariff to prevent the imposition of that maximum tariff against the Dominion of Canada. So far as I am concerned, I would have welcomed the imposition of the maximum tariff on the part of the United States of America against Canada, and I condemned then, as I condemn to-day, the action of this government in bringing about the reciprocal changes which were then made. That was followed up by the agitation which has brought about the proposition, which I am not at liberty, under the rules of the House, to discuss to-day, in regard to the reciprocal trade relations which are now proposed between the two countries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But later.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Yes, with the help of goodness, I purpose having my say, or, at all events, my vote, later on. And I hope, knowing the open mind of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to be able to give him, on that occasion, good and sufficient reasons why he should change his mind and seek some means of having the proposition thrown overboard. However, Sir, while I was making my researches in connection with this movement of a year ago, I ascertained beyond peradventure, from the city of Boston, that Rev. Mr. Macdonald, then editor, now part editor, of the 'Globe,' was in receipt of moneys from the American Peace Society from a fund headed by Mr. Ginn, of the well-known firm of Ginn, Heath & Co., of Boston, to advocate the claims of this peace society. I was asked to make that statement in the House. I declined to do so, because, as I said a week or so ago, I knew that some petty friend of Rev. Mr. Macdonald, some gentleman of small calibre occupying a pulpit, or having access to the public platform in some part of the country, would charge me with taking advantage of the privilege of parliament and refusing, or failing, to stand out openly before the public and make these statements. I went to St. Catharines and made the statement frankly and squarely on the public platform, that the Rev. Mr. Macdonald had, a year ago, undertaken to conduct these reciprocal negotiations between Canada and the United States regarding the maximum tariff and some changes to be made here. I pointed out that this had been carried out, and was being followed up by the present reciprocal negotiations. I pointed out, also, that it was a strange position of affairs, in a country like Canada, to have a man carrying on this agitation, receiving money from an American concern, and at the same time receiving part of his pay from the Toronto 'Globe.'

These statements have never been contradicted by the 'Globe' or by Mr. Macdonald. Never, they cannot contradict them truthfully, they are the facts. Then I went on to say that it struck me that this Peace Society movement, in practice at all events, was merely a movement to bring about closer union between Canada and the United States. That was the ground I took then. Sir, I have no reason to change my position, it is the ground I take to-day. We had an illustration of it here. We were told that this gentleman was in association with President Starr-Jordan—with a hyphen between the Starr and the Jordan—president of Leland Stanford University of California, and Mr. John R. Mott and others for the propagation of peace. We had an opportunity of hearing President Starr-Jordan in the city of Ottawa and he was also heard in Montreal and Toronto. He spoke under the auspices of the Peace Society, the subject being this Peace Propaganda, and the keynote of Professor Starr-Jordan's sermon or lecture was an insidious argument in favour of the union of Canada and the United States. He came out openly in favour of removing the customs officers between Canada and the United States, after approaching it most beautifully. If that is not preaching reciprocity, if that is not moving towards annexation then I would like to know what it is. Does any man mean to tell me that if the custom officers were removed, along the borders between Canada and the United States and kept on the outer borders of those countries against the rest of the world, that would not be annexation pure and simple? On the following Sunday Professor Starr-Jordan went into the pulpit of one of the churches of this city, and as I pointed out in my former address on this subject, as reported in the 'Free Press' of this city, he enunciated the identical views, that we wanted the removal of customs officers between the two countries. Was I or was I not justified in taking the stand I did upon this question? And when I was slandered by the 'Globe'—let me say I appreciate the slander from that source, I value it very highly—when I was slandered by the 'Globe' in this matter I replied to them in the House of Commons. On the following Sunday evening a parson in the city of Ottawa in his pulpit delivered an oration. This parson is an intimate friend of this Rev. Macdonald of the 'Globe'—with a capital 'R'—and this gentleman made use of words which I shall read to the House. Members of his congregation on that evening thought, and said that the words applied to me. I was told by a gentleman in the city of Ottawa that night that I had got slated by one of these great divines in the city of Ottawa, and he told me of this sermon. When I opened the 'Citizen' the next morning, I saw a report of the sermon in which he spoke of the rights of members of parliament. I read it. As I came up the street every other man I met drew my attention to the fact that I had been slated by this parson. Well, Sir, it is a free country. So far as I am concerned I have not the slightest objection to every parson in the country being free to use his pulpit for the propagation of any idea, politics or any other subject—I never hear them preaching the Gospel very much, some of them—that they choose to discuss. I believe in the utmost freedom in that regard, but I also believe in this aspect of the case also : Let those for whom they are lecturing pay the piper, and in the county I have the honour to represent I have taught the gentry of the Liberal faith that if they choose to use the pulpit and sermons in disseminating Grit principles, if we cannot convert them by prayer we will do it by fasting, or, as the poet Whittier says beautifully: 'By dint of fasting if we fail by prayer.' I now come to the article, and it is strange that it is in quotation marks. How did this article so suddenly get into the Ottawa 'Citizen' on the morning immediately after it was delivered? Was there a shorthand reporter there who took it down? I understand not. I will not charge the reverend gentleman with any more offences than possibly he is guilty of, but I understand that this was furnished to the Ottawa 'Citizen' from some source, possibly the reverend gentleman did not compose it but it was furnished to the Ottawa 'Citizen' in order that members of parliament might be taught where they belonged, and if they dared transgress the dictum of this gentleman and others like him, they might know what the future held in store for them. Here is the article :

RIGHTS OF PARLIAMENT.

Rev. J. W. H. Milne, in his sermon Sunday in Glebe Presbyterian church, in referring to men being able to differ and yet remain friends, said:

'Some men in politics can agree to differ. Some men can contend openly and honourably, yet withal retain no unkindly feeling. But every now and then there are men, even members of parliament, who are so venomous in their opposition to those who differ from them that they are ready to suggest or say anything that will leave a stain on the character of an opponent. There is something essentially villainous in the make up of a man who, in order to gain his ends politically, will accept any story floating about and then ask a question, because privileged, with the object of destroying another who may be opposed to him.

I may say, Sir, in passing that this is the twenty-first session I have had the honour of being a member of the parliament of Canada, and I have not known one solitary member of parliament to whom those remarks would apply in all that 21 years.

But worse still is it for any member of parliament, because shielded by four walls, to bring before the public the name of any man——

He might as well have printed Rev. James Macdonald, D.D., of the Toronto 'Globe.'

—any man against whom he may have a grudge, on mere pretext of suspicion. Any man may have his name brought before the House by any member. He may be maligned by inuendos. He may, although innocent, have suspicion cast on his character, yet have no means of redress.

This may be called the right of parliament, but it is not in harmony with the spirit of Christian civilization.

This is the same gentleman who a week ago assisted in passing one of the most disgraceful, unchristian and bedeviled motions that has ever disgraced any body of public men in the Dominion of Canada. Yet he uses the words 'Christian civilization.'

No civilized community would tolerate the highwayman who would jump from an ambush and steal the purse of a respectable citizen, and yet we permit political highwaymen to stand up in the House and rob sincere, earnest citizens of their character. There must eventually be some means provided which will prevent such public outrages.

I leave it to the First Minister, I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, if in your experience you have ever seen in this parliament any conduct which will justify such words as these from a minister of the Gospel. I have never seen it, Sir. I stand here today the best of friends with every man in the House of Commons on both sides. When I hit, the First Minister and every other man knows that I hit above the belt, fairly and squarely and manfully.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. I am told that our good friend who uttered these words now says that he did not refer to me.

He referred to me. I am not perhaps taking his own words because he says that he referred to all the members. But. if he did not refer to me. personally he must have referred to me as one of the members of parliament and in that instance I have a perfect right to defend my honour against this slander that this gentleman uttered from his pulpit in the city of Ottawa. But what do we now hear that his excuse is?—that 'I did not mean to refer to Hughes but to the member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce).' But he did not speak until two days afterwards, showing the very weak subterfuges of these gentlemen and the extremes to which they will resort when they want to cover up their tracks. It was to defend the honour of the Minister of Finance that this was done! No, Sir, he might as well come out in the open and frankly admit that he referred to me. There is no equivocation on my part; I referred to him; make no mistake about that. I did not try to hide myself behind any subterfuge and I am satisfied the public would respect him much more if he would come out manfully and say—he might resort to a little white fib, but I am not going to quibble as to that—I made a mistake ; I did refer to Hughes and I am now ready to take my medicine.' But, he does not do that, he squirms around and says: 'No, I meant the members altogether;' and in that he is endorsed by some hon. gentlemen occupying seats in this House who should be ashamed of themselves. He has gotten back at me in the Ministerial Association and I will deal with that organization in due time.

Now, Sir, valuing my good name as I do, valuing the honour of this House and valuing more than that the liberties of the people of this country and desiring to preserve them from ecclesiastical encroachment or tyranny whether coming from the Roman church or from any Protestant church, I shall have a word to say with regard to the action of these gentlemen. Ecclesiastical tyranny has in all ages, in all lands and at all periods of the world's history coerced humanity. I hesitate not to say so, I have said it before and I am endorsed in that by the best men in all churches. I know that most people hesitate when they are attacked by these gentlemen wearing—I said five cent white neckties—but, I must apologize to the House; I find that an ordinary batch can be got for 25 cents a dozen, but the style that most of them wear now comes a little higher. They are adopting what is called the Roman stole, a descendant of paganism, and this comes a little higher, or costs a little more money. But I know that the people dread running up against these gentlemen. Mark you, in any thing that I utter here to-day I am not saying one word with reference to those godly and good men that are found in all churches. I excepted them in my utterances upon another occasion and I will again except them from what I say here—men who are a credit to the churches with which they are connected, who are found among the ranks of the ministers of the gospel and there are no men who despise these weaklings more than those splendid fellows who are found in the ranks of Christian ministry up and down the country, but who cannot very well get rid of these others. They have to put up with them. The tendency is for humanity to bow before these gentlemen who pose as representing the church, and as being ministers of the gospel. Well, it is not my intention, at all events, to be so suppressed. I have had the privilege of meeting these gentlemen on other occasions. In my own county we had a very godly, Christian soul who, on the eve of an election, found it to be his duty to go from house to house—Tory house to house—and have a prayer for the success of the G. W. Ross government. A number of the gentlemen there were very much annoyed and I wanted to know why they were annoyed. They said: We are going to leave the Methodist church, but I said: Not at all, this fellow is only an excrescence on the church; what you should do, if you cannot reform him by prayer is to reform him by fasting; that will bring him around. So, when the next pay day came around, there was a very small stipend put up, the result being that he got out at the end of the year and balanced up by using some of the missionary funds.

On another occasion another gentleman, who did not belong to the Methodist church, thank fortune, but unfortunately belonged to the Presbyterian church, went from door to door. We found his trail, we saw that his buggy only turned into the Tory doors and he went from house to house, and although he was not a voter, he told them how disgusted he was with politics and that he would under no consideration think of voting for either candidate. The Tory party seemed to be a good deal the worst, but he would not vote for either. In that way he endeavoured to keep a great many of the honest Conservative voters from voting. But the boys in the country are instructed. They listened to this gentleman when he preached the gospel, even then taking only what suited them, but in politics they used their own judgment. I got wind of this and I brought it up in this gentleman's presence, as I usually do in dealing with such things, on the public platform in the village of Minden. I gave him an opportunity of stepping up on the platform and making good his position. Well, Sir, strange to say, the boys applied the fasting game there also, and that gentleman sought fields and pastures new. That is the way we treat political parsons in our country.

Now, Sir, I shall come to the resolution which these gentlemen have seen fit to pass. Let me say before I deal with it that the Ministerial Association in Ottawa should be and, as a rule is, a respectable body of men when they are all there. It is made up of a number of very good men, but I want to point out that on this occasion the big men in the church, possibly with one exception, and he is an innocent, dear old soul, they say—I do not know him at all—who could easily be misled, were absent. However, the gentleman who engineered the show was named Ramsay; I do not know that his name has ever got far through the length and breadth of the land; I never heard of him, but I notice that he is the gentleman who. on a certain occasion came to the assistance of Hon. G. W. Ross in the city of Ottawa, and that he attended his meeting here in order to impress the people with the idea that this man Ross after all was not as bad a fellow as he had been painted. This motion was moved by Rev. Dr. Ramsay. This is the gentleman who is reported by the Ottawa 'Citizen' of January 21, 1905, page 12, as being at the G. W. Ross meeting in the Russell Theatre. It says that on the platform at that meeting were Rev. Dr. Ramsay, Rev. Mr. Reynolds, Rev. Wm. McIntosh and Rev. Mr. Milne. These gentlemen were on the platform at that meeting and one of these is the gentleman who got back at me the other day The resolution was moved by Rev. Dr. Ramsay, and seconded by Rev. Mr. Deeprose. I understand that Mr. Deeprose is a very respectable gentleman, but quite unsophisticated and not up to the arts of these gentlemen who were engineering this affair to suit their little purpose. The resolution was passed unanimously. But at this point I may interject the remark that the leading ministers of the city were not present.

Dr. Herridge, a gentleman whose name is held in high respect, was not there. If Dr. Herridge had joined in condemning me, or if the Rev. Dr. Henderson had joined in passing a resolution condemning me, I would have sat up and hesitated to ask if I had not done something wrong. These are gentlemen whose names carry weight; they are gentlemen of Christian standing, they are gentlemen whose actions as well as utterances are never voiced along the line of politics in the pulpit. I do not know what their political inclinations may be, but these are gentlemen whose names stand high in the Christian world throughout the length and breadth of the land. Neither was Archbishop Hamilton present, or the Rev. Canon Kittson, nor Rev. Mr. Peever, and I submit that not one of these present but Rev. Mr. Deeprose, has any standing. That is the statement furnished me, I am not vouching for it, by authorities in the city. The resolution goes on:

The Ministerial Association of Ottawa, made up of members of various religious denominations, takes this first opportunity to express the surprise and pain——

I will endeavour to give them some balm for their pain:

—with which it has learned of the attack recently made by a member of parliament upon one of our own number.

Now, I don't mind any crowd standing altogether. You all heard the story of the lawyer—I do not know whether it was the member for Pictou in his first case or not—who, when he was addressing the jury passed up and down amongst their ranks and muttered something to them, and the jury, without leaving the box, stood up and said: 'Not guilty.' After it was all over the judge said to him: How did you manage to hypnotize that jury, and he replied: I just muttered to each man as I went along that now is the time for a crowd of fellows like us to stand together.

Mr. CARVELL. Tell the rest of it.

Mr. HUGHES. There may be a little of that spirit abroad among these gentlemen. I do not know whether there was or not, but if so, I do not blame them much:

—upon one of our own number, Rev. J. W. H. Milne. Some years ago Mr. Milne served as our secretary with great efficiency.

He has evidently been always on the job:

He also filled at one time the office of president with tact and dignity. After these many years he is honoured by us all for his geniality and integrity——

In this case it may be something like the darky who was brought before a magistrate, and the magistrate said: This is the first time you were ever up before me, and the darky replied: Yes, Massa, please the Lawd, in his infinite goodness and mercy, this is the first time this here darky has ever been cotched:

—his faithfulness as a pastor and power as a preacher, his breadth of mind and fervor of zeal in the advancement of Christ's Kingdom——

Well, so far as I can find out he has been doing all this chiefly along Grit political lines in the city of Ottawa, and I never knew there was a department of Christ's kingdom for that organization. There may be, but we will inquire into it.

—and we esteemed it a privilege to possess his personal friendship.

I do not blame them in the slightest degree for that. Here it refers to the 'Hansard' report,' and while I do not wish to reflect on the gentlemen who report for 'Hansard,' that report of my address on that occasion by some mischance, contained two of the most outrageous misprints or mistakes that has ever fallen to the lot of any man to have credited to him. However, you would naturally suppose that these gentlemen would have got a corrected copy of 'Hansard' and that they would have done me or done themselves the honour of asking for a corrected copy. Oh, no, they were going it blind:

We have listened to the 'Hansard' report of the speech of which Mr. Milne was assailed.

I stand here to say that Mr. Milne was not assailed, Mr. Milne was exposed, as I am going to expose him a little more to-day:

Together with the 'Citizen's' summary of that part of the sermon which gave an excuse for the hon. gentleman's denunciations.

Now, I ask the Ministerial Association how they knew I referred to Mr. Milne? They take his word that he did not refer to me. How do they know? Surely, if my description of this gentleman is so terrible it cannot apply to any one of them. How do they know it referred to him? They might as well come out in the open. I referred to Mr. Milne, and I admit it, and Mr. Milne referred to me and he won't admit it. There is the difference between us.

It seems to us remarkable that a single member of parliament should apply to himself alone remarks of quite a general nature.

If the remarks were not applied to an individual then it is doubly cowardly on the part of this man to stand in the pulpit and slander 220 odd innocent men for the sake of getting at one man. If he refers to me let him have the manhood to say so. The excuse is now given, I am told, that he referred to the member for Algoma. That is a subterfuge, the member for Algoma did not speak for two days afterwards.

We feel humiliated—

It would take a good deal to humiliate the gentlemen who drew up this resolution:

—that any man should pollute the atmosphere of our national parliament with language so abusive.

Pollute the atmosphere—why, 'eau de Cologne' compared with a polecat would not be in it with my remarks compared to theirs.

—so abusive as seems to have been used on this occasion.

They seem to think that my statement and the narrative of facts I gave have been a little hard, but what I did give was a narrative of facts, plain straight facts, not one of which can be successfully contradicted. Before I am through I will show whether they can be proven or not, if the Ministerial Association is anxious to follow it up:

Not less deplorable do we think it that the representative of a Canadian constituency should unrebuked have publicly repeated to the detriment of a fellow citizen assertions of some irresponsible tale bearer which he does not pretend to have verified.

I verified every statement that was made to me. Members of Mr. Milne's congregation and gentlemen in the city of Ottawa will verify every statement I made. The only one upon which there can be any possible doubt is whether he referred to me or not. If he referred to me individually, then I have accepted it, and if he referred to me as one of the 200 odd members of parliament, I have accepted it as one of these. In the first instance, if he referred to me specifically he would be more manly, but if he referred generically then his statement is utterly cowardly from any point of view you like to take it. Then, the resolution goes on:

We accept without reserve Mr. Milne's assurance, corroborated by the members of his congregation that these assertions are absolutely false.

We will see about that. They go on:

With him, moreover, we regret that there are members of parliament so venomous as to be ready to suggest or say anything that will leave a stain on the character of an opponent, and affirm that such conduct is not in harmony with the spirit of Christian civilization.

Well, Sir, if anything more slanderous and cowardly than that can be produced I want to see it. Now, what are the facts? They have no evidence to back them, not a tittle of evidence for one assertion they made. They didn't even get a correct copy of the 'Hansard'; they did not even ask me to go before them and justify the statement I made concerning one of their members. They showed no Christian spirit in the matter from start to finish. Why, a set of desperadoes, the commonest political hacks I ever saw, could not formulate a resolution under conditions more degrading than these gentlemen who have formulated that. They followed no rules of evidence whatever, they simply took Mr. Milne's statement. And, Sir, the report was prepared, I understand, before they ever went to the meeting. Now, I stated that Mr. Milne, previous to the elections some years ago—the time the Ross government was beaten—had expressed himself as antagonistic to, or at least regretted the actions of the Ross government and condemned them in general terms. There was nothing wrong in that. Lots of Liberals did that and lots of them afterwards fell back into the ranks, and that is not a serious offence. I rather appreciate his manhood if he did condemn them. Then the next statement I made was (and I want to point out this is one of the statements the Ministerial Association says is absolutely untrue), the next statement I made was that he appeared on the Ross platform. The Ministerial Association declares that is untrue. In the Otttwa 'Citizen,' January 21, 1905, page 12, will be found the report of a meeting in the city of Ottawa, and the four clergymen, Dr. Ramsay, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. McIntosh and Mr. Milne are reported as being present. And, when some of the congregation objected to the active part Mr. Milne was taking in that election—I have this from the particular gentleman who was spoken to in the matter, and I will be glad to give the evidence to the Ministerial Association if they choose to act as gentlemen and Christian judges, but if they are going to act as Grit heelers I will have nothing to do with them. One of these gentlemen remonstrated with Mr. Milne for the active part he was taking in the matter, and Mr. Milne said to him: 'Why, you are as bad as Russia in the city of Ottawa, if a man cannot take part in these matters.'

The next statement I made was, that he had arranged with the Rev. Mr. Macdonald (with a capital R), of the Toronto 'Globe' to come down and address the electors in his church on either the Sunday immediately before the election or the Sunday before that; and I stated that this was opposed by certain members of the Session. I will now go further, and say that the Session took the matter up, and that two gentlemen were deputed to wait on Mr. Milne and arrange with him that Mr. Macdonald should not come here. This is one of the statements which the Ministerial Association declare is absolutely without foundation. I repeat that statement to-day, and I will go further and say that Mr. Milne afterwards stated that Mr. Macdonald could not come. That was the reason he did not come. I can give the names of the members of the church Session who were deputed to see Mr. Milne, and have Mr. Macdonald called off from preaching. And yet, I am branded before the Dominion of Canada by this outfit in the city of Ottawa as having stated what was false and untrue.

The only other statement which I made, which it is necessary to refer to, was this, that the Rev. Mr. Milne had furnished, in one way or another, to the Grit leaders a list of the members of his congregation, marked as to how they would vote and how they could be influenced. I stand here ready to produce an affidavit of a gentleman in the city of Ottawa, who will swear that that is true. A gentleman who subsequently tackled Mr. Milne about the matter, arranged to go with him and meet the gentlemen referred to, but when the time came, Mr. Milne did not appear. But the gentleman found out that in the meantime, Mr. Milne had gone to this man privately, and arranged that the difficulty should be smoothed over; and when he denied this, he was told a word of four letters, which I will not repeat here, by the member of his congregation, but a word which comes with very bad grace to one who poses as a minister of the Gospel. It is an old and well recognized principle that:

> Of all the ills with which mankind is curst,
> Ecclesiastical tyranny is the worst.

I wish to point out that not one word that I have uttered has reference to the splendid ministers of the gospel, who are found in all parts of Canada and in all lands. These are men of the highest Christian character and godliness, in word and act, and they are men that one is proud to meet. But these men do not endorse such actions as those I have referred to. I go further and say that the disreputable men in the Christian ministry are responsible for the fact that Christianity, in 1900 years, with all the energy and money expended upon it, has made such little progress. It is owing to the fact that there are these objectionable men to be found in the Christian ministry more than to any other single cause. One of these men will neutralize the good work of 50 good men. One of them will cause more suspicion in the public mind than the actions of a hundred splendid, noble men of the church. I know it personally from this better class of men, that the great drawback they feel to the Christian church in the land, is the fact that there are mountebank clergymen, who are always seeking their own advancement, as this gentleman sought his own advancement.

Let it be clearly understood that in my action towards the Rev. Mr. Macdonald of the Toronto 'Globe' I acted from the highest viewpoint of the British Empire and humanity. I had nothing personal in view. Who dragged the matter into the Glebe church! The gentleman who occupies the pulpit of that church. He made the attack on members of parliament, whether he meant the members generally or me personally; and if there is anything coming before the Ministerial Association, I am not the man who brought it. They passed the resolution; I had no part in it; and let them take their medicine in any way I choose to give it to them.

Mr. Milne lobbied some years ago for his father. I am not saying a word against the old gentleman. I am sorry to bring this in, but I do it just to show you the class of man he is. His father is now in the Post Office Department in the city of Ottawa, as a third-class clerk. He was appointed in 1901. He was born in the year 1835. He is thus 76 years of age, considerably over the retiring age. This is a motive for the gentleman's loyalty. Others of these gentlemen are seen frequenting the halls and corridors of parliament, dancing attendance on ministers, and may possibly have a similar interest in doing so. The famous historian and divine, Rev. Dr. Robertson of Scotland, stated that there were three classes of men to whom no quarter should be given—the hypocrite, the pharisee and the tyrant. There is no use, he said, of reasoning with these three classes of men; there is only one way to reach them—expose them with the strong whip and lash of public censure and public condemnation.

Now, Sir, if any of these gentlemen of the Protestant Ministerial Association approach me on the morrow, I shall be glad to assume full responsibility for everything I have uttered here to-day, by giving them a revised copy of 'Hansard' with my endorsement upon it, and with my certificate that I accept full responsibility for everything I say to-day. Then they will not be able to bring the charge that I am shielding myself behind the privileges of parliament. I have given the evidence to prove every charge that I have made with regard to Mr. Milne. The only point about which there is any possibility of equivocation on his part, is his statement that he referred to all the members of this House and not to me specifically. The more manly thing would be, to say, that he referred to me specifically, and that he did not slander the other 200 members or more of this House. 'An equivocation is half a falsehood, and a falsehood is all of Hades,' and I charge the minister who passed that resolution with being guilty of deception, with being guilty of falsehood, and with being guilty of slander; and I will sign that statement any day that the Protestant Ministerial Association comes to me and asks me to do so. Sir, I rather enjoy the old story told in New England years ago. Whittier put it very well:

> So this is all, the utmost reach,
> Of priestly power the mind to fetter,
> Now shame upon ye, parish popes,
> Was it thus with those your predecessors
> Who sealed with racks, and fire and ropes,
> Their loving kindness to transgressors.

I can imagine this outfit, in the old palmy days, when the strong arm of temporal power was at their beck and call, trailing your humble servant before them and saying to him: Now, dance, you terrier, dance; and then following some of the good old Christian devices, such as bore his tongue with a red hot iron, chopping off his ears, or cutting off his nose. These things have been done by Protestants as well as by the others. We have had women thrashed naked through the streets of Boston, and hanged to the nearest gibbet. But the other fellows did it in even a more drastic manner. These are all part and parcel of the old days of intolerance, and that spirit still exists in the hearts of men to-day, not only in the church, but out of it.

As an instance of this, just let me point to the Ministerial Association. I wonder what the Master, whom these people pretend to follow, would have done under similar circumstances and conditions. Even supposing that I am all that they say—and I am not anything of the kind, for I claim to be just as righteous as any of them, which is not saying much—but, what would the great Master have done ! I am satisfied that He would have followed an entirely different line of action, and it would have been more becoming on the part of these gentlemen if they had shown a little more Christian spirit and had not been so anxious to whitewash one of their own kind. I do not propose to allow myself to be placarded in the way these gentlemen have placarded me all over the country, without showing them up in their true light. In my own county, the exponents of religion, mind their own business, except in the case of one of them, who meddled in the last election, and he had to leave the county. He was deserted by his congregation, and we did not take long to get rid of him. Fasting is the surest way to cure a gentleman of that kind, of this disease. Close up the purse strings, and he will immediately see the errors of his ways, and conclude that if he is going to be in religion, he had better stick to it, and leave politics alone, and if he is going to be in politics, he had better give up his whole time to them. I find that some members of Ministerial Association,—not the big, noble minded men of the organization at all, but the smaller fellows, the men who have not that breadth of heart which they would have, if they really loved one another—have passed resolutions on many an occasion about other people in higher positions than myself. I find that even His Excellency the Governor General, the representative of the King, the Supreme Head of the British Empire, has fallen under their censure, for they passed resolutions condemning him for having gone to a horse race. Well, I have never found any fault with a man of the gospel for going to see the circus. These gentlemen take the children to the menagerie, but they always wait to see the girls dance and ride fast horses. I approve of their going to see the circus, but why make the excuse that they are taking the children to the menagerie ? Why not frankly admit that they are going to see the circus, and are taking the children with them ? We have also had examples of these extreme members of clerical organizations seeking to invade the private homes of people in the country in order to find out if they indulge in a game of bridge on a Sunday afternoon or in a glass of wine. Some years ago a number of respectable gentlemen in the city of Toronto heard that there were living pictures in the exhibition being held in that city. They were informed that a lot of girls had been brought from the slums of yankee cities and were dressed up in tights and were posing as living pictures, and the question was mooted whether it was proper or not. Well, these gentlemen appointed a delegation to inspect, and the delegation after viewing the show for a week or so, came to the conclusion that they were satisfied with it. Why, some of these worthies had the hardihood to condemn even the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), for some official act, and also some of the judges in Ontario. It is nothing but condemnation all over, but I fail to find where the Master followed the same line. He did not go about always condemning. The only time I find condemnation from His lips, is when he was dealing with just such subjects as this hypocritical crowd, and then he was severe, and rightly severe. These people show the same spirit as was shown by the early pagan priests and which was displayed afterwards by the clerical tyrants of Christendom. The earliest annals we have in history recount the tyranny, the villanny, the vindictive spirit displayed by the early pagan priests against those who differed from them, and when democratic Christianity vanished from the face of the earth and autocratic Christianity took its place, we find our friends of the Roman Catholic church beheading, butchering and massacreing whenever persecution suited their purpose. Later on we find our Protestant friends of the various denominations, pursuing the same unchristian mode in order to get rid of those who did not agree with them. In all days and lands, there has been an unwritten law, giving immunity to the clergy of all denominations which, I say, is not in the best interests of any nation. The only immunity to which any man is entitled, is that which comes to him from gaining the respect of his fellow men, by the rectitude of his conduct, and his broadmindedness, tolerance and charity. All the immunity the ministers of the Gospel need, is that which comes from the respect to which every decent man is entitled.

Let me give you an instance from the good, old days, and mark you, there are many who claim that the world was as far advanced centuries ago, as it is now. There are many who claim that the old Phoenican Empire was as great and progressive as those which take the lead to-day. In many lines we know that it was just as far ahead as we are. It had large colonies and made advances in manufactures and in science, such as we have not yet attained. Yet the old Phoenician Empire vanished and humanity fell for centuries, under the heel of the tyrant; and if to-day we occupy the position we do, it is due to the diffusion of education throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire and the carrying of that education into other lands. There is the reason why I am so persistent in endeavouring to bring about the union of Britain and her colonies. I foresee the danger to humanity should the British Empire become dismembered, and that old, grand institution, the British constitution, fall into desuetude. It would then be a very easy matter to have the world back to where it was when the Albigenses and the Waldenses strove for liberty.

The spirit that brought about the butchery of these splendid people is still dominant in the hearts of some men, though they have not the power, thank Heaven, to carry their ideas into effect. The same spirit that sent Cranmer and Ridley and Latimer to the stake is abroad in the world to-day. The same spirit that brought about the persecutions under John Calvin—a man admirable in many ways—that brought about the persecutions in the New England states of people for seeking to worship Almighty God each according to the dictates of his own conscience, is abroad in the world to-day. And the only safeguard that any nation can have is to make an absolute separation between church and state. Let the clergymen, if they wish to preach politics, get out of the pulpit—for the people will not tolerate politics there, and take their places as ordinary citizens, and not seek to give their political utterances the authority of their priestly office.

What prove these but that time was ne'er so black
As ghostly cheer and pious thanks to lack.

How can one describe the days of the persecutions in New England? The men who had fought for freedom in England, the followers of Cromwell, left Great Britain for the right to worship Almighty God each according to the dictates of his own conscience. But soon each primitive community fell under the sway of a tyrant ecclesiastic. Whittier expresses it all, and I will take the liberty of quoting his words:

O glorious days when church and state
Were wedded by your spiritual fathers
And on submissive shoulders sat
Your Wilsons and your Cotton Mathers
No vile 'itinerant' then could mar
The beauty of your tranquil Zion,
But at his peril of the scar
Of hangman's whip and branding iron.

Then wholesome laws relieved the church
Of heretic and mischief maker;
And priest and bailiff joined in search,
By turns, of Papist, witch and Quaker.
The stocks were at each church's door,
The gallows stood on Boston Common;
A Papist's ears the pillory bore,
The gallows' rope a Quaker woman.

Your fathers dealt not as ye deal,
With 'non-professing' frantic teachers;
They bored the tongue with red hot steel
And flayed the backs of 'female preachers.'
Old Newbury, had her fields a tongue,
And Salem's streets, could tell their story
Of fainting women dragged along,
Gashed by the whip, accursed and gory.

Why, Sir, it is not many generations since women were tied to the tail of the cart and flogged naked in the city of Boston because they chose to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and in a way different from that approved by their persecutors.

There is one famous instance of a man named Macy—the story is told by Whittier—who had harboured a Quaker for the brief space of one hour, and given the poor fellow a meal. Along came the sheriff and one of these bewigged parsons and demanded his surrender. Macy was going to defend his position with his musket, when the Quaker, declaring 'No blood shall be shed on my account,' walked out and surrendered himself. And a week or so later, after a mock trial, he was hanged for the offence of being a Quaker. And Macy was to be prosecuted, but he and his wife made their escape to the shores of a little lake, and, taking a boat there, struck out and left the community. The parson ordered them to come back, and when they refused cried, 'Beware the church's curse,' and received Macy's answer, 'Curse an thou wilt, but thy blessing, prithee, spare.' In leaving this subject of the New England persecution, let me quote again the words of Whittier:

> No, for yourselves alone, I turn
> The pages of intolerance over
> That, in their spirit, dark and stern,
> Ye haply may your own discover.

People say: There is no good in going back into these dark days of history; these things are gone, and the world can never come to such a stage again. Why, Sir, within twelve months, in Barcelona, in Spain, another ministerial association was instrumental in having one of the finest men and greatest advocates of freedom shot to death. I refer to Franceso Ferrer. Instances of this kind are found in almost every country, where, if it is not open persecution, it is persecution in office, persecution in society, that is sought to be carried out by dragging the ecclesiastical affairs of the country into the life of the nation.

Now, I come to another ecclesiastical matter. Only last year, we had an exhibition in the city of Montreal, of this ecclesiastical spirit. The Eucharistic Congress met in Montreal a year ago. Standing here, I say that if I had been managing the affairs of the city of Montreal at that time, I would not have objected to the procession that took place. I believe in the utmost freedom in these matters. I fought with the tongue—but we were prepared to take action if necessity arose—that the Salvation Army might be free to parade the streets of the town in which I live. But when it comes to dragging the whole country into a matter of this kind when we find the Public Works Department decorating the public buildings in that city—the Post Office Department, I believe it was—decorating these public buildings with flags other than the flags of Britain; for I am told that there was but one British flag on that whole building, the others being flags representing his Holiness at Rome, I have no hesitation in saying that that should not be allowed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish the House to misunderstand the case. I may inform him that any decoration of these buildings is under the direction of the Public Works Department.

Mr. HUGHES. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is quite right. I have the correspondence with the Minister of Public Works concerning the protests that were made. But the decorations were there all the same. And I repeat that there is only one way for this country in matters of this kind, and that is to keep ecclesiasticism, whatever its source, out of the public life of the nation. If this thing is to be allowed to go on in the city of Montreal on the occasion of a Eucharistic congress, then, on the 12th of July, if we demand it—but we could never be insane enough to do so—the post office in Lindsay ought to be decorated with Orange colours. If it is conceded in one case it must be conceded in the other. Let these institutions keep to their own business; let them keep out of public affairs. And men there were, officers of the Dominion of Canada, who took part in that Eucharistic procession in their garb of office. I am surprised that these men had not more self-respect than to parade the streets in official costumes as part of a procession under the auspices of an ecclesiastical institution. I am amazed at the want of personal self-respect on the part of such men—to be so carried away by this spirit as to be found in such a procession in their garb of office. I would say, 'God bless them,' if they walked in such a procession in their individual capacity; that is none of my affair; they can decorate themselves in any way they choose, they can garb themselves as grotesquely as they please, they can go with rings on their fingers and bells on their toes if they choose, and that is their own affair. But it becomes my affair when they don the garb of an officer of the Dominion of Canada, I care not what position that garb may indicate, to march in such a procession. And I say it is time for the nation to declare that this must stop, and that these ecclesiastical matters must be kept out of our public life.

I am sorry I have had to occupy the attention of the House at such length, but I want to point out that every statement I have made from start to finish in connection either with the reciprocity arrangement, with Mr. Macdonald of the 'Globe', or with the 'Globe' itself, or Dr. Starr-Jordan, or Mr. Milne, is borne out by absolute facts. The only statement about which there is the slightest possible chance of difference is that Mr. Milne says he did not refer to me personally. If he did not he referred to me as one of the 220 members of this House, and I have a right to defend myself as one of them. In order to get at one man he slandered the whole batch. I stand here to say that my motive in introducing this subject of reciprocity long ago and bringing in Mr. Macdonald was in order as far as possible to defeat the attempt to bring about commercial union between Canada and the United States because I believe that is the ultimate ambition of the gentlemen who are engineering that to-day. I am not worried by being attacked from the pulpit, although every one knows what the effect of an attack from the pulpit is if the man has anything behind them. Years ago in my own riding I have had these attacks, but I do not think I will have any more; as I said there is only one way to bring about the proper conduct of these matters and that is if we cannot bring it about by prayer, then let us bring it about by fasting.

Mr. MACDONELL (South Toronto). As an ordinary member of this House, I cannot retain my place without making one word at least of comment upon the remarks just dropped by the hon. member (Mr. Hughes). With that hon. gentleman's quarrel with the clergyman in question I have no concern whatever. I have no concern and no comment to make upon his difference with this particular clergyman or this or that particular church or any other particular matter regarding which he has a desire to speak to a question of privilege in this House, but in a word, I do not desire to sit here and hear an attack, a slander upon religion and the various clergymen of religion without discrimination, of their order. I wish to put myself on record as not concurring in the remarks which have gone down on 'Hansard.' The hon. gentleman has gone out of his way to attack clergymen who do not belong to the church to which the Rev. Mr. Milne or the Dr. Starr-Jordan belong. He has referred to clergymen, priests and ecclesiastics of the Roman Catholic church, both of the present and past generation. His reference to these gentlemen is entirely unnecessary and quite gratuitous and in no way concerns the dispute the hon. gentleman had with the particular clergymen in question at the present time. I cannot permit the hon. gentleman to state that humanity has been cursed by ecclesiastics of the order and the faith to which I have alluded, nor can I sit patiently and hear his remarks directed to what he calls ecclesiastical tyranny when directed in the most indiscriminate and general way without any reference whatever to the question of privilege to which he has risen.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to no question of privilege whatever.

Mr. MACDONELL (South Toronto). You spoke to a question of privilege.

Mr. HUGHES. There was no question of privilege.

Mr. MACDONELL (South Toronto). I think he spoke to a question of privilege and exceeded the privilege. I simply rise to say I will not permit his remarks to go on 'Hansard' without my name being associated as entirely dissenting from them, strongly disapproving of them; and speaking as far as I am concerned, and with reference to the church to which he alluded, I make a protest against the language he has used.

Mr. HENDERSON. Fearing that silence on my part might cause people outside to think that I had sympathy with a great deal the hon. gentleman has said in his lengthy speech, I rise to make the declaration that I am not at all in sympathy with the discussion of a question of this kind in the House of Commons. I would not like to be identified with it, nor would I like people outside whom I know and whom I respect to think that I sympathized with the statements made this afternoon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, not to speak of the clergymen who belong to my own faith, but speaking for the clergymen of the country in general I wish to disassociate myself and I believe all the members on this side of the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX—from the very serious and violent remarks made by the hon. gentleman. I do not think that any well-thinking Canadian can approve of these remarks. I have no mandate to defend the clergy against the aspersions of the hon. gentleman. I have no brief to speak for my clergy, nor for the Protestant clergy, but I think that this Canada of ours can boast of having in both the Protestant and Roman Catholic clergy, high, elevated minds of which any country could well be proud.

Mr. MILLER. I have no part in this matter at all. I did not listen to the address the hon. gentleman delivered in the House a few days ago, but since that time a member of Mr. Milne's church in Ottawa, I refer to Mr. Reid, of the Sun Life Assurance Company, a very estimable and prominent citizen of Ottawa, came to me and said that the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton were quite incorrect as to that church having refused church and pulpit to the Rev. Dr. Macdonald of Toronto. Mr. Reid said that Mr. Macdonald had been invited by their congregation to take their pulpit on the Sunday in question, but had declined the invitation, it not having been possible for him to be present. I do not think that if the hon. member was as brave in this matter as he has often proclaimed he was in South Africa, he would have made an attack upon gentlemen who have not the same opportunity that he has of defending themselves, and speaking in this House. It is not so bad, perhaps, to attack the Rev. Mr. Macdonald, because Mr. Macdonald can reply through the medium of his newspaper, but Mr. Milne has no such opportunity and I do not think it was any example of bravery or chivalry for the hon. member to attack Mr. Milne in the way he has done.

Mr. HUGHES. Before you leave the chair I wish to correct a statement made by the hon. member for South Grey, the only member of the House who was base enough to make out that I had boasted of my bravery in South Africa. It is the privilege of every coward to sneer at those who went to South Africa. I never directly or indirectly in this House made any reference to my bravery in South Africa. The hon. gentleman and one other hon. gentleman have been found base and degraded enough to charge me with having boasted of my actions in South Africa. I take back the word and apologize to the House for having used it, but language could hardly be found harsh enough to describe the spirit of the gentleman making such a remark as he did.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. Far be it from me to question the bravery of any man who, with the aid of one other, rounded up 300 Boers. Nothing was farther from my mind.

Mr. HUGHES. Coward.

DUTY ON FRUIT.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, if this exposition is finished I would like to call the attention of the House, without entering upon any discussion, to a message I have received which I think should go upon record as soon as possible. To this message I would ask the special attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) who especially represents the province affected. The message reads:

Mission Junction, British Columbia,
February 9, 1911.

J. D. Taylor, M.P.,
Ottawa.

That in the opinion of the Hatzic Fruit Growers' Association any alteration in the tariff now existing on fruit and vegetables imported from the United States as proposed by the reciprocity agreement would cause widespread ruin amongst the many small growers, depreciation of land values and disaster to numerous towns now solely dependent upon the industry. We rely upon you to oppose the measure strenuously.

J. McCHIE.
Secretary.

I may add that messages to this effect have been before the government since last session, when a project of interfering with the fruit duties was first mooted.

FISHING VESSELS AND CUSTOMS REGULATIONS.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if he would take over Bill (No. 27), respecting licenses to fishing vessels, and Bill (No. 28) to amend the Customs Act? My purpose in making this request is to facilitate action upon them. The object of the legislation in question is to provide a system under which fishing vessels of Canadian register may enjoy greater freedom of movement, by avoiding the delays which now occur owing to the present necessity of reporting at the customs house; to invite thereby more frequent landing of their fares by those engaged in the fresh fish branch of the trade; to aid in placing at the disposal of consumers in central Canada Canadian caught fish in the primest condition possible, and to help in stimulating fishing on the Atlantic coast of Canada by removing an exacting regulation which interferes with the movements of vessels, more especially those engaged in the fresh fish branch of the trade.

Last year I introduced similar legislation, but at the request of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) I did not press it that session for a good and sufficient public reason, namely that the Hague arbitration was then impending. This session I desired the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be present when these measures were discussed, but upon both occasions, when these Bills were reached the minister was unavoidably absent from the House, and I think, from the city of Ottawa. There is now a special reason why I think this legislation should be taken up as a government measure, namely, that if the present reciprocity agreement is carried into effect, American fishermen will have an advantage over Canadian fishermen with respect to the facility with which the movements of the vessels can be carried on. Fishing vessels of the United States under license are not obliged to report at custom houses in the United States, and in the alteration to be made in our regulations under the modus vivendi they will be permitted forty-eight hours instead of twenty-four hours to remain in a Canadian port without the necessity of reporting. It is for these reasons that I would make the request that the government take these two Bills over as government orders, and have them at least carried as far as the Committee on Marine and Fisheries where the merits can be considered.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether it will be possible to accede to the request of my hon. friend. But I would be very glad to consider it. If I remember aright the object of the Bills is already covered by a regulation of the Department of Customs. It is a matter which appertains to the Department of Customs more than to my department, and I think I would have to confer with my colleague the Minister of Customs before saying that I would adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend.

GRAND TRUNK TRAINMENS' STRIKE.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) to a matter in order that he may inform the House upon one or two points in connection with the strike of Grand Trunk Railway employees, who are in the train, and yard service, which terminated on the 31st July last. This is not a matter that will be dealt with by Judge Barron in the investigation which he is holding. It is a matter as to the status the men will occupy who have been taken back or who would be taken back. I desire to ask the minister, first, whether, by the settlement of the 31st July between the Grand Trunk railway and its employees in the train and yard service, it was intended and understood that the parties were putting an end to all existing disputes and difficulties, (2) that the men should be put back into the positions they held previous to the strike; and (3) was it understood that the men should be reinstated or were they only to be taken back as new men? I had the question jotted down, and I might pass the paper over to the minister so that he might understand them.

Mr. KING. I think I can answer my hon. friend. My recollection is that it was expected by the settlement, that all existing differences would be at an end, and that the men were to return to the company's service and to be reinstated in their former positions.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what I thought.

Mr. KING. 'Were the men to be reinstated or were they only to be taken back as new men?' In regard to that question I think the agreement will have to speak for itself. The word in the agreement is that the men should be——

Mr. LENNOX. Put back.

Mr. KING. Yes, put back in their former positions.

Mr. LENNOX. What I want to call the attention of the minister to is that it is a very important point whether the men were reinstated in the broadest sense of the term or were being put back as new men. I can hardly conceive that it was contemplated that they were to be put back as new men. Are we to understand from the minister that that distinction was not adverted to at all and that he did not take that into consideration? I certainly would think that it would be the object of the minister to see that the agreement was in such a form as that the men, when they were taken back, would get the same positions that they would have occupied if no strike had taken place. Otherwise, it would be an idle sham, and it would deceive the men. If it meant that a man who had been in the service of the company for twenty years or more and who would be entitled to a pension was to be taken back as a new man, and not to be entitled to his pension it would certainly be a most unfortunate result.

Mr. KING. As regards pensions, when the matter was under consideration, the leaders of the men who were negotiating on behalf of the employees took the position that they did not care about pensions one way or the other, that if the company cared to regard them as having violated its agreement with them to the extent of breaking any regulation which governed pensions the company was perfectly free to put that interpretation upon it. I was rather surprised myself at them taking that stand, but they did take it and they gave me to understand that in so far as pensions were concerned, if they had forfeited the pension by going out, and if the company cared to put that interpretation upon it they were free to do so.

Mr. LENNOX. Am I to understand the minister to say that his mind is clear that those who represented the men were at least indifferent as to the question of what position the men would occupy as regards pensions? That is what I understand the minister to say: that those who represented the employees of the railroad companies on that occasion expressed themselves indifferent as to whether the company should consider the pensions forfeited or not. I may say to the minister—of course, with every deference to what he says—that unless he is absolutely clear that that was the understanding, I would be surprised to hear that such was the case. The information I have got so far, and I am endeavouring to get more explicit information, is that the men throughout the country generally, and I understand, also, those who represented them—thoroughly understood at that time that except as to those who had been guilty of acts of violence such as expressed in the agreement, it put an end to all existing disputes and difficulties, and that the men would be restored to all the rights and privileges that they had before the strike had been declared.

Mr. KING. I am perfectly clear in my own mind as to what took place at the time, and I remember that the subject of pensions was never mentioned in any of the joint discussions between the men and the company. I remember, also, quite distinctly, that, apart from the joint discussion which took place, and at which the Minister of Militia and myself were present, the leaders of the men spoke nothing about the question of pensions. I brought that up myself.

Mr. LENNOX. To whom does the hon. gentleman refer as leaders?

Mr. KING. Mr. Garrettson, Mr. Lee, Mr. Berry and Mr. Murdock. I think all of these gentlemen took the same position on the matter. The question of pensions was a separate matter altogether, and it was not one that entered into the settlement one way or the other.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Labour being a party to the agreement that was signed on behalf of the men and the railway company, will it be laid on the table of the House?

Mr. KING. It was laid on the table of the House some months ago. We are going into Committee of Supply on the estimates for the Department of Labour, and possibly if any gentleman wishes to discuss that matter to-night it would be a good time.

Mr. LENNOX. So far as I am concerned, I am not proposing to discuss it. I only want to get information now, and at a subsequent date I shall discuss it.

DUTY ON FRUIT.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). Before Mr. Speaker leaves the chair I desire to read the following telegram, which I have received to-day:

Kamloops, B.C., Feb. 9, 1911.

Martin Burrell, M.P.,
Ottawa.

The British Columbia Inland Board of Trade fearing that the proposed reciprocity may seriously affect the lumber and fruit industry of this province strongly urges that the government thoroughly consider the question and respectfully suggests that a committee be appointed to investigate and report upon conditions before legally passing same.

M. S. WADE, President.
JOHN F. SMITH, Sec'y.

I might say, without wishing to discuss this matter, an opportunity for which will be afforded early next week, and no doubt the government have already had as much as they can stand in one day along that line, that I have had a great many messages of this kind, which I hope to refer to later on, and I presume the government has been receiving messages from my province fully endorsing this telegram during the course of the last few weeks.

Mr. BLACK. If it were in order I could bring a whole sheaf of letters from the fruit growers in Nova Scotia, all of whom, to a man, are in favour of reciprocity. I think it would be impossible to find a fruit grower in my province who is not in favour of reciprocity in natural products.

Mr. BURRELL. As this matter is on the Order Paper for discussion at a fixed date, I did not wish to discuss it further than to read the telegram at the earliest possible moment. I did not want to enter into the merits, and I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Black) should be allowed to discuss them now.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) is not willing that any one else should refer to the matter but himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion of the question is not in order now.

Mr. BLACK. I am not discussing it. I am only saying that if it were necessary I could bring any number of letters in favour of reciprocity in fruit. I only wanted to get in the fact that our fruit growers are all in favour of reciprocity.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Labour—Conciliation and labour, &c., $27,300.

Mr. RHODES. I desire to take the earliest opportunity on going into Committee of Supply to consider the estimates for the Department of Labour, to bring to the attention of the Minister of Labour a matter of grave importance affecting labour conditions in the province of Nova Scotia. I refer to the strike at Springhill, where some 1,600 employees of the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company have been on strike since the 10th of August, 1909, or just 18 months to-day. The Minister of Labour has been informed of the situation in Nova Scotia by letter and telegram, and in the 'Labour Gazette' for a long period, and the situation is more or less familiar to him. I may say that I have not before this brought the matter to the attention of the House for the reason that since the passing of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act the Department of Labour has always taken the attitude that where that Act has been invoked and its machinery has been applied in a given case, that the action of the department would end there, and that if it were understood by those who invoke its machinery, that a resort could be had to the Department of Labour after the Act had been invoked, that it would tend to weaken rather than strengthen the machinery of the Act, and that therefore the parties to the dispute must, after the Act has been applied, resort to the arbitrament of war, and that the fittest must survive. I have kept in touch with the matter myself, and I find that at the very inception of this strike, or on the day before the men went out on strike, the Acting Deputy Minister of Labour wrote to the president of the United Mine Workers of America a letter, which I propose to read in full. It is fairly long, but it gives, in the shortest possible way, I think, the attitude of the department affecting questions of this character. It reads:

Ottawa, August 9, 1909.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge your communication of August 3 in reply to the letter of the Deputy Minister of Labour of July the 28th in respect to the strike in the collieries at Inverness, N.S. Your communication has been referred to the hon. the Minister of Labour and the minister directs me to say that he has had under consideration that part of your letter in which you stated you are inclined to the opinion that 'if the Department of Labour would investigate the situation in Nova Scotia they could do much to bring about a settlement of the difficulty in that province,' and has noted that in concluding your letter you express the hope 'that the Department of Labour may lend its influence to bring about a satisfactory settlement of the difficulties in Nova Scotia.'

With regard to the request that the department should investigate the situation or lend its influence to bring about a settlement the minister directs me to point out that the dispute at Glace Bay between certain of the employees of the Dominion Coal Company, members of a local union of the United Mine Workers of America and the said company, has already been the subject of government intervention by reference under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and the report of the board appointed has been given to the public in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Were parties to industrial disputes encouraged to look indefinitely to government intervention or given reason to believe that the findings of boards appointed expressly for the purpose of inquiring into existing troubles, would be subject to further revision by the minister or other officers of the Department of Labour, it would seriously prejudice the effectiveness of the work of boards appointed under the Act and the value of their findings, and might only serve, having regard to industrial disputes generally, to prolong, rather than to minimize, the period of industrial strike.

Whilst the policy of the department in the matter of disputes referable under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is as set forth herein, the minister wishes me to say that he will be pleased to discuss at any time with either of the parties to a dispute any of the facts or circumstances having a bearing upon the situation and best methods of effecting a satisfactory adjustment of existing differences.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) GERALD H. BROWN,
Acting Deputy Minister.

T. L. Lewis, Esq.,
President United Mine Workers of America,
Indianapolis, Ind.

In that letter the attitude of the Department of Labour was very clearly defined, and there is something to be said in favour of it so far as ordinary strikes are concerned; but the strike at Springhill is an extraordinary one. As evidence of that, I have only to refer the hon. minister to the report of his deputy minister on industrial conditions in the coal fields of Nova Scotia. At page 31 of that report he will find the following remarks in reference to the strike at Springhill:

I found evidence of strong feeling as between the management and the employees of this company. Leading spirits among the men manifest much feeling, not to say bitterness, toward the management, not only toward the person of the general manager, but to all subordinate officials; and since all these were drawn, with one exception from the ranks of the men themselves, the presumption is at least favourable to the theory that any estrangement that exists is not due to one side alone. With such an influence as this dominant among the men it would seem to be impossible for any manager or official to bring about a condition of good relations.

At page 32 of the same report he will find the following:

One is forced, therefore, to the conclusion that there can be no speedy termination to the present struggle, and that it will be a long-drawn-out contest unless some factor not now in evidence comes into play.

The record of strikes at Springhill, with which the minister is familiar, will bear out that expression. I believe that some five boards have sat under the Conciliation Act without alleviating conditions there, and there have been some 23 strikes in a period of 22 years. So that the conditions at Springhill are abnormal. I need not point out that the town of Springhill is an unusually good mining town. There is a good class of men there. The very appearance of the town is pleasing to the eye, vastly different from that of an ordinary mining town. Nor, need I take up the time of the committee to point out the disastrous results of this strike. In the country around the town of Springhill, and in fact throughout the whole county, the blight of this strike is felt. The revenues of the province have suffered from it to the extent of some thousands of dollars. I have shown you the attitude of the minister and the department with reference to the strike at Springhill. But in July of last year there occurred a strike among the employees of the Grand Trunk railway. On July 19, the editor of the 'Gazette' at Barrie, Ont., sent the following telegram to the minister:

Strike of trainmen declared here last night 9.30. Passenger trains being run this morning undermanned by inexperienced men in train service, and public seriously alarmed. Can you do anything?

To which the minister replied as follows:

Your wire received and contents duly noted. Am preperad to lend good offices of government to fullest extent possible towards adjustment of present differences, and have so informed parties.

Then, in a letter addressed by the Minister of Labour to Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk railway system at Montreal, he makes an effort to bring the parties together. In conclusion, he suggests that a way be found for arbitration, and adds :

If such a reference to arbitration is agreed upon, all the necessary expenses incidental thereto will be met by the government.

Then, I find among other telegrams the following, which is typical, from the Minister of Labour to Wm. C. MacLaren, president of the Board of Trade of Brockville, Ont., under date of Montreal, July 29, 1910 :

Your telegraph July 29 received. The government is putting forth every effort to bring about a speedy termination of Grand Trunk dispute.

I could read a number of telegrams of the same tenor, but that may be regraded as typical. Then, at the conclusion of the strike I find that the Minister of Labour refers to his efforts in connection with the strike in the following terms, in a letter addressed to A. J. Anderson, Esq., Joint Secretary O. R. C. and B. R. T., Brockville, Ont. :

I much hope that the part taken by the Department of Labour and the government in helping to bring about a settlement of the differences between the members of the brotherhood whom you represent and the Grand Trunk railway will have commended themselves favourably to the members of the Brockville lodges.

So that the minister himself is not indisposed to take some credit for the settlement of that strike, and as to that I am not disposed to quarrel with him. I would be one of the first to congratulate him on settling a strike or upon doing anything he could to settle a strike, and I hope he will not withhold his efforts to settle the strike at Springhill.

If any proof were needed that the government did promptly intervene in this Grand Trunk Railway strike after the conciliatory board had sat on it, I could refer to the Toronto 'Globe' of Wednesday, August 3, 1910, in which I find this heading:

Grand Trunk Railway strike is over; an agreement is reached. The good work of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Sir Frederick Borden.

Then the details are given. In this article, Mr. Garretson, a representative of the men, is quoted:

Further, said Mr. Garretson, I would like to pay my tribute to Hon. Mackenzie King and Sir Frederick Borden for their work in settling this trouble. They both did everything possible to reconcile the conflicting parties, and they are entitled to the thanks of not only the railroad interests, but of the people of the Dominion. By the manner in which they aided the negotiations they have earned the gratitude of the railway and of the men and also of the whole public.

And the 'Globe' not only refers to the matter in its news column, but also in its editorial column, from which I shall quote a few lines out of many:

The services, the very great servics, rendered by the Minister of Labour throughout this controversy have been of the highest value. Hon. Mackenzie King has illustrated what may be done by government representative with adequate knowledge, a sense of justice, a conciliatory spirit and an eye single to the good of the public.

The Montreal 'Herald' is no less forward in giving its mede of praise to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Militia, but I shall not take up time by quoting the article. I may refer briefly, however, to the government organ, the Ottawa 'Free Press,' in its issue of August 3, 1910. It is just as fulsome in its praise of the two ministers I have mentioned. It says:

The usefulness of the Labour Branch of the Dominion administration has been doubly vindicated as the result of the recent dispute between the railway companies and certain of their employees. When, months ago, the companies were unable to come to terms with their men, a strike was made impossible because of the necessity under the Lemieux Act of first appointing a board of conciliation to investigate the dispute. The report of that board immediately solved the trouble so far as the Canadian Pacific railway was concerned, and an agreement which was mutually satisfactory was signed between the employers and the employed.

That was vindication number one.

Unfortunately, that report did not, offhand, settle the dispute between the Grand Trunk railway and its men and open war resulted.

There was no law on the statute-book empowering the government to interfere. There was nothing to compel the disputants to submit to arbitration. So far as legislation was concerned, the government had no standing.

But while the government had no compulsory powers, it did have in the Labour Department machinery which it could at once set in motion with the object of bringing the regrettable war to an end.

Before the Labour Department was created, it was anybody's duty when a strike occurred to make an attempt to stop it, and what is anybody's duty is often nobody's duty. But things have changed. Immediately the strike occurred on the Grand Trunk, the eyes of the public were focussed on the Labour Department. Everybody said it was the duty of the Labour Department to act as mediator. There was no casting around for a man or men who would be unprejudiced with the delay consequent upon such a search. The one man at whom all pointed for this arduous and urgent task was the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. King rose to the occasion and once more he has come out of the ordeal with flying colours.

The editorial goes on somewhat further, but I shall not quote any more. I have no quarrel to find with the minister or the department for having intervened in the Grand Trunk Railway strike. All credit to them for having done so. As a matter of fact, if the Labour Department is to serve a useful purpose the Minister of Labour must exercise just such powers at Springhill as he did in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway strike. But if the Department of Labour is to content itself with merely sitting still and allowing the machinery to be invoked, and then, if the parties fail to come to terms under the Act, let them fight it out as in the old days before there was an Act, we might just as well do away with the Labour Department altogether, because otherwise all that would remain for the department to do would be to gather a certain amount of statistics, as was done before. In the strike which occurred in the town of Springhill, the department took the stand that it would not intervene after the machinery of the Lemieux Act had been invoked. But that is not apparently always the policy of the minister and the government, because we find that when there was a strike among the employees of the Grand Trunk railway, the minister did intervene. He might say that the policy of the department had changed since the strike at Springhill, but I would point out that the strike still exists there, and is still of great importance, and I hope my hon. friend will take the committee into his confidence and let us know why he has made this distinction between the two.

Mr. LENNOX. Lest my silence be misconstrued, I wish to say that I do not subscribe to the doctrine of the 'Free Press' or the 'Globe'; but aside from that altogether, let me point out that having been intimately connected with the men who are affected by the Grand Trunk Railway strike—not speaking of the strike from second hand but from first knowledge—I say very emphatically, much as I regret it, that I cannot endorse the enconiums which have been showered by the press on the minister or admit that the settlement of the Grand Trunk Railway strike was a satisfactory one. The contrary position is the one I am forced to take. From my knowledge of the situation in the town of Allandale, a portion of the town of Barrie, and from my general knowledge of the matter, I know that the settlement does not absolutely remove all disputes, because I understand there are employees, who by reason of that settlement, are cut off from their pensions. There are numerous instances among the strikers in which men, who had been from 10 to 25 years in the service of the Grand Trunk railway, find that the company entirely repudiate any obligation in any way or to recognize as entitled to his pension any one who had been out on strike and was afterwards restored to the service. What the company say is that these men come back as new men. If I understood the minister correctly, these men would probably not get a pension. He cannot say whether the agreement does or does not cover cases such as those I refer to. I am not now saying that I condemn the minister nor that I applaud him, but what I say is that from my knowledge of the matter, the indications are that this settlement will be exceedingly unsatisfactory, and in all probability a very unfortunate one for the men. I understand the hon. member for Cumberland to be dealing with another matter, and, incidentally for illustration I presume, he finds it proper to refer to the Grand Trunk employees' strike. If I could add compliments to the Minister of Labour in relation to the Grand Trunk strike, I should be prepared to do so, and I may be able to do so in the end. At present I am not in that position. If I am to judge of the facts as they are before me, my reference to the matter must be uncomplimentary. For the present, however, I leave it. I am collecting information on the subject, and when I have collected it, I may bring the matter again to the attention of the House.

Mr. RHODES. I am sorry that my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) did not understand my object in referring to the Grand Trunk strike. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour did. I did not refer to it for the purpose of dealing with it. I pointed out that there has been a strike in my county for the last eighteen months. The policy of the department, it was stated, was not to interfere with the strike where the machinery of the Act had been put in operation and had proved of no avail. But, in the strike of the Grand Trunk employees, the machinery of the Act was applied without effect, and yet after that the minister took it in hand. I was asking him the reason for this difference of treatment.

Mr. LENNOX. I think I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rhodes) and said so. I thought he was referring to the Grand Trunk strike incidentally and by way of illustration, while dealing with the case in his own riding with the facts of which he is specially familiar.

Mr. KING. Replying, first, to my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), I would say frankly that I agree with him that, to appearances there seems to be a difference in the action on the part of the department in regard to these two strikes. But I think he will agree with me that circumstances must govern actions at all times, and there are occasions when the exception itself proves the rule. In regard to the general policy of the department as to intervening in industrial disputes, it is precisely as set out in the letter of August 9, 1909, written to Mr. Lewis by Mr. Brown, the Acting Deputy Minister of Labour. In that letter it is pointed out that where a dispute has come under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act it is not the policy of the department to follow up any intervention of that description by intervention on the part of any officer of the government or department. But my hon. friend will notice—for he has read it—that this communication closes with these words:

Whilst the policy of the department in the matter of disputes referable under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is as set forth herein, the minister wishes me to say that he will be pleased to discuss at any time with either of the parties to a dispute any of the facts or circumstances having a bearing upon the situation and best methods of effecting a satisfactory adjustment of existing differences.

In the case of the Springhill strike, notwithstanding that this intimation was made some sixteen months ago, up to the present time neither of the parties to that dispute, so far as I am aware, has cared to take advantage of it. They have not intimated to me, either directly or indirectly, their desire to discuss the situation at Springhill with a view to bringing about a termination of the strike. The Grand Trunk strike was different. When it had assumed such proportions that there was hardly an interest in the province of Ontario that was not suffering in consequence of it, I received the following telegram from one of the representatives of the employees on strike at that time:

Montreal, Que., July 27, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

Messrs. Garretson and Lee held a conference to-day with Mr. Hays without result. May I be permitted on behalf of the men on strike to request that, as a Minister of the Crown and representative of the people you come to Montreal and by further effort try to arrange an honourable settlement either by arbitration or negotiation.

JAMES MURDOCK.

Mr. Murdock was a representative of the men out on strike at that time. I point out to my hon. friend that there, at any rate, is a difference: in the one case the department has not been requested, up to the present time, to intervene further than by the action under the Act; in the case of the Grand Trunk strike the department was requested by one of the parties to the dispute to take action. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me that, in the absence of any request from the parties after the communication that was sent them, it would hardly have been proper for the department to have proceeded. I say frankly that if the parties had come and discussed this matter with me I should have been only too glad, if a suitable way could have been found to have assisted to the extent of my power. I do not say that I would have intervened actively, but I would have endeavoured to assist in bringing about a readjustment. I may say that, without making it publicly known, I have had a talk with the present manager of the Springhill mines with a view to understanding the situation thoroughly, to see if, in some way, it would not be possible for the difficulty there to be brought to a close.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. gentleman is referring to the new manager?

Mr. KING. Yes. But I would like to point out that, not only was there the difference in regard to there being no request to intervene in one case and not in the other, but in the nature of these disputes there was a marked difference. The difficulty in Springhill, as I understand it, is over the question of recognition of the union. I say frankly to the House that I have yet to find any means whereby the question of recognition or non-recognition can be satisfactorily solved without at least one of the parties agreeing to give up its stand. I cannot imagine any other method short of a statute being enacted making it an offence for an employer to refuse to employ men because they belong to a union or for men to refuse to work with those who do not belong to the union. I do not say I would endorse legislation of that kind. The strike for recognition is different in kind from strikes that have to do with wages, hours of labour and other conditions, and one taking a broad view of the industrial question will have to recognize that fact. There have been under the Act, since it was passed, nearly four years ago, 100 boards. In 91 cases out of the 100 these boards have effected settlements and have prevented strikes—only in 9 cases have strikes taken place. Of these 9, 5 have been concerned almost wholly with the question of union recognition, and in the others the strikes have been of extremely short duration.

Mr. Acland, the Deputy Minister of Labour, made a very full inquiry into the situation at Springhill. My hon. friend (Mr. Rhodes) has read part of his report. In that report Mr. Acland stated as follows:

I found evidence of strong feeling as between the management and the employees of this company. Leading spirits among the men manifest much feeling, not to say bitterness, towards the management, not only towards the person of the general manager, but to all subordinate officials; and since all these were shown with one exception, from the ranks of the men themselves, the presumption is at least favourable to the theory that any estrangement that exists is not due to one side alone. With such an influence as this dominant among the men it would seem to be impossible for any manager or official to bring about a condition of good relations.

That passage my hon. friend read, but on the next page, 32, we find:

One is forced, therefore, to the conclusion that there can be no speedy termination to the present struggle and that it will be a long drawn out contest unless some factor not now in evidence comes into play.

Mr. RHODES. I read that also.

Mr. KING. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I did not catch that. In addition to the work which the Board of Conciliation did at Springhill, an officer of the department, the deputy minister, investigated the situation, went into it carefully and fully, and gave what he believed to be an honest and unbiassed report, so that both parties, if they chose, could be guided by it. Mr. Acland's report was made in September, 1909. He said to the parties that the strike would be a long drawn out fight. It was a question of recognition. He had been in the confidence of the men on the one side and of the company on the other, and, speaking fearlessly as an officer of the department, he gave due notice to all parties concerned, that the strike would be a long struggle. That was in September, 1909. Here we are in February, 1911, and this struggle is still on. I say as a minister, speaking here, that I believe if the present position is maintained by the parties, in other words, if they insist on the question of recognition, if we are here this time next year, this strike will still be in continuance at Springhill. I say that because I have had a conversation with the present manager, who has informed me that on no consideration whatever will his company yield on the question of recognition. If that is a fact, what can save the situation? There is no good of the department trying to intervene and bring about a settlement by negotiation. The only thing is for the parties to settle it themselves, and take such responsibility as the facts seem to warrant.

So I say in regard to the Springhill strike there was additional intervention on the part of the government disclosing the full nature of the dispute, disclosing, also, the only line on which a settlement could take place, but there was no special invitation as in the case of the Grand Trunk strike for any officer of the government to intervene.

But my hon. friend will also see that the strikes were very different in their significance. The Springhill strike has gone on for a year and a half, and conditions have continued in Nova Scotia pretty much as they have been for some years past. Undoubtedly the locality immediately surrounding has been seriously affected, but the conditions generally in the province have not been. In the case of the Grand Trunk strike there was hardly a town in Ontario which was not being affected, in fact, some towns situated along the line of the Grand Trunk railway were really in the nature of communities in a state of siege. It was impossible to ship provisions in or manufactured goods out. Factories were closing, men were being thrown out of employment; the whole situation was one which was creating terror in the minds of the people of this province. A great system had been tied up from Chicago to Portland, a thousand miles of railway had been completely tied up, so far as the handling of freight was concerned. Boards of trade all over the province, city and town councils were sending telegrams daily to the government, and giving in detail the nature of the situation as it had grown up. There was a situation entirely different from a national point of view from the situation in Springhill. Had it been, as at Springhill, local in its nature, I would have maintained the attitude that has been maintained in the case of the Springhill strike and have hesitated about intervening. But when we had a situation such as there was at that time, I felt that no matter what the cost, even if it cost me my position as a minister of the Crown, should I fail in that duty, I would attempt it and do the best I could, because I felt it was my duty to do it; and I must say that I trust hon. gentlemen opposite will be spared from having to take their lives in their hands to the extent to which it was necessary to do so on that occasion, and to get in between two great fighting factions with a view to bringing them together. I do not wish to take any credit in the matter of bringing about a settlement in the Grand Trunk strike, but I do say that had it not been for the agencies which this government had established, had it not been that, in the first instance, the whole dispute had been made the subject of investigation by a board, so that when we came to a final adjustment it was a matter of taking the report of the board and sifting out certain features, and for the fact that there was existing, through agencies which the government had supplied, some means of bringing public opinion to bear on the whole situation, that strike, instead of lasting two weeks, might have lasted several months, and instead of being brought to a termination and of the men who were out being restored to their situations to the extent they have been, there might have been several hundreds who would never have got back their situations at all. My feeling is that had the government not intervened the result would have been disastrous all around, disastrous to the Grand Trunk, disastrous to the men and still more disastrous to the general public. To the extent to which disaster of that nature has been averted, the government has rendered the country a service, albeit that there may be certain features in connection with that settlement that are not quite as we would wish to have them.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MONTREAL PARK AND ISLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 45) respecting the Montreal Park and Island Railway Company.—Mr. Ecrement.

On section 1,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a proposed amendment, notice of which was given by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. BELAND. I was asked by the promoter of this Bill that it should stand until next Tuesday.

Progress reported.

McCLARY MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 75) respecting the McClary Manufacturing Company—Mr. Beattie.

Further consideration of section 1.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose the committee have considered this Bill carefully, but it looks like a merger. Probably my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) has given thought to it.

Mr. BEATTIE. What is the objection?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a principle involved in the Bill. We have on the other occasions declined to allow mergers to be consummated in this manner. You see it gives to the company the power to purchase stock in other companies carrying on similar business. If that is allowed it permits in the very clearest way the possible consummation of a merger among all the manufacturing industries in the same line. I am not quite sure that there is any strong objection to that but it seems to me that there is a principle involved, and that it would be well that it should come before a fuller House than we have to-night.

Mr. BEATTIE. This is a Bill introduced on behalf of the McClary Manufacturing Company. The only persons interested in this company are the members of the McClary family, and I think that you will find in the law as at present existing all that they are asking for. They have an establishment in every province of the Dominion, and agencies in different places, but instead of sending their own agents out on a paid salary to dispose of their goods they propose to entrust that work to persons in business in that line of goods in different towns and they ask for this power in order that they may be able to take some stock in their business. They think that by giving the sale of their goods to a business man in a town and then themselves taking an interest in the business he will push the sale of their goods more energetically, and will at the same time make a little money for himself. I have a statement explanatory of the Bill which, with the permission of the committee, I shall read :

The McClary Company were incorporated by chapter 116 of the Statutes of Canada, 1882. The Companies Act, contained in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and being chapter 79 of these statutes, contains clauses similar to the clauses in the McClary Bill. Part 2 of the Companies Act applies to the McClary Manufacturing Company. Section 122 of the Companies Act provides that Part 2 of the Act shall apply to every company incorporated subsequently to the 22nd day of June, 1869 by any special Act of the parliament of Canada. The McClary Manufacturing Company, being incorporated by special Act of the parliament of Canada in 1882, comes within the meaning of this section. Part 1 therefore of the Companies Act does not apply to the McClary Manufacturing Company. If it did, section 44 gives the right to purchase stock in other companies in a broader fashion than that in the McClary Bill. Section 44 permits a company, to which part 1 of the Companies Act relates, to use its funds in the purchase of stock in any other corporation, when the directors have been expressly authorized by by-law passed by them for that purpose and sanctioned by a vote of not less than two-thirds in value of the capital stock represented at a general meeting of the company duly called for considering the subject of the by-law. You will notice, that in section 12 of the McClary Bill, it is provided that the directors must be authorized by by-law, sanctioned by a vote of not less than two-thirds in value of the subscribed capital stock represented at a general meeting duly called for that purpose, before they can use the funds of the company in the purchase of stock in any other company.

They had a strike some years ago, and an agent in a town refused to sell their goods on account of the attitude of the workingmen in the town, the result being that he gave up the agency. The company had to take one of their own men and start him selling the line of goods they manufactured. But their charter did not give them power to take any stock in his business. That is why the Bill has been brought forward. It has nothing to do with a merger. Everybody knows that the McClary Manufacturing Company is one of the largest institutions of its kind in this country. It employs 1,300 men, and the stock is owned in the one family. They are merged in themselves in so far as that goes. I do not believe that they will think of merging with any other company. They are too large a concern for that, and their purpose for asking for this legislation is as it has been here explained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know the company very well, because they have a branch in my own city of St. John. I know they are a thoroughly respectable and exceedingly enterprising company.

Mr. BEATTIE. Oh, very.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only reason I rose was, that there would seem to be a principle involved in this first section. If we pass it as it is, it may be difficult to refuse similar powers to other companies, which were ostensibly seeking to create mergers, and it is giving parliamentary recognition to the principle that it is quite right for mergers to be created in this way. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beattie), desires to have the Bill go through as it is, I do not intend to press my views.

Mr. BEATTIE. Would the hon. minister like to see the letter; it will give him the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, please send over the letter. The object, as I understand it, is to enable them to take an interest in another company, which might act as agents for the sale of their goods.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is entirely the object of the Bill. They have an agent in almost every city at the present time, and instead of sending out an agent, they thought it better to take a firm who is in business in a certain place, and give them entire control of their productions there. The McClary company is very extensively engaged in the manufacturing business, and they thought it would push their business better and lead to greater enterprise if they adopted this system. The McClary firm as every one knows, is an old firm, a wealthy firm, and a respectable firm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not press my objection, Mr. Chairman.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ALBERTA RAILWAY AND IRRIGATION COMPANY.

Further consideration in Committee of the whole of Bill (No. 51) respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Mr. Crothers.

Mr. BEATTIE.

Mr. HERRON. I move:

That in section 1, subsection 3, the words 'Spring Coolie' be stricken out and the word 'Cardstone' be substituted therefor.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the promoter of the Bill satisfied with the amendment?

Mr. HERRON. Yes, it has been agreed to between the promoter of the Bill and myself.

Mr. FIELDING. In that case, I suppose there would be no objection.

Mr. HERRON. I would also move:

That in the second line of subsection 3, after the word 'westerly' the words be added: 'at, in, or near the town of Pincher Creek.'

Then the subclause will read:

From a point between Cardstone and Mountain View, westerly, at, in, or near the town of Pincher Creek to a point on the line of the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. FIELDING. Has that also been agreed to?

Mr. HERRON. Yes, it has been agreed to by all parties.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 62) respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Tolmie.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill to the provisions of section 3:

The conversion of fifty thousand shares of the capital stock of the company from common stock into five per cent non-cumulative preferred stock, and the issue of such shares as such preferred stock, is declared to be valid and binding upon the company and the shareholders thereof, according to the terms of such conversion and issue.

I would like to know if the committee had information that that was agreed to by all the holders of common stock. This section makes valid a priority which is given to 50,000 shares of the common stock. That of course is unusual, and would I think, be improper unless all the holders of common stock were parties to it. I would suggest that progress be reported on this Bill so that we can get information on that point.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Mr. KING. With reference to the question raised by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) before recess regarding pensions on the Grand Trunk railway, I said that my impression was that during the discussion between the parties, at the time of the negotiation, the matter of pensions was not mentioned, but the leader of the men declared that in that matter it was a matter of indifference to them what attitude the company might take. I took occasion during recess to look up one or two documents, and I find in the Toronto 'Star,' of August 4 last, the following interview given to a 'Star' reporter by Mr. Murdock, who was one of the representatives of the employees concerned:

PENSIONS DON'T BOTHER THE MEN, SAYS MR. MURDOCK—'TWAS A GIFT OF THE COMPANY AND MEN LOSE NOTHING. THEY CAN DO WITHOUT IT.

'What about the restorations of the pensions?' Mr. Murdock was asked.

'We are not paying any attention to that pension talk,' was the reply. 'It was not touched on in the final settlement, as you know. The aim of most of these pension schemes is to test the fidelity of the men to the union. In the strike there it was easily seen what effect it had on the allegiance of the men to their union, was it not? If railways will pay proper wages to their men there will be no necessity for these pension schemes at all.

'If the Grand Trunk sees fit to pension its employees for years of faithful service, well and good. If, now, after the strike it chooses to be vindictive, and to say 'because for fifteen days you left our service we will disregard all your years of faithful work, and cancel your pension,' well, we have nothing to say as to that.'

In the Toronto 'Globe' of August 5, I find the following interview of Mr. Berry, who was the representative of the other organization involved in the strike:

CONFERENCE OF STRIKE LEADERS.

The object of Mr. Berry's visit to Montreal is to meet in conference with Mr. Murdock and the other strike leaders, and to go over the terms of settlement with a view to issuing an official explanation to the men. Also to arrange about the strike pay, and generally wind up the strike campaign. Mr. Berry was accompanied by Messrs. Todd, Dodge and Curtiss.

SAYS PENSIONS ARE A FAKE.

'I am not particularly concerned about the pensions,' said Mr. Berry, in response to another query. 'I believe that the company have the option of granting or refusing them. I have always looked upon pensions as a fake devised to deceive the workers. I believe in the men receiving a proper salary and being independent of any consideration such as pensions.' Mr. Berry also expressed himself as satisfied with the way in which the men were being taken back. He was not surprised at what the company officials were saying, and he dismissed their arguments with the advice to the men and the public not to take any notice of what the company said.

This came as a surprise to me. Messrs. Garretson & Lee, who were negotiating for the men, did not bring up the question of pension at all, and the other leaders took a stand in conversation, not unlike what they appear to have publicly taken in the interview I have quoted here. Speaking this afternoon my remarks may have seemed to imply that Messrs. Garretson & Lee also took the same stand in regard to pensions. I am not quite sure in regard to that, it may be they said nothing about that. As to the other men, dealing so far as Canada is concerned, the position they took was similar to the position they gave out in these interviews to the public.

In regard to the Springhill strike, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), while the strike took place notwithstanding the report of the board which investigated it, nevertheless, the report of the board has had an effect on the situation which ought to be helpful at the present time, in bringing the matter to a termination. The three members of the board were, Mr. Justice Longley, of Halifax, Mr. Archibald, of Halifax, and Mr. E. B. Paul, M.P.P. They agreed in the following, before the strike took place:

Under the circumstances your board cannot help recognizing that the only rational policy to be pursued by all parties concerned, is one of conciliation and forbearance in order that this large and important industry may not be compelled to cease operations, with most far-reaching and disastrous consequences to all, including the business men of the town. Heavy loses have been already entailed by twenty-two strikes which have exhausted the energies and wasted the resources of the company. In the judgment of the board, the present is not a time to agitate for changes, but rather a time a common effort should be made to improve the situation and secure the permanence of the industry.

Your board saw tokens during the somewhat lengthy investigation of the matters in dispute that unpleasant feelings, if not distinct hostility, existed between a large number of employees and the management. It would perhaps be invidious to attempt to place the responsibility for this, but the board feel it their duty to bring this state of affairs to the attention of the directors of the company in a formal manner by means of this report.

This board recommends the directors to make a careful investigation into this unpleasant feature of existing relations with the hope that they may be able to adopt such a policy or make such changes as will prevent the possibility of this unfortunate condition prevailing in the future.

In this report of the board then, attention was drawn to the fact that it was an inopportune time to bring on the strike, and if a strike did take place, it was likely to last a long time, and do considerable injury to the community, and also that evidently there was something in the personality of those who had to do with the management of affairs, that was in part responsible for the continuous friction, and the board suggested that the directors should look into that matter. The directors have looked into this, and I understand that the former manager is no longer manager at Springhill, his position has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Butler, formerly deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, in connection with this government. Therefore, in so far as the element of personality may have had an influence on the situation—and my own opinion is altogether in accord with that of the board, and also with that of Mr. Acland, who later investigated the situation—that factor has been removed, and it would therefore seem that the present is at least an opportune time for the men who may be still out, to go and negotiate with the new manager, Mr. Butler, and see if it is not possible to come to some sort of a settlement. As I said this afternoon, I spoke to Mr. Butler only a day or two ago, and Mr. Butler said he would be glad to have a talk with the men who are out. He also said that he would like me to state, if I had an opportunity of doing so in public, that so far as he was concerned in the management of these mines, he would not yield on the question of recognition. I think it only fair, that the parties in the dispute should know that fact, that the manager has stated he will close the mines before he will yield on that point, and I feel that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), could not render a greater service to his riding than to go down there with the knowledge which he has of the situation, and see if it is not possible himself to point out to the parties involved what the meaning and the ultimate probable issue will be of their continuing as they are at present, without endeavouring to get together and end what has been altogether a lamentable industrial dispute.

Inasmuch as these two strikes at Springhill and on the Grand Trunk railway have been discussed a good deal, and attention has been devoted to them in this parliament, I think it is only right, in order to give the country and the members of this House, a true impression as to the service which the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act has rendered this country, that I should attempt to give the House, in a few words a statement of what has been actually accomplished under that Act. In the first place, I would draw attention to the fact that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act was enacted about four years ago. During that time, there have been altogether 100 boards applied for under that Act. In 91 out of the 100 cases, which have been referred to boards for settlement, strikes have been prevented, and in only 9 cases have strikes ensued. In other words, this legislation has been the means of averting over 90 per cent of the strikes which would otherwise have taken place in the Dominion in industries in the nature of public utilities. There are two ways of verifying these figures. If we compare the record of disputes which took place in the industries in the nature of public utilities for the four years prior to this legislation, with the record which has since been enacted, it will be found that the statistics verify what is given here as the result of the operations of this Act, that, as I have already said, in the industries in the nature of public utilities over 90 per cent of the strikes have been averted. Then there is the actual showing based on the sworn statement of the parties. For ten years the department has been gathering statistics of strikes and lock outs in Canada. It has been possible from these figures, and by comparison with similar statistics in other countries, to find the average duration of strikes. In Canada for the last 10 years the average number of working days lost in each strike amounted to something like 24. In some cases the strikes lasted much longer, in other cases a shorter time, but 24 days seems to be the average. The men involved in the disputes that would otherwise have given rise to strikes, numbered 99,542, in other words, almost 100,000 men have been involved in these disputes that have been settled by boards and in which no strike has taken place. If we assume that the average wage for the men employed in these industries thus affected was $2.50 a day, and that in the cases where there have been settlements had there been strikes, the strikes would have been of the same average duration as in the case of other strikes, there has been saved through this legislation to the workingmen of Canada, in wages alone, a sum not less than $5,972,520; or in round figures $6,000,000 has been saved in wages to the workingmen of this country through the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. I am not just sure as to how one can calculate the amount saved in profits, but if we assume that an employer would receive in profits 10 per cent of the amount which has been spent in wages to his employees, then there has been saved to employers in profits, in round figures, something like $600,000. If we try to form an estimate of the value of goods that would have been produced with that amount of labour, and with the capital that would have been employed, the smallest figure at which it could be placed, would be something like $10,000,000. That is to say, had strikes taken place where settlements have been effected and had these strikes lasted twenty-four days, commodities to the value of $10,000,000 would not have been produced, which have been produced. So, taking the inside estimate, the amount that has been saved to the workmen in wages is $6,000,000, the amount which has been saved to the employer is $600,000, and the amount saved in commodities that have been produced which otherwise would not have been produced is $10,000,000, or in round figures, something like $16,600,000 has been saved to this country by that legislation, and I might add the total cost of administering the Act, including all the expenses of the boards, has not exceeded in these four years $80,000.

That, I would point out, is only the monetary side of it. These industries to which I have referred are industries in the nature of public utilities. They are industries upon which the other industries depend, they are industries upon which the happiness and welfare of the community depend. Take the strike at Lethbridge a few years ago; there you had families freezing in their homes for want of coal. Take a strike on a railway and you have something that influences the whole community. In all these cases the community, and all that goes with it, in so far as its relation to the industry is concerned, has been saved the inconvenience and the loss which would otherwise have taken place. While attention has been drawn to the fact that we have had in Canada in the last four years one or two very serious strikes one should not lose sight of the fact that there has been saved to this country the vast sum of money and the vast amount of disorder which are indicated by the figures I have already given.

There is one other feature that I want to note in connection with the working out of this legislation, and that is the result of strikes that have taken place after the boards have given their findings and where the findings of the boards have not been accepted by the parties. As members of the House know, the parties to an industrial dispute in the industries covered by this Act are not allowed to strike or to lock out until the matter has been referred to a board. If they are not satisfied with the finding of the board then they may strike or lock out, and the returns indicate that while in 91 cases they have not struck, but accepted the findings of the board, in nine cases they have struck, and it is interesting to ask what has been the effect in the cases where they have gone on strike. The records show that in every one of those cases they have either returned to work on the terms which the board had granted or upon terms not as good as those which the board had granted. In no case have the working men who have gone on strike in Canada since this legislation was passed obtained better terms in consequence of their striking than they would have obtained had they accepted at the outset the findings of the board. Then, I think it will be interesting as well to note, the relative position of the different industries concerned.

Mr. LENNOX. That would indicate, as I understood the minister to suggest by reading it, that it would be wise for the employees in all cases to accept the finding of the board in so far as experience has gone?

Mr. KING. That is decidedly the opinion I have. My feeling is that this parliament, by enacting this legislation, has provided a better means of securing what is fair and just to the workingmen than it is possible for them to get in consequence of a strike. I do not say that the findings of the board are always the best thing that could possibly be obtained, but I do think and I say this, as a result of a careful watching of the industrial disputes which have taken place in Canada in the last ten years, the workingmen will gain more in the long run by accepting the findings of the board than by going out on strike.

Mr. RHODES. The impression of the minister is that the Act has been successful in its operation from one view point. What is the view point of the labour men of the country?

Mr. KING. I think the labour men of the country will agree absolutely with what I am saying at this moment.

Mr. RHODES. I think the minister has an idea of what I refer to. I do not know that he has received them, but, speaking for my own constituency alone, I have received resolutions from all the lodges in the county calling for the repeal of the Act. Has the minister received any of these resolutions from Nova Scotia or elsewhere?

Mr. KING. I am well aware of the case to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rhodes) refers. Unfortunately, there has been, in the province of Nova Scotia, during the last year or two, a great deal of industrial strife. As the hon. gentleman knows that strife has come about largely through the endeavour of one union to get into possession and to be recognized, and the struggle that has been going on there has been largely between two different organizations rather than between employers and workingmen.

Mr. RHODES. That is true as affecting Nova Scotia, but has the minister received similar resolutions or requests from other provinces?

Mr. KING. I am informed that all the communications that we have received of the nature to which my hon. friend makes reference have been from lodges of the United Mine Workers' Association, the organization that is concerned in the difficulties in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. RHODES. But have they all come from Nova Scotia?

Mr. KING. They have come from the lodges of this organization in other parts of the Dominion, and it would appear therefore, that in so far as the united mine workers are concerned many of them are not satisfied with the Act. But, I would point out that, while that is true, I know some members of the United Mine Workers' Association who are strongly of the opinion that the Act is the best piece of legislation that has been enacted in the interest of workers. There is a difference of view between them in that regard, but I can refer my hon. friend to the stand taken by the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress which represents the union has pretty generally in the Dominion and which body strongly endorsed this legislation, and also to the communications which I read to this House last year from the representatives of the several railway organizations in the Dominion also endorsing this legislation.

Mr. RHODES. I may say that in the report of the Deputy Minister of Labour with regard to conditions in Nova Scotia he pointed out that politics enter quite largely into the trouble down there, and that is illustrated very forcibly by the fact that while the United Mine Workers' in Nova Scotia are entirely opposed to the Act, and are calling for its repeal, the other body of organized labour, the provincial Workingmens' Association are taking a stand in its favour, but, it is interesting to note that while this organization is now at war with the United Mine Workers', at a meeting in Halifax in 1907, the Grand Council of the Provincial Workers' Association unanimously passed a resolution calling for the repeal of this Act in so far as it affected the province of Nova Scotia. While the minister is discussing this question I may say that the great grievance they have in so far as the Act is concerned is that there is no compensating feature in the Act to make good the loss to the men of the thirty days which they must work before they can go on strike. Under the Act there is no compensation coming to them at all. It simply means that the management receives 30 days' notice that there is going to be war which means that the management is able to fortify itself and consequently the efforts of the miners by means of a strike prove largely abortive, after the 30 day period. That is the great difficulty.

Mr. KING. If my hon. friend had read the Act carefully he will see that the company is not allowed to change the conditions during that time.

Mr. RHODES. Unfortunately they do.

Mr. KING. If they do, then my hon. friend and those interested in the welfare of the men should point to the clause of the Act which gives the men redress, and under which the companies are liable to prosecution if they take steps of that kind. The Hillcrest Coal Company of Alberta did lock out its men on one occasion without giving notice, and they were fined under the Act.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How much were they fined?

Mr. KING. I really forget at the moment.

Mr. RHODES. That is all right if it is a lockout, but if the company should choose to say that they closed down because business was dull, or because the plant calls for alterations and so on, it is a simple matter to have, in effect, a lock-out.

Mr. KING. Granting all that, they would have that power if the Act was not on the statute-books at all. But what the Act does give the workingmen which they never had before is the right to put their own man on the board, and he has the power to summon before him the members of the company by which those whom he represents are employed, to examine their books, and get a complete statement before the public, in order to show who was right and who was wrong, and thus bring to bear upon the situation public opinion properly shaped and properly defined which is of all factors the strongest in bringing about justice in these industrial disputes.

Mr. MADDIN. Does the minister wish the House to understand that employees may summon their employers to disclose their books, their sources of revenue, their cost of manufacture, their market price, and lay it before the public. I am sure he must know that the members of the board alone can receive that, and that they are sworn to secrecy. The public are not allowed to know that and quite properly they should not know it.

Mr. KING. What I stated was this—

Mr. MADDIN. The Minister of Labour did say that this Act empowered workingmen to appoint one of their own number to the board.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MADDIN. To summon their employers and have the employers produce their books?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MADDIN. And lay it before the public?

Mr. KING. No, I did not say that.

Mr. MADDIN. The Act does not make any such provision, and it would be very unwise if it did.

Mr. KING. I have the Act before me, and it provides, just what I said, that a body of workingmen, where a board is granted, may name any workingman they please, provided he has not a financial interest in the dispute, to represent them on the hearing, and that man once appointed has all the powers of a judge in the matter of summoning an employer, compelling him to produce his books, to show what profit he is making, what wages he paid, what is his output, and all the rest of it. This is the power under the Act, and it is a great power to give to any body of men ; a power very much greater than that of simply going out on strike and waiting while they are losing their wages day by day to see whether their endurance is stronger than that of some great corporation. I think that an enlightened view of the industrial situation will lead one inevitably to see that strikes are the last thing in the world which workingmen want. If there is any means whereby justice can be secured to the parties without that extreme measure, it should be resorted to. The record which I have given to the House to-night goes to show that our legislation which was inaugurated by this parliament as a whole, has done very great service to the working classes, and to all classes in this country. To cite only one instance in addition, take the case of street railway strikes. In the period of four years before this Act was passed there were six or seven strikes on the street railways of Canada, and they were among the worst we had in the Dominion. They entailed considerable loss, and the community suffered very considerably. Now, since this Act was passed there have been seven boards in the large cities, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and there has been only one street railway strike in four years, that being the strike which took place in Winnipeg a few weeks ago, when the men did not accept the award. The result of that strike is well known to the House. There is a concrete instance, taking only one industry, showing the immense service this legislation has been not only to the workers but to the public as well. I think that is a matter with regard to which we can afford to have a little national pride.

I should like to put on record a comparison between the effect of our legislation, and the effect of the legislation in New Zealand, and New South Wales. A great deal has been said in the world at different times about the effect of the legislation in both these countries where compulsory arbitration laws exist ; it is sometimes said that there are no strikes there, and that they have found a panacea for these industrial difficulties which no other nation has found. When Mr. Beddoe, our Canadian trade commissioner went to New Zealand, I asked him if he would let me have a report in regard to strikes there in so far as he could get information and verify it on the spot. On August the 22nd last in a report which he sent to the department he gives a list of 16 strikes as having occurred in New Zealand within the preceding 18 months. If you make an allowance for the difference in population between the two countries, the strikes in New Zealand would amount to under their system of compulsory arbitration, 96, as compared with 69 in Canada during a corresponding period. We had only 69 strikes in 1908, and if they had the same population they would have had 96. It is also of interest to note the effect of the enforcement of their law. Under the compulsory arbitration law the means resorted to by the state is to penalize employers, and employees when they do not abide by the findings. Suppose we had a similar law in Canada the effect would have been as follows : Had prosecutions for infringement occurred in Canada to a degree proportionate with the larger population of the Dominion there would have been during the last fiscal year no fewer than 9,672 employers, and 5,840 employees fined in our courts ; a total of 16,514 cases. This does not take into account the very considerable number of prosecutions in which convictions failed, so that it is not unfair to place the number of prosecutions on which the courts have been compelled to pass at 20,000. This comparison is made on the basis of 8 to 1 ; the population of New Zealand being in round numbers 1,000,000, and that of Canada 8,000,000. New Zealand has had 16 years experience of the Act, and this record obtains in the latest year, so that a country newly entering on similar legislation might reasonably expect to find the proportion of similar prosecutions higher. Then, New South Wales, which has also attempted legislation along compulsory arbitration lines, has had an experience hardly less satisfactory than that of New Zealand.

Mr. Harris Weinstock who was recently sent as a special commissioner from the state of California to visit Australia, in a special report with regard to New South Wales, states that the following figures as to strikes were given to him by the registrar of that State, having been taken from that officer's private file. In 1901, 2; in 1902, 12 ; in 1903, 11 ; in 1904, 11 ; in 1905, 36 ; in 1906. 29 ; in 1907, 52 ; in 1908—in the first three months only—33.

It is worth while comparing these figures for a moment, representing a state under compulsory arbitration, with the Canadian figures for the two years 1908-09, under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. The strikes in Canada during each of those years were 69 only, a total of 138 for two years. The strikes in New South Wales for 1906 and 1907, two years nearest the Canadian years (the New South Wales figures for 1908 are incomplete, though very high so far as they go) totalled 81. The population of Canada is in round figures about five times that of New South Wales. Were our strikes proportionate in number with those of New South Wales they would have reached during the two years the very high figure of 405 or over 200 a year, a higher figure than has been shown in any of the ten years during which a record has been kept in Canada.

Mr. RHODES. Has the minister any statistics to show the percentage of strikes before the enactment of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act as against those since?

Mr. KING. Yes, certainly. The record has been kept in Canada for nearly ten years, and the statements that I have just been giving to the House are based upon the figures which are to be found in the annual report of the department; and if hon. members will take the trouble to verify what I have given to the House, they will find that since that Act passed we have in those industries to which the Act applies cut out some 90 per cent of industrial disputes by virtue of the legislation as compared with those which occurred before.

Just one further word in regard to the Grand Trunk strike to which my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has referred. It appears that some hon. gentlemen opposite are endeavouring to hold the government responsible for all that has taken place since the settlement of that dispute. To give the government no credit, or as little as possible, for the settlement, but to make it responsible for everything not entirely satisfactory that has taken place since. In other words because two ministers were present and did their best to bring the parties together and to effect a settlement they would make the government liable for the carrying out of any agreement that might be arrived at under the operation of the Industrial Disputes Act. If the help of the state to bring about a settlement of an industrial dispute is to make the state responsible for everything the parties do in working out that settlement, that is imposing an unwarranted responsibility on the government and going a length which I do not think this parliament would approve. In November 1906 there was a serious strike at Lethbridge in Alberta. The mines had been closed for some months, and the people of the prairie provinces were facing a fuel famine at the beginning of the winter. I was sent out as deputy minister to try to effect an agreement between the parties. An agreement was arrived at upon every point except on the matter of discrimination as between union and non-union men. On that point a compromise was finally affected, both the men and the company agreeing to a clause which I drafted as representing, fairly I thought, the view of both. But we could not get the decision of the company for some little time after the men had given theirs, as to the acceptance of the proposed clause. After waiting some days, I received the following telegram from the manager of the company :

The managing director still thinks our clause fair to all parties, but under circumstances existing in country is willing to accept your substitute clause provided all other conditions are accepted.

In reporting to this government on that settlement I made this statement:

I showed this wire to the representatives of the men with whom I had gone to Indianapolis, gave them an assurance in the name of the government that the company had accepted the clause which I had drafted and the conditions agreed to at the joint conference, and an hour later the strike was declared at an end.

I mention this case because it is a parallel one to the intervention of the government in the settlement of the Grand Trunk strike. The parties to the Lethbridge strike had been negotiating for a settlement. The miners on the one side and the company on the other had come to a final agreement. It was an agreement between these two parties. But what the miners wanted was that the clause referred to should be known publicly to have been accepted by both sides; and I said to them, as an official who had been sent to endeavour to bring about a settlement: 'I will vouch for that; I will see that there shall be no misrepresentation on that point'; and on that pledge being given, the strike was declared at an end. What happened? The mines opened up, work was resumed, and there was no further trouble there for some little time. But what hon. gentlemen opposite contend is that if some trouble had taken place subsequently, the government of this country should have been held responsible, simply because an officer sent by the government had witnessed a term in the agreement, and was prepared to vouch for that being one of the terms of the settlement. That is what hon. gentlemen opposite are attempting to do in the case of the Grand Trunk strike. Now, the Grand Trunk settlement was arrived at between the parties themselves, Mr. Hays representing the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the one side, and Messrs. Garretson and Lee representing the men on the other side. These parties did the negotiating. The hon. Minister of Militia and myself spent two or three days doing our level best to get these parties to meet together, and when they did meet, to keep them together until they could arrive at some definite settlement. Feeling was running very high. The company had refused to negotiate with these leaders. Here is a telegram which I received from Mr. Murdock:

Messrs. Garretson and Lee held conference with Mr. Hays to-day without result.

The Canadian leaders had been trying to get a conference, but had been unsuccessful, and they sent to the United States for these two men, who were the heads of their organization, brought them to Montreal, and sought a further conference, but without any result. When Sir Frederick and I reached Montreal, that was the situation. The parties were unwilling to meet together, and we had to bring all the pressure we possibly could upon them to bring them together; and when we got them together we had to do our best to keep them together for a couple of days until we got the terms of the settlement threshed out. But the terms of the settlement were terms as between the parties themselves, not between the government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Railway Company or between the government of Canada and the men. We were there as ministers of the Crown prepared to vouch for the terms that were in that agreement should they ever be questioned. That position we are prepared to take up to the present. How was our action in that regard viewed by the men themselves? Let their own records speak. I have here a volume of the Railroad Trainmen of September, 1910. In an article on the Grand Trunk railway strike at page 297, there is the following:

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The hon. minister has said that he and the Minister of Militia took an active part in bringing about a settlement, and I would like to ask him if he thinks that either of the parties broke any of the terms and conditions of the settlement arrived at ?

Mr. KING. Well, I would say this, that if I had been one of the parties to the dispute, I would not have carried out the settlement in the way it has been, but every man can do as I have done, draw his own conclusion. I am prepared to state the terms of settlement, but every one is competent to judge for himself as to whether they have been carried out or not. In this article to which I have referred, I find the following:

The strike on the Grand Trunk railway system which was commenced July 18 under the direction of the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, was ended on August 2 at six p.m., when the agreement was signed by Mr. Hays, for the Grand Trunk railway, and the committee of the Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen for the men.

The strike was not ended by my colleague, the Minister of Militia and myself signing any agreement, but by this agreement being signed by President Hays and the representatives of the men. Here was the position at the time of the settlement, as described in this article, by the leaders of these organizations: Referring to the situation prior to the settlement the article goes on to say:

The company, however, was able to secure enough strike breakers to enable it to run 148 freight trains within the 24 hours ending at six p.m., August 2, handling an average of 22 cars per train. While this average of trains run was far below normal conditions, a start had been made in the freight service, and it was only a question of time when the entire service would be resumed.

I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, when they are endeavouring to saddle the responsibility on the government, of the non-reinstatement of some of the men—I think the number is around 200, out of a total of 4,000 involved in this dispute—to bear in mind this statement I have just read of the men themselves. According to this statement, it was only a question of time, when the entire service would be resumed by the company. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite whether, in view of this statement, considerable service was not rendered to the employees by a settlement being effected. Instead of only about 200 men being out of employment to-day, there would have been considerably more had that strike been continued.

Passenger service on the main line was but slightly impaired at any time during the strike, while the branch passenger line service was demoralized for about a week.

That is what 'The Trainmen' say. The article continues:

The settlement includes the return to the service within 90 days of every employee who left it with the exception of those who can be proven guilty of illegal acts against the company. The settlement was effected principally through the efforts of the Minister of Labour, the Hon. Mackenzie King, assisted by Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, to whom full credit is given for their efforts in bringing about the settlement.

My hon. colleague and myself are generously credited with having brought about a settlement, but the terms of the settlement were agreed to by the parties themselves. The parties, I believe, would not have got together, if we had not worked as we did, and the fight would have gone on until the railway company and the workingmen and the country as well, would all have suffered tremendous loss.

Then in the Railway Conductor's Magazine, published by the other organization, I find at page 718, the following:

In connection with this settlement, the thanks of the Canadian membership and that of our entire organization as well, are due and tendered to the Hon. Wm. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labour, and Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, for their untiring efforts in behalf of the men, for the influence they brought to bear upon the Grand Trunk Railway management contributed in no small degree in producing the satisfactory result and the ending of the controversy.

That statement goes to show that the efforts of the ministers contributed to bringing about a settlement, but the men themselves are responsible for the settlement finally reached.

Similarly, in a pamphlet issued on the Grand Trunk Railway Central Vermont strike, by W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, I find at page 10, the following statement:

The ministers of the Crown and particularly the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labour, and Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, were largely instrumental in bringing about a settlement of the strike. They kept in close touch with the strike throughout its duration and made the most of every opportunity to bring the two parties together.

There was the service that we had been able to render, but the settlement had to be effected by the parties themselves, when they came together.

They are due high praise for their interest in the welfare of the striking employees and of those affected by the interruption of the company's traffic. Their efforts in behalf of the men are appreciated by both organizations and by officers and individual members of the brotherhood.

Then Mr. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, sent the following communication from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on August 10, to myself, and I believe sent a similar one to my hon. colleague, the Minister of Militia:

Cedar Rapids, Iowa,
August 10, 1910.

Hon. William L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I take this opportunity of expressing to you on behalf of not only myself and my associate officers, but of the organization at large and the more especially the Canadian membership thereof, the profound obligation under which we lie for the services of yourself and your associate minister in connection with the settlement of the strike upon the Grand Trunk and the Central Vermont railways. The ready recognition by you of the justification for the claims of the men on those properties and the exercise of personal and governmental influence toward securing a termination of the strike on those properties will not be forgotten by our membership and I sincerely trust that those most directly affected, namely, our Canadian citizens, will, in the future, make that appreciation thoroughly apparent.

In conclusion, kindly accept my expressions of highest personal regard, and believe me,

Sincerely and gratefully yours,
(Signed) A. B. GARRETSON,
President.

I would ask permission to read just one further communication, which I hope will be a satisfactory answer to my hon. friends opposite. This is signed by Mr. S. N. Berry, vice-president of the Order of Railway Conductors, and James Murdoch, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and is dated, Windsor Hotel Ottawa, December 13, 1910 :

Windsor Hotel,
Ottawa, Dec. 13, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In further reference to conference held yesterday between the Premier, the honourable Minister of Railways and yourself with a committee of unreinstated Grand Trunk employees, accompanied by the undersigned, at which meeting the facts in connection with the Grand Trunk Company's failure to equitably apply terms of settlement made when strike was called off were discussed.

The committee desire to assure you, and through you the government, that they deprecate the attitude taken by certain gentlemen (presumably well intentioned) whereby an effort is being made to hold the government responsible for the failure to apply the terms of settlement made.

I hope hon. gentlemen will keep that sentence in mind when they try to saddle on the government every failure on the part of either of the parties to live up to the terms of the settlement.

We appreciate fully the assistance given both at the time of the strike, and since, by the government in its efforts to bring about on behalf of the Canadian public and the citizens of Canada who were involved in the strike a settlement, and an equitable carrying out of the terms of that settlement. It is definitely understood by the men interested and the undersigned that it is not on account of any failure on the part of the government that the present unfortunate situation obtains, but that the existing conditions are rather the result of the obstinate disregard for contract obligations on the part of Grand Trunk officials.

The assistance given so far in a conciliatory and mediating way by representatives of the government is much appreciated, but the committee would further request that if consistent the government should take further means, if possible, either by the appointment of a Royal Commission or in some other consistent manner to enforce from the officials of the Grand Trunk an acceptable carrying out of the agreement made and understandings reached.

It appears to the committee that the government can consistently lend its further aid in straightening out this matter when the fact is recalled that the unreinstated Grand Trunk employees who are asking for the carrying out of the agreement made, are placed in such a position on account of the fact that aliens or American citizens who are present in charge of Grand Trunk affairs, have repudiated an agreement made with Grand Trunk employees and an understanding reached with ministers of the Crown.

It is insufficient for those American officials to hide behind the statement that they have carried out their agreement as 'acts are more forceful than words' and the facts are that more than 200 reputable Canadian citizens who have not been guilty of any overt act are being wrongfully held out of service to satisfy the vindictive and retaliatory desires of officers in charge.

We would again assure you that if the government can consistently arrange to take any further action in this matter either by the appointment of a Royal Commission or other investigation, that the employees will be governed by any decisions reached as a result of such impartial investigation.

Will you kindly advise at your earliest convenience as to any further action taken or contemplated by the government.

We remain, very truly yours,
(Signed) S. N. BERRY,
Vice-President O. R. C.
(Signed) JAMES MURDOCK,
Vice-President B. of R. T.

There is the attitude that the men involved in this strike take towards the intervention of the government. And I must say that is the attitude I would expect workingmen, with the sense of honour that I know workingmen to have, to take, in view of the service that was performed. They know what was done to help in bringing about the termination of that strike, and, being grateful, they deprecate, naturally and rightly, the attitude of gentlemen for political reasons trying to make out that the government in some way is responsible for any incident or failure on the part of one of the parties to live up, in the way which might be expected, to the terms of that settlement.

Mr. LENNOX. I have something to deprecate too. I deprecate that the minister (Mr. King) should think it necessary to try to provoke difficulty for himself in getting his estimates through. He must be Irish, I think. He seems to throw down a challenge in order that a quarrel may be provoked. I would not speak at this time if it were not that the minister particularly challenged me by referring to me directly. The minister is on the wrong track. If I might use a vulgar expression which, probably, he would hardly appreciate, he is barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. KING. I am not aware of having challenged the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) in any way.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. King) began his remarks with a reference to the hon. member for South Simcoe—I take it that he must have meant me.

Mr. KING. If I may be allowed, I think the hon. gentleman misunderstood. My reason for mentioning the Grand Trunk strike was that it was referred to before we got into Committee of Supply. In my remarks I did not have any personal reference to any member of the House whatever.

Mr. LENNOX. We will see. 'Hansard' to-morrow will be our sufficient record as to what I say. The hon. gentleman (Mr. King) started by referring to the hon. member for South Simcoe, and he proceeded then to deal for a moment or so with the Grand Trunk strike. Then he wandered off to Lethbridge, and excused himself for that excursion by saying that the Lethbridge situation was illustrative of the position in the Grand Trunk strike. Then he wandered off to somewhere in the United States. I wrote a letter during the time he was discussing that matter, so cannot profess to have followed what he said. But he did try to give the House the impression that hon. members on this side, notably myself as chief sinner, were attacking the government in reference to the Grand Trunk strike. Speaking for myself—and others can speak for themselves —I believe that all I have said about the Grand Trunk strike in this House at any time has been in the form of two sets of questions put upon the Order Paper and the two or three questions that I asked this afternoon. And at that time I told the hon. gentleman distinctly through Mr. Speaker, who was then in the Chair, that I did not propose to pursue this matter until I had knowledge of the facts. The minister has thought fit to delay the passage of his estimates for several hours by bringing before the House—hoping, I suppose, to bring it before the country, but I do not think he will be successful in that—a lot of matter very eulogistic of the Minister of Labour. That we would naturally expect. Who can watch the course of the Minister of Labour and fail to be his admirer?—the gigantic work he is doing, and so on.

Mr. MADDIN. If the hon. member will pardon me, I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, if the number of members present constitute a quorum? I have seen estimates before Committee of Supply when there were more members on the government side.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I find there are twenty-one members present—a quorum.

Mr. MADDIN. Including one hon. gentleman who has just entered?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Labour (Mr. King) has not altogether emptied the House, and we can proceed. I would suggest to him that if we are to act harmoniously, he, at an early day, should discontinue his practice of to-night. We would take it for granted, if the minister would let us do so, that he is doing well. I will take it for granted, at all events, that he is doing as well as he can—that he intends to do well. But it is not necessary that the time of this House should be taken up in placing on record, and thereby burdening 'Hansard', with a lot of stuff that may prove to be mere twaddle to a great extent. The minister says he has the certificates of the men, and that they being actuated by a sense of honour, could not say anything else than that the government had done all it possibly could for them. The men have not spoken yet at all. Some representatives of theirs, who may or may not have acted well, have spoken, it is true. It is by the result of what I referred to this afternoon that we shall be able to judge whether these men did well or not. We cannot judge by these letters; we will judge by the facts and by the results. The minister is trving to crawl out of it already. He says the government are not responsible: they intervened, it is true, but the men must take the responsibility through their agents, for the government was not their agent— that, I think, summarizes what the minister says. But the men know that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Militia intervened. That is a guarantee—or ought to be a guarantee—to the men that their interests will be watched, and that they will not be thrown down. And if it turns out that the agreement entered into at Montreal between the representatives of the striking employees and the Grand Trunk railway was a gold brick; that the men thought they were getting an absolute and complete settlement of all difficulties, that the slate was being cleaned, that all differences were being removed, that they were being reinstated as if no strike had taken place, and that all would be reinstated except those guilty of violence—if it turns out that these men were thrown down, it will not redound to the credit of the government, but the government will be held responsible. That is what I want to say to the minister since he has challenged the position. And I want to tell him also that he intervened in this strike at a critical time. And he did not do much. All that he and the Minister of Militia did, as far as I can ascertain, was to get from the railway company finally a statement which they would not put in writing, that when they spoke of taking on these men as soon as possible, that meant that they would take them back within ninetv days. But what I am led to understand by the men themselves, whatever these representatives may have said to the minister is that they believed when that strike was being settled by the intervention of the government that they were to be restored to the same positions they stood in at the time the strike was called. If it turns out that that is not the case, I for one, and I have a right to speak of it in this House, whatever the agents may say, will say that the government is not without blame in the matter. If it turns out, on the other hand, as I hope it will, that these men were to have been secured in all their rights and the Minister of Labour did not see to it that the agreement was broad enough to cover those rights, then too he will be responsible. If it can be placed in a better position than that I will be quite ready to say that I have no condemnation of the minister in that matter. I do not intend at this moment to make any charge of default on the part of the minister of any kind but, as I said this afternoon, when the proper time comes and when I have my facts, I will then, if they justify such a course, bring it up in the House.

Mr. RHODES. In response to an inquiry which I made of the minister this afternoon as to why it was that he intervened in the case of the Grand Trunk strike, and not at Springhill, the minister has stated that in the former case he had a request, and in the latter he had not. Practically that summarizes the distinction between the two strikes. That he did not interfere in the case of the Springhill strike or tender his services for the purpose of mediating between the parties because he was not requested to do so. It seems to me that for that very reason the minister ought to intervene, and I say this with the utmost deference and good will, and because I have the interests not necessarily of my own constituents but of labouring men throughout the country at heart, and am prepared to believe that the Minister of Labour has their interests at heart as well. My contention is that if the Department of Labour is to be of full benefit to the people of this country it must exercise, if I may use the term, its plenary powers to go, and attempt to adjust differences wherever they may occur. If there is a fight on between individuals they get rather hot headed, they are not amenable to reason, and they battle away until one or the other wins, it is a question of the survival of the fittest, and the man having the greatest brute force wins, but that does not necessarily mean that the better side wins. What is true of individuals is true of organizations and of nations. When two nations resort to the arbitrament of war, the nation having the greatest number of soldiers, and the greatest financial resources wins out, but it does not follow that the nation having the right side of the quarrel wins. In the case of industrial disputes, where the parties are at daggers drawn, as at Springhill, it is perfectly natural that they will not ask some third party to intervene. I think the minister gave a very good reason why he should intervene in a remark he made with reference to the Grand Trunk strike. He said that no agreement would have been effected there had we, referring to himself and the Minister of Militia, not worked very hard. He goes to show by that fact alone that a third party coming in, not knowing either side of the dispute, and there only to bring the parties together, is able to accomplish a much greater work than can be done by the parties themselves. The minister was pleased to say that I could glorify myself if I could settle this strike. Allow me to say to him that there is a member of parliament covering every constituency in this Dominion, and that you could not have an industrial dispute without a member being affected. If you are going to place the responsibility of settling strikes on the members of parliament, why have a Minister of Labour at all? Otherwise the duties of the department are simply clerical, they consist in getting statistics, and publishing the 'Labour Gazette' which could be done by a staff of officials working under any other department. I did not like the attitude of the minister in attempting to make it appear that our efforts on this side were largely partisan. I did not see any attempt before the minister spoke on the part of members on this side to place the responsibility for the failure of the settlement of the Grand Trunk strike on the government.

Mr. KING. I was not referring to anything that took place in the committee, I was referring to previous discussions in the House when I spoke of these things.

Mr. RHODES. But a minister, a man clothed with authority, coming from a long distance away, can do a great deal towards the settlement of a strike, whereas a member of parliament, who happens to be on the ground, who may know the conditions, who is himself a representative of some one political party has not the same opportunity of doing effective work as the man from the outside, or the man occupying a higher office. If the minister is to act as negotiator only in cases where he is called on, we might as well dispense with his services altogether, because the parties could call in a judge or a member of parliament or a clergyman or a professor; but if we are to have the full benefit of a labour department, we should have a minister or a deputy or some competent man in the department prepared, wherever there is a labour dispute of any dimensions, to go to the scene of the trouble and stay there until a settlement in some form or another is effected. I hope that the minister will see his way clear without a request to go down to Springhill, and I may say that if there is anything I can do I should be very happy to go along with him, because I believe in the interests of the men who are struggling there to-day, in the interests of the country, and of the community at large, if there is a possible means of settling that strike, it ought to be settled.

Mr. MADDIN. The Minister of Labour in his speech to-night has gone to some trouble to paint a very good picture of the Minister of Labour. Lord Macaulay, in his essay on Warren Hastings, describes a distinguished gentleman who sat to Lely the painter, and who said to him: Paint me as I am; if you leave out one scar or pimple I shall not pay you a penny. I am quite sure that when the distinguished gentleman who occupies the portfolio of labour had finished adorning himself to-night he had such a halo around his head as would astonish Michael the Archangel. He decked himself with a wreath that contained everything from roses to sunflowers. I would like to add to that wreath one thistle—only one—and I take it from a fellow countryman of his own, a good Scotch Liberal fellow newspaper man in the province of Nova Scotia. True his political faith was not always as good as it is at the present time. I refer to the Hon. Robert Drummond, member of the legislative council of Nova Scotia, and publisher of the maritime 'Mining Record.' There appears in an issue of that paper an article referring to a description of the Minister of Labour published in the Canadian 'Courier,' and I am quite sure that the minister cannot be held responsible for observations contained in the 'Courier.' But, these are the deductions and conclusions that the Hon. Robert Drummond drew from this article and published in his paper last August. He said:

> The 'Canadian Courier' in an article highly eulogistic of Hon. Mackenzie King refers to him as the 'boy minister.' No one dares to criticize any of Mr. King's actions without a swarm of liberal press bees swooping down on him. This raises a doubt in the minds of some, as to Mr. King's alleged towering abilities. If in the Department of Labour he has been a towering success, his works are all the praise he should need. We in Nova Scotia are not in a position to fairly criticise the boy minister. He has never shown us any of the tricks of his department. Perhaps we did not give him the right opportunity. We did give him one opportunity but then it may not have been to his liking, and that perhaps accounts for his not making much of a fist of it. Indeed the boy minister acted in a way which could not be called other than boyish. There was a strike at Springhill and Mr. King came all the way from Ottawa to fix it up. On coming to the junction he found that Mr. Cowans was in Halifax. Instead of taking the next train to Halifax he sent a long telegram to Mr. Cowans and took the next train back to Ottawa. So like a boy.

Mr. RHODES.

Why did'nt he telegraph to find out if Mr. Cowans was at home before taking so long a journey. Was it because he was a boy and inexperienced that Laurier sent Sir Frederick to assist Mr. King in the Grand Trunk Railway strike. What is the use of beslobbering the boy over the settlement; any one with ordinary brains could have done all that the minister did with the government at his back. By and by when Canada grows bigger the Department of Labour will need a heavyweight. By that time Mr. King's boyhood days may be over and by age and experience he may be fitted for so ticklish a post. Give Mr. King an open field and no favour, but for pity's sake don't say he is a wonder because he does the work of his office to the best of his ability.

And, Mr. Chairman, with the canniness of a Scotchman, Mr. Drummond would not continue by saying 'and that is not saying much.' In his eulogy of himself this distinguished gentleman to-night told us that he hoped hon. gentlemen opposite would not be obliged to take their lives in their hands as he had been. He did not indicate whether it was his physical or his political life. He told us since dinner that he had gone out to Lethbridge during the strike there when people were dying. He crowns himself with everything he can bedeck himself with, he makes himself a great hero indeed; in fact, I wondered how it was that he did not come back from Lethbridge with the Carnegie medal for heroism, or something of the kind.

However, Mr. Chairman, this distinguished gentleman has told us to-night about the strike situation in Nova Scotia, and he has given us the reasons why he did not intervene at Springhill. He was discreetly silent with regard to the county of Cape Breton, and with regard to the strike there in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I would like to say that when the minister makes the statement that he made here to-night that the difficulty of the labour situation in Nova Scotia was due to a war between the two unions, he is not stating what is absolutely correct. When he was asked to-night if he had received petitions himself against the Industrial Disputes Act asking for the repeal of it, and said that he had, but that they came from the United Mine Workers of America, I would remind him that in September, 1907, when this Act had been taken up by the Provincial Workingmens' Association at Halifax at their annual convention, and after they had studied it in all fairness and all reason, they unanimously passed a resolution which was submitted to the then Minister of Labour, the present hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) who, I am pleased to see in his seat to-night, asking for the repeal of the Act. The Minister of Labour tells us that the strike situation has some political significance in Nova Scotia. I want to remind him again that before the United Mine Workers of America had taken up a position in Nova Scotia, and while that very resolution was receiving perhaps the due consideration of the Postmaster General, who was then the acting Minister of Labour, the miners of the Dominion Coal Company had a grievance, they called a special meeting of the council of the Provincial Workingmens' Association, that convened at New Glasgow, and who did the lobbying? The very gentleman who eulogizes in such a beautiful manner the Minister of Labour, the Hon. Robert Drummond, was on the scene. Not only did that special meeting of the grand council of the Provincial Workingmens' Association ask for a board of conciliation, but under such special auspices as they had on that occasion and with delegates from amongst the employees of the Intercolonial railway, from amongst the employees of Halifax and Truro, the miners of Cumberland, Pictou and Inverness, but they undertook to discuss, compare and study the Nova Scotia statute which has reference to arbitration, and the Industrial Disputes Act. Not only did they settle in favour of the Industrial Disputes Act, but these gentlemen from the various lodges undertook to name their representative on the board to represent the employees of the Dominion Coal Company, and with Mr. Drummond outside manipulating the discussion there was named Dr. Arthur Kendall, M.P.P., who sits on the Liberal side of the legislature of Nova Scotia. There was no United Mine Workers' in Nova Scotia then. I would like, however, to point out that the protests that came at that time from the Provincial Workingmens' Association have been followed since by protests from the United Mine Workers of America, numbers of which I have received from day to day, and some of which I have here in my hand to-night. I wish to say I have every sympathy with the Minister of Labour with regard to a situation of that kind. He talked about taking his life in his hands. I am prepared to take my political life in my hands and to stand with the Minister of Labour for the preservation of the Act if he will amend it, so as to make it a reasonable working Act. I wish to repeat, in order to make myself plain, that I am not in favour of the repeal of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, but I do wish the minister would take steps to render it more effective in practice and to remove the objections to it. I realize that this is new legislation, embarking in a new field. It is a new industrial tribunal, as it were, and naturally it is not a perfect one. The Canada Temperance Act, when it was passed originally in 1868, was over-burdened with imperfections, but in 1908—and I think as a lawyer I am safe in saying it—it is one of the most perfect pieces of legislation to be found on the statute-books of Canada. And how was that brought about? As breaches of the Act arose, as offenders escaped the penalties of the Act, parliament amended it and by amending it perfected it. And in the light of our experience with the Industrial Disputes Act, I believe it could be so amended as to make it acceptable to employers and employees alike. I am not one of those who, if I build a dike to secure my lands from the overflow of the river and find that notwithstanding my efforts the water had inundated my lands, would say: Destroy the dike. No; I would seek the weak spots; I would look to the holes in it; I would repair these, strengthen the work, and try to make it a perfect dike. If the minister will seriously take up this Industrial Disputes Act, if he will follow the counsel given by the leader of the opposition in the resolution he moved in 1907, and which was talked out at six o'clock by the member for South Cape Breton of that day; if the Minister of Labour will take the counsel offered in that resolution to consult the employers of the country, and to consult the employees and labour unions of the country and get them together and have each side point out the imperfections of this Act, I believe he would be able to secure a more perfect piece of legislation than we have at present. Surely there can be no objection to such a course as that. The minister quoted statistics, and if we accept his figures (and figures can be made to serve almost any purpose) 91 per cent of the disputes that have arisen under this Act have been settled without a strike, and the remaining 9 per cent have been settled according to the decree of the board, or on terms less acceptable to the men who had asked for the board. Let me point out to the minister that this law was enacted in 1907, and since that year the cost of living has been going up in an ascending scale. From whom would the demand come for a conciliation board? I asked him if he would furnish this House some time with the percentage of the number of requisitions from employers and employees. I will venture to prognosticate that 90 per cent of these petitions emanated from employees and not employers. Above all other times this is a time when employees should be receiving increased wages. This is a time when the cost of living is greater than ever before, and consequently the men must ask for an increase, and when they are refused they are met with this Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. They dare not strike until they get the board, and how do they get the board? They must ask for it. But is that all? No, Sir. They must accompany their application with a sworn statement that unless the board is granted there will be a strike. Is not that a beautiful piece of legislation? Doesn't it encourage strikes? What are the men to do when the board decides against them? They are compelled, first of all, to swear that they will strike unless the board is granted, and when the board gives a decree that is not acceptable to them every principle of manhood forces them to make good the statutory declaration which they are compelled to send along with their application for a conciliation board. Let me tell the minister that it would be very interesting to this House to have statistics to show how often the employer met the request of the employees when they presented their petition to the Department of Labour; how often they met it in a conciliatory way, and how often they stood aside and said: The men have no case, and we won't appoint anybody. The Act provides, in that case, that the government shall appoint a representative of the company. This forces upon the department a species of patronage which I have no doubt is quite distasteful to them. It forces them to look for some one to represent the corporation, and what is the result? We are told that politics creeps into these things at times. Is it not a fact that that corporation wherever it may be situated, from Vancouver to Sydney, or from the Great Lakes to the Arctic ocean, will invariably, through its representatives, proceed to Ottawa and say: We won't have anything to do with this board, and whilst under the statute it becomes your duty to appoint a man to represent us, you must be mighty careful whom you appoint. There is appointee No. 1, by the government, after the precautionary measures taken by the employer. What follows: The corporation, or employer, then goes to its representative appointed by the government and says: Don't you agree with the other representative as to a chairman. Don't you dare do it; you are appointed to represent us; we are very reluctant to have anything to do with this thing, but we instruct you now as our representative to be very careful; you must not agree on the third man. Then, under the law, at the end of five days it is up to the government again to appoint a chairman, and it is then the pressure is brought and that the representatives of corporations all over the country get around the department and say: You must be mighty careful in the appointment of the chairman.

Mr. KING. Will my hon. friend allow me to make a statement? While he is throwing out such suggestions as he is doing now I may say that in at least 60 per cent, or probably more, of the cases the parties themselves have agreed on a chairman. During the time I was deputy minister, I think there was one occasion when a corporation suggested to me the name of a man whom they would like as a chairman. I told the person who suggested it to me very plainly that that man certainly would not be appointed, and that hereafter I would thank them if they minded their own business. No corporation and no individual has ever approached me since I have been minister, or brought any kind of pressure to bear as to who the chairman of the board should be, and any corporation or individual who ever does may expect to have his or its name publicly disclosed.

Mr. MADDIN. The hon. minister has stated his position in matters of this kind, but I wish to tell him that he will spend a good many nights and Sundays before he will be able to disabuse the minds of the employees throughout the Dominion of Canada that where the government is vested with the appointment of two members of a board of conciliation the men are going to get a square deal from that board. The workingmen of this country know the power of corporation influence, and whilst the hon. minister cites one particular case, he does not give the name of that case. Then, he tells only of one instance where one of the parties affected, came to him. I wonder if he will go into the confessional now and tell us how often he was approached by members of this parliament who counselled him as to making appointments either as representatives of constituents, of their own, or as members of a board.

Mr. KING. I have consulted with the members on both sides of the House, with regard to members of boards. I am not aware of a single member of the House having come to me to ask me to appoint a single man to a board.

Mr. MADDIN. Will the hon. minister go a step further and tell us the names of some of the members on this side of the House whom he consulted ?

Mr. KING. I cannot think of a name at the moment, but I think I can give him one or more.

Mr. MADDIN. The hon. the minister thinks if he had time he could name one man. When it comes to the selection of a chairman, the government appoint him. I say this, without any apprehension of successful contradiction, that when a government which makes appointments of postmasters, harbour commissioners, overseers of fisheries and rivers and streams by the score, and makes appointments such as this government makes, which appoints men that have nothing to do, but draw their salaries—and their name is legion—I ask the hon. minister if he thinks the common labourers of this country are going to accept as bona fide, a tribunal so constituted that two out of three of its members are appointed by this government ?

Mr. KING. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the workingmen generally know that the appointments made have been eminently satisfactory, and that the hon. gentleman will be unable to cite a single instance where any chairman of any board or any appointee of the government has given ground to any one to believe that he has done other than fill his position honourably and fairly and in the best interests of all parties concerned.

Mr. MADDIN. I have not made a study of all the cases under this Act; they are not compiled and put into a volume which one can see in a law library. They appear only from time to time in the 'Labour Gazette.'

Mr. KING. They are all compiled in the annual report.

Mr. MADDIN. Not by themselves. They are overwhelmed with a lot of rubbish.

Mr. KING. No, by themselves.

Mr. MADDIN. I have not followed the decisions of conciliation boards in other provinces, but I am familiar with a number of those which have been given in the province of Nova Scotia. I do not complain particularly of any one who has acted, either as an appointee of the government or on behalf of a corporation, from my own personal knowledge of the gentlemen who have acted on conciliation boards in Nova Scotia. I am presenting to the minister complaints with which the labouring communities are pregnant, and which you will meet with on every hand, and the natural deductions which thoughtful men will draw from the decisions of tribunals so constituted as these conciliation boards are at the present time. A dispute between the employees of the Dominion Coal Company and that company arose in the county of Cape Breton in the spring of 1909. A board of conciliation was applied for, and it sat during the month of April. While the board was sitting at Glace Bay, and witnesses were going up and testifying as to the discrimination against them on account of the union they belonged to, after Mr. Mackinly Cameron, a barrister of Glace Bay, presenting the case on behalf of the men, had called 15 witnesses who swore that on the morning after the night they joined the United Mine Workers of America, their lamps were stopped and they were refused employment, and when Mr. Cameron asked: 'do you think it worth while to call any more witnesses?' Mr. Duggan, the vice-president of the company, said: 'I will admit that there was discrimination, but it was without the knowledge or consent of the company, and the company regrets it, and will put an end to it.' While the board was sitting, over 500 men in the employ of the company had been dismissed for no other reason than that they had joined the United Mine Workers of America. What happened! If it had been a trial before the Supreme Court, the company would have been brought before the bar for contempt. It demonstrated its intention throughout the whole proceeding, not to be bound by any finding of the board, because, while the board was sitting, it went on erecting an eight foot fence, miles in length, surrounding its property, and stringing over it three strands of wire, carrying about 1,000 volts on which it put up notices: 'Danger, live wire.' This was done while the board was considering whether or not the company was discriminating against its employees. With the statement of Mr. Duggan, that there would be no further discrimination, those men returned to work. Matters went on smoothly for some time, and the number of 500 went up by the first of July to 900, and on the 6th of July the men called a strike—not for recognition of the union. You cannot put your finger on a single published utterance, or find a single officer of the United Mine Workers of America, from its president, T. L. Lewis, in the United States, or the president of district No. 26, in the province of Nova Scotia, Mr. Dan Macdougall, down to the president of the humblest local union in the province, who demands recognition. But what they did say, and what they had a right to say, was this: 'You had no right to dismiss us, or any one of us, for joining the labour union of our choice.' I ask the hon. minister if he concedes to the people of this country, what our statutes have afforded them, what has been made an exception to the law of conspiracy, namely, the right to form labour unions?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. MADDIN. The moment that is conceded he must agree with me when I say that labour in this country has the right to choose its own labour institutions and not the organizations which are the choice of the employers. That being the case it would be much better if the minister would deal equitably with the situation such as we have in Nova Scotia. It would be much better if he would deal fairly and frankly with the men and not take his version of the situation from this report which was furnished by his deputy under circumstances which I intend to speak of later on. It would be much better for him not to take his views from the columns of the 'Globe' and of newspapers in Nova Scotia anxious to make out that the strike was originated for the purpose of serving political ends. I would ask that he would deal fairly with the situation there rather than believe that the strike was for the recognition of a union.

Mr. Cahan, solicitor for the Dominion Coal Company, had a consultation with me on the 24th of August, 1909. I was acting as solicitor for the men, and the whole question was gone into there and then with the leaders of the union. And if Mr. Cahan, whose honour and integrity as a barrister and a gentleman, no man on either side of this House would deny, were here, he would tell us that there was not one word at that conference about any recognition of the United Mine Workers of America.

You would naturally suppose that having a Labour Department presided over by a genius so exalted as the present minister, who had studied labour statistics from the year 1900 down to the present, who had formerly occupied the position of deputy minister before grasping the portfolio—you would naturally suppose that the Dominion Coal Company would have immediately sought counsel from the Minister of Labour. But what do we find ? In the Montreal 'Star' of July the 8th, I find the following account:

Mr. F. L. Wanklyn, vice-president of the Dominion Coal Company, is in Ottawa to-day. He came up from Montreal last evening and immediately got into communication with the Militia Department. He was informed as to the procedure necessary for the despatch of troops to protect the mines at Sydney and was advised that a requisition from the municipal authorities or the county judge to the district officer commanding was all that was required. This was secured from Judge Finlayson. This morning Mr. Wanklyn received a message stating that the special military train bearing the Royal Canadian Regiment at a strength of 512 had left Halifax at 3.45 a.m. The despatch added that things are quieter this morning but that some tracks were dynamited last night and a rifle shot fired at No. 6 colliery. I think the arrival of the troops will end it all, stated Mr. Wanklyn this morning. My advices are that only 33 per cent of the men are on strike and most of these are unskilled labourers. We propose to fight them to a finish.

Further on the despatch says:

Mr. Wanklyn had a further conference with the acting deputy Minister of Militia this morning and afterwards called upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He explained that his visit to the Premier was wholly personal and to advise him of the conditions in which he is naturally interested.

On the morning of the 6th of July we had a strike down in Cape Breton, and on the following evening there arrived in Ottawa the vice-president of the Dominion Coal Company, Mr. Wanklyn, who called, not on the Labour Department—no, but on the Minister of Militia, to tell him that the company were going to fight to a finish. Naturally, under the circumstances, he called on the Militia Department and not on the Department of Labour.

Mr. KING. In what year was that?

Mr. MADDIN. In 1909. Mr. Wanklyn had come up to Ottawa for the purpose of consulting the Minister of Militia and not the Minister of Labour. Mr. Wanklyn was going to fight the men to a finish.

The hon. Minister of Labour has properly said that the last thing people want is a strike. He could picture the horrors of it, as I have seen them myself, time and time again before there ever was an Act on our statute-book. The men themselves do not want to strike, but I want to say to the minister that when he takes out of the hands of the labouring men of this country the only weapon they have effectively to enforce their rights and gives them no compensation, he is putting himself in a position which is anything but enviable.

Mr. KING. I hope my hon. friend does not intend to imply that anything of the kind is done.

Mr. MADDIN. Absolutely.

Mr. KING. Nothing of the kind is done. The right to strike is not taken away in any manner whatever, but the parties have to wait until the statute is acted upon.

Mr. MADDIN. That is an argument and an aspect of the case with which I propose to deal. But how does the Act work? The men say they have a grievance and the Act operates in the interests of the employers and not of the employees. The men want an increase in wages which the employers refuse to give, and the men require that increase to meet the increased cost of living. They must send their application to Ottawa and accompany it by an affidavit declaring that there will be a strike unless their demands are conceded. The minister has five days within which he must notify the opposite party. When the opposite party has been served with a notification, it must reply in five days and then it has five days within which to appoint a representative. And these two have five days more in which to agree on a chairman. If they do not agree within the five days, the Department of Labour or the Governor in Council appoints a chairman. In this way over thirty days may elapse before the board is constituted. Then the board sits, and after they have arrived at a conclusion, if it be not satisfactory, the men dare not strike until another thirty days. What could work better, in all conscience, in the interests of the employers than just such a provision? We have an alien law so loose and easily handled that from across the borders are brought strike breakers. That was done in the Canadian Pacific Railway strike, four or five years ago, in the Grand Trunk Railway strike of last summer, and in the strikes of the Dominion Coal Company and in Cumberland county, and that will continue to be done so long as the government is so partial to the employers as to have this law on the statute-book which it is nobody's business to enforce.

In the particular case to which I have referred, what happened? While the board was sitting, the Dominion Coal Company were building their miles and miles of eight foot fences and stringing their wires by coming in contact with which two little boys were killed. That is what the company was doing during the not less than sixty days' notice they had of a struggle against organized labour. And what had the employees to do during those 60 days? Dig coal every day:—a public utility, therefore they must serve the public and incidentally earn more dividends for their employers. They must not cease to work under a penalty of $50 a day for every day they were not working. And think of these men who had petitioned for a board of conciliation—last week they reached their work by crossing an open field; yesterday they had to go round the end of a fence; to-day they have to go through a gate in that fence. And shacks are thrown up to shelter imported labour; every hardware store is canvassed for stoves and cooking utensils. Here was the enemy—if the employer can be called the enemy of labour? though I do not see why that should be, and I would like to see employer and employee come together and adjust their differences—here was the enemy preparing for war, while the men were forbidden to make any preparations. They had to raise a bank of 400,000 tons of coal while the employers were raising the shacks to shelter the scab labour that was to beat them out in the end.

The minister did make some inquiry into these conditions in Cape Breton. He did send down the Deputy Minister of Labour. But before I speak of that, I want to go on with the story of how they got the militia into the county. Mr. Wanklyn came up here on the evening of Wednesday, the 7th of July. And on. Wednesday afternoon shortly after mid-day, application was made to the mayor of Glace Bay, to the mayor of Dominion and to the warden of the municipality of Cape Breton, the company having coal mines in all these different districts. They refused to requisition the militia, and application was made to His Honour Mr. Justice Finlayson. And I wish to say here, as an aside perhaps, as it may not be strictly pertinent to this inquiry, that His Honour Mr. Justice Finlayson, sitting in the county court there, was obliged to try day after day many cases arising out of the strike, painful cases—distresses for rent, evictions from tenement houses and so on; they were ground out by the thousand. The application was made to Mr. Justice Finlayson for the militia. And, while there have been one or two who questioned his integrity and fidelity to his office in the discharge of his duties on that occasion, I wish to say here to-night, on the floor of parliament, that as solicitor for the men, their chief solicitor at that time, I found Mr. Justice Finlayson absolutely honourable, upright, fair, courteous and obliging from the beginning to the very end. Now, application is made to His Honour Mr. Justice Finlayson for a requisition for the militia. He granted that requisition. And what then? I regret that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is not here, but they actually posted the orders at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning in Halifax—mobilization orders for the regular troops. The Militia Act only provides for the regular troops being called out in the event of the local troops being inadequate. Mobilization orders at Halifax, ten o'clock Wednesday; Mr. Wanklyn calling on the Premier, to inquire about his health, Wednesday afternoon and the Minister of Militia, or the acting deputy Minister of Militia, asking for forces. These were the steps taken to settle that labour difficulty, and so the troops came down to Cape Breton. And what now, do you suppose? They are actually charging the people of Glace Bay, Dominion and the municipality of Cape Breton thousands of dollars for the expenses of these members of the regular militia of Canada. Was there ever anything so outrageous on the face of the earth? Who is paying these men to-day? Do not the people of Canada pay them? But those who asked for them, or have their services reluctantly thrust upon them must pay for these soldiers. Had there been no strike in Springhill the regular troops of this country would have been paid. Annually the Minister of Militia takes his seat here and calls upon us to vote the money to pay these men; it is voted by this House and the country pays it. Why, then, should the municipality of Cape Breton, or the town of Glace Bay, or the town of Dominion pay for these men when their services are required on account of a strike or an invasion? However, the minister did show his hand in the situation in Cape Breton. He sent down his deputy to the county, and that gentleman made a report which came to hand in this House some time during the last year and a copy of which I have now before me. He says, referring to the strike at Springhill that there were several grievances referred to, one being that of recognition of the United Mine Workers of America, others relating to conditions of work. The hon. minister told us this evening that he did not wish to intervene in the situation at Springhill because there it was a fight for recognition of the union. But his deputy lays before this House a report in which he says that there were several grievances at Springhill, one of which was recognition of the union What has the minister done to alleviate the friction in the other case? The men were paid by the 'box' and what constituted a 'box' was well known to be one of the vital questions One board of conciliation decided that 1,700 pounds of coal should constitute a 'box', But the company wanted to change that, making a heavier 'box' That was one of the things that the men protested against. Another question was the schedule of rates in connection with the mine. I wonder did the minister do anything to alleviate the circumstances in this case? His deputy reports that there were several grievances, one of which was the recognition of the United Mine Workers of America. And the minister washes his hands to-day and says: We could not intervene the whole question was that of recognition of the union. This officer proceeded to Sydney and spent some considerable time there—I do not know just how many days. But he gathered a good deal of information. He points out that there was a conciliation board held in March, 1908. That is the board I had reference to that was so ably constituted by Robert Drummond and Doctor Kendall at New Glasgow, and which was participated in by delegates from all over the province who were members of the Provincial Workmen's Association. He says:

It is to be noted in connection with the above list of men prominent in the agitation that Mr. MacDougall, now President of the District Council of the United Mine Workers of America, was a member of the sub-council of the Grand Lodge of the Provincial Workmen's Association in March, 1908, when the existing agreement between the Dominion Coal Company and its employees was concluded before a Board of Conciliation and Investigation established under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and presided over by Professor Adam Shortt.

The deputy minister thinks it is his duty to incorporate in the report he lays before parliament the fact that the President of the United Mine Workers had actually signed and approved of a settlement, of a wage schedule between the employees and the company in March, 1908. Why, some newspapers in this country went so far as to say that the company could not deal with the United Mine Workers of America because they had a contract and they spell that contract in capitals in every Grit paper from the Halifax 'Morning Chronicle' down to the Sydney 'Record.' They spelled it in capitals and they underlined it and put quotation marks around it and nursed it and nurtured it and held it up to the public and said: There is a contract, we cannot negotiate with these men because of that contract. But the Deputy Minister of Labour knew there was no contract, there was an award accepted, not by the Provincial Workmen's Association but in the very words of the deputy minister, by the employees of the company, and it was only by a majority of the employees, for there were a number of lodges of the Provincial Workmen's Association, whose representatives refused to sign the award or accept it. But one would think that when this gentleman came down to the county of Cape Breton to investigate the conditions that obtained there he might possibly have called on the representative of the riding. The hon. minister to-night recommended to the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) that he should go down to Springhill and tell the men there what Mr. Butler had told him; in other words, he recommends the member for Cumberland to go down to Springhill and tell the men exactly what Mr. Wanklyn told the newspaper reporters in June, 1909: We are going to fight them to a finish, give us the militia. He recommends the hon. member to go to his constituency and inform those of his constituents who are on strike what Mr. Butler says. If that is his wisdom in this matter, if that is his judgment, if he thinks such action is incumbent on the representative of a constituency where a strike exists, I would think that his deputy, coming to Cape Breton, would have wired me as member for the constituency where the strike existed, and in addition to that the recognized solicitor of the men on strike. I was there in a double capacity, I was the member for the riding and the solicitor of the men.

Mr. KING. Does the hon. member mean to say that the deputy minister, when he was there, did not see him?

Mr. MADDIN. I could not help seeing him.

Mr. KING. He told me distinctly that he made a point of seeing the hon. member, and he was instructed to do so.

Mr. MADDIN. I am not taking issue with you there, nor are you taking issue with anything I said. I said I would have thought he would have notified me he was coming, either as solicitor for the men on strike or as representative of the county. Now if it had been Mr. O'Donohoe, who furnishes these plastic reports to the Trades and Labour Council, how he would have been notified and embraced on the arrival of the deputy minister. I received no notification. I saw Mr. Acland, in Glace Bay, with Mr. J. K. L. Ross, son of the president of the company, who drew $10,000 a year for doing little or nothing. I saw him accompanied by Mr. Dick, the sales agent of the Coal Company; I saw him going around with the nabobs of this concern. I rode from Glace Bay to Reserve Junction sitting across a sideseated car from Mr. Acland, and I was told he was the deputy minister. I had never met him, if he were in the House now he would tell you I had never met him before a passenger said: that is the deputy minister, and he was with these nabobs I have mentioned. He got off at Reserve Junction. That was his second day down in the strike district, gathering information for that report to lay before this parliament and yet up to that time he had not come to see the member for the county nor the solicitor for the men who were on strike. He knew where I was engaged from 8 o'clock in the morning until midnight in Glace Bay, and when I went home on a certain evening at 6 o'clock, I found a card: F. A. Acland, Deputy Minister of Labour. My good dame said to me: Mr. Acland left the card at the house and said he would like to see you before he left town; he is at the Sydney Hotel. And so I saw him and he was anxious to go over to the north riding to consult with the hon. member who represents that riding, where there was no strike. He was going over on the boat in a few minutes and he said to me, just before going to the boat: I would like to have your opinion about this matter. I said: Have you got the opinion of the men who are in charge of the strike? He replied that he had seen two or three of the executive officers, whom he named. I told him that they had authority to speak about the situation and could doubtless have told him all I could tell him. He asked me about the conditions of order there. I gave him my opinion about the militia. He has not incorporated it in his report. There was not a word in it that should not have been printed, although I felt like saying a good many that would not look well in print. This emissary of the Department of Labour who had journeyed down so far and who on the day on which he was leaving town left a card at my house in Sydney with a pretty positive knowledge that I was in Glace Bay, and would not get out until the evening, and whose anxiety to consult with the hon. gentleman, the member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. KING. May I interrupt my hon. friend. Knowing Mr. Acland as I do, I feel that any action of that kind is not of a sort of which he is capable. I know Mr. Acland to be honourable in the highest degree, and that in going on a mission of this kind he would do his utmost to see every party concerned. I am sorry he is not here at the present moment, but I will have no hesitation in saying that I am quite sure if he did not see my hon. friend the moment he arrived, it was not because of any direct intention not to do so, but that he had every desire to see every person he should see. The hon. member says that Mr. Acland saw the representatives of the men, and I presume he thought it better to see the men themselves before he saw their solicitor.

Mr. MADDIN. I have every regard for the hon. gentleman who acts as deputy for the Minister of Labour. I have not imputed nor do I impute to him anything disloyal to the minister. He was serving his master, he was under instructions. I submit that when this department sends a representative into a county, if it be the fortune of that constituency to be represented by a Conservative that is no reason why that Conservative or that representative of the people there should not be communicated with. Take other instances. In this House and during this session I had occasion to refer to the visit of the Board of Railway Commissioners to the county of Cape Breton. They acted in the same way and what was the report from the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte). Why he said it was through the courtesy of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) who accompanied the board that we were going to have some necessary repairs done to the Terminal wharf in Sydney. I did not know, and was not told that the board were coming to the town or to the county of Cape Breton, but I was told that they were actually going to repair the terminal wharf in Sydney. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that if the Deputy Minister of Labour's efforts in Cape Breton had been of a conciliatory rather than an aggressive character, if he had succeeded in stopping the strike we would have been told that it was through the efforts of the hon. member for North Cape Breton, whom he went to see that very evening, that the strike had been amicably adjusted. I have no reference to being slighted personally. I have no desire to get in the private cars of the Board of Railway Commissioners or to ride around with them at all but I would like to know when they are coming to South Cape Breton, and I would like to extend them a little hospitality, and take them around the confines of the city. I would like to do as much for the Deputy Minister of Labour, or the Minister of Labour, when they come there in their official capacity, but, if they come like a thief in the night, if, I am only to see the Deputy Minister of Labour on a street car twelve miles away from the Intercolonial railway station at which he had landed, and then have him pointed out to me by strangers, I submit it is not doing justice to the man who is elected by the common people as their representative nor is it treating the solicitor of the United Mine Workers of America with the slightest measure of consideration. I hold the Department of Labour responsible for this, and not the deputy. Common courtesy would have imposed on the minister himself, when he sent his deputy down there, the necessity of giving the instruction : Notify Mr. Maddin that you are going down ; wire him, or, he could have wired me himself and we might have been able to discuss the situation. But no, this gentleman comes down, prepares a report and summarizes the situation on pages 11 and 12. He says :

Many people who are entirely opposed to the United Mine Workers of America and wholly friendly to the Grand Secretary of the Provincial Workmen's Association, state that that official's extended retention of office was a source of discontent among a number of miners. He had become well known to the officials of a number of companies, including the Dominion Coal Company, and had grown into the habit of dealing with the companies on behalf of the men without always going through the form of consulting the men's committees. In this and other ways he had aroused the suspicion and jealousies of a number.

And, now, Mr. Chairman, listen to this gem that we have from the student who went down to study the conditions. He says :

In addition, politics came in. Moffat is frankly a Liberal——

I would like the minister to inquire from his deputy where his deputy found out that Moffat was frankly a Liberal. He says :

Moffat is frankly a Liberal, but claims not to have taken unfair advantage of this fact in his capacity as Grand Secretary. He was opposed for Grand Secretary some years ago by Mr. James Madden, now counsel for the United Mine Workers of America, and Conservative member of parliament for the riding.

There is wisdom for you from the man who left his card at my house, and said that he would like to see me, the man who met me and who did see me but who did not ask me one word about it. In 1901, eight years before the strike, when a very callow youth, I did contest with Mr. Moffat for the position of Grand Secretary of the Provincial Workmen's Association. In 1906 when I ran for the local legislature in Nova Scotia, Moffat took the hustings and campaigned against me. I had the first Conservative majority within the town of Dominion, where he lived for ten years, and in which he took the hustings against me, that had taken place since the town was incorporated. But, in 1904, where was Mr. Moffat, this man who was frankly a Liberal?—supporting Stephen B. McNeil the Labour candidate, a man who could not find anything rank or vile enough to say against Alexander Johnston when he was contesting the county in the interest of the Liberal party and who won. Not content with going through the district, at the Lyceum, the theatres and the rinks, he journeyed into the country districts, went amongst the farmers and fishermen, and gave them his opinion of Mr. Johnston and the Grit and Tory governments. That was in 1904. In 1906 he shot his bolt in favour of Kendall and Gillies, and in 1908 there was not a man in the Dominion of Canada in a position to say that he did not vote for me. I have no reason to believe but what he did vote for me. I may say that there is no political difference between us, he certainly did not take the hustings against me, he certainly had no grudge against me, and he certainly made no canvass against me. On the contrary, I am assured by some of his brother grand officers of the Provincial Workmen's Association that I had his assistance and support in the campaign of 1908, and yet the deputy minister says that :

He was opposed for Grand Secretary some years ago by Mr. James Madden.

Whoever that may be. He doubtless thought it was I. He did not know my name or how to spell it, but he says that 'Mr. Madden' ran against Moffat, 'who is frankly a Liberal.' I would like to find out where the deputy minister got that information. The whole thing summed up is that there was politics in the situation. True, the Sydney 'Record,' the Glace Bay 'Gazette,' and Mr. Pearson's papers in Halifax and Glace Bay said so, but, when they alleged that the strike arose out of politics, that it was promulgated and promoted for the purpose of making political capital they were uttering falsehoods, which were not only false but false with the knowledge of those who penned and published them. Political capital is ballots marked in favour of the party who seeks the political capital, and I want to review the political occurrences of the province of Nova Scotia, and show him that these base slanders are absolutely unfounded. In 1906 I had the honour of being a candidate for the local legislature in the province of Nova Scotia. I was running with Mr. Butts of North Sydney against Dr. Arthur Kendall and Neil J. Gillies of Glace Bay. Mr. Gillies was an underground manager at one time. He was a past Grand Master Workman of the Provincial Workmens' Association, and he was the candidate of the mining districts.

The hon. member for North Cape Breton had been elected for that constituency in the general election of 1901, he had a plurality of over 2,000 votes. Mr. Butts and I ran the election under those circumstances, and when the ballots were counted on the night of the 20th of June it was midnight before they knew whether Mr. Gillis or I had been elected, and on a recount of the ballots it was found that the Liberal majority of 2,000 plus which the hon. member for North Cape Breton had in 1901 had dwindled down to 120. Where did these votes come from—a majority of over 275 from the town of Sydney Mines in the riding of North Cape Breton, and I led the poll in Mr. Gillis' home throughout the southern mining districts. The miners in 1906 in Cape Breton county voted for Butts and Maddin. In the county of Pictou Mr. Tanner had a plurality of 454 in the town of Westville a small mining town and in the Back Mines district in the town of Stellarton, and away from the round house and the influence of the Intercolonial railway Mr. Tanner also had a majority. The complete returns from the province of Nova Scotia in the local election of 1906 showed that the Conservative candidates had a majority amongst the miners of Cumberland county of over 500, that the Conservative candidates in Pictou county had a majority among the miners of over 500, and that Mr. Butts and I had a majority in the county of Cape Breton of over 500. There was political capital among the miners of the province. In 1908 how was it? The hon. member for Cumberland took a majority of 500 out of the county of Cumberland, and a majority of 300 in the town of Springhill alone. Mr. Tanner who opposed the member for Pictou had a majority of over 500 in the county of Pictou and in the county of North Cape Breton Mr. McCormack had a majority of over 200 in the town of Sydney Mines among the miners there. I stand here to-night as the representative of the votes of the miners of Cape Breton who gave me in the south riding a majority of between 400 and 500 in the mining districts. There was political capital again in 1908. And, you can run the whole gamut of the Grit newspapers in the province of Nova Scotia from the 'Morning Chronicle' down to the Glace Bay 'Gazette' or from 'Free Speech' or the 'Vindicator' down to the Sydney 'Record' and they are all filled with the idea that the matter is promoted for political purposes. Why, Sir, the interest of the Liberal Conservative party in the province of Nova Scotia lies in continued work, double shift, opening up new collieries, steady employment, that would have meant more political capital to the Conservative party than a strike with its incidental horrors. The emigration which takes place, the people who leave the country whether the strike lasts for a week or a month going from the mining districts operates to the disadvantage of the Liberal Conservative party. And the Liberal Conservative party as a party was the only party who had anything to loose, and the Liberal party is the only party which had anything to gain by keeping the strike going and that may account for the diffidence and backwardness of the department in dealing with the situation of South Cape Breton and Springhill. I have taken up more time than I intended when I commenced to speak and there are some publications that I would like to have before the committee and which I probably will present for their consideration at a future day.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have listened very attentively to the observations of the hon. member for South Cape Breton. He has wandered over a very wide field, and has spoken about a great many things which I do not think on reflection he will consider have very much bearing on the question before the chair. I do not know that this House is very much concerned about the number of votes that were cast at Glace Bay in the local elections of 1906 or the number of votes that were cast at Sydney Mines, or the number of votes that may have been cast at some municipal election in different parts of Nova Scotia. If my hon. friend wants to make a general statement about the political complexion of the province of Nova Scotia he could sum it up in a very short statement; he can say that since confederation the province of Nova Scotia has been in the hands of the Liberal party continuously with the exception of one lean four years that it happened to be in the hands of the Tories. The people of the province had a taste of what they were capable of doing for one four years, and they pitched them out of office at the very earliest opportunity and ever since 1882 they never had a look in, to use a vulgar expression, in the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to ask my hon. friend what his observations, from the time he rose until the present moment have to do with the motion?

Mr. McKENZIE. My hon. friend has given such little attention to the business of this House this winter he possibly doesn't know anything that is going on.

Mr. MADDIN. I wish to repudiate that on the spot. I paid as much attention to the business of this House as the hon. member, and the chances are, with a great deal more advantage to the country, and this is the time and place to say so.

Mr. McKENZIE. My hon. friend may have had messengers back and forth to this House telling him what was going on, but I will venture to say that he graced this House very little during the session with his presence.

Mr. MADDIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make myself clear——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MADDIN. You will get all the order you want. I would like to make myself clear with regard to this matter. I would like to know what the hon. member means by 'presence' in the House. I wonder if he conveys an imputation behind it; I wonder if he would like a Roland for his Oliver?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not know what my hon. friend means by a Roland for his Oliver. If he says that he is Dr. Jeckel and Mr. Hyde and that Mr. Hyde was here and Dr. Jeckel was absent or that he is some double personage I don't know anything about it; all I know is that the honourable Mr. Maddin whom I regard as the representative for South Cape Breton has been absent in the body the most of the session, and that he was not here is what I mean by saying that he was not present. That is about as plain as I can say it, and I think my hon. friend will understand it. He may have been better engaged, I am not making any insinuation.

Mr. MADDIN. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Unless the hon. gentleman who has the floor permits, another hon. member may not interrupt.

Mr. MADDIN. I will ask for his leave.

Mr. McKENZIE. There are some explanations due to his constituents from the hon. member why he was not here, and he can make them.

Mr. MADDIN. That is very good indeed, and I appreciate the courtesy and the big heartedness and the benevolent and the generosity of the hon. member for Cape Breton. If he wishes to put me in competition with himself or some other hon. members as to the number of hours I spend behind a desk in this chamber, I think he has perhaps sat longer behind his desk than I have. But there is this to say, that at any time that I was absent from my chair I was within the precincts of the House, and when I have been there I have contributed more to the development, improvement and welfare of this country in one hour than the hon. member usually does in ten hours, and have given less offence in doing so.

Mr. McKENZIE. I thought that according to the hon. member for South Cape Breton, it was left to the hon. Minister of Labour to give glowing pictures of himself; but it seems that there are other picture painters in this country, and they are of the class I heard described by the Minister of Agriculture once this session, as painters who paint things not as they are, but as they would like them to be. That is about the description which the hon. member for South Cape Breton is giving of himself; but it is certainly not the picture of the hon. member which this House knows. Now, the general complexion of politics in Nova Scotia can be put in very small compass. After forty years of continuous Liberal rule, there is not one county in the province of Nova Scotia today represented altogether by Conservatives. Out of thirty-eight members in the provincial legislature there are I think five members representing the principles of the party of which my hon. friend boasts. That is all he has to encourage him in the conditions of local politics in the province. I do not think it was necessary for my hon. friend to introduce politics into this matter at all. He is not going to drag me into casting any reflection, one way or the other, on the men who were concerned in the strike in Cape Breton. My hon. friend would give you to understand that that strike was something like strikes in other parts of the province. As a rule, when men are out on strike, they are all out. It is a question of the men on one side and the corporation or employers on the other side. Such was not the case in the county of Cape Breton. It was simply a division among the men themselves, about one-half on one side and one-half on the other side; Provincial Workmen's Association men on one side, satisfied with the conditions under which they laboured with the company, stayed with the company; and on the other side the followers and supporters of the United Mine Workers. That was the situation. My hon. friend from South Cape Breton at once destroyed his usefulness to the people he represented by allying himself with one camp of the men. It was his duty and his responsibility, as the representative of that county, as the representative of the Provincial Workmen's Association men just as much as the United Mine Workers men, to conserve his duty to them all by keeping clear and not becoming the lawyer or adviser of one party more than the other. The moment my hon. friend became the lawyer and adviser and strategist of the United Mine Workers men, that moment he lost the confidence of at least one-half the workingmen of his county, and made it absolutely impossible for the Department of Labour to consult him as to what should be done. I say that advisedly, because the moment the Department of Labour consulted Mr. Maddin, one-half the men would say, to the deputy minister: Of what use is it for you to come here as representing the Department of Labour and expect to do fairly by us when you consult the lawyer on the other side? Therefore it was advisable for the Deputy Minister of Labour to get his information elsewhere than from the solicitor of one camp which was engaged in a pitched battle at the time with the other. The hon. member says that I was consulted in the matter by the Deputy Minister of Labour.

Mr. MADDIN. I did not make such a statement. I said that the Deputy Minister of Labour, when he called on me, said that he wanted to go across the harbour to consult with Mr. McKenzie. I did not say that he did consult with the hon. member or that Mr. McKenzie advised him.

Mr. McKENZIE. As men of affairs and men of some common sense, I think we are bound to draw the inference from the statement of the hon. member in regard to the deputy minister being in such a hurry that he would not talk to him, but wanted to go across the harbour and talk to the member for North Cape Breton, that the deputy minister was going to consult me about the matter in hand. In justice to the deputy minister, I must say that he never discussed with me anything connected with the trouble in the southern part of the county. There were troubles brewing in my own part of the county at that time. There was some rumbling that the men at Sydney Mines were coming out. Fortunately they did not. But they were negotiating for a conciliation board, and I spoke to the deputy minister about that. I felt that I had enough to do in trying to keep things quite in my own district without interfering with the southern district, and I did not interfere at all. The point I thought my hon. friend was going to make was in connection with the Industrial Disputes Act. He is a lawyer of some experience and capacity, and he has been dealing with that Act since 1907. He has had exceptional opportunity in this House of dealing with any weaknesses which he might find in that Act; but I have not heard of him making any suggestion as to how it could be made better or more workable than it is. I was thinking, before the hon. gentleman sat down, that he would give us some practical suggestions as to how this Act could be improved.

If there is anything the matter with this Act, why let us sit down and reason together and make it better. I am sure there is not a man here who would not be glad to do so; but at the same time, I must say representing as I do, a great many working men and some capital, that while I want to be fair to the labouring men, I must also, as a member of parliament, be fair to capital. Let us try and constitute a court which will deal fairly with both sides. I cannot understand that it is to the benefit of labouring men in this country that they should be advised or permitted to take an unfair advantage of their employers. I do not think that is what they want. What they want is a fair deal; and if this Act can be improved upon so that a better condition of things may be brought about and a fairer trial given, I am sure no one will be more pleased than myself, but why should my hon. friend spend hours threshing in this House the old straw, about the different things that happened when that unfortunate conflict was on at Glace Bay. I am sure he must admit that the strike was ill advised and badly conducted and resulted in disaster and defeat to the men. It has brought forth no good; and if the men had any grievances, I am sorry they did not meet with more success in having these grievances remedied. Knowing the labouring men as I do, I can say that there is not in Nova Scotia or anywhere east of Winnipeg, a class of people better paid, better housed or more comfortable than the miners of the county of Cape Breton. They are intelligent people, wishing to give a fair return to their employers and capable of understanding fair treatment if they are well advised. I think it is admitted by nine-tenths of the men who went on this strike, that they were ill advised and the hon. gentleman, who boasts so loudly of being their legal adviser, has nothing to brag about as regards the way in which the strike was conducted and concluded. These men were left at last to the mercy of the Dominion Coal Company without any protection whatever; they were left to shift for themselves without reaching any conclusion that will be beneficial to them.

I shall not say anything further about the political effect. We had an election down there a few days ago, and I shall allow my hon. friend to count the votes and let him tell the House what happened there last Thursday.

An effort has been made to show undue haste in bringing out the militia. The difficulty is, that when men introduce politics into everything, it is impossible for them to be fair. Does the hon. gentleman forget that the Militia Act has been on our statutes for over 30 years just as it stands to-day ? Does he forget that it is the product and creation of his own party friends, and that the clauses providing for calling out the military to help the civil powers are to-day just as they were from the beginning ? All that is necessary is to make certain affidavits and comply with certain provisions and no Minister of Militia can refuse military aid. My hon. friend tries to make political capital among men who do not understand these things by saying that the Minister of Militia had no business to send out the troops; but he will not dare say that Mr. Justice Finlayson would think of granting an order calling for the troops, unless the necessity for so doing was clearly established. The Mayor of Glace Bay was appealed to for further assistance in the way of furnishing policemen to keep the trouble down and what did he do ? What was the sage advice he gave ? I will give you aid, he said, 500 strikers to act as policemen. Did you ever hear of such an absurdity? 500 of those who were on strike and against whom the property of the company had to be protected, the mayor suggested, should act as its guardians.

Another point my hon. friend tried to make, was that the county of Cape Breton was taxed for the payment of these men. I presume, as far as the municipalities are concerned, that we all have to pay our share. That is the law. If any municipality calls for the aid of the troops, it has to pay the extra expense, and that would have been the case in the county of Inverness, or Pictou, or Guysborough, had the demand been made in any of these. Why were not the volunteer militia called out, my hon. friend asked. He thinks there would have been a saving of money if they had been, but he knows very well, that he is not putting the whole truth before the House in that connection. The only charge against the town of Glace Bay or the county of Cape Breton is the difference between the cost of the militia from the barracks at Halifax and their cost when in active service on the field. When officers are engaged in the field they are paid higher wages than when in the barracks and I presume so also are the soldiers; and whatever may be the difference, it has to be paid by the municipality. I presume the county of Cape Breton had to pay the expense of transportation, but the same amount of money which would be paid these men in barracks is paid by the government and not one cent of that is paid by the county.

Hon. gentlemen opposite applauded the case made out by my hon. friend, but if they heard the case as it is being tried out in the courts, there would be no 'hear, hears,' from any hon. member on either side who understands the situation and the Militia Act. An effort however, is being made, to poison the minds of the people, particularly interested by giving them a false side of the showing. I do not think it is necessary to discuss this matter at any length. The only thing open to my hon. friend to show is in what way this Act could be improved. If he has any proposal to that effect, I am sure it will receive fair consideration at the hands of the government and this House, but so far, he has given us none, and therefore, he might well have spared us the meandering statements he has been making to no purpose.

He attacked the courts that have been constituted for the purpose of inquiries of this kind in the province of Nova Scotia, but when asked for particulars he had to admit that he had no fault to find with any one of them? What objection could he have to men like Prof. Shortt, or Mr. Justice Graham, of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, or Mr. Justice Paterson, or Mr. Justice MacGilvray, who have sat from time to time upon those courts? Why, my hon. friend himself has been a member of a conciliation court. He forgot to tell us that. And what was the result of his great wisdom as a member of that court? He was dealing with one of the mines of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, and he signed, as the third arbitrator, a report which was signed by all, reducing the wages of the men. He had not the slightest objection to the powers he was given as arbitrator, nor to any of the proceedings. And he came before the miners of Sydney Mines and read them a lecture, declaring that they should accept this result and be satisfied that the Act was giving them everything that was coming to them.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was his decision just and proper?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am not saying whether it was or not. But it was a decision reached under the operation of this Act. And if a just decision could be reached in that investigation by Mr. Maddin and two other men, Prof. Shortt being one, what particular charm had Mr. Maddin in connection with that inquiry that was not present at the other inquiry?

Mr. LANCASTER. Why did not the Minister of Labour do as Mr. Maddin did and bring about a correct decision?

Mr. McKENZIE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), who professes to be a lawyer—

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not professing to be anything; I am trying to understand from the hon. gentleman what he is driving at. Will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will answer his first question, and then he can ask me another. He asks: Why did not the minister see to it that the decision of the board was a correct one?

Mr. LANCASTER. Why did he object—

Mr. McKENZIE. I will give the answer. Does the hon. gentleman say that, if a decision of the Supreme Court is reversed by the Privy Council the government should be called to task and told that they should see to it that the court shall give only such decisions as will be sustained? That is the position he takes when he asks why the Minister of Labour does not see to it that every decision given by a conciliation board shall be such as will be sustained by the men.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman, inadvertently, of course, has misunderstood what I said. I asked why it was not competent for the minister to bring about a just decision which he says Mr. Maddin brought about when he was a member of a board?

Mr. McKENZIE. Perhaps I am one of those unfortunate Scotchmen upon whom a surgical operation must be performed in order to make him understand, but I must admit that I cannot understand the question of my hon. friend. There is an Act of this parliament which enables a court to be constituted under certain conditions, and he charges the minister who puts that law in operation with the duty of seeing to it that every court so constituted shall reach a decision of a certain character.

Mr. LANCASTER. I say an equitable and just decision.

Mr. McKENZIE. What is equitable and just depends upon the viewpoint. What I might regard as equitable and just might be regarded as quite the contrary by somebody else. It depends upon whose ox is gored, as the old saying is. It is absolutely absurd to say that the power that appoints a judge or creates a court can be held responsible for the decisions that court may reach.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman was a judge himself at one time, was he not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. I was, and I should have thought it very absurd, indeed, if the powers that appointed me had been held responsible for any eccentricity that might be found in my decisions. I think it would be as profitable for my hon. friend to leave me alone and let me finish the few observations I have to make.

Mr. LANCASTER. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. An effort was made by my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) to cast unfavourable reflections upon the member for Cape Breton in the local house (Dr. Kendall). I am sure Dr. Kendall does not require defence at my hands, so far as his efforts in support of the labouring classes are concerned, and I am not going to say anything further about it. But from what I can gather from the observations of the hon. member, they were entirely aimed at making political capital, and did not suggest anything that would better the conditions of the working men either in Cape Breton or in any other part of the province. I am sure that anything I say in answer to him must not be understood as opposed to doing everything possible for the working men of my county. At the same time, I think it would be advisable for myself and my hon. friend (Mr. Maddin) to keep clear of being counsel for one body of our constituents as against a body on the other side if we hope to conserve our usefulness in bringing them together. I commend the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) for having kept himself free from entanglements that would destroy his usefulness as a promoter of good understanding among these classes. Had the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) done the same he might have assisted the Department of Labour in improving existing relations. I am sorry he felt it necessary to make such reflections upon the Minister of Labour; I am sorry to find a disposition on the part of hon. members of the opposition in this House to make attacks upon that hon. gentleman. If he were no good, if he were not a credit to the party to which he belongs, to the government of which he is a member, and to the cause he represents, they would have patted him on the back and told him he was all right. It is an old saying that it is under the good apple-tree that you find sticks and stones. I think the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) can take it as a compliment that these attacks are being made upon him. I hope he will not take the observations of the hon. member for South Cape Breton in any way serious. They do not mean anything—he does not mean anything by them himself. I can assure the hon. minister that the people of eastern Nova Scotia who have to deal with great industrial matters will have the same confidence in him, and, indeed, a great deal more, than if he were applauded by the hon. member for South Cape Breton. As I have said, I stand here as a representative of labour, ready and willing to bring about any betterments that may be made by the Court of Inquiry constituted to investigate any difficulties that may arise between capital and labour in any part of the Dominion of Canada, particularly the part that I myself represent.

Mr. LANCASTER. After a speech of half an hour by the hon. gentleman from North Cape Breton in which he said a lot about inferences he was compelled to draw, I do not know whether or not he is in favour of voting this money.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am in favour of the vote.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend should have deferred arriving at that conclusion until a little later. Of course, in his speech there was not a word about party politics, no suggestion whatever on politics from this legal luminary who descended from the calm precincts of the bench to take part in party warfare. Turning the spear which he levelled against me back upon himself, I would ask him to search his own conscience a little and see to what extent his nice little compliment to the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) that his speech was so commendable and free from any party questions would apply to his own remarks. This hon. gentleman who goes upon the bench, who tries cases there and then leaves the bench after about two years' occupancy to go into the party strife of politics, into the most vigorous contests, who escapes defeat by very small majorities and persistent running in all that party strife, who takes the time of this House for nearly half an hour on an item in regard to $27,300 without even stating whether he is in favour of the item being voted or not, has no justification for criticising as he did the address of the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) who has made a very strong and important statement in regard to matters that did pertain to the item before the Chair. When the hon. member disparages the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) he forgets his own history, that he descended from the bench to take part in this very party warfare, and I think that we must not be blamed in the future if we pay no attention whatever to anything that falls from his lips in regard to this or any other matter.

The hon. member has said that the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) has made no suggestions, has shown nothing wrong with this Act. The hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) may have been writing or reading letters in his seat, for he does very little else in the way of useful legislation in this House, or he would have heard as the rest of us did, the most pertinent suggestions as to the defects in this Act. As was prophesied by several of us, including the leader of the opposition, when this Act was being passed, it has turned out in a disastrous way. This Act is unfair and never can be made fair as it is drawn. The right of the men to strike is suspended until it is of no earthly use to them. As I illustrated two years ago when this was brought in it is like saying to the men : We will not prevent you from eating fruit, but you must wait until the fruit is rotten before you do so. It is the same sort of pretended benefit which is nothing but a gold brick. The man is not permitted to strike until the strike will do him no good or until there is nothing left to strike about or until he is starved to death, or must leave the country in order to avoid being starved. The Act is not working fairly to the workingman. If the Minister of Labour is not going to take any more interest in it than he has up to this time the only right thing to do is to repeal that Act and not have it on the statute-book, where it is an invitation to people to believe that they have legislation that is some good to them but which is really nothing but a broken reed that gives way under them when they try to lean on it. The Minister of Labour must not trifle with this any longer ; he must make the Act workable so that the men will have some chance to get a reasonable arbitrament under it in time to do some good or else repeal the Act, and not pretend he is defending or protecting or getting justice for the labouring man. As we prophesied when the Act was drawn, the men are induced to believe that the government are acting as a guardian over wards, to see that they get fair play, and need not resort to strikes, to get these rights and remedies and yet nothing was to be done for them because the pull of the capitalist was of more importance to the government than the cries or screams or murmurings of the labouring man and his family. The Minister of Labour seems to-night to be perfectly willing to have a hypocritical piece of legislation on the statute-book which is of no use to the working man, and it would be better, safer, more honest to the workman to repeal the Act and say : You must look out for yourself as before, we are no guardians of yours. When a deputy minister is sent down to inquire into the merits of the case he seems to think that when he has pointed out that one man is a Conservative and the other a Liberal that is all that is required to form a decision. I do not think it is fair that the Minister of Labour should take the position he does in this matter, and I as a member of this House protest against this money being voted for any such purpose as the Minister of Labour appears to be using it for.

Mr. MADDIN. In his remarks on this subject this evening the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), in referring to a possible excuse for the Deputy Minister of Labour not calling upon me when he came down to Cape Breton in 1901, stated that he should not have come to me, I being the solicitor for the men on strike, and therefore, that I was taking sides. I am very glad that it has remained for the hon. member for Cape Breton to say that; I am very glad indeed that the gentleman who occupies the portfolio of Minister of Labour did not offer that as an excuse. He got up to defend his deputy and he said that he regretted this lack of courtesy, and that it was not intentional. What does the hon. member for North Cape Breton say with regard to a situation such as this? He says that the deputy minister should not have called on me, because, forsooth, I was the solicitor of one of the sides to the strike. Has he so little wit, has he so little judgment as to imagine that one union was fighting the other? The men on strike were fighting the company.

Mr. McKENZIE. I certainly did not say so. I said that two bodies of men were fighting each other, the United Mine Workers' and the Provincial Workmens' Association, that the hon. gentleman was the solicitor of one side of the men, not as against the company at all.

Mr. MADDIN. Has the hon. member so little wit or so little sense as to imagine that one union was fighting another? There was nothing of the kind taking place. The United Mine Workers' of America asked the Dominion Coal Company to meet them and discuss the situation which had provoked the strike, not the recognition of their union, not that the company had recognized the Provincial Workingmens' Association and refused to recognize their union, but merely to protest against the company dismissing them from their employment because of the union to which they belonged. The Minister of Labour was very quick to rise to his feet to defend the Deputy Minister of Labour from the imagined aspersion which he presumed I had cast upon that gentleman. I told him then, as I tell him now, that I have no complaint to make at all against the deputy, but I did not find the Minister of Labour so active as to rise to his feet, and defend him against what was clearly an aspersion which fell from the lips of the hon. member for North Cape Breton when he said that the deputy minister could not go near the hon. member for South Cape Breton because he was solicitor for one of the sides. Does not that in the plainest words impute the basest hypocrisy on the party of the deputy minister who left his card at my house, asked me to call at the Sydney hotel, and, when I had called, discussed the strike with me? The hon. member for North Cape Breton says that he should not do it, that he had no right to do it, that there was every reason for not doing it.

Mr. McKENZIE. The deputy minister did not see the hon. gentleman until he was through with both sides of the men and their officers. Then he saw the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MADDIN. When he came to my house with his card, is the hon. gentleman going to impute that he was playing the hypocrite? Does he know that he had seen both sides before he left that card at my house? Did he call knowing that I was away, and that he would not see me? I would like the hon. gentleman who is a lawyer, and an ex-judge to exercise the function of ordinary every day common sense which, as a jurist and a lawyer, and a member of this House, he has not always exercised, I would ask him to exercise it to-night and to explain it to the committee how the deputy minister left his card at my house during the day with the request to meet him unless he was prepared to meet me when he came to my house. Was he playing the hypocrite knowing that I was not there when he came with his card pretending that he was friendly to me and willing to interview me? The hon. member for North Cape Breton places himself on the horns of a very awkward dilemma. On the one hand it is little credit to the hon. gentleman, and on the other it is little credit to the deputy minister. There is one observation that I wish to make. The hon. member for North Cape Breton stepped aside to-night to cast an aspersion on my personal integrity as a member of a board of conciliation, and spoke of how I had found against the miners down in Cape Breton at one time and had gone to a building and talked them into submission. He thought it an extraordinary thing that the member for South Cape Breton should recommend and approve a reduction of wages. The hon. member for North Cape Breton occupied the very seat on the county court bench that is now occupied by the gentleman to whom I paid tribute to-night, and he did not always discharge his duties there with the dignity, fairness and uprightness that have characterized his successor, but rather with the attitude, and in the manner in which he has discussed this matter which is before the committee to-night. He referred to my acting on the board of conciliation, and he said that I had gone to the miners of Cape Breton and tried to persuade them to accept a reduction of wages. Earlier in the evening, while discussing this matter with the Minister of Labour, I pointed out to him that when the books of the company were exhibited to a member of the board it was not for the purpose of the public, but only for the information of the members of the board. Let me read to you from section 13 of the Act, the oath which a member of the board takes, and the oath which I as a member of that board, to which the hon. member refers, did take. It is this:

13. Before entering upon the exercise of the functions of their office the members of a board, including the chairman, shall make oath or affirmation before a justice of the peace that they will faithfully and impartially perform the duties of their office, and also that, except in the discharge of their duties, they will not disclose to any person any of the evidence or other matter brought before the board.

I made that oath, I accepted it with the responsibility that I would accept the oath of a judge in the Supreme Court or the county court or the oath of a witness giving evidence before any tribunal. Acting under that oath, when the books of the company made it apparent to me as a representative of the men that for various reasons the increase in the wages of common labourers employed by the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company at that time could not, from the revenues of the company, be legitimately, honestly, fairly and equitably increased, I joined in a recommendation that a reduction should take place amongst another class of employees of the company. Who were they? Machine runners and shot firers at No. 3 Sydney Mine. Some of those machine runners, according to public and published evidence taken there earned as high as $14 per day—only a very limited number—but there was quite a number who made $7 and $8 per day. With a sense of fairness and equity, which the men themselves appreciated when I had explained it to them, I thought that they might very well stand a small reduction in order that the common labourers receiving $1.35 might receive $1.43. I went out and submitted that to the men, and I put it up to them as I put up the policy gospel of the Tory party to them, and they accepted the one as they accepted the other. I ask the Minister of Labour if he considers Dr. Adam Shortt, the chairman of the Civil Service Commission an honest and an honourable and an upright man? What does the minister say to that?

Mr. KING. I hardly think it is necessary to answer a question of that sort.

Mr. MADDIN. Would the minister place any reliance on his opinion of a fellow-member of the board?

Mr. KING. I believe the hon. member (Mr. Maddin) would be actuated by the highest sense of honour.

Mr. MADDIN. That is not answering my question. I am absolutely indifferent to the opinion of the minister with regard to myself; what I ask him is, does he consider Dr. Adam Shortt, who has served on nearly 30 boards of conciliation, who occupied the Sir John Macdonald chair in Queens University, who is the foremost economist of the Dominion of Canada, who is recognized from Vancouver to Sydney as one of the most upright men in Canada; would the minister consider Dr. Shortt's opinion of a colleague on the board of conciliation as being sound and and worthy. Yes or no?

Mr. CARVELL. Go on.

Mr. KING. I have the very highest opinion of Professor Shortt.

Mr. MADDIN. The hon. member (Mr. Carvell) might give his opinion when he is asked.

Mr. CARVELL. If you want it I have to say very plainly that you have a lot of impudence to hold up a member------

Mr. MADDIN.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MADDIN. I want the opinion in parliamentary language if the hon. member for Carleton can put it in parliamentary language.

Mr. CARVELL. I can tell my hon. friend that if any member-------

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not sure that the hon. gentleman has a right to speak.

Mr. CARVELL. He is asking me a question.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. I ask that the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) be required to withdraw.

Mr. CARVELL. That is all right. The hon. member for Cape Breton and myself cannot have any quarrel; he wants my opinion.

Mr. LENNOX. If we are to have matters conducted properly we had better have this ended. I ask that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) frankly withdraw the statement he made. It is not a matter personal to the members concerned, it is a reflection on the whole House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have considered the matter concluded. I understood the hon. member to withdraw.

Mr. MADDIN. If the hon. member for Carleton cares to answer the question I propounded to the Minister of Labour, I give him the opportunity of answering it if he can do it in parliamentary language.

Mr. CARVELL. I will try to answer in parliamentary language. I tell him that so far as I am concerned I think no member of this House has any right to address a question to the Minister of Labour and demand an answer in the way this question was put, and if I were the Minister of Labour I would not give an answer.

Mr. MADDIN. Very well, you have not answered my question. In the report of Dr. Shortt to the Department of Labour on this occasion, he states that he found cases where men made from $3 to $6 and $7, and even $10 and $11 per day, and in one or two instances as much as $13 or $14 per day had been made. I concurred in a recommendation that a reduction be made from the wages of such men and applied to the wages of those who were receiving a smaller sum. To-night I am charged by the hon. member for North Cape Breton that when I was on a board I recommended a reduction, and that I went out to a building to the men to urge them to accept it. Now, Dr. Shortt in his report to the government has this to say, and it is only in self-defence and in justice to myself that I venture to read the following from Dr. Shortt's report:

My colleague on the board, Mr. J. W. Maddin, as the nominee of the miners, had a particularly difficult position to fill, where the award of the board was so little attractive to some of the most influential of the miners. He not only maintained an independent and judicial attitude in arriving at the award of the board, but accepted the fullest responsibility for the award and laboured most actively to secure its adoption.

That is a testimonial that I value as highly as the parchment I received with my degree from Dalhousie College in 1900. Now, Mr. Chairman, with this testimonial from Dr. Shortt in these circumstances, my integrity is to be impugned, and by whom? By an hon. member, who, after he had accepted the nomination to run for this House, filed a judgment in his court which was afterwards set aside by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, by a gentleman whom the returns indicate, had no fewer than 125 men appointed as fish wardens in the county of Victoria, and to many streams where no one ever saw water flow during the months they drew the salary for guarding these streams---Little Mountain torrents, Black Brook and such places in the county of Victoria. That is the hon. gentleman who casts aspersion on my integrity, and my honour, and my character, when I was charged with the first and only judicial matter I had the honour to decide. This is my accuser. Why, Sir, I wish to say to you that with the oath I had taken under the provisions of this Industrial Disputes Act, with the knowledge that the men whom I represented had confidence in me, and with the endorsation which will live there in the records of this House, from such a man as Dr. Shortt, I think I may feel safe in laughing at the aspersions emanating from such a source as that.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it is only fair myself that I should reply to the personal observations made by the hon. member for South Cape Breton. I did not make any personal aspersion upon him about his position. Far from it; 'Hansard' will show I did not. I simply said he was so satisfied with the working of this Act that he acted under it and gave a decision. I said, and I was telling the truth, that he gave a decision recommending a reduction of wages. He has the very ill grace of making a reference to a decision of mine when I was on the bench. I would like to see or hear of any judge that was ever on the bench who had not some of his decisions reversed. There may be a few but there are very few of them in this country. I take it as coming from a man who has no conception of the dignity of the profession to which he belongs, that he would descend to such low tactics as to make reference to the decision that a man may have given when he was on the bench which may have been reversed by the Supreme Court. That is the only thing in my history of fifty years in the county of Cape Breton with regard to my private character that he evidently thinks he can put his finger upon. I would like to know if the hon. member for South Cape Breton is prepared to make an open book of his conduct and his character in the county of Cape Breton for the few years he has been there.

Mr. MADDIN. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has put a question, and I would like to answer it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot even answer the question unless permission is given.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am forced to make an answer. The hon. gentleman makes further reference to guardians who were appointed over fisheries. I say the statement is absolutely false, a deliberate lie, with the knowledge of its being a falsehood and a deliberate lie.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. It is not allowable to attribute deliberate falsehood to any member of this House.

Mr. McKENZIE. I say the statement is a deliberate falsehood.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Even in that form I think the statement is beyond parliamentary latitude.

Mr. McKENZIE. Perhaps it is.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In that case I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will put it in another shape.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is at liberty to change the statement to a form that is in order.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to order. I submit that when a member of this House calls your attention to the fact that another member has made a statement which is contrary to the usage of this House, before the hon. gentleman can make any further statement, he must withdraw the statement which you have ruled out of order. He must withdraw that statement absolutely before he can say anything more, and that is what I ask you to direct him to do.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that the decision having been given, the hon. member for South Simcoe is correct. It is the right of the hon. member, before the decision is given, to explain his words and to place what he has stated in another form which would be within the rules of the House. I think that in this case the decision has been given, and so I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the statement.

Mr. McKENZIE. I propose, if it is necessary, to deal with this question along the lines suggested by the Chair. If I were outside of this House I would not withdraw the statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McKENZIE. If it is not parliamentary here, I would withdraw it. As I said, if I were outside of this House I would not withdraw it, I have the right now to put it in another shape.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member is, I believe, in the process of withdrawing the statement. The withdrawal is not necessary in a single word. He has announced his purpose to withdraw and has absolutely withdrawn the statement, and he is proceeding now to place it in what he considers it a correct form. I am not aware of any cause of a point of order in what he has said. If the hon. member believes there is, I will hear his point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). As I understand, the hon. gentleman aggravated the original offence by deliberately stating that he withdrew the offensive expression only in response to the demand of the chair, and that if he were outside of the House he would repeat it. It is new doctrine to me, if that is a parliamentary withdrawal of an offensive expression. Now, I think it is due to the dignity of this House that we should have a thorough understanding of whether we are governed by parliamentary rule——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member must adhere strictly to the point of order and not discuss the dignity of the House or any other matter.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr Chairman, if necessary, I would like to appeal to the Speaker, because I think this is a very serious matter. I am serious, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member is not adhering to the point of order. The point of order must be stated clearly and concisely. What the hon. gentleman's feelings may be, whether he is serious or not, is not included in the point of order. The point of order must be stated clearly, the words objected to stated, the rule quoted if applicable. What the hon. gentleman's feelings may be does not form a part of it.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I will state my point. It is that the hon. gentleman has not obeyed the direction of the chair in a parliamentary sense in prefacing his withdrawal with the statement that outside of the House he would not withdraw the offensive words, and he only withdraws them in deference to the chair. I submit that that is not a parliamentary withdrawal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. member for Cape Breton wishes to discuss that point of order, he is at liberty to do it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have already stated that in compliance with parliamentary procedure I have withdrawn the statement. I say that the purpose of the hon. member for South Cape Breton was to charge me with dishonesty in my election, by saying that in order to get elected I had made appointments which I had no business to make. I say that he cannot sustain that contention; there is no evidence to support it, and I challenge him either from the records of parliament or anywhere else to sustain it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the point of order is clear. The hon. gentleman has stated that he withdrew the expression that had been objected to. To that he had added the expression that outside of the House he would deal otherwise with it. I think the point of order raised by the hon. member for New Westminster is correct, that it would be an evasion of a withdrawal to state that outside of the House he would do otherwise. But in the statement made by the hon. member for South Cape Breton at the present time of rising, he has clearly withdrawn without adding the objectionable portion, so that I believe he is now within the rules of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. member for New Westminster is serious in saying that he desires further information on this item, I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, because it is too late to continue to-night.

Mr. MADDIN. Before the committee rises, I would not want the hon. member for North Cape Breton to go away with any misapprehension of my statement, which he takes so heavily to heart. I did not say that he had made a decision which was set aside. All our judges do that, because they are human. All of them give honest, well-meant judgments which are set aside. What I did say was, that after he had accepted a nomination he had delivered a judgment which was afterwards set aside. That is a mere statement of a fact, and I did not mention it because his judgment had been set aside. Any one's judgment is liable to be set aside.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.37 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 13, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY ON PASSENGER VESSELS.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116) to amend the Telegraphs Act. He said: The purpose of this amendment is to require that all passenger vessels shall be equipped with wireless telegraph apparatus. Every one knows of accidents which have happened, and which might have been avoided if the vessels had been so equipped. In this Bill we provide that all vessels carrying more than fifty passengers, except those plying between ports not more than 200 miles distant from each other, must have the wireless equipment.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SALE OF FLOUR AND MEAL.

Mr. JOHN STANFIELD (Colchester), moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 117) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last, when I moved the resolution on which this Bill is based, I explained the object of the measure. It is for the purpose of compelling millers and packers to stamp the weight on each bag containing flour or meal, the term meal including rye meal, oatmeal and cornmeal. The Act at present does not make provision for the sale of flour or meal by the bag.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 115) to incorporate The Guardian Accident and Guarantee Company.—Mr. Doherty.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECURITY TRUSTS CORPORATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I would ask that this Bill be allowed to stand in the absence of the hon. member for Regina. The only question between us is as to the name, upon which we have not decided yet.

Mr. FIELDING. There was another clause the subject of some consideration, and the Minister of Public Works suggested an amendment which it was thought would deal more satisfactorily with the question of the relative rights of the province and the Dominion. The Minister of Justice decided that on the whole that amendment might safely be adopted. Otherwise the only question is as to the title of the Bill, and I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg that in the absence of the hon. member in charge of the Bill, it had better stand over.

Progress reported.

MONTREAL PARK AND ISLAND RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 45) respecting the Montreal Park and Island Railway Company.—Mr. Ecrement.

Mr. BELAND. I would like this Bill to stand until to-morrow or Friday.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Nesbitt.

On section 2, lines of railway authorized to be constructed,

Mr. SPROULE. Are we to understand that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) is still determined not to make provision that a certain expenditure shall be made? He intimated in committee that that was his determination. Does he adhere to it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I pointed out that this is the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, with a very large capital stock of which a good deal more than 15 per cent has been expended in various undertakings, and that the usual clause calling for the expenditure of 15 per cent of the capital stock within a given time does not really apply.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose that means that they can run on as they like, and if, at the end of five years, they have not completed these branches they can come for a renewal of their franchise.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to see this line run to Georgetown also, an important town in the county. The railway is running to nearly everywhere else, and I do not see why Georgetown should be left out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geoffrion). I understand that notice has to be given of such an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. How could I give notice when I did not know what was in the Bill? This road is to pass through Acton and Brampton, and it might be said that it would necessarily pass through Georgetown, unless it veers too much to the north or to the south, but there is no harm in making it clear. As to irregularity, I think the whole thing is a little irregular. I move that 'Georgetown' be added after 'Acton.'

The CHAIRMAN. I think I shall have to rule that out.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the committee agree to it unanimously, can it not be done?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the committee is unanimous; nobody will object.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that this cannot be done in Committee of the Whole. In order to be regular notice must be given.

Mr. NESBITT. I have no objection to the addition, but I do not wish to have the passage of the Bill endangered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that it would be absolutely irregular, in the case of a private Bill, to make an amendment of which notice has not been given. We may be unanimous on the subject here, but there may be parties outside whose interests would be affected and who would object. The hon. gentleman might move that the committee rise and report progress, and then notice could be given before the Bill comes up again.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know that it would be irregular, but we sometimes do things that are irregular—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not in private Bills.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to impede the progress of the Bill, or I would move that progress be reported. Perhaps, on the third reading, there might be opportunity to insert the word.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the Minister of Railways to explain more definitely how this line is to run in western Ontario? The Bill says:

From a point on its authorized line at or within ten miles east of Toronto westerly passing near or through Toronto, Hamilton and London to a point on the Detroit river at or near Windsor, with a branch from London to St. Thomas and also from London to a point on the St. Clair river at or near Sarnia.

Is it contemplated that the line should run through Petrolia or north of the main line of the Grand Trunk?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine, from the general direction, it would not touch Petrolia. I think the general direction would have to be shown in the plans of the company to be approved. Generally speaking, unless certain points are mentioned which would allow the road to deviate, it would go in a pretty direct line. I think, taking these points described by my hon. friend, the line would not touch Petrolia.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As the main line of the Grand Trunk railway runs within about five miles of Petrolia, passing from Sarnia to London, possibly the branch line would touch Petrolia.

Mr. NESBITT. More than likely.

On section 3,

Mr. SPROULE. This allows the company to raise on securities $40,000 a mile instead of $25,000, which it formerly had authority to raise.

Mr. GRAHAM. This line passes through an old settled country, and the right of way through this country costs so much more than it would through a new country, where the right of way practically costs nothing, we thought it proper to allow them to raise $40,000 per mile.

Mr. NESBITT moved:

The company shall not construct or operate its railway along any highway, street or other public place without first obtaining the consent expressed by by-law of the municipality having jurisdiction over said highway, street or other public place, and upon terms to be agreed upon with such municipality.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I object to that amendment. I think the Canadian Northern railway should be placed under the same jurisdiction and under the same terms generally as the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway. These are the three great trunk lines of the country, and I think they should all be under the terms of the General Railway Act. The Canadian Pacific railway has its main charter and a great many branch lines charters; the Grand Trunk railway has its main charter and the Grand Trunk Pacific branch lines charter, and so has the Canadian Northern railway, all now under the General Railway Act, which provides that they should only go across or along a highway on obtaining the consent and approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners. It is true that in the last three or four years we have inserted in new charters the clause which has been moved by my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), that is, that they shall not go along or across a highway without the consent of the municipality, and upon terms to be agreed upon with the municipality. Now this is creating a discrimination against the Canadian Northern railway, if this term is imposed on this charter, and I think we would do well to leave it under the Railway Act where the other great railway corporations are. It might be that some municipality through which it passes would have power absolutely to block the road by refusing its consent. I think we can trust the matter in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and for that reason this amendment should not be added to the Bill. If it were a new charter and a new company, then this argument might apply. But this road was largely constructed before we ever placed this clause in Bills which apply to trunk lines.

Mr. NESBITT. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to leaving it to the Board of Railway Commissioners. It is a clause we have usually inserted in all the Bills that now come before the committee. I think it is a perfectly legitimate clause. The fact that it is not in the Grand Trunk railway or the Canadian Northern railway charters does not make any difference to me. If they came up for a charter now, so far as I am concerned, I would advocate putting it in their charter, and on the same principle as I advocate this. This railway proposes to pass through all the older settled sections of Ontario, and I do not think that any railway should have a right, even with the consent of the Railway Board, to go along a road in a municipality without its consent. It is not crossing a highway, it is merely going along a highway. The clause inserted there does not say crossing a highway, it simply says going along a highway.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that amendment should be withdrawn. We have been in the habit of putting it in all other Bills we have given of late years. Because the Canadian Northern Railway Company had its original charter before we commenced this practice is to me no strong reason why we should now treat it differently from the way we have treated others when giving them charters to build railways. It applies to a section of country where it is equally desirable that the municipal corporation should have some control, and something to say as to what shall be done with their highways, as it would with reference to a new corporation to which we give that power. Consequently there is just as strong a reason why it should be in this Bill as in any other Bill we give, and I see no reason why the Canadian Northern railway should be exempt from it any more than any other company who are asking for incorporation. I think it is a very proper one. I would be inclined to control them in that way, but when they propose to go along the highways or public places, the municipality should have something to say as to where the railway shall go and upon what terms.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not think the clause a bad one, but I think it ought to be in the Railway Act, and not in particular charters. This is not a new charter, but application for the renewal of an old one, which did not contain any such clause. I think, therefore it would be a hardship to insert that in the old charter. When a charter was before us a few weeks ago for a Grand Trunk Pacific branch, we did not insert any such provision.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). There is another objection which I think is serious against this proposed amendment. Under the municipal Act of Ontario, I understand, a municipality can only give a railway company a franchise for a period of 20 or 25 years. This would consequently limit the right of this road to run over a municipal roadway for that short period of time. Bonds issued upon a railway, usually extend for 30 or 40 years. Anybody who knows anything of this question, will know that it is impossible for a railway company to issue bonds over a piece of road on which it has no right to run except during a period of 25 years. For that reason, since this is an old charter, it would be just as well to let it through; but, in any new charter, a clause such as this, might seem to be advisable.

Mr. NESBITT. I think what my hon. friend refers to are corporations or railways, such as electric roads, which come under the Provincial, and not under the Dominion Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware that there was any such provision in the Ontario Municipal Act, and I am inclined to think that my hon. friend may not be exactly correct. That would be a serious objection, but I have never understood the Ontario Act to apply in that way. I want to say a word with regard to a suggestion made by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), that this is a clause which should be in the General Railway Act. That is an objection which comes to us whenever we propose to insert something new in the charter of any railway company seeking incorporation; but we have almost invariably decided that until these things are in some general Act, we should put them into the special Acts we enact. Parliament has deemed it wise to insert such provisions in special Acts and to continue doing so until such time as they are incorporated in a general Act. With regard to this Bill, the hon. member says that if this were a new charter he would favour this amendment. I cannot appreciate the distinction. We are asked to give the company power to build these new branches, and are giving it new rights just as we would in the case of a new charter. We are not seeking to deprive the company of any of the rights it possesses under its original charter; but when it asks the right to construct other lines, we are only doing our duty if we impose such conditions as we think ought to apply to the case of any new railway.

Mr. NESBITT. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment, if the committee thinks it is better that it should go into the general railway Act.

Amendment withdrawn, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on (Bill 62) respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Tolmie.

Mr. GRAHAM. On Friday evening, I understand, a question was put as to the knowledge of those affected, concerning section 3. As a matter of fact, in the railway committee this question was asked, and the gentleman who represented this company assured the committee and myself that those who will be affected have unanimously given their consent.

Mr. GUTHRIE. We have the authorized record there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was I who asked the question, and I am entirely satisfied with the statement that my hon. colleague makes, in regard to the matter.

On section 3,

Mr. SPROULE. Are all interests safeguarded by this provision?

Mr. GRAHAM. Before this Bill came to the committee the gentlemen representing this company came to see me and convinced me that in this particular instance every interest was safeguarded. Those particularly affected agreed to this clause being inserted in the Act, and also before the committee, they submitted their record to show that the agreement had taken place. I considered it pretty fully, and I came to the conclusion that there was nothing at all in this to affect any persons but those who had given their consent to it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the only question involved.

On section 4,

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Does not this clause give the right to issue bonds before the railway is constructed, or whenever it is under contract? I do not think that we usually do that.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CARVELL moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 9) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act be read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the hon. gentleman explain the amendments?

Mr. CARVELL. It is only a difference in the phraseology of the clause. The clause as it passed this House, stated that:

When potatoes are sold or offered for sale by the barrel the barrel shall contain 160 pounds.

The Senate were afraid that this might penalize a farmer who sold a little less than 160 pounds by mistake. They therefore changed the clause to read:

When potatoes are sold or offered for sale by the barrel the barrel shall mean 160 pounds of potatoes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a funny meaning for a barrel. We might say that a barrel means 100 pounds of apples.

Mr. CARVELL. I think it is, but I do not like the phraseology and yet it really accomplishes what I am after in the result.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think any judge would allow that at all. What do you think?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Was this Bill introduced by resolution? I raise the point that it must be introduced by resolution as the whole matter deals with trade.

Mr. CARVELL. It is a public Bill introduced in the ordinary way, was not introduced by resolution, and I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that, according to the custom of this House, it is too late to raise the point now. The Bill has been passed and sent to the Senate.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The Bill has been referred to the Senate, amended by the Senate and comes back to this House. The House is asked to read these amendments the second time. I hold that the Bill has not been finally committed to the House until the amendments get their second reading. If there had been no amendment made by the Senate it would be all right, but I raise the question now even on these amendments, and I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the Bill is not before the House, that the only question before the House is that of the amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I raise the question on the amendments.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point cannot be taken on that question.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any citation that can be made as to the custom of the House in that respect?

Mr. SPEAKER. We can allow the question to stand until to-morrow, if necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that would be better.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion for the second reading of the amendments will stand until to-morrow.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. I beg to call the attention of the House to the following statement which I find on page 1 of the Toronto 'Daily Star' of Saturday, February 11:

When the government's majority was reduced to 26 on Thursday, on Mr. Monk's amendment, regretting that time had not been given to consider the effect of reciprocity before the agreement had been reached, a large number of Liberal members were away from the House. Perhaps a few of these had not yet made up their minds as to the way they should vote on the general question, but others were away because no division was expected. Perhaps it may indicate Bourassa's influence, or it may be but a coincidence that of the 23 members who did not vote, nor were paired, 15 were from Quebec. Of the total, 18 happened to be Roman Catholics, and three were Conservatives—T. G. Wallace, M.P., Jos. Girard (Ind. Con.), and W. F. Maclean. Hon. Clifford Sifton was also absent. In spite of Mr. German's attitude toward reciprocity, as expressed at Niagara, he voted against Mr. Monk's motion. Had every member of the Commons voted, the result would probably have been 116 to 75, or a Liberal majority of 41.

List of Non-Voters.

Here is the list of those who did not vote:

A. M. Beauparlant, St. Hyacinthe, Que.
Albert Champagne, Battleford, Sask.
E. B. Devlin, Wright, Que.
J. A. Dubeau, Joliette, Que.
Jos Girard (Ind. Con.), Chicoutimi, Que.
J. E. O'Gladu, Yamaska, Que.
D. A. Lafortune, Montcalm, Que.
Ernest Lapointe, Kamouraska, Que.
W. F. Maclean (Con.), Toronto, Ont.
D. H. McAllister, King's and Albert, N.B.
J. A. McMillan, Glengarry, Ont.
L. J. Papineau, Beauharnois, Que.
George Parent, Montmorency, Que.
L. A. A. Rivet, Hochelaga, Que.
D. C. Ross, W. Middlesex, Ont.
Ernest Roy, Dorchester, Que.
F. T. Savoie, Megantic, Que.
P. A. Seguin, L'Asomption, Que.
Hon. Clifford Sifton, Brandon, Man.
O. E. Talbot, Bellechasse, Que.
E. W. Tobin, Richmond and Wolfe, Que.
T. G. Wallace (Con.), York Centre, Ont.
C. A. Wilson, Laval, Que.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, with reference to this article, that I was present here at that vote on Thursday afternoon, and I voted for the amendment. I wish to bring that to your attention as I do not wish it to go to my constituents that I did not vote on that occasion when such is not the fact.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ECREMENT :

Has the document intituled, 'Papers relating to commercial relations between Canada and foreign countries,' been translated into French? If so, has it been distributed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a matter over which the House, and not the government has control.

SASKATCHEWAN SCHOOL LANDS.

* Mr. LAKE :

What decision has the government arrived at, and what action has it taken in response to the request of the Premier of Saskatchewan, that the full control of administration of the school lands in that province be given to the provincial authorities, under such restrictions as may be deemed necessary to perpetuate and safeguard the trust established by the Dominion Lands Act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER :

No action has been taken by the government in this matter.

SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA LANDS.

* Mr. LAKE :

Has there been any correspondence between this government or any member thereof, and the provincial governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan, or either of them, or any of their members, in reference to securing control by such provincial governments of the lands, timber, water-powers, coal and other minerals, or any of the natural resources which exist within the respective boundaries of said provinces, other than school lands? If so, will the government cause copies to be laid upon the table of the House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER :

I do not remember at the moment what correspondence there may be, but if the hon. gentleman will let the notice stand as a motion for a return we will bring down what correspondence we have.

FRASER RIVER MAIL SERVICE.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster) :

1. Has the Postmaster General received any application for or suggestion looking to the establishment of mail service to points south of the Fraser river by means of the recently established electric railway service?
2. If so, have any reports been made by officers of the department, and to what effect?

Mr. LEMIEUX :

1. Yes, communications in the matter were received from the Boards of Trade at Chilliwack and Cloverdale, B.C.
2. A report was made recommending the use for mail purposes of the British Columbia Electric railway between New Westminster and Chilliwack and intermediate points, and the petition was favourably considered and instructions issued by the department to put the service into effect. It is not customary to bring down a report unless a motion is made.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL TRAINING.

Mr. ECREMENT :

1. Is the government aware that the Royal Commission on Industrial Training is now said to be pursuing its inquiry in the province of Quebec?
2. Is it informed that the official stenographer attached to the commission is incapable of taking the depositions of witnesses in French?
3. Have serious complaints been made to the commissioner, Gaspard de Gerres, on this subject?
4. If so, is it his intention to remedy this state of things?

Mr. KING :

When I saw the notice of this question I asked the deputy minister to communicate with Professor Robertson, chairman of the commission. The following telegram has been received from him.

Joliette, February 10, 1911.

F. A. Acland,
Deputy Minister Labour,
Ottawa.

Commission has had competent translators or interpreter. Satisfactory reports of all testimony are being made. Witnesses have always been given option of speaking French or English. Commission has competent French stenographer in attendance here. Commissioner DeGerres has received only one complaint on this subject; that occasion was in September when translator was late in attendance at one session.

JAS. W. ROBERTSON.

LAND APPLICATION OF E. V. BELLEROSE.

* Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster) :

1. Did Edwin Vincent Bellerose make application on June 21, 1906, for N½ of S.E. ¼ section 19, township 22, New Westminster district?
2. Did applicant make the statement that his father, George Bellerose, was willing to give up land above described?
3. Was the willingness on the part of George Bellerose acknowledged in the reply to Edwin Vincent Bellerose?
4. If so, did the acknowledgment imply knowledge on the part of the government or its official of application by George Bellerose for the land in question?
5. What disposition has been made of the application by Edwin Vincent Bellerose, and if not yet disposed of, will it be dealt with before the regulations in force when it was made are abrogated?

Mr. MURPHY :

1. No application is on record here by Edwin Vincent Bellerose on the 21st June, 1906, or any other date for the north ½ of southeast ¼, section 19, township 22, New Westminster district. There may be information concerning this in the Dominion Land Agency at New Westminster.
2. Not known here.
3 and 4. No reply was sent from department.
5. It is understood according to information on file that Edwin Vincent Bellerose is claiming the north ½ of the south ½ 19 and also legal subdivisions 4 and 5 of section 20. It is further understood that Edwin Vincent Bellerose has a house worth about $150 on said legal subdivision 4 probably outside the line of the timber berth.

The greater part of the legal subdivisions 4 and 5 is in timber berth 55 and contains about 5,000 ft. of merchantable timber, board measure, to the acre. The department would not have the power to grant an entry for the land claimed in the timber berth either under the old regulations or the new regulations.

TRANSFERS FROM CANADIAN REGISTER.

* Mr. CROSBY :

1. How many vessels have been transferred from the Canadian register to Newfoundland within the last two years, and how many vessels have been transferred from Newfoundland to Canadian register, within the last two years, and what are the names of the vessels transferred from Newfoundland to Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR :

Twenty-four vessels have been transferred from the Canadian register to Newfoundland within the last two years.

The following seven vessels have been transferred from Newfoundland to the Canadian register within the last two years: 'Olinda,' 'Muriel,' 'Mildred,' 'Dorothy Duff,' 'Nina L,' 'Falken,' 'Crissie C. Thomey.'

This information is for the calendar years 1909 and 1910.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Are these foreign or British built vessels? That makes a difference in the collection of duties, and I understand there is a gateway there where they can walk through the Customs Act. I thought that registry had been stopped.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no information as to that.

OWL'S HEAD HARBOUR.

*Mr. CROSBY:

Has a petition from the people of Owl's Head, Halifax county, asking that a light be placed at the mouth of Owl's Head harbour been received by the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries? If so, what is the intention of the Marine and Fisheries Department with regard to same and when may they expect to have a light placed there?

Mr. BRODEUR:

Yes. The prayer of the petition was favourably considered by the Lighthouse Board at a meeting held November 10, 1910, and approved by order in council of December 22, 1910. Arrangements are being made to erect this lighthouse during the coming season.

FISHERY REGULATIONS—INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

*Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. With respect to the regulations to be framed by International Commissioners under the treaty of April 11, 1908, between Great Britain and the United States, did the two governments engage to put into operation and to enforce by legislation, these regulations with as little delay as possible?

2. Did the commissioners agree or was it recommended by any commissioner, to either government, that the regulations should take effect on January 1, 1911?

3. Was it agreed by the commissioners 'that no amendments shall be proposed at the present time, and that the system of regulations as presented on May 31, 1909, shall be allowed to take their course?

4. Have the regulations been put into effect, by legislation or otherwise, by Great Britain or by the United States?

5. Have both governments observed the agreement noted in question 3? If not, which government has proposed amendments?

6. Has the delay been caused by the hearing at Washington of interests affected by the provisions of the regulations? If so, has opportunity been given to Canadian interests to suggest or to influence changes in the regulations?

Mr. BRODEUR:

The first paragraph of article 3 of the treaty reads: 'The two governments engaged to put into operation and to enforce by legislation and executive action with as little delay as possible, the provisions with appropriate penalties for all breaches thereof; and the date when they shall be put into operation shall be fixed by the concurrent proclamation of the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada in Council and of the President of the United States.

2, 3, 5. The commissioners having made the regulations it is contended by the government that no changes can be made before the regulations have been put in force.

Reference to Sessional Paper No. 105, 9-10 Edward VII., which contains the regulations recommended by the commission, will show that the commissioners recommended that four regulations should become effective on January 1, 1911; but as to all the other regulations no date as to their coming into force was specified.

4, 6. Great Britain was not obliged by the treaty to pass any legislation. The United States authorities have not yet passed the necessary legislation.

BANKERS' ASSOCIATION.

*Mr. LOW:

1. Is the government aware of any arrangement or agreement made or existing between banks composing the Bankers' Association whereby it is arranged they are not to compete or are to withdraw from competition for business in certain towns and are not to establish agencies or withdraw agencies when established, so as to avoid competition?

2. If the government is not aware of this, will they take steps to ascertain the facts so as to deal with conditions before the Bank Act is discussed?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. The government have no information as to any such agreement.

2. The Bankers' Association will no doubt be represented before the Committee on Banking and Commerce when the revision of the Bank Act is under consideration, and there will thus be an opportunity to inquire into the matter before the Act is passed.

TORONTO MAIL COLLECTORS.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Does the government collect the mails from the various boxes and branch offices in Toronto under contract for their collection, or by the services of collectors employed by and immediately under the government?

2. What number of hours per day do these collectors work, and do they work on Sundays and holidays?

3. What is the average wage paid to such collectors?

4. If this work is let by contract, is the fair wage clause inserted in such contract, and what supervision does the government exercise, if any, with regard to the hours of labour?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. This work is done partially under contract and partially by foot collectors employed by and immediately under the control of the department.

2. The collectors employed by the department are divided into two staffs, those who collect during the day and those who collect at night, 5 p.m. to 12 p.m. The former work eight hours per day and the latter seven.

These men do not work either on Sundays or on holidays.

3. The wages paid to the men now employed in doing this work ranges from $2.25 per day to $2.75 per day, the average rate of wages paid being $2.60 per day.

4. This service is at present being operated under a temporary agreement, but specifications are now in course of preparation and public tenders will be invited in the very near future for a new contract in which the interests of labour will be safeguarded.

GRAND TRUNK DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar):

In a return brought down on 1st February, 1909, regarding the Grand Trunk Development Company, which states that there has been given, permission to buy from the homesteader thereof certain unpatented homestead lands, upon payment of $1 per acre to the government, in addition to the amount paid to the said homesteader, besides this sum of $1 per acre, does the government reserve any interests in the lands or profits out of the sale of such lands?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES SINCE CONFEDERATION.

Mr. GILBERT:

What is the total amount appropriated to railways since confederation?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total amount paid in cash subsidies to railways in Canada by the Department of Railways and Canals, from confederation to date, is $607,776,853.50.

MILITIA EXPENDITURES SINCE CONFEDERATION.

Mr. GILBERT:

What is the total amount expended for the militia since confederation?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

The expenditure by the Militia Department totals $83,193,389.47.

This does not include the following expenditure:

Northwest rebellion, 1884-5	$1,697,851.52
Contributions to British government towards maintenance of garrison at Esquimalt, between the years 1889 and 1906	1,237,208.00
South African war and Halifax provisional garrison, years 1899-1900 and 1901	2,826,608.99

Mr. LEMIEUX.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER COMPANY.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What have been the annual payments to the St. Lawrence Power Company since the first year to the present time for supplying light and power respectively?

2. What has been the amount of traffic annually through the old Cornwall canal since 1901?

Mr. GRAHAM:

	Light.	Energy.
1904	$17,337 15	$ 6,444 03
1905	22,518 14	20,886 26
1906	21,887 10	25,199 60
1907	21,863 40	25,400 56
1908	21,820 13	25,268 64
1909	21,499 80	24,785 36
1910	21,891 60	25,199 71
	$148,817 32	$153,184 16

SUMMARY.

Lighting	$148,817 32
Energy	153,184 16
Total	$302,001 48

2. The traffic through old Cornwall canal has not been kept by the Department of Railways and Canals separate from the new canal. The department is unable to give the traffic separately.

HALL'S PRAIRIE POST OFFICE.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster):

1. Did the Post Office Department receive during last year a petition nominating a postmaster and suggesting a location for the post office of Hall's Prairie, B.C., consequent on the resignation of Mr. Alcock, the former postmaster?

2. If so, how many signatures were attached to said petition, and what action was taken with respect to it?

3. Were any representations made to the inspector for the district conflicting with the prayer of the petitioners? If so, by whom and to what effect?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Yes.

2. Eighty-one signatures. Before the receipt of this petition, recommending that the office be given to a Mr. Bamford, the department had already appointed Mr. A. J. Peschke to the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Alcock. Inquiry was, however, made as to the suggestion of the petitioners, and the official investigation showed that the site proposed by the petitioners would bring the office within half a mile of the Hazelmere post office, whereas by locating the office at Mr. Peschke's the Hazelmere and Hall's Prairie offices are one mile and three-quarters apart. The post office inspector was, moreover, strongly of opinion that the location of the Hall's Prairie office at Mr. Peschke's residence, placed it in the most thickly populated portion of the neighbourhood.

3. Yes; a communication was received by the inspector objecting strongly to the office being located at Mr. Bamford's on the ground that the location of the office at a point so close to the Hazelmere post office would operate inconveniently to some twenty families, who would be better accommodated by the office being placed at the residence of Mr. Peschke.

VANCOUVER DRY DOCK SUBSIDY.

Mr. RHODES:

1. What is the nature of the subsidy granted to the Vancouver Dry Dock Company?
2. Is said subsidy in the nature of a guarantee of interest, or is it a grant of interest?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1 and 2. A direct payment, after completion of the dock, of 3½ per cent of the cost.

DRAINAGE OF GEORGETOWN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. FRASER:

1. Has the government established sewerage from its public building, the post office and customs house, at Georgetown, P.E.I.?
2. If so, what was the cost of this work?
3. Have private parties been allowed to connect their drainage with the government sewer?
4. If so, from whom was authority obtained to allow this connection?
5. What are the names of the parties thus allowed to make use of the government system?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. Yes; 6-inch tile to harbour.
2. Included in contract for alteration to building.
3, 4 and 5. Not to the knowledge of the department, and no authority was given to do so.

RED POINT WHARF.

Mr. FRASER:

1. How much money was spent during the year 1910 on Red Point wharf in Queens county, P.E.I.?
2. To whom were the different amounts paid, and how much to each?
3. Who supplied the material?
4. Who worked with horses, and how much was paid to each of these parties?
5. Who was the foreman or the inspector, how many days was he paid for, and what was his wages per day?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. $913.00.
2, 3, 4 & 5:

Malcolm Macdonald, conductor, $2.50 per day ..	$123.75
Peter Cummiskey, carter	55.12

DUNNVILLE POSTAL AND CUSTOMS COLLECTIONS.

Mr. LALOR:

1. What is the postal revenue of the town of Dunnville, Ontario, for the year 1910?
2. What is the money value of post office orders for the town of Dunnville for the year 1910?
3. What is the value of imports of the customs of the port of Dunnville for 1910?
4. What is the amount of money collected for customs at the port of Dunnville for the year 1910?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. $6,918.54.
2. $25,769.70.

Mr. PATERSON:

3. $316,157 for fiscal year ended 31st March, 1910.
4. $38,577.48 for fiscal year ended 31st March, 1910.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. What was the total amount paid last year in iron and steel bounties?
2. What was the total amount repaid last year by the government, or rebated by the government, on duties paid on materials imported by manufacturers, and subsequently exported by such manufacturers as part of that finished product?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. Bounties, $1,808,533.33.
2. Drawback, $382,912.73.

IMPORTS OF FIRE BRICKS.

Mr. MADDIN:

1. What was the number of fire bricks imported into Nova Scotia during the years 1909 and 1910?

2. What ports were they delivered at, and how many at each port?

Mr. PATERSON:

1 and 2. The value of fire bricks imported into the province of Nova Scotia by ports, during the calendar years, 1909 and 1910, was as follows:

	1909. Value.	1910. Value.
Amherst	$ 1,354	$ 2,221
Glace Bay	795	779
Halifax	1,136	2,237

Total	$95,427	$195,760

WESTVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. MADDIN:

How many bricks were used in the erection of the post office at Westville, Pictou county, N.S.?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

The department does not know how many bricks were used.

SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SHARPE moved:

For a return showing the names and addresses of all sessional employees of the government in the House of Commons, beginning with the session immediately subsequent to the elections of 1896, and for each year succeeding to and including the present session, their duties in each case, their home addresses, their salaries, their transfers in each and every case to either other appointments of the sessional staff or to permanent employment in any department, the dates of each such appointment or transfer, upon whose recommendation each such appointment was made, their dismissals, if any, and the reasons therefor.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman's motion speaks of 'sessional employees of the government.' I may say that there are no sessional employees of the government, so that that term had better be struck out and sessional employees of the House substituted. This is no doubt what the hon. gentleman means, and if so, there is no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PATERSON.

TERMINAL AND TRANSFER ELEVATORS.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the present system of operating terminal and transfer elevators is detrimental to the interests of the Western grain producers, and that the government should take immediate steps to operate terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and the transfer elevators between those terminals and the Atlantic seaboard.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in submitting this important motion to the House, I do not think I need make any apology. I know that when questions of this kind, affecting Western Canada, have been brought before this House, some hon. members from eastern Canada have been inclined to regard them as of no interest to themselves. But, Sir, if there is any one question that is of national importance to this country to-day, it is the question of elevators. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition the other day referred to the splendid progress that is being made by Canada, as evidenced by the great growth in population and importance of the great cities of eastern Canada. If Montreal to-day has a population of over half a million and Toronto boasts of a population nearly as great, I think I can justly claim that 75 per cent of the advancement made by these large eastern cities is due to the progress and development of the three prairie provinces. I think it would surprise very many members of this House to have accurate statistics of the trade which has come to eastern Canada because of that development. That western country is overrun with commercial travellers representing all branches of trade and industry in this country, and I believe the great manufacturing concerns of the country admit that their trade and prosperity during the last ten years has been largely due to the development of the Northwest. If that is a fact, and I believe it is, why should not eastern Canada be deeply interested in the great question of elevators? It is true, my motion has reference especially to what are called terminal and transfer elevators; but to my mind there is a strong connecting link between all the elevators which are utilized in the handling of the grain from the time it leaves the farmer's wagon until it reaches its ultimate market. This subject has been debated before in this House. A few days ago the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) brought up a motion on the subject, and although it did not contain all that it should, his speech did. I read the speech of the hon. gentleman, and I do not think he will take any exception to the statement that his general conclusion was that the only way in which we could properly control these terminal and transfer elevators was by the system which I propose to-day, of government operation. I want to say that I do not approach this subject with any partisan motive. If there is any subject upon which the western members can agree, it is this one of elevators, which is closely allied to the great question of transportation.

Now, we have in this country what may be termed three classes of elevators. First, we have the line elevators which are scattered over the three prairie provinces wherever there is a line of railway. We have the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and in some places the Great Northern. I am of opinion that eastern Canada would be surprised to know the number of elevators scattered over these three provinces and the amount of capital that is invested in this elevator business. I repeat, there is no question of such vital importance to the national prosperity of this country to-day as the elevator question. I think I would not be far astray in saying that there are some 2,000 of these line elevators scattered over the three prairie provinces. The Canadian Pacific Railway has over 1,100, the Canadian Northern some 460, the Grand Trunk Pacific some 111, and the Great Northern some 24. This is only a rough estimate, but it is within the mark.

These line elevators are the links between the farmer's wagons and the railways. They are not absolutely necessary. We have what we call loading platforms, and it was somewhat of a surprise to me to find that during the last year some 15,000,000 bushels of wheat were loaded from these platforms. But I am still of the opinion that the elevator is the most legitimiate and the most convenient method of handling our grain from the farmer's wagon to the railway. A great deal of the difficulty suffered in the western provinces during the early years has no doubt been remedied, and there is not to-day so much fault to find with these line elevators, yet there remains a problem in that connection which we have been striving for some time to solve. We had a very important meeting which was attended by the Prime Ministers of the three western provinces for the purpose of arriving at some solution but apparently they were not able to accomplish any result, and the great cry in western Canada a few years ago, at any rate, was for government ownership of these line elevators. The province of Manitoba adopted that principle. The farmers and producers of that province, whether Liberal or Tory, made up their minds that government ownership was the only way in which these line elevators could be operated satisfactorily. I had something to do with the last contest in Manitoba, and I make this statement, that I never on any platform heard any speaker, whether Liberal or Conservative, take the stand that the government operation of line elevators was not in the best interests of the country. The only argument used by our Liberal friends was this, that the government was not sincere, and that on the night of the election all government building and operation in this connection would cease. That, however, has not been the case. I mention that fact simply to show that both parties were then unanimously in favour of that system. As regards Saskatchewan, I am not as familiar with what that province has done as some of my hon. friends opposite, but, from what I have read in the press, it has not exactly adopted government operation of line elevators but appointed a commission to investigate, and that commission reported, as I understand, that a company shall be formed, the officers of which should be the executives of the Grain Growers' Association of the province of Saskatchewan, and that the government should guarantee the bonds to the extent of 85 per cent of the money required to build, the company furnishing the other 15 per cent. and the bonds to be redeemed in 20 years. I also understand that the government was to undertake the financing of the concern, but I do not know as to how that part of the money invested was to be repaid.

This question was debated by the Farmers and Grain Growers' association of Saskatchewan last week, and although there was some diversity of opinion, and although some two or three years ago nothing would satisfy any of the farmers except government ownership, it seems that the Saskatchewan grain growers, in the proportion of about six to one, decided to accept the report of the commission, and no doubt that report will be ratified by the local legislature, and the system recommended by the commission will be the way in which the elevators in that province will be operated. I presume that would be called government co-operation.

As regards Alberta, I am not aware that any steps have been taken to establish any such system of elevators. Although there may be diversity of opinion as to how these line elevators are to be operated, I do not think there is any diversity of opinion among the grain growers as to how the terminal elevators should be operated in the best interests of the producers. Other methods have been tried but we have all come to the conclusion that the warehouse men must not have an interest in the grain. As to the ownership, I do not know that it makes very much difference who owns these elevators, but it does make a tremendous difference to the producers who shall operate them. I am not one of those who desire any cleavage between the east and the west. I believe that the east needs the west, and that the west appreciates to a very great extent the east. I believe in our working together and in encouraging interprovincial trade as much as possible. Therefore, as I have already said, this is not particularly a western question. There is, of course, a difference in the industrial development of the west and the east. The city of Winnipeg is becoming quite a manufacturing centre, but the three prairie provinces are essentially given to grain growing and cattle raising. In the east and in British Columbia you have your lumber, your fruit growing and manufactures, and a great many other industries from which you can receive a revenue, but that is not the case in the prairie provinces. Our industries being limited in these provinces as they are, it is the more necessary that we should find the means of deriving the very best financial results from the pursuit of the two great industries I have mentioned.

I may be asked: Why has the west so recently taken such a stand? There are different reasons. Conditions have changed somewhat in the west. The raising of wheat has become more expensive. One reason for this is that help, both indoors and outdoors, is more expensive. Another question that might be referred to in this connection, but which I shall not deal with to-day, is the transportation question—transportation has certainly become more expensive; freight rates, storage and loading. In fact, the business of the farmer to-day is to give close and intelligent attention to all parts of his industry that enter into the production and marketing of grain from the time he plants the seed until he receives his remuneration in the markets of the world. Until recently the farmers were willing to jog along in the old way, to be the victims, figuratively speaking, of the lightning rod exploiter and the shoddy-cloth peddler. But within the last two or three years a change has come over the farmer. What has brought it about? Nothing short of co-operation. The other branches of industry sought the aid of co-operation much earlier than the farmer did. The manufacturers of this country have found it advantageous—and I am not finding fault with them for it; there is nobody more pleased than I am that our manufacturers are making money. But, perhaps, some of them are making too much money. I know a manufacturer in the city of Toronto who lives in a palace that, I think, cost more than all the buildings in a whole township in my constituency. It is questionable whether that is exactly what we want. Millionaires may be good, but I agree with the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), who, if I understood him right, recently suggested that it is not particularly the business of this country to build up millionaires, but it is the business of this country to secure the greatest good for the greatest number of people. Our farmers are beginning to wake up; they are taking a leaf out of the book of the manufacturer and railways and are trying what co-operation will do. We have had for years, for instance, the Patrons of Industry and other societies for the benefit of the farming population, but the old excuse always came up, 'The farmers cannot stick together.' Thinking people reached a condition of mind in which they were unwilling to ally themselves with these associations, because of the want of stability and stick-to-it-iveness on the part of the farmer. But I thoroughly believe that that is all changed. We had a very good evidence of that here not long ago, when seven or eight hundred of these western farmers came down—and not with the money of Jim Hill either, but paying their own expenses—and this Chamber rang with the enthusiasm and earnestness of these people, as, I believe, it never rang before. These people are in earnest. Some will say—I have had it said to me: These farmers want the earth; they want too much. Perhaps they are asking for a little too much; perhaps I am asking a little too much to-day. But did never the manufacturers come to this House and ask for too much? Did never the railways come to this hall and ask for too much? They certainly have. And I assure you the farmers to-day are ready and willing, although they may be asking a good deal, to accept what is in their best interest and in the interest of the country. And that is what I stand for here to-day. I say the farmers have begun to think for themselves. And my advice to the agriculturists of this country is not to listen to sophistical arguments based upon the idea that the farmers are the best off people in Canada. I wish they were; I would like to see everybody well off. But eastern Canada has not yet quite understood how much sacrifice and toil has been needed to put the people of the western provinces in the position in which they are to-day. A man going into the western provinces—whether he went a few years ago, or whether he goes now—unless he has ample capital, or unless he enjoys unusual good fortune, will spend fifteen years of hard work before he achieves a comfortable position. Manitoba and the older parts of Saskatchewan have gone through that fifteen years, and I admit that the farmers there are in fairly good circumstances. But even the man going to the west to-day will need fifteen years to succeed, as I have said.

Now, I named the three classes of elevators, the line, the terminal and the transfer elevators. As to the terminal elevators, I believe our principal duty to-day lies with the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort Wil liam. Before I get through I will read a report brought down by the government, which, I think, does not exactly agree with the remarks made by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) the other day as to the quantity of wheat heretofore shipped out. I was surprised when I saw the government's figures showing how little wheat has passed through to the markets of Ontario or the markets of the world except through the terminal elevators at Port Arthur or Fort William. I have already said that we had been trying to solve problems connected with the line elevators. But, even if we solved those problems in the most successful manner, of what advantage would it be to us if the terminal elevators are left in the hands of people who treat the producers unfairly, who, in fact, for the last number of years—and the term is none too strong—have been stealing their wheat? (There is absolutely no question about it, because it has been proved by government officers). Then, I say, it is exceedingly important that we do something to remedy conditions in connection with these terminal elevators. The principal marketable product of the western farmer is wheat. The quality of our climate and soil is such that we have gained a reputation for producing the finest wheat in the world, and in such quantities that western Canada has been called 'The granary of the world.' But our wheat, on its way to the markets of the world, almost all passes through Fort William and Port Arthur.

Our farmers have known for years that our wheat was being manipulated in these terminal elevators. Formerly all our troubles were in connection with the line elevators, but now they have been increased in connection with these terminal elevators. The government have tried ways and means, and it may surprise this House to know that to-day this government is employing 95 men at Port Arthur and Fort William—what for? To handle this wheat? No, Sir, just to watch the other fellows that are stealing the wheat. They are there for no other reason. There is an absolute duplication of the men, the men who own the elevators and the men who are operating, and this government is paying $61,000 in employing 95 men to watch these other men, and who pays this $61,000? It all comes out of the grain growers; the wheat must pay all these men, there is no question about that. Now has there been any manipulation of wheat in Port Arthur and Fort William? We believe that it has been going on for years. When I brought this question up before, an amendment was moved from the other side of the House for delay, on the ground that the government was going to appoint men to supervise this work, and they did make appointments. At the very time of the instance I gave this afternoon, there were some 75 men watching the operation of this mixing. Nevertheless this mixing is going on. I do not think that I am giving away any confidence when I say that I believe from information that the Department of Trade and Commerce is just as fully convinced as I am that it is going on, and they know that the only possible way we can protect the producer is that the man who operates the warehouse shall have no financial interest in the grain, and I think that can only be be accomplished by government operation.

Mr. NEELY. The hon. gentleman speaks of information. Has he information which would lead this House to believe that during the present or past years' operation the Department of Trade and Commerce have any reason to believe that there has been manipulation at Fort William or Port Arthur?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Certainly, lots of information, and I will give it before I get through. It was done last year, according to a statement by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) the other day. Now we may or we may not be in favour of government ownership and operation as a rule, I am not discussing that question to-day; but I do say that if there is any business in Canada to which the government operation is applicable, it is the handling of grain by these terminal elevators, and government operation can be applied to them with the least inconvenience of any industry I know of. Now, I will give my hon. friend the information for which he asks. I understand that to be in 1910.

Mr. NEELY. I was referring to handling the crop of 1910, not to any action that was taken by the department, or to something that had occurred previously.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The last report is that of 1910, and this work was going on under the government system of having 75 men to watch the men who were doing this work. At present the number is 95, and I think it has been increased since. The information was supplied by the inspection department of Fort William and Port Arthur. The chief inspector, Mr. Gibbs, reports:

There were serious discrepancies in the returns of the terminal elevator companies' reports, as compared with those of the Inspection Department covering the same period.

This was on the 22nd of April, 1910. Mr. Castles went to Port Arthur, interviewed Mr. Gibbs, and returned to Winnipeg, and he says now:

At my request Inspector Gibbs made a formal complaint in writing, under oath, to enable me to hold an investigation under the provisions of the Manitoba Grain Act.

Now it would be very interesting to the House if I were to give a number of clauses from the Manitoba Grain Act, but I will not take up time by doing so.

The charges made in this case (as in the other two cases) was that the company had sent in incorrect and untrue statements.

The companies involved were the Canadian Pacific railway, the Consolidated Railway Company, the United Empire Company and the Port Arthur Company. They employed a lawyer by the name of Phillipps. Now I want to say that the grain dealers in Port Arthur and Fort William put every obstacle they could—this is Mr. Castles' own report—in the way of this investigation, and nearly all their obstacles were met. But when it came to asking these men to produce their books, and to allow them to be audited by the government officials, what did they do? Did they give up their books? No, Sir, they acknowledged the corn. They refused to give up their books, and admitted the charge Inspector Gibbs had made about the practice of the warehouse. Mr. Castles was correct, and these men were fined. The Port Arthur Company was fined in 1910, but not nearly as much as they should have been fined, only $3,000; and the Consolidated Company were fined $50. The Empire Company $2,500. In all $5,550. I want to say with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that nothing could be found wrong with their handling of the grain, all that was wrong I believe were some technical errors. Eastern millers tell us that wheat that passes through Canadian Pacific Railway elevators is worth more for milling purposes than wheat of the same grade passing through privately owned and operated elevators. Mr. Castles and the government officials were convinced that there was nothing wrong, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was not fined. Now what is the inference? The Canadian Pacific railway had no interest in mixing the grain, in docking the grain; they were merely common carriers, and their only interest was to receive the grain and give it out again to the steamers, to be transported to the markets of the world. Now I think it is rather significant, and goes to prove exactly what we believe, that the elevators must be controlled by men who have no financial interest in the wheat.

One of the chief troubles that we have had has been with what is called mixing grain. This was done in 1910. Some years ago the same system that has been carried on at Port Arthur and Fort William was in operation at Duluth and some of the men who were engaged in it at Duluth are, I believe, those who have been carrying it on at Fort William and Port Arthur. The operation of mixing grain is carried on in this way: They buy a certain amount of No. 1 Northern, No. 2 Northern, No. 3 Northern, and No. 4 Northern. The Manitoba Grain Act distinctly states that grain of different grades shall be placed in separate bins, that No. 1 shall be in one bin, No. 2 in another and No. 3 in another. But strange to say the same grades that go into the elevator do not come out. I ask the attention of the House to these figures. The shipments out of an elevator at Port Arthur of No. 1 Northern exceeded the receipts by 437,884 bushels. That is 437,884 bushels of wheat bought from the farmer for No. 2 Northern, or No. 3, or No. 4 and at the No. 2, 3, or 4 price was placed in a bin with No. 1 Northern and went out as No. 1 Northern, the dealer getting the benefit of the difference in price which sometimes amounts to as much as four cents a bushel. That affects us in a number of ways. I not only have to accept a No. 2 price for my wheat when I should get No. 1 price and I am, therefore, losing in that way, but it works out in another way. The No. 1 wheat that goes into the bin would average up. Some of it would be splendid wheat, some of it not so good, but the inspector at Winnipeg, where most of this wheat is inspected, calls it No. 1. This wheat is shipped to Liverpool, and if wheat that would grade No. 3 and 4 is mixed with No. 1 the No. 1 grade is brought down to where it will just get through by the skin of its teeth; the whole of it is averaged up to a point where it will just grade No. 1 Northern. That goes over to the old country and the quality produced by the mixing operation reflects back on the price that we get for our wheat at home. Everybody believes to-day that the value of our wheat is largely maintained by the Liverpool price. One of the complaints that our farmers make is that although we are supposed to produce the best wheat in the world because of our soil and climate, the grades are so deteriorated before the wheat reaches its market that the value is reflected back and the result is that the farmers receive a lower price.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the wheat all graded at Winnipeg?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The wheat is mostly all graded at Winnipeg. Sometimes when there is a rush on and the railway yards are full, wheat is permitted to be sent on to Port Arthur and is graded there, but you can say that as a matter of fact nearly all the wheat is graded at Winnipeg. We used to have this mixing going on at Winnipeg, but it is not going on to any great extent now because the government has remedied that part of the trouble. There used to be a mixing elevator at Winnipeg. They would run the wheat into this elevator and after mixing take out a carload of wheat which Mr. Horn, or his officers, would inspect. If it did not quite come up to the grade of No. 1 or No. 2 Northern they would ask Mr. Horn to allow them to take it back to the mixing elevator, they would treat it a little more and bring it up gradually to where it would grade No. 1 or No. 2 or No. 3 Northern. But a change has been made in that regard. Wheat that has been transhipped in Winnipeg is not graded until the bill of lading has been made out or until the wheat is ready to go to Fort William or Port Arthur. Therefore, I think I might say, replying to the question of the hon. leader of the opposition, that the grain is almost all graded at Winnipeg, and that no mixing goes on until the wheat reaches the terminal elevators. The process by which wheat is graded at Winnipeg is an interesting one. A car of wheat comes into Winnipeg from any part of the western provinces. It is the duty of the railway company to notify the inspector of the arrival of a car, the number and where it is placed in the yard. The wheat is sealed when it comes into Winnipeg. The inspector and his officers break the seal and gain access to the car. They have a long tube which they thrust into the wheat in a number of different places. It is a good deal like the instrument that dairymen use for testing cheese, with the exception that it is filled with a lot of little holes so that when they thrust the tube down into the wheat they are able to secure samples from the top to the bottom of the car. The sample is taken out, the car is resealed by these officers, it is sent on to Fort William or Port Arthur and then the result of the inspection of the sample, the inspectors having the number of the car, is sent to Inspector Gibbs, or to other persons at Port Arthur. As I said, 437,884 bushels of No. 1 Northern were shipped out more than were taken in. Where did they get the difference? That is by actual measurement by Inspector Gibbs. He also found 389,159 bushels of No. 2 Northern less in the elevator than were shipped in. The greater quantity of No. 1 was shipped out while there was a less quantity of No. 2 in the elevator than had been shipped in. Of No. 3 Northern, deducting shipments from receipts, there should have been on hand in the bins 155,975 bushels but when they came to measure up they only had 5,502 bushels, showing a discrepancy or shortage of 150,473 bushels. Deducting shipments from the receipts, there should have been on hand of No. 4 Northern 47,879 bushels, while there were only, by actual measurement, 4,001 bushels, the discrepancy being 43,869 bushels. That was going on under the supervision of seventy or eighty men in the employ of this government, and I am strongly of the opinion that it will go on in spite of all the Bills that this government may possibly be able to bring into this House until the financial interest of the warehouseman is taken out of these elevators. In the Empire elevator the discrepancy is not quite as large, but they had the same difficulty. The officers at these elevators raised all sorts of objections. At last, when they were asked to produce their books in order to have an independent audit of them, they admitted at once that they had been doing wrong and refused to show their books.

Deducting shipments from receipts in this elevator, there should have been on hand on the 12th of December, 291,742 bushels, while there was only 175,000 bushels, or a discrepancy of 116,000. In No. 3 northern, deducting shipments from receipts there should have been on hand 346,000 bushels, but the examination showed only 166,000, or a shortage of 180,000; and so on. I think that should be very good proof of the kind of work that was going on. The railway terminal elevators were found to be conducted properly in connection with the Canadian Pacific railway, because there is no inducement for manipulation, and the warehousemen have no financial interest in the grain going through the elevator. Mr. Castles' report shows that the Port Arthur Elevator Company shipped out 169,066 more of No. 1 northern than they received. In the Empire elevator, Mr. Castles' report showed that the amount of No. 1 shipped out exceeded the receipts by 437,884 bushels, and that there was also a discrepancy or shortage in No. 2 and No. 3 northern. In view of this condition of things, I maintain that the farmers of the west should be protected to a greater extent in the transport of their grain than ever they have been protected in the past.

I have referred to another evil in the grading of our wheat, and I shall not say more on that further than to remark that the farmer loses in two ways, because he does not get paid for his grain as he should be, and the quality of the wheat is depreciated in the British market. A few years ago most farmers in Manitoba and in some parts of Saskatchewan were absolutely compelled to sell their wheat because they had implements to pay for and had incurred debts during the summer and when the fall rush of wheat was on it was said there was a glut in the market and grain dealers recommended that they should spread the sale of their wheat over the different seasons of the year. The farmers became sufficiently well off to be able to adopt that system but they lacked grain room, and wheat cannot be shipped at any time of the year, because, for example, this winter the snow is so deep and the climate so severe that it would be absolutely impossible to haul wheat. Some of the farmers thought they would send their wheat to Port Arthur and Fort William, put it in the elevators but still retain control of it, so as to sell it when they wanted to. However, although they thought they were not putting their wheat upon the market and they would eventually receive a better price by distributing its sale over different months of the year, they found their wheat was still going forward and that was one of the complaints against the Consolidated Elevator Company. The wheat that the farmers thought they were holding was being loaned and sent forward, and at the same time although they were doing this they were charging the farmer for the storage of this wheat all the time. These are facts that cannot be disputed. Another evil—and goodness knows I have already detailed enough to convince any government that one of the greatest Canadian industries should be better protected—another evil is that when the wheat is inspected at Winnipeg the inspector sends a certificate to Port Arthur that the wheat is of a certain grade with a certain percentage of dockage, which means that at Port Arthur and Fort William it should be cleaned of the 2, 3 or 5 per cent dockage, as the case may be, and then sent on. After the farmer had paid the freight on this dirty grain down to Port Arthur and Fort William, the elevators always had the privilege of using the dockage for their own purposes. But what did they do? If it was only about 2 per cent dockage, they allowed the wheat to go on without treating it at all, and when it arrived in the British market without being cleaned that reflected back again upon the quality of our wheat. The four principles for which the farmers of the west contend are: that there should not be mixing, that there should not be unfair dockage, that wheat should not be loaned, and that wheat should be cleaned at the terminal elevators, according to the certificate of the wheat inspector at Winnipeg. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of that western country are obliged to conform to the Grain Act to the letter, and if the farmers are compelled to keep to the strict letter of the law, my duty here to-day is to see that the grain dealer is dealt with in the same way. I am, however, of the opinion that no amount of supervision or inspection can eventually prevent manipulation in our terminals so long as they are owned and operated by private interests. In taking that stand I am reiterating the sentiment expressed by the hon. gentleman from Regina (Mr. Martin) when he spoke on this subject the other day. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) spoke as he did on this matter; I am not dealing with this question from any political partisan point of view; I believe we have suffered tremendously in that western country for want of proper supervision and because our grain has been manipulated by the grain dealer, and I think Liberals and Conservatives alike should endeavour to seek a remedy. The House may remember that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) moved an amendment to the motion, that I moved in this House, and with that I find no fault. A few years ago Mr. Martin's amendment was to the effect that the system adopted then by government should have a trial.

Mr. Martin now says:

> The system has now been given a fair trial with the result that it has proved itself absolutely inadequate to meet the situation.

He also says on page 2445 of 'Hansard':

> I have gradually come to the conclusion that we will never be protected properly in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur until we have these elevators owned and operated by the government.

There could not be anything more pronounced than that, and I am thoroughly in sympathy with the remarks of the hon. gentleman. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I have referred to to-day all took place under a system of supervision which the government supposed would solve the problem. At that time there were 70 men in the employ of the government inspecting the terminal elevators, but the manipulation continued under their very eyes and they were powerless to prevent it. I say that it is an absolute impossibility to exercise such supervision as will prevent the mixing of the grain, even if you have 500 men there. These elevator people have belts running from one elevator to another, and from one bin to another, and what is to prevent them going in there at night and transferring grain from one bin to another? How is any supervision going to prevent that? And this manipulation and stealing of wheat has been going on for years. I believe I am not out of the way when I say that the farmers of the west have lost at least ten millions of dollars in the value of the wheat that has been taken from them by the operation of these privately-owned elevators. The farmers were here a short time ago to bring several matters before the government of the day. There was the reduction of the tariff, the Hudson Bay railway, the chilled meat question; last, but by no means least, the terminal elevator question. This question is as important to the east as to the west. because the more money the farmers receive, the more money Montreal, Toronto and every eastern manufacturing interest is going to get. I said at the beginning that there might be some difference of opinion on this subject; but three years ago the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, stood almost to a man for government ownership of these elevators. With regard to line elevators, they have to some extent, changed their opinion; but with regard to terminal elevators, I think I can fairly say that they are practically a unit to-day in favour of government ownership and operation. The trouble is not in the ownership of the elevators, but in their operation. This wheat question is becoming a big question, and we have only touched the fringe of it. It is estimated that there are in the three prairie provinces 171,000,000 acres that will produce wheat, and we have under cultivation to-day not more than 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 acres. The hon. member for Regina told us the other day that Saskatchewan alone produced last year 90,000,000 bushels. The other day I placed on the Order Paper some questions, which, with the answers to them, I think are worthy of a place in 'Hansard' to give this House some idea of the magnitude of this subject. They were as follows:

Statement showing Amount of Grain exported from Canada during 1908, 1909 and 1910.

Q. 1. How much wheat was exported from Canada for the crop years ending August 31, 1908, 1909 and 1910?

A. 1908, 39,591,383 bushels.
1909, 45,879,058 bushels.
1910, 53,298,643 bushels.

Q. 2. How much wheat was exported from Canada through United States ports during 1908, 1909 and 1910, naming said ports and amount exported from each port?

A.

Here comes a rather interesting item. How much wheat was exported from Canada during each crop year 1908, 1909 and 1910 which did not pass through the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William? I was under the impression that the amount was very much greater but the figures I am about to give show that only a small amount passed through these two terminals. These figures are :

2. How much grain was shipped through each elevator at Port Arthur and Fort William during each year 1908, 1909 and 1910, and what are the names of the elevators respectively?

Q. How much wheat was exported from Canada during each crop year 1908, 1909 and 1910, not passing through the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William?

A.	Bushels.
1908	1,350,340
1909	1,325,100
1910	3,542,190
	6,217,630

Q. How many men are employed by the government in connection with the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William, and what is the total salary paid the men per year?

A.

	No. of Employees.	Salaries.
Fort William..	96	$50,714 45
Port Arthur..		10,566 50
		$61,280 95

Out of three years' crops, all the wheat which did not pass through the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William amounted to but 5,200,000 bushels. This shows that the question as to the best way to operate and control these elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William is one that might well engage our attention. I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, and consequently may be wrong. The Bill which the government is going to bring down, no doubt, in the opinion of the government, meets the demand, but I do not believe it. I believe that there is only one remedy, and that is to take the operation of these elevators out of the hands of the men who have a financial interest in them. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, no amount of supervision or inspection can effectually prevent manipulation in our terminals so long as they are owned and operated by private interests, which can be benefited thereby. Our farmers in the past have been divided, through lack of organization they have failed to accomplish much, but they have started organizing. They have followed the example of the railways, and the manufacturers, and by means of organization intend to make their influence felt. To-day the ship of these farmers is afloat, it is controlled by competent officers and manned by able seamen, and the port to which it is making is the port of the greatest good to the greatest number.

Mr. ROBB. Can the hon. gentleman inform the House to what extent the farmers of Manitoba have taken advantage of the government owned elevators during the past season?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. My hon. friend will understand that the government operation of these elevators in Manitoba is a very new thing; at least half the crop was shipped before the government took charge of the elevators either by purchase or building. Further, for years there has not been such a small quantity of wheat to ship from southern Manitoba as this year. But the commissioner, who was the chairman of the organization which met in this room, told me that he believed the new system was going to work out splendidly. Furthermore, the farmers of Manitoba must be coming to that opinion because 90 per cent of the points at which elevators are located have petitioned the government to either buy or build and operate the elevators at those points.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt). As a similar resolution to the one before us was offered for our consideration a couple of weeks ago, I do not propose to discuss this matter at any length to-day. I only rise to say that, in view of the fact that the government have introduced into the Senate a Bill dealing with this whole subject, we might very well postpone discussion until we have this Bill before us. I am as strongly in earnest about getting a satisfactory solution of the grain difficulties in the west as my hon. friend can possibly be. I might say that, notwithstanding the very strong criticism he makes of the present method of government supervision and inspection, there are one or two points which he has overlooked, and to which I would call his attention.

In the first place, government supervision was carried on to a very limited extent—that is, the staff was a very limited one until two years ago. And while it is true that certain terminal elevators, so far as the handling of the grain crop of 1909 is concerned, were brought to book last year, it is also true that they were brought to book by the very method of supervision which my hon. friend condemned. These offences would not have been discovered and those guilty of them would not have been penalized had it not been for the supervision that is being carried on by the officers of the government. I asked my hon. friend if he were aware of any similar transactions in handling the grain crop of 1910. He did not give me an answer to that question. If this government supervision is absolutely valueless, as my hon. friend alleges it is, he ought to explain how it comes that it was by this very supervision that these transgressors were brought to book. I might also point out that my hon. friend has not taken cognizance of the fact that since the crop of 1909 was handled, further steps have been taken to protect the interests of the farmer who ships his grain to Fort William or Port Arthur by the appointment of the registration bureau to which I referred some days ago. The trouble in the past has been that the penalties have not been sufficiently severe. If the operation of mixing were carried on to any very large extent, the elevator interest could afford to pay a very considerable fine and still be very largely the gainer. However, I said in opening that it is not my intention to deal with this question to any extent to-day; because, while I take the position that my hon. friend may be correct and that ultimately it may be necessary to establish government ownership and operation of the terminal and transfer elevators, yet I hold that that fact has not yet been absolutely demonstrated. And I reiterate the position I took the other day, that until this is absolutely demonstrated such action as is proposed by my hon. friend is premature and might be dangerous even to the grain trade itself.

And, in view of the fact that the government have a Bill which will presently be before this House, in which, I understand, provision is made of a final remedy for the very thing my hon. friend proposes to meet by means of government ownership and operation, a Bill which, I understand, provides for a commission such as I suggested when discussing this question a couple of weeks ago, and gives the commission the very widest powers possible in dealing with this trade, giving them the same control of the grain situation in Canada as the warehouse and grain commission has in the State of Minnesota, where, I believe, the grain laws are probably more satisfactory than in any other part of North America—I say, in view of these facts, it would be unwise for this House to lay down finally and absolutely the principle proposed in the motion of my hon. friend until we have had some opportunity of seeing for ourselves, of investigating, of thinking over and discussing this measure which the government proposes to bring before the House within the next few days.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) will permit me, I would like to ask a question. Does he believe, so far as he has information of the Bill, that it will provide for the government operation of these elevators? In other words, will it take the operation of these elevators out of the hands of the grain dealers?

Mr. NEELY. I am free to say that, until to-day, I have been quite as much in the dark concerning the provisions of this Bill as my hon. friend. I had no opportunity to see the Bill and consider its clauses. But, when this question came up to-day, I took the trouble to send to the distribution office and procure a copy of the Bill, and I believe my hon. friend could procure a copy in the same way. And I do find a provision which, if it is not out of order, I would like to read:

> The Governor in Council may authorize the minister to construct, acquire, lease or expropriate for His Majesty any terminal elevator if parliament has granted the money for such purpose.
> The Expropriation Act shall, in any case, apply to the leasing and acquisition of such terminal elevator and to the ascertaining of the compensation to be paid therefor.

That is as much information as I can give my hon. friend, because I have not had time even to look through the other provisions of the Bill except in a casual way.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question if it would not be interrupting him too much. I understand him to say that government ownership might ultimately be necessary, but that this had not yet been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the House. Does he say that the case presented by the farmers' delegation from the west is not sufficient demonstration of this point to satisfy parliament that it was absolutely necessary?

Mr. NEELY. While it was demonstrated, not only by the farmers, but by the prosecution made by the officers of the government that, so far as the handling of the crops of 1909 and preceding years is concerned, there probably was manipulation of the grain at Port Arthur and Fort William, and while the farmers demonstrated that a remedy was necessary, they only gave it as their opinion that the one method of reform was government ownership and operation. I can hardly go so far as to say that they did demonstrate the absolute necessity of government ownership and operation; they gave it as their opinion. But farmers' opinions change like other peoples. I notice that a large body of the Grain Growers of Saskatchewan, in convention assembled, have unanimously adopted a co-operative scheme in connection with the operation of interior elevators—line elevators—whereas, some years ago, as my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) has very truly said, the only remedy favoured by many of the farmers of Saskatchewan seemed to be government operation. The same change might occur in this case. But the point I am making is that, in any case, whether government operation be necessary as a final remedy or not, a commission must be appointed—that is, if the government so decide to take over these elevators, there must be a commission to operate them, some body in which shall be vested power to deal with the whole grain trade throughout the length and breadth of Canada. These must be men able to become thoroughly versed in the conditions of the grain trade—in fact the probability is that they will be men who are well versed in that business; they certainly should be men who know a good deal of the grain trade. If these gentlemen, after they have been in office for a reasonable length of time, come to the conclusion that they cannot stop evils in any other way than by government operation, and if they make report to that effect, I am convinced that the government will not hesitate a single moment in putting into effect the recommendation of this commission. That is my answer to my hon. friend's question, and that is the position I take on this whole matter. Now, Sir, in view of the fact that I hold these sentiments, in view of the fact, as I have said, that the government have this Bill introduced in the Senate, and that it is presently to be brought before this House, I beg to move:

That all words after 'that' in this resolution be struck out, and the following be substituted—

Inasmuch as a Bill has been introduced by the government and is now pending in the Senate, dealing with the present system of operating the terminal elevators, it is not expedient to proceed with this question in advance of the consideration of the said Bill by this House.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Allow me, in the first place, to congratulate the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) on the able and thorough way in which he has dealt with this important question, and also on the way he has stuck to his point, a point that I think is endorsed by all the members from the northwest, and by all the men raising grain in that country, namely, the absolute necessity of government operation of the terminal elevators. I have already placed myself on record as saying that, in my opinion, nothing short of government operation will remove the evil under which the people of the northwest are suffering in regard to the handling of their grain at Fort William and Port Arthur. I have taken the position, which I think is a logical one, that once the government have assumed the responsibility of granting a certificate that grain is of a certain quality as No. 1 Northern, No. 2 Northern and No. 3 Northern, it should take such measures as will absolutely ensure that that grain reaches the consumer in the same condition in which it has passed from the hands of the grain growers, and that there should be no sort of tampering with it. Two years ago the members from the northwest, on the other side of the House, blocked a resolution which was introduced by my hon. friend from Souris, asking for government operation of terminal elevators. They proposed that an opportunity should be given for a fuller method of government inspection of those elevators. That system has been tried, and it has been found wanting. A few months ago the country was startled to learn that frauds had been perpetrated under the very noses of the inspectors. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Neely) has taken a good deal of credit for the government inspectors from the fact that it was they who called attention to the frauds. Now, it seems to me as rather singular that credit should be given to men who subsequently discovered a fraud which had actually taken place under their very noses, and which it was their special duty to prevent. The hon. gentleman went on to state that no charges of fraud could be substantiated at the present time in regard to the handling of the grain crop of last year. I think, if my memory is right, that at the very time the grain growers' deputation was being received at Ottawa, a statement was made that such charges would be again preferred in regard to the handling of the grain crop of last year. Any way, let me point out that, although frauds took place at a very early stage in the handling of the crop of 1909, it was not, I think until April, 1910, that the matter reached a point where a prosecution could be entered in connection with those frauds. This is the system of government inspection that has been proved a failure up to the present time. The government now propose to introduce another experiment in the way of still further government control and inspection. Unfortunately, I have not been able to get hold of a copy of the Bill with which the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) seems to have been favoured. I went into the distribution office on Saturday afternoon, and they had not got the Bill at that time.

Mr. NEELY. I have a correction to make. The Minister of the Interior sent up to the distribution bureau a short time ago for a copy of the Bill. I was under the impression that the Bills were in the distribution office, and I have just discovered that the copy he handed to me was his own private copy, and that he was not able to get one at the distribution office.

Mr. LAKE. I have just sent up a written request to the distribution office for a copy of the Bill, and they send me word that they have not got it yet. So members on the other side of the House have an opportunity of studying the details of this measure, which gentlemen on this side of the House have not. During the debate which took place a few weeks ago I noticed hon. gentlemen opposite referring to some details of this measure; so we were certainly at a disadvantage in discussing the course which we understood was to be pursued when this Bill was brought in. Now, with regard to fuller inspection at Fort William and Port Arthur, my hon. friend from Souris has stated that it is absolutely impossible to have thorough and complete control of the grain which passes through these elevators. I confess that I had begun to think there must be something wrong, when there was a body of 75 to 90 inspectors at work there last year, and this year again, who had not been able to control the grain passing through those elevators; that seemed to me extraordinary. I was under the impression that the government were making appointments of men to act at those places as they were doing in other cases throughout the country, leaving the nomination in the hands of the Liberal committee at Fort William and Port Arthur, and were making appointments of inspectors at these places from the recommendations of the Liberal committee. If that is the case, it only shows that the men thus appointed were not able to carry on the work which was entrusted to them, and it is another instance of the mischievous nature of the patronage system to which this government has absolutely surrendered itself since it has been in power.

When the Grain Growers deputation were down here in December last they were quite definite as to what they wanted with respect to this matter. Not only were they definite but they had grain dealers and millers with them who also gave evidence to the effect that the government operation of terminal elevators was the only thing which would satisfactorily control the passage of wheat through these elevators, and prevent any fraud in connection with it. They made out a remarkably complete case and I have heard practically nothing said by any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House to show that the stand taken by the grain growers at that time is not an absolutely sound one. In addition to that let me put in the evidence of a resolution that was unanimously passed by the legislative assembly of the province of Saskatchewan at the last session of the House, to this effect:

Whereas, this House is of the opinion that under existing conditions, both interior and terminal elevators being private and identical interests operate to the disadvantage of the grain growers of Saskatchewan;

Therefore, be it resolved, that in the opinion of this House the government of Canada should own and operate the terminal elevators.

This resolution was unanimously passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan at the last session, affording an additional argument why, in the opinion of men well fitted to judge with regard to this matter, government operation alone will meet the exigencies of the case.

I might point out also to the Prime Minister and to the hon. gentlemen who sit on that side of the House, the additional necessity at the present time that grain, which is going by the Canadian route, and which receives a Canadian certificate, should be absolutely above suspicion, and that the certificate should be absolutely reliable. It lies in the reciprocity negotiations which have been carried on during the last few weeks. If the certificate of our government can be absolutely relied upon by the consumers in Great Britain as giving the correct quality of the grain, I have no doubt in the world that our grain will once again command the very high value which it used to command on the Liverpool markets and which it has not been commanding of late years. The statement was made by gentlemen who were down here representing the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association just about a year ago, that for several months on the British market Manitoba wheat had been at a lower value than many other wheats upon that market. This is the statement which was made by them in a letter which they addressed to the government at that time:

Due to its own high quality for making baker's flour, Manitoba No. 1 Northern usually brings a premium over all other wheats in Britain, yet from early in October to December, 1909, 'Manitoba' was the lowest priced wheat in the Liverpool market excepting some United States wheat.

If that condition continues to exist then we shall see, if the reciprocity arrangement is carried out, our wheat going out through the United States, and not through the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William. That is a condition that I am sure we all most earnestly wish to avoid, and for that reason in itself I would urge that the government undertake the operation of these elevators and see, when they give a a certificate of quality, that that certificate is valid when the grain reaches the markets of the world. I only hope that in addition to the government undertaking the operation of the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur for the reasons I have stated they would hurry up the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. That will give us another and a far better route to the markets of the world than we have at the present time, and it will also assist in preventing our wheat from being carried to these markets by the American route.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. L. CASH (Mackenzie). Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has, on behalf of the government, introduced a Bill in the Senate, dealing with this matter, it will not be necessary for me to-night, speaking on this motion, to anticipate the discussion which will ensue in this House when that Bill comes before us. There is, of course, no doubt that a great many irregularities have occurred at the terminal elevators, and the only question of difference between us is, or should be, as to what is the best remedy to provide for the prevention of these irregularities. When the grain growers from the west were here in December last, there was a conference between them and members of the government as to the measures which should be taken to regulate the terminal elevators, and as I understand it, the proposals then made by the government were satisfactory to the delegates. When I was home during the Christmas holidays, I found the idea prevalent among the farmers, that they would be satisfied with the government measure which they were led to believe would be introduced and which has since been presented to parliament. One of the provisions of that Bill is that there should be a commission appointed to oversee the business of the elevators, to get a perfect knowledge concerning the conduct of that business, and, if the business were not conducted in the interests of the grain growers that this commission should make recommendations to the government as to the taking over of these elevators and the provision of a parliamentary grant for that purpose. When that Bill comes before us, as I say, it will then be time enough for us to consider whether it is calculated to mitigate the evils which undoubtedly exist, and anything we may say to-night would be unnecessarily anticipatory of that discussion. Of course, we know that when a great many bushels of grain go through these elevators, a very small margin on each bushel would amount to a good many dollars in the pockets of the men operating the elevators, and so we must suppose that those guilty of manipulation, have very good reason for urging that conditions should remain as they are at present. However, I believe the legislation introduced by the government, will put an end to wrong-doing in that respect. As we all know, government ownership has not proved a huge success in this country. Our experience with the Intercolonial railway teaches us that, and our experience with that railway also teaches us that since it has been placed under a commission, its operation has been fairly satisfactory. In view of the fact that we will have to consider this question on the government Bill, I think it is only fair that the hon. member from Souris should withdraw his resolution, which at the present time I deem to be inexpedient. I have great pleasure in seconding the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely).

Mr. W. H. SHARPE (Lisgar). The question of the terminal elevators is a most important one to the grain growers of western Canada, and I congratulate the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), that he has brought it to the attention of the House at the present time. I congratulate him also on his able presentation of the case for the western farmers, and upon the fact that he has been able to submit to us so many illuminating facts in connection with the question. This government has known for years that the grain growers of the west have been continuously robbed at the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. I well remember attending a meeting in the West Block during the session of 1908-9 when the grain growers and millers of eastern Canada and the grain growers of western Canada appeared before Sir Richard Cartwright and placed before him all the facts which would convince any reasonable man that the grain growers were being continually robbed and deprived of the just reward of their labours. It was shown to the Minister of Trade and Commerce then, that profits which were theirs were filched from them and handed over to whom? Not to Canadians—because with the exception of the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators, the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William are controlled by American citizens—but to men who come from a foreign land. For years has the government known that this state of affairs existed, but in this case, as in a great many others, they refused to interfere, for the benefit of our own citizens, and allowed these people to continue robbing the hard working people of Canada. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), has dealt with this matter so fully, that it is unnecessary for me to do further than endorse the sentiments expressed by him. I trust, that even though the Bill presented by the government does not give us government ownership, it will to some extent remove the grievances which during the past few years we have suffered in western Canada.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). As a farmer, and as the representative of a farming constituency, it is most gratifying to me to find my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner), and his friends so anxious to meet demands of the western grain growers. Their attitude in this respect, makes me very hopeful that we shall have an early collapse of the reciprocity debate, because, if the hon. member from Souris, and his friends will canvass the western farmers, I am sure they will find a large majority of them in favour of this particular method of getting larger markets for their produce. Having no desire to impugn the honest sincerity of my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner), and his friends in their express desire to find new markets for the farmers, and especially to meet their demands and wishes, I repeat that I am extremely hopeful they will see their way to support that great measure of reciprocity which has been presented by the government for our consideration.

Nothing could possibly give me greater amazement than to see the light-hearted manner in which it would appear that a party calling itself Conservative is prepared to take up a great scheme of state socialism. I am aware that so great a thinker as Sir William Harcourt in the field of politics once said: 'We are all socialists now,' and in a limited sense there is some truth in that statement. But Conservatism, as I have always understood it, is in its very nature opposed to socialism. There seemed to be some glimmering of that thought in the mind of my hon. friend from Souris when he calmly informed this House that he had no desire to discuss the question of state ownership. But the question as he puts it is a question of state ownership, and in that sense it is nothing but rank, pure, simple unadulterated socialism. Socialism is defined by its leading advocates on both sides of the Atlantic as 'government ownership and operation of the means of producing and distributing wealth.' The elevators are a great means of the distribution of wealth, and our hon. friends opposite propose, before other expedients have been exhausted, light-heartedly to commit the government and the parliament and the people of Canada to this very large and serious instalment of state socialism. Well, I cannot understand their attitude upon that question. In debating this matter with socialists themselves, I have pointed out that in their criticisms of government they stand in the same position as all opposition parties in this country. They are continually saying in plain language what the opposition here is continually saying, and what Liberal oppositions in provincial legislatures in this country are continually saying, that they are none too sure of the uprightness with which governments today are handling public funds, public departments and public affairs generally. Now, where is the logic—I would like to put this to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), who had a good, old-fashioned education in his youth—where is the logic of continually basing opposition to governments as they exist upon their alleged incompetence to handle business matters, and asking this House to commit itself to an indefinite extension of the field of government operation? I cannot see the logic of it; and, to be truthful, Sir, I am very frightened at such an extension of the field of government operation. I believe that as a rule a man will do better work for himself than he will get done by a partner; I believe an individual field of operation is better than a partnership; I believe a partnership is better than a company in handling business affairs; and I believe the worst thing in the world to handle business affairs is a government, and the more its operations are restricted to the proper functions of a government the better it will be for the country.

To put it plainly, what our hon. friends want to do is to put a stop to thieving. They allege that there is absolute thieving going on in connection with the handling of grain. They call it manipulation. Well, that term would be a very good periphrasis for an act of burglary, but I do not think the moral quality of manipulation in this instance is very different from that of thieving. I have always thought that the proper way to deal with thieves was by the criminal law, and one of the reasons for delay in this particular instance is that in the measure of inspection which the government at present has in its hands you have a means which has proved to be so far efficient that some of the thieving has been detected, and punishment has been meted out to the culprits. I want to put it to my friends fairly: is it not likely that if we increase our vigilance, if we improve our machinery, we may still be able under the criminal law to put down this thing without committing ourselves to a great scheme of state socialism?

There are other reasons for hesitation in this matter which I would like to impress upon our hon. friends opposite. The very last debate in this House, followed by a division upon a farming question, so far as I remember, was just before the Christmas adjournment, on the question of establishing a government system of handling chilled meat; and our hon. friends opposite were at that time perfectly prepared to encourage the government of this country to embark upon a huge system of government interference in the chilled meat industry. But what do we find to-day?—and I draw the particular attention of my hon. friend from Souris to this point. We find that some of the very men who were making these demands, which he is so solicitous to meet in the exact way in which they were presented, are saying that so large a market will be obtained for the meat producers of the west under the proposed scheme of reciprocity that there will be no need for this chilled meat project.

I was very much impressed with the excellent speech of my hon. friend from Humbolt (Mr. Neely) on this question, in the debate on the resolution of my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin). One of the points that he made was that we are just at the beginning of our wheat production in the west. I have mentioned in this House before the fact that we have in the three prairie provinces 300,000,000 acres of splendid arable land. We have not to-day under cultivation 20,000,000 acres. If the government were to embark on such a course as has been suggested, no man could see the end of it. You would be indefinitely enlarging the field of government interference in a matter which is much better handled by private enterprise, with a strict and rigid enforcement of the criminal law.

In all these considerations there appears to me to be very good ground for giving pause to hon. gentlemen opposite, for taking time to consider this question, and especially to consider a measure which is to be almost immediately presented to the Senate for the more efficient handling of elevators under that scheme of individualism which after all is the outstanding quality of the race which upholds this Empire, and which is the only quality the exercise of which can in the end build up a strong people and a strong nation. On these grounds I shall vote without hesitation against the motion of my hon. friend from Souris at this time, and shall wait with some degree of confidence for the production of the government measure on the subject.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to hear the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. He has a very refreshing manner of dealing with things, and certainly a manner entirely his own. He is greatly concerned with the attitude of hon. gentlemen on this side, and would be exceedingly glad if he could recruit some supporters for the government on the question of reciprocity, which appears to be a kind of nightmare for him as it is for some members of the cabinet as well.

The hon. gentleman talks of socialism. I do not know whether he speaks as an expert or not, but he is very much alarmed over the name of state socialism. Let me say that I care not what name you give this proposition, if it is in the interests of the country and particularly of the farmers of the west, who more than any other class are making Canada great, I shall support it as a good measure. We are told that the government have introduced a Bill in the Senate under the sponsorship of Sir Richard Cartwright. Well, we have not yet seen that Bill, although this House has been in session three months and this question is one of the greatest importance to the most important class in the community. Is not this really an attempt to sidetrack the farmers when we know that this Bill of which the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) speaks does not touch the question before the House? The steps which the government have taken so far, having proved utterly inefficient as the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) demonstrated the other day, the government should not put the farmers off with promises any longer but do something practical. What is this measure, which has been introduced in the Senate after this long delay, going to do? It is simply going to give us a little more of what we have too much of already. It proposes to establish another court. The Lord knows we have quite enough courts in Canada as it is. It is not courts we want but justice. It is not a multiplication of officers, but efficient work that we require ; and to tell us that the government are going to establish another tribunal similar to the railway board, is simply to tell us that this wrong-doing is to get on just as before, and that when any offence is committed the offender may be brought before this court and punished. What we want, however, is not punishment but a remedy. A commission would be all right but not such a commission as the government proposes. What is required is a commission to operate the elevators, to do justice in the first instance, and put a stop to the thieving, which my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) so much deplores. My hon. friend speaks of Conservatism as he understands it. Why, he never did understand it. In that respect he is not very much different from many hon. gentlemen on that side, they are so wedded to their idols, although often elected as independents. I do not know whether my hon. friend got in as an independent but I would almost think he did, to judge by his intense partisanship, because I notice there is no man so utterly subservient as the so-called independent. I see my hon. friend dissents from this suggestion of independence. He is worried about our being light-hearted. Well, every man is light-hearted when he knows he is doing what is right, but when a man knows he has to come forward in response to the party whip to do the government's bidding, if he has any conscience at all—and a few of those gentleman have—he can not possibly be light-hearted, he is despondent as my hon. friend certainly is on this occasion.

My hon. friend asks where is the logic of constantly condemning the government, and then asking the government to undertake additional work. If they are inefficient and incompetent, why should we ask them to do more? My hon. friend does not understand the situation. Those men opposite are not going to be at the head of affairs forever. What we want is to get good laws, and then a good government ; but I admit that if I thought those hon. gentlemen were going to be in power much longer, I would hesitate committing anything to them. I look, however, for a better era, I look for a bright day in the not far distant future when Canada will have a government which will respond to the wishes of the people, and particularly the wishes of the great farming class.

The hon. gentleman says that the government are not doing so badly after all, because some offenders have been brought to punishment. Well, I leave the hon. gentleman to fight that out with the hon. gentleman from Regina (Mr. Martin), who told us the other day most explicitly that the action of the government had been an utter and complete failure, and that he could see no remedy except by government operation, in which he agreed with my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner). Either government operation, directly under a department, or through the agency of a commission. This is what the farmers demand. A hurry up call was sent to the Senate and with little consideration—perhaps with none at all—a Bill is to be brought in towards the end of the session. That means putting off the farmers until another session, for I do not believe that any substantial benefit will be conferred on the farmers by reason of the proposed legislation. The farmers have studied this question, and I venture to think that they understand their wants. If the farmers who have been handling this grain do not know what they want, how are other people to decide what is good for them? Speaking as a farmer myself, I think they do know what they want, and you can depend on their judgment as much as on that of any class in the Dominion, and they are the class who should above all others receive consideration from the government; for, upon the action of the Canadian farmer more than on anything else rests and depends the Dominion's prosperity. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), spoke this afternoon, as he spoke a few days ago ; and he has made his position definite. He comes from the west, but, like my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) though he comes from the west, he speaks for the government. Rarely, if ever, does either of these gentlemen speak in the interest of the farmer. The hon. member for Humboldt takes it upon himself to say that he does not think the government has been doing so badly, in fact, their action is quite satisfactory to him—not very much surprised at that —and that he is altogether in favour of leaving this matter for six months or a year longer in the hope that it will be worked out under a Bill of which he practically knows nothing.

I shall have no hesitation in voting for the resolution of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). I have never thought myself a Socialist, but I am not concerned as to that. I believe the measure proposed by the hon. member for Souris is in the interest of the farming class. I believe that the hon. member himself has very carefully studied it out. I can see that his heart is in the movement. Persistently and at all times he has brought the matter forward. He has worked at it when it was less popular than it is to-day, and has created in this House a strong feeling in its favour. And, when the government is ultimately forced—as it will be—to adopt this method, to my hon. friend from Souris will be due the credit for what is accomplished.

Mr. GEO. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon). I think this House is indebted to the hon member for Regina (Mr. Martin) to the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), and to the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) for the very interesting information which they have given us with reference to terminal and transfer elevators. I hoped, when this discussion commenced, that it would proceed on the lines laid out by my hon. friend from Souris. But when the discussion got to my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) it developed into an appeal against the proposed Bill, which will come into this House from the Senate, and was practically a request to the House to vote for this resolution and throw out the Bill. From the information which I have been able to gain, I have arrived at the conclusion that we are only taking up time in following any other method than government ownership of the terminal and transfer elevators. I could hope that some other means would be satisfactory, but there is this fact which makes the grain question different from other products—it is impossible to identify different consignments of grain after they have been placed in the elevator. And when frauds can be committed by the turning of a spout, it becomes very apparent that the conduct of these elevators, which are the clearing house of the grain of the west, should be taken out of the control of those who are interested in the grain, and should be placed in the hands of some authority which has absolutely no interest whatever in the grain itself. I think that the experience of the past has demonstrated this, and I must believe that the representations which were made by the farmers from the west should be followed out by this government, and that a Bill should be brought in which will in the end produce satisfactory conditions, and, if necessary, that public ownership should be undertaken by this government. I have not seen the Bill referred to by some hon. members, but I heard the clause read by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely). It appears to me that, whether that clause does all that some hon. members of this House, perhaps myself included, would wish, or does not, it is an admission of the principle of government ownership. I think it will be well to postpone the discussion of this whole question until that Bill comes down. The discussion can then go on with the legislation actually before us.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is rather interesting and amusing to hear such arguments addressed to the House as those the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) has just used. He thinks this resolution is a request to the House to throw out the government Bill, and, therefore, it should be opposed. Why? Because the government Bill, presumably, will provide something that will suit the requirements of the farmers of the west, and this resolution, if carried, will not provide it. Is he aware that the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) read to the House a clause of that Bill which provides that the government may do exactly what this resolution asks them to do—take over the elevators. Now, if that is provided by the Bill, and if this resolution only seeks to give the sense of the House on that question, how can the resolution be said to be antagonistic to the Bill? Why, it would strengthen the hands of the government to have unmistakable evidence that the sense of the House was supporting that very portion of the Bill, and, therefore, that they might safely go on with it. So, the argument seems neither consistent with itself nor in harmony with what is demanded by the people of the west. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), in my judgment, is entitled to the grateful thanks of the people of the west and of this House as well, for the very clear and correct view he gave of the operations of those who control the elevators to the detriment of the farmers. The hon. gentleman gave valuable information, clear, and, in my judgment, convincing information. But I was rather amused and surprised to find that almost the first man who followed him amongst the government supporters in the west was the member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), who declared that ultimately it may be necessary to have government ownership, but that that fact has not been demonstrated either to the satisfaction of the House or to his satisfaction. The farmers who came here from the west on a deputation presented their views clearly and pointedly upon this question and gave the most unmistakable evidence that government ownership is the only possible means that can be adopted to remedy the wrongs which exist at the present time. I thought it was not very respectful to his own constituents from the west, and particularly to the great farmers' delegation, to say that all the information they presented to the government failed to convince either the member for Humboldt or the government that they really needed what they were demanding. I may say that the same tenor is evident throughout the remarks of every western member who has spoken as a government supporter on this question. It seems to me that they are treating their friends from the west with scant courtesy, indeed, when they pay so little heed to their declarations, and practically take the ground that they know better than the western farmers themselves what is good for them.

Mr. PATERSON. Did they convince the hon. gentleman himself?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they convinced me that this was the only sure remedy that was available, they convinced me that even though we may not like the remedy, no other is likely to be effectual, and that it must be tried, even though it be what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) calls it, government socialism. Now, the hon. member for Humboldt said that our clear duty at this time was to oppose the resolution of my hon. friend from Souris, and to wait for the government's Bill. Therefore he disagrees with this statement of the resolution:

That in the opinion of this House the present system of operating terminal and transfer elevators is detrimental to the interests of the western grain producer——

Do hon. gentlemen opposite disagree with that declaration? Is it correct or incorrect? If they vote against the resolution, they declare that it is incorrect.

—and that the government should take immediate steps to operate transfer elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and transfer elevators between the terminals and the Atlantic sea-board.

So the hon. member for Humboldt disagrees with that entirely. Well, he is not very complimentary to his friends in the west, or to the government either, because the government have asked this House to wait for a Bill they have introduced, one clause of which, as read by the hon. member for Humboldt, provides that they be empowered to do, what this resolution asks them to do. This resolution only provides for getting the sense of the House upon that question, and the member for Humboldt, the member for Red Deer and the member for Saskatoon are all opposed to it. And the member for Red Deer is opposed to it because it is government socialism, as he says; he calls government ownership government socialism. Well, I do not see anything wrong in the resolution, or anything inconsistent with the Bill, and I should think the government would gladly welcome an expression of opinion from the House upon that very question.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). As an Ontario representative, I wish to offer my congratulation to my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) on his very clear presentation of the case from the western standpoint. He has given a great deal of study to the matter, and has shown how important it is to the western farmers. I wish to remind my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) and my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), that whenever a proposition to assist the farmers in the west comes up for discussion in this House, if it is introduced from this side, these hon. gentlemen always oppose it. The hon. member for Red Deer was not on his feet one minute until he had launched out into a discussion, not of the resolution of the hon. member for Souris but of the proposed reciprocity arrangement, and asked us on this side of the House what we proposed to do about it.

Mr. CLARK. Will the hon. gentleman give me his definition of politics? I have always understood that it was the science of government.

Mr. BLAIN. If I were to give a definition of politics, it would put my hon. friend where he rightly belongs, and show that he is not an independent member of this House, but a radical supporter of the government. I would expect better things from an hon. gentleman representing a western constituency. When the hon. member for Red Deer posed as a farmer from the west, I looked up his record to see what stand he took on a proposition introduced by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in respect to bettering the condition of western farmers with regard to the meat industry. My hon. friend must know that the farmers in the west are not well treated in respect to the meat industry, that the prices to the western consumer, as to the eastern consumer, are very high. The consumers in the city of Winnipeg and other large centres of Canada are paying at this moment high prices for meat; but when we make an investigation, we find the farmers of western Canada are receiving very small prices for their meat.

My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) introduces a resolution to better that condition. What does the hon. member for Red Deer do?—on his feet, as he always is, in opposition to it, and records his vote against that proposition in the interests of the farmers of the west. My hon. friend from Souris has made out a very clear case with respect to the large wheat industry of western Canada, pointing out that the farmers are engaged extensively in the production of wheat, producing the best wheat that is to be found in the world, that when they send that wheat on its road to the English market they are confronted with the mixing of grain, the result of which is the cheapening of their product, and the farmers are not getting a proper price for their grain as they otherwise would if the condition with regard to elevators were correct. When this proposition was introduced to correct it, to direct the government's attention to a better condition of things, asking the government, who are responsible for legislation in the interest of the people, to turn their attention to this very important question the first man on his feet almost in the House is the hon. member for Red Deer, saying: Oh, no, and not declaring himself in the interest of the western farmers, but in opposition to the proposition of my hon. friend from Souris. Therefore, I think that the hon. gentleman had better have a little searching of himself rather than that he should be directing attention so much to this side of the House and on every question giving a lecture to this side as if the members of the opposition were not able to discuss these questions or to take any interest in the affairs of western Canada at all. I am not going to discuss it farther only to say that in future I hope hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will not bring politics into discussions of this kind. The people of western Canada will be very much surprised that when a proposition was put forth in the interest of the west, as this was by my hon. friend from Souris, these hon. gentlemen, instead of facing it as it is and discussing it on its merits, introduce party politics into the discussion and declare themselves to be the saviours of the western farmers. I am only going to make these few remarks. I shall not enter into the discussion. The question has been very fully discussed by my hon. friend from Souris, and other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, representing western constituencies will discuss it more fully as the debate goes on. I only wish to express my sympathy with the western farmers as they have to face grievances, and as this dilatory government are not taking care of their interests, in order to show the government and to show the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his supporters, that whenever any proposition to help the people in the west to better their condition is presented to this House they can always rest assured that from this side of the House they will receive a ready and willing support.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up the time of the House. This question was before the House two years ago, and at that time I placed myself on record with regard to it. I want to congratulate my hon. friend the mover of this resolution (Mr. Schaffner), and to say that I think the House is indebted to him for the facts which he has placed before it. I am not surprised at the attitude of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House—representing constituencies in the west. They took the same attitude two years ago practically saying that the policy of the government was the proper policy, and that it should at least be given a fair trial. That policy has been in operation for two years, and while elevators have been operated under government supervision we find by the facts laid before the House by the hon. member for Souris to-day that the owners or operators of these elevators have been caught practically robbing the farmers of the west. Some of these men have been punished, as the hon. member for Souris has pointed out, but not sufficiently. There is no punishment under the present Grain Act sufficiently severe to stop the outrageous conduct of these men. With regard to the attitude which the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has taken regarding the question of reciprocity, I would just like to say to that hon. gentleman and to some other hon. members from the west that when the time comes to speak on this question we will be able to answer them. Perhaps the attitude of the hon. gentleman and other hon. gentlemen from the west regarding this measure that is before the House can be explained in this way. The hon. gentleman realizes that if the reciprocity arrangements, as proposed by the government, are adopted there will be very little need perhaps for terminal elevators in Port Arthur. They realize that a great deal of the wheat trade will be diverted to Duluth and that it will not matter so much who operate the elevators at Port Arthur. As far as I am personally concerned I believe that the motion moved by my hon. friend from Souris is one to command the support of every man from the west. There is no question that in so far as the handling of the wheat is concerned, as has been pointed out by the farmers year after year, after the wheat leaves the farms it does not reach the markets of the world in the condition in which it left the farms. The identity of the wheat has been lost entirely. There is no question that the wheat has been mixed at different points and that the farmers and the country have been the losers to a great extent by the lowering of the grade. I did not rise for the purpose of taking any lengthy part in this discussion, but I do wish to place myself again on record as intending to support the motion of my hon. friend from Souris as I had hoped that every hon. member from the west would have done. In face of the many complaints that have come from the farming associations and the Grain Growers' Association I cannot very well understand the attitude of these men on questions of this kind when they come before the House. We had a question up here not very long ago regarding cold storage, a matter of vital importance to the cattle raisers of the west. As has been pointed out every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House coming from a western constituency opposed the resolution that was moved by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Every man on this side of the House coming from the west supported that resolution strongly as we have supported every motion I know of that has been brought up in this House from either side that contained any proposition to better the condition of the western farmer. I regret exceedingly that it seems impossible for any motion to be moved from this side of the House in the interest of the western farmers that will elicit the support of members on the other side of the House from the west.

Mr. BRADBURY

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Macleod). Mr. Speaker, I take a good deal of pride in having my name coupled as seconder with this resolution which has been introduced by my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner). When this question was before the House two or three years ago I spoke in favour of a resolution along similar lines. I have not changed my mind from that time to the present; in fact, from the evidence that has been presented to me, from what I have seen and from what I understand about the way things have been going from that time to the present, I am more strongly of the opinion to-day than I ever was that there is only one way of remedying this evil that has been robbing the western farmers of their just dues and that is the proposition which has been presented in the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Souris this afternoon.

I understand that the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner), is precisely in line with the views of the western farmers who waited on the government in December, and surely the farmers who have made a practical study of this question for years and who are men of great intelligence, best know what their needs are. I was rather surprised to hear this afternoon some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House complimenting the government wheat inspectors for discovering that fraud and swindling had been going on in the elevators. Why, the very idea that 75 or 90 inspectors in 12 or 13 elevators permitted this fraud and swindling to go on to the extent it did before they discovered it, is proof positive of the failure of the system, and very strong evidence that these men were either incapable or were negligent in the performance of their duty. That circumstance does not give us much reason to hope for relief from the system of government inspection. We were told by the hon. member (Mr. Schaffner), that nearly half a million bushels of one grade of wheat were sold from the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William at a higher grade than it entered, and as there is no means of knowing what was done with respect to other grades, this shows that the swindling was of enormous magnitude. Again, it was proved that the elevators had actually sold hundreds of thousands of bushels of wheat for delivery in Europe, when it was reported to be in the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William, and all this remember, under the eyes of the inspectors. What stronger proof is required of the incapacity of these men and the failure of the system of government inspection. I understand also that when some of those people were brought up for wrong-doing, the local magistrate held the trial behind closed doors, that the defendants pleaded guilty and were fined $500 for each offence, or $5,000 in all, and that in this way the evidence was precluded which would have afforded us some information as to the extent and duration of this fraud. That, I think, was not as it should be in the interests of justice. One of the strong reasons advanced by members on the other side for opposing government ownership, is the cost of acquiring these elevators. My idea is, and I submit it for what it is worth, that if the government experimented by acquiring in some way, the terminal elevators to the extent of 25 per cent of their capacity, we would be able to test by experience, whether government ownership would prove successful or not. I believe the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur have a capacity of 30,000,000 bushels, but that the greatest quantity ever in storage at any one time was about 19,000,000 bushels, and this season only 10,000,000 bushels. Now, suppose the government acquired by leasing, or expropriation, or otherwise, a capacity of 8,000,000 or about 25 per cent of the total, the expense of the undertaking would not be great and we would know in a few years whether it would be wise for the government to take over the elevators or not. Of course, if the farmers in the west could get justice through private ownership of the elevators, it probably would be the better system, but so far, we have not been getting fair play in this matter, and it would seem to be incumbent on the government to own and operate them. Certainly, if any advantage is to accrue to the farmers of the west from government ownership, then government ownership should be undertaken at once. That is my view of the situation, and I think that probably it would prove a solution of the difficulty without entailing great expense. I am strongly in favour of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), which, as I say, is in line with the demands of the farmers of the west.

Mr. WM. H. WHITE (Victoria, Alberta). As a western member, I do not wish to go on record as being opposed to this resolution, which, in its opening paragraph reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the present system of operating terminal and transfer elevators is detrimental to the interests of the western grain producers.

I think every one in the west will agree with that. But, in my view of the explanation given this afternoon by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), as to the Bill presented by the government in the Senate, I am rather inclined to the belief that while there is nothing wrong with the resolution, the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely), is perhaps at the present time, more in the interests of the farmers of Alberta. In my district we are not at present, growing grain very extensively, although no doubt in the future the industry will be engaged in, to a very large extent. When the time comes, what we will be interested in is a western outlet for the product. If the government is going to take over and control the elevators referred to in this resolution, we, of course, would urge that they should control the elevators on the Pacific coast, at Prince Rupert, Vancouver and elsewhere, and, when the Hudson Bay railway is built, we would desire them to also take charge of the elevators there. On the whole, as I understand it, there is not much difference between the Bill presented by the government and the proposition in the resolution, and, for the present, I think the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Humboldt, is possibly the more desirable.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Have you seen the Bill?

Mr. WHITE (Victoria, Alberta). No. I take my knowledge of its provisions from the statement made by the hon. member for Humboldt.

Mr. GLEN L. CAMPBELL (Dauphin). Mr. Speaker, there is not very much left to discuss in connection with this resolution; but as a representative of farmers, and a farmer myself, I feel it my duty and my pleasure to say a few words congratulatory to my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) on his presentation of this case. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), in dealing with the steal at Fort William and Port Arthur last spring, and the prosecutions in connection with it, congratulated the government on their system of supervision at those points, under which they employed from sixty to ninety men at a cost of some $60,000 of the people's money. I think his argument was very weak when he said that to employ high-salaried commissioners would be beneficial to the farmers of the west, in view of the fact that the government had paid out $60,000 to sixty or seventy officials to watch those wheat thieves who own elevators at those points, and the fact that in the neighbourhood of half a million bushels of wheat was raised one and two grades from the time it went into the elevators till the time it went out, thus enhancing the value of that wheat to the extent of a little over $20,000. When it takes seventy officials at a cost of $60,000 to the people, to rob the farmers to that extent in one season, it would be adding insult to injury to them to appoint any more officials for that work. It is perhaps somewhat irregular to discuss the Bill now before the Senate; but if this House saw its way to pass the resolution which has been brought before us so ably by my hon. friend from Souris, it would give a pointer to the Senate that it was the feeling of this House that some plan for the conservation of the people's wheat and money ought to be effected, and that a clause should be inserted in the Bill providing for the ownership and operation of the elevators by and for the people. For years the farmers have been agitating for the protection proposed in this resolution; for years they have been laughed at by this government, and only within the last year or two have the government offered their sympathy in words to the farmers of the west, and for a very good reason, namely, that the farmers are beginning to organize and will be an important factor in the next election. There are two principal reasons why the farmers have been agitating in this matter. One is for their self-protection from the stealing of their wheat by low grading and mixing, which has been shown to-night to have amounted in one season to $24,000. A further reason is their great desire that the quality of their grain may be properly taken care of, and that is a more than sufficient reason, because northern Canada is the only place in the world where No. 1 hard wheat can be produced. The fact is that under the conditions that have prevailed, even in years when the government has had this very costly system of supervision in operation, no man who saw the wheat go into the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William and saw it afterwards in the market in Liverpool would recognize it as the same wheat, so mixed was it with inferior wheat. Therefore, I think it is incumbent on every member of this House who represents a western constituency to loyally support this resolution. I intend to vote against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) because, like all amendments brought on that side of the House against anything good proposed on this side, it is merely in the nature of a quibble and evasion.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). Mr. Speaker, while this question appeals more directly to the members from the west, anything that affects the western provinces necessarily affects the eastern portion of Canada as well, and anything that can be done to cement the provinces together should be done. There is undoubtedly a very strong feeling amongst the western farmers on this elevator question. When the deputation of farmers was here some time ago, I had the privilege of conversing with some of the gentlemen from the west, and I found that this question of elevators appealed to them more strongly than any other presented to the government. There does not seem to be very strong opposition to this resolution on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite except for the reason that it has been introduced by a member on this side of the House. The hon. member for Victoria, Alberta (Mr. White), seemed to agree with the spirit of the resolution, but found fault with it because it made no provision for elevators on Hudson Bay or on the Pacific coast. It seemed to me that if the principle of the resolution was right, we might very well wait until we have the long-promised railway to Hudson Bay before we put an elevator there. I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman and other hon. gentlemen opposite were very much concerned at present with the probable shipment of grain south of the line rather than east and west; and I just want to give one reason to them as coming from a source which I know will appeal very strongly to every member on the government side and with special force to the right hon. the Prime Minister. The reason I am about to give is the opinion of no less a personage than President Taft. Speaking at Columbus a few days ago, referring to the shipments and the prices of wheat he said that wheat on the American side of the line was 9 or 10 cents higher than in Winnipeg and the reason he gave was this:

> The difference does not arise from a difference in the cost of production in favour of the Canadian farmer but from the disadvantageous conditions under which he is compelled to market his wheat, due to the high cost of transportation, the expensive elevator charges, and the absence of those carrying and warehouse facilities which the American farmer enjoys.

I commend that statement of a very near and dear friend of this administration to their careful consideration, because in it President Taft clearly puts upon the shoulders of the government the blame for not having provided those elevators and transportation facilities which the farmers of western as well as eastern Canada have been clamouring for.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). It will be admitted by every one that there is probably no question of greater importance to the western country generally than that of the handling of its great wheat crops, so that no time spent in intelligent discussion of this subject is by any means wasted. I do not think that any fault can be found with anything that has been said to-day on either side of the House. I wish, however, to draw attention to one feature of the question which appears to me not to have been touched. The resolution calls for government operation both of the terminal and transfer elevators, and the amendment asks the House to support the measure which the government is bringing forward in the Senate. That measure has been described by some speakers as providing for government operation in the last resort, when operation by ordinary commercial methods with government inspection has proved a failure. But there is another way of putting the case and it is this: If the government should undertake without consideration or preparation to take control of the operation of both terminal and transfer elevators, it would assume a responsibility which I think it would not be justified in undertaking. It is an easy matter to sit down and figure out that certain results will follow certain actions; but in a question which concerns the whole product of the western country and the handling of that product, which involves interference with the ordinary channels of trade and investment, it behooves any sane government to move carefully and only after the fullest possible consideration. No government would be wise to assume, without further preparation, the tremendous responsibility of the ownership and operation of elevators, through which the grain trade of the west passes. What the Bill introduced in the Senate provides for, is a commission which will have full control of the grain trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and this commission will have power, when the funds are supplied by parliament, to acquire and operate such elevators as in its judgment should be so operated in the public interest. It seems to me that such a proposition is eminently reasonable. It is not necessarily an experiment in socialism, nor is it a rejection of the principles of socialism. It is a businesslike way of dealing with a matter which is of great business interest not only to the west but to every part of Canada. In my opinion the government would be ill-advised to rush unwittingly and lightly into such a responsibility as this resolution demands. Instead a measure has been prepared which will be first considered in the Senate and then by this House, which will provide for the appointment of a commission that will have the power of informing itself as to possibilities and requirements, and in due course have the fullest authority asked for by the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) to deal with any difficulties that cannot be settled otherwise than by absolute government ownership and operation. It has already been pointed out that the system of government inspection which has been followed so far, had not proved a failure, but rather a success. The fact that improprieties have been located and those guilty punished, is evidence that inspection does inspect and that the law is being enforced; and I have no doubt that that inspection and enforcement of the law will have due effect in the future management of elevators. However, the government is fully aware of the importance of the question and of the necessity to deal with it thoroughly; and the fact that legislation is in the course of preparation which will embody, as far as possible, every means for settling this question, is surely evidence that the government is willing and able to deal with it to the satisfaction of all interests concerned. The government, therefore, ask the support of the House to the policy which is embodied in the measure brought down.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). I have listened carefully and with great interest to this debate. I am interested in the subject as an eastern member because there is a great elevator being erected in our county town, Goderich, and we are very much interested in having the wheat trade of the west continue to flow eastward through its present channel. Consequently, I look upon this debate as of great importance to me as a representative of the county of Huron. I congratulate the hon. member for Souris (Mr.Schaffner) on having brought forward this resolution. And it is hard for me to understand how hon. gentlemen on the other side who represent western constituencies can reconcile their attitude on this subject with the best interests of their constituents. They say that this resolution is exactly in accord with some Bill which is to be brought in shortly but which we have not yet seen. If this resolution and the Bill are in accord, then certainly the resolution is simply an endorsement of the Bill. Are we being deceived or are our friends opposite prepared to vote down the very principle of the Bill that the government is to bring before us? I would like to know how our western friends on the other side will maintain their position when they meet their constituents. The grain growers of the west came to this Chamber and asked of the government sternly and firmly, that the government should own and operate terminal railways at Fort William and Port Arthur. The hon. member for Souris has had this resolution on the order paper for a long time ; it was on the paper before we heard anything of this Bill that is coming from the Senate, and for weeks before the western farmers came here to ask for government ownership and operation of terminal elevators. Why, then, should we vote the resolution down. I fear that hon. members from the west who vote against this resolution will have some very awkward questions to answer when they come before their constituents.

Now, there is no doubt there is a grievance. The grain growers when they were here stated distinctly that wheat was bringing from 8 cents to 10 cents a bushel more on the United States side of the line than on the Canadian side—exactly the same grade of wheat. Hon. members will recollect that when the grain growers were here I got up at that very point in their argument and said I would consider their argument was irrefutable if they would give us some positive proof of their statement. And they said they would leave that proof with the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If they left that proof with the Prime Minister, then it is established that wheat is bringing 10 cents more a bushel on the United States than on the Canadian side. As I happened to ask the question, some of these gentlemen came to me after the meeting was over and showed me affidavits made by three men who had sent samples of wheat to be graded and priced in Minneapolis and in Winnipeg. That sent to Winnipeg graded No. 2 Northern, and that sent to Minneapolis graded No. 1 Northern. These affidavits satisfied me, and no doubt the Prime Minister was satisfied if they submitted to him the proofs which they offered to submit. Now, if the Canadian farmers are losing 10 cents a bushel on their wheat, there is a grievance, and that grievance should be remedied this year. A loss of 10 cents a bushel means an aggregae loss of $10,000,000 to the farmers of the west this year. Is it right that there should be any delay or any humbugging about this thing? I think that, of course, a part of this is due to grading. The term 'Red Fyfe' is not in the Minnesota Act; they use the term 'hard varieties.' We have other hard varieties of wheat besides Red Fyfe, the Marquis and others that are almost as good as Red Fyfe. But they cannot be graded as 'hard' because 'Red Fyfe' is named in our Act. It would appear that those who grade the wheat in the west, and those who manage the terminal elevators are in combination; and they have been taking $10,000,000 a year out of the pockets of the western farmers by manipulations carried on. We may talk of socialism or anything else, but what we want is justice. That is what our western farmers want; that is what they came down here eight hundred strong to ask for; and that is what we are going to vote for tonight, for this resolution of the hon. member for Souris is in favour of granting them the justice that they ask. And it is against that that hon. members on the other side will vote. I would like to see the names of these hon. gentlemen lined up and see the excuses they will make to their constituents. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) spoke of what happened in 1909, as if that year had been the last one in which the farmers were robbed. He seemed to think there was no evidence in regard to 1910. I have here the report of the Elevator Commission of the province of Saskatchewan, issued by the Liberal government from the very province from which the hon. gentleman comes, and I propose to read a few items out of this report. I would like to put them on 'Hansard' to show how things were in 1910 in the province whose representatives are going to vote against this resolution. Hon. members on this side will not vote against the Bill if it is in accord with the resolution, and if it is not in accord with the resolution they will be perfectly right in voting against it. I wish to trace the wheat from the time it leaves the farmer until it leaves the terminal elevator:

CHARGES AGAINST THE PRESENT SYSTEM.

Against the initial elevators.

1. Weights. That they give lower weights than the farmer is entitled to.

2. Dockage. That they take too large a percentage as against cleaning the grain to grade and too large an amount to protect the elevator against shrinkage in handling the grain.

3. Grades. That in buying the grain they give lower grades than the grain is entitled to.

4. Prices. That they give too low prices even for the grade allowed.

5. Cleaning. That in many cases they have no cleaning apparatus, that in other cases they refuse to clean the grain, and that the farmers not only lose the screenings, but are also forced to pay freight upon them from the shipping point to the terminals.

6. Special binning. That they refuse to special bin grain on the ground that they have no vacant bins.

7. Substituting Grain. That they often give the farmer inferior grain, taking his superior lot instead.

8. Mixng. That they mix the grain in the bins so that the grades are skimmed, that is, that the grain shipped in any one grade is, on the lowest line of that grade, good enough to receive that grade at the hands of the inspector, but not a good average of that grade.

9. Shipping. That they try to ship stored grain to their own firms even when the owner desires to ship it elsewhere.

It is not charged by many that the elvator operators receive explicit instructions from their superiors to do these things, though this charge is made by some, but that the operators are under pressure to make the elevators pay, and that such practices are almost inevitable results of the system. And it is pointed out that the farmers who suffer most from such practices are the homesteaders, the small producers, and in general those whose financial conditions constrain them to sell in wagon loads to the elevators, and more especially, such of these classes as live ten miles and upwards from the nearest shipping point.

AGAINST THE BANKS.

1. That by restricting or refusing credit to many farmers, they force these to put their grain upon the market as soon as it is threshed. depriving them of the opportunity to hold it for a rise in price, and compelling them to sell when the market is glutted and the price tends to be lowest. To get the best price the farmer should be in position to market his grain leisurely, offering it step by step with the milling and export demands. The banks make it impossible for the farmers to do this at present.

2. That in giving lines of credit for moving the crops they favour the larger companies, and at times favour a few such companies, thus giving these a virtual monopoly of bank credit, and assisting them in monopolizing the grain business.

AGAINST THE RAILWAY COMPANIES.

1. That through leaky cars and other conditions, grain is lost or damaged in transit, and the loss is too frequently put upon the shipper.

2. That they construct loading platforms as if the object was to render the use of them by the farmers as difficult as possible.

3. That in the past they helped to create elevator monopolies and assisted them, and that at present they favour the large milling and elevator companies as against the farmer whenever they can, and especially at points where there is no competition between the railways themselves.

AGAINST THE TERMINAL ELEVATORS.

1. That they take too much dockage as against the shrinkage of the grain in handling.

2. That they do not pay the farmer for the screenings which they take out of the grain when cleaning.

3. That they do not clean the grain as the inspection requires, but sell it dirty, thus increasing their surplus.

4. That they mix the different grades of grain, selling grain of lower grade at the price of the higher grade, and that, the grain being dirty and lowered in grade by mixing, export prices are lowered and the prices paid to the farmers are also lowered.

5. That at times they loan stored grain to themselves as dealers or to others, while the owner believes he is holding his grain for an advance in price.

AGAINST THE GRADING SYSTEM.

What I say is that these charges made by a commission named by the Liberal government of the province of Saskatchewan appear clearly to indicate a combination with the elevator system to rob the farmers of their just rights.

1. That the grades do not represent the different values of the grain for milling purposes.

2. That good grain in any one grade gets the grade price only, and that selling by grade enables the millers and elevator companies to lower the quality of each grade, and so to fix the export and home prices upon the basis of the lowest level of each grade.

3. That the existing grading system is unfair to grain which though slightly bleached, smutted or frosted, is nevertheless of good quality for milling purposes.

4. That mistakes are made in sampling and grading.

AGAINST THE LARGE WESTERN MILLING COMPANY.

1. That they cull the best of the grain for their own mills:

(a) By buying through their own elevators, especially in the districts which produce the best milling grade, as shown them by their experiments.

(b) By somehow selecting the best car lots in Winnipeg, or by having cars stopped at their mills or terminals, which they can buy or not as they choose.

(c) By selecting from all the grain they buy the best lots, and selling the remainder.

2. That the defects of the grading system, and the absence of a central market, enabled them to buy grain which though slightly bleached, smutted or frosted, is of superior quality, and to buy it at a price far below its value.

3. That because of their culling, the grades of grain exported are lowered, with the result that export and home prices are lowered, and that it is at these lowered prices they secure the very best of the grain, except where they pay a small premium.

4. That besides lowering the prices by lowering the grades, they artificially depress prices:

(a) By spreading false reports about the crops.

(b) By juggling in options, and especially by selling market value early in the season in the Liverpool market, quantities of grain for future delivery.

One illustration of this bearing of the market is seen in the fact that wheat sells for less on the Canadian than on the American side of the line, though the Canadian wheat is the superior article.

I draw attention to that last paragraph. Here is a report published and printed by the Liberal government of the province of Saskatchewan, stating distinctly that the same class of wheat brings a better price on the American side than it does on the Canadian side. Now, I cannot see possibly how that can result from anything but a system of fraud on the Canadian side. We know that the Liverpool market fixes the price, both for Canadian and American grain ; because both countries export grain and we know that grain grown on the American side of the boundary line goes through Baltimore and New York to Europe, while that raised on the Canadian side goes from Port Arthur and Fort William to Montreal, and arriving in Liverpool they are sold in competition with each other. Therefore, this eight or ten cents per bushel must be lost on the way. The farmers are robbed on the road. They lose ten million dollars every year, that is taken from them on the way to the market; this happens between the grading and the elevators. The farmers know that this is taking place; they know they are losing all this money. They paid their way down here, and in a very careful manner they laid their cause before this government. and the government promised to listen to them. One of those farmers told the government on the floor of this House that they were losing ten cents a bushel on their wheat. Now, are you going to ask the farmers of the west to lose another ten million dollars? I say that is the position, if we reject this resolution of the hon. member for Souris; but I hope there are enough men on the other side of the House to back us up and to pass it. I would not consider it a vote of want of confidence at all, but an endorsement of the Bill which they are shortly to bring down, and which will, if they speak truly, be exactly in accord with this resolution. Now, why is there an amendment moved to this resolution? I would ask the hon. gentleman who moved that amendment to withdraw it. I think, in the face of what has been said here to-day, he would be doing a kindness to Canada, and particularly to the western farmers, and more particularly to his own constituents in Humboldt, if he withdrew that amendment. Let us lay aside party spirit as much as possible; there is too much of it here, and let us try to do the best we can for the people. That is what they sent us here for. I was pleased with the speech of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin). I thought he made a very careful and temperate speech, and he gave us a great deal of useful information. I wonder he is not here to stand up and support the hon. member for Souris, who has been juggled out of the benefit of the resolution he brought forward. Let me remind you that the member for Souris put his resolution on the Order Paper long ago, long before this Bill was ever mentioned by the government. And now, when he is allowed to bring it forward an endeavour is made to sidetrack it by this amendment of the hon. member for Humboldt. This is not the way for the government to carry out the desires of the grain growers of the west. It is simply a block game.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I do not wish to be the only western member who has failed to raise his voice in support of the resolution of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). Having spoken some time ago on the resolution of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), I will curtail my remarks on this occasion. The House will remember that when that large delegation from the west came down to interview the government in the session of 1907-8, composed of farmers, a representation of the elevator men, and all the various interests connected with the transportation, the marketing and storage of grain it was then stated by the farmers present that they were convinced there was mixing going on in those terminal elevators. They were asked to produce the evidence. The owners of those elevators took exception to that statement, and while the farmers had no specific proof to offer at that date, they knew they were not getting sufficient prices for their grain in the old country; they were suspicious that the grain was being mixed, and the experience of the past year goes to prove that to a certainty.

A Bill was prepared by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that session. It was prepared largely under the influence of a report presented by a royal commission that had been appointed by this government to inquire into the grain trade. It is true that the royal commission did not report in favour of government ownership and operation of the terminal elevators. They did claim, however, that this government should control by supervision the weighing of the grain into the elevators and the weighing out of the elevators. It is now admitted by everybody that after giving this system a considerable trial the mixing of grain has gone on notwithstanding all those officials, who have been appointed by this government and that it has gone on under their very eyes. That was admitted by the hon. member for Ded Deer (Mr. Clark), and the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), this afternoon, and they took great credit to the government, by reason of the fact that those who were convicted of mixing were convicted by these government officials and that, therefore, a great deal of credit was attached to the action taken by these officials. But, Mr. Speaker, if it is a fact that more of No. 1 or No. 2 Hard was shipped out of the elevator than came in, by reason of lower grades being mixed with No. 1 quality, it did not require any expert to discover that fact; almost anybody could have detected that, and could have laid a charge against these men of having mixed the grain. But, it did not prevent the mixing. The mixing went on right under the eyes of these supervisors, and it went on by reason of the fact that those elevators are owned and operated by gentlemen who are intimately connected with the grain trade, who are the owners of the line elevators, and by reason of the fact that they are vitally, financially interested in the manipulation of grain at the terminal elevators. Even under this new Bill, I believe that the ownership and operation of those elevators will not differ practically from what it is at the present time. The Act, as I have said, that was presented to this parliament in 1907-8, was prepared in accordance with the recommendation of the Royal Commission, and when it came to this House, those of us on this side of the House who engaged in a criticism of the measure, asserted that it would not give the satisfaction that the government claimed it would. Last year when my hon. friend from Souris introduced a resolution, much on the same lines as the resolution moved here to-night, it was claimed by some hon. gentlemen opposite, as a reason for opposing it, and in support of the amendment which the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), moved that the Act now in force, was carrying out the wishes of the Royal Grain Commission and, secondly, that sufficient time had not been given for the operation of the Act to prove that it was not going to be satisfactory. The hon. member for Regina went rather farther than that, and I will just read a short paragraph from the remarks which he made on that occasion. On the 5th of April, 1909, that hon. gentleman said:

I claim that government control if properly carried out should be as efficient as government ownership, if not more so. Under the present system you have two sets of officials, the government official and the employees of the terminal elevators, who act as a check upon each other. But if the elevators were owned and operated by the government there would be only one set of officials to weigh in the grain and to weigh it out, so that the present system if properly carried out ought to give us more efficient control than the system of government ownership.

Further on he said:

I have referred to the legislation passed last year. I claim that if this legislation is properly enforced under the system of government control, it must remove the difficulties of mixing grades which are alleged to exist at these terminal elevators.

Mark you, he says, that if the Act is properly enforced, it will do away with all mixing. Well, we had the hon. gentleman admitting last week, or the week before, that mixing has been going on under this Act. Is it true that the Act has not been properly enforced? If it has not been properly enforced, whose fault is it? Is it not the fault of this government who appointed over seventy officials for the purpose of enforcing the Act right under whose eyes the mixing has gone on? The hon. member for Regina was either right when he stated that government control would be sufficient, if properly enforced, or he had a mistaken idea of the benefits that would accrue from government ownership and operation. Now, the Act of 1907-8 was not approved by the grain growers. They claimed that nothing but complete government ownership would put an end to mixing, that so long as those who had the manipulation of the grain in the terminal elevators were intimately connected with the grain trade and the owners of the line elevators it was impossible to check the mixing that was going on right under the eyes of the officials. The hon. member for Red Deer, who, I am sorry to say is not present, accused the members on this side of the House of socialism, by reason of their advocacy of the government ownership of terminal elevators. We had a resolution passed unanimously by the Saskatchewan legislature last year, which every Grit and Tory voted in favour of, demanding government ownership of terminal elevators. Is it that the Liberals and Conservative members in the Saskatchewan legislature are so tinged with socialism as to advocate that which has led to such strong objection here to-night? The hon. member for Regina and the hon. member for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt), have stated that a change has taken place and that they have come to the conclusion at last, by gradual process, that government ownership is the only remedy for the existing state of affairs.

Reference has been made here to-night to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, and it has been stated by the Prime Minister that the terminal of this road was going to be owned by the government. If it is right and proper for the government to own the terminal of the Hudson Bay railway, what objection can there be to owning the terminal at Fort William and Port Arthur. A minister of the Crown has stated that it is the intention of the government to have a terminal elevator, owned by the government, on the Pacific coast. To-day we find the government owning elevators at Port Colborne, St. John, Halifax and, I think, at Montreal. I do not think that they can be rightly charged with socialism by reason of owning and operating these elevators. If they can be operated successfully why cannot the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur be operated just as successfully? When the right hon. Prime Minister was in the west he was met by delegation after delegation, urging the government to take over and operate the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William. The Prime Minister went to the extent that while he was personally not in favour of government ownership, still, if no other means could be devised, he could see no objection to the government taking over these elevators and operating them.

Well, I believe a Bill has been prepared and we have seen a short synopsis of it in the press. We had a short explanation of it by the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) here to-day and he stated as an objection to the adoption of this resolution proposed by my hon. friend from Souris that the government desired to study the question, that they did not wish to rush into this thing. They want time to study a question that has been before the country and the government for several years past. It has been studied by the farmers. Parliament has been petitioned session after session and I do not think that by adopting it this session there would be any undue haste exhibited by this government. It has been said that the new Act is going to provide greater penalties for the mixing of grain. I believe that last year the total amount of the fines collected in the three cases was $5,500, while under the proposed new Act the minimum fine is $5,000 and the maximum $20,000. It will, therefore, have a certain deterrent effect, but it does not do away with the real ownership of the elevators and take them out of the hands of those who are intimately connected with the grain trade in other portions of the country. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) said that the delegation that came down here to interview the Prime Minister seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the interview they had had with the government and with the assurances that they had received as to the new Bill to be introduced on this subject. Well, I have a little proof here rather to the contrary. Last week the farmers of Saskatchewan met in convention, several hundreds of them being in attendance representing several thousands of the farmers of that province, and they evidently are aware of the nature of this government Bill introduced in the Senate, because this is how they commented upon it:

Whereas the Dominion government has so far conceded to our demands re the government ownership and operation of the terminal elevators as to bring down a Bill appointing a commission with drastic powers, therefore, be it resolved, that while acknowledging this forward step, the Dominion Council of Agriculture reiterate the request that provision be made for the necessary funds to purchase or lease the necessary terminals and reaffirm the former position that nothing short of government operation will remedy the existing evils.

That does not look as if the government Bill is going to meet with any greater favour from the western grain growers than does the legislation now on the statute-books. The question was asked to-day of the hon. member for Souris, if many of the farmers of Manitoba had availed themselves of the provincial elevators taken over by the government of the province this year, and, the hon. gentleman gave his reply. If you read the report of the chairman of the provincial commission you will see the hard proposition they were up against in the year 1910, which was a year of short crops and consequently a bad year to inaugurate a system of that kind. But notwithstanding that the grain buyers at points where the government had purchased an elevator did their best to squeeze out and discourage the farmers from patronizing that elevator, they gave higher prices for the grain at these points than they would have paid under other circumstances. They have also built new elevators and equipped them in a modern manner, they have done away with the heavy dockage that formerly existed, they now merely make deduction for shrinkage, they have special bins provided and there is every reason to hope that these modern elevators will give satisfaction. So much is this the case that the chairman of the commission having explained the operations of the Act—and remember it is less than a year since the provincial government took over the elevators—the Grain Growers' Association of Brandon passed a resolution unanimously endorsing the principle of provincial government ownership of the elevators in that province. This, of course, is the very best reason that can be given to show that provincial ownership is in their opinion likely to prove a success. It is, of course, claimed that the provincial system of ownership will not be a success either in Manitoba or Saskatchewan unless the Dominion government acts in concert with these provinces and takes over and operates the terminal elevators. The amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Neely) is much the same excuse for shelving this motion as that resorted to last year when the member for Regina (Mr. Martin) moved his amendment. At that time the delay was asked to allow more time to see if the legislation introduced by the government would prove satisfactory, and to-day it is to allow further legislation being introduced. At present we have upwards of 70 Dominion inspectors overseeing the weighing in and out of the grain at these elevators, and about all that the Bill does is to appoint three supervisors to supervise the present inspectors, in addition to which it provides for additional penalties. The government Bill is not based on the principle that the farmers have been advocating and that we on this side of the House have been urging on the government, and for that reason I submit that the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) should be adopted and not sidetracked by the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Humboldt.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Neely).

Motion as amended agreed to.

HOURS OF LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Verville for third reading of Bill (No. 3) respecting the hours of labour on public works.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I opposed the second reading of this Bill, and I have since heard nothing to induce me to change my mind. True, if the Bill, as first introduced, was intended to help the labouring classes it is less valuable to them in its amended form now before us, but be that as it may, my opinion is because I disapprove on principle of a measure of this character. I opposed it in the first place because it interferes with personal liberty. I hold that we should not by legislation here prevent a man from labouring any number of hours that his physical strength allows him to, and his actual requirements necessitate. In so far as this Bill interferes with personal liberty in that respect I oppose it. Again, I am opposed to it, because, if we are to judge by the petitions that have come to this House from working people in many lines of occupation, the aim of this legislation is in time to prevent every line of labour from working more than eight hours a day. One of the reasons given as a defence of this Bill is that it applies only to public works under control of the federal government, and if that were so it would be less objectionable to me than it is at present, but, without doubt it is designed to extend beyond public works. One reason that I gave for my opposition on the second reading of the Bill was, and I repeat it, that if we legislate here to compel an employer of labour to pay 10 hours' wages for 8 hours' work the product of that labour must be sold at an increased price, and in that way we are perpetrating a great injustice on those who must toil longer hours to pay for the product of the labour of those who work shorter hours. In the great city of Toronto public works are going on all the time, and if you legislate that those employed on them are only to work 8 hours a day, it is an incitement to other men to agitate for equally short hours. If, for instance, the men in the Massey Harris establishment would only work 8 hours a day producing agricultural machinery, the price of that product must be enhanced beyond the very high price charged at the present time, and so the farmers who buy that product will be obliged to work longer hours to pay for it. Although the agriculturists of this country are now working much longer hours than the men who produce these articles, if they are obliged to work one or two hours a day longer to pay for the enhanced price because of the shorter hours of labour, then you are doing a great injustice to the farmers of this country. If you compel a farmer, who now works 10, 12 or 14 hours a day, to work 15 or 16 hours a day to pay the enhanced price for an implement turned out by a man working 8 hours a day surely you are doing the agricultural classes a great injustice I represent an agricultural community, and I feel I would be doing less than my duty if I did not oppose the proposal made in this Bill. For this reason, as well as for others which I shall not delay the House to explain at present, I am opposed to this legislation.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). It is not my intention to occupy more than a few moments of the time of the House discussing this Bill, nor would I rise were it not that since the Bill was read a second time the agricultural society of the township in which I live and the horticultural society of the city of Kingston have both passed resolutions against the principle of this Bill, and have requested me to express their disapproval. I reiterate the protest I made when the legislation was first introduced. My constituents are largely farmers, and I believe the adoption of this principle works great injustice to them. One of the great difficulties of the Ontario farmers to-day is the securing of labour on the farm, and if you once adopt this principle on government works you insert the thin end of the wedge, and it becomes an encouragement to labouring men of all classes to demand an eight hour day. That must undoubtedly militate against the farmer by increasing the difficulty he now experiences in obtaining labour. Any one who knows anything about agriculture knows that a farmer cannot possibly limit his working day to eight hours. When this matter was under discussion some time ago, an hon. gentleman on this side who was supporting the Bill said that the farmers had very little to do in the winter. After they had collected a good pile of wood and laid in a good stock of tobacco, all they had to do was to sit by the fire and enjoy themselves. But while it may be true that the farmer in the winter season, has not to spend the same long hours at work as he does in the summer, it is still utterly impossible for him to have an eight hour day because, if he is going to get the best out of his cattle, they must be fed at regular intervals, and his cows must be milked at regular intervals. To allow sixteen hours between the feeding at night and the feeding in the morning would prevent his getting the best results out of them, so that an eight hour day is an impossibility for him, even in the winter. Another objection to this Bill, is the vast increase in the cost of all kinds of government work to which this would apply. For instance, you are going to construct a building, and the men who formerly would work on that building 10 hours a day will, when this Bill becomes law, work only eight hours per day. That will certainly make a great increase in the cost, an increase of from 20 to 25 per cent. Another objection I see is this. Why should a man employed by the government in erecting a building work only eight hours a day when other government employees have to work 10 or 15 hours a day. For instance on our canals, such as the Rideau canal, the lockmen are actually employed the whole 24 hours. That is, in the whole 24 hours they have no time which they can call their own, because they must be ready to go out and do their work at any hour of the day or night. It seems very unfair, therefore, that a man engaged in building a post office should work only eight hours a day while a man employed in another department should be obliged to work 10 or 15 hours per day.

But the strongest objection to this Bill is that it must undoubtedly increase the difficulty which the farmer now experiences in obtaining the necessary labour. An instance was cited to me by a farmer in my own county the other day of this difficulty. He had an Englishman in his employ who had come out from the old country. This farmer sold his milk in Kingston, and his hired man had to get up early to milk the cows, and then take the milk into the city. He would get into the city just about the time, or perhaps a little before, other labouring men were going to work, and the result was that in a short time he threw up his job. He said : I am not going to work on the farm for an hour or two in the morning, before men working in the city start their day's labour. I feel that in justice to the people I represent, I must protest against the passing of such a measure.

Mr. HODGINS (Pontiac). Before this motion is adopted I wish to say a few words on the question. It is not often I agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) but on this occasion my sentiments are heartily in accord with his as I represent a farming community, and I feel that this Bill if it became law would be against their best interests. The successful men of the day, either in the workshop, the office, the factory, or the farm, are men who have given up more than eight hours per day to labour, and as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), have said that if this measure be adopted it will increase the cost of living 20 per cent as well as the cost of all public works. The object no doubt is to insert the thin edge of the wedge and in the end, have an eight hour day established throughout the country. No doubt it is urged by the labour organizations, but I do not think that this government should enact any such legislation, as these organizations are very capable of looking after themselves.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.53 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MONK. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the government if it intends placing before the House, as it did in the case of the farmers' delegation, all the papers and statements presented by the important delegation of fruit growers and vegetable growers which came here the other day. I have had several demands for a report of the proceedings, and I see that the government has placed a similar report of the farmers' delegation before the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no objection at all, and will move accordingly.

THE DECLARATION OF LONDON.

Mr. MONK. I would also like to ask my right hon. friend if he has come to a conclusion with respect to an order of the House, made the other day, regarding the declaration of London. At that time he said he would see whether the communication from the imperial government on that subject was confidential, but I see since then that the declaration of London has been communicated to Australia, and that the Australians have sent a protest to the English government against the adoption of the declaration. I presume we will have the same advantage.

THE LONG SAULT DAM.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask whether it would be possible to have the communications between this government and the British ambassador at Washington, which would naturally form part of the return moved for some time ago, brought down at an early date. I appreciate what my right hon. friend has said, that, as regards the whole return, the preparation must take some time, but I see no reason why a partial return of those communications that are easily accessible should not be brought down at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About the Long Sault?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly. I have no objection.

PORK PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask whether there would be any objection to having the views of the pork packing industry, a delegation from which interviewed the government yesterday, submitted to the House, so that we may have full knowledge of their statements?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No objection whatever. Everything will be brought down.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FOSTER. The most important factor in the development and progress of any country is its productions in kind and variety. The twin factors which aid in producing are capital and labour, and I propose, for a few moments, to consider what will be the effect of the proposal before us in respect of the productions of Canada and their co-operative factors, capital and labour. As I have already said, we are disposed to pay too much attention to the figures of trade, which, after all, are but indexes of something which is basic and far more important. In all the foreign trade of Canada there are two productions, as far as geographical distribution is concerned—one of them in Canada and one outside Canada—and the one production is exchanged for the other. But the interprovincial trade is infinitely more important than foreign trade, as indexed by the foreign trade figures, because in the former all the products are made in Canada and the elements necessary to production are furnished and operated in Canada itself. The aim and object of this country for the last 40 years has been, as far as possible, to stimulate the number of productions in Canada itself, which usually form the article of exchange between the different parts of the country and to diminish as far as possible—and it is only possible relatively to diminish them—the productions of outside countries required in exchange for the productions of Canada. That is to transfer, as far as possible, all the elements of labour and capital and profit which go towards making up foreign productions, to transfer these to some section, province, or part of Canada where they shall be sent out and shipped for other productions in Canada made in some other province, section or part of Canada. To-day, when I read the American papers and scan the American speeches, and look at the American arguments, I do not find that they are saying very much as to the employment of American capital in the establishing of American industries in Canada. In the past and present condition of things we have noticed that as a factor, and a very important one, in the development of this country. It is stated, and I think without doubt, that at least $226,000,000 have been transferred in equipment and plant from factories in the United States towards the establishment of branch factories in the Dominion. Senator Beveridge, deploring that fact, substantiates it, but wonders whether it would not be much better for the United States, instead of transferring branch factories to the Dominion, to bring about a condition of tariffs, in which it would not be necessary for these American industries to transfer branches beyond the line. And Governor Foss, another very strong advocate of this reciprocity arrangement, deplores the same fact, and says that if it goes on hundreds of millions more will be so transferred, and he thinks the time has come for the United States of America to accept Canada's offer, make the way easy and clear between the two countries and thereby keep the production, the capital, the labour and profits, the homebuilding and wealthmaking in the United States, instead of transferring it to Canada.

Why are they solicitous for this trade treaty with Canada? It looks out upon every page of their argument ; it slips off the tongue of every advocate of the proposal. It is that the United States of America covets the rich natural resources of the Dominion of Canada—covets these resources not with a view to coming where the resources are, bringing labour and capital, and working them up where they exist; not that, but covets them to draw them away to their own manufacturing industries, to the centres of their own country, to make them up with their own labour to their own profit, directly and with all the subsidiary gain which accrues to manufacturing in the United States. 'How will they get these raw resources'? you say. Well, Sir, outside of what they already own in this country—and they own, probably, more than any one who has not looked into quite understands—this arrangement will not have been in operation for five years before the big trusts and moneyed interests of the United States will own everything that is loose in this Dominion in the way of great natural resources. What they do not wish to buy from the man in Canada who raises it or digs it from the mine, they will raise and dig on their own properties under their own direction in this country. They will have these natural resources, they will command them. And, as I have said, I want the people of Canada to keep this in mind—that the object in all this is not to work up the raw materials in Canada but to work them up in the United States of America. They will allow the cheaper and less skilled and less concentrated operations of labour to be performed in Canada, but the better paid, the more skilled, the more aggregated, are to be carried on in the United States. They will let Canadians take out the ore, catch the fish, fell the trees, raise the cattle and other stock, do the mechanical and exhausting farming work and—all the rougher processes of industry ; but all the progressive processes of perfecting the raw material with all that pertains to those processes, and the distribution of them with all the profits that pertain thereto, these they covet for themselves. And the tendency of this arrangement is to put it within their power to carry out this purpose.

What I want to ask is this : Of what particular benefit will that be to the Dominion of Canada? You say : It is not possible for them to take away all the raw material. I do not press the argument that far ; but I do say that the tendency is and will be to draw, as far as possible, the rawer resources of Canada to their centres and work them up there. And that they will do more and more, and in larger proportion as the years go by. I say that the broad effect of this agreement if it is to be as successful as these advocates argue, will be to leave the rawer rougher processes of the work, the digging, the mining, the felling, the collecting, all the processes of common labour at lesser wages, to the people of Canada, and as few as possible of the perfecting, more highly-paid and better-conditioned processes to the United States of America.

If that be true, what is the first effect? The first effect is to exhaust, in proportion to what they draw from us, the natural resources of the Dominion of Canada and to husband what they have left of their own resources as far as they possibly can for future generations; to take away from Canadians the higher and better processes of development in their own country, and to transfer these to the United States. Here is a general tendency, which, in its beginnings, has already been carried out with all the intense vigour, the enterprise, the skill, the money power which lies in the United States of America. I ask any one to settle with himself whether this is for the future good of this country as an independent nation or whether it is not. I appeal to every man who is not so thoroughly impregnated with the commercial spirit that he would say, as the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) did the other day: Wherever we see a raw resource in this country, for Heaven's sake let it loose and send it to the United States, and let them work it up there, so long as we get the money for the raw material itself—I appeal to every man who is not so impregnated with commercial spirit, but who believes somewhat in the idea of the trusteeship of the present generation for future generations, whether it is not worth while to think, and think deeply, before we set ourselves irrevocably on the stream which leads us down with resistless current to the future which I have but dimly and poorly pictured.

How is capital to be affected by this? And how is labour to be affected by this? For forty years we have had a fairly stable policy in this country. The national idea came to birth in 1867 and it has ruled in this country from 1867 to this day. The national spirit carried with it the National Policy. And the national spirit and the National Policy appealed to the capital of the old country and of other countries, on the ground that this was to be a national development under a settled policy. And capital, which is eminently sensitive, which looks long before it invests itself, has gradually invested itself in the great public works and important national enterprises of Canada, until to-day $1,800,000,000 of British capital lies in our great routes of transport and the public undertakings of this country. Under what conditions was that placed there? Take the capital invested in your east and west lines of communication, was it ever dreamed in Britain, Sir, that the time would come when a change of policy would be inaugurated by the men who petitioned for the money, who plead for the investment of capital and got it at long last, was it ever dreamed that when this capital was securely fixed and invested, the long lateral lines of railway should be tapped every few miles by communication to draw off the trade intended for them to southern routes and do away with the long haul of the east-and-west lines?

So this proposition of the Finance Minister absolutely changes the conditions of all capital that has been invested in that way, invested from Great Britain in our great national concerns. In those times we wanted money, and our credit, though good, was based more upon hope than fulfilment; it was what we expected to happen in this country upon which we made our appeal for finances, to bring what we expected to birth and to fruitage. But, Sir, as the years went on, and expectations began to be fulfilled, that stream of money widened and deepened, and to-day it is coming into this country from Great Britain at the rate of $150,000,000 a year, and increasing from year to year. The men who have their money fixed in it have to stand the new conditions, they cannot get their investments out. Canadians have not been simply trying to get investments in the past, but they have, as we know, been endeavouring to make the flow deeper and more plentiful into this country for the ever ripening and recurring development which it is necessary for us to make in a new country like ours. How will this instrument affect capital that has not come, that is ready to come, but which, under doubt and uncertainty, will hesitate to come and invest itself in this country? I do not follow that out any further, it is not necessary.

Let me state another thing: That just as the flag follows trade, just so labour follows capital, and capital is going to be sensitive and careful of investing itself in this country on account of the unstable conditions which are imported by this arrangement, and will go to the side where there is the largest population, where there is the greatest market, where there is the greatest fixity and stability of financial conditions. For you find no intimation amongst the powers that be, or the powers that are to be, in the United States, that while they are quite willing, for purposes which I shall hereafter disclose, to open the barriers and to make free trade between Canada and the United States, they are at all disposed to throw any barriers down against the rest of the world. They do not intend to do it. Then, Sir, the investor, under this precious document which the Minister of Finance has laid upon the table for our approval, the investor says: Here is an instrument which works in a certain direction, how long is it to be valid ? The Finance Minister says he does not know. It can be made invalid any day that this legislature or that legislature chooses to make it so. What money will invest itself then in enterprises which run in the lines of trade which are established between the United States and ourselves? If they have money to invest, what will they say? We think we had better go to the other side of the line and invest it. Then, if this thing bursts up we will be, with our investment, with our establishment, with our labour, with our product, where the ninety-three millions are, and where we will be protected against the rest of the world. Suppose that you persuade capital that this thing, although it is upon such tenure as that, will, from the very nature of circumstances, as they develop, tend to become permanent and remain permanent, will the man who has money to invest, invest it in the United States or Canada ? Should I invest it in Canada, he says, in manufactures? Caution whispers into his ear: Be careful, don't you see that in Canada, don't you see that in the United States, in Canada by the grain growers, in Canada by the free traders, in the United States by Democrats and Republicans in power and authority—don't you see that all these, in the two countries, simply look upon this as the entering wedge for full and complete free trade between Canada and the United States ? Not that it should come all at once—divide and destroy, that is the maxim. First, one industry will be attacked, and it will go by the board, then another industry will be attacked and it will go by the board. Do you mean to tell me that sensitive, long-sighted capital, looking for investment, will, under these considerations, invest itself in industrial establishments and enterprises on this side of the line ? No Sir, It will make capitalists doubly sure to plant themselves and plant their enterprises on the side where the big population, the big market and the greatest chances for themselves exist. Therefore, I say that in this matter, production, labour, capital, that trinity of influences and of factors which go to make up the prosperity of every great country, are all assailed by this instrument, threatened by this instrument, menaced by this instrument; and that the tendency will be to throw one production outside of Canada instead of Canadians having the two, to draw capital outside of Canada and invest it in the United States; and, as an inevitable consequence, to draw the labour around that capital and in that direction from Canada to the United States.

For, Sir, let there be no mistake in this matter. I am not going to read you quotations to any large extent. I am going to make the statement that every prominent advocate of this measure on the United States side of the line is overjoyed at it, and is an earnest advocate and supporter of it, and when he gives voice to the sentiment that is within him, he says that they are marching up, not to partial reciprocial free trade between Canada and the United States, but that it is the entering wedge and that the successful conclusion of the matter, not far off, in sight, will be when a circle is formed from the frozen sea on the north to the Rio Grande on the south, within which circle there shall be free trade unimpeded, and outside of which shall be the world with a tariff wall against it.

I sat the other day and saw the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) sitting there with his Finance Minister beside him listening to a delegation of 1,200 or 1,500 men, any one of whom knew more in five minutes about the business in which he had been brought up and which he was carrying on than these two gentlemen. I saw the right hon. gentleman, bereft of every power that a Canadian legislator ought to have, listening to the grievance, hearing a tale of gross and rank injustice, according to the statements that were made, and he was not able, Sir, to look his fellow Canadians in the face and say: As your Prime Minister I will take your grievance into account and if it is just I will right the grievance. The Finance Minister sat there, Sir, and when he was asked to speak, he declared that it was near two o'clock, and that he had no time to speak to-day. If he had told what was in his mind he would have said he was not able to say anything to them. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had to speak and he did speak. What did he say? I heard him before the Manufacturers' Association, I heard him before the Grain Growers' Association. To each of these he said: Gentlemen, I have been very glad to have your representations, I have gained a great deal of knowledge from what you have told me, I shall report the matter to my ministers, we will take it under advisement and we will do the best we can. Now and hereafter, as long as that instrument holds, no section, no interest, no man can come here with a tariff grievance based upon an article within the four corners of that agreement and can find a legislature, or a government, which is able to say to him: Yes, we will inquire into your grievance, and if it is properly founded we will have that grievance removed. Why did the Prime Minister allow 1,500 men to journey to Washington—I should say to Ottawa. It was a slip, but as in the cases of some slips, it was mightily true. Why did he allow 1,500 men to spend $10,000 or $15,000 of their hard earned money to come down and make a show representation to him when he knew in his heart that he could do nothing, and when it would have been a mercy for him to have told those men beforehand: Your case is already decided, I am bound up in a contract with Mr. Taft, and no matter what kind of a grievance you have I am not able to redress a Canadian grievance. If you want to get it redressed, take it to Washington, that is the forum now. So I say that my slip of the tongue was the tongue verging off towards the great truth, the fundamental truth in this matter, that Canada has given up her fiscal freedom to the extent which I have shown to you this afternoon. When the great fruit and dairy industries of this country, believing that they have a grievance, coming before the men who ought to have the power to right it, with an immense expenditure of money already in the business and their fortunes based upon it, with tremendous possibilities in the future, put their plea and are told by a Finance Minister who is careful to keep his own coal scuttle undamaged by a Minister of Customs, who sits tight upon his own biscuit box, that they must sacrifice themselves for the good of Canada, which, being interpreted, is for the good of that old coal scuttle and that box of biscuits, they are apt to ask whether they alone are to do the sacrificing. If you say to these men: No protection for you, those men will say: Then, by the Great One above us, no protection to any other industry in this country; if we are not to be considered in the scheme of protection, then we will fight, and we will vote against any other person being considered in the scheme of protection. It is conceded in the United States of America, by those who want to see free trade between the United States and Canada that they are perfectly satisfied now with things as they are going, and that they will have the whole farming interest of the United States when deprived of protection ready to strike off the duty from every other industry so far as it affects the United States and Canada, and to a certain extent you have it the same way here. Let no mistake be made, that sense of injustice cannot be wiped out, it will rankle and grow, the sense of fair play runs even beside it, and the step now advised once taken will not be retraced, unless this government is speedily overthrown, until there be free trade between the United States and Canada. So it is not simply the men who do the market gardening and the men who do the fruit raising, and the men who do the milling, and the men who do the meat packing, and others who are threatened and hurt in this matter, but one by one the sound sense and the fair play instinct of the people will say: This must be an all-round square deal in protection or we shall not have any protection at all.

Now as to its trade features. The Finance Minister, I think, will be quite willing to acknowledge that up to the present time I have not been waving the British flag. I have no doubt he is sadly disappointed. Almost the first word he uttered in this House when this measure was brought down was that the first thing that would be heard would be loud shrieks, and the waving of the British flag. I have so far confined myself absolutely to the economic side of the question, but I am not afraid, thank God, to wave the British flag, and I do not propose to be frightened by the jeer of any Finance Minister or the quip of any newspaper from loving that flag and waving it when I please. But I am confining myself absolutely to the economic side of the question. I wish to ask a few more questions on the trade side of the question. In the first place, I want to ask what is the effect of this upon our trade with other countries. The first effect that we have is a singular one—no I am not quite right in saying that, under this government it is not singular, but it is one of which we have had repeated instances. There is again in this case, as there has been in other cases, the gift of free trade privileges, or lower duty privileges, to foreign countries who give us no compensation of any kind.

By what right in this stage of commercial competition and warfare so to speak does the government of Canada give to countries already upon a good basis of trade with Canada further concessions upon entering into our markets when Canada gets no single thing in return for the same. At least it is questionable as to whether we should carry out that operation too far and repeat it too often. What is done in this case? I find that most favoured nations receive a benefit of $165,254 of trade made free to them on the basis of their dealings with Canada last year, and $580,317 of trade in which the duty has been lowered to them under this treaty, taking the goods they sent to Canada in 1910. That is to say, a total trade of $745,671 has been effected favourably to certain countries of the world and for this no single thing in the way of compensation has been given to us in return. So much for that. There is also, however, this to be noted, that in some of the articles which we have made free to the United States of America, these favoured countries come in not only theoretically but practically with the ability to send large exportations into the Dominion, free, or at a modified rate of duty. Animals, grains, vegetables, fruits, butter, cheese, fish, salt and other articles can come in from Argentine, Austro-Hungary, France and Algeria, Norway, Russia, Switzerland and some other countries. With that superior smile which more frequently graces the face of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister when he labours for lack of information than otherwise, the Prime Minister rather smiles now at I suppose the silliness of my argument; nevertheless each man has to make his argument according to his light, and each man has a perfect right to judge of it as he wishes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And to smile also.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend can smile and take a smile for all I care; I won't quarrel with that. But what is more important—and now perhaps my right hon. friend will rather want to take a smile than to smile—what does happen is this, and it is rather an important point it seems to me. I want to remind my right hon. friend of a statement made in cold blood by the Prime Minister of Canada; a statement which he is supposed to have known the meaning of, and which no honourable statesman would fail to carry out. Sitting in that chair the other day, he said to the 1,500 that were interviewing him: Gentlemen, I am sorry you come too late; if you had come a few weeks before, why, we could have interchanged opinions and you could have had your questions taken up. Afterwards, hearing some of these gentlemen talk, one said to the other: Oh, well you see, this is the misery of the thing, we did not come early enough; did'nt you hear what the Prime Minister said; if we had come earlier we would have got all we wanted maybe. Yes—said the other, did'nt we have the Prime Minister's pledge as a public man and a gentleman that he did'nt propose to make any adjustment and revision of the tariff until he had appointed a tariff commission? I thought the answer was a good one. I make the same answer to my right hon. friend here to-day. Why did he make that promise and why did he fail to fulfil it? Why did he pledge himself in the west and pledge himself here in this House of Commons in the early part of the session unless he honestly intended to abide by the pledge? In reply to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, he said:

I stated that we would have a commission of investigation before we undertook a revision of the tariff. Does any member on the other side of the House take issue with the promise I make. Would any of them advocate rushing into a revision of the tariff without previous investigation. Hon. members may laugh at that but they will dare not to say that they would favour such a course.

Mr. HUGHES. Who said that?

Mr. FOSTER. This was said by the right hon. gentleman who sits opposite to us now, and who as Prime Minister, made that statement in the west and made it here. And, he will get up after me, and he will try to crawl out of that by saying that this is not technically a revision of the tariff. Now, will he? It will be the smallest hole that any large sized man ever tried to get through. When you transfer the immense number of products which have been transferred from the dutiable to the free list, and when you affect the dutiable list in others, what is it but de facto a revision of the tariff, and a good big revision, and a revision upon which most important consequences hang. I say that never in the history of Canada, has a more fateful and more important revision of the tariff taken place than has been brought about by this agreement with the United States, and the legislation which is to call it into force. I charge the right hon. gentleman with bad faith with the people of the west, with bad faith with this parliament of Canada, with bad faith with this whole people of Canada, when he lulled every interest to sleep by saying to the wide Dominion: Don't fear, gentlemen, there will be no revision of the tariff until a tariff commission has been put to work and you shall have an opportunity to make your representations before that tariff commission. My right hon. friend made this other statement:

There is in the Fielding tariff a cardinal principle. It is the principle of British preference, and that preference will not be interfered with by anything we do with the United States.

I ask the right hon. gentleman if he has implemented that promise? I charge him to his face that he has broken it. Right under my hand here, are the proofs that he has broken it. He made that statement not once, or twice, but over and over again, and, Sir, I noticed that the Finance Minister took the unusual course of sending a reasoned argument by cable to the High Commissioner at London to be used by the Prime Minister of the empire, filled with many half statements that would have been clearer had they been made whole statements, and with many presentations which would have been nearer the truth if they had been whole instead of partial presentations. But, Sir, on the basis of it, Mr. Asquith rose in the House of Commons and in the debate which took place there he said:

The American-Canadian agreement had been carefully watched by the British Ambassador at Washington on behalf of British interests, and he had been assured that so far as British importations into Canada were concerned, British preference would be scrupulously maintained.

Now, that is a succinct sentence; it is inclusive; no one can fail to take in its meaning. Negotiations were going on at Washington. The British Ambassador was cognizant of them and privy to them. The British Ambassador was advised that whatever took place there would be no interference with the preference to Great Britain. He had advised his government of the fact, and his government, through Mr. Asquith, on that information and the information given to the Finance Minister, stood up and pledged his understanding of the case to the British people and to the empire, which is interested therein. In the face of that I challenge the statement that imperial preference has been scrupulously maintained. I have here only a partial table which will show what I mean. Counting up the items, I find that there are 102 in which there has been a lowering of tariff without going so far as perfect freedom from impost. Of those, 28 involve importations from Great Britain which have not had the preference impaired; 74 involve importations from Great Britain in every one of which the preference has been impaired and lowered. In the list of goods made free there are 69 items. On 39 of those British preference has not been touched; on 30 of them it has been absolutely wiped out, for the goods have been placed on the free list. There is involved altogether $6,387,336 worth of British goods imported under the preference in 1910, on every dollar's worth of which the imperial preference has been either absolutely wiped out or has been materially diminished. Now, it is no excuse to say: But that six millions, compared with our whole foreign trade, is but a trifle, and therefore we have scrupulously maintained the preference. That would be quibbling unworthy of even any member of the present government.

Now, Sir, the Finance Minister, when questioned the other day, wobbled, and wobbled pitifully, on this matter. First, he declared that the British preference would be kept intact; then when questioned he said, there will be other legislation, and it will be within the power of this parliament to make good the British preference. How will he make good a British preference which was 5 or 10 per cent on goods which have been now placed on the free list? Give a bounty to the exporter from Great Britain to make up his loss? Where the preference was 12 per cent or 10 per cent, and it has been reduced to 8 or 7½ per cent, how are you going to make up that loss by adding to the British preference at the expense of industry in Canada, on a production which already has been reduced to the lowest or nearly the lowest figure which it is possible to have, and still maintain itself? Now, Sir, these gentlemen sitting opposite you have pledged themselves, and have led the British government to pledge itself, and the British people and the people of the empire to believe, that they have not touched or impaired the British preference when they have stricken it its death blow. It was not their own infant, much as the Finance Minister would sometimes like to father it. The infant brought into being by the Finance Minister was a reciprocity with the whole world. The child that was forced upon him in the end was reciprocity with Great Britain alone, which was afterwards extended to the British dominions. They immediately went to work to render it as ineffective as possible—first, by raising the duties on the list of articles before they made the preference to Great Britain; later, by the French Treaty, which in some respects scaled down the preference to nothing, and in other respects materially reduced the influence of the preference. Then, in 1910, after parliament had closed, these gentlemen, true to the great Liberal principles which they professed, reduced by order in council the duties to Belgium, to Holland and to Italy, and so brought in further competition with the preference to Great Britain; and to-day, what have they done? They have done what I have told you in the way of reduction of the preference, but they have gone leagues further, they have reduced the incentives for Canada to look for, to ask for and to work for preference. They brought back in their hand a free market, they say, for butter, for cheese, for wheat, for dairy products of all kinds, for grains of all kinds, and for sundry other products.

Where is the argument for the men who advocate the imperial preference arrangement with Great Britain? On this side of the water, they will say it would have been a boon to us then, but we have got free entrance into a market of 93,000,000, we have got all we want, do not talk to us about British preference. On the other hand, they have struck a fatal blow on this side, in this way. They have included all the articles on which the British people would be willing to give a preference in the free list to the United States, and every one of them could be sluiced through Canada into the empire under a preferential arrangement with Canada. And you could not help yourself. Preference then will not be with Canada alone in these articles, but with Canada plus the United States. These considerations justify me in saying that a fatal blow had been struck at British preference, and I want no better corroborative argument than this, namely, the joy that broke out in the British House of Commons among the anti-tariff reformers when this news came to them, which, it was declared, dished tariff reform in Great Britain forever and aye. This is how imperial preference has been treated.

The preference being destroyed, the hopes of preference with the United Kingdom being dished, we shall be more and more impelled to join our fortunes in trade with the United States. That is the way the argument and the circumstances work. I notice that my hon. friend, the Finance Minister, in the closing part of his speech the other day, dilated upon what good this would be to the United States, and also to the people of Canada, but he was significantly silent as to any good it would work out to the empire. That part of the argument evidently appeared to his mind as not in keeping with the proposition he was laying before the House.

I lay on the table a list of the rates, the importations, the preference reduction that has been made, not of all the articles, but I have picked out a number of them :

I think these figures bear out my assertion, which may have seemed somewhat harsh that the Prime Minister forgot his pledges that he solemnly made here and elsewhere, and that the information which was given to Prime Minister Asquith and the British ambassador is not reliable information, but that the British preference has been in part lessened and in part wiped out. This is proven by the figures I have taken from their own little blue-book, which figures I have accepted without revision or examination as being absolutely correct. What are the distinctive features of this treaty, and how far do they conform to the conditions of reciprocity? Suppose that I am a maker of jack-knives of a certain quality, and my hon. friend opposite is a maker of jack-knives of the same quality. I could send over to him and buy a dozen jack-knives, and he could send over to me and buy a dozen jack-knives, and this might be called trade; but there would be no reciprocity about it. Reciprocity, I think, has this as a prime condition—that it shall be between two countries, each producing a surplus, but a surplus in a different line of articles, and each wanting articles of which the other's surplus is made up. More than that, for ideal reciprocity, this should not be a mere occasional surplus, but should be the result of fixed conditions of climate, soil, and so on, that will make the surplus permanent. Two countries that show ideal conditions of reciprocity in trade would be the West India islands and Canada. The West Indies produce a surplus of tropical fruits, of which we produce none. But they produce absolutely no dairy products, none of the food products of the temperate zone, of which we produce a great surplus. These are examples of two countries between which a reciprocity trade arrangement could be made with great profit. In the same way, reciprocity between us and Great Britain is possible in lines or articles which will readily suggest themselves to the minds of hon. members. But in the case of the arrangement we are now discussing, you are trying to establish reciprocity between two countries, each of which has a surplus, and a surplus of exactly the same products. With the exception of cheese and fish, the United States of America has a surplus of every article which goes from Canada, under this arrangement, into the United States. And not a slim surplus, but in every respect a substantial surplus, and in some respects a very large surplus. I do not wish to weary the House with figures. But let me take a few instances. I find that the United States of America exported last year $68,000,000 worth of wheat, and $51,000,000 worth of wheat flour. Of this combined export, 58·57 per cent was of wheat, and 41·43 of wheat flour, and the total export represented an aggregate of 114,000,000 bushels of wheat. There is a large and substantial surplus. Nor is there any probability that, within a reasonable time, the United States will cease to be a grower of wheat in excess of the wants of the people. In the case of animals, the excess of exports from the United States over imports is $20,000,000. In breadstuffs, the excess is $150,000,000; meats and dairy products, $157,000,000. Of beef products they export $21,000,000, of hog products $114,000,000. What is most noticeable in the trade history of the United States is their persistent encouragement and nurture of manufacturing industries. At first, the United States of America was an exporter of food and natural products but of few or no manufactures. In 1899, her exports of manufactures were only $123,000,000. But in 1910 her exports of manufactures were $440,000,000, an increase of 250 per cent. And President Taft, in his message to the United States Congress, says that what the United States must set itself to do is to increase its exports on the line of manufactured goods. That is its future. It cannot expect to make large exportations of food and other products. What we want, he says, is raw material close at hand, what we want is cheap foodstuffs, so far as we can get them from the northern country in order that we may be better provided and furnished for this increased product and increased export of the industries of this country, in which our future lies in respect of the world trade. That is the policy shining out in every statement, shining out in every line and article of this proposed agreement. The United States knows what it is after, with a tariff wall against the world, desiring to preserve its own unused natural resources so far as it can, dipping into the virgin resources of Canada so far as it may be able, fortifying itself by the conservation of its own and by the destruction of ours, making itself the great manufacturing country of the world, and increasing its wealth and its power in that way.

So I say that the elements of real reciprocity are not found in the conditions of the two countries. The reciprocity that you will have between this country and the United States will be largely a sectional, fitful, occasional reciprocity. If the hay crop is poor in the United States, and we have a good crop, that will be our opportunity to a certain extent; although if the hay crop is very poor in the United States, and the existence of their cattle depended upon hay being got, no matter what the duty was in reason, they would have to pay for the hay and pay the duty. But the Finance Minister laid little stress on this part of the arrangement, that whilst the United States gave us a market we gave the United States a market as well. If we can turn our products into their country in certain sections where drouth or frost has made a shortage at certain seasons, when, from any circumstance, there is a failure of any particular crop in whole or in part, the very same thing can be done by the United States when these adverse circumstances visit the Canadian crops, and the Canadian farmers. There is a market given to us, but there is also a market given by us. As I said before, the reciprocity between the two will be largely a fitful, sectional reciprocity.

Now, we hear a farmer living on the border of the United States, say: If there was no duty I could take my wheat free to the other side and sell it for ten cents a bushel more than I can now. Do you mean to say that it is not the tariff that does that? well, Sir, I will let Mr. J. J. Hill answer that. Mr. Hill is a man of great experience, of wide knowledge in everything that pertains to the production, the carriage and the transport of the business of the west. On the 10th inst., Mr. Hill spoke in Minneapolis, and let me tell you what he said, in commenting on wheat prices to the farmers of the United States: Are you afraid to take off the 25 cents per bushel, and let the Canadian farmers in free? Will it decrease the price of your wheat? You say wheat in Winnipeg is so much, and is less than the price paid in Minneapolis. Are you afraid, then, that if the tariff is taken off, wheat will be put into your market at a lower rate? Is it the tariff that does it? Then he quotes from averages of the year with reference to wheat prices in different states of the United States, and he says:

For the year ending December last the average price in California was 84 cents a bushel, 12 cents a bushel higher than the price in Oregon.

There, he says, are two states of the United States, Oregon and California, no tariff between them, and yet in one wheat was selling at 12 cents more than in the other. How do you explain it? Evidently not by a tariff.

The average price for wheat per bushel, in 1909, in the North Atlantic states, was $1 12; in the South Atlantic states it was $1.17½. What made the difference between the two? Was it the tariff? But there is no tariff whatever, so you have to seek for some other cause to account for the difference. The average value per bushel on the farm, in 1910, for Iowa, was 72 cents; for Missouri, 78 cents; for Tennessee, 90 cents; for Alabama, $1.02; for Oklahama, 73 cents; for Arkansas, 85 cents; for Oregon, 72 cents; for California, 84 cents; for North Carolina, $1.01; for South Carolina, $1.14. Now will some one explain that great difference in price? It is not due to the tariff.

So, said Mr. Hill, and Mr. Hill is evidently right. So what I say is that if this thing goes into operation under the glare, and glitter, and glamour of a promised fabulous rise in prices for the products of which the United States exports its surplus, there will be disappointment keen and bitter. I hope our farmers will never be subjected to the risk of that disappointment. The Finance Minister came back and he said to the farmer in the west: See here, look at the gift I have brought you; your wheat goes free into the United States, I have given you a second market for your wheat. The Northwest farmer already had two markets for his wheat, he had the miller and he had the British market, and the British market absolutely fixes the price for the surplus wheat of the world. Mr. Hill takes great pains, in his argument at Minneapolis, to show that in the general trend of commerce the surplus wheat of the world, coming from all countries, has its price fixed in Liverpool and London, by the circumstances and relations of supply and demand; and he says it make no difference whether wheat comes from the Canadian west and filters through American lines of communication to Liverpool, or whether wheat comes from the Canadian west and reaches Liverpool direct; it makes no difference in the price that each must take for his grain in the Liverpool market. All that varies the price is the cost of transportation and incidental charges.
